THE HONOURABLE JOHN J. CONNOLLY, P.C.

The Leader of the Opposition

THE HONOURABLE ALFRED JOHNSON BROOKS, P.C.

THE SENATE

Thursday, September 1, 1966

The Senate met at 11 a.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

STANDING COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS

TIME OF MEETING CHANGED

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, a meeting of the Standing Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was called for 11 o'clock this morning. On behalf of the Chairman, Senator Dessureault, I would ask all members of that committee to take notice that the committee will meet immediately after we rise this morning.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: That will be at 11.15.

DIVORCE

APPOINTMENT OF SUBCOMMITTEE TO HEAR APPEAL

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I wish to make an informal report on behalf of the Standing Committee on Divorce. We had a meeting this morning and a resolution was passed authorizing the chairman to appoint a committee to hear the appeal that is before us and which was discussed at some length yesterday.

Honourable senators will be interested to know that I have nominated such a committee. I am sure honourable senators also will be interested in the personnel of the subcommittee. The chairman will be Senator J. Campbell Haig, a very experienced and thoroughly competent lawyer who has had nothing whatever to do with this case so far.

The appeal is by a woman. I do not know that that should make much difference but it is a circumstance, however; and one of the members of the subcommittee will be Senator Muriel McQ. Fergusson, a woman and a lawyer by profession. The third member of the subcommittee will be Senator F. W. Gershaw, a medical doctor.

I submit to my fellow members of this chamber that a stronger and more experienced group could scarcely be found if one searched all Canada to find it. I am very pleased indeed that we are able to produce such a subcommittee of talent, of integrity, of knowledge and experience as the three I have just mentioned.

Honourable senators, while I have the floor, may I make an apology to the chamber for a mistake I made yesterday. I was asked whether the evidence in this case had been transcribed and I said I was fairly sure it had not.

It was transcribed, and I think I ordered it to be transcribed. However, I do not know that any significance attaches to this fact, but in the interests of accuracy I would like to correct my statement of yesterday.

Honourable senators will remember that our honourable leader made a suggestion yesterday afternoon with regard to the criticism levelled not only by Senator Walker but by others and which has also been in other minds, my own included, that it was not quite right in principle or in appearance that the body which passes upon a case should also be the body to hear an appeal against its decision. It is fundamental; it is elementary, but it is certainly not applicable in the present instance since the members of the committee just named had nothing to do with the case under discussion; however, for the sake of appearances and principle I think we should make some change. The Leader of the Government, Senator Connolly, suggested that we divide the committee into two sections, one of which will be known as the Appeal Division. This suggestion has met with the unanimous approval of the committee, and we will draft the necessary amendments to the rules of the Senate during the recess and action will be taken as soon as we reassemble in October.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, may I congratulate the honourable Chairman of the Divorce Committee for his quick action in connection with this matter. I understand that he had a very early morning meeting of the committee and that these matters were determined at that time.

May I also say I agree that his committee has made a very fine selection of a subcommittee to look after this problem. They are all well qualified, and I am sure the selection will meet with the approval of all members of this Senate. I might also say to him that he need not apologize to a body of this kind for his lapse of memory with respect to the transcript having been prepared because all, or at least many of us, are reaching that stage when a lapse of memory is a very common occurrence. I find I am that way myself.

I also agree with his approach to the appeal matter. I listened to my colleagues Senator Walker and Senator Choquette yesterday, and I wish to commend the Chairman of the Divorce Committee for his quick action in adopting their suggestions which were so well made yesterday afternoon.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I have been in the other place to see what progress has been made. They sat quite late last night, and resumed again this morning at 10 o'clock. There is little prospect of getting this bill before 2.30 this afternoon at the very earliest. I therefore suggest that it would be appropriate to rise until 3 o'clock this afternoon.

The members of this chamber who have sat in the House of Commons know the old adage that if you begin a week, you finish the week. Very often, if you begin a bill on a day, you finish it on the day. I am hopeful that we will have this bill by 3 o'clock this afternoon.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Would you tell us what is going on in the Commons at the moment?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): They are dealing with the bill clause by clause in Committee of the Whole. I am not able to say at what stage they have arrived at the moment.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Clause 6.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I take it we will have copies of all the amendments—that we will have a bill we will understand?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I am just coming to that, senator. If there are amendments made in committee, we may not have a reprint of the bill. If time permits, I shall try to arrange for it; if time does not permit a reprint of the bill, then I shall endeavour to have a memorandum containing the amended sections. It will be duplicated in some way. In other words, there will be a fair copy of the section as amended and passed.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: We could have typewritten copies at least.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It may be in that form.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: There will be copies in some form.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes.

Honourable Senators, I would suggest that the Senate recess at this time to reassemble at the call of the bell at 3 o'clock this afternoon.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 3 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, the progress in the other place on the bill we are expecting has been snail-like. I understand that clause 7 of this bill of 11 clauses has passed, but clause 6 stands until after clause 10 is dealt with. If it meets with the convenience of the Senate I suggest that we rise now until approximately 5.30, at which time we may receive the bill. If we do not, then we shall have to adjourn again.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: I take it that if we receive the bill at 5.30 it would mean our sitting right through till we dispose of it.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: We must do that.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: I was wondering if it would be better to meet after 6 o'clock. Like the honourable Leader of the Government, I have no idea when the other place will complete its deliberations, but an hour is not going to make much difference either way. I suggest we adjourn until 6.30 or 7 o'clock.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It was my view that it would be better to assess the situation at 5.30. I am in the hands of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I suggest that we stand ready to be called so soon as the bill is received? There will then be no delay whatsoever. We are all present in the building, and when the bell rings we are ready to respond.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: I agree with that.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): That is substantially what I had in mind, although at 5.30 I would at least be reporting to the Senate on what is the situation. I suggest that we rise until the call of the bell which need not necessarily be at exactly 5.30. If the bill passes the other place before 5.30 then I shall ask that the bell be rung. I have grave doubt that the bill will be available between now and 4 o'clock. There are still two contentious clauses to be dealt with, according to my information, and then there has to be a third reading upon which there could be debate as well. If the Senate agrees to the suggestion, the bell will ring before six o'clock, and we will know then what is the situation.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 5.45 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, we adjourned until 5.30 not by good management but rather by luck, for precisely at 5.30 the bill passed in the other place.

I promised the Senate we would have the amendments in some clear form. While they are not extensive, it will take a little time to accomplish this. I suggest therefore, if it is agreeable to the Senate, that we adjourn now to reassemble at the call of the bell at 7 p.m. This will give senators an opportunity to have dinner and, of necessity, it will provide an opportunity to have the amendments put into fair form so that they may be readily understood.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 7 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

MAINTENANCE OF RAILWAY OPERATION BILL, 1966

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-230, to provide for the resumption of operations of railways and for the settlement of the existing dispute with respect to terms and conditions of employment between Railway Companies and their employees.

Bill read first time.

SECOND READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. John J. Connolly, with leave of the Senate, moved the second reading of the bill.

He said: Honourable senators, my first duty is to thank you all for the wonderful co-operation that you have given not to me personally but to the Senate, and indeed to Parliament, during this week. We have had some measures which perhaps we could have disposed of much more quickly than we did, but I want to express my deep personal appreciation to all honourable senators who have interrupted their time with their families at their homes to come here in this emergency.

You have come here out of a sense of duty and in great numbers, and I want all honourable senators to know how deeply I appreciate this. I am sure you appreciate the fact that your readiness and willingness to come here for this purpose has enhanced the position and the prestige of the Senate.

The bill before us this evening provides basically for resumption of railway services in this country, services which were disrupted by a strike that has paralyzed the railway industry now since Friday noon of last week. The bill also provides for a certain increase in wage rates to be paid to the workers. It establishes procedures whereby all other issues between the railway companies and the trade unions representing the workers can be settled; and I hope that all honourable senators will come to the conclusion that it provides a base for a just and fair settlement, considering the national emergency and the requirements of the times.

I should point out that involved in the dispute which led to the strike are the 13 companies described in Schedule A. The main companies are the Canadian Pacific and the Canadian National Railways. The other companies are all rather familiar to senators; some of them are jointly operated, some are jointly owned by various groups; some are independent. In any event, all are listed in Schedule A.

The other party to the dispute comprises the 19 unions listed in Schedules B and C. These unions represent over 100,000 non-operating employees of the railways and over 15,000 operating employees. The contracts between the unions and the railways expired on December 31, 1965. They were two-year contracts. The issues arising out of renegotiation of those contracts can be described generally as follows: wage increases, shift differentials, sick leave provisions, worker benefit plans, annual vacations, bereavement leave and statutory holidays. Pre-eminent among the issues raised by the trade unions with the companies was the issue of wages. The shop craft group, for example desired a 23 per cent increase for all employes, plus 30 per cent for mechanics. The residual non-operating group desired a 12.5 per cent increase, plus 27 cents an hour, plus further provision for skill differentials. In the case of the Canadian Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen the union asked a wage increase amounting to 90 cents an hour. All of these wage demands cover a period of two years.

The negotiations which led to the point at which we have now arrived began before the contracts expired on December 31 last. They began, in fact, in November 1965, and they continued for some time. Obviously, they failed. Therefore requests were made by various unions or groups of unions under the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act for the establishment of conciliation boards in accordance with the terms of the act. In fact, five such boards were established.

I propose to deal briefly in a moment with the timetable respecting the establishment of the boards, but I should say at this point that despite the fact that for the purposes of conciliation the groups were broken down into five different categories, the unions decided to act together in the event the boards failed to settle the disputes between themselves and the companies. That is why the concerted action which has resulted in this strike took place in the way in which we see it.

May I deal now briefly with the boards? Board No. 1 and Board No. 2 were under the same Chairman, Mr. Justice Munroe of the Supreme Court of British Columbia. He dealt with the demands of 83,000 non-operating and shop craft employees. The applications for these boards, despite the fact that talks began in November, were received in the department on January 27 with respect to the first one, and on March 1 with respect to the second. The boards were established on March 1, 1966, the day on which the second application was received.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: If I may interrupt the honourable Leader of the Government, I would ask him if we can put on the record that both management and labour asked that Mr. Justice Munroe be the chairman of the board.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Certainly, I would be happy to confirm that statement of Senator McCutcheon. It gives me an opportunity of saying that I think there is no one in Canada whom both the companies and the unions respect more than Mr. Justice Munroe. I know this from personal experience, because many months before this started I had talks with people on both the management and labour sides who confirmed this fact.

The boards were established, as I say, on March 1, 1966. The representatives of the unions and of the companies were appointed between March 10 and March 15, and they were confirmed by the department on St. Patrick's Day, March 17. They notified the minister that they had agreed on Mr. Justice Munroe as chairman on April 19.

This confirms the point that Senator McCutcheon makes.

Mr. Justice Munroe was appointed on the same day, April 19. The board's report was received by the department on July 4. The processes under the act proceeded. Strike action was decided upon on August 22, 1966, the strike to begin on August 26, four days later.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Would the leader make any comment on the progress in negotiations up to the time that the Seaway workers were granted a 30 per cent increase?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): No. Perhaps I should leave that to my honourable friend to deal with.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I will deal with it.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I should like to get the record straight at this stage and then a discussion of this kind can be conducted. I have no objection to the discussion, but if the honourable gentleman would not mind I would prefer to proceed as I have planned. I may save some time for the Senate if I do so.

Board No. 3 sat under the chairmanship of the Honourable Mr. Justice J. C. A. Cameron. It dealt with the non-operating Canadian Brotherhood of Railway Transport and General Workers, numbering some 20,000. I need not go through all of the dates with reference to the establishment of this board. The union application was first received on March 21. The company nominee and the union nominee were unable to agree upon a chairman and notified the department on April 18 of this fact. On May 13 Mr. Justice Cameron was selected. His board reported on August 10. Again through the normal processes strike action was decided on August 22, to begin on August 26, four days later.

In the case of Board No. 4, Judge Little of the County Court Bench in the Province of Ontario sat on one board which dealt with the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen in the Canadian National System, numbering some 8,500 members. Again, the union and the railway company nominees were unable to agree on a chairman, and the minister was so advised on May 26. The chairman was appointed by the minister on June 9. He made his report on August 12. Strike action was decided on August 22, and the strike began on August 26.

Roughly, the same schedule applied in connection with the appointment of Judge Little for Board No. 5 which dealt with the problems of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen in the Canadian Pacific Railway system, numbering some 6,200 members.

When the Government was informed officially that strike action was decided upon on August 22, the Prime Minister immediately sent a wire to all of the parties concerned. That wire was tabled by me in the house here a few evenings ago. That wire offered whatever services the Government had at its disposal to try to bring about a settlement before the deadline for the strike on August 26 was reached.

Honourable senators, I think it quite proper for me here to speak of my colleague the Minister of Labour, and indeed of the other ministers, and certainly also of the officials of the Department of Labour. All of my colleagues were indefatigable in their efforts to try to avert this strike. If some of them are showing up a little the worse for wear just at this time, honourable senators will understand why. Neither sleeping time nor eating time seemed to matter. They were on call and were at work almost continuously for the purpose of trying to prevent this national emergency from arising.

I think it appropriate for the purpose of the record to give some of the reasons and some of the reasoning of Mr. Justice Munroe. I quote from page 8 of his report with reference to the 55,000 non-operating employees.

> It may be said that the recent wage settlements in the Quebec Longshoring and St. Lawrence Seaway disputes should govern my recommendations as to wage increases. I think not. It should be noted that the employees affected by such settlements are not working in Durable Goods Manufacturing Industries; such settlements are not typical or representative of negotiated wage settlements for 1966 and 1967 in such industries or in industry in general; such settlements involved a relatively small number of employees and arose out of special circumstances and facts which are clearly distinguishable. It would, I think, be no more justifiable to consider such settlements as governing factors in my determination than it would be to say that other wage settlements of amounts less than my recommendation which involve larger numbers of employees, of which many examples could be cited, should govern. In my view, a national standard—not individual settlements or regional standards—is the proper standard to apply to the national railway industry whose employees live in remote hamlets and in metropolitan areas across Canada. The national standard of the earnings of Durable Goods Employees, adjusted for the factors referred to in my 1964 report, remains, I think, as the sensible standard—because those two groups of employees are the most nearly comparable. Such standard has the support of many years of jurisprudence. It would, I think, be unwise to abandon it at this time in the interests of expediency.

He made the same findings on this point with reference to the shop craft employees report in which 2,800 people were involved.

I quote further from the recommendation in the report of Mr. Justice Munroe with reference to the rates of pay on page 9:

> My recommendation is as follows:
> To the hourly basic rates of pay in force at December 31, 1965, there shall be added:
> (a) effective January 1, 1966, add 4 per cent.
> (b) effective July 1, 1966, add a further 4 per cent.
> (c) effective January 1, 1967, add a further 4 per cent;
> (d) effective July 1, 1967, add a further 6 per cent.
> Daily, weekly and monthly rates shall be increased in an equivalent manner.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Would the Leader of the Government tell us what the amount is that will be imposed on the railways this year by that settlement, and next year and in 1968 when the whole thing becomes effective, and then would he tell us where they are going to get the money?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I can give an estimate for the year 1966; I think it will be somewhere in the neighbourhood of $35 million to $40 million. I think probably an amount slightly in excess of that, because of the additional 6 per cent factor, will be involved in 1967.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: If I said to the leader it will be $48 million, would he contradict me?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): No. I think the honourable senator has reasons for saying that. However, I made some inquiries about this some time ago, and I do not think he is in a position to contradict me any more than I am in a position to contradict him.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I repeat my figure of $48 million is far more realistic than his.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): That is the honourable senator's view, and I think he is entitled to his view.

Mr. Justice Munroe also dealt with questions of bereavement leave, annual vacations, statutory holidays, and at page 12 he had something to say about wage stabilization which I think I should read at this point.

> I am of the further opinion that, as stated before the board by the unions, "the railway companies must continue to accept a responsibility for minimizing the adverse effects of changed working conditions upon their employees. In turn, the unions must not try to imprison the railways within a system of obsolete or uneconomic methods and procedures."

And I quote further from Mr. Justice Munroe on page 13:

> The request of the unions that the recommendations contained in the report of the Industrial Enquiry Commission presided over by the Honourable Mr. Justice Samuel Freedman should be included in the new collective agreements has been considered by me. That report is now under study by the Government of Canada. There is nothing in the evidence before the board to indicate that the railway companies are contemplating major changes that will materially affect the job security of the employees represented before this board. In those circumstances and pending completion of such study, it would, I think, be premature to accede at this time to the request of the unions. However, I would expect that good sense will prompt the railway companies not to introduce such changes without first engaging in meaningful discussions with the unions and employees concerned.

I will have something more to say in reference to the Freedman Report at a later point.

Having mentioned Mr. Justice Munroe's recommendations with reference to wage levels and increases, I think it appropriate to put on the record, too, that the nominee of the railways on this same board rejected the increase as being too high for the railways to carry.

His recommendation was as follows: effective January 1, 1966: 3.5 per cent; effective July 1, 1966: an additional 3 per cent; effective January 1, 1967: another 3 per cent; effective July 1, 1967: a further 3 per cent. In other words, it is a total, during the two-year period beginning January 1, 1966, of 12.5 per cent.

I think, too, I should put upon the record what the nominee of the unions, who rejected the chairman's recommendations as being too low, had to say about wage levels. His recommendation was this:

Effective January 1, 1966: 6.5 per cent increase, plus 13 cents an hour; effective January 1, 1967: 6 per cent increase, plus 14 cents per hour.

I am advised that this would average out at about 25 per cent, with provisions for additional increases for certain skilled categories, to which I will refer later.

I have in my hand the report of Mr. Justice J. C. A. Cameron, a retired judge of the Exchequer Court who is chairman of Board No. 2 which heard the dispute between the railway companies and the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway, Transport and General Workers, numbering some 20,000.

Mr. Justice Cameron on the question of wage rates, at page 25 of this report says this:

> My recommendation therefore, after weighing all factors is the same as that made by Mr. Justice Munroe in the two 1966 Conciliation Board Reports. . .

Mr. Justice Cameron had the advantage of seeing Mr. Justice Munroe's report and, I presume, the transcript of the evidence. In other words Mr. Justice Cameron's recommendation, following that of Mr. Justice Munroe, was 4-4-4-6 on the dates to which I have referred. The union representative sitting with Mr. Justice Cameron made these recommendations:

> I recommend that the union be granted a wage increase of 40 cents an hour retroactive to January 1, 1966, and that a further increase of 12 per cent on the wages prevailing on December 31, 1966, go into effect on January 1, 1967.

The company representative sitting on that same board had this to say:

> ...the brotherhood has repudiated the durable goods standards...I have already recommended in my reports as a member of the boards...a wage increase of 12.5 per cent representing an average of 28 cents per hour for all non-operating railway employees. In the absence of any evidence before this board which would justify any departure from the percentage figure of 12.5 and having regard to the evidence contained in the railways' submission,...I recommend that the general wage increase for the employees represented before this board be an average of 12.5 per cent.
> ...the employees represented before this board are receiving remuneration much in excess of employees performing the same or very similar duties in outside industry. It would appear desirable that the wage scales of the employees represented before this board should be adjusted so as to reduce inequities that appear now to exist...
> I recommend that such a study be now undertaken on this point, but always within the limits of an average increase of 12.5 per cent.

I think honourable senators that I should also refer to one of the reports made by Judge Little and choose his report on the C.N.R. group representing 8,500 operating trainmen. Judge Little was unable to make a firm recommendation but he had some comments to make on the implementation of the Freedman Report which I think the Senate should know about.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Are we implementing that report tonight?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): No, sir.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Thank you.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I quote from pages 7 and 8:

> The Implementation of the Freedman Report:
> It was the unanimous view of the members of the board at the conclusion of the formal presentation that if mediation were to resolve the dispute it would be necessary to secure agreement on the manner in which the proposals of Mr. Justice Freedman were to be implemented. In its arguments the union had adopted the said report in its entirety, whereas the Company had accepted it in principle, but varied from it and the union in the manner in which finality should be achieved in its implementation.
> Our discussions with the parties satisfied us that the three basic principles with which we had to deal were:
> (1) The railway's right to determine and effect technological innovations, both major and minor, where the rights of employees might be adversely affected, on due notice to the union.
> (2) The negotiation between the union and the railway of the protective conditions to apply to each and every employee affected in each case.
> (3) The modus operandi of resolving such protective conditions in the absence of mutual agreement.
> We are pleased to report that there was basic agreement between the parties on Item (1) and (2) above, but we were unable to reconcile their differences concerning Item (3).

Finally, the board was aware that the Freedman report was now under study by the Department of Labour. It was also apparent to us that the union does not expect this issue to be resolved by normal process of collective bargaining, including conciliations. The representatives made it quite clear that it is convinced that the only solution was by way of legislation. The railways expressed its readiness to give due notice to the union any technological innovations it has decided upon and to negotiate the protective conditions that apply to employees adversely affected thereby.

It was the railways' position that, if such negotiation failed, the said protective conditions should be determined by an impartial tribunal. It was therefore the board's conclusion that no useful purpose would be served by a specific recommendation from it.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: May I ask the honourable Leader of the Government a question? Is it Government policy to put into legislative form—although I am confused as to how you would ever do it—the Freedman Report?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I think the answer to that is no.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: No.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I quote from page 12 of Judge Little's report:

> We accordingly recommend that the parties in conjunction with the Minister of Labour agree upon the appointment of an impartial party qualified in the matter of wage determination to examine into and make recommendations upon a more rational wage pay system.

Honourable senators, throughout this protracted period of negotiation there has been a most strict and faithful observance of the law by the companies, by the unions and, if I may modestly say so, by the Government.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I would withdraw that last statement.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I certainly will not withdraw it.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: It certainly did not follow precedent.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I thought it did follow the precedents. It certainly followed the precedents that are established under the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act. I challenge my honourable friend to show how in any particular the Government has strayed from those principles.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: It did not follow the very good precedent of the legislation of 1960.

Hon. Mr. Croll: That was not a precedent.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): We are talking about something now that the honourable gentleman has strayed from.

In the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act there is enshrined procedures for collective bargaining. These procedures have been strictly observed. I would be the first to admit, if I were called upon to do so, that the period of these negotiations stretching from November 1965 to August 1966 is too long a period when it affects an industry as vital to this country as the railroad industry. I feel too that the procedures which have grown up through the years have become cumbersome. They may even be described in many respects as outmoded. They need streamlining, and I hope that some action in this direction will soon be undertaken, not only with the co-operation of management but with the co-operation of the trade union movement as well.

For the workers in this dispute I have real sympathy, and I think all honourable senators have sympathy with them. They are faced with rising costs—as, indeed, all of us are. They see better working conditions being established in various industries throughout this country, and they want to have better working conditions in their own industry.

The problem of job security in the face of technological change certainly is a problem for these workers, and we would not be talking about retraining and the more effective use of manpower if we did not intend and hope that technological change and greater productivity could be and would be developed in this country so that our goods which are sold so widely on the markets of the world can be competitive.

I think I can say as well that the pay received for special skills in some branches of the railway industry is out of line. Much attention will still have to be given to this very complicated and difficult area of conciliation, mediation and negotiation.

So much for the workers. I want to say something about the companies. The railway industry in this country has been and still is a controlled industry.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Before the honourable Leader of the Government leaves the subject of automation, may I ask him if labour is being given the assurance that it will have the opportunity of sitting in on the discussions when such matters are under consideration?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I think it flows clearly from the extract I read from the report of Judge Little that this has been agreed to by the railways.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Well, we know Judge Little made a report, but there did not seem very much indication that it would be favourably considered.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I think that his report was to the effect that the railways said they would be perfectly agreeable to dealing with technological change in conjunction with the workers, and by discussion with their workers.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: It is a very important matter.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes, it is a very important matter. If I may say so, now that I am talking about the companies, it is also important to understand that the railways cannot really give too much attention to the importance of increased productivity and technological change if we are to remain competitive.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: That is agreed.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I come back to my first point and say that these companies, so far as their rate structures are concerned, are, in effect, a controlled industry. They cannot increase their rates, other than perhaps in a few cases of agreed charges, without going before the Board of Transport Commissioners. They went there in 1957 and 1958 and were awarded or authorized an increase of 17 per cent. It was felt that this would damage the economy to an extent that compelled the Government of the day to disallow the increase. In its place the Government awarded the railways a subsidy. From this it follows that the railways are not free agents, and have not been free agents in respect of control of the revenues they earn because they have been required to go before the Board of Transport Commissioners to have rate increases approved.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: That is not what the Prime Minister and the Minister of Transport say.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I think this is the fact.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I know it is the fact. I am glad that the honourable Leader of the Government says so.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: That is one of the unfortunate things about this situation.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I do not think it is too unfortunate.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: It should have been attended to sometime ago.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): If in the other place there had been an opportunity of considering the new transport legislation much sooner than it is to be considered, then perhaps some of these problems might have been resolved.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Well, there has been three years' opportunity.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes, and there has been three years of filibuster too, if I may say so.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Last night I noticed the Liberals filibustering their own bill.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Order, order.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: The honourable Leader of the Government has the floor and—

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I do not have to listen to this nonsense.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: The honourable gentlemen on the other side who are interrupting have not asked if they might ask a question.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): The honourable Leader of the Opposition did. I do not mind the questions.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I object to this continuous barrage that is coming from the other side.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: But the applause from your side is quite welcome.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I think, honourable senators, we might well revert to our normal—

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Yes, our normal friendly attitude towards one another.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West: Yes, I think we can do that very readily because we are good at it.

May I deal with the second point I wish to make with respect to the companies? I say that they have been prevented from increasing their revenues through rate increases, even when those increases have been authorized by the Board of Transport Commissioners, and they have been given subsidies amounting to somewhere between $95 million and $100 million a year. The result, in effect, of the rate freeze—I have no hesitation at all in saying this, and I am a member of the Government—is that really meaningful collective bargaining through this period from November 1965 until this date is a very questionable thing.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: May I ask the honourable Leader of the Government—

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): May I finish this point, after which I will listen to the honourable gentleman's question.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I have been greatly impressed, as I am sure all honourable senators have, with the absence of acrimony with which the discussions have been carried on between the companies and the unions, before the boards of conciliation were established and since. Indeed, in some of the confrontations on television between the companies and the unions, I was most impressed by the lack of acrimony in the statements they made. These people seemed to be realistic and reasonable in the way they talked about their problems. I hope that here in Parliament our discussion of this issue may be just as lacking in acrimony as was the discussion by those people so vitally concerned with the decisions that we make.

I hope there will soon be correctives for the company. I hope that the implementation by legislation of the MacPherson Report would be proceeded with and completed at the earliest opportunity, in so far as that can be done in the circumstances of today.

I do not say that the passing of legislation implementing the MacPherson Report will mean an immediate cure-all for the problems of the railways; but it will be a step forward and the country is indeed indebted to Mr. Murdock MacPherson for the leadership he gave in this respect.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Five years ago.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): The legislation was on the Order Paper two years ago, too.

For the unions there is the Freedman Report to be considered. The Freedman Report contained some things which are most valuable. From my own point of view there are some questionable items in it. It has made a contribution to the solution of this recurring problem, one which seems to bring crises every four or five years; and I hope that the Freedman Report will eliminate some of those crises. The non-operating crafts and trades must be dealt with in a very special way by specialists in those problems.

For both the railways and trade unions there needs to be a streamlining and a modernization of procedures, so that the problems which face them, when their contracts are to expire, can be solved much more readily and much more effectively than has been possible heretofore.

Honourable senators, may I come to the bill before us. It is not a new type of bill. Parliament is familiar with bills of this kind, having dealt with them on many occasions, certainly back to 1950.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Four times.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Therefore, some of the terms will be familiar to senators who have been here for many years. Section 3 provides that the services given by the railways shall be resumed forthwith and that the employees now on strike shall resume the duties of their employment with the railway companies.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Forthwith.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): This is a familiar section, which has been in innumerable bills which Parliament has had before it.

Section 4 provides, as the other bills provided, that no worker shall suffer any punitive action at the hands of his employer as a result of his going on strike.

Section 5 deals with strike notices and requires their cancellation by the trade union officials who issued them. In other words, these sections legislate the ending of the strike and prevent recrimination by the companies against workmen for having gone on strike.

Section 6 deals with the terms of the collective agreement in respect of wage rates. I need not repeat the detail of the section, as it contains precisely the recommendation made by Mr. Justice Munroe and that made by Mr. Justice Cameron. The formula is that every six months, beginning January 1966, the increase will be 4 per cent, until July 1, 1967, when the increase will be 6 per cent.

Section 7 provides that the terms of the collective agreements now in force shall be extended and that they shall be binding and effective for the extended period, subject to the increases provided in section 6.

Section 8 requires the railway companies and the unions to resume negotiations forthwith and to try to resolve all the matters in dispute.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Would the leader tell us what they are going to negotiate?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Perhaps I could deal with that in a moment. The list of items of dispute are given in the reports of the conciliation board. They are very long, and at the beginning of this much-too-long speech I indicated the general areas where there continues to be disagreement.

Section 9 provides for the appointment of a mediator, in the event that the companies and the trade unions are unable to reach agreement. That mediator shall be appointed by the Minister of Labour. He shall enter into discussions with the parties and he shall report to the minister not later than November 15, 1966.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: He must be appointed forthwith and at once.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): He is to be appointed forthwith and at once and he is to try to assist the unions to carry out the provisions of section 8. The term of his appointment or the duration of his work can be continued under subsection 2 of section 9, if the Governor in Council so decides. Subsection 3 gives the mediator all the powers of a conciliation board that are provided in the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act.

Section 10 has been patterned on the legislation passed by this Parliament in 1958. It provides for the possibility of arrangements for finality and could lead to compulsory arbitration unless the parties agree otherwise.

I think that the 1958 legislation in this respect was wise legislation. It was supported in this house by the party to which I have the honour to belong. It could have been drafted by my friend Senator Walker, and I am sure that when he was in the Cabinet he had much to say about matters of this kind. It should commend itself, in this emergency, to the approval of this house. It provides also that if the board of conciliation to be appointed, which is to consist of three people, fails to agree, the chairman's decision will be final.

It provides that the wage rate increase set out in section 6 shall be the floor in so far as wage increases are concerned. They shall not go below that figure. It also provides in section 11 that if the executive or the Government makes up its mind, sometime presumably after November 15, it must take its responsibility to appoint the arbitration board; the order in council shall be laid on the table of the House of Commons within five days, and within three days the house, at an appropriate time, must arrange for an opportunity for the issue to be debated if ten members of the House of Commons file a petition to that effect for the purpose of having the order in council negated. I think this further step is a more liberal and a more democratic method of dealing with the establishment of a board which will have compulsory powers.

I should say too that in the course of the discussion of the draftsmanship of this section, the question was raised as to whether or not this right should be extended to the Senate. I am persuaded, honourable senators, that because of the theory in practice and in fact that the executive is responsible to the House of Commons and that only by defeat in the House of Commons can the Government be defeated in Parliament, it is appropriate that this action to annul the order in council should be taken by the House of Commons alone. I think there are practical reasons for adhering to that view.

Honourable senators, I commend the bill to the Senate and I am sorry I have taken so long.

Hon. David Walker: Honourable senators, it is now five minutes after eight, and I shall curtail my remarks because regardless of how we might criticize this bill, we are, on this side, above all else, anxious that the men should get back to work and that the trains should start rolling again, and it cannot be too soon.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Walker: After hearing the Leader of the Senate (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West), I could not help but remark on the magnificent way in which he has summarized the history of this whole unfortunate affair. How unrealistic the Government has been throughout! From June last, or, as a matter of fact, from the time of the Seaway settlement and from the time of the Longshoremen's settlement, the Government knew there was going to be a rail workers' strike, and that the railworkers would settle for nothing less than 30 per cent. The Government has been warned time after time after time from June up until the strike took place on August 26. It has amassed from some of the best brains in Canada reports so that it could know what was fair and equitable under the circumstances, and yet, with all that information and with all those reports and with all the warnings the Government has had, and with the broad knowledge of the strangulating effects of a railroad strike, it sat back and waited as if transfixed with fear for the inevitable strike which has certainly taken place. It is a shocking thing to think how idly the members of the Government gazed. It is true the Government sat by, and it is true that on August 22 the official report of the unions was that they would strike on August 26. The Government for weeks ahead knew that this was coming, and it should have had ready, as we had ready in 1960, legislation to nip the strike in the bud, legislation which would have prevented this strike from taking place, legislation which would have sent the workers back again to proper collective bargaining when they knew there would be no nonsense under all the circumstances. Yet they delayed; they did nothing.

Then, even when the strike is on us, on August 26, without any legislation prepared, without any plans made, they still stood dazed, and did nothing except call Parliament for August 29. Then, with all these days, with all this information before them, with all these reports from people whom they had confidence in, all we had from them when the great day came, when Parliament assembled on August 29, was one of the most astonishing bills ever produced. Contrary to all the advice they had received, contrary to all the injunctions that they had heard of, they produced a bill offering 6 per cent for 1966 without any outline of any other plans for the future, and ordering the workers back to work. It was unrealistic, so unrealistic that it shocked the conscience of even the public that was suffering as a result of the strike.

And then we had a third stage; for three days the Government sat and listened to a barrage of effective criticism, of helpful criticism, and stubbornly maintained the position that it took originally, that it would be 6 per cent for 1966 and no further concessions. They heard the Tories in the other place through their great leader make a reasoned speech outlining that the plans, the recommendations in the report of Mr. Justice Munroe as to wages, should be implemented in this bill. They stubbornly refused to do so until in their own Liberal caucus a rebellion broke out that forced them to capitulate and bring about this bill which was finally passed today.

Hon. Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne): Were you there?

Hon. Mr. Choquette: He does not have to be there.

Hon. Mr. Walker: There were so many leaks from your own caucus, even from some of my honourable friends on the other side of this house, that I had a full report within an hour of what took place. Obviously my friend was not there or he would not be laughing.

Hon. Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne): I was there.

Hon. Mr. Walker: Then there was a fourth stage of this inability to take proper action today when there was a complete volte-face, when the Government could not do enough to solace the Opposition, could not do enough to accept the suggestions of the Opposition. The Government comes out of its reverie at last and at the very last moment, when realism is forced upon it by the argument of the Leader of the Opposition—who, in order to save time, was the only one to speak on behalf of the ninety-five Conservatives—it makes amendments to the bill increasing the 6 per cent for 1966 to 18 per cent for two years. It finally adopted the Munroe formula, and then to save face,—it is an old eastern custom to commit hara-kiri if you cannot save face—it said that the railway workers should have known all along that the government always intended to give them 18 per cent. Did you ever in your life hear such ridiculous nonsense? Even senators on the other side had no idea that they meant 18 per cent when they said 6 per cent, and if they had no knowledge of this, how could the railway workers be apprised of it? Are they supposed to be mind readers?

The harm has been done now; by noon tomorrow the economy will have suffered a week of strangulation. It cannot now be helped; it is all behind us. Most of us on this side, though I think there may be one exception, want the bill to pass. It is not because we are satisfied with the bill, not at all. But we want to get the trains rolling again.

Many of us would like to see spelled out some of the ancillary terms which had been outlined in Mr. Justice Freedman's report, or, at least, to have some guideposts given for those who are going to engage in collective bargaining, as to what the opinion of Parliament is in connection with such matters as pensions, life insurance, holidays, job security, and so on. But this has been left out and we must make the best of what we have.

Some good may come of this strike, however. It proved again the folly of strikes. What possible good did it do? But this weak, vacillating Government has become famous around the world for its vacillation, and having acceded to 32 per cent for the longshoremen and 30 per cent for the seaway workers, it has led and encouraged the workers to strike.

One other good thing it might accomplish is to convince the Government that it has four months left in which to act at once on the postal strike that is threatened in the Christmas season. The Government still has time to head that off. All this proves beyond peradventure that the Government must find some substitute for strikes in our essential services in order that such strikes might be outlawed.

Finally, one other benefit—and we have to look if we can on the cheery side of this catastrophe—is that if it affects our Parliament and our Government sufficiently to amend the Railway Act to make it possible for the railways to be unshackled and to look to their own increased revenue rather than to the Government of Canada for any more subsidies, it will be a good thing. I hope the day of increasing subsidies has come to an end. This is the view of some of us on this side of the house.

Honourable senators, I am not going to detain the house further. I congratulate the leader on his speech. He must make the best apology that he can for the Government of which he is a member.

Hon. Mr. Farris: He made no apology.

Hon. Mr. Walker: That is very nice. I am glad to hear that from Senator Farris. We thought it was the best apology that could be made, far better perhaps than Senator Farris could make under similar circumstances.

Hon. Mr. Farris: A much better speech than you are making.

Hon. Mr. Walker: I am glad to hear that. When I have lived as long as the distinguished senator, perhaps I can sit back, too, and make comments like that about other senators, but I do not expect to be here at that time.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Very disrespectful comments.

Hon. Mr. Walker: Well, we always judge the source of these things, and I was going to say that, except for the distinguished and benign appearance of the honourable senator, in the colloquialism of the railways, I don't stop at flag stations and he, in his own time and in his own way, may have an opportunity to toot his own horn.

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, I regret that my friend who made a good speech should have messed it up at the end by an extraneous comment.

To begin with, let me say that I agree with the purpose of the bill.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I am surprised.

Hon. Mr. Croll: And I will give you the reason why. I support the resumption of railway services at the earliest possible time. I realize that we are doing this in a time of tension and some hostility, with public statements being made here and there. It would appear to be the worst kind of atmosphere. Nevertheless, we have to do it.

I think it is good that there are no sanctions in this bill; and such should not be necessary because through this bill Parliament is speaking. It speaks for all of us, it speaks to all of us, and it must be heeded and observed. We must reiterate for those who have any doubts that Parliament is supreme.

Let me dwell for a moment on something said by Senator Walker. He took the Government to task for not taking action before strike action was taken, as did the Government of which he was a member in 1960. I think the answer to that has been made on many occasions in the other place, namely, that that would have deprived the workers of a basic, fundamental right. It would have deprived them of the right to strike, and this Government was not prepared to do that. Moreover, this is not 1960. No one knows that better than Senator Walker. We are living in an entirely different atmosphere with respect to labour.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: And with respect to the Government.

Hon. Mr. Croll: It is a better Government, I suggest, but with respect to labour let me make my point.

In the Province of British Columbia four or five people were put into jail for law breaking over some labour infractions. In Ontario we had quite a fiasco in Peterborough, as a result of which labour men were prosecuted. In Oshawa I think there was a tearing up of an injunction that was presented there.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Does my honourable friend call it a fiasco to enforce the law in the courts?

Hon. Mr. Croll: I am saying that the law was not enforced.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): He was saying that the law was not enforced.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: He called it a fiasco. The law was enforced in Peterborough and the men were sentenced.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): He is commenting on the fiasco.

Hon. Mr. Croll: I am saying that the fiasco was as a result of the law being enforced and that the men involved were sentenced.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Now you are explaining it.

Hon. Mr. Croll: They had a strike at International Nickel where the policemen had to obtain permission from the pickets to drive their cars in. You have the same thing happening at Stelco in Hamilton.

Now, in that atmosphere, do you think any Government could have been justified in taking away from the people their rights to strike? What would have been the result? We would have had wildcats all over the place. That is the mood labour is in at the moment. We have to live with it until such time as the mood passes, and in the meantime try to reason with these people.

You cannot beat them on the head. Reasoning with them is one way of indicating to them that the law applies to them and to the Government. The Government has lived by the law, and so they have a right to say to these people, "Now we want you to live by the law also." That, I think, is a very strong argument.

Let me just say this also. My friend keeps talking about the longshoremen and the seamen, and their raise in pay. It was a substantial raise in pay, but no one knows better than he does that these people are seasonal workers and part-time workers; they are not railway workers.

As I recall railway workers—and I have known them all my life—they had tenure, they had pensions, they had comparatively good wages and they were the aristocrats of labour. That is as I remember them and as I have always known them, and they cannot be compared with these part-time, seasonal workers who catch on now and then and earn themselves some money and then go on unemployment insurance for the balance of the time.

Now, as to my friend's remarks about the 6 per cent that appeared to be offered originally, actually the Government was trying not to write a contract. They attempted to leave something to conciliation and arbitration, and not write a contract. Once a government gets into the business of writing labour contracts, then there is no end to it. They try to avoid it as much as they possibly can.

Hon. Mr. Walker: Was not the 6 per cent in the contract?

Hon. Mr. Croll: No. It was put in the 1966 portion, and the arbitration that was provided for November 15 was to deal with the other portion—the 4 per cent and the 6 per cent, which may very well have turned out to be 6 per cent and 8 per cent or 4 per cent and 8 per cent. Who knows? It may yet turn out to be that, if the climate is satisfactory. The Government wanted to leave it that way, but the desire was to put it in the bill, and it was put in by Mr. MacEachen who spoke in the House of Commons. He made it clear, as he was heard by many of us, and there could be no doubt about it. Mr. Marchand and the Prime Minister made statements such as I am making at the present time—I am only repeating them—yet, they appear not to have been heard. Certainly they were entitled to be heard, believed, and to have their statements relied upon.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: But they never answered the basic question: Where are the railways going to get the money?

Hon. Mr. Croll: That was not really basic, except from your point of view. The Canadian people have provided money for the Canadian National for a great many years, and if I recall correctly I did not see the President of the C.P.R. making any collection with a cup in his hand. The C.P.R. is quite well to do.

Let me deal with something that concerned me a little. I think the most infuriating words in the English language are, "I told you so." I remind this house that 16 years ago almost to the day a bill providing for compulsory arbitration was introduced, under identical circumstances, for the same reason and for the same purpose in the other place. I was a member of the other place at that time, and I voted against that section of the bill. Well, here we are again, 16 years later, with the same actors, the same play, the same stage, the same script, the same audience, asking for the very same action.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: And you were quoted yesterday.

Hon. Mr. Croll: The point I am making is that it is hard to believe that we have made so little progress in labour-management relations in all these years. I heard the question asked yesterday, and repeated here today: Is there real collective bargaining in the railways? The picturesque phrase used was that in so far as the railways were concerned it was a ritualistic dance.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Are you going to finish Mr. Douglas' statement?

Hon. Mr. Croll: I thought it was a very apt description. I am glad to associate myself with it. From my own point of view I think it is a shambles. It just ain't there! If you want to know my view about it I will say that if that is the way they are going to carry on, and come back to this Parliament every time they are in a bit of trouble, then that is one hell of a way to run a railway. I objected to compulsory arbitration, and I have had no reason to change my mind.

Hon. Mr. Walker: Are you in favour of it?

Hon. Mr. Croll: Of course I am not.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Are you going to vote against the bill?

Hon. Mr. Croll: That is why I got up. I would have been on my way a long time ago.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Are you going to vote against the bill?

Hon. Mr. Croll: I voted against it in 1952, and found myself in the position of being the only Liberal who stood up to vote with George Drew. I find myself in the same position so far as compulsory arbitration is concerned. I am opposed to it. I did not think it was necessary then, and I do not think it is necessary now. We can do without it; in fact we won't use it.

The argument by the proponents then was that it was not to be considered a precedent. It was introduced in a limited field for a limited time with a limited objective. Yet, it did harm then, and it does harm now to the concept of collective bargaining, and by its potentialities it has proved through the passage of time to be destructive of the concept.

I believe that the terms "collective bargaining" and "a free society" are synonymous. I believe it is one of our show pieces and one of our great possessions. Once we take pride in our free society we cannot deny collective bargaining.

It was made clear in 1950—those of you who were there will remember it, and those who were not can read the record—that it was not to be a precedent. But, it was employed in 1958 and again in 1960. And now, once again, we are faced with it. It is not a precedent; it has become a habit. If the principle of collective bargaining is on the verge of burial in the railway industry, then I ask: Can trucking and air services be far behind? I said then that it was dangerous—less because of what it attempted to do than of what, in other hands, it might be made to do later. This is later—much later—and we are faced with it once again. At this stage the Government has no alternative, but it does say: In certain circumstances you are no longer free to exercise your rights. I consider it wrong to say to labour: When you jeopardize a large number of your fellow men we will strip you of these rights and privileges. I reiterate, that is destructive of democracy.

I have indicated that it is habit forming. It does harm to the concept of collective bargaining because collective bargaining is an important process and must be preserved to the full. It is the only way yet available to us for the adjustment of the interests of the two great elements of economic strength—capital and labour. We have been operating under procedures and concepts that were adequate 25 years ago. I certainly join with Senator Walker in saying that it is about time we did something towards improving these labour-management procedures. We must realize that what was good 25 years ago does not fit today. Times have changed. We have now automation, technological advances, electronic achievements, and yet our procedures and laws are cumbersome and backward. It is as though they belonged to yesteryear; they are not sufficient for grappling with labour-management problems that are as modern as tomorrow.

It is time we began to think of public protection, governing not only the railways but the much wider field of industry. We must find some other solution, and we must find it very quickly. We need urgently to reappraise social, economic and moral issues that are basic to labour relations. Nothing is gained by shoving something down the throat of labour. We need a new management-labour climate. There should be a constant daily interest in labour relations in every plant in Canada, and there should be no waiting for contract time and the point of no return.

Organized labour must have a voice in the introduction of new procedures made possible by modern technology. That was the recommendation of the Freedman Report. Management's right to introduce changes in working conditions during the lifetime of a collective agreement, when it materially and adversely affects present jobs, has been challenged.

Referring to the present situation in which management under the law may introduce any changes it desires during the no-strike period of the contact, Mr. Justice Freedman said:

> There is a manifest inequity here which clamours for attention and correction.

He went on to recommend that the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act be amended to give labour a legal voice in the acceptance of automated procedures.

I quote further:

> A technological advance whose benefits accrue to the employer but whose burdens fall on the employee is unacceptable in a society which is concerned about human welfare.

It seems to be a statement with which we might well find ourselves in agreement.

I gather, from speeches made in the other place on behalf of the Government as late as this afternoon, that they were not only sympathetic to the view but they intended to do something about it, and very soon.

At the beginning, I said I was going to support that portion of the bill which will start the railways operating. I am troubled, as most honourable senators are, about the arguments as to wages, that the durable goods formula based on wages in automobiles and steel would give the workers a little something more than is presently offered. The conciliation board recommended 18 per cent, and my leader has already set forth the manner in which that was to be provided. That is for the present, that is what it is, subject to certain negotiations and subject also to fringe benefits.

As a result of all this, we now are faced with having a fait accompli. We are on the verge of passing a bill and recognizing certain matters of principle which are fundamental. One is "no compulsion." Individuals are not to be dragooned into doing things, and yet responsibility extends further. The law must be respected and obeyed.

Today our economy is so interdependent and complex that every big strike is a strike against the public.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Croll: To hear reports that those on strike are debating on whether to obey the law is indeed a chilling thought, for I consider the rule of law to be our greatest heritage and our most coveted protection. I hope the railroaders and their leaders realize how tremendous are the stakes involved—and I am not talking about money.

The law passed by Parliament is always debatable, subject to change, but it cannot and it must not be ignored or disobeyed. Civil disobedience is still a dirty word in this country, and it should so remain.

We must all be responsible citizens, some more responsible than others by virtue of the positions we hold, either privately or in public. Railroad men hold a high position in the public esteem.

It is easy enough for me to point and say that some societies respect the rule of law by force. There are examples before you every day, and you had better look quickly, because they are gone the next day. We respect the rule of law. That is our great heritage, and in the context of a free society, democratically organized, with a completely representative Parliament, disregard for the law enacted by that Parliament would not only be disruptive of that society but in my view be inconceivable. Having all the cards is not enough: you have to know how to play them.

On Monday, August 31, there appeared in the Montreal Gazette what I consider one of the great editorials of recent years. It spoke for all Canadians. I think it is worthy that I should bring it to your attention, with the hope that people who are involved may have seen it. It said this:

> The issue now before the country has become one even bigger than the rail strike, big and urgent enough as that is in itself. The issue has developed into the place of Parliament as the ultimate authority in the country, the court of last resort, the final word.
> Canada has had troubles over the years, in the breaking of laws and the defiance of orders from the courts. But few indeed have been the times when the possibility—even the likelihood—of defying Parliament has been openly raised. For to speak of defying Parliament is to speak of defying the very basis of authority in Canada: beyond Parliament there is nothing.
> Labor leaders among the railway workers may believe that the measures brought down in the House for ending the rail strike are far from satisfactory. They have every right to protest, and every right to keep on protesting. They may clamor outside the House for amendments to the proposed legislation, and lobby for changes, and bring every sort of pressure to bear upon the House.
> But there is no defensible right, on anyone's part, to defy Parliament. Parliament is the groundwork, and the only groundwork, for everyone's rights. It is not possible for citizens to pick and choose which laws they will obey and which they will reject.
> Citizens may certainly do just that as voters at the polls. But to have groups declaring that Parliament's decisions will not apply to them is more than protest; it is civil disobedience. And what one may do, all may do.
> Then it would mean that the will of Parliament, as expressed by its laws, has meaning only if the laws are found acceptable to the particular groups to which they happen to apply. The veto power would be widely distributed. Parliament instead of being the final authority of the people, would become only a body that expresses hopes or wishes, such as may or may not have any effect.

The editorial closes with these words:

> No matter how seriously any group may feel about what Parliament may decide, to undermine Parliament itself, by dragging its authority down, is to destroy whatever protection anyone may hope for in the future. If the traditions of parliamentary democracy in Canada are to be replaced by a system of group vetoes of legislation, then the rule of law has gone with the wind. What would take its place would be nothing new, but something terribly old. It would be either tyranny or anarchy.

It seems to me that that was as well said as any expression I have heard.

We have the conciliation report in the bill and the negotiations will of course continue. It is hopeful that some good will come as a result of them, and I feel therefore that they will reach an understanding. I think that the Freedman formula should be endorsed. I gather, unlike some others in the house here, that the Prime Minister today actually said that they had endorsed it in principle and would take some action about it very quickly and in due course.

Honourable senators, I close with this observation, that compulsory arbitration has had an undistinguished history of non-acceptance. It did not do the job before and that is why we are here today.

There was a long stride taken in 1950 down the road which was neither trade unionism nor democracy. It was not a cure and is a source of conflict; it has multiplied strife rather than preventing it. For that reason, of course, I will vote for the bill, because I want the railroads to get started as quickly as possible—perhaps even tonight, to look after the holiday people who need some form of transportation and will be anxiously looking for it.

I hope that, in the light of what has been said in many responsible places, that the railroad men who must feel the responsibility very heavily will return to work once again.

Hon. M. Grattan O'Leary: Honourable senators, it was said of Mr. Gladstone that he could make a budget speech sound like a sonnet. I thought of that as I listened to the soothing words this evening of the Government Leader in the Senate (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) about this bill. I thought also that if he had not distinguished himself in politics and in law he might have gone into medicine and made a vast reputation for himself on his bedside manner alone. Speaking of bedside manners, I must say I was a bit astonished to find that veteran warrior, Senator Roebuck, objecting to the comparatively mild questions and interruptions of Senator McCutcheon. And when I heard him rise and make these objections I thought of what was once said by Mr. Churchill: "Let nothing interfere with the rancor and acerbity of public discussion."

Honourable senators, since coming to this chamber I have heard again and again gentlemen arise and emphasize how in this house we must adhere at all times to what I do call "nice Nellyism." I think this is nonsense, utter nonsense. I am a partisan and I hope I shall always have enough integrity not to try to conceal it. I may say I have noticed that those in this house who are most ready to lecture the rest of us on nonpartisanship are the men who, when an opportunity presents itself, are the first to show extreme partisanship.

Now, honourable senators, at this late hour no one should want to delay the lifting of an evil which has been with this country during the past week. I myself have every confidence that the railway unions of this country, with the long tradition of responsibility and Canadianism, will have no hesitation in returning to work when this bill is passed.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton): I have no desire, and I confess I doubt if I have the capacity to traverse again the various clauses of this bill, most of which have come to us battle-scarred from the other place; in any event, we in this house are not in a position to dot an "i" or to cross a "t" in this bill. This is a money bill and so it seems to me almost idle to spend time discussing it. Having said that, however, I do not think my position absolves me from the duty of saying that the evil that has been with us this past week may be traced and can only be traced directly to the weakness, to the irresponsibility and to the incompetence of the Government.

Make no mistake about it; that is the verdict of the people of this country at the present time. If you walked up Sparks Street in Ottawa this afternoon and asked the man in the street what he thought about what was happening in Canada this week he would say two things: First, he would say that what has happened in Parliament during this past week has once more succeeded in downgrading Parliament, and, second, he would speak of the incompetence of the Government.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton): There is no doubt about this; that is the public thinking and that thought can be documented fairly well.

This is an inflationary bill. It is a child of inflation. It is produced by an inflation which began in a creeping way in this country a year ago and now has almost reached the galloping stage. What has the Government been doing about it in the meantime? This Government has the great advantage and the great privilege of having as advisers two of the most eminent public servants in any democratic country in the world. I speak of Mr. John Deutsch, Chairman of the Economic Council of Canada, and Mr. Louis Rasminsky, Governor of the Bank of Canada. Again and again over the past year these two men have pointed out to the Government the dangers of inflation. Mr. Deutsch did in the first and second reports of the Economic Council of Canada, and Mr. Rasminsky has done it in his various statements on the Bank of Canada. Yet what happened? Every democratic country in the world, and certainly the United Kingdom and the United States, in meeting this same problem—although not in as striking a way as we are meeting it—adopted guidelines for prices and wages; 3½ per cent in the case of the United Kingdom and about the same amount in the case of the United States. It is true that these guidelines can be exceeded, but their very existence at least showed an awareness by the governments of those countries of the problems which they faced, and at least impressed something on labour, on capital and on management of the gravity of the situation which existed.

What have we had in Canada? We have had a budget a few months ago in which the Minister of Finance admitted there was such a problem and said he would keep his eye on it. Well, how has he been keeping his eye on it? Prices have mounted again and again; they are inflicting grievous hardship upon countless thousands of our people, and all that has been heard so far as the minsitry is concerned is the resounding snoring from the treasury benches.

These are facts that can be documented. The failure of this Government to do anything whatsoever about inflation, to try to stem mounting prices, to try to stem inflation so far as deals between management and labour are concerned, is a shocking thing to contemplate.

I know it has been argued in the other place that a 30 per cent increase in the case of the seaway workers and the longshoremen in Montreal were exceptional cases and did not set a pattern or a precedent. If they did not, why did not the Government say so? For weeks and months after these settlements were arrived at it was stated by labour and by the unions, "Here is our pattern." The charge was made again and again, and the other day the Prime Minister in a plaintive note in the House of Commons said it was too bad that somebody had not explained to the country that this was not a precedent at all.

Honourable senators, the Prime Minister spends a great deal of his time on television. In fact we can count that day lost now on which one does not see the Prime Minister or one of his ministers on TV. Why did he not explain this to the country? Why did he not say this: "Two agreements have been made in this country for a 30 per cent increase in wages, but I warn you, and I warn labour and management that these in fact are not to be used as a pattern or as a precedent." Surely that was the least he could have said with responsibility to the nation.

When it comes to inflation the Government itself is one of the chief offenders. You will say that I am guilty of partisanship in saying this. Let me read what was said only this week by the Times of London. Incidentally, Mr. Pearson the other night in a television broadcast quoted an unnamed economic journal congratulating the Government upon its fiscal and monetary policies. I have the name here of the paper I shall quote from. It is the Times of London, and talking about the strike, it said:

> The main problem, as so often in Canada nowadays, can be traced to weakness of the federal government.

It went on to speak of inflation and it said:

> Various restrictive measures were applied in the budget last March. But they do not appear to have been successful so far.
> This is partly because the Government has been less stringent with their own than with private spending and partly because they are in a poor position to guide the economy.

"Less stringent with the spending of their own money." This is true. You can hardly pick up a newspaper in the morning without reading where the Government has spent more money here, more there and more some other place. They have spent more millions for Expo, more millions for the C.B.C., more millions for Mr. Hellyer's policy of the integration of the armed forces.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: The unification of the armed forces.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton): And so on down the line. This is what has brought about inflation in this country, the Government spending more than anything else.

Honourable senators, there is more. I spoke of the warnings given by Mr. Rasminsky and Mr. Deutsch, but all over Canada people and newspapers of responsibility have been urging the Government again and again in heaven's name to curtail its expenditures, now ranging over the whole area of public activity. Not only are they now concerned with millions for our material needs; they are looking after our cultural needs as well.

It is getting to be now in this country that when some community can afford two supermarkets it comes to the Government and says, "We must have an arts centre as well." This is what is happening.

I have been reading this past week the first volume of the memoirs of Mr. Harold Macmillan, and I would like to think that that volume could be read by every member of the Cabinet, and in fact by every man in public life in this country.

Mr. Macmillan was a Conservative who, like some Conservatives in this country, followed an independent line. He wrote a book called The Middle Way. Mr. Macmillan says that after 40 years spent in public life, 40 years in the House of Commons, six or eight of those years as Prime Minister of Great Britain, he has come to the conclusion that under modern circumstances you must have social security, that private business and government, state ownership, must work side by side. However, he went on to give as his final conclusion that the chief problem of a modern democratic society at this time, of a nation like Britain, and the principal thing it must do, is to first find out what are the priorities in the way of public need, and seek finally and most of all to discover, before starting to spend public money, just what the nation can afford.

This Government has been spending money without priority, although priorities have been urged on it. It has been spending money without priorities and without knowing just what the money was being spent for.

Honourable senators, I do not like to say this but I think it is true. I think our public men at the present time have become so obsessed with international affairs, so obsessed with the clichés, the cliché-ridden claims and statements about an affluent society, about what they call the Gross National Product, and so bemused by strutting the international stage, that they are forgetting why they were elected to office. They were elected to office to govern in Canada and not to try to set in order the whole house of the world.

I submit to honourable senators that we in Canada shall make small contribution towards setting the world's house in order unless we can first show capacity to set in order our own, and the events of this week have shown that in this, the Government has failed, and failed in a most melancholy way.

Of course I am supporting this bill. I am going to vote for this bill regardless, but I think that the public must not be permitted to forget what it was in the first place that brought this crisis about. This is the main thing. If we are not going to learn a lesson from what happened in Canada this week, with its peril and its threat of greater peril, then we are not going to learn anything at all.

I am sure that tomorrow or next week the railway unions will return to work, and for that we should all be grateful; but let the gratitude be for the common sense of the Canadian people, for the common sense of the railway unions, and not for the wisdom or the statesmanship of the Government of Canada at this time. This is not the last crisis we shall face. If the present Government of Canada continues—which God forbid—then other crises will follow, and they will not be solved permanently or well by the people who have brought about this present one.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I congratulate the honourable speaker who has just sat down for the skill and beauty of language with which he carried out his original principle, which he quoted in favour of rancour and—the word escapes me.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Say it in French.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: —and acerbity of political discussion. Certainly, his rancour and acerbity were surely up to his own desire, and I may say that I have no intention of replying in kind.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: You did not say "absurdity"—you said "acerbity"?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Yes, acerbity—acidity of meaning.

Were I to indulge in an attack which I could make on the Leader of the Opposition in the House of Commons to match my honourable friend's attack upon the Prime Minister, I submit to you it would be entirely out of place at this moment in this chamber. When the Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General is outside the door waiting to assent to this bill, when the leaders of the labour unions are ready to telegraph the instructions we are giving in this bill to their men to return to work, and when the business interests of Canada are waiting anxiously for the wheels of thousands of cars to start turning, it would be entirely out of place.

Hon. Mr. Walker: Let us not keep them waiting too long.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: No, let us not keep them waiting too long. My speech will be a short one—much shorter than that of the honourable gentleman who suggested that my speech should be short.

Hon. Mr. Walker: Mine took about eight minutes. You have taken five minutes already.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I have not yet taken up more than one minute. At all events, I am not going to compete with the honourable gentleman in the length of my speech.

I have certain things to say, but I do not propose to go through this bill in detail after listening to the eloquent and excellent speeches made by my colleagues, the honourable Leader of the Government, Senator Connolly (Ottawa West), and my honourable friend, Senator Croll. It is unnecessary to do so, but I do think it will serve some purpose if I make some short comments which I hope will be listened to by my friends in the labour unions outside this house.

I am not in favour of everything in this bill. I think that the men have been underpaid for a long time. Were I drawing this bill, I would draw it differently from the way in which the Government has drawn it, and I suppose every other honourable senator would say the same. I would have granted the men very nearly all that they asked, because even at that it would have only brought their wages up to a fair comparison of those paid in other industries. I speak with some knowledge when I say that. I have represented no less than 17 of the unions that are engaged in this dispute today. I have represented the running trades that are now involved for the past 30 years. Nobody has been appointed by the running trades but myself, until this last occasion, over the last 30 years. So, I think I can speak with some knowledge of the circumstances, the conditions, and the men involved in this dispute.

They are good men. They are law-abiding men. They are wise men too, as a rule. They form one of the finest classes of citizens we have in Canada. I want to make it clear that I am not in favour of only 18 per cent. I would have given them more.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: How much?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Never mind how much. It would have been very nearly all they asked— very nearly.

Hon. Mr. Walker: What was that?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: They were asking roughly 30 per cent, and we are offering them 18 per cent. However, that is my own personal view of this matter. I would not have made any reference to arbitration, but let me assure my honourable friend, Senator Croll, this bill does not establish arbitration at the end of the negotiations which will take place immediately following the enactment of the bill into law, and the return of the men to work.

At the present moment the Parliament of Canada has the power to pass a bill establishing arbitration. All this bill does is to transfer that power not from Parliament, but to the Executive. That is all it does. The probabilities are that it will never be acted upon. I have every hope it will never be acted upon, and had I been drawing the bill I would not have mentioned it. I would have simply told the men to go on with the negotiations, and left the future to take care of itself.

But, honourable senators, somebody had to draw this bill, and our constitutional arrangements are such that that duty fell upon the Executive. They have drawn the bill, and I think only the veriest of partisan would assert that they have not done so with every possible care, devotion and bona fide in an attempt to bring this strike to an end, and doing so in a manner that would not cripple too greatly the economy of our country.

We all might say it is a bad bill in some respects, but it is the only bill we have before us. It is the only measure we have for ending this disastrous strike. As such, I intend to support it, and I intend further to ask my friends in the railway unions—and I have many of them—to accept this bill, to return to their posts, and to look to the future for further concessions if that is their desire.

I am confident, honourable senators, that that is what is going to take place. I call your attention to the statement made by Mr. Kelly, the Vice-President of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, on the air last night to the effect that his union will obey the law. I have other information that leads me to be perfectly confident that immediately after this bill is assented to by the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, telegrams will go across the country asking these railway men to return to their work. I am also confident that similar telegrams will go from all other leaders instructing their members to obey the law as we lay it down in this bill, and that by the morning many of the trains will be running, particularly the passenger trains. So, setting aside all comparatively small criticisms, I am prepared to support this bill.

But let me say to my friends outside, who may perhaps hear my voice, that the Parliament of Canada is the citadel of freedom in Canada, and there is no other. We in Canada for the last hundred years have lived happily and peacefully together in probably the freest community in the whole world, and I do not exclude even England from that statement. We have been kind to one another. We have developed rapidly. We are free. Our women and children can walk the streets in peace and security and we have the rights and freedoms of free men. We look the whole world in the face, we bow to nobody, we take our hat off to nobody. That has been accomplished under parliamentary rule.

What is the alternative? If the laws of Canada are not to be observed by those who disagree with them in part or in whole, then what? What follows that? Is it chaos? Is it military rule? Is it a dictatorship? Or what is it?

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Anarchy.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Is it just the kind of chaos that would result when the employer goons on the one side and the plug-uglies, the gangsters, work in the ranks of the workers, fighting it out in the streets? I have seen street battles in the City of Toronto between these classes of people. Are we going back to that kind of life? I hope not.

Honourable senators, I suggest to you that the working men of this country, be they organized or otherwise, are those who would lose most were we to destroy the democratic institutions under which we have lived for the last hundred years. I appeal to all men, not only the leaders but those whom they lead, to think well before they go into wildcat strikes or any other kind of demonstrations contrary to the law that we are passing tonight, and then to take their place in our democratic society to bring about such changes in the law in future as they may think necessary in their own interests.

I appeal to them all—and they probably will listen to my words, if that is necessary, because I have been one of them and one with them for many years—and I commend to my fellow senators here the passage of this bill.

Hon. M. Wallace McCutcheon: Honourable senators, I am in complete agreement with Senator Roebuck, that the members of the railway unions will observe the law, whether it be the law as expressed in the bill in the House of Commons up to about 11 o'clock last night, or whether it be the law as expressed in the bill which we have before us now.

However, I say that we will look back on this day and on yesterday—when history is written—with some shame. We have been faced with naked power, despite Senator Roebuck's reference to his friends for whom he has acted for 30 or 40 years.

I have a copy of a letter in front of me, addressed to the Prime Minister, copies of which were sent to the Leader of the Opposition, to Mr. Douglas, to Mr. Caouette to Mr. Thompson, to Mr. Pickersgill and to Mr. Nicholson. It is on the record in the House of Commons. I will read but one sentence, the last sentence:

> We ask that you and your colleagues give most serious consideration to making amendments which would make this legislation acceptable and avoid putting the railway workers of Canada in a position in which they are likely to ignore parliamentary action.

Let us not hear any more from Senator Roebuck.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: What is wrong with that?

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Are you satisfied that they should avoid Parliament, that they should object to what Parliament has done?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Parliament has agreed to amend the bill, as it has done, and has not placed the members of the unions in a difficult position. What is the matter with that ?

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I did not say "in a difficult position". They say, "in a position where they will ignore Parliament".

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: That is a statement of fact.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: All right, you made it and you accept it? That is fine. I think the time has come when we should put a few facts on the record. We have been hearing for some three days about the railway workers. I am sympathetic to the railway workers and they deserve a wage increase of some kind; but when with bleeding heart the Toronto Daily Star says that they must have 25 per cent in order to come up to the standard which the Toronto Daily Star says is the right standard, that is, the standard of the durable goods industry, then we should take a look at that.

The fact is that at the end of December 1965 the average hourly earning of employees in the durable goods industry was $2.33. The fact is that at the same date the average hourly earning of the non-operating railway employees— of course, if we brought in the operating employees it would be higher— was $2.23. So they were 10 cents behind. An increase of 4 per cent, which is contemplated, would mean $2.30 and would put them about even, as of January 1, because each increase of one per cent means about 2.2 cents per hour. But then we have gone on, under this threat, and we have 4 per cent on July 1, 1966.

I do not object really to the 1966 proposals, but we have gone on to 4 per cent on January 1, 1967, and to 6 per cent on July 1, 1967. We have set the floor, we have provided for mediation and arbitration over and above the floor. What that means is 43 cents per hour. The expected increase in the durable goods index is 30 cents per hour. I am not going to quarrel particularly with that. That came out of the conciliation board. But I do say that I am getting a little tired sitting and listening about these poor people of whom we are taking advantage, for I say there is no advantage being taken of them at all. What has really happened, of course, is that the Government has deceived them.

The Prime Minister has been at great pains in the last day or two to say that there is no 30 per cent guideline. As a matter of fact, I agree, because the Prime Minister is not capable of announcing any guideline.

The fact is that on June 14, I think it was, the Prime Minister approved a settlement in which one of the unions represented in the railway dispute received 30 per cent. The Prime Minister is now blaming my friend Senator MacKenzie for that; he says, "The Government did not do it, the mediator did it." I never heard a more unfair statement, because of the Prime Minister did not have to accept the result.

Curiously enough, whether the Prime Minister set a 30 per cent guideline or not, that was the night when the railway unions hardened and when they walked out and said, "We do not need to stay here any more, we know what the Government is going to give us now." That is why we are here tonight. The Prime Minister, who suddenly became bold on August 23 and went on television, says the railways claim that they are in no position to increase wages so long as they are restricted by law from adjusting the charges they make for their services, thereby increasing their earnings. That was not news; most people in this country with any knowledge have known that for some years.

Then he goes on to say:

> Necessary increases in wages for railway workers since 1960 have, on three separate occasions, been met by government subsidies to the railways. Such subsidies are now costing the taxpayers of Canada $100 million a year. The government cannot continue to provide subsidies to pay railway workers without imposing higher taxes. This we are not prepared to ask Parliament to do.

This is the Prime Minister! Well, I do not think that he reached that decision that afternoon. Maybe he did—sometimes he reaches decisions very quickly. And then he goes on:

> We do, however, intend to ask Parliament immediately to pass transportation legislation based broadly—

—that is a nice word. I love adjectives!

Hon. Mr. Hayden: That is an adverb.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Is it?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Yes.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Well, I like them too.

> —based broadly on recommendations of the Royal Commission on Transportation. This legislation will give the railways greater freedom to adjust their charges to meet competition and increase their earnings. Therefore, it should enable the railways themselves to bear the burden of a legitimate increase in wages.

Now, there is the Prime Minister. He says that the subsidies are $100 million a year.

Now we come to Mr. Pickersgill. Somebody very rudely described Bill C-231, which is the National Transportation Bill, as being "a handy document." I have heard about a handy document in other places.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Soft-covered.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: In this handy document Mr. Pickersgill, contrary to what Mr. Justice Spence did, summarized. What he says about the bill is this:

> In place of the three special subsidy funds, it provides for a transitional subsidy to the railways which will start at approximately the present level of railway subsidy payments, namely, one hundred and ten million dollars per year—

Now, Mr. Pearson said it is $100 million and Mr. Pickersgill said it is $110 million. The Ottawa Citizen the night before last said it was $125 million.

> —and commencing in 1968 will decline at the rate of twelve and one-half per cent of the present subsidy each year.

I tried to ask a question of the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West), and it was quite proper for him not to accept my question, and when he finished, and having regard to the high note on which he finished, I felt to ask a vulgar question about money would be highly inappropriate.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): That will be the day!

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: But this bill we are considering will cost the railways $48 million this year. My friend Senator Croll, when I asked him the question, said, "Of course we have been paying these deficits all along." All right. And when the full 18 per cent is in effect—I am sorry, I have to stop to multiply—

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I thought you did it automatically.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: It will cost $134 million. The total subsidy is only $110 million and nobody sitting here will contest that that subsidy is necessary, because we have passed it. What is the Government trying to do to the people of Canada? Well, I will tell you what it is trying to do. It is trying, as usual, to deceive them.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: And I hope it will not be successful in deceiving them. That is what the Government is trying to do. To say that this National Transportation Bill will enable the railways to get into the position where they have meaningful collective bargaining, is utter nonsense. The Government knew last November, in fact they have known since they came to power that there could never be meaningful collective bargaining between railways and workers as long as they kept a freeze on the freight rates. Now they are saying, "Well, we are going to settle the strike." Of course, they should have intervened long ago or they should have implemented the MacPherson Report long ago. The MacPherson Report came down, or at least the third volume came down in June 1962. The Government of which I had the honour to be a member had the legislation printed. We were defeated in the first week in February 1963. The resolution was on the Order Paper. The bill, of course, never appeared. What did we hear from this great Government? Was there anything in the Speech from the Throne in 1963? Not a word. They were interested in the 60 days of decision; they were waiting for Walter Gordon's budget. In 1964 they made an announcement and brought down a bill which they did not have the courage to present.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Or the opportunity.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: You had lots of opportunity. I do not know what you were doing if you did not have opportunity.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It is not what we were doing.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: It was what you caused. In 1965 they made no reference to it, and in 1966 they made no reference to it. The only reason they have for producing the bill now is that they said, "My God, we have to settle this strike and we have to have an answer." And the answer will be this implementation, so-called, of the MacPherson Report. The fact is that the people of Canada should know that even if that bill is passed in this session, and even if this Government—but knowing the Government I doubt it—appoints the 17 commissioners that it contemplates and gets them organized and gets them to work, it will be 1969 before the railways get any benefit, and the people of Canada have to pay in the meantime. I am not saying there is anything wrong with it, but I am saying I want people to understand what the facts are.

The Government knew last November, December, January and February, that there could be no meaningful collective bargaining. There has been no meaningful collective bargaining between the railways and unions since 1960. How could there be? How could there be with the freight rate freeze? Yet the Prime Minister stood up in the House of Commons, according to what I read in the newspapers, and he is asked to intervene. He is asked to do what we did in 1960. He is asked to intervene and prevent the strike and he says, "No, we believe in the principle of collective bargaining." I am very fond of the Prime Minister as an individual, but that is one of the most hypocritical statements I have ever heard, because he knows there can be no meaningful collective bargaining. I am hopeful that if this national transportation legislation, properly amended, goes through, that in about three years we will restore meaningful collective bargaining to the trade unions and the railway field.

I know my colleagues are getting restless, and I have enough material here to speak for another hour and a half.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Go ahead.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: No, I am going to abbreviate it somewhat. My friend Senator O'Leary (Carleton) talked about inflation. I make the simple statement that, despite all the cries that were made, any of my friends who want to check what I am saying can read the Bank of Canada's statistical summary of August 1966, on page 79, and they will find that the consumer price index is galloping ahead today at a rate that was never touched while we were in power.

I can remember in 1962 and 1963 that we "devalued" the dollar. Of course, we never "devalued" the dollar. Prices were going to go up. "Tragedy" was going to come to Canada. Of course, it never did.

Honourable senators, I am not going to take the time to put this on the record. You can read how that index has gone up, and you can see what is happening today. That, of course, is partly why the labour people are, justifiably, saying, "We must have more." I do not blame them, but I still think that they do not have to follow the non-existent Pearson "guidelines."

Now, there is only one other thing I want to say, honourable senators. We are here because of the complete failure of the Government to face up to a fact and deal with it, a fact that was obvious months ago, but which they tried to talk away—"Collective bargaining. We believe in the principles of collective bargaining. We will not intervene." Nonsense! Nonsense! We are here because the Government failed to do what it should have done.

The railway men are out on strike and losing money because the Government failed to do what it should have done, and the economy is suffering, people tell me, to the extent of $15 million a day. Not being an economist I do not know where they get these figures, but I am sure if it lasts much longer it will be far more than $15 million a day, and all because the Government has failed to do what it should have done.

Tonight we are passing a bill, and I agree with my friend Senator Roebuck that the men will go back to work. We have a high regard for them. As a matter of fact, even if the bill had not been amended in the shameful way that it has been and under these pressures, I think that the men would still have gone back to work. I have great confidence in the members of the railway unions, and while I have not been as familiar with them over as long a period of years as has Senator Roebuck, I have some knowledge of them; they are responsible, law-abiding people.

Had the bill come through yesterday afternoon I would have voted for it because I wanted the men to go back to work, and they wanted to go back to work. However, having said that, I must say one or two other things, address one or two other remarks to the Government. In one sense they do not relate to what we are discussing tonight, but in the broad sense I think they do.

I say to this Government that it cannot continue to allow to essential workers the privilege of striking in areas in which the Government has jurisdiction. When I am here next mid-October or November I have no desire to be faced with a bill to tell the postal workers to go back to work because we are not going to give them a 50 per cent increase in pay.

I deplore the suggestion that the Prime Minister made when he introduced a bill respecting the Civil Service, which in due course no doubt will come before us. The bill provides for collective bargaining for associations of civil servants. With that I am in complete agreement, but then—and I have only the Prime Minister's statement as I read it in the Globe and Mail—they are going to go whole hog and give them the right to strike.

The Prime Minister went on to say, as I recall it, and I am sorry I have not got the quotation here, that only the non-essential civil servants would be allowed to strike. Well, I have a view that if we have any non-essential civil servants around here we should fire them. That would be one of the first dampeners on inflation. It would cut our budgetary processes. If it were not so late I would say a great deal about inflation and about the complete failure of this Government to control it.

That failure is inciting labour, and I do not blame labour, not at all. Here you have the consumer price index up by 4.8 points in the last 12 months. Putting it on a percentage basis we are up 2.2 per cent in the first six months of this year. Now, the Economic Council of Canada says that a tolerable increase is 2 per cent a year.

We in this country have rightly boasted—you have read the annual reports of the Economic Council and of the Governor of the Bank of Canada—that our prices have been more stable than in any industrial country in the Western world. However, at the moment we are just going down the toboggan slide and we are so far behind that it is not funny.

The Minister of Finance prepared a budget trying to restrain inflation. Can you convince any provincial government or any municipal government in Canada to exercise restraint, when the budgetary expenses of the Government of Canada in the first four months of the current fiscal year are approximately $300 million more than they were last year?

I could quote you the figures of the Department of Public Works. We were going to cut back on capital expenditures. What has happened? Expenditures are up. Why would you think that any province or any municipality would pay any attention to a government that says, "Well, do as I say but don't do as I do."

That is the position we are in tonight, gentlemen.

The Hon. the Speaker: I would remind honourable senators that when Senator Connolly speaks it will have the effect of closing the debate.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, let me say at once that this is not an occasion for a long speech in reply. Indeed, it would take a long time to reply adequately because we have had a very wide ranging debate. Tonight we have covered the whole spectrum of the problems that face the Government of Canada and we have had the spectacle of all of the sins and defects and problems that exist in the economy.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Not all.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Oh, yes —laid at the door of the Government. This is standard, and I think if we were on the other side perhaps we would be doing the same thing.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Not perhaps—that would be the case for sure.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I do want to say one thing about the 30 per cent guideline. I read earlier what Mr. Justice Munroe said about the 30 per cent increase granted to workers on the St. Lawrence Seaway system. This Government did not appoint Mr. Justice Munroe to the Supreme Court of British Columbia. He was appointed by the Government that preceded this one. Certainly he is an ornament to the bench of that province, and he is an experienced man in the field of conciliation in the industry we are discussing tonight. He made it very clear that this was a local situation, affecting a small number of people employed for a short period of the year. But if he did not do that, then it was done very clearly by a man who does not claim to be an orator, on television a few nights ago. I am referring to the President of the C.P.R., Mr. Ian Sinclair, who agreed thoroughly with what Mr. Justice Munroe said, but he put it in a much better way than I could state it here. I hope I am allowed to refer simply to Mr. Justice Munroe's statement, with which Mr. Sinclair concurred.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Unfortunately the railway men did not believe that.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): That may be so, and if they misunderstood, that is another problem.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I acquitted the Prime Minister of the 30 per cent guideline.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I beg your pardon?

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I say I acquitted the Prime Minister of establishing the 30 per cent guideline.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Thank you very much for making that statement. I want to say what I said earlier, that I have never claimed that the proposed transport legislation is going to be a cure-all or an end-all of all of the problems. I hope it will be a beginning.

I say to the members of the Opposition who have said that the Government is not and has not been concerned about inflation, that I wish they could sit at the council table and listen to the discussions of this problem, and hear of the attempts that are being made not only to cut government expenditure but to do everything possible to keep down prices in the interests of a sounder economy than the one we have. Inflation is certainly the first problem that faces the Government today, just as unemployment was the problem that faced the late Government. But that problem of unemployment fortunately was solved. I do not claim for this Government the credit for its solution entirely, but I think the steps taken by this Government had much to do with the ending of the unemployment that did exist. I do not blame the other Government for having created it either.

Having seen what was done about unemployment I say now I have confidence that this Government, having dealt strongly with the unemployment problem, will deal effectively and strongly with the problem of inflation.

In the second place, honourable senators, it may be—and I admit it—that collective bargaining in this industry, together with the procedures that have been followed, is outmoded. I do not think there is any question about that in view of the circumstances that exist in respect of the problems of both the trade unions and the companies. But, the law is on the statute books—the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act. It was up to the Government to show that it was ready and willing to abide by the provisions of that law, and to respect the positions that were conferred upon both the workers and the companies under that law. I respect this Government for that.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Having continued to keep the handcuffs on one of the parties. I admit the Government of which I was a member put the handcuffs on, but this Government has kept them on and it is now saying there must be free collective bargaining. This is nonsense.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I do not think anybody has ever said "free collective bargaining" in the sense my friend says it, without qualification, because I have qualified it here and he has qualified it as well. There is no misunderstanding between us on this point. What is between us is the means of free collective bargaining. The straitjackets in which both parties, labour and management, find themselves have resulted from joint failures in respect of both these procedures. I hope when the time comes for the legislation to be introduced in this house those procedures will be streamlined so that there will not be any fractious political opposition to the attempts that are made towards that end.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): With leave of the Senate, I move that the bill be read the third time now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

ADJOURNMENT

Leave having been given to revert to motions:

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate, that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, October 18, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

This is the date to which we adjourned on July 14 last. As honourable senators know, this adjournment is subject to recall, if necessary.

Motion agreed to.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that he had received the following communication:

GOVERNMENT HOUSE

Ottawa
1st September 1966

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Hon. Robert Taschereau, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, acting as Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 1st September, at 9.45 p.m. for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
A. G. Cherrier,
Assistant Secretary
to the Governor General.

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate,
Ottawa.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Robert Taschereau, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned and being come with their Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give Royal Assent to the following bill:

An Act to provide for the resumption of operations of railways and for the settlement of the existing dispute with respect to terms and conditions of employment between Railway Companies and their employees.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, October 18, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, September 13, 1966

The Senate met at 8 p.m., Hon. Maurice Bourget, P.C., Acting Speaker, in the Chair.

Prayers.

NEW SENATOR

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to inform the Senate that the Clerk has received a certificate from the Secretary of State of Canada showing that has been summoned to the Senate.

NEW SENATOR INTRODUCED

The Hon. the Acting Speaker having informed the Senate that there was a senator without waiting to be introduced:

The following honourable senator was introduced; presented Her Majesty's writ of summons, which was read by the Clerk Assistant; took the legally prescribed oath, which was administered by the Clerk, and was seated:

Hon. Chesley William Carter, of St. John's, Newfoundland, introduced between Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) and Hon. Mr. Basha.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker informed the Senate that the honourable senator named above had made and subscribed the declaration of qualification required by the British North America Act, 1867, in the presence of the Clerk of the Senate, the Commissioner appointed to receive and witness the said declaration.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, before we proceed with the business of the Senate may I, on your behalf, welcome Senator Carter to this chamber. He is not a stranger to us, having been on Parliament Hill for some seventeen years. I believe he was one of the first members elected from the Province of Newfoundland. He was elected on several occasions by acclamation, which speaks well for the reputation he enjoys among his own people. I know he will be a very valuable addition to the Senate. As a result of having Senator Carter among us, we also get a bonus because there is no more popular person on Parliament Hill today than Mrs. Carter.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

DISTINGUISHED VISITORS IN SENATE GALLERY

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I wish to draw your attention to the fact that in the gallery tonight we have as a very special guest Mr. William Wilberforce Kalema, Minister of Public Works from our sister Commonwealth country Uganda. Mr. Kalema is the Vice-President of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association and will become President at the meeting which is being held in Canada this year. Next year the meeting of the Association will be held in Uganda, and I can already see the lines forming for those who aspire to go to that meeting.

On your behalf and my own I welcome Mr. Kalema to the Senate of Canada tonight, and I invite all honourable senators who can do so to visit my chambers immediately after the sitting this evening, where they will have an opportunity of meeting Mr. Kalema personally.

I would mention that we also have in the gallery tonight the Secretary General of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, Mr. Robin Vanderfelt, and the Editor of Publications, Mr. Ian Grey, both of whom are from London and have already done magnificent work in connection with the opening activities of the Association which were held in Montreal this past weekend.

CONSUMER CREDIT

ENLARGEMENT OF REFERENCE TO JOINT COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to inform the Senate that the following message has been received from the House of Commons:

> Ordered: That the Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons appointed to inquire into and report upon the problems of consumer credit be instructed also to inquire into and report upon the trends in the cost of living in Canada and factors which may have contributed to changes in the cost of living in Canada in recent months;
> That the Committee have leave to sit notwithstanding any adjournment of this House; and
> That a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours thereof and to request the concurrence of that House thereto.

Attest.

Alistair Fraser, Clerk Assistant for The Clerk of the House of Commons

Honourable senators, when shall this message be taken into consideration?

Hon. John J. Connolly moved, with leave of the Senate:

That the Senate do agree that the Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons appointed to inquire into and report upon the problems of consumer credit be instructed also to inquire into and report upon the trends in the cost of living in Canada and factors which may have contributed to changes in the cost of living in Canada in recent months; and

That a message be sent to the House of Commons to inform that house accordingly.

He said: Honourable senators, I think it will be of assistance to remind the Senate that the Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on Consumer Credit was approved originally in this house on November 21, 1963, but the session was prorogued before the committee was able to commence its work.

The committee was reconstituted on March 11, 1964, and during that session held eighteen meetings. On March 23, 1966, the committee was reconstituted again in this house, and I shall read from page 317 of the Debates of the Senate the motion which was made at that time.

That the Senate do unite with the House of Commons in the appointment of a Joint Committee of both Houses of Parliament to inquire into and report upon the problem of consumer credit, more particularly, but not so as to restrict the generality of the foregoing, to inquire into and report upon the operation of Canadian legislation in relation thereto;

That twelve members of the Senate to be designated by the Senate at a later date be members of the joint committee;

That the said committee have power to call for persons, papers and records and examine witnesses; to report from time to time and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be deemed advisable, and to engage the services of counsel, accountants and such other clerical and technical personnel as may be deemed necessary, and to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate;

That the minutes of proceedings and evidence given before the joint committee during the Twenty-sixth Parliament be referred to the said committee and be made part of the records thereof; and

That a message be sent to the House of Commons to inform that house accordingly.

That motion was adopted unanimously.

On March 29, 1966 the Senate approved unanimously the following motion:

That the following senators be appointed to act on behalf of the Senate on the Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons to inquire into and report upon the problem of consumer credit, more particularly, but not so as to restrict the generality of the foregoing, to inquire into and report upon the operation of Canadian legislation in relation thereto, namely, the honourable Senators Croll, Davey, Deschatelets, Gershaw, Hastings, Hollett, Irvine, McGrand, Smith (Queens-Shelburne), Thorvaldson, Urquhart and Vaillancourt; and

That a message be sent to the House of Commons to inform that house accordingly.

On September 9 last in the House of Commons the following motion was moved:

That the Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons appointed by this House on March 15, 1966, to inquire into and report upon the problems of consumer credit, be instructed also to inquire into and report upon the trends in the cost of living in Canada and factors which may have contributed to changes in the cost of living in Canada in recent months;

And that a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours thereof and to request the concurrence of that House thereto.

The purpose of this motion which we now have before us for consideration is simply to enlarge the terms of reference of that joint committee. The motion is that the Senate do concur in the action taken by the other house.

I should say in the first place that basically the problem which is to be studied by this committee is inflation. The study of inflation is not new to the Senate, because in 1959 the Finance Committee of this house inquired into the question of inflation, and the report of the committee, under the able chairmanship of the late Senator Emerson, is to be found on page 553p of the Journals of the Senate of 1959.

I think it appropriate that I read the seven short sentences which summarize this very valuable report, and to suggest that the report might very well be the subject matter of consideration and study by the members of this committee. The summary reads as follows:

> To summarize, your committee concludes that:
> 1. Inflation is not inevitable.
> 2. We reject the doctrine of "creeping" inflation as in any way desirable for Canada.
> 3. The maintenance of reasonable stability of prices should be a basic aim of our economic policy along with our other aims for the achievement of high levels of employment and an adequate rate of economic growth.
> 4. Reasonable stability of prices is entirely compatible with and essential to the attainment of continued economic progress and high levels of employment.
> 5. Inflation constitutes a hidden tax which falls inequitably upon the public, with grave injustices upon those least able to protect themselves.
> 6. Inflation is harmful to our basic primary producers and weakens the competitive position of both our export and domestic industries.
> 7. Tools to contain inflation are available—what is necessary is the will and determination of the people and the authorities to use them.

Honourable senators, in the House of Commons, during the emergency sittings which were held a week ago, the Minister of Finance made a statement in which he indicated some of the steps being taken by the Government to deal with this problem with which everyone is concerned.

One of the steps was a proposal to discontinue the winter house-building incentive program. This program was introduced originally in the budget in 1963 and it was designed to try to relieve the problem of unemployment which was plaguing us at the time, particularly in the winter months.

The second step which he announced was that the Government proposed some restraint on the rate of increase on grants for research. A step of this kind is taken with reluctance, because research is so vital to economic growth. However, in this emergency one looks for programs where one would hope there would be relief without commensurate damage. This was one of the programs which was indicated for treatment.

The third program which was deferred was one which had been long promised by the Government and which because of other commitments it has been unable so far to fulfil, namely, the provision of certain scholarships for university students. This is not cancelled, but the Government proposes at this time that it should be deferred.

There have been in existence agreements between the federal authorities and certain of the provinces with regard to certain forestry programs. These programs are due to expire in March 1967. The Honourable Mr. Sharp announced in the House of Commons the other evening that these agreements would not be immediately renewed.

The minister also announced the hope and the determination of the Government to hold down expenditures in the field of defence. This must be done, of course, in a way which will not interfere with our commitments to the NATO alliance and in other areas where defence commitments are inescapable.

Some restraint has been exercised already by the federal Government on capital expenses particularly in the field of construction. It is hoped that these deferments of such projects can be extended even more, in the hope that much of the heat will be taken out of the pressures which exist in the construction industry.

The other major item, of which honourable senators are quite aware because of the amount of publicity it has received in the press, was a decision that the coming into force of the medicare program would be deferred from July 1, 1967 to July 1, 1968.

When the budget was presented by the Minister of Finance in the spring of this year, it was thought by him and his advisers that certain steps should be taken which were of an anti-inflationary character. One of those steps was to increase the personal income tax by some nine and a half per cent; another was to reduce temporarily the capital cost allowances theretofore permitted under the tax act. A third step was to provide for a tax in the corporation field which would be refundable—under conditions of which honourable senators are aware.

Honourable senators, the problem of wage control and of price control in a federal state, as opposed to the position which obtains in a unitary state, is one of jurisdiction. During war time the War Measures Act is available and, as a result of the emergency of war, prices and wages were controlled during the Second World War.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Up to a point.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Up to a point and as far as was possible.

The honourable senator who has just interjected was one of those who contributed mightily to the success that program enjoyed, and I am glad to mention this here tonight.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Therefore, it is impossible, without the concurrence of the provinces, to do much in the way of price control and wage control in a legislative way. On the other hand, sometimes the power of persuasion, sometimes the setting of an atmosphere, the creation of a climate, can do much. It is hoped that some of the measures which the Government has proposed will help to create that kind of climate, develop that kind of atmosphere, which might, in the words of the journalists, "cool off the economy".

I think it can be said that we have virtually full employment in Canada now. That does not apply everywhere, as there are always pockets of unemployment; but we virtually have full employment, and in some places over-employment.

With full employment there has come into the economy a number of elements which are difficult to handle and are damaging to the economy and to the people. Wage spirals develop because of the competition for workers. Workers, seeing the kind of prosperity enjoyed in the country, feel that they should get part of that prosperity. What they have to sell is their services and they sell them in the form of wages. Therefore, they try to get higher wages.

Price increases are inevitable, too, first of all because of the increased demand created as a result of full employment. The increases are also attributable to the fact that the costs of the items that go into manufactured products—and, indeed, into all kinds of products, sold both domestically and abroad—are rising as well.

There are profit increases. The profit pictures of the majority of Canadian corporations that have been so important to the economy of our country in the past, in the extensive industrial expansion since 1945, show that those companies have had great profit years more recently.

One should remember that it is highly desirable for these companies to show a good profit record, if they are to attract investment capital in an economy which gives, I hope, more than just lip service to private enterprise. The cost of money is increasing, the cost of food is increasing. These are the two items which more than anything else concern the average citizen. If he has to pay more for a mortgage when building or buying a house, or pay more for food and the other necessities of life and the additional items now considered to be part of our standard of living, then he will feel the pinch of rising prices when his income remains unchanged.

I do not wish to speak at length tonight on the question of productivity, but it is a very important factor in the development of our economy. It is, of course, important to the domestic market that our producers be competitive, but it is particularly important to a country that depends so much for its prosperity upon its sales abroad. Therefore there is a definite relationship between productivity and costs, between productivity and wages, and between productivity and profits.

These are things that concern us all. The idea of having these problems aired before a Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons, which I hope will begin its work as soon as possible, certainly during the recess, is very important. I think this will further help to create the kind of climate to which I alluded earlier. Speeches alone will not do it. The committee will have the opportunity of hearing representatives of the consumers, of the producers, of trade unions, economists and industrialists. In the result, I think the public generally will have a better concept of the problem that faces not only the Government and Parliament but the whole of the Canadian people.

It is also expected that some time this fall the result of a special study by the Economic Council of Canada in this field will be available. I am sure this joint committee will have an opportunity of considering that report, and will find it very valuable to them.

I am sure we all agree, as your attendance here so readily tonight would indicate—having been called back a second time from vacation to deal with public business—that some great good can come from the deliberations of this committee. I commend this motion to the Senate.

Hon. M. Wallace McCutcheon: Honourable senators, once again I rise almost overwhelmed by the authority and the earnestness of the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West). Before dealing with what he has said, let me also pay my tribute to our friend in the gallery, the Vice-President of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association. May I remind the Leader of the Government, as I mentioned to him at lunch today, that I am first in line to go to the meeting next year. I do not wish that to be overlooked.

Honourable senators, this is the innocent type of resolution that could possibly be passed without comment or debate, and I must confess that if my honourable friend the Leader of the Government had not become the great apologist for the Minister of Finance I would speak much more briefly than I intend to speak now.

The Leader of the Government took some of my words out of my mouth, because I proposed to refer to the Standing Committee on Finance which was instructed to study the threat of inflation in 1959, and which reported back on July 14 of that year. In the course of its ten sittings it heard Professor Frank Knox of Queen's University, the Governor of the Bank of Canada and many other people. Then it reported, and its conclusions were as read by the Leader of the Government. One item he did not read—this of course was not part of the conclusions, and I am not being critical—but he might have included these words:

> Your committee records its deep appreciation of the invaluable help received from its consultant and adviser, Dr. John J. Deutsch.

As I recall, Dr. Deutsch gave a press release or made a speech or statement about two days after Mr. Sharp made his statement on September 8, in which he suggested that there were certain priorities in this country, and that one of the great priorities was the question of education at the post-secondary school and post-graduate levels. Mr. Sharp, according to the press, when questioned said he did not need Dr. Deutsch to tell him that; on the other hand, that is one of the anti-inflationary measures Mr. Sharp has introduced.

I did not intend to discuss this point tonight, honourable senators, but the Leader of the Government has forced me to do so. Imagine saying, "We are going to slow down research expenditures as an anti-inflationary measure." Mr. Sharp is an economist; I am not. Mr. Sharp knows better. There is no excuse for that at all.

The Leader of the Government, reading the list of conclusions by the earlier committee, read these words:

> Tools to contain inflation are available—what is necessary is the will and determination of the people and the authorities to use them.

That is all we lack today, the will and determination of the authorities.

The so-called anti-inflationary measures brought in in the budget of March of this year were criticized at least by myself as being incapable of accomplishing what they were designed to accomplish. The Minister of Finance now admits that they did not accomplish what he designed them to do, and so now he is standing up and telling us, "Well, I am going to cut back on research. I am not going to go ahead as fast as I would like to; I am going to cut back on winter house-building bonuses." That was announced a long time ago. He also says, "I am not going to go ahead as fast with university grants."

Hon. Mr. Choquette: University scholarships.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Well, so far as university scholarships are concerned, of course he was never going to bring in scholarships anyway. I was in fact thinking of general university grants. These scholarships have been on the books for a number of years, but I would like to see any government of Canada try to grant scholarships in the Province of Quebec.

The Minister of Finance is also going to put medicare back a year. As a matter of fact I am in complete accord with that course. Sometimes wise decisions are made on the wrong basis, because putting medicare back a year is not an anti-inflationary measure. Putting medicare back a year will fortunately give us another year to discuss the matter and to see if we can work out our problems with the provinces, but to say that it will control inflation is just a sham.

As I have said, honourable senators, I did not intend to take this position until the Leader of the Government became the great apologist for the Minister of Finance, which he so demonstrated in the last few minutes. What the Minister of Finance has given the people of Canada is an amendment to the powers of a committee and a threat which nobody knows in what form or when he will carry it out. Something has been said somewhere about not threshing old straw the second time.

The reference in 1959 to the Standing Committee of the Senate on Finance was a reference designed to embarrass the Government of that day.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I am sorry, but I cannot agree with you.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I could read the vote, but I will not embarrass the honourable Leader of the Government. It was designed to embarrass the Government of that day.

I was a little shocked when I listened to the Leader of the Government telling us how long the Joint Committee on Consumer Credit has been going—November 1963, March 1964, March 1965, and March 1966. I can assure honourable senators that if it takes as long to go into this question of rising costs and the increase in the cost of living we will be in either a bust or a new boom, and in either case we shall not have to worry about the report of the committee. All I am saying is that this reference to the committee, and this extension of its powers, is a sham to deceive the people of Canada.

Mr. Sharp has said—he sent me his press release—that this will be educational. We do not need any more educational material than we have already. Has Dr. Deutsch changed his views as to the causes of inflation? He was the adviser to the Senate in 1959, and is now the Chairman of the Economic Council of Canada. He occasionally makes statements which I am afraid may embarrass the Government, but of course that is his privilege.

The reason why we are here tonight, honourable senators, is not to agree to this sham extension of the terms of reference of this committee, but because on amendment in the House of Commons it was moved that this committee have leave to sit notwithstanding any adjournment of this house. I should like to ask my honourable friend Senator Croll, at the conclusion of my remarks, if he will tell me of the plans he as co-chairman of the committee has in this respect, because I read in the press that his co-chairman has said that the committee hopes to get down to work in three or four weeks.

Hon. Mr. Croll: No; in about ten days.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: That is what was reported in the press. I read it in a paper that is not very unkind to the Liberals, the Globe and Mail. It also implied that Mr. Basford meant after the recess.

Honourable senators, we are not going to oppose this at all, but let us not try to bemuse either ourselves or the public of Canada by thinking that this is making any contribution to the problem that faces us today, because it is not. Anybody who wants to know about the classic causes of inflation can find them all here. Anybody who wants these charts brought up to date can do it for themselves by using the material that is available now. This committee may have served some useful purpose, but I, as a person who thought he kept abreast of what was going on in the country, never heard of it until I did a little research after the Senate was called back. So, when Mr. Sharp says that this will help the public obtain a general understanding and make them save their money instead of spending it, all I say is that I am not convinced.

I shall refrain from trying to review item by item the honourable Leader of the Government's defence of what the Government has done, but I shall ask a few questions. Will he rise and tell me specifically where has been this restraint on capital construction? Where is the evidence of it? It is certainly not in the spending figures. Sure, they have not built a rink in Vancouver, but I do not think they ever intended to. But, where is the item in the estimates that has been thrown out?

The honourable Leader of the Government seemed to imply that the Government would put in price and wage controls but for the fact that this was not a unitary state; it is a federal state. The honourable gentleman knows just as well as I do that price and wage control in a democratic state in peacetime, whether it be a unitary state or a federal state, is impossible.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It is done in England.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: It is not done in England. There are no controls in that country. There are so-called guidelines, but prices and wages are going up, and there is no law about it. There is only a speech by the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom. I am very sympathetic to the position in which he finds himself, but this is not being done in England and it is not being done anywhere in a democratic state in the Western world.

Hon. Mr. Croll: There is an Act of Parliament.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: There is not. Let not the Leader of the Government suggest that if this were a unitary state the Government would put in price and wage control.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I did not say anything of the sort at all.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Well, that was the inference. I do not know why the honourable Leader of the Government laboured the fact.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I did not labour it. I mentioned it.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: It is a matter of degree. What the people of Canada are looking for today is not an extension of the terms of reference of the Joint Committee on Consumer Credit, which has been sitting for three years and has yet to bring in any report. What they are looking for is some leadership and some guidance from the Government of this country, which they have failed absolutely to get, and which the Minister of Finance failed to give them last Thursday night. They have only exhortations. When they look around they say, "That is all very well. That is what he says, but what is he doing?" The answer is "Nothing."

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, in the first instance I should like to join in the welcome to our friends in the gallery, and particularly that to the Vice-President of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association who will shortly be President. He is a very distinguished member of that organization. I welcome him here and hope to meet him later this evening when I have an opportunity of accepting the kind invitation of the honourable Leader of the Government. As a Past-President of the organization I welcome him as a prospective President.

Let me address myself now to this very serious subject.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Would you like to be second in line to Senator McCutcheon?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: No, I do not think so, although I would certainly like to visit Uganda.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I would too. I am right behind you.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I do not like standing in line. Perhaps that is one of my natural characteristics. I do not like being marshalled into line.

In attacking the problem before us I shall express my thoughts in connection with the matter in a humble way, and in doing so I shall not speak politically, but I do think that my honourable friend Senator McCutcheon might have waited until this committee had had an opprtunity of proving itself before accusing it of being a sham and declaring that its work will be valueless.

I hope that in saying that it was a sham, he did not include in his charge my good deskmate Senator Croll, who is joint chairman of that committee and who will be charged, no doubt, with much of its responsibility, and to whom we look hopefully and with some confidence for real results.

In opening, I would like to express my accord with the motion and say to the leader that he was entirely justified in having the Speaker recall us on this occasion to reconsider the wording of the reference to the Special Joint Committee on Consumer Credit, of which my friend Senator Croll is joint chairman.

The purpose of the amendment is to include that very important topic of the day, and of yesterday as well, the problem of inflation. Notwithstanding what the Finance Committee did—its recommendations were very nebulous and little followed from them—and notwithstanding the fact that the Economic Council is studying the question, in my judgment it is high time that a real inquiry were made into this important subject, a subject that seems to be little understood and, although I do not wish to appear egotistical in the matter, frequently misunderstood.

I think it was when that report was made in 1959 that I declared in the debate which followed that I was opposed to unstable money. I said I advocated an honest dollar, and by that I meant a dollar that would buy today what it bought yesterday and would buy tomorrow, that any other currency was dishonest currency, dishonest money.

There is an old saying, as you know, that honesty is the best policy. That is a statement with which I agree, and we have had ample proof in recent years that the monetary dishonesty from which we have suffered has been very bad policy indeed.

I recognize, of course, that the degrading of the currency will relieve the debtor at the expense of the creditor, and thus temporarily stimulate the economy, but it is at the cost of cruelty and injustice to a very large number of people, and I am opposed to it.

There may be some excuse for such a policy in times of depression, although I would not advocate it even then, but now we are in what is generally understood and described as a booming economy. Yet we have been degrading our money in good times and bad from year to year ever since the early stages of the First Great War.

In periods of depression, of course, depreciating or devaluing the dollar can be used in a number of ways. It will moderate rents and land values by lightening the weight of the dollar. It will reduce real wages. It will cut down the weight of bonds and mortgages and notes and debts of every kind, including, by the way, the national debt, the provincial debt and the municipal debt—but at a cost of uncertainty and inequity in business transactions.

It has been a sad policy for those who by industry and frugality have gathered some funds for their declining years. It has been a cruel policy for those who have been obliged to depend upon pensions or, in fact, anybody who has had to depend on fixed incomes payable in dollars. It has been a vitiating policy in industrial relations. Wage rates honestly established and happily accepted have been stealthily disrupted, and employers and employees alike have been forced into industrial warfare.

The employees have been required by such conditions to fight for their standard of living, and the employers have been forced to increase their prices in order to recoup themselves for increased expenditures.

We have recently experienced a national railway crisis caused in the main by this thief in the night who pokes his nose into every pay envelope. This constantly changing measure of values is the prime cause, in my judgment, of the industrial unrest which you will find at the moment, accentuated over previous years, from coast to coast.

And so I say that it is high time that someone with the courage to face the facts inquires into this problem of inflation, what it is, what is its cause and what can be done to counteract it or, shall I say, cure it. I respectfully request, and I shall try to make myself clear, that this committee deal with the whole subject because, as far as I can follow the discussions in the newspapers and in Parliament and on the street, the only complaint that you hear is of rising commodity prices and nothing about its corollary, falling money. Nothing is said about that.

It is elementary, is it not, that in every sale and purchase you have two factors: one, the value of the goods sold and, two, the value of the consideration given in payment. The value of the commodity may be influenced by the cost to produce, and more directly and primarily by supply and demand; that is what you hear discussed, and that only.

Equally, the value of money also will fluctuate. It is not because of the cost of production, because all you need in the matter of folding money is a printing press, but it certainly will vary and fluctuate by the regular principles of supply and demand. Both of these factors control prices and, therefore, control and influence the cost of living.

In my opinion—and I am merely stating a fact as I observe it—commodity values have not altered greatly in Canada in recent years, except as they are measured in money, that constantly shrinking monetary yardstick.

The tractor and the combine and other farm implements have quadrupled the productive power of the farmer, and yet food prices go up. This is not because of any scarcity in the products of the farm. We export wheat by the millions of bushels. Prices of farm products go up because money goes down. No other reason. I sometimes marvel, honourable senators, at the productive capacity of our factories, a marvelous capacity that has increased vastly in recent years. Yet commodity prices are going up at the same time that commodity productivity has vastly increased.

Why do commodity prices go up? I submit to you it is because the purchasing power of the Canadian dollar has gone down and is still going down, although the gross national product of our factories and people of Canada during recent years has increased steadily until today it has reached fantastic figures.

Why, then, does the dollar go down and what can be done to meet the conditions? Why does it go down? That is the $64 question before us right now. It is the riddle of the sphinx which "not to answer is to be destroyed." That is the question which this committee should answer and must answer if it would fulfil the obligations which we are placing on it.

Honourable senators who have long memories will recollect the reliability of the pound sterling and of the Canadian dollar in the years which preceded the First Great War. I think I will strike a response when I remind you that we used to consider the pound and talk about the pound as being "as sound as the rock of Gibraltar." The Canadian dollar during that period also varied very little. The reason was obvious. It was that the dollar was a governmental promise to pay on demand a dollar's worth of gold, which had a commercial value. So, except that gold might fluctuate slightly, the dollar did not and could not fluctuate very greatly. But during that First World War we were financing our military operations very largely with governmental promises, and so our obligations very soon outran our gold resources and consequently we went off the gold standard.

What is important is this, that ever since that time the Canadian dollar has depended entirely on supply and demand, influenced perhaps slightly by public sentiment as to the value of the dollar. The principle which was behind the level of the purchasing power of the dollar, ever since early in the First Great War, is supply and demand, the good old principle.

Honourable senators may remember that, during that war we appointed committees for the sale of victory bonds, which were governmental promises to pay and which were used much like folding money, notwithstanding that they carried an interest payment. Very shortly, as a result of our effort to sell bonds, the supply became greater than the demand. So drastically did the supply of money become greater than demand, and so fast did money sink in purchasing power that prices went up drastically. Generally speaking, it took a dollar to buy a bushel of wheat at the head of the lakes prior to that time, but a little later, due to changing money values, it took four dollars to buy a bushel of wheat. That was inflation, real inflation. The well-established principle of supply and demand lowered the purchasing power of the Canadian dollar at that time and raised commodity prices to fantastic levels.

That was the situation very nearly half a century ago. What is the situation today? The price of commodities is going up and up, notwithstanding that the supply of commodities is not decreasing but on the contrary has increased very rapidly, even on a per capita basis. What, then, of the supplies of money with which commodities are purchased, thus governing prices and therefore affecting the cost of living?

The most effective of government promises in regard to supply and demand is the currency in circulation. I pause to point out that if there were any doubts with regard to the Canadian dollar, about the soundness of our money, financiers would at once sell Canadian and the supply of Canadian dollars would so exceed the demand for Canadian dollars that Canadian dollars would go down. The exchange rate on the New York world money market would respond immediately and the exchange as against the Canadian dollar would increase. But no one, not even on the lunatic fringe, has any doubt as to soundness of the Canadian dollar. Then, why is the Canadian rate on the world market in New York and elsewhere 10 per cent or thereabouts less than American?

I wonder whether honourable senators ever thought to inquire as to the supply of Canadian dollars in circulation. Will it surprise you to learn that Canadian money in circulation has doubled in the last 20 years. It has increased half as much again in the last 10 years. Will you be surprised if I tell you that the Canadian money—that is, bills, notes, folding money and coin—in circulation as of July 27, 1966, within the last two months, was $2,390,000,000, very nearly $2,400,000,000. That is sufficient to put $120 in the pocket of every man, woman and child of the almost 20,000,000 population in Canada today.

Realizing that tremendous sum, even per capita, will you pause to consider the amount in circulation, say, 20 years ago. I am going D.B.S. figures when I quote that on May 31, 1946, just 20 years ago, the amount was $1,059,000,000, less than half the amount now in circulation—or, on a per capita basis of the then population, about $86 for every man, woman and child in Canada.

I am not relying entirely on theory. Honourable senators have a vivid recollection of what took place in Germany, where an increase in the amount of money in circulation brought about a terrible disaster. By simply keeping the printing presses running, the German authorities depreciated the value of the German mark to zero. We have not done anything so drastic, but I mention the German experience because I want you to realize that if you increase the amount of money in circulation you depreciate its value. The corollary of that statement is equally true, that is, if you cease to force money into circulation you can increase its value. There is no difficulty about it at all.

Now, you may ask me, "Why this generosity in the supply of Canadian money in circulation?" Do I answer your question when I remind you that money in circulation is in the nature of a loan from the public, engineered by the Finance Department, irrespective of the government in office, without interest? An interest-free loan of $1 billion is something—it is something to the money-conscious people who control our financial affairs, irrespective of the party in office,—if they can get away with it. The Finance Department, with its handmaiden the Bank of Canada, has been pushing money into circulation year by year in amounts so great that supply and demand has lowered its purchasing power. This in turn has raised commodity prices and in consequence has brought disservice to every household in our country.

May I at this stage, honourable senators, place in Hansard a D.B.S. statement showing the amount of money in circulation during the last few years?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

(The statement follows)

Currency in circulation in Canada and population at specified dates

Date	Canada Population as at June 1 (thousands)	Currency (notes and coins) in Circulation as at May 31 ($ million)
1956	16,081	1,527
1961	18,238	1,825
1962	18,570	1,939
1963	18,896	2,043
1964	19,235	2,128
1965	19,571	2,204
1966	19,919	2,390* (as at July 27)

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I have a copy for the Leader of the Government, a copy for the Leader of the Opposition, and one for my deskmate Senator Croll who is joint chairman of the committee.

I am confident, and I have history to support me as well as experience and common logic, that by increasing the amount of money in circulation you depreciate its value, and when you depreciate its value prices rise. True, there are other factors such as the leader has mentioned. If we could increase our productivity more than we have done in the past, although in fact we have increased productivity very considerably, we would counteract to some extent the effect of depreciation of money. Supply and demand would then lower the value of commodities but that in itself would hardly correct the situation we have today, which is due to the drastic reduction in the purchasing power of our dollar. It would only help. I am equally confident that the continuance of the downward trend in the value of Canadian money can be halted and can even be reversed if our financial authorities take the necessary steps which I hope this committee will make clear and force upon the Government.

In my judgment it is within the power of the Minister of Finance to do a great service to the Canadian people by gently reversing this rising cost of living that is bedeviling family life in Canada. I commend this problem to the attention of the committee with every confidence that its chairmen and members have the courage to face the facts. I hope that they will recommend such changes in financial policy, particularly monetary policy, as the situation warrants.

At the same time I insist that they consider both sides of the phenomenon, not merely the value of commodities, not only why prices are going up, but also why the value of money is going down. The committee can render great service to our people by a courageous and intelligent diagnosis of the malady from which we suffer. I am not asking for any drastic changes; all I ask is that the dollar should remain steady and that the present trend should be reversed. If this were achieved the retrenchments recently announced by the Government would become unnecessary.

Honourable senators, I thank you for your attention and I commend this subject to the very serious, intelligent and courageous consideration of honourable senators and of the members of this committee.

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, I do not wish to detain the house for very long. May I at the outset mention to the new senators that one of the great advantages of being in the Senate is that you can sit back and listen to knowledge, learning and erudition presented in the manner which we have just heard from the last speaker. One does not have to agree with what my friend has said but one can listen, learn and benefit from it.

One of the reasons I stood up was to add a little to the knowledge of Senator McCutcheon. If we are going to send him to the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association meeting next year, I should say to the outstanding citizen from Uganda, who is here tonight, that we shall be sending a man who is knowledgeable on all things Canadian. I shall take a moment to fill him in, so that he will go first class.

The Joint Committee on Consumer Credit was established a couple of years ago as a result of a bill introduced in this house to make provision for the disclosure of information in respect of finance charges.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Your bill.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Yes; thank you for mentioning it. After many years of discussion of this bill, I think we can safely say that we are the ancestors of this committee, irrespective of what else has been sent from the House of Commons for this committee to consider.

The point was made that we have been hearing evidence for some years and that the report is not yet ready. That is true. But the report is now being prepared. Let me outline for a moment what has happened. The purpose of the original bill was to require finance companies to disclose in dollars and cents the rates of interest being charged. What has happened in the meantime? The Province of Nova Scotia has passed a bill dealing with this subject. Ontario has done likewise. The Bank Act provides for full disclosure of interest. The Province of Manitoba dealt with the matter, as have both Alberta and Saskatchewan. These bills deal with varying aspects of the subject which was before the committee on Consumer Credit for consideration.

It is true that this question lies within their provincial jurisdiction, but their action has been the direct result of what we undertook here at that time.

I am not going to say anything more about that subject tonight, except to indicate to you the fact that thousands of consumers across this country have benefited already as a result of the work undertaken by the Senate in establishing the Joint Committee on Consumer Credit.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): By the creation of a favourable climate.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Both the climate and actual results that followed. More will follow, I hope, after the report.

As to the motion now before us, I should mention that notice has already been given to the members of the committee on both sides of the house to meet for discussion after we rise tonight. The members of the Steering Committee have been summoned from British Columbia, Alberta, Ontario, Quebec. They will be here tomorrow for a meeting at 10 o'clock in the morning, when we shall decide what staff we need, and make plans for the hearing of witnesses. My purpose in calling the group together tonight is to obtain some advice as to how we should proceed. It is my hope that we shall be at work within ten days. Every member of the committee wants to get to work as quickly as possible. If we can commence our work and have witnesses appear before the committee within ten days, we shall be doing remarkably well.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, if no other honourable senator wishes to speak I would like, with the consent of the house, to say something more. We are not debating a bill, and in speaking now I do not close the debate.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Senator McCutcheon—I am sorry he is not in the chamber at the moment, but I would say this in the same way if he were—rather charges me with the offence, if you will—although it is not too heinous—of being an apologist for the Minister of Finance. In the first place I say, and I hope without any bravado, that although there may be many people in public life for whom apologies must be made, none are needed for the Minister of Finance of Canada.

In the second place, I feel it is my duty, because I am bound by the decisions of the Government, to come here and say what the Government has done in respect of these matters. Some of the honourable gentlemen opposite may say: "This is not enough. You do not go far enough. You do not do the right things. You go in the wrong direction." That is their right, but I have the responsibility, as a member of the Government of Canada, of coming here and speaking as frankly and clearly as I can about programs and projects so that the members of this house, as is their due, will know what the Government is attempting to do.

Senator McCutcheon, in respect of education, complained that the research program is going to be restricted, and said that this is a bad thing. I hope honourable senators will remember the way I discussed the point in connection with research. I said only that plans had been made to increase the amount of money that was going to be made available to the various research institutions in this country, and at no time was there a proposal to reduce the amount. Very soon I hope it will be possible to go on with increases in the allocation of moneys for this very important work.

I point out that there is no intention whatever of cutting down on university grants, which were initiated by the party to which I belong, increased by the party represented by the honourable gentleman opposite, and further increased when our party came back into office. I feel sure that this program, which has had a good deal to do with furthering higher education in this country, is not going to be cut back.

There is no proposal to cut back either in respect of another popular program that has been useful in the field of education, namely, that which is called the Student Loan program, and which is working well.

Senator McCutcheon made a point about the last item in the finding of the 1959 committee of the Senate on finance, and I quote it again:

> Tools to contain inflation are available—what is necessary is the will and determination of the people and the authorities to use them.

It is hoped that as a result of this reference to the committee, and the publicity that will flow from the discussions that go on in the committee on the evidence adduced before it, there will be generated on the part of the people a will and a determination that may very well be helpful in this whole approach to the problem of inflation.

Honourable senators, the list of not only monetary but fiscal and economic policies and projects announced by the Minister of Finance, to which I made reference, and which is by no means complete, indicates a will on the part of the Government—if Senator McCutcheon, when he uses the word "authorities," means the Government—and a determination to do something about this problem. If an apology is necessary, then I make it but I am rather proud of the way in which they have tackled it.

I am particularly proud also of the fact that at this stage, within six months of the time of his budget, Mr. Sharp has said: "Perhaps I did not go far enough at that time. I now feel I have not gone far enough, but the situation then was not the situation now. I want now to go further."

Senator McCutcheon suggests that the postponement of medicare is not going to be anti-inflationary. Tomorrow morning the Tax Structure Committee is going to meet in this chamber. If medicare is going to be started by July 1, 1967 then there will have to be a good deal of spending not only on the part of the Canadian Government but on the part of the provincial governments that are going to participate in the plan. That spending which could have been inflationary has been deferred, and will be deferred. Honourable senators may believe me when I say it took a lot of soul searching for the Government to come to this kind of a decision because of the importance of the program.

I am glad that Senator Macdonald from Brantford is present this evening. He was the Leader of the Government when we were in opposition and when the 1959 Committee on Finance had referred to it the problem of inflation. He was also the Leader of the Government when the Special Committee of the Senate on Manpower and Employment was established, and he gave leadership in the setting up of that committee. All the honourable gentlemen on the front benches of this chamber were here at that time, and honourable senators opposite may take my word for it when I say that those were important and valuable studies. The reports of those committees were invaluable to the Government of the day.

But, let me make this point very clear, because it was clear in my mind and I am sure it was clear in the minds of others, that neither of those studies was undertaken for the purpose of embarrassing the Government of the day. They were undertaken for the purpose of helping the Government of the day to combat the problems that it then faced. First, there was inflation, and, second, there was the constructive use of manpower. My honourable friend will remember the good things that came from those studies. One was the Vocational Training Program, and there were many others.

I do not consider this reference to the committee a sham, in any sense of the word. Perhaps I was wrong when I suggested, as I did in my interjection in Senator McCutcheon's speech, that the British have legislation to control prices and wages. Certainly, if they have not, they do have the power to make regulations, to legislate.

Hon. Mr. Croll: To discipline, too.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): They can take this step, but it could be that as a result of creating the kind of atmosphere and climate which the British Government has succeeded in creating in an emergency infinitely worse than ours, they may very well not have to take the step.

I do not say that this committee will be able to do that, because the emergency in this country is not of that character. But I think this committee can contribute a great deal towards helping people solve this problem by urging them, as the Senate committee of 1959 suggested, to be determined and to have the will to deal with it.

Senator McCutcheon asks for evidence of restrictions on capital expenditures; he does not see them in the Estimates. One of the reasons one does not see them in the Estimates is because they have been cut out of the Estimates. However, this committee will look at that question and will find out where the Government has decided to defer capital expenditures.

I am always pleased to hear Senator Roebuck talk. He talked almost exclusively on the question of monetary policy. I am one of those who think that perhaps we have relied too much in the past on monetary policy in this country to cure our ills. Perhaps we should be doing more in the fiscal field, and these steps that the Minister of Finance is taking are in this line.

Perhaps we should be relying more and more on economic policy, on fiscal action and on steps such as those which are proposed by many to restrict the amount of spending.

I think the Senate also with its background of experience in studies of this kind can give a real impetus to the work of this committee. Personally, I am sure we all have very great confidence in the co-chairman (Hon. Mr. Croll) and in the initiative that he has shown on other occasions in respect of committee work, the last one being the Committee on Aging. I think we can rely upon his youth as well as his drive to accomplish a great deal through this committee.

Motion agreed to.

JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN COMMONS MEMBERSHIP

The Hon. the Acting Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the name of Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands) has been substituted for that of Mr. Scott (Danforth) on the list of members appointed to serve on the Joint Committee on Consumer Credit.

JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN SENATE MEMBERSHIP

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West), with leave of the Senate, moved:

> That the names of the Honourable Senators Carter, McDonald and O'Leary (Antigonish-Guysborough) be substituted for those of the Honourable Senators Gershaw, Smith (Queens-Shelburne) and Irvine on the list of senators serving on the Joint Committee on Consumer Credit; and
> That a message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that House accordingly.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): May I ask which of the many "Macdonalds" in the house is named on that committee?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Senator McDonald (Moosomin).

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, although this is becoming somewhat of a ritual, with leave, I move that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, October 18, 1966, at 8 o'clock in the evening. I hope this motion sticks.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, October 18, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, October 18, 1966

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

CONSUMER CREDIT (COST OF LIVING)

JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGES IN COMMONS MEMBERSHIP

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that messages had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the name of Mr. Gray has been substituted for that of Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale), the names of Messrs. Smith, McLelland and Code for those of Messrs. Hees, Coates and Bell (Saint John-Albert), the name of Mr. Scott (Danforth) for that of Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands), and the names of Messrs. Whelan and Choquette for those of Messrs. Deachman and Matte on the Joint Committee on Consumer Credit and Cost of Living.

DEPUTY GOVERNMENT LEADER IN THE SENATE

APPOINTMENT OF HON. JEAN-PAUL DESCHATELETS TO SUCCEED HON. CYRILLE VAILLANCOURT

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I am happy to announce that the Honourable Jean-Paul Deschatelets, following discussions with his colleagues from the Province of Quebec and his French-speaking colleagues in the Senate, has agreed to become my deputy in this chamber.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Senator Deschatelets is relatively new to the Senate, but in the short time he has been here I am sure he has made many friends, and he has demonstrated his great capacity as a parliamentarian. This is not a matter of any surprise, for he has been in Parliament for some 12 years. As a minister of the Crown, he was Minister of Public Works, an honour shared by Senator Walker during a different period. It is a distinction to have both these gentlemen in the Senate with us after their records of achievement in that important department of Government.

In thanking Senator Deschatelets for agreeing to assume these new duties, I should also like to pay a special tribute at this time to the work that has been done through the years by Senator Vaillancourt as Deputy Leader, not only as my able assistant, but also when he acted in a similar capacity for the honourable Senator Ross Macdonald when he was leader. I have expressed my warm appreciation to Senator Vaillancourt on other occasions, but I do want to say to him again, although he is not present tonight, how deep the debt is that I owe him, and what a notable contribution he has made to the work of the Senate.

We have had a problem in that our late, lamented colleague from Quebec, Senator Bouffard, who assumed the deputy leadership at the beginning of the session, suffered a serious failing of health, resulting in his death. Senator Bouffard was an ornament to the Senate and indeed to the post of deputy to the leader.

I have complete confidence, which I am sure is shared by all honourable senators, that Senator Deschatelets will live up to the great traditions of the Senate in carrying his responsibilities which, I warn him, will be much heavier than he may now appreciate.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, I take this opportunity of congratulating Senator Deschatelets on his appointment.

We on this side of the chamber are very pleased to hear that the honourable Leader of the Government is getting some help, because we have been concerned about the huge amount of work he has had to do. He deserves great credit for carrying on without assistance up to this time.

I wish also to join with Senator Connolly in the remarks he made with respect to Senator Vaillancourt—a quiet, fine, effective gentleman, and one whom all of us in this house respect.

Senator Deschatelets, we congratulate you on your very rapid promotion. I know of few men who have come up as quickly as you have, or who have come along the road so fast. I am not going to wish you a long term of office, because I feel you will not have it. However, for the short time in which you are going to adorn the office of Deputy Leader of the Government, I wish you every success.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Paul Deschatelets: Honourable senators, I thank the Leader of the Government and the Leader of the Opposition for their kind words, as well as all of you, my colleagues, for your warm appreciation at the announcement which has just been made.

I must say I am well aware of the responsibilities I assume, and when called upon to act in that capacity, I shall endeavour, above all else, to serve this great institution we cherish, that all important branch of Parliament, the Senate.

[Text]

Honourable senators, I thank the Leader of the Government and the Leader of the Opposition for their kind words, and also your warm appreciation at the announcement which was made by the leader. Let us hope that I shall justify and merit the confidence which has been placed in me tonight.

May I say that I intend to serve on behalf of the Senate, this institution we cherish. I think that anything I might add to its prestige would justify in part the duties which will be entrusted to me. To all, I say thank you.

PUBLIC SERVICE

JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGES IN COMMONS MEMBERSHIP

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that messages had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the name of Mr. Hopkins has been substituted for that of Mr. Caron, and that the name of Mr. Chatwood has been substituted for that of Mr. Hopkins on the list of members appointed to serve on the Special Joint Committee on the Public Service.

THE LATE SENATOR CHARLES L. BISHOP

TRIBUTES

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, before we proceed with the orders of business, I have to announce the death quite recently of our beloved and distinguished colleague, Senator Charles Bishop, whom everyone knew as Charlie Bishop.

It is not my intention, and if it were I am sure I would not succeed, to compete with the eulogistic editorials which appeared in the press throughout Canada at the time of his death.

Charlie Bishop was a distinguished journalist of his time. He was for some 40 years in the Press Gallery, and indeed was its honorary president. He was beloved by his colleagues there for himself, for his humour, for many of his practical jokes upon them, but above all for his capacity and perspicacity as a writer.

There is of course a memorial in stone to Charlie Bishop at the entrance to the House of Commons reading room. He shared that honour with another of our colleagues, Senator O'Leary from Carleton, and with men like Henri Bourassa and others; but I think the enduring monument to Charlie Bishop is the monument that has been erected in the hearts of his friends and colleagues on Parliament Hill over a period of 40 years.

Charlie Bishop was born in Bear River, Nova Scotia, a place that is washed by the waters of Fundy. There, in the early days of this country, the Order of the Good Companions was established at Port Royal, and Charlie Bishop was a Good Companion. That tradition was part of the blood that ran in his veins.

I remember that during the war, I, as a young man, went with the naval minister to look at various possible places for the establishment of an important new naval training base. We came to a place called Deep Brook. At that time, it was nothing but barren fields running down to the tidal waters of Fundy, inside Digby Gut, with wonderful, deep water, with Digby at the head of the bay. I think that over all the world there is no other place which resembles quite so much the beauty of the Bay of Naples.

The fact that the Honourable Angus Macdonald had been there was reported pretty widely in the newspapers, and when I returned to Ottawa one of the first calls I had was from Charlie Bishop, who was then in the Press Gallery and not in the Senate. He said, "You have been at Bear River." I did not know I had been at Bear River: they called it Deep Brook, but for him it was home. He was most interested in the fact that this naval establishment, which meant so much to the training of the young men who served in Canadian ships during the war, was to be located close to where he had been born.

Charlie Bishop, moreover, was a confidant of the great leaders of this country. He knew Laurier and Borden and King and Bennett.

I would not wish to take anything from Nova Scotia's claim to Charlie Bishop, but I think it fair to say that he was indigenous to Ottawa. Senator Choquette will agree with me, if no one else will, that he was indigenous particularly to a very important part of Ottawa called Sandy Hill. It is a part which lies east of the canal and south of Rideau Street. Charlie Bishop lived there and he worked here on the Hill during most of his life. In that area, as indeed in every part of Ottawa, his name was a household word.

I had a particularly deep personal affection for him, as he was a close friend of my father. I need not tell you, of course, that I was born and brought up in Sandy Hill, and I could not help but know all about Charlie Bishop from the time I was a small boy.

When I was appointed to the Senate—now more than 14 years ago—it was not the Prime Minister of the day who told me of the appointment: it was Charlie Bishop. He had been at the press conference where the announcement was made. I was touched at the time that this should have happened.

Later, when the time came for me to be assigned to a room, he and Senator Calvin Pratt and I occupied a room together on the fourth floor. Senator Pratt later moved out and Senator Leonard joined us. I never knew really how fine the companionship was in that room until I moved down to a lonely eminence in another part of the building.

Charlie Bishop was primarily a journalist. I would hope that, some day, some student would take enough interest in his writings, which were voluminous, to edit them. In them I am sure will be found a history of his time, as seen from the vantage point of the capital city, and particularly of Parliament Hill. He reached the great age of 90 years. He died full of years, full of the esteem and affection of all who knew him, and, to mourn him, he leaves a widow and two wonderful daughters. But to mourn him also he leaves colleagues who have known him in the Senate and who will treasure his memory here for many years to come.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, we have just heard a very splendid tribute to a man whom we all knew well. Charlie Bishop lived to be 90 years of age and was fortunate in retaining his health and remaining active almost up to the very last.

We can all say that Charlie Bishop lived a long, happy and full life. His activities are well known. The leader has mentioned the extensive editorial tributes and press comments all across Canada. Charlie Bishop was successful in all the activities he undertook. He was a Maritimer and was proud of it. We in the Maritimes were proud of him, as we had just reason to be.

When we read of his many activities in his chosen walk of life, we learn that he was one of the youngest reporters, if not the youngest, to enter the Press Gallery. He was the first and only reporter from the Press Gallery to be appointed to the Senate, having been president of the gallery on a number of occasions.

I understand he was the oldest active senator at the time of his death.

I knew him when he was in the Press Gallery 30 years ago. He was one of the first men that I met from there, and I liked him from the very first.

We know that Charlie Bishop was an excellent newspaperman because he was a reporter for most of the leading papers in Canada. I have here a list of some of them: the Toronto Telegram, Montreal Star, Winnipeg Tribune, the Hamilton Spectator, the Calgary Herald, and others.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): The Ottawa Citizen.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Yes, the Ottawa Citizen. This gives one some idea of the prestige and success that our great departed friend had in his chosen profession.

I have often wondered, as I have met some men from the Press Gallery, where we get the term "the gentlemen of the Press," but when I met Charlie Bishop and followed his activities, I realized to the fullest extent just what a gentleman of the Press, and a gentleman, period, could mean. I noticed him here in the Senate when I first came, and he always gave one a warm welcome. He gave you a warm smile and a warm handshake every time you met him on coming back from a recess or after an absence from the chamber.

I join with the Leader of the Government in extending to the late Senator Bishop's widow and his family my most sincere sympathy and condolence.

Hon. Lionel Choquette: Honourable senators, the late Senator Charles Bishop had one of the shortest biographies in the Canadian Parliamentary Guide. This was typical of him, for these are really autobiographies. But the bare statement that he was for 40 years parliamentary correspondent for Canadian newspapers does him much less than justice.

He was a great and respected Canadian journalist whose summons to the Senate did honour to all his colleagues in the profession. I sincerely hope his perceptive vignettes of "Canadian Prime Ministers I Have Known," published by the Citizen, will be preserved for posterity.

He was also a great wit and humourist. The halls of this building still echo to the sound of his sallies which were Chaucerian, never bitter, never unkind.

He was an ornament to the Senate, a man beloved by all who knew him. I think of him not so much as a journalist, wit and parliamentarian, but as a dear family friend and next-door neighbour. As I have said before in this chamber, Senator Bishop and I were next-door neighbours for a period of 17 years. I have no wish to expand upon this save to say that on the day of my appointment to this chamber Charles Bishop came over and posed for a picture which included only my immediate family and himself. This picture now adorns the wall of my Senate office.

I shall never forget his many kindnesses to my family. The deepest sympathy of my wife, my children and myself goes out to his widow and daughters.

Hon. John J. Kinley: Honourable senators, there is little I can add to the splendid tributes paid to Charlie Bishop by our leaders in the Senate and by the honourable senator who has just spoken. However, as he came from Nova Scotia, I feel it only right that I should rise and say that we are proud of him as a Nova Scotian who came up to the biggest arena and became so highly esteemed by the people here in central Canada.

Charlie Bishop and I were appointed to the Senate on the same day and our association here was always most cordial. I knew him in the Commons when I went there as a young Liberal. I found in him a congenial spirit because he was a great party man and his advice was something very valuable, particularly to a young member. In the last few years he would call me on the telephone each day to ask what was new and what was going on, and frequently he could give me more news than I could give him. He was an able news-gatherer, a loyal member of this chamber and he came from good stock in the Province of Nova Scotia.

I wish to say as a Nova Scotian that we always feel glad when one from our province is as highly esteemed in this chamber as was Charlie Bishop. The high esteem in which he was held is shown by the tributes paid to his memory this evening.

HON. GEORGE S. WHITE, P.C.

WELCOME ON RETURN TO CHAMBER AFTER ILLNESS

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I am sure I am expressing the feelings of all honourable senators when I say how delighted we are that our former Speaker, the Honourable George White, is back with us again. I did not want him to hear this because the Irish are not given to flattery, and if it were flattery, he being Irish would recognize it at once.

Senator White has been absent much too long. Therefore may I say on behalf of all his colleagues how pleased we are to see him, and to see him look so well.

COMMONWEALTH PARLIAMENTARY ASSOCIATION

CONFERENCE AT OTTAWA—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I must apologize for inflicting myself upon you once more. But, with leave, I should like to report on the 12th General Conference of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, held in Ottawa from September 28 to October 4. I hope I have the consent of all honourable senators to make some remarks about this meeting which I consider to have been of some consequence and of some promise for peace, security and understanding not only within the Commonwealth but in the world at large.

When the delegates assembled in Montreal in late September there were 23 independent countries represented; Zambia, the 24th country, could not attend for reasons which are understandable. I refer to the situation which exists in Rhodesia and the fact that Zambia is adjacent to that country.

In addition to the 23 independent countries represented, there were three groups of smaller dependencies and islands whose names were set out in the material available to delegates, and one observer country, the United States of America, represented by two distinguished members of the United States Senate. While the conference was in session, on September 30, Bechuanaland became independent as Botswana, and on October 4 Basutoland became independent as Lesotho. On November 30 Barbados will achieve independence.

There were some 65 branches of the association represented by 133 delegates, including one premier, 15 speakers or deputy speakers, three leaders of opposition, and 14 ministers in various governments. In addition to these delegates, there were 30 individuals who came as secretaries to various delegations. Here I should like to say how invaluable I consider the work done by the secretaries and how much they contributed to the success of the deliberations and of the travel arrangements.

There were four past chairmen of the General Council present on this occasion: Mr. Sangster, the Acting Prime Minister of Jamaica; Mr. Tennent from New Zealand; Sir Alister McMullin, the President of the Senate in Australia; and Dr. Lim of Malaysia. Unfortunately, Dr. Lim had to leave because his parliament reassembled while the delegates were on tour. In fact, he had reached Vancouver with the group and finally had to return to Malaysia.

In addition to the meetings that were held by the delegates there were meetings of the Speakers. As I have said, there were some fifteen Speakers or deputies, and these meetings were convened by our own Speaker, the Honourable Senator Smith, and the Speaker of the House of Commons, the Honourable Lucien Lamoureux. As well, there were meetings of many of the clerks-at-the-table from parliaments of the countries represented here.

I should say at this stage too that the officers of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association in attendance at the meeting included the Honourable W. W. Kalema, the Minister of Works in Uganda, who was the Vice-President; and the Right Honourable Lord Rowley, the Honorary Treasurer, perhaps better known by his former name of Arthur Henderson. There were also two Clause 24 Councillors, who are the continuing element on the executive of the association: Mr. Bernard Braine, M.P., of the United Kingdom, and the Honourable Dr. Lim from Malaysia.

The Canadian branch was represented by its President, the Honourable John Turner, who made an invaluable contribution to many aspects of the work. Mr. Harold Winch, one of the Vice-Presidents, was also in attendance and did a tremendous job of work with the delegates from so many countries. The other officers of the Association were the two Speakers whom I have already mentioned, and the Honourable Maurice Bourget, who was not available because he was on government business out of the country at the time, but he made a great contribution to the preliminary work that led to the setting up of the conference.

As chairman of the organization I must say that I am particularly indebted to the conference committee which served under the Honourable John Turner. This committee consisted of the Vice-Chairman of the Canadian branch, Mr. Winch, and two of our senators, Senator Grosart, who looked after public relations and publicity, the communications aspect of the conference, and did a magnificent job; and Senator Leonard, who was the custodian of the purse strings, perhaps one of the most difficult of all the jobs.

In addition, I should like to acknowledge the great co-operation of members on this conference committee from the House of Commons: Mr. Gordon Fairweather, Mr. Ron Basford, Mr. Georges Lachance and Mr. James Walker. All these men worked assiduously for the better part of a year to get this meeting set up in a way that would do credit and justice to Canada.

As President of the Association too I should like to pay a special tribute to the Secretary-General of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, Mr. Robin Vanderfelt, whose home is in London, and to the very outstanding team of people he had and continues to have with him and who were present at the conference. Without them we really would have been at a loss on many an occasion. They include Mr. Ian Grey, Mr. Jack Fowler, Miss Betty May and Miss Sheena Geddes. I thank them not only for the work they did, but also for the wonderfully co-operative spirit they showed with the Canadian Secretariat.

I thank too Mr. T. R. Montgomery, the long-time Secretary of the Canadian branch. "Monty", as he is known to everyone in the C.P.A., not only travelled across the country with these delegates, but was also a source of help on every conceivable occasion.

I thank too the Canadian staff through its three chief officers, Mr. Ian Imrie, Colonel T. G. Bowie and Miss Jean Macpherson. This would include not only the staffs that work for them regularly, but a good many foreign service officers who were seconded from the Department of External Affairs to assist.

I regret that right at the beginning of the conference the former Chairman, the Honourable Blair Tennent of New Zealand, was stricken with a heart attack in Toronto. He was brought to Ottawa and hospitalized here. Fortunately, the attack was not as severe as was originally thought, and I am happy to be able to report that through the cardiologist who looked after him, who is one of the outstanding men in this field, Mr. Tennent was able to whip himself into shape soon enough to take a plane back to New Zealand this morning.

When Mr. Tennent was stricken with a heart attack during a meeting of the C.P.A. I could not help but think of my own experience. Perhaps there is an element of occupational hazard involved in being the President.

If I might digress for a moment, there also seems to be another pattern which has developed, because two past presidents have become Prime Ministers: Mr. Harold Holt in Australia; and Mr. Donald Sangster, acting Prime Minister of Jamaica.

There is also another kind of pattern running through the presidency, because two former presidents now occupy important positions in the diplomatic field. Dato' Ong of Malaysia was in fact never President; he would have been, but he entered the diplomatic field while still vice-president, and Dr. Lim succeeded him. Dato' Ong is the Malaysian Ambassador in Washington and came to Ottawa to lead the delegation when Dr. Lim had to leave suddenly. He is a distinguished man and contributed greatly to the success of the conference. The other past president who entered the diplomatic field was Lord Mortonmere, perhaps better known to the members of this chamber as Sir Roland Robinson, the Governor General of Bermuda. Really, the only past president who has not run into some of these hazards—if I may describe them that way; they are in some respects pitfalls—is the charter Past President, Senator Roebuck. He has been able to maintain his integrity, dignity and health.

Delegates arrived in Montreal on September 8, and they were welcomed extremely well. The welcome they received from the mayor and officials of that city and that province was tremendous. Then they began a visit to all of the provinces of Canada, and veritably what we had was a Commonwealth airlift. They were the guests of the provinces and municipalities, as they moved first from Montreal east to the Maritimes and then finally to the west coast.

I must express on behalf of the Canadian branch, and indeed on behalf of the C. P. A., appreciation to the provincial authorities in every province who made it possible not only for the delegates to see these provinces and to see Canada, but also to meet so many of the people who live in these provinces.

The press at one stage said the program was too elaborate. I want to make one comment about that. I thought at one stage that perhaps too much was being undertaken.

How can anybody see a country that occupies half a continent in two weeks? But the committee responsible for making the arrangements found that when they suggested to a province that it might join with another province and thus avoid a visit from only a portion of the delegation, they were met with righteous indignation. The result was that there were parties of delegates to every province, and there was not one complaint about anything that happened in any one of those provinces. So, we are indebted to the provinces for the co-operation they gave the Canadian branch, and for the hospitality they showed to so many people from so many parts of the world.

Then followed the meetings. They were held in Ottawa—plenary sessions, meetings of the General Council, meetings of the subcommittees, and meetings of the Steering Committee, which committee had a very difficult task to perform.

In Ottawa there occurred something quite new to the annual meetings of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association. We had the privilege of being addressed by the Commonwealth Secretary General, Mr. Arnold Smith. Mr. Smith, as all honourable senators know, is a Canadian. He was trained in our Department of External Affairs. He addressed the delegates in the House of Commons on Friday, September 30, and I should like to express to him the deep appreciation of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association for the way in which he approached that task and for the manner in which he discharged it. I was very proud of him, as I am sure all the delegates were, for what he is doing in the discharge of his heavy responsibilities at a time of great difficulty for the Commonwealth.

I should like to touch upon some of the events of the meetings, both the plenary sessions and the committee meetings, which took place in Ottawa. They began on September 28. Before I do so I want to say that because of the persistence and the insistence of Senator Grosart the proceedings were reported in the way the proceedings of Parliament are reported, by Hansard. This Hansard type of report is an invaluable document. It was most helpful to the delegates at the time of the conference, and I commend a reading of it to all honourable senators.

In referring to some special parts of this report I am perhaps undertaking an invidious exercise, because it is difficult to select one person and comment upon his remarks without selecting a good many more. But, at the risk of offending some, I think it might be of value if I say something of the discussions which took place.

The important debate was that on international affairs, and one can understand the great interest in it in view of the fact that some 27 countries from every continent of the world were represented. This debate was opened by the Canadian Minister of External Affairs, Honourable Paul Martin. His contribution was both valuable and helpful. The delegates certainly appreciated it, and said so. As soon as the debate began, it was clear that within the Commonwealth, and between the countries of the Commonwealth, all is not sweetness and light. The Kashmir situation, for example, was one upon which there was some comment, although I must say that the key of the debate was very low, mainly because of the tentative agreements that were reached at Tashkent, Russia, a little less than a year ago. I regretted, as I think a great many of us did, the fact that the settlement between India and Pakistan reached on that occasion was not an intra-commonwealth settlement. It is correct to say that there was disappointment expressed in the fact that there is not a Commonwealth agency to deal with intra-commonwealth disputes. Mr. Bhargava of India referred to this question. Mr. Pannell of the British House of Commons referred to it at page 91 of the proceedings, as did Mr. Soomro of Pakistan at page 67. The debate on this issue was not as hot or difficult as the one that took place in New Zealand a year ago.

The debate on Rhodesia was another matter, but it was somewhat overshadowed by the fact that the Prime Ministers had recently come to certain conclusions about the problem there. I think many of the delegates questioned whether Rhodesia is in fact a microcosm of the Commonwealth, and whether there will always be in the Commonwealth antipathies between blacks and whites, between race and race, and between creed and creed. I am bound to say that there was condemnation on the part of some delegates for the way the Rhodesian situation is being handled. The leader of the debate, the Honourable J. S. M. Ochola from Uganda, made a speech in which he expressed very strongly-held views that force should be used. His criticisms were pungent, and he had the support of speakers from southeast Asia, Africa and the Caribbean area. His speech appears at page 45 of the report.

But there were other views expressed, and I think this was partly due to the influence that emanated from the meeting of the prime ministers which had concluded shortly before the conference began. I was particularly impressed by the moderation of the speeches of the delegates from Malawi.

I was impressed also, as I think all delegates were, by the responsible way in which the leader of the British delegation, the Right Honourable Arthur Bottomley, the Minister of Overseas Development, discussed this issue. He did it objectively, calmly, and very effectively. Mr. Bottomley brought distinction to both the meeting and the debate. I was delighted that the British Government had seen fit to send a minister of his rank to this meeting, especially in view of the situation in Rhodesia.

South Africa was discussed. Southwest Africa was mentioned, and the conditions there deplored. The situations in Ghana and Nigeria, and the military dictatorships that have been established in those countries were commented upon, particularly at the council meeting at Montreal. There being no parliaments in those countries, there were no representatives from them.

There was a view taken also about the position of Gibraltar, and I commend the reasonable words of the representative from Gibraltar, Mr. Seruya, on the position that Gibraltar occupies in respect of the Spanish development, because this affects Gibraltar very much.

Then, of course, Vietnam came up for discussion, and in this we were most indebted to the members of the United States Senate who were present for the contributions they made. Senator Fulbright is well known to almost every member of this chamber. His remarks begin at page 50 of the Official Report. He spoke of the need for compromise in the situation out there, and of all the dangers that are inherent in it. He spoke from a full mind, and I believe from a heart full of compassion and concern.

Senator Edmund Muskie from Maine, taking a different line, as I thought, gave a particularly objective description of the American position in Vietnam, which the President has made so forcefully and so often and is making now in the Pacific—I believe tonight he is in Hawaii.

It was not only the Americans who spoke of Vietnam. New Zealand has troops there. Mr. Gordon, the leader of the New Zealand delegation said that they were there to help re-establish peace.

The Australians talked about Vietnam. Senator Davis of Australia said that the United States has taken a stand in Vietnam "on the highest level of morality." One can understand the concern of people in the Far East about the danger, the explosiveness that exists in Vietnam. Senator Davis said that it was a stand against communism, and communism has its expansionist philosophy.

I think there were other delegates too who felt that there might be a great element also of Chinese nationalism that was creating some of the problems out there. Peter Howson, the distinguished young leader of the Australian delegation, strongly supported the United States position.

Other delegates said that a United Nations force should be sent there and should try and solve the problems. These views were put forward by Mr. Pandya of Kenya, Mr. Cheeks of Guyana, and by others. Dato'Ong, the distinguished member of the Parliament of Malaysia, thought that an Asian solution was perhaps the only one to look for.

This was the kind of debate that we had on external affairs, and you can see what a wide ranging thing it was, how varying the points of view were, and how difficult it is to try to put them down into some neat formula that will result in solutions for these complex problems.

I was also impressed with the fact that so many of these views were expressed not by ministers but by back benchers, who spoke out of minds that were well informed and cultivated and with the experience of minds accustomed to making good judgments.

On the problem of Commonwealth self help, particularly in the field of trade and aid, notable speeches were made. I think one of the best was by the deputy leader of the British delegation, the Whip of the House of Lords, Lord Shepherd. At page 275 of the Official Report he described the quantum of aid given by the United Kingdom, and it is worthy of reading by all honourable senators. He also talked about the importance of international liquidity, as well as about some of the British problems connected with this problem of liquidity and the level of aid.

Mr. Neville Hewitt of Australia, at page 279, said the Australians were second as donor countries in the amount of aid given in the Commonwealth.

There were also views expressed by donee countries, and this was particularly sought and welcomed, because the giving of aid is one thing, but the usefulness of the aid, its value to the country receiving it, and the manner in which it is given are most important.

Mr. Ahmad of Pakistan made an acknowledgement of the value of this aid. He praised particularly the work of the Colombo Plan.

Shri Veerappa of India spoke about the Kennedy idea of freer trade, as also did Mr. Refalo of Malta. They talked too about the difficulties some of the developing countries have because of the tariff walls that exclude their products from so many of the developed countries.

Mr. Tuan Tiah Eng Bee of Malaysia, at page 287, talked about the difficulties of marketing products like rubber and tin from his country.

There was discussion about commodity price stablization. The plea and the call there was for the abolition of tariffs, for the increase in consumption among developing countries of some of these products that are indigenous to the countries of the southern hemisphere—sugar and cocoa.

The questions arising out of food resources and the population explosion in the world were also debated with knowledge and authority by many of the delegates.

Honourable senators, I am speaking too lengthily, but there are some things that need to be said if we are to have an appreciation in this country and in this Parliament of some of the problems that exist in the Commonwealth which, if solved even in part, can mean so much to peace and security in the world.

This year we tried an innovation, a Canadian initiative. Instead of having speeches made only in plenary session, we resorted to the device used in the I.P.U. and the NATO Parliamentarians organization, of breaking up into committees. One committee, dealing with parliamentary institutions in the modern world, sat in this chamber under the chairmanship of the Honourable C.A. Thomasos, of Trinidad and Tobago. It was an interesting discussion, and you will find it throughout the debate in various places. I hope to assist honourable senators who might be interested in reading the part of the committee work, dealing with second chambers by referring to some of the people and mentioning the pages where their speeches appear.

The references to a second chamber at page 109 by Mr. Rowe of Australia, and at page 112 by Sir William McDonald of Australia, describe the elective upper house or second chamber in their country.

I am indebted to our colleague Senator Hugessen, because he undertook the task at my instance, for a most enlightening speech in this particular committee on the work and functioning of the Senate of Canada. If I may say so, it was one of the best contributions to the work of that committee. Senator Hugessen's remarks are reported at page 118.

At page 122, Mr. Cheeks of Guyana told why there is not a Senate in his country.

At page 126, Mr. Gordon, the leader of the New Zealand delegation, told why they abolished the Senate there in 1950.

At page 128 Mr. Durga Das Khanna of India emphasized the importance of the second chamber and why in his view the Indian system of electing the members was desirable.

Senator Machio of Kenya said that in his country, a small country, they will probably abolish the Senate some day.

Finally, although he was not expected to appear, and normally does not appear, everyone was delighted with the fact that Senator Fulbright took enough interest in this debate to go to this committee and talk about the working of the United States Senate. This was a gesture that was received with warmth by the members of the committee; his contribution was a very good one indeed. This was the first time that a United States delegate—and they only attend as observers—has ever been permitted to participate in the debate, except on international affairs. The larger countries—and those countries which, like ours, are federal states—generally feel that second chambers are of immense importance and value. There are various ways in which second chambers are constituted.

In the smaller countries the experience is somewhat analogous to the experience of the provinces of Canada, which abolished their legislative chambers, one by one, Quebec now being the only province which has retained a second chamber.

Considerable discussion arose also on the problems of the lower house, on the procedures of the lower house, and on the work of committees. Speeches were made on the importance and value of Parliament, on the sacredness of this institution.

The conclusions of that committee, as given in its report, are to be found at page 307 of the Official Report:

Consensus

> A United Kingdom delegate, in closing the debate, remarked that three threads have run through the discussion:
> 1. Some modification or reform is needed to bring parliamentary institutions up-to-date;
> 2. A pattern suitable for one part of the Commonwealth would not necessarily be suitable for another part; each country must, while maintaining fundamental democratic principles, evolve its own parliamentary methods;
> 3. The committee system offers many advantages in meeting present-day demands of Legislatures and consideration could be given in many countries to developing it further.

I am particularly pleased at the reception which the committee received at the hands of delegates and at the enthusiasm with which they praised this Canadian initiative. It gave an opportunity for an exchange and interchange of views, immediately upon statements being made. There were questions and answers; and it provided a lively debate, an opportunity of which the parliamentarians took advantage.

Honourable senators, the other committee dealt with external aid, primarily the sector concerning education and training. It was an outstanding committee, under the chairmanship of Mr. Bernard Braine of the United Kingdom delegation. It is clear from the debates in that committee that modern political, economic and social development can come, provided the educational opportunities are available to the people who are to shape and form those institutions. There were excellent contributions by donor countries; Senator Grosart and Mr. Turner made valuable speeches on that part of the work in which Canada's participation was particularly discussed. Donee countries appraised the programs and there was criticism in some quarters of the way in which this work is handled.

In the General Council we first of all arranged for general data papers which could be used for any debate. From Canada, we circulated a paper from the external aid office on the work of Canada in the field of external aid in the Commonwealth, relating to education and training.

Honourable senators, we succeeded in doing another valuable piece of work, which should have been done earlier and should have been thought of much more on other occasions. For this I am particularly indebted to the Reverend Mr. Bennett of the World Council of Churches, Canadian branch, in Toronto; and to Father Gordon George, S. J., of the Canadian Catholic Conference. They sent me material which made it possible to produce a paper on the missionary work, outside of the religious field, done by Canadian churches of all denominations, in the underdeveloped parts of the Commonwealth. This material was taken by Senator Bourque and was put into an excellent speech, which you will find at page 168 of the Official Report.

You might be interested in reading what Mr. Kalema, the new President of the C.P.A., said about the work done by these Canadian missionaries in Commonwealth countries in the field of education. I refer to work they do in hospitals, in schools, in clinics, in social service establishments. I am not referring to their evangelical work.

Usually we do not think about this as part of the external aid which Canada is giving to developing countries, but some of it has been in operation for a hundred years. There were delegates here, men who had achieved prominence in their own countries—whites and blacks and reds, and yellows and tans—who got their education, and who would not have had it, were it not for some of the missionary schools established generations ago.

These are things we seldom think of in this country but these are things which Canadians have done abroad and continue to do.

Honourable senators, may I refer briefly to the conclusions of that committee, which will be found at page 305 of the Official Report of the conference:

> The consensus of the Committee may be summarized as follows:
> (1) Developing countries appreciate the educational and technical aid they are receiving, but in most cases this is inadequate to meet real needs, nor is it sufficiently co-ordinated.
> (2) While there is a division of views as to whether the multilateral or bilateral method of providing aid is to be preferred, there is general agreement that under either system aid should be more closely geared to the needs of developing countries.
> (3) To ensure more effective mobilization and use of available resources expert surveys of the needs of each developing country and the means of meeting them should be made and then co-ordinated through some centralized Commonwealth agency.
> (4) Arrangements should be made to ensure that persons sent to developed countries for training as teachers or technicians should return home to utilize their newly acquired skills in the service of their own people.
> (5) To facilitate better understanding and co-operation there should be many more direct links between educational establishments in Commonwealth countries and more exchanges of teachers and students.

Honourable senators, I am delighted that we made the delegates feel they could speak frankly and fearlessly about the aid and the way it is given. Furthermore, this matter might be a very valuable type of study for a committee of this house.

There are challenges within the Commonwealth and there are diverse opportunities for a far-ranging worldwide organization. The parliamentarians of its countries are anxious for solutions based on firm foundations. They believe they can succeed in achieving this through the parliamentary institutions. I share that belief and anyone who followed those proceedings would be moved deeply by the sincerity which delegates showed.

Honourable senators, when the conference was opened, His Excellency the Governor General, in a notable speech, said things which are worth recording. He said:

> Man has been created a free person, with a free will and the power to choose for himself. If this be so, then democracy is the only political expression in which these rights can be respected. Any dictatorship, by definition, is a denial of freedoms.

Later he said that "democracy is based upon the conviction that there are extraordinary possibilities in ordinary people." That is what we had at this conference. Everyone of the delegates considered himself to be an ordinary man or woman.

Finally, the Governor General concluded by quoting from a speech made by Her Majesty at the time of her Coronation, and appropriate it was that he should quote Her Majesty, because she is the head of the Commonwealth. She said this on that occasion:

> Parliamentary institutions, with their free speech and respect for the rights of minorities, and the inspiration of a broad tolerance in thought and expression—all this we conceive to be a precious part of our way of life and outlook.

But there are deeper things involved in understanding and solving Commonwealth problems; things deeper than politics or economics or social action. I believe, having been in rather intimate contact with these people now for some time, that there is a great deal to be said for some appreciation of the role which the spirit and the mind play in this work.

Mr. Speaker, east may be east and west may be west, and at one time it was thought that the twain never could meet. But the twain can meet if an effort at understanding will persist on the part of east and west. I think Barbara Ward, whom I admire greatly, has perhaps put her finger on this concept in a book which she wrote some years ago, entitled Faith and Freedom. I think it expresses better than I can what I would like to leave as my finishing words in connection with this great meeting. At page 140 of that book she said this:

> This failure of Western culture to communicate itself in depth arose in part from a narrowness of vision among Christians themselves, in part from the decline of religion as a force in Western life. In India and the Far East—and indeed she might have said, too, "in Africa", had she been writing this today—

> the Westerners were brought into contact with civilizations more ancient and continuous than their own and with a religious and social outlook of immense traditional force. To suggest in such a situation that faith in Christ could be achieved only by those who were prepared to renounce totally five thousand years of Hindu or two thousand years of Buddhist or Confucian experience was the equivalent of rendering certain the rejection of Christ. In a similar debate, at the origins of the Christian Church, some of Christ's first followers believed that unless Christianity was presented in the ritual form of Jewish religion—with circumcision and all the minutiae of the Law—it would not be the true and saving word of God. But the force of St. Paul's conviction that a Hellenic world would not receive the truth wrapped in a Jewish envelope decided the issue. Paul was free to express the Christian gospel of redemption in terms by which the prophet and the philosopher, Isaiah and Socrates, the worshipers of the Messiah and of the Logos, could give their differing yet complementary witness to the same salvation.

Honourable senators, basic to every Commonwealth undertaking is an understanding of this passage and of the will on the part of people of the Commonwealth to recognize it.

Hon. A. K. Hugessen: Honourable senators, as one of the delegates of this Chamber to the recent meeting of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, and after listening to the magnificent explanation by our leader of the meetings that have just been held by the Association, there are two things that I want to say. In the first place I was a very recent delegate. I was appointed only a few days before the meeting was held, and, frankly, I did not do nearly as much work, or as effective work, as two of our colleagues who were also members, Senator Grosart and Senator Leonard, both of whom contributed immensely to the success of the meetings.

I wish to thank my honourable Leader for his over-kind reference to the small part I played in the committee on Parliamentary Institutions in the Modern World. I think he was bound more or less to say what he did because it was at his request that I did it. And. however bad I might have been, he at least will have to cover his own mistake in asking me to undertake it.

Hon. Mr. Connolly: Nobody could have done it as well.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I could add a little to what he said about the debate on parliamentary institutions which took place in this Chamber. It was, I think, his own responsibility that that meeting took the form of a committee rather than of a plenary session. It did give a number of interesting views of Parliament in general and of the functions of second chambers, and I think it was of some use because, as you could well realize, many of these new countries, particularly in Africa and Asia, are struggling to develop a proper system of parliamentary government, and any advice or experience that we in the older parts of the Commonwealth can give may be of some use to them. So I thank my honourable friend for his kindly, if undeserved, references to me.

I have one thing more to say about his speech. If you were to read his speech tomorrow, as being a complete reference to what actually took place in the Conference, and all his complimentary references to the various people who took part in it, and if you were to consider that as being in itself a true picture of the Conference, you would be getting a most misleading picture, because one of the important, one of the really vital parts of the Conference and of the proceedings leading up to the Conference, about which my honourable friend said not one word, was his own most distinguished share in that Conference.

Those of you who know what a vast amount of detailed work was involved—and there are some of you who do—will realize what a tremendous strain was imposed upon our Leader by the fact of his becoming chairman of this most important meeting.

I think the only thing one can say is that, from every indication that I have had from the delegates that I have met from all over the world, it was perhaps the most successful Commonwealth Parliamentary Conference that has ever been held; and I say that that is largely due to the initiative of our own leader. I am simply trying to fill in the gap, which my leader left in his speech, in the general impression that this house and the country as a whole should get of the way in which this Association meeting took place.

There was a Labour Member of the House of Commons in England who rather questioned the value of these conferences. He said, "What is the use of our coming here thousands of miles, just to speak?" Of course it is perfectly true that at a conference of this kind you cannot pass any laws. At times it is even difficult to pass resolutions. What we are trying to do is what people at other levels of Government are constantly doing; premiers of different parts of the world are meeting regularly, as are foreign ministers and ministers of every kind, chancellors of the exchequer and ministers of justice. Even in the business world there are regular international meetings of like-minded people dealing with like-minded subjects. At this Commonwealth Parliamentary Association meeting we had members of parliaments of different parts of the Commonwealth come together to share their common experiences. I must say I found great satisfaction in being present, listening to members outline the problems with which they are faced and the manner in which we possibly can help them.

With regard to travel arrangements, I have heard my honourable friend say that there had been some criticism. For my part, I heard nothing but the highest commendations from every non-Canadian delegate I met concerning the travel arrangements. They were delighted to get a chance to see as much of Canada as they did see as a result of the arrangements made. My honourable friend was quite right in complimenting the provinces on doing their share very well indeed in seeing that the members of this conference got a fair knowledge of every part of the country.

Honourable senators, I had not intended to speak on this subject tonight. My purpose in rising was to fill in the gap left by my honourable friend, and to tell the Senate once again that much of the success of the conference was due to my honourable friend the Leader of the Government.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, it is my intention, with your permission, to adjourn the debate on Senator Connolly's very able report. I am very glad that Senator Hugessen rose as he did to fill in the gap left by Senator Connolly. I feel it would be ungracious if we did not also acknowledge the very kind references made to various members of the Canadian delegation, including Senator Leonard, Senator Hugessen, and Senator Roebuck. If our team had some success, it was due to the usual reason for the success of any team effort—it had a very great leader.

I would like to make a few more elaborate comments at a more convenient time; therefore, with your permission I move the adjournment of the debate.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Grosart, debate adjourned.

CONSUMER CREDIT (COST OF LIVING)

JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN SENATE MEMBERSHIP

Hon. John J. Connolly, with leave of the Senate, moved:

That the name of the Honourable Senator Inman be substituted for that of the Honourable Senator Davey on the list of senators serving on the Special Joint Committee on Consumer Credit and Cost of Living; and

That a message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that house accordingly.

Motion agreed to.

PUBLIC SERVICE

JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN SENATE MEMBERSHIP

Hon. John J. Connolly, with leave of the Senate, moved:

That the names of the Honourable Senators Denis and MacKenzie be substituted for those of the Honourable Senators Croll and Roebuck on the list of senators serving on the Special Joint Committee on the Public Service; and

That a message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that house accordingly.

Motion agreed to.

IMMIGRATION

APPOINTMENT OF JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. John J. Connolly, with leave of the Senate moved:

That a Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons be appointed to examine and report upon the White Paper on Immigration tabled in the House of Commons by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration on 14th October, 1966, and tabled in the Senate this day, and also to examine the Reports on immigration matters made to the Government of Canada by Mr. Joseph Sedgwick, Q.C., in 1964 and 1966;

That the following senators be appointed to act on behalf of the Senate on the Special Joint Committee:—Honourable Senators Baird, Cameron, Croll, Desruisseaux, Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche), Hastings, Hnatyshyn, Langlois, Macnaughton, Nichol, Pearson and Willis;

That the committee have the power to call for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, to report from time to time, and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee, and to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate; and

That a message be sent to the House of Commons requesting that house to unite with the Senate for the above purpose, and to select, if the House of Commons deem advisable, some of its members to act on the proposed Special Joint Committee.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it is moved by honourable Senator Connolly, seconded by honourable Senator Deschatelets—

Hon. Senators: Dispense.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, I move the adjournment of the debate because I want to read the White Paper before expressing an opinion.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I wonder if the honourable senator will allow me to say a word of explanation.

This is the first time that a joint committee of both houses has been proposed in the Senate. The purpose of the committee would be to do precisely what my honourable friend proposes to do, namely, to examine and study the report. This would be the only purpose of the committee. I am rather anxious to have this motion agreed to tonight for the simple reason that I think it would be a futile exercise to recall the Senate again tomorrow for the purpose of doing what I think we will inevitably do anyway, namely, agree to join with the Commons to set up a joint committee.

In view of the fact that honourable Senator Pouliot has raised an objection, I cannot proceed without unanimous consent. Frankly, I have not read the White Paper myself; I have a general idea of its contents but I am not familiar with the details. I have been busy with the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association meetings and other matters and have not had time to study it. All honourable senators are in the same position. The purpose of the committee is to find out what is in the report. It is only for the establishment of the committee that I seek unanimous consent tonight.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: I am the most obliging member when it comes to requests like that, especially when it is made by my leader. He says nobody knows about it. At least I can spend the night reading it and should be able to express an opinion tomorrow. It will take two or three hours to read it. I never expected such a motion to be brought forward and passed tonight. Is the Senate sitting tomorrow?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I hope not. We hope to adjourn tonight.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: I close my eyes and I shut my ears at the request of my leader, and that makes everybody happy.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I thank honourable Senator Pouliot for his co-operation.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: It is a great proof of friendship.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It reminds me of the cartoon, "See no evil, hear no evil, speak no evil."

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Monkeys.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Oh, no!

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate, that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, November 8, 1966, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Before that motion is adopted, honourable senators, I want to know about the Inquiries. There is an inquiry in my name, and I do not know if it has been answered or not.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): We have not reached Inquiries yet, senator; we are coming to them.

Before the motion is put, I would like to say that while it is proposed to adjourn until the date specified in the motion, I expect it will be necessary to recall the Senate before that date. Interim supply runs out on October 31. I hope that by that time, in addition to interim supply legislation, there will be other legislation that I will have available for the consideration of honourable senators.

In the meantime may I also, as a matter of record, now bespeak the co-operation of honourable senators particularly in the work of the joint committees, which is so important, and commend those who have been particularly faithful in their attendance over the past few weeks.

Motion agreed to.

CENTENNIAL PERFORMING ARTS

ALLOCATION OF GRANTS—INQUIRY ANSWERED

Hon. Donald Cameron inquired of the Government, pursuant to notice:

1. What is the total amount of money allocated by the Government of Canada for the Centennial Performing Arts grants?

2. What is the allocation by provinces?

3. What portion of the total amount available has been allocated to institutions and organizations within the provinces?

4. What institutions have received grants and in what amounts?

5. What criteria has been used for the allocation of grants? Was it by population, and if not, what basis was used as a determining factor in the allocating of grants?

6. What are the names and positions of the people responsible for the allocations?

7. Is there a distinction between what might be called pre-production grants for the writing of plays, ballets, symphonies or musical works and the necessary pre-production costs for assembling casts and rehearsals, and the grants made to professional companies?

8. How much money has been distributed to professional companies and how much to amateur companies?

9. What are the amounts of the allocations by provinces of the grants that have been made to date?

For text of answer, see Appendix "A", pp. 1069-71.

Hon. Mr. Cameron: Honourable senators, may I thank the Leader for his courtesy in providing a very detailed reply to the series of questions I asked some time ago and say that the answers raise some further questions which I will not go into tonight.

CENTENARY OF CONFEDERATION

CONDUCT OF NON-ESSENTIAL BUSINESS—INQUIRY ANSWERED

Hon. Keith Davey inquired of the Government, pursuant to notice:

What steps will the Government and or the Centennial Commission take to prevent non-essential business establishments from doing business on July 1st, 1967, the Centenary of Confederation?

For text of answer, see Appendix "B", p. 1072.

GOVERNMENT COMMISSIONS

NAME, NATURE, PERSONNEL AND DATE OF EACH—INQUIRY ANSWERED

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot inquired of the Government, pursuant to notice:

What Commisions (other than Political Partisanship Commissions) were issued under the Great Seal from January 1, 1961, to June 30, 1966; who were the Commissioners therein named; what was the nature of each of the said Commissions; and what was the date of each of the said Commissions?

For text of answers, see Appendix "C" pp. 1073-4.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Honourable senators, if I am permitted, I thank the Leader of the Government for answering this inquiry. I know my honourable colleagues are surprised sometimes over my insistence upon getting some information.

I am particularly pleased to tell you that following the interventions that have been made in the Senate concerning commissions, the Minister of Justice has written a letter to the Chief Justice of the Province of Quebec and to all chief justices. It is in French, and if it is agreed, I could place it on Hansard, and then honourable senators would be able to read it tomorrow in both French and English.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Text of letter follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Ottawa, June 27, 1966

The Hon. Frederic Dorion
Chief Justice
Quebec Superior Court
The Court House
Quebec City, Quebec.

Mr. Chief Justice,

It has been brought to my attention that certain judges of the Quebec Superior Court act at times as arbitrators or mediators in labour disputes on the invitation of employers or labour organizations.

Under section 37 of the Judges Act, a judge must devote himself exclusively to his judicial duties. Section 38 further provides that no judge shall act as commissioner or arbitrator on any commission or inquiry without the consent of the governor in council, unless appointed by the governor in council or the lieutenant-governor in council.

I would kindly ask you to call the attention of the Superior Court judges of your district to those provisions, and to remind them that every time they intend to assume extra-judicial duties in labour matters on the invitation of private individuals, they must obtain the consent of the governor in council. You may add that I would not willingly recommend to the governor in council that he give his consent without your assurance that the acceptance of such duties would in no way prejudice the proper administration of justice.

Yours very truly,
Lucien Cardin.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: I must add that it is not only in the Province of Quebec but also in the Province of Ontario that the number of judges sitting on commissions or as referees in labour matters has been so considerable that the intervention of the Minister of Justice was required to put a stop to it. According to the letter that you will read tomorrow in Hansard, the minister has now pointed out to the Chief Justice that the judges have been appointed to judge in virtue of the Judges Act.

I thought that the letter from the present Minister of Justice to the Chief Justices was called for and was timely; and this is why I have taken the first opportunity, which was a Liberal caucus, to congratulate the minister on this.

The Chief Justice of the Province of Quebec, the Honourable Lucien Tremblay, gave a thunderous echo to the letter from the Minister of Justice, and at a meeting of the Bar he said that the judges who sit on commissions do not have the same privileges they have when they sit in their capacity as judges on the Bench, and that what they say may be taken with a grain of salt. This is not exactly what he said, but this is its meaning. I will come to it in due course. I have the greatest respect for the Chief Justice of the Province of Quebec, and I may say that some of the commissions on which judges have sat have been very useful—and some others quite different.

In the first place, I thank the Leader of the Government again for supplying me with the list of commissions presided over by judges during a certain period of time. But I may add to that that when the Honourable Norman Rogers was Minister of Labour in the Mackenzie King Government he gave me in 1935 a list of the commissions that had been appointed. He had it in front of him on his desk, and each minister of the Mackenzie King Government at that time had information of that kind in front of him on his desk, and when it was asked for we got it at once; it was there.

How many times have I had to fight to get some information? I gather that the Leader of the Government has been very insistent on getting it, and this is why I am thankful to him. It is no more a matter of course for cabinet ministers to have all the required information before them, with a few exceptions, but it should be the general rule that information of the kind asked for in this question be before the cabinet, in the first place, and be supplied to us upon request.

With regard to the other questions, I hope that the Leader of the Government will be kind enough to remember the service that I rendered him tonight by not insisting upon the adjournment of the motion to another date, so that I will have an answer to the other two questions when we meet together, whether it be in October or November.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I shall certainly do my best.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: And I will never cease to pray.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, November 8, at 8 p.m.

APPENDIX "A"

(See p. 1067.)

CENTENNIAL PERFORMING ARTS
ALLOCATION OF GRANTS

Answer to Inquiry by Hon. Donald Cameron:

1. What is the total amount of money allocated by the Government of Canada for the Centennial Performing Arts grants?

Three million eight hundred thousand dollars ($3,800,000.00).

2 and 3. What is the allocation by provinces?

The budget is not apportioned by provinces, but it is hoped that when all the money is finally allocated, it will somewhat relate to proportionate distributions by provincial population. At the present time the budget is broadly divided as follows:

(a) Canada Festival Agency	$ 380,000
(b) Pre-production grants	1,471,250
(c) Transportation	748,105
(d) National capital festivities	227,750
(e) Centennial Music Festivals/ Festivals de musique du Centenaire	91,000
(f) Assistance to Provinces (ticket price)	181,895
(g) Contingencies	200,000
	3,300,000
For amateur and light entertainment	500,000
	3,800,000

Item B, C, and F could be divided on a regional basis at the present time, the distribution is as follows:

Province	Pre-production	Transportation	Price Assistance	Other Expenses	Total
1. British Columbia	175,500	47,600	17,232	3,315	243,647
2. Alberta	20,000	....	17,714	3,409	41,123
3. Saskatchewan	12,500	....	28,700	5,523	46,723
4. Manitoba	144,500	45,900	8,033	1,547	199,980
5. Ontario	345,500	181,885	49,701	9,562	586,648
6. Ottawa	....	....	5,526	1,064	6,590
7. Quebec	395,700	158,350	15,740	3,028	572,818
8. New Brunswick	5,000	....	14,966	2,880	22,846
9. Nova Scotia	55,000	23,190	5,942	1,144	85,276
10. Prince Edward Island	30,000	66,180	8,713	1,677	106,570
11. Newfoundland	5,000	....	9,628	1,851	16,479
Total	1,188,700	523,105	181,895	35,000	1,928,700

Negotiations are currently going on with the provinces and amendments to the above distributions may result from such negotiations. It should be noted that in addition to the provincial distributions indicated above, there are additional amateur programs; the present list is as follows:

Les jeunesses musicales competition, $100,000; Canadian Universities Centennial Program—Theatre Project, $50,000; Canadian Folk Arts Council (a) Administration, $190,000, (b) Programmes, $230,000; Dominion Drama Festival, $35,000; Spectacle on Parliament Hill (Amateur show directed by professionals), $350,000; Participation by some 500 young people from 10 provinces and the Territories, Province of Saskatchewan—Gala Night under the Stars, $20,000; P.E.I. (for amateur program not yet decided), $5,000; Newfoundland (for amateur program not yet decided), $5,000; Canadian Music Educators Association, $2,550.

4. What institutions have received grants and in what amounts?

New Brunswick: New Brunswick Symphony, $5,000.

Nova Scotia: Halifax Symphony Society, $5,000; Neptune Theatre Foundation, $50,000; Don Messer Jubilee Show, $5,000.

Prince Edward Island: Project not yet decided, $5,000; Confederation Centre Theatre, (Anne of Green Gables), $20,000.

Newfoundland: For a project to be decided fall 1966, $5,000.

Others: Centenary Festivals of Music, $91,000; Centennial Plays, $40,000; to be recommended for try-out performances, $5,000; Les Jeunesses Musicales, $100,000; Canadian Universities Centennial Program—Theatre Project, $50,000; Canadian Folk Arts Council, (A) $190,000; (B) $230,000; Second Century Week Arts Program (Alta), a portion thereof, $83,000; Dominion Drama Festival, $35,000; Spectacle on Parliament Hill (All Amateur Show), participation by some 500 youngsters from 10 provinces and the Territories, $350,000; Province of Saskatchewan for Gala Night under the Stars, $20,000; P.E.I. (for amateur program not yet decided), $5,000; Newfoundland (for amateur program not yet decided), $5,000; Canadian Music Educators Association, $2,550; Canadian Music Centre, (including Alta Commissions), $60,000; Canadian Theater Centre, $35,000.

5. What criteria has been used for the allocation of grants? Was it by population, and if not, what basis was used as a determining factor in the allocating of grants?

The allocation is not made on the basis of provincial population only, other determinants have been used. The amounts of allocations have been considered in the light of the budget of the organization concerned, the artistic attainment, the categories such as ballet, theatre, symphonies, etc... together with other factors such as professional or amateur organization series, popular or light entertainment.

6. What are the names and positions of the people responsible for the allocations?

The budget was prepared on the recommendation of the Program Development Committee to the Centennial Commission which in turn submitted a proposal to Treasury Board. A selection of the organizations and the determination of each amount was primarily the responsibility of the Program Development Committee. The members of this committee are as follows:

Georges E. Gauthier: Chairman of the Program Development Committee and Associate Commissioner, Centennial Commission. Jean-Marie Beaudet: Assistant Vice-President, Programming, C.B.C. Peter Dwyer: Associate Director, Canada Council. Robbins Elliott: Director, Planning Branch, Centennial Commission. Claude Gauthier: Assistant to Commissioners and Secretary, Centennial Commission. Mrs. Esther Genser: Member Board of Directors, Winnipeg Symphony Orchestra. Nicholas Goldschmidt: Chief, Performing Arts Division, Centennial Commission. Gordon

Hilker: Head, Master Programming Division EXPO'67. Henry Hindley: Department of Secretary of State. Walter Kaasa: Chairman, Centennial Performing and Expressive Arts Committee, Province of Alberta. Gilles Lefebevre: Head, Cultural Section, EXPO'67. Carl Lochnan: Department of Secretary of State. Mavor Moore: Director, St. Lawrence Arts Centre. John Pratt: Producer of Entertainment EXPO'67. Hamilton Southam: Coordinator, National Arts Centre. Donald Wetmore: Arts Supervisor, Arts Service, Halifax. Henry Wrong: Director, Festival Canada Agency. Alcide Saumure: Secretary, Assistant Secretary, Centennial Commission.

7. Is there a distinction between what might be called pre-production grants for the writing of plays, ballets, symphonies or musical works and the necessary pre-production costs for assembling casts and rehearsals, and the grants made to professional companies?

For the purpose of the responsibility of the Centennial Commission and the Program Development Committee, the following definitions are being used:

"Operating costs" mean costs incurred by actual performances be they in the homebase or on tour, including such costs as local theatre rentals, stage hands, promotion, ticket selling, etc., etc.

"Pre-production costs" encompass: (1) the commissioning of the composer or playwright; (2) costs for designing sets and costumes; (3) printing and duplicating of orchestral parts and scripts; (4) the construction of scenery, the making of costumes; (5) all rehearsal expenses including salaries for all performers and technical personnel (including stage hands); (6) administrative costs as applied to preparation of new productions; and, (7) all salaries and expenditures relating to the preparation of productions in the homebase such as conductors, directors, assistants to these and to the producer, as well as secretarial help.

In summary, pre-production costs involve all expenditures made necessary to bring a performance to the stage of its première performance. With the première performance, the operating expenses start.

8. How much money has been distributed to professional companies and how much to amateur companies?

As indicated in answers 2 and 3 a sum of $500,000 has been reserved for amateur and light entertainment, it might be pointed out, however, that the amateurs are receiving additional funds under other programs:

Centenary Festivals of Music, $91,000; Centennial Plays—Scripts and Try-out Performances, $45,000; Les jeunesses musicales Competition, $100,000; Canadian Universities Centennial Program—Theatre Project, $50,000; Canadian Folk Arts Council, $190,000; $230,000; Second Century Week Arts Program (Alta), (a portion thereof), $83,000 Dominion Drama Festival, $35,000; Spectacle on Parliament Hill (All-Amateur Show—participation by some 500 youngsters from 10 provinces and the Territories; $350,000; Province of Saskatchewan for Gala Night under the stars, $20,000; P.E.I. (For amateur program not yet decided), $5,000; Newfoundland (for amateur program not yet decided), $5,000; Canadian Music Educators Assoc., $2,550.

9. What are the amounts of the allocations by provinces of the grants that have been made to date?

Answered by question number 4.

CENTENARY OF CONFEDERATION
CONDUCT OF NON-ESSENTIAL BUSINESS

Answer to Inquiry by Hon. Keith Davey:

What steps will the Government and or the Centennial Commission take to prevent non-essential business establishments from doing business on July 1st, 1967, the Centenary of Confederation?

Answer in so far as the Privy Council Office is concerned:

The Government is not planning to take steps to prevent non-essential business establishments from doing business on July 1, 1967, the Centenary of Confederation, as the observance of this and other similar holidays is a matter which is within the exclusive jurisdiction of the provinces. However, the Government earnestly hopes that the full significance of this important occasion will be recognized and observed accordingly.

Answered by the Hon. Judy LaMarsh, Secretary of State of Canada in so far as the Centennial Commission is concerned:

July 1st being a statutory holiday, the Centennial Commission is developing a program of special events for that day in the national capital and is encouraging provincial and local Centennial Committees to do likewise to prepare to mark the 100th Anniversary of Confederation in a fitting manner by special celebrations of interest to the largest public. The Centennial Commission does not, however, consider that it is within its authority or power to prevent non-essential business establishments from doing business on that date.

DIVORCE

THIRD REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Joint Chairman of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on Divorce, presented the third report of the committee:

> Your committee recommends that its quorum be fixed at seven (7) members, provided that both Houses are represented.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate, that the report be adopted now.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, I have one or two remarks to make on this report. The Rules of the House of Commons have been changed, supposedly for the better. The number of committees has been increased, and their memberships reduced. The result is that there are now so many committees that hardly a quorum is available for any one of them. We have today an example of what is going on.

What I am saying is no reflection on Senator Roebuck, who is one of the most assiduous of our colleagues. But it is a physical impossibility for the Members of the House of Commons to attend regularly the committees of which they are members. When we go to the House of Commons we see very few members, and we wonder where they are. We are told that they are attending sittings of the committees. When we go to the committees we are surprised to find that they do not have a quorum.

I heard Mr. Stanley Knowles, who was instrumental in changing the rules, say on television that he did not understand why the attendance was so small in the house and in the committees, now that the new rules were in effect. Members of the House of Commons have met together to improve conditions, but it is evident that the committees are too numerous.

It is absurd to have a Special Joint Committee on Divorce. We already have our Standing Committee on Divorce, and the House of Commons have their Private Bills Committee which attends to such matters for that house.

We are now being asked to reduce the quorum of this committee from nine to seven. Why? It is because physically the members cannot attend the sittings of all the committees. It is an absurdity. I regret it, and I express my regret to those who were instrumental in redrafting the rules and Standing Orders for the House of Commons. They will have to meet again in order to improve conditions and to make sure that a satisfactory number of committee members attend the sittings of the various committees.

I rely on the fairness of Senator Roebuck. I would be satisfied to have the quorum of this committee reduced to one, if he were the only member of the committee able to attend its sittings. That would be an easy thing to do, and perhaps we will come to that.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: With both houses represented?

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: He will represent both houses, and he will do it very well and in fairness to all.

Honourable senators, this is a sad picture. I am sorry for having to draw the sadness of it to your attention, but I have done so. I have done my duty in that regard. Once more we must remind the Canadian people that the members of this chamber are much more assiduous in their duties than are the members of the other place.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I thank my colleague Senator Pouliot for the very kind remarks he has made. I would point out that the quorum requested for this committee is the same as that granted the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on Consumer Credit (Cost of Living).

The reason for my asking that this report be considered now is that the committee is meeting tomorrow. As honourable senators have just heard, this house will be in session at the same time. The Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Consumer Credit (Cost of Living) will also be sitting tomorrow. We have had some difficulty in meeting so far because we have been meeting while the Senate has not been in session. I have been here, as have two or three other honourable senators, but only because the committee was sitting. However, we have managed one way or another.

Tomorrow the committee will hear a very distinguished witness who has already prepared a magnificent brief to present to us. It would be a great pity if by any chance we were not able to hear what he has to say because of a lack of quorum. That situation would be almost unthinkable, and that is my only reason for asking that this report be considered now. I am rather apprehensive as to what may happen tomorrow if we do not reduce the quorum.

Hon. Malcolm Hollett: Honourable senators, I do not always agree with the honourable Senator Pouliot, but I think he has spoken very wisely. I have a notice today to appear before the Consumer Credit Committee at three o'clock, and I also had a summons to appear here in the Senate chamber at three o'clock. What a painful decision to have to make! I do not think it is right that one should have to serve in the Senate or in the House of Commons when committees are meeting at the same time.

Furthermore, the Consumer Credit Committee was meeting all the while we were in recess, and unfortunately many of us who live a long distance away could not very well attend. Again, I do not think that is fair. Let us all be here together, or let us have no one here. To have a summons to appear before the Consumer Credit Committee this afternoon at three o'clock while the Senate is sitting does not seem right.

I think an effort has to be made to correct this matter, and I am sure the Chairman of the Joint Committee on Divorce will do all he can so far as this is concerned. I think it is time for us in the Senate to step in and declare ourselves. If committees are going to take place at the same time as the Senate sittings, let us abolish the Senate, as some people in the other place want to do, and just set up some committees. I repeat, I agree with what the honourable Senator Pouliot said on this occasion.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, perhaps I should say a word about this matter.

There is no doubt that there can be a conflict between the sittings of the houses and the sittings of committees. A number of joint committees are being set up, and I agree with this because in my view they render very great service to Parliament. However, I do realize that the effect of this at times is to put a greater load upon senators who live closer to Ottawa than upon others. There are those from very distant parts who do stay in Ottawa during the adjournments of the Senate and do attend these joint committee meetings very faithfully, and I should like to commend them for what they do.

Moreover, I think there is something to be said too for the Senate being in recess when there is no legislation for us to deal with. I see no reason why we should summon 102 ladies and gentlemen here to Ottawa to sit simply for the purpose of adjourning so that a few or a small number can attend committees. That is the difficulty. I am not complaining, but I do think an explanation should be on the record. This is a difficulty with which the leader and indeed the entire Senate are confronted. In commending those who have attended the meetings, I would urge others to do all they can to come here and give their attendance so that the Senate will be adequately represented, and so that when certain bills are considered in this chamber we will have here persons who are well informed as to what happened in committee.

As I have said, I realize there can be conflicts. However, I think I am correct in saying that all these joint committees have permission to sit while the houses are sitting, and for this reason I ask for the co-operation of the members of committees to try to pace themselves so that they will be able to do as much as possible to assist the work not only of the Senate but of the joint committees.

Hon. Mr. Davies: Honourable senators, arising out of what has been said, I have a question. If a senator who is a member of one of the committees which is meeting at the same time as the Senate attends the committee meeting, does he get credit for having attended a Senate sitting?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I think the matter of attendance is easily settled. There is no difficulty about that matter. Appearance in the Senate is considered as an attendance.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I think the act provides that if a member of the Senate is absent on account of Government business he is exempt from being here.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable Senator Macdonald is quite right, but there have been occasions when the question was raised whether or not an attendance in committee in the morning counts as an attendance in the Senate in the afternoon. This is a technical point, and I think it is not one that we should delve into at this time.

I think the answer I gave to Senator Davies' question, plus the supplementary explanation given by Senator Macdonald (Brantford), will be a clear guide in this situation. It may be what I might call a starry guide as to how we should conduct ourselves.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it has been moved by honourable Senator Roebuck, seconded by honourable Senator Fergusson, that the report be now adopted.

Report adopted.

CONSTITUENCIES OF CANADA

POPULATION—INQUIRY ANSWERED

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot inquired of the Government pursuant to notice:

> What is the population of each of the constituencies of Canada, as described in Part II of the Canada Gazette of June 20, 1966?

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I have the answer to this question.

I would ask that Inquiries No. 2 and No. 3 stand.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Honourable senators, I thank the honourable leader for answering Inquiry No. 1. I should, however, point out that it has been on the Order Paper since June 29, and the answer has been prepared by one who had nothing else to do than add the population of the various parts of the new constituencies. If he did that with an adding machine it would take him no more than one day. I wonder what he has done besides that since June 29, and if he has taken holidays. Moreover, I must also point out that the information that I have requested should have been on the desk of every cabinet minister a long time before it was asked for here in the Senate.

As to Inquiry No. 2, it too has been on the Order Paper since June 29. It concerns the amounts of money that have been paid by the Government to the solicitors, lawyers and notaries public and others who work for the Government. I am anxious to have that information, and there is no reason to delay the answer. It is in the public accounts, and it is very easy for the Treasury Branch of the Department of Justice and other departments to make that calculation. When we think that in the Province of Quebec there was the case of one Mordecai, the adviser to King Ahasuerus, who was paid $75,000 per year for three years—a quarter of a million dollars in three years—for legal services, I would like to know if the same thing is happening here in Ottawa, and if this is the rate paid to solicitors in Government service. I do not object because of the money paid to them, but my contention is that those who receive emoluments from the federal Government or from any provincial Government should be debarred from sitting on the executive councils of the provincial bars and the Canadian Bar Association, so that those Bar associations can be independent. At the present time, when so many lawyers are paid high fees by any Government and when there are so many of them on the executives of the Bar associations, I do not see how the Bar can be called independent.

I thank the honourable leader for providing the information as soon as possible as to the two previous inquiries.

COMMONWEALTH PARLIAMENTARY ASSOCIATION

CONFERENCE AT OTTAWA

The Senate resumed from Tuesday, October 18, the debate on the inquiry of honourable Senator Connolly (Ottawa West), calling the attention of the Senate to the 12th General Conference of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, held in Ottawa from September 28 to October 4, 1966, and the participation therein of the delegation from Canada.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, there is always a danger when we report on these assignments—as it is my duty to do now on the 12th Commonwealth Parliamentary Association Conference—that we begin to sound a little like a mutual admiration society. I want to avoid that danger, but as one who had the opportunity to observe the planning and organization of the conference from beginning to end, there are a few things that should be said, a few credits given to those who made the conference a success, without which any report would, in my view, be incomplete.

I was very glad that after Senator Connolly (Ottawa West) made the main report, Senator Hugessen took the opportunity to fill in some of the gaps that Senator Connolly had left in respect to his own very important role in the conference. In spite of the fact that Senator Connolly himself has asked me to say no more about that, I feel I should add something of my own knowledge.

Senator Connolly was of course the second Canadian to hold the highest office in the Association, the other being Senator Roebuck, who was the chairman 15 years ago and served with great distinction. On Senator Connolly's tenure I report to the Senate only what I heard many delegates from many countries say; that, in effect, he had brought great distinction to himself, to Canada and the Commonwealth by his usual skill in such matters, by an expenditure of energy that some of us would like to see him conserve rather more than he does, and by his usual charm of manner, to which we have become so accustomed in this chamber.

A very characteristic anecdote, if I may call it that, is that when he went over to London last May to attend the General Council meeting he went first, I am told, to Lincoln's Inn to refresh his memory on that great man of the Renaissance, Sir Thomas More, the author of Utopia and, later, a martyr and saint of his church. I was told that Senator Connolly made one of the most inspiring speeches ever made before the General Council, in which he related the humanism of Sir Thomas More in his time to the human problems of the underprivileged peoples of our Commonwealth in our time.

When I heard that, I recalled some lines that I had heard spoken at our Stratford this summer which would seem appropriate. Honourable senators may remember the occasion when the Archbishop of Canterbury was contrasting the new-found kingly qualities of Henry V with his riotous youth as Prince Hal. I cannot suggest any such comparison in the case of Senator Connolly, because I never knew him in his youth, but I make bold to suggest that Shakespeare's words do apply to that amazing facility he has in mastering any new subject that is put before him; and Shakespeare put it this way:

> Hear him but reason in divinity
> You would desire that he were made a prelate
> Hear him debate on Commonwealth affairs
> You would say it hath been all in all his study
> Turn him to any cause of policy
> The Gordian knot of it he will unloose
> Familiar as his garter—

As I go along I will be pointing out that Senator Connolly had a few Gordian knots to unloose during the conference.

I should also pay tribute to the leader of the Canadian delegation, the Honourable

John Turner. He very quickly made himself one of the outstanding figures at the conference. It was the first time in years—if not ever—that Canada had appointed a cabinet minister to lead the Canadian delegation, and there were many who felt that this was a long overdue tribute to the other Commonwealth countries who have, over the years, almost invariably appointed members of their cabinets to lead their delegations. Mr. Turner more than justified the principle, and one would hope that he has established a precedent which will not be departed from in the future.

Senator Connolly has also referred to the contributions of Senator Leonard and Senator Hugessen to the success of the conference, and I am in the fullest agreement with him.

I think some of us rather enjoyed that brief experience of having seats in the House of Commons; and, speaking personally, when one of the sessions was held in this chamber I thought it was a good omen of better times ahead that I found myself once again sitting on the right of the presiding officer.

There are many others to whom congratulations are due. Senator Connolly has mentioned all of them, and I join with what he said about Mr. Vanderfelt, Mr. Grey and others of the London office; and Mr. Imrie, Colonel Bowie, Miss Macpherson and others of our own secretariat; and of course the invaluable Mr. Montgomery.

In that connection I think it is a real sign of progress that we have in Canada now established a parliamentary conference secretariat under Mr. Imrie. It may not generally be known that his office handles all the arrangements for all parliamentary conferences and, naturally, that office is developing experience and skills which I think are adding greatly to the success of delegations coming and going to these conferences.

I said that Senator Connolly had some Gordian knots to unloose. That, I suppose, is to be expected when 170 or more politicians from various countries meet in legislative chambers. It should be said that these conferences are anything but a joy-ride for those who attend them. The discussions are factual, down-to-earth, penetrating and at times heated, but always, I think, instructive. I cannot but believe that the Hansard of the proceedings—which, as Senator Connolly said, we produced for the first time in Canada this year—will be both useful and influential at the decision-making levels of the governments of the countries represented.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: The sessions on Rhodesia, for example, were often of the "gloves off" variety, although as far as I could see there were no blows below the belt. There was a detailed statement from the Right Honourable Gordon Bottomly, who was the leader of the United Kingdom delegation, on the constitutional aspects of the Rhodesian crisis from the British point of view. It is recorded in the conference Hansard, and I suggest it is well worth reading, regardless of what one's views may be on the solution of this problem. I know some delegates—particularly from the western countries—were surprised to find not all the African delegates in favour of immediate military sanctions; some of course were. There was certainly no unanimity among the Africans and Asians on this subject or, indeed, on the status of Nigeria or Ghana, who are having their growing pains at the moment.

The subject of trade and aid was prominent on the agenda of this conference, as I think it will be in many conferences in the future. This is so because of the very startling facts that were put before us in the debates and in the data papers prepared by the London secretariat and by our own.

The most startling fact of all—and I have referred to it before—is that the gap between individual standards of living and national productivity of the developed nations and the developing nations is still widening after a quarter of a century of aid. Of all the aid that will be given by all aid-giving countries this year to developing countries, at least one-half will have to be paid back to the donors in principal or interest on previous loans. This, to me, is appalling.

The situation facing us is that the total level of international aid has not increased in the last few years. I am happy to be able to report that Canada is an exception to this, both in the quantity—which is probably just as important, if not more so—and the quality of our aid.

When I reported to this chamber on the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association's Conference in Jamaica two years ago I said that our total aid in 1965 would reach $190 million. Actually, it was a little more than that, being just over $200 million. This year it will be $300 million. If all the developed countries were to make a similar increase in their aid, then it is almost certain that for the first time in this long haul of years that gap would begin to narrow.

This of course is a matter of the greatest importance to the nations of the Commonwealth, because in this respect we are about the poorest of all the international organizations. Of our 25 member nations, only four are in a position to grant aid without also being the recipients of aid. These are the United Kingdom, Canada, Australia and New Zealand. All the authorities I have consulted are agreed that it is only with a program of aid first, and then trade, that we will be able to solve this world-wide problem which many think constitutes a greater danger to the peace of the world than Red Guards, Vietnam, the population explosion, or even the proliferation of nuclear weapons. Our world can handle these, but only if and when we are able to assure the peoples of these undeveloped countries that their standards of living are going to begin at once to rise a little bit every year.

They are not asking for the moon and sixpence; they are asking only for the sixpence. If we do not collectively find ways and means of giving it to them soon, then we may find as Rome did—and I do not think I am exaggerating—that we are not safe behind all the legions on the frontier.

I simply cannot believe, honourable senators, that we of the developed affluent nations can keep on adding to our affluence every year, and boasting about it—as of course we do—while half of the world starves. That is a fact, and it has been verified before the United Nations. Half the peoples of the world are starving, or are living at slightly below subsistence level, while ours is an affluent society.

There is a realistic target. Nobody is suggesting we just keep on pouring out money and hoping. Studies have made it clear that if all the nations in a position to give aid were to give one per cent of their gross national income, then the gap would immediately start to close; not only that, but many nations would within a year or so reach that take-off point where their economies would become self-propelled and they would need very little aid in the future.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs has predicted that by 1970 the total level of Canadian aid should reach that figure of one per cent of gross national income. At the present time the average amount given by all the aid-giving nations is about half of one per cent of their gross national incomes. Canada's giving is probably 0.6 per cent, or just over half of one per cent.

Not having all the facts, and not wishing to suggest that I know more than those who have responsibility in this matter, I wonder if it might not make a tremendous contribution to the solution of this problem if Canada were to announce now that somehow we will find the extra money to bring our contributions up to one per cent, if other aid-giving nations will do the same.

Another matter that arose out of the conference discussion—and honourable senators may have read something of it in the papers —was the suggestion that these conferences cost too much money. I think it is fair to say in respect of this conference that any such comment was almost entirely due to a lack of knowledge of the facts. It should be remembered that the C.P.A. is an association of branches attached to some 90 legislatures around the world. Of these, no fewer that 11 are Canadian. Both federal and provincial Canadian representatives have for 15 years been guests of other countries at these conferences. All 11 Canadian branches were joint hosts at this last conference, and Senator Leonard, the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance, would be the first to agree, I think, that the provinces were generous in their co-operation with us.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: So, to get an estimate of the weight of expense we have to divide the total by 11, and remember that our branches were 11 members who took responsibility for this conference.

Of course, a most unique feature of the C.P.A. conferences are the tours across the country. Some have said they are unnecessary. I spoke to many delegates about this, and I would say the opinion was unanimous that these tours are just as important, if not more important, than the conference itself. As far as Canada is concerned, I am convinced that the value to us of these important leaders from all over the world getting to know Canada, and not just Ottawa, is inestimable. The same applies when our delegates go abroad. There are ties that bind us together as a Commonwealth, and they are ties that need constant renewal. I would say, of course, that it is not necessary for any tour in a smaller country to be as expansive as was necessary in Canada.

It is my opinion that we could do with considerably fewer official dinners. As a matter of fact, my own feeling, which I think is the feeling of others, is that the best hospitality is often the least expensive. I am glad to say that it is becoming a standard feature of C.P.A. conferences for small groups of delegates to be invited into private homes.

Another of Senator Connolly's Gordian knots, and something that I thought he handled extremely well, was the implied criticism of the activities of the Commonwealth Secretary-General, Mr. Arnold Smith, formerly of our Department of External Affairs. While it could not be described as serious, and while it came from only one or two delegates from older countries, it did suggest that the Secretary-General should in future confine himself merely to secretarial duties. I found myself on Mr. Smith's side, not because he is a Canadian but because, in my opinion, he was right. He was right, and is right, to speak up about Commonwealth affairs, and certainly when he does it within the scope of policies laid down by the Prime Ministers' meeting, which, so far as I have read, is what he has done.

It may be hard for some of us older Commonwealth countries to swallow the fact that the Secretary-General of the Commonwealth represents equally all its members, and not merely the members of the old club. This is particularly so because it must be remembered that the older countries—the United Kingdom, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa at one time—opposed the institution of the Secretariat. It was the newer nations that insisted on its being formed.

The United Nations would be a poorer place today were it not for men like U Thant speaking out, even though at times they are critical of the greater and middle powers. NATO, it seems to me, was a stronger alliance when General Eisenhower and others were speaking their minds. The European Common Market was more viable before its secretary was muzzled. Who speaks for SEATO now? This great international organization might have headed off the whole trouble in Vietnam if there had been such a thing as the voice of SEATO. For such reasons, honourable senators, I hope that Mr. Smith will not take this recent sniping too seriously and will not allow himself to be muzzled.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: These are days when we need men with the ability and experience to rise above their own national backgrounds, just as in our own country we need men who can rise above regional backgrounds and see the nation as a whole. We need more, not less, of these men of international vision to show the rest of us how we can direct our nationalism into channels more conducive to the peace of the world than it has been in the past. I believe there is room in the world for both nationalism and internationalism.

Certainly we hear enough of the voice of nationalism, and we can stand a lot more of the voice of internationalism from men like Mr. Arnold Smith.

Such, honourable senators, are some of the thoughts I brought away from what I am sure was for the vast majority of delegates a very successful 12th Commonwealth Parliamentary Association Conference. As host country, I think we can allow ourselves some small measure of satisfaction in its success.

LIVESTOCK FEED ASSISTANCE BILL

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. John J. Connolly, with leave of the Senate, moved the second reading of Bill C-218, to provide assistance to livestock feeders in Eastern Canada and British Columbia.

He said: Honourable senators, I approach the matter of explaining this bill with some trepidation because I am neither a farmer nor a farmer's son. I hope that if there are people who are more aware, and I am sure there are, of some of the problems that face the farming community in this country, and if they find that as I move along I stumble or fall on my face, they will either put out a hand to help me or will stand me up. Perhaps I should begin by giving the background to this legislation.

Honourable senators will remember that in 1941 a transportation subsidy was granted by Parliament and the Government of the day because of the increased domestic, foreign and, in particular, American demand for beef, pork, lamb, poultry and products of that kind. The food supply for these products in western Canada was very great or potentially so, but it was closer to the United States border than it was to Canadian breeders on the west coast of British Columbia, in eastern Canada, in central Canada and the Maritimes. Furthermore, this feed grain was cheaper to European breeders than it was to breeders in eastern Canada and British Columbia because of the cheaper export rates which then prevailed. This transportation subsidy was granted for the purpose of attempting to encourage the breeding of livestock and poultry in parts of Canada where the feed was not grown in sufficient quantities to allow the industry to develop. Since the war the position is relatively unchanged. There have been controls on feed importation to encourage the development of feeds in Canada. Not all have been under control. Corn has been under the control of the wheat board, and I understand the vegetable protein sources like soya beans and soya bean meal have been under import control.

As I said a little earlier before the doors were opened, I have placed before honourable senators a group of statistical tables entitled "Statistical Information with regard to the Livestock Feed Assistance Bill." I may say that these tables, which I am not going to table, will be referred to in the order in which they appear in the document placed in the hands of all honourable senators.

Table No. 1, on page 1 of the document, indicates the need in tons of feed grains in central and eastern Canada. The figures were given for the year 1964 for the provinces from Ontario eastward to Newfoundland, and the quantities are significant. On table 5 at page 2 is shown the transportation subsidy which has been paid in the form of freight rate assistance for western grains to British Columbia and to the eastern Canadian provinces, with prices fixed at the Lakehead. The totals are not given. Perhaps it would be of interest to know that in the peak year in which the subsidy was paid, which was the crop year 1958-59, over $22 million in assistance was expended by the federal authority. The low year was the crop year 1962-63 in which some $15½ million subsidy was paid, and I think the average seems to run pretty close to $17 million a year. This was approximately the amount paid in the crop year 1964-65. The amount of shipments of western grain will be found on page 3 of the documents which I have supplied, which indicates the shipments of western grains and feeds into eastern Canada and British Columbia for the crop years 1949-50 to 1964-65. These reached a total of 2½ million tons in the crop year 1955-56, and a low—and not very much of a low at that—in the crop year of 1961-62 of 1,900,000 tons. In addition to the matter of the transportation subsidy for the shipment of grains, it was found too that the problem of storage costs was increasing the problem for the breeders.

On page 5 of the document supplied, honourable senators will see an indication of where in eastern Canada—east of the Lakehead, that is—the storage facilities are provided, and the total licensed capacity at these points for the storage of grain outside the navigation season, namely, during the winter months.

I would also direct honourable senators' attention to page 6 of the document supplied, in which an indication is given of the stocks of western wheat, oats and barley in storage in eastern Canada in terms of thousands of bushels. This is given for the crop years 1961-62 through the crop year 1965-66.

Perhaps I could point out one or two figures on this table which would be of interest to honourable senators. In the crop year 1961-62, in the first week in December there were over 20 million bushels of wheat, oats and barley in storage. In the following April over 9 million bushels were still in storage. The holdover in the crop year 1963-64 was 7¾ million bushels. So honourable senators will see—and this is one of the first problems that has to be dealt with by the department in this exercise—that while storage was essential in order to stabilize price and to make feed available to eastern and western breeders, there were still some discrepancies in the way the storage facilities were handled, and there was a great supply of grain in storage at the time the new navigation season opened in the Great Lakes.

One of the complaints made is that there have been price variations, and rather wide price variations, between the cost of feed grains to the breeder in mid-winter and in mid-summer. Table 20 on page 7 is helpful in this respect. This page contains an index guide—not a price guide—highlighting the higher unit prices at various times both for feed and animals from the calendar year 1963 through the calendar year 1965. I may say, and the table so indicates, that the index numbers of feed prices and prices of farm animals and farm animal products by months in this period are based on a figure of 100 for the crop years 1935-1939.

Some figures shown here are perhaps indicative of the problem too. In the year 1964, in the feed column, honourable senators will see that the feed index in October was 218.6. The following April, 1965, that index had risen—which means that the price had risen in accordance with the index—from 218.6 to 248.5. I cannot translate this in terms of price, but it is an indication of the extent to which prices varied over the winter months. There are other figures which indicate variations, if honourable senators care to look at this table carefully. The high for feed seems to have been in 1965, in April, 248.5. The high for animals seems to have been in 1965, in December, when the index was 320.3.

I know this makes a tedious speech, but I am putting these figures on record so they can be of value to honourable senators at committee stage.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: Were those market variations?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): They were market variations, variations in the price reduced to 100 for the crop years 1935-1939. So, it indicates, first of all, the increases in price from 1935 to 1939 to the years in question, and the variation in the index reflects simply the increases or decreases in prices, depending on the season, both for feed and animals.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: That is the market variation?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes, that is right. There has been a debate in the industry, in the farming community, and indeed in the trade, as to whether or not the storage assistance which began in 1963—and which, I should inform the Senate, now has been dropped for this year—should be continued as a public or private venture. It has cost approximately $1.2 million per annum to provide the subsidies required for storage during the winter months.

There was an excellent debate on this subject in the other place, a debate in which very useful and informative speeches were made by farmers from Ontario, if I may say so, on the opposition side of the house, who knew the problem. In particular, one of them said that some consideration should be given to the encouragement of private enterprise to provide the storage which is required by allowing special rates of depreciation. That was one of the practical suggestions—and a very good one, I thought—made on the other side during the debate.

However, as honourable senators will see, even from a casual inspection of these tables, the big problem has been first that of coordinating the work of government agencies and the trade, and also trying to eliminate the huge carryovers after the winter months have passed and navigation is opened in the Seaway.

In addition to the transportation subsidy of approximately $17 million a year, and the subsidy for feed storage, which was approximately $1 million a year in the last three years only, there have been certain other facilities provided, particularly in specified zones in eastern Canada, for the subsidization of the distribution of feed grains from central points by the trucking industry. This has proved to be a successful venture. It has encouraged lower-cost movement of these feed grains within the specified areas, within the zones. It has provided increased competition for the shorter hauls; and I am told that it has reduced the cost of this shorter haul transportation by as much as $4 a ton.

There has been criticism too that this many-pronged program has been one which has helped the big feeders rather than the small family farm feeder or breeder. The trade, in fact, has been buying the bulk of the grain, particularly in western Canada, and the trade has been making arrangements for the distribution and sale to the breeders. It has been done mainly by private agencies with the subsidies to which I have referred. This in turn has led to complaints that there has been too much in the way of middlemen's profit, too much in the way of opportunities for speculators. Honourable senators can see by simply looking at page 7 the rise and fall in prices, and obtain an indication of the opportunity for the speculator to buy when the grain is cheap, and to hold and to sell when the grain is more expensive.

There was some criticism also of the fact that there has been a good deal of price fluctuation. This is hard on the farmer-breeder in Eastern Canada, including the Maritimes, and on the west coast. The table on page 7 indicates that the feed costs and the animal costs are up and down seasonally.

I refer honourable senators to Table 25 on page 8, which is entitled: "Canadian Wheat Board Prices to Producers for Western Canadian Oats, Basis in Store Fort William-Port Arthur, Crop Years 1962-63 to 1964-65". The second table on that page indicates the same figures for barley. I do not purport to discuss these tables; I simply draw them to the attention of this house for the purpose of indicating what the prices to producers of these feed grains are at the Lakehead.

There is a good deal of development in the feed grain growing business in eastern Canada, particularly in Ontario, and on that account it is important to know something of what the prices are that the farmer-grower commands in the Province of Ontario. Those are given in Table 26, which is to be found on page 9 of the documents filed.

Perhaps I can summarize this table by saying first of all that it contains the daily quotations and the monthly averages of Ontario Corn, No. 2 Yellow, for the crop year 1964-65. In August and September of 1964 it will be seen that the average for the month was high. For October and November it was low. From December through to April it was rising, and in May, June and July it became high again. In other words, the seasonal variation in the price is indicated in this table.

The variations in commercial prices are indicated on Table 29, which is found on page 10 of the material supplied. Perhaps I should simply indicate that the important line of Table 29 is the last one, which shows the range per ton over the period from 1961 to 1965. For No. 5 wheat in store at Fort William during this five-year period the price was $12.24 per ton. For No. 1 feed barley the price was $19.00; for Ontario corn the price was $21.07; for soybeans at Toronto it was $60.00; for fish meal it was $30.20, and for meat meal, $30.00. The last three columns, I may say, do not relate to feed grains, but to the ingredients that are included in the feed grain mix, and they do, in fact, advance the price of the feed grain to the breeder.

I would ask honourable senators to look also at Table 33 on page 11, because they will see there the value of the grain crop at the farm in each province for 1963. The figures are in millions of dollars. Those prices range from a high in Saskatchewan of $1,012 million, to a low in the province of Nova Scotia of $1.7 million. The value of the crop in 1963 in Ontario was $220 million. This indicates that there is a good deal of feed grain grown in central Canada, and much less in the Maritimes, with, of course, the bulk being grown in western Canada.

I should say here, honourable senators, that the freight assistance to subsidize transportation—the $17 million that is paid—is paid for the subsidization of the movement of grains from Fort William eastward through to the easternmost provinces of Canada. But there is no subsidy paid on feed grains grown in central Canada if those grains move from central Canada eastward to the Maritimes.

Hon. Mr. Benidickson: And there is no subsidy if it goes to the Rainy River or Dryden districts.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): That is right. I thank the honourable senator for his interjection.

I would draw the Senate's attention also to Table 34 on page 12, because it gives comparative figures on prairie production, prairie utilization, total producers marketings, exports of wheat, oats and barley grains in the prairie region, and the quantity which is freight assisted for livestock consumption in eastern Canada and British Columbia.

I have not very much comment to make upon this table, but it does indicate in the first column what the prairie provinces produced from the crop year 1958-59 to the crop year 1965-66. In the second column is shown the utilization that was made of those feed grains—wheat, oats and barley—in western Canada. The third column shows the total producers marketings outside of the prairie provinces. The fourth column shows the amount of the exports made, and the last column the amount that was freight-assisted.

These figures do not add up mathematically to an exact figure of production. I am informed that that is because it is difficult to estimate the actual amount used on the prairies for feed purposes.

Table 4 on page 13 gives some idea, particularly in the last column, of the eastern feed grain production in Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. I should comment that the third column indicates the amount of western feed received in each of those provinces, and this is the subsidized grain. The next column shows the acreage in feed grains in each of the provinces, and the last shows the feed grain production in thousands of tons for each of these provinces.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: May I ask the honourable Leader of the Government a question? I am not clear with respect to the information in Table 34 on page 12. The export figure given for 1964-65 in respect of oats is 17.5. I take that to be millions of bushels.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): All of these figures are given in millions of bushels.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: Then, under the heading "Freight Assisted" there is the figure 35.2. Does that mean 35.2 million bushels?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: But only 17.5 million bushels were exported?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I think these exports are the exports overseas. It will be seen that the total marketings of oats in that year amounted to 49.7 million bushels. I have said that these figures do not add up mathematically because they are estimates, but there were 49.7 million bushels marketed outside of western Canada in 1963-64, after deducting the feed needed there. The figure of 17.5 million bushels probably relates to overseas exports. However, this will have to be verified in committee. The figure of 35.2 million bushels relates to the freight-assisted exports from western Canada to eastern Canada. I should add that the cost of shipping feed grains out of Canada from western Canada is done at a very special rate, as the hon. senator undoubtedly knows.

Now, I am not completely away from the tables but very nearly so. At this stage I should say something about the effect of the subsidy both for transportation and for storage of western feeds on the position in central and eastern Canada.

Generally speaking, I think it fair to say that the subsidy program has been depressing on prices for these feeds. One of the reasons is the fact that even if in central Canada they grow surplus to their requirements, there is no subsidy from central Canada to the Maritimes for feed grains. So the effect seems to have been, and the Ontario farmers have indicated this a number of times, that both the transportation and storage subsidy has inhibited the development of the feed grain industry in central Canada, although perhaps not in the Maritimes.

The Maritime problem in feed production is indicated in Table 33 on page 11. There honourable senators will see that the production of feed grain in the Maritimes is small. Some of the representatives in the other place from the Maritimes speaking to that point gave the reasons for this: farm units are smaller, there is less mechanization on the smaller units than on the bigger farms in western Canada, and the capital requirements to mechanize and enlarge the units are not as readily available as they should be. Here it seems to me that the terms in the bill dealing with farm machinery last session, which originated in the fertile mind of the senator from Calgary Senator Hays, might very well contain a solution to the problem in the Maritimes with respect to the growing of feed grain. If I remember, the honourable senator in explaining the bill in cabinet and elsewhere felt it might he helpful to the man on the smaller unit or family farm.

There are, of course, in Canada great developments in the areas of crop rotation and fertilization. Climate also has much to do with this, as it affects the length of the growing season. The problem is storage and the kind of storage that must be provided; and I am told that the drying of grain is an important aspect of the marketing process.

I suppose the ideal situation would be that each section, whether it be the Atlantic area or central Canada or the prairies or British Columbia, should be self-sufficient in feeds, capable of supplying the local needs of the breeders in the area, and exporting the surplus, and that the breeders in turn would be able to sell locally and export their surplus. Whether that can ever come about will, I suppose, depend on the development of the country and to some extent on foreign markets.

I think I should refer now to future prospects. In this regard there is on page 14 of the material supplied a table which should purport to be something of a crystal ball. This indicates that by 1980—and I am only going to refer to two figures from this table—an additional 31,000 million pounds of feeds will be required in this country, and about an additional 5,780,000 acres of land will have to be devoted to the production of feed grains. So, the opportunity for markets for feed grains on the basis of this estimate is very great indeed.

I should say that on March 22, 1965 the Agriculture Committee of the House of Commons made a report in which it described the existing domestic situation in respect of feed grains in Canada and called for a remedy. I arranged this afternoon for honourable senators who were interested to receive a copy of this report on entering the chamber. I think it is a very interesting report and bears reading.

I want to say something in passing about the situation that goes beyond our Canadian borders. Senator Grosart earlier this afternoon exhorted us to consider situations other than the Canadian situation, and in this regard I quote from the Winnipeg Free Press of October 21 under the heading "Food Shortages":

> Canada had a bumper crop. Russia had a bumper crop. The world food situation is worse this year than it was last year.
> Food production dropped back in this past year to its pre-World-War II level in the poorer regions of the world. In Africa, Asia and Latin America production dropped 4 to 5 per cent. In these regions population rose most.

Food output per person fell by about two per cent around the world. The general director of the Food and Agricultural Organization, B. F. Sen, issued these figures in the organization's annual report. He says: "Any remaining complacency...must surely have been dispelled by the events of the past year."

On page 15 you will see a table which indicates the livestock on farms in central and eastern Canada from June 1, 1941 through to the year 1964, and the increases and decreases per province for Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. The figures there are rather startling. Perhaps the big decrease in every province for horses is to be understood as a result of mechanization, but you will see that cattle in Ontario have increased some 58 per cent, with smaller increases in the other provinces until we get to Prince Edward Island, where there has been an increase of up to 81 per cent. In sheep and lambs there was a falling off of 62 per cent in New Brunswick, 66 per cent in Nova Scotia and 59 per cent in Prince Edward Island.

I would also draw the attention of honourable senators to the note at the bottom of that table, because there are references in the last two columns to the letters g.c.a.u. which mean grain consuming animal units. A horse is one unit; a dairy cow is one unit; other cattle constitute .51 of a unit; hogs, .87 of a unit; sheep, .04, and poultry .045 of a unit.

On page 16 you will see a table showing the livestock on farms in the prairie provinces for the years 1951, 1956, 1961 and 1964; and the changes which have occurred in dairy cattle, hogs, sheep and lambs, and poultry.

There are details in the remaining tables with which I will not weary the Senate. I come now to the bill.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: I wonder if the honourable leader would be good enough to turn to Table 5 on page 2 and note that the figures for the provinces of Ontario, Quebec, Newfoundland and British Columbia are all given individually; and once again the D.B.S.—I suppose these figures are from D.B.S.?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: They lump the Maritimes together, which does not give us a clear picture with regard to Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. In future I think all tables should be divided into individual provinces in order to give us a clear picture with regard to those provinces as well.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I certainly agree. That is not so with regard to the other tables. Perhaps the honourable senator who has asked the question would be satisfied with my assurance that when the bill goes to committee I will ask for a breakdown by provinces, including each of the Maritime provinces.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: That will be fine.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): The House of Commons debated this measure on October 6, 7, 11 and 21; and I must say that this was an excellent, far-ranging and long debate, but one in which there was not much information supplied.

The purpose of the bill, first of all, is to establish the Canadian Livestock Feed Board as a crown corporation, which will consist of three to five members appointed by order in council. They will serve during good behaviour, and out of their number the Governor in Council will appoint a chairman and vice-chairman. The chairman is going to be its chief executive officer. Salaries will be authorized by orders in council, and there will be provision for expenses incurred by board members. The board itself will determine its quorum, and there is provision in the bill for the filling of vacancies. The board will also have authority, subject to Treasury Board approval, to appoint officers, employees and staff.

In addition to the board, the bill also provides for the establishment of the Canadian Livestock Feed Board Advisory Committee. This committee will consist of from five to seven members appointed by order in council for a period of five years. No more than two will be allowed to vacate their position on the committee in any one year, in so far as that is possible. There will be allowances and travelling expenses provided for the members of this committee by order in council. The committee will be required to hold a meeting at least once every year, and more meetings per year will be held as determined either by the committee itself, or the minister, or by the board to which it reports. The committee will make its own rules to govern its proceedings.

Its duties—and I shall quote the words of section 15 (6)—will be:

> to study and review all matters relating to feed grain transportation, storage, prices and consumption that it may deem necessary, together with those that are referred to it either by the Minister or by the Board.

In addition to that, the committee will have the duty of reporting to the minister and to the board, of which it is the servant.

Now may I return to the board itself. The objects, powers and duties of the board are set out in sections 5 to 8 of the bill. In these sections is prescribed the proposed basic policy for the approach to the feed grain problem in Canada.

These sections indicate the objects of the board are to ensure a number of things: first, the availability of feed grain to meet the needs of the feeders; second, the adequacy of storage space, particularly in eastern Canada; third, reasonable stability in prices, both in eastern Canada and in British Columbia; and, fourth, the fair equalization of these prices in these two extreme areas of Canada, namely, eastern Canada and British Columbia.

I think it reasonable to conclude from this, honourable senators, that the basic source of supply of feed grains would continue to be the prairies. This, of course, does not preclude the production of feed grain in other parts of the country; and there is obviously room for development on the west coast, in the central provinces and the Maritime provinces. Indeed, if the foreseeable needs of 1980 are to be met, as indicated by what I have placed before the Senate this afternoon, there must be development; and I, for one, hope there can be great expansion in production.

Section 6 of the bill deals with the duties of the board. It authorizes the board to subsidize storage and transportation to further its objectives; to negotiate for storage or handling in the interests of reducing and stabilizing the costs of storage and handling in eastern Canada; to allocate space for storage facilities in eastern Canada; to negotiate import permits and licenses, when required—and sometimes they are required when you have crop failures or short supply in certain areas for certain ingredients of feeds. And the board has the usual powers to acquire, hold or dispose of real property; to carry out studies relating to feed grain prices; to require information from feeders and persons engaged in the business in all its ramifications; to establish branches of the board or employ agents of the board in Canada or elsewhere; to act as agent for Her Majesty in respect of its operations; and generally to do whatever is required to meet its purposes and functions.

Section 7 of the bill fixes certain duties of the board. They include, first, the study of the requirements for feed grain in eastern Canada and on the west coast, and its availability and storage needs.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: I wonder if the honourable senator would define the term "eastern". What is the western boundary of eastern Canada?

Hon. Mr. Benidickson: The Lakehead—and I object to that.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): As a matter of fact, the Lakehead is the quick answer. I will come to that, if I may, in just a moment. Generally speaking, it is the Lakehead.

Its other duties are: to make recommendations to the minister on storage facilities; generally, to advise the government on questions of stabilization in respect of the equalization of feed grain prices to feeders; and to consult with other appropriate departments and agencies of government.

In addition, the Government, by order in council, may empower the board to investigate certain problems relating to the transportation, storage and handling of feed grains in eastern Canada and British Columbia; the supplies and prices of feed grain in these areas; and payments related to the cost of feed grains, storage and transportation made under the act.

In addition to these broad powers given to try to cope with this problem that is before the Canadian people and the Canadian farm community, the board is empowered to purchase feed grains in eastern Canada, British Columbia and in the west, provided the latter purchases are made through the Canadian Wheat Board.

The board is empowered to import feed grain and pay the cost thereof for resale in Canada; and to acquire, ship, store and handle feed grain for the same purposes.

In the selling of feed grain the board is directed by the bill to do so in accordance with sound commercial business practice. This practice will apply not only to purchases, but as well to the cost of handling, storage and transporting feed products, and the administration cost of this activity; and it must recover the administrative and other costs it incurs in the exercise of its powers.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Cape Breton): Might I ask the honourable leader a question? Under section 8 the board can only do these things by order in council. The bill itself does not give the board the authority to do so, does it?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): As section 8 is a long section, I wonder if the honourable senator would mind if I took that under advisement?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Cape Breton): My point is that section 8 says:

> The board may, in furtherance of its objects, at any time when it is so authorized by regulation—

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Cape Breton): In other words, the board has not that power, but it can be given that power by regulation. Is that not correct?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): That is right. There is power to make regulations in the bill before the house.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Cape Breton): No. That refers to the making of regulations by order in council.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): The regulations will be made by order in council on the advice of the board. That is how it will work in practice, as I understand it.

Sections 16 to 18 of the bill deal with financial matters. Section 16 (1) provides that all expenditures under this act, including the amounts required for the payment of the cost of feed grain transportation and storage, and the payment of salaries and other administrative costs, shall be appropriated by Parliament. In other words, the amounts required will be provided for in the Estimates.

The board is authorized to make expenditures for the purchase of feed grain under section 16 (2), and these costs shall be paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund. There will be, in the Consolidated Revenue Fund, a special account set up for expenditures on the purchase of feed grains and receipts from the sale of the grain so purchased. The expectation is that the turnover of purchases and sales will be very rapid, so that the entries will be in and out entries.

Section 16 (4) contains a limitation on the financial activity of the board, in that the amount that can be expended from the account in the Consolidated Revenue Fund is limited to the credits which the board has in the account, plus $10 million which it can be granted, plus the amount of any loans which are made to the board by the Government under section 17. Section 17, as would be expected, provides that the Crown may lend money to the board, but that the amount of the loans may not exceed $50 million without further authorization of Parliament. An audit of the board's accounts and affairs is to be conducted by the Auditor General, who reports to Parliament.

Section 19 provides for the making of regulations dealing with such matters as the cost of storage and transportation, the classes of persons to whom payments may be made, and the period during which feed grains can be purchased. This section also may define where eastern Canada begins.

The regulations will also be with respect to the grades of wheat not considered to be feed grains, and those which are considered to be feed grains.

They will define "livestock" for the purposes of the act, and they will determine the location of the head office. The board will have authority also to make such other general regulations as it sees fit.

Section 21 provides for the probative value for court purposes of orders of the board, and by section 22 the board must report to Parliament annually by March 31 for the crop year ending the preceding July 31.

Honourable senators, I apologize for the length of my explanation. It seemed to me, after a long recess, that my introduction of this bill should be as complete as possible, so that those desiring to speak to it would have the information readily available. It may also be helpful to the work done in committee.

Perhaps my conclusion may be an oversimplification of the bill, but I would point out that the transportation subsidy, which is a large one, has been favourable to the western grain producer and to the eastern livestock producer, but it has not been as fair to the eastern grain producer and the western livestock producer. The problem, in any event, is a big one, and it is hoped, by the establishment of this board and this committee, that equitable solutions can be found, and also that encouragement will be given to this very important aspect of our national life.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Flynn, debate adjourned.

PRIVATE BILL

RAINBOW PIPELINE COMPANY LIMITED—SECOND READING

Hon. Earl A. Hastings moved the second reading Bill S-52, to incorporate Rainbow Pipe Line Company Limited.

He said: Honourable senators, this bill, which I recommend to you for second reading, provides for the incorporation of a pipe line company under the name of Rainbow Pipe Line Company Limited.

In my remarks today I propose to sketch briefly the background of the project, the sponsors, and the reasons why this bill is being presented now, because I believe the Senate will wish to be assured of the integrity of the sponsors and the legitimacy of the project.

As background, may I state that Canada's petroleum industry had its birth about 100 years ago, in 1858, when James Williams began producing oil from Canada's first well at Oil Springs, Ontario, near Sarnia. However, the present Canadian petroleum producing industry did not get rolling until major oil and gas discoveries were made in the western provinces after World War II, commencing with Imperial Oil's first major discovery at Leduc in 1947. Since 1947 many significant oil and gas fields have been discovered in rapid succession, and brought into production as transportation facilities were constructed and markets established.

These fields are located in the central part of Alberta, in southern Saskatchewan and in southern Manitoba. The Alberta fields developed subsequent to Leduc, and to which I refer, are Red Water, Pembina and Swan Hills. In northeastern British Columbia large discoveries of gas have been made in the last decade. It is to be noted that these plays, or discoveries, have progressed westward and northward as technology has met and solved the challenges of remoteness, terrain and climate—indeed these challenges have been met in this particular area of Alberta and the Northwest Territories.

During 1965 oil discoveries and development on the exploration front were probably the most significant of any in the past seven years, with the Rainbow Lake oil play opening a whole new exploration front. This particular area is situated approximately 100 miles south of the boundary of the Northwest Territories and northwest Alberta. The outcome of Rainbow Lake has seen exciting exploration developments north in the Zama Lake and Bitcho Lake areas of Alberta, extending into the Northwest Territories. Because the same sedimentary conditions are found to exist there, there is every geological reason for believing that the same productive horizons which exist in the prolific Rainbow Lake area will indeed extend into the Northwest Territories. The Rainbow Lake discoveries in 1965 will be an added incentive to exploration ventures in the offshore area and the Arctic.

The companies principally concerned with the discovery and development of this field were Banff Oil Ltd., Aquitaine Co. of Canada Ltd., Secony Mobil of Canada Ltd., and Imperial Oil Ltd. In order to bring this valuable production to market, these companies formed Rainbow Pipeline Co. Ltd., an Alberta corporation, in September 1965. Under a permit from the Alberta Government, Rainbow Pipeline Co. Ltd. has constructed a pipe line from the Rainbow field at a cost of approximately $27 million to connect with the existing pipe line systems in Alberta.

Honourable senators will appreciate that the most important means of transportation in the oil industry is by far the pipe line. The result is that this oil from the Rainbow Lake field can now be transported to major Canadian markets in eastern Canada and the Pacific coast.

The whole area northward from the present Rainbow field is considered by the industry to be very favourable for further exploration for the next several years. Tremendous exploration activity has been carried on this past year. New findings of oil have occurred in the area almost to the boundary of the Northwest Territories. Vigorous exploration is now being undertaken just north of the border and everyone is extremely hopeful of the results. I understand that over 200 development and wildcat wells are scheduled to be drilled throughout this exploration area during the coming drilling season, which in essence is the winter months.

It may be of interest to note that at a recent Crown Reserve sale conducted by the Province of Alberta one company paid $13½ million for petroleum and natural gas rights in the Zama Lake area. This last sale was one of the largest Crown Reserve sales in the Province of Alberta since the inception of exploration in 1947.

Rainbow Pipeline Co. Ltd. has already obtained from the Province of Alberta a permit to extend its existing line to the northern boundary of the province and will be in a position to offer transportation to these areas as soon as sufficient production develops.

Exploration and drilling in these far northern areas present many difficult problems. One well in this particular area could cost $1½ million or more to drill. There are no roads, and the country generally consists of muskeg. Therefore all major activities, including drilling and pipeline construction, have to be undertaken in winter when materials can be brought in by tractor train over the frozen terrain. It is expected, as I have already indicated, that there will be excellent results from exploration carried out this past summer, and more particularly from the drilling to be undertaken this coming winter. It is in anticipation of these developments that the Rainbow company is seeking permission to incorporate, so that it will be able to extend its line, if permission is granted by the National Energy Board, to serve production in the Northwest Territories as quickly as possible and without needless delay.

It will be appreciated by honourable senators that a federal charter is required for this purpose because a purely provincial company cannot extend its line over a provincial boundary and into the Northwest Territories. If, as is confidently expected, significant oil discoveries occur in the Northwest Territories during this coming winter, it will be important to have a competent, well-financed organization ready to construct a pipe line to transport that oil to market. The reason for the request for incorporation this year is to put the Rainbow company in a position to serve this important need as it arises.

From what I have said, honourable senators will appreciate that because of the limited construction season, confined as it is to the winter months, perhaps a year or more of valuable time could be lost if pipe line companies were not ready to request authorization from the National Energy Board and to proceed with construction if and when these discoveries are made.

The grant of a charter by Parliament is merely the first step. It is the responsibility of the National Energy Board to determine whether a given pipe line should be built and, more importantly, by what company it should be constructed. I am sure the Senate would agree that the Rainbow group, which has already spent so much money in exploration and development of these northern fields and in providing a pipe line connection between Rainbow Lake and Edmonton, should be in a position where it can apply to the National Energy Board when and if conditions justify the construction of a pipe line to the Northwest Territories.

The Parliament of Canada has a special responsibility for the development of the resources of the Northwest Territories. It is agreed by all that one of the greatest unexploited resources of the territories is petroleum. The key to the development of this important resource is the pursuit of a vigorous exploration program by oil companies. This exploration can and will be undertaken only if there is assurance that the oil, when discovered, can be brought to market. For this reason, I suggest that the passage of this bill is in the national interest. The assurance that a competent, well-financed group is ready to provide pipe line transportation of oil in this area will surely stimulate the development of petroleum resources.

In accordance with usual practice, the sponsors of this bill will be ready to appear before a Senate committee and explain its detailed provisions and full particulars of their plans. It is not appropriate for me to go into these details now, but I wish to make two specific comments. First, in order to avoid confusion between the existing provincial company, Rainbow Pipeline Company Ltd., and the federal company which is being incorporated, the sponsors will ask the Senate committee to consider a change of name of the proposed federal company to Rainbow Pipe Line Corporation. Secondly, the sponsors desire that it be made clear that this proposed federal pipe line, as is the case with the existing Alberta pipe line, will serve all producers in the area without discrimination. These lines will not be limited to the carriage of oil belonging to the four companies which are sponsoring this application.

Honourable senators, if second reading is given this bill, I propose to move that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. The applicants have assured me their legal counsel and technical experts are prepared to appear before the committee to answer any questions which honourable senators may have in connection with this application and project.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Hastings, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the committee's reports Nos. 817 to 847, inclusive, and moved that the said reports be taken into consideration on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

THREAT OF POSTAL STRIKE

CHRISTMAS AND NEW YEAR'S GREETINGS

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, on October 13 last I received a very pretty Christmas card which reads as follows:

Hope Christmastime leaves you
A house full of cheer—
To start you off right
On a Happy New Year!

And in French:

Joyeux Noël
La grève des postes bientôt.
Un postier

In English, that is:

Merry Christmas—
The postal strike soon.
A mailman

This is the time of the year when we buy Christmas cards, and I have always bought a certain quantity to send in answer to those that I have received. However, as the newspapers have announced that the difficulties of the Post Office Department have not yet been settled, and that a strike may occur on the 15th day of this month, I have made a sacrifice and decided not to buy any Christmas cards this year.

During the yuletide—on Christmas day and on New Year's day—my heart will overflow with gratitude, while remembering all the kindnesses that I received from everybody during the year. May I take this opportunity to wish you all a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) for the second reading of Bill C-218, to provide assistance to livestock feeders in Eastern Canada and British Columbia.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, with Senator Flynn's permission, may I intervene to reply to a request by the honourable senator from Halifax-Dartmouth (Hon. Mr. Isnor) for a revision of page 2 of the material that was circulated yesterday. Page 2 contains Table 5, which shows a breakdown between the various provinces in the maritime region. I have had that revision prepared and circulated to all honourable senators.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Should the table not be printed in Hansard as an appendix?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, we did not print the material in Hansard yesterday because it was circulated to all honourable senators as they entered the chamber. If in the course of the debate it is found desirable to print those tables, I would have no objection. When Senator Aseltine looks at the material, I think he will be just as happy not to have it printed.

[Translation]

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, when I moved the adjournment of the debate yesterday, I was not convinced I would not ask someone else to take my place today to discuss this bill on an agricultural problem which is far remote in character from those things I usually deal with. This oratorical precaution or excuse is similar to the one expressed by the Leader of the Government yesterday. I thought it might be amusing to give the following quotation. I shall not reveal its origin as that may be against the rules of the Senate. I quote:

> Mr. Speaker, when workers have problems, they go to a labour leader; when we have problems with the mail, we automatically go to someone who was practically born in a post office. Similarly, when we have legal problems, we > go to a man of law. We therefore wonder why, when it comes to as important a matter as feed, we must go to a minister who does not know the difference between barley and oats, or the difference between wheat flour and buckwheat flour.

I presume that applies somewhat to the Leader of the Senate, as at any rate it does to me. However, I know something about the problem this bill seeks to solve. But I shall take up only a few minutes of the time of the house, knowing that other senators, on this side of the house, who are familiar with agricultural problems, will have the opportunity of expressing their views.

The problem of feed grain in not a new one to livestock feeders in the East. As it has already been pointed out here, since 1941 the transport of feed grain has been subsidized to help eastern feeders. But this policy which was limited to granting transport subsidies did not give satisfactory results. That is why eastern livestock producers had for many years urged the government to do something about it, such as setting up an agency which would see to it that eastern feeders would be adequately supplied with feed grain, at a reasonable price. The main problem facing livestock feeders in eastern Canada was that the scarcity of feed grain during certain periods of the year pushed up prices. Such market fluctuations, especially during winter months, prevented the feeder from assessing with any degree of accuracy what his returns would be. Price stability would put the feeder in a better position to determine the price at which he could sell his livestock. We know that this matter of supplying eastern feeders with feed grain at adequate prices was the pet subject of Mr. Clément Vincent, who was federal Member of Parliament for Nicolet-Yamaska from 1962 to 1965 and who today is the Minister of Agriculture in the Quebec government. I think his untiring efforts most certainly helped to bring about the piece of legislation now before us.

Hon. Mr. Denis: He was not the only one.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: I quite agree with Senator Denis that he was not the only one, but at the beginning he was practically preaching in the wilderness. I know that today certain people belonging to the same political group as my honourable friend, Senator Denis, would like to have initiated this policy. However, I think Mr. Vincent should not be denied the credit he deserves, but at the same time the work done by Senator Denis' friends in promoting this legislation should not be overlooked.

Hon. Mr. Denis: The wilderness was from 1958 to 1962.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: My honourable friend was at the time sitting opposite me on the other side of the house, and I became dizzy when I used to gaze at the wilderness surrounding Senator Denis.

The obvious purpose of this legislation is to create a body known as the Canadian Livestock Feed Board. I quote the objects of section 5 without discussing them in detail, as follows:

> (a) the availability of feed grain to meet the needs of livestock feeders;
> (b) the availability of adequate storage space in Eastern Canada for feed grain to meet the needs of livestock feeders;
> (c) reasonable stability in the price of feed grain in Eastern Canada and in British Columbia; and
> (d) fair equalization of feed grain prices in Eastern Canada and in British Columbia.

It seems, incidentally, that the problem is almost the same in British Columbia as in eastern Canada. In short, this legislation guarantees supplies and firm prices of feed grain for livestock feeders of eastern Canada and British Columbia.

For those purposes, the Board is granted every useful power; it is allowed to continue subsidizing transportation costs and to buy in any manner, even abroad, some feed grain to be stored so as to provide livestock feeders during periods of shortage, especially during the winter, with the feed grain which they would need, and once more at a reasonable price.

Of course, the Board will be faced with numerous problems. It has been pointed out, for instance, that if the Board bought feed grain outside Canada, it would enter into competition with the Canadian Wheat Board and with western wheat growers. It is obvious that the Board will only make use of this provision or power in extreme cases. This is one of the theoretical problems which have been emphasized.

It may also be asked whether the Board will not enter into unfair competition with the wheat growers of eastern Canada proper, or of part of Ontario.

In other words, there is no doubt that, at first, the Board will have to make many adjustments in its operational methods so as to take into account the rightful interest of all those people it could prejudice in seeking to achieve its aims.

An attempt will have to be made to balance various and often conflicting interests and to find equitable solutions for everyone.

The government leader gave us yesterday a great deal of information which we shall have an opportunity to discuss in the Committee on Banking and Commerce.

The purpose of this legislation is surely worthwhile. It is undoubtedly designed to carry out a long-standing request made by a large group of people.

I am sure that eventually the Board will be able to achieve the purpose for which it is established under the present legislation.

Hon. W. M. Benidickson: Honourable senators, I listened with great interest to the remarks of the Leader of the Government and Senator Flynn. In this bill there is a definition as to the line between western and eastern Canada. It rather affects the area in which both Senator Paterson and myself have an interest, namely, that between Winnipeg and the Lakehead.

I have spoken to the Leader of the Government and have been assured that during committee stage in this house there will be an opportunity for all members of the committee and other senators to examine whether or not it is necessary to have this territorial definition in the area of Kenora-Rainy River included. I think this subject was brought up earlier by my predecessor the late Senator John A. Robertson. It is a territory where grain is not grown in any quantity, but where it is just as important to have feeder cattle as it is in any other part of eastern Canada, the Maritimes or British Columbia. I would like to be assured that the definition of eastern Canada would be examined by the committee.

Since the introduction of this measure yesterday I have again taken some steps concerning this problem. I understand from the officials of the departments concerned that there is a clause in the bill which provides that the Governor in Council can re-define what is eastern Canada. I hope this is so, but if it is not, I hope that my colleagues in the Senate, in examining this bill, will at long last give an opportunity for residents from the area between Winnipeg and the Lakehead to look at this definition.

I think this definition is linked improperly with freight rates, and has resulted in discrimination in the agricultural areas near Dryden and in the Rainy River district in a very disadvantageous way.

I hope that my colleagues in the committee will be sympathetic when this is considered. I know very well that Senator Grosart, Senator Pearson and Senator Irvine have links with this area, and I think they with others will join Senator Paterson and myself in giving very sympathetic attention to this particular problem when the bill is sent to committee.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, may I just answer the honourable senator by referring him, perhaps unnecessarily, first to section 2(f) of the bill, which does define "eastern Canada," as he has indicated. I should also refer him to section 19(c)(i) which does permit any area in Ontario lying west of the meridian passing through the eastern boundary of the City of Port Arthur to be part of eastern Canada.

Hon. Mr. Benidickson: I referred to that, but we have to go to Cabinet to get it.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): The authority is given to make regulations to accomplish this end. I simply want those sections put on record. Perhaps we can all well understand the desire of people in many parts of Canada wanting to be considered as eastern Canadians.

Hon. James Gladstone: Honourable senators, I am glad to hear the honourable senator from Kenora-Rainy River—successor to the late Senator John A. Robertson who so ably represented that area—finally make the Government acknowledge where east is east and west is west. We always had the impression that Port Arthur was the division point. Then again, Kenora and Rainy River and parts west of that area are in the Province of Ontario. Ontario seems to feel that Ontario is east, and the rest of Canada is west.

I am glad that this distinction has been clearly made today, and I thank the senator from Kenora-Rainy River for bringing this about.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Blois, debate adjourned.

DIVORCE

MEETING OF JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: If honourable senators will permit me, might I point out that the Joint Committee on Divorce is sitting at 3.30 p.m. today, and it is now a few moments past that hour. Speaking yesterday on the subject of attendances, the Leader of the Government stated that it was no discourtesy to the house for committee members to leave in order to attend a committee meeting. The Senate members are: Senators Gershaw, Haig, Aseltine, Baird, Belisle, Bourget, Burchill, Connolly (Halifax North), Croll, Fergusson and Blois.

With your permission, honourable senators, as co-chairman of that committee, I must leave, and I hope that some others, and perhaps all other senators concerned, will attend that meeting too.

CANADA CORPORATIONS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald moved the second reading of Bill S-51, to amend the Canada Corporations Act to facilitate the incorporation by letters patent of corporations without objects of pecuniary gain.

He said: Honourable senators, this bill amends the Canada Corporations Act and relates to certain corporations under Part II and Part II(A) of the act, namely, corporations without objects of pecuniary gain.

The purpose of the bill is twofold: in the first instance, it enables certain organizations to be incorporated by letters patent rather than coming to Parliament with a bill; and, in the second place, it makes it possible for organizations which have already been incorporated by special act to have their charters amended by going directly to the Registrar General without coming to Parliament.

Perhaps the purpose of the bill can best be explained if I read section 144 as it presently stands. It is set forth in the explanatory notes in the bill.

Section 144(1) reads:

> The Registrar General of Canada may by letters patent under his seal of office grant a charter to any number of persons, not being fewer than three, who apply therefor, constituting the applicants and any other persons who thereafter become members of the corporation thereby created, a body corporate and politic, without share capital, for the purpose of carrying on in more than one province of Canada without pecuniary gain to its members, objects of a national, patriotic, religious, philanthropic, charitable, scientific, artistic, social, professional or sporting character, or like objects.

Honourable senators, this bill amends that clause in one respect. The following words are eliminated: "in more than one province of Canada", and the words "objects, to which the legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada extends" are substituted for them.

Prior to 1953 there was some doubt as to the power of the federal Parliament to legislate with respect to religious institutions which were not operating or carrying on their services in more than one province. There was no doubt that if they carried on their services in many provinces, then it would be a national matter and would come within the jurisdiction of the federal Parliament. But, if they carried on their religious observances in one province only there was some doubt as to whether the Parliament of Canada had jurisdiction to legislate in respect to them.

In 1953 the matter went to the Supreme Court of Canada in the form of a case, which all honourable senators will recall, affecting the Jehovah's Witnesses. That case held that the freedom of worship and of the press are not civil rights or matters of a local or private nature in the province. If they are not of a local or private nature in the province they are, therefore, within the jurisdiction of the federal Government.

This bill would give the Registrar General the power to incorporate religious denominations, whether they are provincial or operate over the whole dominion, and it provides, therefore, that such organizations—they are all mentioned in section 144—have the right to be incorporated by letters patent rather than by a bill, as has been the custom.

Clause 2 of the bill provides for allowing these organizations to have both an English and a French name.

Clause 3 contains a consequential amendment. It amends section 147A and adds a new section 147B which provides for the amendment of the charters of existing organizations incorporated by Parliament, by application to the Registrar General.

Honourable senators, this does does not appear to be a very complicated bill, but for several reasons I feel it should be referred to a committee. In the first place, it is a public bill which, when passed by this house, will be sent to the other place. It should, therefore, receive careful clause-by-clause study in the presence of officials of the department. In the second place, clause 2 should be considered carefully because it amends a number of sections.

Another reason why I feel this bill should go to a committee is that some honourable senators may want to ask about the legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada in this respect and how far it extends.

My fourth reason is that at present one of our committees is sitting, and a number of honourable senators have left the chamber in order to attend the meeting. Among them are some very prominent corporation lawyers. I know that a number of members of the legal profession are still in the chamber, but I do feel that those who have gone to attend the sitting of the Special Joint Committee on Divorce might want to examine this bill carefully in committee.

Therefore, if the bill does receive second reading I shall move that it be sent to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Flynn, debate adjourned.

RICHELIEU BRIDGE COMPANY ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

Hon. Jean-Paul Deschatelets moved the second reading of Bill S-44 to amend an act to incorporate the Richelieu Bridge Company.

[Translation]

He said: Honourable senators, if you have examined Bill No. S-44, you will have noticed that it contains only one clause. However, one must sometimes be wary of these bills consisting of a single clause. I do not hesitate to tell you that this one contains certain legal or constitutional implications which the proposed amendment does not define clearly.

First, what are the facts? In 1882, a company was granted a federal charter under the Companies Act, enabling it to build a wooden bridge over the Richelieu river between Noyan and Cantic and, when that wooden bridge was completed, a toll was required; this toll is still in effect today.

Three sections of the charter granted to this company are directly connected with the bill before us. I will outline them to you, as briefly as possible.

First, section 10—I will quote the section in English, since the copy I have of the charter is written in the English language.

[Text]

Section 10 of the Richelieu Bridge Company Act reads as follows:

> The Company are hereby authorized to build, erect, construct, work, maintain and manage a solid and sufficient toll-bridge for ordinary traffic purposes, over the Richelieu River near the mouth of the Lacolle River from the Parish of St. Thomas, in the County of Missisquoi, to Ash Island; thence westerly to the Parish of Lacolle or St. Valentine, in the County of St. John's, Province of Quebec, and to erect, make and sink all piers—

In other words, under section 10 of the act this company has received the right to proceed with the erection of this bridge.

Section 12 reads as follows:

> After the said bridge is open to the public, and while it remains fit for traffic, no person or company, other than the Company hereby incorporated, shall construct or cause to be constructed any bridge or bridges, or shall use as a ferry any boat, scow or vessel of any kind, for the purpose of conveying any person, animal or vehicle whatsoever, for hire or reward, across the said river, for a distance of three miles on the north of the said bridge and to the Province line of the south of the same—which is the American border.

Let us now examine the article which is the basis of the bill before us, namely, section 18, which reads as follows:

> The bridge of the Richelieu Bridge Company, hereby incorporated, is declared to be a work for the general advantage of Canada.

[Translation]

I said a little earlier that this bridge is still operated by the Richelieu company. It is a toll bridge.

A few months ago, the former Quebec government made representations to the federal Government so that the words which appear in section 18 of that company's charter —"that this bridge is for the general advantage of Canada"—be deleted from the charter to allow the province to build a new modern bridge approximately 300 feet from the present bridge.

Since 1882, various amendments have been made to the company's charter. New letters patent have been issued. A new incorporation has been approved. But for the purpose of the discussion, I think we can admit that all the rights and privileges granted to that company in 1882 are extant, namely, the right to operate that bridge and collect charges as well as the right to forbid any other person or company to build another bridge within 3,000 feet from that one. That is why the authorities of the present Quebec government want to proceed with the construction of a new bridge, as the former government had proposed to do.

I submit therefore, honourable senators, that our problem with regard to second reading of that bill is first of all a matter of public interest. You might say: How can you prove the public interest in this case by deleting from a company's charter a statement to the effect that the bridge is for the advantage of Canada?

I see at least two reasons why we can at this stage go ahead and approve that bill. In the first place, the Province of Quebec wants to build a modern toll-free bridge quite near to that which belongs to the Richelieu company, which means that the users will have nothing to pay. That is a rather important factor as far as the public interest is concerned.

In the second place, the bridge that the Province of Quebec wants to build will link the provincial roads at both ends and, if we do not approve this bill, the province might be prevented from proceeding with the construction of a new bridge, which would upset rather seriously the planning of roads under construction right now.

Honourable senators, I do not know if I should stress several other points. But I can say this: section 12 of the company's charter states that no other company or person can build a bridge less than 3,000 feet from the present bridge, but the opinion that this restriction does not apply to the province is but the opinion of government legal advisers acting on behalf of the province. Furthermore, honourable senators will recall that section 12 of this charter states that no person and no company may build a bridge less than 3,000 feet away, and legal advisers suggest that this does not bind, in law, the province to build there, because section 7(33) of the Interpretation Act, Victoria 31, chap. 1, states, I believe, that no province, acting as a province, nor the federal Government, can be subject to any restriction under a statute, unless it is specifically so stated.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Nevertheless, will some kind of compensation be given shareholders of this company which, after all, will fold up because of the action taken by the provincial government?

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: That is an excellent question, Mr. Speaker. Unfortunately, I cannot answer yes or no. I must say in that connection—and I cannot vouch for this information—that the chairman of that company is supposed to hold the majority of shares but that, in fact, several shareholders have shares in the company. However, I say to Senator Choquette that the immediate result of the passing of this bill would be to put back this bridge under the aegis of the Quebec provincial legislation. Moreover, it would have the effect of withdrawing only that statement from the 1892 charter to the effect that it is for the advantage of Canada—and this prevents, it seems, the province from proceeding with the construction of the bridge.

But to reply to Senator Choquette's question, I think all these obligations could very well be defined before a committee of the house because I hope, if honourable senators agree to the principle of the bill, that the committee will hear the various witnesses concerned in that legislation. I hope that all those who have, directly or indirectly, an interest will be summoned, so that honourable senators will realize, first, that it is a case where the public interest is well established and, second, that the shareholders perhaps will not have to suffer any prejudice. But I do not want to say more at this stage.

Now, according to the power given in section 92 (10) of the British North America Act, the provinces have the right to erect works, local structures, as is the case here. However, the main reason why, in my opinion, the province of Quebec must appeal to the federal government, is that—and I think this is recognized by the provincial authorities—the Richelieu waters are navigable.

Even if this legislation is adopted, before construction of the new bridge can proceed, the Province of Quebec should, according to its legal advisers, appeal to the federal Government for permission under the Navigable Waters Protection Act.

If honourable senators have other questions to put, I will be happy to answer. However, I would like to come back to what I said before concerning consideration of this bill by a committee of the house. We are used to sending our bills to a committee and I think this is a case where perhaps more caution should be shown; I hope all those interested will be called, so that when the bill comes back for third reading honourable senators will be sure that this is a case where public interest transcends any other.

If some honourable senators would like to ask questions, I shall be delighted to answer.

Hon. Mr. Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche): I should like to put a question to the honourable senator. Could he tell us in what year the bridge was built? Was it built immediately after the charter was granted?

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: I may tell Senator Fournier that the charter was granted in 1882, and the bridge was built in 1883.

Hon. Mr. Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche): I should like to ask another question. Do you know what tolls are being charged to users of this bridge?

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: With reservation, I would say it is $1—with all due reservation.

Hon. Mr. Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche): Is the traffic fairly heavy?

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: I must say—again with all due reserve—that I do not have the official figures, but I believe the gross revenue for last year reached some $55,000.

Hon. Mr. Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche): One last question. Are the shareholders of the company against this bill?

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: I say to the honourable senator that the president of the company and the company itself are against this bill; they want to stay under the protection of the federal law.

Hon. Mr. Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche): Thank you.

Hon. Mr. Dessureault: Are you aware of similar cases in the Province of Quebec, that is, cases where bridges would have been built under the authority of a federal charter and would enjoy a privileged right as the Richelieu bridge does? Are there still other similar cases?

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: There are surely other wooden bridges, not many but some, I am sure. However, I do not know if these other bridges give rise to the kind of legal other problem that we now have.

In this case, the problem results from the fact that in the original charter of 1882 it was stated that the bridge was to the general advantage of Canada while in fact, today with technical advances, with the road projects of the Quebec government, needless to say this bridge is no longer considered to be in the general interest of Canada.

Hon. Mr. Dessureault: Could the province still decide to build bridges on other improved roads in the province? The same thing could happen somewhere else in the province.

Hon. Mr. Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche): If the bridge was built in 1883, would there not be a matter of security involved, since it is made of wood?

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: Maybe. I am quite reluctant to talk about security. However, there is no doubt that if this problem does not arise at the present time, it could arise within five or ten years, there is no doubt about it.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Deschatelets, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

STANDING COMMITTEE ON FINANCE

NOTICE OF MEETING

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, before I move the adjournment of the Senate, I would draw honourable senators' attention to the fact that there will be a meeting of the Standing Committee on Finance in room 263-S immediately after the Senate rises. The committee will continue the study of the Estimates, perhaps I could say, in anticipation of interim supply coming to us, because that bill is now public, although it is not before us. Despite the fact that Senator Roebuck has perhaps drawn off much of the support Senator Leonard requires, I do bespeak your attendance at the hearing of the Committee on Finance.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, November 9, 1966

The Senate met at 3 p.m., Hon. George S. White, P.C., Acting Speaker, in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE LATE MRS. SYDNEY J. SMITH

EXPRESSIONS OF SYMPATHY TO HIS HONOUR THE SPEAKER ON THE SUDDEN PASSING OF HIS WIFE

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I am sure that everyone was deeply shocked after the sitting yesterday to learn of the sudden and tragic death of the wife of our Speaker.

Mrs. Smith was a dedicated lady who was extremely popular among parliamentarians in both houses and in every quarter of each house. I can think of no wife who was of greater help at all times to her husband than was Mrs. Smith to our Speaker in the discharge of his duties. It can be said that she performed services on behalf of the Senate, the Office of the Speaker, and indeed, Parliament, in a manner beyond the call of duty.

The shock of the suddenness of her passing was such that we do not realize the full implications of it. If these are our feelings, then our sympathy must go out to His Honour the Speaker, who must feel the shock so much more.

All honourable senators, I know, will want me to record in Hansard this expression of our deep sympathy for Senator Smith in his tremendous loss. Our sympathy is extended also to his daughter and two sons, and the other members of the family who have been bereaved.

This record in Hansard will speak for itself. In the circumstances it is only appropriate that we pay this tribute to a wonderful woman who was active, energetic and enthusiastic, and who seldom thought of herself. Mrs. Smith was dedicated to the work that her husband was doing, not only as Speaker of the Senate but for the many years before.

Hon. Lionel Choquette: Honourable senators, I wish to associate myself and the members of the Opposition with the remarks of the honourable Leader of the Government. The sudden and unexpected passing of the wife of our distinguished Speaker comes as a sad shock.

Mrs. Smith was a charming and gracious chatelaine and hostess whose unfailing kindness and hospitality will be greatly missed by all honourable senators.

Our sympathy must be reserved for those whose loss is the greatest in the passing of a devoted wife and mother. Our sincerest sympathies and expressions of regret go out to our respected Speaker and his sons and daughter in their bereavement.

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Order in Council P.C. 1966-2079, dated November 3, 1966, authorizing under section 21A(2) of the Export Credits Insurance Act, long-term financing by the Export Credits Insurance Corporation for the sale by Automatic Electric (Canada) Limited, Brockville, Ontario, of capital equipment and services to the Philippine Long Distance Telephone Company, Manila, Philippines, pursuant to section 21B of the said Act, chapter 105, R.S.C., 1952, as amended 1960-61. LIVESTOCK FEED ASSISTANCE BILL

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) for the second reading of Bill C-218, to provide assistance to livestock feeders in Eastern Canada and British Columbia.

Hon. Fred M. Blois: Honourable senators, it is my intention to speak briefly in connection with Bill C-218. I think we all agree with the setting up of this board to regulate the matters of payments that have been made for the moving of western grain to Eastern Canada and to British Columbia. As far as I am personally concerned, my interest is in the Atlantic provinces, and more particularly in my own Province of Nova Scotia.

I think most of us, in studying the bill and listening to remarks that have been made, realize that after a trial certain changes and amendments may be necessary. However, I think all agree that the operations of the board should be given a fair trial. It will no doubt be a strong board, and we expect that the persons who serve on it will be competent to study and determine what is in the best interests of Canada as a whole.

As far as the Atlantic provinces are concerned, we have been receiving subsidies in this connection for the past 25 years, not necessarily in the manner in which they are now being proposed. These have been of considerable help. Unfortunately, even with this help, the cattle population of the Atlantic provinces—and more particularly of Nova Scotia—has decreased by almost 20 per cent.

That may not be as bad as it sounds, because while the size of the cattle herd has decreased, other things have taken place. For instance, the raising of hogs in Nova Scotia has increased considerably, and the quality has been such within recent years that a large proportion of the hogs going to abattoirs have been of the highest grade. Furthermore, there has been considerable growth in the poultry, egg and chicken industries, and perhaps to a lesser extent in the turkey industry, and all this has had quite an influence on the economy of our province.

In addition, another situation has developed under which our farmers, in conjunction with the provincial government, have been improving their herds.

Not many years ago the farmers had a lot of other than purebred stock, which some referred to as scrub cattle. The farmers have found that to get the best results they must have better stock. It became necessary to cull out those cattle which were not paying and endeavour to raise purebred stock. The farmers of my province are not as well off financially as some of those in other sections of Canada. The first thing they had to do was to sell off some of their so-called cull stock in order to raise money to buy purebred stock.

Those senators who know something about farming realize that a farmer would have to sell from three to five head of ordinary stock in order to buy one purebred animal. If as an alternative, he bought purebred calves at a low price, it would be a couple of years before there would be any return.

I am pleased to say that this change is going ahead now reasonably well. Last week one of the prominent farmers of Nova Scotia told me about what he had been doing on his farm. He had taken it over from his father and had bought additional land to go with it. He cleared out all the old stock which was not purebred and started out with purebred stock. Today he has a herd of 200 purebred Herefords, and he is beginning to operate on a paying basis. He informed me that at the Atlantic Purebred Fair in Halifax last week, and in the year before, he had several cattle which took first prize. He was also proud of the fact that one of his animals sold at auction at $14 a pound live weight, and quite a few averaged out at $8 a pound. So you can see that he is raising high quality cattle. When I asked him a few more questions I learned that most of the cattle they were selling were running in the vicinity of 1,000 pounds. This is a marked change in my province in the last ten years.

The problem always has been, and probably will continue to be, that the cost of bringing feed grain in has been excessive. Even last year, 1964-65, arrangements were being made to bring western feed grain by sea into the Port of Halifax, but they found the elevators were not sufficiently large to store it. As a result, later in the season this western feed grain had to be purchased from storage places in Quebec and Ontario and landed in Nova Scotia at a much higher cost.

As I understand it, the idea of this legislation is to provide the necessary arrangements for storage, so as to have grain available to the farmers at a reasonable price. This has been, and probably will continue to be, quite a serious problem for them.

I referred a few moments ago to the poultry industry. Last summer I visited one of the poultry farms in my constituency. The owner of that farm told me that he was grading at that time between 30,000 and 50,000 eggs a day. Now, he is not the largest producer in the province, but that will give you some idea of what can happen if we can get proper feeds.

This man also informed me that he found it necessary to haul about two truckloads of feed a day over a distance of approximately 40 miles. He said it was difficult but that he was still making a small profit. As has happened, there were times when this feed grain was not available and he had to buy grain where he could at much higher prices.

This bears out the statement that I made that we do need the facilities of this board so that grain will be available when it is needed.

I would suggest that there is another problem developing as to whether or not something can be done so that the farmers in the Province of Nova Scotia, and no doubt elsewhere in the Atlantic provinces, can raise a certain amount of feed grain themselves on their own farms.

In going about the province this summer I was very much encouraged to see that a large acreage had been cultivated and planted to grain. In fact, one farmer in my own constituency planted a 12-acre field to barley and his results were most amazing. Even some of my friends from western Canada and Ontario might doubt my accuracy when I say that his yield was an average of 117 bushels per acre. I know that this is well above the average, but, to be fair, the man told me that in the previous fall he fertilized this field very heavily. He had plowed it under and the soil was in excellent condition. He had an early season this spring, and when planting his barley he also put on more commercial fertilizer. We were fortunate in having a reasonably wet spring—not too wet to get onto the land but wet enough for good growing—and that accounted for his tremendous crop.

I spoke with other farmers in various parts of the province and they were also getting good results, though not equal to the one I first referred to. However, some of the farmers with whom I spoke are endeavouring now to raise grain for feed, and they were wondering if it would not be possible to adopt some system whereby payments would be made to them along the lines of those which are now being made to bring the western grain to the Atlantic provinces. This would assist them in raising much larger crops and would assist them in buying fertilizer, which is very expensive.

By doing this they would improve the lot of the farmers in the community; moreover, they would improve the economy of the province, and I think we will all agree that if the economy of any one of the provinces can be enhanced, it is bound to affect the economy of Canada as a whole. I think it is something well worth considering.

I was interested in the discussion on this matter in the other place, particularly in view of the fact that I had talked with quite a number of the farmers myself.

I realize also that there are many honourable senators, as well as many people in other walks of life, who do not realize that farming can be successful in Nova Scotia. It is true that we do not have large level fields, as is the case in western Canada or even in Ontario and Quebec. However, our temperature is conducive to fast growth and we have to use, as I mentioned previously, a lot of fertilizer.

As I understand it, in the Prairie provinces there is plenty of potash in all the fields, and while they use certain types of fertilizers they do not have to use those which are blended with potash. That again cuts down the cost.

Moreover, our provincial government along with our provincial agricultural college and federal institutions, which are endeavouring to assist the farmers in the Maritime provinces, are all doing good work. The various farm associations are reasonably effective and are trying hard to be successful.

Perhaps it would not be out of place if I mentioned one factor that I think is doing much to improve our farms and to keep our young people on the farms. I refer to the 4H Clubs. Most of you know that these clubs are endeavouring to instruct both young boys and girls, the teenagers, on improved methods of farming. These growing people are taking an interest. If you go to any of the local fairs now you will find both boys and girls showing cattle and stock of various kinds. They take care of them on the farms from the time they are young animals and they bring them along and show them. Interest is really building up and these clubs are most worthwhile.

In the Province of Nova Scotia, as is the case in other places, one of the big problems has been to keep young people on the farms. Nowadays, however, I can see quite an improvement. There seems to be quite a difference of feeling, and if we can get a little help in the growing of grain I am sure that too will help solve this problem.

It may be said that we are always asking for something, and I suppose it is true, but I do not feel that the people of the Atlantic provinces or of British Columbia are asking for any help in this industry which is not being granted to people in other places and in connection with other industries. While we may have important industries, such as the paper industry, I think we all have to admit that agriculture in its various forms is the backbone of a country like Canada. Therefore we should not hesitate in asking for and urging that very careful consideration be given to any measure which would tend to help these people. Above all it is important that we should help them to help themselves.

I was interested to read today an editorial from the Halifax Chronicle-Herald dealing with this problem. It is under the heading "Strong Board", and while I do not intend to quote it in full, it does mention many points which I have brought forward this afternoon. In that editorial the following sentence appears:

> Nova Scotia farmers have relied too heavily on subsidized western feed grain. They have had too little incentive to use suitable land in this province for the cultivation of home-grown feed grains.

Then it goes on to adduce some of the ideas which I mentioned a few moments ago, and to examine the situation in detail.

I am not making any apology for suggesting to this house that when this bill comes before the committee we should give it approval. I realize that at the moment few changes can be made and I question the wisdom of making amendments at the present time, but I think if the members of this honourable house keep in mind that in one or two years' time changes can be made if necessary, the passage of this bill will help the situation not only in my own province and all the Atlantic provinces but in Canada as a whole.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Pearson, debate adjourned.

CANADA CORPORATIONS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. W. Ross Macdonald for the second reading of Bill S-51, to amend the Canada Corporations Act to facilitate the incorporation by letters patent of corporations without objects of pecuniary gain.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, we are all indebted to honourable Senator Ross Macdonald for the clarity of his explanation in connection with Bill S-51, which suggests some amendments to the Canada Corporations Act relating to corporations without share capital.

As the honourable sponsor has said, the purpose of this bill is rather simple. It derives from the fact that the provisions concerning the incorporation of corporations without share capital are restrictive in the words "in more than one province of Canada" and have led to the conclusion that a corporation which did not operate and/or did not intend to operate in more than one province could not be incorporated under the then Companies Act and had to secure incorporation through a special act of Parliament. Section 1 of the bill deals with this matter in removing these words and substituting the words "to which the legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada extends..."

The occasion has been taken to apply to these corporations without share capital some provisions which apply to corporations with share capital concerning the use of the English and French versions of their names; and, at the same time—this is the third purpose of this bill—to allow the continuation by letters patent under Part II of the act for corporations without share capital which were incorporated by special act of Parliament.

The mechanism of the amendments will be studied in committee, and this is a good thing, but may I make this one comment, that I am interested in the principle that is embodied in section 147B, which allows the continuation by letters patent or provides the application of the Corporations Act to corporations without share capital which have been incorporated by special act of Parliament.

It seems to me this is a good idea, and one that possibly should be studied further and applied in many more cases to corporations with share capital which have been incorporated by special act of Parliament. I have in mind, for instance, the special case we studied earlier this year, the act respecting the Interprovincial Pipe Line Company. This is a corporation which has been incorporated by special act of Parliament. It had to come to us merely to change its capital structure. I do not see why, once Parliament has incorporated a company for specific purposes, this company would have to come back to Parliament to change, for instance, its name or its capital structure. In my view it should be sufficient in a case like this for the corporation to seek permission to split its capital structure, after having first obtained the concurrence of the Superintendent of Insurance or whatever other body might be concerned with it, through supplementary letters patent.

Therefore, when this bill goes to committee, I intend to inquire of the officials of the department regarding this suggestion that an amendment could be brought into the Corporations Act embodying the same principle and applying it to some other corporations incorporated by special act of Parliament with share capital.

This bill seeks to remedy an omission that occurred when we reviewed the Companies Act two years ago, because at that time the problem existed. It was simply omitted; but at the same time I suggest that maybe this other problem I have underlined was also omitted and may be remedied in the future.

Hon. A. K. Hugessen: Honourable senators, I think the principle of this bill is one which deserves our support, because what it really will do, if it is brought into effect, will be to take away from Parliament certain obligations, certain duties in respect of private bills which now take up a good deal of time.

The effect of section 1 of this bill will be that, in the case of religious organizations, they will have to apply to the Registrar General of Canada for letters patent incorporating them, rather than to the Parliament of Canada.

Honourable senators who have been members of the Miscellaneous Private Bills Committee, as I have for quite a number of years, will realize that that sort of work, incorporating a religious organization, is a thing that can just as well be done by the civil servants in the Secretary of State Department as by Parliament itself.

As far as I recall, the only question that has ever arisen in connection with any of these religious organizations has been as to the use of the name. In one or two cases that has arisen. In the case of names, the Department of the Secretary of State—now the Department of the Registrar General—has a tremendous body of experience in connection with the granting of names to companies and making sure they do not conflict with the names of other companies, and I am quite sure that department could do likewise with regard to religious organizations.

I support the principle of this bill, because it will relieve Parliament of an obligation which I do not think it necessary for Parliament to take and because, in these days of enormous masses of important legislation, it is a good thing for us to reduce the parliamentary load.

I would draw the attention of the house to the fact that this seems to be a trend developing at the present time. In connection with the new Bank Act, which is to come to us after it has passed the House of Commons, as I recall it there are provisions which would allow a new bank to be established by letters patent without having to go through this long and complicated business of a parliamentary bill. I would suggest, along that line of thought, that it would be wise if proper action could be taken to allow pipe line companies to do the same thing. As honourable senators who are members of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications know, we have a series of pipe line bills coming before us, and we are always told that the only purpose of such a bill is to give corporate form to the organization, because when the organization wishes to build a pipe line or an extension, or anything of that kind, it has to go before the National Energy Board. It has seemed to me for some years that this business of bringing these pipe line bills before us is really a waste of the time of Parliament.

I was much interested in my honourable friend Senator Flynn's suggestion as to a further extension of this bill, for instance, in the case of a company which has been organized by special act of Parliament and which wishes to increase its capital or change its name or its head office, or any of these things, and which has now to come before Parliament and go to all the trouble and expense of getting an amending parliamentary act—to see if we could devise some scheme by which it could go through the Registrar General and get supplementary letters patent, or some such procedure. I think that would be a proper amendment and would support what I consider to be the merit of the bill, the divorcing from Parliament of much unnecessary work.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: May I ask the honourable senator a question? Is it not possible in this bill to include, by way of amendment, a clause enabling a company with share capital to change its name or adopt a French name, or do things of that sort which now come before us? Could that be done in this bill by way of amendment?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): That has already been done; that is already in the act; we did this last year. However, you are quite right, it is the kind of thing it could do.

Hon. Salter A. Hayden: Honourable senators, may I add a word?

The companies that are intended to be covered by section 1 of this bill are companies which may have national connotations in the area of patriotic, religious, philanthropic, charitable, or like objects, and which, while they might be confined to a province, feel and have found it necessary to go to the Parliament of Canada rather than seek incorporation by letters patent.

One advantage in having a company with objects of this kind come to Parliament is that their efforts and what they are seeking are spotlighted, because they must advertise preceding the introduction of their bill, and in that way there is an opportunity for a more searching inquiry, if necessary; and the purpose, the objects, plans and intentions of the persons behind this sort of company which is espousing patriotic, charitable or educational objects, come to the attention of a larger body of people. Therefore, you can be sure that when the matter has gone through Parliament, the public and those who may have viewpoints for or against, have had more notice and more opportunity to express themselves. I do not say that is a reason for not doing this, but I think it is reason for providing for some measure of publicity akin to that which it would receive were it introduced in the form of a private bill.

It is true that under the Corporations Act the Director of the Corporations Branch can, in a proper case and if he feels it necessary, take evidence, but that is all done within the scope of the department. I think possibly it would be well to consider in committee what features of publicity should be added as a requirement if you are going to proceed by way of letters patent rather than by way of private bill.

I agree with the suggestion made by Senator Flynn. I am a little concerned about the connotation of the word "national" in section 1. The word "national" in that section is associated with patriotic, religious, philanthropic and charitable objects. As I read it in its present form, it means that any company without share capital and without profit motive, being incorporated and having a national objective, may seek incorporation by way of letters patent instead of by private bill. I am wondering whether what was meant here was something of religious or educational concern national in scope, or corporations having objects of that kind which were of a national character. A very interesting question might be presented if you had a mutual insurance company—and insurance companies must be incorporated by act of Parliament, in virtue of the provisions of the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act—which presumably has no share capital and which is operated for the policy holders and which, therefore, has no profit motive. We might well say it has that feature of national character or objectivity, and as such it might well be able to apply for incorporation by letters patent. I am not sure that that was intended, and some slight revision of the language of this section might be required in order for it to accomplish its purpose.

Motion agreed to, and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I had the honour of introducing this bill yesterday, and at the close of my remarks I suggested that it should be referred to a committee for four reasons. A fifth reason has been added by the suggestions of Senator Flynn and other honourable senators who have spoken. There is a general feeling in the house, I think, that this bill should be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, and I so move.

Motion agreed to.

CRIMINAL CODE (HATE PROPAGANDA)

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck moved the second reading of Bill S-49, to amend the Criminal Code.

He said: Honourable senators, may I commence my remarks in support of this bill this afternoon by saying how much I appreciate the honour of sponsoring a ban on the demon of hate. It is not only something that appeals very strongly to my own moral feelings and hopes, but this is a government bill designed to carry out the policy of the government of the day.

As mercy blesses him that gives as well as him that receives, so hate is destructive not only to the hater but also to the hated. It is the very antithesis of the Christian injuction to love thy neighbour as thyself.

Canadians, according to my understanding, knowledge and experience, are a kindly and tolerant people. As a nation we have friends in every country of the world, and I hope we have no enemies. We have good will for all mankind, irrespective of colour, race or ethnic origin. Domestically, our people, with very few exceptions I think, are good natured, kindly and hospitable. We have freedom, and we have learned by experience to preserve our ways of life by a scrupulous regard for the ways of life and freedom of our neighbours; and, honourable senators, we wish that kind of thing to continue.

However, the world at large, I am sorry to say, is not so fortunate. We have seen people, no less virtuous than ourselves, driven to deeds of fiendish cruelty by the merchants of hate. Human emotions stirred to fever heat seem to overpower reason, and mob fury begets savagery.

In my lifetime I have seen hate progaganda lead to barbarities that shocked the conscience of the world. We want no such insanity in this country—in this Christian country.

I hasten to say, lest my words by misunderstood, or lest the object of this bill be misinterpreted, that there is no such prospect at present in this country—in this well-fed community. Lest somebody misunderstands what we are doing, let me say that there is now no such crisis in Canada. But, on the other hand, I pause to remind honourable senators that great oaks from little acorns grow. If the cloud on the horizon at the present time is no bigger than a man's hand, it is still there. There are people in Canada who do offend in this matter of hate propaganda, and who do offend against certain groups in the community. I suggest that every group in this community is interested in this matter, for every group is open to attack and the possibility of attack, both by way of insult and the actual dangers of such propaganda.

While these purveyors of hate are few in number, and perhaps unimportant from some points of view, their potential for mischief is very great. At present, honourable senators, there is no prohibition in law—in the Criminal Code or elsewhere—against their poisonous appeal. There are thousands of law-abiding citizens in this country who have already experienced the bitter fruits of hate progaganda. Some have lost mothers and fathers, brothers and sisters and cousins in gas chambers. These people now look to us for protection against the insult as well as the dangers of hate propaganda directed against identifiable groups to which they belong. Honourable senators, that is the purpose of this bill.

Before discussing the bill itself may I refer briefly to such protection as is now afforded by the Criminal Code. While I cannot, of course, give a complete reference, I can point out some of the outstanding features, such as section 153 that prohibits the use of the mails for the transmission of scurrilous material.

Mr. Justice Dalton Wells, a member of the Appeal Division of the Supreme Court of Ontario, has defined "scrurrilous" as "grossly offensive and abusive", which I suggest would certainly include hate propaganda.

Section 160 of the Criminal Code prohibits disorderly conduct in a public place, and there are other sections such as those dealing with riots, unlawful assemblies, blasphemous and defamatory libels, murder, forcible entry, assault, and so on. I could mention very many others.

These are valuable and really necessary provisions for the protection of the individual. However, there is nothing in the Code for the protection of groups as such. There is also no mention of hate propaganda. We must realize, of course, that our Criminal Code was drawn long before the Nazi tragedy. Our radio and television regulations have been much more modern in draftsmanship because they are, comparatively speaking, quite recent. The radio regulations prohibit the broadcasting of:

> Any abusive comment on any race or religion.

Our television regulations prohibit:

> Any abusive comment or abusive pictorial representation of any race, religion or creed.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Is religion included?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: It is not; but I will discuss that later.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: It is not?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: No, not directly.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: I do not want to interrupt you, but I heard you say "religion," and I note its absence from the act.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: It is not referred to directly but it is covered. I will discuss that later.

What I have mentioned is all that there is in the present law, and the failure of our criminal law to suppress these mongers of hate and to protect the public from such propaganda has been the cause of very serious concern by the public at large and in Parliament. For instance, a private bill was introduced in the House of Commons on February 20, 1964 dealing with genocide and hate propaganda. It was introduced by Milton Klein, M.P., Q.C., of Montreal, and seconded by Mr. James Walker, M.P., of Toronto, the then chief whip of the Liberal administration. I think these men are entitled to a good deal of credit, because they broke the ice, as it were, in parliamentary circles. They initiated the parliamentary procedures which followed and culminated in the bill I now have the honour to sponsor. I congratulate them because it is not often that those who advocate public reforms live to see the fruits of their enterprise.

The matter has been discussed no less than three times in the Commons. I noted that on one occasion Mr. Larry Pennell, M.P., now the Solicitor General, referred to a measure such as this, as "expressing the conscience of Canada."

Following the introduction of that bill and the discussion on it in the Commons in 1964, after February 20, the present Government authorized the consideration of the subject by the Commons Committee on External Affairs. The committee sat through the sessions of 1964 and 1965. Special studies were made by Professor Mark R. MacGuigan of Toronto, and a member of the committee, and also by professor Harry Kaufman, Associate Professor of Psychology of the University of Toronto. Then Mr. Klein reintroduced his bill in 1965. This in turn was supplemented by an extensive analysis of hate propaganda as distributed through the mails. That was done by a committee chaired by Mr. Justice Dalton Wells, of the appeal division of the Supreme Court of Ontario, to whom I have already referred.

These activities, while they were most useful and very important in my judgment, were nevertheless somewhat desultory and incomplete, and the Government was desirous of practical and positive action. Accordingly, in January 1965, the then Minister of Justice, Mr. Favreau, appointed a committee under the chairmanship of Dean Maxwell Cohen, of the Faculty of Law of McGill University, Montreal, to study and report on the subject. That report is now promptly to hand. It is a masterly report, and this government bill which I am now sponsoring is designed to carry out almost to the letter the recommendations of the learned chairman and his exceedingly able and capable committee.

The committee made an intensive study of the subject, and it found that hate propaganda, which it said had not reached crisis proportions, is nevertheless so serious in Canada as to require legislative action. The committee therefore recommended prohibitions in the Code in three great divisions which you will find set out, in almost the same terms as the committee's recommendations, in the bill now under consideration.

The first of the prohibitions is against genocide, to be found in section 267A, subsection 1 of the bill, which reads as follows:

> Every one who advocates or promotes genocide is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for five years.

As a matter of fact, the penalty is not quite as drastic as it would appear to be in the bill, because the Code under these precise circumstances permits a fine to be levied at the discretion of the court in addition to or in the alternative for the penalty prescribed in the act. However, no more than the same penalty of five years may be levied for non-payment of the fine.

The dictionary definition of genocide, to take Funk and Wagnall first, is:

> The systematic extermination of racial, national, cultural or religious groups.

Webster's Third International Dictionary gives this definition:

> The use of deliberate, systematic measures calculated to bring about the extermination of a racial, religious or cultural group.

The bill retains the ordinary meaning of genocide which is indicated at least by these two definitions, and it widens the meaning ordinarily given to the word to include a number of specific offences. The section includes the following:

> (a) killing members of the group;
> (b) causing serious bodily or mental harm to members of the group;
> (c) deliberately inflicting on the group conditions of life calculated to bring about its physical destruction;
> (d) deliberately imposing measures intended to prevent births within the group; or
> (e) forcibly transferring children of the group to another group.

May I emphasize that these specific provisions are in addition to the ordinary natural meaning of the word "genocide".

This series of special descriptions of offences is copied from the United Nations Convention, Article II, adopted in 1948, which was signed by Canada in 1949. It was ratified by the Parliament of Canada, including this chamber in which we are speaking today, in 1952. It was ratified unanimously at that time. It has now been ratified by no less than 66 states of the world, as of 1965.

Most European nations, including Great Britain, have adopted legislation of a somewhat similar character, the detail of which would be rather too great for me to attempt to describe at this moment.

Honourable senators, the odious deviltry of such acts needs no elaboration from me, except to say that they have been actually used in this world of ours for the wholesale destruction of certain groups—elsewhere, not in Canada. I am sorry to say that there may be those in Canada who would practise them here, in whole or in part. The Maxwell Cohen committee found no less than 14 organizations in Canada engaged in hate propaganda. While they say that the persons involved are few in numbers, and they suggest unimportant from some points of view, to ignore the potential injury and the prejudice developed by their activities in the distribution of hate literature would be a mistake.

Because most of the acts defined as genocide are clearly prohibited in the Criminal Code—such as murder, assault and a few more such acts—this bill is confined to the advocacy and promotion of genocide. This is clearly not forbidden by our Code as it stands today. While mass murder of any group in Canada distinguished by colour, race or ethnic origin is unthinkable, at least at the present time, and is certainly very remote, the awful consequences of racism and prejudice are such as to warrant a repudiation by the Parliament of Canada.

The groups against whom it may be levied—and that perhaps applies to us all—are entitled to protection from its advocacy—and, I might add, from the insult of such attack.

Honourable senators, I turn again to the bill. I would like to mention the second great division of prohibition. It reads as follows:

> Every one who, by communicating statements in any public place, incites hatred or contempt against any identifiable group where such incitement is likely to lead to a breach of the peace, is guilty of
> (a) an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for two years; or
> (b) an offence punishable on summary conviction.

Two years may seem to some as being severe, but section 622 of the Code permits a fine in lieu of or in addition to, the specified penalty set out in the act. It limits the imprisonment for non-payment to the penalty set forth in the act, in this case two years. The penalty on summary conviction may be a fine as high as $500 or six months' imprisonment, or both.

That section which I have read requires some definition. "Public place" is defined to include any place to which the public has access, as of right or by invitation, expressed or implied.

"Statements" which are prohibited, as you have noted, include words, either spoken or written, gestures, signs, or other visible representations.

Then comes the very important definition of "identifiable group". It means "any section of the public distinguished by colour, race or ethnic origin."

"Ethnology" is defined in Webster as "the science dealing with the races of man, their origin, distribution, peculiar characteristics, et cetera."

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Is my question again timely?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: It is not timely quite yet.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: I hope it will come.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: It will come in a moment. May I say to my good friend that the committee's recommendations included religion, language and nationality. They are not in the bill, and I will tell you why. "Colour, race and ethnic origin" is broader in its scope, as it includes all of a group, whether or not they adhere to the religion of the group and whether or not they speak the language of the group.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Yet their religion could be maligned and insulted, and you could have all colours belonging to that religion and it would be all right.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I do not think it goes that far.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: That is the explanation you are giving.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: The ethnic definition would cover what you say.

Hon. Mr. Walker: How?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: At all events, that is something for more thorough discussion in committee. If religion is not covered, we may amend the bill. At the same time, I submit now that the addition of adjectives or words to a simple sentence usually restricts the meaning rather than enlarges it. That is the argument at least with regard to the present phraseology. To add religion, language and even nationality would narrow rather than widen the definition. Moreover, religion is pretty well protected, as my friend will see, under section 161 of the Code. "Nationality" and "ethnic group", for the purposes of this bill, mean about the same thing.

The third division of the prohibitions which you will find in the bill and also in the report, affects anyone anywhere who, either orally or in writing, wilfully promotes hatred or contempt against any identifiable group, and provides for a penalty of two years' imprisonment or for summary conviction.

The Cohen committee points out that the prohibitions such as last mentioned, in this last group only, are a limitation on free speech and expression. On the other hand, I point out that statements in the public place which are likely to lead to a breach of the peace cannot be allowed to continue on any ground of freedom of speech. The public order is paramount. Statements not in a public place and not likely to lead to a breach of the peace are quite a different matter. I personally, and I am sure all members of this house, will agree with their concern for freedom of speech in Canada. Our governmental system depends on freedom of speech. It is a key freedom upon which all liberties depend.

Honourable senators will remember this quotation:

> I disapprove of what you say, but I will defend to the death your right to say it.

Thus the bill provides certain defences under this third section, under which, as I have said, the offence is not committed in a public place and is not liable to lead to a breach of the peace and does not include the advocacy or the promotion of genocide.

The bill then provides that the accused is not guilty, if he establishes that the statements communicated are true.

There was and still is a very well-known phrase: "The greater the truth the greater the libel." That never was the law of Canada or of Great Britain and is not now. In defamation, in libel, and in matters of that kind, the truth has for many years been considered in this country a complete defence, even when the truth has been spoken for not the best of motives.

Now, in addition to that right to plead the truth of the statements complained of there is this: that "they were relevant to any subject of public interest, the public discussion of which was for the public benefit, and that on reasonable grounds the accused believed them to be true." This excludes, of course, a bona fide discussion of political, economical and social problems as outside of the prohibition, and it seems to me that that should be sufficient.

Lovers of free speech should find little cause for complaint at the prohibition of words of hate and contempt, when the speaker or writer does not believe them on reasonable grounds to be true. We are not in the habit in this or the other chamber of protecting spiteful liars.

It follows of course that the means by which the offence was committed should be forfeited to the Crown to be disposed of as the Attorney General may direct. You will find that in the bill. The means would include pamphlets and books, newspapers and magazines and so on and so forth. For example, if it were the actual commission of genocide, I suppose it would be arms of some kind.

The seizure provisions which you will find in the bill are identical with those in connection with obscene publications and crime comics as set out in section 151A of the Criminal Code.

Further, when the judge is satisfied that any publication kept for sale or distribution is hate propaganda, he may issue a warrant of seizure, but, within seven days after the seizure, he must summon the occupier of the premises where the offensive articles were found—and I suppose, if he knew to whom they belonged, he would certainly include that person—and ask him to show cause why the copy or copies should not be forfeited. Should the defence succeed in showing why they should not be forfeited, they must be restored, when the time for appeal has elapsed. And, fortunately, there is to be an appeal, though it is under the third division of the prohibition only, and of course under the Code in the other divisions.

The appeal is by any person who appears in the proceedings. It is the widest possible classification of who may appeal. The appeal may be on both questions of law and questions of fact, and on questions of mixed law and fact. The appeal is as provided for in the Code as respects indictable offences. You will find, too that the Attorney General has also an appeal, which is given under section 584, subsection 1A, of the Code.

The bill has a still further precaution against what might be described as police persecution, in that on conviction with respect to material seized that has come before the judge, the proceedings cannot be instituted or continued against copies not seized, without the consent of the Attorney General. This is to prevent a multiplicity of proceedings, and also to prevent the harassing of periodical publications.

May I conclude, honourable senators, by saying that the conditions which this bill is designed to correct have received a most intensive study by many competent persons over a very considerable period of time since the present Government took office. The substance of the bill is recommended after thoughtful investigation by a highly competent committee under the chairmanship of the Dean of the Faculty of Law of the University of McGill.

The bill itself has been drawn, to my personal knowledge, in all its detail with the greatest of care by the Department of Justice of our own Parliament, and may I say again that hate propaganda is so odious and so dangerous in its effect on the groups against which it is directed that it is cruelly unjust and should be prohibited.

I congratulate the Government on the production of this bill and I recommend its passage by this house. I confidently suggest that it will, after some discussion of detail, receive the unanimous approval of this house. I hope it will.

I understand, honourable senators, that there will be proposed a joint committee of both houses of Parliament appointed to consider in detail the report which I have mentioned, together with this bill and as well the purposes of this measure.

That is all that I can say at the moment in description of the bill, its need and its possible beneficial effect in our community.

Hon. Edgar Fournier: Honourable senators, I am not a member of the legal profession, but after hearing the honourable Senator Roebuck give such a fine description of this bill, I surely endorse all his words and all his wisdom. I believe this bill is long overdue and will serve a very good purpose.

While I listened very attentively to the honourable senator's explanation, and he mentioned many of the groups that will be affected, I was wondering whether some of the cartoonists we have in Canada would not fall under these categories. This is just my own personal opinion, but sometimes I wonder if some of these public demonstrations—and they do not have to be written, as far as I am concerned—are not in the category of hate literature. Some of these demonstrations are carried too far; some day they may result in a great deal of trouble.

When I mention cartoonists, what I have in mind is the type of thing that is intended to destroy somebody, the sort of caricatures that are repeated in newspapers day after day. Is this freedom? Sometimes we have a tendency to hide too many things behind "freedom" and "liberty".

Just a few days ago there was a demonstration here in front of Parliament: two young men burned the Canadian flag, although less than six months ago there was an act passed here demanding respect for the flag. These two young men that I refer to came here and burned the flag deliberately, knowing very well what they were doing. They challenged the protective staff and the R.C.M.P. They challenged the Government as a whole, and their action was an insult to the Canadian people. It took place in front of the veterans of our country who gave everything they had so that we might have a Canadian flag which would fly with pride. In my view it was an act of savagery of the lowest level. But, honourable senators, somewhere along the line these people can hide behind freedom. I believe the time has come when we should do something about this type of demonstration. I have no objection to the displaying of banners or flags, but when it comes to the burning of the Canadian flag in front of the Canadian Parliament, that is another matter. This is going too far and I object strongly.

I know this bill has nothing in it which will prevent this sort of thing, but I hope it is a first step and that at a later stage some regulations may be made to prevent repetitions of this act.

I believe this bill will do much good and I hope it will have an early passage. We will give it all the support we can and we hope it will serve the purpose for which it is intended.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Perhaps I should state in the public interest that according to my information those young men have been arrested. In those circumstances, and according to the law, we should not discuss the matter here, because it is sub judice.

Hon. Mr. Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche): I am very glad to hear they have been arrested.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: That is my information.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Croll, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, November 10, 1966

The Senate met at 3 p.m., Hon. George S. White, P.C., Acting Speaker, in the chair.

Prayers.

IMMIGRATION

JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN COMMONS MEMBERSHIP

The Hon. the Acting Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the names of Messrs. Clermont, Roxburgh, and Blouin have been substituted for those of Messrs. Macaluso, Reid and Tremblay on the Special Joint Committee on Immigration.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Report on Prairie Farm Rehabilitation and Related Activities for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1966, pursuant to section 12 of the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act, chapter 214, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts.)

Statutory Orders and Regulations published in the Canada Gazette, Part II, of Wednesday, November 9, 1966, pursuant to section 7 of the Regulations Act, chapter 235, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Statements showing Classification of Loans and Deposit Liabilities in Canadian Currency of the Chartered Banks of Canada as at September 30, 1966, pursuant to section 119(1) of the Bank Act, chapter 48, Statutes of Canada 1953-54. (English and French texts).

INTERNAL ECONOMY

SECOND REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Donald Smith, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts, presented the committee's second report:

Your committee recommends:

That, during a recess of Parliament the Leader of the Government in the Senate and on behalf of the Senate in all matters from time to time be authorized to act for and on behalf of the Senate in all matters relating to the internal economy of the Senate.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I move that this report be adopted now.

Honourable senators, perhaps I should explain that this is the usual motion which is made from time to time to establish some body of authority to conduct any business with regard to the functioning of the Senate at any time when the Senate is not in session.

I understand the practice for a long time past has been that during recesses of Parliament of say, a week, two weeks, or two months duration, the Leader of the Government in the Senate has been empowered to name two other senators to act with him in matters relating to the internal economy of the Senate. I also understand that as a matter of courtesy he always includes the name of a representative of the Opposition in the Senate.

As we have no indication as to when the Committee on Internal Economy and Contigent Accounts will meet again, this motion was passed at our meeting earlier this afternoon in order to have on the record authority for the leader and two other senators to act in this capacity, should the occasion arise, before the next meeting of the committee.

I commend the passage of this motion to the house.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: May I inquire from the chairman of the committee if the two members will be chosen from the senators at large?

Hon. Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne): I do not have a copy of the motion before me, but my understanding is that the two members are appointed by the Leader of the Government in the Senate.

Report adopted.

IMMIGRATION

JOINT COMMITTEE—FIRST REPORT ADOPTED

Hon. Leopold Langlois, Joint Chairman of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on Immigration, presented the first report of the committee:

Your committee recommends that its quorum be fixed at twelve (12) members, provided that both Houses are represented.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Langlois: Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate, that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

CONSUMER CREDIT (COST OF LIVING)

JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN SENATE MEMBERSHIP

Hon. Arthur L. Beaubien, with leave of the Senate, moved:

That the name of the honourable Senator Cook be substituted for that of the honourable Senator Deschatelets on the list of senators serving on the Special Joint Committee on Consumer Credit (Cost of Living); and

That a message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that house accordingly.

Motion agreed to.

LEGAL SERVICES

FEES PAID BY GOVERNMENT TO MEMBERS OF QUEBEC BAR—INQUIRY STANDS

On the Notice of Inquiry of Hon. Mr. Pouliot that he will inquire of the Government:

Who were the solicitors, lawyers, counsel and notaries public, of the Province of Quebec, who reecived fees or payments for travelling expenses from the Government of Canada or its agencies during the three years ending June 30, 1966, and how much was paid to each one?

Hon. John J. Connolly: Stand.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Honourable senators, this inquiry has been on the Order Paper for four months and twelve days. I wonder when the Government will be in a position to answer it.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): All I can tell the honourable senator is that the material is in preparation, and that there is a large volume of it. Some technical problems arose, which I dealt with the other day. I had thought the reply would be available by this time. However, I expect to have it very shortly.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Will you have it on Monday next?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I cannot promise that to the honourable senator, but I will have it, if possible.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: They are very slow.

Order stands.

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) for the second reading of Bill C-218, to provide assistance to livestock feeders in Eastern Canada and British Columbia.

Hon. Arthur M. Pearson: Honourable senators, first, I would like to congratulate the Leader of Government and the other members who spoke on this bill, C-218. So far three lawyers and one businessman have taken part in the debate. This shows considerable cooperation on the part of the legal fraternity and business people, and I am pleased to see that they are taking such interest in this matter.

I am in favour of Bill C-218 with regard to assisting farmers in the east and in British Columbia so that they may make a good living from their farms.

The Leader of the Government has said quite correctly that freight assistance on feed grain was started in 1941. It was a war measures act. However, over the years it has been shown that there are several problems in that sort of program.

On reading the reports of the debates in the other place, I have come to the conclusion that there are a number of conflicts of interest in this bill, even though it will give new help in several ways. There is a conflict of interest between the Wheat Board in western Canada and this livestock agency which is being set up in eastern Canada. One, I would judge, would try to obtain the best price it can; and the other would try to obtain as low a price as possible.

As to the eastern coarse grain producers versus the western coarse grain producers, with low freight rates, there is a conflict of interest there, and the west has an advantage. The western coarse grain will go down to Nova Scotia apparently at a lower rate than that at which it can be shipped from Ontario.

Consequently, there is conflict of interest between the western agricultural lands and the eastern agricultural lands.

Again, there are the western grain producers versus the western beef cattle producers. There are many farmers in western Canada who produce nothing but grain, and all they are anxious about is to get markets and to get rid of this grain. On the other hand, there are stock producers in the west, and these are growing very rapidly, who are looking for feed themselves. They see that the setting up of this freight rate assistance and storage assistance in eastern Canada puts them in direct competition with the stock producers in eastern Canada, and in British Columbia, who, in a sense, are closer to the market than they are in western Canada, and they are hurt by such competition.

Consequently, one sees a number of problems in this bill that will have to be rectified as time goes along, and I hope that the Government will take that into account when they appoint this agency and that they will look into this matter.

The cost of feed in the years gone by has gone up and down in relation to whether grain has been scarce or plentiful.

There was apparently no stability in the program that was originated during the war. The small farmer was particularly vulnerable to this type of marketing and supply. My colleague Senator Blois gave a good report on the raising of stock in Nova Scotia. He did a good job on his report, and I would agree with him on it. Yet it is well known that there is a tremendous shortage of beef, pork and other meats in the Maritime provinces. So that actually he was just giving you a rough outline of what is happening to certain small areas and not to the whole of the province. It is hoped that with stability of price and supply of coarse grains, you will be able to build up a greater population of beef cattle and hogs.

After some long delay, the Government has finally brought in this bill C-218. The resolution was placed on the Order Paper in April 5 of this year, introduced into the house on June 30 and finally passed on October 21. We are now at the 10th day of November, and it should be passed very shortly.

I would say: first, support this bill wholeheartedly, if it means more and cheaper meat for the consumer in those have-not areas; second, support it wholeheartedly, if it means better living for the eastern farmer and the farmer in British Columbia; third, support it if it means a definite move to increase production on farms; and fourth, if it means more and better use of lands.

In checking through the ARDA catalogue for 1965-66, which sets out the projects to be undertaken jointly by the provincial and federal governments during that period of 1965-66, I was amazed to find that in the projects to be undertaken in the Maritimes and in Quebec there was very little provision allowed for the establishment of community pastures. There was only a total of 2,724 acres. Of course in Nova Scotia approximately $3,332,000 is being spent to build what you might call viable farms. This lack of effort to build community pastures does not seem to indicate—at least not to me—any determined effort to increase beef production in eastern Canada.

The advantages in this bill are a steady supply of feed grains and a stable price. These are the two most important features of the bill.

I hope the farmers in eastern Canada are going to make full use of this measure of assistance. If in the result we get only a continued reduction of farm lands and a continued reduction of beef cattle production, then our efforts will have been wasted.

In this regard I would like to refer to a report brought out by the Department of Finance. This report gives some indication of what is happening in the various provinces. This is the Annual Report of Farm Improvement Loans Act, 1965. I might say that I referred to the same report for 1964 and found it to be roughly the same as this one.

Referring to loans taken from the Government to purchase livestock, by provinces, the report shows:

British Columbia	370
Alberta	2,886
Saskatchewan	1,627
Manitoba	972
Ontario	1,598
Quebec	245
New Brunswick	23
Nova Scotia	67
Prince Edward Island	83

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Those figures are all in thousands of dollars, are they?

Hon. Mr. Pearson: No. Those are the number of loans applied for.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): In thousands?

Hon. Mr. Pearson: I would say they are the number of loans.

Now, the report deals with the matter of hay balers, which is one of the main items needed in the production of cattle, as follows:

British Columbia	96
Alberta	1,328
Saskatchewan	1,134
Manitoba	535
Ontario	591
Quebec	90
New Brunswick	46
Nova Scotia	67
Prince Edward Island	100

Hon. Mr. Burchill: May I ask my honourable friend what those last figures are.

Hon. Mr. Pearson: Those are the number of loans that were asked for.

Now, in regard to buildings which have something to do with the raising of stock, the number of loans asked for were as follows:

British Columbia	188
Alberta	1,207
Saskatchewan	896
Manitoba	536
Ontario	2,124
Quebec	134
New Brunswick	43
Nova Scotia	22
Prince Edward Island	60

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Does the honourable senator mind if I ask him a question? Am I to understand that the figures he is quoting deal with applications to the Canadian Farm Board for loans for improvement to farms?

Hon. Mr. Pearson: Yes. I am just giving those figures in order to give an idea of stock decreases or increases in the different provinces.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It seems to me, from the way the honourable senator mentioned them, that those figures indicate rather that it is the intention of the farmers in those areas to try to increase their production by having better facilities, and that their intention is to do that very thing.

Hon. Mr. Pearson: Exactly. I am suggesting that those figures show that where you have a large community pasture, such as you have in Saskatchewan and Alberta, the farmers have more land for producing hay and grains and, consequently, they put their cattle into the community pasture and use the extra land to plant; for that reason they need more hay balers and more buildings for stock in the winter. This is an indication that they are developing faster in the west than in eastern Canada.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: Borrowing money has many implications.

Hon. Mr. Pearson: Quite so.

According to an article by W. W. MacDonald in the Family Herald of May 12, 1966, farmers in Nova Scotia have reduced grain acreage by 65,700 acres in the past 25 years. Yet they have increased their hog and poultry production. The whole Maritime area has reduced oat seeding by 185,000 acres, and cattle population of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick dropped 63,000; Quebec dropped oat seeding by 400,000 acres. Oats are part of the main diet for cattle.

If this area is going to build up herds of cattle, hogs and poultry only on imported western grain and Ontario grain, then there will be very little improvement to livestock industry and it will largely be at the expense of the taxpayer.

It seems to me, honourable senators, that there is need for a great educational program in the Maritime areas, rather than just enacting a bill and setting up a number of warehouses full of feed for the farmers. There are a great many farmers in those areas who do not know what this is all about. They do not take advantage of this sort of program.

It is a well known fact that a farmer who raises his own grain and processes that feed through his livestock will make a great deal more money than buying feed, even with all this proposed assistance. Assistance must be given now; but with all our knowledge today, our main effort must be to get livestock farmers on their feet by making arrangements to settle each man on a viable farm and build large community pastures to take care of the stock during the summer season. We must also make a special effort to encourage and assist the grain producer in the east. Every effort must be put forward to assist him to compete with imported grain.

One thing which seemed to scare some members of the other house was that western grain would flood the market and that the grain producer in the Maritimes, particularly Prince Edward Island, would drop out of the business of growing grain.

During the summer season community pastures relieve the farm of the need of private pastures and leave more land for hay and coarse grains. We must face facts, and make each part of this dominion self supporting in the matter of raising livestock. With the burgeoning of world population we in Canada, although relatively small in population, must all work together to help feed other peoples. We must not expect one part of this country to feed any other part. Agricultural land is too scarce and too valuable to allow it to be wasted because of indifferent cultural practices.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I am a farmer myself, and I have a great deal to learn about modern farming. The honourable senator spoke of community pastures, and I would like some information about them. Are they anything like the commons of ancient times in England, the enclosure of which caused so much social distress in times gone by? I would like to know a little more about what he means by community pastures.

Hon. Mr. Pearson: In the thirties in Saskatchewan, for instance, there were particularly large areas where the land was rather poor and unproductive, and farmers who lived in those areas abandoned the land and went north or elsewhere. Consequently, large blocks of land were left vacant. The odd farmer remained in those areas, but because schools were distant and there were no accessible roads, the Government of Saskatchewan stepped in and bought them out through the Land Utilization Board. Then they fenced the land in, put in wells, or erected dams or dug-outs to supply water. This land is becoming more and more valuable because it can now support more stock per acre than in the past. They say that whereas in the past they could take in 20 head of cattle per farmer, they can now take in 40 head.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: At a price?

Hon. Mr. Pearson: Yes, at a price—a rental. I understand there is a great deal of land in Quebec and Nova Scotia in the same position, which should now be used.

Hon. G. Percival Burchill: Honourable senators, I had not intended to say anything in this debate, but after listening with pleasure to the excellent speech from the west, which gave a worthy viewpoint of the west, I would like very much to adjourn the debate.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Burchill, debate adjourned.

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Roebuck for the second reading of Bill S-49, to amend the Criminal Code.

Hon. Daniel A. Lang: Honourable senators, with the kind permission of Senator Croll I would like to take the opportunity this afternoon of addressing a few remarks in connection with this bill on hate propaganda, being an act to amend the Criminal Code.

Firstly, I wish to pay tribute to Senator Roebuck for his erudite observations on this bill before the Senate yesterday. As usual, he brought not only mind and thought to the subject matter, but also a very great heart. I think he spoke for all of us when he said how he detested the things against which this bill is directed.

I know that we all, honourable senators, can only laud the objectives of this piece of legislation and we can only give our support to the achievement of what it hopes to eradicate. Yet, frankly, after listening to Senator Roebuck yesterday, and considering the bill myself thereafter, I had to admit that I became more concerned and distressed about what lies behind it. I felt that today I would not be discharging my duty in this chamber if I did not express to all of you some of my concern. I suspect that this concern I feel arises from the fact that I am a lawyer by profession and I recognize the great difficulty any legislature is faced with in attempting to codify and define an offence as nebulous as the one contemplated in this act. I also know that very often by attempts to codify, define and pin down we can create, albeit unwittingly sometimes, an instrument which will perhaps turn against us because we do place in the hands of the state a power which was not readily available to them before. In a country such as ours this is basically of no immediate concern, so we must assume a continuity of the state we now enjoy and know that this legislation will be effective.

I was pleased to hear Senator Roebuck say that this bill will be sent to a joint committee for study. I hope that there it will receive a thorough examination and that all the best minds, not only of the legal profession in both houses but of all Members of Parliament, will be brought to bear on the problems it raises.

First of all, recognizing that this bill is basically a restriction on freedom, I think we have got to ensure that it does not restrict and cannot restrict freedoms that we do not immediately contemplate being effective. Secondly, we must ensure and write into this proposed legislation every safeguard we are capable of putting into it to ensure that we are not placing in the hands of the state some instrument of power which may be turned against freedom in its broadest sense. Indeed, this proposed legislation is to ensure a very basic freedom and to try to put into statutory form a freedom that I for one feel is now implicit in our constitution and in our way of life in Canada.

We must avoid creating inadvertently through legislation such as this a Frankenstein monster which could—I say "could" —possibly some day destroy what it attempts to do by definition.

Honourable senators, looking at the bill itself, I notice in subsection 2 of section 267A the definition of "genocide", and I note that this bill contains no definition of the word "group". I submit that a definition of the word "group" is essential to ensure that this section does what it sets out to do. I notice, for instance, that in section 267B, the words "identifiable group" are used and are defined, but that definition is applicable only to section 267B and not to 267A.

I put to honourable senators the hypothetical question: Does a person who advocates the mercy killing of the incurably insane, commit an offence under section 267A? I am not so sure that the incurably insane may not be a "group" because the word "group" is not defined as it is used in that section.

Of necessity, I must reach for far-fetched examples. In so doing, I am relying on experience in the practice of law. Some far-fetched situations come under the ambit of definitions in legislation which were never contemplated originally to fall within their scope. Honourable senators examining the situation and thinking of those who may inadvertently come within the meaning referred to, may come upon other examples.

In the following section "identifiable group" is defined to mean "any section of the public distinguished by colour, race or ethnic origin." I submit that definition may be quite inadequate for the purpose intended herein. I do not know where the borderline of that definition may be. I do not know whether "identifiable group" extends to include a group of German Nazis with a race or ethnic background. I do not know whether Gypsy fortune tellers would fall within the meaning of those two words "identifiable group".

Would the members of the Royal Family who are of Germanic origin fall within the meaning of "identifiable group"? Perhaps honourable senators of Scottish ancestry would form identifiable groups under that definition.

Honourable senators, I submit that this vagueness is of real concern to us, in a piece of legislation as sweeping in its effect as this one is.

In the first part of that section, honourable senators will notice that an offence under it is the communicating of statements in a public place, inciting contempt of an identifiable group. It goes further to define that the incitement is to be such as would be likely to lead to a breach of the peace.

I suggest that the determination of what may or may not lead to a breach of the peace is almost a subjective determination and may very well vary from case to case, depending on the length of the judge's foot, or on his predilections, or on his own prejudices, emotions or fears.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: We have precedents for that. We have the Munsinger inquiry and the Landreville inquiry.

Hon. Mr. Lang: I would scarcely draw an analogy between the two instances.

Honourable senators, I am somewhat more concerned when we come to the second subsection of this section, where the offence is not one committed in a public place but is committed in other than a public place. Here I ask myself: In a private place, where someone may be communicating statements, wilfully promoting contempt against an identifiable group, who is going to lay information about that conversation? Who will go to the State to lay a charge? Are we not injecting something here which goes to the very root of our society, our privacy and our freedoms?

May someone some day who may be promoting contempt of, let us say, the identifiable group known as the Spanish Loyalists, come under fire or commit an offence under this section?

Again, my examples may be far-fetched, and I draw them broadly to try to bring home my point.

I notice that that section goes on to shift the onus to the accused to prove that the statements communicated were true, or that they were relevant to any subject of public interest, the public discussion of which was for the public benefit, and that on reasonable grounds he believed them to be true.

I do not have to say that to shift the onus from the Crown to that of the accused, on an indictable offence, crosses some long-established lines in our legal jurisprudence.

Honourable senators, I do not want you to feel from my remarks today that I am not completely in accord with the objectives of this piece of legislation. I am sorry if it is true that we in this country today need legislation like that. I do not think that Hyde Park in London, with all it means, with the way it builds up the great British traditions of freedom, would survive very long if legislation of this nature were introduced and enforced in Great Britain. I do not think it necessary to say that the great traditions of freedom and tolerance which we have inherited from our Mother Country are just as fresh in the minds and hearts of the Canadian people.

If and when this piece of legislation is placed on our statute books, I hope and trust it will rest there, as a section of the Criminal Code which will never be required to be enforced by criminal prosecution.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Walker, debate adjourned.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these resolutions be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I move that these resolutions be considered on Monday next.

Motion agreed to.

ADDITION TO MEMBERSHIP OF SUBCOMMITTEE TO HEAR APPEAL

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: With honourable Senator Connolly's permission, concerning the matters that I have just moved, I would like to take advantage of the occasion to announce that, in connection with the subcommittee of the Standing Committee on Divorce appointed to hear the evidence in regard to the private bill on the petition of one Mrs. Biega, the committee has added to that subcommittee Senator Hugessen and Senator Aseltine. The present committee, prior to the addition of these gentlemen, consisted of Senator Haig, Chairman, Senator Fergusson and Senator Gershaw; the subcommittee now includes the two additional names, making a committee of five.

VISITING FORCES BILL

Hon. Leopold Langlois moved the second reading of Bill S-50, respecting the Armed Forces of Countries Visiting Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, the main purpose of the bill entitled the Visiting Forces Act is to repeal the Visiting Forces (North Atlantic Treaty) Act, the Visiting Forces (British Commonwealth) Act, and the Visiting Forces (United States of America) Act, and to replace them by one act which will prescribe the rights, privileges and duties of the armed forces of any other nation when in Canada.

For the information of honourable senators, I wish to add at this stage that the Visiting Forces (British Commonwealth) Act was enacted in 1932, as a result of the Statute of Westminster. It provides for the privileges, immunities and duties of British forces from other parts of the Commonwealth when in Canada. Reciprocal legislation was enacted by other nations of the Commonwealth to provide for Canadian forces visiting those countries.

On the other hand, the Visiting Forces (United States of America) Act was enacted in 1947 to provide for the privileges, immunities and duties of United States forces in Canada. However, no reciprocal legislation was enacted in the United States, as under the law of that country a visiting force automatically carries with it rights to hold courts martial, administer discipline, etcetera.

The privileges and immunities granted by the Visiting Forces (British Commonwealth) Act and the Visiting Forces (United States of America) Act are not as extensive as those granted by the Visiting Forces (North Atlantic Treaty) Act, and in fact since the latter act was enacted in 1951 the privileges and immunities of British and United States forces in Canada have been and still are governed by it.

The Visiting Forces (North Atlantic Treaty) Act was enacted primarily to implement Canada's obligations under the "Agreement between the Parties to the North Atlantic Treaty regarding the Status of their Forces," commonly referred to as the NATO Agreement. The act was so framed, however, that its provisions could be extended to such non-NATO countries as might be designated as "Associated States" by the Governor in Council. It is considered that it is not desirable to have the privileges and immunities of friendly visiting forces of non-NATO states in Canada governed by an act, the name and terms of which appear to apply only to members of NATO. It is therefore proposed that this act be repealed and replaced by the new act.

The new act is in effect a revision of the Visiting Forces (North Atlantic Treaty) Act, omitting therefrom, however, all references to the North Atlantic Treaty. The only portions of the Visiting Forces (British Commonwealth) Act that have been used in recent years are the provisions relating to the mutual attachment of personnel and to forces serving together and acting in combination. These provisions have been inserted in the new act under section 27 thereof.

There are certain provisions in the Visiting Forces (NATO) Act that are not entirely satisfactory or do not comply completely with the NATO Status of Forces Agreement. The opportunity has been taken to correct these unsatisfactory provisions in the new act.

Honourable senators, as I have said, the Visiting Forces Act, 1966, would in effect be a re-enactment of the Visiting Forces (North Atlantic Treaty) Act but with the following significant amendments.

All references to the North Atlantic Treaty are deleted from the act.

Part II of the act deals with the disciplinary jurisdiction of visiting forces. As presently framed, it does not give a visiting force jurisdiction over the dependants of its members and in this sense does not fully implement the NATO Agreement. The proposed amendments would extend the provisions of this part to dependents accompanying a visiting force.

The only other important amendment to Part II would be to section 13, which now gives authority to members of a visiting force to exercise police functions, but implies that such functions may not be exercised in respect of any person who is not a member of the visiting force. This section could be interpreted as depriving members of a visiting force of the powers of arrest which every person in Canada, whether citizen or visitor, has under sections 434, 436 and 437 of the Criminal Code. These sections, as honourable senators may recall, have to do with the right of arrest without warrant when, for example, a person is found committing a criminal offence.

For the information of honourable senators, I must add that in the final drafting of the bill it was omitted to add sections 38 and 41 of the Criminal Code, which have to do with the defence of property and which empower a person to defend property, prevent trespassing and so forth. It is the intention that when the bill is referred to and discussed in committee an appropriate amendment to that effect will be moved.

Part III deals with claims for personal injuries and property damage. It provides that a claim against a visiting force shall be dealt with as a claim against Canada. The present drafting of section 16 is faulty and requires amendment to make it clear that the whole of the Crown Liability Act applies to claims arising out of the activities of visiting forces in Canada.

A new section 16A is required to ensure that a member of a visiting force would be in the same legal position as a member of the Canadian Forces in respect of an injury or death occurring in Canada for which a pension is payable; that is, a claim would not lie against Canada if a pension is payable by the sending state in respect of such injury or death.

Section 18 requires amendment to enable Canada to deal with claims arising out of the navigation or operation of a ship belonging to a visiting force in accordance with any agreement Canada may make with a sending state concerning the handling of such claims.

Section 19 requires amendment to remove the present absolute requirement to submit certain questions to arbitration. It should be possible to settle such questions by negotiation and only refer to arbitration if negotiation is not successful.

The NATO Agreement is attached to the Visiting Forces (North Atlantic Treaty) Act as a schedule. The whole of the Agreement would be removed from the act but its continued validity would be assured by section 29(2).

The proposed act will, in my opinion, be a much more effective legislative vehicle for regulating the activities of visiting forces in Canada than are the acts which it is proposed should be repealed.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Cape Breton), for Hon. Mr. White, debate adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I have received no further word with reference to the progress of supply in the other place. In the circumstances, and after conferring with the Acting Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Choquette), I suggest that the Senate do now adjourn, to reassemble at the call of the bell at approximately 9.15 this evening.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 10.05 p.m. the sitting was resumed, Hon. Maurice Bourget, Acting Speaker, in the Chair.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): First, may I thank honourable senators for their patience in waiting this evening. We really did not know until 10 o'clock whether there was any possibility of our considering the interim supply bill tonight. However, it is quite clear now that there is no such possibility.

I therefore move, with leave, that when the Senate adjourns tonight it do stand adjourned until Monday, November 14, 1966, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

The Senate adjourned until Monday, November 14, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Monday, November 14, 1966

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

PUBLIC SERVICE

JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN COMMONS MEMBERSHIP

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the names of Messrs. Sherman and Madill have been substituted for those of Messrs. Keays and Ricard on the list of members appointed to serve on the Special Joint Committee on the Public Service of Canada.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the committee's reports Nos. 848 to 909 inclusive, and moved that the said reports be taken into consideration on Wednesday next.

Motion agreed to.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

AIR CANADA MACHINISTS STRIKE AND POSTAL WORKERS THREATENED STRIKE—INQUIRY

Hon. Donald Cameron: Honourable senators, I would like to ask the Leader of the Government (Honourable Mr. Connolly) if he can give us any information as to what action is contemplated or likely to be taken with respect to the current strike situation which affects transportation in Canada. I refer particularly to the fact that 5,200 members of the International Association of Machinists are tying up our major air line, and that there is a likelihood within a few hours of postal workers going on strike and disrupting communication between the various parts of the country.

I have heard the statements made from time to time by Mr. Kay, the President of the Canadian Union of Postal Workers, and by Mr. Decarie, representing another group of postal workers, and I have heard and seen on television Mr. Rygus, the Vice-President of the International Association of Machinists.

These gentlemen claim that their members are being unjustly dealt with. Anyone who has read the Montpetit Report, as I am sure all honourable senators have, will realize that there is injustice in the postal service and that there has been a quality of low-grade administration—

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): What is your question?

Hon. Mr. Cameron: I asked what action has been taken or is likely to be taken by the Government to deal with the situation; and, by way of explanation—

Some Hon. Senators: Order.

Hon. Mr. Cameron: Just a minute. If I am not in order, Mr. Speaker, I will find another occasion, but my observations will take only a minute.

The Hon. the Speaker: I do not wish to interrupt the honourable senator. I think it would be more fitting if he would reserve his comments to a later point in the debate. The honourable senator has put his question.

An Hon. Senator: There is no debate on a question.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, may I intervene at this point, now that the honourable Senator Cameron has asked his question? I must say that I have had no notice of it, and therefore I take it under advisement. But let me make a comment by way of preliminary answer.

He has raised a question about two strikes. One of these has started, that in respect of Air Canada. In the first place, I should say that Air Canada is—

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Struck.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): —is a Crown Corporation, and the officials of that corporation are dealing with the union officials. They have been negotiating and the negotiations have broken down. A strike has begun. This matter has been engaging the very earnest attention of the Government for some time.

I am not in a position tonight to say what precise action the Government proposes to take, as negotiation is primarily the responsibility of the parties. However, I understand that an offer will be made—if it has not been made already—to appoint a mediator to deal with the situation as it exists.

With respect to the other matter which the senator from Banff raises, namely, the possibility of a postal strike, this too is subject to negotiation between the officials of the department and the union. In respect of the Montpetit Report to which he referred, I may say that most of the recommendations which were made—and they were very numerous indeed; I think they ran to 87—have already been dealt with. I understand that others are part of the negotiations between the parties.

I would have been in a much better position to deal with these two questions upon notice. Perhaps I could defer further comment until a later time.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Honourable senators, if I might interject for a moment, Senator Cameron might better have made this speech sometime in June or July when we had some strikes.

Hon. Mr. Croll: You made the speech that time yourself. We did not want two of them.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: I know, Senator Croll, but what I have said is correct.

DIVORCE

APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO HEAR APPEAL

Hon. John J. Connolly with leave of the Senate, moved:

That a Special Committee of the Senate be appointed to examine and report upon the Petition of Joyce Regina Nagine Biega, of the village of Vaudreuil, in the District of Montreal, in the Province of Quebec, praying that the Resolution numbered 738, adopted by the Senate of Canada on 11th July, 1966, dissolving the marriage between the said Joyce Regina Nagine Biega and Alexander Biega, be annulled, which petition was filed with the Clerk of the Parliaments in accordance with subsection (2) of section 2 of "An Act authorizing the Senate of Canada to Dissolve and Annul Marriages", 1963, chapter 10, on 5th August, 1966;

That the Committee be composed of the following Senators, namely Senators Aseltine, Hugessen, Haig, Fergusson and Gershaw; and

That the Committee have the power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, to print such papers and evidence as may be ordered by the Committee, and to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, perhaps a brief explanation is owing to the Senate by the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce.

This bill was in the ordinary course referred to the Standing Committee on Divorce, and that committee appointed, as was its right, three members from its membership. Later, I was asked to supplement the membership by two others and, perhaps a little thoughtlessly, we appointed two Senators who were however not members of the Divorce Committee.

This resolution does not change in any way the substance of what we did on that occasion, but it does regularize it and, in that way, it is satisfactory.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Carried.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: No, sir. I think that resolution should wait until tomorrow.

The Hon. the Speaker: With due respect, honourable senators, the question was put and, in my opinion, the motion was passed.

Motion agreed to.

HON. C. G. POWER, P.C.

PUBLICATION OF MEMOIRS

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with, I am sure all honourable senators will be glad to know, and I believe it worthy of mention in the Senate, that the Macmillan Company of Canada has published a book called A Party Politician—The Memoirs of Chubby Power.

It so happens that I have not read the entire book, but I have read enough of it to know that it is a most engaging and interesting piece of work, and I commend it to all honourable senators. However, I want to make clear to the honourable senator involved and to all honourable senators that I am not doing this in order to "plug" the book. As a matter of fact, when I heard about the book and went to him about it, he said, "I have come to the conclusion that the booksellers have made up their minds that they want as few people as possible to read it, because it costs $8.75 a copy and it is not worth that much." I can only say he is much too modest.

But I think the book is important in that this kind of work by experienced parliamentarians—and there are many in this house though I am not one—is a great contribution to the public life of this country.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I am delighted not only that this book has been written by the father of the Parliament of Canada but also because it was through the good offices of Queen's University in Kingston that it has been made possible.

Hon. M. Wallace McCutcheon: In the light of what the Leader of the Government has said, I should say that I am more indebted to Senator Willis than I ever thought I would be because today he presented me with a copy of the book, and I did not know it cost $8.50.

CRIMINAL CODE (HATE PROPAGANDA)

DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Thursday, November 10, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Roebuck for the second reading of Bill S-49, to amend the Criminal Code.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I have taken the liberty of asking the Clerk Assistant to call item No. 2 on the Order Paper first rather than item No. 1, so that Senator Walker may proceed with his speech. I do this because there are certain senators who perhaps feel that their services are urgently required elsewhere in the City of Ottawa this evening.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. David Walker: Honourable senators, may I join in saying that if we had more broadminded people such as honourable Senator Power in this country we would not have the necessity of considering a bill such as we have before us tonight.

I listened with interest to the very able introduction of this bill by Senator Roebuck, and to the thoughtful address by my colleague Senator Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche), and to the excellent criticism by Senator Lang. It is a fine thing to see on the Government side an occasional difference of opinion, and it would be even finer if some day they could vote that way. But after all the smoke is cleared away they usually line up and vote with the Government. That may be because of the powerful leader they have on the other side. In any event, it is refreshing to see that there is a difference of opinion.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): We are not unique in having differences in our ranks.

Hon. Mr. Walker: Touché. That is why we are going elsewhere tonight.

Many years ago when I was very small my mother used to tell me that every Jewish child born into the world was apt at some time to face hatred and prejudice. I have remembered this throughout my life, but since the war I thought this feeling had almost disappeared. I thought there was an end to prejudice against Jewish people or against people of any racial origin.

Senator Croll will recall that for 25 years the Lawyers' Club in Toronto, which numbered 600 members, and tried to get rid of that part of the constitution which said that a member had to be white and Christian. After a great struggle, in 1950 when I was president I was able to direct the minds of the members so that this offending clause was finally struck out. We now have 1,000 members of which 300, I am happy to say, are Jewish.

Looking back from 1966 to 1950, I cannot conceive how in those days people could have been so prejudiced, because in the last decade this prejudice seems to have completely disappeared. With the exception of a few crackpot groups such as the alleged Nazi group in Toronto, I had not heard of any of this. I thought it was almost gone, and I was hoping it had. I say, therefore, if it has almost disappeared, why press this very stringent, very exceptional, very harsh legislation at this time? Why did we not do this 50 years ago when there was widespread hate and prejudice against certain races? Why did we not do it even 25 years ago? To bring up this matter now at a time when hate is almost extinct is wrong.

I believe that in its enlightenment the public has substituted love for hate, and tolerance for prejudice. I for one cannot believe that this very harsh legislation is going to control the minds of men any more than any other legislation has ever controlled the minds of men. Certainly it is not going to lessen any hate, if there is such hatred left about which we have heard so much from Senator Roebuck.

However, to be fair, even Senator Roebuck, in his speech introducing the bill, admitted that there is no prospect at the present time in this country of any of the instances such as he described as having originated, I presume, in Europe. There is no crisis in Canada at the present time, and even Senator Roebuck admits that. Then why, in the name of heaven, introduce such a bill now, knowing as we do that there are a few crackpots who have been very successfully kept under control by the present provisions of the Criminal Code?

Senator Roebuck was fair enough to point out that section 153 does prohibit the use of the mails for the transmission of scurrilous material; that section 160 prohibits disorderly conduct in a public place; and that there are other sections dealing with riots, unlawful assemblies, blasphemous, and defamatory libels, and other offences. There are in the Criminal Code many checkmates to meet any problem I could foresee arising under the circumstances; and the radio and television regulations are stringent and prohibit any abusive comment.

Senator Roebuck says, "But we have no group protection." After all, groups are made up of individuals, of persons, and there are many provisions in the Criminal Code under which action can be taken by such persons. I think particularly of the situation of a person belonging to one of these groups and feeling that he has been offended or has suffered as a result, can lay a prosecution under the criminal libel sections and, I suggest it, would be very successful.

Bill S-49, this hate propaganda bill which we have before us, is a radical cure—and I put quotation marks around the word "cure"—for hate in Canada. Even Senator Roebuck's newspaper titled the Toronto Daily Star—

Hon. Mr. Benidickson: What is that?

Hon. Mr. Walker: You need not have asked that question.

Hon. Mr. Benidickson: I am from too far away.

Hon. Mr. Walker: I think even you have heard of the Toronto Daily Star. If you have not, speak to Senator Croll on your left, and he will tell you about it.

Even the Toronto Daily Star, in its leading editorial of November 12, under the heading, "The hate law: well-meant but perilous," analyses the bill and ends up with these words, which I think are words of wisdom:

> The experience of centuries in the English-speaking world has shown that free speech, within traditional limits, is the best guarantee of all the other rights, including the security of minorities.
> Parliament should hesitate a long time before abridging it merely because it has been abused by a few crackpots.

Then last week, on November 9, the Brantford Expositor—most senators in this chamber have heard of the Expositor, and Brantford is the home of our distinguished former Leader of the Government in the Senate and former Speaker of the House of Commons. To him I will read the Brantford Expositor which, in summing up a very careful analysis of the proposed bill, says:

> The measures proposed are grossly out of proportion to the need for them.

May I analyse the bill to indicate briefly why this is so? Will you examine Bill S-49 with me and look at the first page? Under the heading "Hate Propaganda", proposed section 267A reads as follows:

> (1) Every one who advocates or promotes genocide is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for five years.

Five years is a long time.

What does "genocide" mean? This section contains a detailed description. Ordinarily, the word means the systematic extermination of racial, national, cultural or religious groups. That is a dictionary definition. But the definition contained in this section includes the killing of members of a group, and other things. According to subsection 2(d), at the bottom of the page, it means deliberately imposing measures intended to prevent births within a group. The dissemination of birth control literature could be attacked under that definition. Is anybody going to lay a charge against a person who attempts to control births by the dissemination of knowledge? Even the Roman Catholic Church is seriously considering this problem, and at the present time public health nurses are disseminating not only the literature but the pill as well.

Another astonishing definition of "genocide" is contained in subsection 2(e), which reads:

> forcibly transferring children of the group to another group.

Under this bill the Attorney General of British Columbia would be liable to prosecution, and to imprisonment for five years, because he forcibly took a large group of Doukhobor children away from their parents and put them with another group. Why did he do that? He did it because they were being brought up without any education and were being encouraged to become outlaws. This statement indicates how far this legislation can be made to go.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: May I ask the honourable senator a question?

Hon. Mr. Walker: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: While he is on the subject would he care to comment on the situation in the United States today where negro children have been transported to other schools, and vice versa.

Hon. Mr. Walker: I know that my honourable friend, who is a skilful debater, is going to discuss this subject. I will reserve that matter to him. I will sit at his feet and listen to him. I have not given the matter any consideration. I appreciate, however, that the question was asked with the best of intentions.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I am asking merely whether that would not also be an offence against this proposed section.

Hon. Mr. Walker: I would certainly think so, and knowing that the honourable senator is on my side I know also that there is no brickbat in his question.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): There is no jurisdiction either.

Hon. Mr. Walker: That is right, there is no jurisdiction. Thank you for allowing me to discuss that matter briefly.

On page 2 of the bill is the proposed section 267B(1) which reads:

> Every one who, by communicating statements in any public place, incites hatred or contempt against any identifiable group where such incitement is likely to lead to a breach of the peace, is guilty of
> (a) an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for two years—

The word "statements", honourable senators, is defined in subsection 5 (c) as follows:

> "statements" includes words either spoken or written, gestures, signs or other visible representations.

If this sections means what it says—and in strictly intrepreting a section we have to assume that it does—then a person who thumbs his nose in certain circumstances in a public place could be hauled up, particularly if he does it as a sign of contempt of an identifiable group. He would be liable to two years in jail. I point out that we have all the other sections of the Criminal Code with respect to sedition, unlawful assembly, disorderly conduct in a public place, and other offences, to protect the public against that sort of thing, and in most circumstances, I submit with the greatest of deference, section 267B (1) is redundant.

Then section 267B (2) reads:

> Everyone one who, by communicating statements, wilfully promotes hatred or contempt against any identifiable group is guilty of

Here we are going a very long way. This is a very risky precedent. It has the potentiality of being mischievous. We find that "identifiable group" means any section of the public distinguished by colour, race or ethnic origin. This subsection will mean that from now on the banter and criticism that has taken place between the French and English can no longer take place. Of course, if we say such things in this house we are protected, but if we attempt outside to bring ridicule upon, for instance, the French-Canadian separatists—which are surely an identifiable group within the given meaning of "any section of the public distinguished by colour, race or ethnic origin," and certainly their race is French—then we are liable to prosecution. Or, if they in turn attack us English—well, perhaps, they would not be able to say that we are an identifiable group because we are a little more mixed up than they.

However, it can be seen to what lengths this legislation can be taken. For instance, a person may condemn, as is sometimes done in the mornings when alighting from a train, the Pullman porters. They are an identifiable group; they can be identified by their colour. Is that person who does so open to a charge and liable to two years in prison? What about the laundrymen? They form an identifiable group—the Chinese race.

Hon. Mr. Croll: No, no.

Hon. Mr. Walker: Do you see to what extent this legislation can be carried? The draftsmen of this measure have attempted to cover every little nook and cranny in order to eradicate hatred in every possible way. Nobody believes in eradicating hatred more than I, but let us not make our efforts to eradicate it appear ridiculous.

I suggest, with the greatest of respect, that this bill should be withdrawn. It should be withdrawn for many reasons, the first and foremost of which is that it is contrary to our conception of what is proper, in that it blocks free speech, and puts it in a straightjacket. We do not believe in limiting the freedom of discussion and the freedom of debate.

If this proposed legislation is passed we shall have to be very careful in what we say outside Parliament in, say, an election campaign. My honourable friend Senator Croll is an expert in saying certain things in election campaigns, but if this bill passes into law he will have to look over his shoulder all the time to make sure that no one is listening to what he says with the idea of laying a charge against him.

This measure can be an instrument of oppression. It could be used to silence opposition, to still legitimate criticism, by alleging an attack on some group or other.

I ask you, honourable senators, in all seriousness to take my remarks into consideration. Nobody has the interests of the oppressed races more at heart than I. I have given you the background of my feeling in this respect, but I say in all seriousness, with the Toronto Star and other thoughtful newspapers across Canada, that this legislation is so radically drawn that in unscrupulous or ignorant hands it can be used as an instrument to smother free speech. It could be used also on occasion as an instrument of tyranny, and it is my respectful suggestion that it should be withdrawn.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Croll, debate adjourned.

The Senate resumed from Thursday, November 10, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) for the second reading of Bill C-218, to provide assistance to livestock feeders in Eastern Canada and British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, on behalf of Senator Burchill, I would ask, with the unanimous consent of the house, and reserving Senator Burchill's rights, that Senator Argue be permitted to speak on this bill at this time.

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, I have a few brief remarks I would like to make on this bill.

This is one of those rather non-controversial bills which in another place often take a long time to pass, but nevertheless after a long debate, as I read it, this bill received unanimous consent there.

This is important and far-reaching legislation which has arrived at this stage only after a very long and hard campaign by feeders and farmers in eastern Canada and in British Columbia, who felt that this kind of legislation was required. Feeders in eastern Canada and British Columbia have for years felt they had a serious grievance.

Over the years I have had the opportunity to sit on the Agricultural Committee of the House of Commons, and I have heard eastern members, both elected members and representatives of farm working organizations, complain very bitterly of the high prices they have had to pay from time to time for western feed grains. They have complained not only of the high prices but of the quality. Some of the samples of grain which have been brought to that committee from time to time would shock a western grain farmer, because some of it was the kind of stuff they would discard and even hesitate to feed to livestock because of the danger of contaminating the land with weeds. Therefore, this measure has come about because of a grievance that has been felt over a long period of time as to price, quality and availability of supply of feed grains for feeders in eastern Canada and in British Columbia.

This measure, I think, has received favourable consideration by people in eastern Canada and western Canada because of the very good experience of western farmers in marketing their grain through the Canadian Wheat Board.

The Canadian Wheat Board is defined as an agency of the producers, but in a real sense it is a government board; it is a government board that sets itself up between the producer and the consumer. Those of us who support a free enterprise system—and I think that includes everybody in this chamber—are naturally reluctant to see the Government propelled into greater and greater control in many areas of the economic life of this country. However, as far as the western producers and the Canadian Wheat Board are concerned, it has the near unanimous support of the producers.

A vote taken in Manitoba some years ago on the question of the Canadian Wheat Board handling feed grain received some 85 per cent support. However, the Canadian Wheat Board itself is not substantially engaged in either the direct buying or storage, or indeed the sale of grain. The board operates through private agencies—either private agencies as we normally know them or through agencies which are in fact co-operatives. Even in selling on the world market, the board operates largely through the private grain trade, and in some instances, of course, such as the Iron Curtain countries, with other agencies of the federal Government.

This system has worked well. It is a kind of combination between normal free enterprise and Government activity, and has seemed to recommend itself to farmers and feeders in eastern Canada as the kind of principle that could be adapted to meet the needs of the eastern feed producer. I think it has a good deal of merit because of the highly successful experience we have had in western Canada in the operation of the Canadian Wheat Board.

When this measure was introduced in this house, the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly) made a very adequate, comprehensive—

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Too comprehensive.

Hon. Mr. Argue: —and factual statement on this whole question. I am sure that anyone interested in the facts as they relate to this subject could learn much by referring to that statement. However, if one wants to go back some years and find out the main parts of this bill, all he has to do is read the submissions of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture made over a number of years to the Government and to agricultural committees. One who has certainly been extremely active in the preparation of those statements is the Secretary of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, Mr. David Kirk. I think the Government and Parliament have been well advised to take the advice given in such large measure by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture through its spokesman, David Kirk, when presenting the kind of legislation which is now before us.

This bill is comprehensive. It establishes a board which has highly important and widespread objectives. The objects of the board are to ensure the availability of feed grain, the availability of adequate storage, stability in the price of feed grain, and equalization of feed grain prices.

The board may, in furtherance of its objects, make payments for storage, payments for transportation, payments for the purpose of reducing or stabilizing the cost of storage.

The board may licence for the importation of feed grains coming into the country from outside Canada; may make studies relating to feed grains; and the Government may authorize the board to exercise additional powers for the purchase of feed grain in eastern Canada, for the purchase by this board from the Canadian Wheat Board of feed grain; to purchase feed grain outside of Canada; to take delivery of, ship, store, handle and, subject to subsection 2, sell or otherwise dispose of feed grain in eastern Canada or British Columbia and enter into contracts for the delivery, shipping, storage, handling, insurance and sale or other disposition of such feed grain.

This is a powerful and comprehensive piece of legislation. I would suggest that it go all the way in prices suggested by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. One might even say that it makes in a more comprehensive and exact form the kind of recommendations that had been made by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture.

It has sometimes been said by western producers, even by some western farm leaders, that this kind of measure in some way or another is a threat to the stability of the Canadian Wheat Board or is an economic threat for the producers of feed grain in Western Canada. I do not think that is true at all. This board may negotiate from time to time for the purchase of grain from the Canadian Wheat Board, but in so far as it is able to bring about stability of supply and suitability of price, I am certain that it is going to help western farmers to get reasonable and steady prices and eastern farmers to get reasonable and steady sources of feed grain.

By this legislation we are implementing in statute form a freight rate subsidy on feed grain that has been paid on a kind of a continuing ad hoc basis, if those words are not contradictory, since about 1941. It was a kind of permanent policy, put on a temporary year-to-year basis. If we are to have a permanent policy, it would be far better for us to face it and put it in statutory form than to have it done in a slipshod year-to-year method.

Sometimes it has been inferred that the producers in western Canada want this freight subsidy. It is probably beneficial to both the feeders in eastern Canada and to the producers in western Canada. I cannot see how, if you reduce the freight cost, it can be anything but of benefit to both of them. However, I think it is a fair interpretation—and others in this chamber would know better than I—to say that the western grain producers and the western feeders really do not care whether or not this subsidy is maintained. They do not think it is directly for their benefit; they feel it is a subsidy for the benefit of eastern Canada and British Columbia.

We are somewhat disturbed, therefore, to read that Ontario members have said that this kind of subsidy in some way or another discriminates against the producers of feed grain in Ontario or in parts of eastern Canada. I think they should settle that argument themselves.

If one may speak rather parochially, as a person from the Prairies, we are not primarily interested in whether this subsidy is maintained, except that we feel, as good Canadian citizens and as members of farm organizations, that if this is considered a good policy in the interests of Canada, we are certainly very pleased and proud to support it.

I should make the point that the farmers in the Prairies are not holding up the producers of eastern Canada for big prices for oats and barley that they produce. If you take the initial price for oats on the Prairies, and add the final payment, which means the total price that the farmer receives for oats—I am no great authority on this, as my production of oats is comparatively small—I would say that the western producer of oats would be lucky if he gets 70 cents a bushel or $2.00 a hundredweight for the best oats produced in the world. That is what the western producer obtains for the best quality, that is, No. 1 feed oats—about $2 a hundredweight. If the prairie producers get 96 cents a bushel for barley, or $1 a bushel when the total payments are in, this is about all that they can expect—again, about $2 per hundredweight.

Those who are knowledgeable about eastern feed costs will agree with me when I say that, for the producer of oats and barley, a return of around $2 a hundredweight is not a exorbitant price to receive.

I checked in Ottawa today the price of feed grains. I made two telephone calls and the prices were the same. The price of feed oats is $3.45 a hundredweight, and of feed barley $3.50 a hundredweight. This means that beyond the price paid to the western producer, of some $2 a hundredweight, there is $1.50 a hundredweight dissipated for other costs and other items, and this is over and above the feed grain freight assistance paid by the national treasury.

I am no authority to say whether or not this is exorbitant, but it is clear, from stating those two prices, that the western grain producer is not holding up the eastern feeder for exorbitantly high prices for feed that he produces.

Honourable senators, that is the main reason behind this measure. The feeders in eastern Canada fear that there is somebody other than the Prairie grain producer who has been getting perhaps too large a slice, certainly a slice at some times of the year that was far too large. They have other complaints about quality and availability of feed grain from time to time. That, in my opinion, is why they are supporting this measure.

There is one other point I would like to make as to the difference between the Canadian Wheat Board and the eastern wheat board. Some of us who come from the Prairies get a little impatient at times from the feeling which is prevalent that every payment made to the western grain producers somehow or other is a payment out of the federal treasury, and when the final payment is announced for grain, whatever it is—I am sure it will not be announced until the new year—there will be hundreds of millions of dollars paid out of the Wheat Board, from the surplus belonging to producers, to the western grain producers. Some people may think this is another instance of the federal Government paying some money to western farmers, but senators will understand and know of course that this is not true. Not only is it not true but, with one or two exceptions, in the main, all costs incurred by the Canadian Wheat Board are paid by the producers of grain—even the salaries and the pensions, the travelling expenses, postage, head office buildings, all of the administrative costs—they are paid by the western grain producer himself and are not a charge on the federal treasury. We like it that way, because we think it makes us more independent as producers to be able to pay ourselves the administrative and other costs of this board out of the proceeds of the grain that we sell, than to have the Government make these payments.

I quite realize that circumstances are not the same when you come to eastern Canada. However, just to make the point, let it be perfectly clear that section 16, or some part of this measure, provides that all of the expenses, the storage, the freight—and you would expect this—as well as the salaries and all other normal expenses, are to be paid by the Government of Canada. We make no objection, and I make no objection whatsoever to this. But let it be clear that the producers of western Canada, in the handling of their grains—as I say, with some exceptions —as far as administrative costs are concerned, pay the whole shot themselves.

At the Leader of the Government pointed out, this is a very serious problem facing the country, to provide stable quantities and ever-increasing quantities of feed grains at reasonable prices to a very rapidly growing livestock industry in eastern Canada and British Columbia. Nevertheless, the statistics show that the increase in livestock production over the last few years has been even greater on the Prairies than it has been in general in other parts of Canada. So the prairie farmers are producing livestock in accelerated quantities, even more accelerated than the quantities being produced in other parts of Canada. However, as the Government Leader pointed out, the figures that he put on the record show that by 1980 we will need to increase our production of feed grains in eastern Canada threefold, and this would mean more than doubling our acreage, if we take into account a projected increase and improvement in efficiency.

Honourable senators, I suggest that the important problem for the future is not only to provide the stable supplies at reasonable prices, but to bring about an increasing production of feed grains in eastern Canada and in western Canada to take care of the very rapidly increasing livestock industry.

There is one positive suggestion I have which I would like the Senate and the Government to take into consideration. A couple of years ago, on an emergency basis I think, the Government decided to provide accelerated depreciation for storage facilities for grain, both on farms and for larger storage facilities provided for elevator companies. At that particular moment I belive it was brought about because of a serious lack of storage in the corn-producing area of Canada. If one has seen the present Minister for External Affairs in operation in years gone by as the Liberal party's chief agricultural spokesman, one can understand how his words would carry very great weight, as they should with the Government. I am sure that this gentleman, the honourable Minister for External Affairs, made very appropriate recommendations to government that were listened to most carefully. When he made those recommendations, the good legislation applied to all of the country, as it should. But this legislation expires at the end of this calendar year, so the Ontario farmer and the Saskatchewan farmer, or the farmers in any other place who provide storage on a straight-line method of depreciation have to take 20 years to depreciate that storage facility. That is not much of an incentive to provide good storage.

I can tell you that a substantial proportion of the farm grain storage of this country is in an abominable state. Some of it is kept in rat-infested, weather-beaten old buildings, 30, 40 and 50 years of age.

If you wish to see the truth of what I am saying, drive down a road in western Canada any time in July when the farmers are hauling out their grain. There is always a certain percentage that cannot be hauled out because it is spoiled.

Grain producers should be encouraged to provide good storage facilities, and I can think of no better encouragement than to continue the legislation that is now in effect but which ordinarily will expire by the end of this year. What I propose would be for the good of the people in eastern Canada as well as for those in western Canada, because, if oats and barley are going to be produced for eastern Canada, obviously these bulky commodities will take a great deal more storage than the equivalent in wheat.

It would be reasonable for the Government to encourage farmers to have a better quality and a larger quantity of storage in order that the wheat going onto the markets of the world might be in better condition than some of it now is, and so that farmers might have an incentive to produce the feed grains required in eastern Canada as well as for the purposes of this legislation. I would like to bring that especially to the attention of the Leader of the Government. It is sensible; it is reasonable. To ask a producer to wait 20 years to depreciate storage facilities which are just as much in the interests of the country generally as in the individual producers' interests, is to ask him to wait far too long.

Honourable senators, as I said when I began my remarks, this is an intrusion, by unanimous consent, of the House of Commons and of this chamber, by Government, into the question of the handling of feed grains for eastern Canada. We may not like to do it, but we are doing it because the eastern feeders have felt that their prices have fluctuated far too violently, and that there have been people who have taken advantage of them and charged them exhorbitant prices from time to time.

Is this not just another indication of the kind of world we are in and the kind of situation we have in this country, when a joint committee of the two houses is dealing generally with prices of many commodities? I do not know what action this committee will take, but it certainly is exposing some things that should be exposed. It may be that the committee will make recommendations, and that the Government and Parliament will act on them to establish a Prices Review Board so that when the Parliament of this country thinks that some private corporation is charging exorbitant prices, then this public body will at least have the authority to use public scrutiny to expose the practices of the particular corporation, and if those practices are against the public interests, to see that they are corrected.

There has been an outcry that feed grain prices are too high in eastern Canada. There has been an outcry that other prices are too high as well. I want to say that there is going to be another great outcry, as there should be, as I have read there is going to be a move by the farm implement companies of this country to charge higher prices for farm implements.

This is a measure, honourable senators, that has been undertaken after a long campaign, the Government providing a public board to deal with this problem. I suggest that the problem of farm machinery prices across this nation is every bit as important as the feed grain prices problem, and perhaps more urgent, and I would like to use my position here to voice a warning to the farm machinery companies of this country not to increase their prices. Their prices have gone up threefold in the last 20 years while the prices of farm commodities, especially grain commodities, have scarcely increased at all.

There is going to be a public outcry as well as an outcry from the farmers from one end of this country to the other, if there is an increase in farm implement prices. I would forecast that, if such an increase takes place, there will be a hue and cry to have a Farm Machinery Board to deal with that urgent question, just as we have a Feed Grain Board to deal with this question of feed grain prices.

I have said that I do not want to see the Government intruding itself into a larger and larger segment of the economy of this country. Therefore, I support this measure only as a last resort. However, I think the facts are that the public, in this instance the eastern producers, will not tolerate what they consider to be an injustice and inequity, and are prepared to ask Parliament to pass this kind of legislation in the hope that there may be a redress of their grievances; and that this board will have the opportunity to provide some regulations so that the producers of eastern Canada and British Columbia will have a chance to increase their production of foods, buy their grain at stable prices and receive a reasonable return for their efforts.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Beaubien (Provencher), for Hon. Mr. Burchill, debate adjourned.

DIVORCE

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of Resolutions numbered 801 to 830, inclusive, which were presented on Thursday, November 10.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, November 15, 1966

The Senate met at 3. p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

NEW SENATOR

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to inform the Senate that the Clerk has received a certificate from the Secretary of State of Canada showing that has been summoned to the Senate.

Douglas Donald Everett, Esquire

NEW SENATOR INTRODUCED

The Hon. the Speaker having informed the Senate that there was a senator without, waiting to be introduced:

The following honourable senator was introduced; presented Her Majesty's writ of summons, which was read by the Clerk Assistant; took the legally prescribed oath, which was administered by the Clerk, and was seated:

Hon. Douglas Donald Everett, of Winnipeg, Manitoba, introduced between Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) and Hon. Mr. Beaubien (Provencher).

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that the honourable senator named above had made and subscribed the declaration of qualification required by the British North America Act, 1867, in the presence of the Clerk of the Senate, the Commissioner appointed to receive and witness the said declaration.

Hon. John J. Connolly: I am sure that all honourable senators would wish me on their behalf to express to Senator Everett a very warm welcome to the Senate and to the work of this chamber. It is our hope that he will play an important part in our deliberations and work.

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson: Honourable senators, being one of the members of the Senate from the Province of Manitoba, I would like to join with the Leader of the Government in the expression of welcome to the new senator from Manitoba. We on this side of the house welcome him most warmly.

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Copy of Order in Council P.C. 1966-2099, dated November 3, 1966, transferring from the Minister of Finance to the Minister of Trade and Commerce the powers, duties or functions under the Canadian Wheat Board Act. (English and French texts).

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Roebuck for the second reading of Bill S-49, to amend the Criminal Code.

Hon. Eric Cook: Mr. Speaker, this order stands in the name of Senator Croll. With leave, I should like to speak now.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Cook: Honourable senators, I agree with the principle of this bill, and I further agree that after careful study it may well be improved in committee.

To many there may not appear any great need or urgency for this law at this particular time. If present affluent times continue, perhaps there may be even less need for this law in the future. Hatred may well indeed be limited to a few crackpots who are obviously warped and unsound even to those who do not bother to think very deeply. However, evil persons like Hitler and his crew do not flourish when people are reasonably happy and content; they flourish when people for one reason or another feel hurt, oppressed or exploited, or, above all, when they are insecure and are ready to blame others for their unsatisfactory condition.

With improvements in all forms of communication it becomes easier and easier to reach a larger and larger audience. For these and other reasons I think that now is the time to improve and strengthen the law, so that if a real need ever arises, the statute law will be adequate to meet that need.

It may indeed be that the present bill, even if improved upon in committee, will not be perfect. It should not, however, be forgotten that Parliament enacts laws, while the courts interpret them. As we all well know, many acts have been amended again and again. No doubt the present bill if enacted can also be amended in the light of experience and of judicial comment.

However, I suggest the drafting of the bill does not warrant some of the criticisms which have been made. It has been suggested that the Attorney General of British Columbia could go to prison for five years under the provisions of section 267A, subsection 2(e). Subsection 2 (e) reads:

However, the important element in the alleged offence is not the transferring of children from one group to another, but rather why was it done. If the Attorney General ordered the transfer of children "with intent to destroy in whole or in part any group of persons"—for example, to destroy the fathers and mothers of the children, or the children themselves—then and in that event he should be given the full five years.

We all know this is nonsense, and that the Attorney General had no such evil intention. My point is that in order to secure conviction, the Crown must establish not only that the act complained of was in fact committed but must also establish that it was committed with some evil purpose in mind, with the intent, for example, of destroying a group in whole or part.

It seems to me therefore to be somewhat misleading to criticize the bill by isolating one part of the offence without at the same time pointing out that there must also be present an evil intention before there is an offence under this bill. In other words, if some disgruntled person swears aloud or even under his breath at a careless porter, in my opinion the Crown would have a very difficult time obtaining a conviction on a charge of "public incitement of hatred" or on a charge of "wilful promotion of hatred."

Finally, as the sponsor pointed out in his most learned and excellent address, the accused person always has a right of appeal.

For my part, I have complete confidence in our judicial system, and I am sure the possibility of any innocent party being wrongly convicted under the provisions of the bill are very slight indeed. On the other hand, the bill can afford great protection to the victims of wicked persons who should be stopped and punished before they become a threat to our ordinary, decent Canadian way of life.

Hon. Norman A. MacKenzie: Honourable senators, I had not intended making a speech on this subject, but it is a matter in which I am deeply interested. I like to think of myself as one of those who are opposed to discrimination of any kind, and who dislike and detest actions or writings, words or deeds, that reflect upon any individuals or groups or classes of citizens in this country; and I am thoroughly in favour of anything that can be done to ensure that this kind of objective be achieved. However, at the same time I am concerned about the freedom and the liberty of the citizen and of the individual, and I tend to have a native, inborn distaste for and almost a fear of punitive legislation that does interfere with that freedom.

We have here two objectives, two goals, that are both good; and to achieve them it may be necessary to surrender part of one in order to attain at least part of the other. It is my hope that this bill will go to committee and that in committee very great care will be given to the achievement of the protection that seems to be desirable and necessary and, at the same time, the preservation of the freedom and liberty of the individual. This is important, and is becoming increasingly so in the world in which we live, and it is something that I am sure we all cherish.

My concern, honourable senators, is that this bill will go to a committee, and that in committee a full debate will take place, and careful consideration will be given to these most important and desirable objectives which appear in some cases to be contradictory and opposed to each other.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Beaubien (Provencher), for Hon. Mr. Croll, debate adjourned.

DIVORCE

MEETING OF JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, may I, with your kind permission, draw to your attention the fact that the Joint Committee on Divorce has a meeting scheduled for 3.30 o'clock. It is most necessary that as many honourable senators as possible attend that meeting in order that we may have a quorum to hear two distinguished delegations.

The Senate members of the committee are Senators Gershaw, Haig, Aseltine, Baird, Belisle, Bourget, Burchill, Connolly (Halifax North), Croll, Flynn, Fergusson, Blois and myself. With the permission of the house, I would urge these senators to attend this meeting.

I must now leave the chamber, but I assure you that I do so with no discourtesy to the honourable senator who will speak when the next Order is called.

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) for the second reading of Bill C-218, to provide assistance to livestock feeders in Eastern Canada and British Columbia.

Hon. G. Percival Burchill: Honourable senators, while I cannot claim to be a farmer I do claim that my experience as an agriculturalist entitles me to make a few remarks on this bill. Before I go further I should like to give you the New Brunswick distinction between a farmer and an agriculturalist. A farmer is a man who makes his living on the farm and spends his money in the town, while an agriculturalist is a man who makes his living in the town and spends his money in the country. Having paid for the luxury of maintaining a herd of dairy cattle in the Province of New Brunswick over some years, I feel I have some excuse for saying a few words in respect of this bill.

First, I should like to point out that dairy farming in the Province of New Brunswick is a very unprofitable business. Some have survived, and I pay tribute to them. They have survived because of a love of the soil, or a love of livestock, and a willingness to work 18 hours a day, along with much fortitude and, I might add, a frugal wife.

The main reason why dairy farming in New Brunswick is not profitable—in fact, by any standard it would be called highly unprofitable—is the cost of feed for the cattle. From the amount of every cheque that a man receives from the sale of his milk he has to deduct 35 to 40 per cent for the cost of feed, and that is exclusive of fodder or hay.

I want to pay tribute to the people who raise dairy cattle in New Brunswick, because they have bred some of the finest cattle in the Dominion of Canada. The Jersey cattle, which were promoted by community effort over some years in Harvey, which is not far from Fredericton, are acknowledged to be among the best in the whole dominion. In fact, wherever the best Jersey cattle are on exhibition you will find the Harvey strain, and it is sought not only in all parts of Canada but even in the United States.

We have also in New Brunswick some splendid breeders of Holstein and Ayrshire cattle. The showing of cattle at the Provincial Exhibition in Fredericton this year was outstanding.

In paying tribute to the breeders of New Brunswick I want to include those from Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. Cattle which were on exhibition at the Winter Fair in Halifax recently were, in the opinion of the judges from Ontario, as good specimens as any that could be produced in the land. So I take my hat off and pay tribute to the dairy cattle producers of the Atlantic provinces.

Breeders from the Maritimes, I might add, exhibit at the Royal Winter Fair in Toronto, and have won many awards there.

Eminent agricultural authorities tell us that the soil, climatic conditions, and the seasonal condition in the Atlantic provinces are such that the land is better suited to the growing of grass than grain. We have had that practice tested on many occasions, and a leading agricultural authority from Nova Scotia told me not long ago that land growing hay in that province—and I will associate Nova Scotia with other provinces in the Atlantic region —would produce a land value of $100 per acre as compared with $40 per acre if the crop were grain. In spite of that fact, New Brunswick produced last year 40 per cent of the grain used in that province, Prince Edward Island produced 70 per cent, while Nova Scotia produced only 17 per cent. The figure in respect of Nova Scotia is accounted for by the fact that in that province the hog and poultry industry is of large proportions.

I should mention also the beef production in New Brunswick. Many farmers in the province have gone into beef production, and have produced wonderful specimens of animals. But in this area, too, the profit is very meagre, because the breeders are caught in the squeeze between the high price of grain and what they are able to get for the beef.

This feed grain assistance plan was started in 1941 because there was a surplus of grain in the West at that time, which we in the Atlantic provinces needed. Since that year there have been three consecutive surveys or polls taken by economists in each of the three western provinces—one in Alberta, one in Manitoba and one in Saskatchewan—the results of which have pointed out that this policy is sound, and that it is equitable for both eastern Canada and western Canada. It has been in existence since 1941, but in the intervening years the machinery for carrying it out has not been too efficient. There has been difficulty in getting supplies of grain. There has been difficulty in transportation. There has been difficulty in securing vessels for the shipment of the grain, and great difficulty in respect of storage facilities. There are not adequate storage facilities in Halifax, for instance, for holding supplies of grain over the winter months.

To add to the difficulties, four different departments of government are involved—the Canadian Wheat Board, the Department of Trade and Commerce, the Department of Transport, and the Department of Forestry which now comes into the picture. Honourable senators can imagine the red tape encountered in endeavouring to secure deliveries of the necessary quantities of grain at the time it is required when all of these various departments are involved. It has been a headache and a work of frustration. Finally, after many discussions, the National Federation of Agriculture presented a brief to the Government outlining what has been happening and asking for relief. They asked for the appointment of a board to take over the complete administration of the movement of this grain from the western producers, including the buying and selling. The bill presented to this Parliament at this time is an answer, and in my view a pretty complete answer, to the brief of the Federation of Agriculture. I can only add that the agricultural community of the Atlantic provinces is very much concerned about this whole matter, and they look forward with great anticipation to the establishment of this board and to the better functioning of the facilities for the transportation of grain to the east when and where it is required.

I do not intend going into the details of the bill because the leader has done that very well and other speakers have pointed out the various aspects of the bill. I simply want to repeat that this bill is of paramount importance to the agricultural community throughout the Atlantic provinces, and the people in these communities are looking forward with anticipation to the establishment of this board. I trust the bill will receive unanimous approval in this house.

Hon. Mr. Paterson: Before my honourable friend sits down may I ask him a question? There are many types of grain—wheat, oats, barley, flax, rye and corn. What do the feeders find to be the best feed for milk cows and beef cattle? I am in the grain business and I am curious to know this.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: We feed our dairy cattle a mixture of oats, bran and middlings, together with other ingredients and minerals, known as Dairy Ration, which go to make up the proper feed for cattle. When this is compounded it is sold in bags, and I would say about 75 per cent of the content of each bag is eligible for the subsidy. That subsidy varies in the different sections and areas of the province, because the areas which are farther away from the railway points or from ports where the grain is brought in by vessel have to pay increased transportation charges. The bonus averages from $15 to $17 a ton. It is paid to the wholesale manufacturer by the Government and he in turn deducts it from the invoice when he distributes the grain or sells it to the retailer or feeder. As to the feed used for beef cattle, I am afraid I cannot answer that.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Cameron, for Hon. Mr. Gershaw, debate adjourned.

UNIVERSITY FINANCES

Hon. Norman A. MacKenzie rose pursuant to notice:

> That he will call the attention of the Senate to the question of university finances.

He said: Honourable senators, I had intended to make this statement some six months ago but circumstances, and particularly the postponement of the Government conference on university education, seemed to make its postponement both necessary and desirable.

A little more than two weeks ago a conference of the Prime Minister and his colleagues with the premiers of the various provinces on the financing of post-high school education, including university education, was held here in Ottawa and the conclusions reached by that conference may seem to make this speech of mine somewhat unnecessary. However, for the record there are a few things I would like to say.

As most of you know, my lifelong interest in and concern for education, and more particularly for higher education, grows out of my interest in the welfare of our young people and the welfare of our country and all of its provinces and territories. I have no particular concern as to who should finance our universities, provided they are adequately financed and have the freedom from Government and other intervention and interference in their affairs which is so necessary if they are to achieve the maximum results in this most important and desirable area of life and affairs.

However, in passing, there are two or three comments of a general nature which I wish to make. The first of these concerns Government responsibility for universities and some of the constitutional aspects of this. As a former professor of Canadian constitutional law, I am well aware that the British North America Act by section 93 allocates, in general terms, education to the provinces.

To the best of my knowledge, however, universities were not even discussed or mentioned by those meeting in the conferences which preceded Confederation and out of which our present Constitution emerged. In fact, universities, in what was to become Canada in 1867, had been created long before that date. The University of King's College in Nova Scotia and the University of New Brunswick date back to 1780 in their origins. Laval has two charters, one a Royal Charter granted by Queen Victoria and the other a Papal Charter granted by the Vatican. In its earliest origins, Laval goes back to the 1600's —long before provinces were thought of.

Nearly all of these colleges and universities, apart from Dalhousie and McGill, were church-related institutions, influenced or controlled by the various denominations which had shared in their establishment, and they were supported by these denominations in financial and other ways. Historically, universities are among the most ancient of our institutions that have survived and continue to serve the societies and nations in which they are located.

Bologna in Italy dates back, I believe, to the 800's and Paris, Oxford and Cambridge to the Middle Ages. Apart from the Roman Catholic and Greek Orthodox churches, there are probably no other institutions in what we call the Western World which have had a longer or more continuous existence than our universities. Certainly, there are no governments presently in existence that are as old as our universities. Their nature, function and services were and are, as their name suggests, universal rather than national or provincial. Their students and professors were and are drawn from many lands and their graduates went off and go off to serve not only their own communities and nations but to serve other countries in distant places.

This general fact that our universities were not thought of or not provided for in the British North America Act is borne out, it seems to me, by two other facts. First, the descriptive sections of section 92 have reference to schools, and I suggest that it was education at the level of the schools that our founders were thinking about and legislating for. My second point is that education in its general sense is a word or term with a very wide possible meaning.

Nearly everything and every experience that happens to a human being throughout his lifetime has some influence upon him and, in this sense, is part of his education. In our modern world, our churches, religious denominations, clubs and organizations, our financial and industrial institutions and, more specifically, what we call the mass media, the newspapers, radio, television, films, books and periodicals, are all part of the education of every human being. These are part of the whole general area of one's education. In addition, in specific ways, the federal Government and Parliament have direct responsibility for certain areas of education. Among them are national defence, aspects of agriculture and certain fields of research.

As I stated at the outset, I am not concerned to argue the issue of our constitutional limitations, but rather to consider how best we can provide university education for those young men and women who want it and who, by virtue of their temperament and talents, are entitled to it. In addition, I am concerned as to how best the needs of our country and its various organizations and institutions of a national kind, including our Government and Parliament centred here in Ottawa, can best be served.

If university education is left with the provinces in their individual capacities, then I suggest that neither the universities nor the provinces will necessarily have a concern for the national interest, but will concern themselves more legitimately with the welfare and needs of provinces and of the people who live in the individual provinces.

My concern about the newly announced arrangements is that as far as I can judge or understand no one in Canada has or will have any formal responsibility for what I term the national interest, or in providing those special services at the highest levels which every country must have if it is not to become and remain a second- or third-rate nation or power.

In this connection I give you here a quotation from a speech made by Dr. Eli Ginzberg, Professor of Economics at Columbia University and an adviser on Manpower Utilization to President Johnson. Speaking to the Canadian Guidance and Counselling Association, he said this:

> Canada has been grossly negligent and deficient in the provision of secondary and higher education, and its underinvestment...will hurt the country and cause a serious educational crisis.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Would the honourable senator mind answering a question at this point? I did not hear the name of the person who made the observation.

Hon. Mr. MacKenzie: The person is Dr. Eli Ginzberg, Professor of Economics at Columbia University and an adviser on Manpower Utilization to President Johnson.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Thank you very much.

Hon. Mr. MacKenzie: This was a statement he made in a speech delivered to a body here in Canada.

It seems obvious to me that no province need concern itself about these matters of national interest, and it might well be argued that the expenditure of moneys under the control of the provinces, for other than provincial needs and purposes within the province, could be legally or constitutionally questionable.

My hope at the moment is that the universities themselves, regardless of where their moneys come from, will continue to think of themselves as being national and international in scope and function and will individually and collectively, through their association of Canadian universities and colleges, try to fill this gap and cover this grey area which all of our governments seem to be in the process of ignoring.

Then, too, there is the magnitude of the problem and the very real question as to whether some of the small provinces with limited resources can afford to provide high-level education for their young people, and will in this respect be at a serious disadvantage as compared to the larger and wealthier provinces such as Ontario, Quebec, Alberta and British Columbia.

Due to the increase in our birth rate, which for Canada has been a most fortunate circumstance, the numbers of those entitled to university education has increased and will continue to increase very greatly. As recently as 1950, there were only about 50,000 students attending universities and colleges in the whole of Canada. By 1976, only ten years away, it is estimated that this number will have grown to about 560,000. In addition, because of the increasing complexity of modern life, the costs of higher education—and here I mean university education—have increased, and will increase to an even greater extent than indicated by the increase in numbers of students. But even this great increase in student members leaves us far behind the United States in terms of the percentage of young men and women in the relevant age groups 18 to 24 who are enrolled or will be enrolled in our institutions.

Our distinguished colleague, Senator McCutcheon, was a member of a very important university commission, the Bladen Commission, which two years ago made a study of this whole question of university finances, which was presented as the Bladen Report just a year ago. The Commission stated that operating expenditures will increase from $284 millions in 1963-64 to $924 millions in 1970-71, and $1,675 millions in 1975-76, while the total of capital and operating expenditures for our universities will rise from $429 millions in 1963-64 to $1,314 millions in 1970-71 and to $2,032 millions in 1975-76.

Personally, I believe that because of inflation and the increasing costs of university education, these estimates are too conservative and too low. In the light of this, I am wondering what the peoples, the governments and the universities in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, for instance, can do to ensure that their young people are properly and adequately cared for, so that they will be able to compete with their fellows in other parts of Canada and, more important, in other parts of the world. In contrast, the federal Government of the United States has been and is pouring ever-increasing amounts into higher education—hundreds of millions of dollars—despite the fact that there too education is primarily thought of as being a state responsibility.

Personally, I believe that there is a case for leaving "school education" with the provinces, and I would be prepared to agree that undergraduate training in the liberal arts and the basic sciences and teacher training might also be reserved for the provinces. When we get into the fields of professional training, particularly in the health science, into graduate work at the Ph.D. levels, and into high level research work, I claim, even though I may be a voice crying in the wilderness, that these are and must be matters of national concern and can only be dealt with and financed on a national basis and at the national level.

May I digress for a moment about medical education, which is a special problem because of our Medicare program now pending. Here I quote from a distinguished medical friend of mine Dr. John F. McCreary, who was, and I believe still is, chairman of important medical committees and Dean of the Medical Faculty at the University of British Columbia.

He writes:

> Canada had one doctor for each 859 of its population in 1961. No one knows what the proper ratio of physicians to population is. Obviously it will vary from country to country depending upon the manner in which health services are provided. We do know that there are 20 countries in the world today that have a more favourable physician-population ratio than does Canada and we know that a very large number of our physicians are over-worked and do not have time to keep themselves up to date. We also know that there are rural areas in Canada in which health services are not provided because there are insufficient physicians.
> In order to maintain the physician-population ratio as it is, Canada must register 1,300 new physicians each year. Our own 12 medical schools only produce 850 new physicians each year. Had it not been for the fact that we have enjoyed an immigration of between 400 and 600 physicians per year during the past 15 years Canada would have been seriously short of physicians at this time.

Again, on the basis of information that I have, this fortuitous source of supply is drying up, and is not likely to be available to us much longer.

> Members of the Association of Canadian Medical Colleges, representing those responsible for the education of physicians in Canada, have been seriously concerned about this matter for some years. They are more particularly concerned at this moment because the advent of universal health insurance is now imminent.

I should like to read one other paragraph from Dean McCreary's memorandum:

> In Canada we have over 300 institutions which provide credit courses towards degrees. We have 59 full degree granting colleges and universities. Of this large number of teaching institutions there are only 12 with medical schools and only 7 with a combination of medical and dental schools. It is on this small handful of Canada's institutions of higher learning that the responsibility for preparing the prime purveyors of health services to Canada's 20 million people must fall.

Under the circumstances, it seems reasonable to suggest that funds associated with medical and hospital care insurance surely must come from the Department of National Health and Welfare, or some other national source.

If what I have been suggesting, namely, that federal participation in universty education is politically impossible, then I am sure that my former colleagues in the universities, as I have already stated, will do their best to meet this need and to fill this gap. But I do not believe that with the best will in the world, they can deal with the problem, and provide the services in an adequate and satisfactory fashion, if they are dependent upon their own provincial resources alone.

I made mention earlier of the importance of freedom to the universities. I stress this because in the area of ideas and creative activity, freedom to investigate, to explore creatively, to discuss, to argue and to debate is not only necessary, but vital. I am not suggesting that provincial governments will deny this freedom to our universities, but I do know from my own experience that a variety of sources of support is a better safeguard of this freedom than total dependence upon one source alone.

Then, too, there is the problem of a considerable number of church-related institutions which I know under existing legislation or provincial government policies, are denied support from provincial funds. No doubt this situation can be corrected if provincial governments wish to do this. But this will take time and will confront provincial governments with other serious problems. The result may be that they will delay doing anything about it, or will do nothing at all.

In conclusion, honourable senators, I would urge every one of you to give continuing and serious thought to these matters, and to contribute, as best you can, to the solution of the problems I have raised and which I know exist, and which, in terms of the future of our nation, are among the most important that we have before us today.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Leonard, debate adjourned.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, before I move the adjournment of the House I should like to say that the unusual disposition of certain senators at this time is neither an indication of their personal defection from the party nor an indication of a lack of party solidarity.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, November 16, 1966

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

IMMIGRATION

JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN COMMONS MEMBERSHIP

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the name of Mr. Macaluso has been substituted for that of Mr. Clermont on the Special Joint Committee on Immigration.

PUBLIC SERVICE

JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN COMMONS MEMBERSHIP

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the name of Mr. Orange has been substituted for that of Mr. Munro on the Special Joint Committee on the Public Service of Canada.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Copies of formal agreement, dated October 4, 1966, between the Government of Canada and Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited, and Alberta Inter-Field Gas Lines Limited, together with letter, dated September 22, 1966, from Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources relating to the transport, export and import of natural gas. (English and French texts).

Copy of answer to inquiry of the Honourable Senator Pouliot of June 29, 1966, respecting fees or payments of travelling expenses paid by the Government of Canada or its agencies to solicitors, lawyers, counsel and notaries public of the Province of Quebec during the three years ending June 30, 1966.

Order in Council P.C. 1966-2148, dated November 16, 1966, appointing Mr. M. W. Mackenzie, Montreal, Quebec, Mr. Yves Pratte, Quebec City, Quebec, and Honourable M. J. Coldwell, Ottawa, Ontario, as Commissioners under Part I of the Inquiries Act to make a full and confidential inquiry into the operation of Canadian security methods and procedures, and setting forth the terms of reference of the Commission.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Many thanks for the return.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Many happy returns.

CANADA CORPORATIONS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the following report of the committee on Bill S-51, to amend the Canada Corporations Act to facilitate the incorporation by letters patent of corporations without objects of pecuniary gain:

> Your committee recommends that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 300 copies in French of its proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I move, with leave of the Senate, that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill S-51, to amend the Canada Corporations Act to facilitate the incorporation by letters patent of corporations without objects of pecuniary gain, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Honourable senators, with leave, I move that the bill be read the third time now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

CRIMINAL CODE (HATE PROPAGANDA)

MOTION FOR APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. John J. Connolly, with leave of the Senate, moved:

That a Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons be appointed to study and report upon amendments to the Criminal Code relating to the dissemination of varieties of "hate propaganda" in Canada as set out in Bill S-49, intituled: "An Act to amend the Criminal Code";

That the following senators be appointed to act on behalf of the Senate on the Special Joint Committee, namely, the Honourable Senators Belisle, Bourque, Choquette, Croll, Lang and Roebuck;

That the committee have the power to call for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, to report from time to time, and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee, and to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate; and

That a message be sent to the House of Commons requesting that House to unite with the Senate for the above purpose, and to select, if the House of Commons deems advisable, some of its members to act on the proposed Special Joint Committee.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate—

Hon. Senators: Dispense.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Perhaps it would be appropriate for me to say a few words about this motion at this time.

The debate on this subject is not yet finished in this house, but it is felt desirable to refer the bill, if it receives second reading, to a joint committee; therefore, it is necessary to have the vehicle established. For that reason it seemed appropriate at this time to make this motion so that the Senate could deal with it and appoint its members. Then, when second reading has been concluded, the bill can be referred to that committee.

I have discussed with the Acting Leader of the Opposition the composition of the committee and we are agreed on the members, all of whom have kindly consented to serve.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, in all deference to my honourable leader, it is my duty to oppose this motion because I cannot see why the committee should be appointed before second reading of this bill has been concluded. The principle of this legislation has not yet been adopted by this house, and if we set up this committee it will be an inducement to the members of the Senate to let the legislation pass without protest. I feel that this legislation is wrong from the start, for reasons which I shall explain later. There is no justification for it. It will give an erroneous impression of Canada when people read about genocide and hate referred to in this bill.

When was the first murder committed? We will have to go back further than the deluge; we will have to go back to a few years after the creation of the world, when Cain killed Abel because of jealousy and hate. That was the start, and it was caused probably by original sin. Cain became jealous and envious of Abel to the point of killing him. Afterwards, if we look at the Old Testament we find in the Book of Maccabees how many Jews were slaughtered by their own folk, and how many Philistines Samson slew with the jawbone of an ass. I remember reading that 100,000 Jews were slaughtered on account of their bad pronunciation of the word "Shibboleth"; because they said "Sibboleth" instead of "Shibboleth" they were slaughtered. They did not have the right pronunciation. It shows the importance of good pronunciation when one speaks a language.

I will draw the attention of my leader, the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West), and of the whole Senate to the fact that this motion is premature and there is no reason at all to adopt it now without protest. I protest strongly against it, and I have a protest to register against the bill itself. This is not because I feel like committing genocide or because I do not like the Jews. I consider they are not any better than but they are just as good as the French Canadians, English Canadians or Scottish Canadians or any other group of the great Canadian family. They are neither better nor worse; we are all alike.

I must remind you what Marshal Foch, the Generalissimo of the allied armies, said in my presence at the Chateau Frontenac, in Quebec City, shortly after the First World War. There was an Armenian prelate, a monsignor, who pushed his way to Foch and said to him, "Marshal, will you come to the help of the Armenians?" Foch was a devout Catholic who went to mass every morning and had the reputation of being a great general—in fact, he was responsible for winning the war. He replied: "Monsignor, France does not come to the help of peoples who have not the courage to defend themselves." Then he added, "Take this gentleman away!" Thus ended the interview in the presence of about 100 or 150 people.

Now, why do we speak in this country of genocide? Nobody has been persecuted in this country since Regulation 17 was dispensed with. I remember the motion presented by Mr. Ernest Lapointe before he was a member of the cabinet, but with the support of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, complaining about Regulation 17, which meant persecution for French Canadians in the Province of Ontario speaking the French language. Not only that, but I remember not so long ago, under another government in the Province of Ontario, the nuns could not wear their uniform to teach class—

Hon. Mr. Denis: Shame!

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: —and the crucifixes were not admitted into the schools.

Hon. Mr. Denis: Shame!

The Hon. the Speaker: With due respect, at this point I would ask the honourable senator if he is denying leave of the Senate on this motion?

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: I said, Your Honour, that this motion is premature, and I oppose it. By virtue of the fact that I oppose it, it will not pass today. I wonder if the second reading of the bill will pass today or some other day; but I find that to propose the formation of a committee or the appointment of its members to consider a bill before it has received second reading makes no sense. That is my point of view, sir, and I rise today to protest against the proposed course.

I must tell you clearly, and without leaving any doubt in your minds, that I have nothing against the Jews. I repeat, I have nothing against the Jews. I have nothing against any race. I have never spoken of religions or racial matters in this house.

I have some friends among the Jews. Our colleague who will speak today on the bill seconded a routine motion that I moved when a French-Canadian colleague refused to second it. I had a client who was of Jewish descent. He was a friend of mine, and he established a branch of his industry in the city of Rivière-du-Loup where I live. My relations with the Jews have been very pleasant. But, if I were a Jew I would be insulted by the legislation that is now brought before the Senate. I would be insulted because it is groundless.

Why do we speak of genocide? Auschwitz is not anywhere in Canada. It was in Poland. The Poles suffered very much when they were made martyrs by the Russians. These things are to be regretted. Eichmann, the German who was responsible for their murder, was executed in Palestine—perhaps too late. He should have been dispensed with before. If his crimes had been committed in Canada he would not have been hanged because murderers in this country are not hanged any more. It is a good thing that he suffered his fate in the end, and the Jews did well to get rid of him.

Why do we speak of Auschwitz when we speak of our fellow citizens, the Jews? We have only to look at the social pages of any newspaper to see that the Jews are doing very well in this country. They should appreciate it, and they do appreciate it. They are at the head of many charitable organizations. They are good citizens. It is beyond my understanding why some professors of law have assumed the responsibility of starting this trouble. We do not expect this from a man who is Dean of the Faculty of Law of McGill, and another who is a professor of constitutional law at the University of Montreal. Do you remember, Mr. Speaker—I think you were a member of the Senate at the time—when I said that the professors of civil law and of constitutional law in Canada, and the deans of the faculties of law—all of them, with very few exceptions should wear asses' caps instead of mortarboards, because they do not realize the relationship that exists between the constitutional law, which distributes the jurisdiction to legislate, and the civil law. They ignore it totally. They are pompous and ponderous. They give the impression of being the only ones who carry the truth in their hands.

I have read the report of the Special Committee on Hate Propaganda in Canada. It makes no sense. What I regret, honourable colleagues, is that in this country everybody seems to ignore the real meaning of liberty. Twenty centuries ago one of the Romans said:

> O liberty! how many crimes are committed in thy name!

Honourable senators, you know that. I tell you nothing that you do not know already. I appeal only to your memory, your common sense, and your sense of fairness. Here in the Senate any one may come with any kind of legislation and speak about liberty, freedom, justice and all that, and his proposal will pass like butter in the pan.

One of the great evils of these times is the general indifference of the public about matters of vital importance. As much as I respect the Jews, as I do all my fellow citizens—and I make no difference between them—I think the Jews and the Gentiles should enjoy the same consideration from their fellow citizens.

I cannot understand why a matter like this is brought today before the Senate and has been discussed in the House of Commons for such a long time. I heard many distinguished people in a committee—professors and other gentlemen—who gave their statements, or what we call in committee language "presentations" before the committee. They proved nothing but they told us about their nightmares.

I find that this piece of legislation is an insult to the intelligence of Canadians and to Canada itself. What can I say more than that? If I were a Jew I would rise as I do today to protest against it, giving as it does the impression that the Jews are persecuted in Canada. They are not. They enjoy the fullest liberty just the same as any other citizens.

I will be accused of being narrow-minded, of not understanding what are the great aims of those who love and cherish liberty and freedom, and they will say that it takes a man without any compassion, a bigoted Canadian, to speak as I have done. I have expressed my views, and I know that after this sitting I may meet many of you who will say that I was right. Do not say it then, but say it now. If you find I am wrong in speaking as I have done, rise now and tell me but I will ask you to tell me why I am wrong. At the present time the policy of the Government seems to be "slack the slack"—Larguez les amarres.

I have something further to say about the bill. I congratulate my deskmate Senator Lang for the excellent speech he has made, and I also congratulate Senator Walker, and Senator Fournier (Madawaska-Restigouche) for what he said about the flag in this debate. He was right. The flag should be respected. The flag is something sacred that has its place in churches as well as on the public square. That is why it flies above the Peace Tower of Parliament. The first thing we see when we enter these grounds is the flag of Canada on top of the Peace Tower. We also see the flag above other buildings adjacent to the Parliament Buildings; and we see it on many buildings throughout Ottawa. It means that the idea of patrie—patriotism—has been accepted; it is recognized and honoured in this country.

This is why I do not despair. This is why I hope for better days, when all of us will come together to consider all matters on their merit instead of showing some kind of false sentimentality and a complete lack of understanding of matters of cardinal importance.

That being said, I hope you will understand; and I ask my honourable leader (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) not to insist on the adoption of the motion to appoint members on a committee to study this legislation before it receives second reading.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I must say something in answer to my honourable friend Senator Pouliot.

In the first place, he has disclaimed any idea of playing the role of Samson. For that I am grateful. I do hope, however, that he will not expect me to play the role of Goliath to his David.

The honourable gentleman indicated opposition to this bill. He is not the only person in the house who has indicated opposition to it. A number of speeches from both sides of the house have been critical of the bill in certain respects. I would be very surprised indeed if there were not differences of opinion within a house as varied as this one. He is entitled to his opinion about the merit of the bill or of any part of it as indeed any senator is entitled.

However, I simply wish to point out first that the establishment of a committee does not prejudge the decision of the Senate to deal with the bill on second reading. As a matter of fact, at the beginning of the session we set up all our committees before we introduce bills. Many of these committees already set up are going to be very busy dealing with legislation, and there is no prejudgment that any bill will be passed on second reading simply because there happens to be a committee available to deal with it. I think that is standard and sound parliamentary practice.

The only other point I wish to make is that none of us can be sure of the situation in the House of Commons and how regularly the Senate will be sitting during the remainder of this session. I think honourable senators, including my honourable friend, will give me credit for at least trying to anticipate the convenience of members of the Senate by not calling them back to perform functions which are not of a substantive nature. I do not consider this one to be a substantive function.

I would hope that either today or tomorrow—and I do not care whether tomorrow or not—we could pass this motion so that the House of Commons will have an opportunity at an early moment to appoint its members to the committee.

If the Senate rejects this bill on second reading, then the business of setting up the committee will have been futile, but no harm shall have been done. On the other hand, if, as I expect, most honourable senators would want this bill to go to a committee for consideration, then what we are proposing to do by this motion this afternoon should facilitate that step being taken.

I do not want the Senate to be brought back ahead of time. I have to try to look ahead and anticipate problems that might arise. If the Senate should pass the bill on second reading, it will have a vehicle to which it can be referred, which I submit is an appropriate one. When the debate is concluded, should the Senate adjourn and it is necessary for that committee to sit during the adjournment, then this motion gives the authority to do so. If it is not the desire of the Senate to pass the motion this afternoon, I have no objection to deferring it until tomorrow.

An Hon. Senator: Pass it.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): However, I submit that the reasons for putting the motion before the Senate at this time are valid, and that the interest of adapting the proceedings of the Senate to the situation in which we find ourselves is well founded.

The Hon. the Speaker: Do honourable senators grant me leave to put this motion?

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: Not until tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): As the consent is not unanimous, we cannot proceed. The motion will be put tomorrow. That is quite satisfactory.

LEGAL SERVICES

FEES PAID BY GOVERNMENT TO MEMBERS OF QUEBEC BAR—INQUIRY ANSWERED

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot inquired of the Government, pursuant to notice:

> Who were the solicitors, lawyers, counsel and notaries public, of the Province of Quebec, who received fees or payments for travelling expenses from the Government of Canada or its agencies during the three years ending June 30, 1966, and how much was paid to each one?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): The answer to the inquiry was tabled earlier today.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

STRIKES AFFECTING THE PUBLIC WELFARE

Hon. Donald Cameron rose pursuant to notice:

> That he will call the attention of the Senate to the disruptive and costly effects of strikes in services affecting the public welfare.

He said: Honourable senators, in introducing this subject this afternoon, may I first say to the honourable leader that I broached the subject the other evening in a manner which I am aware was an infringement of the rules, but I did it with no attempt to embarrass him. I had hoped that there might be some value in having the matter raised at that time, in that it might serve as a red light or warning to some segments of the labour force of this country who seem to be acting with less responsibility than we could hope for.

My purpose in interjecting this issue into the discussion of the Senate at this time is because, if I sense the feeling of the Canadian public correctly, there is an increasing dissatisfaction with the mounting rash of strikes in industry and in the public service, which are disrupting the normal lives of thousands of people, disrupting the normal channels of trade and commerce, disrupting the normal day-to-day family life of the people, and generally contributing to an uneasy and unstable economic climate and one in which productivity is either suffering or is likely to suffer.

We have been fortunate in the last few years in enjoying a buoyant economy. We are at a stage today when, through inflationary pressures, we may be on the razor's edge of plunging into a recession. I am sure that anyone who has experienced the recessions of the past does not want to see that happen again. The rate at which prices, wages and profits have been climbing in the last year in particular is causing a great deal of uneasiness.

To give one small example of what is occurring today—and here I speak from personal experience—I happen to have between $1.5 million and $2 million worth of construction going on in the enterprise for which I am responsible in Banff. The other day the foreman of the construction company carrying out this project came to me and said that unless I was prepared to permit at least two or more hours per day overtime, at the time-and-a-half rate, he could not keep carpenters on the job. He said that another well-known national contruction firm which had a contract 15 miles from Banff had guaranteed the carpenters on that job from 11 to 14 hours per day, with time-and-a-half for each hour over eight hours. He said that another well-known construction company working at Lake Louise 40 miles away had guaranteed the carpenters from 10 to 11 hours per day, with time-and-a half for every hour over eight hours. He said that unless I was prepared at least to guarantee a minimum of two hours per day overtime at time-and-a-half, he was afraid he would have no carpenters to keep the job going.

In the light of this ultimatum—and this is only a small instance—this is the way it works. Ordinary carpenters—and they are not too skilled—are getting $3.35 an hour, which works out to $135.00 for a 40-hour week or $603.00 a month at the standard rate. But if you add the overtime, these carpenters are getting $925.00 a month. This is for just ordinary carpenters. The supervisory personnel get $1 per hour more than that.

It is not hard to understand, honourable senators, that those institutions or organizations which have construction programs under way, which of necessity are planned two or three years in advance, find that budgets planned for the buildings one or two years in advance fall far short of what is necessary on the completion date. Unfortunately, the salaries and wages of people in many other areas of the economy, however, have not been keeping pace. There are many cases where it must be extremely difficult for men with families to make both ends meet. At the same time, some corporations are showing profits at record levels. I have no objection to that.

Honourable senators are familiar with the fact that the Government of Canada has felt constrained to take measures to curb what is euphemistically called the "overheating of the economy." We have gotten into a tight money position, with interest rates at such a level that many small borrowers are deterred from borrowing.

The Minister of Finance uses as an excuse for the postponing of medicare by one year the argument that the huge expenditures involved in that program would contribute to the inflationary pressures. There are many people who dispute that viewpoint, and it is not my purpose to enter into that argument today. I am simply citing these illustrations to underline the fact that we are in troubled times as far as the Canadian economy is concerned. Large segments of our labour force feel that they are not getting their proper share of the national productivity pie, as a result of their labours in association with capital. The result is that in the past year we have experienced a rash of strikes, both legal and wildcat, which have not only disrupted the industries concerned and the normal way of life in the communities in which these industries are located, but they certainly have not contributed to the gross national product.

In this discussion, I am particularly concerned with strikes in the public service, which affect the health, welfare, convenience and the rights of ordinary citizens. Within the past year we have had a strike in some sections of the postal service; we have had a prolonged strike among hospital workers in Quebec; we have had a strike of the telephone employees in Newfoundland; we have had a threatened strike by the employees of Air Canada which was averted at the last minute during the summer; and we had the threat of a complete shutdown of our railways just three months ago. We also had a threatened strike of some 1,200 seaway workers, in which our colleague Senator MacKenzie played a role in getting it settled before they actually went on strike. If such a strike had taken place in the case of industrial transportation by the waterways of this country, 1,200 men could have brought the economy to a standstill. Then we had the Montreal longshoremen's strike, which went on for weeks.

At the present time we have a strike of 5,200 machinists against Air Canada. Until last evening we had the threat of another postal union strike to shut down the entire postal services of the country. Fortunately, the views of moderation and responsibility have prevailed, and our congratulations must go to Judge Montpetit and to the union negotiators who have performed a fine public service in avoiding this strike.

May I digress here to say that Judge Montpetit has performed a magnificent public service in the preparation of his report on the postal service. It is an eminently fair document, and it shows many of the reasons why there is so much justifiable dissatisfaction among the postal workers today. At the same time, in spite of the fact that the union leaders agreed last night to accept an interim settlement of 25 cents an hour, we have no assurance that there may not be wildcat strikes by elements of the postal service.

Therefore, in view of this situation which I have elaborated at some length, it seems to me we have arrived at a time when we must take a completely new look at labour-management relations, and to find ways and means by which injustices, where they exist, can be corrected without long and frustrating delays, which have so irritated the workers in many areas of our economy.

If one looks at the wages paid to hospital workers in Quebec, for example, one sees there is no question that in many cases these were far below the minimum accepted standards which should prevail in that kind of service today. If we look at the details of the longshoremen's strike in Montreal, we will again find that there are many places where the rates of pay were out of line with the minimum standards necessary. If we look at the position of the railway employees we will find some incredible instances where some sections of the staff are below minimum standards, particularly in the area of protection, sick benefits and other fringe benefits which are accepted as a necessary part of any labour contract today.

I said a moment ago that, if we read the report of the Royal Commission on Working Conditions in the Post Office Department, we must be impressed with the fact that the postal workers have many and long-standing grievances. Responsibility for these inequities falls upon two groups of persons, one, the management, whether it be in the private sector or the public sector and, the other, the leadership of organized labour, which has been either complacent or negligent, or both, in putting forward the case for the employees to whom they were responsible.

It is not my purpose today to get into the area of strikes in general, but I want to confine what I have to say from here on to the question of strikes in the public service, strikes which affect the welfare, the health, the standard of living, the safety and the productivity of the people as a whole. I also want to ask a number of specific questions of ourselves and to use these as warnings both to the public authorities and to labour, because I for one firmly believe that, while justice must be done to labour regardless of the area in which it is employed, at the same time I feel that we have reached the point where we can no longer tolerate strikes, or the threats of strikes, in the public service, whether this be among hospital workers, railway workers, seaway workers, communications workers, airline workers, postal workers, policemen, firemen or what have you.

For example, at the present time we have a strike of 5,200 machinists, members of the International Association of Machinists, which has completely grounded a great transportation system. These people say that by striking they are exercising their democratic right to determine what they will do with their labour. This may be true but what about the democratic rights of the 4,000 or more other employees of Air Canada whose pay cheques have stopped because of the action of the machinists? What about the democratic rights of the 18,000 to 20,000 people a day who normally use this airline in carrying out their business responsibilities? Are these people to be the forgotten men on every occasion when a minority, regardless of how just their cause may be, decide that they are going to cripple an industry? I therefore think we have reached the time when we must find some other and better ways of settling these disputes.

I would ask the following questions: Is the Government prepared to explore ways and means by which labour disputes in the public service can be brought to a solution more expeditiously than has been the case in the past? It seems to me that one of the reasons organized labour has become militant and fractious is that the processes of negotiation have been interminably slow. I suggest we should carefully examine the machinery we have for settling industrial disputes and if we find, as I think we will, that much of our present machinery is not adequate we should devise new ways and means of settling grievances. Just here may I interject that I have the greatest sympathy for the Minister of Labour, Mr. Nicholson, who has I feel, been doing a very good job.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Cameron: But I also feel that he is working, in effect, with one hand tied behind his back because of the regulations he has to work with, and because of the fear of criticism that might result from the Government intervening in strikes. Heaven knows, the Government represents the people of Canada and it is high time it did intervene on some occasions.

What specific and helpful role can the Senate of Canada play in protecting the public interest and at the same time guaranteeing to labour that justice will be done with a minimum of delay?

Will the Government be prepared to specify those public services in which labour disputes must be submitted to arbitration binding on both sides, without the right to strike? If you have been following the proceedings of the Special Joint Committee on the Public Service, you will find at pages 292 and 293, and in that general area, a rather eloquent defence of the employees' right to strike put forth by a very able representative of organized labour, Andy Andras. But in spite of his eloquence and sincerity I think you have to take a new look and find a better way to settle matters than by resorting to striking, which is the most costly, inefficient and ineffectual way we can devise.

I think the time has come when, because of the disruptive and costly effect of strikes in services affecting the public welfare, the Government, in the interest of both the public and of the labour bodies concerned, must be prepared to specifically delineate those services in which strikes will not be permitted. In saying this I know there are people who will claim loud and long that this is an interference with the freedom of the individual—with his freedom to work or not to work, or to work for whom he pleases. There are others who will say that by forbidding the right to strike in certain services we will be encouraging wildcat strikes. If we examine this for a moment we must recognize that we have wildcat strikes today, they are happening all the time under the present rules, and we will undoubtedly have some of them in the future but we must provide alternatives which will cause people to think twice before they engage in unauthorized and irresponsible wildcat strikes. This phenomenon of the labour movement provides a challenge both to the leaders of the labour movement and to the Government. I would suggest that provision should be made for such penalties for unauthorized wildcat strikes that this action would become extremely hazardous and unwise for those who participate in them. However, I do not believe in a negative approach to this situation. I think that one of the tasks that management has—particularly in the public service and management in all aspects of our economy—is to see that justice and equity prevails in industry both with respect to wages or salaries paid and the fringe benefits which have come to occupy such an important place in modern industrial relations today.

Apropos of unauthorized strikes in the public service and the means of trying to prohibit them, you may say that you cannot put everybody in jail. Obviously, this is so, but I suspect that you might feel differently, if we were to have a strike of the employees on Parliament Hill some day. However, if we do our job in public relations and personal relations effectively and properly, and show these people that they are getting justice and equity in their salaries and emoluments, in relation to other segments of the labour force, and if we could show them that they have a greater measure of security and, probably, a less hazardous and less demanding type of work in many respects, then we need not worry about staff in the public service. There will be many people who will want to come in and get the jobs in place of those who go out.

If one may refer to a specific case, let us take the Montpetit Report as an illustration of the kind of situation which brings about strikes. On page 22 of this report Judge Montpetit says, and I quote:

> There are some senior employees in the higher grades in the department who have been promoted from the ranks but still have the attitudes which were prevalent at that time. They did not keep up with the times and, consciously or unconsciously, they refuse to do so. They are living in the past. They have a decided tendency to sacrifice the morale and welfare of the employees to their idea of an unequalled postal service.
> This lack of moderation, or this attitude, which prevents people from seeing the tremendous possibilities of a policy of a happy medium, has caused strong resentment amongst employees.
> We have noticed serious deficiencies in personnel administration at all levels.
> These may be due to the enormous difficulties which most departments experience in recruiting really competent men for this type of work which has become highly specialized. Whatever the reason may be, the department is in dire need of such men. Many personnel officers in local offices have not been trained adequately for personnel work. We do not cast any doubt on their sincerity and desire to do their best.

Continuing on page 34 of the same report Judge Montpetit goes on to say, and I quote:

> Everyone is aware of their preference in the matter.
> It is hoped that employees will use discretion and moderation in exercising this right and will not lose sight of the serious problems and difficulties which any interruption in the postal service, however brief, imposes on the public.

> Finally, we hope that the staff organization, as well as the postal employees, will be satisfied at having obtained, at last, official recognition of their right to participate in collective bargaining and to reach agreements. We hope also that they will not only prepare themselves accordingly and call for the assistance of experts they may need, but will show, as will the employer, a spirit of good faith and co-operation.

I cite these as examples of the kind of administration which, whether in public or private industry, causes the employees affected to become dissatisfied and disgruntled to the point where they may take action which, in the long run, is neither to their interest nor to the public's. It is not my purpose in this discussion to spell out in precise detail those areas of the public service in which strikes will not be permitted. But I shall give some examples and I think that great care should be taken in the preparation of a precise list. The examples I would suggest are: hospital workers; transport workers, including railway workers, seaway workers, communication workers, air line employees; postal workers; civil servants; public utilities; and teachers. I mention teachers because I have sat on arbitration boards in teachers' strikes before now.

If we examine the situation we will recognize that already it has been accepted that policemen and firemen—both essential elements of the public service—are not permitted to go on strike. And here is a case where one of our colleagues, Senator Roebuck, has had a major role in working out the rules by which these elements of the public service have accepted the situation. If these arrangements are working satisfactorily in these two elements of the public service, there is no reason to believe that some arrangement would not work out in other sections of the public service.

As honourable senators are well aware, we have three bills before Parliament at the present time—Bill C-170, an act respecting employer and employee relations in the Public Service of Canada; Bill C-181, an act respecting employment in the Public Service of Canada; and Bill C-182, an act to amend the Financial Administration Act. I want to say that there has been careful examination of these before joint committees. We have been hearing about the problems of the employees and I am delighted with the results and the basic agreements in this committee on some very contentious issues. Bill C-170 does give the employee a choice between binding and final arbitration and conciliation followed by the right to strike. I want to go on record right now as saying I shall oppose the inclusion of the "right to strike" in that act. In doing this, however, I am cognizant of the fact we must give an assurance to labour that justice will be done to them and that it will be done with reasonable dispatch and efficiency.

I am going to make two suggestions, one of which I suspect will be rather unpopular with organized labour but I think that they should face it. This is that they be brought under the conditions of the Fair Employment Practices Act. This would go a long way to deal with some of these wildcat strikes.

My second proposal is that we set up in Canada a sort of national referee or council. What I am thinking of is an organization something like the Economic Council of Canada, which would be a body completely independent of politics and agreed upon by management and labour, which would be charged with carrying out a continuing study of industrial productivity and labour's legitimate and equitable share of that increasing productivity. This could be a vitally important institution in our whole economy. It would work in the closest co-operation with the Economic Council of Canada. It should be staffed with the most competent economists and statisticians available in this country. It should have the closest possible working relationship with the trade unions and management. I am not going into detail at this time, but I am sure some kind of institution of this nature is vitally necessary at this time. I am suggesting that if we deny the right to strike to public employees, we must give them in return an assurance, not only that justice will be done in all cases but that justice must seem to be done. I feel if the labour bodies could come to have confidence in such a body, as the police and firemen have come to have confidence in the more limited bodies with which they have to deal, we would remove much of the grumbling, dissatisfaction and the unhealthy labour climate which exists today. There is no question that many sections of the labour force affected by the recent strikes, or threatened strikes, are suffering an injustice and these injustices can and should be removed without long and protracted delays.

In conclusion I want to say one other thing and this is my justification for interjecting this subject in the Senate at this time. In the peculiar circumstances in which we find ourselves at the present time, a time in which our political parties have become bogged down in a miasmal swampland of political bickering and procedural wrangling to the neglect of the great issues which are crying out for solution, I feel that the Senate of Canada, which is an independent body where narrow political partisanship is at a minimum and where there are many men and women who have been and are presently involved in the operation of some of Canada's major industries, who are qualified to give some leadership in this area and indeed have the right and responsibility to be heard on issues of this kind. I therefore suggest to you, my colleagues, that you should become much more articulate than you have been in the past on these issues and that you should express yourselves freely and forthrightly in the public interest; that you should use your influence not only in the businesses and industries which you represent but on the public platforms of this country to bring about the kind of solutions I have suggested in this critical area of our national life.

My final word is an appeal to the labour leaders of this country to take a wider view, not only of the rights of labour, but also of the responsibility of organized labour. Organized labour is an accepted and necessary part of today's industrial society and there is just as much need for statesmanship in the field of labour relations as in any other field of our national life today.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I had hoped that there might be further debate on this very important topic. I gather, however, that at the moment honourable senators are not prepared to continue the discussion which has been so ably initiated by Senator Cameron. I do not think that indicates for a moment that either the Senate as a whole or the individual members are not very much alive to the importance of the problems that have been pointed out in this excellent address which we have heard this afternoon.

Senator Cameron has pointed out the dangers and troubles that arise out of inflation. Of course it is a very real problem in this country. It is a problem that governments as well as the private sector have to cope with constantly; it is a problem that is bound to arise when you have full employment as we virtually have it in this country today.

We suffer from what I might call over-full employment in many places, but perhaps in no place more than in the Province of Alberta from which the honourable senator comes. Honourable gentlemen opposite who sat in cabinet will remember that when there was a problem of unemployment, it was not a problem in Alberta, particularly with the trades people. I have heard people concerned with developments in the northern part of that province talk about the very high rates of pay required to induce tradesmen to go to remote parts when they can command good wages, and, in many cases under the circumstances described by Senator Cameron this afternoon, get a guaranteed overtime rate of time-and-a-half or more, and could still live with their families in one of the major centres and enjoy the many benefits of living in that province. That is a problem that has prevailed in Alberta for some time, and Senator Cameron will agree that he is not the first person to be victimized, if that is the proper word, by conditions of the character he describes.

This house is an admirable forum for the discussion of public problems of this kind. I think the more initiative that is taken in this respect by members of this house on both sides, the better. And we do not have to do these things from the point of view of partisan political approaches, for these are national problems that concern us all. We are indebted to Senator Cameron for raising this matter in the Senate today.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I want to say one or two things about the question he raised. First of all, he discussed the slowness of the machinery provided by the law, particularly the federal law, in respect of industrial disputes. I do not say the processes outlined by law today are of the horse-and-buggy days—they have been improved over the years—but they are processes with which both management and labour and the public at large are concerned. They want efficiency, and to that end a task force has already been set up by the Government. Unfortunately, I had to leave the chamber for a few moments, and I am not sure whether Senator Cameron mentioned it. The force consists of Dean Woods of McGill as chairman, Abbé Dion of Laval University, Dean Carruthers of the University of Western Ontario, and Professor Crespo of the University of Toronto, to which will be added representatives of the trade unions, labour, management and the public, such as consumer groups. Their prime purpose will be to investigate the machinery of dealing with industrial disputes, because nothing can be more crippling to the economic fabric of this country than the continuation of strikes, industrial disputes and unrest.

Let us admit, too, that the fault does not always lie on one side when workers go on strike. I believe we in this chamber can afford to sit down and assess impartially and judiciously many of the general problems that prevail in this area, with a view to helping both sides to improve working conditions and productivity, and to make our economy as sound as possible in a modern industrialized society.

The honourable senator also mentioned the problem of what to do about the rights of workers within the public sector in the public service. I assume that he is talking not only about the federal service but also the provincial services and indeed the municipal services. This is a very important point.

Just recently I was talking to some people who were concerned about the retraining program that the Government is attempting to develop, and I am frank to say that this is not the first attempt made in this field. The Government of which Senator Walker was a member made great efforts in this field, particularly with regard to vocational training and retraining in the private sector. And every successive government—indeed, every government during its own life must continue to make more and more efforts to keep pace with the industrialization and mechanization.

I think the same principles apply to the public service. There can be, and Senator Cameron has given examples of, antiquated methods used within the public service at all levels of government. It seems to me not inappropriate to say that a retraining program will constantly be required within the public services itself, as well as within the private sector, because the public service too must be efficient and highly productive.

There is the large question of the essentiality of work and whether or not there are certain areas within the public service which must be declared to be essential in the interests of the national economy and the national welfare, so as to prevent work stoppages on a firm and fair basis to the workers involved. It is a question that calls for the application of the best judgment, skills and experience, and a determination on the part of legislators to make sure that justice and equity will be done by preserving the continuation of services deemed essential.

Senator Cameron said we should ask ourselves questions. He asked the questions of the Government, but I think we should ask ourselves how we define what an essential national service is. What is deemed to be a national service? We can even have it in mind that at times the definition of essentiality in the national service can change as times change.

There will be an opportunity in legislation which ultimately will come before us to undertake that debate in this chamber, and I hope honourable senators will take the opportunity to deal with these problems in an objective way.

Senator Cameron has rendered a service to the Senate today in bringing this matter forward, and I commend his initiative. We have so many people here who can take a similar initiative, and I hope they will use this forum to do this kind of work.

Hon. Norman A. MacKenzie: Honourable senators, if it is in order, may I be permitted to put a question to the Leader of the Government?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It is in order.

Hon. Mr. MacKenzie: I am greatly interested in the subject under discussion, and I agree with both previous speakers that it is one that this chamber should continue to give considerable time and attention to, because it is basic to the prosperity of our society.

My question is as to whether we have a Standing Committee on Immigration and Labour to which matters of this kind could be referred for further study after we have concluded our preliminary discussion in this chamber. I raise this point particularly, because I do not think we are going to get very far unless we have responsible leaders of labour come before us and tell us how this situation—which bothers them, I am sure, as much as it does us—can best be resolved. It might be easier for them to do that before a committee than in a public way.

Honourable senators, I should like to suggest that the debate on this subject be adjourned for the moment, and that we consider whether the subject matter can in due course be sent forward to the committee. I make that suggestion with the best will in the world towards Dean Woods and his colleagues, most of whom I know.

I recall the story that Dr. C. J. MacKenzie once told about research. He said it does no harm to have two or three caddies looking for a lost ball, because the more caddies the more chances of finding it. In the same way, if there are two or three responsible groups seeking solutions to these problems, then the sooner will a solution be found, and in so doing all interested will receive a measure of education.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, in reply to the honourable senator I would point out that the Senate has a Standing Committee on Immigration and Labour, of which the Honourable Senator Hnatyshyn is the Chairman, but in my view the referring of this subject matter at this time to committee should be taken under advisement.

As to this suggestion I should like to say first that we are all familiar with the subject matter of material now before the special joint committee of both houses which is conducting a wide-ranging investigation of those bills. Secondly, I would point out, as I have already mentioned this afternoon, that there is a study group headed by Dean Woods of McGill University, and it might be more appropriate to see what the outcome of that study is before we embark upon a further study. There is a limitation upon the facilities available for dealing with a matter as serious as this, and I do not think that now is an appropriate time. However, I do not want to impose my views upon the Senate.

The opportunity that the Senate has of raising questions of great public importance by means of notices of inquiry is one which we do not take advantage of frequently, but I have already said enough about that. I have mentioned in this chamber that the House of Lords had this facility, although its procedure is slightly different. There they move for papers, but by so doing they accomplish the same thing. In this chamber a notice of inquiry results in a good debate, and often that is deemed sufficient without the necessity of going further. Sometimes, as a result of an inquiry of this kind, and after debate, we take the further step of referring the matter to a committee. However, I do not think we should feel impelled every time an inquiry is put on the Order Paper to urge that we have a committee study it.

At the present time many senators are busily engaged in the work of various joint committees, and we are proposing to set up another one—a small one, it is true—tomorrow. These committees will keep many honourable senators here. I would ask Senator MacKenzie to think about this aspect of it in relation to the remarks he has made. In any event, because we now bring this particular topic of discussion to a conclusion does not preclude further action.

Hon. Mr. Leonard: I think that Senator Farris intends moving the adjournment of the debate.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I beg your pardon.

Hon. J. W. de B. Farris: Honourable senators, it has been extremely satisfying to me to hear the speeches of Senator Cameron and the Honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West). I did not know that Senator Cameron was going to make a speech as effective and comprehensive as the one he made this afternoon, but I appreciate being present and hearing it. I have great admiration for our leader in taking the thing off the bat, and doing it as well as he did.

I should like now to move that this debate be adjourned in order that I may see if I too can add a little to it.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Farris, debate adjourned.

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Roebuck for the second reading of Bill S-49, to amend the Criminal Code.

Hon David A. Croll: Honourable senators, let me say first how pleased I am that Senator Roebuck had the privilege of introducing this bill. He has devoted a lifetime to proclaiming the principles embodied in it—the rights of people distinguished by race, colour and ethnic origin.

The other interventions have come from four outstanding lawyers and two distinguished laymen—six in all. They agreed in principle, but they had some reservations as to detail. The substance of their criticism was: Is it necessary? Will free speech be protected? Does it go too far? I, of course, think the bill is necessary, and I do not believe that free speech is in any way endangered. I am sure that when the evidence is completely in before the committee those people who have some slight doubts will be fully satisfied.

In so far as the lawyers are concerned, there were two on one side of the question, and two on the other, but that is in the nature of lawyers. The layman, Senator Fournier, a fair and understanding man who has lived all his life as a minority, saw great value in the bill. He said, "Let us get on with it", as did Senator MacKenzie, who has had wide experience in the field of education.

In my view the problem demands that we do something. We can afford anything but silence. We can no longer remain as onlookers. But I want to make clear and as emphatic as I possibly can—and I ask the Senate to hear me out—that I reject, I deny, and I abhor totally, completely and absolutely the suggestion that this bill is for any single ethnic group. It is for all of us—all of us who are distinguished by race, and colour, and ethnic origin, which means everybody in this country.

Certainly, the subject of this bill is beset with pitfalls. Let me remind you that when I first entered the House of Commons I introduced a bill of rights; the Right Honourable John G. Diefenbaker, who was then a private member, introduced a bill of rights: and M. J. Coldwell introduced a bill of rights. Every session the three of us each introduced a bill, and who ever got the break had his bill called first and we all debated that bill. I remember only too well the opposition to it, and much of it came from all sides. I remember that the Minister of Justice at that time was utterly opposed to the bill. It was said that unless it was embodied in the Constitution it would not mean a thing, and it would interfere with the rights of individuals.

Then, this country was fortunate, and there came a time when the present Leader of the Opposition became Prime Minister. He had been a great advocate of such a bill. He was in a position to do something about it, and he did—he passed the Bill of Rights. All those who had other views yesterday hail it today. It was the right thing to do. It serves a necessary purpose and proclaims to the world the rights of our citizens.

Certainly, I realize that this bill has pitfalls. That is why it took so long to get before us. But the best legal minds in this country have been consulted. John Robinette was asked for an opinion, with particular emphasis on the common law. Arthur Maloney gave an opinion, with particular emphasis on the criminal law. Frank Scott gave an opinion, with particular emphasis on the constitutional law. These men were of the opinion that the law was inadequate, that something more had to be done.

The Justice Department took a long time to consider the matter, and came to the conclusion that in the circumstances what is contained in this bill is what we ought to do.

In the circumstances I think this is a good bill; I welcome it and I am hopeful that it will commend itself to every right-thinking person, for here we are concerned with a principle that goes to the very heart of Canadian nationhood. Too much has happened within the memory of most of us to permit complacency or indifference concerning a problem which affects us all. We have only to look about us, to use our eyes and our minds, to see that hatemongers are using democracy's freedom to subvert democracy itself.

It is a truism, often repeated and not to be forgotten, that Canada is a mosaic and not a melting pot. We are a group of races, of colours, of social and ethnic units, united in our common love for an allegience to Canada, and anything that weakens or endangers that love or allegiance which men commonly call patriotism weakens our nationhood.

It is important to remember that mosaic in the political and social sense as applied to Canada is not a static or inert thing. The Canadian groupings are very much alive and in a state of continual development and interaction. They maintain a balance within themselves in their relation to each other, which at time gives balance and stability to the nation as a whole. If that balance both internal and external falters, then the whole country is in some danger.

That is why I view this bill which is before us as one of first importance. It is true that the acts which inspired this legislation are those of an infinitesimal number of people, but the effect of those acts, the harm which they have done and which they may do, is of vital concern to all of us.

There are those in our midst who believe, and who say that you cannot curb hatemongers by legislative enactment. Even if that were true—and I do not subscribe to that belief—is that sufficient reason why we should not attempt to silence those who preach dissension and hatred against any section of the public distinguished by colour, race or ethnic group?

Education may be the answer, but we do not repeal the Criminal Code and leave it to our educators to do the job. I do believe in the power of education to create and enlighten the climate, but I also believe that we cannot and must not leave the task of fashioning a more united and harmonious Canada to the educators alone.

One cannot dismiss recent history with its gloomy record of genocide by saying, "Yes, that was terrible, but it is all past now, and we know better." Do we know better? Should we not make sure of things for the future?

Some years ago when anti-discrimination legislation was introduced in Ontario a lot of well-meaning people said, "Oh, you cannot legislate tolerance." Time has proved them absolutely wrong. In Ontario we have been successful to a point in legislating tolerance. We have stamped out discrimination where it hurts most—in employment, in accommodation. I do not say there is no longer any discrimination in Ontario. We have not yet attained the ultimate state, but I do say that discrimination in Ontario today is a tiny fraction of what it was in the bad old days.

In a short span of years the Human Rights Commission in Ontario has revolutionised our thinking on a vital, social and economic problem which had faced us for generations. Can anyone seriously believe we cannot accomplish the same thing in this pernicious matter of hate literature?

I believe that the vast majority of Canadians view hate literature with abhorrence. It is always the few, the lunatic fringe, the little warped minds, that can only exist by defaming and throwing mud. These warped few would not attempt to defame individuals, because the law of libel and slander is there to stop them with its punitive sanctions. But there is nothing to stop them from vilifying and defaming whole groups of people, which is a thousand times worse than defaming an individual because of the greater number involved and their inability to defend themselves.

No society can tolerate these hate merchants for very long without suffering incalculable damage. I am not speaking of the damage to the warped individuals—probably they are beyond redemption, anyway. I mean the damage to the very fabric of our society.

Hate is a corrosive force, a violent emotion which stirs up an equally corrosive and violent reaction. It starts a chain reaction which can only end by invading every sector of our society with its poisonous fallout, and this infamous thing can and must be stopped, for if we allow the tongue of hate and the pen of hate to go on unchecked we shall surely regret it at a later time.

It is said that we must not curtail that most precious thing, freedom. Honourable senators, what this bill aims at curtailing is not freedom but the abuse of freedom. The opposition to this bill say civil rights, the right of free expression, will be curtailed if not destroyed by this bill. These persons show little faith in the workings of our democratic system when they paint fearful pictures of Canada becoming a semi-Fascist state by reason of a measure designed to root out the evil in our midst.

This bill will not interfere with the right of the individual to speak his mind, to criticize, to advocate unpopular causes. But the hatemongers in our midst, those sick persons with minds twisted by prejudice, will not be permitted to stir up hatred, for hatred is a forerunner of disorder and violence.

We live in a society where freedom itself is curtailed by common consent in order that we may live under the rule of law. Our society has laid down rules of conduct to which we must adhere under pain of punishment. No government can afford to turn away from a problem which cries for an equitable solution.

This bill gives Government approval to a principle that has long been neglected, that there cannot be freedom for some and not for others; that there can be no unity or harmony in this land of ours so long as we permit the racists to spread their foul propaganda, secure in the knowledge that they are free to undermine us by using our own democratic rights for their evil purposes.

No charter on human rights in the world permits the deliberate defaming of any group by the evil-minded few, for hate literature is the handmaiden of genocide. Its only aim is the systematic denigration and eventual extermination of the group which it attacks. It is a crime against society, and like any other crime it must be proscribed.

Unfortunately we cannot either teach or compel these warped few to love their fellowmen, nor can we prevent them from hating their fellowmen, for these matters are beyond the powers of any earthly legislature. What we can do, and this bill intends to do it, is to stop the outward manifestation of hate. We can stop now and finally these senseless attacks on racial and ethnic groups; we can stop this pollution of our clean northern air; we can defend those who are unable to defend themselves.

Can we have so little confidence in the value of our way of life that we fear to do what has to be done because of concern that basic freedoms will be lost? Are they really lost? Are they not strengthened? Other countries have no such fear. In the land where democracy was cradled, where the rights of the individual are framed in laws that have been adopted in the western civilized world—I speak of Britain—they have seen fit to pass a law which is more stringent than the one with which we are dealing here. The British Race Relations Bill introduced a new element into British law, punishing by law the intention to stir up hate. In most countries the law already provides a penalty for promoting violence or disorder, but the British measure now recognizes that the fermenting of hatred of a group brings in its train violence and disorder.

This law will discourage the hatemongers by leaving them open to punishment, but it does much more. It proclaims a moral value and brings the Government more on the side of that moral value.

Honourable senators, I do not think this bill goes too far, but we shall examine it carefully and with utmost concern. The right of free speech must be foremost in our minds when examining this bill, and we shall see that it will be fully and adequately protected. I do not believe that the bill in any way weakens or abrogates those freedoms which are precious today.

I ask the Senate to support the principle behind this bill.

Hon. Malcolm Hollett: Honourable senators, I would like to ask the last speaker a question, if I may.

What is the necessity in this country of inserting these paragraphs into the new section 267A of the Criminal Code? One of the crimes indicated is: "killing members of the group." Of course there is a law against that. Another is: "causing serious bodily or mental harm to members of the group." There is a law which takes care of that. Another crime is: "deliberately inflicting on the group conditions of life calculated to bring about its physical destruction." That I am not so sure of. Another says: "deliberately imposing measures intended to prevent births within the group." Surely we have no such conditions in this country which would demand a law which includes that provision. If there is a fear about it, I fail to see the necessity of putting in the subsection, which would indicate that there are people who are deliberately out to prevent birth within certain groups.

I ask this particular question, honourable senators, because I do not believe there is such a threat in this country. I do not know of any such condition in any country, since the days of Hitler. Why should we introduce legislation here to prevent something which does not exist? This country is free of that sort of thing. What indication do we give to a neighbouring country, when we ask for this provision?

Hon. Mr. Croll: I think it is taken from the United Nations' definition of genocide to which we agreed some years ago, under the international agreement regarding genocide. It is the exact definition.

What we are talking about is the advocating and promoting of this crime. I cannot give any example at this point. The questions the honourable gentleman is asking are in all seriousness proper matters for the committee. Those questions can be put when the officials from the Department of Justice are before the committee, and I would suggest he should ask them at that time. I did not suggest that the bill was perfect. I said it was a matter we would have to look over very carefully and particularly so in this kind of bill.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: I am sure of that.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, I must tell you a reminiscence that I have about the previous speaker (Hon. Mr. Croll). It goes back 32 years ago, in Windsor, when we were together with the different candidates of Mitchell Hepburn. At that time the honourable Senator Croll was Mayor of Windsor. Six of us were together—four liberal candidates, including himself and Mitchell Hepburn. We fraternized there on the big cement square of the Kennedy Stadium, and Mitchell Hepburn made an appeal to the Province of Ontario over a special radio hookup.

This was my first recollection of meeting Senator Croll. Afterwards he had a brilliant career in the army. When I did some research work on unemployment, the Bennett Government could give me no information. I had to go to Senator Croll, who was then Mayor of Windsor and Minister of Labour and Welfare of Ontario, and he supplied me with the information I needed to do my work for that section of Canada.

Honourable senators, those are happy recollections. There is nothing I regret more than to hear that at times I do not agree with someone. I congratulate him on his speech. He spoke in a lofty manner, as did honourable Senator Roebuck.

In theory it is fine. I appreciate the paeans we have heard, like the Greek ode to Liberty. This is good, but I am sure that neither Senator Croll nor Senator Roebuck made the choice that appears in this book, the Report of the Special Committee on Hate Propaganda in Canada.

Honourable senators, do you know what hate propaganda in Canada is? I will tell you. According to the illustrations that I have seen in this book, the propaganda came from Atlanta, Georgia.

The names of the members of that committee may impress you—or they may not—but I have the names here. The report is signed by Professor Maxwell Cohen, Chairman; Professor J. A. Corry, of Queens University; L'Abbé Gerard Dion of Quebec; Mr. Saul Hayes of Montreal; Professor Mark R. MacGuigan; Mr. Shane MacKay; and Professor Pierre-Elliott Trudeau, the present Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister.

In the first place there is in this report a letter by one Colonel J. P. Fry, National Organizer in Canada, but the address is P.O. Box 2013, Atlanta, Georgia. It comes from the United States. The hatred was in the United States and, probably, he wanted to recognize hatred in Canada. However, his name is there and this is his most recent letter. Perhaps he belongs to the K.K.K. in the United States.

Then there is the Thunderbolt which comes also from the United States, and there are other pictures that date back to 1934 which also come from the United States.

Here I find a publication with the title in Gothic letters, and it is dated Nuremberg, the 1st May, 1934. I cannot understand how it could justify the legislation that is before us in Bill S-49 of the Senate. Naturally, what happened was to be regretted, and they were war criminals who were punished in Nuremberg. Some of them were executed, others committed suicide and still others were put in jail for a long time. Now all that is finished and we must see the future in a better light. Those things are the black side of mankind. I am sure that you understand what I mean. I grant that the people of Canada could not be compared to the Nazis; they do not have their cruelty and they would never do the things that are complained of in this book.

Now, I have said what I have to say. I find that there is no reason for this legislation. Just because some professor in Montreal, Winnipeg, or wherever he comes from, believes in it, I am not bound to agree with him and approve of that legislation when there is no reason for it.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Choquette, for Hon. Mr. Phillips, debate adjourned.

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) for the second reading of Bill C-218, to provide assistance to livestock feeders in Eastern Canada and British Columbia.

Hon. F. W. Gershaw: Honourable senators, this bill has been pretty fairly discussed; each clause has been before the Senate and has been generally approved, the reason being that it is a step towards making a better standard of living for some Canadian people.

Now, transport enters into this, and, during a time of wheat movement, box cars are always in short supply. This condition got so bad in 1958 that Mr. John Bracken was asked to conduct an inquiry into the distribution of box cars at the elevators at shipping points. He did this and published a full report. Since then conditions have been little better. Railwaymen have been trying to do their best, but, from time to time, there is a serious shortage of box cars. Even this year there was a shortage.

The question of feed grain, which is the substance of this bill, came up during the war years. At that time there was a heavy demand for protein foods. All the cars were used to transport meats to where they were required, so that there was nothing left to move feed grains. This went on year after year and really caused a lot of trouble. Then, at about the same time, there were other conditions which entered into the picture. Transportation by water is usually cheaper than transportation by rail, and this report says that some people in the Atlantic provinces got in their supply of feed by water, the cheaper route, and then when freeze-up came they sold it out, charging for the feed plus the railway price. This resulted in a great disadvantage to the feeders at that time.

Another point is that if we are to keep up with the markets of the world, our export rates must be lower. It just happened that the export rate from Fort William to the Scandinavian countries was very low and the feed grain was cheaper in Denmark than it was in Halifax, for instance, so that there were difficulties there.

In 1941 action was taken to alleviate the situation and to help both the feeders in the Atlantic provinces and the producers of feed in the western provinces. Subsidies were given. From time to time the bill has been improved, and this particular bill should improve the situation very much, because the board that will be appointed should be able to correct some of the defects in the present bill and make it work very much better.

But times have changed, of course, and it is not so long ago that cowboys, in stormy weather such as we had this morning, had to round up the cattle from the open ranges and take them on to the stockyards of the stations. Desperate times often resulted. Nowadays there are community pastures where, for 50 cents or $1 a month for each animal, ranchers can have their cattle fed. Thus they can preserve their winter pasture for the winter.

There are feed lots almost everywhere in the west nowadays, especially where there are beet sugar factories where the pulp and tops can be used for finishing the cattle.

We need more and more legislation to help people who are producing food. Even this year there was a pretty good crop, but when it was sold it was mostly No. 2 Manitoba Northern, which would bring approximately $1.75 a bushel. It was not enough, really, to pay the expenses and leave any profit for the farmer. The increase in the income of food producers has not kept pace with the increase in income in other lines of work. They are still in a squeeze where they receive a small price for the things they sell and pay a big price for the things they have to buy and have serviced, such as cars, trucks, machinery, and things of that kind.

Honourable senators, I just want to make a plea for a class of people who seem to have been left out of the general increase in incomes. If we in Canada are to achieve the destiny which we hope fate has in store for us, if we are to have people at peace working together, there must be favouritism for none but fairness for all; there must be a far greater and far more equitable distribution of the wealth of Canada and the responsibilities of our way of life. Thank you.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I have no desire to wind up this debate at this stage if there are other speakers who wish to take part. However, if there are no other speakers, I will make a few remarks and then refer the subject matter of the bill to committee, if that is agreed.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Perhaps then I may be taken as giving the usual warning in that event.

At the outset I wish to thank all honourable senators who have taken part in this debate. I certainly do not qualify to come under the definition of a farmer or an agriculturist as given yesterday by Senator Burchill, but I was particularly gratified to hear the point of view of the farmers of western Canada as expressed by Senator Gershaw, by Senator Pearson and by Senator Argue, and to hear of the situation in the Maritime provinces, in New Brunswick as expressed by Senator Burchill, and in Nova Scotia as expressed by Senator Blois.

This problem as outlined in the original presentation indicates that there are difficulties not only with respect to the problem of transportation, which is the one that confronted the producers of cattle, hogs, poultry and the like in eastern Canada in 1941, but there are difficulties of distribution and storage as well. One of our problems is to consider situations as described by Senator Burchill where apparently it is not an economic exercise to raise these feeds in certain parts of the Maritimes. I was rather heartened to hear Senator Blois say that the acreage sown under feed grains in Nova Scotia is rising. I was delighted to hear, as were we all, that the breeders in all of these categories are increasing in number, and that their flocks are increasing in size and in quality as well. I would hope we could look to the day when the supply of feed on the one hand and the production of poultry and livestock on the other would be adequate for each of the regions and also adequate to create an export market. Perhaps it is too much at this stage to expect that this could come about very readily or quickly, but I feel that this bill, which is a simple one, will have the effect through this board and through the advisory committee of sorting out many of the problems that are now clear to us as a result of the speeches made here.

I am disappointed we have not heard from an Ontario farmer about the production of feed grains in this province. This may be because of a lack of Ontario farmers in the house. I know Senator Roebuck will disagree with that, but he has been very busy and we excuse him for not having taken part in the debate. But one claimant in a house of 102 could scarcely represent the feed growers in the Province of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: You are from Ontario yourself.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): But I am not a feed grower. The same applies to you, if I may say so.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Yes, but it is easier to farm outside of Ottawa than outside of Toronto.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): In conclusion, I hope that the committee will take advantage of the material that was supplied when the bill was introduced. These tables are very useful and they will supply honourable senators with material with which they can question the witnesses, and from which some of the anomalies can be pointed up so that when the board and the advisory committee deal with this they will have the benefit of the practical experience of the legislators who put this statute upon the books. I commend the bill to the Senate.

Before the motion is put, I wonder if I could plead with honourable senators who are unable to attend the committee meeting to send to my office their copies of the material filed on the introduction of the bill. When I was having it printed I arranged for only sufficient copies to use in the Senate, and there will be a demand for this material in committee.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West), bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Motion agreed to.

VISITING FORCES BILL

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from Thursday, November 10, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Langlois for the second reading of Bill S-50, respecting the armed forces of countries visiting Canada.

Hon. George S. White: Honourable senators, in rising to make a few remarks to this bill I wish first of all to express the appreciation of all members of this house to the honourable Senator Langlois for the very clear explanation which he gave on introducing the bill.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): His maiden speech too.

Hon. Mr. White: I would also say to the honourable senator that I welcome him to this chamber as an old colleague from the House of Commons. I am sure he will enjoy very much the many new friends he will make here. I hope he will be here for a long time and I wish him the very best of everything.

Honourable senators, as was explained in the introduction, this bill replaces three existing acts affecting visiting forces of other nations. There are various other amendments, and the provisions of the new bill will apply to dependants of members of visiting forces.

The honourable senator also pointed out that in committee there will be various changes made, and I suggest to the officials of the Crown who will appear that they give the committee information as to what happened in previous cases in claims for damages for personal injuries and/or property damage properly arising from motor vehicle accidents.

You will note that in the bill there are two definitions of "court": civil court and service court. Section 5 provides for the primary right of civil courts to exercise jurisdiction; but in looking over the bill I am unable to find any reference to claims for personal injuries and property damage caused by members of a visiting force which were committed outside the scope of their duties or employment. As I mentioned before, the most common claim would be in connection with automobile accidents. It is made very clear that when a tort is committed by a member of a visiting force, while acting within the scope of his duties or employment, he is regarded as a servant of the Crown. This is set out in Part III, section 15. It is also made very clear that all property owned, occupied, possessed or controlled by a visiting force shall be deemed to be owned, occupied, possessed or controlled by the Crown.

There is a third subsection to section 15 which defines a motor vehicle:

> a service motor vehicle of a visiting force shall be deemed to be owned by the Crown.

I do not know whether "a service motor vehicle" would include an ordinary passenger car; or whether it would include a motor vehicle that was personally owned by an individual of a visiting force; or whether it just refers to the equipment and vehicles owned by the Government which controls a visiting force.

The honourable senator mentioned in his remarks, as reported at page 1123 of Hansard, certain amendments that would be made. In particular he referred to section 16 and mentioned that the required amendment is to make it clear that the whole of the Crown Liability Act applies to claims arising out of the activities of visiting forces in Canada. There are two words there: "claims" and "activities". The question arises as to whether those claims just refer to claims there might be regarding a member of a visiting force acting in the scope of his employment, or whether to some damage he does outside the scope of his employment. Then it refers to "activities". I may be stretching things, but I think there is a point there that we should have cleared up, as to what claims are covered by this act and as to just what the activities are. If they are restricted entirely as provided by section 15—"within the scope of his duties or employment"—I think there should be further provision whereby when a member of a visiting force in this country, outside the scope of his duties or employment, causes personal or property damage, he shall be liable in our civil courts. If he is liable in the civil courts, the question that naturally follows is: How is a Canadian citizen going to recover under any judgment of the court against a member of a visiting force who, naturally, would be very unlikely to have any assets of any nature in this country?

It would also be interesting to supply the committee with information regarding a member of a visiting force who imports a motor vehicle of his own into this country, as to what provisions, if any, there are as to the insurance that he would have to carry on that motor vehicle. There also arises the important question of the age of members of his family who would be entitled to drive that motor vehicle. These are matters that occur to me as being most important.

As to the other provisions, an examination of the bill will show that the majority are already embodied in the three acts that are now being consolidated into this new one, and I am sure that entirely satisfactory explanations will be given when the matter goes to committee.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Could a judgment be enforced by attachment of his salary or wages?

Hon. Mr. White: I would say not, because section 17 says:

> A member of a visiting force is not subject to any proceedings for the enforcement of any judgment given against him in Canada in respect of a matter that arose while he was acting within the scope of his duties or employment.

If it is outside the scope of his duties or employment, I presume one could proceed, but I am afraid any assets he would have in this country would be rather elusive.

Honourable senators, I approve of this bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Langlois, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, my information is that the interim supply bill has not yet been passed in the other place, and the house does not sit on Wednesday evenings. I think we can all agree to deal with interim supply very promptly if it comes before us for consideration tomorrow. In the circumstances, I believe it would suit the convenience of the Senate, and be strictly in accordance with our duty, if we adjourned now.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, November 17, 1966

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

IMMIGRATION

JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN COMMONS MEMBERS

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons stating that the name of Mr. Schreyer has been substituted for that of Mr. Orlikow on the Special Joint Committee on Immigration.

PRIVATE BILL

RAINBOW PIPE LINE COMPANY LIMITED—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. A. K. Hugessen, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, reported that the committee had considered Bill S-52, to incorporate Rainbow Pipe Line Company Limited, and had directed that the bill be reported with the following amendments:

Page 1, line 15: In clause 1, strike out the words "Company Limited" and substitute therefor the word "Corporation".

Page 1: In the title, strike out the words "Company Limited" and substitute therefor the word "Corporation".

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: With leave of the Senate, I move that this report be taken into consideration now.

Honourable Senators, the amendments are extremely simple. The first one changes the name from Rainbow Pipe Line Company Limited to Rainbow Pipe Line Corporation. At the present time there is a company in Alberta having a substantially similar name and owned by the same people. They wish this change in name so that there will be less confusion between the two companies.

As a matter of fact, the present Alberta corporation has been carrying on business, and has expended some $50 million to $60 million in completing pipe lines from an area called Rainbow Lake in northern Alberta down to Edmonton, and so forth. The only reason why federal incorporation is desired, as was explained to the committee, is that the area of exploration for oil is extending northwards, and oil is expected to be found north of the Alberta boundary. If that is so, the company will need federal incorporation in order to be permitted to export oil from the Northwest Territories to the province. That is the reason for the change in name, and for federal incorporation.

The other amendment is also very simple. A number of the sections of the bill deal with certain parts of the Canada Corporations Act which relate to the company. As honourable senators will recall, the Department of the Secretary of State which used to deal with companies is now the Department of the Registrar General. This amendment simply substitutes the words "Registrar General" for the words "Secretary of State" wherever they appear in the bill.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: May I ask the honourable senator a question? What is the significance of changing the words "Company Limited" to "Corporation"?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: The name of the present Alberta company ends with the words "Company Limited," and they wished the name of this federal company to be changed to avoid confusion between the two.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: It is still a limited company?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Yes, it will still be a limited liability company.

Report adopted.

THIRD READING—NEXT SITTING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Honourable senators, I move that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: We will agree to have it read the third time now, if you wish.

Hon. Mr. Reid: No, at the next sitting.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Very well.

Motion agreed to.

UNITED NATIONS

TWENTY-FIRST SESSION OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY

Hon. Edgar Fournier rose pursuant to notice:

> That he will call the attention of the Senate to the Twenty-first Meeting of the General Assembly of the United Nations (1966) and in particular to the discussions and proceedings of the meeting and the participation therein of the observers from the Parliament of Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, as most of you know, I had the honour and privilege of spending two weeks at the United Nations as an observer. There is no need for me to say that this was most instructive and interesting to me. Before giving the House a short resumé of my impressions, I should like to say that I noted with great pleasure indeed that a large number of the speeches at the United Nations are made in French and, accordingly, my report will be given in my own native language.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, I should like to thank very sincerely my superiors: the leader of the Senate, Senator Connolly, and my distinguished leader, Senator Brook, as well as the Prime Minister of Canada and the Leader of the Opposition in the House of Commons for the confidence they showed me.

I would like to pay tribute to His Excellency George Ignatief, our distinguished ambassador at the Canadian mission, and to all his staff. I was proud to learn in the lobbies that the Canadian mission at the United Nations is known as one of the most assiduous and active.

I was very impressed by the devotion to duty of our staff who spared no pains to make our visit instructive and interesting. I found there a group of young men and women who take their work at heart. I want to thank them, to congratulate them and tell them that we are proud of them and that we wish them all possible success.

I was delegated as an observer to the United Nations. In my opinion, that meant simply that I had to keep my eyes opened and my mouth shut. That is exactly what I did.

I had to follow in the footsteps of Senator Inman who preceded me and did us credit at all times and in all places.

In addition, I knew that Senator McDonald was to replace me. I was like a piece of cheese in a sandwich—I could not spoil the dinner.

Honourable senators, for one without experience at the United Nations, it was quite a revelation to note the organization that exists there, the procedures and the dignity of its members. But there are nevertheless problems.

If we think we have problems sometimes, at the local, provincial or federal levels, a visit of a few days to the United Nations makes us appreciate and understand better the extraordinary work carried out by that organization. I wonder what would happen in our troubled world if the United Nations did not exist.

I told you at the beginning that one of my first impressions—I would even say one of my first surprises—was to notice that the French language is recognized as a diplomatic language at the United Nations. I was surprised to find that the delegates of the new countries, especially from Africa and Asia, speak an excellent and cultured French.

I soon realized that, today, the United Nations General Assembly faces four major issues, namely: the war in Viet Nam, Rhodesia, the South African problem and, finally, communist China. Of course, there are several equally important issues, but they are rather routine matters.

There is the financing of the United Nations, the appointment of a new Secretary General to replace U Thant, the troubles in Cyprus, Palestine, India and Pakistan, as well as racism. Still, all those matters are well contained by the Organization, thanks to the competence, intelligence, understanding and good will of its members.

At the time of my visit to the United Nations, the Rhodesian and South African problems were on the order of the day. The debates were serious and at times quite animated. There were times where I felt in the midst of an electoral campaign.

I noted that, together, the new African countries and a few allies could control the United Nations vote.

I also noticed that most representatives of the new members of the United Nations are rather young, occasionally very young. Needless to say, these people are very intelligent and highly educated; they are also well disposed and full of good intentions. However, some of them occasionally seemed to find it hard to understand and accept that absolute freedom does not exist in our democracy, because the democratic way of life implies certain obligations and responsibilities which even we, who have known it for centuries, find rather difficult to accept.

Those young people need our help and advice. If, by any chance, we make the mistake of not helping them, well, they would be helped by other countries and the results could very well be costly and unfortunate.

Almost every day, a new African country joins the United Nations after getting its independence.

I had the pleasure of seeing the flags of Lesotho and Botswana added to the 119 flags already being flown, for a total of 121. Several others hope to be able one day to join the group.

On Thursday, October 27, the general assembly of the United Nations lived one of the darkest days in its history. All the delegates agreed that an atmosphere of fear prevailed throughout the organization; people felt that at any moment a catastrophe would put an end to it because it really was the day when the general assembly had to face a vote on the delicate and dangerous question of South Africa. All day spirited and contradictory debates were heard.

A motion moved by the U.S. ambassador, Mr. Goldberg, at the opening of the meeting, would have widened the gulf between the African group and the White group. That motion had somewhat shaken the opinions already arrived at by several nations.

Groups of delegates went around the hall of the general assembly, making a last ditch effort to prevent what could have been disastrous for the organization's structure.

It was 7.45 p.m. before a vote was taken and the result was 114 votes for and 2 against with 3 abstentions. In other words, the amendment moved by Senator Goldberg was defeated.

On October 26 I had both the honour and the pleasure of attending a conference on disarmament—what is called by the United Nations "the non-proliferation of nuclear arms". I was all the prouder because one of the speakers was Lieutenant-General E. L. M. Burns, our distinguished representative and adviser to the Canadian government on disarmament matters.

General Burns' speech was very well received and appreciated, even by the delegates from the U.S.S.R.

Honourable senators, I do not want to venture into the problems of Viet Nam or Red China. I hold rather personal views which are not always in tune with current events. However, I agree also that I am not an expert on those great world problems.

Red China today, with its recent successful nuclear experiences, is giving the world food for thought. At the United Nations General Assembly, I heard these words from a delegate:

> We must not forget that it is not Red China that is in need of the United Nations today, but the United Nations who need Red China.

This is undoubtedly food for thought.

Honourable senators, I have no intention of elaborating much longer on comments and recommendations which would in no way affect the state of world problems, and telling you things about which you know more than I.

I therefore conclude by assuring you that I have accepted my stay at the United Nations as a great honour. When I took my seat behind the Canadian flag, I felt very proud —proud to be a Canadian, proud to represent my country, Canada, proud to be a member of the Canadian delegation, and even prouder by the fact that I was representing the Senate. I thank you for your attention.

CRIMINAL CODE (HATE PROPAGANDA)

APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the motion by Hon. John J. Connolly:

> That a Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons be appointed to study and report upon amendments to the Criminal Code relating to the dissemination of varieties of "hate propaganda" in Canada as set out in Bill S-49, intituled: "An Act to amend the Criminal Code";
> That the following senators be appointed to act on behalf of the Senate on the Special Joint Committee, namely, the Honourable Senators Belisle, Bourque, Choquette, Croll, Lang and Roebuck;
> That the committee have the power to call for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses, to report from time to time, and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee, and to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate; and
> That a message be sent to the House of Commons requesting that House to unite with the Senate for the above purpose, and to select, if the House of Commons deems advisable, some of its members to act on the proposed Special Joint Committee.

Hon. Walter M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I find this an unusual motion. I am forced to agree more or less with the point that honourable Senator Pouliot raised yesterday.

I am not prepared to vote for this motion and then continue the debate on the hate propaganda bill. We have never followed that course before. The only occasion I can remember when anything approaching this has ever taken place in the Senate was when there were a number of divorce jurisdiction bills before the Commons and we had one before us which we had been debating. On that occasion we made a motion that a joint committee of both houses be set up to deal with the question of divorce jurisdiction, but the debate on the bill before this house ended there and then.

Now it is proposed to pass this motion and then go on to deal with the bill. Then, if we give it second reading we will have voted on the principle of the bill. This I am not prepared to do now. There are many aspects of this bill which I do not like and I do not think are at all necessary. If we are going to refer this whole question to a joint committee, I think the motion should be amended to read that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the committee.

I hope I make myself clear, honourable senators. I do not want to compromise my position by voting for the principle of this bill now. I do not know whether or not I will be in favour of the bill after the whole subject has been considered by this joint committee.

The motion is not unusual and it may be out of order. I wanted to put my remarks on record to that effect.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I would hate to think that the principle of the bill was being decided by the establishment of a joint committee. I have very little to add to the remarks I made yesterday on this subject. I believe it is an appropriate procedure to take, particularly in view of the fact it is a joint committee that is proposed. In view of the fact that progress in the other place is not as expeditious as it is here, it seemed to me this was the appropriate time to make the motion.

However, I would say to honourable Senator Aseltine that the setting up of the committee in advance does not commit him in any way to accept the principle of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: But we are going on to debate the bill in principle and vote on second reading.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Quite so. Let me put it to the honourable senator this way. If, for the sake of argument, the motion for second reading is defeated, no damage will have been done by setting up the committee, because there would be nothing to refer to it. The matter would die and the committee would never assemble. I have consulted the authorities on this, and I can assure the honourable senator that what I am saying is on very sound advice.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Senators: Carried.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: On division.

Motion agreed to, on division.

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Roebuck for the second reading of Bill S-49, to amend the Criminal Code.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, I find it rather strange to be rising and taking part in the debate on this bill when I find that I have a good deal of sympathy for the viewpoint just put forward by Senator Aseltine.

I am not going to attempt to discuss the legal aspects that have been so ably mentioned by Senator Walker, Senator Lang and others, but rather, I am going to ask the question: Do we really need this legislation?

I take a great deal of pride in Canada, and I feel quite certain and contented that these things do not and will not happen in Canada. We do not attempt completely to eliminate any race; we do not attempt forcibly to remove children from one race to another; and I am quite proud of the fact that we do not do these things. Therefore, I seriously question whether we need an amendment to the Criminal Code outlawing these acts.

Honourable senators receive literature from every organization in Canada. You have only to be away from your office for a few days and when you come back you can hardly see your desk for the briefs, brochures and different viewpoints put forward by every organization in Canada. If you read this literature you do not find in it any indication of all the horrible things mentioned in this bill. In short, there is none of it that I would consider hate literature.

As a youngster I was taught that every person was entitled to his viewpoint and the right to express it. The only warning I received was that you could not exactly put a hundred per cent of your faith in Mackenzie King and the Grits.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): A lot of people did.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: That is what I was going to mention, Senator Connolly, that despite my, shall we say, lack of a hundred per cent faith in the Liberal party, I see their numbers increasing not only in this chamber but in the other chamber. Perhaps the only reason I can think of for a bill of this nature is the recent events that have taken place at the Chateau Laurier, and sometimes I felt we were almost bordering on that condition. However, that is an internal problem of ours, and it is one we will have to solve without the aid of Parliament.

Honourable senators, it is my feeling in regard to this legislation that today it has become the fashion to do these things. I remember seeing the C.B.C. television program This Hour Has Seven Days, on Sunday evening when there was an interview with the Nazi leader from the United States, and from that time on there was a general outcry for a bill of this nature. I must admit that I was not pleased to see that man on a C.B.C. television program, but, on the other hand, in my view, we should not take a dangerous step, purely on the basis of fashion.

It is impossible to completely outlaw crackpots of this nature. If they are going to distribute such literature, I would much rather have it published under a letterhead and signed by the author, because then I would know from which organization it comes. If this sort of thing is made illegal, then much of it will be distributed without any mark whatever, and we will have no idea of its origin or the type of people publishing it. In short, the organizations will be driven underground.

The last thing that is worrying me in this regard is the enforcement of the provisions of this bill. Certainly I would not wish to be in the position of having to enforce them. There are many organizations in the country that are opposed to one another, and if this bill becomes law I am afraid there will be complaints to the various attorneys general complaining that the literature of one organization advocates hatred towards certain groups. This bill must be carefully studied by the special joint committee, which I hope will considerably improve it.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Choquette, debate adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, in view of the fact that the interim supply bill and the housing bill are up for third reading in the other place and have not yet come to us, I would suggest that the Senate do adjourn during pleasure at this time, to reassemble at the call of the bell. I am not in a position to say whether or not the bell will be rung before six o'clock.

I remind honourable senators that the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce will be meeting in Room 263-S, immediately after we rise this afternoon for consideration of Bill C-218, the Livestock Feed Assistance Bill, and possibly Bill S-50, the Visiting Forces Bill. I would ask as many senators as possible, whether members of the committee or not, to attend that meeting. As soon as I have heard from the other side I will notify the chairman of the committee.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

Upon resuming at 5.05 p.m.

Leave having been given to revert to reports of committees:

LIVESTOCK FEED ASSISTANCE BILL

AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. T. D'Arcy Leonard, for Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the following report of the committee on Bill C-218, to provide assistance to livestock feeders in Eastern Canada and British Columbia:

> Your committee recommends that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 300 copies in French of its proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Leonard: I move, with leave of the Senate, that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Leonard, for Hon. Mr. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill C-218, to provide assistance to livestock feeders in Eastern Canada and British Columbia, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): With leave of the Senate, I move that the bill be read the third time now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

VISITING FORCES BILL

AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. T. D'Arcy Leonard, for Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the following report of the committee on Bill S-50, respecting the Armed Forces of countries visiting Canada:

> Your committee recommends that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 300 copies in French of its proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Leonard: I move with leave of the Senate, that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 8, 1966

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-245, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1967.

Bill read first time.

SECOND READING

Hon. Jean-Paul Deschatelets, with leave of the Senate, moved the second reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Reid: May I ask a question? How does the amount granted this year compare to that granted last year?

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: If the honourable senator will permit me, I am going to explain the bill in a moment and will answer the question.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Then, I will listen carefully!

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: Honourable senators, Bill C-245, copies of which have already been distributed, proposes for interim supply a total sum of $371,999,867.43, which will provide for all the necessary requirements of the Public Service up to November 30, 1966.

It will be noted that today is November 17, and under normal circumstances it might reasonably be expected that before November 30, or in the following few days, another interim supply bill might be introduced for one or two months' supply.

As has been the custom in the past with respect to interim supply bills, explanatory notes have been placed before all honourable senators, and before examining briefly Bill C-245 I think we should look at those notes.

Page 3 is headed "Estimates, 1966-67." It will be noted that the main Estimates for 1966-67, excluding payments from the old age security fund, amount to $8,283,224,878. Out of this amount of expenditure a sum of $3,375,-241,967 is statutory, such as family allowances, the interest on the public debt, the indemnities of members of the House of Commons and the Senate, and so forth. This means that out of the total sum of the main Estimates a net sum of $4,907,982,911 has to be voted.

To this sum of $4 billion-odd, which has to be voted, must be added and voted also the sum of expenditures covered by Supplementary Estimates (A) and (B). Honourable senators will recall that Supplementary Estimates (A) amounted to $332,441,791, and that Supplementary Estimates (B) amounted to $177,027,000. If we add to the sum of $4 billion-odd, that I mentioned a few minutes ago, the expenditures covered by Supplementary Estimates (A) and (B) we get a total of $5,417,451,702 which has to be voted.

If we consider now the different sums of money which have been voted so far this year by appropriation acts we will have, I hope, a more comprehensive picture, because we will be able to calculate three lump sums, namely, the amount of expenditures to be voted, the amount already voted, and the amount which remains to be voted.

Honourable senators, let us look at Appropriation Acts Nos. 3, 5, 6 and 7. To avoid any unnecessary complication I have left aside Appropriation Act No. 4 which had to do with sums of money spent in the previous fiscal year, 1965-66, and which were all accounted for in the last fiscal year. It will be recalled that Appropriation Act No. 3, 1966 provided for expenditures to May 31, 1966, amounting to $870,275,281. Appropriation Act No. 5, 1966 provided for expenditures to June 30, 1966, and amounted to $450,944,478.01. Appropriation Act No. 6, 1966, covered the full supply in the main estimates for ten departments, namely, Citizenship and Immigration, Defence Production, Forestry, Governor General and Lieutenant Governors, Industry, Legislation, National Revenue, Post Office, Privy Council and Veterans Affairs. The expenditures for these ten departments amounted to $825,462,241.67.

Appropriation Act No. 7, 1966, provided for expenditures to October 31, 1966. This is the last interim supply that we had, and it amounted to $1,662,982,791.93.

If honourable senators add the aggregate sums for these appropriation acts, Nos. 3, 5, 6 and 7, which have been voted this year so far, we arrive at the total of $3,809,664,792.61.

Therefore, at the present time, out of a sum of $5,417,451,702, which has to be voted, we have voted so far through the four appropriation acts numbered 3, 5, 6 and 7, the sum of $3,809,664,792.61, leaving a balance of expenditure to be voted at this time of $1,607,786,909.39.

We come now to the consideration of the present bill C-245, known as Appropriation Bill No. 8, 1966, which will provide for expenditures to November 30, 1966, a sum of $371,-999,867.43. If this bill passes, it will leave as a balance of tabled estimates yet to be voted the sum of $1,235,787,041.96.

I must confess, honourable senators, that I am not used to playing with millions of dollars.

The purpose of this bill is to grant interim supply for one month, with a few exceptions which are outlined in the bill which I will explain later. I must say that in no instance is the total amount of any item of the main Estimates being released by this bill. The same applies to the supplementaries. In other words, the passing of this bill will not preclude the rights and privileges of honourable senators to discuss any of these items on other occasions.

May I remind honourable senators that it has been the practice to refer to the Finance Committee the main Estimates as well as the supplementaries as soon as they are tabled. I refer honourable senators to page 626 of the Senate Debates, where the Government Leader said:

> In that committee, not only committee members, but any member of the Senate who chooses may attend and ask for any information he or she requires in respect of any item in the Estimates.

May I say here that we had a meeting of the Finance Committee last week at which many questions were asked relating to the present bill, and some of its features were discussed. Now I draw to the attention of honourable senators the bill itself, and especially Schedules A to F. I hope all honourable senators will agree that it is unnecessary for me at this time to go into many details on each vote, since all the items are left open for further discussion or inquiry.

It will be noted in section 2(a) that one-twelfth of the total amount of the items set forth in the main Estimates may be paid, with some exceptions such as Vote 25 under Agriculture and Vote 10 for the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. There are in all, ten exceptions for which items there is no proportion granted in the present bill. The reason for that is that eleven-twelfths of these items have already been voted in previous interim supply bills, and if the one-twelfth were added it would mean that the total amount would be paid. The purpose is to keep these votes open, and the last one-twelfth of these votes will appear in the final supply bill this year.

Schedule A on page 4 of the bill concerns the Department of Public Works, and three-twelfths or one-fourth of the item in the main Estimates is required. In other words, an amount of $4,600,000 is to be paid to the National Capital fund. As the title implies, this money is paid into the National Capital Fund from which payments are made for the capital expenditures under the National Capital Plan.

In 1966-67 payments will be made for such projects as the Western Parkway, the Ottawa River Parkway, the redevelopment of Confederation Square, and the railway relocation program.

Under Schedule B of the bill, $3,175,900 is required under item 35 for the Department of National Defence and under item 20 for the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources. The amount represents two-twelfths or one-sixth of these two items.

Now just a word of explanation concerning item 35, which has to do with the research satellite program. The Defence Research Board is carrying on with the assistance of the United States National Aeronautical and Space Administration, a program which began in 1963 consisting of the construction and launching of four satellites for the purpose of ionospheric investigations. These satellites are referred to as the Isis satellites. This vote also provides for the ground control of and analysis of data from the two Alouette satellites now in orbit.

As far as item 20 of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources is concerned, this vote provides for the capital requirements of the new Kejimkujik National Park and other national parks, historic sites and monuments programs. Due to the excellent weather up to recent days, contractors and departmental crews have completed more construction work than was anticipated. These additional sums are required to make progress payments and to cover accounts on hand.

Schedule C at page 6 of the bill is also based on the main Estimates, and honourable senators will note that one-twelfth of the item L30 of the Estimates of the Department of Finance, $9,166,666.67, is required under this vote. This item has to do with the purchase by the Minister of Finance of securities of Expo '67. As honourable senators will recall, the Canadian World Exhibition Corporation Act was passed sometime in 1962, if I remember correctly, under the previous administration, and under the act the Minister of Finance was authorized to pay to the corporation a $20-million grant. The act also authorized the corporation to borrow money subject to guarantee by and terms and conditions to be approved by the Governor in Council and the Quebec Lieutenant Governor in Council. The funds requested in this appropriation are to allow for the purchase by the Minister of Finance of securities issued by the corporation to meet the difference between its expenditures and receipts for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1967. In other words, the purpose of this item is to provide working capital for Expo '67.

Honourable senators will see by Schedule D, page 7, of the bill that what is being sought here is three-twelfths or one-fourth of the total of the amounts of the several items in the said Supplementary Estimates (A), as contained in this schedule. The total amounts to $11,304,250. There are two votes included in this schedule, and I would like to make some brief remarks about them. On item 35a, which concerns the economic and technical assistance to east Asian countries, the $45-million vote in Supplementary Estimates (A) brings to $75 million the total food aid program for 1966-67. Some $63 million of the total is for wheat for India, Pakistan and Ceylon. A further $8 million represents Canada's contribution to the world food program. Vote L22a is merely a clean-up entry relating to a total loan to India of $12.5 million for the purchase of 16 Caribou aircraft and parts for the India Air Force.

If we turn to page 8, Schedule E—which is also based on the Supplementary Estimates (A), 1966-67—the amount of $713,266.67 is granted, representing two-twelfths or one-sixth of the item under the Department of the Secretary of State. This vote in Supplementary Estimates (A), together with its counterpart in the main Estimates, totals $13,800,000, and represents the expenses in 1966-67 of some 80 projects of all kinds and sizes to mark our Centennial. They range from the Confederation trains and caravans, estimated to cost between $8 million and $9 million, to the provision of $360,000 for medallions for school children. Provision is also made here for the promotion abroad of our Centennial.

Schedule F, on page 9 of the bill, is again based on Supplementary Estimates (A), 1966-67. It represents one-twelfth of the amounts of several items in the several Estimates, and amounts to $4,716,666.67.

Under the Department of Finance, provision is made in Vote 15a for the cost of salary revisions approved too late for inclusion in the Estimates of each department. Payments from it are made to each department as the costs of pay revisions are determined. Revisions were approved for several categories of civil servants after the 1966-67 main Estimates were finalized, particularly for the administrative support and the administrative and foreign service categories.

Under the last item on page 9, Vote L40a, loans are made from this item to finance the construction of transmission lines, terminal stations and thermal generating plants in the Maritimes. To date agreements have been made covering some 33 such projects in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, with an estimated total cost of $29 million.

I submit that clauses 3, 4 and 5 of the bill are more or less standard clauses in every supply bill, and I do not think there is particular need here for further explanation.

Honourable senators, at this point you will permit me, I am sure, to say a word of explanation concerning the mid-November payroll payment made before the interim supply bill was passed in the other place. When it became evident that the interim supply bill would not be passed before the first mid-month pay, which was Thursday, November 10, the government reviewed the condition of each appropriate account. It will be recalled that under Appropriation Act No. 6, which was explained a few minutes ago, the supply of ten departments was voted in full and, therefore, in respect of these accounts there was no problem as far as the civil servants' salaries and suppliers' bills were concerned. Moreover, the review revealed that out of the 243 votes only 15 lacked sufficient funds to cover the mid-month payrolls, and the total shortage amounted to $2,160,000.

In order to prevent inequitable treatment of the civil servants involved, the Government authorized the release of $2,160,000 from funds remaining in Vote 15, Department of Finance, Contingencies. Vote 15 is to be found at page 119 of the Blue Book under the Department of Finance, and it provides authority to supplement other votes and to provide for miscellaneous, minor and unforeseen expenses not otherwise provided for, subject to the approval of the Treasury Board, and includes also authority to re-use any sums repaid to the vote from other appropriations to which funds were advanced earlier in the year. Officials of the Department of Justice were consulted as to the legal propriety of this transfer, which was completed under the authority of the Treasury Board.

If any honourable senator would like to have additional information on this matter, I am sure this could be obtained at the first opportunity in the Standing Committee on Finance.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, this bill provides for interim supply for one month, that is, until November 30 next.

As I said at the beginning of my remarks, the various amounts of expenditures involved in this bill concern one part only of the amount provided in the main estimates and in the supplementary estimates A and B, so that all the items affected by this bill, not being approved completely, remain subject to further discussion in the standing committee on finance.

Honourable senators, I hope that the explanations I gave of this bill will be satisfactory. Before resuming my seat, I want to thank the honourable senators for their kind patience in listening to the series of figures, which are always tedious to listen to, but it seems to me that this is the price we must pay if, before voting a legislation as this one, we want to have before us a comprehensive account of our financial situation—so far as interim supply is concerned.

Honourable senators, I commend this bill to your approval.

[Text]

Hon. Walter M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, this is more or less a new role for me because in years gone by, and not so many years ago at that, I had the responsibility of introducing and sponsoring many supply bills similar in form and context to the interim supply bill No. C-245, which calls for the approval and expenditure of approximately $372 million of money by the present Government. I sympathize with the sponsor of this supply bill, but I congratulate him on a very fine effort.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I believe this is the first time he has had this responsibility. He has given us many more figures, I believe, than I used to give, and that is all to the good. However, I noticed that he left out one quite large sum, $1,035 million, payments from the Old Age Security Fund which should be added to the $8,792,693,669, making a total expenditure for the year of almost $10 billion. I think it will amount to $10 billion when all the supplementary Estimates between now and the end of the fiscal year next March 31 will have been brought forward for our consideration.

I referred to having had the responsibility of introducing many bills of this kind in the past, but I did not have any trouble explaining the bills themselves and the amounts contained therein. The chief difficulty I had was to answer questions as to why the Senate was being asked to approve the spending of so many millions of dollars without being given any time to investigate the expenditures more fully. I did not have at that time the ready answer that was given by the sponsor today, namely, that our Finance Committee has been dealing with these matters ever since the opening of the 1966 session of Parliament.

I have been a member of the Finance Committee and I think it has done excellent work.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I congratulate the chairman of that committee on his ability and particularly his indefatigability. I am hoping that before this debate is concluded the chairman will perhaps say a few words about what has been accomplished by the Finance Committee, since it has been operating during the whole of this session. I am quite satisfied with the results so far, and I am sure that all who have attended the meetings of that committee are also quite well satisfied.

Moreover, the Estimates have been tabled since early last spring and no member of the Senate can complain that he has not had any time to look at and deal with any estimate he was interested in. I do not think that we can raise any objection on that score.

The bill itself is in the form which the Senate approved some six, seven or eight years ago, and also the Estimates have been put in a form which was approved by the Senate and is much more satisfactory than it used to be.

There is only one other item about which I wish to speak. I am not going to review in detail the different items so well explained by the sponsor of the bill (Hon. Mr. Deschatelets) but I am not entirely satisfied with his explanation of where the money came from so suddenly a few days ago to make up the balance of the amount required to pay the salaries of civil servants and others. I hope that before this debate is concluded we shall be able to obtain more detailed information than has already been given to us. I call on the sponsor of the bill when he replies to give us all of the information he has in that regard. Other than that, I have nothing further to say at the present time.

I presume that it is the intention to have the Royal Assent given to this bill today if possible. So far as we on this side of the House are concerned, we shall do everything we can to expedite matters.

Hon. T. D'Arcy Leonard: Honourable senators, I would be remiss if I did not acknowledge the kind and complimentary remarks of Senator Aseltine which were directed primarily to the committee, and on its behalf I express appreciation.

Senator Aseltine suggested that I might have a few words to say on this particular bill at this time. My remarks will be brief.

Dr. Davidson, Secretary of the Treasury Board, appeared before our Finance Committee meeting on Tuesday of last week, at which time we put to him that the supply bill based on the resolution that was then before the House of Commons would soon be before us. As Senator Deschatelets said, a number of questions were asked. Indeed, it was a good meeting and well attended.

The next meeting of the committee is set for two weeks from today, when we expect to hear from the Auditor General, Mr. Henderson. I believe the Auditor General's department was one of the departments that applied for payment out of contingency Vote 15 of the Department of Finance, and received a payment out of that vote for the purposes of paying the salaries of his staff. He will therefore be familiar with the situation.

At the same time I think we ought to call Dr. Davidson back. No doubt at that time a full explanation can be given of exactly what transpired between the time of our committee meeting last Tuesday and the announcement on Thursday of the sum of money being transferred or being paid from the contingency Vote 15 of the Department of Finance to the other departments and the required funds for payment of salaries. I think that might be the best time and place to get the information.

We are also bound to have a further supply bill for December or, I presume, December and January, and no doubt some further supplementary Estimates.

I can assure the Senate that the Finance Committee will be ready and willing, and I think able, to deal with any questions relating to further supply bills and Estimates.

If there are any other questions in the minds of senators with respect to the main Estimates or the previous supplementary Estimates, they will of course be free to bring them forward at future meetings of the Finance Committee.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I feel that I would indeed be remiss if I did not say a word at this point, because for many years, when the Senate has been dealing with appropriation bills, members of the Opposition, regardless of which party sat on that side, have risen to say, "We are asked to put through a bill involving billions of dollars in the dying moments of the session without time for adequate consideration."

I recall hearing this kind of speech made when I was a student at university, when Senator Choquette and I used to come here at times to listen to the debates. Such speeches were still being made when I came here as a senator many years later.

So, to hear what Senator Aseltine said this afternoon warms me deeply indeed. The credit for this goes to the co-operation and willingness of the Senate to deal with these financial matters in a responsible way, through the work done by the Finance Committee with its very able chairman and informed members. So it is that much of the stigma that has been attached to the Senate in respect of appropriation bills has, as a result of the work of this committee, ceased to be a matter of public comment.

This is a great step forward and it is particularly gratifying to have an experienced person, a former leader of the Senate, like Senator Aseltine, make the kind of remarks he does. I am delighted.

May I at this stage congratulate the new Deputy Leader of the Senate (Honourable Mr. Deschatelets) on his orderly and masterly presentation of this bill. Believe me, I am going to be very reluctant in the future to take another appropriation bill myself after what I have heard this afternoon.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: When shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I move that the bill be read the third time now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. John J. Connolly: There is no further business before the house at the moment, but I understand that we may receive the housing bill from the other place before the end of the day. It is also the intention to have Royal Assent tonight before the normal adjournment of the house. I would therefore suggest that we recess now, to reassemble at the call of the bell at approximately eight o'clock.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 9.35 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that he had received the following communication.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE

Ottawa

17th November 1966.

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Hon. Robert Taschereau, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, acting as Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, 17th November, at 9.45 p.m. for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
A. G. Cherrier
Assistant Secretary
to the Governor General.

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate
Ottawa.

DOCUMENT TABLED

Leave having been given to revert to Presentation of Petitions:

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Supplementary Estimates (C) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1967. (English and French texts).

THE ESTIMATES

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (C) REFERRED TO FINANCE COMMITTEE

Leave having been given to revert to Notices of Motions:

Hon. T. D'Arcy Leonard moved, with leave of the Senate:

That the Standing Committee on Finance be authorized to examine and report upon the expenditures set out in Supplementary Estimates (C) laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1967; and

That the committee be empowered to send for persons, papers and records, to print its proceedings upon the said Supplementary Estimates (C) and to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate, that when the Senate adjourns this evening it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, November 29, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

This is the customary motion in the circumstances. It may well be that the Senate will be required for legislative work before November 29. If it becomes urgently necessary for the Senate to assemble before that date I will consult with His Honour the Speaker, and all honourable senators will be advised. It is expected that we will receive for consideration a bill respecting the National Housing Act, and a supply bill. There may be little other legislation for the present, but the month of December may be fairly busy, depending upon the speed at which legislation reaches us.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Does this mean we recess for two weeks?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It means that the Senate will not assemble again until Tuesday evening, November 29, unless it is recalled in the meantime.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Robert Taschereau, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned and being come with their Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give Royal Assent to the following bills:

An Act respecting The Pacific Coast Fire Insurance Company.

An Act to provide assistance to livestock feeders in Eastern Canada and British Columbia.

The Honourable Lucien Lamoureux, Speaker of the House of Commons, then addressed the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General as follows:

May it please Your Honour:

The Commons of Canada have voted certain supplies required to enable the Government to defray the expenses of the public service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Honour the following bill:

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1967.

To which bill I humbly request Your Honour's assent.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the said bill.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, November 29, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, November 22, 1966.

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT

REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to present a report from the Joint Committee on the Library of Parliament recommending that salary rates of pay of professional and non-professional classes in the Library of Parliament be brought into line with the recently revised salaries paid for comparable positions in the Civil Service and those recently announced for the House of Commons classified staff.

The Clerk Assistant (Reading): The Joint Committee on the Library of Parliament—

Hon. Senators: Dispense.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable Senators, this is obviously a complicated recommendation. I move that the report be printed in the Minutes of the Proceedings of today and that it be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

CONSUMER CREDIT (COST OF LIVING)

JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN COMMONS MEMBERSHIP

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the name of Mr. Matte had been substituted for that of Mr. Lachance on the Joint Committee on Consumer Credit and Cost of Living.

IMMIGRATION

JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN COMMONS MEMBERSHIP

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the name of Mr. Orlikow had been substituted for that of Mr. Schreyer on the Joint Committee on Immigration.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

PROPOSED JOINT COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER REMOVAL OF MR. JUSTICE LANDREVILLE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I have the honour to inform the Senate that the following message has been received from the House of Commons:

> Resolved,—That a Joint Committee of both Houses of Parliament be appointed to inquire into and report on the expediency of presenting an addresss to His Excellency praying for the removal of Mr. Justice Leo Landreville from the Supreme Court of Ontario, in view of the facts, considerations and conclusions contained in the report of the Honourable Ivan C. Rand concerning the said Mr. Justice Leo Landreville, dated the 11th day of August, 1966, and tabled in the House of Commons on the 29th day of August, 1966;
> That 12 members of the House of Commons, to be designated later, be members of the Joint Committee on the part of this house;
> That the committee have power to appoint, from among its members, such subcommittees as may be deemed advisable or necessary to call for persons, papers and records and to engage counsel, to sit while the house is sitting and to report from time to time;
> That the Committee have power to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee for its use and for the use of Parliament; and that Standing Order 66 of the House of Commons be suspended in relation thereto;
> That a message be sent to the Senate requesting that house to unite with this house for the above purpose and to select, if the Senate deems advisable, some of its members to act on the proposed joint committee.

Attest.

Léon J. Raymond
The Clerk of the House of Commons

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) moved that the message be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT, 1954

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-241, to amend the National Housing Act, 1954.

Bill read first time.

SECOND READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. John J. Connolly, with leave of the Senate, moved the second reading of the bill.

He said: Honourable senators, may I preface my remarks on this bill by saying that I am indeed most gratified to see that so many senators have found it possible to be present here this afternoon for this special sitting. This sitting had to be arranged as a result of the passage of this bill by the House of Commons after the Royal Assent was given on Thursday of last week. We all realize the difficulties involved in having honourable senators from distant parts come here in the existing airline situation, and I do thank those who have found it possible to attend this afternoon.

This bill deals generally with the housing situation in Canada. As it has developed in modern times, housing is an instrument not only of economic but also of social progress within a country. In a sense, too, it is a measure of economic and social progress within a country. It is important anywhere, but especially so in northern countries such as ours, where housing must be of durable quality and therefore an expensive item in our cost of living.

The problem of dealing with real estate and housing is an historic one, particularly in the development of countries in the northern hemisphere. "Landlordism" is a word which has a sinister meaning and many connotations. At one time it had a feudal meaning, when the lord of the manor owned all and the serfs worked for their keep and their housing, with no stake in the land.

With the coming of the Industrial Revolution there developed social phenomena such as the urbanization of countries, and with urbanization came slum development, land speculation and all manner of benefits and problems.

In the twentieth century the modern approach to housing has involved the establishment of efficient family units. Sometimes these are single family units; sometimes multiple units, as in the case of the large high-rise apartment buildings in our urban centres. The development of housing has fostered industrial enterprise. It has involved the development of the skill of the engineer, architect, craftsman, tradesmen for heating, lighting, plumbing and all the amenities that go into modern housing. It has brought too the day of the real estate developer and the land speculator, sometimes for the good of the community. Many of these developments have been tremendously advantageous to our urban areas and, in certain cases to rural areas. Other developments have not been as altruistic.

In our society we have the builder who builds for investment, and here the relationship of landlord and tenant develops. We also have the builder—in growing numbers, I hope—who wants his own home and bring up his family in it. This involves not only the acquisition of land but also the erection of a building. It involves the getting of a deed and perhaps the arrangement of a mortgage. But, generally speaking, the objective remains the same as always, the acquisition of a home. The home is the unit of the social structure, and may it ever remain so.

In the country in which we live today we have virtually full employment. We have a rising demand for products of all kinds. We have a rising demand for housing of all kinds. This demand occurs primarily because our population is growing in the normal, natural way. The demand is also growing because of increased immigration under policies fostered by various governments. It is growing as a result of the shift—the unfortunate shift—from rural to urban living. We must always be conscious of this shift because of its importance, first to our agricultural industry and, secondly, in respect of the provision of food having regard to the desperate shortages in certain parts of the world, and thirdly, because, in my conception at least, the home in the small town and on the farm is indigenous to Canada, and an institution that is well worth preserving to the fullest extent possible.

Within the building industry there have been many manifestations of economic development. There are heavier demands for capital in our expanding economy than we have ever experienced in history. The cost of money for the developmnt of enterprises of all kinds, both private and public, has been rising. An interest rate that is too high of course very seriously affects the homeowner, his aspirations and desires, because it is uneconomic for him to pay too high a rate of interest on his mortgage for too long a period and still meet the payment of higher taxes, federal, provincial and municipal.

Just yesterday the Economic Council of Canada made a report about the seriousness of the housing situation as it is developing in Canada, which I will be tabling later today. While everybody recognizes the importance of that report and the homeliness of the truths it contains—and these truths are incontrovertible—it is at the same time made clear to all of us who are concerned with the existing inflationary pressures that a massive injection of money into any segment of the economy can be harmful. It can be dangerous, and it could push inflation to the point where the consequences are undesirable and would defeat the results sought to be achieved. We have had many strikes. We have increasing wage demands, mainly because of increases in prices. The cost of living is rising. There are demands for higher profits on the part of shareholders, and on the part of companies who are trustees for shareholders, because they require larger returns on their invested capital.

I am not talking in a critical way about any segment of the economy. I am only trying to sketch some kind of broad perspective within which we should view the bill now before us.

It is clear from figures available that the conventional private sources of mortgage money for house building are drying up. One of the reasons is that there are higher and easier returns in other forms of investment. Mortgage, insurance and trust companies and private individuals are finding they can get a better and perhaps more secure return on their money by buying in the bond and stock market rather than in the mortgage business.

In the first six months of 1966 the starts in housing were down 26,000 from the same period in 1965. This applies even to loans that are insured under the National Housing Act. In 1966, from January to October, direct lending from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation increased by 31,500 units, which is 33 per cent over the same period in 1965. That is perhaps because money under the direct lending of the corporation is cheaper than in other sectors of the economy. The rate for these direct loans is $6\frac{3}{4}$ per cent.

It is anticipated that in 1966 some 130,000 housing units will be completed in Canada, and of that number 80,000 will be completed as a result of capital supplied from private or conventional sources. Although this is a tremendous number of housing units it still falls short of the required number by perhaps as many as 40,000 in this year.

It is a matter of policy, therefore, for the Government to support projects for urban renewal, for slum clearance, and for other forms of civic improvement in the use of land within our cities.

In 1966 some $16 million was allocated for that purpose, as against some $4 million or only 25 per cent of that in 1965. These urban renewal projects took place in such cities as Hamilton, Saint John, New Brunswick, Montreal, Vancouver, Calgary, Winnipeg and Toronto. Over 9,000 family units were affected, it is hoped favourably, by this development within our urban centres.

Perhaps a good example of what has happened can be seen in this City of Ottawa over an area which Ottawans generally call "the flats"—that is, the Preston Street area—where sub-standard housing was removed and replaced by new forms of public housing with modern conveniences installed, under a federal-provincial program. The buildings are somewhat attractive, some have more free land available for the use of the tenants, and more houses were provided on a rental basis. That is just one example of what has been done with some of the $16 million already used this year for that purpose. But there is much more to be done in this field.

It is also a matter of policy for the Government to support housing for low-income families, and help has been given to non-profit corporations to provide subsidized rental accommodation. By non-profit corporations I mean organizations like service clubs and other philanthropic bodies which undertake projects of this kind in the interests of their communities. They provide both single-family units and multiple-family buildings in certain areas. The areas which have been affected by this development are Winnipeg, London, Moncton, Saskatoon and Verdun near Montreal.

These developments have been of special benefit to the older members of the community, people who have not been able during their lifetime to provide for the housing they require out of their savings or by other means.

A very successful development has been undertaken by the Ontario Housing Corporation, a Crown company established by the Government of the Province of Ontario. The president of that corporation is Mr. Soble of Hamilton. In 1966 under that organization there were 46 housing developments, costing $24 million. About 7,200 family units were built, some in new buildings, some in used dwellings. Some 1,978 families have benefited by what has been done by the Ontario Housing Corporation in 1966. The federal portion of this program has been a loan covering 90 per cent of the capital cost.

Honourable senators, I think it fair to say that Ontario has done more in this field in two years than any other province in Canada has done in ten years. Much more remains to be done.

The Province of British Columbia has another scheme for subsidized rental accommodation. They prefer the scheme in which the federal contribution is 75 per cent by way of loan and the province and the municipalities contribute 25 per cent.

Under Section 35A of the act, covering the establishment of rental housing accommodation in British Columbia, 974 units have been completed in Vancouver and 376 more units are under construction. In Prince Rupert some 50 units have been completed, making a total of 1,400. That is a record which is commendable and which speaks for itself.

At Inuvik in the Northwest Territories, in August 1966, a hostel type of accommodation was established for which the federal contribution was $350,000 and in which 54 units were provided for the Eskimo people. The administration of that establishment has been vested by the Northwest Territories Council in the Y.M.C.A.

I should add that in all of these projects in which there is federal and provincial co-operation—and there have been a great many—the federal authority has agreed to pay 50 per cent of the operating losses which are incurred in these projects. Progress has been made, obviously.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: What does "operating cost" mean? Is it administration costs, and so on?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It is operating losses. I did not mean costs. Any losses incurred as a result of the operation of these projects are shared on a 50-50 basis so far as the federal Government is concerned. We will pay 50 per cent of whatever losses might be incurred. I think I am safe in saying that so far there have been no losses. These houses are self-sustaining; the rentals are modest but they are adequate to carry the administration, the interest on the money, and the repayment of the principal.

Hon. Mr. Reid: What is the interest rate generally charged?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I cannot answer that question but I shall get it and give it to the honourable gentleman later in the debate.

Great progress has been made in these fields. I have given some examples to illustrate that progress, but much more needs to be done.

As to the bill itself, it provides for loans to be made for the acquisition by individuals and others of existing housing units. It is thought that this provision will provide a benefit for low-income families who want to acquire and own their own homes. These loans will be insured under the National Housing Act. A portion of such loans, to be designated later by regulations, will have to be devoted to the improvement of the property in question. I should add that these improvements are not all improvements that have to be purchased by the person who acquires a house. His own labour and materials can be used for this purpose.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Will that be by regulation, or is it in the bill?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It is proposed that that should be done by regulations.

It is also proposed by this bill that the ratio of lending on rental construction, because of the success achieved in this field, shall now be raised from 85 per cent to 90 per cent of the value of the property to be developed. It is thought that the increase in this ratio of the amount of the loan to the total cost of the project will be beneficial in the larger centres but more particularly in the smaller centres.

The bill also provides that the pool of money for insured loans which has been made available to C.M.H.C. by Parliament from time to time, and which has been increased from year to year by various governments at various times and is now at $8½ billion, should be increased now to 9½ billion. In other words, another $1 billion will be made available for these purposes.

The pool of money for direct lending by C.M.H.C., which is a kind of application that is growing, probably because of the fact that the interest rate is lower than it is on the market, is now $3¼ billion. It is proposed to increase this pool by $750 million, and that Parliament authorize C.M.H.C. to lend to the extent of $4 billion both for new and for existing housing.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Does that open it up for the private investor?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Indeed it does. This is one of the beneficial amendments arising out of this bill. I am glad the honourable senator raised that point. I can remember in the early days of my own law practice—and I am sure this is true of many others—that it was impossible to provide money, even public money, on anything but new improved real estate within a city. The trustees of estates that had money at their disposal, and other private lenders, were pretty well restricted to that kind of investment.

Well, I think experience has proved, especially with the development of the country and the prosperity that we are now enjoying, that loans in rural areas not only are needed but are good investments.

I thank the honourable senator for allowing me to make the point specifically, because it is an important point which arises out of this measure as one of its more beneficial aspects.

May I deal for a few moments with the business of campus accommodation for students? Since 1960 Central Mortgage and Housing has been making loans to universities. In these six years approximately 30,000 students have been accommodated in the units provided. The Senate can take a certain amount of credit for this development, because certain members of the Finance Committee pressed for it in order to assist with the housing problems on our univertsity campuses. On that committee were the late Senator Wall, Senator Cameron and others who were close to this field—I just mention those two because they spring to my mind.

In 1966, $37 million was devoted to this purpose, and accommodation was provided for some 6,000 students in all provinces of Canada. There were 25 such loans. I may say that before any such loan can be approved, the consent of the province concerned must be given. Recently, approximately $12 million was approved for a project at Guelph University. We used to call it O.A.C.—I suppose the same institution. The project at Guelph will accommodate approximately 1,700 students.

Perhaps I should say, in passing, that in 1965 less than $12 million was authorized.

Clause 7 on page 4 of this bill gives a definition of "student housing projects." It now includes housing for students who are attending vocational schools, technical schools, training hospitals and establishments for the training of the handicapped. I may say that in the debate in the other place this was highly commended by many of the members both on the Government and Opposition sides.

The pool of money available for student housing at the present time stands at $250 million. It is proposed by this bill to increase that pool by $100 million, to $350 million.

Lastly, honourable senators, may I deal briefly with sewage treatment projects? These are dealt with in clause 10 of the bill. Since 1960 there have been some 1,000 loans to municipalities for improving or installing sewage treatment projects. These projects are of benefit to a community both for purposes of health and for the conservation of resources. The bill proposes to extend the period within which applications may be made by municipalities for this purpose for a further three-year period which will expire on March 31, 1970. These are the loans for which there is a 25 per cent forgiveness once the project has been completed.

If I may have the approval of the Senate, I will place on Hansard a table showing the loans for municipal sewage treatment projects by provinces as at September 30, 1966. The total number of these loans was 1,069. Every province of Canada participated and the total amount of money involved was over $200 million. Is it agreed that I put this on Hansard?

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Loans for Municipal Sewage Treatment Projects Approved under Part VIB of the Act by Province as at September 30th, 1966.

	No.	$000
Newfoundland	19	2,058

Hon Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, while in this area I submit that although much progress has been made, much remains to be done. I believe the steps that have been taken by successive governments in the field of housing have been in the right direction. We are on the right road. I claim no credit for the work that has been done by this Government. It has succeeded a previous government which worked in this field and which in turn worked along the same road as the governments before it.

On looking at our housing legislation today from the standpoint of 50 years ago, one would be truly amazed at the developments which have occurred. I do think it is important, however, that in supporting the house building program in this country we should not overload the economy at this time. However, I am fully conscious of one fact pointed up by the Economic Council. They may not have given the figures and I did not look into the detail of their report to that extent, but I am informed that within the next five years 170,000 units of living accommodation will be required each year of those five years if we are to keep up with the demand. So it is obvious that this is a very important area of economic and social activity. I think there are imperatives involved.

Before I sit down, may I tell Senator Reid that the present interest rate charged on loans made under section 35D on public housing projects is 6⅛ per cent. This is the technique adopted by the housing corporation.

Hon. John M. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I am sure that we have all listened with considerable interest to the very detailed explanation of this bill given by Senator Connolly. From his explanation it is obvious that the amendments proposed are worthwhile and deserve our support. It may well be that the amendments do not go far enough, but I think that is understandable because on reading one of the speeches of the Minister of Labour in the House of Commons, when he was discussing this bill, I noticed that he intimated that he had other amendments in mind which he hopes to introduce in the not-too-distant future. Indeed, he mentioned that this bill represents only those improvements deemed absolutely essential at the present time.

The amendment which I like most provides for the purchasing of older homes. As has been pointed out, the scheme is that loans will be made so a person can purchase, remodel or repair and occupy an existing home. This is a field which I consider needs most attention.

It is claimed that the need is most serious in the groups of wage-earners who earn less than $5,000 per year, because for them it is not possible to build a new home costing perhaps $15,000, $20,000 or $25,000. But there are many places where an older home could be purchased at a reasonable figure, and then repaired or remodelled by the purchaser and occupied very comfortably for many years to come.

I was glad to hear the leader say, so far as this type of repair or remodelling is concerned, that work done by the purchaser will be included as part of his contribution towards the cost. In many of the smaller areas at least, a purchaser together with his family or friends can carry out much of the necessary work of repair. He himself may be a carpenter, an electrician, a plumber or he may have some other trade which would be useful. We have had some experience of this in the Province of Nova Scotia.

Honourable senators may recall that for many years, going back to 1935 and 1936, the Nova Scotia Housing Commission made loans to co-operative groups. Under the original scheme six to 12 people could join together and form a co-operative association which could borrow money from the Nova Scotia Housing Commission to build these homes. A large proportion of the amount to be put up by the purchasers was however contributed in the form of labour. In each group they tried to have a person who had some skill as an electrician, a plumber, a heating man or a carpenter. Each would contribute his skill to the building of the home, with the result that the cost was kept to a minimum and the value of the work was regarded as contributing in a large part to the down payment. That scheme has worked fairly well over the years. Recently the act has been amended and the scheme has been broadened to conform to changing conditions.

This scheme should also work under the terms of the bill which we have before us. I say this because my concern at the moment is not so much for the housing shortage in the cities and larger centres, but for the shortage which exists in the smaller areas. We must remember that it is at times very difficult to get direct lending in a rural area. In fact, at times it is difficult even in some of the smaller towns. During the past year conventional sources of mortgage money have pretty well dried up. For that reason I think that this amendment to the act will be of real value. However, I feel that these people who are trying to obtain homes of their own could be further aided by the removal of the sales tax on building materials.

I understand that these provisions will be particularly beneficial to people making less than $5,000 per year. However, we must keep in mind that this is only one objective. The second objective should be to try to get these people out of this income bracket and into a higher one. I am sure we would all achieve a feeling of satisfaction if we could reach the point where the need was no longer there because we had managed to get these people out of that low-income group. In my view this would indeed be a very praiseworthy objective.

Some mention was made of older people, and without any doubt there is a problem in this connection. As the honourable Leader of the Government has mentioned, much good work has been done by various service clubs and other non-profit organizations in providing housing for older citizens, but that does not appear to be the ideal solution. These elderly people, especially those whose only income is by way of old age security payments, cannot hope to continue to own their own homes because of the present high cost of maintaining such property. It is a sad and pathetic sight to see people who have owned their own homes now being forced to give them up. Municipal taxes are higher, as is also the cost of ordinary maintenance, and these people simply cannot afford to own property.

Where the solution to this problem lies, I do not know. Personally, I am one of those who advocate higher pensions, but that may not be the whole solution. I would like to see the time come—and I know you would too—when these elderly people, if they wished, could end their days in their own homes. I understand some municipalities have made arrangements whereby some tax relief is provided in such cases, but it is essential that we try to attack this problem in two ways. First we should try to reduce the cost of living in a home. This is done in many cases under this act, where they build places for senior citizens. If I might add just one more place to the list which the Leader of the Government gave, I would mention that in the City of Sydney there is one of these homes being constructed at the present time.

Now we must also try to raise the income of those persons who are under $5,000 a year, and to raise the incomes of those who are wholly dependent upon Old Age Security. If we can do that, then I believe that we will be making a substantial contribution to the well-being not only of those people but of the country in general.

I know we are all interested in the explanation given by the honourable leader in regard to loans made to universities for housing on the campus. This has been of comparatively recent origin and it is obvious that many universities are taking advantage of it. However, there is one point I do not wholly understand, namely, that the approval of the provinces must first be obtained. I think it is stretching our constitutional conception of jurisdiction to the limit to say that because the provinces have the first responsibility in regard to education, their approval must be obtained before a loan can be made to a university for housing on the campus.

Certainly, in this case the prime object is housing and the secondary is education. While I have no objection to it, we should keep in mind that we might be building up trouble for ourselves in the future if in such cases we acknowledge that the provinces have some jurisdiction. I know we all agree with the other objects of the bill, and it is not my intention at the moment to deal with them.

As the Leader of the Government mentioned, the Economic Council of Canada is somewhat concerned about the housing shortage. The report says:

> —adequate measures and adjustments are needed to reverse the decline in new housing construction and to avoid the danger of a rapidly intensifying housing shortage.

The Leader of the Government also mentioned that it is sometimes harmful to have a massive injection of new money into the economy. I appreciate his point of view, but I would point out that if people feel there is a danger of inflation through a massive injection of new money for housing, for example, then perhaps we should examine the whole system and see whether or not there are some priorities we should set, so that if we inject money into housing perhaps we should withdraw it from something else.

Honourable senators, I do not think it necessary to send this bill to committee. The sponsor gave a detailed explanation of it. I should also add that I have read the speeches given by the Minister of Labour in the House of Commons on the resolution and second reading stages, and I believe he made very clear not only what the purposes of the bill are, but also furnished much detailed information which normally would be forthcoming in committee. Speaking on behalf of those on this side of the house, I do not think it necessary to refer this bill to committee. We would be quite agreeable to the bill receiving third reading.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I might say that I understand there was no committee hearing in the other place.

Hon. W. M. Benidickson: Honourable senators, as some of its clauses indicate, this is an important bill.

First of all, let us realize that going on from the initial stages of housing support from the federal Government, the purpose of this bill is to increase support in a lending capacity from $8½ billion to $9½ billion. This support has developed within a relatively recent period of time. This is in keeping with the words of the Leader of the Government, that "the home is the unit of the social structure." He also said that in legislation of this kind we are "on the right road." With these statements I agree wholeheartedly.

The honourable Senator Macdonald (Cape Breton) said that it is not necessary to refer this bill to a committee. I have no objection to that conclusion. However, I would like from the Leader of the Government some assurance that, if the bill is not referred to a committee, the expressions of view by honourable senators as reported in Senate Hansard today be given the utmost consideration by the representatives of this tremendously large body, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, and by the honourable Mr. Nicholson, the representative in the cabinet who speaks for this corporation.

This bill contains some very meaningful, helpful and forward-thinking proposals. I think the most important item in it is that which refers to the provision of financial aid that would not come from any other financial sources, banks or other institutions, unless backed by this legislation, for the improvement of old homes. I think many people need help of this kind.

We have the Farm Improvement Loans Act —I think the loans under it are in the neighbourhood of $1,200 million or $1,300 million. We have the Home Improvement Loan Act, which provides a large number of other Canadians with backing so they can go to the banks. That measure has increased construction and has provided labour; indeed, it has improved our society to a degree comparable to improvements carried out under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, in millions of dollars. I think these are all important measures.

Honourable senators, I know we are under some pressure today. However I rise to say that I remember 12 or more years ago, when I was in the other place, I had much to say about the possibility of influence and effectiveness of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in areas to which they were not effectively ministering. I referred to the housing accommodation in some remote parts of this country. I suggested that while the actual occupant of the home might not be able to enter into a contract under which he would satisfy the fancy terms of a C.M.H.C. representative who lived in suburban Ottawa, Toronto, Montreal or Winnipeg, we could and should do much to improve the status of that particular class of Canadian through the National Housing Act. I do not suggest that I want people in that category to get anything less than the very best that is available in metropolitan Toronto or Montreal, but this is not realistic. I am talking about small lumbering, mining and similar communities and, when I was otherwise occupied, I visited many homes in such areas. We have a duty to improve the living conditions of those Canadians, but some of the standards set under this otherwise magnificent corporation do not provide help to these people. They do not require a great deal immediately, but let us try to improve their lot now.

Honourable senators, we have heard that in the other place there was announced a policy respecting war on poverty. We have heard also that there is to be a Company of Young Canadians who are going to help in the war on poverty. It is a coincidence that this bill should come to us today, because only two or three days ago I wrote again to the President of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to remind him that he used to be this corporation's senior official in Winnipeg and in the territory I represented as a member of the other place. He knows the territory about which I speak. Some years ago there was presented in a committee of Parliament endorsation of official government loans for what was then known, as I recall it, as a Newfoundland type of house, which would have represented a tremendous improvement in the living conditions of many people at that time. I regret I have not followed up this matter recently, but I thought it had been agreed upon.

Honourable senators, as this bill is not going before a committee I should like to mention two communities in the territory I know best. In both there are now modern timber-working mills. I know that the natural resources of this country are under the jurisdiction of the provinces, and that for the last few years the provinces have, with good, well-educated and dedicated staffs, laid down rules under which the timber limits, mining limits and other resources cannot be exploited without there being some idea of their perpetual use. Perhaps that could not apply so much in respect to mines, but it certainly does to timber.

These rules have been laid down. Why then is it that the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is still of the view that in these areas it can lend only to a borrower who wants to put up a nice suburban home, such as those seen around Toronto?

There is an urgent need, honourable senators, for the introduction of loans by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to people in non-urbanized areas who want to build a modest home of the type which formerly cost only $3,000 or $4,000. Why does the corporation lend these billions of dollars to the members of the affluent society only, for homes costing from $14,000 to $40,000 or more?

If this bill is not going to a committee then I am certain the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) will assure me that my views will be presented vigorously to the corporation. I was surprised to learn in a conversation the other day that in two communities in northwestern Ontario, namely, Hudson and Sapawe, that while industry in these places has gone ahead with the most up-to-date plants, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation still has the idea that industry only should take care of all the housing problems there. The result is that because they cannot borrow from sources such as banks, these Canadians are living under conditions that are not desirable and certainly would not be tolerated in the metropolitan areas of our country. Yet, the industries here have a long life secured to them because of the provincial government's conservation rules.

Hon. Gordon B. Isnor: Honourable senators, I do not propose to take up very much of your time. However, there are one or two points I should like to bring to the attention of the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) who so eloquently outlined the purposes of this bill. I should like also, at this point, to compliment the honourable senator from Cape Breton (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) on his contribution to the debate.

I recall well that when I was a member of the other place, the Honourable Charles Dunning brought in the National Housing Act in 1938. I notice that this bill mentions the National Housing Act of 1954, but if my memory serves me correctly it was in 1938 when Mr. Dunning brought in the National Housing Act. It was at that time that the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation was started, and we have come a long way since then.

At that time the corporation advanced something like 60 per cent of the cost of a home. Senator Ross Macdonald and our Whip, Senator Beaubien (Provencher), will confirm that only 60 per cent was advanced at that time. I remember it being said that we would see the day when housing loans would be made on the same basis as life insurance is made available, namely, on the moral character of the borrower. We have not yet reached that stage, but we have gone from 60 per cent to 70 per cent, from 70 per cent to 80 per cent, and from 80 per cent to 90 per cent, as the honourable Leader of the Government has announced today. That is going a long way, for I believe that 90 per cent will cover the needs of the average person who seeks to build his own home.

Hon. Mr. Benidickson: Yes, if the standards appeal to the lower-income groups.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Quite right.

The honourable Leader of the Government touched on section 2 of the bill which relates to a person who intends to purchase, improve and occupy an existing house or one of the family housing units thereof. I wish to make particular reference to the word "occupy." I take it for granted that this bill does not cover the borrowing of an amount for improvements to be made by a person who intends to resell that home. The home must be occupied by the person who is borrowing the money.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It is intended for homeowners.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Yes; it is for homes occupied by the owners. There is no intention here of giving a certain type of person the opportunity of buying an older home, borrowing $4,000 to improve it, and then selling it for an additional $6,000 or $8,000?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It is not intended to help the speculator.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: That is the right word. I just wished to bring that to the attention of the Senate in view of the fact that this bill is not going before a committee. I am quite in accord with that thought.

I am also impressed, as was Senator Macdonald (Cape Breton), with the idea that a person who is borrowing an amount for improvements is permitted to make the repairs and charge up his labour costs to the extent of the amount he borrows. This is a good move. Quite often a home owner and his family can do the work in just as satisfactory a manner as someone else who is brought in for the purpose.

Another point I wish to touch on is in connection with the rural districts. All honourable senators realize, as does Senator Benidickson, the trouble that the borrower in the rural district has in procuring an amount of money sufficient to purchase a home. This is perhaps due largely to the fact that there are no trust companies or banks in those localities. It is my hope that in the revision of the Bank Act some provision will be made whereby those living in rural districts and wishing to borrow will have the opportunity to do so. I say that notwithstanding the fact that I am a director of a trust company and am perhaps sending business away from trust companies to the banks. But I feel, in view of the way banks are located in different sections of the provinces, they could make available the funds necessary to carry out these improvements. I bring that particularly to the attention of the Government.

Honourable senators, on the whole, this is a step in the right direction. While I perhaps will not live to see the day when we will be getting the full amount required, as I mentioned earlier, on the moral character of the borrower, we have gone a long way in getting 90 per cent of it.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, I listened with much interest to the good speeches made by the Leader of the Government and by many of our colleagues. I have one question to ask.

I wonder why the policy which has favoured foreign countries by lending them money without interest is not applied to Canadians for the building of houses. How is it that Jamaica and Bolivia have received Canadian loans on which they pay no interest, and that Canadians have to pay interest on loans for building houses?

This is my question. I ask for no answer to it, but I hope it will be submitted to the Government in order that action may be taken in the matter.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: May I remind honourable senators that if honourable Senator Connolly speaks now, it will have the effect of closing the debate.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I thank those honourable senators who have taken part in the debate this afternoon and who have been so constructive in their approach to the project incorporated in the bill. I am pleased that Senator Macdonald (Cape Breton), Senator Isnor and Senator Benidickson have commended the idea of providing for insured loans on existing real estate. I repeat what I said to Senator Isnor, that this is not intended to help the speculator. The purpose is to assist the person with low income to acquire a new home.

So much has been done in the field of "do-it-yourself" lately, that the idea of allowing the homeowners labour to count in the cost of the improvement, particularly with the popularity of power tools within the family, will beneficially affect this area.

I was pleased to hear Senator Macdonald (Cape Breton) speak about the work of the co-operatives in the production of housing in Nova Scotia. Some years ago I went to Chile to attend the inauguration of the new President, Eduardo Frei Montalva. While I was there I found some specialists in the co-operative movement who had taken their training at St. Francis Xavier University in Nova Scotia.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): That is the college which has the football team.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes. It is a good football team. Perhaps I should stop the sentence there, because I know there are several good football teams in that college grouping.

Hon. Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne): And some not so good.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): As I was saying before I was so sportingly interrupted, these people were looked upon as developing the co-operative idea in that country, particularly in the field of housing. Recently, I was asked by some of the Chilean authorities where they could get information on this matter. I was able to refer them to the Canadians who were working in the field in this developing country of South America.

I quite agree that the sales tax of 11 per cent may be a deterrent to the building of houses by people with low incomes. However, we cannot have it both ways, and the demands on the treasury are heavy. The 11 per cent sales tax on building materials has not proven, by and large, to be too bad a thing, although there are people in the industry who will complain that they could do much more without it. However, we can hope for better times. We can hope for a decrease in that tax, and even the elimination of it. There is a royal commission which is to report shortly on the whole tax system and perhaps there may be some relief as a result of that report.

On the question of homes for the aged, I would be less than frank if I did not say that much work is being done by the provinces and by municipalities in this field. I am indebted to Senator Choquette for the name of the Island Lodge Geriatric Centre in Ottawa, which is located on Porter's Island and which is designed to look after the needs of old people in this community in what I would describe as rather superior surroundings. This is not a National Housing Act assisted project; it is built by the Province of Ontario with their own funds.

There are in Ottawa four or five projects financed by National Housing Act money and accommodating some 400 elderly people; they are owned by the City of Ottawa and known as the Lowren Housing Development. This is true of certain other parts of Canada as well.

Senator Macdonald (Cape Breton) raised the question of jurisdiction with respect to loans for student housing. With much of what he said, I agree. As a matter of fact, I was attacked here at one time for suggesting that help to universities could be justified on the grounds that education was a national problem. There may be another reason for wanting provincial approval: it carries with it a guarantee from the province that the loan will be paid, and one must always look to the safeguarding of investment made from the federal treasury.

I am glad Senator Benidickson referred to the Farm Improvement Loans Act and to the Home Improvement Loans Act. Both of these provide opportunities for homeowners, both rural and urban, to take advantage of loan facilities provided generally through the banks. I understand the maximum for the Home Improvement Loans Act is $4,000. Curiously, the average loan is not much more than about $1,500, I think the minister said.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Yes; $1,500.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): The opportunity is there. I do not say that this legislation and this corporation is the be-all and end-all, nor do I say that it is the only place where benefits are available to the community from the public purse.

On the other question raised by Senator Benidickson, one of the things that legislators on their own responsibility must always remember is the problem of security in the investment of public funds and the question as to where the line should be drawn. The question as to where the line should be drawn as between what is considered to be standard housing on the one hand and substandard housing on the other may be very difficult. I gather that the burden of Senator Benidickson's argument is that the standard described by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is much too high for the average purchaser with low income. May I say in all frankness that I shall present his views to the authorities; and, to use his own language and indeed the language of another great man, I shall do so with vigour.

Senator Isnor refers to the pressures which have been growing over the years of his distinguished career in Parliament to raise the ratio of the loans from 60 per cent upwards and to depend the more upon the moral character of the borrower. With that I agree. Anyone who has been concerned with private lending, as a trustee or in a law firm, or in a trust or loan firm, or in an insurance company, must be concerned with the moral character of the borrower, but the margin between the value of the equity and the mortgage itself being only 10 per cent, I think you already have this reliance built in. When you consider that the situation will be applied on a national basis, I think it speaks pretty highly for the moral character of the borrower of these funds that the Corporation supported by the Government is willing to go as far as it has gone in this regard.

Hon. Mr. Paterson: What is the history of loss?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I do not have that on hand, but I shall try to get it for you. I know it is a very insignificant amount. I am not sure if it is still less than one per cent, but I shall find out.

I come now to the point raised by Senator Pouliot, which was a very valid one, to the effect that in certain cases underdeveloped countries receive free loans, usually soft loans. In the first place let me say that the amount involved in these loans is infinitely smaller than anything contemplated in this bill. In the second place I think, and I am sure Senator Pouliot will agree, that a country that is relatively as wealthy as Canada, and a people that are as generous as Canadians, would give wholehearted approval to the steps that have been taken. Such loans are granted only in cases of great need, in many cases dire need. I think so far as the average Canadian homeowner is concerned, all he wants to do is to be able to pay his way, and he also is interested in safeguarding the integrity of the Canadian treasury.

I commend the bill to the Senate.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read a third time?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): With leave, I move that the bill be read a third time now.

Motion agreed to and bill read a third time and passed.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that he had received the following communication:

GOVERNMENT HOUSE

Ottawa

22 November 1966.

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Hon. Robert Taschereau, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, acting as Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 22nd November, at 6 p.m. for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,

Sir,

Your obedient servant,

A. G. Cherrier

Assistant Secretary

to the Governor General.

The Honourable

The Speaker of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): May I ask the honourable leader if we have received copies of those reports?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes, the copies are all tabled now. I take it you are talking particularly about the reports referring to the federal-provincial meeting?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Yes.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): If it is the desire of honourable senators to have these reports circulated, I will give instructions for that to be done forthwith.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton): When shall we receive the copies of the report of the Economic Council?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I am sure it has been circulated.

BANK ACT AND QUEBEC SAVINGS BANKS ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

Hon. John J. Connolly presented Bill S-53 to amend the Bank Act and the Quebec Savings Banks Act.

Bill read first time.

SECOND READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. John J. Connolly, with leave of the Senate, moved the second reading of the bill.

He said: Honourable senators, I think in a sense this can be considered to be a necessary but routine bill. It provides for an extension of the Bank Act and the Quebec Savings Banks Act. This is extension No. 4.

The first one authorized the extension of the Bank Act from July 1, 1964 to July 1, 1965. The second extension was for a period from July 1, 1965 to January 1, 1966. The third was from January 1, 1966 to December 1, 1966, and this bill requests a further extension from December 1, 1966 to January 1, 1967.

It follows from what I have said that the Bank Act will expire automatically at midnight on the 30th day of November next. As honourable senators know, the Bank Act has been before the House of Commons on a number of occasions. It received second reading in the other place on October 6. It was then referred to a standing committee of the house which began its sittings on October 25. It has held 16 meetings. The progress, I am bound to report, has been rather good. Some briefs have been submitted, and a deadline for their presentation has now been set for November 30, 1966. So far, the committee has heard evidence from the Inspector General of Banks, Mr. Elderkin, and from the Governor of the Bank of Canada, Mr. Rasminsky. It has been examining two witnesses from the Canadian Bankers Association, and I am informed that there are thirteen other witnesses with presentations to be heard by the committee.

Obviously, the committee cannot conclude its deliberations before November 30. At any rate, when it does conclude its deliberations, the bill must be reported back to the house and go through the normal processes there up to third reading, at which time it will come to us. It is expected that the bill will reach us before the conclusion of the present session of Parliament.

This act provides in clause 1 of this bill that if Parliament does not sit on at least 20 days during the month of December, the banks may carry on the business of banking until the sixtieth sitting day of Parliament next thereafter and no longer.

The same provision applies to the Quebec Savings Banks. I think that is the only section with which we are concerned because, in point of fact, unless the other place should sit on Saturdays or sit during the Christmas recess, which is an anomaly in itself, it would be impossible for the house to sit for more than 17 days in December. It is therefore expected that through the operation of clause 1, which is section 6B of the bill before us, Parliament will in fact have 60 days to complete its work from the time it reassembles after the Christmas recess. The purpose of this bill is to authorize the continuation of the work of the banking institutions until the Bank Act has been passed by Parliament.

I say that it is to be expected that this can be accomplished before the end of the present session. However, it is obvious from what I have said that the present session will not likely end before Christmas, but will probably be adjourned over a Christmas recess, resume in the New Year and continue until it completes certain work.

At present there is nothing further that I have to say on this measure.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): With leave, I move that the bill be read the third time now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

CANADA LABOUR (STANDARDS) CODE

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

Hon John J. Connolly presented Bill S-54, to amend the Canada Labour (Standards) Code.

Bill read first time.

SECOND READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon John J. Connolly: With leave of the Senate, I move the second reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Where are the copies of these bills?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): These bills are being introduced into Parliament for the first time now. We are originating these bills in the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Reid: They are not on our records here.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): No, of course not. This is legislation that I have been able to obtain for introduction in the Senate in the first instance.

Honourable senators, again I have to explain a bill which has for its purpose the elimination of an anomaly, in that in the Canada Labour (Standards) Code, chapter 38 of the statutes of 1964, there are provisions in Parts III and IV for annual vacations and general holidays for workers in industries under federal jurisdiction, and there are rules whereby the workers acquire certain of these benefits either for annual vacations or for general holidays. These rules are very easy to apply in cases where an employee is working for a single employer over a period of time, but it is not so easy in the case of employees working in port areas.

This is especially true of the west coast, where the service of the longshoreman to load and unload ships is performed by him on behalf of many employers. On the west coast the employment is provided by the shipping interests, and each longshoreman works for various periods of time for many companies. There are as many as 70 or 80 companies operating on the west coast of Canada in the course of a year. For the most part the hiring of the longshoreman is done directly by the shipping companies, exclusively, in that area.

On the east coast and in the Seaway system there is a comparable situation. However, in certain ports in the east the hiring is not done by the many shipping companies who use the ports. It is done by the stevedoring companies, and they give employment to the longshoremen who work for them over an extended period.

On the west coast the longshoremen work for a shipping company while one of its ships happens to be in port. They are laid off at the end of that period of time, and they may go to work for another shipping company to deal with another ship. In other words, in this industry, particularly on the west coast of Canada, most stevedores have what is described in the bill as "multi-employer employment."

Perhaps honourable senators will allow me to read the definitions section contained in clause 1 of the bill, which will become section 34a of the act. In subsection (a) "employee" is defined in these words:

> "employee" means an employee to whom this Act applies who is engaged in a multi-employer employment;

And subsection (b) reads as follows:

> "multi-employer employment", as more particularly defined by the regulations, refers to employment in an occupation or trade in which, by the custom of that occupation or trade, any or all employees would in the usual course of a working month be ordinarily employed by more than one employer.

I have before me a document that indicates in certain cases for certain payrolls some 60 or 70 different employers hired various gangs of longshoremen for work for short periods of time while their ships were in port.

I should say that basically the purpose of the bill is to provide authority for the making of regulations which will permit these longshoremen to get the same benefits with respect to annual vacations and general holidays as people in other branches of industry under federal jurisdiction. Secondly, I should say that the pattern or custom of the port is to be of paramount importance in the framing of these regulations. In other words, the regulations are not intended to cover the floater, the worker who of his own choice moves from one place to another, from one employer to another, or from one port to another.

As I have said, the regulations are designed to give multi-employer employees the same rights to the general holidays as other people working in industries under federal control. The general holidays prescribed in section 2(f) of the Canada Labour (Standards) Code, are: New Year's Day, Good Friday, Victoria Day, Dominion Day, Labour Day, Thanksgiving Day, Remembrance Day and Christmas Day.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Are they paid for those days?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes, these are holidays with pay.

It is permissible under collective agreements for Remembrance Day to be substituted for another holiday. In certain areas Boxing Day is recognized as a local holiday, and the collective agreement allows a substitution to be made, but, generally speaking, these eight days were fixed as general holidays by Parliament during the 1965 session.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: They are paid holidays?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Who pays the employees of the multi-employer group?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): This is the problem I am coming to, if I may. For an employee who has to work at his trade as a longshoreman sporadically for different employers, it is practically impossible to provide for a day off. If he has to work on a holiday, then of course he will get a premium for working on that holiday, and that is time-and-a-half; but if he does not work on a holiday, he gets regular time.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Cape Breton): Is it not double time for holidays?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Not under the act.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: It is double time for Sundays.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Sundays may be different.

Now may I deal with the annual vacation situation? Under section 16 of the Canada Labour (Standards) Code, which we passed last year, an employee is entitled to two weeks' vacation after each year of work. Perhaps I should read section 16(1):

> Except as otherwise provided by or under this Part, every employee is entitled to and shall be granted a vacation with vacation pay of at least two weeks after every completed year of employment.

Now may I refer to section 20 of the Code, which reads as follows:

> Where the employment of an employee by an employer is terminated before the completion of the employee's year of employment, the employer shall forthwith pay to the employee
> (a) any vacation pay then owing by him to the employee under this Part in respect of any prior completed year of employment, and
> (b) four per cent of the wages of the employee during the completed portion of his year of employment.

If, for example, he worked two months, he would be entitled to 4 per cent of the wages that he earned during the completed portion of his year's employment in lieu of vacation.

Section 20 (2) has a bearing on this. It reads:

> Notwithstanding paragraph (b) of subsection (1), an employer is not required to pay an employee any amount under that paragraph unless the employee has been continuously employed by him for a period of thirty days or more.

The act is also designed to provide for the making of regulations to cover multi-employer employees or any services with any employers with whom they happen to work during the course of the year.

I may say too that the intention of the regulations is that liability for annual vacation pay and general holidays will be apportioned among the employers for whom the employee worked during his period of employment.

I know it may sound complicated, although it is really not a complicated bill. The simple explanation arises from the fact that in stevedoring, where you have so many employees working for a variety of employers, if they are to get the benefit of the holiday provisions under the Code, there must be some method of determining the portion that is attributable to each of the employers for the stevedores on his payroll at various times.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton): Who would do the apportioning?

Hon. Mr. Paterson: Is it the intention to refer this bill to committee? This is quite a complicated matter, and unless the Shipping Federation and the vessel owners had a chance to have their say, it would be unfair to pass this legislation without their knowing what it involves. Is it your intention to refer it to committee?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I am in the hands of the Senate. I have no objection to it going to committee. I am glad to do whatever the Senate desires, but I would say that generally speaking this bill is beneficial not only to the worker but to the shipping company. It removes an inequity that could conceivably be a disadvantage to both.

I think Senator O'Leary (Carleton) had a question.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton): I would like to ask who will do the apportioning as between the various people liable for the annual vacation?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I think this would result from the reports on employment which are submitted by the various shipping companies. I have examples of them here.

To take a practical example, suppose I am a stevedore, and I work ten days for X steamship company and 20 days for Y steamship company, and so on. There would be a record kept by each company, and, in fact, I would keep my own record. Let us say, for the sake of argument, that I work for five different shipping companies during the course of the year. In that case I would say that the responsibility for my vacation would be equally apportioned between those five shipping companies for which I worked.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I think Senator O'Leary (Carleton) asked the question I was going to ask. Who actually makes the apportionment? Is there a central office to which these reports go?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes. As I conceive the situation, the regulations would provide that there be an officer of the Department of Labour who would administer them, and if there is any difficulty about the amount of the apportionment as between the companies, then representations could be made by the companies concerned as well as by the employee.

Hon. Mr. Fournier (De Lanaudière): May I be permitted a question? What happens if a stevedore takes no vacation at all, and works all the year through?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): In that case he is entitled to pay in lieu of time off, as is provided for in the act. In any event, it would be apportioned among his employers in the same way as it is done in other industries under federal jurisdiction.

Hon. Fred M. Blois: I think I heard the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) say that it is possible for these men to work for 50 or 60 different companies during the year. If that is so I am wondering why it is so important that this bill be passed today. If there are so many companies involved then perhaps they should be given the opportunity of studying this bill and coming before a committee of the Senate in order to present their views. We are noted here for giving everybody an opportunity to be heard. The honourable Leader of the Government gave an example of a stevedore working for five or six companies, but it is possible that he could work for 50 companies in a year.

This bill seems to be very cumbersome. I am not opposed to it, but I have not read it and I do not understand it. Perhaps there are other honourable senators who do not understand it either. I do not think it should be hurried through.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): If the bill seems to be complicated then that is because I have made it appear so.

Let me say quite frankly that there is a strike on the west coast at this time. There has been considerable labour unrest. One of the points of grievance is a situation which this bill seeks to correct. I have no intention of urging the Senate not to send this bill to a committee, but we thought we were sitting for today only, and I am thinking of our colleagues who, because travel arrangements are difficult, found it impossible to arrive here in time today.

Would the Senate give consideration to sending this bill to a committee this evening, and hearing the Minister and his officials? If the committee is not satisfied with the explanations given, then we can resume our sitting in the house, and adjourn the debate. I would be perfectly happy to move that this bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, which could sit at eight o'clock this evening to hear the minister and his officials. I am sure they will be able to throw much more light on it than I have been able to do this afternoon. Would that be satisfactory?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Blois: Honourable senators, I still do not think I have made my point clear. This is a bill that affects the companies hiring the men, and surely it is not going to be passed without their having an opportunity to present their views. That cannot be done in a hurry, having regard to the difficulty in travelling at this time. It would be very unfair, in my view, for this chamber to pass this bill today.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I do not object to what the honourable senator has said. This is the point Senator Paterson raised. What I suggest is that the bill be considered by the committee this evening. If the honourable senator has the same feeling after the committee has heard the minister, then he can make his point to the committee, and the committee can decide what should be done.

Hon. Lionel Choquette: Honourable senators, I fail to see the reason for the rush in sending this bill to a committee and having it dealt with tonight, even with the presence and counsel of the Minister, because it cannot be given Royal Assent today. We are having Royal Assent at quarter to six this afternoon, and that is in 20 minutes' time. Would not the honourable Leader of the Government be satisfied, having given his explanation, that the bill be read the second time and then be referred to the committee which will sit next week?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): The bill cannot receive Royal Assent today, not only because that comes up in 20 minutes' time but because the bill has to be passed by the House of Commons. We are not going to be able to dispose of it finally, in any event. It has to go to the House of Commons, so the question of Royal Assent does not enter into the picture.

What I am concerned about is having the committee sit tonight and deciding whether the minister's explanation is satisfactory. We might then resume our sitting this evening and read the bill the third time, instead of sitting tomorrow. But, if it is the desire of the committee to adjourn in order to hear further witnesses then, of course, it will be up to the committee to say so.

Hon. Mr. Blois: May I ask the honourable Leader of the Government one other question? Have the shipping companies been informed of this bill? Do they know anything about it?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I think that is a more appropriate question for the minister, but I would think that the shipping companies know all about this bill.

Hon. Mr. Blois: We have not seen the bill ourselves, and I am wondering how other people have been able to see it.

Hon. Malcolm Hollett: Honourable senators, in my view it would be a mistake to rush through a bill as important as this. There are many questions that have to be resolved. If I am a longshoreman and I have worked only nine months this year, who pays, and in what proportion, for my holidays? If we are a responsible body—and I think we are—then we must hear from the shipping companies. We must not rush this bill through under any circumstances.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I understand from what the honourable Leader of the Government has said that there is a situation on the west coast that is causing some concern. It seems to me that his proposal is a very reasonable one. He is not necessarily suggesting that we should give the bill third reading tonight. All he is suggesting is that we should obtain the advantage of the minister's opinion this evening. It may be satisfactory, or it may not, but in either case we will be better informed.

Hon. Mr. Reid: What about our receiving a copy of the bill? I have not seen it.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I am sure we will be able to see the bill between now and this evening. My point is that there is no disadvantage to anyone in the committee's meeting this evening and hearing the minister. We can decide what to do after hearing him. It seems to me that is the procedure we should follow.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable Senators, I shall have to come with an olive branch in my hand.

We were called here to deal with the bill to amend the National Housing Act, 1954, and that bill has been discussed and passed. There followed then an innocuous and routine bill providing for the extension of the provisions of the Bank Act, and that has been disposed of. But, in the notice we received to assemble here today there was no mention of the bill now before us, and perhaps some of our colleagues who are not present today would have attended this sitting had they known that this matter was to be discussed.

Not long ago I heard over the radio or TV that there had been 155 strikes in the Province of Quebec this year. There are still strikes that have not been settled, especially that of Air Canada.

I find that this bill may have a different interpretation. In fact, in the explanatory notes "stevedores" are mentioned. On the other hand, in the bill the definition of "multi-employer employment" is not clear, and there is nothing in the bill which mentions that it applies only to stevedores. It should apply also to employees of the chartered banks—

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It might; that is true.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: In fact, honourable colleagues will admit that it would apply to all classes of employment which could be compared according to the relationship of employer and employee—to the shipping industry, the banking business, or to the railways, or anything else. Therefore, we have in this legislation provisions that apply to the whole labour world, and it is described as innocuous. I cannot agree to that, especially when we have to deal with trade unions as they are now, when the leaders of the unions are so exacting, and when there is in the House of Commons a piece of legislation which would allow the civil servants to strike.

Permission was given by the previous government of the Province of Quebec to strike, and many strikes are occurring there. There is always the threat of a strike in the public service.

I have been interested in labour all my life. At one time when there were 800 railway employees, some working on the trains, others in shops, I had to work for them, I had to do the work of the union leaders and I had to travel from Moncton to Toronto for the defence of the rights of the railway employees. That is known especially by all the railway employees east of Montreal. The union leaders smoked big cigars and wore big gold watch chains, and they were eating continually.

At one time a former union leader had an appointment by Mr. Mackenzie King to a position in the service. He did not call himself a civil servant; he was a public servant. He was eating all the time. If I went to a restaurant and saw him, he would be munching all the time, so much so that I said to Mr. King, "If you appoint him again, put him near a cafeteria so as to satisfy his hunger." I will not give you his name because he is dead and he must be with the blessed ones in the great au-delà.

I spoke to Humphrey Mitchell who was then Minister of Labour. At the time of the Ford strike in Windsor, men were coming to Parliament to canvass, in spite of regulations. However, I met a group of nice fellows and I said to them, "Do you think it is the best thing to do to come to me and to speak over the head of your leader?" I repeated that and they said there was something in it. That is true. The people who belong to unions do not always agree with what is said by their leaders, because they are free men and free women, but they belong to an organization which is supposed to help them.

Why is freedom famous and extolled by all the labour unions? It is that a man who works somewhere is free not to belong to any union or in a closed shop. He is free provided he pays his dues. The Rand formula means freedom for a worker to pay union dues if he does not belong to the union. Everybody knows that.

To conclude what I have to say in the friendliest manner, one of the unions said that they were sending observers to see what we are doing in the Senate and in the House of Commons, to see what Parliament is doing and to check up on us. They would be welcome, and if they came here and attended a sitting of this house or one of our committees they would be greatly surprised to see the quantity of work being performed by the Senate. The same applies to the House of Commons. I have no power of attorney to speak for you, but I myself invite here all union leaders and all of those who belong to unions, especially the working men who are not on the executive, upon one condition, that they do not make false reports of what is being done and said here.

If they cannot come, they have only to subscribe to Hansard, which records our debates faithfully. They should read Hansard of both houses and the reports of committees of both houses. However, they must not have a false impression of what we are doing here.

Union leaders are not the only ones who look after the affairs of labour. Many men I know and respect are friends of labour and never miss an opportunity to defend the rights of labour, even when they are abandoned by the union leaders.

Honourable colleagues, you may ask all the employees on the trains, the conductors, the brakemen, the men who look after the cars, and the employees of the express companies, if they have friends who are not the heads of their unions, and they will answer that there are many of them. We need not look so far away. Next to me is Senator Gordon Isnor, one of the most popular members of the Senate. He was formerly in the House of Commons, and he knew 9 out of 10, if not 99 out of 100 of his constituents by name. He was most popular with the railway employees, because he fought the case of each one of them for the very good reason that the unions were not always there to support them. And besides that, there is Rule G. Senator Isnor knows about Rule G. Nobody can do anything. The unions say we—

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I wonder if the honourable senator would mind an interruption at this time? His Honour the Speaker has already read the letter indicating that there will be the Royal Assent and that the Chief Justice of Canada will arrive here at 5.45 p.m. It might serve the honourable gentleman's convenience if the Senate were to adjourn now and then he could conclude his speech when we reassemble at 8 o'clock this evening.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: I will say thank you just to affirm my rights.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Does the honourable senator intend to speak this evening when we reassemble at 8 o'clock?

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: I have said "thank you". That is my peroration.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I did not intend to shut the honourable senator off. If he desires to speak tonight, I have no objection. Otherwise, my intention is that the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, and I would suggest that the committee meet tonight at 8 o'clock. If the honourable senator desires to speak further, the house will adjourn, after Royal Assent, until 8 p.m. and we can come back and finish the debate on second reading.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: I did not hear the hour. Will the committee to which this bill is referred sit before 8 p.m.?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): No, we cannot do that. This bill must have second reading before it can be referred to a committee. I am proposing that, if the debate does not finish immediately, we come back at 8 o'clock and complete the debate, and thereafter have the committee meeting. As Senator Choquette knows, I am thinking of the situation which exists because we were called here for only one day.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: I am in a conciliatory mood and all I would ask of the leader is to tell us what is the urgency for this measure.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): As I have indicated already, I understand the situation on the west coast in respect of certain labour problems out there is critical. I would ask the honourable senator to go to the committee; I will arrange to have the minister there, so that he may ask him directly and get a much better explanation than any I can give him.

Hon. Mr. Paterson: I think we realize that there is a good deal of urgency about this matter, and I am hopeful that the minister will be able to clear it up.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: If the leader says so, I will withdraw all objection.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West), bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Robert Taschereau, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned and being come with their Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give Royal Assent to the following bill:

An Act to amend the National Housing Act, 1954.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned until the call of the bell at approximately 9 p.m.

Upon resuming at 9 p.m.

CANADA LABOUR (STANDARDS) CODE

BILL TO AMEND—AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. T. D'Arcy Leonard, Acting Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the following report of the committee on Bill S-54, to amend the Canada Labour (Standards) Code:

> Your committee recommends that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 300 copies in French of its proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Leonard: I move, with leave of the Senate, that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Leonard, Acting Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill S-54, to amend the Canada Labour (Standards) Code, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I move that the bill be read the third time now.

Hon. Mr. Leonard: Honourable senators, first I wish to say a few words in explanation of the proceedings of the committee and this report which has just been adopted.

The committee met at 8 o'clock this evening and had before it the Honourable John J. R. Nicholson, Minister of Labour; Mr. Jean Dupré, Assistant Deputy Minister of Labour; Mr. Harris Johnstone, Director of the Labour Standards Branch of the Department of Labour; and Miss E. Lorentsen, their legal adviser.

The Minister explained the bill. I think it was apparent to all that the bill is to correct a mistake which, had it been brought to the attention of the Government and of Parliament at the time when the original statute was being introduced last year, this type of provision would have been included in the bill.

The employee who perhaps is employed for only a few hours or a few days at a time by one employer and then subsequently is employed by another employer, becomes known as a multi-employer employee. By this amendment such an employee is brought into line with the employee who has one employer throughout the entire year.

At present the employee of a multi-employer has no person against whom the cost of his eight holidays is properly chargeable, whereas in the case of the employee who is employed for the whole year by one employer, the cost is charged against that employer. In the other case, a man may be working only a few days before one of the statutory holidays comes up, and the question arises, who is to pay him for that statutory holiday. A very simple system is being worked out, and though it is not in the act it will be in the regulations, whereby 3 per cent is added to each employee's wage, whether it be for the hour or for the day, and this charge compensates the employee for his statutory holidays. By being charged per hour or per day it has the effect of automatically distributing the vacation pay cost over whoever is employing him throughout the whole year.

The Minister also said that this was a matter of some urgency, because there had been some proceedings which had resulted in jail sentences in connection with disputes by reason of the provisions of the act in this particular respect, and that he had given an undertaking that he would introduce a bill to correct the situation before the end of the year.

This is legislation which has been requested by the representatives of the employees to correct the situation from which they are suffering. It has been discussed with and is not objected to by the employers represented by the shipping companies on both the east and west coasts and on the St. Lawrence River.

I think, honourable senators, that is the explanation which satisfies all members of the committee.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time, and passed.

CONSUMER CREDIT (COST OF LIVING)

THIRD ANNUAL REVIEW OF ECONOMIC COUNCIL OF CANADA REFERRED TO JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. John J. Connolly, with leave of the Senate, moved:

That the Third Annual Review of the Economic Council of Canada relating to Prices, Productivity and Employment, dated November 1966, which was tabled in the Senate today, be referred to the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Consumer Credit and Cost of Living.

Motion agreed to.

He said: Honourable senators, may I take this opportunity to say that one of the joint chairmen of the committee has asked me to inform the Senate—and this applies to any senator who cares to attend—that Mr. Deutsch will be before the committee on Thursday next and will be available for questioning in connection with this report. I thought this might be of interest to members of the committee and to other senators who are available.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate, that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, November 29, at 8 p.m.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILL

RAINBOW PIPE LINE CORPORATION— THIRD READING

On the Order for Tuesday, November 29, 1966:

Third reading of Bill S-52, intituled: "An Act to incorporate Rainbow Pipe Line Corporation". (Honourable Senator Hugessen).

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, may I ask your indulgence. I should like to have unanimous consent to call now the first order of the Orders of the Day for Tuesday, November 29 next. It is the third reading of Bill S-52, entitled An Act to incorporate Rainbow Pipe Line Corporation.

This is a private bill which has been passed by the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications and which is standing for third reading.

I am informed by the sponsors that it would be a source of convenience to them if this bill could be given third reading and sent to the House of Commons. I see no objection to it and I hope it will meet with approval.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West), for Hon. Mr. Hugessen, with leave of the Senate, moved that this bill be read the third time now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I am always saying thank you. But before we adjourn, may I say how grateful I am for the magnificent co-operation I have had today. We have gone through a great deal of work only because of the wonderful co-operation everybody has displayed. We have had a good day in the Senate.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, November 29 at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Monday, November 28, 1966

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

GREY CUP

NATIONAL FOOTBALL PLAYOFF IN VANCOUVER

Hon. Arthur M. Pearson: Honourable senators, before the house begins its business, I would like to call attention to an event of some moment which took place in Vancouver last Saturday. As one who comes from western Canada, I was quite pleased to see the Saskatchewan Roughriders take the Ottawa Rough Riders. One could say that the capital of Saskatchewan took the capital of Canada.

I am sure that all of you who saw that game were pleased with it. It was a wonderful game, with great sportsmanship being shown on both sides. Both teams fought hard, but the western team was a little stronger. However, we should congratulate both teams for their fine sportsmanship and the wonderful show they put on.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I certainly wish to thank Senator Pearson for his remarks concerning an event that has become almost an institution in Canada, namely, the playing of the Grey Cup football game. I am sure all senators would want the leader to congratulate most heartily the winners, the Saskatchewan Roughriders. They played a magnificent game of football. It was a great spectacle all round.

Having done my official duty as leader, may I as a citizen of Ottawa quote one of the great classical expressions that originated in Brooklyn? "Just wait 'til next year!"

PUBLIC SERVICE

JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN COMMONS MEMBERSHIP

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the name of Mr. Patterson has been substituted for that of Mr. Leboe on the Special Joint Committee on the Public Service.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 9, 1966

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-248, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1967.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) moved, with leave, that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that he had received the following communication.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE
Ottawa
28 November 1966

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Hon. Robert Taschereau, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, acting as Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 28th November, at 9.45 p.m. for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
A. G. Cherrier
Assistant Secretary
to the Governor General

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Copies of Memorandum of Understanding between the Governments of Canada and Hong Kong regarding exports of certain cotton apparel and fabrics from Hong Kong to Canada. (English and French texts).

Report on the Operation of Agreements with the Provinces under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostics Services Act for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1966, pursuant to section 9 of the said Act, chapter 28, Statutes of Canada, 1957. (English and French texts).

Report of the Superintendent of Insurance for Canada, Volume II, Annual Statements of Fire and Casualty Insurance Companies for the year ended December 31, 1965, pursuant to section 9 of the Department of Insurance Act, chapter 70, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE—DOCUMENTS DEPOSITED IN THE CLERK'S OFFICE

He said: Honourable senators, while I am dealing with documents, may I, with your indulgence, ask to be relieved of an undertaking I gave honourable Senator Ross Macdonald on November 22 last. After I had tabled certain documents with respect to the recent federal-provincial meetings, Senator Macdonald (Brantford) suggested I should circulate them among all senators.

I have in my hand copies of these documents in English and French and, as honourable senators can see, they form a very thick pile. Not every senator will require a copy.

I know that Senator Macdonald (Brantford) would be able to examine the material I have here. I do have one extra copy, and I wondered whether it would be satisfactory if I informed honourable senators that in the office of the Clerk there will be an extra copy of these documents available for any senator who wishes to inspect them, with the exception of the document entitled "Federal-Provincial Tax Structure Committee." That is the report dated September 14 and 15, 1966. About 60 copies of that report are available in the office of the Clerk, and I am sure that any senator who requires a copy could obtain one. If we run short, I would appreciate it if anyone who has not been accommodated would let me know.

Under those circumstances, may I be relieved of the undertaking I gave the other evening?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Thank you very much.

The Senate resumed from Thursday, November 17, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Roebuck for the second reading of Bill S-49, to amend the Criminal Code.

Hon. Lionel Choquette: Honourable senators, the sponsor of this bill, Senator Roebuck, has given us, as he always does, a very clear and concise explanation of the proposed legislation which if passed will be incorporated in the Canadian Criminal Code.

I must say at the outset that Senator Roebuck must be admired for his courage in sponsoring this bill, because in doing so he is in some measure advocating something which he has combatted all his life, namely, stifling to some extent freedom of speech and freedom of the press.

When listening to his remarks and those of Senator Croll, I could not help thinking that if I were to present such legislation I would have two formidable adversaries vehemently opposing it, namely, the sponsor of this bill and his good friend Senator Croll.

Honourable senators, I thought that the sponsor and Senator Croll were speaking with tongue in cheek when they spoke about this bill. But I watched them closely, and seeing no bulge on either side of their face I had to conclude that they were not speaking with tongue in cheek but that they were speaking in all sincerity.

This proposed legislation is a matter of great concern not only to the Canadian people but to parliamentarians of all political parties, and to editorial writers throughout Canada.

Seven honourable senators have thus far participated in the debate, and four of them have unequivocally stated that in a peaceful country such as ours this proposed legislation is absolutely unnecessary. Let me be the fifth one to take the same attitude for the same reasons advanced by these honourable gentlemen. Allow me to add also that were this debate to be prolonged in this house, it is my opinion that the great majority on both sides would oppose this bill, not because they are antagonistic to any identifiable group, but because they would fail to see the necessity for such legislation.

Honourable senators, since the advent of the printing press, newspapers in this country—and in any other country, for that matter—have been the ramparts against oppression and tyranny, and have always championed the cause of freedom of speech and freedom of the press. Yet, if we read the several editorials dealing with this proposed legislation, we will realize that the writers of such editorials are gravely concerned over the determination of the present Government to incorporate such legislation in our Criminal Code.

I agree entirely with Senator Phillips when he said that with this legislation, the organizations promoting and distributing hate literature will be driven underground.

At this stage, I would like to quote excerpts from a few editorials published in recent months on this important matter. Let me read first from the Toronto Star of November 12, 1966. The title of the editorial is "The Hate Law: Well-meant but Perilous". It says, among other things:

> The second amendment provides a two-year penalty for anyone who incites hatred or contempt against any identifiable group in any public place where such incitement is likely to lead to a breach of the peace...
> This provision is not particularly objectionable, but we question whether it is necessary. The sections of the Criminal Code dealing with sedition, unlawful assemblies and riots would seem to provide ample protection against speeches and meetings which lead, or are likely to lead, to a breach of the peace.
> It is the third amendment which is the really dangerous one. It makes it an offence punishable by two years imprisonment to promote hatred or contempt against any identifiable group by words, writings, signs or gestures.
> This is aimed, of course, at the leaflets and other propaganda of the Nazis and similar extremists. But it could very easily have the effect of stifling free discussion over a wide field of public affairs. Canada is a country of many ethnic groups, and a measure of friction between them is inevitable.

Let me quote the title from an editorial in the Globe and Mail of November 8, 1966: "A Stick for neo-Nazis would be a Stick for all". Honourable senators can imagine the content of the article, as it is explained by the title.

Let me quote from the Brandon Sun of May 24, 1966, an editorial entitled, "The Problem of Hate".

> Laws are intended for people who have their personality under control. The man who deals in hate literature reacts to forces that no law could correct. So a law against hate literature will not prevent it, and the attempt to enforce such a law could have serious consequences for free speech in this country.

The Vancouver Province of August 10, 1966, has on its editorial page this title, "Hate Control Cure worse than the Disease".

The Toronto Globe and Mail of August 23, 1966, has the title, "Value of Hate Literature Law questioned".

The London Free Press of August 29, 1966, in an article under the title, "Laws of Libel and Slander sufficient," says this:

> As for hate literature, most of it is so biased that it stands self-condemned, and only those warped beyond hope of redemption will fail to see it for what it is. No law can teach or alter a hate-filled mind, nor can bigotry or prejudice he legislated out of existence.

Honourable senators, with your indulgence I will quote some excerpts from an article written by the Reverend Ernest Marshall Howse in the Jewish Voice, a Toronto paper, and copied in the Globe and Mail about November 12 last.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Would you say who wrote the article? I did not hear the name.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: The Reverend Ernest Marshall Howse, a former Moderator of the United Church of Canada.

I should like to read some extracts from that article:

> It is of course thing to pass a law against the public advocacy of genocide. This is a definite offence and can be specifically named.
> In my judgment such a law is unnecessary. In Canada in our present day it is almost as unnecessary as passing a law making it an indictable offence to advocate the burning of witches. Canada is no more likely to undertake a programme of genocide than it is to take on a programme of burning heretics in the public square. However, genocide is a definite term and can be dealt with specifically.

Here is another paragraph from his lengthy article:

> The attempt to use law as a means of sending to jail those who spread hatred is apt to cloud still farther the processes of justice. We have not enough jails in Canada to hold people whose statements might be considered—by those who suffer from them—to incite hatred or contempt. Think of all the earnest but misguided souls who denounce the Pope as anti-Christ. Will they forthwith be carted off to jail? Should I immediately report to the police those who write to me in similar terms about the World Council of Churches? Or even about myself? What about the Roman Catholic publications, which may still be speaking in the all too common language of the past that Protestant literature is a dangerous and hateful attack upon the Christian faith. All these can be judged to incite hatred or contempt. How could any judge determine whether or not there are reasonable grounds for believing such things to be true?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Is religion included in the bill?

Hon. Mr. Choquette: No. I am coming to that, because I have asked that it be included. I am going to be a member of the committee and, if you ever saw anybody fighting to have one word included in a bill, you will see this little fellow insisting that religion should be and must be included in the identifiable group. However, I will deal with it.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Thank you.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: This is a further paragraph from the same article:

> Hate literature will be stifled more quickly by the silence of contempt than by mob violence and jail sentences. It would be more rational to ignore its producers and purveyors as the perverts they are, than to dignify them with the suggestion that they are likely to take over Canada.

Then, one last paragraph of this excellent article reads as follows:

> The attempt to crack down by force on utterances tending to incite hatred or contempt is an adventure in futility. The clever will only do it but more effectively within the law. The only real antidote to ill-will is to cultivate within the community, and spread beyond the community, a common spirit of understanding and good will, and a discerning appreciation for every form of excellence. Here is an area where we must overcome evil with good.

Hon. Mr. Bourget: Which newspaper was it published in?

Hon. Mr. Choquette: I gave the name at the beginning, but perhaps you are interested in buying a copy of it. It is the Jewish Voice, a Toronto paper, in the issue of November 12, 1966, or thereabouts.

Hon. Mr. Bourget: I did not say I was going to buy it. I was just interested.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Well, you can get it.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): I thought it was the United Church Observer.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: No, it is the Jewish Voice.

Hon. Mr. Leonard: Was that article not reprinted in the Toronto Globe and Mail?

Hon. Mr. Choquette: I am coming to that, because I have the particular issue of the Globe. It does not reprint all of the article, but this man is so determined to influence the parliamentarians who are dealing with this question that, in the Toronto Telegram of November 26, 1966, which is quite recent, there is an article entitled "Former Moderator's View".

> Cleric raps proposed bill. Hate law smacks of Nazi storm troopers.

This is how he terminates his article, which should be read and which I commend to all honourable senators:

> Not the way
> Duplessis was not facing any "clear and present danger" of Communism which warranted the despotic measures of the padlock law. Even if he had been, the padlock law was not the right way to deal with it.
> And we are not facing any clear and present danger of Nazism which warrants the sweeping and dangerous clauses proposed in the hate law.
> To make laws for Canadian society as though we were on the brink of toppling either into Communism or Nazism is as unnecessary as to make martial law the normal order of our community life.
> It may possibly be that some addition to our present law is necessary to deal with literature and speech that does, in fact, incite to violence—including that which incites violence against the crackpots. But, certainly, the hate law, as at present proposed, should be summarily rejected. It is too much a resort to Nazi methods as a means of stopping Nazi ideas.

Hon. Mr. Walker: Who is the author of that?

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Again, the same Reverend Howse, former United Church Moderator.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): Just recently retired.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: But he is not senile. He is smart enough to see through this.

Hon. Mr. Power: I hope he did not intimate that Duplessis was a Communist.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: No. I am going to deal with Duplessis' padlock law. We have one similar to it now 25 or 30 years later. I shall deal with that in a few minutes.

Now, honourable senators, the first of the committee's recommendations—that is the committee appointed more than a year ago by the Minister of Justice and headed by Professor Maxwell Cohen, Dean of Law at McGill—would appear to be the simplest of definition, determination and enforcement: that relating to genocide. But the two other categories would be far more difficult to define and prove: far more susceptible to variable interpretation with the guilt factor shaded from hatred to contempt. There is a vast difference between the two, and indeed it is difficult to conceive how a conviction for group defamation could be obtained under the latter, so general is the terminology, so broad its possible application. Further, it trespasses dangerously upon the vital concern of free speech.

Let us deal now with section 267B of the bill.

> Every one who, by communicating statements in any public place, incites hatred or contempt against any identifiable group where such incitement is likely to lead to a breach of the peace, is guilty of—

All honourable senators know the punishment and the penalty, but subclause (3) says:

> No person shall be convicted of an offence under subsection (2) where he establishes—

And this is a defence.

> (a) that the statements communicated were true; or
> (b) that they were relevant to any subject of public interest, the public discussion of which was for the public benefit, and that on reasonable grounds he believed them to be true.

The first part of that puts teeth into the law, but the second part removes them immediately, and I will tell you why. As it reads, no person shall be convicted of an offence under subsection (2) where he establishes, (a) "that the statements communicated were true", or that they were "relevant to any subject of public interest, the public discussion of which was for the public benefit, and that on reasonable grounds he believed them to be true."

These provisos, honourable senators, invite an individual or several individuals to make what is called a test case.

Before I deal with these provisos, let me say this—and Senator Lang has already pointed this out in his able speech of last week—that this throws the proposed legislation into conflict with a root principle of Canadian justice: that the accused is not required to prove his innocence, but the Crown to prove his guilt.

With regard to truth of the statement being a valid defence in such cases, the committee, and in fact this proposed legislation, departs from the recent British precedent. The British Race Relations Act of 1965 proscribes public discussion on all matters involving colour, race or ethnic and national origin if it occurs in a form which is threatening, abusive or insulting, and likely to stir up hatred, regardless of the merits of its contents—that is, irrespective of its truth or falsity.

As I have already pointed out, a person accused under the proposed law can escape conviction by proving that the statements he made about any identifiable group—Communists, separatists, Jews, Negroes, Jehovah's Witnesses, et cetera—are true. This opens up the possibility of court hearings in which hatemongers produce "scientific evidence" —which all hate groups have—to prove the inferiority of a given group. Today, with statistics on nearly every subject being available to the public, it is very easy to ascertain the truth of statements before making them in public, either verbally or in print.

Ladies and gentlemen, in 1937, when I had just been practising law some five years, we had in the Town of Eastview, a sensational case called Rex v. Palmer. It looked very innocent from the beginning. Miss Palmer, who was not even connected with a welfare or social agency, was going from door to door selling contraceptives. She did not choose the Anglo-Saxon parts either of the City of Ottawa or of Eastview. She went into the French-Canadian parts where the people were 99.9 per cent French Canadian.

She knew that she was going to provoke a discussion, and she was probably hoping that there would be a test case. There was, and this case lasted about one month in the magistrate's court in Eastview, in the County of Carleton, and it merely provoked a lengthy and bitter debate between medical doctors.

doctors of divinity from different religious denominations, theologians, psychologists, professors of Canon law, priests, ministers and general medical practitioners.

When reading the accounts in the newspapers, the members of the public were asking themselves: How can all these people be justified in giving this type of evidence? Honourable senators, it was due to a proviso similar to that proposed in this legislation which says that:

> The accused is entitled to set up a defence that the public good was served, but in order to succeed he must establish
> (a) that the public good was served by the acts that are alleged to constitute the offence; and,
> (b) that the acts alleged did not extend beyond what served the public good.

After a month's discussion and after the case was appealed to the Appeal Court of Ontario, it was decided that this "nice" girl had served the public good. So that now the door is wide open to the sale of contraceptives, not only in drug stores but from door to door.

Honourable senators, there is another well-known test case, concerning a pamphlet printed and published by the Witnesses of Jehovah entitled, "Quebec's Burning Hate." I am sure we all followed that case. Those people did not go and sell these in Port Hope, where they "like" bilingual signs! They just went to small villages in the Province of Quebec where 99 or maybe 100 per cent of the population were French Catholics, and they distributed this hate literature. The case went to court. It went to the Appeal Court and to the Supreme Court of Canada, and our learned judges said that in the name of freedom of speech these people had done no wrong.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Is that the Saumur case?

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Yes, that is it.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): It was quite a divided court.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Yes, it must have been divided.

Then, we have defamatory libel, which is very similar to the proposed legislation. Regarding defamatory libel, as the falsity of defamatory matter is presumed the prosecution need not produce evidence of its falsity. The onus is upon the defendant to prove that it is true, that it is a matter of public interest, and that the publication of it was for the public benefit; and the whole of the libel must be proved true. The justification must be as broad as the charge. If a material part be not proved to be true, the Crown will be entitled to a verdict.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: That is the law of libel in general, is it not?

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Yes, that is what I said, and I think this proposed legislation is almost a codification of the law of libel as embodied in the Criminal Code.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Honourable senators, I am almost through. I had not intended to speak as long as I have, but while we are dealing with literature, whether it be called hate literature, pernicious literature or obscene literature, I think we are faced today with a much more serious problem than that of hate literature, and it is that of obscene literature.

In every corner store, in every drug store, in any tobacco store, you can purchase pornographic books dealing with Lesbianism, homosexuality, adultery, masochism, sadism and violence. And what is being done to prevent that type of literature being circulated and sold? Honourable senators, I say that this is an urgent problem, one which is much more urgent than the legislation we are now being asked to pass. This problem of corrupting morals is with us now and has been for some time. We as parliamentarians, as legislators, must do something about this, or we will be a party to changing our young boys and girls into perverts and degenerates.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: What about free speech?

Hon. Mr. Choquette: That is it. We are not concerned with free speech, seizure and lock when faced with that type of literature. I am saying that we should be more concerned with this type of literature, than with this legislation that is not vital, that is not necessary, that is not urgent, and legislation that we may be asked to pass 10, 20 or 30 years from now. I say we are faced with an urgent problem, one that concerns everybody now.

The same remarks apply to our television. Surely, honourable senators, we have sane people in the C.B.C.! Surely, if we pay them $25,000 or $30,000 a year we can ask them not to insult our intelligence! Surely, we can ask these people not to insult Christianity and Christian principles which are dear to the majority of people in this country! And yet last evening—I do not know how many honourable senators saw this—there appeared on television one of the most disgusting spectacles I have ever seen.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Compared to this program, "This Hour Has Seven Days" was mild. There was Lesbianism and homosexuality. People were asked: "Do you have as much thrill with a man as you have with a woman? Do you have as much thrill with a Lesbian as you have with a man?"—and similar questions—all before the eyes and ears of our children.

Honourable senators, let us not look to legislation which is unnecessary and uncalled for at the moment, but let us look at these problems which are urgent.

I am going to conclude my remarks with an excerpt from an article, one of the most fascinating I have read in years, entitled, "A Jew in Germany," the author being Irving Layton. He is a young Jewish poet who was quite reluctant to go to West Germany because he thought it was his duty, because of the persecution of his forefathers, his father and mother, to hate the German people for the rest of his days—the generation after the last war and the following generations as long as he would live. But when he went there he realized that he could not hate indefinitely, and that he should banish hatred from his heart. Here are the most touching things he had to say at the conclusion of his article:

> In West Berlin I was in a playground and watched some German children, no less fair and helpless than my own two-year old son, toddling toward the sandbox. It was the greatest Jew of all who said, 'Suffer little children to come unto me.' He meant, don't infect them with your lousy hatreds and prejudices. Give them a break, don't cripple them, don't stunt them with the cruel nonsense, the racial and political ticks you've picked up along the way. If you can't delouse yourselves, at least let the children grow up free of them. Yes, that's what I think Jesus meant.
> Well, when I saw the blonde, blue-eyed toddlers in the sandbox and afterward held one of them on my knee, I mentally said, 'No one, but no one, is ever going to hurt those kids.' Not while I'm alive, by God.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—C.B.C. TELEVISION PROGRAM "SUNDAY"

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, may I rise on a question of privilege concerning a point raised by the honourable Senator Choquette with respect to a program that he apparently viewed on television last evening?

I rise now on a question of privilege in my private capacity as a member of the Senate because I, along with other honourable senators, have today received a number of telephone calls describing situations in homes in which the children were sent off to bed, or the television set was switched off, because of the content of the program mentioned by Senator Choquette. Concern has been expressed by adults in respect of the kind of performance that was broadcast by the national television network last evening.

This program dealt with sex matters in a way that I could not describe half as luridly as did my honourable friend Senator Choquette. It dealt also with sensational aspects which were—and I think not for the first time—anti-religious. If they were not anti-religious, at least they offended the sensibilities of a large segment of the population of this country.

Because of the representations I and other honourable senators have received, and because of what Senator Choquette has said, I should like to say, on a point of privilege, on my own responsibility and without engaging in the debate on the bill before us, that at one time it was felt that censorship should be introduced in an endeavour to regulate the movie industry. The Hay's office was established. I cannot say whether it was completely successful because I do not know, but at least it was an attempt to instill a sense of responsibility into people who might use a medium of communication to the detriment of the public at large.

My honourable friend referred also to the existence on the newsstands of periodicals and other kinds of literature of a very obscene character. The Honourable E. Davie Fulton, when he was in Opposition at an earlier time, caused some legislation dealing with this situation to be put on the statute books. The law, of course, does not succeed always in establishing the ideals of the moral code. The Honourable Mr. Fulton went as far as he could, but I think it is up to the public authority in cases of that kind to deal effectively with them, and without fear of the consequences. There are organizations such as the Legion of Decency and church groups and others, which have tried to do something about obscenity on our newsstands.

But, with respect to these other forms of communication such as radio and television I wonder whether consideration should not be given to the question of some sort of censorship. I am not thinking of a rigid censorship, because we do cherish the ideals of freedom of expression and freedom of speech in this country. One wonders whether a sense of responsibility actuates people who put such programs before the public. It must be remembered that these programs we are talking about are not something which you go out and buy like a book or a ticket to a theatre. They are piped into your living room, and on a Sunday night when youngsters and teenaged children are exposed to them.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien (Bedford): And at public expense.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes, at public expense. We have to rely on the responsibility of the higher officials, but upon inquiry I am informed that the higher officials of the public broadcasting system do not know what is going to be on these programs until they actually turn on the switch. This is a situation that should concern us all, because this program last night was a complete outrage against every decent-minded Canadian.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I did not see all of this program, but the stories I have heard about it outraged me.

Honourable senators, there was another item on a local television station tonight which I thought went beyond the limit which the owners of the station or the network should go. It concerned young students from a local university who had made their way into the House of Commons on Friday. To prove a point, one of them had concealed in his coat pocket a tape recorder, and by means of the public address system had recorded a question that was asked in the house.

Nobody objects to this kind of thing, but those students said they went in there to prove that a person could very easily walk into the House of Commons—or the Senate for that matter, or any other congregation of people in the country—with a similar small package that could easily have been four or five sticks of dynamite, and blow the whole place up.

Perhaps these young men rendered a service by pointing this out. Thereafter they saw the Sergeant-at-Arms. It may be that security measures in this building are not adequate. But, what I object to is that this might cause some demented people to say to themselves: This is my opportunity.

Why is this kind of thing done? Why are these people, who have access to an instrument that has so much power over public opinion, allowed to abuse their responsibility by using it in this way? These are questions which should be engaging our attention.

I rather expected a great deal more protest than I have heard today, but on my personal responsibility as a senator I owe it, if not to myself, then to the chamber and to the listening public of this country, to rise and protest, even though I do so on a point of privilege and without taking part in this debate.

Hon. Mr. White: Honourable senators, I move that this debate be adjourned.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, it has been moved by honourable Senator White, seconded by honourable Senator Aseltine—

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, before his Honour the Speaker puts the motion may I add a comment to what has already been said? I am very grateful to Senator Choquette and Senator Connolly (Ottawa West) for what they have said about the C.B.C. program of last evening. They have said what they had to say well, but I do not think enough has been said on this subject, and I hope that other senators will follow me and express their views.

What is so often forgotten in this particular context is that this was a C.B.C. program. I agree entirely with what has been said. It was outrageous. It was disgusting. It was an affront to every adult and every young person who happened to be watching it.

What is also often forgotten is the fact that no private television station in the United States, Great Britain or here, would dare to put on a program such as this. We hear a great deal of criticism of our private enterprise system, but let us not forget that the private enterprise system would bring into being automatic checks because no sponsor or advertiser for one moment would allow himself to be associated with that kind of an affront to those he expects to have as his customers.

This brings me to the point that the money that was available for the production of this piece of utter rubbish—and this is not the first such material that has been produced on the

C.B.C.—is money collected from the public. At least $80 million of public money is used to support the C.B.C.

What is the answer? We are all concerned about censorship. We are all interested in the preservation of freedom of speech, but I am convinced that no one in this chamber, and extremely few Canadians throughout the land, have any interest whatsoever in the proliferation and perpetuation of this kind of license.

Honourable senators, is there an answer? I suggest there must be an answer. An old maxim which has governed our affairs for many years is that there shall be no taxation without representation. The public is being taxed to provide the money for these programs. Is the public not then entitled to be represented in the determination of the broad policy of the kind of program that is offered to them and their children, as well as to their friends?

I suggest that this is not in any way a question of censorship of the whole broad spectrum of presentation of ideas to the public in a literary form, newspaper form, or pictorial form. I suggest this is an area in which the Canadian people are themselves assuming the responsibility of perpetrating a degree of license that no other television system anywhere else in the world tolerates.

This is us, honourable senators; it is our money, it is our decision whether or not to allow this to continue. I suggest there should be a protest made from this chamber to those who are in positions of responsibility in the C.B.C. We should say to them, "Now, stop!" There is no sense in arguing about the hierarchy, the chain of command in the C.B.C. This argument has gone on and on and has appeared in the front pages of the press. The people responsible for the previous program which offended many Canadians are gone, and they have been superseded by another group which, in my judgment—if it is worth anything—is worse.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Why are they not prosecuted by the police?

Hon. Mr. Grosart: I have no responsibility, Senator Roebuck, and I do not think it is a matter of breach of the law. Maybe they are not breaking the law.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Oh, they are.

Honn. Mr. Grosart: I do not know. Perhaps under our law it is allowed in a public medium to discuss publicly the kind of matters that were discussed in this program, questions with tongue in cheek about the most intimate relationships, and not the kind of relationships between men and women, or men and men, or women and women, that anybody would be proud of.

Is it a matter for the police? I think not. I think it is a matter for the whole Canadian community. If Canadians generally do not care, are not aroused, if they want this to go on, I for one do not protest; but I do not believe the Canadian people want this kind of thing to be repeated.

In my position at this moment, it is difficult to say how a formal protest might be made from this chamber. I would like to leave that for the consideration of the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West). He has spoken strongly on the subject. If there is a way in which this chamber can go on record within the rules tonight as calling for action to prevent a repetition of that C.B.C. program last night, then I would hope that somehow he will find that way.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

On motion of Hon. Mr. White, debate adjourned.

Resolution 890, for the relief of Marie Madeleine Sontag Munz, otherwise known as Marie Madeleine Sontag Minz.

Resolutions adopted, on division.

CONSERVATION OF WATER RESOURCES

DEBATE CONCLUDED

The Senate resumed from Tuesday, July 12, the adjourned debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Gershaw, calling the attention of the Senate to the need for conserving Canada's water resources.

Hon. Norman A. MacKenzie: Honourable senators, I have listened with keen interest to the speeches delivered this evening on a most important and moving topic, because it happened to be an area in which I have had a special interest for some time, for I am concerned with human values, morality and decency; therefore, I commend the honourable senators who have spoken.

However, tonight, thanks to the courtesy of Senator Beaubien (Provencher), this topic raised by Senator Gershaw, and spoken to by Senator Cameron, has been on the order paper for some months, so I thought it would be in order to deal briefly which this topic of our fresh water resources, and to leave it for the further consideration of this honourable chamber.

It is frequently stated, with reason, that our fresh water resources are probably the most important natural resources which we possess in Canada. Like the air we breathe and the food we eat, fresh water is basic and essential to life on this planet, and obviously adequate supplies of fresh water are of tremendous importance.

In this respect, we Canadians are the most fortunate of people, for despite our relatively small population, 0.6 per cent of the world's population, we have between 25 per cent and 30 per cent of all the fresh water resources of the world.

The population of our neighbour, the United States of America, is increasing rapidly. By the year 2000 it is expected to reach the 340 million mark. Substantial areas in the United States are already short of water, and its increasing population, plus the increasing uses of and needs for fresh water, will make the shortage even more serious.

It is true that in respect of their own fresh water resources, as in many other areas, and many other countries, the people and governments of the United States have been careless and wasteful and pollution has become a major problem.

In Montreal two weeks ago an important conference attended by over 500 delegates and provincial ministers was held. The Honourable Jean-Luc Pepin was good enough to invite Senator Cameron and myself to attend as observers. Senator Cameron did attend, and I hope that in due course he will report on it.

Unfortunately, I was unable to go along, but I have heard sufficient about it and I know enough about it to realize that, in the Great Lakes, particularly in Lake Erie, and in many of our streams rivers and other lakes, even with our limited population water pollution and air pollution cause a situation which, if we do not deal with it effectively and soon, will become a major problem.

In the the United States, with their tremendous population and the kind of free-for-all life that they live, water pollution is already a major problem and contributes to their desire for increasing quantities of pure fresh water.

Regardless of this—which is, in a sense, within their own control—the Government and people of the United States are almost certain to want, and probably to need, some of our fresh water.

Science, and the economic development of nuclear energy, will make it possible to obtain quantities of fresh water from the surrounding oceans. Even so, natural fresh water, particularly in the inland sections of the continent, will always be of great importance.

I predict that in Canada in the years ahead we will have to consider and deal with this problem. Therefore, I would urge, if it is in order, that in due course we in the Senate make a thorough study of this whole question so that we may know all of the facts and obtain the most expert information in regard to it, and express ourselves publicly about it.

It is only as this is done by an increasing number of responsible people and organizations, will the importance and the magnitude of this problem become known.

I am the first to confess that I am not in a position now to do more than indicate a serious interest in the matter. However, Government policy about the export of hydro-electric power has changed radically and fundamentally in recent years. The United States—and more particularly the City of Chicago and the State of Illinois—are already diverting substantial quantities of fresh water from the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence system.

I am aware, as are all members of the Senate, that we encourage the export of our wasting assets—oil, gas and other minerals —although we know that when these have been used up they never can be replaced. In contrast, fresh water, like forests and agricultural production, with intelligent management, is a continuing resource that is self-perpetuating. It seems to me that it could be exported and sold if the return were adequate and if the necessary measures of control were set out. In regard to that, however, I am not in a position either to judge or to rule without further information and advice from those who know and who are expert in this field.

As I come from British Columbia, I have a special interest in this whole matter. As you know, we have some magnificent rivers there—the Columbia, the Fraser, the head waters of the Peace and the Liard and, farther north, the Yukon.

While rivers, lakes and fresh water are of special interest to the provinces, all of these rivers that I have mentioned, and nearly every river of importance in this country, including the St. Lawrence which in a sense is the cradle of Canada, are either interprovincial or international or both.

No intelligent measure for the use and control of these tremendously important and valuable resources can, in my opinion, be devised by the provinces alone.

Most of those rivers I have mentioned are interprovincial, and even the Fraser, which is wholly within British Columbia, because of its proximity to the Columbia—you may remember it was suggested by General McNaughton that the Columbia be diverted into the Fraser—has become very much a potential issue in this area of international and interprovincial control.

Lest some may think that this kind of study and inquiry is academic and has no practical value, I would like to cite an incident which occurred a few years ago, when the question of Canadian interest and rights in the downstream benefits of the Columbia River development were beginning to arouse public interest.

About that time, half a dozen lawyers from the University of British Columbia and the City of Vancouver attended an international meeting in Seattle, Washington, with a group of American lawyers. Our Canadian group had a special interest in international law and in the law governing international rivers. One of our group, in his research, had come across a statement of American policy known as the Harmon Doctrine, which is somewhat akin to the Monroe Doctrine. It was propounded by the then Attorney General of the United States, Mr. Harmon, about 1895. This doctrine stated firmly and simply that the United States—and by implication other countries or states within the United States—in any disputes with other states about control over water, had sovereignty over and complete ownership and control of all waters within the boundaries of that state or nation.

This had been propounded, I believe, in respect to the waters of the Rio Grande, as between the United States and Mexico, and also in respect of some interstate disputes in the United States itself.

Apparently the United States delegation had forgotten about this; and they were not only surprised but greatly concerned when we cited it against them, when they contended that there were no rights on the part of Canada to downstream benefits from waters that had their origin in Canada.

This statement of policy made by Mr. Harmon was taken up by the Government of Canada and by General McNaughton. While we were not nearly as well prepared as they were—in terms of the studies the Americans had been making on the subject—we were able, partly as a result of this earlier statement of United States policy, which we had discovered, to persuade them that they must reckon with and provide for the downstream benefits of British Columbia and of Canada.

It is my expectation and hope that posterity will continue to enjoy in perpetuity some of those benefits which have come from it and which accrue to us.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: May I interrupt my honourable friend? The doctrine which he mentioned was thoroughly agreed to and acted upon in connection with the Columbia River treaty.

Hon. Mr. MacKenzie: That is right. This policy is in effect at the present time. I give you this only to indicate that study, research and discussion, prior to the necessary Government action, can be of considerable practical importance, and that is why I urge that a study of our fresh water resources be made at a convenient time.

Honourable senators, I have here a number of quotations and papers and statements. Incidentally, one was written by Mr. Dillon O'Leary, a son of our distinguished and beloved Senator Grattan O'Leary, and was published in the magazine section of the Globe and Mail of May 21 last, under the title, "Should Canada turn the Tap." There is also a quotation from the Canadian Bar Journal for June 1965, the author being Professor C. B. Bourne, Professor of International Law at the University of British Columbia. The other is from the Canadian Bar Review, which I will deal with in a moment.

There is a brief from the Canadian Chamber of Commerce entitled "Canadian Water Resources," in which they state that mimeographed copies of their full report on which this summary is based may be obtained at a cost of $1 per copy at 300 St. Sacrament Street, Montreal 1, Quebec. This is just an extract from that, but it is a very interesting extract or summary of it.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Thank you.

Hon. Mr. MacKenzie: There is another article here from the Canadian Bar Review for September 1959, entitled "The Columbia River Controversy." This article also was written by Professor C. B. Bourne. Incidentally, he became something of an authority on this subject because of the little meeting that we had with our American confreres in Washington at the time I spoke of.

The extract I propose to read from the letter in hand is from the head of the Department of Economics at the University of British Columbia, Professor A. D. Scott. He reminds me in his letter that he had been discussing this question of our fresh water resources with another friend and colleague who had been one of the legal advisers of the British Columbia Electric Company before they were taken over.

He said:

> In discussing this suggestion with him, I was reminded of the great contribution made by Senate committees of the recent past on manpower, the drug traffic, and land use. All of these full-scale investigations have borne fruit in subsequent years in federal re-organization of federal policy. Doubtless you know of other and better examples.
> Two or three of us in this Department take a personal interest in this subject—That is, our fresh water resources.
> —although I would not like to suggest to you that research is now proceeding. We would like to assure you, however, of our backing and enthusiasm if you should find it possible to persuade your fellow senators of the worthwhileness of an investigation of this type.
> The value of such an investigation is indicated by the recent parliamentary committee enquiry into the Columbia River Treaty. Its only defect was that it took place after the main lines of the Columbia River Agreement had been set, so that short of a massive resistance by parliament no change could be made on the basis of a committee report.
> Those of us who were interested in the Columbia River discussions realized that whereas most of the American groups had done their homework well before the agreement was signed, Canada was getting around to doing its homework only after the event. We are, I think lucky that we came out so well.

I have one or two other similar statements from people in important places in the life and Government of this country, but I do not propose to take any more of your time this evening in reading them to you. All I would do in conclusion is to say that I hope that at some convenient time in the future, either just after the New Year of even next autumn, we might come back to this topic and see if it, as perhaps our most important natural resource, does not deserve further study by this Senate.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): As honourable senators are aware, there will be a Royal Assent tonight at approximately 9.45. I would therefore suggest that the Senate take recess now to reassemble at the call of the bell at approximately 9.40.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Robert Taschereau, P.C. Chief Justice of Canada, Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned and being come with their Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give Royal Assent to the following bill:

> An Act to amend the Bank Act and the Quebec Savings Banks Act.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, November 29, 1966

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

JOINT COMMITTEES

CHANGES IN COMMONS MEMBERSHIP

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that messages have been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the name of Mr. Ryan has been substituted for that of Mr. Wahn on the Special Joint Committee on Immigration; that the name of Mr. O'Keefe has been substituted for that of Mr. Matte on the Special Joint Committee on Consumer Credit and Cost of Living; and that the names of Messrs. Ethier and Langlois (Chicoutimi) have been substituted for those of Messrs. Hymmen and Orange on the Special Joint Committee on the Public Service.

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Report of the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1966, pursuant to section 6 of the Department of Agriculture Act, chapter 66, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

DIVORCE

TIME OF JOINT COMMITTEE MEETING

On the Orders of the day:

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are called may I be permitted to ask the Co-Chairman of the Special Joint Committee on Divorce (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) if he will explain why the meeting of the committee today is called for 3:30 a.m.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: I thank the honourable senator for calling the meeting of this committee to our attention. At 3:30 today we are able to get a quorum because the House of Commons members of the committee are free after the question period is over.

It is seldom that the Senate sits on Tuesday afternoon. Our regular custom has been to meet at 8:00 o'clock on Tuesday evening, which has left the afternoon free. When we considered this question some little time ago it occurred to us that it would be more convenient for the committee to meet this afternoon because we would then be taking advantage of the fact that many honourable senators would be already here for the usual Tuesday evening sitting. Therefore we could well afford to hold the meeting in the afternoon. It has been just a little difficult to arrange a suitable meeting time.

Hon. Mr. Leonard: But why does the notice say that the meeting is at 3.30 in the morning?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I beg your pardon, and I thank the senator for his good humour in advising me of this typographical error. At the same time, he has performed a service in calling attention to the fact that we are sitting at 3.30 this afternoon.

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Roebuck for the second reading of Bill S-49, to amend the Criminal Code.

Hon. George S. White: Honourable senators, my remarks will be brief. I have listened to all the speeches made on this bill and have carefully re-read them in the Senate Hansard, and I feel that I must join the group in this chamber which is opposed to the bill.

In my opinion, the senators who have spoken in favour of this bill have not indicated or put forward one good reason or argument as to why this infamous bill should be passed by the Parliament of Canada.

What type of people are we in Canada to need such a bill as this? I can find no better definition of Canadians than that given by the one who introduced the bill, the honourable Senator Roebuck. At page 1109 of the Senate Hansard he defined Canadians as follows:

> Canadians, according to my understanding, knowledge and experience, are a kindly and tolerant people. As a nation we have friends in every country of the world, and I hope we have no enemies. We have good will for all mankind, irrespective of colour, race or ethnic origin. Domestically, our people, with very few exceptions, I think, are good natured, kindly and hospitable. We have freedom, and we have learned by experience to preserve our ways of life and freedom of our neighbours; and, honourable senators, we wish that kind of thing to continue.

I commend and congratulate the honourable senator for that excellent definition of Canadians. Yet, despite that definition of the kind of people we are in Canada, we find in the year 1966 that it is necessary for the Parliament of Canada to pass a bill dealing with and defining genocide.

In my opinion, this bill is no compliment to the people of Canada. Is Canada being put on a par with the Germany of Hitler and his gang of storm troopers and SS troops?

Other senators have dealt with the present provisions of the Code that deal with the use of the mails for distribution of hate propaganda, and other sections dealing with riots, unlawful assemblies, libel, murder, and so on. I do not need to repeat those arguments, as they are already on Hansard. However, those sections in the Code are at least a partial answer to the case that this bill is unnecessary.

Honourable senators, there occurred a case recently in Toronto where a so-called Nazi by the name of Beattie was prosecuted, if my recollection is correct, for unlawful assembly and inciting to riot. That same matter comes under this bill.

Reference has also been made to the section of the bill which shifts the onus of proof to the accused. That is section 267B which reads in part as follows:

> (3) No person shall be convicted of an offence under subsection (2) where he establishes
> (a) that the statements communicated were true; or
> (b) that they were relevant to any subject of public interest, the public discussion of which was for the public benefit, and that on reasonable grounds he believed them to be true.

It is hardly necessary to mention in this chamber that any change whereby the onus of proof is shifted to the accused is certainly a change in the law of Canada. Other senators have given examples of things that might happen, and one senator stated that he must reach for far-fetched examples. I would like to add another one to the list. Everyone will recall that in the Recessional Hymn written by Kipling there appears the line "Or lesser breeds without the law." If Mr. Kipling were in Canada and this act were in force, I wonder if he would be charged with inciting hatred or contempt.

I would also point out that section 267c, subsection (3) reads:

> The owner and the author of the matter seized and alleged to be hate propaganda may appear and be represented in the proceedings in order to oppose the making of an order for the forfeiture of the said matter.

It seems most peculiar that any such provision should appear in any bill in Canada. In this country, when has anyone been charged with an indictable offence on which he has not the right to appear in court and be represented? If this bill passes in its present form, there will be considerable confusion in our courts on the various legal interpretations of many words used in the bill. I refer to such words as "a public place". What is a statement which incites hatred or contempt? When would such incitement lead to a breach of the peace? What is meant by "communicating statements wilfully to promote hatred and contempt"? What is meant by the phrases, "that the words were relevant to any subject of public interest", and "the public discussion of which was for the public benefit"? What is meant by the definition that "statement" includes words either spoken or written, gestures, signs or other visible representations? What is "hate propaganda" as defined in the last section of the bill?

One has only to look over legal prosecutions in the Province of Ontario in the last few years to remember the various interpretations of words such as those. In Ontario in the last few years there have been various prosecutions dealing with obscene literature, movies, stage plays, paintings and sculpture. I remember various cases where prosecutions were brought against obscene literature. Defence counsel called some of the most outstanding literary men in both the United States and Canada to give evidence on behalf of the author that these books should be in the realm of classics. The same has applied to stage plays, paintings and sculpture. What one witness may describe as totally indecent, another will describe as a work of art.

Senator Lang, in his speech, has properly stated that the court decision on these interpretations may well depend upon the prejudices, emotions and fears of the presiding judge. I agree with that comment in every respect.

In Section 267c, subsection 1 provides that a judge who is satisfied by information upon oath that there are reasonable grounds for believing that any publication, copies of which are kept for sale or distribution in premises within the jurisdiction of the court, is hate propaganda, shall issue a warrant under his hand authorizing seizure of the copies.

Now, who is to supply that information and what are reasonable grounds? Again we will have the confusion and uncertainty as to opinions for and against. What one individual may consider hate propaganda, another may consider to be just and proper comment.

The honourable senator who introduced this bill, Senator Roebuck, and his colleague Senator Croll who seconded it, and other honourable members who have spoken in favour of the bill, have not given one single case or incident of a happening in Canada that would make it necessary for the introduction of this far-reaching and objectionable bill, No. S-49. There have been references to the lunatic fringe, hatemongers, crackpots and words to that effect, and references have been made to individuals; but, I repeat, there have been no instances in the slightest degree to show why it is necessary to have a bill of this type. If these things exist in Canada, I for one would like to have the particulars and full information about them. In the meantime, I suggest that this house should be most careful and cautious in giving approval to this bill which, as I said before, in my opinion is an insult to Canadians.

If this bill passes, it certainly will not improve the good name of Canada in other countries. As I stated in my opening remarks, I am opposed to the bill and I sincerely hope that it will not receive second reading.

Hon. Mr. Belisle: Honourable senators, before the debate is adjourned, might I be permitted to ask a question of the honourable Leader of the Government? Will it be possible to speak to this bill if and when it returns from committee?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): You can always speak on third reading.

Hon. Mr. Belisle: Will it be possible?

Hon Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Certainly.

Hon. Mr. Belisle: I would like to wait, because I am one of those named on the committee and I should like to gain some additional information in committee.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: We on this side object to the bill getting second reading. If it should get second reading, we will be bound by its principle, and we do not want to be bound by it.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I quite agree with you, but we are in the hands of the Senate on that.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Hayden, debate adjourned.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 9, 1966

SECOND READING

Hon. Jean-Paul Deschatelets moved the second reading of Bill C-248, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1967.

He said: Honourable senators, the purpose of Bill C-248, known as Appropriation Act No. 9, 1966, is to grant for the public service a sum of $1,542,982,673.96, which sum will defray the several charges and expenses of the public service to March 31, 1967.

May I say right at the outset that this bill is fortunately not as complicated as it looks. It might be summed up as follows: Article 2 of the bill, paragraphs (a) to (c) inclusive, proposes to pay the full balance of the amounts of all the items not already voted in full in the main Estimates as well as in the Supplementaries (A) and (B). This part of the bill deals, therefore, with items that have already been discussed and voted, in part, in previous appropriation bills.

Clause 2(d) of the bill, however, proposes new and additional expenditures as Supplementary Estimates (C), amounting to $307,-195,632, details of which will be found in Schedule D of the bill, pages 41 to 47 inclusive.

As has been the custom in the past with respect to appropriation bills, financial statements have been placed before honourable senators, and because they are self-explanatory it is not my intention to comment on them at length. However, if honourable senators will be kind enough to look at the financial sheet entitled "Estimates, 1966-67", you will note that the total of the main Estimates plus the three supplementaries, (A), (B) and (C), amount to $9,099,889,301. If we add to this sum the payments from the Old Age Security Fund, the grand total amounts to more than $10 billion. As honourable senators know, the payments from the Old Age Security Fund, though coming from taxation, are put in a separate fund and are not included in the budgetary calculation. It will also be noted that a total sum of more than $5 billion has to be voted, the balance being statutory payments.

Honourable senators will recall that on November 17 last, when explaining Appropriation Bill No. 8, C-245, at page 1170 of the Debates of the Senate I stated that with the passage of Bill C-245 the full balance of tabled Estimates to be voted amounted to $1,235,-787,041.96. If we add to this amount the total of the new Supplementary Estimates (C), it gives us a total amount of $1 billion-odd to be covered by this bill.

Honourable senators will also recall that on November 17 last, on a motion by the honourable Senator Leonard, which was carried unanimously, Supplementary Estimates (C) were referred to the Standing Committee on Finance. That committee has the power to call witnesses and, as is the custom, any further particulars on any item in these Supplementary Estimates (C) can be obtained before the committee.

(Translation)

Honourable senators, the total expenditures covered by this Appropriation Act No. 9, Bill C-248, exceed $1 billion and a half. Before asking you to pass these estimates, I want to insist on the fact that a very serious examination has been made of all the items included in this bill, including the main estimates and supplementary estimates A and B.

In addition, Bill C-248 has been referred, as far as the supplementary estimates C are concerned, to the Standing Committee on Finance; at its next meeting which will take place tomorrow morning, honourable senators will have the opportunity to ask the officials concerned all the questions they want. I must add that this applies to all honourable senators, even those who are not members of that committee.

It would then be contrary to the facts to say that we approve these substantial estimates in a few hours only. In fact, by this bill, we approve the full balance of the main Estimates and supplementary Estimates A and B. That means that all these items have been considered and discussed for the past few months in this house and in the finance committee in connection with interim supply.

(Text)

Honourable senators, the financial statement entitled "Estimates, 1966-67" gives the total amount to be voted. On the financial sheet entitled "Supply, 1966-67," the first page —which again I am glad to say is self-explanatory and well detailed—it will be found that, as a result of all previous appropriation bills and with the present bill, we are disposing in full of all the main Estimates as well as Supplementaries (A), (B) and (C) yet to be voted. But since new votes appear on Supplementary Estimates (C), I considered giving you some brief details concerning each item; but since there are nearly 50 votes involved I decided—and rightly so, I hope—that I should not do so. However, regarding Supplementary Estimates (C), amounting to a little more than $300 million, it might interest honourable senators to have at least a brief comment on five votes involving substantial expenditures.

If honourable senators would be kind enough to look at page 41 of the bill, Vote 105c, under the heading "Dominion Coal Board," you will see that a little more than $10 million is required. The purpose of this additional payment is to enable Canadian coal to compete with United States coal.

On page 42 of the bill, Vote 15c, "Contingencies," honourable senators will note that an additional $50 million is required. This vote has to do with salary revision. It might interest honourable senators to know that $60 million has already been spent and that an additional $20 million might be anticipated above the amount of $50 million provided in this bill. The salary increases of postal employees is included in this vote, but it must be pointed out that these salary increases are spread over 50 different departments and government agencies. On pages 4 and 5 of the Blue Book there appears a list of these departments and government agencies. Honourable senators will have an idea of the addition to the amount provided for in the main Estimates.

On page 43 of the bill under Manpower and Immigration an amount of $50 million is required by Vote 6c. This vote is to provide for federal payments under the Municipal Winter Works Incentive Program, which is being continued during the fiscal years 1966-67 and 1967-68 under conditions substantially the same as those in effect last year. The present estimate of claims in the 1965-66 program totalling $44 million indicates that the 1966-67 program will result in claims totalling about $50 million.

On page 46 of the bill Vote 84c requires a total sum of $118,750,000. Pending enactment of the Railways bill resulting from the recommendations of the MacPherson Royal Commission, an aggregate annual amount of $50 million is required to reimburse the railways for maintaining freight rates and branch lines for which abandonment procedures are temporarily frozen. The amount of $118 million-odd is to be paid in instalments at such times, and in accordance with such methods of allocation as may be determined by the Board of Transport Commissioners.

The last item upon which I wish to comment is found in Vote 10c on page 46, and in Vote 25c on page 47 under Department of Veterans Affairs. A total of $22 million is required by these two votes. The Government has approved the recommendation of the Minister of Veterans Affairs that the monthly rates of War Veterans Allowances and the maximum annual income ceilings be increased with effect from September 1, 1966. I know of the interest of many honourable senators in this matter, and if further particulars are desired I will take much pleasure in preparing a detailed statement of the different rates for the various classes of recipients entitled to an allowance under the act.

Honourable senators, I hope these explanations will be found satisfactory. If any honourable senator has any question I will try to answer it at this time; if I cannot, I will supply the answer at the next sitting. I commend this bill for your approval.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, this is the type of bill upon which very much can be said, but it is also the type with respect to which it is very difficult to prepare lengthy remarks unless it has been in one's hands for some time. I should like to mention that I received a copy of it only last night.

The honourable sponsor of the bill, Senator Deschatelets, has said that although there is very much in the bill, it is not difficult to understand. I think that is probably correct, because the first part deals with the Estimates that have been before this House now for some months.

May I, at the outset of my remarks, congratulate the honourable sponsor of this bill. This is the first time he has undertaken the responsibility of introducing a measure of this nature and, in my opinion, he has given us a very clear explanation of it. He was also very fair when he advised us that he will be at our disposal at any time in respect to answering any questions. We have also the promise that the bill is being referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, and I know that in committee there will be many senators who will have questions to ask.

All the appropriation bills that have come before us in recent years have one common feature which I am sure is recognized by all honourable senators, namely, a definite inflationary trend. Our spending is increasing by leaps and bounds. As Senator Deschatelets said, this year's expenditures are larger than those of last year. According to his figures—and they are correct, I know—we have budgeted this year for $10,134,889,301, the highest budget in the history of this country.

I should like to review for a few minutes the increases that have occurred over the last few years. For instance, in 1962-63 the total expenditures amounted to $6,963,569,134. In 1963-64 there was an increase of $463,966,366 making a total of $7,427,535,500. In 1964-65 there was an increase over the previous year of $382,441,289, making a total expenditure of $7,809,976,789. In 1965-66 there was an increase of $943,226,650 over the previous year, making a total of $8,753,203,493.

Then, as the honourable sponsor of this bill has said, the increase in expenditures of this year over those of last year is $1,381,685,862. That is a tremendous increase.

Hon. Mr. Reid: What is the total amount for this year?

Hon. Mr. Brooks: The total amount for this year is $10,134,889,301. As I have pointed out, there is certainly a very strong inflationary trend in the country.

Honourable senators, I am not going to take up your time by going through all the estimates, but in looking through this bill last night I saw certain items upon which I should like to have a little information. On page 11 under National Defence there is Vote 15 which reads:

> Operation and Maintenance and Construction or Acquisition of Buildings, Works, Land and Major Equipment and Development for the Canadian Forces and $1,750,000 for Grants to the Town of Oromocto.

As honourable senators know, the Town of Oromocto is situated in Camp Gagetown. I am wondering whether that amount has become a yearly grant from the Department of National Defence to that town.

I also wish to ask the honourable sponsor of the bill about item 45 on page 12, "Mutual Aid," under the Department of National Defence, which says:

> Contributions to infrastructure and the military costs of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and the transfer of defence equipment and supplies and the provision of services and facilities for defence purposes in accordance with Section 3 of the Defence Appropriation Act...

As honourable senators are aware, I had the honour and distinction of attending the NATO Parliamentary meeting in Paris along with my good friends Senator Lefrançois and Senator Aird. May I pay a compliment to our Canadian delegation, which was headed by Mr. Ryan of the House of Commons. Our committee and the delegates certainly gave an excellent account of themselves at the meeting.

We also had the opportunity of visiting our forces in different parts of France and Germany. It was no surprise to me, nor, I am sure, to the other members of the delegation, to note how well trained were these men and what an excellent spirit existed, except for the fact, of course, that some of the air force units have to move from their present locations to others, which is giving them great concern.

I therefore wish to ask the honourable sponsor if item 45 has anything to do with the cost of moving our air force from France into Germany, which I understand must take place before April of next year.

May I also ask what will become of the buildings and the other military set up at Marville and the other Canadian stations. I know the officers and other ranks of Marville, where we spent considerable time coming and going, have an excellent set-up in the matter of accommodation for married people, barracks, schools and other facilities, and these of course will have to be abandoned before April of next year.

Another item I should like some information on is item 1 under National Gallery of Canada on page 13. This has to do with the administration, operation and maintenance including the payment of $500,000 to the National Gallery Purchase Account for the purpose of acquiring works of art. Could the sponsor give us a list of some of the items that have been acquired by the National Gallery of Canada? Of course we know that the $5 million picture has not been acquired. However, the amount of $500,000 is mentioned, and it would be interesting to know just what items have been purchased or intended for purchase.

In connection with the Centennial Commission, on page 19, items 35, 40 and 45 specify the amounts that are to be paid to each of the provinces. I was wondering if this could be broken down to show the amount that each province will receive.

The honourable sponsor mentioned "Railways and Steamships," on page 21, with respect to the Maritime Freight Rates Act, and that we would have an opportunity of discussing that later when the MacPherson Report and the transportation bill are before us.

One page 34 is an item entitled "University Grants." Since I returned to Ottawa I have had the opportunity and pleasure of reading Senator MacKenzie's remarks in connection with university grants. This item mentions the amount of $38,400,000. In reading Senator MacKenzie's remarks I was greatly impressed with the cost of university education in Canada today in relation to the projected cost in the years to come, which Senator MacKenzie mentioned. An amount of $38,400,000 seems very small, compared to over $1 billion which he anticipates will be the cost of university education a few years hence.

I was glad to hear the honourable Senator Deschatelet's remarks on the Dominion Coal Board and concerning the $10 million which is being voted to assist in the competition of Canadian coal with United States coal. I think that is money well spent and will be greatly appreciated in certain parts of the Atlantic provinces.

I had some other items to mention, but I will take the opportunity of asking questions in committee. However, I wish to make a brief remark on items 10c and 25c, to be found on pages 46 and 47 with reference to Veterans Affairs. I understand that the pension increase is to be 15 per cent over the increase that was made in 1964. At that time I understand the veterans asked for a 15 per cent increase but received 10 per cent. The 15 per cent increase is quite fair, but not as substantial as we would expect. However, I understand it is to be an interim increase, and that after the Wood Report a bill will be introduced to increase it along the lines of that report.

So far as War Veterans Allowance is concerned, the increase from $94 a month to $105 for single veterans is a fair one. A ceiling increase from $133 to $145 is in the right direction, but hardly sufficient in my opinion. The increase in allowance of $175 over $161, being $14 a month, for married veterans is modest; however, I think the ceiling in this case might also have been raised.

The items I have mentioned are very small. The vote to veterans amounts to a few millions of dollars. These are people who are most deserving. I do not believe anyone would criticise an increase to the war veterans, either under the Pensions Act or under the War Veterans Allowance Act.

Honourable senators, it is not my intention to take up additional items at this time. As the sponsor stated, he does not intend to discuss the items but after studying them he will arrange for them to be dealt with in committee. I approve of this procedure.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, I wish to refer for a moment to Vote 1, Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, on page 5.

I apologize for reverting to the subject on which I made a few remarks last evening. The reason I return to it is that I have had a number of telephone calls today, and a number of people have stopped me in the corridors, all asking, "What are you going to do about it?"

The second question they ask is, "Who is responsible?" The wording of the vote which we are asked to approve in the amount of $110 million is "a grant in respect of the net operating amount required to discharge the responsibilities of the national broadcasting service." That is the item under which we are discussing this. I think it is interesting that the word we have here is "responsibilities", since the question which is agitating many Canadian minds today is the irresponsibility of the national broadcasting system.

This is the first time in my life that I have publicly criticized the C.B.C. On the contrary, there are many occasions when I have defended the C.B.C. Today I am in the position of many Canadians who are saying, our patience has run out. Patience with whom? With whoever is responsible.

I spent some time today trying to find out who is responsible for deciding what may or may not be said or shown on the publicly-owned national broadcasting service. The only answer that I can get is that Parliament is responsible.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): That is right.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: This is not a case where an emanation of the Government of Canada is under the direct responsibility of the minister or of the department nor, according to the information I have obtained, is it a matter which can be said to be the responsibility of the Cabinet. The C.B.C. merely reports to Parliament through a minister. I do not know whose concept that was. I know it was developed many years ago, but I suggest today that it is time Parliament revised that archaic, impracticable and unworkable method of controlling the use to which funds voted by Parliament are put.

Honourable senators, this chamber is part of Parliament, and we like to think that we are an important part of Parliament. I ask, are we going to vote $110 million, saying to ourselves that we do so knowing that we have no control whatsoever under the system that we have set up as to how that money is used?

Under the present system, we have a responsibility and I suggest that we are not discharging it. Apparently the attitude being taken by Parliament is that it matters not whether this money is spent in the public interest or not; it matters not whether it is spent in accordance with the public will.

What can we do about it? I am not an expert in such matters. An adequate answer would have to come from somebody who knows much more about how this matter can be handled. I presume that the question could be referred to a committee of the Senate. There would be some value in such a committee, to which we could call some of those people and ask them: Why do you do this? Is it just to get ratings? Is it your view that it is your main responsibility to get the largest audience possible, regardless of whom you offend?

I know enough about the broadcasting business to know that it is easy to get a very large audience. All you have to do is to think of ways in which to incense people, ways in which to laugh at the standards set by parents who have tried to inculcate them into their children. As long as you laugh at and ridicule such standards, you will get an audience. Does that justify the ridicule? Honourable senators, I think not.

I suggest to the honourable Leader of the Government that he consider carefully taking appropriate and effective steps for the more adequate discharge of the responsibility of Parliament, and particularly of this part of Parliament, in respect to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

Hon. W. M. Benidickson: Honourable senators, I appreciated the final remarks by Senator Grosart. A committee of the Senate could do very well in looking at the programs, policies and future programs of the C.B.C. However, I rise only on the bill we have before us, which is for supply, for the main Estimates.

I understand that in the other place they have been confined to 30 days of debate. I hope this bill may be referred to a committee here, but I would like the honourable leader to say whether the time will be unlimited in this place. Do these appropriations go to the Finance Committee, which is under a capable chairman?

Hon. Mr. Walker: If this goes to the Finance Committee, it will be under an able chairman.

Hon. Mr. Benidickson: That is what I mean. I meant that Senator Leonard would be a most capable chairman.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): This is just a little home-town loyalty.

Hon. Mr. Benidickson: We are dealing with the balance of the main Estimates and with Supplementary Estimates (C), which seem to be new.

The question should be raised now as to the limit of 30 days on the debate in the other house, where they were obliged to conclude their discussion on estimates covering many millions of dollars. I hope that the Senate will consider some of these items without that restriction under our rules.

As has been pointed out, with the inclusion of Old Age Security Fund payments, we have a budget of over $10 billion. We respect that, but I am concerned that we in the Senate should retain under our rules the opportunity to look at these things without a date time limit such as has predominated lately in the House of Commons. I approve of this date termination, but I want to ask our leader whether or not we here are under any restriction in so far as date is concerned, particularly in our Committee on Finance under the able chairmanship of Senator Leonard, to look closely at these items.

Hon. David Walker: Honourable senators, I want to congratulate the Deputy Leader of the Senate on his very lucid outline of this fantastic budget, and to congratulate him on the aplomb and complete satisfaction with which he outlined the grossest and most extravagant budget in the history of Canada. It is hard to believe that this was the honourable member who sat opposite me when we formed the Government and who screamed to high heaven when our budget got up to around $6 billion just a few short years ago.

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: Your memory is better than mine.

Hon. Mr. Walker: Yes, I have a good memory. Perhaps it just depends on whose ox is being gored. We should have the venerable Senator Crerar here today to make his annual expostulation at the extravagance of Government in this country. I am not being partisan in what I am saying, but where are we going from here? In 1962-63 the budget was $6,900,000,000, a tremendous sum. Today, four years later, it is $10,100,000,000, roughly speaking.

Four years ago we were spending less than $400 for every man, woman and child in Canada. Today we are spending $555, far more than the income of many people in many countries, and this just in taxes.

My friend the Leader of the Opposition talks about inflation. He says that this is an inflationary budget. It is indeed an inflationary budget, and it is inflationary because of the constantly added items of increased spending. Next year we have medicare coming along with an estimate of—and I am only giving rough figures—$300 million. My friend, Senator Sullivan, who is an authority on this subject, tells me that in England, the end of the first year, it was three times what they had estimated. If medicare adds another billion dollars or even a half a billion dollars, what limit can the public stand? How long can this go on? When are we going to hold the fort? When are we going to stop the increase in spending?

Aside altogether from politics, I would recommend to this Government to hold the line on spending, because the day will come when we will not be able to increase spending further. The day will come when the law of diminishing returns will take effect, when the limit of taxation will be reached and when industry and our whole economy will be affected.

Yet I am not blaming Senator Deschatelets. He is simply sponsoring the bill and putting his usual Gallic temperament to work, outlining this $10,100,000,000-bill like a song, as if there were nothing to it. It is nice to be able to do that. I think the leader is to be congratulated on being able to find someone to do it with that savoir faire for which Senator Deschatelets is celebrated.

This is serious, however. Like my leader, I have not had an opportunity to study this bill in depth. I received the bill only last night. But, surely on the face of it, it is outlandish. Just when is the Government of Canada going to stop greater spending? When is it going to stop increasing its budget? If Senator Crerar were here today, he would end this speech by saying O tempora, O mores.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, my intervention will be very short. First, I should like to join with other speakers in congratulating Senator Deschatelets on the very clear exposition he has given of this appropriation bill. He did one the other day, an interim supply bill—so this is really his second run at the appropriation bills—and he did it so competently that I was a little afraid to venture back into the field. I do thank him for the care and attention he has given to it. I know that he will have some remarks to make in concluding the debate.

I feel very remiss, honourable senators, in saying at this late date something I should have said at the beginning, namely, how glad I am and all of us are to see the Leader of the Opposition back in his seat after a very useful and, I am sure, most interesting sojourn at the meeting of the NATO Parliamentarians Organization.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It has a new name now, but it is basically the same organization that Senator Beaubien from Montreal and I attended a number of times. I must say that I have a very soft spot in my heart for the work of the NATO Parliamentarians, and I was delighted that this time the Senate was so ably represented by Senator Brooks, Senator Aird and Senator Lefrançois. I hope that in due time we will hear more about the meeting from all of these honourable gentlemen.

May I now deal with the points raised by Senator Grosart. Last night he asked me if some practical steps could not be taken with reference to the questions that were raised at that time about the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. He repeated that request today. I have given it some thought and have had some discussions, and I think something must be done.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I think something should be done now. I cannot speak highly enough of the fact that Senator Grosart and other honourable senators, privately, in writing and verbally, have said to me that this is not a party matter. The plain fact is that it is not even a governmental matter. Senator Grosart has put his finger on it. It is a matter for Parliament. We keep reminding ourselves in this chamber from time to time that we are an integral part of Parliament. If we are, not only have we the privileges of parliamentarians and of Parliament, but we also have the responsibilities.

The control of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation resides in Parliament, and if things are to be done about the C.B.C., parliamentarians must act. Without wanting to generate a lot of heat, but also attempting to introduce some light upon the subject—and there was occasion for the heat just as there is now a need for the light—I would like to make the following practical suggestion. The main and supplementary Estimates thus far tabled are before our Finance Committee. Senator Walker has said that we have a very able chairman. We also have very able members on that committee. I would like to suggest that at this time, during this session, when it is possible for the committee to make suitable arrangements, that they first of all ascertain the facts by summoning to that committee, as they are entitled to do, officials from the C.B.C.

Allegations were made last night by myself and by others about facts. I confess that mine were allegations based only upon information received, but I would like to see this kind of information tested. And I need not repeat the statements I made. I must confess that it may be very unusual for a minister of the Crown to speak out on the floor of Parliament the way I did last night or do now, but I do so because I feel that it is a parliamentarian's responsibility.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Having obtained the facts about the chain of responsibility and where the weaknesses lie—and I do not think it would be an unduly difficult task with the kind of committee we have—I would like to see that committee take one further step, if possible, and arrange for a private viewing for the committee of the program of which we complained. And I would like to see an analysis and comment made both by those ultimately responsible and those immediately responsible, and let them be examined. I do not say that this could be done tomorrow, but in answer to Senator Benidickson may I say that the work of the Finance Committee continues until its final report is made each session to Parliament. I would like to see this done in a methodical way at the appropriate time, but I do say the sooner the better.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: In that connection, after obtaining the facts, what then could we suggest should be done?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Last night someone remarked that it is all very well to get up and make a speech on this matter, but we do nothing about it. In the first place, I think the fact we did speak about it last night had a salutary effect, because it gave rise at least to part of the debate we have had this afternoon. It has not got through to the press yet, but that is no surprise to any honourable senator.

Now we have a further step to take, and that is the practical one of dealing with this matter in our committee, which is capable of and has the authority and power to do so. That committee will make a report, and when we receive it for consideration perhaps some action will become obvious. At that time we can decide what further practical steps should be taken.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: To see it does not happen again.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes, indeed, to see it does not happen again, or to try to ensure that that kind of thing is not repeated. The outrage that people feel about matters of this kind has already been adequately described in this chamber for it to be unnecessary for me to make any further comment.

I believe that these are practical and can be effective steps; and I think the Senate will render a valuable public service if it embarks upon this path.

I do not want to speak further, but I must say that I am always glad to hear Senator Walker participate in a debate. There is one difference between the kind of speech Senator Walker made and the kind Senator Crerar would have made today, and only time will provide the test. But usually the most severe of Senator Crerar's strictures were reserved for the party of which he is a member. Senator Walker has not yet had that opportunity, but perhaps it will arise in due time! I do agree with him that the "box-car" figures contained in the Estimates today are staggering, but of course the growth of this country is also a staggering spectacle in numbers, economic development and in almost every way. The demand for public spending and for more and more from the public treasury certainly keeps the pressure on Government, regardless of who is in office. No one knows that better than Senator Walker. He was a member of Cabinet, and he realizes what these pressures can be, how demanding they are, and how difficult it is at times to resist them or even to modify them. But I think every government tries. All I can say to him is that, in so far as governments can, all try to avoid extravagance and very few really succeed. This is the purpose of the scrutiny by Parliament of the spending.

I was more than delighted on the last occasion we considered an appropriation bill to hear Senator Aseltine stand in his place and commend the Senate for the work that has been done by the Finance Committee in dealing with the Estimates. Perhaps for the first time in the history of the Senate we have not had to listen to speeches, either from the Government or the Opposition benches, saying that we are voting huge sums without knowing for what they are voted for. Now the opportunity is available through the Finance Committee to examine the details of the Estimates. If we do not go into every detail, we can still undertake the kind of valuable studies through that committee that make it possible for the Senate now to say: We can deal with this bill on our responsibility as parliamentarians. It is curious though that the rules recently adopted by the House of Commons have now put the Opposition there at least into the position that the Senate Opposition once was in. Having restricted themselves to a certain limited time for consideration of the Estimates, the other day they had to put through a great many which they did not have time to debate. I do not think we are in that position in the Senate. There is no term fixed for the sittings of the Finance Committee: it continues to be seized with these matters; it can continue its work until just before the end of the session, when it brings in its report.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, I am satisfied with what has been said by the Leader of the Government (Honourable Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West), the Acting Leader of the Opposition (Honourable Mr. Choquette) and Senator Grosart about the C.B.C. We live in different times from 10 or 11 years ago when the Right Honourable Louis St. Laurent was strongly criticized by the opposition front benchers because he complained about a C.B.C. program. The theory of the Opposition at that time was to give a free hand to the C.B.C. but the fact that Mr. St. Laurent was Prime Minister of Canada did not deprive him of his rights as a private citizen to express his free opinion about any program of the C.B.C. or anything done by any crown company.

At that time I found that the theory that members of both houses of Parliament should be in a straitjacket and not able to express their free opinion on matters that came under crown companies was absurd. Now it is refreshing for me to see representatives of both parties uniting to complain about what is wrong and to express their willingness to remedy it.

I had a personal experience with the C.B.C. One day on a certain program some shameful things were said by a drunkard. What trouble I had to obtain some information about that from the C.B.C! I spoke to Dr. McCann, the minister responsible. I had to rely on the help of his secretary who showed considerable determination to obtain the information. I was told finally that the program was all right because the one who had said those foolish things over the TV was a clochard—a bum. Everything was all right; he was a bum. I do not think any bum should be allowed to use the facilities of the C.B.C. in order to address the Canadian people at large. That was one experience.

I had another experience which concerned the suppression of the word "mass" from a weekly program on the C.B.C. There is a mass that is celebrated every Sunday, sometimes at Ville St. Laurent, near Montreal, and sometimes in other churches. It is a beautiful mass, and the sermons are delivered by preachers of renown. In the first place, the name of the mass, which is highly respected, was replaced by "Meeting of the Faithful," or "assemblée des fidèles."

A meeting of the faithful could have been a meeting of the Ladies of the Holy Family, or a meeting of the church wardens, or a meeting of the beadles. I do not know why, but they did not want to use the word "mass", and afterwards, to my surprise, it was completely dropped from the program.

I then wrote to the president, Mr. Alphonse Ouimet, to complain about it. He told me he would see to it, and, in fact, under his presidency the Sunday mass was restored and it appeared again on the program. This shows that it is not a bad thing to speak to the authorities of the C.B.C. I always relied on the fairness and common sense of Mr. Alphonse Ouimet in order to have wrongs on the C.B.C. redressed as much as possible.

But now there is an underground authority over there. There is a certain group of people who seem to be viciously inspired, and who bring before the public pictures that should be burned. The scenes that are shown over the TV and the words that are said over the radio, especially at night, are unbelievable. Where does it come from? Who is responsible for it? It would be a good thing to know that. A study of the whole business would reveal who is responsible for it, and the action to take would be to fire them and be rid of them.

The trouble nowadays is that we live in a time when there is a crisis of authority. Nobody listens to anybody, and there is no longer any hierarchy. I believe in hierarchy, because without a well organized hierarchy order could not exist. I remember when I was at school the first thing we had to write on the first page of our copy books was the phrase "Ordo ducit ad Deum"—order leads to God. Order shall exist in society; everything should be in its own place. We have now anarchy and disorder. Why? We have it for the very simple reason that the basis or foundation of liberty is ignored. No one knows what liberty is, and those who ignore it the most are those who speak the most of it. They speak about freedom, about liberty, and about human rights. But, honourable senators, if you look at the Bill of Rights you will find in it no definition of human rights, liberty, or freedom.

At this very session, in the spring, when the gentlemen who is responsible for the drafting of laws in the Department of Justice appeared before the committee on the Interpretation Bill I asked him, "Is there any definition of 'freedom' and 'liberty' in the Bill of Rights?" he answered me honestly by saying, "No." Honourable senators, you all know that. We do not know what is liberty. We do not know what is freedom. We do not know what is meant by human rights. What is taken for liberty is licence, and licence is boundless liberty. It is the kind of liberty that encroaches upon the rights of the neighbour. Where does my liberty end, honourable colleagues? It ends where your own liberty starts, so that there is no conflict between your liberty and mine. Is that clear enough?

I think I have told you that one day I received a memorandum—and recently I was able to put my finger on it in my files—from the dean of one of the faculties of a well-known university not far from here. He tried to give me a definition of "liberty". He spoke of liberty, freedom, and human rights, but he did not define any one of those words. He did not say anything about responsibility. For each liberty that one has there is a corresponding or co-relative responsibility. Am I clear enough? I think you understand me. It is because the responsibility of any individual —of myself or you, or of everybody—is ignored that we have anarchy and chaos, not only in Canada but in all the countries of the world.

What absurdity we hear at times. I have heard young school boys sing over the radio that it was undemocratic to pass examinations. They said that they were at liberty not to pass examinations, which are there to show that they have qualified themselves, to show that they have learned something during their school year.

Where do we go? We have strife and all sorts of difficulties all over. This is why I found it extremely refreshing to hear what was said last night and today. Somebody should put the C.B.C. into good shape. I wonder if it would not be a good thing, in view of what I hear so often, to allow the C.B.C. to broadcast only the daily news, some concerts, and the sports events—rugby, football, baseball and hockey—and suppress everything else. Sermons, if you like, could be allowed, but only the good ones, and the Holy Mass shall remain on the weekly program of the C.B.C.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): No political speeches?

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: No poetical speeches?

Hon. Mr. Lang: Political speeches.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): C'est la même chose.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: I do not know of any political speeches being obscene. They may be everything else, but they are not of that class. There are never too many political speeches.

This is my vision of the C.B.C. If we cannot have good English programs and good French programs, and if they are going to insist on broadcasting all sorts of dirt, then it would be just as well to suppress them, and have them broadcast only poetry, music, sports and politics.

Honourable senators, I leave it at that. It was a joy for me to listen to what has been said; I found it refreshing. I hope that the program of which we complain will not be repeated again. However, the only way to take action is to have information, and the only way to get proper information is to have a chart with a line-up of the hierarchy of the C.B.C. Then you will know who is responsible for all the things that you complain of and you will be in a position to remedy them.

Hon. Josie D. Quart: Honourable senators, may I be permitted to join in this chorus against the C.B.C. I believe I had already spoken about it, but all the speeches of my male colleagues have been like music to my ears. I feel like the cat that swallowed the canary, or the person who said, "I told you so," because two years ago 35 women from across Canada, without one cent, not even a postage stamp, gathered some 86,000 or 90,000 names.

If anyone doubts my word, the lists are still in my office. One senator, Senator Davey, profited by coming to my office to look at the lists of names. He was extremely interested, and asked, "May I look at one of these very beautifully bound books?" Now, I deserve no credit for any of this work. I merely had the courage to say, "Yes, I will go along with you women."

As an individual, I did come in for some criticism in Chatelaine magazine two years ago for having headed this committee. I was one of those who was called "witch hunter" and "crackpot." We took it all in our stride, but on and on went the signatures, and they are in my office, beautifully prepared. I do not think anybody could ever have prepared a list of signatures more methodically.

To return to Senator Davey—and I am sorry he is not in the chamber today to speak—when he asked if he might pick out one of these books, I replied, "Surely—which one?" He said, "Toronto." He seemed very surprised to find the names of many persons he knew personally.

The signatures include four wives of lieutenant-governors, three or four wives of premiers across Canada. Even the Prime Minister, as I believe I mentioned last year, in the Senate, said, "If my wife had been asked to sign, she would have signed." This morning I received telegrams from three of the six women who went on the delegation to the Prime Minister, saying that the only thing we can do now is to get on the march again.

Honourable senators will understand how proud I am at this time, because as a member of the Senate I was asked by many of these women, "Couldn't the senators do anything about this?" I am happy that I sent for some extra copies of the Debates, which I will send to the members of the committee.

I would welcome an opportunity to confront a responsible officer of the C.B.C., as regards a proposition made to our committee, which we did not accept. Perhaps that opportunity will present itself in the near future.

Last year when I spoke in the Senate about the C.B.C. I was much more charitable than the senators who spoke here last evening and this afternoon, because I was afraid that even some of my own colleagues would call me a witch hunter or a crackpot.

When we presented our brief to the Prime Minister we concentrated on five or six objectionable programs. When we went to the Fowler Commission, Mr. Steele even reminded our delegation about a very indecent program which we had forgotten to mention. I assure you we had a wonderful reception.

I have in my office letters we received from whole communities, such as Timmins, Ontario, Chicoutimi, Quebec, and various other places in Canada, offering their co-operation. Our mistake in the beginning was that only women's names were placed on the petition, because had men's names been included we could have had 500,000 names instead of only 90,000.

Recently, at a convention in the Chateau Laurier I received a call asking, "What has happened? Are you people letting up?" This was a mixed convention, and they wanted to take up where we had left off.

For all these reasons, honourable senators, you will understand how very proud I am of my male colleagues in the Senate today, that they are really the ones who are now putting teeth into this revolt. I congratulate the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) and the others who have spoken so eloquently. Thank you very much.

Hon. Gordon B. Isnor: Honourable senators, when sitting on the Government side one does not as a rule take part in a debate such as this. Rather one leaves it to the sponsor of the bill and to the Opposition to criticise the budget figures. However, in listening to the views expressed by all concerned, and particularly by the Opposition, with regard to the huge and ever-increasing amounts of money being expended—in the neighbourhood of $10 billion—one wonders just how they analyse such sums.

In a business approach to the subject, it is not so much the amount to be spent in terms of dollars and cents, as it is a question of what is going to result from the expenditures. From time to time business is forced to do expensive advertising and to carry on campaigns that run into large sums of money; indeed, one finds the percentage cost of business gradually increasing from say 18 per cent or 19 per cent to 20 per cent or 21 per cent, and rising to something like 30 per cent. However, you wait and watch your sales grow as the result of that expenditure, and at the end of the year you make up your statement and see the net profit, because that is what counts in business. This expenditure of $10 billion is being forced on the Government to a large extent by the demands from all directions.

I do not want to be misunderstood, but in assessing what Senator Walker had to say with regard to Government expenditure, perhaps one should be reminded that he was a member of another government which continued to show deficits year after year. Indeed, there were 13 deficits while that government was in office. I prefer to wait to see the result at the end of the year, and I look forward to future years when we shall not have a deficit running from year to year such as occurred when the Conservative government was in office, of which the honourable Senator Walker was a member. I think that will be the fairest test we can make in regard to those expenditures of which we have heard so much today.

Honourable senators, perhaps I will not be popular in standing up to give voice to my sentiments regarding the C.B.C., because I view that body from another angle. Criticism against the C.B.C. here has been almost 100 per cent. I was rather surprised at the remarks of Senator Grosart. He is a gentleman who has been in the advertising business, and he knows the channels that you have to use to get the best results. I believe that if you were to canvass the private stations throughout Canada today, both radio and television, you would find that the C.B.C. rates very high.

I am certainly not opposing the thoughts expressed by the Leader of the Government (Honourable Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) with regard to one particular program. It was disgraceful, and I wish to make myself clear on that.

However, I stand up to say that on the whole I have a word in favour of the C.B.C. In answer to those who criticise the religious services, I think they are doing a splendid job in regard to the churches. They give all denominations an opportunity, and they have very fine programs. Perhaps the finest on TV or radio stations in Canada today is the C.B.C.'s program called "Hymn Sing" at 5.30 o'clock on Sunday afternoon. I am sure that if any honourable senators have not yet heard or seen such a program they have missed a great deal of enjoyment.

I felt I should express this view, honourable senators, because apart from the criticism that is offered in connection with one program, it should be made clear that the C.B.C. is doing pretty good work in the broad field of giving us news, as mentioned by Senator Pouliot. In regard to sports, they are outstanding. We all witnessed the national football game last week, and while we do not agree with some of the scenes witnessed, it was coverage such as no other station or chain of stations could give. The news items have been enlarged and are particularly outstanding.

Honourable senators, we should recognize that C.B.C. is doing a service for the whole of Canada, while many of the private stations are obliged to cater in a local field. I felt I should express these thoughts, even though they may not be as popular as some which have been expressed today.

Hon. Jean-Paul Deschatelets: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, may I remind honourable senators that if the honourable sponsor of the bill speaks at this time it will have the effect of closing the debate.

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: Honourable senators, in closing this debate, may I thank all those who have taken part for their important contribution. I can assure them that the views they have expressed, from both sides of the house, will be taken into serious consideration.

In regard to the questions raised by the Leader of the Opposition, may I say those questions are too important to be answered offhand. It would be more satisfactory for him and for myself if I take notice of them and have the answers appear in Hansard as soon as possible. I hope that will be satisfactory.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Thank you.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

THIRD READING NEXT SITTING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) moved that the bill be read the third time at the next sitting.

He said: Honourable senators, before this motion is carried, I would remind you that the Standing Committee on Finance will meet tomorrow morning at 9.30.

Hon. Mr. Benidickson: Also the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I do not wish to say anything about that at the moment. Unfortunately, there is a conflict of meetings, but something will be done about resolving it. In any event, the Minister of National Revenue and President of the Treasury Board, the Honourable Mr. Benson, and Dr. George Davidson, will be in attendance tomorrow to deal with anything arising out of this bill or indeed out of any of the Estimates or supplementary Estimates which are before the committee at the present time.

Motion agreed to.

LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT

REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the report of the Joint Committee on the Library of Parliament recommending that salary rates of pay of professional and non-professional classes in the Library of Parliament be brought into line with the recently revised salaries paid for comparable positions in the Civil Service and those recently announced for the House of Commons classified staff, and which was presented on Tuesday, November 22.

Hon. John J. Connolly moved the adoption of the report.

He said: Honourable senators, this report speaks for itself. It has been on the Minutes of Proceedings since November 22. The report is submitted by the honourable Speakers of the two Houses of Parliament. The purpose is to bring the pay of personnel in the Parliamentary Library into line with the pay in various sections of the Public Service of Canada and into line with the pay of other employees in the House of Commons and the Senate.

Report adopted.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, November 30, 1966

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

PUBLIC SERVICE

JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN COMMONS MEMBERSHIP

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message has been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the name of Mr. Hymmen has been substituted for that of Mr. Chatwood on the Special Joint Committee on the Public Service.

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Statutory Orders and Regulations published in the Canada Gazette, Part II, of Wednesday, November 23, 1966, pursuant to section 7 of the Regulations Act, chapter 235, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

VISITING FORCES BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill S-50, respecting the armed forces of countries visiting Canada, and had directed that the bill be reported with the following amendments:

1. Page 1: Strike out lines 17 and 18 and substitute the following:

"of a visiting force, the spouse of such".

2. Page 4: Strike out line 3 and substitute the following:

"of a visiting force or a dependant".

3. Page 5: Strike out lines 1 to 6, both inclusive, and substitute the following:

"11. (1) Where a member of a visiting force or a dependant of any such member has been sentenced by a service court to undergo a punishment involving incarceration, the incarceration may, at the request of the officer in command of the visiting force and in accordance with the regulations, be".

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: With leave of the Senate, I move that this report be taken into consideration now.

Honourable senators, the amendments are simple. They do not change the substance of the bill. In several places where amendments were made, the expression used was, "the armed forces of a designated state." After conferring with the Department of Justice, it was felt that language approaching that used in the title of the bill would be more appropriate. So, for the words "armed forces of a designated state", we substituted "visiting forces".

The third amendment, where there are about six lines struck out, was a question of draftsmanship. It appeared easier to strike out the six lines and re-insert them with the amending words, than to strike out the words where they occur in each case. It is not a substantial matter: I would call it a language change which gives a better reading of the section.

Report adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I move that this bill be read the third time now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

CRIMINAL CODE (HATE PROPAGANDA)

JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN SENATE MEMBERSHIP

Hon. Arthur L. Beaubien, with leave of the Senate, moved:

That the name of the honourable Senator Aird be substituted for that of the honourable Senator Lang on the list of senators serving on the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons appointed to study and report upon amendments to the Criminal Code relating to the dissemination of varieties of "hate propaganda" in Canada as set out in Bill S-49, intituled: "An Act to amend the Criminal Code"; and

That a message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that house accordingly.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I move that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, December 13, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

I understand that in the other place they are debating medicare and their plan is to follow that with a debate on the pension bill. I have no idea and no one can forecast when that debate will finish. The medicare bill may be completed next week. I hope to be able to arrange that the Senate return to deal with both measures at the same time rather than returning for one and then for the other. That is why I have moved for an adjournment to a week from Tuesday rather than to some day next week. By adjourning for this length of time, subject to being recalled on the direction of the Speaker, there is a reasonable prospect of accomplishing what is desired.

There will be a meeting of the Finance Committee tomorrow morning. I would ask as many members and other senators who are free to attend that meeting.

I should also like to point out that, although the Senate is adjourning until December 13 because of lack of legislation, nevertheless many senators are attending the meetings of the various joint committees at which the Senate is represented. They are working hard and spending a great deal of time here, and for what they are doing in that respect they deserve our collective thanks.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: May I ask the honourable leader a question with reference to legislation? I understand that the Commons will be discussing medicare first and then the pension bill. Are they likely to discuss any other legislation, for instance the budget?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Well, it is difficult to forecast. The legislation with respect to transport is also about ready to go back into the house, and, as the press has indicated and is a matter of public knowledge, it is expected that there will be another budgetary proposal made by the Minister of Finance some time before the Christmas recess. However, I doubt that there will be much legislation arising out of any budget speech before Christmas. Under its rules, the House of Commons has to spend at least six days debating a budget; therefore, it is unlikely to produce any legislation for us before then.

Subject to correction as events develop, I would guess that the order of legislation is medicare, the pension bill and perhaps the transport bill.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Is there any likelihood of prorogation occurring before the end of this year, or will this session be carried over into 1967?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): My judgment would be that the session would not terminate before the end of the calendar year. Among other reasons would be the fact that the Bank Act is now in committee. The other day when I inquired there were some thirteen important witnesses still to be called, and I would think the Government would not wish to start the Bank Act amendments all over again in another session. Therefore, I think the present session will continue into the next calendar year and I hope wind up rather early in the year.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: There is no particular reason for medicare being hurried through, as I understand. It is not going to come into force until July 1968.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I think it is always desirable that when the House has passed important legislation the Senate should act upon it promptly—

Hon. Mr. Brooks: I am not arguing to the contrary.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): —and I try to observe that.

Hon. Thomas Vien: Honourable senators, I think this occasion justifies my intervention at this moment. The honourable Leader of the Government has mentioned the desirability of concluding certain legislation before the end of this session; failing to do so, we would have to commence it all over again next session.

I would like to suggest to the leader consideration of the expediency of changing the rules in that respect. I quite understand that when there is dissolution of Parliament—whether the Government changes or not—it is required that the legislation be considered afresh. But between two sessions of the same Parliament, I do not believe it is expedient that a piece of legislation—for instance, the Bank Act—should come to grief and have to be considered all over again before the same members of Parliament, both in the Senate and the House of Commons.

I suggest to my honourable leader that the rules should be amended so as to provide that when a session of Parliament comes to an end, not by dissolution but by prorogation, upon resumption of the same Parliament in a new session, consideration of that legislation should be continued from the point at which it was interrupted. I think that procedure would be proper and convenient, and would expedite the dispatch of business.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: Would the honourable leader give us any idea as to approximately when the Christmas recess will begin —subject to correction?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Well, certainly we will not be sitting at Christmas. Much depends upon when the budget debate takes place, because those are days that are legislatively unproductive for the Senate. If the budget debate continues until the Commons takes its Christmas recess, then our recess might begin a good deal earlier. Likewise, assuming the session goes over into next year, as it likely will, there will not be any legislation for us to consider when the Commons reassembles.

I cannot give an exact date, but it would be sufficiently in advance of Christmas to enable the honourable senator from Newfoundland to get home for Christmas.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: To hang up my stocking!

Motion agreed to.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 9, 1966

THIRD READING

Hon. Jean-Paul Deschatelets moved the third reading of Bill C-248, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1967.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, I want just to tell you that this morning we had a most profitable and useful sitting of the Standing Committee on Finance. The witness was Dr. Davidson, the Secretary of the Treasury Board, and the meeting was presided over by the Chairman, Senator Leonard.

We learned important things about the Treasury Board. We learned, first, that there are at the present time no regulations governing the Treasury Board, such as there are with respect to other government agencies. However, Dr. Davidson told us that in October next there will be regulations of some kind.

Another matter of great importance that was told us—and I take the liberty of informing you about it today because it will be several days before you receive a printed copy of the report—is that the Minister of National Revenue has replaced the Minister of Finance as the head of the Treasury Board; there are six cabinet ministers who are appointed to the Treasury Board, and they have also eight substitutes. Moreover, the Governor in Council may appoint additional members of the Privy Council, not necessarily members of the cabinet, to the Treasury Board.

Another matter that will interest you and about which Dr. Davidson spoke openly, is that there is no provision for a quorum on the Treasury Board. As I said, six cabinet ministers head the Treasury Board, they have eight substitutes, and they may have additional substitutes, but there is no regulation whatever concerning the quorum. Dr. Davidson added that as a rule there are three who meet together on Thursday afternoons to consider matters that are submitted to the Treasury Board.

Honourable senators, I thought you would be interested in knowing about these matters, and that is why I have taken the liberty of informing you of them at this time.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that he had received the following communication.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE
Ottawa

30 November, 1966

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Hon. Robert Taschereau, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, acting as Deputy of His Excellency the Governor-General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 30th November, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
A. G. Cherrier
Assistant Secretary
to the Governor General

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate

CRIMINAL CODE (HATE PROPAGANDA)

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—
DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Roebuck for the second reading of Bill S-49, to amend the Criminal Code.

Hon. Salter A. Hayden: Honourable senators, there has been already a fair amount of serious and interesting debate on this bill. We have heard from those who support the bill in the form in which it is now before us, and those who suggest that however meritorious the bill may be, its provisions are unnecessary having regard to the state of our law at the present time. Some honourable senators have said that this is a bill which proposes to make law certain provisions for dealing with situations with which we in Canada are entirely unfamiliar—situations which have not occurred in Canada.

I propose to develop that point as I go along, but my first observation is that the provisions with respect to genocide should not appear in this bill. That is my firm belief.

In that connection I would refer you to the British legislation which was enacted in 1965, entitled the Race Relations Act 1965, over 50 per cent of which deals with discrimination as to race, colour and so on exercised by the proprietor or manager of a hotel, lodging place or eating place, and also discrimination in property restrictions and matters of that kind. Provisions as to discrimination are already contained in the laws of most, if not all, of our provincial jurisdictions, because the province is the authority primarily that must deal with such matters.

The other part of the English act concerns questions of public order. It makes it an offence for any person, with intent to stir up hatred against any section of the public in Great Britain distinguished by colour, race or ethnic or national origin, to publish or distribute written matter, et cetera. It also makes it an offence to utter words which are likely to stir up hatred against any section on the grounds of colour, race or ethnic or national origin. This portion of the English legislation is based on breach of the peace.

Honourable senators will recall the experiences in England over the last few years when there were serious race riots in various parts of the country. It was my experience about eighteen months ago to pass through a city the day after one of those race riots had occurred. The knowledge of what was going on gave me an awesome kind of feeling. I had the feeling that I was moving through an armed camp, and I did not know which side might jump on me. I made sure that I got through that city as quickly as I could. But there was an immediate purpose to be served by the creation of this offence in England. It is a breach of the peace if you stir up hatred against any section of the public which is distinguished by the characteristics to which I have referred. We do not have that situation in Canada, and this makes it more difficult to come to grips with the necessity of providing specifically in legislation for it.

I want to say something further about the genocide provision. As I said, I think it has no place in this bill. We do not need it because we have had no situation of that kind. I can understand the feelings of those who are supporting this bill, because they remember the horrors and atrocities in Europe during the period of the last war, when millions of people were enslaved and put to death, their only crime being that they wore a particular badge of race which conflicted with the mass psychology of the people and the rulers in the country at that time.

However, when we are thinking about the effectiveness of the provision of genocide in the bill, I would suggest that even if one assumed that this bill had been passed and became law in all the countries of Europe immediately prior to the outbreak of World War II, the measure would have accomplished nothing in the way of preventing what actually happened. What happened occurred in spite of and without any regard to what the law might or should have been, and without any regard for principles of morality or the humanities. It was simply a case of a ruling class taking the law unto itself. There is no way in legislation of preventing the occurrence that sort of thing.

I think the proper place to deal with genocide is where it already has been dealt with, that is, in the United Nations. Basically, the question of genocide becomes one of international law, and the United Nations has a convention on the prevention and punishment of the crime of genocide. That convention was adopted by the General Assembly of the United Nations in December 1948, and came into force in January 1951, when the required number of countries filed their ratifications. Article I states:

> The Contracting Parties confirm that genocide, whether committed in time of peace or in time of war, is a crime under international law which they undertake to prevent and to punish.

The next article goes on to define what is genocide, and the language used in Article II of the convention is almost word for word that of paragraphs (a), (b), (c) and (d) of the new section 267A (2) in the bill which is now before us. Paragraph (e) deals with forcibly transferring children of the group to another group.

The bill then goes on to define what acts shall be punishable. The enumeration is, genocide, conspiracy to commit genocide, direct and public incitement to commit genocide, attempt to commit genocide, and complicity in genocide.

Then we come to the undertaking of the parties. Article V of the convention reads:

> The Contracting Parties undertake to enact, in accordance with their respective Constitutions, the necessary legislation to give effect to the provisions of the present Convention and, in particular, to provide effective penalties for persons guilty of genocide or of any of the other acts enumerated in Article III.

Then, Article VI reads:

> Persons charged with genocide or any of the other acts enumerated in Article III shall be tried by a competent tribunal of the state in the territory of which the act was committed, or by such international penal tribunal as may have jurisdiction with respect to those Contracting Parties which shall have accepted its jurisdiction.

Here we have an international body proscribing the offence of genocide and providing a way through our international court of law for dealing with this particular crime.

Canada was a signatory and filed its ratification, and therefore assumes certain obligations. However, in Canada we have always had in our Criminal Code the offence of murder, and I think it is murder, no more, no less, to kill one, two, six or more persons.

We have in our Criminal Code at the present time, and have had for many years —perhaps for as long as the Code has existed—the offence of counselling or promoting or attempting or conspiring to commit an indictable offence—and killing is an indictable offence. We have different penalties provided where the offence involves counselling, or conspiring, or attempting, or being an accessory after the fact, and the penalty is life imprisonment. There is a substantial penalty provided for one who does the counselling, etc., and where the sentence for the offence committed is under 14 years, a lesser penalty is provided.

Therefore, the broad field in relation to killing is covered, and probably has been, for as long as our Criminal Code has been in existence, and applies merely because the subjects are human beings and life has been taken in violation of our criminal law.

Paragraph (b) of section 267A (2) speaks of "causing serious bodily or mental harm to members of the group." That might involve assault or an attempt to assault, or counselling or advocating assault. All of those are offences now covered by the Criminal Code.

Paragraph (c) reads:

> Deliberately inflicting on the group conditions of life calculated to bring about its physical destruction.

That puzzles me, because I do not know how that would be possible unless you had a ruling class and the government in control was forcing this sort of situation. Short of that, I do not know how the actual offence could be committed.

On counselling or advocating or promoting this sort of thing, there are in the law at the present time provisions for the offence of encouraging a breach of the peace, and other similar provisions.

In 1960 we enacted a Bill of Rights, and I wonder how much thought has been given to it. In that Bill of Rights we declared certain rights as having always existed and continuing to exist. I will read the opening words of Part I:

> It is hereby recognized and declared that in Canada there have existed and shall continue to exist without discrimination by reason of race, national origin, colour, religion or sex, the following human rights and fundamental freedoms, namely,
> (a) the right of the individual to life, liberty, security of the person and enjoyment of property, and the right not to be deprived thereof except by due process of law;—

Then the other freedoms continue, and since all are familiar with them I do not need to read them.

May I suggest for your consideration that here is a statute of the Parliament of Canada and a declaration of the rights of persons who compose Canada in relation to each other and their country. The Bill of Rights was enacted after Canada had become a party to this convention of the United Nations, and could be read in conjunction with Canada's obligations under that convention.

While there is no provision specifically dealing with the penalty for breaching these provisions, it will be recalled that there is a general provision in our Criminal Code, which has been there for a considerable time. Section 107 provides that:

> Everyone who, without lawful excuse, contravenes an Act of the Parliament of Canada by wilfully doing anything that it forbids or by wilfully omitting to do anything that it requires to be done is, unless some penalty or punishment is expressly provided by law, guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for two years.

So there is a penal provision that could be correlated even to this declaration in the Bill of Rights.

Paragraph (d) in the genocide section of the bill reads:

> Deliberately imposing measures intended to prevent births within the group.

I find it difficult to determine or to fix in my mind the scope and extent of that provision. What does it mean? How far does it go? If I counsel or promote, deliberately imposing measures intended to prevent births within the group, what does it conflict with that we now have in our law in the way of organizations and societies, and even in recognition of advances that are being made in this area and that will continue to be made?

These matters bring me back to where I started, that is, that some of the provisions of the bill, particularly paragraphs (c) and (d) of section 267A (2) which I have already read, are situations that could only develop as a factor in substantive law through the Government imposing this sort of law. True, the proposed offence here is "who advocates or promotes."

Within the scope of our present law we have the Criminal Code and the governing by-laws in cities on gatherings of people. How do you go about promoting these things? You write a letter to the newspaper. One must always look at these things in their context.

Honourable senators, my own personal view is that emotion has dictated these provisions in the definition of genocide. Emotion is an honest sense of feeling, and the emotion has been stirred by the most terrible events that history has ever disclosed. For that reason, it becomes important that we try to be as objective as we can in achieving something which will accomplish a purpose. To me, section 267A will accomplish nothing that we cannot already achieve under our present laws.

In any event, it is inadvisable to think of attempting to deal with a problem of this kind by such vague, indefinite language as we have here. If this is passed into law it might bring a new rash and a new set of situations encroaching on freedom, with problems at least as serious and perhaps more serious than any we were trying to overcome. I couple with that the fact that we do not know this sort of thing in Canada. Believing that the people in Canada are a tolerant, friendly, sociable people, I believe this is not the kind of soil in which this reaction would develop, or develop to any extent.

It did arise in the field of discrimination, as I mentioned earlier, but that has been corrected; and even Senator Croll, speaking the other day, referred to the fact that, by legislation in force over the last number of years, discrimination has ceased to be a real problem in Canada.

Having expressed my views in relation to genocide, I would add that, if this bill goes to a joint committee for study and the hearing of witnesses, and if the committee reports this bill in the form in which it is now, I would vote against it, because I do not believe that genocide should be dealt with in the bill at all.

On that point, since there has been some discussion on the principle, and on what we are doing on the second reading stage, let me say that, if the bill were going to a committee of the Senate only, where this proposed legislation would be carefully studied and where an effort would be made to maintain the substance of the bill, I would be more firm in my opposition than I feel I need be at this time. If you vote for the study of this bill by a joint committee, I may very well say, when it finally comes to a vote, "on division". That is because I feel that the purpose of the joint committee is to analyze this bill and to find its weaknesses. It may be that the whole bill has weaknesses which make it impossible to pass it into law. But let the joint committee study it and tell us so. I would not have committed myself, in my view, to the principle of the bill beyond this.

Honourable senators, I ask you, what is the principle of this bill? Is not the real principle of the bill an attempt to deal with propaganda by hate literature? That is another reason for my saying that genocide has been dragged in but has no place in this bill.

I doubt if there is a senator or a Canadian who would say in principle that he is not opposed to hate literature, to the sneaky or the dastardly and wide-open material that might be distributed and that might select some sections of the public, by reason of race or colour or ethnic origin, and revile those people. It is difficult not to be against that sort of thing.

Therefore, I think the principle is "hate literature." Since the bill goes further than that, I do not feel that, in sending the bill to a joint committee, I am subscribing to any principle other than the principle that hate literature is something I despise and that I am in favour of trying to find some way by which it can be regulated, controlled or prevented.

On that point, I believe there are other ways in which it should be treated rather than the way selected here, taking a breach of the peace as a method and creating that as the offence. In my view, the language in which this is done is vague and confusing, and would give rise to many difficulties and many applications that were never intended. We might build up a conflict among various ethnic groups in Canada, with one group asserting that another group had made certain criticisms or was promoting certain ideas against another group. We may have an incitement to hatred that does not exist at the present time and we may create many tender spots which do not now exist, simply through the desire of each group to keep itself immaculate in its own eyes and in its own judgment, so far as its heritage and its background is concerned. I do not know where this would end, so I would hesitate a long time before approving of a start along those lines.

For instance, remarks or writings of the character described as hate literature may constitute a defamatory libel; and defamatory libels are covered in our Code as a criminal offence. The provisions in the Code may not go far enough to cover groups and sections of the public; but Parliament has power to create new law. There are many offences in the Criminal Code today which did not exist previously and which were introduced accordingly as changes in our social relationships indicated a need to create new offences. That would be one way of dealing with it.

As a matter of fact, that is not an original idea of mine. When the commission was set up to deal with this question, a number of bills were introduced by private members of the House of Commons. One bill, introduced by Mr. Monteith, proposed that the matter be dealt with by amending and broadening the applicable provisions in relation to defamatory libel. Other bills followed the line of dealing with it under seditious libel, while others suggested dealing with it as a breach of the peace. Which is the best method? I would like the joint committee to study that, to determine, first, whether we need this type of legislation; and, secondly, what is the best way of doing it.

I do not know why we are so concerned about the person who has created this sort of literature, surrounding him with all the rights of our law, borrowed from the rights that we have provided in the case of obscene literature. If this charge is not proven, the documents are returned in the ordinary way. I do not know why we have to be so particular, on a question that is so important, that is so fraught with emotion and which so easily can stir up hatred. Why should we not create the offence, in whatever way we intend to do so, and simply provide the penalties? Then, if a person is acquitted, he will get back his documents.

Honourable senators, to summarize the points I have been making, first, it is not necessary to incorporate a section on genocide in this bill in order that Canada may fulfil the undertakings given by its ratification of the United Nations convention on genocide, secondly, in that connection, the provisions in our Code and in our general law go far enough.

On the question of hate literature specifically, it would appear from looking at the report of the commission that a great deal, perhaps a very large percentage, of so-called hate literature that was presented to the commission represented importations from other countries, with much of it coming from various states in the United States.

We do have regulations in our Post Office Act under which the entry of such literature can be prohibited and prevented; we do have provisions that, if you are in possession of such things in Canada, in violation of the provisions of an act such as the Post Office Act or Customs Act, whichever it is, you are guilty of an offence and can be prosecuted. So we do have methods of keeping anything originating on the outside from coming into Canada; and, in my view, we have enough strength in our law to control the situation, having regard to the present state of education and tolerance of the people in Canada.

I think it will take a long time, if we ever succeed, to erase even from succeeding generations of Canadians the memory of the awful experiences their forebears went through during the Second World War period. I can remember that this Senate took a position in this regard, and some of the senators of that time are still here.

Senator Hugessen made a speech concerning the occasion of the Nazi destruction of the Czechoslovakian Village of Lidice, where the occupation forces, because of some violation of discipline or regulations, razed the town completely, killing every adult male inhabitant and shipping off the women and children to labour and concentration camps. On that occasion I suppose the inefficient, older people ultimately ended up in those horrible places of death. The others ended in labour camps.

At the time of that occurrence, Senator Hugessen put a resolution on the paper here and we had a debate. We did not have that debate because we thought it would change what had been done or would prevent future similar occurrences. We wanted to show people on the outside, in other parts of the world, who were holding fast to their views, that we were providing as much moral and physical support as we could.

I had occasion at that time to speak in that debate, and I will say that the speeches were reported in the papers—not that we intended they should be—in the various parts of the United States and Canada at least. So, in speaking as I have today, I do not think any person could accuse me of being a supporter in any fashion of hate literature or of the incitement to hatred by any words, deeds or actions that are related to any person in Canada by reason of his colour, race or ethnic origin. My position was so firmly stated back in 1942, and, as a matter of fact, for those who know me it has been all through my life, that when I speak as I have it is not with any desire to obstruct this bill or to obstruct the giving of statutory effect to legislation of a kind that will give assurance, if we have people in Canada who feel that assurance is necessary, that these things cannot happen in Canada. But we must be rational about it. We must not run at it. We must try to be objective, when there are a lot of other people whose objectivity is dimmed by a high rise in the degree of their emotions.

That is understandable, after all. I am not being critical for that reason, but we do have a job to do as well, and, in taking time for debate there is no desire to prolong consideration of this bill. The very fact that there is going to be a joint committee, however, means that the views of the members of the Senate, or of as many as possible, should be stated as a matter of record so that the committee, when it sits, will be able to get a cross-sectional viewpoint representative of the sum total of senators who are here. It is for that reason that I have spoken as long as I have.

One further thought: Having regard to the nature of any legislation that might be required to deal with hate literature and what is involved in any consideration of it, is how emotion will play such a large part in the charges that may be brought forward, and the allegations that may be made, that such and such an article is inciting hatred in relation to certain groups of people. I think a very salutary safeguard in any event would be that there should be no prosecution under legislation of that kind without first obtaining the consent of the Attorney General of Canada.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Flynn, debate adjourned.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

APPOINTMENT OF JOINT COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER REMOVAL OF MR. JUSTICE LANDREVILLE

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I move:

> That the Senate do unite with the House of Commons in the appointment of a Joint Committee of both Houses of Parliament to enquire into and report upon the expediency of presenting an address to His Excellency praying for the removal of Mr. Justice Leo Landreville from the Supreme Court of Ontario, in view of the facts, considerations and conclusions contained in the report of the Honourable Ivan C. Rand concerning the said Mr. Justice Leo Landreville, dated the 11th day of August, 1966, and tabled in the House of Commons on the 29th day of August, 1966, and tabled in the Senate on the 22nd day of November, 1966;
> That the Senate designate six members of the Senate to be members of the Joint Committee, namely, the Honourable Senators Cook, Fournier (de Lanaudière), Hnatyshyn, Lang, Langlois and Macdonald (Cape Breton);
> That the committee have the power to appoint, from among its members, such subcommittees as may be deemed advisable or necessary, to call for persons, papers and records, to engage counsel, to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate and to report from time to time; and

That the committee have power to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee for its use and the use of Parliament; and

That a message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that house accordingly.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Robert Taschereau, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned and being come with their Speaker:

The Honourable Lucien Lamoureux, Speaker of the House of Commons, then addressed the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General as follows:

May it please Your Honour:

The Commons of Canada have voted certain supplies required to enable the Government to defray the expenses of the public service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Honour the following bill:

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1967.

To which bill I humbly request Your Honour's assent.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the said bill.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, December 13, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, December 13, 1966

The Senate met at 8 p.m., Hon. Maurice Bourget, P.C., Acting Speaker, in the Chair.

Prayers.

JOINT COMMITTEES

CHANGES IN COMMONS MEMBERSHIP

The Hon. the Acting Speaker informed the Senate that messages have been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the name of Mr. Fawcett has been substituted for that of Mr. Brewin on the Special Joint Committee on Immigration; and that the name of Mr. Chatwood has been substituted for that of Mr. Rochon on the Special Joint Committee on the Public Service of Canada.

PRIVATE BILLS

GENERAL MORTGAGE SERVICE CORPORATION OF CANADA—COMMONS AMENDMENT CONCURRED IN

The Hon. the Acting Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons returning Bill S-8, respecting General Mortgage Service Corporation of Canada, and acquainting the Senate that they have passed this bill with the following amendment, to which they desire the concurrence of the Senate:

> Page 1, Lines 16 and 22. Delete the words "sections 1 and 2" and substitute therefor the words "sections 1, 2 and 4".

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this amendment be taken into consideration?

Hon. T. D'Arcy Leonard: Honourable senators, I move, with leave, that this amendment be concurred in now.

This bill was introduced in the Senate, was given first and second readings, referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, received third reading and was passed on February 24 last. Since that time it has been in the House of Commons.

This is a simple bill. It changed the English name of the corporation by dropping the word "Service", so that the new name would be General Mortgage Corporation of Canada. It changed the names of its securities by dropping the word "Mortgage" out of the title of the bonds they were issuing, so that the new names would be "Series A Bonds" and "Series B Bonds", instead of "Series A Mortgage Bonds" and "Series B Mortgage Bonds".

The amendment that the House of Commons has made to this bill is very slight. There is some question as to whether or not it would be required at all, but I think that pursuant to the old legal maxim ex abundanti cautela they have chosen to make this slight amendment. In the bill there was the usual saving clause whereby the change in name did not affect any right of action or judgment existing, or any suit or proceeding now pending, et cetera. That clause was confined to sections 1 and 2 of the bill when it passed this house. Those were the sections which dealt with the change in name of the company. The saving clause did not refer to the change in name of the bonds.

Now the House of Commons has inserted section 4 in the phraseology of section 3 so that the saving clause now extends to rights, if any, shall I say, covered by the question of the change in name of the bonds. When the amendment was suggested in the committee in the House of Commons the sponsors agreed to the change.

Amendment concurred in.

BANK OF BRITISH COLUMBIA—COMMONS AMENDMENTS

The Hon. the Acting Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons returning Bill S-16 to incorporate Bank of British Columbia, and acquainting the Senate that they have passed this bill with certain amendments to which they desire the concurrence of the Senate.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, this is a private measure upon which I have no real authority to speak. However, I understand that Senator Lang on behalf of Senator Farris, the sponsor, will move consideration at the next sitting. Perhaps honourable senators would agree to dispense with the reading of the amendments at this stage and have them printed in the Minutes of the Proceedings in time for consideration tomorrow.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: When shall these amendments be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Lang, for Hon. Mr. Farris, moved that the amendments be taken into consideration at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

For text of amendments see appendix, p. 1242.

APPROPRIATION BILL No. 10, 1966

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-254, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1967.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) moved, with leave, that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

MEDICAL CARE BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-227 to authorize the payment of contributions by Canada towards the cost of insured medical care services incurred by provinces pursuant to provincial medical care insurance plans.

Bill read first time.

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Alan Macnaughton moved, with leave, that the bill be read the second time now.

He said: Honourable senators, in making my initial remarks as a newcomer to this chamber, I am well aware of the significance of this occasion for me. So it is with due humility that I rise this evening to introduce a bill of very considerable significance to our people and to the welfare of everyone residing within the borders of our land. This bill adds one more step in the forward march to a program of health and welfare benefits which, it is our dream, will, in the not too distant future, see Canadians free of want and of ill health, and leading other countries along the road of good living for all.

Less than a decade ago, this Senate passed a measure not unrelated to the one with which we will be dealing this evening. I would remind honourable senators of the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act which has been enabling the residents of all provinces and jurisdictions to have readily available without financial obstacles the benefits of hospital and diagnostic services. When this act came into operation there were those who raised some doubts and who expressed some fears about the effects of certain features of the law which, on looking back, we now know were groundless. In fact, there is no voice in the whole of this vast country which would be raised today in opposition to the legislation passed at that time in connection with hospital insurance and diagnostic services.

Tonight I am proud to introduce a bill entitled the Medical Care Act which, in effect, complements the benefits already made available through the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Program. The present bill, in effect, fills in the gaps previously left, in that provision is now being made to ensure to our people the services of physicians, both medical practitioners and specialists, without financial obstacle.

When this program comes into complete fruition, our people will have obtained not all of the health services we hope some day to be able to make available to them, but at least those required most frequently by the largest number of citizens. The Government has made abundantly clear that they do not consider this bill to represent the end of the road, but rather an important milestone along the way. I am sure we are all anxious to hasten towards the health goal upon which we have set our sights, but in doing so we must have regard to the total needs of our people, including essential needs beyond the health field. It is for this reason that we must pace our health program. At the same time we must constantly move forward, as we have been moving these last twenty years. It was precisely at that time we were designing our National Health Grants Program which it was envisaged would set the stage for health insurance. Then, just one decade later, we designed our Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Program which was, in effect, the first major step in our comprehensive health insurance plan towards which we are striving today. We now have before us a bill called the Medical Care Act, the second major step towards our goal.

When the Medical Care bill was first presented for the consideration of the legislators, it was designed precisely in accordance with four basic principles which were placed before the provincial governments by the Prime Minister of this country in July 1965. One of these principles related to the scope of the benefits which provincial governments would be required to provide. In order for a province to receive from the federal Government a contribution for medical care, the provincial government would be required to provide to all residents insurance for the costs of physicians' services, both general practitioners and specialists. As I have indicated, the Government recognized these services did not in themselves comprise a complete health insurance program, and it was intimated at that time by the Prime Minister that additional services would be included subsequently when there was a consensus as to extensions.

In its present form, therefore, the Medical Care bill encompasses all physicians' services as a prerequisite for federal contributions and, in addition, the statute empowers the Governor in Council, on the recommendation of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, to add additional health services. This new flexibility will have the effect of giving a statutory basis to what may become, in the course of time, a broad program under which all personal health services will be insured.

Honourable senators, I would now like to discuss briefly the different provisions of the bill, copies of which I understand have already been distributed in this house. I purposely make it rather brief because, outside of referring to one or two sections as we go along, I am enunciating the basic principles.

The essential feature of Bill C-227 is its simplicity. The purpose of the bill is to permit Canada to make contributions to provinces which mount a medical care scheme adhering to four basic principles. Apart from stating these principles, the bill does not attempt to dictate to provinces any detail with respect to a provincial plan.

As I said before, in July 1965 the Prime Minister announced the willingness of the federal Government to make contributions of this kind. Further details were elaborated at a meeting of provincial Ministers of Health in September 1965, and again in January 1966. Generally speaking, no province objected to the principles, although I must admit some provinces had some objections to some of them, or parts of some of them.

The federal Government is stating that in order to qualify for federal contributions a provincial plan must, first, be universal. That is, it must cover all the population of a province. In recognition of the practical difficulties of covering all of the population of a province which chooses to raise its share of cost by a voluntary premium system, the federal Government has agreed that for its purposes coverage of 90 per cent of the population at the outset of the plan will be considered satisfactory. Second, a provincial plan must be comprehensive in that it provides, as a minimum, for the payment of services by physicians and surgeons. Third, a provincial plan must be publicly administered. Fourth, a provincial plan must be transferable from province to province.

The extent of the contribution offered by the federal Government is one-half of the average national per capita cost of services provided by physicians and surgeons.

There is nothing in the bill to prevent any province from offering more extensive benefits to its citizens under the provincial plan. Indeed, the federal Government would be very pleased if such were the case. However, the federal Government has said that as a minimum a provincial plan must provide for physicians' services, and the federal contribution at the moment is limited to one-half the cost of these services. At a later date, and if there is consensus among the provinces as to the desirability of extending benefits, the federal Government will be quite prepared to give consideration to increasing its contribution appropriately.

Clause 2 of the bill contains the interpretation of the terms used elsewhere in the bill.

Clause 3 is the authority for the federal Government to make contributions.

Clause 4(1) sets out the four principles I have already mentioned, but some detailed explanation may be useful. With respect to public administration, there is no doubt that administratively the most simple procedure in a province would be to have a plan operated by a department of the provincial government. Such action, however, fails to take into consideration the existence of many non-profit or co-operative plans which are now in operation and which some provinces may wish to retain. The bill before us, therefore, allows provinces to appoint agents to carry out part of the administrative duties in respect to a provincial plan, provided these agents are non-profit in nature, are subject to public audit, and are responsible to the provincial government. The province is required, however, under its law to set up a provincial authority which will have the responsibility of assessing accounts rendered for payment, and for determining the amounts to be paid. It is the desire of the federal Government to provide provinces with the greatest possible flexibility in this matter while still adhering to the overall principle of public administration. I submit that the bill does just this.

On the question of universality, the bill admits the practical difficulties which a province might meet in covering all of its residents in a situation where it chooses to raise its share of the cost by a system of voluntary payment of premiums. The bill agrees, therefore, that in the beginning coverage of 90 per cent of the population, rising to 95 per cent within a short period of years, will be considered universal coverage for the purpose of making federal contributions.

Experiences under the Hospital Insurance and Diagostic Services Act in a province such as Ontario, using a voluntary premium system, have shown that the attainment of this extensive coverage is entirely feasible. Acceptance of any lesser coverage by the federal Government would interfere with, to quote Sir Winston Churchill, "the magic of averages," in that it would be impossible for the provincial plan to be saddled with only the high-risk, high-cost segment of the population, while other competing plans provided coverage for the rest of the population.

The plan provides for payment for the provision of services of physicians and surgeons. Some provinces may wish to provide wider benefits, and it would be very desirable if they did so. Indeed, the fact that federal money is going to a province to assist in the cost of those services which form the greater part of medical expenses may mean that provinces are in a better position to provide greater benefits in a provincial plan.

The principle of portability has never been challenged, and the provinces have agreed to work out among themselves ways of implementing this principle.

Honourable senators, may I draw your attention to an amendment made in the original bill and now appearing as clause 4(3) in the bill, which empowers the Government, in accordance with terms set out in this clause, to add health benefits over and above those of physicians' services. In fact, when this amendment was passed, the Minister of National Health and Welfare said that it was his intention to recommend the inclusion of oral surgery carried out by dentists in public hospitals and in licensed private hospitals.

Clause 5 deals with the calculation of the federal contribution. In amount this is one-half of the average national per capita cost of physicians' and surgeons' services. The use of the national average provides encouragement for provinces to exercise reasonable economy in the operation of a provincial plan. A province in which the per capita cost is higher than the national average will receive less than 50 per cent of those costs. A province in which the per capita cost is lower than the national average will receive more than 50 per cent of the per capita cost.

Clause 6 explains the technical details of making federal contributions. In essence, the payments will be made on the basis of not less than 90 per cent of the estimated costs. Such payments will be made monthly, and adjustment will be made at the end of the year on the basis of actual costs.

Clause 7 sets out the procedure to be followed in the case of dispute between a province and the federal Government, particularly with respect as to whether or not the provincial plan qualifies for federal contributions. It also provides that in the event that a provincial plan is disqualified by the federal Government, recovery of any payments made to the province prior to disqualification will not be undertaken.

Clause 8 is in the bill to provide for a change in the methods of payment to provinces, and I consider this to be a most important clause. It is possible that following the deliberation of the Tax Structure Committee, Canada may want to withdraw from shared-cost programs and to provide tax room to the provinces in lieu. The bill provides for a "run-in" of five years to determine the cost trends of the medical care program on which information a determination of the appropriate amount of tax room could be based.

Clause 9 of the bill is a simple provision for an annual report to Parliament.

To sum up, Bill C-227 is essentially a financial bill giving the federal Government authority to make payments to provinces. The four principles which are set out as conditions which the provinces must meet in order to qualify for federal contributions must be regarded as minima in a medical care plan. It is important to note that the bill does not attempt to dictate to provinces the detailed nature or extent of a medical care plan which a province might wish to institute, beyond insistence on the four basic principles.

Honourable senators, this, then, is the program with which we are dealing tonight. It marks the inauguration of a new era for our people. It ensures that no resident of this land will be deprived for the lack of ability to meet the costs, of the fruits of scientific progress in the medical field so ably provided by Canadian physicians. It will remove the barrier so frequently posed by the economics of an ever-more complex society, to essential medical services. Although it is anticipated that provincial programs may differ one from the other in some respects, the fact that all participating provinces will include provisions designed to ensure the portability of benefits, that is, the right to carry entitlement from one part of Canada to another, will guarantee the national character of the program.

The legislation now before you, honourable senators, incorporates the main recommendations of the Hall Royal Commission. This was a commission set up by the official Opposition when it formed the government of the country. The Hall Commission called for a comprehensive, universal, publicly-administered, prepaid medical insurance scheme. These are precisely the principles set out in this bill.

I would now ask honourable senators to take the very important step of approving the principles of medical care insurance. In closing, I should like to express once more the privilege which I feel to have been mine tonight in having the opportunity to bring to this chamber, as one of my first acts, this statute designed for the welfare of all our people.

Hon. M. Wallace McCutcheon: Honourable senators, before I say a few words this evening, may I ask the sponsor of the bill (Hon. Mr. Macnaughton) whether, as and when the bill receives second reading, it will be referred to a committee?

Hon. Mr. Macnaughton: I feel quite sure, honourable senators, that this is the proper thing to do, and that the bill will be referred to a committee if the house so desires.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Thank you very much.

Honourable senators, in his closing remarks, Senator Macnaughton referred to the fact that this bill carried out the major recommendations of the Hall Royal Commission on Health Services. One might question whether that was really the case, because while the public attention was captured by the recommendations of the Royal Commission on Health Services regarding physicians' care, that was only one of a number of recommendations made by the commission. I had the honour to be a member of that commission, but I resigned from it when I was summoned to this place on August 19, 1962. I did not participate in its deliberations and in the preparation of the report, and as to some of its recommendations my views are very well known.

In its terms of reference, the commission was instructed to establish priorities, and that of course is the very thing that the commission failed to do and that the Government is today failing to do. The commission made many detailed recommendations, and it said we must push on, go along the road with them all at the same time. It had estimates of the shortages of medical and para-medical personnel, dental personnel, which have proven to be low. It had estimates as to the cost of providing educational and other facilities needed for training these personnel, which have proven to be low. So far the Government has merely paid lip service to those very important recommendations in the educational field to provide the people to do the job that is proposed this evening and the much wider job that the sponsor of the bill suggested.

The sponsor said that we put flexibility into it, and he referred to the amendment, which as he repeated twice, was made in the House of Commons on the recommendation of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Of course that is quite true. But the amendment was made only after four or five days of debate, during which, far from providing flexibility in the bill, the Minister of National Health and Welfare was willing to withdraw certain physicians' services from the bill as his solution of the problem which was properly put before him.

A number of my colleagues will be speaking on this bill, and in many respects they will speak with more authority than I will. We know now that the bill will be going to a committee, so that certain sections, the effect of which frankly I do not understand, will be explained there. So, I simply want to make a few general remarks.

I regard this bill as essentially a further unwarranted intrusion by the federal Government into fields of provincial jurisdiction. If the federal Government had said, we will contribute to the cost of medicare plans—to use that term—as developed by each province, in accordance with what it considers the needs and requirements of its people, I probably should not be speaking here tonight. After all, we are taxpayers provincially and we are taxpayers federally, and it can come out of one pocket or out of two pockets and be shared in that way. It does not affect the taxpayer. However, that is not what is being done.

This is one more evidence of the new socialism. The new socialism is based on the philosophy that government—and it seems particularly true of the federal Government—knows better what should be done for the people than the people know themselves. So we have the provision of universality. We continue to narrow the area within which the individual can exercise his own judgment regarding his own affairs.

I do not for a moment suggest that there should be any person in this country who, if medical help is available—and I wish to underline that to honourable senators—if medical help is available, should not be entitled to it, and without any financial barrier, if he needs it.

The Province of Ontario has a plan which is universally available. I agree with universal availability, but I do not agree to a plan which tells the Province of Ontario that it must enlist 90 per cent, and subsequently 95 per cent, of the people in it. This is a plan which, we are told, does not impose any details on the province—it merely lays down that you have to come in, that the plan must be universal.

The bill describes the scope of the benefits, subject to that flexibility amendment which the Minister of National Health and Welfare was forced to make. It must be comprehensive—that is included in the scope of the benefits. It must be administered by a public agency—with a slight refinement which the sponsor has set out. Also, it must be portable.

This means that there is very little more which they could add, except to specify the names of the officials, the bureaucrats, who will administer the scheme in a province.

The Province of Alberta has a scheme which is universally available and which it, like the Province of Ontario, subsidizes. There is no money barrier in those provinces. Why do we have to proceed on the basis that the federal Government knows better than the governments of, say, the Province of Ontario and the Province of Alberta, as to what should be done for their citizens in a field which is primarily the responsibility of the province?

It is the old case of "father knows best." It is also a species of blackmail. The Minister of Finance made that very clear when he spoke to the provincial premiers and finance ministers early this fall. He referred to the desire of the federal Government to move out of some of the cost-sharing programs. He referred to those programs being financed later by what he called tax transfers, equalized under the General Revenue Equalization Formula, plus a program of equalization payments calculated and escalated to ensure that the provinces were fairly dealt with. He forestalled the obvious question—"What if the provinces radically change the program?"—by saying that the programs had been in effect long enough that no province, in his opinion, would dare change it, and that the federal Government was therefore satisfied to do this. That is what he says in section 8 of this bill. In effect, he is saying: When I have forced you to conform for five years, this matter will have become so interwoven into the social and economic fabric that you will not dare give it up, and I will be able to move aside another few points on the personal tax or the corporate tax.

He cannot move very much further aside on the personal income tax, on his own admission. We will have an opportunity later this session, or early in the next session, to discuss some of the Honourable Mr. Sharp's categorical statements, such as that he must have 50 per cent of the personal income tax or he cannot fulfill his responsibility as Minister of Finance in the fiscal and monetary field. Personally, I do not believe that that statement is correct, but we will discuss it later.

Honourable senators, at the appropriate time my colleagues will introduce amendments to this bill. If it is not amended materially, we are taking another long step towards that socialistic state of which the Minister of National Health and Welfare at the moment seems to be the principal advocate in the present Government.

Honourable senators, having said that, I feel sure the sponsor of the bill realizes that my remarks are not directed to the quality or tone of his remarks, and may I take this opportunity of congratulating him upon his maiden speech in this chamber.

Hon. Joseph A. Sullivan: Honourable senators, it was with some degree of misgiving and anticipation, and now it is with a greater degree of anticipation, that I move the adjournment of this debate.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Sullivan, debate adjourned.

THE LATE SENATOR STANLEY S. McKEEN

TRIBUTES

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, since we last met, one of the most popular and most distinguished members of this chamber has died, in the person of Senator Stanley S. McKeen.

Senator McKeen was senator for his native Province of British Columbia. He was of Scottish ancestry, although he served in the First War, both in the Royal Flying Corps and in the Irish Fusiliers. He served also in the Second War, with the Vancouver Regiment; and his services were recognized by being awarded the distinction of becoming an Officer of the Most Honourable Order of the British Empire. When he died in 1966 he was 70 years of age; so, when he served in the Second War he was by no means a young man.

Stan McKeen's life has been a life of service to his country, to his province and to whatever community he happened to live in.

He was a member of the Legislature of British Columbia from 1933 to 1937. Those were difficult years in this country. They were the depression years, and he gave good service in that legislature during those times.

In 1947, some 19 years ago, he was appointed to the Senate. In 1953, as a representative of this chamber, he was a delegate to the United Nations Assembly. I think that all who knew him well will agree that he was devoted and dedicated to the work of Parliament, to the work of this chamber, and that, all in all, he was motivated by a high sense of patriotism.

But Stanley McKeen had another career over and above his career of public service, and that was in the business community, within the private sector of the economy of this country. That career was wide and diverse; it was in the field of shipping and shipbuilding primarily. He was also a director of many public and private enterprises, both business and educational, philanthropic and social.

He was an integral part of the social, political and economic development of an expanding British Columbia, and he helped mightily to shape it in its most dynamic days. If any evidence is needed regarding the extent of the diversity of his interests and his activities, one need only look at the Canadian Parliamentary Guide. They are listed there, and it is a most impressive list.

Stanley McKeen was one of the most energetic and enthusiastic members the Senate ever had. He added distinction and experience to the work of this chamber. He perhaps was not on his feet as much, particularly in later years, as some of us, but he did a lot in the committees and he was a faithful attendant at their work.

I think most of us will remember him for his personal charm and his great heart and the kindness that overflowed from it. In spite of the busy kind of life he led—and Stanley McKeen was busy from the moment he arose in the morning until he went to bed at night—he always seemed to have time for personal kindnesses to individuals. His colleagues here will remember him with deep affection on that account.

In his later years, ill health and tragedy both struck at him. We all agree that in spite of this he showed an indomitable courage.

I had personal experiences of Senator McKeen's kindness on many occasions. He was in Florida last winter when I was recuperating from an illness, and one of the great problems on his mind at the time was that, because of ill health, he was unable to come back to Canada to pay tribute to his former roommate and deskmate who had died while he was away. I refer to the late Senator Bouffard.

Senator McKeen will long be remembered in this chamber. He will be deeply appreciated in the memory of all of us who knew him. I say without any hesitation that he merited being appointed to the Senate of Canada.

I think all of us who knew him were proud to call him a colleague.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, as the Leader of the Government has just said, since we last met we have lost one of our outstanding senators. I have often thought how fine it would be if, after a recess or a short vacation, we could come back to this chamber and find all our old friends and colleagues still here. But this we know cannot be, and on this occasion we are mourning the loss of one who I know was dear to all senators in this chamber.

Senator McKeen, as was very eloquently represented to us, was widely and favourably known all across Canada, and rightly so, because he served his country well. He served it not only in peace but also in war. He was a man of many sides. Besides being a great businessman—and he was one of Canada's outstanding businessmen—he was a soldier in two wars. During the Second World War he made a great name for himself not only in western Canada but all across the country by raising very large amounts of money in Victory Bonds.

We also know that in sports he took a very active part. He helped to organize the British Empire Games, in Vancouver in 1954. He was also one of the governors of the British Columbia Lions Football Club.

I mention these facts to show what a many-sided man our late departed senator was.

The Leader of the Government has told us that Senator McKeen was liked by his associates. I have seen him in the last few years attending this Senate when he was a very sick man, and I was always pleased to see the number of senators—practically all of them —who went to his seat to tell him how pleased they were to see him back here.

I have not been in the Senate very long, and I did not know Stanley McKeen as well as most of the honourable senators here, but, in reading Hansard, I agree with the Leader of the Government that he had made some great contributions to the work of the Senate, both in the chamber and in committees.

Not long ago I read a speech he had made giving the history of his beloved Province of British Columbia. If anyone wishes to read the history of British Columbia, he can do no better than to read the speech Senator McKeen gave at that time. He loved his province. He was proud to have in his biography the fact that he was a native son of the Province of British Columbia. I am equally sure that his native province was very proud of him and will cherish his memory for many years.

I join with the Leader of the Government in extending to Senator McKeen's family our very sincere sympathy in their sorrow at the loss of our great comrade.

Hon. M. Wallace McCutcheon: Honourable senators, I cannot let this occasion pass without paying my small tribute of respect to the late Senator McKeen and extending my personal sympathy to the members of his family.

It is difficult to add anything more to the eloquent statements that have been made by the Leader of the Government and the Leader of the Opposition, but I did have the opportunity of knowing Stanley McKeen very well. I met him first during the last war, some 25 years ago. Immediately after the war I became closely associated with him in business in Vancouver and, subsequently, I was proud to be his colleague in the Senate.

I just want to emphasize one thing that the Leader of the Government said. With all his great contribution to the public life of Canada, whether in legislative chambers in the armed forces, or otherwise, and with all his contribution to the business community, Senator McKeen's outstanding characteristic and the one for which he will long be remembered was his kindly, generous and thoughtful nature. Many of us have been the recipients of his thoughtfulness and generosity. Certainly I have on many occasions, and it is that side of Stanley McKeen, and not the politician or the industrialist, that will long be remembered by me.

Hon. John J. Kinley: Honourable senators, we have all listened with interest to the eloquent and affectionate tributes paid to the memory of our honourable colleague who has just passed away. We all know that British Columbia is very far from Nova Scotia, but this tragedy connects the two, the East and the West, because Senator McKeen, although a native of British Columbia, had a Nova Scotia tradition in his family which he lived up to wonderfully.

The McKeens of Nova Scotia are a distinguished family. They have served the country in public places; they are giants in industry and are highly respected as distinguished citizens of our province. The late David McKeen was Lieutenant Governor of Nova Scotia in 1915, and today another member of the McKeen family is Lieutenant Governor of Nova Scotia. Both have been excellent governors, and have played a great part in the recent history of our province.

The late Senator McKeen was one of the kindest men I have known. He was my neighbour here in the Senate; he had his office next to mine for many years. Senator McCutcheon has said he had many reasons for remembering his kindness and the kindly things he did for people, and how he was so generous in all the things he did. I recall he was a member of and did valiant service in British Columbia for the St. John Ambulance Association. He passed through the various grades until he was appointed by his Sovereign as a Knight of Grace, and he joined the Priory of the Order of St. John in Canada where I served with him for many years. He was an outstanding figure upon whom you could always depend to play his part in anything that was necessary for the organization. He has left an honourable record; he did so many things well. It was a source of wonder to me as a businessman that he could be so successful in business, having so many interests and doing so much voluntary good for the people around him. He was in the forefront of practically every movement designed to elevate the tone of the people of his province.

He knew tragedy and suffered infirmities in the last few years of his life, but he had what I might call a marine attitude. He was president of a towing company, and president of an engineering and shipping company in British Columbia, and he stayed on deck despite the fact that he was infirm, and he fought to the last. When last I saw him here my opinion was that he would not last very long, but he still had hopes for the future and he still was optimistic about life in Canada.

The McKeens of Nova Scotia will be pleased to know that he was so well liked and highly esteemed here in the Senate. He has kept the name clean and great on the west coast. With other honourable senators, I wish to express to Senator McKeen's widow and family the sincere sympathy of my wife and myself. And now that he has been gathered to his fathers, their faith will help to sustain them in their sorrow.

RICHELIEU BRIDGE COMPANY ACT

BILL TO AMEND—AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. A. K. Hugessen, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, presented the following report of the committee on Bill S-44, to amend an act to incorporate the Richelieu Bridge Company:

> Your committee recommends that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 300 copies in French of its proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I move, with leave of the Senate, that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

PRIVATE BILL

BANK OF BRITISH COLUMBIA—COMMONS AMENDMENTS CONCURRED IN

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the amendments made by the House of Commons to Bill S-16 to incorporate Bank of British Columbia, which were presented yesterday.

Hon. Daniel A. Lang: Honourable senators, I draw your attention to the fact that the amendments to this bill are incorporated in the Minutes of the Proceedings at page 929. Although there are 20 amendments, 18 of them are merely a renumbering of the sections to conform with two substantive amendments which were brought in and passed in the other place.

Honourable senators will recall that this bill was introduced in the Senate on February 9 of this year, was referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce and there exhaustively dealt with and amended, and received third reading here on March 30. Since that time the bill has been in the House of Commons, and we now have it back with the amendments set out in the Minutes of the Proceedings.

Honourable senators are all quite familiar with this bill to incorporate the Bank of British Columbia which, in another form, first came before us in 1964. Because of the background and the treatment this legislation has received, I shall not take the time to do more than deal with the specific amendments now before us.

The first amendment deletes clause 5 of the bill, as passed in this place. Clause 5, as honourable senators will recall, requires that:

> (1) A majority of the directors of the Bank shall be resident in the Province of British Columbia.
> (2) A majority of the executive officers of the Bank shall be resident in or shall have their ordinary residence in the Province of British Columbia.

The question as to the exact intended nature of this bank was raised in the other place and was specifically directed to whether it was intended, as the sponsors had mentioned time and again, that it should be a national institution or be confined in a regional manner. It was felt that clause 5, by placing a limitation with respect to the residence of directors, put a decidedly regional cast on the bank. It was felt also that this was in conflict with the expressed intention that it should be an institution of a national character. As to who the directors should be, it was felt that this should be a matter to be decided entirely by the shareholders, subject, of course, to the restrictions contained in the Bank Act generally. For these reasons, it was seen fit to amend this bill by deleting clause 5.

The second amendment of substance was the addition of a new clause requiring that:

> No executive officer of the Bank shall be a director, employee or officer of any Government or agency thereof.

I am sure honourable senators will recall that when the original bill was before us for debate in 1964 concern was expressed with regard to the possible association between governmental officers and the provisional directors named in the original bill. That bill died on our Order Paper.

The bill we had before us earlier this year came without that association being present, and although today this association has been dissipated, that concern lingered in the minds of the members dealing with this legislation in the other place. Their concern was that if this association by any chance did persist, a conflict of interest might arise as between the interests of the provincial government and the interests of the bank. So, in amendment, this new clause was inserted to remove that possibility.

I think I can safely assume that both these amendments will commend themselves to this house as being in keeping with our own deliberations on this bill. I should add that these amendments met with the full concurrence of the sponsors of the bill.

As I mentioned previously, apart from the deletion of clause 5 and the insertion of the new clause 13, to which I have just referred, the other 18 amendments are merely for the purpose of renumbering the sections and the references to them throughout, to accommodate the deletion and the insertion.

Amendments concurred in.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 10, 1966

SECOND READING

Hon. John J. Connolly, moved the second reading of Bill C-254, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1967.

He said: Honourable senators, this appropriation bill is in the usual form, and I think I need not dwell upon the sections of the bill itself. However, I will devote my attention, and I hope yours, to the purpose behind the bill. The fact of the matter is that there are some 70 million people in India and Pakistan who are in dire distress on account of hunger caused by the failure of crops. The worst of this condition prevails in two provinces of India, and some 25 per cent of the Indian population is affected.

I should like to read to the chamber the letter dated November 16, 1966, from the Prime Minister of India Mrs. Indira Gandhi, to the Prime Minister of Canada, because it explains better than I can the circumstances under which this bill comes before us this afternoon. The letter reads as follows:

> For the second successive year, our country has been afflicted by drought. Earlier in the year, we were looking forward to a good, if not a bumper, crop because of our efforts to introduce better seeds and to increase the use of fertilisers. To start with, the rains too were good. But, as we approached harvest time, the rains suddenly stopped in certain parts of the country, irretrievably damaging standing crops and creating a grim unprecedented situation affecting nearly 70 million people in the densely populated States of Bihard and Uttar Pradesh. The situation we now face is more serious than the one that we have just tided over, because there are no carry-over stocks from the last crop.
> It has been my earnest hope that in the coming months, we would be able to manage with a lower level of imports and that the need to seek assistance from the countries which had helped us so generously in the past months would go down. However, in the situation in which we find ourselves, we have approached the U.S. Government for supplies under PL-480 and we have also requested your High Commissioner to approach the Canadian Government to assist us with 2 million tons of wheat.

I know that your Government will give its fullest consideration to our request and do whatever is possible to help us. I am addressing this letter to you personally because the month of January will be particularly difficult. The decision of the U.S. Government on our request for supply under PL-480 is likely to be delayed among other reasons because of the President's operation. It is imperative to avert an interruption in the programme of imports at a time when we need them most. In these circumstances, we should be most grateful if the Canadian Government could agree immediately to the supply of 500,000 tons of wheat, the shipment being so arranged that these supplies reach us by the second half of January at the latest. While it may well take some time to agree upon the terms on which the supply would be made, what is most important is to ensure that physical deliveries are not delayed on that account.

I am sorry to have to make this special plea for help for the second year in succession, but I feel sure that you will understand the compelling nature of the circumstances in which I have to do so.

With warm personal regards,

Yours sincerely,
Indira Gandhi.

Honourable senators, one of the corporal works of mercy that we all recognize is the feeding of the hungry, and hunger certainly does prevail in India. India is a country of great people. Many of us know the immense prestige that parliamentarians from India enjoy because of the Commonwealth associations that we have with them. We remember the distinguished delegation from India to the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association Meeting here in Ottawa last September under the leadership of Shri Hanumanthaiya, and those who were in New Zealand the year before will remember the similarly distinguished delegation under the leadership of Shri Desai. We remember too with warmth the visit that was made here, for the first time in the history of the two countries, by the Prime Minister of India, the late Mr. Shastri.

These gentle people of the East have great social and political problems. Not only does our heart go out to them but, being the great people they are, we want to do whatever we can to alleviate the terrible condition of distress which again has afflicted them. If for no other reason, as we approach the Christmas season the feeling of good will among all Canadians would support the proposal which is contained in this bill, to supply wheat and flour to India and to Pakistan to the value of $22,500,000.

The catastrophe that has struck those people is no fault of their own. By taking on this responsibility, Canadians will be providing a massive form of aid to a whole people. At this time of the year, when we try to exercise the virtue of charity, particularly to India, to be able to do so in this form should give us all a sense of personal gratification.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: I am sure we all feel indebted to the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) for his explanation of this bill, and it is unnecessary for me to say that we on this side of the house are in full accord with its objects.

I think it is good that Canada should provide additional aid to India during that country's time of distress, not only because she is in distress, but because, as the leader has told us, she is one of our Commonwealth countries. I feel that it is good for one Commonwealth country to come to the assistance of another whenever possible.

India has become one of the most impoverished and overcrowded countries in the world. The Leader of the Government has just told us that 70 million people are practically on the verge of starvation. It is fortunate that we in Canada can provide two million tons of wheat to starving people. It is well to remember that wheat, the main staff of life, is what such people need most in their distress, and it is good that Canada, with all her broad acres in the West, is able to supply it.

May I ask the honourable leader how many bushels of wheat will be sent? My friend from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson) tells me it will be about 10 million bushels. Would that be correct?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I think it would be 66 million bushels.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: There are about 40 bushels to the long ton.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: That would be 72 million bushels.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It is a complicated calculation. When the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks) has concluded his remarks, I shall be happy to put on record the amount of money that is involved with respect to wheat, milk powder and atta flour for India, and wheat to Pakistan, but I am afraid I have not the bushel figures.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: I understand the price per bushel is over $2, and if our expenditure is $22,500,000 it should not be difficult to calculate.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): The amount is for wheat and flour.

Hon. Mr. Paterson: That would work out at half a million long tons of wheat; that is, approximately 18 million bushels at $2.25 per bushel, or about $40 million.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: As we know, since obtaining her independence, India has attempted a series of five-year plans, which unfortunately have not been very successful, chiefly because her population is increasing at a terrific rate. Indeed, since 1947, the year of her independence, India's population has increased by 160 million people.

I was pleased to get a circular a few days ago with reference to this matter. It is called "News from Oxfam of Canada." I presume that other senators received this circular also. In addition to the Canadian Government giving $22,500,000 worth of wheat, churches, individuals and societies across the country are making donations.

According to this circular, the national chairman of Oxfam, Mr. Hawkins, says in regard to India:

> We cannot turn our backs on the problem; our present grant is extremely small, compared to the seriousness of the situation.

A cable from the Oxfam representative said:

> We are faced with a massive disaster; 30 million people in South Bihar alone are involved.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): That is in one state.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: I understood the leader to say that this aid also is being given to Pakistan.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes. Some $1½ million worth of wheat is to go to Pakistan out of this allocation.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: The press officer of Oxfam quotes again from the cable sent by the Oxfam field representative, Mr. Howard:

> Five districts are having starvation deaths now, and the numbers will leap up in the next two or three weeks. Some of the villages I visited close to Budh Gaya had groups of people already prostrate with starvation.
> In this local area, 100,000 children under five and 250,000 children under 12 are affected.

As I say, this is in that particular local area. He goes on to give much more information, but we know from what we have heard and from what he says in his report that the situation is most serious.

This situation pinpoints and emphasizes one aspect which has been mentioned in the Senate, and which I have heard mentioned in the United Nations and in the Parliamentary Association. The world's number one problem in these great Eastern countries today is that of feeding the people. This problem has been debated at the United Nations every year, and also in Dublin when I was at the International Parliamentary Association conference there. The problem is the tremendous increase in population.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: The population explosion.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: The population explosion. It used to take some hundreds of years for the world population to double, but now it doubles in about thirty-five years.

Besides giving food to these people, which is all right in times of stress such as this, what the Western nations particularly are trying to do is to teach the people better methods of farming and better ways of raising their own foods and crops. Canada is doing her share in this, as are other countries. I do not think we are doing more than our share, and there has been some criticism that we are not doing as much as we should. Nevertheless, we stand high in the list of aiding countries.

It is not necessary for me to make further remarks. This proposal is one which appeals mainly to all of us in the Senate. It appeals also to the great bulk of the people of Canada. We are very anxious to do whatever we can.

Hon. Walter M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I would like to add a word before the honourable Leader of the Government closes the debate. When I was in India in 1957 we spent a week in Pakistan, and during our travels there we visited the huge dam which the Canadians were building for the people of Pakistan on the Hindu Kush River.

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: At Warsak.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Yes. The honourable senator who has just spoken was a member of that delegation, and we visited this dam together. The purpose of building that dam was to produce hydro electric power and irrigation. I wonder if that irrigation system is operating now and, if so, if that area is still suffering from the lack of moisture. The monsoons cannot be counted on and the people there are much in need of this relief.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, may I intervene to say I understand the dam and the power station are actually completed and the irrigation project associated with it is proceeding. I will try to get some more information about this at the earliest possible opportunity. Many millions of Canadian dollars went into this project. It was part of the general Canadian contribution to the work of the Colombo Plan. I will try to get more information for the honourable senator.

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson: Honourable senators, I had the privilege of attending the sessions of the United Nations in New York during the past week or two. There one comes to very close grips with the problems outlined in the bill before us. There are differences in ideologies among the peoples of the world and sometimes such differences are the most serious menace to peace. However, when one attends the United Nations and observes the membership of that body, one finds that its membership is divided largely between the have nations and the have-not nations. There are some divisions on colour but the great division is that of the developed countries and the underdeveloped countries.

We in Canada are realizing more and more that the best way to maintain peace and security in the world is to improve the economic side of the have-not nations. Part of that process is helping them to survive, by feeding them. Part of it is by technological help in building dams and factories, such as the project referred to by Senator Aseltine.

At the same time, while we are referring to the huge quantities of food we have shipped to those markets, we should not forget that Canada plays a tremendous role in sending scientific personnel to all those countries. I have known many of the personnel. A number of our leading scientists, when they retire from their vocations because of the age limit, are sent to India, Pakistan, and other countries to teach their people how to grow more food per acre, and other skills. I have been close to this problem, and it has become very noticeable to me that this matter of feeding the underfed people of the world is as tremendously important as is looking after them in other ways, namely, in helping them along in industrial development.

Frequently we hear Canada criticized by those who say we are not doing enough in this area of need. People do not always agree on what we should do. As Canadians we should be proud of the contribution we make. I doubt if any other country, per capita, makes a finer and bigger contribution towards a settlement of these problems than do the people of this nation.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, have we any information, or can the Government give us any information, as to the methods of distribution of this food when it does arrive? Is there a great Canadian organization that follows it? Is it handed over to the governments for their tender mercies? Does it fall into the hands of speculators? Can we get any information concerning these questions? It is very important, it seems to me, that our largesse does go to those people who need it and that we take the precaution to see that it does.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Answering that question directly, I believe we can be fully assured that, first, there is no speculative element in the handling of the commodities that are given on this basis; nor is there a great Canadian contingent that goes over to make the distribution. This is left to the local authorities.

I would draw the Senate's attention to the fact that the request in this case has not come from the Minister of Agriculture, not from some agency charged with distribution, but from the Prime Minister herself. This is not the first time that aid has been given in the form in which it is being given this time.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: In other words, it is being given to the Government.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I know of no complaint about the distribution of the aid or about the distribution of the food.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Honourable senators, this appropriation is, I understand, supplementary to the Estimates of the External Aid Office of the Department of External Affairs. The formal conditions under which grants are made require the recipient country to pay the cost of transportation from Canada to that country. As I understand it, this is a gift, as the Leader of the Government has said. It is a Christmas gift from the people of Canada to the people of India. I wonder if, under those circumstances, the conditions of requiring the recipient of the gift to pay for its delivery will be enforced in this case.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I do not know that I would like to describe it as a "Christmas gift," although I do say at this time of the year we are likely to be more disposed to think in a sympathetic way about such a proposal.

You may find it helpful if I tell you that what is proposed to Parliament is that, to India, wheat to the value of $13.5 million is to be shipped within 10 days; milk powder to the value of $3.5 million is to be shipped approximately a month from now, towards the end of January; atta flour, which is whole wheat flour, to the value of $4 million will be shipped early in January. To Pakistan, wheat to the value of $1.5 million will be shipped when shipping instructions have been received from Pakistan.

Answering directly the question that Senator Grosart raised, I do not think that we can agree in this house to the charge that is involved, if the shipping costs are to be absorbed. This is more than was called for in the resolution in the other place. It is not something we really have power to touch. However, in view of the kind of request made by the Prime Minister of India and the words she used, I think the arrangement used in previous years for handling and shipping will prevail again. That is about as far as we can go in the circumstances.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Did the Prime Minister of Pakistan make a request as well?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes. I am sorry that I do not have that letter with me, but there was a similar request from that Government. It may have been made through the Pakistani High Commissioner in Ottawa.

Hon. Jean-François Pouliot: Honourable senators, the head of my church and the leaders of all churches have made representations for aid to be given to countries who suffer from famine and who have suffered from other disasters, and the speeches that have been made today and the questions that have been put have been inspired by very high motives. Although I do not object to the aid that is to be given, I would like to have some enlightenment as to the manner in which the food, or money, is to be distributed and to whom and by whom. Senator Roebuck asked the first question, Senator Grosart asked a second question along the same lines, and it is important for us to know where we are going in this matter.

In my view, aid should not be restricted to the Commonwealth countries, because there are other parts of the world in distress and in need of help. One or two nights ago there appeared on television a picture of the flooding at Florence, Italy, where many art treasures of the world had been preserved for centuries. These treasures have been damaged or destroyed by the floods that were caused by heavy rains and the melting snow from the mountains.

It is extremely unfortunate to think of the destruction of art treasures, but something much worse than that is the suffering of people because of hunger. People who had been comfortable, who had had means and who had been prosperous were, in one day, put out on the street—and on a street covered with water, mud and all sorts of debris. It seems to me that some help should be given, but the most urgent help is not that which is given to salvage art treasures; it is that which is given to human beings, to persons like ourselves, to persons who are completely destitute. What can be done for them, I wonder.

The United States has been very generous in all sorts of ways in order to help alleviate misery and privation all over the world. We, too, are doing our share, but it must be done in a manner which is logical and as fair as possible.

The people of the beautiful City of Florence, who were of comfortable means, and who were perhaps wealthy, but who have lost all they had and were left in a city where they could no longer get the comforts to which they had become accustomed, are no less worthy than the people who suffer on the sands of Pakistan or in Central Africa. They are all human beings.

When we speak of help to the Commonwealth countries, it may be meritorious, but, if you help anyone who suffers, you have the same merit and you are entitled to the same reward. It is not a question of countries; it is not a question of restricting aid to the Commonwealth. It is a question of helping mankind and showing that Canada makes no distinction between races or colours when giving help to any country in the world.

One must, however, keep in mind that the money given comes from the pockets of the taxpayers of Canada, and in my view the people of Canada should have the first opportunity and the first chance, although I have no objection to helping the other parts of the world which suffer. Therefore I would ask the Leader of the Senate if there are amounts which have been earmarked for some specific countries, and if so, how much for each one. He mentioned grain to the value of $1.5 million for Pakistan. I would like to know where that money will go in terms of currency or in terms of food, and I would like to know who are the people who will benefit from it. I do not believe that the Leader of the Government can answer this question today.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes, I can.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: You can? Then, I shall stop at once.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): May I tell the honourable senator that the money goes first to the Canadian farmers and the Canadian millers who produce the flour. The flour and wheat then go to the distribution agencies in the countries which it is intended to assist. I should also tell him that the Government is at the moment giving serious consideration to the question of aid for some of the distressed parts of Italy. The grounds for this, of course, are somewhat different from those which prevail under this bill. I should tell him too that in the supplementary Estimates, in the food aid program, in addition to what we are doing today, the amount allocated to India for wheat was $56 million, to Pakistan for wheat $5.9 million, to Ceylon for flour $2 million, to Ghana for flour $2 million, and to Indonesia for flour $350,000. For the total world food program, which includes many countries other than those I have mentioned here, there is a total of $8.7 million, plus, in the same vote, a contingency fund of an additional $50,000, making a total, before we come to consideration of this bill, of some $75 million for the food aid program Canada is giving to the world in this fiscal year.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Connolly: Honourable senators, in view of the unanimity of feeling about this matter today, and also in view of the fact that we shall have Royal Assent this afternoon, I move, with leave, that the bill be read a third time now.

Hon. Mr. Pouliot: May I say just a word on third reading?

We all agreed on the expenditures but in order to meet them, perhaps some curtailments could be made in the actual expenditures of the Government. It would not be a bad thing to use the scissors on the Estimates. The first cut I would make would be in the sums allocated to the B and B Commission, the Laurendeau-Dunton Commission, which has served no useful purpose and which is the most expensive of all the commissions. The money that would be saved by that curtailment would help to pay the aid to other countries who are in dire need of assistance. There are many other cases I could mention, but for the moment I shall mention just that one. I shall check the Estimates and have more suggestions next time I have the opportunity to do so.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

MEDICAL CARE BILL

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Honourable Mr. Macnaughton for the second reading of Bill C-227, to authorize the payment of contributions by Canada towards the cost of insured medical care services incurred by provinces pursuant to provincial medical care insurance plans.

Hon. Joseph A. Sullivan: Honourable senators, I neglected yesterday to inform the Leader of the Government in the Senate, when I adjourned the debate, that a very momentous event had occurred in the Sullivan family. One of my nephews was ordained to the priesthood in the Order of the Basilian Fathers at St. Michael's in Toronto, and today he is praying for his Uncle Joe because he knows he needs it, and he is putting in a word for the Leader of the Government in the Senate so that he may see the light.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I congratulate the honourable senator.

Hon. Mr. Sullivan: Without wishing to be designated as being perfunctory, I wish to congratulate the sponsor on his diplomatic manner of introducing this legisation, which I am sure he does not altogether believe in. He has been one of Canada's distinguished Speakers of the House of Commons, and I sincerely trust that when legislation on legal care comes to this house that he will show the same unbounded enthusiasm for it as he did for medicare.

I would like to make clear that I yield to no person in support of humanitarian legislation, for that has been the basis of my whole life's work. I further state that the medical profession wholeheartedly supports medical services for the people because that again is the basis of their life's work.

The sponsor of this bill is a Montrealer and an outstanding member of the legal profession of Canada. I will introduce my remarks with the words of another Montrealer, the internationally famed scientist and one of the greatest, if not the greatest, neuro surgeons living today, Dr. Wilder Penfield. Dr. Penfield has advised Canadians never to make medical services entirely free. He said:

> Give support to hospitals and medical education, but never make medical service free. This would only increase total cost to the taxpayer without providing more efficient care, and would deprive the patient of the direct, friendly guidance of a family doctor.
> The poor patients have rarely been forgotten by our hospitals, and doctors do care for a significant proportion of patients free of charge. The present situation can be made worse by legislation.

I further quote from Dr. Penfield:

> Socialization of British medicine has decreased scientific achievement which would have been more forthcoming if universities had been allowed greater freedom and independence. Dependence of British medical schools on government support and control had an unfortunate effect on academic initiative. Unnecessary treatments also are more frequent under their socialized system and hospital workers lazier and less productive, causing a great increase in the total cost of hospital care.

"Medicare and the Politicians." Medicare is the word now used to describe, in short, government-controlled health services. It is inconceivable that any government in a free country would compel or even ask the lawyers, engineers, architects, actuaries, accountants, economists, scientists, professors, journalists or the citizenry of its own country to become in effect employees of the state.

It is my considered opinion that doctors are being singled out among the professions. Why? It is the most worthwhile vote-getting scheme that politicians can perpetrate on the general public at large in order to be returned to office for their own gain and security. Bureaucratic meddling has caused many of the complaints against Britain's national health service. We can learn from the experience of other countries.

If there is a lesson from life, it is that none of us can afford to be lookers on, the critics standing on the side lines. It was Lord Acton who said, "Power tends to corrupt, absolute power corrupts absolutely."

Some political leaders are unquestionably innocent of any desire—and this is the theme of my whole discourse this afternoon—or intention to limit freedom of expression or profession, but even measures introduced to serve innocent purposes are frequently later perverted to serve evil purposes. Who can tell what future administration itself might twist the law, or colour the law, as once promulgated. Clause 8 of this bill, as described by Senator McCutcheon last evening, vindicates that opinion.

I speak to you as a doctor, and a member of this venerable chamber, not as a member of a political party; as a physician, vitally interested in the individual welfare of each physician and surgeon in this country; as one who has devoted his life to his profession, both in medical scientific research and surgery. What I have to say is in the interests of the people of Canada as a whole, and with the full support of the Canadian Medical Association. There are about 24,000 doctors in Canada, 22,000 of whom are practising doctors, and 2,000 postgraduates, interns and residents. The Canadian Medical Association consists of a membership of about 20,000 doctors, representing 95 per cent of the profession in Canada.

The philosophy of the minister—Professor of National Health—is only too apparent. Is Canada a tired old country with a tired, sick and incompetent population that some of our politicians think she is? Not yet, thanks be! But how soon will she be?

Sweden, the model socialist country, with the highest suicide rate in the world—which I have visited numbers of times and have lectured in—is frustrated and unhappy. Socialist Great Britain is almost bankrupt, yet we rush into socialism with far costlier schemes than ever thought of. The minister's edict that we must keep everyone that refuses to work, his contemplated scheme to guarantee an adequate yearly income for all Canadians—to a degree that is right—and now this compulsory medical services scheme, only portrays too well his philosophy and his thinking—mere textbook economics. But just as economic servitude makes for political helplessness, so does economic freedom make for political independence.

In a speech in Toronto recently the minister, when talking about automation and cybernation, made this remark:

> It may well pioneer a new system of income maintenance and social welfare for all the population...

The wrongness of this legislation lies in the opportunism with which it has exploited a few splinter party votes, to make basic changes in the fabric of Canadian life. These rash and radical political pressures have left us in an economic mess in which the Minister of Finance has indirectly attempted to forestall the onrush of socialism. We face a tangle of welfare programs which have so institutionalized poverty as to make the practice of being poor, and on the public dole, a legitimate job classification in the eyes of many.

In his remarks on automation and cybernetics—the latter word coming from the Greek word meaning myth, the study of communication and control in living organisms or machines, which the medical profession have been doing for years—he stated it was the building of a new and great society. We cannot have the so-called new and great society until we have the responsible society—the society where it is more profitable to work than not to work. You do not help a man by constantly giving him more handouts. I accept the opinion of Penfield rather than that of the minister.

For centuries, philosophers and patriots have repeatedly warned mankind to guard against unchecked majority rule. Popular sovereignty is a safeguard against certain forms of tyranny: it can also be as tyrannical as any other form of despotism. It may ignore all restraints, claim an unlimited power and justify that power on the grounds that its actions represent the general will. Madison, the great constitutionalist, said:

> There is nothing to check the inducements to sacrifice the weaker party or an obnoxious individual.

Alexander Hamilton added:

> You must first enable the government to control the governed, and in the next place oblige it to control itself.

In the western democracies the doctrine of the general will, which places the power of governing in the hands of the majority, emerged only after the people's basic individual liberties were firmly established and powerful non-governmental organizations and institutions existed to defend individual liberty.

It must be remembered that individual liberties were not created by the relatively simple act of granting the franchise.

Liberties and freedom were created by various interests so organizing themselves that they were in a position to fight for their rights. The franchise was the reward of such determination and conviction. In this regard, John Stuart Mill has stated:

> The rights and interests of every or any person are only secure from being disregarded when the person interested is himself able, and habitually disposed to stand up for them...Each is the only safe guardian of his own rights and interests. Human beings are only secure from evil at the hands of others in proportion as they have the power of being, and are, self-protecting.

And, as Pope John XXIII stated in Mater et Magistra—Mother and Teacher:

> Experience, in fact, shows that where the private initiative of individuals is lacking, political tyranny appears.

John goes on further to state:

> At the outset it should be affirmed that in economic affairs first place is to be given to the private initiative of individual men who, either working by themselves, or with others in one fashion or another, pursue their common interests.

Economic control is present whenever any agency, government or private, becomes the sole buyer and seller of medical services or any other service in the community. Government control which must exist over any "free" service carries with it a real danger to the freedom of those providing the service. For example, if the legal profession were socialized—God forbid—who would represent the individual against the state? Or if citizens enamoured of the slogan "Cleanliness is next to Godliness" advocated "free" plumbing as a right, would the guilds and unions agree to the principle of economic control by the state, to the principle of compulsory arbitration, or to the principle of the state having power to legislate its own idea of a fair wage? Are not the advocates of "free" services with government control and compulsory arbitration only advocates of such measures when control and compulsory arbitration are applied to others?

Free men and institutions have the right to place a value on their labour and services. These freedoms are endangered when the state promises to the people the "free" services of others in the face of the expressed opposition of those who would provide the services.

There is general agreement that free essential services should be provided for the deserving needy, and it would seem more reasonable to grant more generous benefits to those in need than to grant equal benefits to all regardless of need. Everyone is concerned for those with real needs—that is a doctor's life—but there is a growing feeling we are acting unwisely to the extent that we are actually using the federal treasury to encourage and reward laziness and malingering.

The concept of medical care as a right, and the relationship of this concept to basic rights and freedoms, desire careful analysis. The advocates of the welfare state, and socialized medicine in particular, have recently adopted the slogan "Medical Care as a Right," and are already demanding this new "right."

What are the implications and possible consequences if this demand is accepted as an established right? This concept of "medical care as a right" must be examined in the light of the postulates of right and duty arising from the philosophy and laws of western democracy.

A curious paradox of some contemporary social philosophy is the idea that a man should spend what he earns for his pleasures rather than for what he needs. It is appropriate, so this reasoning goes, that he should buy a television set, a vacation in Florida, or an outboard motor boat, because these are cardinal rights. But, for something that he really needs, such as his life or his health, or the life of his child, someone else should pay. This may be the government, his employer, his union, his great aunt, or anyone else who can be cajoled or coerced into paying the price for him. If no one else will pay for it, then the doctor should serve him for nothing. This is the philosophy of the child whose needs should be met by his parents, but whose Christmas money or earnings for sweeping the front porch should be spent for his personal pleasures. This may be acceptable for the child of an indulgent parent, but it is not appropriate for a free man in a free society.

It is fairly obvious that the government believes that the payment for the provision of medical care should be a tax-supported right for every Canadian. It would also appear that they hold that when one purchases a medical care insurance policy they should not be provided with a copy of that policy unless they purchase it from the Queen's Printer, and employ a lawyer to interpret it for them. The benefits provided in the policy should not be dictated by sound insurance or economic principles, but should be subject to the whims of political expediency.

If one holds to the foregoing, then this is good legislation. If, however, one holds as I do that the Government's interest in medicine is not, and never has been, medical but was, and is, political, designed to extend a greater degree of control over the individual and to extend socialism by taxation, then it is bad legislation.

As the Canadian public has accepted the above-mentioned principles as applied to the hospitalization plans for some years, it is doubtful if they will object to this act until after it is passed and the necessary taxes levied.

Numerous supposed rights are based more on imagination and emotion than on fact. In general, those who contribute nothing to the values and freedoms of society have very small rights to its protection.

The Canadian Bill of Rights defines the rights of the citizen against those of the State in accordance with democratic philosophy. I hasten to bring to your attention, and emphasize some basic economic truths—not theories or fanciful crudities. In evaluating the socialistic welfare state it might be timely to reflect on a few basic economic truths which have been proved many times in the course of history. The first is: Governments cannot give to the people what they do not first take away from the people. The second is: You cannot multiply wealth by dividing it. Third: You cannot legislate the poor into economic freedom by legislating the wealthy out of it. Fourth: That which one man receives without working for, another man must work for without receiving.

Nothing can kill the initiative of a people more quickly than for half of them to get the idea that they need not work because the other half will feed them or take care of them, and for the other half to get the idea that it does no good to work since someone else receives the rewards of their labours.

I am well aware of the trend of conditions, not only in my own country but in other countries as well—countries that I have visited, worked in, attended seminars in, and lectured in. I am firmly convinced that this does not come so much from the people.

In a society of free men, competence is a primary duty. The man who does his job well tones up the whole society, and the man who does a sloppy job—whether he is a janitor or a judge, a surgeon or a mechanic—lowers the tone of all society. But, excellence implies more than competence. It implies a striving for the highest standards in every form of life. We need individual excellence in political life, in education, in industry, in medicine—in short, universally—and, not the least, we need excellence in standards of individual conduct.

A truly democratic society cannot force any person or persons, or professional group into any service unless in time of national emergency, and then under emergency powers. The great advances in medicine have come under free medicine—that is, in countries where government does not control or direct the practice of medicine. Who raised the average life expectancy from 49 years in 1900, to 72 years and better today? Was it labour leaders, radio and TV wise men, or newspaper columnists? Assuredly it was not the members of political parties. It was, and is, medical science.

Germany's unprecendented prowess in this regard came almost to an end 15 years after Bismarck's scheme was introduced. Today most of the advances are coming from the United States of America. As William Pitt stated in 1783:

> Necessity is the plea for every infringement of freedom. It is the cry of tyrants; it is the creed of slaves.

The planners cry for preventive medicine, but beyond good food, exercise, clean water, milk, and vaccinations, this is shibboleth. Who can tell when a man is going to have a heart attack or cerebrovascular accident, arthritis, pneumonia, or cancer?

Let me illustrate a little further. In Great Britain for the fiscal years 1949-50, $1,410 million was the budgeted cost of the new health scheme, which is just about 75 per cent more than what the brilliant minister had figured nine months earlier, and a good third over what the Beveridge Plan estimated for 1955. In 1965-66 it was $4 billion a year.

It is only in recent years that doctors have become exercised about politics and economics, being forced into this by the pressure of politicians and latter-day socialist economists. Until a few years ago it was rare to see in any medical journal an article on medical economics. These journals were filled with scientific articles and clinical data on medical progress. Indeed, the only concern was the patient and the advancement of medical knowledge.

The British National Health Service, for example, although it was a comprehensive, ambitious and Utopian undertaking, incapable of being realized, remains, despite superficial alterations, a sacred cow of British politics. The labour party seems to be busily engaged in trying to kill whatever remains of a medical service market. Why should this be so? It may be due to the inability of the public—and this assuredly is not confined to Great Britain—to dispel the illusion that they are receiving something for nothing. Doctors are not trained to think politically; they are trained to think scientifically. Physicians, individually or as a group, have never tried to win any popularity contests. They have tried to protect the dignity of the profession.

Young British doctors are quitting their nation's program of "free" health care, and are emigrating, presumably to the United States. This disenchantment points up the extent to which reality has intruded into a socialist dream. Although the British Government now says it plans to build some hospitals, and to expand medical schools, it is apparent that a socialist vision has been blurred by some harsh economics. According to the London Illustrated News of September 17, 1966, they are not only walking to get out—they are running.

The adage, "People who get everything for next to nothing think next to nothing of everything they get," epitomizes a human reaction so automatic that it is scarcely even conscious. Given the meagreness of our pocketbooks, we cannot help but be rational to the extent of economizing with things which are expensive, but that which is cheap is cheap as dirt and need not be treated with care and consideration.

The new apostle of social security, Sir William Beveridge himself, had warned that "the danger of providing benefits which are both adequate and indefinite in duration is that men are creatures, adapt themselves to circumstances, may settle down to them." They settle down, indeed, and smarten up to them. What is done at first surreptitiously by uninhibited persons only tends to become common practice.

In agreement with the Canadian Medical Association, I submit the following very positive form of program for the Government. I realize that I am exercising a piece of futility in doing this, but I intend to put it on record. The program can be classified under nine points:

1. It is not in the interest of the sick that medical care should ever become a subject of political dispute, nor should the physicians' services ever become an item of meretricious party political value.

2. There must be no compulsion or abrogation of the citizen's right to determine the method and extent of his participation in prepayment insurance of his medical care. Any such abrogation of his rights constitutes a measure of civil conscription.

3. The fiscal arrangements for the provision of personal medical services must not be all wed to become a monopoly of any agency, but it must be open to competitive carriers within the framework of existing insurance laws.

4. The proper and only role of government in the fiscal arrangements for the provision of medical care is to undertake to defray the cost of insurance premiums in respect of those who are unable to assume their responsibility—the needy and the indigent.

5. In the interest of their patients and also to safeguard its own democratic freedom, it is my opinion that the profession will not participate in any plan which involves a measure of coercion or civil conscription.

6. The contract to provide medical care lies solely between the patient and the physician of his choice. The contract to provide payment for this care lies between the insurance carriers and their clients and must not intrude upon, or bind in any way the physician providing the medical care.

7. Any insurance system for the fiscal arrangement for medical care must foster individual responsibility and discourage abuse by ensuring that the individual shall bear directly part of the cost at the time of the provision of the physician's services.

8. The prospective carriers should be encouraged to evolve an insurance policy which will not discriminate against any individual or group on the basis of age or pre-existing infirmity.

9. The profession can undertake and guarantee to maintain its traditionally high standards only if it continues to enjoy autonomy and control of its own destiny.

In a democracy, can the citizens allow the state to coerce any minority group, let alone the citizens themselves, and reduce it to servitude? Are Lincoln's famous words, "Government of the people, by the people, for the people" to become, "Government of the people, by the majority, for the majority"?

Medicine and doctors are being exposed to changes which they themselves have not initiated and do not really want. Our society has decided that we, the profession, have given inadequate care to our nation. Our apparent shortcomings have caused our governments both federal and provincial to implement medical care legislation to assure every citizen the right to medical care.

Medical men have never backed away from their professional responsibilities. While doctors are less than perfect expendable commodities, they have gone unarmed into the beaches of Dunkirk; they have sacrificed their health and wellbeing in the interests of human suffering. They have laboured through nights of tragedy, with no thought to overtime and no thought for themselves.

This has been all too little for our social system. Our society wills to see the profession as a group of well off, self-satisfied autocrats with special rights and privileges.

Dr. George Scott, the eminent psychiatrist of the Faculty of Medicine at Queen's University, said, rather pungently:

> Political life, ridden with patronage and scandal, has betrayed medicine in an effort to preserve its narcissistic images.
> Psychologically bankrupt political parties have revitalized themselves through the life blood of the medical profession. "Medicare" actually has been a political manoeuvre cloaked in puritanical robes of altruism.

The medical profession moves into a new era of service. People seem to think they now have a right to demand treatment for an illness which may or may not exist. All one has to do is to read the books of Dr. Penfield. The latest book to which I shall refer is entitled "Medicine in Transition" by Iago Galdston, M.D. I will quote from the foreword by Lord Cohen of Birkenhead, President of the Royal Society of Medicine:

> Dr. Galdston's earlier writings on the social science of medicine in a world of change stamp him as one of the outstanding medical philosophers of our time.

Here is a very important point as to what we are running into as all these services are being given. Dr. Galdston, at page 173 of his book, states:

> With the recession of the infectious diseases, but not necessarily because of their recession, the functional and physiological disorders have now come to the fore. It is possible that some of these disorders have become demographically significant because in time past many of their victims would not have successfully run the gauntlet of the infectious diseases. But, whatever the reasons, a great many of the present-day disorders requiring medical service are distinctively functional and physiological in nature.

It is a most difficult problem to get a patient out of the hospital. The article continues:

> The list is extensive and includes not so many disease entities as discomforts, dysfunctions, complaints, anxieties—symptoms not necessarily ascribable to any gross or definable pathology.

If there was ever sufficient evidence for this chamber to exercise its constitutional authority, namely, as that of the chamber of sober second thought, it is in this legislation.

It appears to me that the minister is mesmerised with his own power. He has been adamant in introducing his own version of medicare. He has rejected almost all suggestions for improving the plan. He has spurned the plight of the provinces. Technically, all that needed doing was a change in the bill so it would cover only the low income 30 per cent of the population. This 30 per cent of the population which the Canadian Medical Association rightly asked the Government immediately to institute care for was facetiously commented upon by the leader of the New Democratic Party. That is not unusual for him. However, let me tell him right straight that the medical profession has been taking care of that segment of the population from time immemorial for nothing. I speak, as the standing evidence of that basic truth before you today, with my colleagues in the Senate, Dr. Gershaw and Dr. McGrand.

Both the Government and the socialists are so firmly committed to universal medicare, that anything short of that—even needicare now, universal medicare later—could topple the Government. The elected representatives have been chary of charging the Canadian Medical Association with putting forward its proposal in bad faith. Yet behind the coolness of the Government and the socialists undoubtedly there is apprehension that medicare for only the needy 30 per cent of the population would be so popular with the provinces, with the medical profession—the men who are to carry out the program—and perhaps even with the taxpayers, that pressure to leave it at that would be irresistible. Indeed, there is more than apprehension; there is suspicion that this is the result the doctors hoped to achieve.

The plan has worked very well in Ontario, Manitoba, Alberta and British Columbia, and to all intents and purposes is working satisfactorily in Quebec.

This bill, in brief, legislates so that the state will provide supported medicare for millionaires along with every other group.

Now I will quote freely from the past President of the Canadian Medical Association, Dr. Jones, on the need for markedly increased medical personnel of all kinds, that is, doctors, nurses, physiotherapists, occupational therapists, and so on. To meet this need, we need vastly stepped up recruitment. One of the principles that must be borne in mind is that any scheme for medical services must do more than gain grudging acceptance by my generation of doctors, but must be of such a sort that it will attract the best young people of this country to the health professions. This seems to me to be one of the greatest dangers in the introduction of new plans. In all honesty, one already hears of young people who are turning away from medicine because of the present unrest.

On page 180 of Galdston's book are figures in support of that view that are extremely revealing.

In this regard, I wish to make a few comments on what my colleague Senator MacKenzie said in this chamber on November 15 last. He quoted my associate of World War II, Dr. John F. McCreary, Dean of the Faculty of Medicine at the University of British Columbia. I have all of this in my presentation, so I will not repeat it, except to say that I agree with him completely.

Senator MacKenzie then referred to the members of the Association of Canadian Medical Colleges, which is written up in the Canadian Medical Association Journal of November 5, 1966.

I wish to quote a few remarks of Dr. McCreary to show you exactly how he feels about it. Dr. McCreary expressed the view that the Canadian medicare scheme could drive away immigrant physicians and cause a serious shortage of doctors in Canada. He said that Canada must register about 1,300 new physicians each year to maintain its present physician-population ratio. "However," he said, "our 12 medical schools only produce 850 new doctors each year."

Regarding immigrants, he said:

> Canada would have been in serious difficulty during the period of post-war population growth if it had not been for the large number of immigrant physicians. Now, Canada will cease to be one of the two remaining countries in the world where health services are provided entirely on the free enterprise system. It may well become a less attractive place to foreign physicians than it has been in the past.

Regarding the expansion plan, Dr. McCreary said the Royal Commission on Health Services also recognized the effect medicare might have to diminish the number of immigrant doctors, and had urged immediate expansion and construction of medical training facilities.

The University Toronto Graduate, of December 1966, page 22, quoted Dr. Chute, the new Dean of the Faculty of Medicine, in answer to the question, "Is there any answer for the doctor shortage?" as follows:

> No matter what we do, there will be a shortage of doctors for the next 15 or 20 years. There just is not enough doctors in Canada.

I do not often quote from newspapers, with all due respect to Senator O'Leary (Carleton). I have not made much use of the big scissors they gave me when I first came here. There is a smaller type of scissors I would like to use on some people down here. However, I would like to quote from the Montreal Star of March 2, 1966. That paper carried an extract of an editorial in the Journal of the Canadian Medical Association. The Montreal Star then said:

> The editorial is an urgent appeal for government to heed the warnings and the proposals of the Gundy Report on Medical Education.

It is one of the most informative reports that ever has been produced in this country as regards medical science and education, but it has been disregarded completely. It has been sent to everybody but it was never made any use of.

This is what the Star said:

> The editorial is an urgent appeal for government to heed the warnings and the proposals of the Gundy report on medical education. It refers to the "twilight sleep of lethargy" which enfolds both the public and those in high place.
> Canadians complain endlessly about their abject position vis-à-vis the United States. But they refuse to face the fact that much of it is simply due to failure to spend money where it will do the most good. We are prepared, apparently, to institute medicare at vast expense. We do little to improve medical science and education upon which, obviously, medicare ultimately depends. The amount of money involved is trifling in comparison to the global budget total.

I would quote further from Dr. Jones, and I shall be brief, because I could talk until midnight about this subject.

This matter has been studied by many bodies, most recently in the Gundy Report, and all have come up with staggering figures about our needs for increased medical research. Let me emphasize that this is not to have large break-throughs in medical knowledge, though that would be very nice and such things have occurred in Canada in the past, but because unless we do have adequate research facilities of our own, we cannot properly teach modern medicine and we will not attract or hold our qualified teachers.

All groups agree that we need a vast extension of facilities, hospitals, laboratories, and so on. All groups are exceedingly concerned by the very poor conditions in the mental health services in this country, for example, taking up almost 50 per cent of the hospital beds of Canada.

This has been Government responsibility for years. I want this on the record carefully, and every word of it.

Then, to show why we are foolishly rushing into this medicare scheme, this is in a field of medicine which is supposed to require a more expensive kind of care than others and, incidentally, has been almost entirely Government administered for the last one hundred years.

Here is a real sore spot in the body-medical of Canada, and the Canadian Medical Association have urged that steps be taken to correct this. Up to date, these urgings have fallen on pretty deaf ears.

All groups agree, including the medical profession, that there are groups of Canadian citizens who are unable to pay for medical care because of their financial difficulties. The Canadian Medical Association believes the Government has a real responsibility here and urges them to provide total or partial help to Canadians who need it.

Until midsummer of this year, the Canadian Medical Association had some reason to believe that Government authority agreed with the association, and we were somewhat complacent about the future of health care in Canada. This complacency was rudely jolted on July 19, 1966, when the Prime Minister listed his famous four points, in which there was to be a Government agency, to be initiated, at that time, on July 1, 1967, and which is now deferred until July 1, 1968.

The provision of this so-called "opting out" right of the doctors I believe to be essential in any plan desiring the co-operation of Canadian doctors. That is, the right to opt out of the plan as an amendment, as I said in the earlier part of my remarks and as Senator McCutcheon referred to under clause 8.

Only in this way can we preserve our rights —our patients' rights to receive and our right to provide the kind of medical care dictated by the patients' need and the doctor's conscience—rather than by the deputy ministers or by the treasury officer.

The present situation regarding the Health Resources Fund—of which Senator Burchill spoke, and also my fellow colleague on the Board of Governors of the University of Toronto, Senator Lang—illustrates the ever-present possibility of control. I emphasize this on the record. It seemed logical that the informed bodies in the training and research fields, for example, the Association of Canadian Medical Colleges to which Senator MacKenzie referred, as I did, should at least be well represented on the final administering body. The Canadian Medical Association then confidently sat back to await such action.

On February 1, 1966, a two-day meeting of the federal and provincial ministers of health concluded. The communiqué emerging from this conference reported as follows:

> In considering the composition of the advisory committee, the ministers decided that a body of this kind should consist of representatives of the federal and provincial ministers of health.
> The advisory committee would be empowered to call upon professional bodies for advice on technical matters.

The position of an on-call advisor to an advisory committee scarcely reassures the informed professionals of this country that they will have much of a voice in planning for facilities which are of vital importance to them.

I quote again briefly from Dr. Galdston's book some comments on the British National Health Service:

> In Britain, the National Health Service is virtually the sole purchaser of the services of the doctors.

Galdston concludes his remarks on the British National Health Service as follows:

> What stands forth in terms of its effect on the profession is bureaucratization with all its attendant evils, principal among them the conversion of medical practice into the pursuit of a vocation rather than that of a profession. In effect whether medicine is practised as a vocation or as a profession cannot but prove of great consequence to the recipient of medical care. It must affect the moral and intellectual fibre of the medical corps, it cannot but deleteriously affect medical education and the advancement of medical science. Only those ignorant or unmindful of historical experience, can doubt that these must be the inevitable sequelae of the bureaucratization of the profession and of the practice of medicine.

Let me add another telling voice to this debate. For many years the late Henry Sigerist, the Professor of the History of Medicine at Johns Hopkins University, a man who surveyed the Saskatchewan situation and was most influential in shaping the thinking of Mr. T. C. Douglas and who was an outstanding medical spokesman advocating the nationalization of medical service.

The chapter to which I have reference in Sigerist "On the Sociology of Medicine", published by M. D. Publications, Incorporated, New York, N.Y., 1960, at page 209, vividly describes his association with their plan.

Sigerist retired to his native Europe and in 1956 published "Landmarks in the History of Hygiene" by the Oxford University Press, page 72. It is perhaps worth noting here that, having been an ardent proponent of the complete socialization of medicine, Sigerist retracted on his return to Europe and wrote as follows:

> Now that I am back in Europe, I am no longer in favour of health insurance and I think that better solutions should be found. Health insurance in many a European country has become rigid and is in the hands of groups that have a vested interest in it. The machinery is frequently very clumsy and we generally find the tendency to perpetuate under a Government insurance scheme an outgrown type of medical service. Hence the time has come to re-consider the whole set of problems and to seek new ways of solving them, ways that will make the best possible use of the present technology of medicine.

In speaking to this legislation in the other place on December 6, 1966, the Leader of the New Democratic Party stated he did not want to be a "spoil-sport." He said:

> I would make a special plea that optometric services be included because of the importance of these services to children and elderly people.

How considerate of him!

Honourable senators, this latter remark could not be further from the truth. These two groups, children and elderly people, require medical services not technician's services. The examination and diagnosis of a child's eye disability requires all the skill and diagnostic acumen of a highly qualified eye specialist. It would be just the same as sending a young child or an elderly person with a hearing disability to be evaluated by a hearing aid salesman.

Speaking to an amendment to the bill the other day, the minister rejected a series of opposition amendments designed to cover a variety of para-medical services. The medical profession has no objection to that, but it does object to the word "services". We feel that it should be a separate piece of legislation, and should not be considered in this bill.

However, the minister saw fit to shelve this problem of para-medical services, and conveniently relieved himself of any responsibility in this regard by passing it on to the provinces. Commenting on that, I would like to fall back on my legal friends and quote a very fine phrase, lex dubia lex nulla, a doubtful law is no law.

Canadian doctors recognize and support the need for government aid in making possible high-quality medical services for a proportion of our population. They believe that this can best be provided by the provision of a voluntary plan, available to all Canadians with government subsidy to the individual according to his needs. In setting up such a plan they believe that the ancient but vital medical doctrine, Primum Non Nocere—Do not harm —should be respected.

Attention should be directed to first things first—personnel, training, and our mental health services. The introduction of a plan or plans should be constantly accompanied by research into their effectiveness and, especially, their effect on the quality of medical care. Mechanisms should be built in for the correction of faults which are bound to appear in any plan actually in operation. The freezing of patterns of medical care which will inevitably result from massive Government intervention with centralized bureaucratic administration and with rigidly conceived rules, may well produce lowering of the quality of medical care exceedingly difficult to reverse in the future. Our ultimate goal is to retain that which is sound, precious, and essential in and to medicine and to the profession, and give up that which is harmful and outgrown or merely habit and not essential. To conclude in Dr. Galdston's words,

> This adaptation must be attained by reasoned study, by consultative statesmanship, mindful of changing conditions but mindful also that whatever is grievously injurious and disruptive to the medical profession must prove evil to the people as a whole.

To such a reasoned study and collaborative effort to improve medical services in this country with built-in self-corrective safeguards, the Canadian medical profession will gladly pledge itself.

When this bill goes to committee, I will discuss certain parts of it and move two amendments. I apologize for taking so much time, but I felt that it had to be said, and I thank you for your attention.

Hon. F. W. Gershaw: Honourable senators, may I first congratulate the sponsor of this bill on his clear explanation. I also may say that we know Dr. Sullivan has reached the very highest place in the Canadian Medical Association, and his discourse today has been listened to with rapt attention. It has been comprehensive and he has placed material on record which will be of great value.

This is a very important bill for the reason that, when this measure comes into force, it will affect the financial planning of almost every individual in this country.

I take it that the members of the House of Commons and the members of this Senate are all anxious to see medicare made available for every person in Canada. The only point is that there are different ways in which this may be brought about. Medical men try to preserve a certain image. A doctor likes to be closely associated with his patients. He likes to be friendly. He likes to be helpful. He likes to work with his patients.

I am a little afraid, from what has happened in other countries, that this measure will tend to separate the doctor from his patient. Doctors will be in a group negotiating for better terms and better conditions against another group, and there will be some loss of that very fine association between the doctor and his patient.

My chief object in saying a few words today is to bring to your attention something that has already been done and which I think might be a good foundation at some future date for this particular medicare bill. In Alberta, in Ontario and in British Columbia there are plans now in operation whereby any person who is short of money can have a premium paid for prepaid medical care. This scheme has been in operation in Alberta since 1963 and it works very well. The doctors like it and the patients like it. It is now in operation in the other two provinces that I mentioned, Ontario and British Columbia.

It seems to me that if that were general, poverty and hard times would not prevent everyone from getting medical care, and probably later that could be a foundation for further advancement in that line.

The cost of medicare is a factor. It is just one of the factors, but it is usually increased where the fees are paid by the Government instead of by the individual.

The Hall Report at page 879 states that the costs by 1971 will be increased by $466 million. Now, that has been interpreted as meaning that the Government costs will be that much more than the individual costs would be for the same form of expanded service. On close reading it really does not say that but, as a general thing, we can be pretty sure that when the Government pays for something, it pays a little more than the individual would be able to pay.

It is estimated that the cost for each individual in Canada will be from $35 to $40 per year. Taking as an average 20 million people, that brings you from $700 million to $800 million that the taxpayer will have to raise; whereas, by this other plan that I have mentioned, where those who need help get help, it would not be $700 million, but would be $157 million.

The Premier of Alberta says that a sales tax will have to be put on there, that there will have to be an increase in gasoline tax and an increase in income tax, to cover these expenses.

Now, as Dr. Sullivan has said, this medicare has been in operation in many countries in the world, and I just want to mention briefly some of the difficulties that they have run up against. For instance, New Zealand has had socialized medicine for a long time, but everybody who goes to see a doctor has to pay part of the fee out of his own pocket. He has to make a payment himself.

In Australia they have had to set up a special discipline committee to prevent fraud in connection with medicare. In Sweden, a country that is always spoken of as a great socialist country, they have completed their scheme in easy stages. First, they had compulsory accident insurance, and then they built it up from one thing to another. But even there, the individual, if he has the money, pays the doctor and then sends his receipt in to the government and gets three-quarters of it back again.

It is said that in Russia the doctors spend more time on documents and forms than in examining patients. Half their time is spent filling in documents, reports and forms of different kinds.

Even in Germany and Austria, where they have had a system of medical care for 70 years, there are frequent disruptions, and it is said today that a doctor sees from 40 to 60 patients in his office every day and makes 15 to 25 calls. He cannot possibly do that much work in one day and give the patient the care he should really have.

Reference has been made to Great Britain. Lloyd George, back in 1911, started the scheme in Great Britain and the national health plan came into being in 1958. But there has been constant debate, negotiations, turmoil and even friction, and the doctors there have gathered into a group and are constantly bickering with the Government. This is not a desirable state of affairs.

As regards costs, when it was first brought in there it was thought it would cost $480 million, but instead it is costing $2,800 million at the present time.

In closing let me say a few words about the scheme in Alberta, which started in 1963, Under that scheme one can insure with any carrier one likes, but there is a law which says that carriers may only collect a certain premium, which is limited. The Government looks after that. There are about 1,400,000 people there and 1,100,000 have protection at the present time. Of course the Government provides medical attention to those who qualify under the Old Age Assistance Act or who are in receipt of any pension, if they need the help. They also have a plan by which if you have no income tax to pay they will pay 80 per cent of your premium. If your income on which you pay tax is $500 or less, they pay 50 per cent; and if your income on which you pay tax is up to $1,000 a year, they will pay 25 per cent. They are also helping out in the payment of chiropractors and optometrists and such people.

Before concluding let me put this statement on the record. The Canadian Medical Association, Alberta Division, said recently:

> We sincerely believe that the Alberta Plan insures a high quality of medical care while preserving for the individual citizen the important principle of freedom and responsibility.

I have been unable to find out how much demand there is for medicare, but I know there is a great demand for educational facilities. As Dr. Sullivan has said, there is a great demand for mental health requirements and education, and there should be more inquiry into the cause and treatment of heart disease, the cause and treatment of cancer and pneumonia and the cause of accidents, because these are the captains of the men of death, and research is needed. Research brings more knowledge in the ways of preserving good health and it brings more ways of preventing disease. It brings more happiness, more accomplishments and more good to the whole of your country.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Phillips, debate adjourned.

DIVORCE

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of reports of the Standing Committee on Divorce Nos. 910 to 1041, inclusive, which were presented yesterday.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, reports adopted on division.

RESOLUTIONS PRESENTED

Leave having been given to revert to Presentation of Petitions:

Hon. Mr. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the following resolutions:

Resolution 891, for the relief of William Peter Reid.

Resolution 892, for the relief of Marie Thérèse Fernande Brais Archambault.

Resolution 893, for the relief of Mary Renee Frenette Menard.

Resolution 894, for the relief of James Hubert Carlin McMahon.

Resolution 895, for the relief of Joseph Jacques Girard.

Resolution 896, for the relief of Odette Ladouceur Mathieu.

Resolution 897, for the relief of Adrienne Landry Fournier.

Resolution 898, for the relief of Donna Audrey Joyce Heckman Gleason.

Resolution 899, for the relief of Doris May Lillian Brabant Tessier.

Resolution 900, for the relief of Helmut Hubert Hermes.

Resolution 901, for the relief of Rebekah Naomi Paltiel Lowi.

Resolution 902, for the relief of Joseph Ulric André Gagné.

Resolution 903, for the relief of Evdoxia Argyriadou Halivelakis.

Resolution 904, for the relief of Anna Lazar Baron.

Resolution 905, for the relief of Marie Cécile Martel Lavoie.

Resolution 906, for the relief of Nicole Le Petrie Denis.

Resolution 907, for the relief of Sheila Louise Hayes Shepherd.

Resolution 908, for the relief of Freda Beatrice Cooper Stutt.

Resolution 909, for the relief of Edith O'Sullivan Hack Johansson.

Resolution 910, for the relief of Shirley Ann Cecillia Everitt Cunningham.

Resolution 911, for the relief of Barbara Ann Kelly Miner.

Resolution 912, for the relief of Ruth Jacqueline Julien Bohbot.

Resolution 913, for the relief of Pauline Drimer Kreaden.

Resolution 914, for the relief of Arnold Ritchie Rogers.

Resolution 915, for the relief of Rachel Suzanne Capraro Leonard.

Resolution 916, for the relief of Gunda Elizabeth Radbill Haas.

Resolution 917, for the relief of Régean Réal Roberge.

Resolution 918, for the relief of Janet Frances Smith McLachlan.

Resolution 919, for the relief of Norman John Black.

Resolution 920, for the relief of Huguette Gagnon Huard.

Resolution 921, for the relief of Lucien (Luciano) Bellemo.

Resolution 922, for the relief of Donald Patrick Joseph Brown.

Resolution 923, for the relief of Harold Auty.

Resolution 924, for the relief of Hector Quintal.

Resolution 925, for the relief of Elisabeth Heseltine Nesbitt.

Resolution 926, for the relief of Joyce Slapcoff Stuart.

Resolution 927, for the relief of George Stinton.

Resolution 928, for the relief of Eileen O'Dair Ryan Sheahan.

Resolution 929, for the relief of Michel Pierre Paul Van Schendel.

Resolution 930, for the relief of Laurel Fay Lyons Rugg.

Resolution 931, for the relief of Wilbertson Wilks.

Resolution 932, for the relief of Joseph Bernard Schachter.

Resolution 933, for the relief of Ernest Maurice Mayer.

Resolution 934, for the relief of Antonin Josef Vyvial.

Resolution 935, for the relief of John Herschorn.

Resolution 936, for the relief of Andree Paquette Mudie.

Resolution 937, for the relief of Maureen Harling Watmore.

Resolution 938, for the relief of Nicole Desroches Lauzon.

Resolution 939, for the relief of Marie Jeanne Pauline Gauthier Tremblay.

Resolution 940, for the relief of Michel Tamilia.

Resolution 941, for the relief of Yvon Chevrette.

Resolution 942, for the relief of Gerard Barbeau.

Resolution 943, for the relief of Honnie Nadler Pedvis.

Resolution 944, for the relief of Bella Cooper Gohenberg, (otherwise known as Belle Cooper Bond).

Resolution 945, for the relief of Dallas Kenny Proulx.

Resolution 946, for the relief of Gilbert Charles Roger Prevot.

Resolution 947, for the relief of Nicole Maxine Beaudry Hicken.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Robert Taschereau, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned and being come with their Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give Royal Assent to the following bills:

An Act respecting General Mortgage Service Corporation of Canada.

An Act to incorporate Income Life Insurance Company of Canada.

An Act to incorporate Income Disability and Reinsurance Company of Canada.

An Act respecting Canada Health and Accident Assurance Corporation.

An Act respecting the Boundary between the Provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan.

An act respecting the Boundary between the Province of Saskatchewan and the Northwest Territories.

An Act to amend the Canada Lands Surveys Act.

An Act to amend the Canada Labour (Standards) Code.

An Act to incorporate Bank of British Columbia.

The Honourable Lucien Lamoureux, Speaker of the House of Commons, then addressed the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General as follows:

May it please Your Honour:

The Commons of Canada have voted certain supplies required to enable the Government to defray the expenses of the public service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Honour the following bill:

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1967.

To which bill I humbly request Your Honour's assent.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the said bill.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, December 15, 1966

The Senate met at 3 p.m., Hon. Maurice Bourget, P.C., Acting Speaker, in the Chair.

Prayers.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Copy of an Agreement between the Government of Canada and the Government of the Province of Newfoundland for the use or employment of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, pursuant to section 20(3) of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act, chapter 54, Statutes of Canada, 1959. (English text).

Copies of fifty-six contracts between the Government of Canada and the Municipalities of the Provinces of Alberta, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Saskatchewan for the use or employment of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, pursuant to section 20(3) of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act, chapter 54, Statutes of Canada, 1959. (English text).

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Are the provisions in the agreements with the various provinces the same in this case as they have been over the past few years?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I understand so.

POSTAL SERVICES INTERRUPTION RELIEF BILL

FIRST READING

Hon. John J. Connolly presented Bill S-55, to provide relief in certain cases against loss or hardship suffered as a result of interruptions of normal postal services.

Bill read first time.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I think I should say at the next sitting, which will probably be two days hence. With leave, I move that it be placed on the Orders of the Day for consideration at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

MEDICAL CARE BILL

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Macnaughton for the second reading of Bill C-227 to authorize the payment of contributions by Canada towards the cost of insured medical care services incurred by provinces pursuant to provincial medical care insurance plans.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, in rising to take part in this debate, I wish first to pay tribute to the sponsor of Bill C-227. While the honourable Senator Macnaughton is not directly associated with any of the health services—he chose a more lucrative profession—he has always taken a very keen interest in health matters.

Hon. John J. Connolly (Ottawa West): That is a mistake, on the average.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: I recall another occasion in more fortunate days in a different house, when he and I sat on different sides of the Speaker's chair, he introduced a motion concerning mental health, and I had the pleasure of suggesting to the Government of the day that they accept the motion; and, later in the day, it was accepted by the Government. I also want to pay a tribute to Senator Gershaw and Senator Sullivan. A little later I will be referring to Senator Gershaw's remarks, but I would like to pay a short tribute now to Senator Sullivan. He is one of Canada's most distinguished doctors.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: He is not only one of Canada's leading ear surgeons, but I can say, without fear of contradiction, that he is a recognized world authority in his field. This is borne out by the fact that he has been honoured not only by the Canadian and American medical associations but also by every leading medical association in the world. Yesterday he referred to Dr. Penfield's writings on a number of occasions. After reading his remarks in Hansard, I would suggest that he take up Dr. Penfield's hobby of writing, and I am sure that any book he produced would automatically become a best seller.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Senator Sullivan referred to what he called socialized legal care. If I may, firstly I would like to make a suggestion to him. I have not had time to make an accurate count, but I believe there are approximately 200 lawyers on Parliament Hill, taking in both the House of Commons and the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): You can never have too much of a good thing!

Hon. Mr. Brooks: That is taking in everybody!

Hon. Mr. Phillips: I notice that many of these are ardent supporters of medicare and, in fact, some of them even go so far as to go along with the idea that it is a sort of cardinal sin for a medical man to charge a patient for services rendered. I would like to suggest that these people now take the opportunity of volunteering to provide free legal aid for all those who need it. This is the golden opportunity for the members of the legal profession. Their numbers are representative from Newfoundland to Vancouver.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): This may be a non sequitur, but we now have it.

Hon. Mr. Walker: We have been doing this for the last 30 years.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: We will have to publicize that a little more, because not many people are aware of it.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): You can get a lot of free legal advice here.

Hon. Mr. Walker: We will send you bills from now on.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: I get enough bills now—and I do not mean those we consider in the house.

In my remarks I want to make clear at the outset that I have no basic objection to the principle of the bill, but I do have certain disagreements in respect of the planning of it, which I will discuss for a few minutes.

The bill I think was prepared in haste. I understand that in 1919 medicare was part of the platform of the Liberal party. That was before I was born. I called the library to obtain a history of the Liberal party, and was referred to one written by Mr. Pickersgill. That left me with some doubts, so I decided to inquire of the more senior members of this chamber. I asked Senator Rattenbury if that was the case, and he, in turn, referred me to Senator Davies who told me that he has a distinct recollection of medicare being in the 1919 program.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): You should have asked the honourable senator from Carleton (Hon. Mr. O'Leary).

Hon. Mr. Phillips: I can recall when Mackenzie King revived the matter again in 1937, and I remember my father making his usual complimentary remarks about Mackenzie King and medicare at that time.

In 1945 there was a great movement on for medicare in Canada. This, I think, was associated with the "from the cradle to the grave" coverage of the Labour government in Great Britain at the time. This did not come about because there was disagreement with the provinces. I believe it was a good thing, because the extreme socialism in England then, in my opinion, had a great deal to do with that country's difficulties today.

Canada, on the other hand, proceeded more slowly and on a somewhat different pattern. Firstly, we had the national health grants, then hospital insurance, and now we have medicare. We are all sort of bedded in a patchwork quilt of socialism, and a number of politicians keep reminding the people that these benefits are free. I dispute that fact, and I would like to illustrate my point by this reference to hospital insurance. Through the Canadian Dental Association we had a hospital insurance policy which cost $48 a year for family coverage. Admittedly, the first $25 was deductible—that is, it was paid by the patient—but that insurance coverage provided private room accommodation. Hospital insurance came into effect, and in the province in which I live we paid a premium of $48 a year, in addition to which the federal Government paid about 60 per cent of the cost of the program in that particular province, and we went from private room accommodation down to ward accommodation. This illustrates clearly, I think, the fallacy of believing that these benefits are free and cheaper when operated by a government agency. The socialists continue to advocate more and more social measures on the basis that they are free.

In case some honourable members opposite think I am being partisan, I will say here that although I think the Liberal party has a patent on most political sins, it has not exclusive use of them all. Those of us who are proud to call ourselves Conservatives must admit that our party commits a few sins along this line too.

We have all become familiar with Stanley Knowles' setting himself above God with his socialistic blessings, but I sometimes wonder whether the present Minister of National Health and Welfare occasionally considers himself a sort of Canadian Father Divine who, as you all know, was a former slave who operated his own church in Chicago, and who built a number of Meccas throughout the United States in which the few enjoyed luxury which the rest paid for.

In the debate in the other house emphasis was placed on the fact that Canadians need not fear any extensive or expensive medical bills in the future as a result of this measure.

At one point in particular I feel the federal Government has been very negligent, namely in its treatment of tubercular and mental patients. Under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act, tubercular and mental patients are not covered if they are in a tubercular hospital or a mental hospital. It is true that they do get coverage if they are in a general hospital, but of course it is extremely difficult for a tubercular patient to be admitted to a general hospital. The larger hospitals do have active psychiatric treatment wards, but they account for a little over two per cent of the psychiatric beds in Canada. These are two of the most expensive and lengthy illnesses that can afflict individuals, and the federal Government does not touch or assist them in any way.

I wish to say something further about the drift towards socialism and its effect on Canada's development. We are all familiar with the division within the Liberal party concerning foreign investment and foreign ownership in Canada. Honourable senators, it grieves me to see a party split, as the threatened departure of Mr. Gordon from public life also grieves me. I would like to make a suggestion to those opposite which will allow them to heal the split in the Liberal party and retain Mr. Gordon, and do Canada a great service. I am basing that remark on the fact that a study of the welfare payments in Canada shows that as these payments increase so does foreign investment in Canada; they run almost parallel.

In all sincerity I suggest to you that if we stop this rush down the road to socialism we shall not only save Canada but also greatly assist the Liberal party. I hope they will take that advice in the sincere spirit in which it is offered to them.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Physician heal thyself.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: I wish briefly to mention the problem of the profession. Probably I should say professions, because I am mostly concerned with dentistry.

First, I will mention the medical aspect. No one will dispute that Canadian doctors maintain probably the highest standard in the world, and that Canadians without medicare at the present time enjoy the highest standard of medical treatment in the world.

Hon. Mr. Sullivan: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Our doctors are extremely dedicated. I have many friends in the medical profession who become rather annoyed when they read of and hear people asking for a 30- or 35-hour week. Doctors would like to get 35 hours in a week to rest. In presenting medicare to the public we must be most careful that it does not reflect upon the medical profession. I for one would deeply resent that.

Canada has, on the average, one doctor for 960 patients. Prince Edward Island is in a worse position, having one doctor for 2,000 people. The United States, in turn, has one doctor for every 740 patients. I mention the United States, because the workload of the American doctor is 30 per cent less than that of his Canadian counterpart.

As I have already stated, we did not have much time to plan for medicare. We made no effort to step up the training of doctors. The Hall Commission recommended that we add 471 students to our medical classes each year.

Honourable senators, this is an extremely expensive task and it is one, of course, that had to be done whether medicare was introduced or not. I am not blaming this on medicare but I want to point out the need of assistance to medical and other professional schools. The University of Toronto, I am told, will be adding 75 students to its class this year, but that is being done at a cost of $35 million. This illustrates the staggering cost that the medical schools are facing. In fact, I am told that to get the 471 students into medical schools, we would need to create ten new medical schools of approximately the size of Queen's University. The same shortage applies in my own profession, and in nursing. Canada presently needs 35,000 nurses.

One of the problems in keeping doctors in small rural areas is that about half of the doctors in Canada today tend to specialize. The general practitioner fears very much the regulations which will be introduced under medicare, that they may place him in a very awkward position in dealing with his patients. Those regulations may set out that only a specialist can perform certain forms of treatment, and quite often this type of specialist is not available in that area.

Another item bothering doctors is the question of increased workload. They say they are already overworked. It is human nature that when a person finds out he can visit the doctor and have his services paid for, there will be an initial rush. I do not say this rush will continue, but there will be an initial rush for medical examinations, whether they are needed or not. This will throw a heavy burden on a profession which is already short of members.

When you get into a program administered by bureaucrats, you naturally seem to accumulate a lot of paper work. When the doctor has worked all day seeing patients, sometimes listening to very sad stories, he does not feel like spending too much time doing paper work. The profession naturally hates it. This is going to take away much of the doctor's time to see patients or so-called patients. The filling out of forms can be very frustrating.

Honourable senators, I always like to tell this story. One night I was called back to my office to see a patient who had been in a car accident and was thrown forward on the dash, unfortunately fracturing his anterior teeth. A few days later I received a form from the insurance company which required me to answer a lot of questions on age, marital status, and so on, of the patient. I was asked to describe the accident, although I had not seen it. Then I came to questions 22 and 22a, set in a very attractive black box. In question 22 the company wanted to know if this claim had any origin or result in pregnancy, and question 22a asked if there were any complications during the pregnancy.

I looked at this and decided I had done enough paperwork in answering the other questions, and I sent the form back without filling this in. It came back from the insurance company with a note stating that I had not filled in question 22. I just marked in N/A, meaning not applicable, and returned it. It came back to me again with a note that I had not filled in the answer to question 22a, as to whether there were any complications during the pregnancy. I was about to write to the insurance company to explain to them that normally males do not become pregnant, but I decided that I had had enough of paper work and I let it go at that.

A doctor in one of the provinces mentioned to me that he is very concerned about the type of form some of the provinces are considering. In this computer age, the form is being designed for the computer. On each visit, the doctor will be required to check off 23 separate items, so that this card can be fed into a computer. This is a complete waste of valuable time, which the doctor could spend on another patient.

The medical profession also fears that measures of this nature in the practice of medicine may become controlled by economists, bureaucrats who do not understand medicine and who do not think along the line of medical men but will become more concerned with the statistics of medicine than with the actual relief of pain. One of the disturbing features of this bill is that in the act we have done nothing to protect the medical man.

I would like to spend a minute or two on the related or associated professions. I do not particularly like the term "para-medical", because it always conveys to me the idea of a rescue team jumping from an aircraft. I have had my day sitting on a parachute and I would not particularly care to go back to that. I prefer the term "associated professions." There are dentists working in a number of these plans now, such as OMSIP, the Ontario plan. I think there are 18 or 19 forms of dental treatment which can be carried out under this plan, and the dentist is paid from the plan.

A complaint I often hear from dentists is that, under this plan they cannot take X-rays to aid them in their work. This is the danger of having a decision made by someone who does not understand the problem. The dentist at work naturally takes the X-ray anyway, but he does not receive any fee for doing so.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Unless he gets paid by the patient, I suppose.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: It would be possible to get paid by some patients, but I think the average patient would be most reluctant to pay the fee if he felt that OMSIP was looking after his bill.

Recently I was talking with a dentist in Ottawa, a member of a small group who do charity work in one of the hospitals here. He told me that they see approximately 3,600 patients a year for which they receive no fees whatsoever. I was very impressed with the fact that these extremely busy gentlemen will give that much time to see that number of patients without receiving any fee.

The particular dentist in question told me that on one occasion he had gone back to his own office, and was so far behind in his appointments schedule that he told his nurse not to take any more patients that day, otherwise he would be too late finishing his day's work. Later, the nurse received a call from the Department of Northern Affairs asking him to see an Eskimo who was down here undergoing training. The nurse informed the department that it was impossible for the dentist to see the Eskimo. Shortly after that the dentist received a call from an official in the Department of Northern Affairs who wanted to know why he had refused to see the Eskimo. The dentist explained the situation to the official who, in reply said, "Well, there is no problem. We will not keep you waiting. We will send him out in a taxi." The dentist asked about payment and was told, "Well, we have no money to pay for the dentist, but we can pay for the taxi. Don't worry, you won't be caught paying for the taxi."

To me it is a strange situation that the department would have no objection to paying the taxi driver but would balk at paying the professional man. I think at least the professional man is entitled to the same treatment. In general, dentists are not happy with this plan and for very good reason, I think.

I would like, before moving on to the bill itself, to pay particular tribute to the work of Dr. Rynard and Dr. Brand in the other house. They presented the viewpoints of the associated professions on this subject. It is interesting that at the turn of the century the medical man worked alone. Now that picture has completely changed and he is part of a team, the main member of a team, always willing to refer patients to other health services. Now, there is a danger that by including only one member of the team under medicare, it will weaken the structure or weaken the team.

After repeated requests from the Opposition, the minister moved an amendment which I would like to read to you. It is clause 4(3):

> In the application of this Act to a plan established by an Act of the legislature of a province, any health services of a kind prescribed by the Minister to be required health services rendered by a person lawfully entitled to render such services in the place where they are so rendered shall, under such terms and conditions as may be specified by the Governor in Council and if the provincial law so provides, be deemed to be services rendered by a medical practitioner that are medically required.

I am very glad to hear, Senator Connolly, that you give free legal advice, because I think anyone who reads that section is going to need assistance to interpret it.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I was not speaking for myself; I was speaking for all lawyers.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: It reminds me of those so-called artists who take pieces of metal that have been left over as junk and weld, solder, or anneal them together to fashion some form of creation to which they give a name, and then call it "modern art."

At any rate, in order to get the minister's interpretation, I looked at Hansard of the other place, and at page 10762, he said:

> The amendment which has been moved has been moved with the authority of the Government. It has been discussed, but I am not empowered to state that we will move in any direction.

I ended up wondering whether that was illumination or hallucination.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Or a moving outfit.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: I do not think you could call it a moving outfit, Senator Choquette, because he gave a fairly strong indication that he did not intend to move on it.

The amendment indicates a certain dangerous pattern which I dislike to see developing in the legislation, and it is so strongly reflected in this amendment that I would like to spend a minute discussing it. The policy of legislation lately seems to be to grant the Governor in Council authority to draw up regulations, and Parliament is more or less giving the Governor in Council a blank cheque.

This amendment continues this dangerous trend. It is enabling legislation; it allows the Governor in Council to deal with the provinces, as a result of which we are placing each individual province at the tender mercies of the Governor in Council. I am sure that many of the provinces would rather be protected by Parliament than be left to the tender mercies of the Governor in Council. Furthermore, these agreements can be negotiated among the provinces, and Parliament will have no say as to whether or not they are satisfactory.

Honourable senators, I do not need to remind you that it is a sacred function of the Senate to protect the rights of the provinces. Therefore, I think that when this bill goes to committee we should have a particular look at this aspect of the amendment.

To mention the two provinces with which I am more familiar, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island—and I am sure the same situation exists in other provinces—mobile dental clinics are sent around to the rural areas where there is no resident dentist. The children are charged a fee of $2 for a complete treatment. If the parent is able to pay the fee, it is paid; if not, the treatment is free. Under this amendment, I ask what would happen if these provinces approached the Governor in Council and asked that this treatment be included under this medical care program? Will the minister reply that he is technically allowed to move but cannot move because no one has given him any instructions as to the specific direction in which he should move?

The amendment also weakens the influence and the stature of the national professional association. Each professional association—that is, the medical, dentistry, optometry, in the province—will be left in a position of having to negotiate directly with the provincial government, and in some of the smaller provinces the associations are so small they will be in a very poor position to negotiate with the government.

I come now to deal for a moment with the conditions necessary to qualify under this act. The first of these is the necessity for 90 per cent coverage. I do not quarrel with the fact that a certain percentage of our population needs to be covered, but I cannot go along with the 90 per cent coverage. This is entirely too high, and it is being forced—I would say crammed—down the throats of the provinces. It is not necessary for every person in a province to be covered, and I do not think the provinces are anxious to cover 90 per cent of the population. This is borne out by the Nova Scotia brief to the Hall Commission, in which they state:

> We would urge, based on our own experience, that the federal legislation should be sufficiently general and flexible that a province would be able to develop and implement a plan that meets its individual needs.

Prince Edward Island has a limited plan to cover those in receipt of old age assistance, widows' allowances and other welfare payments. An arrangement was made with the Blue Cross and Blue Shield to cover these people so that they would receive these benefits. The annual cost is, I believe, in the vicinity of $31 per person. As you all know, the province is not wealthy; in fact it is in serious financial difficulty. Why not let this province, if the provincial government so desires, or any other province for that matter, develop its own program according to its own specific needs and the ability of the province to pay? The Minister of Health in introducing the legislation in the other house emphasized that the figure of 90 per cent carried no compulsion, and he went on to say that the only compulsion was taxation. I say this bill is about as voluntary as income tax, and I do not see too many people rushing forward voluntarily to pay more income tax.

The public authority, according to the description given by the minister, can provide leeway for non-profit organizations to operate. I think this is a good idea and I would like to see the provinces pay particular attention to physician-operated plans.

The portability mentioned as a feature of this bill is very desirable and most necessary. But here again the amendment I referred to, this distorted piece of modern art, can weaken portability because, as I interpret it, one province may have oral surgery and optometry covered, while another may not.

Senator McCutcheon referred to clause 8 the other evening and mentioned the desire of the federal Government to move out of cost-sharing programs, and the sponsor of the bill indicated this possibility. This causes me to shudder. I hate to think of the possibility that in five years time the provinces will be left with the full burden of this expensive measure.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): That is not suggested, is it?

Hon. Mr. Phillips: I would remind the honourable senator that in the introduction of the bill it was stated that the federal government may wish to move out of this field, and that, in my view, is why clause 8 is in the bill. I hope the sponsor had no advance notice that the federal Government was considering leaving this field at some time in the future.

Hon. Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne): May I ask a question to clear this matter in my own mind? Was there not an addition to that statement which seemed to point out that there would be a certain number of income tax points turned over to provinces which might decide to take this over and run its own program? There was a quid pro quo arrangement.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: There is a suggestion of that, but let us apply it to our own particular area of the country. I cannot see how a point or two yielded on the income tax can take care of this problem in any of the Atlantic provinces. I suggest to you that you are familiar enough with the Atlantic provinces to know that they would not meet the requirements of the provincial governments.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Will the honourable senator allow me to deal with this point? There is no suggestion in the debates on this bill in the other place that at the end of five years, when the fiscal review is made, there would not be adequate compensation given by way of tax adjustment so that the provinces would not be in any worse position than they are under this measure.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: I am very happy to have the assurance of the Government Leader in the Senate in this regard, and while I do not wish to say that I hope he is still a member of the Cabinet in five years' time, because I would rather see the situation reversed—

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I will say that.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: —I hope the honourable senator is still there, so that I can remind him of the assurance of protection which he has given here today.

The sponsor of the bill stated that it would be referred to a committee, and I would like very much to see this done. However, I think it should be referred to the Standing Committee on Public Health and Welfare. We have a tendency to refer most measures to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, which is an excellent committee with a very capable chairman. But why have a committee on public health and welfare if we are going to refer this bill to another committee? As I said earlier, I would like to refer to Senator Gershaw. He is a respected physician and one who has long experience in public life. He is chairman of this committee, and I cannot think of any greater reason for referring this measure to that committee, where we will have the benefit of his experience both in practice and in public life.

I thank you, honourable senators, for your attention, and again let me thank the Leader of the Government in the Senate for his assurance.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Free legal advice on behalf of my colleagues.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: I do not expect him to be in the Cabinet in five years time, but should that be the unfortunate situation, politically, I shall remind him of his assurance given here today.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, may I have the privilege of answering a question asked by honourable Senator Phillips in the early stages of his remarks? He said he had been looking up the early history of the subject in question and had seen the book by Mr. Pickersgill, which had not much impressed him. Perhaps he will give more credence to a statement by one of his own colleagues who speaks from personal knowledge of what took place a very long time ago. I have had on my shelves for 47 years a book entitled "The National Liberal Convention, Ottawa, August 5, 6, 7, 1919." I turn to page 126, where I find a resolution on the subject of Labour and Industrial Relations, moved by one Honourable W. L. Mackenzie King, in which I find this paragraph—and I would like to place it on the record, as well as answer the question put, for the benefit of all senators and others, because this same question has been raised in the House of Commons—

> And Further Resolved:
> 2. That in so far as may be practicable, having regard for Canada's financial position, an adequate system of insurance against unemployment—

I pause there to say that I am rather proud of the fact that I was a member of the committee which brought in the bill that established unemployment insurance.

The resolution continues:

> sickness—

It is 47 years ago that the Liberal Party, in convention assembled in the City of Ottawa, adopted the principle of the bill that is now before us.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: It took them a long time!

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: It took them a long time, that is true; and during all that time there has been no waivering, so far as I know, from the general principle of paternalistic, shall I call it?

Hon. Mr. Choquette: "Socialistic."

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: No, it is not socialistic at all. Call it "paternalistic," if you like, but it is not socialistic by any definition I know of "socialism."

Hon. Mr. Brooks: It might be "politicalistic."

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Of course, politics is the science of what is possible, and at last we have come to the time when this sort of legislation is apparently possible—although there are some people who are of the opinion that we are still somewhat ahead of the times. But here, however, we have a resolution that has never been repudiated by the Liberals, in convention or anywhere else, for an adequate system of insurance against sickness—that is, medicare;—and I am rather proud to say that we are here carrying out that long-since resolution. It goes on to say:

> dependence in old age—

We have also accomplished that in the interval.

> widows' pensions—

There is something in legislation with regard to that, particularly in the provinces.

> and maternity benefits, should be instituted by the Federal Government in conjunction with the Governments of the several provinces; and that on matters pertaining to industrial and social legislation—

That is what this is, social legislation and not socialism.

> —an effort should be made to overcome any question of jurisdiction between the Dominion and the Provinces by effective co-operation between the several Governments.

That has taken a long time to work out, and I am not quite sure it has been worked out yet.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Those promises were good for 20 elections!

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Oh yes, the general principles of the Liberal party have been endorsed in election after election, and I have no doubt they will continue to be in the future.

There is just one other part I would wish to read—and perhaps you will smile when I do so:

> Hon. Mr. Stewart (Acting Chairman): The resolution will be seconded by Mr. Arthur W. Roebuck, of Toronto.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Willis: May I ask the honourable senator when unemployment insurance was first introduced?

Hon. Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne): In 1940.

Hon. Mr. Willis: I think it was introduced by the Bennett Government.

Hon. Mr. Smith (Queens-Shelburne): No; in 1940.

Hon. Mr. Willis: I think it was introduced by the Bennett Government between 1930 and 1935.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: No, my friend is in error there. I was on the committee, and I was in the House of Commons in 1940.

Hon. Mr. Willis: The Liberal committee—you were on the political committee at the 1919 convention, is that not right?

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Senator Roebuck, we all remember the Bennett administration originated unemployment insurance. It was sent to the Supreme Court of Canada, and they decided, on some technical point, it was ultra vires—until the Liberals got hold of it and passed it.

Hon. Mr. Willis: My second question of Senator Roebuck is: Who are you quoting from the Conservative side? You said at the outset you wondered if my friend Senator Phillips would listen to one of his own. Who is "one his own"?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Myself!

Hon. Mr. Willis: I do not consider you a Conservative sir.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I do not think my honourable friend Senator Phillip doubts a word of what I have said when I read it from the original record of the convention.

Hon. Mr. Willis: You said "one of his colleagues," and I assumed wrongly it was a Conservative.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: No.

Hon. Mr. Willis: I am glad to know it was not.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Senator Phillips has a number of colleagues—and I will go further than that—he has a number of friends on this side of the house.

Hon. Mr. Sullivan: Honourable senators, after such an extreme degree of tranquility as we have witnessed, I wonder if I could make a special plea to all senators to use the expression "medical services" in future?

Hon. Alan Macnaughton: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: I must inform honourable senators that if the honourable Senator Macnaughton speaks now it will have the effect of closing the debate.

Hon. Mr. Macnaughton: Honourable senators, in closing this debate I want to thank all those honourable senators who have taken such an active and most interesting part in it. It was very interesting to me to listen to different political theories, some of which I like and some of which I do not agree with. However, in closing this debate, with your permission I will not try to answer all the questions, because to do so we would be here for days. Furthermore, I have not yet acquired that facility that so many senators in this exalted chamber have displayed in this debate.

There are one or two points I feel I should try to explain very briefly because, like yourselves, I am hopeful that this bill will be referred to committee, where a complete explanation can be provided, where all questions can be asked and complete and satisfying answers given.

There were some very important points made by the honourable Senator Sullivan, Senator Phillips, Senator Gershaw and perhaps one or two others; so, without taking much time, may I put a statement on the record by way of general information.

I am, of course, mindful of the interest shared by all in the vital subject of medical care, and I am particularly appreciative of the views so ably presented by those of our colleagues who are members of the medical profession. For while there is significance for all of us in the provisions of this legislation, its significance is that much greater for physicians, including honourable senators who are physicians, as providers of services.

As honourable senators are aware, I am a member of the legal and not the medical profession; and, as you will also appreciate, I have not had the privilege of studying in depth some of the problems which have been set out during this interesting debate.

In order to acquaint myself with the views of those better versed than myself, therefore, I have turned to the Report of the Royal Commission on Health Services, popularly called the Hall Report, with which the honourable Senator McCutcheon was originally associated. I appreciate that the honourable senator was no longer a member of that commission when its report was completed; and I am not overlooking his statement here that he would not have concurred in all of its recommendations. Nevertheless, I am sure that honourable senators will agree with me when I say that this commission based its report on an intensive study in depth of the problems with which it was dealing at the time.

In studying this report I have endeavoured to seek an answer to the suggestion made by some speakers in this debate that the medical care program for which provision is made in this Medical Care Bill which we are discussing should be limited to those individuals who lack the means to provide medical care coverage for themselves, the rest of the population being left free to avail themselves, of their own volition, of insurance coverage against the risks posed by ill health. This view has been eloquently enunciated here, and it is one that certainly merits consideration.

I find that the conclusion drawn by the Hall Commission, after careful study and based upon reports of experts, was that public medical care plans should be designed so as to cover the whole population. In connection with a consideration of partial plans, the report points out the following:

> The number of individuals who would require subsidy to meet total health services costs is so large that no government could impose the means test procedure on so many citizens or would be justified in establishing a system requiring so much unnecessary administration. The health services will make enough demands on our resources. We must not waste them.

A number of speakers in this debate have mentioned existing provincial programs under which government subsidies are made available for persons needing some financial assistance. I am told that the Canadian Medical Association has advocated this type of a partial plan. In fact, I have received the courtesy of a letter from that association outlining its various points. I believe that this is the type of plan that some honourable senators had in mind when they suggested that federal legislation should be directed towards the more limited type of coverage. I should like to bring to the attention of honourable senators, however, the estimate made by the Canadian Medical Association recently of the number of persons who would require this type of subsidy, namely, five million Canadians. This would mean that a means test would have to be applied to at least this number, although probably it would be more since there would be inevitably those who on examination were found not to be eligible. I am sure that the enormity of the task of means-testing this number of persons, quite apart from other administrative problems, can be well appreciated by all honourable senators here.

As honourable senators are aware, of course, the federal Government is even now able to share in the costs of health services for those of our people who are in receipt of social assistance. These health services include medical care until such time as programs are universally available. When the Canada Assistance Plan came into operation it became possible, for the first time, for the federal Government to share with the provinces the costs entailed in providing these services to the recipients of welfare aid.

To this extent, therefore, the federal Government has been empowered to assist the provinces in certain programs based on a needs test. The number of persons involved in these programs, however, is not comparable with the number which would require some form of subsidy under a partial plan such as that suggested by the Canadian Medical Association.

While other significant and important points have been raised during this debate, I have endeavoured to discuss coverage in particular because, frankly, I was impressed by the views put forward in this regard. However, in committee there will be ample opportunity for discussing both this problem and others which have been raised.

Under the heading of "public administration" I should like to mention very briefly a point which seems to me to be self-evident. Public administration is the second basic principle in this legislation. The need for public responsibility, public administration, and nonprofit operation is obvious because public funds are concerned. When we spend public funds it seems to me that we must have public control.

The manpower situation has been raised this afternoon, and without getting into an argument I will say that there is a point in this particular discussion that I want to bring out. There is a need for more doctors and other health professionals. However, the Royal Commmission on Health Services came to this conclusion:

> While we are aware that shortages of physicians, dentists, nurses and other paramedical personnel will make it difficult to establish the full personal health services program our charter envisages, nonetheless the fact there are shortages must not be used as an excuse to delay initiating programs and plans.

For example, the United Kingdom, France, West Germany and Sweden have a less favourable doctor-population ratio than Canada, yet these countries have had universal prepaid medical care in effect for many years,

The same arguments concerning inadequate resources were advanced prior to the introduction of hospital insurance in 1958. Experience has shown that the establishment of a new program stimulates efforts to increase resources, and assists in their effective utilization. The Health Resources Fund established this year in an amount of $500 million to support the capital costs of medical schools and training facilities for the other health professions is just one example of this. It will, of course, not have an immediate effect in increasing the number of doctors, but it is a very large step in the right direction.

In concluding these brief remarks I should like to express once more my appreciation to honourable senators for their kind comments on my initial participation in the debates of this chamber.

It is my hope that this bill will receive second reading today and be referred to committee for a full and frank discussion.

Motion agreed to, and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Macnaughton: Honourable senators, I move that this bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, certain of those who have spoken in this debate—Senator Sullivan, Senator Phillips and Senator Gershaw—rather indicated that this is the type of bill that should be referred to the Standing Committee on Public Health and Welfare, of which Senator Gershaw is the chairman. I know that the honourable senators I have mentioned are very anxious that the bill should go to that committee.

It may be argued that this is a financial measure, because by it the federal Government is guaranteeing the provinces that it will pay a certain proportion of the expenses incurred in carrying out the scheme. But, I should like to point out that the bill is the Medical Care Bill, and it does deal with matters of health. Any honourable senator who has read the debate on this bill in the other house will know that the emphasis there was on the health aspects of the bill, namely, the scarcity of doctors, the improvement of the health of the people, and related matters.

For these reasons, honourable senators, it is my humble opinion that this bill should be referred to the Standing Committee on Public Health and Welfare. After all, what is the use in having a Standing Committee on Public Health and Welfare if we do not refer to it matters pertaining to health. I would suggest that the honourable sponsor of the bill (Hon. Mr. Macnaughton) move that the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Public Health and Welfare.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I should have spoken to Senator Brooks before he raised this issue. I spoke to Senator Gershaw, chairman of the Standing Committee on Public Health and Welfare, the other day, and we came to the conclusion that because that committee has not sat for some time and the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce has been sitting regularly, that at this stage of the session, with the possibility of many members of this house being away, it was desirable that this bill should be referred to the Banking and Commerce Committee. However, the real reason that moved me to suggest to the sponsor of the bill that it be referred to the Banking and Commerce Committee was that the bill is primarily a financial bill. It concerns the expenditure of public money.

I would point out that there is no prohibition against any member of the Senate attending the meeting of that committee and taking part in its proceedings. If an honourable senator who is not a member of the committee wishes an amendment made, I am sure there will be no difficulty about arranging for a member of the committee to make the motion.

For these reasons I ask the Senate to agree to the motion of the honourable sponsor of the bill.

Motion agreed to, on division.

CRIMINAL CODE (HATE PROPAGANDA)

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from November 30, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Roebuck for the second reading of Bill S-49, to amend the Criminal Code.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, I yield to honourable Senator Belisle.

Hon. Rhéal Belisle: Honourable senators, I was going to request permission to speak instead of Senator Flynn, since he is not ready to proceed today. Thank you for allowing me this privilege.

Honourable senators, in rising to take part in the discussion of this bill, I do so with a certain amount of trepidation, due to the discussion and comments already made by so many able and experienced senators.

It is not my intention to discuss the legalism of this bill if it becomes law. In the first place, not being a lawyer, I am not qualified to do so. Secondly, that point was so well covered by experts such as the honourable Senators Walker, Choquette and Hayden, that we all feel this bill will only add confusion and annoyance to the already burdensome Criminal Code. Even Senator Roebuck admitted that the proposed legislation is almost a codification of the law of libel as embodied in the Criminal Code.

While I was listening with great interest to all the previous speakers, I was deeply impressed by the honourable Senator Walker's argument, and also by the logical and thoroughly exemplified thesis of the honourable Senator Choquette. However, when the honourable Senator Hayden commenced his impressive and legal argument about genocide, I could not help but think that he was giving the bill the "kiss of death". Having concluded his remarks in such an able fashion, he tried not to disagree with the intent of the bill that was advocated by the distinguished Leader of the Government in this house.

Again, I could not evade the thought that Senator Hayden was performing the same service to this house as the honourable Senator Crerar did on many occasions. I hope honourable senators will permit me to quote Senator Crerar's remarks, which appear on page 735 of Senate Hansard of 1963:

> What this country needs today, above everything else, is clear thinking on these matters. It needs wisdom and sometimes I wonder, when I read the debates in the House of Commons, if we have a clear thinking and as much wisdom as the country requires at this juncture of our affairs.
> At any rate whatever that may be, let this house, this chamber, be an illustration to our country of what temperate, well-considered, wise judgment may produce in the way of our contribution to the national business.

If I may be permitted to add, I would say we need it more now than ever before.

I am sure that if Senator Crerar were here he would strongly object to this bill. After reading the contents of this bill, with due respect for those who composed it, I cannot help but agree with Senator Crerar that wisdom and sagacity are found to be lacking.

We all agree that hate propaganda is an undesirable thing, but it is most difficult to find effective means to eliminate it.

May I present a suggestion in this regard? The crux of the problem was stated by the Prime Minister when he posed the following question to the Canadian Jewish Congress:

> How to discourage wanton incitement to racial hatred while preserving the right to free expression of opinion?

He obviously believes it can be done by legislation.

There are two main assumptions upon which this legislation is based. One, that there is a great enough quantity of hate propaganda being circulated and distributed in Canada to justify the passage of legislation to control it; secondly, that the Canadian people do not have enough common sense or sense of fairness or fair play to be able to recognize and reject such propaganda on sight. To put it another way, the Government does not have enough confidence in the Canadian people to believe that they are capable of recognizing and rejecting such propaganda outright. By introducing this bill, the Government must be convinced that such literature will poison the mind of the Canadian reader.

With regard to the first point, do honourable senators truly believe that there is enough hate literature being circulated in this country to warrant and justify outlawing it by bringing down an amendment to the Criminal Code? I do not believe there is, when talking strictly in terms of quantity.

Honourable senators know the amount of mail we receive, from every nook and cranny of Canada dealing with every subject imaginable. However, we do not receive that much hate propaganda through the mails. Some senators might say, "Oh, but they will not send their publications to legislators. They are afraid we will raise a fuss about it. Therefore other people must receive it, not those in a position to do something to curtail it." In this respect, I will say that to my knowledge, members of Parliament do not receive all that much mail from constituents on this subject; nor do I. In other words, the people themselves do not appear overly concerned.

Therefore, in terms of the quantity of hate propaganda circulating in Canada this legislation, in my opinion, is not justified. With regard to point two, I only wish to re-affirm my own confidence in the ability of the Canadian people to recognize and reject publications and propaganda of this nature. Here is something that the Government has not done. This Government is essentially paternalistic, which has been shown in a number of areas. In the field of welfare, they have not reflected that confidence that Canadians are able to care for their own health and welfare. In the economic sphere they have not reflected confidence in our businessman, since they do not believe that he can do the job himself. However, the thing that disturbs Canadians is that they refuse to use this paternalistic attitude towards the C.B.C. where it is greatly needed.

The Government has made the incorrect assumption that Canadians need help in certain fields. In the field of hate literature, they are, in effect, telling us that the Canadian people have not the common sense or the ability to discriminate between hate literature and the daily newspaper.

The Government has become known as an administration that continually retreats from the legislative and policy positions it takes in Parliament. Why does it retreat, alter, backtrack and change horses in mid-race? Because it is confused, and this confusion is reflected in bills such as this.

There is an important connection here. I believe that confusion breeds disrespect. An example of the actions of this confused Government are reflected in part in this bill. How can we have any respect for the bill—this bill of all bills—which has as its essence the protection of the individual? Was it not for this and other purposes that the Bill of Rights was passed?

I sincerely feel that, instead of enacting new legislation which will but erode our existing legislation and create disrespect for our laws, we should do some soul searching and find ways and means that will command respect for our laws and authorities.

No wonder our youth and citizens at large are losing respect for our laws and traditions when we, as legislators, are unsteady and indecisive in our aim to protect and conserve this priceless title of being a Canadian. In this new age it should not be surprising to find crackpots who would try to abuse our already limited freedom. It should not be surprising to find emerging a new liberalism, a new conservatism, and a new socialism.

The new world is being increasingly fettered by automation, electronics, the amazing speed in communications and the media of press, television and radio. It seems that the theory of obsolescence is making a sharp impact on political persons, theories and programs.

Honourable senators, may I ask a lingering question, whether or not this onrush is totally wise. To what extent can a nation afford to toss into the ashcan much of its proven past in preference for the untried, as the new generation ventures into the unknown future? I am not too easily impressed by those johnny-come-latelys with theories brainwashed by modern-day propagandists and history re-writers.

My point is this. The fact that we have the opportunity to debate this bill is a tremendous thing for Canadians. It gives us the opportunity of showing them that we have confidence in their ability to make up their own minds. Therefore, we should block this bill. Here we have an opportunity to say to all Canadians who will listen, that we have confidence in their judgment regarding hate literature. It is one of the duties of our Canadian Senate to protect the sovereign right of the people themselves to decide what is good literature and what is bad literature, which is harmful and which is not.

I want to thank the Government for providing us with the opportunity of stating something which they are reluctant to say, but even more reluctant to demonstrate—that at least some legislators believe that the Canadian people should be left alone to handle those affairs which only they can handle best.

I know Canadians will treat hate propaganda as they treat the common housefly—they will simply whisk it off their sleeve because they know that while it is dirty and might pester them, it will not hurt them. Or, as Canadians can kill the nuisance fly, they can destroy hate literature by throwing it into the fire.

Hon. Douglas D. Everett: Honourable senators, in continuing the debate on Bill S-49, I would, in making my maiden speech, beg your indulgence to allow me to thank the Leader of the Government and the honourable Senator Beaubien (Provencher) for having introduced me to this chamber, and the Leader of the Government and the honourable Senator Thorvaldson for their kind references to me.

Honourable senators, I would also like to refer to my predecessor the honourable Thomas Crerar, and I shall do so, very briefly, for there are far better orators than I who have spoken of this great man. I would like to make just one point in reference to him: In 1921 he had an opportunity to become the Leader of the Opposition of the other place, but he was sent here as the head of the Progressive movement that had as its objective the enshrinement of certain principles in the laws of the country. He was prepared to forsake that opportunity. For Thomas Crerar is a man who always put principle before power.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Everett: Honourable senators, in the years I might spend in this chamber, I can never replace Thomas Crerar, but I shall attempt to emulate him.

In regard to Bill S-49, and in particular in regard to clause 1 thereof, which proposes to introduce section 267A into the Criminal Code, and which deals with persons who advocate or promote genocide, it has been said in this chamber that if such a section had been in the laws of Germany prior to the Second World War, it would not have prevented the frightening things which happened during that war. Yet, in the period prior to the time that Hitler took power, he was constantly advocating and promoting genocide. He created the conditions in which genocide took place when he did come into power.

It has been said in this chamber that this matter should be dealt with by the United Nations. I question whether the United Nations can really deal with the problem of the advocacy and promotion of genocide. I agree that it may be they can deal with genocide itself. But would we permit the United Nations to invade our law to punish the advocating or promoting of genocide? I doubt it very much. What we are really proposing to do here is implement a United Nations convention which was ratified by the Parliament of Canada.

It has been said in this chamber that the criminal code already protects against that which is contemplated by section 267A. But surely there is nothing wrong in covering in a specific way what the Code already protects? And further, honourable senators, I question whether the Code indeed does protect against the act of > deliberately inflicting on the group conditions of life calculated to bring about its physical destruction.

Section 267A (2) (c) does.

It has been said in this chamber that the Bill of Rights, through the operation of Section 107 of the Criminal Code, would protect. I wonder. I wonder whether a charge could really be successfully framed against one who advocates or promotes genocide, under the Bill of Rights and the operation of that Section 107. Again I suggest to you that, if the Bill of Rights protects, then there is nothing wrong with implementing it in the Criminal Code. I cannot find anything wrong with doing so.

Honourable senators, I have no hesitation in endorsing the principle of this legislation. The United Nations convention on genocide has been ratified by 66 countries of the world. We have a duty and an obligation when we ratify a convention to implement that ratification, and that is what we are doing. I suggest to you that we should do it.

There are demagogues, there are people even in Canada who can sway crowds, and Canadians, no matter what we may like to think, are not exempt from being swayed. This section is required.

Honourable senators, while I say I endorse the principle of the section, I am concerned about certain aspects of its drafting. It says, "in this section, genocide includes..." The word "includes" gives rise to a dictionary definition. The United Nations convention, however, states in this regard "that genocide means..." In forming laws such as this we should be precise. We should define genocide in all its aspects.

Furthermore, section 267A refers to "any group of persons." I believe that if we turn to the dictionary, we find that the word "group" means any three persons. I cannot believe that that was the intention. Again, I think the drafters of the legislation should be precise. I would like to know why in section 267A they use the word "group" when in section 267B they used the words "identifiable group" and then defined "identifiable group".

I would also like to know why there were five categories, when the Special Committee on Hate Propaganda used three. Admittedly, the UN Convention definition does use the same five categories, but, again, we are trying to protect against any encroachment on the freedom of speech, and I would like to see us examine whether we should not reduce the categories. Frankly, on my reading of the proposed act I would think paragraph (a), "killing members of the group", and paragraph (c), "deliberately inflicting on the group conditions of life calculated to bring about its physical destruction", would be sufficient for the purposes at hand.

I am also concerned, honourable senators, with the drafting of section 267B which talks about an "identifiable group." In our legislation we say an "identifiable group" means any section of the public distinguished by colour, race, or ethnic origin. The Special Committee talked about religion, colour, race, language, and ethnic or national origin. If I am correct, the words "religion", "language" and "national origin" have been omitted. Now, the honourable Senator Roebuck said that the omission of those words widened the definition but that the inclusion of them would narrow the definition. Well, I am in favour of narrowing the definition.

Honourable senators, I also feel that perhaps the consent of the Attorney General of Canada should be required before an action could be brought under this act. That may restrict it too much, but at the outset I do not think that that would be a bad thing; and, if we found that it was too restrictive, then Parliament could amend it to include the Attorneys General of the provinces.

What then are my conclusions in reviewing this act? I find fault with it from a procedural point of view, but I am in favour of it from a substantive point of view. I think that we have to extend the law of defamation to groups.

Admittedly, in doing so, we are limiting free speech. But we do not live under a laissez-faire society; we live under a society which believes in the rule of law. So, we have provisions of the Code on defamatory libel which restrict the freedom of speech but make freedom a more perfect thing. The question we have to ask ourselves is: are we better preserving freedom by restricting by a slight amount the freedom to speak? I suggest an examination of this act would indicate that we are indeed better preserving freedom by doing so.

Honourable senators, there is a real and present danger. I admit to my honourable colleague who has just spoken that the number of occurrences are not great, but they are vicious and they are occurring now. Listen to this example given by the Committee on Hate Literature:

> We do not say that every Jew is a Communist, but that the majority of the Communist leaders and spies were and are Jews. Therefore, Communism is Jewish. Christians unite! Boycott Jewish filth! Nazism is dead, but Communism lives. Fight Communism or die a slave!

That is a vicious attack. It does not have to be repeated over and over again.

Senator Croll, in his great speech, said that hate is a corrosive force. Indeed it is, and with today's modern communication methods it is a force whereby a drop of water of hate can be a tidal wave of hate tomorrow. I suggest to you, honourable senators, that we have to stop this and stop it now.

There is ample precedence for what we are doing. There is the United Nations' Genocide Convention, as I told you, ratified by 66 countries, including Canada. There is the Declaration on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination passed, I believe unanimously, by the General Assembly. This sort of act is to be found in the laws of most western European countries. It is to be found under the Public Order Act in the United Kingdom. Even in my Province of Manitoba, we have had since 1934 an act which extended defamation laws to groups. I might point out that while that same law may be ultra vires and only provides for an injunction, there is only one hate case recorded by the Special Committee on Hate Propaganda in Manitoba between 1963 and 1965, whereas Ontario has had 40.

I suggest to you that if this act errs, honourable senators, it errs on the side of free speech. Look at Section 267A. It requires an "attempt to destroy"; Section 267B requires an action which is "likely to lead to a breach of the peace." Section 267C requires someone who "willfully promotes", and 267C provides two defences: truth and a condition in which the utterer reasonably believes the statement is true so long as it is within the public interest.

These two defences are not found in the British act. I suggest to you that Bill S-49 puts no ban on the advocacy of any viewpoint, except genocide and grossly abusive statements.

There are those who have said that education is the answer. Of course it is. But that does not mean that we should dispense with the law. The law is still required, and I suggest to honourable senators that legislation is a form of education. I think the Human Rights Code in Ontario has not only created a law; it has, by its very existence created an attitude, a new attitude. I cannot help but believe that the civil rights legislation in the United States has created a better attitude towards civil rights in that country.

I would like to make two final points that to me are the crucial reasons why I support this legislation. First, if you examine the membership of the Committee on Hate Propaganda, you will find that for the most part the members are advocates of civil liberty. Can you imagine that men like Corry, Dion, MacGuigan, Trudeau or MacKay would proscribe free speech unless they felt there was a compelling reason? And, honourable senators, the most compelling reason to me is that it is essential in Canada that we extend the law of defamation to groups.

When I came to the Senate I tried, like all new senators, to find out something about its history and its traditions. I found that the three things that we are here to protect are provincial rights, minority rights and individual rights. In this legislation we have a dichotomy between minority rights and individual rights, and the question is how are we going to solve that dichotomy? Well, honourable senators, this country is unique, because it is a cultural mosaic. We say that what really distinguishes this country is that we have strong groups who maintain their individuality but who have a common allegiance to Canada. We seek unity in diversity, and I suggest that we should enshrine this principle in legislation: that the group is an essential part of the Canadian makeup, that this is the thing that distinguishes us from the cultural melting pot theory of the United States, and that the group has the right of the individual in Canada.

I have no hesitation, honourable senators, in supporting the principle of this bill.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West), for Hon. Mr. Flynn, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Friday, December 16, 1966

The Senate met at 3 p.m., Hon. Maurice Bourget, P.C., Acting Speaker, in the Chair.

Prayers.

JOINT COMMITTEES

CHANGES IN COMMONS MEMBERSHIP

The Hon. the Acting Speaker informed the Senate that messages have been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the name of Mr. Orange has been substituted for that of Mr. Isabelle on the Special Joint Committee on the Public Service; that the name of Mr. Brewin has been substituted for that of Mr. Fawcett on the Special Joint Committee on Immigration; and that the names of Messrs. Saltsman and Lamontagne have been substituted for those of Messrs. Scott (Danforth) and Duquet on the Special Joint Committee on Consumer Credit and Cost of Living.

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Statutory Orders and Regulations published in the Canada Gazette, Part II, of Wednesday, December 14, 1966, pursuant to section 7 of the Regulations Act, Chapter 235, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

MEDICAL CARE BILL

AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. A. K. Hugessen, for Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the following report of the committee on Bill C-227, to authorize the payment of contributions by Canada towards the cost of insured medical care services incurred by provinces pursuant to provincial medical care insurance plans:

Your committee recommends that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 300 copies in French of its proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I move, with leave of the Senate, that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Hugessen, for Hon. Mr. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill C-227 to authorize the payment of contributions by Canada towards the cost of insured medical care services incurred by provinces pursuant to provincial medical care insurance plans, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Alan Macnaughton: Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate, that this bill be read the third time now.

Hon. Joseph A. Sullivan: Honourable senators, I pray the indulgence of the House for a few moments. I shall not be long.

It is better to have fought and lost than never to have fought at all. However, throughout life, praise God, I have had more wins than losses.

In all sincerity, I am greatly disturbed that this chamber of protectors of minority rights should easily dispose of this legislation. The honourable sponsor of this bill (Hon. Mr. Macnaughton) has commented on the shortage of doctors in this country. Well, I hope my prophecy will prove wrong, and that he will not see an exodus the like of which he never dreamed.

He mentioned other countries at the conclusion of the debate on second reading yesterday, namely, the United Kingdom, France, West Germany and Sweden. It has been my privilege to have visited each of those countries, and in them to have participated in seminars, to have lectured at scientific meetings, and to have performed surgical operations in an attempt to give what I had learned to others. I cannot accept his enthusiasm about the medical services rendered in those countries when compared to what we have today in Canada and in the United States of America. I suggest he read the Gundy report, and not the Hall Commission's report which practically ignored the recommendations of the Canadian Medical Association after Senator McCutcheon resigned as a member of that commission.

However, I wish to place on record today a judicial decision of the High Court of Australia. In Australia a compulsory state medical care plan was declared illegal because it abrogated fundamental rights defined in the Australian Constitution. Chief Justice Latham, Chief Justice of the High Court of Australia, referring to the Pharmaceutical Benefits Act on which the decision turned, noted that it involved "civil conscription." He stated:

> There could in my opinion be no more effective means of compulsion than is to be found in a legal provision that unless a person acts in a particular way he shall not be allowed to earn his living in the way, and possibly in the only way, in which he is qualified to earn a living.

Thus the High Court did not declare the plan invalid because it proposed to give medical benefits contrary to any provision in the constitution; it declared it invalid because the court regarded the proposals as an act of civil conscription, and therefore ultra vires the constitution.

In Australia the state was thwarted in its attempt to impose involuntary servitude and civil conscription. In that country, our sister dominion, both citizens and physicians appear to be content—a principle consistent with individual rights, duty and liberty. The citizen has not surrended his rights to the state and the state has not abrogated the rights of the physician.

With the enactment of this legislation, this Government will be responsible for the deleterious effect that will be done to the people of Canada in the provision of quantity, not quality, medical services. Pass the bill!

Hon. Mr. Burchill: Honourable senators, I was present this morning at the meeting of the Banking and Commerce Committee as a member. I attempted to ask the minister a question in relation to this bill, but unfortunately he had to leave shortly before the meeting adjourned. Perhaps the sponsor of the bill (Hon. Mr. Macnaughton) can give me the information I wanted. Has there been any estimate made of the initial cost of this legislation?

Hon. Mr. Macnaughton: Honourable senators, there has been an estimate. Just what the exact terms are, I would not want to state this afternoon because I am not sure of my information. I have heard estimates of from $53 million up to $200 million. I regret to say that I am not in a position to give an exact figure; I suppose no one is able to do so at this stage. However, it would be 50 per cent of the cost of a provincial medical claim inside a province, depending on the number of provinces participating.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, it has been moved by the honourable Senator Macnaughton, seconded by the honourable Senator Hays, that this bill be now read the third time. Is it your pleasure to adopt the motion?

Hon. Mr. Sullivan: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed, on division.

NATO PARLIAMENTARIANS

TWELFTH ANNUAL CONFERENCE AT PARIS, FRANCE

Hon. John B. Aird rose pursuant to notice:

> That he will call the attention of the Senate to the Twelfth Annual Conference of NATO Parliamentarians held at Paris, France, 9th November to 14th November, 1966, and in particular to the discussions and proceedings of the Conference and the participation therein of the delegation from Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, it is my pleasure to give you a brief report of the recent meeting of the NATO Parliamentary Group in Paris, and of the visit to the Canadian army and air force bases in France and Germany, as well as a special trip made to Berlin as guests of the Federal Republic of West Germany. As you know, the Senate was represented by Senator Brooks, Senator Lefrançois and myself. We had a very active trip and, as no doubt other senators will be speaking in due course, I will confine my remarks to several impressions and conclusions which have occurred to me personally.

I would like to discuss the current NATO situation from a Canadian point of view, under three headings: firstly, NATO and Canada; secondly, Britain and the European Common Market; thirdly, the Canadian delegation.

Turning to my first heading, NATO and Canada, I believe that the present NATO dilemma requires that Canada reassess her position as a member of the Alliance, because there is no doubt that the French decision to withdraw from the integrated NATO defence system has brought to a head the whole question of the form and functioning of the Atlantic Alliance. It is now up to Canada, as it is to the other member countries, to make up its mind how it envisages future NATO co-operation.

Honourable senators, what I am concerned about is the possibility that Canada and her NATO allies may be lulling themselves into a sense of false security because of the apparent thaw in the cold war, the emergence of France as a power to be reckoned with, and an economic approach as contrasted to a political and military approach to the problems of the NATO Alliance. This is not to suggest that I believe that there is a short term danger of war in Europe.

What I am suggesting is that it is premature to move away from the maintenance of a first-class common defence system in the peacetime that we presently enjoy. Furthermore, I am suggesting that this common defence system has been the decisive factor in making Europe a relatively stable area. The ability of the leading member of the Alliance, the United States, to retaliate effectively in the case of aggression—and, equally important, the credibility of this deterrent—has given the European countries of the Alliance the security and the confidence necessary for effective policies in relation to the Soviet Union and the other communist-governed countries of Eastern Europe.

In this regard I would like to refer to you some excerpts from the address delivered by the Secretary General of NATO, General Manlio Brosio, at the Paris meeting, He said, in referring to the Soviet threat, that it was "no longer immediately a military one" but that there "remains the threat of an implacable political and diplomatic struggle backed by the presence of a huge and constantly improving military force." "The doctrine of peaceful co-existence," says Mr. Brosio, "was formulated not to end the east-west struggle but to shift it to the less dangerous arena of political pressures and diplomatic manoeuvre..." The communists are convinced, Mr. Brosio says, "that if they only wait, economic or Asian preoccupations will force the United States to reduce its interests and influence in Europe, NATO will break up, and the east will find itself able to deal bilaterally with a fragmented series of small and medium-sized states."

At the moment, therefore, I believe that NATO is at a policy crossroads. Will it allow itself to fragment into separate units or will it adhere to the policy that has worked so admirably to date? What is Canada's position as it surveys this rapidly changing scene? Surely it is unwise to move too quickly away from a defensive position which should be maintained, I believe, at the same time as discussions on a political level are going forward with eastern Europe and with the countries behind the Iron Curtain.

It was my good fortune to be named coordinator of the Canadian delegation on the economic committee. I believe that economic problems are one of the fundamental causes of the deterioration of the NATO Alliance, so I felt that this forum would be most interesting and productive. In the result, this proved to be only partially the case. The committee restricted itself to somewhat general debate and in the final analysis passed three resolutions of a very wide nature.

The first was a general resolution reaffirming the desirability of European unity and once again reiterating the dual-pillar approach to an Atlantic Alliance. The two pillars envisaged are America and a united Europe. I, of course, was concerned as to the meaning of the so-called "American pillar" and where Canada stood in relation to it. I believe that Canadians will need to think a good deal about exactly where Canada fits in the American plan.

The second was a general resolution supporting the GATT negotiations and expressing the hope that these negotiations will come to a successful conclusion by the spring of 1967.

The third was a general resolution concerning international liquidity and an endorsement of the studies being conducted by the Group of Ten in their efforts to develop a new form of international reserve asset to supplement gold and reserve currencies. In recent years it has been recognized that the growth of reserves in the form of gold and reserve currencies will probably be insufficient to satisfy growing needs. The problem is essentially one of the total quantity available for all countries. This proposed development of a new form of international reserve asset is now generally regarded as a feasible creation, but no mutually acceptable agreement has yet been reached. There is a basic concern that the creation might constitute a temptation to many countries to postpone or evade actions that are needed to run their own economies properly.

Because of the general and universal scope of these resolutions, I think that the Canadian delegation was justified in expressing its support in their carriage, but I was disappointed that the economic committee did not discuss in some detail what I consider to be the fundamental economic problem currently facing NATO.

This problem, as I understand it, was very well expressed by C. L. Sulzberger in the New York Times international edition on Monday, November 21, 1966, and I quote:

> The United States of America, Britain and West Germany are all beset by special economic worries. The United States burden in Vietnam is now reflected in worried stock and capital markets. Britain still lives beyond its modest means and West Germany approaches the brink of inflation.
> Therefore the United States of America, although it knows any withdrawal might risk serious political damage, has told the Germans it cannot maintain its forces there at existing levels unless Bonn continues to buy, in American goods and services, the equivalent of what we spend on this NATO army. The British, who operate on a less extensive scale, have said about the same thing. The Germans meanwhile insist they can't afford and don't intend to continue spending in "offset agreements" the entire cost of allied garrisons.

Continuing the quotation:

> Economic-military quid pro quo seemed to be working all right when everyone except the poor English was prosperous and the other allies were continually prepared to bail Britain out. But economists now worry that prosperity may be slipping behind us. The allies maintaining troops in Germany therefore mutter about troop costs, and Germany begins to mutter about not needing to spend so much on weapons and services.
> Thus, as NATO tries to recover from its troubles with France, it finds itself faced with another problem—how to have both guns and butter when the bank account has been diluted by inflation. The embarrassed answer is to substitute missiles for guns—because fewer are needed.

Put in the simplest of terms, the truth is that each of the principal NATO partners is suffering from a shortage of money and as a result NATO is changing its defence strategy. Generally speaking, I have the greatest respect for the laws of economics, but in this particular situation it seems to me that it may not be the wisest nor the safest course to have NATO strategy dominated by economic thought or the excuse of economic distress rather than by political or military considerations.

It is of interest to note that most reports indicate, in fact, that while the Russians are cutting down their conventional strength in Europe, they are at the same time increasing their nuclear missle strength. Therefore, both sides are going back to the strategic defence concept of massive retaliation.

On analysis, it seems that the real problem of NATO is a sagging economic situation which has caused a return to the previous strategy of massive retaliation which was given up five years ago because it was too dangerous although it was obviously cheaper. Until we have a much better appreciation of what the Russians are doing, it seems to me that it is foolish to allow these economic considerations to become dominant, and it is my belief that it is much too early in the game to cut down or thin out the NATO European defences. There is simply too much at stake for NATO—or for the United States—to conclude that the present level of NATO forces is not absolutely vital to the peace and prosperity of Europe.

In addition to the foregoing comments concerning economics and the shortage of money and how they are affecting NATO strategy, it also seems clear that there is a definite shift in posture by the United States in its position vis-à-vis West Germany. It is a hard truth, but it is now apparent that the federal republic is no longer the principal military and political partner of the United States in European affairs. That completes my section on Canada and NATO.

I would now turn to my second heading, which is Britain and the European Common Market. Quite apart from NATO's specific problems, there is of course the introduction of Prime Minister Wilson's commitment to bring Britain into the European Economic Community. This newly adopted British position was very much debated and, of course, carries all kinds of ramifications far beyond the scope of this brief report. But I would like to point out the amazing position of power that General de Gaulle seems to have achieved for France. What will happen if he slams the door in Britain's face again? If Mr. Wilson is sufficiently unwise as to approach General de Gaulle directly, surely it gives the French the chance to set the terms for Britain's entry. From my observation of the silence from France since Mr. Wilson's statement, it seems that there has been no change of heart since the previous rejection. It seems that the General still concludes that the presence of Britain and Germany together inside any economic community would drown the hitherto preponderant voice of France and would put him in permanent danger of isolation.

On the other hand, every other issue in Britain is now subordinate to the question of whether Mr. Wilson's new effort will succeed. He has every incentive to find out exactly what Britain must, and must not, do to qualify for EEC membership.

And what of Canada's position in the event that Britain does join the European Common Market? In this regard, I agree with the editorial in the Financial Post of November 19, 1966, which reads as follows:

NO BLEATS THIS TIME PLEASE

> A few years ago, when Britain made its first bid to join the European Economic community, Canadians had some reason to deplore the threat this posed to Commonwealth ties. But even though Britain's entry into ECC would temporarily cut into the major gains Canadians were making in selling more to Britain's newly reopened economy, most knowledgeable Canadians involved in world trade believed, all other things notwithstanding, Canada's best long-term interest would be improved if Britain joined Europe. A stronger Britain in a prosperous EEC, it was reasoned, in the long run would create bigger markets for Canada.
> Since then, Canadian economic policy has followed a consistent line of self-interest. In so doing, it has freed Britain from any obligation it may have felt toward preserving traditional British markets for Canadian goods.
> Among Canada's moves that have clashed with the interests of Britain are the United States-Canada auto production deal, United States-Canada defence production sharing, slowness in reinterpreting our anti-dumping laws, quickness to buy United States airliners and French executive transports and the recent decision to buy United States, not Britain, naval power plants. The list is long and the North-South, not East-West, trend in our buying and selling is clear.
> Because business and government have been pursuing policies profitable to Canada and have by-passed Britain at a time it needed help, there will be no room for complaint if Britain negotiates EEC entry on terms that may tramp on some Canadian toes. Ottawa must now prepare a basic list of trade items of particular concern to Canada and work toward tariff compensation from EEC for losses in Britain. Beyond that, all we can do is assist the British in their bid.
>
> The truth is this: a healthy Britain, playing a full role in Europe has much to offer the world and all traders. It profits no one if Britain's EEC bid fails a second time.

I must say that I agree whole-heartedly with this position.

Turning now to my third heading, the Canadian Delegation, I would also like to make a few remarks concerning the performance of the Canadian delegation at Paris. Everyone was most diligent in both attendance and in performance and I believe that Mr. Perry Ryan, the leader of the delegation, is to be sincerely congratulated on this performance. However, there is a great deal of room for improvement as to the method of preparation and briefing. This is true not because of a lack of effort on the part of the Department of External Affairs but because of a lack of appreciation of what a delegate really needs, particularly when he is seated at the conference table and is required to perform and to take a position on matters of some importance.

I was a last-minute replacement for Senator David Croll and therefore was unable to attend any of the briefing sessions in Canada prior to departure, but I did take one full day with the Department of External Affairs in an effort to educate myself as to the matters on the agenda. The Department were most helpful and I am grateful to them for their assistance. However, it is my opinion that each of the delegates was supplied with far too much reading material and background data, which was interesting but not very useful. It was simply impossible to assimilate it all. What is needed, in my opinion, is a short precis or an appreciation of Canada's position on each of the subjects to come under discussion.

It is true that this is a conference of parliamentarians and not of countries and, therefore, the official line is not necessarily the individual line, but it seems to me very clear that the delegates must know the general Canadian position. For instance, where does Canada stand on the two-pillar approach? It would have been of benefit to me to have had an appreciation by an expert of what exactly this resounding phrase means to Canada. Then, if I felt so inclined, I could either agree or disagree in my capacity as a parliamentarian.

After all, there are only five standing committees—political, military, economic, scientific and educational—and it seems to me that as the agenda is more or less known prior to a conference, it would be a simple matter to prepare a situation appraisal for the benefit of those participating. Canada is looked to by other nations for leadership, for knowledge and for the necessary courage to speak up in affairs of this nature. If it is to properly discharge this role, its delegates must be properly armed. I understand that this year the briefings were more extensive and more intensive than ever before but, believe me, when you get on the ground and are required to carry the burden of representing not only yourself but your country, you cannot have had enough training and/or education.

I am not aware of the budget required to send this delegation, but it seems to me that two members per committee, plus three or four leaders would be sufficient for future meetings. I would rather see budget dollars spent in back-up staff who could assist the delegates on the ground. Canada goes to considerable expense to discharge its obligations to send a worthwhile delegation and I can see no reason why it should not adequately support its delegates with expert opinion and expert help both in Canada and at the conference.

In conclusion, you will note that I have generally tried to stay within my own field, namely, the economic side of the events that took place, but I would be remiss if I did not tell you of the great impression that I received of our troops overseas, both army and air force.

I spoke to as many of them as possible and believe me I conclude that the morale is high. They are proud to be Canadians; they are proud to be in the front line; and they are good at what they are doing.

In many ways our NATO forces receive little attention and no publicity. Perhaps this is as it should be, but it should be recorded that we have every reason to be proud of them and to support them in every way we can. They are doing their part in preserving the peace of the world, and if one needs a reminder about the ravages of war, I wish to tell you of standing at the war memorial at Verdun in France where in a period of ten months, 600,000 soldiers of Germany and France were killed and where they are still discovering bodies. Or if one needs to be reminded about the desirability of peace, one should stand at the Berlin Wall and see the quarter mile of no man's land guarded by barbed wire, planted with mines, patrolled by Soviet troops with machine guns at the ready, and searchlights in position. In every sense of the word, Berlin is a beleaguered city, an island in a "red sea" surrounded by a wall of shame.

Finally, as I have said before, I believe that NATO is at a crossroads. Its strength in a very large measure has enabled the recovery of Europe and I think that it is too early to move away from its basic premise. I hope that it will remain strong and a force to be reckoned with in maintaining the peace of the world.

Hon. John J. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, having had a number of years of experience with the work of NATO parliamentarians and because of the importance which I consider this Parliament should attach to the concept of NATO, I rise to participate in this debate. I do so not as a member of the Government but rather as a member of the Senate, and in the capacity of a member of the Canadian Parliament who has attended these very important meetings.

I am sure that you have all been impressed this afternoon, as I have been, with the report we have had from Senator Aird. What strikes me, perhaps more than anything else, is that as the years have passed and Canadian parliamentarians have attended meetings of the NATO Parliamentarians' Association, we have here heard reports in greater depth as to the real meaning of the problems that are faced, reports that involve more personal involvement in looking for solutions and, I think too, an increasing experience and capacity for facing up to these problems in the meetings that take place at the Porte Dauphine. This is a good thing for the Canadian Parliament. I hope it is helpful for the Canadian public, because unless there is within the Canadian public an awareness of these problems, then the parliamentarians who are concerned about them and the governments which must do something about them will be operating in somewhat of a vacuum.

I am particularly pleased to hear what Senator Aird said about his visit with Senator Brooks and Senator Lefrançois to Soest, where the brigade is stationed. I am sure he could have said the same about the air force units they visited and about their very poignant experience at Verdun.

One fact we must be particularly proud of in this country is that the brigade, which is located near Soest in Germany, is not considered to be in any sense an army of occupation. They are friends of the German people, and are so regarded because they feel they are there as part of the shield. I am sure it is a source of gratification to all Canadians to know that just a year or so ago the brigade itself was given the freedom of the City of Soest. That is a tribute to the kind of work they do, and indeed to the kind of people with whom they are living.

NATO itself not only was but remains, in my personal view, a great concept. It was established in the spring of 1949. Originally it had some 12 members; now there are 15. It was established before the problem facing the world was nuclear proliferation, because at that time the United States alone had the bomb. It was established because Russia was deploying conventional forces in massive groups just east of the Iron Curtain. The answer, to the people in western Europe—indeed, the answer, to the people in the West—was NATO. It was the shield which provided, and was intended to provide, security in anxiety. It provided, and was intended to provide, confidence for the period of reconstruction that would be political, economic and social.

Almost immediately after its establishment, the great debate began. In the event of a conflict, with the Americans only having the bomb, the great moral and political question was: Should the bomb be used in the face of what were, in fact, overwhelming conventional forces on the other side of the Iron Curtain? The conventional forces of the West did not measure up in striking capacity to the forces with which they were confronted.

That great debate did not continue for long, because in the fall of 1949 the Russians had their first atomic explosion. Since then France has tested; China has tested. In fact, what has been ushered in is not a balance of power quite so much as a balance of terror.

Some progress was made in 1963, when the treaty was culminated for the banning of tests in the atmosphere, but the problem of the banning of the bomb, the problem of international inspection and the wider problem of disarmament, still face the peoples of the world.

How is this to be accomplished? Can it be accomplished? These are problems that must be ever present in the minds of legislators in every part of the world. Are these objectives to be achieved by treaty? Are they to be achieved on the basis of a balance of terror or a balance of strength? Is it too much to expect that they might be achieved as a result of a growing sense of international morality? But if this is to develop, the question that we must ask ourselves is: What moral standard is to be set? Is it to be the standard of western Christendom? Is it to be some revolutionary standard? Is it to be some standard based upon power, upon some imperialistic approach? All these are not moral standards, but they are standards that are looked upon, and I wonder whether some of the ones we consider to be amoral, if not immoral, are the standards that might govern policy in these fields, say, as between Russia and China.

I have been reading a book called The Proud Tower by Barbara Tuchman, which in many respects, I have found completely fascinating. She has written a number of books. Among other significant but isolated items in the history of the nineteenth century, she describes an attempt made in approximately 1900, at the instance of the Czar of the Russias, for a conference on disarmament in Brussels. I would recommend this book for reading to all honourable senators, because to me it is one of the most fascinating I have seen—apart from Senator Power's book—in a long time.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It is most amazing to me to read the account of the attempts that were being made at that time by the powers of Europe, and indeed of the world, based on ideas of disarmament and warfare; and they did not yet have the airplane, but they thought of it. After reading that work, I think you will all agree that we have come a long way in our international gatherings in having so much of the information we require for the discussion of these problems. In those days they simply did not have the will or the material with which to work.

I have talked about trying to achieve these great objectives leading ultimately to disarmament, from the point of view of the standards that should be applied.

What is the standard to be applied when Russia confronts the United States, or when Russia confronts China, with ideologies so different that it seems almost impossible that there could be reconciliation between them? Inevitably you come to the question as to what should be done in a place like Viet Nam. Should the Americans back out of there? Are they to abandon those people, and indeed all of South East Asia, to Chinese Communism, which is another phrase for Chinese Imperialism? The Japanese are certainly concerned about this prospect, as are our sister dominions of Australia and New Zealand.

I was glad to hear Senator Aird quote the Secretary-General of NATO, Manlio Brosio, who spoke recently at the Washington Press Club and said, amongst other things, that he was not sanguine about the long-term goals that Russia had. He thought that the prospect of military aggression on the part of Russia had diminished, but he still believes that Russia is pursuing a diplomatic struggle to dominate both Europe and Asia.

Russia, as Senator Aird has indicated, is suspicious of a re-armed Germany. But then we have the British Foreign Secretary, George Brown, saying that the Germany of today is completely different from the Germany of the two world wars. First of all, Germany is a divided Germany. Mr. Brown is convinced that the German people today are devoted to democracy. Certainly they appeared to be when Mr. Adenauer was their Chancellor and they appeared to be when their Chancellor was Mr. Erhard, who so impressed us when he visited this country not so long ago. But, the recent elections in which the Christian Democratic Party was successful, with Mr. Keisinger becoming the Chancellor, and his forming a coalition with Mr. Brandt, whom we know, has raised questions in the minds of some people as to the direction in which Germany is heading.

For my part, I am prepared to rely upon the good faith of those people and upon their realism in the face of the balance of terror that is before us at all times. I am concerned—and I think we all should be—about the rise of the new nationalism in various parts of Europe. In this I do not exclude Germany, and I certainly do not exclude France because the French nationalism which has taken a stand against the philosophy of the common market and the philosophy of NATO, which Senator Aird has discussed so ably today, presents a challenge to a concept which I thought could only be fruitful of good. We must be concerned and Europeans must be concerned as to whether Europe will revert to a collection of relatively weak separate nationalistic states. We must be concerned with whether this is to be the permanent concept for pan-Europeanism or, on the other hand, whether in the interests of world peace there should be a strengthening of the international federation established by the Treaty of Rome, not only in the economic but in the political sphere as well.

Senator Aird raised also the question of the participation of Britain in Europe. If Britain joined the community would her participation arouse French antagonism with respect to leadership within the community? For my part I believe, and I believe it fervently, that not only would the heartland of western civilization and Europe itself be strengthened by the addition of Britain to the community but, as Senator Aird has so well said, that for all parties concerned a prosperous Britain will make for a more prosperous West. I believe that if Europe did have Britain as part of the community there would be an outward looking viewpoint from the community headquarters, particularly in economic affairs. There would be an anti-protectionist viewpoint because the British are freer traders.

Is Britain a part of Europe? Certainly the British are independent individualistic people, but we should never forget that Britain was the last rampart that was able to stand when Europe was overrun by the forces of oppression that began in 1939, and Britain belongs as much in Europe as any of the countries in Continental Europe. I think that the contribution she can make to the community, both politically and economically, is enormous.

We must all be grateful for the establishment of NATO, and this country played a large part in its establishment. I remember meeting Leon Blum, who was the head of the European Coal and Steel Community which started the European Economic Community, at a meeting of the Atlantic Congress in London. He was talking with a very distinguished French philosopher, Jean Danielieu, whom I had known. I was at the time with the President of the Canadian Bar Association, Mr. Walter Owen of Vancouver. I was young, and I looked it—more so than I do today. The Atlantic Congress was really a meeting of NATO parliamentarians, plus people who were not from the parliaments in the NATO countries. I remember being flattered that M. Blum should put his arms on my shoulders and say that if it were not for Canada we would not be here today, that Canada had had much to do with the establishment of the NATO Alliance.

Well, that may have been an overstatement of the case, because there was so much done before Canada's part became significant in respect of the establishment of the Alliance. I think that one of the greater steps of international statesmanship was the establishment of the Marshall Plan in 1947. The sum of $12.5 billion was poured into 16 different countries of Europe, to be managed not by the Americans but by an organization called the Economic Co-operation Administration, upon which Americans sat but which was mainly guided by the Europeans. That organization turned into O.E.C.D., which was one of the important elements not only for NATO and for the community but, indeed, for the economies of the west in providing the kind of information that is necessary for these establishments if they are to live and make progress.

But then NATO did come, and NATO did provide these people with not only protection but with a source of confidence which enabled them to go on and develop their political and economic institutions.

The European Free Trade Association, although it did not have as much an impact, also played its part, and can and will continue to do so.

I was glad to hear Senator Aird talk about the economic committee of the NATO Parliamentarians. My experience with that committee was under the chairmanship of Senator Javits. We all felt, as I am sure Senator Aird and Senator Brooks did, that there was really not ample opportunity to come to grips with the problems which were facing not only the Alliance but the West itself. However, it was a forum which at least enabled persons such as Senator Aird and Senator Brooks, and so many senators and others who have been at these conferences, to become acquinted with the problems and to return to their parliaments and to their people in the hope of acquainting them with these problems, so that they could see them in a proper perspective.

Honourable senators, my remarks this afternoon have been somewhat rambling. However, from the NATO experience I have had, and I am sure every Canadian senator and member of parliament has had, there does emerge an ideal for Europe, because it is the birthplace of the civilization we call the West. The civilization of the West is not the only or the oldest civilization of the world. It has not always been proved to be the most benevolent civilization of the world, but if it uses its resources, human and otherwise, properly, it can become one of the greatest forces in being for peace and security.

I think also that the concept of the Atlantic community, to which Senator Aird referred, with all that it implies, involving the difficulties of solving the problems of GATT and the Kennedy Round, with all the economic and political struggles that are entailed in establishing a strong Atlantic community, not inward looking but outward looking, particularly to the developing and underdeveloped countries of the world, is an ideal in which all parliamentarians must at all times be interested. These are objectives that we must always keep before our minds, and they should actuate our approach not only to international problems but to our domestic problems as well.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, we have listened this afternoon to two eloquent and instructive addresses on NATO. I agree wholeheartedly with all that has been said by the honourable senators who have spoken.

As Senator Aird mentioned, I had the honour of being on the military committee of NATO. That committee met this year in an atmosphere of confusion, uncertainty, and sometimes of uncontrolled resentment. The military situation is extremely uncertain at the present time. Our Minister of National Defence has been meeting in France with the other 14 members of the Alliance, and will no doubt make a report shortly.

Honourable senators, it is not my intention to speak on this subject this afternoon, but I would like to speak at a later date. Therefore, I now move the adjournment of this debate.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Brooks debate adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, as we are all aware, a deadline is set for a strike in the air controllers' division at all airports throughout the country, on Tuesday next at 8 o'clock in the morning.

The information I have been receiving from time to time today leads me to believe that there is a possibility of a settlement. I cannot confirm that a settlement has been reached. All I can report to you at the moment is that the talks are continuing. If it becomes necessary to have legislation, it will have to be passed by Parliament this weekend. That may involve sittings in the House of Commons tonight and tomorrow, and it could also involve our sitting tomorrow. It is desirable, of course, that this matter be drawn to a conclusion quickly and satisfactorily, but the difficulties are not inconsiderable.

In the circumstances, I would now suggest, and I hope there is unanimous consent to the proposal, that the Senate recess, to reassemble at the call of the bell at approximately 5.45 p.m. The normal hour for rising in the House of Commons on Friday is 6 o'clock, and it may be that before that time there will be word of settlement or word as to whether or not legislation will be necessary.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

Upon resuming at 5.45 p.m.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I desire to make a short announcement to the effect that the Government has reached an agreement on terms which have been separating them from the three organizations representing the air traffic controllers of Canada in all airports.

The representatives of the air traffic controllers have agreed to recommend these terms of settlement to their membership and, in the meantime, to withdraw the strike date, which was set for December 20, pending confirmation of the terms of settlement.

For practical purposes, as it affects the Senate, it is not necessary for legislation to be brought down or for the Senate to assemble tomorrow. If there are no questions about the matter—and I doubt that I would be able to answer them all—we will adjourn now.

The Senate adjourned until Monday, December 19, at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Monday, December 19, 1966

The Senate met at 3 p.m., Hon. Maurice Bourget, P.C., Acting Speaker, in the Chair.

Prayers.

SUPPLEMENTARY BUDGET SPEECH

ACCOMMODATION FOR SENATORS IN IN COMMONS GALLERY

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: As honourable senators are aware, the Minister of Finance will deliver a Supplementary Budget Speech in the other place this evening, at 8 o'clock.

May I be permitted to mention to honourable senators that none but senators will be admitted to the Senate Gallery of the House of Commons on that occasion. This step is being taken for the purpose of providing accommodation in the gallery for as many senators as possible. In this manner, senators will not be excluded from the gallery on account of many of the places being occupied by relatives and friends of senators.

Such instructions were first issued in 1931 by the then Speaker of the Senate, the Honourable P. E. Blondin, and this practice has been followed ever since by succeeding Speakers.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

JOINT COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER REMOVAL OF MR. JUSTICE LANDREVILLE— COMMONS MEMBERS

The Hon. the Acting Speaker informed the Senate that a message has been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the following members of the House of Commons will serve on the part of that House on the Special Joint Committee to inquire into and report on the expediency of presenting an address to His Excellency praying for the removal of Mr. Justice Leo Landreville from the Supreme Court of Ontario: Messrs. Bell (Carleton), Brewin, Cashin, Choquette, Coates, Fulton, Laflamme, Patterson, Richard, Stafford, Tolmie and Woolliams.

DOCUMENT TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Report of Temporary Loans made out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund to The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority between August 18 and November 29, 1966, pursuant to section 26(4) of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority Act, chapter 242, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

HON. C. G. POWER, P.C.

FELICITATIONS ON FORTY-NINTH ANNIVERSARY IN PARLIAMENT

Hon. John J. Connolly. Honourable senators, I should like to draw the attention of the Senate to the fact that on Saturday last the Honourable C. G. Power, the senator from Gulf, one of the very distinguished and popular members of this chamber, celebrated the forty-ninth anniversary of his entry into Parliament.

It is not my intention on this occasion to make a speech, nor to give his book another boost, although I understand that the Christmas sales have surpassed the expectations of the publishers and, indeed, of the author. But, I do think it is appropriate to congratulate him upon 49 continuous years in the service of the public of this country. I would suggest to him that if he will bear with us—and I use those words in just that way—the Senate for centennial year will have a built-in centennial project, because he will then have been in Parliament for half of the first century of this country's existence.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, may I join with the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) in congratulating my colleague of many years, Senator Power, in having become a 49'er. We shall certainly be pleased next year when he becomes a 50'er.

My first acquaintance with Chubby Power was when I came to the House of Commons in 1936. I recall that at our first opposition caucus the Right Honourable R. B. Bennett, who later became Lord Bennett, gave an appraisal of Mr. King's Cabinet, which, may I say, was not too complimentary of the cabinet. Indeed, I just wondered how the country was going to be able to carry on. However, I do remember that when he came to Senator Power's name, Mr. Bennett said, "He has quite often given me a pretty tough time, but I will say this for him, he has more brains than any other man in King's cabinet." I found out later there was considerable truth in this statement, having been with Senator Power for a number of years in the Commons.

Honourable senators, I offer Senator Power my congratulations.

Hon. C. G. Power: Honourable senators, 49 years' experience in the House of Commons and the Senate has taught me to say very little. Thank you.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: The record speaks for itself.

POSTAL SERVICES INTERRUPTION RELIEF BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Azellus Denis moved the second reading of Bill S-55, to provide relief in certain cases against loss or hardship suffered as a result of interruptions of normal postal services.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, the bill which I have the honour to introduce for consideration and second reading is so simple that I myself had no difficulty understanding it. It would almost be an insult to your intelligence to try to add a few words of explanation.

That reminds me of a story a friend told me recently. It seems that when he was in college the teacher said to him one day: "Mr. Fournier, do you understand this problem?" "Yes, professor," he replied. "Very well then, let us take up something everyone understands," said the professor. Likewise, I say we should take up other business because Denis understands.

Honourable senators, the purpose of this bill is to provide relief against hardship due to interruption of postal services. As you undoubtedly know, certain laws provide periods or limits of time for the accomplishment of an act or the exercise of a right, otherwise the act or the right may be forfeited or declared null and void.

This is what happened when postal services were interrupted in 1965, more particularly with respect to the Patent Act, where some two dozen known applications for the production of papers, payment of taxes, etc., were delivered too late, which resulted in damages and losses for those who had made use of the postal service.

At the present time, neither the minister nor the commissioner of patents has discretionary powers to cope with this situation. Moreover, the only relief available at the present time is by means of a private bill, and this occurred a few times in the past, at the request of persons whose rights had been interfered with.

[Text]

Honourable senators, may I refer now to a note I have here dealing with foreign countries which are surely interested in this bill.

Because of the Paris Convention for the Protection of Industrial Property, of which Canada is a member, along with 73 other countries, this bill has some international implications. Most of the patent agents in Canada, besides acting for Canadian inventors, represent foreign associates who are dispersed all over the world. It might be of interest to realize here that approximately 95 per cent of the patents granted in Canada are granted to foreign applicants.

The proposed bill, therefore, covers not only correspondence between the Canadian agents and the patent office but also correspondence between the patent agents and their foreign associates who, I may say, unlike some of our Canadian patent agents, had no forewarning of the impending strike of 1965. Without the benefit of this legislation, these foreign inventors would be left powerless in so far as the exercise of their patent rights in Canada is concerned.

[Translation]

After consultations with the Patent Office officials, the Registrar general, who is responsible for the administration of the Patent Act, and the officials of the Department of Justice, it was recommened that this bill, providing relief in certain cases against loss or hardship suffered as a result of interruptions of normal postal services, firstly be applicable to the interruption which occurred between July and August 1965—this act is therefore retroactive to that date—secondly, to any subsequent interruption of more than 48 hours duration; it was recommended, thirdly, that it apply not only to the Patent Act, but to any law of Canada; in the fourth place, it enables any person who has been aggrieved by an interruption, to apply to a judge of the Exchequer Court of Canada for relief.

Honourable senators, that is the gist of clause 2 of this bill.

Clauses 3 and 4 provide for additional functions and powers of a judge of the Exchequer Court. For instance, section 3 authorizes, (a) the establishment of the loss suffered by the applicant; (b) the establishment of the reasonable steps taken by the applicant to comply with the time requirement or the period of limitation; (c) the establishment of the fact that the applicant submitted his application without undue delay; (d) the power to make an order waiving the time requirement in relation to the applicant; (e) the power to make such further order as is necessary to enable the applicant to do any thing or exercise any right, within the time limit provided under any law of Canada.

Finally, section 4 authorizes the judge of the Exchequer Court to require that public notice of the hearing of the application be given, so that any interested party may be heard.

Honourable senators, I do not think I can add anything to the few remarks I have just made—and I hope they will not tend to complicate the consideration of a bill which is quite simple, as I said. I do not know whether the honourable senators will find it necessary to refer the bill to a committee, but they can rest assured that I will comply with their wishes.

As the Yuletide season is at hand, I wish to take this opportunity to express to all, to you, Your Honour, to the honourable senators, to the officials and to other members of the staff, my best wishes for a healthy and a happy New Year and, as we say at home, Paradise at the end of your days.

[Text]

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, I wish first to congratulate our honourable former Postmaster General of Canada for his explanation of this bill. As he pointed out, it is "an act to provide relief in certain cases against loss or hardship suffered as a result of interruptions of normal postal services." He mentioned only one particular type of case, such as would come under the Patent Act.

Hon. Mr. Denis: That was just one example, but it is a common occurrence under the Patent Act.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: There must be many other cases that would come under the Patent Act. As a matter of fact, just before coming into the house, I received a copy of the honourable member's speech, and I noted that it emphasized that this bill was being introduced to overcome difficulties relative to the Patent Act. His explanation of the legal aspects was both clear and understandable but it does seem to me that there must be numerous cases other than those under the Patent Act which would come under this legislation. For instance, I think of contracts which are confirmed by mail, and the interruption of normal postal service could result in considerable loss.

Honourable senators will note that the bill contains the words "loss or hardship," and aside from financial losses one can readily imagine many other hardships arising from the fact that people fail to receive their mail. I have no doubt that when this bill is passed there will be many applications for relief under its terms.

As can be seen in the bill, it is introduced as a result of the postal strike in 1965—a year and a half ago. Perhaps the honourable sponsor (Hon. Mr. Denis) can explain why we have waited so long for a bill of this kind, particularly in the present situation where persons seeking relief are advised to do so almost immediately if they expect to get any results.

However, honourable senators, in my view strikes that give rise to the necessity for this kind of legislation should not happen. There must be some unfortunate lack of responsibility somewhere when civil servants, such as those in the Post Office Department, can strike and cause serious trouble and hardship to the public of Canada, as is pointed out in the bill. I am not now referring only to civil service bodies, but also to the employees of other branches of the Public Service, such as crown corporations, the railways and others. I think the time has come when adequate machinery should be set up to prevent such strikes, and also to ensure that civil servants get the fair wages and fair treatment due to them. Surely there is some way this can be done.

It has been said this is not a very important bill. Possibly it is not, but I can see where the results of these strikes can have very serious consequences. I have here some press clippings which deal with the postal strike of 1965 and subsequent strikes. Parliament was not sitting in July and August of that year, hence there was not as much publicity as there might have been had it been sitting. On August 3, 1965, the Montreal Gazette had this to say:

> A situation that could have been settled with much public sympathy has been forced into a position of facing settlement only amidst public indignation. The injury done to relations between the public and those who serve it will be long in coming back to that mutual respect that need never have been lost.

That is quite a severe criticism.

The Sun-Times of Owen Sound, of Wednesday, July 28, 1965, had as its heading in the editorial column: "Must Resolve Postal Department Trouble." It then went on with a long dissertation against a strike of this nature.

The Hamilton Spectator had the following heading: "Hamilton Mayor Studies Callup for Emergency Mail Deliveries."

The Globe and Mail of August 27, 1966, had this to say about the threatened strike:

> A postal strike is a great calamity; it invades the life of every citizen, brings the economy virtually to a standstill and robs the public of millions. It cannot be lightly undertaken.

The Sherbrooke Daily Record of July 27, 1965, had an editorial dealing with this matter headed, "Government inept in mail strike."

In its editorial of November 8, 1966, the Edmonton Journal castigated the Government for allowing the strike to continue. Among other things, it said:

> But it must be remembered that, thanks largely to the intervention of the Pearson government in wage disputes, recent pay increases, directly or indirectly concerned with public funds, have been greatly in excess of Mr. Sharp's guideline.

I am sure you all know what Mr. Sharp's guidelines were. The editorial continued:

> For example, St. Lawrence seaway workers (seasonal) were given 36 per cent; Expo 67 and other Montreal construction workers, 35 per cent; railway workers, 18 per cent over two years (interim); armed services, 14 per cent over two years; RCMP, 14 per cent over two years.
> Perhaps a reasonable solution would be to treat the postal workers as well as the armed services and RCMP and give them an increase of 14 per cent spread over two years.

As you will have noted in the press today, the Canadian National Railway employees have been given a 28 per cent wage increase. The public is beginning to wonder to what extent these increases should go in settling strikes. Of course, a strike can be settled if the employees are given all that they demand. However, as I said a moment ago, I believe there must be some other way of settling strikes, whereby through arbitration or other means the contending parties can get together and agree upon a solution without the employees going out on strike and interrupting the comfort, rights and necessary requirements of the people.

Hon. A. K. Hugessen: Honourable senators, I should like to see this bill go to committee. It does establish a rather important principle, and I think we should be quite certain what we are doing before we pass it

I have had a chance to look at the bill only during the last few minutes. In some ways it is a good deal broader, and in other ways it is a good deal narrower than I had anticipated it would be. It allows relief to a person who has suffered damage as a result of interference with normal postal services, only in cases where there is some limitation of time prescribed in any law of Canada. It does not in any way interfere with any conditions contained in a private contract between individuals, in which you must give 14 days' or 28 days' notice, or anything of that kind. So, to that extent, it is really very limited.

As I understood from the speech of the mover, there is something in the Patent Act which requires certain specific delays, and it is primarily for this purpose that the present relief bill is introduced. Am I correct in that?

Hon. Mr. Denis: I am afraid I did not understand you. Would you please repeat your question?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: It is primarily in connection with the Patent Act requirements as to certain delays being necessary that this bill of relief is being introduced?

Hon. Mr. Denis: The main reason for the introduction of the bill is because such instances have arisen in connection with the Patent Act. The Patent Office has reported a couple of dozen such cases, and others might arise.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: On the other hand, the bill does go a good deal further than dealing only with the postal strike of 1965, because there is reference in section 2 not only specifically to the postal strike of 1965 but to any subsequent interruption of normal postal services in Canada of more than 48 hours' duration. That invites speculation as to all sorts of possible interruptions of normal postal services.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: It even mentions embarrassment, I think.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Yes. For instance, some town might be surrounded by floods for two days. Would this bill then apply?

Hon. Mr. Denis: It could be a storm.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Yes, but I was thinking of occasions that my friends from British Columbia know about, when the Fraser River overflows its banks and Vancouver is isolated from the rest of the country. Would this bill be applicable in a case of that kind?

Hon. Mr. Denis: Yes, of course, if the interruption lasts more than 48 hours.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Then my next question is: Why 48 hours?

Hon. Mr. Denis: There may be dozens and dozens of cases in which the interruption lasts for just one day, and will not affect the time taken to have mail delivered from one point to another. If the interruption lasts for only 12 hours, then there is some chance that the mail will reach its destination without any real delay.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I am not criticizing the bill. I am addressing these observations to the point that this bill should go before a committee so that we may know exactly what is involved.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I agree.

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson: Honourable senators, I wish to make only a few remarks in connection with this bill. I do not want to criticize it, or to praise it. I shall follow the injunction urged by Senator Power a few moments ago, that it is always the better part of wisdom for members of legislative bodies to talk very little. I will modify that somewhat and say that I shall not talk too much.

This is, however, a very important bill, and it does seem to me to be a new type of legislation of which we do not have many other examples. For that reason it would be very beneficial, I believe, to have it referred to a committee, as was suggested by Senator Hugessen, presuming that we have sufficient time to do so before the Christmas recess.

In respect to referring the bill to committee I have in mind exactly the same reasons put forward by Senator Hugessen, one of which is in connection with the limitation of 48 hours as provided in clause 2 of the bill. Why should it be 48 hours rather than 24 hours, or some other length of time? We should have an explanation from the officials of the Department of Justice in respect to that.

There are various other phrases in this bill, some of which are of a most general nature, and these might be the subject of revision if the minds of the committee members are applied to them.

There has also been reference to the fact that this bill applies only to legislation of Canada. Quite obviously that is so, because there is no authority in the Parliament of Canada to interfere with provincial statutes. Nevertheless, this bill points up the fact that there are many provincial acts which provide for limitations on periods of time. There are, for instance, the motor vehicle acts of the various provinces under which a plaintiff must sue before the expiration of one year or lose all his rights to sue. One can understand that there might be situations where legal offices in faraway places write to a legal office in, say, Vancouver and instruct that action be taken two or three days before the expiration of the time limit. In a situation such as that of the postal strike of 1965, which was of 15 or 16 days' duration, one can well see that a great number of situations might arise in which the rights of individuals could be affected most prejudicially.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: If I may interrupt my honourable friend, I wonder whether we can deal with the laws of provinces, or the laws of other countries. It seems to me that by this bill we are giving power to a judge of the Exchequer Court to vary such laws. I do not think we can do that, can we?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I quite agree with what Senator Hugessen has said, and I think it would be of value if a committee could question officials of the Department of Justice as to their opinion on the constitutional limits of this measure.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: However, I want to say again that this bill points up the tremendous harm and damage that can be done to this country and its people if there ever occurred another postal strike such as that of 1965. It points up also the importance of the debate we now have on the Order Paper, namely, Order No. 4, the debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Cameron calling the attention of the Senate to the disruptive and costly effects of strikes in services affecting the public welfare. I can think of no department of government which is more important to the public welfare than the Post Office Department. Consequently, I am in hearty agreement with the purposes of this bill.

At the same time I want to urge upon all honourable senators the necessity, as has been indicated by my leader (Hon. Mr. Brooks), of finding some way in the near future of dealing more comprehensively with these problems that arise, not only in the public service but in services where much more than local interests are at stake. I am referring in this regard to the situations that would arise if the workers in power plants, for instance, in any of the great cities of Canada were allowed to go on strike. The result of anything like that happening would be disastrous.

I do not intend to continue this discussion any longer, but I do wish to point out the importance of the bill, and consequently the importance of the debate in which we are presently engaged.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, before the honourable sponsor of this bill (Hon. Mr. Denis) closes the debate I should like to say a word or two. First, I want to thank Senator Denis very much indeed for taking on the responsibility of sponsoring this measure. He has done it most admirably.

Secondly, I want to thank all honourable senators who have participated in the debate. This is the kind of bill which I am always glad to see come to the Senate, and for the reasons given by the speakers this afternoon.

This is a nonpolitical and noncontentious bill, but it is of great importance, and one with which the Senate is particularly well qualified to examine the draftsmanship and consider its purposes. This bill is before this house, quite frankly, because of some misgiving on my part about its contents. The Legislation Committee of the cabinet does not always have an opportunity of ferreting out defects that a body constituted like the Senate and its committees has. I am particularly pleased that this kind of discussion has taken place.

I would welcome the reference of this bill to a committee for detailed discussion and for questioning of the officials, particularly of the Department of Justice, as Senator Thorvaldson suggested, in order to make sure we are doing the right thing. We must, of course, stay within our own jurisdiction. Generally speaking, I think the purpose behind the bill is a proper and desirable one.

Coming now to the question of strikes—and I know I may be out of order in speaking about them—I think what Senator Brooks has said is worthy of more than passing attention.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: May I point out to the honourable leader that it is on account of the strike that this bill is being introduced. I do not think he is out of order, nor that I was out of order in my remarks.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I do not think you were out of order, and perhaps I was not right in saying that I may be out of order; however, we will not argue the point as to whether either of us has the right to speak.

Strikes in industries which can be deemed to be essential have crippling effects upon the economy of this country, and the question, first of all, of governments dealing with these issues presents major problems, and when Parliament itself has to deal with some of the more protracted strikes, the problems are that much greater.

I would hope that in some way or another the people in the trade union movement, as well as those on the employers' side, in the private sector of the economy, could develop some civilized and reasonable way of dealing with strikes which paralyse the economy.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): The Industrial Disputes and Investigation Act has been on our statute books for perhaps 35 or 40 years, and probably without amendment. Some countries in the world have made some progress in the way of settling disputes without using the strike weapon. The strike weapon was used here because these people had a union, and they simply pulled their employees off the job.

It is easy, as the Leader of the Opposition has already said, for newspapers to state that the Government should have taken action sooner. The Government was alerted early enough, and was worried and gave serious consideration to it day after day. I recall how many days of the summer holidays were lost as a result of this strike in 1965, not only for me but for many others in the Government. Such problems are not easy to handle, for one has to deal with people who have rights given to them under the Industrial Disputes and Investigation Act. One has to go through the processes, and it is not always easy to come up with the right answers.

The Government has been criticised for making strike settlements in certain cases at levels that are too high. It is never commended for making settlements which in certain cases fall below the level sometimes described as the "Pearson formula". The fact that such situations arise in this country points up the difficulties that confront any government, in an economy where there is virtually full employment and in which every wage increase puts that much more pressure on the inflationary process.

I do not minimize the criticism that has been made by certain newspapers, but I make no apology for the attention, time and effort that has been given by the members of the Government in each of these strike instances, to do everything within their capacity to try to resolve the situation in a reasonable way. There is only so much time in the course of the day at one's disposal to work at these problems. I have seen some of my colleagues on the west coast—I do not say this to excite pity—work all day with a group of people, and fly all night in order to get back to Ottawa, then sit down again and work all that day and sometimes all of the following night, to try to reach a solution on a strike. That has happened within the last month.

Other ministers, whether of this or any other Government, are going to be faced with this kind of problem, unless we can reach a solution somehow along the lines of that which Senator Brooks would like to see reached.

In justification for what has been said about many of these strike situations, I think I am right in saying what I have said today. However, I am glad this particular bill will be referred to a committee. We shall not be investigating a strike situation.

Before leaving that aspect of the matter, I hope that the inquiry of the honourable Senator Cameron, calling the attention of the Senate to the disruptive and costly effects of strikes in services affecting the public welfare, and which Senator Farris adjourned, will be the subject matter for consideration and of speeches by many senators. Senator Farris has not been able to come here lately, but when the Senate resumes again and there is an opportunity, I hope that honourable senators will rise in their places and discuss this most important issue.

L'honorable M. Denis: Honorables sénateurs,—

[Text]

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: May I say that if the honourable Senator Denis speaks now, it will have the effect of closing the debate.

[Translation]

Hon. Mr. Denis: Honourable senators, I have only one word to add to the important and constructive remarks made by the honourable senators.

I also thank them for their kind words but, as I said in my opening remarks, I do not deserve much credit: the bill is very simple. May I repeat the words of the poet:

I really don't deserve
The apple-green paper
You wish to offer me;
'Tis no doing of mine
That I should feel so well.

I merely want to answer the question put to me by the honourable Leader of the Opposition, namely, why wait so long to introduce that bill? I would point out to him that the complaints to the patent office did not reach it simultaneously, when postal services were interrupted. They reached the office over a period of time. I would add that similar complaints may well be made later on, because some people, being aware that no such statute enabled them to have recourse simply waited, either to introduce a private bill, or for one to be introduced similar to the one we are now dealing with.

With regard to the matter mentioned by Senator Thorvaldson, concerning the application of this act insofar as provincial legislation is concerned, I feel that we do not have the jurisdiction required to amend that legislation. It should suffice for the provinces themselves to legislate on the matter.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, before the bill is referred to a committee, I wish to say that I will make arrangements for the committee to be convened tomorrow morning, subject to the availability of facilities. In any event, notices will be delivered to honourable senators' mail boxes.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Denis, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): As honourable senators are aware, we are now waiting for the pension legislation which has been before the other house. There are but two or three clauses to be considered in committee, and the bill will be available for third reading. A supplementary budget will be presented in the House of Commons this evening at 8 o'clock. I was hopeful the bill I mentioned might have been ready this afternoon, but my hopes were not realized. If any honourable senators have any influence with friends in the other place, perhaps they would use that influence to get the bill to us as soon as possible. I know that many senators will be inconvenienced in making satisfactory travel arrangements for the holiday if we do not receive the bill soon.

I am anxious to accommodate all honourable senators. If we get the bill this afternoon we could consider it this evening, and if necessary tomorrow morning, and then refer it to a committee. In that way, we might dispose of it expeditiously.

Honourable senators, I propose that we now recess, to reassemble at the call of the bell not later than ten minutes to six.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

Upon resuming at 5.45 p.m.

Hon. Jean-Paul Deschatelets: Honourable senators, after consultation with Senator Brooks, the Government Leader has asked me to announce that the Senate will adjourn until tomorrow afternoon at 3 o'clock. We are informed that the other place will be sitting until 8 o'clock tonight to consider the Old Age Security Act. If the bill is ready for presentation in the Senate tomorrow afternoon, it is hoped that we can dispose of it some time during the day, so that the committee will be able to study it on Wednesday morning. The bill might come back for third reading at an early hour on Wednesday.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

POSTAL SERVICES INTERRUPTION RELIEF BILL

AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. A. K. Hugessen, for Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the following report of the committee on Bill S-55, to provide relief in certain cases against loss or hardship suffered as a result of interruptions of normal postal services:

Your committee recommends that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 300 copies in French of its proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I move, with leave of the Senate, that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Hugessen, for Hon. Mr. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported that the committee had considered Bill S-55, to provide relief in certain cases against loss or hardship suffered as a result of interruptions of normal postal services, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Denis: With leave of the Senate, I move that the bill be read the third time now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

CONSUMER CREDIT (COST OF LIVING)

SECOND REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. David A. Croll, Joint Chairman of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Consumer Credit and Cost of Living presented the second report of the committee, as follows:

Your committee recommends that it be authorized to adjourn from place to place.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Croll: With leave of the Senate, I move that the report be adopted now.

Honourable senators, it is the intention of the committee to hold some further hearings on food prices and then turn its attention to housing and clothing costs. It is planned that by the end of February a subcommittee will travel in order to obtain some regional viewpoints. It is not possible to ask all interested persons, such as small merchants and people in credit unions and co-operatives, to come to Ottawa to be heard. It was thought that a subcommittee would be able to handle that aspect much better by doing an on-the-spot job.

This same motion was put to the House of Commons earlier today. The committee has asked for this, and I commend it to the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: I understood from the press that you had completed your hearings.

Hon. Mr. Croll: No. We have an interim report, which I will be presenting in a moment or two.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: How many members will be on the subcommittee?

Hon. Mr. Croll: We have not made up our minds on it, but we think that five or six would be the number, so as to represent all the parties. That was the tone of the discussion, but as yet it is quite indefinite.

Report adopted.

THIRD REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE TABLED

Hon. Mr. Croll tabled the third report of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Consumer Credit and Cost of Living.

He said: Honourable senators, may I ask the indulgence of the Senate. This is an interim report which the committee promised to deliver before Christmas. It is not long, as reports go. It occupies seventeen foolscap pages. You can read it in twelve minutes, but I hope you will take somewhat longer to digest it. It is an interesting story and there are 14 recommendations. If I may, I will take a few minutes to outline them to you so that you may have the highlights of the report.

The recommendations are as follows:

That a joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons be established for the life of a parliament to review consumer affairs and the state of the Canadian economy.

That a department of consumer affairs, headed by a minister, be established.

That immediate steps be taken to promote standardization and simplification of grades, nomenclature and packaging for commonly purchased consumer items.

That non-price competition by retail food outlets should not be allowed to become sufficiently important to outweigh price competition.

That "cents-off" labels, in view of their tendency to cause confusion and to distort price relationships, should be prohibited.

That the minister to be responsible for consumer affairs undertake a review of the effectiveness of the investigation and prosecution procedures under existing statutes relating to misleading advertising.

That more care should be used in re-marking the prices of goods in the inventories of retail food stores.

That additional staff resources be provided to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics to improve the collection of urgently needed statistical information on price movements.

That more information concerning consumer prices be made available to the public in as simplified a form as possible.

That a thorough review be made of the governmental system of collecting, analysing and issuing other types of economic statistics in addition to price statistics.

That increasing attention be devoted to consumer education both through the educational system and by the wider distribution of information useful to consumers through Government channels.

That the distinction between disclosure requirements by private companies of significance to the public and public companies be eliminated.

That the disclosure requirements for both public and such private companies be enlarged to assure full and complete disclosure of corporate activities to give to the public sufficient information for meaningful continuous analysis and comparison.

That the Joint Committee on Consumer Credit and Cost of Living continue with its investigation of concentration in the food industry.

You will find some elaboration under each one of these headings. I merely indicate the form which the report took, so as to give you some idea of its contents. Again I suggest to honourable senators that the report is easy to read.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, before the next order is called, and without making a speech upon the matter, I think the Senate, and indeed Parliament and the country, are indebted to the joint chairmen and to all the members of this committee for the arduous task they have undertaken and carried out since this important order of reference was made for their consideration last summer. This work has kept many members of both houses in Ottawa at times when others of us have been enjoying time off. That they have done a painstaking and a thorough going job so far, has been indicated by the kind of attention that has been given to their work by the press and the other news media across the country.

We have nothing but commendation to offer the members of the committee, through its distinguished, able and energetic chairman from this house, for the work they have done. I am sure we will read their report with much interest, and that it will be the subject matter not only of concern but of debate in due time in this house.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson: Honourable senators, as a humble member of the committee, I would like to support the remarks made by the Leader of the Government, particularly in regard to the capable, efficient and effective work done by the joint chairmen, and especially by Senator Croll.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: May I also add that apart from any legislation that might in due course result from the committee's work, it seems to me that the publicity given to the work and proceedings of the committee have already been of inestimable value. I believe it has had the effect of at least bringing home to every person in this country the danger of the inflationary conditions that are being experienced throughout the world as well as in Canada. This type of education has brought home, as I say, the danger of inflation to the individual, and particularly to the women of this country who are the buyers of most of the goods purchased in our stores—certainly groceries, clothing and furniture.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): And Christmas presents!

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Yes, and Christmas presents. This education will be of great value in our fight against inflation.

Report tabled.

MOTION TO PRINT AS APPENDIX TO DEBATES OF THE SENATE AND MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Mr. Croll moved, with leave of the Senate, that the third report of the Joint Committee be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this house.

Motion agreed to.

(For text of report see Appendix, pp. 1307-13.)

UNIVERSITY FINANCES

The Senate resumed from Tuesday, November 15, the adjourned debate on the inquiry of the Honourable Senator MacKenzie calling the attention of the Senate to the question of university finances.

Hon. T. D'Arcy Leonard: Honourable senators, I am rather in the position of a stopgap, in that while waiting for more important matters to reach the Senate, the opportunity is afforded me to continue the debate in connection with the inquiry launched by Senator MacKenzie.

At the outset I should like to tender my thanks to Senator MacKenzie for having initiated this debate, and also to compliment him on his presentation. He has had a long experience in the university world as well as in the world of public affairs, and this has qualified him as one of the outstanding authorities on university matters in Canada. We are very fortunate, not only because of his knowledge of this subject but his knowledge of other matters as well, in having him as a member of the Senate.

My own qualifications to deal with this subject are quite modest, the chief being the fact that I have had for a long time a keen and abiding interest in the subject of university education, and in discussing this subject today I shall be dealing only with its practical aspects. In my view there are other functions of universities that are more important than this, namely, the search for truth and the imparting of cultural, aesthetic and intellectual qualities and standards to the individual and to the country. However, no matter how important, these are not within the realm of my discussion today. I shall confine myself to the purely practical side of university education—the university and its relationship to the economic life of our country.

As I look back over the years to my own days as a student at the University of Toronto, now over 50 years ago, I recall the time when the academic world was a world apart from that of business and government. College Street in Toronto was a boundary line dividing gown from town, and academic life went on in a cloistered, sequestered retreat. Student fees were very small. I think my own fees were less than $50 a year. The contribution to the finances of the university from the province was meagre. There was no contribution whatsoever from the federal Government, and practically none from business generally. Yet, the academic life of the university went on, largely due to dedicated professors who worked for very small stipends. Nevertheless, there were many great men in the universities in those days.

Great changes have taken place over the past 50 years, and particularly since the Second World War, even more particularly in the last five or six years, and I should like to make reference to some of those changes or some of the aspects of those changes that have occurred during the last five years. First of all, I should like to refer to the report of the Special Committee of the Senate on Manpower and Employment, dated June 14, 1961. This is one of the basic documents dealing with this subject. Not only has it been quoted often, but I think it has led to a number of measures and changes that have taken place in respect to the problems of manpower and employment.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Leonard: At page 8 that report says:

> Nothing has impressed the committee more than the very heavy incidence of unemployment among young people, the unskilled, and the inadequately educated.

And it goes on to say:

> This situation must be viewed with a sense of urgency. Without any question we must devote a much larger proportion of our resources to education and training of all kinds—academic, professional, vocational, and technical. To a much greater degree than in the past our national investment must include investment in people—and we must begin now.

The same note has been struck by the Economic Council of Canada in its annual reviews. At page 94 of its Second Annual Review, the Economic Council said:

> To advance educational levels through the formal education system, attention currently needs to be focused on five particular areas.

The third of these areas is:

> The tremendous expansion required especially at the university and post-secondary technical school level in terms of higher enrolment ratios and retention rates for those of post-secondary school age, in the circumstances of an unprecedented upsurge in the numbers of young people who will be moving out of the 15-19 (mainly high school) age group to the 20-24 (post-secondary) age group over the coming decade.

The same report, at page 92, estimates that the average real income per person in the male labour force was roughly one-quarter higher in 1961 than it would have been if the average educational attainment had remained at the 1911 level. In other words, the increase in education alone contributed to a 25 per cent increase in the productivity per male in the labour force over that period of time.

At this point I should like to quote from an editorial headed "Land of the the Second Rate" in the Financial Post of November 26, 1966. This editorial makes very interesting comparisons between Canada and the United States in regard to figures pertaining to education. For example, in the age group of 20 to 24 years 39 per cent of the population of Canada has completed high school or better. In the United States the same age group with the same qualifications comprises 73 per cent of the population. The editorial says:

> These figures suggest several hard truths. Much of the remarkable productivity and efficiency of the United States economy reflects workers better equipped than we to make most of the factors of production. Until the education gap is closed, we won't make similar advances in productivity or earn the living standards which they imply. Wage parity under these circumstances is so much nonsense.
> Canadians are plainly going to have to devote a growing share of their income to education.

So much for the importance of the subject. Let me go over the last five years and relate some personal experiences in dealing with the problems of university education. At the end of 1959 or the beginning of 1960 I was appointed to the board of a new university in Ontario—the first of a group of new universities—York University. At that time it was a university in name only. It had a charter. It had a president in the person of Dr. Murray Ross. It had a chairman of the Board of Governors in the person of the Honourable Robert Winters, and it had a Board of Governors of seven persons. It had no students, no professors, and no buildings. This was in the spring of 1960. It opened for business in the fall of 1960 in Faulkner Hall which was loaned to it by the University of Toronto, and it had 76 students. Faulkner Hall was the former residence of Sir Robert Faulkner. Here I should interject that without the assistance and aid of the University of Toronto, York University would never have made the progress it did in its beginnings.

That was in the fall of 1960. Six autumns later, in 1966, York University has over 5,500 full-time and part-time students. It has two campuses, a faculty that in numbers and quality is adequate for the number of students, an imposing set of buildings and equipment, the cost of which was in the neighbourhood of $40 million. All this has been accomplished in six years, and this is just one example of the explosion that is going on in university affairs, not only at York but in Ontario and the whole of Canada.

It fell to my lot also to see something of the whole picture in Ontario during these past five or six years. In April 1961, I was appointed to the Committee on University Affairs set up by the government of the Province of Ontario to advise and make recommendations in connection with the problem of the expanding demands upon the universities. I was a member of that committee for some four and a half years, until I resigned last year, but in that time, in addition to York, five other new universities have opened—Brock, Trent, Lakehead, Laurentian, and Guelph—making a total now of 15 universities in Ontario. In the same time, all the older universities have greatly expanded.

The student population has risen from approximately 35,871 in 1961-62 to more than 60,000 this year, and the annual operating grants by the provincial government rose from $19 million in 1961-62 to $81 million, or a four-fold increase in that same period. In addition to the operating grants, the Province of Ontario has set up a Crown corporation called the Ontario Universities Capital Aid Corporation. In the current fiscal year 1966-67 that corporation has allocated the sum of $150 million for advances to the universities on capital account for the erection of buildings.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Is that for loans?

Hon. Mr. Leonard: That is for loans. However, the loans are repaid both as to principal and interest by the operating grants of the Province of Ontario, because naturally the universities are operating at a deficit.

I pay tribute to the government of the Province of Ontario for the way in which it has dealt with that problem, by its good timing, good planning, efficient operation, and for the generosity of its treatment of the universities. Up to the present there has been a place in Ontario universities for every qualified applicant; however, when one looks to the future the outlook is still formidable, because we are moving into a stage of even greater acceleration of expansion.

The best information on what we may face is contained in what is known as the Bladen Report. The Bladen Commission was so named after Dean Bladen who was Chairman of a commission that was formed by the Association of Universities and Colleges in Canada. That report is dated June 1965.

The forecast in the report is that, compared with the student enrolment today of 234,000, it is expected that in 1970-71 it will reach 340,000, and by 1975-76 it will reach 460,000, and all indications are that these forecasts are conservative.

Total university capital and financial requirements, which for 1966-67 are of the order of $750 million for the whole of Canada, and are expected to be $1,314,000,000 by 1970-71 and $2,032,000,000 by 1975-76.

At page 57, the Bladen Report states that this increase could be frightening, were it not related to the growth in our gross national product.

To take care of these substantial sums, the Bladen Commission made certain specific recommendations. It particularly recommended greatly increased grants from the present level by the federal Government. It also recognized that there would have to be increased provincial support, and indeed increased private and corporate support would also be necessary if the universities were to meet the demands upon them. It recommended no increase in student fees, but that such fees be continued at about the present level. Since the Bladen Report was issued in June 1965, it has been the subject of study by universities, by governments and other interested bodies throughout Canada.

The latest development in this field has been the meeting of the federal and provincial governments, held in October of this year. In his statement to that conference, the Prime Minister of Canada, Mr. Pearson, stated:

> Today among Canadians in the age group 18 to 24, one in ten is a full time student at university; in ten years time the ratio is expected to be almost one in five.

He said further:

> Moreover, if there is to be, as we all desire equality of opportunity of Canadian youth, there must be increasing funds for student aid.

The proposal of the federal Government at this conference took the form of a radical departure from the method that had been used by the federal Government up until now for assistance to the provinces in the field of education. Hitherto, so far as the universities are concerned, ever since the Massey Commission Report the federal grant had been on a per capita basis, commencing with 50 cents per head of population. Immediately following the Massey Report, and advancing in stages until now, the federal grant has increased to $5 per capita. It is based on the population of the various provinces; the amount so determined is then allocated to the universities in the province on a per student basis, the distribution being made through the Canadian Association of Universities and Colleges.

In so far as vocational schools are concerned, the federal Government assistance has been by way of a cost-sharing program. These two methods have been used: the per capita method in the case of universities, and the cost-sharing basis in the case of vocational schools.

The proposal made at the conference was to do away with the per capita grant and the cost-sharing program and to substitute fiscal transfers. The federal Government would transfer to the various provincial governments four percentage points of the basic personal income tax, and one point on corporation profits; that is to say, the federal Government would reduce its individual income tax by four per cent of the basic tax and its corporate tax by one per cent of corporate profits, thus enabling the provinces to step into the field to that extent and raise their money relatively painlessly by corresponding amounts. One can see at once that the result of this would be that the wealthier provinces with heavier personal income taxes and corporate taxes would benefit, where the less wealthy provinces would not.

Therefore, the federal proposal went further and said that where the tax abatement did not amount to at least 50 per cent of the operating cost of the universities in a province, an equalization grant would be made by the federal Government to bring the amount received by that province up to 50 per cent of these operating costs, so that half of the operating cost of all the universities of all provinces would be paid by the federal Government. Even that, however, would not take care of those provinces where the amount spent on university education was low in comparison with other provinces. So the federal Government has taken the national average of university expenses of all provinces, which works out at $14 per capita, and any province, after receiving the amount of income tax and corporation tax that is made available to it, after receiving up to 50 per cent of its operating cost, is also entitled to receive an amount to bring it up to $14 per capita. This is a long step forward.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Is that per capita of the population within the province?

Hon. Mr. Leonard: Per capita of the population of the province. In other words, with a population of 20 million in Canada, that is $14 per capita, or $280 million. This is a long step forward, and it seems to me to go far toward meeting the problem of financing post-secondary education. The Prime Minister himself said that it goes further than the Bladen Commission Report in so far as the federal Government is concerned, and he gave the figures that the federal grants, plus the abatement of the tax field in 1967-68, would mean federal assistance in all of $359,974,000.

I should mention that there is also to be a phasing-out of the federal grants towards the construction of vocational schools, and these grants are included in that figure, but the total increase by the federal Government towards post-secondary schools would be from $75 million to $100 million. That I think is a very substantial increase toward meeting the problem we are facing.

One aspect of the federal policy, however, that disturbs me is that in connection with church-related institutions. Until now the moneys from the federal Government have been made available to all universities in Canada, whether church-related or not, and to me that is the right policy. For reasons that are largely historical, the Province of Ontario does not make its university grants as such available to church-related universities. Waterloo Lutheran University, of which Senator Ross Macdonald is chancellor, is the only university in the Province of Ontario which is church-related. However, there are church-related colleges affiliated or federated, or connected with other universities. These church-related institutions in general have not been receiving assistance from the Province of Ontario. They have been obtaining their share of the federal grant, and this I submit is the right policy. Had it not been for the substantial amounts given to these institutions by the federal Government, their condition in the last few years would have been extremely difficult.

If the result of this fiscal transfer is that the provincial policy is to be applied not only to the grants that the provincial Government makes in its usual or ordinary way, but also to the amount now made available by the federal Government, through the vacating of the tax fields and through the equalization grants, then the position of these institutions would be really calamitous.

In its figures, the federal Government has taken the cost of these institutions into account. It is prepared to make its funds available for these institutions and from a national standpoint I think this is right.

If the federal Government, in pursuance of a national policy, deems that it should assist a province in a matter that is under provincial jurisdiction, so as to assist the economy as a whole, I think it is entitled to prescribe terms or conditions to see that this national policy is not impeded or obstructed by the application of a provincial policy.

I would think it is strictly wrong, for example, for Waterloo Lutheran University to be excluded from sharing in these additional federal grants. If the provincial policy is applied to it, the university will lose not only the additional moneys being made available by the federal Government, but would in fact lose the amount it is already receiving from the federal Government. I would hope that, in some way or other, between the Province of Ontario and the dominion Government, this problem will be worked out so that this very wrong result would not ensue.

I am not quarrelling with the right of the province, in the ordinary case in dealing with education, to establish its own policy. I am not quarrelling with what they do in regard to their own tax money, but when the federal Government moves in this way, then I think that there is a different aspect of it.

Honourable Senators, I really have concluded what I wish to say on this subject. The point I want to make is that, from the time of the conditions such as existed some 50 years ago, we have moved now into a situation where university education is interwoven into the economic fabric of this country, along with business and along with governments, and there it is, and this is what we are going to have to deal with throughout the years to come. We are going to have to spend larger and ever larger amounts of money on university education.

The justification for the size of the expenditure is the contribution that university education makes to the increased prosperity and productivity of the country. Through the spread and growth of knowledge, through the application of science and research, through training in skills, through reduction in unemployment and through increased productivity, higher education will make a substantial contribution to the increase in our gross national production. It will help to meet the challenge that Canada faces in the fierce competition today in world markets. By so doing, the expenditure on university education will not only justify itself but will repay itself.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Lang, for Hon. Mr. Burchill, debate adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, from what I can gather, the discussion continues in the other place, but there is a prospect that the bill for which we are waiting will be available to us later this day. Having consulted the honourable Leader of the Opposition, I think it might be more convenient and expeditious if we adjourn now until the call of the bell at approximately 8 o'clock.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

Upon resuming at 4.30 p.m.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I must make an apology, not to you but to the honourable senators who have already left the building on the understanding that we would reassemble at 8 p.m. The fact of the matter is that third reading of the pension bill in the other place has been deferred until tomorrow. It is unnecessary to bring honourable senators back this evening, because there is no prospect of our receiving the bill for consideration tonight. I would hope that we might receive it early tomorrow afternoon. I have no alternative but to move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

CONSUMER CREDIT (COST OF LIVING)

INTERIM REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE

December 19, 1966

The Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on Consumer Credit and Cost of Living makes its third Report, as follows:

1. Preamble

During the first two weeks of September, 1966, the Senate and the House of Commons agreed to expand the terms of reference of the Joint Committee which had been appointed earlier to enquire into the problems of consumer credit. The added responsibility given to your Committee was "to enquire into and report upon the trends in the cost of living in Canada and factors which may have contributed to changes in the cost of living in Canada in recent months." Because of public concern over increases in food prices, your Committee decided to concentrate its attention initially on the reasons for the upward movement in food prices. It also undertook to present an interim report to Parliament sometime during December. Your Committee met on forty-two occasions in the period from September 28 to December 13, 1966 and heard testimony from a representative cross-section of individuals and organizations. Because of the pressure of time, many of the witnesses appeared on very short notice and your committee wishes to record its appreciation to them for their invaluable assistance in its efforts to throw light on the factors influencing consumer prices.

Recently, Parliament has also referred to the Joint Committee on Consumer Credit and Cost of Living the Third Annual Review of the Economic Council of Canada entitled "Prices, Productivity and Employment." This important and complex report obviously requires detailed study and because of the shortness of time, it has not been possible to do more than refer briefly to some of the conclusions of the Economic Council of Canada which impinge directly on the work of your Committee.

This interim report is necessarily brief. It is not and could not be expected to be an exhaustive analysis of the evidence. The limitations of time meant that the report could deal with a limited number of issues. Many other problems referred to during the committee hearings require additional evidence, study and research before useful conclusions can be drawn.

2. General Observations

The economic experts both from the public service and the academic community who gave evidence to your committee made it obvious that the factors influencing the cost of living in Canada were many and varied. Some changes could be explained by the increased price of imports. Canada's trading relations with other countries are intimate and important and it is therefore natural that the general increase in price levels in the recent past in most western countries has had a contagious effect on Canadian prices. In addition, domestic changes in the price of goods and services interact and reinforce each other. A great deal of the evidence presented to your committee emphasized the fact that consumer prices moved in response to changed market conditions in other sectors of the economy or in markets outside Canada. These changing market conditions, in turn, affected the share of the national income going to labour, to farmers, to business and to others, but there was nothing to indicate that the recent changes in the cost of living in Canada arose out of unusual or unwarranted increases in the sizes of their respective shares. Your committee's review of the evidence has not yet revealed any group or sector of the economy which could be singled out and blamed for the recent increase in consumer prices. Its general conclusions were that there have been many factors contributing to the changes in the cost of living, particularly the price of food.

While there are many groups in the economy which are able to protect themselves against the rising costs of living, your committee must recognize there are many such as the handicapped, the aged and the unemployed upon whom the burden of price increases falls most heavily.

Since your committee commenced its hearings on September 28, food prices as reflected in the food component of the Consumer Price Index have declined slightly and it is believed that the information which reached the housewife through the committee hearings has had a stabilizing influence. The hearings have had a significant educational value for the members of your committee, for the housewives and for the business community. Public attention has been focussed on the importance of the price and quality of consumer goods and it is the earnest hope of your committee that Canadian housewives will shop both selectively and carefully.

For the first time, full public disclosure of the business practices and affairs of companies appearing before your committee was requested. This applied to Canadian companies as well as to subsidiaries of non-Canadian corporations. In some instances, new light was thrown on extensive inter-corporate relationships which had not been made public before. In one case, one newspaper reported "for the first time, amazing extent of holdings revealed" and a press service referred to the "Stunning scope of food empire" All the proceedings were open and no information was given to your committee in confidence. There was extensive coverage of the work of your Committee in the newspapers and on the radio and television.

3. The Need for Improved Statistical Information

Your committee experienced some difficulty in obtaining satisfactory statistics on the prices of a number of important commodities at the farm, wholesale and retail levels. This was particularly true of meats. In part, this arose from the division of responsibility between the Department of Agriculture and the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. It is the view of your committee that there will be continuing interest in the trend of prices. For purposes of economic analysis and studies of distribution, improved statistics concerning prices at all distributive levels are essential. For this reason, it recommends both a greater degree of interdepartmental co-ordination in the compilation of price statistics and the diversion of professional staff to expand and improve the statistical information on prices throughout the public service, and particularly in the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. While the quality of the work performed by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics is very good, your committee firmly believes that its work in some fields was being impeded by shortages of professionally qualified staff.

The principal way of informing the public of the changing level of prices is the monthly Consumer Price Index issued by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. This is a sophisticated and valuable economic measuring device but it is nevertheless difficult for an ordinary consumer to interpret it as it applies to her normal purchases for her family. While the existing published consumer price indexes provide a very useful measure of price movements affecting consumers nationally and in major urban centres, additional statistical indicators are required. In particular, there is a pressing need for the Dominion Bureau of Statistics to broaden the scope of its retail pricing program to encompass a wider range of qualities of goods and services and to allow more useful item price averages to be derived, by cities, on a continuing basis. It is recognized that an expansion of available retail price statistics along these lines will require additional resources, both in the field collection of price data and in its evaluation, processing and analysis. A good deal of information on various aspects of consumer prices is published by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics but it is not usually easily available to the consumer. The consumer appears to be less well served in this respect than some other groups in the community. For example, her ability to detect seasonal and other trends in food prices is impaired by a lack of information. Your committee recognizes that there are technical problems in compiling accurate price statistics but nevertheless believes that it is an appropriate governmental function to disseminate price information as widely as possible to the consuming public.

Although your committee's primary concern was with prices, it necessarily became involved on several occasions with other kinds of economic statistics. Specific evidence was given, notably by the Chairman of the Economic Council of Canada, that there were serious deficiencies in the government system of collecting, analyzing and issuing statistics relating to economic conditions. Moreover, your Committee was impressed by the urgent need for comprehensive, accurate and timely statistics in the formulation of government economic and fiscal policy. Because of the importance of having good and current information about short-run economic changes, your committee proposes that a detailed review of the government statistical system be undertaken with a view to modernizing, improving and co-ordinating the whole process of collecting and compiling economic data.

Recommendations:

(a) That additional staff resources be provided to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics to improve the collection of urgently needed statistical information on price movements.

(b) That more information concerning consumer prices be made available to the public in as simplified a form as possible.

(c) That a thorough review be made of the governmental system of collecting, analyzing and issuing other types of economic statistics in addition to price statistics.

4. Parliamentary Responsibility for Consumer Affairs

The experience in Canada and in many other western countries demonstrates the need for Parliament to be informed on both general and specific economic developments. Economics cannot properly be the exclusive province of experts, even though it has aspects which are technically complex. The study of particular legislation or special problems by ad hoc parliamentary committees does not meet the continuing need of Parliament to become familiar with the issues of current economic policy. For this reason, your committee has concluded that it would be desirable to establish a Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons whose primary aim would be to keep under continuous review the whole field of consumer affairs. In addition to this, the proposed committee should have the responsibility for surveying economic developments in the Canadian economy which affect employment, income and consumption levels. A Committee of Parliament would be immediately responsive to parliamentary or public concern over problems affecting the consumer.

It is recommended further that such a Joint Committee be established for the life of a parliament in order to provide continuity to its work and that it should act on problems referred to it by Parliament.

It is essential to provide the Joint Committee with the services of a professional staff. It is of interest to note that the Third Annual Review of the Economic Council makes a somewhat similar suggestion and outlines some specific tasks which a Joint Committee might undertake.

Recommendation:

That a Joint Committee be established to review consumer affairs and the state of the Canadian economy.

5. The Influence of Consumer Demand on Food Prices

It was brought out in testimony before your committee that there is an increasing tendency for consumers to buy convenience foods. Such foods require a minimum of preparation before cooking and in some cases merely need to be thawed. In part, this is a consequence of increasing numbers of married women in the labour force and the unwillingness or inability of many consumers to devote much of their time to food preparation. Your committee has no views on the cultural aspects of this development but does recognize the fact that the price of convenience foods must inevitably include some allowance for the costs of preparation. If consumers prefer partially or completely prepared foods, they should be perfectly free to exercise their choice. However, if their time spent in the kitchen is reduced, it is to be expected that the cost of eating will be increased.

In the past few months, there has been widespread publicity and controversy concerning rising food costs. Public interest has been stimulated by the formation of consumer protest organizations, by the hearings before the Joint Committee on Consumer Credit and Cost of Living and by discussions in the press and on the radio and television. Your committee has gained the impression, based partly on the volume of its mail from the public, that consumers are looking at prices more carefully. There are quite acceptable substitutes for many types of food and consumers can affect the prices of particular items simply by not buying them if they think the price is excessive. It is also true that some consumers could reduce their food budgets by shopping carefully provided the retail food markets available to them are truly competitive. The conclusion of your committee is that if consumers are well informed and discriminating in their shopping practices they can reduce their food bill appreciably in many cases. Consumer education is a matter of such importance for the welfare of individuals and families that increasing attention should be devoted to it in the Canadian educational system beginning in the secondary schools. A vast amount of information useful to consumers is available through newspapers, magazines and the publications of government departments. Your committee's opinion is that increased efforts should be undertaken by the government departments involved to distribute as widely as possible attractive and informative material which will help the Canadian housewife to be a well-informed and careful shopper.

Recommendation:

That increasing attention be devoted to consumer education both through the educational system and by the wider distribution of information useful to consumers through government channels.

6. Consumer Standards and Consumer Protection

The problems of the consumer in the market place are accentuated by the changing nature of retailing itself. The rise of the supermarket has meant that for a wide range of commonly purchased items retailing has become impersonal. At one time the retailer was a source of information about the products he sold but the modern supermarket offering many thousands of products usually relies on the consumer to select her own purchases on the basis of her own knowledge.

Product information must be provided. Consumers must be informed about physical properties or products they are buying such as weight, volume quality and number of units and this information should be immediately available at the time of purchase and should be expressed clearly and unequivocally.

Your committee could cite many examples taken from letters received from dissatisfied consumers about merchandising and packaging techniques which annoy the consumer and make it difficult if not well nigh impossible for the consumer to compare price and quality of different products effectively and quickly.

Facts should be presented in a prominent place on the package or container in a form which is legible and free from graphic distortion. Where applicable, the ingredients should be revealed both by name and percentage of composition, and the consumer should also know about the quality of the product. In particular:

(1) the product should be described by its generic name where this is meaningful;

(2) where products are of a certain type, variety and quality, they should be graded;

(3) packages should be designed in terms of size, shape or dimension in a way that will not deceive or mislead retail purchasers;

(4) the net quantity of the contents in terms of weight or measure should be expressed as simply as possible and in terms which can be easily interpreted;

(5) the essential information about a packaged product and its physical contents should be stated in a prominent place on the label.

It is essential for the government to take all measures within its power to foster the welfare of the consumer. In particular, the government has a responsibility for protecting the consumer against all forms of exploitation.

One aspect of this responsibility was referred by the Government in July 1966 to the Economic Council of Canada for investigation. The terms of reference of the study to be carried out are:

"In the light of the Government's long term economic objectives to study and advise regarding:

(a) the interests of the consumer particularly as they relate to the functions of the Department of the Registrar General;

(b) combines, mergers, monopolies and restraint of trade;

(c) patents, trade marks, copyrights and registered industrial designs."

In the normal course of events the findings of the Economic Council of Canada will not be available until late 1967. Your committee, however, feels that the function of consumer protection is of such urgency as to require the establishment of a Department of Consumer Affairs. Because of the special responsibility of the Department of Health and Welfare, the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Fisheries and the Department of the Registrar General, your committee is not prepared to recommend the nature of the administrative structure for such a department until the Economic Council of Canada reports. However, because of the need for consumer protection, for co-ordination of existing legislation and for the immediate establishment of machinery to receive and investigate consumer complaints, the Economic Council of Canada should be asked to report on item (a) of their reference as soon as possible.

Additional legislative authorization may be necessary ultimately for the protection of the consumer but this should not stand in the way of immediate action which could be carried out under existing regulations. Your committee reached certain specific conclusions, which are:

(a) with particular respect to food, that the establishment of standards and grades should be extended to cover all commonly purchased foods for which standards or grades would be useful to the consumer.

(b) that a standardized nomenclature for designating grades for different classes of food should be developed as quickly as possible and that an intensive campaign should be undertaken to acquaint consumers with the meaning of the grades;

(c) that manufacturers of consumer products should be required to modify their packaging techniques so that, where applicable, the weights or contents are expressed in terms which minimize the difficulties of calculating and comparing prices.

Recommendations:

(a) That a Department of Consumer Affairs headed by a Minister be established.

(b) That immediate steps be taken to promote standardization and simplification of grades, nomenclature and packaging for commonly purchased consumer items.

7. The Promotion of Retail Sales

Your committee noted, with interest, the variety of promotional schemes which had been introduced by the major retail chains to encourage customer loyalty. One senior executive of a corporate chain expressed the view:

"A lot of people are anxious to play games and have these contests. It is all part of their present-day life to engage in these adventurous things. It is a challenge...Have you ever considered how dull it would be for a housewife to go into a store and see nothing but price tickets and a display of produce."

The competitive significance of promotional devices was emphasized by another chain store executive when he said, "If stamps are in fashion, then you had better be in style yourself."

The impact of stamps, premiums, games and contests on the retail price level is difficult to assess and clear differences of opinion were expressed by responsible officials of the chain and other stores. Your committee did not have sufficient evidence at this time to reach any final conclusions about the effect of promotional devices on prices but it did conclude that the different forms of promotion should be used with restraint. Its opinion was that competition not based on price should not be allowed to diminish unduly the healthy effects of vigorous price competition at the retail level. It is your committee's intention to conduct further investigations for the purpose of making final recommendations on promotional devices such as trading stamps, games and contests.

Your committee, however, saw at least one example of a technique of price competition which it considered to be objectionable. This was the system, evidently sponsored by manufacturers or processors, of labelling packages to imply that the product was being sold below the regular retail price. The use of the so-called "cents-off" labels seems to be of fairly recent origin and now to be quite common for such classes of commodities as detergents and processed foods. Your committee feels that this device tends to create uncertainty about what the regular retail price is, particularly in a period of change. Cents-off labels therefore, confuse the consumer and lead to abuses. Anything which smacks of deception in advertising and merchandising is unacceptable. Competition or promotion on the basis of price or quality is a desirable goal but competitive methods which create doubt or confusion should be prohibited.

Your committee learned much about the methods used by chain stores to attract customers. On the other hand, it observed some actions by food retailers which were poor from the viewpoint of their public relations. Your committee's attention was repeatedly drawn to the practice of re-marking goods on the shelves with a new and higher price without removing the old price. Whatever the reason for this practice, your committee's view was that some adjustment in the method of inventory management and more care in marking prices on containers would eliminate this irritant to consumers.

Recommendations:

(a) That non-price competition by retail food outlets should not be allowed to become sufficiently important to outweigh price competition.

(b) That cents-off labels, in view of their tendency to cause confusion and to distort price relationships, should be prohibited.

(c) That the Minister to be responsible for consumer affairs undertake a review of the effectiveness of the investigation and prosecution procedures under existing statutes relating to misleading advertising.

(d) That more care should be used in re-marking the prices of goods in the inventories of retail food stores.

8. Public Disclosure

In times of both depression and prosperity, Canada has in the past resorted to a series of royal commissions or parliamentary inquiries on prices and price spreads, each of which has had to compile its own information on costs, profits and return on investments. Your committee was no different, and used its parliamentary privilege to ask for and receive from corporate witnesses information never before made public. However, your committee feels strongly that if those responsible for or concerned about the management of public affairs are to be properly informed, such information should be available publicly on a continuous basis for the scrutiny of parliamentarians, public officials, consumer groups, investment analysts and the academic community. Such public disclosure would also be a spur to greater efficiency and productivity by preventing inefficient entrepreneurs from hiding their inefficiency from shareholders or public scrutiny. Further, your committee sees no reason why large public companies should be compelled to compete in the market place against other large private competitors whose operations are almost wholly secret and many of which are privately held wholly-owned subsidiaries of non-Canadian parents.

Recommendations:

(a) That the distinction between disclosure requirements for private companies of significance to the public and public companies be eliminated.

(b) That the disclosure requirements for both public and such private companies be enlarged to assure full and complete disclosure of corporate activities to give to the public sufficient information for meaningful continuous analysis and comparison.

9. Profits of Corporate Food Chains

The Joint Committee on Consumer Credit and Cost of Living asked for and received detailed statistical information concerning the experience of the companies which appeared before it. One of its principal purposes was to determine if there had been any significant recent changes in the levels of costs, prices or profits which would help to account for the upward movement of the cost of living. In particular, your committee concerned itself with the profit levels of the corporate food chains. This whole question was looked into by your committee.

One way of measuring profitability is to examine net profit after taxes as a percentage of gross sales. Your Committee is aware that this method of comparing profit levels has some deficiencies and that an analysis should also be made of profits in relation to invested capital. Such an examination raises theoretical and practical accounting problems and while the necessary research has been started, the results are not available for this interim report. Your committee has retained the services of a firm specializing in management consulting and accounting which has undertaken to conduct a study in this field.

The level of profits in the Canadian economy as a whole was discussed by several expert witnesses who testified before your Committee. Their opinion was that in the late stages of an expansionary period there tended to be a squeeze on profit margins. This resulted from rising costs and the inability of sellers in competitive markets to raise prices sufficiently to offset them. Although the statistical evidence was not conclusive, it did appear that profit levels or ratios had not risen generally and that one would have to look elsewhere to explain the changes in the cost of living after a long uninterrupted period of prosperity.

10. Advertising.

Your committee heard lengthy arguments concerning the economic consequences of advertising. It also accumulated a considerable amount of information relating to advertising expenditures and the way in which advertising costs are shared among different distributive levels in the food industry. There was evidence that the market power of the retail level of the food industry was sufficiently strong to shift some of the burden of advertising costs to food processors or manufacturers. In the time available to your committee, it was not possible to ascertain all the facts necessary to reach any firm conclusion. However, your committee decided that more information was needed.

11. Concentration and Cost Levels in the Food Industry.

The terms of reference of the Joint Committee on Consumer Credit and Cost of Living necessarily meant that primary attention was focussed on factors influencing recent changes in consumer prices. Your committee was not, as a result, able to devote more than passing attention to some of the longer run influences at work in wholesale and retail food distribution.

Although the preliminary judgment of the committee was that profits in the different levels of food processing and distribution had not increased substantially or generally in the recent past, this does not answer a very relevant question, namely, whether the cost levels in the industry were reasonably low in the light of Canadian conditions.

Your committee uncovered specific evidence of great concentration of market power. It came to public attention as a result of questions by your Committee and disclosed more particularly the so-called Weston Empire.

This disclosure was an astonishing revelation and the enormity of the Weston complex surprised even the sophisticated. The far-reaching implications will take some time to assess. The Weston Empire reveals for the first time vast holdings and control over food and other related aspects of the economy which will need further investigation to reveal all the implications and to do this, more specific information will, of course, be required.

The detergent and soap industry, it appears from the evidence, is controlled by three giants which among them have between 85 and 90 per cent of the total business.

The five great corporate food chains and the voluntary chains control more than 75 per cent of the grocery business in urban areas and their percentage is increasing.

In one part of the food processing industry, one firm controls 100 per cent of the market in the Maritimes and Western Canada and at least 80 per cent of the market in Ontario and Quebec.

The domination of a few large corporations in some sectors of the Canadian economy is clearly evident and gives rise to the question, "Is this in the public interest?" Your committee feels that the implications of this question must be fully examined.

In view of this, your committee recommends that a thorough assessment should be made of the organization of the food industry with the object of publicizing any monopolistic tendencies which may exist, of determining whether the market power of any group or groups is sufficient to impair the workings of a competitive market and whether there are any undue barriers to entry.

Recommendation:

That the Joint Committee on Consumer Credit and Cost of Living continue with its investigation of concentration in the food industry.

12. Price Control.

The view is sometimes expressed that price control by government edict is the easy answer to price stability. All the witnesses who were questioned on this matter disagreed with the opinion and demonstrated clearly that this was an unworkable and unrealistic solution. Your committee concurs in the conclusion that price control is a fallacious method of attempting to control any general increase in prices. It notes, furthermore, that the federal government does not have the constitutional power to enter this field.

13. Co-operatives

In order to meet its self-imposed deadline of an interim report in December, your committee did not have an opportunity to call witnesses on co-operative organizations, but recognizing the importance of the movement intends to do so.

All which is respectfully submitted.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, December 21, 1966

The Senate met at 3 p.m., Hon. Maurice Bourget, P.C., Acting Speaker, in the Chair.

Prayers.

EXPORT CREDITS INSURANCE ACT

BILL TO AMEND—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-253, to amend the Export Credits Insurance Act.

Bill read first time.

SECOND READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read a second time?

Hon. T. D'Arcy Leonard, with leave of the Senate, moved the second reading of the bill.

He said: Honourable senators, I have just received a copy of Bill C-253, and therefore I assume that copies have been distributed and are on the desks of all senators.

Perhaps I may commence by refreshing our minds on the act itself. This legislation was originally enacted in, I think, 1944. At any rate, the first policy under the act was issued in 1945.

The principle of the act is to assist in the sale of Canadian goods to foreign countries, that is, to assist Canadian exporters. This type of assistance is general throughout the great trading countries of the world, and nearly every government is assisting in building up its export business.

Over the twenty-one years during which this Crown corporation has been in business, since it was set up by the original act, it has been extremely satisfactory and successful. It has had the support of all governments in those intervening years, and I think I can say it has had the support of all parties and also of Canadian businessmen.

The corporation has power to insure credit contracts where the Canadian exporter sells on credit terms, to insure the payment of that credit by the foreign buyers.

The act has been amended from time to time. Its powers have been extended and the limits to which it might enter into risks have also been increased. In addition to its power to insure, the corporation also has power to make loans on behalf of the federal Government, again in connection with the export of Canadian goods.

This bill makes some four amendments to the main act. As the principles applying to these amendments are contained in the sections themselves, it seems to me that the most simple way of explaining the principle of the bill is to deal with it directly, section by section.

Clause 1 of the bill makes an amendment to section 13 of the act, the section empowering the corporation to issue its insurance contracts with respect to sales by Canadian private organizations, such as the Canadian General Electric Company, to foreign buyers. The amendment now proposes to add the words shown at the top of page 2 of the bill, so that in connection with these policies, where a credit insurance policy has already been issued by the corporation, the corporation may issue unconditional guarantees to banks.

In the ordinary course of business, a Canadian exporter will have a bank loan or a line of credit in connection with the transaction affecting the goods which he is exporting. He insures those with the credit corporation but he is still under his liability to the bank. This proposed amendment in effect, enables the Export Credits Insurance Corporation to step into his shoes, so that he can be relieved of his liability to the bank, and the Export Credits Insurance Corporation gives a guarantee to the bank, the insurance corporation being already under liability itself through its insurance policy. Then the exporter is able to restore his line of credit to the original amount, or at any rate to have his liability to the bank thereby reduced.

The maximum amount of liability or risk of the credit corporation is not itself increased. That is taken care of by consequential amendments made by section 2 of the bill. Therein, section 14 of the act, incorporating the amendment now proposed, makes it clear that the total of the corporation's liability, which is ten times its capital and surplus now, with respect to insurance policies that it may issue, will include any of these guarantees. Therefore, the gross amount for which the corporation may be liable is not increased: it is the same maximum amount of risk, whether made up by insurance policies or by guarantees.

This amendment is very remedial and very helpful, and is one which the exporters of Canada have asked for. With the experience the Corporation has had, it now comes forward and recommends this change, and having in mind the tight money situation in Canada, it should be very helpful. That, honourable senators, is the first change.

Clause 3 contains the second change. This clause deals with section 21 of the main act which gives the Corporation power to enter into transactions which otherwise they could not enter into under section 13 by reason of either the risk or the term involved. In those cases the Export Credits Insurance Corporation asks the Government whether or not it should enter into this transaction, and if the Government deems it is in the national interest that the corporation should do so, then it enters into the insured credit transaction, with the Government standing behind it with respect to the liability. This section has been in effect for some time, and the amendment made today adds the provision with respect to guarantees of bank loans in the same way as the amendment under section 13 deals with an insurance policy in a transaction in which the Government itself is not directly concerned. There is no increase in the maximum amount of liabilities that the insurance credit corporation may enter into in this type of transaction under section 21. The same maximum liability of $600 million holds good including the guarantees.

Clause 4 of the bill amends section 21A of the act. Section 21A does not deal with credit insurance risks, but with actual loans. These loans are made by the Government from Government funds, but they are made through the instrumentality of the Export Credits Insurance Corporation. Here, there are two amendments of importance. The first is that there is a power to roll over a debt. That is to say, where a foreign government or a foreign buyer is in any difficulty with respect to repayment of the loan to the Canadian corporation, then there is power under this section to reschedule the debt. As a rule these difficulties will arise from foreign exchange problems, and this section gives the Export Credits Insurance Corporation power to enter into a roll-over agreement with the foreign government so as to provide for a change in debt repayments to enable the transaction to be carried out over a longer period of time. That is the change made in subsection 1 of section 4. Then there is a further change made in subsection 2 of that section. This increases the total liability under section 21 from $400 million to $500 million.

This last amendment is the one in which there appears to be some sense of urgency, as the corporation has now entered into contracts or is prepared to approve loans under section 21A which will extend, if they are entered into, the total amount of loans beyond the $400 million figure. Therefore, this amendment increases the maximum liability to the corporation to $500 million. I simply want to reiterate that the urgency is that if this increase from $400 million to $500 million is not made, then loans that the corporation wishes to make, loans that the corporation has in fact already approved, cannot be made, and the total operation of the corporation will be confined to the present provisions.

In the light of the history of this corporation, its success, and excellent management, and the desirability of these amendments, I think the bill will receive the support of all members of the Senate.

I may say that I think it went through all three readings in the House of Commons in such a short space of time that it involved less than half a column of Hansard—not as much as it will take in the Senate Hansard today.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Not as good either!

Hon. Mr. Leonard: I feel that we will all be in favour of this measure, and I question in my own mind whether it is necessary that it be referred to committee, particularly as we have another very important bill to deal with which no doubt will go to committee. However, I leave that decision in the hands of honourable senators. As I say, it is urgent that it should be passed as soon as possible.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, I may say that this bill has come to us more or less as a surprise. I feel sure that few honourable senators, and particularly those who unfortunately cannot be present this afternoon, expected the bill would be considered by us at this time.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Including the leader.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Yes, including the Leader of the Government.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): And the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. Mr. Leonard: And the sponsor!

Hon. Mr. Brooks: As the honourable sponsor has pointed out, this bill received—I will not say "short shrift," but it passed through the other place quickly, and the main reason, as the sponsor also pointed out, was that it was greatly overshadowed by another very important measure, Bill C-251, to amend the Old Age Security Act. Probably another reason was because we are getting very close to Christmas and there are many who would like to make reservations to get home, if possible, to greet Santa Claus.

This is nonetheless important legislation, and I am disappointed that the Government felt there was such urgency as to warrant its being considered at this time. Frankly, I do not think it would have mattered much had its introduction been delayed until after the recess, but I always take the word of my good friend Senator Leonard, in the manner in which he expresses it, and if he says it is urgent legislation, then we will not object; however, I am not altogether convinced of its urgency.

We are all familiar with the objects of this bill. No objection is being taken to it by any party in this house or the other place, and I believe that each member has been and is greatly in favour of it. I do hope, though, honourable senators, that some time before this session ends we will have another opportunity to discuss the Export Credits Insurance Act itself, because I know that there are those who are unavoidably absent today who have left their names with me with an indication that they intended to speak on this bill when it came before us for consideration after the recess, as anticipated.

I have no intention of undertaking an analysis of any of the sections of the bill, the chief reason being that I could not do so, even if I had intended to, on this short notice. Suffice it to say that I am satisfied it is an important bill, and that under the act itself the economy of this country is greatly assisted.

Taking these matters into consideration, there will be no objection from this side of the house to the bill receiving third reading expeditiously; and, frankly, I really do not see any necessity for its being referred to committee. However, I think my good friend Senator Thorvaldson, who is more familiar with these matters than I am, might possibly have a few words to say and might have other views.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Honourable senators, may I ask the honourable sponsor of this bill a question with respect to the new subsection 2(b) in clause 1? I should like to know if it is clear that these unconditional guarantees are to be limited to the liability already undertaken by the E.C.I.C. in connection with these insured loans.

Hon. Mr. Leonard: My information is that the guarantee will extend to the full liability of the exporter to his bank. There is a possibility that the amount insured might be under a co-insurance policy, the full amount of which might not be sufficient to cover the full amount of the debt. My understanding is that so far as the guarantee to the bank is concerned, it is to the extent of the liability of the exporter to his bank. What the Export Credits Insurance Corporation might decide in those circumstances will be up to it. I would probably agree with the honourable senator that this change is not actually limited to the same liability that might exist under the policy. There could be that possibility, but I would be inclined to think that the Export Credits Insurance Corporation would not enter into a guarantee beyond the extent of its own liability without security or recourse against the exporter.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I should like to direct a question to the honourable sponsor of this bill, and it is a question that I would have asked if the bill was before a committee. What practical circumstances have arisen at this late date, after this corporation has been in existence for many years, to make it necessary for the corporation to issue insurance policies directly to a bank? I ask this question because I would have thought that the policy issued by the corporation to the exporter was assignable to the bank, and would have been assigned to the exporter's bank as a regular practice. I am wondering if something has happened to make it necessary to issue a policy directly to a bank covering the same transaction that is made with the exporting company.

Hon. Mr. Leonard: Honourable senators, I shall attempt to answer this question in my own way, and perhaps I should say that I am not as fully informed as I would have been had I had more time.

Two or three years ago I received representations from exporters who were very much interested in this act. They sent me a copy of a brief that was submitted by the Canadian Export Association to the Honourable Mitchell Sharp, in which the point was made that they could not get bank credit in connection with these transactions without full recourse. In other words, the exporter was still under complete liability with respect to this contract, notwithstanding that the credit was insured by the Export Credits Insurance Corporation. What they asked for at that time was the very thing that this bill now provides. They asked that they be enabled to refinance without recourse, and this is what the bill now does.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: That answers my question.

Hon. Mr. Leonard: It is much more urgent now than it was in 1964.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Yes, I understand.

Motion agreed to, and bill read second time.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time.

Hon. Mr. Leonard: Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate, that the bill be read the third time now.

Motion agreed to, and bill read third time and passed.

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

BILL TO PROVIDE GUARANTEED MONTHLY SUPPLEMENT—FIRST READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-251, to amend the Old Age Security Act.

Bill read first time.

SECOND READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. John J. Connolly, with leave of the Senate, moved the second reading of the bill.

He said: Honourable senators, it was originally intended that the honourable Senator Connolly from Halifax would sponsor this bill. Unfortunately he was taken ill yesterday, not seriously, but enough to make it inadvisable for him to be present here today. Therefore, you have in his place another Connolly, and I am afraid a long-winded one, if I may quote my friend from Gulf (Hon. Mr. Power).

Yesterday Senator Leonard, in a notable speech dealing with education in this country, paid a special tribute to the initiative taken in this house some years ago by a special committee called the Manpower and Employment Committee, to which all parties gave their full support and great results followed.

The same type of tribute can be paid to another committee of the Senate in respect of the bill that is before us this afternoon, namely, the Committee on Aging. While I do not say that the idea of a basic minimum income provision was new with the committee on Aging, nevertheless, what it did over a period of time, with great devotion on the part of its Chairman, its members and the staff it employed, was to provide basic information as a result of its studies and research, which led to the legislation we are to consider this afternoon. I do not claim, and I am sure the chairman or any member of the committee would not claim, that all of the provisions of its report are embodied in this legislation, but I think they gave great impetus to the implementation of the proposal now before us.

In the first place, I should say that this is an act to amend the Old Age Security Act, which is chapter 200 of the Revised Statutes of Canada. Old age pensions were originally introduced in the Parliament of Canada in 1927, and a means test was attached. The original Old Age Security Act was enacted in 1951. At that time a payment of $40 per month was prescribed for all Canadians over 70 years of age, without any means test. Between 1951 and 1963, by successive parliaments and successive governments, that old age security payment of $40 a month was raised gradually from time to time until in 1963, by chapter 16 of the Statutes of that year, it reached a level of $75 a month.

I think we should remind ourselves also, honourable senators, that originally the Old Age Security Act was looked upon not as a be-all and end-all of income for our older citizens, but rather as assistance to them in their advanced and advancing years. It was not originally conceived and operated as a provision for a minimum income for the older citizens. Nonetheless, it has developed appreciably since that time as has the philosophy behind it.

There was some question, of course, as to the capacity of Parliament to deal with measures of this kind. In order to make it abundantly clear and, indeed, to confer jurisdiction on Parliament, an amendment was made to the British North America Act in 1951, and a new provision was introduced by section 94A. That section reads as follows:

> It is hereby declared that the Parliament of Canada may from time to time make laws in relation to old age pensions in Canada, but no law made by the Parliament of Canada in relation to old age pensions shall affect the operation of any law present or future of a Provincial Legislature in relation to old age pensions.

So, I think the authority of the Parliament of Canada to deal with legislation of this kind, and which has been exercised a number of times over the years, is clearly set out in that section. It does not derogate from the authority of the provinces to legislate in this field, but it does confer authority on the Parliament of Canada to take action.

I think I should also remind honourable senators that in 1965, by chapter 21 of the Statutes of 1964-65, Parliament passed the Canada Pensions Act. Due to changes in the social structure of our country by industrialization, urbanization, the sophistication of our economy, the early retirement of people from their life work and avocation, there arose the need, as indeed in many other modern industrialized countries, for the provision of pensions for older citizens after their retirement.

Perhaps one of the factors which contributed to this situation is another deplorable fact of modern life, namely, the disintegration of the family unit. This did not happen so often when our cities were smaller, when many people lived in small towns or on farms. Urbanization and industrialization and the general development of the economy have all contributed to these general social changes which have evolved.

The first steps that were taken by Parliament in recognition of these facts, against the background I already placed on the record of this house when I introduced the measure to implement the Canadian Pension Plan, was towards the end of World War II, when there was recognition given in the Income Tax Act to private pension plans.

I do not want to go into details, but honourable senators are aware that as a result of the tax adjustments that were made in the Income Tax Act at that time, it was possible for some two million Canadians, about 30 per cent of the work force of the country, to be assisted for the most part by contributory pension plans and also by noncontributory plans. The contributions became deductible in the years in which they were made, and when the pension was paid out after retirement, then the tax was applied, of course. The income had fallen after retirement, and so the rate was lower.

In addition to the assistance that was given through private pension plans which were approved and registered with the Department of National Revenue, there was another provision in the Income Tax Act called the Retirement Savings Plan provision. That plan enabled individuals to allocate a certain percentage of their income to an approved fund, and such individuals would not pay the tax on the contributions to that fund in the year in which the contribution was made. That fund could be set aside and held for them on certain conditions to be used after their retirement as a source of revenue, as assistance, as a pension. These were two methods which were to be privately operated.

Finally, in 1965 Parliament passed the Canada Pension Plan. Under that plan some six and one-third million Canadians or more were covered, which would be approximately 92 per cent of the work force of Canada. The Canada Pension Plan was integrated with the Old Age Assistance Act. At that time the Old Age Assistance payment was $75 a month, payable at 70 years of age without a means test. However, it also provided that within five years progressively, one per cent year by year, the age date at which the old age pension cheque would become available was to be reduced until it reached 65, and that would occur in the year 1970.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: You are referring to the Old Age Security Act, are you not? You mentioned the Old Age Assistance Plan.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I beg your pardon. Thank you, Senator Thorvaldson. Yes, I am talking about the Old Age Security Act.

The Old Age Security Fund was established at that time, in 1962. In 1965 that fund, which is of considerable size now, was made up of the proceeds of three per cent of the sales tax collected, three per cent of the corporate income tax collected, and four per cent of the personal income tax collected in a given year.

There was a ceiling then of a special tax for the old age security fund of $120. As honourable senators know, the mini-budget or supplementary budget, introduced in the House of Commons on Monday evening, doubled this tax from $120 to $240, and increased by one per cent the sales tax, except for certain items. That change will make funds available to look after the payments which this bill contemplates.

Honourable senators are familiar with the provisions of the Canada Pension Plan. Under it, contributions are payable by employers and employees, each paying 1.8 per cent of the income earned by an employee, that is, income between $600 and $5,000. The maximum payable in a year is $79.20, and there is a matching contribution from the employer. Those who are self-employed pay premiums at the rate of 3.6 per cent of the income they earn between $600 and $5,000, provided they earn more than $800 in any one year.

Honourable senators, I have already said that under the Canada Pension Plan pensions in 1976 will be payable at age 65. The contributions to the Canada Pension Plan are compulsory for people in the labour force between age 18 and age 65. I should add that in 1976, but not before that, will the full advantage or benefit of the Canada Pension Plan be realized. In the meantime, there will be partial benefits realized by people who retire and who have paid into the plan. In 1976, after the plan has been in existence for a ten-year period, the initial maximum pension that can be payable, based upon an income of $5,000, will be $104.17 per month. There is a provision for the escalation of this amount, geared to the cost of living index, and there are provisions for death and disability payments.

Honourable senators, I trust that what I have said as to the background will be helpful in the circumstances in which we meet here today. What is now proposed is an amendment to the Old Age Security Act, to provide for older citizens who are not able to take full advantage of the Canada Pension Plan, and to provide for them as far as possible a basic income which is consistent with Canadian standards, with the Canadian way of life and with the dignity of the individual.

The bill before us provides a guaranteed income supplement to pensioners who require it. The maximum supplement proposed is $30 a month for the pensioner who needs it, whose income is inadequate, that is, below $1,260 a year.

The $1,260 per year is arrived at in this way. Under the Old Age Security Act, the $75 a month comes to $900 a year. Under this bill, the payment of $30 a month will come to $360 a year. Therefore, the maximum payment under this act would be the combination of those two, or $1,260 a year. As a matter of fact, the ceiling is actually $1,620 for a single pensioner and $3,240 for a married couple. This arises, however, from a special provision in section 8 of the bill before us, which permits a pensioner to earn $2 of income, but to lose not more than $1 of the supplement. It sounds rather complicated to say it in this way, but it is a neat expression of the fact and it can be and will be explained in the committee in more detail as honourable senators require. In any event, I will have something to say later about section 8. I should point out that pensioners only can qualify for the supplement proposed in this legislation.

In the year 1967, people will be able to obtain the pension at the age of 68. In 1970, they will be able to obtain the pension, and therefore qualify for these supplements if they are otherwise entitled to them, at the age of 65. Again, I say the purpose of this bill is to assist the older people in the community who are too old to get or to earn adequate benefits under the Canada Pension Plan.

In so far as residence is concerned, generally speaking the same rules which apply to a person who is about to qualify to become a pensioner under the Old Age Security Act apply specifically to those who desire to qualify for the supplement to be provided under this bill.

This is a transitional measure. Most people born in the year 1910 or earlier will never get the full benefit of the Canada Pension Plan or of the Quebec Pension Plan, because ten years of contributions are required to earn the full benefits under the Canada Pension Plan. On January 1, 1976 the best that those born in 1910 could do is to reach age 66 and just complete the ten years in the Canada Pension Plan, and therefore qualify for the full benefits thereafter. Most of those born before December 31, 1910, could not by 1965 get in their ten years, and they would reach pensionable age too soon to get the full benefit.

It is estimated that some 900,000 Canadians who are Old Age Security recipients will benefit to some extent under this plan, that is, they will have their incomes, supplemented under this plan to some extent. By 1970, when the pension is available at age 65, an additional 75,000 persons will be added each year to that number of 900,000. The cost of the program in 1967 will range between $260 millions and $280 millions. Three years hence, in 1970, the cost is expected to reach its peak of $350 millions. Thereafter, as the older age groups drop off, the cost will naturally decrease. As I said, the benefit will be $30 a month, which comes to 40 per cent of the old age pension. It is necessary to have the figure 40 per cent in this bill for the reason I gave earlier, namely, that the old age pension itself can escalate as the cost of living escalates.

Each applicant for the supplement to be paid under this bill will be required to make application yearly. The bill also provides that a person entitled to the supplement may be absent from the country for six months, plus the month in which the departure was made, and still not have the payment interrupted.

Clause 8 of the bill deals with the tapering-off provisions. The tapering-off provisions deal only with the supplement of the $30-a-month maximum, or $360 a year. The provision in this respect is as follows: For each full $2 of other income received by a pensioner, whether from investments, from earnings or from income as understood by the definitions in the Income Tax Act, $1 will be deducted from the $30 otherwise payable. Computed on a yearly basis, the $360 annual supplement will be reduced by $12 for every $24 of other income received by the pensioner.

Generally speaking, the income of the pensioner in each case will be calculated under the rules provided in section 3 of the Income Tax Act. There are some exceptions additional to these which are mentioned in this bill. Payments to supplement the old age security pension—for example, the $25 a month payable in Prince Edward Island—would not be considered to be part of a pensioner's income for the purpose of getting the additional supplement. Assistance payments of $30 a month are made for example, in British Columbia, under a needs test. These and other similar payments are not taken into account as income for the purpose of determining the pensioner's income. The same remarks would apply to payments made under the needs test of the Canada Assistance Plan.

The income for two pensioners who are married on the last day of the year preceding the year in which the supplement is to be paid will be considered to be half of the aggregate income of the two spouses. If I remember my Quebec law correctly, we are coming closer to the idea of community property in some of the Common Law legislation, and I think the gentlemen on my right and on my left would agree that that concept is not too far removed from the provisions in the bill.

The statement of the income of the pensioner must be made in an annual application, and will be based upon his income from the previous year. In other words, the income of the person who makes an application for the supplement to be paid in the year 1967 will be based upon his report of income received in 1966. In cases where retirement takes place during the year, an arrangement or a provision is made, and a formula is set out in Clause 10(3) of the bill which entitles the pensioner to elect to estimate the income that he will make in the year in which his retirement takes place, in the event that he might be qualified for a supplementary payment.

There are special provisions in clause 9 and in Clause 11 which deal with married applicants. First of all, in the case of married pensioners, both of them must file an application if they desire to have a supplement. But situations within the family and among married people are not all the same; sometimes it is not possible to arrange for consorts to file joint statements. Sometimes they are not even talking to each other, and this may even happen when they are living together. There are provisions which take care of situations in which difficulties of this kind arise. In the extreme cases, for the purposes of this act, I think it is quite appropriate to say that the minister may deem a married man or a married woman to be a single person, if he so desires and if the appropriate conditions obtain.

There are also options for relief available. For example, if a pensioner is widowed in the course of the year, there is provision for making an adjustment so that for the purposes of the Act and for the payments to be made, that woman will be recognized as having single status. Likewise, if during the course of the year two pensioners should marry—and it happens after 65 and sometimes after 70—in the appropriate circumstances the minister may deem them to be married as of the previous December 31 which allows them to have the married status and so be in a more advantageous position than they otherwise might be.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Will this encourage that sort of thing?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I do not know that it would encourage it, and I do not know that it would discourage it. I think it would depend on the individual case and what the income of either of the prospective spouses might be. Perhaps the honourable senator would like some of the officials to enlarge on that point at the committee stage.

When the appropriate information has been received by the department, the application can be approved, modified or rejected. But the minister, in any case of modification or rejection of the application as submitted, can be required to give his reasons.

Interim payments may be made for a period of four months, particularly if there is difficulty in the department in fixing the amount of the entitlement under the Act, or in cases where notice of intention to apply is made before December 31 in a given year by a person who formerly received a benefit but whose papers have not been duly processed.

There are provisions in the act—and clauses 14 and 15 deal with them—for providing additional amounts to those requested in the application if, in fact, it is found that an applicant is entitled to more because his income is really less than he or she thought. There is a provision too for an adjustment downwards if an individual claims too much and it is subsequently found that he or she is being overpaid. In such cases, the recoveries will be made out of future payments. These supplementary payments will be made at the end of each month, and retroactive payments will be made either in the month in which they are approved or in the month following.

There is an appeal provision too to a tribunal to be established by the minister, and the findings of this tribunal will be final and binding upon the parties in respect of the amount of the supplement. But if there is a dispute with reference to what constitutes income, then the appeal in that case must take the normal course of going to the Tax Appeal Board.

As honourable senators are aware, there is a strict privilege enshrined in the Income Tax Act with reference to information supplied by taxpayers under that act.

In clause 17 of this bill there is privilege established also with reference to information about income supplied under this Act. But there are certain exceptions. One is in favour of the Comptroller of the Treasury. He has to know something about it because he is the one who is going to write the cheques. An exception is also made in the case of the Department of Veterans Affairs for war veterans' allowances, because while these allowances are not taxable income under the Income Tax Act, the administration requires information about other income payable to a war veteran under these allowances. The Unemployment Insurance Commission is made an exception, simply to provide the possibility of using the computer system in due time and, therefore, the use of the social security number which is issued by the Unemployment Insurance Commission. The Dominion Bureau of Statistics is also listed among the exceptions, for the purpose of enabling general statistical information to be supplied to that body. The provincial welfare departments are also listed as exceptions under the regulations which are to be made, because they are the departments which are charged with the administration of the Canada Assistance Plan, and there may very well be cases in which payments under this act and under the Canada Assistance Plan have to be examined together.

The information concerning income can only be required to be produced in court under a court order in respect to cases involving administration under this act. This provision will not allow an order of a court to be made except in respect of a matter arising out of this act, and not a general court order with respect to income information generally.

There is a long section about regulations and, as is to be expected, details of the regulations will have to be worked out as experience develops.

There are certain amendments which are normally described as "consequential"—which perhaps should be described as "inconsequential"—towards the end of the bill. They are mainly concerned with the use now of the word "benefit" rather than the word "pension" as was formerly the case, because a benefit now can include not only a pension but also the supplementary benefit proposed to be made available under this act.

Honourable senators, this is obviously not the kind of bill that lends itself to a type of enthusiastic presentation, when it comes to describing the mechanical features that it embodies. I have often said that today in Government you have to have a course in higher mathematics; you certainly must know a little more than long division to get along.

Perhaps I have taken more time than I should have to explain the general structure and purposes of the legislation, but I hope that what I have said has been helpful, and I commend the bill to the Senate.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, the sponsor of the bill here has given us a complete background history and full explanation of the bill section by section. I congratulate him on the fullness of his presentation, and I think I understand his sentiments when he said at the end that this was not the kind of bill that lends itself to enthusiastic presentation.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I meant with regard to oratory.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: As I go along I may be able to indicate why he made that reservation.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I was just talking about the oratorical side.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: The sponsor of the bill here and the minister who sponsored it in the other place have stressed the fact that there is a relationship between this bill and the recommendations of the Senate Special Committee on Aging. It has even been said —though Senator Connolly did not go that far—that the bill is based on the Senate committee's report. The minister did go that far. I have too high a regard for Senator Croll to accept that as a fact. That there is some relationship, there can be no doubt, but I suggest to honourable senators it is at best a poor relationship—

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: —of which Senator Croll and others, like myself, who were members of that committee are not entitled to be very proud.

The principle of the Senate report was a good one. It is to be found at page 19 of the report, under the heading, "Summary and Recommendations." Because I am going to speak for a few minutes about the differences between this bill and what was recommended by this committee, perhaps I should read it—it is very short.

> The committee endorses in principle the institution of an income guarantee program for all persons aged 65 and over and recommends to the federal Government that this proposal be given immediate study.

The committee elaborates upon that further on, and I shall refer to that in a moment. What I want to point out at this stage is that the present bill does not constitute an income guarantee for all persons aged 65. As Senator Connolly has pointed out, it includes only those who are presently recipients of pensions under the Old Age Security Act.

Now, it is true that in some respects the bill goes beyond and improves upon the recommendations of the Senate committee. These are largely the mechanical aspects of the bill, though not all of them are unimportant. However, I would like to suggest that this bill falls tragically short of what the Senate committee proposed in at least four main aspects.

The first, of course, is that it does not provide any supplementary income, any financial assistance of any kind for persons now aged 65. It may be said that in three or four years the 65-year-olds will come under the provisions of this bill, but I should like to point out that as the committee heard the evidence of our senior citizens, and in its discussion of that evidence afterwards, the one point that impressed itself more than any other upon the members of the committee was that it was the duty of the committee to bring in a recommendation for immediate action—for action now—with respect to those of the age of 65 years. That was the crux of the recommendation of the Special Committee of the Senate. Why? The answer to that is that the committee had evidence time and time again of this fantastic gap that has arisen because of the general policy among business firms and the Government of Canada of compulsorily retiring persons at the age of 65. It is still a mystery to me why the Government of Canada insists on retiring people at 65 years of age. It is something for which the committee was unable to attain any reason.

Nevertheless, this was the area with which, by and large, the committee was primarily concerned, because at that time there was, and still is, no government action of any kind for taking care of this most urgent and pressing problem of people who are 65, 66 or 67 years of age. I suggest it is just simply not good enough to say, as the honourable Leader of the Government has said, "Oh well, they will be looked after by 1970."

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Or under the Canada Assistance Plan.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: The honourable Leader of the Government mentions the Canada Assistance Plan. I will have something to say about its relationship to this bill in a few minutes.

My second point is that this bill takes this great principle, which the Senate committee enunciated, of a guaranteed annual income for all citizens over 65 years of age, and uses it only as a stop-gap to fill up a hole that they themselves thoughtlessly left in the Canada Pension Plan. It applies until 1975, as far as people coming under it for the first time are concerned. After that date what happens to the recommendation of the Senate Committee? After that date what this bill provides ceases to be a guarantee, ceases to be annual, and ceases to be income.

The third point I should like to make is that there is another large group of senior citizens for whom this bill does nothing. Apart from those who are 65, 66, 67 or 68 years of age there is another very large group, namely, those who will not in any way benefit under the Canada Pension Plan when they reach the age of 65. This group includes housewives who will not have contributed and who will, therefore, get nothing under either this legislation or the Canada Pension Plan. It is true, of course, that they will be eligible for, and will automatically receive, the basic old age pension, whatever it may be at that time. I am referring now to the pension which is $75 a month, and which may be escalated upwards by two per cent a year in keeping with the rise in the cost of living. This bill does nothing for that group of citizens.

The Senate Committee used the words "all citizens 65 years of age and over". I have mentioned two groups of citizens whom we are almost callously disregarding in this bill.

Fourthly, the Senate Committee asked that there be an immediate study made of these problems. I cannot reach any other conclusion, honourable senators, but that no real study has been made, and I shall return to this point in a moment or two. It is enough to say for the present, perhaps, that there is no evidence in this bill, or in any statement made by the Minister, or in any discussion of this bill in the other place, that the Government did anything to ensure that the present payments, sometimes amounting to $30 a month, to our senior citizens under the assistance plans will not be cut off.

It is true, as the honourable sponsor of this bill (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) said, that these supplementary assistance payments are not considered income under this plan. That is a very generous gesture on the part of the Government. But, there are many assistance acts, some federal and some provincial, in which there is an income ceiling—an income ceiling that is higher than the ceiling created by this bill. I do not know what is going to happen. I am not saying that the provincial governments, or some departments of the federal Government, will immediately cut off this assistance. I do not say that, and I most certainly hope that that will not happen.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): You are thinking of British Columbia, I suppose?

Hon. Mr. Grosart: I am thinking not only of British Columbia but also of Prince Edward Island, which the honourable Leader of the Government mentioned. Prince Edward Island, unlike any other Canadian province, has introduced not "assistance" but an actual provincial old age pension of its own. No other province has done this. It amounts to $25 a month. I am not going to say what will happen to that, but my complaint here is that there is not a tittle of evidence—and the Minister, when he was asked, was not able to give any—that the Government had said to the provinces: "Now, what will you do? Will you give us your assurance that you will not use the increase offered to our senior citizens here as an excuse for cutting them off from other assistance?" Many of these other assistance plans are tied also to free medical and other health services, and if there is a cut-off then those free services go as well. I am not saying that these provincial governments are going to do this, but even if they do not surely this legislation limits the benefits they are now paying. They are not going to increase these benefits.

The honourable Leader of the Government asked if I was thinking of British Columbia. I have before me, for example, a document entitled "Guide to Legislation and Services Related to the Wellbeing of Older People in Ontario", published by the Ontario Society of Aging. I must admit it is two or three years out of date but as I look through this long list of assistance legislation I find over and over again a ceiling. A ceiling is to be found in the Disabled Persons Act, the Blind Persons Act, and even in the War Veterans' Allowance Act, and there are others. This situation applies in every province, and I am concerned at the failure of the government to go to the provinces and obtain some kind of assurance—

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Why?

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Is the honourable Leader of the Government asking me why the Government should obtain assurance from the provinces, or why I am concerned?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Why should the Government do this? The provinces have jurisdiction just as the federal Government has jurisdiction to operate in this field. Why should the federal Government attempt to dictate to the provinces as to what they should do?

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Of course, I made no suggestion that the federal Government should dictate to the provinces or attempt to dictate to them. I merely suggested the application of some co-operative federalism, which has become a sort of motto of this Government. The Government has gone to the provinces on much less important things than this. It has gone to them secretly at times, and without disclosing to Parliament the discussions that took place with the provinces. I am surprised that the honourable Leader of the Government should ask me why the Government should discuss this with the provinces.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I am just as much surprised that you should make the suggestion.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Yes, and I am surprised that the honourable Leader of the Government should ask me that question.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Then, we are both surprised.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: If we are, then I will say that this is certainly not the first time that that the honourable Leader of the Government has surprised me, but I should add that it is probably the only occasion on which the surprise has been unpleasant.

I say, honourable senators, that apart from these things I have mentioned, we have here more evidence of ineptitude on the part of the Government. It is almost trite or redundant to criticize the present Government for ineptitude, but I think we have a glaring case of it here.

The plain fact is that the Government has obviously amended the wrong act. This bill has nothing to do, or should have nothing to do, with the Old Age Security Act which, in our "jungle"—as some of the experts call it—of old age social legislation, is the bastion of the principle of universal old age security, available to all at the statutory age without means test, needs test, or any other kind of test.

This bill would certainly have been more acceptable had it been brought in, as it should have been, as an amendment to the Assistance Act, because all this is welfare assistance that is being offered, not a guaranteed annual income.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: You mean the Canada Assistance Act?

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Yes. When I say the Assistance Act I am reminded that we have had a series of such measures, and I use that term to distinguish it from the Old Age Security Act and also to distinguish it from the Canada Pension Plan.

Honourable senators, sooner or later we shall have to add another measure to take care of those people I mentioned earlier, who will not benefit ten years from now under the Canada Pension Plan, because they will have made no contributions.

The Leader of the Government traced the history of security legislation back to 1927. Perhaps the highlight of that history was what was accomplished in 1952 when, partly as a result of the recommendation of a joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons, we made what was then labelled as a breaking of new ground and the establishment of a great principle for Canada. The idea was that we had at long last caught up with some of the other nations and were able to say that we had one act which grants the universal pension as of right without any needs test. We do not have that any more. We do not have a universal old age pension act any more.

It is significant, and the honourable Leader of the Government mentioned this, that it was necessary to change the wording of paragraphs (a) and (b) of section 2 of the present act. Paragraph (a) says:

> "Application" means application for a pension.

And the word "pension" is in italics. It has been necessary to change that wording so that "application" now refers to "benefits." There is all the difference in the world to the self respect of old age pensioners between a pension, which is something they earn as of right, and the benefit, which is something granted to them by a paternalistic government.

It has been said that the Government may be in trouble about this bill.

Hon. Mr. McDonald (Moosomin): I can't think why.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: I can, and to a greater extent when the old age pensioners and others come to realize what has been done by this proposed amendment. I think it is fair to say that it has been done thoughtlessly. However, the means test has been added here to our basic act for the first time since 1952. From 1927 to 1952 there was tremendous opposition by parliamentarians and by the pensioners themselves against this test. Now we have it back.

Honourable senators, this is not what the Senate committee recommended. I hope that when the Government finds itself in the kind of trouble it will find itself in, it will not try to shift the blame to Senator Croll's Committee on Aging. The senator, out of his unquestioned understanding of the Canadian people, and particularly of this whole area of social justice, pointed a way out of the difficulty. They took a quick look at his signpost, misread it, and took off in another direction.

The Leader of the Government sketched the background. The rate of pension was increased over the years from $20 originally to $40 when the universal act came in. It was raised to $46 in that now notorious misjudgment of public sentiment which is associated with the phrase "Six buck Harris"—a misjudgment which, in my opinion, since I was fairly close to public sentiment at that time, was the major single cause of the defeat of the Liberal government of that time.

I am convinced that here today we have another example of the same kind of misjudgment, and in the same area. It is a misjudgment which affects today some 1,100,000 Canadians directly, and their relatives and friends indirectly. The "MacEachen means test" of 1967 may well take its place in current political history as a matching chapter heading to "Six buck Harris" of 1957.

Honourable senators, I am not going into the many defects of this bill in detail at this time. Some of my colleagues will be following me and will have something to say on that score. However, there are many other defects. One is the application form. My understanding of the Senate recommendation was that we asked for a simple form. My understanding was that this would be automatic. This bill is quite different from what the Senate recommended. May I read from page 18 of the Final Report of the Special Committee on Aging, under the title "Income Guarantee Program." The committee recommended:

> The establishment of an Income Guarantee Program to provide allowances throughout life to all persons beginning at age 65 on the following lines:

The above amounts were the same as under this for the basic eligibility for single persons, a little higher for married persons.

The report continues:

> (b) that the program be administered and financed by the Federal Government.

To do that will be some job. The Prime Minister of Quebec announced in the Speech from the Throne that Quebec will enter the old age pension field. I shall not be surprised if he accuses the federal Government of a breach of faith. The Leader of the Government read to us section 94A of the British North America Act. The amendment to this act takes the federal Government beyond the terms of that original agreement, and I imagine it will find itself in trouble on this score.

Honourable senators, I should like to have commented about a number of matters in the bill, but the time is advancing. An alternative to this bill has been proposed by the Opposition. This is generally called a flat rate $25 increase in the universal pension without the means test.

In conclusion, I can only say that I think the Senate committee might have recommended that alternative had we had the figures that are available to the Government. We would have realized that the difference between the cost of this legislation and the universal pension would be $100 million rather than amounts ranging up to $800 million in the figures we have before us. I suggest that even with Senator Croll as chairman, the Senate committee might have supported the Opposition rather than the Government on this matter. It can happen here. It has happened before. And, if we had time to debate the bill as fully as we should, I can think of no better time than now for it to happen again.

Hon. David A. Croll: Honourable senators, I cannot resist the opportunity to say something on this bill. First, let me repeat what I have said on other occasions, that the report of the Committee on Aging was a collective report. I am glad to have my name associated with it. Senator Grosart was an active member of the committee, as were many other senators. It belongs to the Senate, and to the Senate completely.

On the other hand, what I have to say now is said with great enthusiasm. I appreciate what Senator Grosart has said, and I am disappointed, as he is and as others are, with that particular shortcoming with respect to those people who are now aged 65. Over and over again we emphasized that time was running out for them, and how well we know it. We said: "Do something for them while they are still here." But the Government, in the light of the Canada Assistance Act, decided to do something else. I am practical enough to know that when you are able to get your foot into the door on this sort of situation, and when you can get half a loaf of bread at the same time, you should take it and not complain too much, especially if you can see something ahead.

What I like about this bill, more than the money and more than anything that has been said, is that by it we are recognizing a great principle, the guaranteeing of an annual income. That to me means more than the money it gives. Let me build up the record a little, as it needs it.

Senator Grosart has made reference to the final report of the Special Committee on Aging, as has my leader, but because this will be read, I hope, from time to time, let me put on the record what was actually said. I read from page 18 of the report:

> (3) The establishment of an Income Guarantee program to provide allowances throughout life to all persons beginning at age 65 on the following lines:
> (a) that the only conditions for eligibility under the Income Guarantee Program be age, as indicated above, ten years' residence in Canada, and net cash income from all sources, including Old Age Security and the Canada Pension Plan, below the above amounts.
> (b) that the program be administered and financed by the Federal Government.
> (c) that the procedure call for the completion of a simplified income form annually and that the amount by which the declared income falls short of the established minima in any year constitute the benefit for the year following.
> (d) that there be "sample checks" periodically, as under Unemployment Insurance, to catch abuses, but no means or needs test enquiries on traditional lines.
> (e) that income, capital and deductions be defined and treated as for income tax purposes so far as possible, except that all public transfer payments other than temporary needs-tested supplements would be included.

The report also says:

> (1) The establishment of a technically competent body to study the income needs of older people and to develop a socially acceptable minimum budget for single persons and couples, which would be adjusted automatically each year on the basis of a suitable index of consumer spending or of earnings, with a review every five years to reflect changes in the relative circumstances of the working population and the retired population.
> (2) until this study has been made, acceptance as a working standard of the maximum annual income permitted now under Old Age Assistance, namely, $1,260 for single persons, and $2,220 for married couples.

The committee also said:

> The committee endorses in principle the institution of an Income Guarantee Program for all persons aged 65 and over and recommends to the Federal Government that this proposal be given immediate study.

It was on Wednesday, February 2, 1966, that the final report of the Committee on Aging was tabled in this house. It endorsed this guaranteed income, and that recommendation, as has already been stated, was intended to fill a very wide gap in our social services which the Canada Pension Plan was unable to fill.

The Government was attempting to close the gap, by taking steps to have the Old Age Security Pension payable at 65, but coming into effect over a five-year period. Then the Government created the Canada Assistance Plan, which had a great potential for providing further assistance, with provincially administered help on the basis of need rather than on the basis of a means test.

This measure incorporates the basic recommendation of the Senate Committee on Aging and, no matter how you speak about it or what you say, you cannot get away from it. It attempts to improve on its concept. It does improve on its concept, but unfortunately it leaves out those people we wanted so much to help immediately, that is, those who had reached age 65 and needed assistance. Now of course they are diverted for the time being to the Canada Assistance legislation.

I said at the beginning, what intrigues me about this bill and what draws me to it is the principle involved. The Senate has always been referred to as the chamber of sober second thought. By the very endorsation of this principle, we can well in this case earn a regard for this Chamber as being that of imaginative first thought.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Croll: The bill improves on our thought to the extent that it provides a higher maximum pension for married couples. One must realize that we were walking on eggs, so to speak, when we were making recommendations as to the spending of large sums of money. It was February, and we were not in the Christmas spirit at the time we were making the recommendation; we were careful not to have it said that the Senate was recommending the expenditure of large sums of money. So we took the minimum figure under the Old Age Assistance Act at the time, $1,260 for a single person and $2,220 for a married couple. The bill raises the second figure to $2,520, which is more realistic.

Moreover, it incorporates the committee's recommendation, as it automatically increases the pension whenever there is any increase in the index which reflects changes in the cost of living. There is a built-in escalation in our recommendation, which is carried forward, and that too is very good.

The additional payment to the recipient is based on income, as proposed by the committee. The committee spoke very loudly against a means test and a needs test. It is not the means test that we have in the Old Age Assistance Act; and it is not the needs test that we have in the Canada Assistance Act. Let us recognize these things for what they are.

The Old Age Assistance Act provides for payments up to $75 a month per person who is more than 65 years of age, subject to a means test, to take into account the assets and the financial status of relatives. It is administered by the province, and the federal Government pays 50 per cent of the cost, up to $75 per person.

The Canada Assistance Act is a new umbrella. It provides for the totality of the family need. It looks on it as the family. It considers the old age assistance; it considers the schemes for the blind and the disabled and for the mother of dependent children. There is no upper limit. The federal authority pays 50 per cent of the cost, but up to the present time some of the provinces have been dragging their feet on it. They have not made too much progress, although most of them have come in under it.

The Canada Pension Plan is contributory, self-financing and portable. The contributions began on January 1, 1966, and the plan will not be fully operational for ten years. It will begin to pay benefits on January 1, 1967 to persons of 65 years and over who have made contributions and who have retired; and advertisements are already appearing in the newspapers that persons who think they are entitled should make application. It will eventually pay a maximum of $104 a month.

When one comes to the guaranteed income, here one has to fill in a form. We avoided the use of the words "means test." In our report you will find the words used are "income requirement form." There was to be no snooping, no prying, no demanding questions, no investigation. Information was to be obtained, but it was to be asked for and received and to be interpreted under the Income Tax Act. In that respect there certainly has been no change. I understand what is now proposed is the same provision as that with which we comply under the Income Tax Act. A pensioner may own a car, have money in the bank, have a TV, own a home, his relatives may contribute, he may receive social assistance from the government, from compensation boards, or there may be widows' allowances, but none of these is considered as income. The form to be used is a simple one setting out the income for the previous year. The benefit to result will be the difference between the income and $105 a month, the amount he is entitled to get.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: How many of these old age pensioners do you think would qualify for the children's allowances?

Hon. Mr. Croll: Not too many, and I have not suggested that.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: They would only qualify with the small pensions they get.

Hon. Mr. Croll: But certainly this test is not a means test or even a needs test. I do not mind telling you that when we sat down to prepare the report, and when we talked about a means test or a needs test, I particularly was qualified to speak on that particular subject. I administered means tests as Minister of Welfare in the Province of Ontario during the depression, and I tried to humanize them as much as possible. I know exactly what it means. For years in this Chamber and in other places I have fought against a means test to the point that the party felt a little uncomfortable in having me around. That was my view then, and it is my view now. But we do not consider this to be a means test. This new concept of the guaranteed income which we embody today in our legislation will be enshrined as a new, imaginative, progressive program. I hope, as I know others are hoping, that it will soon be extended to the disabled, the blind, to widows, to the sick and to the maimed.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: May I interrupt the honourable senator? Would he consider that the war veterans' allowance, for instance, is comparable to this particular pension or so-called allowance? It is not necessary for me to explain to him that the war veterans' allowance was raised to $105, and I gather it was raised on account of the work of this committee. But the ceiling under the war veterans' allowance, where there is also a means test, is $1,740. Would my honourable friend not consider that it would have been consistent to have raised the general ceiling to $1,740, so as to give them the possibility of getting $25, $35 or $45 in addition to their pensions, because many of them are only getting part under this legislation?

Hon. Mr. Croll: I certainly share your view that it would be a good thing to do. However, they attempted to meet it, as I understand it, by allowing them a certain amount of their earnings, and in that way there was some differential. We have always made some difference between war veterans' allowances and other allowances for a very good reason, which I support. Now that we have started, I hope this too will be incorporated.

I have always been one of those people who believe that government expenditures on welfare are bound to grow, but to what limits I do not know. In all my years of political life I have found no inexpensive solutions. Certainly it will be cheaper in money and will do less damage than the heritage of poverty we have built up in this country in attempting to deal with it in piecemeal fashion. Our social welfare programs were basically designed to save money rather than to save people, but usually they did neither. However, we have not done too badly. We pioneered family allowances on the North American continent, in fact in the world, and now we introduce the concept of a guranteed income. When we look about us we see that the United States is still talking about it, and the United Kingdom is talking about it, but here in Canada we are doing something about it. In my view this is a fine inaugural for our centennial years. It is something we will remember.

My good friend Senator Hugessen, if he carries out the decision he has made which will result in his not being with us next time we meet, will have as a rememberance the knowledge that before he left the Senate Chamber he supported a measure embodying a great new imaginative concept that will help many people in need of help.

In this country we have lost sight of something which I consider worthwhile talking about for a moment. I have been associated with public welfare in this country for 30 years, first as the Mayor of Windsor, at the beginning of the depression, and then as Minister of Welfare in Ontario where one person in seven was on relief. Honourable senators will remember what a problem that was. My interest in this has been intimate and close. From time to time I have admitted to myself, but this is the first time I have said it in public, that our efforts have ended in failure. The work we have done did not achieve what it should have achieved. Why has it been a failure? Because our welfare programs did not adequately meet the needs of the people they were intended to serve; they did not cover all those in need. The administration was costly and burdensome, and it did not sufficiently emphasize social rehabilitation. It provided no incentives for people to get off relief, to go to work, or to live within a family unit because if they earned a dollar their relief was immediately reduced. We started this in the 1930's, but even today we see situations where we have had four generations on relief in this country. That is nothing to brag about. Anything we can do to change that condition is in the interests of all of us.

So, honourable senators, we find ourselves here today with this bill, and if this guaranteed income can dismantle our horse and buggy welfare system it will mean a great step forward. It will mean that this is a day of which Parliament can be proud. We are striking a new blow in a direction that will be in the interests of the people who need assistance. As I have said, I hope that arising out of this, greater help will be forthcoming for the disabled, the blind, the sick, the maimed and others who need help, to put them on a basis where they are not worried from week to week, where they can plan in the knowledge that they will have a guaranteed annual income, and where they will have a few dollars to jingle in their pockets. They will be able to look forward to a monthly cheque. If we can achieve this, it will be cheaper in money and it will be a genuine accomplishment from the point of view of the welfare of human beings.

Much as I regret the fact that this bill does not cover people aged 65 and over, I feel it has much to recommend it, and I support it.

Hon. Edgar Fournier: Honourable senators, first may I congratulate the Leader of the Government on the fine explanation he has given of the bill in his usual charming manner—even if at times there were moments of embarrassment.

I would also like to congratulate my colleague Senator Grosart on his enlightening explanation, and Senator Croll, who did very well in fighting his own war.

In making my short observations, I do not rise to be unduly critical of what the Government of the day is doing to help the needy people of this country. I simply rise to be somewhat critical of the things that will be done in the future and the way in which they will be done.

Bill C-251 has some good in its contents. It reminds me of the mini-jupe of today, exposing enough to create interest and leaving much to the imagination.

We are told that approximately 900,000 people in this country are recipients of Old Age Security payments, and that approximately 500,000—according to what I have read in the reports of the other place—will receive the full benefit of the extra $30 per month. It occurs to me that when the screening machine is put into operation at the local, provincial and federal levels, this 500,000 figure will be reduced. Senator Croll called it a new concept in respect of the means test, but I would say that is only adding another evil to the old concepts.

Honourable senators, I do not for one moment advocate that the extra $30 should be paid across the board to everyone. No one disagrees that the needy should receive the extra allowance. However, my worries are based on how the selection will be made in some areas—Who and who will not qualify?

The Government spokesman in the other place told us that it will be very simple. His observations appear on many pages in Hansard of the other place. He says it is a very simple test: just fill out a simple and easy form, and that is it—no postage stamp required.

Under our present way of living and the day-by-day approach of socialism and bureaucratic administration, whether we want to admit it or not, many forms of various types have to be filled in, in order to survive. On many occasions the filling in of a form is like placing a rope around your neck—there is usually someone at the other end to pull on it. This is why we have so much discrimination in our social services and so many sad cases of which many examples could be given.

For many years I have felt very sorry that our aged people have become the victims of politicians and that a price tag is put around their necks at election time. Are we not at this moment placing a two-faced tag on their heads?

The minister may have good intentions and may be sincere—and there is no doubt that he is sincere in his thinking—but once the bureaucratic machine is in operation he will not have very much to say. New victims will be created daily. Problems and discussions and confusion will arise. Some may even be punished, and those who will fall in this field of persecution will be the honest and conscientious old people who, throughout their lives, have thought seriously of their old age: people who have put aside a few dollars; people who have sacrified all their lives and built themselves a little home; people who have done without many things they needed in order to provide themselves with a little income upon which to retire. They too will have to fill in a form.

I am asking you, honourable senators: Is that the reward which the aged are to expect from their Government for all their years of good behaviour? For good behaviour, are they not entitled to a little better or a little more than a neighbour who has lived a jolly life, without a care for anyone? What about the veterans who spared nothing, who were even ready to give their lives to save our democracy? They will also have to fill out this little form. Believe me, much more could be said about it.

Another thing: Are we not going to encourage the aged to stop being of good behaviour, and ask themselves, "Why should I be working? Why should I earn a few dollars after retirement if it is going to be taken away, or I am going to be punished for it?" Will the young people say, "Why should I save money for my old age, because it might be taken away from me by filling in this simple, little form?" These are some of the things I am worried about.

Will our older people continue for a long time to be the victims of local social assistance patronage, provincial administration, confusion and federal dictatorial meddling? Today, usually when a man receives $10 assistance from one group it is taken away immediately by another group which can always find a reason for doing so. By just filling in this easy little form, are we going to better the situation? Will it prevent the hundreds of Government and partisan employees from checking the colour of your eyes after this easy little form is filled in?

Many pieces of legislation were passed this year which, on the surface, appear to be a movement in the right direction, but in several instances the intention and the purpose of such legislation is destroyed by having to fill out a simple little form which serves to advise you later that you do not qualify. Today ARDA is the victim of this type of administration.

May I mention another piece of legislation, the act to amend the assistance being offered for vocational education? The purpose of this bill was to fill the gap for various groups of students who could not qualify for assistance under the existing legislation. I was much in favour of this bill, for I had always taken an interest in vocational education, and I had faith in the bill and felt it was long overdue. However, again a simple little form has to be filled out by the applicant, with the result that today hundreds of students receive no assistance, not even under the most pressing hardship, while others are receiving up to $85 per month, resulting in great confusion for the administration. And why? Because of a simple little form.

Hundreds of thousands of elderly people who will be required to fill out this form have never seen an income tax form in their lives. Are we not going to invite thousands of honest elderly people to be hesitant in some cases about telling the truth? Much could be said about that also. Are we not going to affect the economy of our country by inviting older people not to work any longer?

Honourable senators, pension or no pension, work is the basis of a healthy moral and spiritual life. Why do we have in this honourable chamber so many older senators? I am sure you are not staying here because of financial need, but because you believe in work and wish to continue, as you have in the past, to contribute to building a better Canada. You are to be complimented, and I trust that you will continue to contribute to our deliberations for many years to come. Honourable senators, if you believed in idleness you would not be here today, and yet, are we not presenting a bill that in many instances will promote idleness?

The days are not far away when we will be paying for our weakness in avoiding facing the facts in the most serious way. I believe we have too many laws today providing handouts without requiring effort—security without responsibility. Are we going to build a strong Canada by having one-half of the population sitting idle? We will find out very soon that retiring a wealth of knowledge, ability, experience and know-how at an early age will not give the results we anticipated. I, for one, never have believed that the policy of sending home a good, producing citizen just because he has reached the age of 65, to make room for a newcomer to maturity, is the wisest thing to do. The results would have been much better had we created new jobs for the newcomers and left the older ones to continue their role in life and to contribute their share towards the development of Canada. This early forced retirement has placed hundreds of thousands of our citizens at the humiliating door of social assistance, or has condemned them to live out their lives in a state of poverty and misery.

Let us not depart from the principle that responsibility and obligations make democracy. Economy is governed by production, and production is the result of work.

Honourable senators, let us not continue to build up a population of handout seekers. Rather, let us devote our efforts to creating suitable employment for the various age groups—up to a certain limit, of course. We know that today the greater part of the Unemployment Insurance Fund is not always paid for the purpose for which it was intended. I am afraid that the same will happen with regard to this supplementary pension. It cannot be otherwise, unless you have an army of inspectors or snoopers, which will be costly and unpleasant.

Furthermore, it will open another door for politicians at the next general election, and I need not elaborate on this. I will support this bill with all my heart if it will help all the needy ones, but from past experience I have at the bottom of my heart some doubts.

I am sure that there are easier ways of finding the required $280 million. An intelligent look around would have disclosed waste, extravagant and unnecessary expenditure that could have been curtailed, and by this means the necessary amount could be obtained.

I regret to say that due to poor administration on the part of this Government the members of the Senate and the House of Commons have to be here this week, at a time when parents want to be at home with their families and to feel for a short time the spirit of Christmas. I can see no reason in times of peace for forcing members of Parliament to sit during Christmas week. This bill could have been presented weeks ago, and with respect to the so-called mini-budget the Minister of Finance presented on Monday last, I would say that he could have done that also some weeks ago. In any event, the funds will not be required yet for some months. I am sure that the Canadian people are not appreciative of these last-moment decisions that members of Parliament, strangled by time, have had to make. Let us hope that it will not happen again.

Honourable senators, in concluding my remarks may I depart from the subject of this bill? In a few days it will be the time for making our resolutions for the coming year. The new year will be Centennial Year—the only one that we senators will live to see. What could be finer for Centennial Year than for us to pledge ourselves to the promotion of highway safety? If by our efforts we prevent only one accident, and save one life, they will be well rewarded. This can be done by dedicating ourselves to improving our driving, obeying the rules of safe driving, becoming a defensive driver, reducing our speed, practising courtesy and, above all, always remembering that alcohol and driving lead to disaster.

Early in 1967 the Canadian Highway Safety Council will promote a safety program called "Hospitality on the Highway." The Council will need the assistance of every Canadian driver. Pamphlets, recommendations and advice will be publicized early in the new year by means of radio, television and other forms of information media. Let us associate ourselves with the Canadian Highway Safety Council, and do our part to ensure that Centennial Year will not go down in history as a year of highway massacre.

I would like to thank honourable senators and offer them my best wishes for the coming holiday season.

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, it is my pleasure at this time to add my voice in support of the measure now before this house. I wish to congratulate the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) for his full explanation, and Senator Croll for his outline of the very important work done by the Senate Committee and its advocacy of the guaranteed annual income. This measure is a great step forward and a valuable addition to the body of social security legislation of this country.

I have followed the remarks on this matter made by many leading citizens of our country, and I am pleased that the leadership that has been given demonstrates most clearly, at least to me, that this is but another step forward, with others to follow, in the building up of a body of social security legislation of which this country can be proud. It is also proper that the Minister of Finance brought in his budget the other night to show that these things are not manna from heaven, that they are not gifts, but that they have to be paid for. The thinking public of this country will decide, I am sure, that this is a measure that can be afforded by our nation at this time.

The present Minister of National Health and Welfare, the honourable Mr. MacEachen, has done an admirable job in giving leadership in this field. I have read the speeches he has made across this country. They are most enlightening and advanced. His grasp of the fundamental political questions facing this country demonstrates to me that our nation is indeed fortunate in having a man of his calibre head the important portfolio of Health and Welfare.

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Argue: As a nation, we have made great advances in the last few years—not all of them under any one government—in this field of social legislation. We have a medical care program. I know it will not come into effect for some time, but it has received support. I for one hope that when it does come into effect in the various provinces it will be comprehensive. I am convinced that it will not be confined to ordinary medical expenses as we know them, but that very soon after its implementation it will be extended in one province after another to include drugs, dental care and the like.

Honourable senators, I am new in this chamber. I have a great deal to learn—and I am learning, I hope—but I thought perhaps this afternoon we would hear some very able and impassioned speeches to the effect that the country needed to be more careful of its finances, that there is no inexhaustible fund from which monies can be obtained for this kind of social advance, but I have heard no remarks along those lines. In this august chamber, this chamber of sober second thought, those who have spoken seemed to say that the members of the other place have been too cautious, too careful, and that if this house would but give them some leadership we would go all out for these and other measures.

I am pleased to read that this bill passed the other place with only one dissenting vote, and that was not by a member of any official party. That particular member sits, I believe, as an independent. This legislation received in the other place, and I know it will receive in this chamber, the unanimous support of all political parties. This fact demonstrates very clearly that the leadership of the political movements in this country today, certainly those on the national field, is in favour of this or similar, legislation, and of further steps forward.

I have read statements made by the Premier of Alberta from time to time. He heads up what is probably, on an income per capita basis, the wealthiest province in Canada. I suppose he can afford to take the position he does. He seems to say that the country has gone far enough. that all governments are becoming spendthrift, and there should be halt called to social security legislation. But then he spreads his arms wide and invites representatives of all the free enterprise parties to come in with him to beat the N.D.P. on the question, as he puts it, of halting social security and other progressive legislation. This is a short-sighted attitude, in my opinion, and it is a mistaken attitude. It is mistaken in its initial judgment about the legislation itself. I am certain it is mistaken as a piece of political strategy, because if anything would help bolster the N.D.P. in this country it would be an amalgamation of the other political parties because that would leave the N.D.P. alone to promote in their own way social security measures and the like.

So, I think the Parliament of this country has given a decided answer to those who might be accused of being the radical right by saying that it is going forward with schemes to provide social security legislation.

I hope I am not taking a reactionary point of view, however, when I say that I am very much in favour of the principle of this bill which states there shall be a guaranteed annual income, and that we shall not ask the treasury of this country and the taxpayers to pay a $25 general supplement to a lot of people who do not need it.

In Saskatchewan I live in a very small community. It is a hamlet. It is not even big enough to be incorporated as a village. I know that in election campaigns—and I say this with respect to the individuals involved —some of the strongest advocates among the older people of a higher across-the-board and without-means-test increase in the old age pension have been people who do not need it. If they got an increase, they would not spend it; it would go into a bank account and merely increase the size of their estate when they passed on. I say at once that this is a minority, but it is an important minority. I have asked these people individually, as I ask here, why should this country adopt measures to tax the public generally, including a lot of poor people, as well as young people, in order to give money that is really not necessary to increase the bank accounts of those who already have adequate money? I do not know if I can be called young or old. We all like to think we are young. However, looking back over my experience in raising certain members of our family, and still in the process or raising others, and in trying to look at the experience of older and young people—

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Which makes you young.

Hon. Mr. Argue: Thank you very much. Well, the Senate is getting younger all the time, but I am a long way from being the youngest.

One cannot make general statements, but it is the young people who are the poor people. When a young person gets married and starts to raise a small family, he often has great difficulty in making ends meet. When I hear about fires in Ottawa, and of people living in the second or third storey of an old house, and when the temperature gets so low they have to turn on all the burners of the stove to keep warm—those are the people with whom I am especially concerned. I do not see why the country should undertake to tax people with low incomes, young people with small families, in order to pay more money to a certain group of people who do not need it.

I hasten to say that I am all in favour of paying to our older people the assistance they require, and I think that is a step in the right direction.

I have been reading what the N.D.P. have been saying about this. In the past they have been in favour of removing the means test. Later they were in favour of a guaranteed annual income, but as soon as it was put forward they called it all the rough and mean names they could find, and applied the same terms to the Government and anybody associated with the committee. They used such names as "Scrooge," "callous" and "indifferent," and they said that the measure now before us means, not $260 million, but a few more cents. It seemed to me rather a strange role for them to play.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: May I ask how long ago that was?

Hon. Mr. Argue: Yesterday, or the day before. Even right now that is what they are saying.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Were you with them at that time?

Hon. Mr. Argue: No, I was not, but I think they have changed adversely since the time I was with them. When I was with them we were a group of individuals. Some of us may have been a little off base once in a while. I may still be, and I hope I shall be once in a while in the future; but we were not under the control of an elite in the labour movement or any other movement. I think this is the position they have since acquired for themselves, and I think it has been and is a great mistake. However, they have certainly by their speeches followed a course of "Tax the poor to pay the rich," and that would seem to me a kind of policy that no one should be following. Oh, I know they are crying about the people on $200 or $300 a month.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: I think they were crying about the people who are on $105 a month.

Hon. Mr. Argue: I do not think they were crying about them. I think they were crying about the people on higher incomes.

Senator McDonald from Saskatchewan can remember when the leader of the N.D.P., Mr. T. C. Douglas, in 1961 brought a measure before the Saskatchewan legislature to pay to himself a pension of $4,200 per year, so that when elected to Parliament he would get a provincial pension from the taxpayers of Saskatchewan in addition to his pay as a member of Parliament, and this he is now receiving. I would far rather see members of this chamber promoting legislation that will provide funds for people who are in need. I was glad to hear Senator Croll this afternoon say that he looks forward to the day, and that day soon, when there will be guaranteed annual income legislation for the blind, disabled, the sick, the maimed and others in need.

The whole concept of guaranteed annual income, of course, is going even beyond that. The present Minister of National Health and Welfare, the Honourable Mr. MacEachen, made what I believe to be a most important speech on the whole concept of a guaranteed annual income, when he said that whenever there are increases in welfare measures in this country they will have to be paid for out of taxation, that they will have to be paid for out of the production of this country.

We have to take action to provide increases from time to time, for the cost of living has been rising at a rapid rate. I think it is a mistake for corporations or others who are in a powerful position to increase the prices of their products or to raise wages, on the basis of "all that the traffic can bear." When I see people in public life advocating increases in wages of 30 per cent and 40 per cent over a two-year period, I think that is completely irresponsible and is the kind of thing that is adding to inflation. It means that legislation has to be amended to take care of that inflation and the unnecessary increase in the cost of living.

We can pay for our social security measures out of tax revenue, of course, but we can gain more tax revenue by increasing the annual production of our country. When our nation talks about increased legislation in the social security field we should consider not only the taxation required, but should start to think about how we can increase productivity in our country, and how we can produce more in the hours we work. Perhaps some people may be encouraged to work somewhat longer hours in order that the productivity of our nation can be increased.

I was pleased to read in the Financial Post about a week ago a statement that, according to statistics, living standards in Canada have risen more in the past five years of steady business growth than in the previous 13 years.

The key to providing a guaranteed annual income for older people is to undertake in every way possible to increase the productivity of our nation. I think the Government and the Senate should be giving real thought to this question.

I have read the report of the Economic Council of Canada. It is a brilliant report, and many things in it show that the Economic Council has done excellent research and it provides guidelines on how we can improve the economic position of our nation. However, it says little about increasing productivity. I think the council itself would admit that the attention it has given to the question of productivity is inadequate. That is a field to which we might apply ourselves, for if we succeed in increasing production we can afford this and other important social security measures.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, my remarks will not be extensive. I had intended to rise and ask one question of the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West), because earlier in the debate this afternoon reference was made to the old age supplement paid in Prince Edward Island. Perhaps I can explain to the Leader of the Government what Senator Grosart meant by consultation with the provinces.

One unfortunate aspect of the legislation in Prince Edward Island was that the Department of Veterans Affairs moved in and began deducting this amount from the recipients of War Veterans Allowances. In turn, the Province of Prince Edward Island said, in effect, if it is going to be taken off by the Department of Veterans Affairs, we are not going to pay it. Consequently, while this was being straightened out, there were many cases where for a period of two or three months the veteran received $25 a month less than he had normally received before. I believe this is what Senator Grosart had in mind.

The comment I would direct to the Leader of the Government is that last week when we dealt with medical care, it was clear that the Government was insistent on a 90 per cent to 95 per cent coverage. This was for the young, the healthy, and for those who are able to take care of themselves. I find it rather strange that this figure, that was described, I believe, as the "magic of averages", is completely missing in the case of our senior citizens who are unable to care for themselves. I am sure that when he comes to close the debate, he will, with all his Irish charm, explain why the 90 per cent covers only the benefits to the young and not the aged.

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson: Honourable senators, my few remarks on Bill C-251 will be directed solely to the new principle now being adopted or—as it might be described—the change of direction which is now taking place in our country in respect to federal involvement in the field of old age pension legislation.

Let me say at the outset that I have a feeling of sorrow and frustration that any Government of Canada should abandon, as is being done by the measure before us, the principle of the universal old age pension system. This system was recommended to Parliament by a Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons many years ago, after painstaking study. Then it was concurred in by Parliament practically without dissent.

The measure which followed, namely, the Old Age Security Act of 1951, adopted a universal pension scheme for Canada, provided for a fixed monthly sum to all persons in Canada meeting qualifications as to age, residence, and so forth, and without any requirements concerning means or income. These payments commenced at $40 a month and, as the wealth of Canada grew, as the gross national product went up, and as the cost of living rose, periodic increases in the pension were made, until we have now a universal pension of $75 a month. The basic and fundamental consideration was that the plan was universal and no income or means test of any kind was required.

One known result of the scheme was that a considerable amount of the payments made under the plan would be returned to the treasury in the form of income tax payments from those persons who were in tax paying positions.

The next development, which is laudable if the country can afford it—which I believe it can—is a gradual reduction in the age of beneficiaries under that act until the minimum age of qualification in a few years reaches 65.

A later development, only a few months ago, was the enactment of the Canada Assistance Act, having as I understand it objectives very similar to those under this bill and as a result of which any investigations with regard to persons seeking to qualify for assistance would be made on the provincial or municipal level, by welfare workers engaged by those bodies who, I submit, are the only persons properly qualified to determine the welfare or the financial needs of lower income people.

Senator Grosart said in his speech to the house this evening that the wrong act was being amended. With that statement I agree wholeheartedly. If we desire to give a supplementary pension, as is being done now, I submit that that should have been done under the Canada Assistance Act or through similar means, in co-operation with the provinces and municipalities. They, I submit, are the only governmental authorities who should have anything to do with a means test or a needs test in the case of our older people.

It is my conviction that up to now Canada has had the fairest, the most generous and the most up-to-date welfare system in the world, not excluding even the United States, which has per capita wealth and income much in excess of that in Canada, and excluding also any reference to the Canada Pension Plan which is expected eventually to have a beneficial effect on the living standards of Canadians. In the light of these facts, I simply cannot understand why our Government should embark on a formerly discarded theory of old age pensions. To me, everything about the system adopted in this bill is wrong.

Honourable senators, what will be some of the results of this legislation? One will be the establishment in Ottawa and elsewhere throughout Canada of an additional bureaucracy which will not only deprive our country of the services of all these extra people from other useful and productive endeavours but will entail a further needless expenditure of public funds amounting to many millions of dollars. It may and likely will complicate further our present and proposed complicated relations with the Province of Quebec in the field of public welfare services.

Worst of all, it will re-establish a principle which was wholly—and I would have liked to think, permanently—rejected 16 years ago, in the field of federal old age pensions, namely, the principle of a means or a needs test, or whatever else one may wish to call it, in relation to a federal pension plan for the aged.

As I say, this principle of a means or needs test in regard to the Canadian plan was wholly and unanimously rejected by the Joint Senate and House of Commons Committee, which so assiduously studied this problem for practically two years during 1950 and 1951. And, as I say, that rejection was concurred in by Parlament, practically without dissent.

This bill also has the effect of breaching for the first time, as far as I am aware, the principle of the inviolability of information given in income tax returns. Where this may lead to, no one knows. To me this is simply another serious step in the constant erosion of the privacy and the freedom of the individual in this country.

I believe that nothing that I have said so far rejects the basic principles of the report of the Senate Committee on Aging, in so far as the needs of some people are concerned. This point has been fully explained by my colleague, Senator Grosart, and I will not repeat his argument.

On the contrary, I believe that the course of wisdom would have been for a continuous and indeed scientific adjustment of payments made under the universal old age pension plan, thereafter leaving it in the hands of the provinces and municipalities to operate assistance schemes on the basis of means or needs as required by the circumstances of certain people who may be afflicted with undue poverty.

In the light of these remarks, I sincerely believe that, even if the cost to the public treasury should be somewhat increased at the moment, it would have been highly preferable to raise the universal old age pension to $100 for the present, allowing for adjustments upwards in, say, five-year periods, based upon the gross national product from time to time, and combined with considerations relative to the cost of living.

Honourable senators, what will be the effect of this legislation on the old age pensioner? First, I believe there will be thousands of marginal cases where personal judgments of government employees will be required to decide who are eligible and who are not. One can appreciate the personal conflict and difficulty that will be involved with individuals in regard to this phase of need or means.

Secondly, a vital principle of administration of the income tax laws will have to be violated, namely, as I said a moment ago, the granting of access to outsiders, that is, to people from another department, to private income tax records.

Besides this, there will be employed an army of civil servants who will inevitably be termed snoopers, whether they are or not—and they are already being termed "snoopers"—and the amount of animosity and ill-will created will be without measure.

Furthermore, there will be no end to the number of marginal cases, those who will make it their business to divest themselves of their savings and other property to their children or relatives, and who will indeed pauperize themselves in order to qualify for the supplementary pension. Also pensioners in good health who now try to earn a few dollars each day, week or month, will discontinue these employments. This system will encourage idleness and indolence to a degree that may shock us all.

Honourable senators, for these and other reasons too many to dwell upon, it is my sincere conviction that this legislation should not be passed, but that in the alternative our universal old age pension system should be continued unimpaired.

Now, honourable senators, having made these remarks on Bill C-251, may I offer Christmas greetings to everyone here.

On the question of sending this bill to a committee, may I add that we are all aware that this bill has been in the other place for a long time and has been debated at length both on second reading and in committee of the whole, and we on this side see no good purpose at this late date for sending it to committee here.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators,—

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, I must advise honourable senators that if the honourable Senator Connolly speaks now, it will have the effect of closing the debate.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, we have had a most interesting afternoon. I, for one, regret that this bill came to us so late because, while I think there has been agreement by and large on the need for the principle embodied in this bill to be translated into legislation, I think there may be much misunderstanding on the part of individual critics of the bill of some of the details.

First of all, let me say to Senator Grosart that I am sorry about the surprise he expressed when he suggested that before a measure of this kind was presented to Parliament there should have been consultation with the provinces to ensure that they would not reduce payments they were going to make in the light of prospective payments that could be made under this bill. I take exception to this suggestion, not on any personal or political grounds, but simply on constitutional grounds. I have already, for good reason, read Section 94A of the B.N.A. act into the record. I shall read it again:

> 94A. It is hereby declared that the Parliament of Canada may from time to time make laws in relation to old age pensions in Canada, but no law made by the Parliament of Canada in relation to old age pensions shall affect the operation of any law present or future of a Provincial Legislature in relation to old age pensions.

To me that means that the province has the clear power, as has the federal authority, to legislate and operate in this field. And if some of the provinces desire to supplement old age security payments while others do not, this is a capacity they have under the Constitution of the country. That is the only point, I assure Senator Grosart, with which I was concerned. The federal Government has responsibility for legislating on a national basis with a view to establishing national standards and that motive has prevailed in much of the social legislation the federal Government has put on the statute books. Now to go to the provinces and say, "If we do this, will you keep yours going?" is not, in my view, a valid principle upon which the federal Government should direct its work in this field.

However, I would remind honourable senators that this bill first came to the public notice in the summer, and there have been federal-provincial meetings since then. The provinces were all aware of the provisions in this measure. Certainly the bill was available to them. I want to assure Senator Grosart this is not a personal matter; I look upon it as a matter of some substance based upon the jurisdiction of Parliament.

Senator Phillips asked me a direct question. He asked why, if under the medical care legislation it is required that 90 per cent increasing to 95 per cent of the population be covered, some similar standard should not be applicable in this bill. In answer, let me say at first that I feel it is difficult to compare the two. Perhaps it is not quite the same as comparing apples and oranges, but as far as medical care is concerned, I think the federal Parliament in legislating in this field should try to cover as much of the population as it can. Secondly, from the point of view of spreading the risk, it is desirable that it should do so. That is a very important aspect. I would point out also to Senator Phillips that potentially under this bill every pensioner, if he was poor enough to qualify, could receive 100 per cent coverage. Of the 900,000 to be affected immediately, there may be many who will not qualify for any part of the supplement. Others will qualify for varying amounts.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: May I at this stage ask the honourable leader a question which I would have asked in committee if the bill had gone there. How was the figure of 900,000 arrived at?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I understand that this is the estimate by the department of the people who will qualify in some measure under this legislation.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: They may receive anything from $1 to $30.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes.

Hon. Mr. Benidickson: Will this be done by computer?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): That method has not been brought in at the moment. I understand it is hoped the computer system will be introduced to facilitate the work.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: I am sorry to interrupt the leader's line of thought, but I think he said that the initial cost is estimated as high as $360 million.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It is estimated it will range from $260 million to $280 million in 1967, rising to $350 million in 1970.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Would that be the average as between the possible $1 and the possible $30 per month payment? What would be the situation if the $30 were paid to each of the 900,000?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Then the estimate would be much higher.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: In that situation it would be $360 million? But in many cases pensioners will not be entitled to this supplementary amount.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Many pensioners will be in receipt of other income which will reduce their entitlement.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Was there a figure estimated to show what the cost would be if it were universal?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I was coming to that, because Senator Thorvaldson made a point about the increased cost. If instead of doing this on an income test basis, it was done on an across-the-board basis and applied to the amount paid under the Old Age Security Act, the actual cost would amount to an extra $100 million.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: It would be $100 million more than has been estimated already?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It would be $100 million more than the $280 million estimated for 1967.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: I have seen that estimate in the other place.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Some of my colleagues seem to think it is more, but my recollection is that the estimated cost of the program proposed in this legislation for this year will range between approximately $260 million and $280 million. It is estimated that the cost of paying a $25 a month increase across-the-board as Old Age Security without any test will be an additional $100 million this year. That is my recollection of the figures.

Hon. Mr. Benidickson: Then some poor people will not get $30; they will get $25.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): All right. It is a $25 increase and not a $30 increase in certain cases too.

However, the point I particularly want to make is this. We had a budget the other night in which a $280 million increase in taxes was proposed. I have no doubt whatever that the Opposition in the other place will be criticizing the increase in taxes of $280 million. Now what is proposed is that we should increase the expenditures by a further $100 million. So, if you are going to live by the rule that was proposed by the Minister of Finance and you are going to pay as you go in this program, then the kicking over the $380 million would have been that much more vigorous.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: They might have been satisfied with the other arrangement.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Do you not agree that basic and fundamental principles that are deemed to be valuable are not worth dollars, even if it is in high figures?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Might I ask my honourable friend a question? It is a very personal one. Why should I get an extra $30 old age pension a month?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Of course there is no reason in the world why you should, Senator; no one suggests that.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I might say that if there is anyone who is entitled to an additional pension it is my friend on my left.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: I move that he gets it!

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I am feeling particularly low today, because this is my friend's last day in the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Oh, no!

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): However, let me come back to Senator Thorvaldson's point. I take it that what he and Senator Grosart object to is the departure from what they say is the principle enshrined in the Old Age Security Act, that the payments are made to all those who have reached pensionable age without any test whatever, and that in this case the wrong act has been amended.

I do not think many are so doctrinaire on this subject. Certainly, I do not feel so doctrinaire as to say that in a case like this, when you are dealing with old age pensions in the field outlined in section 94A of the British North American Act, you need be so particular. We have the universal system without any test at all up to $75. What is wrong with saying that you should have, not a means test and, I would say, not a needs test—though I would not object to its being called a needs test—but, in effect, an income test for the amount in excess of $75? If that is the only serious objection to the legislation, then I really do not think it is too serious an objection.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Of course that is not the only objection; there are many others.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I realize that. Some honourable senators wanted a $25 straight increase across the board, which—

Hon. Mr. Benidickson: Instead of $30.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes —which, as I say, would cost an extra $100 million this year. But we must always remember that once you increase that $75 to $100 without a means test or any other test, as the population grows and as time goes on, this is going to mean a great deal more every year than the difference between the $280 million and the $380 million that is estimated for 1967.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Well, of course, our gross national product will be increasing proportionately.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes, our gross national product will be increasing too, but at the same time you will be getting more and more built-in statutory payments that are going to be made and which are going to put that much more burden upon the finances of the country. Moreover, the life span is increasing.

I think this is a responsible approach. It does not go as far as the Senate committee proposed that it should in some respects: it goes further in other respects. However, as I say, I think this is a responsible approach to the question of providing a basic minimum income for elderly people who need it.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Seeing that the honourble leader has stated as his objection to the $25 flat rate increase that it is a built-in expense which will go on and on, does not that same objection apply to the measure before us—or is he suggesting that this will not go on and on?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I think that in time—after 1975—the measure before us will begin to decline in cost and that ultimately, when the full benefit of the Canada Pension Plan is available to these pensioners, there will be practically no more payments to be made under the scheme proposed here. That is one of the reasons why I say this is a temporary measure. This is a measure intended to fill a gap which the Senate committee pointed out. I do not say it will fill the hole completely, but it goes a long way towards satisfying the purpose the Senate committee had in mind.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): With leave of the Senate, I move that the bill be read the third time now.

Honourable senators, I would just like to say that I feel rather like a lawyer in court, because my "client" is in the gallery. I have been defending him, and he will not have to defend himself at a later time in committee. I mean, of course, the minister, Honourable Mr. MacEachen.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Acting Speaker informed the Senate that he had received the following communication:

GOVERNMENT HOUSE

Ottawa

21 December 1966

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Hon. Emmett M. Hall, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, acting as Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 21st December, at 9.45 for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
A. G. Cherrier
Assistant Secretary
to the Governor General.

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Report by the Tariff Board, dated June 6, 1966, relative to the Inquiry ordered by the Minister of Finance respecting Machinery, Apparatus, Printing Plates and Related Products for the Printing and Allied Industries, Reference No. 133 (English and French texts), together with a copy of the transcript of the evidence presented at public hearings (English text), pursuant to section 6 of the Tariff Board Act, chapter 261, R.S.C., 1962.

Report of Expenditures and Administration in connection with the Family Allowances Act for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1966, pursuant to section 14 of the said Act, chapter 109, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Report of Expenditures and Administration in connection with the Old Age Security Act for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1966, pursuant to section 12 of the said Act, chapter 200, R.S.C., 1952. (English and French texts).

Report of Expenditures and Administration in connection with the Youth Allowances Act for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1966, pursuant to section 13 of the said Act, chapter 23, Statutes of Canada, 1964-65. (English and French texts).

Copies of letters written by the Minister of Trade and Commerce to Canadian companies in the export field regarding expansion of Canada's export trade. (English and French texts).

Revised Capital Budget of Polymer Corporation Limited for the year ending December 31, 1966, pursuant to section 80(2) of the Financial Administration Act, chapter 116, R.S.C., 1952, together with copy of Order in Council P.C. 1966-2371, dated December 15, 1966, approving same. (English text).

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate, that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, January 31, 1967, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

23031—98

I remind honourable senators that, if this motion is agreed to, there is no guarantee that the adjournment will be until that date. This adjournment is subject to recall, as are all adjournments of this kind.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: May I ask the honourable Leader of the Government when the House of Commons will resume after the Christmas adjournment, and also what we may expect in the way of legislation when we return on January 31?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It is my understanding that the House of Commons will adjourn until January 9, but I cannot say what that chamber will produce in way of work for us between the 9th and 31st days of January. The Transport Bill is now engaging the attention of the other place, and perhaps it will be the first piece of legislation that we shall consider in the New Year. The Bank Act is on the Order Paper, and I think there are three measures that have emanated from the Special Joint Committee on the Public Service. Besides these, there is other legislation, some of which may be passed by the other place before we re-assemble.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Emmett M. Hall, Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned and being come with their Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give Royal Assent to the following bills:

An Act to authorize the payment of contributions by Canada towards the cost of insured medical care services incurred by provinces pursuant to provincial medical care insurance plans.

An Act to incorporate League Savings Mortgage Company.

An Act to amend the Old Age Security Act.

An Act respecting the Boundary between the Province of Manitoba and the Northwest Territories.

An Act to amend the Export Credits Insurance Act.

An Act respecting the prevention of employment injury in federal works, undertakings and businesses.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

Hon. Jean-Paul Deschatelets: Honourable senators, this is the last Senate sitting before the Centennial Year. As Senator Hugessen, our distinguished colleague, may not be back with us after the recess, I would like him to move the adjournment of the Senate.

Hon. A. K. Hugessen: Honourable senators, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, January 31, 1967, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, January 31, 1967

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION BILL

FIRST READING

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons with Bill C-231, to define and implement a national transportation policy for Canada, to amend the Railway Act and other Acts in consequence thereof and to enact other consequential provisions.

Bill read first time.

SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Jean-Paul Deschatelets moved, with leave of the Senate, that the bill be read the second time now.

He said: Honourable senators, Bill C-231 is probably one of the most complex bills on transportation to reach us in a long time. I intend to cover in my remarks the most important features of the bill, and I will also say a few words about its background and its purposes.

It is not possible, honourable senators, to cover in every detail a bill of this proportion, which was examined during thirty-five sittings by a standing committee on transportation and debated during three weeks in Committee of the Whole in the other place.

If there is agreement on the principle of the bill on second reading, it is my intention to move that the bill be referred to our Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. The officials concerned will be in attendance, and proper answers on all questions of particular or regional interest can then be obtained, especially on points which I do not have time to cover completely.

As to the importance and scope of the provisions of this bill, we can fairly say, honourable senators, that in adopting Bill C-231 we will modify all existing legislation on transportation and all institutions or boards that have been created in Canada for regulating the various modes of transportation in so far as they are subject to the jurisdiction of Parliament.

In fact, the bill embodies the following modes of transportation:

(a) Railway transportation, now under the Railway Act;

(b) Air transportation, now under the Aeronautics Act;

(c) Water transportation, now under the Canadian Maritime Commission;

(d) Commodity pipe line transportation, falling under the jurisdiction of Parliament; and

(e) Motor vehicle transportation, so far as the federal jurisdiction applies under the Motor Vehicle Transport Act.

Before going further, honorable senators, I think I should deal with certain criticisms made of one aspect of the bill, that is, the constitutional right of Parliament to legislate on transportation, especially in connection with motor vehicle transportation.

We are all aware that the Minister of Transportation and Communications for the Province of Quebec has already stated that this bill impinges on the jurisdiction of the provinces. I do not think that anyone has ever seriously challenged the overall jurisdiction of this Parliament over railways that have been incorporated by Parliament. The same can be said of steamships and of all forms of navigation where Parliament's jurisdiction has always been considered supreme. As the Minister of Transport stated in the other place during the debate on this matter, even a canoe is not actually subject to regulations by a provincial government. Moreover, as all honourable senators know, Parliament's jurisdiction over aviation has been clearly decided by the highest courts. The only area where any conflict can seriously arise seems to be in the matter of the limitation of the jurisdiction of this Parliament over motor vehicle transport, and here a few words of explanation are necessary.

Until 1954, when the Privy Council made one of its last decisions applying to Canada, it might seem strange to say so but it was generally believed that the overall jurisdiction over highway transportation was exclusively provincial. However, the courts have decided that when a commercial carrier operating a bus or truck crosses a provincial boundary or serves more than one province, or when he leaves Canada to go to a foreign country, he is under the jurisdiction, and the exclusive jurisdiction, of this Parliament.

Pursuant to this decision of the Privy Council, the federal Government had no administrative machinery ready in 1954 for carrying out the exercise of this jurisdiction. On the other hand, the provinces had been accustomed to this administration and Parliament passed the Motor Vehicle Transport Act, which enabled the Government of Canada to confer upon provincial agencies certain delegated authority in that field. In other words, we authorized these provincial agencies to act as federal agencies for purposes over which the jurisdiction of Parliament has been recognized by the courts, and on the whole, we can say that the arrangement has worked very well. Provincial governments were informed of our intention to introduce such provisions under Part III of the bill, and as far as motor vehicles are concerned it was pointed out that all we are seeking to do is to specify in the legislation a reserved right or power in case it becomes necessary to use it.

This explanation would not be complete if I did not add that when the bill was introduced in the other place, or just before, the Prime Minister wrote to the premiers of all provinces and made clear that the Government did not contemplate precipitate action in this particular field of road transportation; and the hope was expressed that a federal-provincial conference would take place not long after the passing of this legislation.

To summarize this aspect of the extra-provincial motor transportation, I think it can fairly be said that no immediate action is envisaged for the present time. The provisions of the bill are flexible enough to permit this. Honourable senators will note that the bill is divided into six parts, and after the adoption of the bill—if it is adopted—it is intended that these different parts will come into force by proclamation on different dates.

Honourable senators, there are 94 clauses in this bill which result in major amendments to several acts of Parliament and minor amendments to at least fourteen other acts of Parliament. Bill C-231, in fact, represents the charter of a national policy on all modes of transportation falling under the competence of Parliament.

We are always very proud indeed, and justly so, to praise the vastness of our country, extending from sea to sea. However, it is precisely this particular geography of Canada which is the crux of our difficult problems of transport.

There was a time when the railway companies exercised a monopoly, or a quasi-monopoly, in the field of transport, but with the rapid industrial and technological growth of our country this no longer applies, except maybe in some distant regions. Today the railway freight car is not the only device providing facilities to heavy and long-haul transport. Airplanes, trucks, and ships are built in such a way as to cover any distance, and to transport everything under the sun. The time has come, therefore, to combine the various means of transport into a sole organization and under a single piece of legislation. The result of this will not only improve generally our transport system but will serve the public interest as well.

Honourable senators, when I mention "public interest" the phrase implies the concept of a measure of equity for all regions of Canada, and in a vast country like ours this is not an easy thing to implement. I know that previous attempts were made in the past towards this aim, namely, in 1925 and 1948, when the government of the day, by orders in council, asked the Board of Transport Commissioners to examine the freight rates structure in order to provide a better measure of equity for all regions of Canada.

Having assumed this responsibility, the Board of Transport Commissioners required a number of years to make its examination, and in 1955, I think it was, the board reported that equalization of rates in Canada involved the establishment of a fundamental base and a statistical survey which would take many years to complete.

In 1959 the government of the day seems to have been faced with a two-fold problem as far as transportation was concerned: a horizontal increase in freight rates on the part of the railways, and also the important and complex problem of abandonment of certain branch lines. The Government decided in 1959 to disallow in part the horizontal increase—I think it directed the Board of Transport Commissioners to reduce this increase from 17 per cent to 8 per cent. At the same time the Government decided to appoint a royal commission.

The MacPherson Commission was set up to consider, among other things, the inequities in the freight rate structure and also the obligations and limitations imposed upon railways through the years by law or by reasons of public interest.

The report of the MacPherson Commission was presented some time in 1961, and it is without doubt the genesis of the bill we have now to consider. However, as honourable senators will find, the delay which elapsed between the presentation of the MacPherson Report and the present bill has permitted the Government, with the experience of these years, to go much further in the provisions of the bill than the MacPherson Commission went.

If I may, I shall now say a few words about the highlights of the MacPherson Report.

In esence, the commission found that the inequities in the freight rate structure were the immediate result of horizontal freight rate increases. It was found that the railways applied the increases to traffic on which there was limited or no competition and omitted the increases where there was competition. Broadly speaking, this means that the increases were applied to the long-haul movement of relatively high-value commodities but were generally not applied to low-value commodities or to short hauls of high-value commodities. It is in the latter area, that is, high-value commodities and short hauls, that the effects of competition have been felt most keenly by the railways, although competition in recent years from trucks, ships, pipe lines and air transport has by no means been confined to short hauls or to high-value commodities. In addition, it was found that competition from air and the private automobile has been particularly effective in reducing the importance of the railway passenger service.

Looking further, the commission found that the rate increases by the railways were made necessary in part by obligations imposed upon the railways by law, custom and public policy. These obligations arose principally from operation of low-traffic density branch lines, operation of passenger trains and handling grain at low statutory rates. These obligations, the commission found, imposed burdens upon the railways which were not offset by related revenues.

If I said that the detailed recommendations made by the MacPherson Commission form the genesis of the bill, I must point out again that some experience gained since the report of the commission in 1960-61 and since the introduction of the first bill in 1964 has led the Government to modify the manner in which some of the recommendations were made. A good example of this is the somewhat different views reached by the royal commission on the question of branch lines abandonment, compared with the provisions of the present bill on this particular matter.

As far as the previous bill, edition 1964, is concerned, I must point out to honourable senators that it was merely an amendment to the Railways Act, though a substantial one. The real concept of the present bill was evolved between 1964 and 1966. The experience of recent years has convinced the Government that the economic regulation of transportation calls for unification, and not for division by mode of transport; and this of course is one of the highlights of the bill.

For this reason, the bill provides for and sets up a new body, the Canadian Transport Commission, whose duty it will be to implement Bill C-231, or the new national transportation policy.

I believe that the following three basic principles sum up the structure of this new transport policy. First, it envisages competition among transportation modes and companies as the chief regulator of rates and services. Second, it enunciates the principle that, where transportation facilities are provided at public expense, the user shall bear a fair proportion of the costs. Third, where burdens are imposed on transportation companies by law, the burdens should be borne by the public as a whole.

Honourable senators, I propose that we examine now, as briefly as possible, what I think are the most important clauses of the bill. Since the bill is divided into six different parts, we might comment on these parts, underlining in each one certain issues which I know are of national interest.

Part I covers clauses 2 to 21, inclusive, of the bill. Part I sets up the Canadian Transport Commission and outlines its powers and duties. As the Minister of Transport stated in the other place, probably with tongue in cheek, in the first place it will be one bureaucracy instead of three. It is important, I think, that we have at this stage an idea how this commission will work, at least the main line of its composition and duties.

As I indicated earlier, the new commission will replace three existing agencies, the Board of Transport Commissioners, the Air Transport Board and the Canadian Maritime Commission. The present members and staff of these bodies will be transferred to the new commission, with protection of their present terms of appointment. I believe that the authorized membership of these three bodies is about 13 officers, while the new commission will be composed of 17 commissioners.

The new commission is to have a president and two vice-presidents. It will be divided for working purposes into five committees—one each for rail, water, air, commodity pipe line, and motor vehicles—thus ensuring both expertise with respect to the individual modes of transport and efficient operation of licensing and regulatory procedures. The commission will have responsibility in two general areas, and I am summarizing here its powers and duties.

First, it will be responsible for the licensing and economic regulation, where appropriate, of all modes of transport under federal jurisdiction. Its second function will be to conduct investigations and to make recommendations to the federal Government on development and administration policy in all transportation fields. In this connection, the commission is given responsibility, in the legislation, for developing major research activities in support of these objectives.

I must say that a good deal of misgiving was expressed in committee in the other place about the possibility of conflict between what might be called the research, planning and development functions of the commission and its regulatory functions. The reason for appointing two vice-presidents is precisely to minimize such possibilities. One vice-president will deal with the research side, while it is intended to appoint as second vice-president a barrister, who will deal with the planning of operations.

This is the general structure of the new commission, and, as I said before, the existing appointments will just continue and all the rights which the present members of the various boards now have are safeguarded in the bill.

Normally, when hearings in one of the five committees is dealing purely with aviation matters, for example, the committee will be formed of those commissioners who are particularly competent in that field, and the same will apply to other matters such as railways and so forth.

Honourable senators, I might sum up here in a few words certain provisions of the bill dealing with the rates. The commission will not in fact set rates except under conditions where a particular mode of transport has a monopoly of common carrier transportation. Under such conditions, the commission may disallow existing rates or may require the carriers to substitute satisfactory rates or it may itself fix rates.

These rules apply only to commodity pipe lines, to motor vehicle transports and railways. So far as aviation and water transportation are concerned, the existing rules contained in the Aeronautics Act and the Transport Act are not changed.

The other general rule on rates which the commission will apply will be the rule that no rates may be below a compensatory level. In other words, a rate must cover the variable costs of the movement. What are variable costs? I think they can be defined as the directly traceable costs of the movement. They do not, of course, include any of the fixed or overhead costs of the carrier.

Hon. Mr. Pearson: May I ask what clause that refers to?

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: I think I will give that information to honourable senators in a minute, because here I am summarizing at times many clauses of the bill in order to give at least a general view of what is contained in the bill. It will also be noted that all activities of the commission will have to be financed out of appropriations voted by Parliament.

My comments on Part I, honourable senators, would not be complete without saying a word about the general appeal and review provisions of the bill.

An appeal may be made to the commission on acts or omissions of a carrier or the effect of the making of rates under the new rules contained in the act. An appeal may be made also to the Minister of Transport on applications for licences to engage in transport by air, motor vehicle, by water or commodity pipe line. The right of the appeal to the Governor in Council that exists in the Railway Act is preserved under the new legislation and is extended to all modes of transport. But, in order to bring more flexibility to these matters of appeal, there are provisions covering the right to review a decision of a committee respecting one mode of transport which is objected to by another mode of transport.

Having said that, honourable senators, may I now proceed with Part II of the bill, which covers clauses 22 to 28 inclusive.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Before the honourable senator goes on, might I ask him what goods he would expect to be carried by commodity pipe lines?

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: I am coming to this point, honourable senators. Part II has to do with commodity pipe lines falling under the jurisdiction of Parliament, which means transport through pipe line of commodities from one province to another, or others, or extending beyond the limits of one province. I may say here, that oil and gas moved by pipe lines will remain under the National Energy Board.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: They are not under commodity pipe lines?

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: No, but I am coming to another detail. As I said, oil and gas moved by pipe lines will remain under the National Energy Board, but if the pipe lines carries a commodity other than gas and oil it will come under the jurisdiction of the new transport commission.

Special rules are provided for the regulation of "combined pipe lines," that is, pipe lines designed to move commodities using a medium of oil or gas. An example of a combined pipe line would be a pipe line for moving sulphur in oil.

Honourable senators, I think we should now look at Part III of the bill, which covers clauses 29 to 37 inclusive. Part III deal with the federal control of motor vehicle transport. As I explained earlier, so far as federal jurisdiction applies, this mode is regulated under the Motor Vehicle Transport Act, which authorizes provincial highway transport boards to regulate extra-provincial trucking operations within their own borders as if they were intra-provincial operations.

I stated before that it is intended that these provisions will not be brought into force until the matter has been thoroughly reviewed with provincial authorities; I have some reasons for that, but there is another reason. The constitutional validity of the Motor Vehicle Transport Act has been challenged in an appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada, and the possibility that this act will be declared ultra vires makes it, for this reason alone, essential for the federal Government to be prepared to step rapidly into this field.

Part IV of the bill covers clauses 36 to 37 inclusive. It provides for the transfer to the Minister of Public Works from the Board of Transport Commissioners of the powers of the board with respect to the safety and construction of bridges that come under the jurisdiction of Parliament.

Honourable senators, we now come to the largest part of the bill, Part V, which deals with railways. This part of the bill is based broadly on the recommendations of the MacPherson Commission Report. It covers clauses 38 to 79, inclusive. Part V of the bill provides a new system for regulating the railway rates under conditions of growing competition, and for the assumption by the Government of Canada of burdens arising out of the maintenance of operation of branch lines and passenger services which lose money.

There are burdens which are imposed on the railways by law or custom. Some of these burdens date as far back as the building of the railway lines. The most important of these burdens in dollar terms is the burden of money-losing passenger services.

Under the rules established by the bill, if a railway wishes to discontinue a passenger service, it must first apply to the new commission.

The commission is directed to determine whether or not the service is losing money. If it is not losing money, there is no problem and the application will be dismissed. If it is losing money, the commission must decide whether the service should be discontinued according to a set of broad criteria which has been outlined with a view to safeguarding the public interest.

I must mention that under the provisions of the bill if any person wishes to present his views on the discontinuance of a service to the commission, it must hold hearings. If the commission, after reviewing the evidence, comes to the conclusion that the railway should continue a money-losing service, the railway may claim for the loss, and the commission may recommend that they be paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

Part V also has provisions dealing with the abandonment of money-losing branch lines, according to the same general principles as passenger train discontinuance, but because of their greater local importance in the Prairie Provinces especially, the procedure to be followed is spelled out in more detail. The commission can, where desirable, deal with abandonment applications on an area basis in order to avoid a piecemeal approach. The commission may make recommendations for exchange of branch lines or of running rights or connecting branch lines to other lines of railway and even to the lines of other railways. There are provisions that the cost of such connections and exchanges may be borne by the Government.

I must remind honourable senators here that the provisions with respect to branch line abandonment must be considered in the light of the Government's announcement that a certain network of lines in the Prairie Provinces will be guaranteed by the Government until January 1, 1975. If the branch lines are not part of the now guaranteed network, the railways must apply to the commission for authority to abandon these non-guaranteed lines, and after a hearing has taken place, as explained earlier, the commission may either grant or refuse the application depending upon the evidence. In short, the bill carries out the basic recommendations of the royal commission, that railway operations that are required to continue for reasons of national policy or interest should not be a burden on the shippers or on the railways themselves.

There was in the other place a long discussion preceding an amendment to the original provisions of the bill having to do with the Crowsnest Pass rates. The present bill, which includes all the amendments which were brought to the bill since its introduction in the other place, renews the statutory provisions with respect to the Crowsnest Pass grain and flour rates and makes statutory the related grain and flour rates for movements to Vancouver, Prince Rupert, and Churchill, under clause 328, page 42, while the so-called related rates are protected indirectly under clause 470 at page 65. Contrary, however, to the recommendations of the MacPherson Commission, the bill does not provide for a subsidy to the railways with respect to Crowsnest Pass and related rates. Conditions have changed remarkably since 1959, as honourable senators are aware. This applies particularly with respect to the volume of grain moved to export ports, and the Government does not now believe that the recommendations of the royal commission on the matter are necessarily applicable in 1967. The commission has, however, under clause 15 broad discretionary powers to inquire into and report to the minister upon situations where financial assistance to railways is required.

Honourable senators, I regret to say that it is not possible for me to conclude my remarks on Part V without mentioning at least some important clauses with respect to three particular situations. Firstly, I said before that unfortunately the royal commission had not enough time to deal with the special regional problems of the Atlantic area. As many honourable senators are particularly interested in this region, I would like to mention that there are provisions in Part V stating that rates on movements into, out of and within the Atlantic Provinces, which were reduced by the Freight Rates Reduction Act, are now frozen for a further period of two years by this bill; these include rates on coal, coke and timber. In the meantime a thorough and comprehensive study of the transportation system of the Atlantic Provinces is now under way and it is expected that by the time this freeze expires the Government will be in a position to act on the recommendations in the report.

Secondly, there are provisions also regarding rates on grain and flour moving to ports on the St. Lawrence or the east coast for export from elevators or flour mills in eastern Ontario or Quebec. These rates are made statutory, and provision is made for payment of assistance to the railways by the Government in respect of such movements. However, I wish to add that the bill does not in any way touch the feed grain subsidies which are governed by and paid under entirely different legislation introduced by the Minister of Forestry.

The third point—and of course you would expect me to say a few words about this—has to do with the general transitional subsidy to the railway companies. To avoid a too radical change in the financial position of railways, because of the change from the present system of subsidies to the new system set up by this bill, the legislation provides a general transitional subsidy. This subsidy begins at the level of $110 million for all railways this year and will decline by $14 million per year until it disappears in 1975.

It will operate along the following lines. The special subsidies for passenger services, branch lines and eastern grain and flour are payable first; and it is provided that if the total of the special subsidies is less than the general subsidy—for example, $110 million this year—then the difference is payable in addition to the special subsidies. If the special subsidies are greater for a given year than the general subsidy, then only the special subsidies will be paid.

Honourable senators, the last part of the bill—clauses 80 to 95 inclusive—protects the present rights of members of the Board of Transport Commissioners, the Air Transport Board and the Canadian Maritime Commission.

Honourable senators, I am now coming to the conclusion of my remarks. Before preparing these notes I went over some of the reports of the Transport and Communications Committee meetings in the other place and read as carefully as I could the lengthy debate in the Committee of the Whole, as well as other sources of information; so, if there is one person in this room fully conscious of the incomplete and superficial presentation I have given you, I am the one. However, I think that I have covered the most important features of the bill, and hope that at this stage it will be found satisfactory.

I know that many aspects of this bill are controversial, as the discussion in the other place has shown; but I must remind honourable senators that 34 committee meetings were held, 73 witnesses were heard and 36 extensive briefs were examined on this bill. From the start in committee, and later on in Committee of the Whole, more than 60 amendments—though not all substantive—were made to the bill. This shows that the Government, and especially the Minister of Transport, during all these discussions, kept the door open to any amendment which appeared to be an improvement in the provisions of the bill.

A tremendous amount of work has therefore been done already, and I think it is right to say that all parties have contributed in this effort, and that the debate on this matter in the House of Commons has shown Parliament at its best.

[Translation]

I should now like, if you will allow me, honourable senators, to comment on the criticism published in this morning's Gazette—which matter has already been mentioned in the other place. I should then, in closing, like to comment on that criticism with a view to proving that it is not justified. This editorial praised the thoroughness of the bill submitted to you to-day, adding that it should have been brought down years ago. This, of course, seemed to indicate that the Government, having received the MacPherson Report in 1960-61, had been remiss in not having dealt sooner with a bill of such magnitude.

May I point out that that criticism is also shared by the former Government which in fact received the MacPherson Report in 1960-61. But I will try to refute that criticism aimed at the former Government and the present Government by saying this: if the former Government, upon receipt of the MacPherson Report, had introduced such a piece of legislation, we would not have today a bill as complete as the one we are introducing. As a matter of fact, I proved that the MacPherson Report sets up some general principles. However, it was not enough to make up a bill such as this one. That was true also of the first bill introduced by the Government in 1964 which, in our opinion, was only a major amendment to the Railway Act.

What I want to prove is that when a government introduces such a wide ranging bill which might serve Canadians for generations to come, one mistake must be avoided and that is to improvise, to go too fast.

I feel that we now have a complete bill on transportation. Of course, we owe it to the MacPherson Commission report. We owe it also to all the suggestions and advice given in all the studies made by transportation experts. I wish to say also that if after those studies the Government agreed to 70 amendments—not all of them major ones—it shows that the Government kept an open mind about all the suggestions likely to improve the bill which is now before us.

[Text]

Honourable senators, one distinguished member of the official opposition in the other place—I think it was the member for Qu'Appelle—in the course of his remarks said that he believed that the great majority of the people of Canada are willing to give this policy of competition a try. I would go a few steps further in my appreciation and say that although the bill may not solve all our transportation problems, it will permit the Government for the first time to contemplate not only short-term but long-term solutions to those transportation problems. It is for this reason that I am happy to propose it for your approval.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Brooks, debate adjourned.

INCOME TAX AGREEMENTS ACT

BILL TO IMPLEMENT AGREEMENTS BETWEEN CANADA AND TRINIDAD AND TOBAGO AND CERTAIN OTHER COUNTRIES AND TO IMPLEMENT A CONVENTION BETWEEN CANADA AND THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA—FIRST READING

Hon. John. J. Connolly presented Bill S-56, to implement agreements for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax between Canada and Trinidad and Tobago, Canada and Ireland, Canada and Norway and Canada and the United Kingdom, and to implement a supplementary income tax convention between Canada and the United States of America.

Bill read first time.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for second reading at the next sitting.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Honourable senators, I do not wish to object, but it seems to me that we are placing a lot of bills on the Order Paper for the next sitting. As honourable senators know, we have all just returned to the Senate and it is rather difficult to pick up the loose ends, as it were. I am wondering whether we are not trying to do more than we really should in so short a time. I take it that some of the bills will be stood.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Most of them will be stood. May I say to the Leader of the Opposition, the purpose of moving as I have is simply to get the bills on the Order Paper so that we can proceed and be selective about them.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: With that assurance, I am satisfied.

Motion agreed to.

THE LATE HON. THOMAS V. GRANT

TRIBUTES

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, at this time may I ask for unanimous consent to refer to the death since we last met of Senator Grant of Prince Edward Island.

I am sure that it is unnecessary to repeat what was so eloquently said of Senator Grant's career at the time of his retirement on January 19 last year by the then Leader of the Senate, Senator Bouffard. He spoke not only of Senator Grant's retirement from the Senate but referred to his career and mentioned his family, his service in the Legislature of Prince Edward Island, his service in the House of Commons from 1935, and his service in the Senate from 1949 until the time of his retirement.

I am sure that I express the views of all honourable senators when I say here on your behalf that we extend our deepest sympathy to Mrs. Grant and the surviving members of Dr. Grant's family.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, I concur entirely in the remarks of the honourable leader, and on behalf of the Opposition I also express sympathy to Mrs. Grant and the family.

PENITENTIARIES

JOINT COMMITTEE—SECOND REPORT ADOPTED

Hon. W. M. Benidickson. Joint Chairman of the Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Penitentiaries, presented the second report of the committee:

> Your committee recommend that they be empowered to engage the services of such technical, clerical and other personnel as may be necessary for the purpose of the inquiry.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Benidickson: Honourable senators, with leave, I move that this report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 9, 1966

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ASKED IN DEBATE ON SECOND READING NOVEMBER 29, 1966, PRINTED AS APPENDIX

Hon. John J. Connolly: I move, with leave of the Senate:

> That the answer, tabled today, to the inquiry of the Honourable Senator Brooks, P.C., in the Senate on November 29, 1966, on second reading of Bill C-248, Appropriation Act No. 9, 1966, regarding supplementary estimates for the Centennial Commission, and certain other questions and answers, be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate of this day.

For text of answers see Appendix p. 1352-4.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

APPENDIX

(See p. 1351.)

APPROPRIATION BILL No. 9, 1966

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ASKED BY HON. MR. BROOKS IN DEBATE ON MOTION FOR SECOND READING, NOVEMBER 29, 1966

1. Question

The Town of Oromocto is situated near Camp Gagetown. I am wondering whether that amount has become a yearly grant from the Department of National Defence to that town.

Answer

The amount of $1,750,000.00 is provided in the Estimates (Defence Services) for 1966-67 to cover an Operating Grant to the Town of Oromocto, New Brunswick, in lieu of Municipal Taxes. The amount represents the difference between the total estimated expenditures for the year and revenue received from all other sources, e.g., Provincial subsidies, Municipal and School, Municipal taxes, rents, fines, licences, etc. The Grant is made yearly but varies from year to year, depending on the total expenditures and revenues of the Town.

2. Question

Does item 45—Mutual Aid—have anything to do with the cost of moving our air force from France into Germany?

Answer

No.

3. Question

What will become of the buildings and the other military setup at Marville and other Canadian stations?

Answer

Under NATO arrangements and the bilateral agreement between Canada and France, the buildings and permanent fixtures revert to France as the host country. Canada has the right to remove or dispose of movable equipment, materials, etc., and prefabricated structures paid for by Canada.

4. Question

With respect to item 1 under National Gallery of Canada, as to administration, operation and maintenance, including the payment of $500,000 to the National Gallery Purchase Account for the purpose of acquiring works of art, could a list be furnished showing some of the items that have been acquired by the National Gallery of Canada?

Answer

The following is a list of the items purchased or intended for purchase from this account during 1966-67:

5. Question.

In connection with the Centennial Commission, items 35, 40 and 45 specify the amounts that are to be paid to each of the provinces. Could this be broken down to show the amount that each province will receive?

Answer.

The following table shows the cumulative totals to October 20, 1966 and November 30, 1966.

The figures cover direct payments only; up to $200,000 will also be paid in total to the provinces by way of reimbursement. No breakdown of this amount is available at this time.

> HON. JEAN-PAUL DESCHATELETS: Honourable senators this is the last Senate sitting before the Centennial Year. As Senator Hugessen, our distinguished colleague, may not be back with us after the recess, I would like him to move the adjournment of the Senate.
> HON. A. K. HUGESSEN: Honourable senators, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

With those words, simple and clear, there came to an end one of the most distinguished parliamentary careers, made entirely in this chamber, that this country has ever witnessed.

Senator Hugessen was appointed to this chamber in January 1937. He was born in Great Britain, and was educated at Eton and later at McGill University in Montreal where he took his degrees in Arts and Law.

Senator Hugessen came to Canada originally as a very young man to work for the railway. His father was Lord Brabourne who once entertained Sir John A. Macdonald when Sir John was in Britain at the time of Confederation attending the conference leading to the passage of the British North America Act. Both his maternal and paternal grandfathers were members of the British House of Commons, as was his father before his elevation to the peerage. They were indeed real nineteenth century Liberals.

I remember visiting Balliol College at Oxford a few years ago and examining the plaques at the entrance to one of the quadrangles. I saw there the name Knatchbull-Hugessen repeated several times among the names of Balliol men who had died in the war. All of these people were kith and kin to Senator Hugessen. He himself served in World War I with the Canadian Expeditionary Forces in France.

By profession, Senator Hugessen is a lawyer, and there can be no question but that he was a leader at the Bar of Montreal. He was a partner in a firm of distinguished lawyers which at one time included among its number the great Eugene Lafleur. He was treasurer of the Montreal Bar in 1958, later he was its Bâtonnier, and Bâtonnier of the Bar of the Province of Quebec in 1960.

He has a great many business connections, and has been a member of the board of directors of many commercial and industrial organizations in this country. He was Chancellor of the Anglican Diocese of Montreal. You will recall that in 1963 he represented this Parliament at the funeral service for Pope John XXIII in Rome. On his return I think he spoke as feelingly about that great man as anyone, to my knowledge, has ever done. His speech made a deep impression upon all of us.

Senator Hugessen was a Governor of McGill University.

He was never a member of the House of Commons. In 1935 he was a candidate in St. Lawrence-St. George, running against the Honourable C. H. Cahan, who defeated him. I do not know that I can vouch for its accuracy, but there is a story prevalent about that occasion. At the nomination meeting he was nominated but was not present, and so was sent for. When he arrived at the hall with his wife he was informed that the Liberal party desired him to represent them, and he accepted. On that occasion Mrs. Hugessen was presented with a beautiful bouquet of roses. Some weeks later, probably after the election and his defeat, not to his but to her consternation he received a bill for the roses! To Mrs. Hugessen, who was quite concerned about it, he remarked, "This is perhaps your real introduction to politics, my dear."

Senator Hugessen was Deputy Leader of this house from 1950 to 1952. He sat in this chamber under every Leader of the Senate since the time of Senator Dandurand. On one occasion he told this story about the days of Senator Dandurand and Senator Meighen.

After a committee meeting Senator Dandurand arose in the Senate to explain a bill or a report of a committee, which he did in his usual "Edward Blakian" thorough way. He was followed by Senator Arthur Meighen who put his side of the case just as thoroughly, completely and concisely. Senator Hugessen thought he had at least a contribution to make, so he rose from the back benches to do this. Whereupon Senator Dandurand turned around in his place on the front benches, with his mouth open down almost to his waist in wonderment that anybody should have the audacity to rise and speak after such a thorough discussion had taken place between himself and Meighen!

Senator Hugessen was Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications from 1950 until his retirement. Everyone will agree, I am sure, that he displayed great judicial qualities in performing those duties. Some of the accomplishments of that committee under Senator Hugessen's chairmanship are I think worthy of notice. Some of them—and particularly the figure I am about to give—Senator Hugessen himself might not even remember.

During the time Senator Hugessen was Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications there passed through his hands 188 important pieces of legislation, as well as four important references. This legislation ran the whole gamut of development of modern Canadian transportation systems. They dealt with railway reorganization and development, the establishment of the St. Lawrence Seaway, the revision of the Canada Shipping Act, the inauguration of the pipe lines, and the establishment and development of the National Energy Board. The whole problem of telecommunications, both domestic and overseas, was considered, as was the development of radio and television in Canada, the harbour authority development, problems affecting international and interprovincial bridges, legislation touching the field of aeronautics and that of national highways. In all of this his firm hand was evident. His sound judgment and clear thought not only helped the Senate and Parliament, but Canada herself.

If honourable senators could read the list I hold in my hand they could not help but be impressed with the volume of work that passed through his hands, and the capacity that he showed in dealing with it.

I have said that Senator Hugessen was of British origin. I have said too that he was schooled in the classical liberal tradition of the nineteenth century. We all agree that his patriotism for this country was indeed something resplendent.

In 1917 he was at Ypres at the time of the federal election, and on that occasion he voted for conscription. In World War II when the question of conscription arose again, he was against it. In the Senate he spoke in favour of the plebiscite, and had this to say:

> It seems to me fundamentally important that we as Canadians should see to it that there is no repetition in the future of the divisions which separated us in 1917.

Senator Hugessen felt his Canadianism deeply. Early in 1945, while speaking in support of a distinctive national flag, and in anticipation of what was accomplished many years later, he was asked what was wrong with the Union Jack, and he, with his British origin, said this:

> The fact remains that it is the flag of Great Britain. It has no particular designation to show that it has any special connection with Canada...I think it is now time for us, like other members of the British Commonwealth, to design a flag of our own.

At the same time, while making his speech on the flag, he said he would welcome any steps which would place more emphasis on our present status as Canadians and less on our racial antecedents.

In 1949 he sponsored the bill for the abolition of appeals from the Supreme Court of Canada to the Privy Council. No one could question his admiration for the British system of justice and for the integrity and capacity that he knew existed on the British bench. But he concluded a great speech on that occasion with these words:

> Honourable senators, as a Canadian of British origin passionately interested in the development of our country as a free, a united, and a self-reliant nation, I welcome this bill. I believe it is a great step on our way to complete nationhood and as such I welcome it.

The economic liberalism that he believed in was a liberalism pragmatically adapted to the conditions of his times. In 1939, when speaking on the question of the deficits of the Canadian National Railway and the public debt which was thus created, he pointed out the necessity of public debt in every civilized country in order that the Government might provide the required services for the people. He saw public debt as an investment in the future, as an asset to the country and as a stimulus to growth. His thinking on this matter was much more advanced than that of his contemporaries.

Again, it was Senator Hugessen who supported a publicly owned Bank of Canada. In 1938, when speaking on that measure he said:

> I think it is quite conceivable that having this bank under our own control and in our own hands may result in a considerable extension of sound ideas about the relationship of currency and credit to the national policy.

Again, he was a steady supporter of the ever-continuing need for social reform. He said that there was no justification for extremes of wealth and poverty in this country. When speaking on the whole concept of social security in 1943—during the war years—he had this to say:

> I do not regard with any great alarm the prospects of high taxation. I am a believer in high taxation for purposes of social service, and in a redistribution by that means of the country's wealth, provided always that the taxation is fair and the social objects sought to be achieved are worthy of attainment. You can do a great deal by high taxation devoted to useful social purposes.

He insisted that even during the war the Government should implement social reforms to procure for all the people of Canada freedom from want and freedom from fear. To those who suggested that social reform should await the end of the war, he replied, quoting. Sir Winston Churchill's statement: "The true measure of nations is what they can do when they are tired."

In 1946, when the Government to which he gave his political allegiance proposed the extension of the Foreign Exchange Control Act in this house he opposed it. It is a measure of his foresight to note that within a year the board itself was abolished.

His speech in the debate on the bill to dismiss the Governor of the Bank of Canada may not have had the approval, on political grounds, of honourable senators opposite. No one, however, will deny that it was a debating speech of the first order. On that great parliamentary occasion his speech drew from one of the best informed press gallery correspondents—and not a supporter of the party to which Senator Hugessen belonged—the statement that it was one of the finest parliamentary performances he had ever witnessed.

Those present shall not soon forget the monumental speech he made a year ago on the Columbia River development. Not only was it an outstanding speech but, with a touch of genius, he reduced a problem of extraordinary complexity to its bare essentials, with a clarity and a cogency which commanded the respect and the admiration of us all.

In international affairs, Senator Hugessen believed that the Senate had a very special parliamentary role to perform for a country which was growing into a position of enlarged maturity in the international community. In 1945 he said this:

> Now, honourable senators, those are matters of vast import, and they fall outside the region of ordinary partisan activities with which we associate, and quite rightly, the Lower Chamber. It seems to me that the Senate of Canada can make a great contribution to the public life of this country by taking upon itself the function of deliberating upon international affairs in the same way that assemblies of similar character do in other countries. I refer particularly to the House of Lords in England and to the Senate of the United States.

At various times, indeed starting with his maiden speech in 1937, he promoted this idea. He deemed no part of this vast field unworthy of the Senate's attention, whether it be the United Nations, NATO, the Commonwealth, problems of trade, and of disarmament, problems of war and of peace.

Adrian Knatchbull Hugessen was a great parliamentarian and a great Canadian. Few knew him. He never sought publicity: he seldom got it. Yet his influence upon public affairs through the Senate was in my estimation so great as to be incalculable. He was and always will be one of Canada's great men of state.

For his contemporaries, his legacy here is the joy of having had an association with a great gentleman of great competence and great judgment. For those who follow him, his legacy is not only the inspiration but the challenge of a great career.

Hon. M. Grattan O'Leary: Honourable senators, I have always admired the fecility of speech which Senator Connolly (Ottawa West) summons on an occasion such as this. Surely this term felicity of speech could scarcely be applied more appropriately than when applied to one who was himself a master of speech.

I shall return to the matter of Senator Hugessen's speech later, but first I want to say this. Here we had a man with a lucrative law practice, a distinguished member of the Bar, yet who felt it his duty and thought it a matter of pride to serve for so many years in this house. I say that his long career of service shouted back triumphantly to the cynics who say that men are in public life only for what they can get out of it.

Senator Hugessen, steeped as he was in British parliamentary tradition, did not regard the Senate as a theatre; he thought of it mainly as a workshop. All of us here remember, as Senator Connolly has made clear, the devotion, the dedication and the wisdom which he brought to the more important of our Senate committees. Yet I imagine it was for his speeches here, for his style and for his parliamentary manner, that most of us admired him.

It was my privilege more than 55 years ago to have sat in the Press Gallery of the House of Commons and to have heard there some of the greatest speeches of the most famous orator of his day, Sir Wilfrid Laurier. And in intervening years I have heard as well the great masters of words on both sides of the Atlantic. I would not put Senator Hugessen on that plane and I am sure he would not want me to, but I will say without hesitation that with his copious vocabulary, his effortless command of the right word and his remarkable gift of lucidity, he was surely one of the foremost parliamentary speakers of our time.

Honourable Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton): He was not of the old school of purple rhetoric. He had not the literary grace or the beauty of a McGee, the searing phrases of a Meighen, nor the "Proud Full Sail" of a Laurier, but he did represent a type of speaking which Mr. Asquith, at Westminster, carried to its highest perfection.

Senator Hugessen's temperament would not permit him to soar into passion. He never became neighbour to the sun, and never tried to kindle an audience into flame, but, at the same time he never fell below a certain stately level, and it was a joy to hear him in exposition. Even when you disagreed with him you were compelled to feel that here was a remarkable example of what is known as "parliamentary style," here a master of parliamentary plausibility.

Honourable senators, the loss of such a man to this house is great, and the loss to our public life perhaps greater, for I have long held a conviction that we here in Canada, obsessed with materialism, obsessed with false gods of success, do not give to great public speech—to what Lord Morley once called "the glory of words"—the honour it deserves. Instead we are inclined to decry eloquence. We extoll what we call "the strong silent man," and some even sneer at what they call the "talking shop on the Hill." Whenever I hear people talk in that way, and especially young people, I think of lines by Rudyard Kipling which I have quoted often, incidentally spoken in Canada.

Kipling spoke of a masterless man who rose up and discovered words, words which walked up and down in the hearts of all his hearers, and he went on to say that after all it was the phrase, the naked phrase, which made or unmade the kingdoms and the glories.

That, honourable senators, is the truth, the truth of "words that call up transcendent meanings from the best passions of all bygone time," words which from Pericles to Lincoln and from Lincoln to Churchill have been the sentinels and safeguards of human liberty.

And so, honourable senators, speaking for this side of the house we say to Senator Hugessen, "Farewell and Hail!" We will remember him as one who adorned this house and was truly one of the great senators.

Fondly we wish for him and the gracious companion of his years an eventide of joy and glad grace, and all the brave and good things they both deserve so richly.

Hon. Salter A. Hayden: Honourable senators, you may think I am presumptuous to say a few words after the brilliant remarks which have been made by the previous speakers, but I have a few personal reflections gained over a period of 27 years of the 30 years that Senator Hugessen was in the Senate. These reflections are a personal assessment by me of this senator.

I can say that I prized his friendship very much and admired his ability tremendously. I say too that so far as the Senate is concerned, and the concept of the Senate over this period, his personality, his capacity and his integrity so much became a part of the workings of the Senate that one might say that they had impressed themselves into the very fabric of this body.

I admired tremendously the objective, analytic approach he had to the business of the Senate. He dealt in a very incisive way with the matters which were before us and wasted no time on the fringes of legislation. In that connection I recall particularly his speech on the Columbia River Treaty. I thought it was the most masterful exposé I have heard in all the years I have been in the Senate.

Men of the ability of Senator Hugessen, in their devotion to the work of the Senate, have assisted greatly in maintaining in full measure the Senate's place in the scheme of government and in the performance of his responsibilities. I would say that the trade mark of the work of Senator Hugessen was his earnestness and capacity in relation to whatever task he took on. There was, nonetheless, always room for the point of view of others.

From my own personal reflections may I say that I found Senator Hugessen always a friendly and wholesome person who enjoyed his work and his associations in the Senate. He was a leader in his profession, a leader in the bar of his province, at one time being its Bâtonnier-Général. He was prominent in public service and in the field of education; he was a man of many parts, capable in every field in which he moved and worked. He was invaluable to the work in this chamber.

I respect his decision to retire from the Senate, and I wish him health and vitality to enjoy the freedom that may come from that decision. However much I would have wished for his continued association with his fellow senators, to him I say au revoir and good health.

Hon. George S. White: Honourable senators, I would like to add just a word about my old friend Senator Hugessen.

Senator Connolly made reference to the fact that our former colleague had served in the First World War. I regret that he did not enlarge a little more on that important part of his career. Senator Hugessen was a real fighting man. He was not an officer. He attained the rank of sergeant, which, to old soldiers, places him in a very special category.

Though there are few senators here who are veterans of the First World War, I am sure we will all regret very much the resignation of Senator Hugessen, and will remember him in the days ahead. In future days in this chamber we will miss his friendly and cheery smile, his old-world manners and courtesy.

I wish the honourable senator and his gracious wife the best of health and every enjoyment in the years ahead.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I hesitate to rise at this time, but for one reason, which I shall mention shortly, I am sure you will agree with me that I should say a few words.

I, along with the other senators, regretted deeply Senator Hugessen's decision to resign. He is one senator whom we can ill afford to lose, and it will be very difficult to replace him.

The Leader of the Government has referred to the fact that Senator Hugessen was deputy leader of this House in 1952. I came into this chamber in 1953, and on doing so found that the desk immediately to my left was vacant. I asked Senator Hugessen if he would sit there, and he did so throughout the term of my office. I will always be indebted to him for the help which he gave me. I asked him to sit next to me so that I could turn to him for advice and assistance, and those of you who were in the Senate during that time will remember how often I took advantage of his knowledge and of his skill. He would present the most complicated legislation so clearly and concisely that when he was finished his presentation no one had any doubt as to the meaning of any clause or indeed any word in the legislation. It was a joy to listen to him at all times.

Honourable senators, I concur fully in all that has been said this afternoon about Senator Hugessen and his dear wife. We shall indeed miss her too. How often did we see her sitting in the gallery following the debates. She seemed to give an added tone to the Senate. Then, too, it was most pleasant to meet her in the corridors and to have a cheerful word from her. I feel we owe them both a debt of gratitude for the service which they have rendered to the Senate and through the Senate to this country.

However, honourable senators, in regretting Senator Hugessen's retirement, we have some comfort from the fact that he will now be able to enjoy the company of his wife, his children and his grandchildren, freed from the demands of the Senate, a place where he will never be forgotten and where he will always have a host of friends who will ever remember the great contribution which he made to the work of this house.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Would the Senate grant me the indulgence to do something unusual? Honourable Senator Pouliot is ill and has been in hospital for some time. He was very disturbed about the fact that he could not be present and pay his respects to Senator Hugessen on his retirement. He has sent a short letter of two paragraphs in this connection, and with your consent I would like on his behalf to place it on the record along with the other remarks made about Senator Hugessen.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): The letter reads as follows:

> For thirty memorable years, Senator Hugessen has been a tower of wisdom, logic and tolerance. He is remaining a beacon of legal knowledge in the Canadian Bar.
> Both Senator and Mrs. Hugessen have been known with deference as an ideal couple and they will be thus remembered with a great deal of affection.

IMMIGRATION

SECOND REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Leopold Langlois, Joint Chairman of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on Immigration, presented the second report of the committee:

> Your committee recommends that:
> 1. It be empowered to sit at Toronto, Ontario, and Montreal, Quebec; and
> 2. The clerk of the committee and the necessary supporting staff accompany the said committee.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Langlois: Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate, that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

FIRST REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Daniel Lang, Joint Chairman of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons respecting Mr. Justice Landreville, presented the first report of the committee:

> Your committee recommends that its quorum be fixed at seven members provided that both houses are represented.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Lang: Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate, that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

STANDING COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND COMMERCE

ADDITION TO MEMBERSHIP

Hon. Arthur L. Beaubien, with leave of the Senate, moved:

> That the name of the Honourable Senator Macnaughton be added to the list of senators serving on the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Motion agreed to.

STANDING COMMITTEE ON TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

ADDITION TO MEMBERSHIP

Hon. Arthur L. Beaubien, with leave of the Senate, moved:

> That the name of the Honourable Senator Leonard be added to the list of senators serving on the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Motion agreed to.

NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION BILL

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Deschatelets for the second reading of Bill C-231, to define and implement a national transportation policy for Canada, to amend the Railway Act and other acts in consequence thereof and to enact other consequential provisions.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, I realize that I am undertaking a rather difficult task and one to which I feel I shall not do justice. At the outset may I congratulate the honourable sponsor of this bill (Hon. Mr.

Deschatelets) who, I am sure you will agree, did an excellent job yesterday in explaining this very difficult piece of legislation.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Sometimes I think that those who undertake those responsibilities deserve much credit, and indeed praise. As we say in hockey, "he scored a goal" but I am sure he must have had some "assists". I have no doubt he took full advantage of whatever advice and help he was given. I wish I had the same assistance.

I will begin my remarks this afternoon on a note of optimism. I was very pleased to read in the Montreal Gazette yesterday a corporate report on the C.P.R., which bore the headline: "C.P.R. net up 25 per cent in year." A little further on the report said:

> For the full year 1966 net rail operating income was $50,219,767 compared with $40,239,707 in 1965, while gross revenues were $553,830,250 against $518,035,410.

There has also come to my attention an article on the 1966 report of Mr. Donald Gordon for the Canadian National Railways, headed, "Passenger revenue up 18 per cent, C.N.R. reports."

In part, the article reads:

> The report of over-all improvement in the railway's financial outcome for the sixth successive year came from the C.N.R.'s chairman and president, Donald Gordon. The year-end review will be the last for Mr. Gordon, who steps down from his post on Saturday.

He went on to point out that it had been a very successful year for the Canadian National Railways.

May I say—and I think you will agree with me—that much praise is due Mr. Donald Gordon, who was President of the Canadian National Railways for many years. I believe the public of Canada owe him a vote of thanks, and now that he has retired from the C.N.R. and is taking on other duties, I am sure we all wish him every success in his new work.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Honourable senators, as the sponsor of this bill explained yesterday, it is five years since we received the report of the MacPherson Commission. During the intervening period there has been much study of that report and much preparation on the road to the introduction of the bill now before us. A great array of specialists and particularly interested people have followed the progress of its preparation, and surely there is little more information that can be squeezed out of it in the Senate.

Yesterday evening the honourable Senator Deschatelets mentioned that between February and November 1966 a committee met steadily and brought out a report that was voluminous, as I am sure anyone who has tried to analyze or digest it will agree.

Furthermore, when this measure was considered in committee I understand that between 60 and 70 amendments were recommended; and when the bill was before the House of Commons there was lengthy debate, and these amendments were placed before the house and dealt with. So, as I mentioned a moment ago, I feel there is not a great deal that can be added here in the Senate.

I believe it was only right that there should be a thorough study of this problem. Frankly, I think it is one of the most thorough studies I have noted in my experience in Parliament. The members of the House of Commons who took part in the deliberations of the committee and in the debate in the house deserve great praise for the attention they gave this bill and the very serious problems of transportation.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: The Fathers of Confederation 100 years ago recognized transportation as one of our main problems. Perhaps in those days they placed it second only to defence, and also after the cementing or uniting of the two great races into one Canadian nation. Anyway, it was one of the serious problems at the time of Confederation, and for the succeeding 100 years, and it still is.

We all know that Canada is a difficult country in which to arrange transportation. From east to west, from Halifax to Vancouver, there runs a narrow band of inhabited land, in which there was little depth until recently, and the organization of transportation had to be based on the east-west theory.

One of the main arguments in favour of the two Maritime provinces, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, joining Confederation in 1867 was that they would be given proper transportation and connection with the other parts of Canada.

We all know the history of the building of the Canadian National Railways. If it went through Canadian territory the railway had to be built around a large state of the United States. The Maritime provinces comprise the only part of Canada where, in order to go from one part of our country to another, we have to make a detour around the territory of another country. This was and has always been taken into consideration in the cost of transportation in the Atlantic provinces. However, since those early days, as was so well pointed out by the sponsor of the bill yesterday, new methods of transportation have been developed. In the early days there was just rail and water transportation. Today we also have air transportation, pipe line transportation and, most competitive of all as far as the railways are concerned, truck and bus competition in the transport field in different parts of the country. Air transportation has opened up the great northern tracts of Canada. I do not know what the pipe lines will open up. As I understand it, as far as oil and gas are concerned, the pipe lines do not come under this bill, but there is the possibility, we are told, of pipe lines becoming a major conveyance in the future.

I was interested to hear the honourable senator say that sulphur, for instance, was already being shipped through pipe lines. I was interested also to read not so very long ago that a 300-mile pipe line was being built in the United States for the conveyance of coal. Coal is to be soaked in water and made into a sort of slush, and then conveyed by pipe line over this distance. If this can be done for coal and sulphur, then I am sure the time will come when other commodities will be transported in the same way.

I point this out to show that as far as the railways are concerned there is today in Canada tremendous competition. The picture, of course, has grown in this way. It has become evident over the years that a thorough overhauling of our transportation system and policies must be undertaken.

Five years is a long time to take making a study but, as we were told yesterday, possibly those years were justified because from the date of the report of the MacPherson Commission until this bill passed the House of Commons a few days ago many changes have taken place. Adjustments were needed, particularly on account of the freight rates which, of course, need very serious attention. The upshot of this proposed investigation was the appointment of the Royal Commission on Transportation by the Diefenbaker government in 1959, and which reported in 1962.

I am sure all honourable senators have a very good knowledge of that report. It is considered an excellent report. It dealt with transportation in all sections of the country, but particularly relating to the railroads. Bill C-120 was prepared in 1964 by the then government—they did not wait too long. The provisions of that bill were quite simple, as any honourable senator will see if he takes the trouble to compare them with those of the bill we now have before us. It can be said that in general both bills were based on the recommendations in the MacPherson report.

The late Mr. MacPherson, as my good friend seated behind me (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, Cape Breton) would be very pleased to tell you, was originally a Maritimer. He understood the problems of the Maritimes. He lived in the west for many years, and he understood the problems of western Canada. His appointment as chairman of the royal commission to study transportation was a very satisfactory one.

The honourable sponsor (Hon. Mr. Deschatelets) also told us that the bill provides for a national transportation policy, and contains the machinery, we hope, for the carrying out of that policy in connection with all modes of transportation under the control of the Canadian Parliament. It provides for amendments to the Railway Act based on the recommendations of the MacPherson Report, in which, we have been informed, national objectives are set out.

By this measure a body to be known as the Canadian Transport Commission is to be set up, and it will replace the existing agencies such as the Board of Transport Commissioners, the Air Transport Board and the Canadian Maritime Commission. This, I may say, is all to the good. The Canadian Transport Commission will have two main responsibilities, and is given tremendous powers. If the expressed desires are to be carried out, it will see to it that all parties—firstly, the public; secondly, the producers; and thirdly, the transportation systems—receive fair play. In general, I think that that is what this bill seeks to provide.

The Canadian Transport Commission will, first of all, be responsible for the licensing and regulating of all modes of transportation—by air, water, railways, road transport and pipe lines. It will also investigate and make recommendations to the government on the development and administration of policy, and in this respect will undertake research and review. No moves will be made in this connection until it is well known what they should be and in what direction they should be applied.

The commission will also be responsible for the licensing and economic regulation of commodity pipe lines and motor vehicle transport as that becomes necessary in the public interest. The honourable sponsor of the bill assured us yesterday that in the event of any difficulty arising with provincial governments there will be consultation, and that any such difficulty will be resolved by mutual consent.

The commission will consist of 17 members and will be divided into five subcommittees dealing with, as we were told, the different branches of transportation.

Some of the main provisions of the bill that were emphasized were those in connection with branch lines. I have been long of the opinion that the railways should not be compelled to maintain branch lines that were not paying unless they were absolutely necessary to the economy of the country, and were the only means of transportation in their particular sections. I am glad to see that there is provision made for the elimination of branch lines which may not be needed, and which have been a burden for many years on the railways and on the economy of the country.

This measure deals mostly with freight rates in general. The idea is that there must be competition between all the different branches of transportation, but that the competition must be adjusted and controlled so that it will be fair to all.

Generally speaking, competition would be very easy to control if all parts of Canada were in the same position. But, they are not. Different areas have different problems, as was discovered when the horizontal freight rates were established. The competition between the trucks and the railways in the central part of Canada meant that the freight rates there were reduced. In eastern and western Canada where there was not this competition the freight rates were higher and thus a burden was placed on the people in those areas—a burden which was not commensurate with the charges being made in the central parts of the country.

Then there is the matter of water transportation. In this connection I, as one who comes from the Maritimes, point out that we have been very much concerned over water transportation and the ice-breaking activities on the St. Lawrence River, keeping it open during the winter months. That results in a serious situation for the winter ports of Canada, such as Saint John and Halifax. In 1960, from January to March, only six ships sailed up the St. Lawrence to the City of Montreal. The number has increased in the winter months over the past few years. I am told that today there is an expectation that over 200 ships will be diverted from the ports of Halifax and Saint John and will be moving up the St. Lawrence River.

The Minister of Transport has assured us that there will be no special effort made to keep the St. Lawrence River open. Of course whatever effort is made will be at the expense of the people in general. In any event, the river is being kept open. The harbours of Quebec, Montreal and Trois Rivières are being kept open, and they are also getting assistance from the many ships which are coming in from other parts of the world. Russian ships in particular come in with their heavy steel hulls, and they assist in keeping the river open.

Perhaps we of the Maritimes will have to recognize that much as our ports of Saint John and Halifax will suffer, we shall have to reconcile ourselves to a situation which seems bound to happen. However, it is a sad sight at Saint John or Halifax to see perhaps only one or two ships in the harbour where once were many, loading and unloading, and also to know that the means of livelihood of thousands of men who depended on the winter ports for employment to maintain themselves and their families has been affected.

I think it bears repeating that the economy of the Atlantic provinces is extremely dependent on the railroads.

Honourable senators, I hope I may be excused for mentioning my own particular part of Canada in trying to review this bill.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Everybody else does.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: I am sure they do. The debate on the Crowsnest Pass will illustrate that; it was a highly successful debate. I find that it is utterly impossible for anyone to try to analyze this bill and to speak for every part of this counrty, even though qualified to do so, which I am not.

We in the Atlantic provinces have been sufferers, along with the railways. I think the railways may be said to be victims of circumstances very much the same as are the provinces, politically, economically and, if you like, historically. It has been our mutual misfortune that attempted solutions of our separate problems have almost always been, in part at least, at the expense of one another, and mostly at the expense of the Atlantic provinces.

In my opinion, the solution which the new railway legislation proposes will be implemented two years hence. I say two years hence, because the Atlantic provinces will not know for two years just what benefits, if any, they will receive, from this legislation, and they are deeply concerned on that account. I feel that this proposed legislation could and possibly will be in favour of the railways as opposed to these provinces. Henceforth, unless the legislation gives fair and just treatment, the economy of the Atlantic provinces will in practice, not necessarily in theory, pay the railways a rate which at the very least will be compensatory—a word which is used frequently in the bill—and it will tend to be as much more compensatory as the traffic will bear. That is my fear in this regard as to what damage this may do to the economy of the region.

Honourable senators, this statement may sound extravagant and somewhat of an oversimplification of the facts, but I think it is essentially correct. It does not bid well for the future industrial growth of this region. In any event, this is the fear of the people living there.

No consideration of Bill C-231 can be meaningful unless one keeps in mind throughout the full significance of rail freight rates to our economy, and in relation to our industrial growth and population. We all know from past experience that many young people are obliged to leave our part of the country, that the better educated people move out, with disastrous consequences even for our existing economic base. We must have industry, and in order to have industry in these provinces we must have cheap rates so that we can sell our produce and our goods in other parts of the country.

I am not going to enlarge on this any further at the present time, but perhaps I may mention some of the recommendations which were made by the Atlantic provinces to the MacPherson Commission when that commission sat in our area. First: Extension of Maritime Freight Rates Act to all carriers of outbound traffic. Second: Removal of assistance on internal rail freight movements—except Newfoundland. Third: Special separate assistance for outgoing manufactured goods beyond the area of the Maritime Freight Rates Act. This assistance is designated at 20 per cent of assistance within the area and 30 per cent westward outside the area to certain boundaries such as Levis, I believe, and other parts of Quebec. Fourth: Road building.

In this connection, I do not think it is out of place to mention the recommendation which is in the minds of the people of my province, and also I believe of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. They feel that where trucking has become such an enormous means of transportation, we should have through the State of Maine, which intervenes between us and other parts of Canada, a corridor road. I do not think that it is too much for the people of the Atlantic provinces to ask from the rest of Canada and I think it will come. We also ask for parity of Atlantic ports with American ports, and this is provided for in the bill.

We also protested the St. Lawrence Seaway. Canada today is paying very large sums of money for the seaway. It has been suggested that its tolls should be increased. The deficit runs somewhere around $40 million a year, of which Canada is paying a very high proportion, something like 70 per cent, although we receive far less than that in benefits. This should receive attention. This is of course an international matter, for consideration by Canada and the United States.

There is also a recommendation regarding flour and grain, which has been provided for in this bill, and we are very pleased to see it.

I would like to read from an editorial of January 25 in the Saint John Telegraph-Journal which I think expressed very well indeed the feeling of most of the people in the area I have spoken of. This editorial deals with the transportation bill under the headline, "No Worse Off—Maybe". I quote from the editorial:

> Changes in the government's transportation bill have apparently removed the immediate causes of Maritime alarm. They still provide no new benefits and no assurance that the act does not contain a time-bomb that will go off in our faces one day.

They say that because we do not know just what the bill will provide for us after this two-year term of review. The editorial continues:

> Transport Minister Pickersgill has reworded the legislation, under pressure of Atlantic protest, to delete the direct menace written into the original.
> The act still says that railway tolls and conditions must not leave any region at unfair disadvantage "beyond that disadvantage inherent in the location or volume of the traffic"—

There is a disadvantage as far as we are concerned in the location and in the volume of traffic. The article goes on:

> —which is just the nub of the region's problem—so there's no help there. But a phrase has been added to provide that the act is not to be interpreted to permit any "undue obstruction...to the movement of commodities through Canadian ports."

We are glad therefore to have that assurance. However, there is no definite assurance in the bill that the Atlantic provinces will not suffer through their location and their volume of traffic. This editorial is quite a long one but I should like to read another paragraph from it, if I may.

> The section of the act that may yet time-bomb Maritime ports and industry is Section 334, which will require the railways to charge "compensatory" rates on all traffic. It would be possible for such rates to push freight costs so high that even Maritime Freight Rates Act subsidies would not bring them down within competitive reach in relation to other regions. Meanwhile, the federal government is spending millions of dollars each winter on St. Lawrence River ice-breaking, is planning to spend $100 million for improvements to the St. Lawrence route, and is spending further millions to subsidize the St. Lawrence Seaway.
> So we are left hoping that the new Maritime deal promised after the transportation study will be a fair deal. And while we wait to find out, the weapon that could destroy us will be primed and ready, and its name is "compensatory freight rates."

Honourable senators, perhaps I should apologize for placing so much emphasis on this situation, but I feel that it is very important and that we are as much, if not more, concerned than other people in Canada in this new bill.

We may not be as good at putting up a fight as those from western Canada. I remember the debate on the Crowsnest Pass. They called it their charter. I congratulate them on having succeeded, though I do not know what was the particular danger.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: The Magna Carta.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: It does not go back quite as far as that, but it goes back to 1897, which is far enough. It brings to my mind that some years ago when I first entered politics I attended a meeting in a little country school. The main speaker took most of the time discussing the Crowsnest Pass. I do not think he knew anything about it but at that time it was politics, as it has been politics for a great many years. He harangued the audience and I listened to him, trying to learn something. I did not learn very much regarding it. In any event, near the end of his speech, he asked, "What are we going to do about this Crowsnest Pass?" Some fellow at the back of the hall, who may have been drinking something stronger than tea, shouted, "We will shoot the damn crow and tear the nest down."

Having listened to the western members in the other place the other day, it seemed to me that anyone who tries to shoot their crow or tear their nest down would have a difficult task. As I was brought up on a farm, I know that a crow is a pretty hard bird to shoot, for he can look after himself very well and keep out of the way.

Honourable senators, I have little more to say, as there are other members who will speak on this bill and will go over other sections of it and bring up points which I have not been able to touch.

I hope and trust that the new 17-man commission will be composed of outstanding persons who will understand the problems of all parts of Canada. I hope that in their deliberations they will assure equity for all parts and have regard for all Canadians. I hope they will show good judgment in deciding, for instance, on the abandonment of branch lines, that those abandoned will be those not needed and those retained will be needed in the public interest and for the public good.

I hope that careful consideration will be given to these so-called compensatory rates.

Honourable senators, I may say that I am in favour of the bill. I believe it holds tremendous possibilities for the future of our transportation. There are possibilities in it for good or evil, but I feel that those appointed on this commission will do justice to all parts of the country.

Honourable senators, before I resume my seat, may I say I was pleased to hear the honourable sponsor of the bill (Hon. Mr. Deschatelets) say that he would move later that this bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. This brings to my mind the former chairman of that committee. I was pleased to hear the eulogies expressed this afternoon in honour of Senator Hugessen. I recall the tremendous work that he did, here on the floor of this chamber and as chairman of that committee and in every other committee which he attended. He set a splendid example of dedication to duty which could proudly be followed by any senator.

I heartily agree with all the statements that have been made. My only regret is that a man of his tremendous experience so far as transportation is concerned—and I doubt if there is a man in Parliament today who has his knowledge—is not here to look after this very important bill which will be going to the Transport and Communications Committee. That is no reflection, honourable senators, on whoever may have that responsibility. I am sure no one would consider it was, realizing the background Senator Hugessen had in transport matters in this country.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Cape Breton) for Hon. Mr. Phillips, debate adjourned.

PUBLIC SERVICE

ENLARGEMENT OF REFERENCE TO JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. Maurice Bourget, with leave of the Senate, moved:

> That the Senate do agree that the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on the Public Service be empowered to enquire into and report upon the matter of the pensions paid to retired civil servants or their dependants under the provisions of the Public Service Superannuation Act; and
> That a message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that house accordingly.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, is it the pleasure of the Senate to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

CRIMINAL CODE (HATE PROPAGANDA)

The Senate resumed from Thursday, December 15, 1966, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Roebuck for the second reading of Bill S-49, to amend the Criminal Code.

Hon. Jacques Flynn: Honourable senators, I will give my introductory and closing remarks in English, but the rest I will give in French. I have been away for such a long time in the old City of Quebec where one does not hear English very much that I do not feel as sure of myself in English as I might otherwise feel.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Brantford): It does not show.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: You do not have to worry.

Hon. Mr. Flynn: Honourable senators, this debate, which goes back to the middle of November, has been more or less irregular, but the speeches have regularly been good.

I will not refer to the sponsor's speech; the honourable Senator Roebuck is always very interesting. I do want to single out one speech, however; that made by our new senator from Manitoba, Senator Everett. His maiden speech was excellent, and he has proven himself a powerful speaker. I am very pleased that his addition to this chamber has sort of re-established the balance of debating power, should I say, between the two groups or two sides of the house.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, it is obvious that during the present debate on this bill there is unanimous agreement against genocide and hate propaganda. We all agree and there are no dissenting voices. In addition, the same unanimity exists on another point: there is no urgency or any emergency situation in Canada which would prompt us to pass this bill without delay. As a matter of fact, the matter has been under discussion here for over two months, and nobody has put or attempted to put pressure on members of the Senate to hasten the passage of this bill. Besides, in the other place, the question of joining with the Senate to set up a joint committee in order to consider the matter is still in abeyance. Furthermore, the speeches indicated an almost complete unanimity on the necessity of amending this bill and the most ardent advocates of this legislation themselves recognize this; they are very few—I would say there are only Senator Roebuck and Senator Everett. Most of the other senators were severely critical and noted several errors and obvious defects. There are then two main criticisms, first, the uselessness of the act since we already have in the Criminal Code all the means required to meet the problem as it exists in Canada at this time, and, as I have said, there is no urgency. Secondly, the provisions specifically referring to hate propaganda involve a great risk of limiting freedom of speech.

I agree with those two main objections. I do not intend, in order to justify my stand, to go into the details of the bill. The senators who spoke before me proved fully the worth of those objections.

I merely wish to point out the anomaly which would result from the passing of this bill. It provides a five-year prison term for whoever promotes or advocates genocide, that is, the destruction of a group or several members of a group, while the Criminal Code already provides for imprisonment for 14 years. It seems most illogical to stipulate a lesser penalty for the destruction of a group than for a single individual. It strikes me that imprisonment for five years for a group, as compared with 14 years for an individual, is quite illogical, and because I am no expert in criminal law, further explanations would be needed to convince me of the merits of that proposal.

The object and the principle of a legislation are two things entirely different. The object may be excellent. It is excellent for the time being. Generally speaking, we cannot say that the legislator always has a good intention. But the principle does not include only the intention of the law-maker. It includes also his approach to the problem. If the bill is useless, its principle might be tainted. If it is not urgent, its principle may be tainted. It might create a disadvantage and when there is no emergency as in this case, the principle becomes wrong.

Senator Hayden, who made a remarkable speech, said this on page 1227 of the Debates of the Senate, concerning the provisions with regard to genocide:

> My first observation is that the provisions with respect to genocide should not appear in this bill. This is my firm belief.

Further on, on page 1229, he said with regard to the committee:

> But let the joint committee study it and tell us so. I would not have committed myself, in my view, to the principle of the bill beyond this.

The Senate has already made known its intention to set up a joint committee which will study the subject matter of this bill. For one reason or another, the other place has not yet approved the setting up of that committee. I would not like to vote for the bill because, in my opinion, since I do not approve of its principle I would therefore bind the committee which eventually will be set up.

Moreover, I wonder what would be the reaction of the members of the House of Commons appointed to sit on the joint committee before a bill whose principle had been approved on third reading by the Senate.

The committee has not yet been set up. Therefore, I will not move to refer the bill to a committee even before second reading, as I intended to. However, I intend to ask for postponement of the debate today, even though I might add some remarks later. That will make it possible to keep this item on the orders of the day as long as the other place has not decided to appoint its own members to a joint committee of both houses to study the bill.

[Text]

I have just said that I intend to move that this bill be not now read a second time but that the subject matter be referred to the special joint committee which has been proposed. Since this committee has not yet been formed in the other place, I now move the adjournment of the debate and reserve further remarks on the bill until such time as the other place has made a decision on the formation of the committee.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Flynn, debate adjourned.

JUDGES ACT

BILL TO AMEND—SECOND READING

Hon. Eric Cook moved second reading of Bill C-262, to amend the Judges Act.

He said: Honourable senators, Bill C-262 is a short one and it will be quite apparent upon reading it and from the explanatory note that it requires very little further explanation. The purpose of the bill is to authorize provision of salaries for one additional County Court judge in British Columbia and one additional County Court judge in Ontario.

With respect to the additional County Court judge for British Columbia, it is proposed that the appointment be made for the County Court of Westminster County. Westminster County has at present two County Court judges. The county, I am informed, includes not only the cities of New Westminster and Chilliwack, but also the greater part of the lower Fraser Valley, and the growth of the population in this area has made the services of a third judge necessary. The appointment of an additional judge to the court was requested by the Attorney General of the Province of British Columbia and by both judges of the County Court of Westminster County.

The provision for an additional County Court judge in Ontario was made by the legislature of that province in July of last year by an amendment to The County Judges Act. Following passage of this amendment, the Attorney General of Ontario requested that the Judges Act be amended to provide a salary for this position. It is intended that the additional judge will be appointed for the county and district courts of the counties and districts of Ontario, and not for a particular county. Judges so appointed have authority to hear cases throughout the entire Province of Ontario and are assigned by the Chief Judge of the County Courts to the area where their services are most urgently required. The new judge will be Judge at Large, otherwise known as a roving judge.

Honourable senators, if it is considered desirable that this bill should be referred to committee, I shall move that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. David Walker: Honourable senators, it is an interesting situation that in this great country we should have one of our colleagues from Newfoundland move that new County Court judges should be created in British Columbia and Ontario. This shows how broadminded are the members of this chamber.

Hon. Mr. Connolly: Hands across the continent.

Hon. Mr. Walker: Despite the view held by some members on the other side, I think it is fair to say that we have in this country a magnificent judiciary, and this applies to all the provinces. At the present time, because of the tremendous explosion in the population of Ontario, we are greatly in need of an additional County Court judge, perhaps two or three. I understand the same situation exists in British Columbia, and I know that everyone on this side of the house is very much in favour of this bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Cook: If it is not considered desirable to send this bill to committee, I move, with leave, that the bill be read the third time now.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, February 2, 1967

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

DIVORCE

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I desire to present a number of petitions in divorce.

May I take advantage of the fact that I am on my feet to ask permission to place on record a number of statistics in connection with the work of the Standing Committee on Divorce.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I have now been Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce for approximately thirteen years, having succeeded my friend Senator Aseltine, who was chairman for the previous ten years. I would like to place on Hansard some figures showing how the cases have grown in number during my tenure of office. In 1952-53 there were 282 cases, and in 1962-63 there were 513.

Evidence was given before the special joint committee studying divorce that in the first 12 years following Confederation only eight cases were tried—eight cases in 12 years! Honourable senators perhaps will be interested to know that in 1966 we tried more than 1,000 cases.

We have had very few cases in which there was a remission of fees. Each petitioner has paid $210, and some of the mathematicians in the chamber will no doubt figure out what that amounts to. A thousand cases at $210 a piece means quite a substantial revenue.

I have the cases that we have tried listed according to the various times of approval. A total of 1,106 cases were dealt with. As of January 17, 52 had not yet been moved in the Senate. There were 13 annulments, 19 withdrawals, and 14 cases held for further evidence.

There were 235 cases ready for hearing and unopposed—this shows that we were pretty well up with the work as of the date I mentioned. Forty-eight opposed cases are ready for hearing. It will be seen that the number of cases being opposed is increasing.

Cases heard but waiting approval at the next committee meeting, number between 80 and 100. As a matter of fact, we have just a few minutes ago approved as many as 111 cases. If we were in business I would say that we were doing a pretty brisk business.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the committee's reports Nos. 1042 to 1098 inclusive, and moved that the said reports be taken into consideration at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

INCOME TAX AGREEMENTS ACT

BILL TO IMPLEMENT AGREEMENTS BETWEEN CANADA AND TRINIDAD AND TOBAGO AND CERTAIN OTHER COUNTRIES AND TO IMPLEMENT A CONVENTION BETWEEN CANADA AND THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA—SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, with the agreement of Senator Brooks, I ask that we proceed now with Item No. 5 on the Orders of the Day, namely, the second reading of Bill S-56 to implement certain tax agreements.

The Hon. the Speaker: Is it agreed?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Salter A. Hayden moved second reading of Bill S-56, to implement agreements for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax between Canada and Trinidad and Tobago, Canada and Ireland, Canada and Norway and Canada and the United Kingdom, and to implement a supplementary income tax convention between Canada and the United States of America.

He said: Honourable senators, Bill S-56 is divided into five parts, and each part approves and declares to have the force of law in Canada and agreement made between Canada and, in the first case, Trinidad and Tobago; in the second, Ireland; in the third, Norway; in the fourth, the United Kingdom; and in the fifth case, as to a supplementary convention with the United States.

In relation to these different countries we have had a tax convention with the United Kingdom. We have one presently existing with the United States and we have one presently existing with Ireland.

The agreement with Trinidad and Tobago is new. We ventured part way a year or so ago with Norway, and I believe the matter got to the stage of first reading in the House of Commons and did not get further at that time, for reasons with which we are not now concerned.

With respect to Trinidad and Tobago, we are taking advantage of the opportunity of a new agreement with the United Kingdom to make a separate tax convention with Trinidad and Tobago, because in the interim it has become more or less a self-governing country. The treaty or convention we had with the United Kingdom before that also included the then colonies of the United Kingdom, and hence Trinidad and Tobago were covered.

The duration of each of these agreements is provided in each case. The provision as to Trinidad and Tobago, Ireland, Norway and the United Kingdom is that when the agreements come into force they will continue indefinitely, with provision for notice of termination by either country, and provides the date when the termination becomes effective.

As to the United States, the provision with respect to termination is a little different. The provision in the main agreement—and this is only a supplementary agreement—is that on six months' notice the agreement may be terminated at the beginning of the calendar year following the year in which the six months' notice was given.

Honourable senators, I shall devote a reasonable amount of time to explaining the convention with the United Kingdom, and then give you the necessary means by which you can gather the information in relation to the other treaties. I shall deal briefly with the United States.

I should state that we had a tax convention with the United Kingdom dated 1946. In 1960, as a matter of government policy, we changed our withholding tax provision in relation to the percentage of withholding tax, and at that time provision was made for a 15 per cent withholding tax in relation to dividends distributed by a company in Canada to a non-resident shareholder. In the United Kingdom agreement there was a provision under which, in the case of a wholly-owned subsidiary, the dividends flowing from Canada to that wholly-owned subsidiary in the United Kingdom would flow without tax.

Canada endeavoured over a number of years to secure an amendment to that tax convention so as to reflect this change in the withholding tax rate. It was difficult to secure an arrangement with the United Kingdom. Then, during the latter part of the period of the negotiations they were revising and changing their own tax structure. Accordingly, in 1964 Canada served a notice of termination, as a preliminary to negotiating a new agreement.

You will recall that because there were certain items in the relationships between Canada and the United Kingdom that required a high degree of certainty as to tax, an interim agreement, or a stop-gap agreement, was entered into between Canada and the United Kingdom. We had that measure before us here in the Senate; and you will see by Hansard of May 5, 1966, I was privileged to give the explanation on the second reading of that bill. The headings which were dealt with at that time were only four in number, as being the items that required particular certainty. They were the business, commercial and industrial profits, the relationship of a permanent establishment to that kind of operation, copyright royalties, pensions, and the profits earned by ships and aircraft operating in international traffic.

There were many other things that could have been said to have been very important, but these which I have mentioned were regarded as requiring immediate certainty.

Now we have an agreement which deals fully with all the various heads of relationships that might attract tax as between Canada and the United Kingdom, and that is what we have before us at this time.

I can tell you that the provisions of the stop-gap agreement were approved last year, and I might observe, too, that Senator Thorvaldson spoke on the bill when it was in the Senate in May of last year. These provisions are assimilated into the present treaty.

In giving the explanation in May—from which I am not going to read at this time, because you will find it in Hansard of May 5, 1966, pages 441-443—I took particular care to develop how government pensions and non-government pensions, payable from a Canadian source to residents in the United Kingdom, and then the reverse situation, were dealt with both under the old treaty of 1946 and in the period when there was no treaty or convention, and how they were dealt with by the stop-gap agreement of 1965. Since those provisions are now assimilated into the present agreement, it is simply a matter of reference to what was said at that time.

So far as Ireland is concerned, they were requested to consent to an amendment by reason of our settling on a fixed rate of withholding tax of 15 per cent. They had enjoyed a situation where, in certain relationships of a percentage of voting shares, they would have a 5 per cent withholding tax instead of 15. Now, the Irish were reluctant—I think that is the right word—to amend the existing agreement, for two reasons. One was that they had a few other matters that they wanted to put forward. Secondly, they felt it desirable to consider the work of the organization which had developed, which had been in existence for some time in Europe, and was then enlarged by the addition of the United States and Canada into what is called O.E.C.D.—the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development—which is really now, and probably has been since 1960, made up of most countries in the world who are interested in the business of development of trading among countries. The fiscal committee of O.E.C.D. had evolved what may be called a standard form of tax convention. I can say that this standard form in skeleton has been pretty well followed in the tax conventions which you have before you now. The Irish felt that, since this had been set up, the treaty should be pinned upon the skeleton of the standard form settled by the O.E.C.D.

Now, as to the provisions of these treaties, first I want to tell you about what the United States treaty does, because it has only one item. It deals with a situation where you have a company organized in Canada which afterwards becomes a nonresident company by taking the necessary steps to change its head office and relocate itself somewhere outside Canada and the United States. It would then do its housekeeping and its business operations from its new location.

As a result of that, the United States withholding tax of 15 per cent applied to dividends and interest being paid out of the United States to this company, because this company was a Canadian company in the sense that it had been organized in Canada. The United States general rate of withholding tax is 30 per cent. This procedure had been adopted—I was going to say fairly generally in Canada, but perhaps that is the wrong description. Perhaps I should say that there were many cases where use was made of this method of incorporating a Canadian company and then transferring residence so as to accomplish what has come to be known in the income tax branch as the practice of stripping dividends, and things of that kind, and getting the benefit of the 15 per cent rate.

The amendment in this supplementary tax convention provides that in such circumstances where the Canadian company is a nonresident of Canada, the 15 per cent convention rate will not apply, but that the general 30 per cent rate will apply. That, of course, will increase the tax revenues of the United States. So far as Canada is concerned, however, it does not change in any way its tax revenues.

In the meantime, we amended our own law last year. I think you will find that in section 139 (4a) of the Income Tax Act, where we provide that a company incorporated and organized in Canada after April 26, 1965, or if so incorporated before April 27, 1965, and if it carries on any business in Canada at any time in the taxation year, or has done so at any time in any preceding taxation year of the incorporation ending after April 26, 1965, or if it was resident in Canada during such times, then such corporations shall be deemed to have been resident in Canada throughout the whole taxation year.

So we have covered the situation with respect to companies that, as of and from April 1965, are incorporated in Canada. They are barred from taking this sort of proceeding and thereby escaping from Canada into a nonresident status—and whatever may be the tax implications or the advantages. They are also affected insofar as the United States situation is concerned.

There are still quite a number of companies that had achieved their nonresident status before this legislation came into force, and I would say the supplementary tax convention is designed to deal with those. Our amendment last year was designed to bring them back into the fold as full-fledged Canadian corporate residents, if they made any step by way of carrying on any operation in Canada after this critical date.

Now, that is all I have to say about the United States supplementary tax convention. That is all it does.

I should tell you that the United Kingdom agreement is a general treaty covering a wide variety of headings. At this time, in order to expedite the explanation and not wear your patience thin in the course of giving the explanation, I have prepared a memorandum which takes in all the headings that are dealt with in the tax relationships between Canada and these various countries whose tax convention agreements are before us in this bill.

Under the headings U.K., T. & T.—which is Trinidad and Tobago—Ireland and Norway, and in relation to those topics that are dealt with so far as tax is concerned in the convention, I have indicated where they occur in the four different treaties. I have given the article number in relation to each country so that for ready reference you can look at the headings and can turn to that particular convention and find the article and read it in its entirety. I must admit I was a little selfish in doing that; I thought by taking a little time on this tabulation it might save some time in my explanation of each of these treaties.

I would therefore ask your permission to have this document included in the record of my remarks on second reading of this bill.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: You will notice in some cases that there is a blank under one or more countries in relation to a particular item. It simply means that item is not developed in that particular tax convention.

(The table follows)

Honourable senators, I want to make a slight comment on some of the topics and headings dealt with in the United Kingdom convention. You will see there the numbers of the various clauses dealing with the various classes of income and how they are dealt with.

As to dividends and interest, it is agreed that withholding tax on dividends and interest payable from sources in the United Kingdom to a resident of Canada shall not exceed 15 per cent of the gross amount, and Canada agrees that in the reverse situation this withholding tax on dividends and interest shall not exceed 15 per cent. So far as the United Kingdom is concerned this is a substantial reduction from their general rate, which I believe is 41½ per cent. In this connection I would mention that copyright royalties are exempt, and you will find the enumeration in Article 11 of the United Kingdom treaty with the extended meaning following the use of the words "copyright royalties".

In connection with patent royalties and royalties other than copyright royalties, withholding tax shall be at a rate not to exceed 10 per cent of the gross amount of such royalties. This represents a concession on the part of Canada because these were 15 per cent. It was felt that since the United Kingdom had reduced their taxation from 41½ per cent to 15 per cent on the withholding tax on interest and dividends, we should make some concessions too. We have reduced our rate from 15 per cent to 10 per cent. This is the only item in which there is this reduction. In others it remains at 15 per cent for this type of royalty.

As to United Kingdom surtax, by the new agreement individuals resident in Canada are in effect exempt from United Kingdom surtax from dividends, interest, patent and copyright royalties and alimony.

There is a new item in here dealing with alimony and maintenance payments. Before we assembled today I searched in vain for something which might possibly add a bit of romance to the consideration of tax conventions. I finally decided that this was not possible, but I have an item which might be described as the negation of romance. In connection with alimony or maintenance, it is provided that such payments are to be exempt in the country from which they are paid. For example, where the source of the payments is in Canada there will be no Canadian withholding tax of 15 per cent levied on such payments to United Kingdom residents. This also works in reverse.

In relation to teachers and students we have a number of provisions. In the first, professors or teachers resident of one country and teaching for up to two years in the other country are taxable on their remuneration for teaching only in the country of residence and not where teaching. You may find a few words of limitation in there, but they are easy to understand.

Furthermore, a person in receipt of a grant, allowance or award for the primary purpose of research from a government, religious, charitable, scientific, literary or educational organization in one country who goes to the other country for a period not exceeding two years to perform such research is not taxable on the amount of such grant in the country where he is carrying on the research.

The third type in this category is a student or business apprentice of one country who goes to the other country for instructions and who is not taxable in the country where he is studying on remittances for his maintenance, education or training received from outside such country.

Then we come to the general rules on salaries, wages and similar remuneration. Where such remuneration is derived by a resident of one country in respect of an employment, he is subject to tax only in that country unless the employment is exercised in the other country and if so such person is subject to tax on his remuneration in that other country. However, notwithstanding this provision he is subject to tax only in the country of residence if: (a) he is present in that other country for a period or periods not exceeding 183 days in any Canadian taxation year or the United Kingdom year of assessment, and (b) his remuneration is paid by on behalf of an employer who is not resident in that other country, and (c) such remuneration is not deducted from the profits of a permanent establishment which the employer has in that other country. Then the only tax he would have to pay on his salary or remuneration would be the tax payable in the country of his residence.

There are certain broad exceptions, however. For instance, the country of residence of an individual or an enterprise has the sole right to tax profits or remuneration from, (i) the operation of ships or aircraft in international traffic; (ii) copyright royalties in respect of literary, musical or artistic works, not including films; (iii) pensions and annuities, with certain exceptions. These exceptions are very clear. The same rule that applies as to when an employee in certain circumstances is subject to tax where he is working, even though he is resident in another country, also applies in the case of a director who may be earning director's fees and who may be attending directors meetings, for example, in the United Kingdom while a Canadian citizen.

Then, honourable senators, we come to professional services or other independent activities of a similiar character. The general rule is that the income of a resident of one country for such services is subject to tax only in that country unless he has a fixed base regularly available to him in the other country for the purpose of performing such services. In such case, then the portion of the income attributable to that base is taxable in that other country.

The next item I want to deal with concerns public entertainers. Income derived by public entertainers such as theatre, motion picture, radio or television artistes, and musicians, and by athletes from their personal activities as such may be taxed in the territory where such activities are performed. Of course that means that if it were a Canadian athlete performing professionally in the U.K., he would be subject to tax on the earnings or remuneration that he received for that activity. Being a resident of Canada, he would have to bring the income home and report it in his income in Canada, but under the provisions he would be entitled to a credit for the tax paid elsewhere, subject to the limitation that you will never get a credit for more tax than you would otherwise have to pay.

On the question of pensions, I referred you to the debate in this house in May of last year, so I am not going to say much about that subject. However, I will mention that any pension or annuity derived from sources in one country by an individual who is a resident of the other country shall be exempt from tax in the first-mentioned country. It is the residence of the pensioner or annuitant which determines the country that taxes such income. That is the general rule. This new rule is that the pensioner is taxable where he is residing. The old rule used to be that the pensioner was taxable by the paying country, the country that was paying the pension.

Particular situations are dealt with in a number of the articles in the tax convention, and as these pertain to particular situations I think it is quite unnecessary for me to go into that kind of detail, although if there are any questions in connection with them I am ready to do so. Some of those particular situations even deal with individuals in one country who are performing or discharging government functions in the other country; and it also deals with the spouse or other dependent of such person, either before or after the critical date which decides under which law—either the old 1946 convention or the present one—the tax is received.

However, there is a saving clause in all this, that the pensioner really has the opportunity in those circumstances to determine which way he may go, and he can elect the way which will impose the least tax on him. At the present time, having regard to the rate of tax in the U.K and the rate of tax here, wherever election is possible I think that for the time being the pensioner might elect to be subject to the Canadian rate.

Capital gains are now covered in the United Kingdom legislation and, therefore, there are incorporated into this tax convention provisions in relation to capital gains and income from the direct use, letting or use in any other form of immovable property. It is taxed in the territory where located and where such income is derived.

As to movable property, if it forms part of the business property of a permanent establishment which an enterprise in one territory has in the other territory—for instance, that Canada has in the United Kingdom—it is taxable in the territory where located, but you exclude from that all gains on the sale of ships and aircraft in international traffic and movable property pertaining to its operation which are taxable only in the home territory. Beyond that, the alienation of movable property, other than described above, is taxable in the territory of which the alienator is resident.

There are one or two other things which are reasonably new.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Might I ask a question?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Certainly.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Does that mean that a resident of the U.K., who made a capital gain on the sale of land in Canada, would be taxable on the profit that arose from that sale?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Where, in Canada?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: No, it would have to be income under Canadian law, but he would be accountable in the country of his residence, which is the U.K. This does not make anything taxable in Canada, unless by the law of Canada it is income in Canada.

We have continued the principle of a permanent establishment in relation to business and industrial profits, and you will find a whole page, or perhaps two pages, in the U.K. tax convention, and indeed in the tax conventions other than with the United States, illustrating the factors which will determine whether an enterprise in Canada has a permanent establishment in the U.K.

If it has a permanent establishment in the U.K., as a general principle it will be taxable upon the profits from that operation in the U.K. But the basis for taxation will be as though it were a separate operation or a separate company and the proper deductions for such an operation would be made. That works in reverse as far as Canada is concerned.

So far as Canadian life insurance companies carrying on branch operations in the U.K. are concerned, in the old convention of 1946 they had a formula, a rough-and-ready formula, by which they determined the amount of world investment which would be taxed as investment income in the U.K. Roughly speaking, they took the world investment income, and then they took the total premiums paid in the United Kingdom over the total world premiums, and that percentage of the world investment income was the amount of investment income taxed in the U.K.

However, difficulties developed. I think an Australian insurance company went to the House of Lords quite a number of years ago, as a result of which it was held that the proper basis for determining the amount of investment income was in relationship to the permanent establishment which was being operated in the United Kingdom.

This trade convention reverts to the basis which was formerly in use—that is, the world income base, and the formula for determining the percentage to be treated as income in the U.K. for tax purposes. In several of the tax conventions you will see, by consulting your chart, this same provision is dealt with.

I am not going to deal with all the items—I think I have dealt with the important ones—and, needless to say, there is provision for the exchange of information at the level of the taxing authorities in Canada and the taxing authorities in the United Kingdom. It is impressed into the section providing for that, that the information shall be confidential; and there is provision by which a person who feels that he has been unjustly dealt with as a result of a see-sawing between the two jurisdictions may voice his complaint and hope that the authorities in both countries which are parties to this tax convention will see the merit of his case.

One item I referred to last May which is continued in this U.K. tax convention deals with dual residence, a situation which sometimes occurs. That is, in certain circumstances a person may find that he is resident in Canada and in the United States, and there are procedures outlined in the tax convention by which a determination will be made as to which authority has the right to impose a tax by reason of residence.

Before going on to deal with Ireland, I think there are one or two important parts I should mention in the U.K. agreement.

There are some special cases dealt with which may be regarded as new. That is, this tax convention provides that each country will exempt dividends paid after April 5, 1966, by a resident company to a person resident in the other country, if certain conditions are met. The conditions are that the company paying the dividend must derive at least 90 per cent of its income from a business carried on by it in the other country, and the other country does not subject it to any special tax on branch profits.

Another provision that is somewhat similar is that in addition to the reciprocal undertaking whereby the United Kingdom gives a credit against its tax for Canadian tax imposed on income derived from a Canadian source, the United Kingdom Government also gives credit for the underlying Canadian corporation income tax where a corporation resident in the United Kingdom receives a dividend from a corporation resident in Canada in which it owns at least 10 per cent of the voting shares. This provision will be effective only as long as Canada continues to give a deduction in computing taxable income for dividends received by Canadian companies from subsidiaries in the United Kingdom in which the Canadian parent company has 25 per cent ownership of the voting shares. These are special features.

I have referred to the branch profits of Canadian life insurance companies operating in the United Kingdom as being given special consideration, having regard to the fact that this agreement reverts to a formula in the 1946 convention which had to be changed for a while.

I have told you the reasons why Ireland wanted a new convention, and I might just enumerate the new things. One is that on ratification of this new tax convention Canada will have the right to impose a tax of 15 per cent on dividends paid to a parent company in Ireland by its subsidiary controlled company in Canada. Under the existing agreement the tax rate on such dividends is limited to 5 per cent.

It is made clear in this agreement too that Canada has the right to impose a special 15 per cent tax on the branch profits of Irish companies operating in Canada. At present

Ireland does not impose a tax on branch operations in Canada.

Then, there is a reference to a "funnel company," and I will tell you what it is in a moment. I do not think there are such things as funnel companies operating between Ireland and Canada, but we do have such a company in the Netherlands.

Canada agrees to exempt from its withholding tax on nonresidents the dividends paid by a certain kind of holding company known as a "funnel company" because it funnels its earnings, substantially all of which come from outside of Canada, to its parent company in Ireland. So, a funnel company is a Canadian company that receives all of its earnings from operations of companies outside of Canada, and which then funnels all of those earnings right through to the parent company in Ireland. In those circumstances Canada says that it will not impose its withholding tax.

There has been added to the Irish tax convention the provision I referred to in the United Kingdom agreement dealing with advanced studies by a resident of Canada going to Ireland. This they regard as being very important, having regard to their Dublin University and the people who go there to take advantage of the facilities for learning, and possibly also for teaching.

Then, in the Irish convention they deal with the method of taxation of profits earned by a Canadian life insurance company operating a branch in Ireland. Although they do not say this—and I would not expect them to say it in their agreement—the formula will be that which is provided in the United Kingdom agreement. However, the language which is used would lead you to that formula.

With respect to the agreement with Trinidad and Tobago you will see by looking at your chart that not all of the headings which you have in the United Kingdom agreement, and not all of the headings that you have in the agreement with Ireland, are headings in this agreement. They have negotiated and agreed on the headings which they regard as pertinent to the relationship between Canada and Trinidad and Tobago. But, to the extent that you have those headings you will find that they conform to those, and to the treatment that you will see in he United Kingdom convention.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: In that connection may I ask if this is the first agreement we have had with Trinidad and Tobago?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Yes, it is the first one.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Did we have any agreement with the confederation which included Barbados?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Not that I am aware of. I think I explained earlier that Trinidad and Tobago came under the United Kingdom convention as long as they were colonies of the United Kingdom.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: They were part of a confederation, were they not, of which Barbados was a part?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Yes, but my recollection is that that did not go on for very long—at least not long enough for a treaty to be negotiated. We have now negotiated a treaty with Trinidad and Tobago.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: I think that that is quite logical.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: In the agreement with Norway you will not find as many headings as there are in the agreement with the United Kingdom or in the agreement with Ireland, but those headings that you do find there are dealt with in the same way as they are dealt with in the United Kingdom tax convention.

Honourable senators, I apologize for running on as long as I have. There are many things that can be said, and there are many more that perhaps you would like to have me say—although perhaps I am presuming in that regard—but this, on a broad basis, is an explanation of the tax conventions. By this method of presenting this correlation that I have filed you can understand that I have saved myself quite a lot of work, while at the same time giving a full explanation, and I have also saved you considerable wear and tear in having to listen to it.

If there are any questions, I am quite ready to endeavour to answer them.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Is it the intention of the sponsor of this bill to move that it be sent to a committee?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I am in the hands of the Senate in that respect. I am ready to do anything the Senate wishes me to do.

Hon. Mr. McCutcheon: Then, I would move the adjournment of the debate.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, before the honourable senator's motion is agreed to I would ask his leave to intervene for a moment to say that I am sure we are, as usual, indebted to Senator Hayden for taking on the responsibility of explaining a bill of this nature. This is really complex legislation because it involves not only principles of international law and the provisions of our own tax acts, but those of other countries which have different systems.

I have no wish to flatter Senator Hayden, but it would be quite appropriate for me to compliment him upon the explanation he has given us today. It was not only a tribute to his own capacity in this very specialized field, but something which emphasized the fact that the Senate is a very special kind of place. There is really no other forum in which this kind of an examination can be conducted. There are other experts in this chamber who can discuss these matters very ably, and I personally am looking forward to Senator McCutcheon's contribution.

This is a bill that should go to a committee, and I hope that Senator McCutcheon will make that suggestion. As Senator Hayden has said, we are in the hands of the Senate with respect to this. But, to have this kind of work done here is, in my opinion, really invaluable to people who have to work with our own tax acts, and to advise the ever-increasing number of individuals who have business abroad on their tax problems.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, if Senator McCutcheon will kindly allow me to make a remark or two before he moves the adjournment, I would like to join with my leader (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) in complimenting Senator Hayden for the clarity of his explanation and for the labour that he has obviously devoted to this measure. Senator Hayden is a man of great power, and he does bring to us clear explanations of complicated proceedings.

This points up something that I have been saying to the Senate for the past 15 or 20 years, that the changes in the law of the land should never be brought to us in the form of an agreement. Can we imagine a department so lazy that it cannot put into legal language changes in the law that these agreements involve and place them before us in a concise form?

Many of the provisions in these agreements are the same as in other agreements. It would be a matter of considerable labour it is true, but it would be of some convenience to the legal profession, who have to advise their clients, and to others.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): And accountants.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Yes, accountants—of all persons, so that they can explain what the change in the law actually is as a result of these complicated agreements.

I suggest that this is an outrage on the public, that it is a total disregard of the convenience to the taxpayer to place before him, in this convention—and there are a number of others as well—in this instance 66 pages, if he wants to learn about the relationship between the taxpayer of this land and the taxpayer of some other land. He must re-read the relative agreement each time he needs to find out about any particular country. It would be so easy to phrase an amendment to our law—the rule of law with regard to these matters. I have protested for the past 15 or 20 years until I am tired of doing so, but it does not seem to make any difference whether or not I continue to protest.

Each agreement repeats that this "convention is approved and declared to have the force of law in Canada." I say that is not the way to amend the statutes, to express the law of the land, to make clear to those who are subjected to it what is expected of them.

On motion of Hon. Mr. McCutcheon, debate adjourned.

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Honourable Mr. Deschatelets, for the second reading of Bill C-231, to define and implement a national transportation policy for Canada, to amend the Railway Act and other acts in consequence thereof and to enact other consequential provisions.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, my first remarks must be in thanks to the sponsor of the bill (Honourable Mr. Deschatelets) for the thorough explanation he gave of a long and complex piece of legislation.

In his closing remarks, the sponsor mentioned that he had read the debates as reported in Hansard of the House of Commons, and the committee reports. I also read them, probably to the state of confusion, and I think we are both in agreement that the bill is most confusing and difficult to understand. The sponsor of the bill referred to the MacPherson report as being the genesis of the bill.

Theologians have spent hundreds of years debating Genesis, and I suppose it is only proper that members of the Senate should spend some time in debating the various merits and interpretations of this bill.

The bill itself is described as one which establishes a transportation policy for Canada. In reading the bill and the evidence given in committee, I find that really the bill does not establish a policy; it merely moves the transportation problems out of the office of the Minister of Transport and out of Cabinet responsibility into the hands of a group of bureaucrats.

The bill naturally concerns some sections of Canada a great deal more than others. For instance, I do not believe the people of Hamilton or of the Toronto area are greatly concerned or excited about this bill, yet it is of tremendous importance to the people of the Maritimes and of western Canada.

In reading the proceedings of the Transport and Communications Committee of the House of Commons, I notice that the Minister of Transport attempted to reduce the bill to a very simple level. He is reported as saying:

> What I am saying is, either we make up our minds that we are serious about giving the railways a chance to earn their keep and not be a drag on the taxpayers, or we are not. This is the basic position.

Honourable senators, I am afraid I cannot reduce this bill to that simple level. In a country as vast as Canada we are naturally going to have transportation problems, and I find nothing sinful in the fact that various areas of Canada, because of their geographical position, are going to require federal assistance for transportation—call them subsidies if you wish.

The minister emphasized that we have to end this subsidy of $110 million per year, yet when the House of Commons had finished with this bill it promptly turned around and passed a bill establishing a fund of $10 million for a national film industry. I imagine the film industry will be built around several actors, probably a maximum of ten, similar to the C.B.C., so that we will be providing a subsidy of $1 million per ham actor,—yet they complain about a subsidy on payment of transportation costs which would assist all of Canada.

The committee is to consist of 17 members. Great care must be taken in selecting the members and needless to say the Government will make every effort to select capable men to serve on this committee. However, I would like to suggest that they also ensure that every region of Canada is represented on that committee, so that each area will have one spokesman thoroughly familiar with its particular problems.

The bill is based on the fact that the railways will now enter free competition. I find it rather odd, when we have the most socialistic government we have ever had in Canada, in this particular aspect they are advocating competition as the basis of the establishment of freight rates.

There is still a question in my mind as to whether or not we will achieve competition. Dr. Borts, who was engaged by eight of the ten provinces of Canada to do a study and make a presentation before the Transport Committee of the other place, pointed out that it is very dubious whether this will establish competition. He illustrated this by stating that, once you go beyond a certain distance, the competition between trucking and railways ceases. Also, there are certain types of goods which cannot be transported economically by highway transportation.

There is the further question in my mind about the ownership by both railway companies of the large number of trucking firms. I doubt that a subsidiary trucking firm of either the Canadian Pacific or the Canadian National is going to provide competition for their parent companies.

However, as the expression goes, "to give the devil his due," there are several features that I appreciate about the bill. I particularly appreciate the establishment of a research division. This is a measure which is long overdue and I hope that this division will not only make recommendations to the Government on various policy matters but that they will also do research work on establishing better forms of transportation.

There is one matter to which I hope consideration will be given, and that is one which we in the Maritimes refer to as the Corridor Road across Maine.

As Senator Brooks said yesterday, the Maritimes, transportationwise, are in the unique position of almost having to circumvent another country in order to reach central Canada. If we could have both rail and road traffic directly across Maine, we would reduce our haulage by several hundred miles.

As I indicated earlier, freight rates have always been a great concern in the Maritimes; in fact they played an important part in the entry of the Maritimes into Confederation. I find, particularly in central Canada, that many people consider the Maritimes freight rates a form of subsidy. This rather annoys me, because I do not find that the Maritime Freight Rates Act is any more of a subsidy than the huge investment which the federal Government put in the St. Lawrence Seaway—which incidentally does not pay its own way, and we do not hear many complaints about the subsidy on that seaway.

I am not going to attempt to explain the Maritime Freight Rates Act to honourable senators. You are familiar with the 20 and 30 per cent reduction. I am sure you are also well aware of the fact that the past horizontal freight rate increases have practically eroded the benefits of the Maritime Freight Rates Act; that is, they give a 50 per cent increase in freight rates and apply a 20 per cent reduction and you have just about nullified the original intent of the act.

Honourable senators, I refer now to an off-the-cuff speech which honourable Senator Burchill made about a year and a half ago, explaining the difficulties of operating a business in the Maritimes. That is one speech with which all maritimers will agree.

Honourable senators, Bill C-231 does not in any way alter the Maritime Freight Rates Act. This can be done only by a separate Act of Parliament. In the other place, the minister repeatedly emphasized this.

In addition, the bill provides for continuation for a two-year period for the so-called rate freeze on commodity products. This is where our concern in the Maritimes really centres. The Government is conducting a special study on the problems of Maritime transportation. It is hoped this study will be completed within a two-year period. I do not wish to be a doubting Thomas, but I am always a little apprehensive of a study. They always take longer than intended.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): And they cost more.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: And sometimes they do not bring in recommendations that one would like.

After the report and recommendations are received, I would hope that the members of the cabinet would want some time to study them. In addition, I would like to see the various organizations in the Maritimes that are concerned with transportation take the opportunity to study this and express their views. I am afraid that this is going to take more than two years.

I know that the Leader of the Government in the Senate is always willing to step in and give assurances; and I am inviting him to give the assurance that if the study goes beyond the two-year period, the freight rates freeze will be carried beyond the two-year period.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Would the honourable gentleman allow me to speak for just one moment on that point?

Hon. Mr. Phillips: I would invite the honourable leader to do so.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I certainly am not in a position to give any assurance to the honourable gentleman or to the Senate on this point, but if the present Minister of Transport remains in office and if this point creates a problem for the Maritimes region, I believe the people in the Maritimes generally could feel optimistic that whatever should be done on their behalf would most certainly be done if he could possibly achieve it.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: I regret that the honourable leader obviously has not read all the discussion that took place in the House of Commons. If he had, he would be aware of the fact that the Minister of Transport, in the closing days of the debate in the other place, when questioned on this matter, said that he expected this would be a problem for another Minister of Transport. Possibly it will be the Leader of the Government in the Senate—and then I can really accept the concrete assurance.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Do not wish that on me, please!

Hon. Mr. Phillips: If I may, I should like to make a brief reference to the fact that industries in the Maritimes really are handicapped by transportation costs. While I would like to spend some time on this, I am going to be brief and illustrate this by two examples.

In Sackville, New Brunswick, there is a firm which manufactures stoves, and it would like to market these stoves in Montreal. However, it must compete, in the face of higher transportation costs, against a firm which manufactures stoves in Hamilton. Steel from Sydney, Nova Scotia, costs almost $4 more per ton to deliver to Montreal than steel from Hamilton.

Honourable senators, I wish to leave for the moment the Maritime transportation problem and touch on section 336 of the bill. I feel that this section will deserve special study and attention in our transportation committee. It deals with the fixing of the freight rates, and it causes me concern for a number of reasons. The rates can be established by taking the variable costs and allowing 150 per cent markup over the variable costs. I am told on very good authority that 70 per cent of the total costs of the railways is accounted for under variable costs.

If we took this on a figure of cost of $100 and added 150 per cent of the 70 to that, we would be adding 105 per cent. In other words, on the cost of $100 the railways are allowed—and admittedly this is supposed to be a maximum—a markup of 105 per cent. This is a fairly generous markup, and I feel that most people in Canada could successfully operate a business with a markup of 105 per cent.

The second aspect that causes me a great deal of concern is that the 150 per cent is based on a carloading of 30,000 pounds. Here again, if I may refer to Dr. Borts' submission—and I believe the Manitoba submission supported Dr. Borts in this—he pointed out that, in cases of carloading beyond 30,000 pounds, the markup is really more than 150 per cent. In cases of carloadings of 100,000 pounds the markup will be in the vicinity of 400 per cent. This is due to the economy of moving a larger carloading plus the complexity of the variable cost as presently calculated by the railroads.

If I may illustrate this from a Maritime viewpoint, the average shipment of potatoes from the Maritimes is 55,000 pounds.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Is that a carload?

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Yes. Applying Dr. Borts' formula to this, you will get a markup of approximately 225 per cent.

Now, admittedly potatoes are moved presently under an agreed charge with the railway, but this does not mean that later on the railways will not ask to have this agreed charge renegotiated. I am very worried and concerned about the increased costs of moving Maritime potatoes to central Canada.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I wonder whether the honourable senator is right when he speaks that way? I understood that that formula applied only in cases where there was a captive shipper and not where there was a competitive factor involved. I may be mistaken about this, but that is my own reading of it.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: I am going on, Senator Connolly, to point out that the potato grower is a classic example of a captive shipper. He must move most of his machinery, manufactured in the central United States or central Canada, into the Maritimes. In addition, a great deal of the chemical fertilizers and various insecticides he will use will be brought in by railway. Then, after it is harvested, the crop will have to be moved out by rail. So this leaves the potato grower in the position of being a very captive shipper.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I hope the honourable gentleman will not think I am rising to interrupt his trend of thought, but my understanding of the definition of a captive shipper in this bill is that that shipper is restricted to one form of transportation company, and perhaps to transportation that can be provided by one company only. Now, in the case mentioned by the honourable senator, where he talks about the movements of the product potato, I think there are various methods of transportation that could be employed here, and are in fact. There is rail, water, and road transport. I do not know whether they fly any. Perhaps on occasion they do. However, there are various companies involved. So it seems to me that the principle embodied in the conclusion of the MacPherson Report with reference to competition is the feature that would apply to provide the remedy that the honourable senator suggests.

Please do not misunderstand me. I do not want to throw the honourable senator off on the argument he makes. This seems to me to be the fact of the case.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: I would like very much to accept the explanation of the honourable Senator Connolly but I cannot do so. I would point out to him that in the case of Prince Edward Island there is only one railway line, the Canadian National. While we do ship a number of potatoes by water to southern United States, the agreed charge with the railway specifies that any potatoes moving into central Canada must be shipped by rail or the agreed charge is no longer effective. So you really have no alternative company to move these potatoes into central Canada.

Now, one other aspect of section 336 that I would like to deal with concerns the costs of capital as prescribed under the act. It states that the commission shall compute the costs of capital in all cases by using the costs of capital approved by the commission as proper for the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

In preparation for study of this bill I did a great deal of reading. I found three figures commonly used for the cost of money. Firstly, there is that used by the Canadian Pacific Railway in its application for abandonment of branch lines. They used debt and equity, and then the company took the attitude that they must earn more than they pay out in dividends, and they included certain other items such as income tax to reach a figure of 11.4 per cent.

The Board of Transport Commissioners, in hearing applications, have set the cost of money at 5 per cent. The MacPherson Royal Commission have suggested a figure of 3.84 per cent. But their figure was based on evidence from hearings held a number of years ago. We are leaving the entire cost, not only the variable cost but also the cost of money, to the commission to establish without any direction from Parliament. If Parliament does not wish to give the commission direction in this regard, I would like to suggest that the commission hold public hearings at which various provinces and interested groups could make representations before the commission establishes this very important item of the cost of money.

This bill provides a right of appeal to the Transport Commission in case of captive shippers. This idea in itself is good, but when the bill comes into effect we are going to have substantial freight rate increases and I would expect that in the first two or three years at least there will be a large number of appeals. I am wondering, honourable senators, if the commission will be able to hear all the appeals in time to be fair to the individual or company making the appeal. Many of these companies will probably be supplying lumber and building material, to contractors under large contracts over a period of two or three years. They will want to know the freight rates before entering into any contract. I would hope that our Senate committee will give this aspect of the bill further consideration.

The sponsor of the bill mentioned interprovincial traffic, and he was somewhat concerned with the constitutional aspects of this. Now, I do not intend to deal with the constitutional aspect, but I do wish to deal with the question of the Northumberland Strait causeway. I am happy to tell Senator Connolly that I took advantage of his advice that I could obtain free legal help in the Senate. The advice I received from some of the best legal minds in the Senate is that it is quite proper to include the Northumberland Strait causeway under this bill. The Minister of Transport, before the committee in the other place, stated that the Governor in Council may, if he wishes, bring international and interprovincial highway traffic or—and this is more important—certain aspects of it under the control of the Canadian Transportation Commission. This raises a very serious problem for the residents of Prince Edward Island. The Terms of Confederation call for continued means of transportation across the strait and, after many years of study, tenders are now being called for the construction of the causeway. We are seriously concerned about the fact that the rates set for the causeway will be set by a commission on which the Island has no say. Here, again, if we apply the cost of money to the fixing of the rates, the prospect is absolutely frightening to Islanders, because the causeway is estimated to cost $140 million, and if we take the cost of money at six per cent we are going to have a figure of $9 million or $10 million per year which would have to be taken into account under Section 336. This is beyond the ability of the province to pay. In this regard also I shall have a number of questions for the minister who, I presume, will appear before the committee.

In the debates in the other place much time was spent on the question of abandonment of branch lines, mainly with reference to western Canada. But I would point out that this abandonment will occur elsewhere, and I would bring to the attention of senators from the Atlantic provinces that there are many lines in that part of the country which it is proposed to abandon on the grounds that they are uneconomic. We know that they are uneconomic, but we also know them to be vital to the transportation system of the Maritimes. Certainly the railways in Prince Edward Island are uneconomic. Nobody could pretend that they are otherwise, but we would expect the commission to realize that they are essential to our economy. Railways into the Annapolis Valley are also likely to be disturbed, but here again I would say that they are essential to the economy. This fact was recognized by a cabinet decision reached several years ago.

Honourable senators, I do not intend to take up any more time in this debate. I hope that the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications will give this bill a thorough study. The members in the other place expressed confidence that the Senate committee would give the bill a thorough clause-by-clause examination, and I am sure that the Senate will not disappoint them in this regard.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson, debate adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Report of Operations under the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1965, pursuant to section 6 of the said Act, chapter 25, Statutes of Canada, 1957-58. (English and French texts).

Report of Operations under the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1966, pursuant to section 6 of the said Act, chapter 25, Statutes of Canada, 1957-58. (English and French texts).

PUBLIC SERVICE

SIXTH, SEVENTH AND EIGHTH REPORTS OF JOINT COMMITTEE TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly, for Hon. Maurice Bourget, Joint Chairman of the Special Joint Committee on the Public Service, tabled the following reports of the committee:

The Sixth Report, on Bill C-170, respecting employer and employee relations in the Public Service of Canada;

The Seventh Report, on Bill C-181, respecting employment in the Public Service of Canada; and

The Eighth Report, on Bill C-182, to amend the Financial Administration Act.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, may I ask the honourable Leader of the Government (Honourable Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) if the study of any or all of these bills has been completed in committee and, if so, when we might expect to receive them?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): My understanding is that that is the position, and that the bills are soon to be reported to the House of Commons. Honourable senators will understand that these bills are not before this house at this time. After their presentation in the House of Commons they must be considered there by the committee of the whole house, and thereafter receive third reading. What I have tabled here today are reports containing amendments that have been made to the bills in committee, and in a few minutes I shall be moving that these reports be incorporated in today's Minutes of the Proceedings so that honourable senators will have these amendments available to them prior to the reprinting of the bills to which they relate.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: In that connection may I ask whether we shall receive the bills individually or all three at one time?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I would think that we will get them seriatim. They may actually be presented to us in one group —depending a good deal upon when the Senate is sitting—but we are not committed to taking them one after the other or in any special order. They are three pieces of legislation, three independent bills, that emanate from one joint committee.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: And they will be considered independently and at different times?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes. It would not be my intention to move all three at the same time; in fact, it would be quite improper to do so.

MOTION TO PRINT REPORTS AS APPENDIXES TO MINUTES OF THE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. John J. Connolly, with leave of the Senate, moved:

That the sixth, seventh and eighth reports of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on the Public Service, tabled today, be printed as an appendix to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this date and form part of the permanent records of this house.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I move that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Monday next, February 6, 1967 at 8 p.m.

Motion agreed to.

NATIONAL AND ROYAL ANTHEMS

APPOINTMENT OF JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, may I ask for the indulgence of the Senate to have Item No. 6 on the Order Paper called first. Iam sure it is noncontentious.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, as is evident from this item on the Order Paper, it is a matter of a resolution rather than a bill. I have consulted with the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks) and I think it would be agreeable universally for the Senate to comply with the request of the House of Commons to unite with them in the formation of a joint committee for a study of this question, before the resolution is considered in this house.

I would therefore move, seconded by Honourable Mr. Brooks:

> That the Senate do unite with the House of Commons in the appointment of a Special Joint Committee of both houses to consider and from time to time report upon the subject-matter of the following proposed resolution: "That the Government be authorized to take such steps as may be necessary to provide that 'O Canada' shall be the National Anthem of Canada while 'God Save the Queen' shall be the Royal Anthem in Canada";
> That the Senate designate six members of the Senate to be members of the Joint Committee, namely, the Honourable Senators Bourget, Davey, Gelinas, Smith (Queens-Shelburne), White and Yuzyk;
> That the committee have the power to sit during sittings and adjournments of the Senate; and
> That a message be sent to the House of Commons to inform that house accordingly.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I ask what steps the Government can take or are contemplating to bring about the desired result?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I must answer that question off the top of my head, so to speak—and there is not much there to cover it. If the resolution with respect to this item is adopted by both houses, there would probably be a proclamation which would bring the resolution into effect. I say that subject to correction, as this is a matter which the committee may well consider.

Hon. Mr. Power: May I ask a question?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Yes, with leave.

Hon. Mr. Power: I am somewhat puzzled by the language:

> —that the Government be authorized to take such steps as may be necessary to provide that 'O Canada' shall be the National Anthem of Canada while 'God Save the Queen' shall be the Royal Anthem in Canada.

What is the difference between "of Canada" and "in Canada"?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I think that an honourable senator who not only writes a book but writes a best seller has a lot of nerve to ask a mere individual like myself what is the difference between "of" and "in". He is an expert in English.

If there is need to give serious consideration to that question, I suggest that the honourable senator attend the committee and put it before them. They are going to be paid for that kind of work; all I do here is introduce the motion.

Hon. Mr. Power: That is a very unsatisfactory answer.

Motion agreed to.

NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION BILL

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Honourable Mr. Deschatelets, for the second reading of Bill C-231, to define and implement a national transportation policy for Canada, to amend the Railway Act and other acts in consequence thereof and to enact other consequential provisions.

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson: Honourable senators, at the outset of my remarks on Bill C-231 I would like to pay my humble respects to the late honourable Mr. Murdock MacPherson and to the members of the royal commission which bears his name. The report of that royal commission was a monumental one in regard to the transportation problems of Canada; and it is the foundation stone of this legislation.

Mr. MacPherson, although born in the Maritimes, became a distinguished citizen of the west. He was a former attorney general of the Province of Saskatchewan and throughout his life was one of the distinguished sons of this country. It may have been but an accident of politics in history that he did not become leader of my party and perhaps a prime minister of Canada.

It is also true that the very broadness of the concept of Bill C-231 has resulted from the rapid changes and developments of the various modes of transportation during the last few years. In this respect it has followed to some extent the advances and improvements in the field of transportation made in other countries. However, we must recall that it is now six years since the report of the MacPherson Commission was made and, naturally, a great deal of thought has gone into the transportation problems of this country during this period of time.

Although the bill deals with nearly every other mode of commercial transportation, by air, water, motor vehicle and pipe line, the basic and thorniest problems involving transportation in this country relate to railways. The railway history of Canada is of course an amazing story. For sheer fascination I do not think there is anything comparable to it in any part of the world. Here in Canada it related not only to the economic development of a people, but from the very beginning it was also an instrument of politics, an instrument of statecraft, making possible in the first instance the union of the original provinces of Canada. Railway building then became the one essential element without which there could have been no such thing as a Canada from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

In later years the story of the Grand Trunk Pacific and the Canadian Northern Railway is just as fascinating as the earlier story of the Intercolonial and the C.P.R.

While I am speaking of transportation in its widest concept as related to the public interest and development at the hands of the Government, let me remark that in the early days of Canada, at an original cost of about $245 million there was developed the canal system of central Canada. Later on there followed the construction of the St. Lawrence Seaway at an original cost of about $322 million.

Throughout the years transportation and railway rate making have presented one of the most difficult problems of government. As a result, no less than 32 royal commissions have been appointed to deal with railway affairs. Most of these commissions have dealt with railway problems piecemeal, that is, with particular problems at particular times, and generally in respect of particular regions.

The MacPherson Commission, however, became all-embracing in its work. It covered the whole field of transportation in Canada. Its purpose was to define and implement a national transportation policy for all Canada. Hence the bill opens with the words:

> An act to define and implement a national transportation policy for Canada...

In order to show the breadth and scope of this bill, I can do no better than to read the general words of clause 1 of the bill, referred to as "National Transportation Policy". I read from the bill:

> It is hereby declared that an economic, efficient and adequate transportation system making the best use of all available modes of transportation at the lowest total cost is essential to protect the interests of the users of transportation and to maintain the economic well-being and growth of Canada, and that these objectives are most likely to be achieved when all modes of transport are able to compete under conditions ensuring that having due regard to national policy and to legal and constitutional requirements...

And then there follow subclauses (a), (b), (c) and (d), more specifically defining these broad objectives.

As I have said, one can only comprehend the vast scope of the bill when one reads and digests clause 1. This is the framework or the skeleton of the bill while the rest is the flesh on the bones. It was the flesh on the bones which was so ably explained by Senator Deschatelets the other evening.

Throughout the bill the question of a declaration of principles of rate making for the railways naturally asumes a role of tremendous importance. It does so, firstly, because compensation is the lifeblood of any industry and also because of the vast regional differences existing in our country. Hence, throughout the years the problem of maintaining a proper economic balance between the three main regions of Canada, the Maritime Region, the Central Region, and the Western Region has exercised all the ingenuity which we possibly could provide in solving the problem of continuing to hold all parts of our vast country together. Indeed, as testified by Mr. Donald Gordon, the then Chairman of the Board and President of the Canadian National Railway, in his submission before the parliamentary Standing Committee on Transport and Communications—

> —A proper foundation for an orderly national development is an efficient transportation system.

He then quoted the following passage from the MacPherson Commission Report.

> History records how the Canadian railways provided the means of meeting not only the demands of a developing economy but, also, the goals of national policy directed towards the establishment of national unity. And today the railways continue to play a vital part in the maintenance and growth of the nation.

These words are true and they provide ample justification for the close liaison between government policy and railway policy, as well as some justification for the subsidies and other payments to the railways that the Canadian taxpayer has assumed in recent years, and will have to assume at least during the transition period between now and 1975. The hope is, of course, that during this period of seven or eight years the effect of the provisions of this bill together with the prospects of greater economic development in the future will be such as to eliminate the present heavy costs of railway transport now borne by Canada as a whole. That is the basic hope and objective of this legislation.

Included in this bill are several important principles most or all of which were referred to in the speech of the sponsor. I select as the most important changes envisioned in the bill the freedom to compete and the principle that competition in future will be the chief regulator of transport rates in this country. Another important principle is this, that where burdens are imposed upon transportation companies by law, the burdens should be borne by the public as a whole.

I refer to these two principles in the context of a subject matter I would now like to pursue, namely, the so-called Crowsnest Pass rates on grain and flour as well as other statutory rates on these commodities now prevailing in western Canada. I wish to make reference to this question especially in the light of the long debate in the other place and the subsequent deletion of the clause which decreed a revision of these statutory rates within a period of three years.

Let me say first that the Crowsnest Pass rates have for two generations in western Canada been referred to as the Magna Carta of western agriculture; hence, even the slightest suspicion or hint of Parliament laying a hand on these rates is cause for fear and anxiety in the Prairie Provinces.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It was done at one time, was it not? They were eliminated at one time, were they not?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I will come to that.

In light of the great importance of the subject of railway grain rates and also in light of the fact that most Canadians are in a state of bewilderment in regard to the words "Crowsnest rates" and "statutory rates," I wish to discuss these points briefly: First, how did these rates come about? Are they justifiable now? Is there any legal or moral justification for their abrogation?

I have before me the Statutes of Canada for the years 1896-1897, 60-61 Victoria, which volume at chapter 5 contains the statute which ratified the Crowsnest Agreement.

I refer to this important statute because I find that in talking to people, particularly from eastern and central Canada, many have no knowledge of the fact that there existed a statute of Canada which ratified an agreement known as the Crowsnest Pass Agreement and imbedded its provisions in the law of Canada. What I mean is this. Some Canadians speak of the Crowsnest Pass Agreement, and they often ask why should Canada be burdened, or why the railways of Canada should be burdened by an old agreement made in 1897. That is what I want to talk about for a few moments.

I wish to emphasize the fact that an agreement was entered into between the Government of Canada and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. That agreement was entered into in 1897 but it was also ratified by statute, and that statute makes it crystal-clear that the agreement shall remain in force in perpetuity.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: With no term?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: With no term. It is in identically the same position as the statutes which were previously passed in regard to railway construction in western Canada, where the Canadian Pacific Railway was by statute granted freedom from municipal taxation in perpetuity. As is well known, when the legality of these statutes was brought in issue before the Privy Council it was held that they were valid, legal and binding. If my memory serves me right, the legality of the Crowsnest Pass statute has been confirmed by the Privy Council in the same way as were these other statutes concerning railway taxation. However, what I want to emphasize is that the Crowsnest Pass agreement is much more than a mere agreement; it is ratified by a statute of Canada.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: That was with the C.P.R. only, was it not?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Yes, with the C.P.R. only.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: It does not affect the C.N.R.?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: No. It was with the C.P.R. only.

I think honourable senators will realize why, in the course of time, that agreement being in existence with regard to the C.P.R., the other railways were naturally compelled to grant the same rates as the Crowsnest Pass rates.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Does anything compel the other railways to follow suit?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Yes. A moment ago I referred to the statutory rates which compelled the other railways to comply.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: The Board of Transport Commissioners?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: No. I believe it is done by statute, but it may only have been an order or orders of the Board of Transport Commissioners. I do not think it has ever been a matter of any great moment, or a matter in issue, as to the other railways. The basic fact was that the Crowsnest Pass Agreement, together with ratification and sanction by statute—

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Would the honourable senator agree it was the competitive factor, which just fortifies the argument that he made initially? The competitive factor painted the other railways into the corner, and they pretty well have to use these rates?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Yes, that is what I am trying to say.

I want to read briefly from the statute, chapter 5 of the Statutes of 1897. Section 1 of the act refers to a subsidy payment made by the Government to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to the extent of $11,000 per mile, being a total sum not exceeding $3,630,000 which was to be paid to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company on condition that a railway be constructed into the Kootenay Valley area of British Columbia.

Section 1 continues:

> On the part of the Company:
> (a.) That the Company will construct or cause to be constructed, the said railway upon such route and according to such descriptions and specifications—

—as may be required. So, initially the railway was required to be constructed.

It is not generally known about the Crowsnest Pass Agreement statute that subsection (d.) provided for a very considerable reduction in the freight tariffs from east to west on thirteen important commodities. Those commodities are set out, and the rates of reduction from the freight rates of that day are established. For instance:

> Upon all green and fresh fruits, 33⅓ per cent; Coal oil, 20 per cent;—

And so on down the list.

Subsection (d.) concludes with these words:

> And that no higher rates than such reduced rates or tolls shall be hereafter charged by the Company upon any such merchandise carried by the Company between the points aforesaid; such reductions to take effect on or before the first of January, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-eight;...

This point is of no importance now, but I just make it in passing, that these rates were decreed by statute. They were decreed to be perpetual, but in fact they were abrogated over the years and they were completely done away with by 1925.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: With the consent of the C.P.R.?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Yes, naturally with the consent of the C.P.R., because the C.P.R. benefited by the abrogation. Consequently, the C.P.R. was relieved from complying with this part of the statute, and then the statute continues:

> (e.) That there shall be a reduction—

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Can you tell me whether there was any consideration given to the C.P.R. for the abrogation of those additional rates? Do you know that?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I do not believe there was any consideration given by the C.P.R.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: No, to the C.P.R.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: No, the consideration would be by the C.P.R. because it was the company that benefited.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Yes, you are quite right.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Yes, by the C.P.R., because the fact is that the rate—and I saw this figure in the MacPherson Report—the average rate on these particular 13 commodities is now 157 per cent higher than the rates indicated in the statute. I do not think it is an important factor, but as far as I know there was no consideration given by the C.P.R. for the abrogation of that clause.

There then follows paragraph (e), which provides:

> That there shall be a reduction in the Company's present rates and tolls on grain and flour from all points on its main line, branches, or connections west of Fort William to Fort William and Port Arthur and all points east, of three cents per one hundred pounds, to take effect in the following manner—

Then it was decreed that it would take effect in two stages, 1½ cents in one year and 1½ cents in the following year, making a reduction of 3 cents in all. That was a reduction from the current rate at the time—and I quote again from paragraph (e):

> ...and that no higher rates than such reduced rates or tolls shall be charged after the dates mentioned on such merchandise from the points aforesaid.

So much for that. Here was the contract, and here was the statute confirming it in perpetuity.

Then in paragraph (g) of section 1 there was a reference to a further consideration which I shall talk about later, namely, the consideration given the C.P.R. in the grant of land and mineral resources in the Kootenay Valley.

I believe that these resources were actually owned by the province of British Columbia, but presumably by some arrangement between the federal Government and government of British Columbia they were acquired by the C.P.R. Anyway, as a result of the agreement and statute the C.P.R. was enabled to build this line by a subsidy of approximately $3.5 million. But what was far more important was the tremendous potential asset which the railway received as a result of the transfer to it of the resources to which I have referred.

As I said, honourable senators, I have emphasized the fact of the statute because I have so often spoken to people who refer to the Crowsnest Pass Agreement as an agreement only, whereas it was in fact an agreement ratified by statute in the manner in which I have indicated.

I should like to refer now for a moment to an assessment of the situation made by Mr E. P. Reid, who was assistant director of research for the MacPherson Royal Commission. It is contained in Volume 3 of the Report of the Royal Commission on Transportation at page 371. I am going to ask you to bear with me while I put on the record the statement that is contained in this report.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Before doing so would the honourable senator allow me this question: Has he given any consideration to the change in money values and equities that might arise because the dollars of the nineties are very different from the dollars of today? The strict wording of the agreement, therefore, might be influenced to some extent by the equities brought about by the change in money values. Has the honourable senator given consideration to that point?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I say to my honourable friend that that is part of the crux of this whole problem, namely, the difficulty in making an agreement at any time that is perpetual.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: That is exactly what happens, and that is one of the reasons why difficulties arise in a transaction that is made perpetual. Of course, when the value of the dollar decreased, as it did in the inflationary period of the First World War, it brought about a very difficult situation. Similarly, of course, a difficult situation is brought about by the inflation that is occurring now.

On the other hand, a partial reply—and there are other replies—is that at the time of the making of the Crowsnest Pass Agreement and the enactment of the statute the rates were based on a 20-ton railway freight car, as Senator Paterson well knows, whereas at the time of the beginning of the hearings before the MacPherson Commission in 1959 that 20-ton car had become a 60-ton car, and the car-mile cost was consequently reduced to a third. At the present time I think we have still larger and more modern cars. Automation and other developments and techniques in freight transportation have helped to ease the problem of inflation and other rising costs.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Today there are 100-car trains.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Yes. I had not completed that. I cited one example. In those days I think there were 20-car trains or 30-car trains. Later on we had 50-car trains, and today we have 100-car trains, and perhaps longer. These are all factors in the present situation, and they are all factors that were fully discussed by experts and others before the MacPherson Royal Commission.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I should like to ask another question—and I hope the honourable senator will pardon me if I am embarrassing him, although I do not think I am. I am tremendously interested in what he has been telling us. I have learned more about the Crowsnest Pass Agreement in the course of this address than I knew previously.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Hear, hear. We all have.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I assure the honourable senator that it is not my intention to embarrass him. But, could he give us any information as to the principles upon which the courts have considered perpetual contracts or agreements, because there is, I am sure, a considerable body of jurisprudence in this connection. The courts on the equity side have always considered perpetual agreements as having a reasonable period of termination, and which they have written into them a number of times. I wonder if my honourable friend has looked into that aspect at all.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: I really do not think the pursuit of that subject would have any great value just now. However, I do repeat that the statute or statutes of Canada which gave the Canadian Pacific Railway Company this perpetual exemption from municipal taxes in western Canada was found legal and valid by the Privy Council.

I believe I recall reading somewhere in the report of the MacPherson Royal Commission that the statutes or statutes of Canada which to the Privy Council and found valid. I must say that I intended to pursue this fully, and find out for sure, in the last few minutes before entering the chamber, but unfortunately a visitor came to my room and I did not have a chance to do it. However, I am pretty certain that the validity of the agreement and statute has been considered by the Privy Council and has been confirmed.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton): For all eternity?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Yes, for all eternity, and so were the tax exemptions granted to the C.P.R.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton): You could amend the Constitution, but you could not amend this statute at that time?

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Oh yes, Parliament can amend the statute but the point is that the courts cannot. I do not wish to get into the complicated details regarding the history of the Crowsnest agreement. However, I believe that at various times in the early years of this century rates on grain were actually lower than those provided in the agreement. Then in the early 1920's they were abrogated completely, I believe for about a year or so, and then reinstated.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: In 1919.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: 1919. I am not quite certain of those dates, but Senator Aseltine delivered a speech on the subject a few years ago, and he will probably be more conversant with those dates than I am.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I think Senator Aseltine's date of 1919 is correct, and I believe the reinstatement year was 1925. One must of course be conscious of the fact that so far as western Canada is concerned there are probably political considerations that make these rates sacrosanct.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: They still are.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: No, I would say there are political considerations which—

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Let us call them practical considerations.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Yes, practical considerations.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: In 1919 the Senate of Canada saved the day for the West. Senator Lougheed and Senator Watson refused to accept the bill passed by the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: As a result of which, I understand, the Crowsnest Pass agreement was preserved by the Senate of Canada.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Of course there were political considerations, and also considerations of high national policy which permeated this whole matter throughout all these years.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: That is not your thesis now. You are justifying the rate from a legal and moral standpoint, not from the political standpoint.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: That is quite right. I am making these remarks because I want to put on the record of Hansard the facts in connection with the Crowsnest Pass rates.

In order to place this subject in more complete perspective, I would like to read from page 372 of Volume 3 of the MacPherson Report. This statement, by Mr. E. P. Reid, is entitled "The Crowsnest Pass Agreement," and is a historical review and analysis of it:

> In the 1897 Crowsnest Pass Agreement the Canadian Pacific obtained a subsidy of $3,404,720 from the Government of Canada to build a line from Lethridge through the Crowsnest Pass into the Kootenay area of British Columbia where coal and other mineral discoveries had been made. In exchange the railway undertook to reduce freight rates on:
> 1. a number of articles important to settlers and farmers on their movement from Central Canada to the Prairies; and
> 2. grain and flour from its lines on the Prairies to Fort William and Port Arthur by three cents per 100 pounds. This provided rates to Fort William, for example, as follows:
> Winnipeg 420 miles, 14 cents per 100 lbs.
> Regina, 776 miles, 20 cents per 100 lbs.
> Calgary, 1,242 miles, 26 cents per 100 lbs.
> As part of the Agreement the railway undertook "that no higher rates than such reduced rates or tolls shall be hereafter charged by the company between the points aforesaid. These are the phrases which have (quite logically) been taken by the Prairie people as an undertaking in perpetuity.
> Fowke has summarized the objectives of the contracting parties as follows—

Mr. Vernon C. Fowke, an expert on railway matters, appeared before the Board of Transport Commissioners in Rate Base-Rate of Return case on January 12, 1953. These are the objectives as summarized by Mr. Fowke:

> Government of Canada
> 1. the more rapid development of the highly promising mining area of southern British Columbia,
> 2. the effective integration of this area into the Canadian economy in defiance of geographic facts and despite American designs,
> 3. the enlargement of the prairie and intermountain markets for eastern manufacturers through the provision of lower freight rates on the western movement of certain important products,
> 4. the stimulation of agricultural settlement and general economic expansion in the prairie provinces by means of the statutory assurance of lower rates on grain and on the inward movement of capital equipment, and
> 5. the acceptance by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company of the principle of governmental rate control in the national interest.
> Canadian Pacific Railway Company
> 1. the subsidy, more substantial than that considered by the previous government, would pay, according to the Company's own recorded estimates, upwards of one-half of the cost of the Crowsnest line,
> 2. construction of this line would entitle the Company to a large land subsidy indirectly from the Province of British Columbia,
> 3. the line would provide an all-rail link between the Company's main line and the Kootenay region, and
> 4. it would thus be possible to forestall American economic occupation of that wealthy area and to secure for the Canadian Pacific Railway Company first claim upon the traffic benefits to be derived from economic development in the southern Canadian Cordillera.

Those were the high principles of public policy which prompted the agreement and the statute.

As a matter of fact, there is a rather interesting commentary on this matter which perhaps I should read to the house. It is contained in an article entitled "Reservations on Grain," by Mr. A. R. Gobeil, who was one of the members of the MacPherson Royal Commission. I refer to Volume 1 of the MacPherson Report, at page 79, under the heading "Legal and Historical":

> The atmosphere of that day is illustrated by the quotation from J. W. Dafoe's "Clifford Sifton in Relation to his Times" of the Manitoba Argument.

That quotation is contained in the book written by the late J. W. Dafoe, "Clifford Sifton in Relation to his Times." The article goes on to say:

> Apparently there were also questions of high policy involved in this arrangement. In an open letter to the press of Canada, dealing with railway questions, written by Sir Clifford Sifton, in January 1929 there appears this passage: "I remember when as a young minister in Laurier's cabinet, Van Horne and Shaugnessy said a line into the Kootenay mining district would not be considered for fifteen years. Also I remember that within six weeks the same two gentlemen came into my office and said that they had to build this line and wanted a large bonus for doing it, that the C.P.R. was on the verge of bankruptcy.
> We gave them this bonus against the public sentiment of two-thirds of the people of Canada. They built the line and the Kootenay mining development saved the C.P.R. and saved a good many other things in Canada."

In any event, I think this quotation is an interesting sidelight of the times. I must say, however, that my information is that the financial reports of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for the years in question do not indicate that the company was near bankruptcy, or anything of the kind.

The facts in respect to this agreement, including the granting of lands and resources by government—I say "government" because presumably it was both the federal Government and the Government of the Province of British Columbia—to the C.P.R. is now claimed by western Canadians generally as having been a part of national policy which used this method of equalizing, as well as it could be done at that time, the burden of transportation costs vis-à-vis the West and Central Canada.

The point that Western Canada will not allow anyone to forget is that, whether or not the contract was wise in its origin, nevertheless it is a contract which was in fact made; the contract is in perpetuity, it was imbedded in the Statutes of Canada in 1897, and we make the further claim that it has been fully compensated for by Canada in the conveyance to the railway company of western Canadian resources which were at the time perhaps potential only, but which since, by virtue of careful development, have become of tremendous value to the other party to the contract, namely, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and indeed to Canada as a whole.

I do not propose to search deeply into the present values of these resources, but let me cite one example only, namely, the company formerly known as the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company of Canada, whose name has recently been shortened to Cominco. As I understand it, approximately half the shares of Cominco are owned by the Canadian Pacific Railway. The present market value of the interest owned by the railway company in Cominco is roughly $250 million and I believe that the revenue derived by the Canadian Pacific Railway from this asset in the year 1966 was in the neighbourhood of $15 million. I am sure no one will question the fact that the development of Cominco is directly related and results from the Crowsnest Pass Agreement, and the other development of that area of Canada resulted from the step taken at that date by the Government of this country.

I cite this one example as being only a part of the quid pro quo which passed to the company as consideration for the terms of the Crowsnest Pass agreement.

The point I am trying to make is that it serves no purpose for Canadians in other parts of Canada to get too wrought up about this agreement and statute because it is not as one-sided as one is sometimes led to believe. Indeed, the agreement has clearly been of inestimable value to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and to Canada.

Let me repeat that the Crowsnest Pass agreement and statute are now and have been deemed since 1897 to be a charter of freedom of western agriculture, and were at the time they were granted, and are now, part of the regional give and take on railway rate matters which has over the years been accepted in this country.

In regard to the bill itself and its effect upon the economy of the country, much will depend upon the ability and qualifications of the 17 persons who will constitute the Transport Commission set up by the act. I am sure that all Canadians hope that this bill, resulting as it does from a study of transportation matters which began in 1959, will be successful in helping to solve the transportation problems of our country as well as assisting in the building of a greater Canada.

Hon. A. Hamilton McDonald: Honourable senators, there are four matters to which I would like to refer this afternoon.

I would refer first to the part played in the public life of Canada by the late M. A. MacPherson; I would refer to some matters which have been discussed by previous speakers on this bill; and I would also like to give some of my impressions of the power that I think the bill before us has in influencing the development of this country, in developing the nation in which Canadians will live 50 or 100 years from now. I would also like to make some remarks with regard to grain handling facilities, our country's elevator system in western Canada, in the hopes that I have that this legislation, and the policies that evolve out of it will result in modernizing the grain handling facilities in western Canada.

We all realize that the late Mr. MacPherson was a resident of the Province of Saskatchewan and of the City of Regina for most of his life. When Senator Thorvaldson referred to Mr. MacPherson not having been born in western Canada but in the Maritimes, my colleague Senator Smith (Queens-Shelburne) said that would be no handicap. It obviously was not, because the late M. A. MacPherson was a master in many fields. He was a prominent lawyer, heading one of the largest law firms in western Canada, he himself specializing in corporate law. In my view he had few equals in that field, either in western Canada or in all Canada. Apart from his legal practice, he was very active in the formation of and in participation in many companies that are active now in western Canada. The commission that we have been talking about for the past day or two is not the only commission on which the late M. A. MacPherson served. He served on many provincial and national commissions throughout his lifetime and was recognized in every instance as an expert in whatever field of endeavour the commission was set up to investigate.

He played a very active role in the political life of the province of Saskatchewan and of this country. It is only too bad that he had not lived to see the day when this legislation would be placed before Parliament and the day it would become the law of the land.

The honourable sponsor of this bill (Hon. Mr. Deschatelets) when proposing the second reading, did a great service for all senators in that by his rather full explanation I am sure all of us have a far better knowledge of the total content of Bill C-231 than we had prior to his introductory remarks. I congratulate him on his effort.

I think of all honourable senators who have taken part in this debate and who have made such excellent contributions. I wish to refer first to the comments by the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks). He referred to Bill C-231 as broad legislation and he said it would be the application of this legislation which would tell the story. I think that is a true and an honest assessment of this piece of legislation. It is broad enough and has the authority necessary to do all these things which would develop the transportation system for this nation and help to develop the type of Canada that you and I would like to leave for Canadians yet unborn. Honourable Senator Brooks went further and said he was sure that, in the application of this legislation, concern would be given so that fair play would be received by all Canadians, regardless of the part of Canada in which they live. I think that is possible under the legislation.

This leads me to some comments on the remarks of Senator Thorvaldson. I know you are aware that I have no legal training, and I do not attempt to get into legal arguments involved in past legislation and commitments that may have been made. But I think I can sum up very briefly the feeling of people in Western Canada. They believe that great areas of land and natural resources were given to the railroads in perpetuity in exchange for a rate on grain in perpetuity, period.

A cartoon in one of the eastern newspapers a few days ago depicted the problem very well. Some of you may have seen it. It depicted an area that had at one time been a forest but in which there was now just one tree left in the middle. All around that tree were the stumps where other trees once stood. The one tree that was left had a crow's nest in it with a couple of crows sitting out on the branch looking at their young. Well, woebetide the woodsman who cuts down that tree.

That reminds me of a story I heard about a big Swede who was acting as straw boss for a lumber camp in Northern Canada. It was in the fall of the year when they were taking on new employees. He was standing out in front of the cook-shack when a little short fellow—I think he was a Frenchman—came along and asked for a job. The Swede said, "What kind of job do you want?" The little fellow said, "I want to chop the trees." Man, you're not big enough, thought the Swede. Anyway he said to the little man, "You see that tool over there by the cook-shack—what is that?" "That's a woodsman's axe." "That's right. Now, take that axe and cut down that tree;" and he pointed to a small tree. The little man picked up the axe, and swish, down went the tree. Impressed, the big Swede pointed to a larger tree. "Try that one." Swish, swish, and down went the tree. The straw boss pointed to a great big tree and he said "Try that one for size." Chop, chop, chop, and down went the big tree. The big Swede was really impressed. "Where on earth did you ever learn to use an axe like that?" The little fellow said, "Why, in the Sahara Forest." "But there are no trees in the Sahara!" The little fellow replied "Not now."

Well, there is one tree left in this forest in Western Canada and I can only repeat: woebetide the individual who cuts it down.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: Senator Brooks also referred to the fact that he did not think that the railways should be asked to retain branch lines at great loss to the railway companies. I agree with him. I went back to look at the remarks of the sponsor of this legislation, when he was referring to this matter, and he said as follows: "Where burdens are placed on the transport companies by law, the public shall pay part of the cost." Provision is made to do this under Bill C-231, and it is my hope that those people who are charged with the responsibility of implementing policy and programs under this legislation will take cognizance of this fact.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: That is, that we have already paid for it?

Hon. Mr. McDonald: Yes, and perhaps will have to continue to pay for it on into the future.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Pay double?

Hon. Mr. McDonald: No. We will have to continue to pay towards some of the operating deficits that are involved.

Senator Brooks also referred to the fact that this nation had spent large sums of money to develop the St. Lawrence Seaway, and that this had had some detrimental effects on some areas in eastern Canada, and I agreed with him. But I am confident that, when the decision was made to develop the St. Lawrence Seaway, those people responsible for making that decision were convinced that for the total good of Canada the St. Lawrence Seaway had to be developed. We all know the important part that it is playing in the development of Canada today, when we think that ocean-going vessels are able to enter into virtually the heart of this North American continent.

Certainly this has caused some hardships in eastern Canada, but I think programs have been implemented to bring about some development in eastern Canada that might not have taken place, if it had not been for these more recent programs. It is my own hope that the Government of the day will continue to implement programs that will make it possible for the eastern provinces of Canada, the Maritime provinces, to prosper in the future even more than they would have if the St. Lawrence Seaway had never been built and they had continued to enjoy the shipping season all year round, something not enjoyed in other parts of Canada.

We in western Canada feel that some railway line abandonment will be necessary, but the problem is always to decide what line you are going to abandon. If you happen to live in a town or community through which a railroad line runs today and it is up for abandonment, or if your farm is closely associated with that railroad, you are very naturally opposed to the abandonment of that line. But most of these people will agree that some line some place else should be abandoned. You know the abandonment of railroad lines is something like socialism—it is good for everybody else but it is no good for me. This is the feeling of the people in Western Canada.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: It just depends on who is being socialized.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: Yes, it depends on who is being socialized. I am not one of those people who believe that it is impossible to abandon some railroad lines in Western Canada—perhaps I should say on the prairies—but I believe that if you are going to abandon them there must be some other railroads built. It may sound strange to advocate abandonment on the one hand and construction on the other.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: It is going on all the time.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: But we have railroads that start nowhere and end nowhere, and it seems to me that many of these could be abandoned, if we had joint railroads connected together a few miles away that would be cheaper to operate and would virtually serve the same communities.

Canada has often been described as a very difficult country in which to provide transportation. This is quite true. From east to west it is many thousands of miles in length, but very narrow in width, north to south. It is most difficult to provide an adequate transportation system when not only do you have this extreme distance from east to west and narrow width from north to south, but when the natural lines of traffic on this continent in many instances are north and south rather than east and west.

Here you have British Columbia cut off from the rest of Canada by the Rocky Mountains. British Columbia has far easier access into the United States than she has even into Alberta. Then you have the prairie regions cut off from Central Canada by the Great Lakes and that rocky terrain around the north of them. Then Senator Brooks and Senator Phillips explained the situation that exists in the Maritimes, where it is necessary to go north around a piece of the United States in order to get into the eastern part of Canada.

So it is difficult to tie this nation together with any type of transportation, be it railway, road, water, or air. But we have been successful in the past, and the progress we have made to date has been remarkable despite these natural difficulties that have been with us since this country was formed.

It seems to me that the legislation that we have before us will make it possible to do a better job in the future than we have done in the past.

The new commission, as the sponsor told us, will replace three old commissions. Some persons have said: You will have one big new group of bureaucrats doing what three small groups of bureaucrats used to do. Well, I do not look upon the commissioners of this new organization, or of the old bodies, as bureaucrats.

Senator Phillips said he hoped that these people would represent all Canada. I am sure we all agree with him in this desire, but it is my conviction that there are not 17 people in Canada who can do this job by themselves. Too often we set up commissions and send them off on the road without adequate staff, without adequate personnel to serve them, without providing them with all the essential material and facts necessary for making a decision. It is my hope that such a mistake will not be made with this new commission. I sincerely hope that they will have at their disposal the necessary, qualified personnel to provide them with all the facts before any decision is made. This is very necessary if, as I said at the outset, the legislation or the programs and policies that are evolved from this piece of legislation are to play the part they ought to play in developing the type of Canada that we would like to leave for Canadians yet unborn.

It seems to me that if we play no part, or if we do not interfere in any way with the natural growth of this country, then we are very apt to have a pattern of development similar to that in the great country to the south of us. It may be even more emphasized in Canada than in the United States because of the fact that we are a long narrow strip of land, which is how one could describe the occupied part of this country. It seems to me we could arrive at the day where we would have one City of Montreal with perhaps 20 million people, another 20 million people in Toronto, and another huge metropolitan area on the west coast, with very little in between and very little east of Montreal. I doubt if this is the type of Canada that our children and grandchildren would wish to live in. But if we give little or no guidance, this is very liable to happen. But if it does happen, this nation will be faced with tremendous expenditures many years from now to solve the problem that this type of development creates.

Think of the tremendous problems in the great cities in the world today with water and air pollution, with the problems of supplying fresh water and the problems of transportation. Untold millions of dollars will have to be spent on large cities, especially in the United States, in the very near future just to keep them habitable. This same situation could develop in Canada. Instead of having three or four large metropolitan areas, I would much prefer to see Canada develop 20 or 30 smaller metropolitan areas. This will cost money, honourable senators, but I doubt if in the end the expenditures will be greater than those involved in the type of growth that has taken place in that great country to the south of us.

I believe that the transportation programs and policies that will be implemented under this bill will play a large part in dictating the type of country we will live in 50 or 100 years from now.

I want to turn for a moment to the effect that this transportation policy could have on modernizing the grain handling facilities in western Canada. There has been some modernization in these facilities, but it has been painfully slow. I suggest to you that if the modernization of agriculture generally in western Canada had been as slow as the modernization of the grain handling facilities, then we would not have lost 50,000 farmers in Saskatchewan since the end of the last war—we would probably have lost them all. Farming has changed, and changed tremendously. This is the only reason that some 80,000 farmers have continued in the agricultural industry in my province, and are doing probably better today than their counterparts did 20 years ago. But what has happened the grain handling facilities? By and large the country elevators in Western Canada today are almost identical with those in operation at the turn of the century.

Hon. Mr. Paterson: Oh no, not by a long shot.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: My honourable friend does not agree with me; he is in the grain handling business. In Western Canada today and in my own province we have many of the old 30,000-bushel houses—and when I say "houses" I refer to the country elevators still in operation. The place for a 30,000-bushel house is out on the farm and not in the commercial elevator business. Certainly many new elevators have been built; we now have some modern elevators with a capacity of 150,000 bushels.

Furthermore, there have been some amalgamations and some of the weaker and smaller companies have been bought out by larger companies, and this is good. It has resulted in greater efficiency through the cutting down of staffs both in the field and in head offices. This has resulted in many towns, where a larger company purchased a smaller one with whom it had been in competition, and are now operating two elevators. In many cases they have A and B elevators. The A is the big parent elevator and B is the smaller one. As a general rule these elevators are operated by one man, or by one man and a helper.

Another factor in the updating of the country elevator system has been the change from diesel motors to electric motive power, but in many instances this has been a patched up hook-up affair where the modern, efficient electric motor is not given half a chance to perform its function. In many cases they took the old motor out and put the electric motor in and left in all the old linkage which could not provide the efficiency that the electric motor could provide. In other instances the linkage has been done away with and the electric motor has been attached to the leg at the bottom. In some instances the electric motor has been placed at the top of the leg where it should be to get maximum efficiency.

An hon. Senator: How do you spell that?

Hon. Mr. McDonald: The same as mine. The leg is the main bucket system running from the bottom of the elevator to the top where the wheat is dumped into the bins. In addition many of the belts that run around the leg have what they call high speed buckets installed because the old buckets on the rubber or leather belt which went around the leg were such that if you ran them too fast they carried the same wheat round and round all the time. So they put in high-speed buckets to allow the wheat to be dumped out at the top. Many country elevators have put in new pits; these are the steel bins where the leg goes in at the bottom with the scales on top where the grain is weighed. We have had new scales installed in many others.

But do not take it from what I have said that this is all that should be done to keep pace with the times. On the installation of scales alone, there have been days in Western Canada when the only way you could weigh a modern truck in a grain elevator was to drive in and weigh the front wheels first, and then drive through and weight the back wheels, because it just was not possible to weigh the whole unit at the one time. Don't tell me they have kept pace with automation.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: We have none of them at Rosetown.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: No. You were a little luckier and had some bigger crops, and they gave you some better elevators than some of us got.

Honourable senators, I want to give full credit for the efforts that have been made, but there are on this continent elevators that are fully automated, ones where an agent is not confined to 30,000, 70,000 or 150,000 bushels capacity. There are elevators on this continent that have a million-bushel capacity and are automated from beginning to end. There is no such thing as having to walk down to the end of the gangway and close the elevator door before you can weigh the load of grain because the wind is blowing through and the beam is going up and down like this. You still have that old beam with the old weight on it, and you walk up and down until you get a place where it balances. This type of scale is for the birds! You can weigh grain today with the human hand never touching it. Not only do you weigh it, but the weight is imprinted on the storage or cash ticket without the individual having to write it out by hand. I will refer to that again a little later on.

Not only have you automatic scales, but also automatic moisture testers, automatic dockage machines, automatic graders, automatic computers, automatic cheque writers so much so that one man and a helper are able to handle a million-bushel house rather than a house of 30,000, 50,000, 75,000 or 150,000 bushels.

I have in my hand a grain ticket. Not many people in eastern Canada have ever seen one. I attempted to have one cashed at a bank in Ottawa one day and they did not know what it was. However, they finally accepted it.

Hon. Mr. Baird: Is that coloured green?

Hon. Mr. McDonald: No. The colour of the original is white; but this is a copy. This is supplied by the Canadian Wheat Board, and it is virtually the same type of ticket as the first I ever received for a load of grain and as my father ever received. I will return to the subject matter of the ticket a little later.

In the first place, when you deliver a load of grain to a country elevator it is very seldom that the agent brings the storage or cash book out and makes out the ticket. It is so cold, windy and drafty, dusty and dirty in the gangway that he generally has an old calendar sheet from last year and he puts the particulars down on that as he weighs the grain, docks it, weighs the empty wagon, and so on. Then he takes you into his office and starts to fill this ticket out.

In the first column you have "gross weight." Of course he has to take this off the scales, put it down on the calendar pad and take it to the office. He puts down the gross weight in longhand, weighs the vehicle after the grain has been dumped out, and puts that in, and then subtracts one from the other in his head. Then if you want the grain cleaned, he takes out the screenings and cleanings and deducts those. Then you have the gross weight after cleaning. Then he takes out shrinkage, all by hand, and enters the gross weight to account for it.

That is not the end of it. He transfers that over on to the other half of the ticket, but before doing that he writes in the name of the station and the Canadian Wheat Board number, the date, type of grain—all by hand. Then he puts your name in; he puts your producers permit book number in by hand; he puts your address in by hand. Then all these figures that he has put down he reproduces again in writing. Then he has a further calculation to make when he gets the total weight of grain, grade, price per bushel—and they do have a calculator to do this—the value. Then he deducts the P.F.A.A. deductions and enters on the cheque the final amount that you are entitled to—all in longhand. Then he signs it, and if you belong to a co-operative he writes your co-operative number in. If you are a tenant he writes the landlord's name in. In the meantime you smoke two cigarettes, drink a cup of coffee and have a very enjoyable afternoon.

Surely, we are part of a different society, one that cannot afford this outmoded system? One of the reasons we have this type of system is because every time the grain-handling companies get into a financial squeeze they can come to Ottawa and make application for an increase either in handling or in storage charges. They do not often get what they ask for, but quite often they get an increase, and sometimes they are adjusted because of particular conditions prevalent at that time.

This can all be done by machine today, and the cost of handling a hundred or a million bushels of grain in my humble opinion could be much less than it is. But it cannot be less unless we have a drastic change in our country elevator system.

My figures are ten years old now, but in 1956 I made a survey of the total amount of grain handled by the country elevator system in Saskatchewan, and of the amount of grain that was handled on the average by each elevator. Ten years ago there were, in round figures, 300 bushels a day entering and leaving the average country elevator in Saskatchewan. I can carry 300 bushels in a pail from a wagon to the top of an elevator, and do away with all the rest. But this is foolishness, and it is foolish to have a country elevator system where your average handlings for a 200-work day a year are 300 bushels a day. Naturally, it is more today: We are growing more grain, and we have had some amalgamations. I did not have the resources at my disposal to get the average today, but I am sure it is not keeping pace with the modernization in other industries.

We have another problem with the transportation of grain from western Canada to our ports. Our grain is taken from the country elevator to terminals—whether at Fort William or Vancouver—in the raw state. You are moving the dockage, the weed seeds and cracked grain from the place of the producer down to your terminal elevators, and in some instances moving the screenings back to where they were produced. In my humble opinion, this grain should be cleaned on the prairies, and in the future it will have to be cleaned there.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: This is all very interesting, honourable senator, but what has it all to do with the bill before us? I have been very attentive but I cannot see the connection.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: I do not think you have been very attentive, or you would have heard me say that the bill before us, which is a transportation bill, has a tremendous effect on the facilities that we are going to have available for handling western grain production in the future. What I am trying to point out is the inefficiency of the system today, and that it is high time it was changed. It is my hope that those people charged with the responsibility of implementing programs under this piece of legislation will bear these matters in mind.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Are the railroads responsible?

Hon. Mr. McDonald: They are responsible for moving the grain from the elevators.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: After it moves out of the elevators.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: You are speaking of the situation in the elevators.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Are the railroads responsible for the situation in the elevators?

Hon. Mr. McDonald: No, they are not, but if we are to have some adjustment in the railroad system in Western Canada, if some branch lines are to be done away with, and perhaps some new additions made to the railroad system to hook up two areas that may be several miles apart by a branch line or an inter-connecting line between two main lines, then this is, in my opinion, a golden opportunity for the company that are charged with the responsibility to the country elevator system in western Canada to modernize and bring their elevators up to date.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: I agree with you. It should be done.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: I was talking about removing weed seeds and cracked grain from the grain before it is moved to the terminal elevators. I know that some of this material has gone into export channels, but there is a need, and there will be a greater need, for it to remain in Western Canada. It is estimated that by 1980 the production of red meat on this continent will have doubled. One of the main areas of Canada to double its red meat production is Western Canada, and I think there is going to be great need for all of these waste materials that are included in the grain that is now being shipped to our terminal elevators. It will have to be cleaned before it leaves the place of origin.

Honourable senators, I shall conclude by saying again that this bill gives us a golden opportunity to change some of our old habits in Canada. It gives us a golden opportunity to design the type of country that we would like to leave for the coming generations. To repeat the remarks I made at the beginning of my short address, surely we are not going to let this country grow up in a laissez faire fashion so that it will be unsuited to the generations yet unborn. We have an opportunity in this legislation to do something about that.

I sincerely hope that the 17 commissioners will be the best men available in Canada, and that they will have an adequate staff to do the research so that every decision they make will be the right and proper one. If that is the case then we can be hopeful that Canadians to come will have a better country in which to live—better than that in which you and I have had to live, and it has certainly not been too bad for us.

Hon. Norman McL. Paterson: Honourable senators, before we forget what the honourable senator has said I should like to remark that the first elevator I built cost $5,000. About two years ago I built one at Broadview that cost $85,000.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: It is a good one too.

Hon. Mr. Paterson: The honourable senator was entirely wrong. The first elevator I saw was run by a horse going around a capstan. Then, there was another one that was run by a steam engine. Nearly every elevator today is run by electric motors. The carts that came in with the grain in those early days carried 30 to 40 bushels in bags. Today trucks will come in each with 500 bushels.

If the pools were taxed they would have to compete with us fellows, and build a little better type of elevator.

Hon. Hazen Argue: Honourable senators, before the motion is put I should like to say a few words.

I associate myself with other honourable senators who have complimented the honourable Deputy Leader of the Government for his competent introduction of this very important and complicated measure.

I want to associate myself also with the remarks of Senator McDonald who has just resumed his seat, in referring to the late Mr. M. A. MacPherson of Regina, Saskatchewan, who was a most outstanding Canadian, a man who over a whole lifetime completed successfully any job to which he set his hand. In the field of railway matters certainly he had become Canada's outstanding authority.

Mr. MacPherson, if I may say so, seemed to take at different periods of his life somewhat different attitudes to the same question. I can say that I was emotionally in greater sympathy with his general stand when he was opposing freight rate increases than I was when he said, for example, there should be after inquiry compensation to the railways for the Crowsnest Pass grain rates. Mr. MacPherson was a very outstanding Canadian who made a great contribution to the public life of this country.

I agree with Senator Thorvaldson in his stated opposition to any change in the Crownest Pass grain rates. That opposition is a nonpolitical thing in Canada because I know of no political party that is in favour of any tinkering with the Crowsnest Pass grain rates. Speaking for myself, I would be quite happy if the delay in inquiring into the Crowsnest Pass grain rates, to decide whether they are compensatory or not to the railway companies, is prolonged, because if there is one issue today on which the people of the Prairies are united it is in respect of those rates and in opposition to tinkering with them.

I must say that the people on the Prairies, generally, are suspicious of any activity that might tend to prove that these rates do not compensate the railway companies in an adequate way and that therefore the companies should be compensated from the national treasury. They view any move in that direction with considerable suspicion.

It is all very well for people to get up and say: "We want all controls off, and all regulations off." That is fine, and I certainly feel that there should be a maximum amount of competition wherever it is possible. But let us never forget that the industry of this country has been built up to a substantial degree by the existing tariffs. We have tariffs in this country against many goods coming into it from other countries. The people on the Prairies feel that it is right in the public interest that this great grain export industry should be encouraged by the provision of the lowest possible freight rates.

I do not think that there is any doubt that when this measure becomes effective the people on the Prairies and the people in the Maritimes as well, to a much greater degree than people in other parts of Canada, will be required to pay higher freight rates. Public money to the amount of $110 million a year is now paid by way of subsidies to its railroads. One of the principles of this measure is to phase these subsidies out, and to increase freight rates, albeit as far as possible in a competitive way, and thus transfer the burden from the national treasury to the transport users of this country. I hope that in all of these steps the new commission, and the Parliament of this country, will see to it that the freight rates are as fair as possible and kept in relation with other general policies of the government across our country.

Honourable senators, I want to take what might be called a rather parochial attitude today, because I do feel it is required that a case be made in the direct interests of the people who will be affected—and adversely affected—by the abandonment of railway lines when those abandonments do take place. Let us not forget that the pioneers who went out to Western Canada to turn the sod and establish that great agricultural area spent years of their lives in endeavouring to get an adequate network of railways and railway branch lines to service the area. Their sons and daughters will not take kindly to any general wholesale effort towards taking up branch lines and undoing the work of their forefathers in bringing railway services to the country.

I am not going to say that some branch lines cannot be abandoned, or should not be abandoned. Branch lines have been abandoned in the past. But, I think there should be a careful and cautious approach to this matter, for a number of reasons.

I have looked over the submissions of the farm organizations to the transport committee and I have read the debates in the other place. There are some outstanding contributions. However, it does seem to me that there has been a general oversight of the precise and adverse effect on the individual producer by rail line abandonment.

Honourable senators, I put it to you in this way. Imagine that you are a producer and that you have a farm unit close to a railway marketing point, that you have one of those elevators which Senator Paterson referred to. Most of the farms are at least adequate from a farmer's point of view, although they may not be the most efficient from a grain company's point of view. In any event, your farm is close to a local elevator. All of a sudden a railway branch line is abandoned, and instead of hauling perhaps five miles to the local elevator you have to haul possibly 25 miles to another elevator. I suggest that you are going to lose at least 10 cents a bushel immediately by that single act. If that should be the case, and I believe it is the case, then the farmer will lose up to 6 per cent of his gross income from wheat by that single act. I suggest that would mean a reduction of at least from 15 per cent to 20 per cent or 25 per cent in his net income.

This is why the farmers on the Prairies are going to be very much opposed and will do everything they can to prevent the abandonment of some of these railway lines that the railway companies will endeavour to abandon.

Not only will the farmer lose this net income, but if he is an older man and wishes to retire he will immediately lose a part of the capital value of the farm. Many farmers, I think all farmers, will pay extra money to get a farm close to a market, and will pay less money if the farm is remote, and railway abandonment will affect the capital value.

I saw little or no reference to this point by the farm organizations or by people talking about this subject, and I feel that it is time we started to think about the individual who will be adversely affected by this kind of a move.

Now, the Government has adopted, and I think rightly, a number of important policies to compensate in other areas when automation and modernization of facilities takes place. One has only to mention the coal mines of Cape Breton. I am told by my colleague Senator Urquhart that it will cost $25 million to phase out the coal industry and that another $30 million is required for new industry. I think that is the modern attitude to adverse results that come about by reason of automation and modern development.

The whole concept of government today is to try to lessen the burden, where there is a burden following automation. The Freedman Royal Commission, which had to deal with the dismissal of certain employees on the railway runthroughs because they were not required, made important recommendations to ease this kind of modernization.

We have an ARDA program to which was committed $75 million, because Parliament said, and rightly so, that we should do everything we can to bring industry into the agricultural areas and to support those areas. I suggest that Parliament should be careful, even from a monetary and budget standpoint, when, on the one hand, it is spending $75 million to bring industry to certain areas, further millions to compensate for the adverse effect of modernization and automation in certain other areas, and then on the other hand, says, now we are going to go ahead and provide for this kind of modernization but without taking into account the possibility of paying some direct compensation to the farmers who may be adversely affected.

I think some consideration should be given, when the railways feel a line should be abandoned, to providing some compensation to the farmers. I can think of a plan and a formula. They know the marketing pattern of the past and the new pattern that will result from abandonment. There is that information to guide them in establishing a formula whereby a farmer who is adversely affected will get some compensation when such a railway line is abandoned.

I also think there should be the utmost care taken in looking into any of these applications for the abandonment of a railway line, because I think it has already been proven, even to the railways' satisfaction, that they were too ambitious a few years ago in the number of branch lines they wished to have abandoned, and since that time there has been an increase of traffic over most of those branch lines.

A few years ago there was talk of the abandonment of 4,000 miles of railway lines on the prairies. The railway companies have said since that at least until 1975 they will not be asking for any more than a maximum of 1,800 miles of abandonment. So let us not agree to the abandoning of a given line when in fact that line might become a very economic line in the years ahead.

I want to say that the present legislation, as I read it, is a substantial improvement over the first draft, and that the Canadian Transportation Commission has a good deal of discretion in recommending whether or not an uneconomic line should be maintained, and if so, suggesting a certain monetary compensation to the railway companies; but I know of no consideration that has been given to compensating farmers themselves when a line is abandoned.

Now, no doubt there will be lots of applications for abandonment of lines. The railways will be doing everything they can to abandon the lines which are not now protected. I can understand their point of view very well. They are going to get the grain anyway. If a farmer has to haul another 20, 30, or 40 miles, the railway companies will get the grain, and under the Crowsnest Pass Agreement they will be paid almost precisely the same amount, so it is to their advantage to obtain abandonment. But is it to the advantage of the farmers?

I know one part of a branch line some 50 miles in length that the railways are endeavouring to abandon. In each of three towns there is a brand new elevator, or less than two or three years old; so modern facilities are available. The three elevators have been handling during the past year over 1,000,000 bushels of grain. To haul that quantity out requires 22 miles of railway from the three points. It is so easy to say, "Let's go modern; let large elevators in the main lines." Well, the railways informed the transport committee that they would like to have a marketing point every 50 miles. To haul this greater distance, a farmer must incur a substantial expense. A small freight train today carrying grain has fifty cars, and to carry the wheat that goes into those fifty 2,000-bushel cars would take 500 farmers driving 500 trucks, each one carrying a load of 200 bushels of wheat. I ask you, which is the more efficient, a railway train with four or five people operating it, or 500 farmers driving trucks at their own expense because the railway lines have been abandoned? This is modernization in reverse. Where railway lines are abandoned, it will mean a transfer of money from the farmers' pockets to the automobile manufacturers, truck manufacturers, oil companies and so on.

I am not saying there should be no branch line abandonment. This is a problem which must be dealt with. However, it should be dealt with with great caution. I am saying that we should not automatically decide that, because a branch line loses some money it should be taken out. The railway may be the only small industry in that area. It may have in that elevator a good modern seed-cleaning plant, which is something which should be considered.

I realize that the Transport Commission will have power to make that recommendation. I am merely saying that I hope it will be given the greatest possible amount of weight.

I would suggest that in handling this whole affair there is need for a united voice from the Prairie provinces. I suggest that at present, at least on this problem, the farm organizations are weak, divided, and not very articulate. The Canadian Federation of Agriculture did not even grace the Transport Commission hearing with a submission. It did not appear. The Wheat Pools appeared, the Farmers' Union appeared, but their submissions were not the strong submissions that the situation required.

In the interest of getting the best possible results from this legislation—not to destroy it or undermine it but to get the very best possible results—the people in the Prairie Provinces should be united on this problem in one organization representing the farm organizations of the three provincial governments, so that when representation is made to the new commission it will be made with a strong voice.

Furthermore, some consideration should be given to providing moneys to the producers themselves for losses in any phasing-out period. I believe it is just, it is fair and it is in keeping with the Government and Parliament's attitude to other industries and other areas faced with somewhat similar problems.

The federal Government should also take the initiative in providing legal counsel and competent experts on freight rates and freight questions, to help put the case for those areas affected by proposed branch line abandonment. This would mean a kind of ombudsman, enlisted to argue the economic and other legitimate interests of those who may be affected.

Let us assume and let us hope that this commission will be the best in the world.

However, appearing before it will be representatives of the railway companies, who are strong and powerful. The Government would be doing the country a service if it provided a bureau from which legal personnel would be available with the services of railway economists, to go before that commission to make sure that the producers' case would be well represented. The farmers do not stand a chance by themselves before a commission, where they will be arguing against legal counsel, economists and rail costing experts representing railway companies.

This morning I read an important statement in the press by the Honourable John Turner, Minister without Portfolio, wherein he advocated a system to provide public moneys for legal aid to people who are unable to provide legal assistance for themselves when they get into difficulties. That is a good principle, and I compliment the Honourable Mr. Turner on his statement. It is my opinion that that principle should be extended in a situation like this, to provide legal services to producers along the railway lines, who may not be adequately represented before the new commission.

Care must be taken that the abandonment procedures are not carried out in cases where, a few years later, everyone would agree a mistake has been made.

The agricultural industry in Western Canada is efficient, as Senator McDonald so well said. It has increased its productivity in the last few years by 50 per cent. The agronomists of this country are using every effort on a accelerated basis to increase the grain yields.

As one who understands something of this field, I would expect to see a great breakthrough in grain production in the next few years, showing at least a 25 per cent increase, and therefore there would be at least that much greater business for the railway companies.

I am sure this bill has received careful consideration and thought before being brought before us. Many amendments have been made to the first draft and the Government has been prepared to accept the amendments. I feel that further changes will be made, and I have made my comments this afternoon in the hope that when this case is argued, the same weight and consideration may be given to the farmers as is being given to the railway position.

Hon. G. Percival Burchill: Honourable senators, at this hour of the day I can assure you my remarks will be brief. In case anyone should leave this chamber this afternoon under the impression that all the transportation problems are in Western Canada, I join with my colleagues from the Maritimes, my old friends Senator Brooks and Senator Phillips, in emphasizing that we in eastern Canada have some problems regarding transportation.

Before I say more about that, may I say I was glad to hear the gracious and deserving tribute paid this afternoon to the Honourable Mr. MacPherson, the Chairman of the Royal Commission on Transportation which brought in the report on which this legislation is based. I wish to remind honourable senators that Mr. MacPherson came from the Maritime Provinces. He was our gift to Western Canada. Mr. MacPherson was not alone in that respect: we have sent thousands out there since Confederation, and we will send many more, because the Maritimes are producing the same kind of men all the time. Therefore, do not forget where the good stuff comes from, when talking about the glories and the progress made in western Canada.

I join with my Maritime friends in respect to the problems of transportation in eastern Canada. These are vital problems for us. To go back to the days of Confederation, one of the provisions which brought the Maritime provinces into Confederation was that a railroad be built to enable manufacturers in the Maritime provinces to market their goods in central Canada. So the Intercolonial Railway was built, and for some years while that company had its main office in Moncton we enjoyed fairly good times. But the Intercolonial Railway was assimilated into the great Canadian National, with headquarters in metropolitan Montreal. We in the Maritimes felt that that agreement was sacred, as our forefathers also thought it was sacred when the Maritimes joined Confederation.

We have an idea now and have had for some years that the agreement is not regarded by the management of the Canadian National Railways in the same way as it was at the time when it was formulated in the days of Confederation, with the result that ever since that time transportation has been a burning question all over the Maritime provinces. In fact it got to such a point, I think in 1926, that a special train carrying people from all over the Maritimes—among them the most prominent citizens—came here to Ottawa to protest to the Government. They demanded that something be done, because in those days, and previous to that time, we were really handcuffed. The word they use today I think is "captive."

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Straitjacket.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: Yes. We were really handcuffed. We could not get anywhere in the Maritimes. So this special delegation went to Ottawa, and as a result the Duncan Commission was appointed and we finally got the Maritime Freight Rates Act.

Also, the Maritime Provinces Transport Commission has been in operation down there ever since, to ensure that operations are in line with the objectives of the Maritime Freight Rates Act. I want to pay tribute to that commission for the work it has done through the years in acting as watchdog over the rates charged by the Canadian National Railways on our commodities.

Now let me remind you once more that trading from central Canada to the Maritimes is a one-way street. We have to buy everything we need from the manufacturers in the central provinces, but we cannot sell them anything—at least we cannot sell them much, because the cost of transporting our goods to the central Canadian market undermines our ability to compete with other goods.

Senator Phillips yesterday afternoon gave two very excellent examples of what is happening and the detrimental effect it is having on our manufacturers in the Maritimes.

I remember one of our great manufacturers in New Brunswick, the late Mr. A. D. Ganong, who was a very active member of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce and the Maritime Board of Trade. He gave a lot of time to the furtherance of matters considered by those bodies. He told me once that the only product that virtually could be manufactured in the Maritimes with any hope of successful marketing in central Canada was a small article that did not weigh much, so that the cost of transporting it would be a small part of the total cost of manufacturing and delivery.

I think Maritime manufacturers in their years of experience would bear out and confirm that statement by Mr. Ganong.

In our section of the Province of New Brunswick, the northern part, we are solely dependent on the Canadian National Railways. Lumber and forestry products, which are the principal products of that section of the province, if shipped to points on this Continent, are entirely dependent on the Canadian National Railways. The lumber industry survived over the years down there on account of the opportunities we had for shipping and selling to the United Kingdom.

In latter months, the restrictions that have been imposed in the United Kingdom on account of economic conditions over there have made it pretty difficult to make any sales in that market. So the industry is restricted in its search for markets for its products. I do not know what we would do if it were not for the truck transportation that we are able to employ between our manufacturing points and the market in eastern seaboard of the United States.

I am very much in favour of Senator Brooks' suggestion for a corridor road through Maine, an idea which has been promoted recently in the Maritimes so that we may use truck transportation for our commodities in the hope of being able to compete on a better basis in the Canadian market.

Let me just conclude by saying that, so far as the Maritime provinces are concerned, and in fact the Atlantic provinces, transportation is our very lifeline. I cannot emphasize too much that our future welfare and prosperity depends on transportation, and I have every reason to hope that the commission which will be appointed by this legislation will study and favourably consider the Maritime situation. If the worst comes to the worst, of course, as Senator Asletine reminded us this afternoon when he referred to what happened in 1919, we can always depend upon the Senate to look after our interests.

Hon. Gordon B. Isnor: Honourable senators, as the hour is late I will condense my remarks to the lowest possible point. However, I feel that in view of the fact that three westerners have taken part in the debate this afternoon and have presented their story in such an able manner, the least I can do is try to present our story from the east along with those points made by the honourable Senator Burchill.

I listened to and read the remarks made in the House of Commons on this bill, and I was very much impressed with the arguments advanced there. The reasons for the bill impressed me, but I think if the people of Canada could have listened to the remarks of the previous speakers this afternoon and to the remarks of the speakers yesterday, and as well to those of the sponsor of this bill (Hon. Mr. Deschatelets), they would better realize the value of the Senate.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: I pause at this time to compliment the Deputy Leader of the Government on the very able manner in which he outlined this bill. He gave us a wonderful background which made it ever so much easier for us to follow the bill, for it is a voluminous document and covers a lot of ground. I know that we all appreciate the homework and the very fine manner in which he presented the main features of this bill.

Coming as I do from the Maritimes, I naturally must speak not so much of the railway angle but rather of the effect that it is going to have on traffic in general. This is not a railway bill, as has been emphasized time and again by various speakers, but is rather a transport policy bill designed to cover all phases of transportation, namely, by rail, air, water, truck, and even pipe lines.

The competition phase of the others has been emphasized. We in the Maritimes do not enjoy the competition which they enjoy and have in central Canada, and for that reason I am just wondering what is going to happen to the rates. Naturally, a person in business, if he has very keen competition, is going to be guided to a certain extent by the prices offered by his competitors. In the case of Ontario and Quebec it is particularly true that they have a system of transportation by truck. The railways naturally will be interested in comparing their rates, and of course will be so guided.

We in the eastern section of Canada have not the same form of competition, and I am just wondering what effect that fact might have on these 17 men on the commission who will be obliged to decide whether an increase in the rates is warranted.

Honourable senators, like others, I had misgivings at first about this bill. I wondered what effect it would have on my own section of the country. Illustrations have already been given of the costs of production and manufacturing in the Maritimes. Senator Phillips and Senator Burchill spoke on these questions. I remember one manufacturer of coffee remarking to me, "Do you realize that we pay 65 per cent of the cost of the product on freight rates?" He went on to point out that we pay to bring the glass jar from central Canada to Halifax, where we fill it with the best brand of coffee made in Canada and then ship it back again, and that the cost involved in this represents 65 per cent of the total cost of the product. I have remembered his remarks since then because they brought home to me the effect of the transportation charges on the railways.

I was very much interested in what the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks) had to say, and I was very pleased to hear that he approved of the bill. I too approve of the bill. I think if properly implemented and if adequate consideration is given to its details, it will work for the interests of all concerned. However, as I said a moment ago, this measure involves a transportation policy and not just a railways policy. The users of transportation require a healthy and efficient transport system, free to compete and to be paid for by the users. I think Bill C-231 will implement this idea as well as the recommendations contained in the MacPherson Report.

Reference has been made to the greater use of pipe line transportation for solids. Serious consideration should be given to this matter. Sulphur, potash, wood chips, iron ore as well as wheat shipments could possibly be moved by this means in the future.

Honourable senators, one of my concerns since the bill was first introduced has been the effect it will have on the Port of Halifax. We all realize that the federal Government has a larger capital investment in the National Harbours Board, but this has not been talked about to date to any extent. I mention it because it is something which should not be overlooked. While the St. Lawrence ports will no doubt continue to be used by interested parties, for the sake of those who now make their living on the waterfront I hope that the ports of Halifax and Saint John will continue to be used to the greatest possible extent, particularly in the winter season.

May I at this juncture refer to Halifax as being perhaps the safest year-round shipping port in the whole of Canada. I think that fact is generally recognized. It has a depth of 70 feet, which enables the largest ships to enter the port, dock, turn around and go out again without the slightest danger.

In this connection I would mention that yesterday the Halifax press carried an item which stated that a $60,000 report by a New York consulting firm is now being studied in Halifax in respect to the possibility of developing the Port of Halifax as the terminal for giant bulk cargo vessels, such as I believe will be in use in future years. These ships are getting larger and larger, and for that reason I look to greater possible use of the Port of Halifax.

I might also make a passing reference to freight rates, which have increased 157 per cent in twelve years. But they have increased more in the Maritimes than in any other section of the country; in fact, one-third of the traffic has borne three-quarters of the increase.

I think I should also mention that the act which came into force in 1927 approved a 30 per cent freight charge subsidy for goods shipped east of Levis, Quebec, to central Canadian markets. This was designed to place eastern manufacturers on a price parity basis with their competitors in central Canada. That is a point which should not be overlooked. It is especially important to remember this because of the centralized population, particularly in the Toronto area, within a radius of 100 miles of that city. This applies equally to Montreal and the surrounding industrial districts.

Honourable senators, I mentioned the larger type of bulk carriers. The development of such carriers is growing, and ports such as Halifax which have safe deep-water berths should attract them. I mention this also so that our friends in the Maritimes will not overlook the advantages of our fine harbours. At this stage I think I should also mention the contracts entered into between the Canadian Government and the Russian Government for the shipment of grain. I believe all that grain should be shipped through our own Canadian ports. I have in mind particularly the suitability of the ports of Halifax and Saint John for the shipment of flour, but I think both ports should share equally the benefits to be derived from the traffic. At the present time 100 per cent of the shipment are going through the Port of Saint John. I do not know whether they are more energetic and more active there than we are in Nova Scotia, but that is the situation that exists today and I feel that the Government should look into this matter with a view to distributing the shipments equally.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: You are getting most of the other freight.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Perhaps we handle the other freight better than they do in Saint John; and of course we have a safer harbour. At any rate, I feel that these shipments should be through Canadian rather than United States ports.

No doubt the drafters of this particular bill intended to assist all parts of Canada in equal measure. If so, I feel it ought to be emphasized that all such cargo should be shipped through Canadian ports, and that all through rates by Canadian railways to and from Canadian ports must not be greater than the rates for shipping via United States ports. I leave that thought with those who will have to consider these questions later. I sincerely trust that protection will be given to all Canadian ports.

Since this is Centennial Year, let us look back to what has happened from 1867 to the present time. My honourable friend Senator Burchill has already spoken of the feeling in the Maritimes. When we entered Confederation we felt that we were going to have direct contact and the same opportunities as other provinces to do business with central and other parts of Canada. I feel that should be emphasized, so that the commission, when appointed, will bear it in mind and see that the maritime provinces are given the thought and attention they had hoped for when entering Confederation.

Following along the same line of thought, the mere fact that a greater proportion of Atlantic region tonnage is carried by the rails compared to any other region of Canada means that any increase in rail rates resulting from Bill C-231 will hit the Atlantic provinces harder than other regions.

At this point I might mention that the lack of motor truck competition with the railways means that the railways will feel free to apply, and no doubt will apply, rate increases in the Atlantic region, yet will be reluctant to apply them in areas with effective competition such as Ontario and Quebec for fear of losing their traffic. I have mentioned that before, but it does no harm to emphasize it.

Again, without being narrow in my thinking, the Government and the country have a big financial stake in the St. Lawrence, and we all recall that when the St. Lawrence Seaway development was inaugurated it was stated that it would be self-supporting. It is not now, and never has been in such a position. At the present time it is operating with a deficit in the region of $42 million, its true accumulated deficit being about $76 million.

I mention this because there are some who feel that the St. Lawrence ports should continue to operate without an increased toll charge, and I feel, in fairness to the Government as well as putting the St. Lawrence ports on a par with other ports, that this increase of tolls should go into effect. I think I am right in saying that a few years ago the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks) thought otherwise, but I was happy to note when he spoke here yesterday that he thought these tolls should be increased. I hope I am not misquoting him.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: That is on the canal system.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: I just want to put that on record.

The main features of this bill have been so well covered that I do not propose to comment further on the matter at this late hour.

In closing, may I say that I have endeavoured to keep my remarks on an impartial and nonpolitical basis. If the measure becomes law I am axious to see the act given a fair trial, and I again repeat the words of the Leader of the Opposition, "I am in favour of the bill."

Hon. Malcolm Hollett: Honourable senators, I do not intend to take up much of your time, but I am a Canadian—as a matter of fact, I received a placard to that effect today. I live in little Newfoundland, opposite the mouth of the St. Lawrence River, and I have not heard the word Newfoundland mentioned since this debate began. I did hear an honourable senator opposite complaining that his grain cheque was not made out by the computer system. I heard some honourable senators complaining about things in other parts of Canada, but I did not hear Newfoundland mentioned at all.

It is nearly 18 years since we entered Confederation, and I remember hearing speakers on the public platform in Newfoundland in those rugged days before we entered Confederation, say that we would get a railway comparable to that of the rest of the country, as soon as they could build it.

In Newfoundland today we have a narrow-gauge railway, and it takes twice as long to travel from Port aux Basques to St. John's as it would if we had a wider gauge. We were promised a wider gauge but it has not been built yet.

I merely rise to remind the commissioners, when they are appointed, that we are still expecting that railway to be rebuilt with regular gauge rails which as I say, would make possible the journey from Port aux Basques to St. John's in almost half the time; and the cost to carry freight back and forth would be considerably less. I am quite sure that my friend opposite, Senator Cook, will agree with me when I say that we want that wide-gauge railway.

As for other means of transportation, I think Air Canada is marvelous. We in Newfoundland have every reason to admire the service it provides. We are flying across the ocean more and more. The ships are also doing a splendid job.

I am not complaining at all. I am just reminding the Senate of, and asking the commissioners when appointed, to remember the promise that was made to the people of Newfoundland 18 years ago.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Do you want them to abandon your railroad and build a new one?

Hon. Mr. Hollett: Yes, that is what we want them to do.

Hon. Jean-Paul Deschatelets: Honourable senators,—

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, if the honourable Senator Deschatelets speaks now it will have the effect of closing the debate.

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: Honourable senators, I have some good news for you—I will be brief.

I wish to thank all the honourable senators who have taken part in this excellent debate; they have all been very kind to me in their remarks. I appreciate this, and also wish to tell them how valuable have been their contributions to this debate. I wish to put some emphasis on the fact that since the beginning this debate has been kept on the highest level. I believe we have seen the Senate at its best.

Honourable senators, I had prepared answers to some difficult questions which were raised, but since in a few minutes I am going to move that this bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, and since the Minister of Transport will appear before that committee, I think that better answers and more elaborate details could be given in committee. Therefore, I think it will be found more satisfactory if at this time I conclude my remarks by saying that if the debate that has taken place is a sample of what is going to occur in committee, then we shall have a lively and interesting hearing.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Deschatelets, bill referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS FINANCING AND GUARANTEE BILL, 1965-1966

SECOND READING

Hon. W. M. Benidickson moved the second reading of Bill C-229, to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways System for the period from the 1st day of January 1965 to the 30th day of June 1967, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company.

He said: Honourable senators, this bill will be familiar to this assembly, because basically it is the same as that of many previous years, except that on this occasion it combines two years in one measure. In this, though, it is not unique, as there is a precedent for it, in that the Canadian National Railways Financing and Guarantee Act of 1962-63 also combined two years in one act.

The bill is intended to accomplish six main purposes, each of which is similar in form to those of preceding acts.

First, in simple language, the bill proposes to authorize capital expenditures by the Canadian National Railways not exceeding $161,600,000 during the 1965 calendar year and not exceeding $192 million during the 1966 calendar year.

While the level of expenditure in 1965 is about the same as that incurred in the previous year, the level for 1966 is somewhat higher.

The bill contains technical provisions authorizing payments not exceeding $126 million coming due between January 1 and July 1 of this year, for obligations incurred prior to 1967. It also authorizes the Canadian National Railways to enter into contracts not exceeding $90 million for capital expenditures before July 1 of 1967, when payment will not become due until after 1966.

I think it will be recognized that we are dealing with capital expenditures in the two-year bill of $161 million for 1965 and $192 million for 1966, with provisions for certain commitments being given to the Canadian National Railways which extend into 1967.

The second point of the bill provides for the continued purchase by the Minister of Finance of Canadian National Railway four per cent preferred stock through to the end of the calendar year 1967. This continues the practice of previous financing and guarantee acts. I point out that the 1964 financing and guarantee act, which was the last one before the Senate, extended to December 31, 1965. It extended the expiry date of the authority granted by the Canadian National Railways Capital Revision Act of 1952 for the purchase of such stock.

I must point out to the Senate that from my personal studies I find that the original act of 1952 contemplated expiry after nine years from the enactment of 1952, but for several years both Houses of Parliament have agreed to extensions. The cost of the purchase of four per cent preferred stock is at the present time about $25 million a year. It does not presently return anything on this investment. I think since 1952 dividends have been paid only in three or four of the years in this period.

The third item involved in this bill will extend until the year 1967 a moratorium on interest on the government loan of $100 million to the railway company, which was also authorized in the basic act of capital revision of 1952. Again I must point out to the Senate that the original concept in the 1952 act was that the interest would be forgiven for a period of ten years, and in the last ten-year term of the loan interest would be paid. Each year Parliament has decided to forgive the interest on this particular item of $100 million, and that is incorporated in the bill before us.

The fourth point is that the bill will provide for the interim financing requirements of Air Canada during the first six months of the calendar year 1967 in the amount of $50 million. The reason for this, honourable senators, is that the Crown-owned airline company has engaged in very exceptional purchasing of new equipment. For some years previous it has not been required to borrow from the Crown, but because of this purchase of new equipment it does for the first six months of 1967 require some government guarantee for its financing.

Fifth, as in previous years, this bill in a similar way provides authority for the Government to make temporary loans to the Canadian National Railways and to Air Canada to meet deficiencies in operating revenues up to June 30 of 1967. Any such loan is to be repaid later from revenues of the railroad or of the airline. If these prove insufficient, then in the usual manner you will receive a request for a vote through the Estimates to cover any deficiency. So far as the C.N.R. is concerned there have been substantial deficiencies for several years, but that situation does not apply to Air Canada.

Sixth, the bill will provide for the appointment of the firm of Touche, Ross, Bailey and Smart, Chartered Accountants, of the cities of Toronto and Montreal, as auditors of the C.N.R. for the calendar years referred to in the bill.

Now I understand that the Leader of the Government in the Senate feels that inasmuch as for reasons known to all of us there was not a review of the budgets or reports of the C.N.R. or Air Canada for the calendar year 1965, or indeed for the calendar year 1966, it will be appropriate for this chamber to ask that officers of these two important crown companies appear before one of our standing committees. I assume that the Leader will make a motion along those lines at the appropriate time. In my view, honourable senators, this is desirable. If you examine the financial reports of these very important public services, you will find that deficits since 1959 in the C.N.R. alone total $300 million. Therefore, I think this would be proper avenue of investigation by the Senate.

I want to give credit to the Canadian National Railways to this extent: there have been no new borrowings by them since 1961. In other words, while I have presented to you figures of their capital requirements for 1965 and 1966 that may sound stupendous, they have, by depreciation and through the sale of preferred stock that I referred to, generated internally these funds without any new borrowings. The Canadian National Railways have not gone to the public or to the Government for new borrowings for the past five years, as I am informed. However, I want to point out as justification for Senate investigation, in a most helpful way, the fact that since the calendar year 1956 to the end of the proposed estimates for the calendar year 1966, more than $2 billion net has been ploughed into capital expenditures required by this crown company. The fact that it was not possible for the other place to investigate these accounts during the last two years is, I think, ample reason for a wholesome study by the Senate of some of the figures concerning this, perhaps our chief Crown corporation.

Although, fortunately, the deficits of the Canadian National Railways have become slimmer in recent years—indeed they have gone from about $67 million in 1960 to, according to the annual report which you have all received, about $33.5 million in 1965—they are still considerable. During this period, under the preferred stock arrangement referred to in the Capital Revision Act of 1952, I calculate that besides what we voted in the Estimates for annual deficits, $305 million has been spent in buying stock upon which we get no interest. I think this should be taken into consideration.

In addition to that, and in keeping with the custom for quite a number of years, the bill requests that we waive interest on $100 million of debt referred to in the 1952 bill. It was intended that after 10 years that interest would be paid. As I think I mentioned earlier, each year Parliament has been asked to agree that the national railway system be relieved of any obligation to pay interest on this sum of money.

I estimate, not from the original time of the capital revision but for the period 1954-65—and I am taking annual periods—that in addition to what I have already stated, deficits have totalled $452 million. These expenditures may be in the national interest, but I think they should be looked into. In four years there were surpluses: In 1952 and 1953 they were insignificant; 1955, a rather large surplus of $10.7 million; and in 1956, $26 million. But, apart from that, in addition to the purchase of this preferred stock which has seldom returned any interest, there have been deficits which I calculate total these considerable sums mentioned.

As I see it, these are the matters that should be taken into account in considering the second reading of this bill. I would not for a moment feel competent to answer detailed questions about the operations of a corporation as huge as this one, but I suggest to my colleagues in the Senate that in as much as even their capital budgets for 1965 and 1966 have not been examined by a committee of the other place—for good reasons, which I accept—it would be a worthwhile exercise on the part of this chamber to review these budgets and those expenditures.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the sponsor of this bill (Hon. Mr. Benidickson) a question, but before doing so may I compliment him upon the excellent, clear and businesslike way in which he presented these complicated figures. I should like to ask if I am correct in understanding that we are only now appointing auditors for the years 1965 and 1966; that during those years there have have been no auditors in charge.

Hon. Mr. Benidickson: Honourable senators, that is a very valid question, and it is one that concerned me when I was considering this bill. I think the act of 1964 authorized the appointment of auditors to the end of 1965. I told you that there was a two-year bill for 1962 and 1963, and then a bill in 1964, but the authority of the 1964 act would extend only to the end of 1965. I must say that I find that for the 1966 calendar year the auditors have been on the job, but they have been on the job with the feeling that Parliament would pass this legislation.

Honourable senators, in fairness to the other place I want to point out that this bill came before them in June or July of 1966, but you must remember that although the committee worked hard on its reference it was, first of all, dealing with the passenger service of the C.P.R., and then it had to work hard on and think about the omnibus bill with respect to transport resulting from the MacPherson Royal Commission, which had been held up for about four years. The other place did not deal with the annual affairs of the C.N.R. in 1966.

Hon. Walter M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I always like to be present in the chamber when the senator from Kenora-Rainy River (Hon. Mr. Benidickson) makes a speech, because generally he has something to say and he says it very well. However, when I heard that he was to move the second reading of this bill I wondered what he would say about it in view of the fact that there was almost no debate on it in the other place.

As Senator Benidickson intimated, the resolution was moved in the other place on June 27, 1966. It was concurred in on July 14, 1966, without any debate whatever, and the bill was then read the first time. The only thing done on first reading was that the sponsor made a brief statement which takes up ten lines in the Hansard of the other place.

The second reading of the bill was not moved in the other place until December 6, 1966, and on that motion there was but a very brief debate. There were only one or two speakers and, to my knowledge, none of the matters that have been discussed by the honourable sponsor in this chamber were brought up. The bill was then referred to the committee of the whole house where it was debated briefly, and was finally read the third time and passed without any further debate to speak of.

Having regard to those facts I was hoping, therefore, that the honourable sponsor of this bill today would give us a complete explanation of the matters covered by it. I have not had the financial experience that Senator Benidickson has had during his parliamentary career. The highest position I ever attained was that of the Leader of the Government in this house.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): And that is not too high.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: During the time I was the Leader of the Government in this chamber I had to introduce such financial bills as this, and I doubt very much if I ever did any better than the honourable sponsor today in explaining these complicated matters.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): You were both very good. Do not be so modest.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: If honourable senators would look at section 3(1) (a) they will see that the National System, as was stated by Senator Benidickson, is authorized to spend $161,600,000 in the calendar year 1965. The curious thing about this whole matter is that we are being asked to authorize today the expenditure of that huge sum of money when it has already been spent for a year or more.

Hon. Mr. Croll: Don't we always?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: We are also asked today to authorize the spending of $192 million in 1966, which money has already been spent. I did not know until Senator Benidickson told us that there was a similar situation in 1962, but I will take his word that such did occur at that time.

However, it is very bad business. I do not think we should carry on the affairs of this huge railway of ours in any slipshod manner. Over the years millions and millions of dollars have been poured into this railway system in order to make it work, and we should look into and study all of these appropriations long before they are spent.

We have no detailed explanation covering the sums of money that I have mentioned. They are the total amounts for road property, branch lines, equipment, telecommunications, hotels, investments and so forth. Why has there been this delay, and why are there not more particulars or details? We might have known the details for 1965, and perhaps also for 1966, if we had studied the annual budgets for those two years. Other honourable senators may or may not have done so, but I cannot remember studying them.

Then we find that section 3, subsection 1(b) provides for the national company to make further capital expenditures prior to July 1, 1967 in the amount of $126 million by investing in securities in Air Canada. I do not know whether or not we have ever done that before. Why are we doing so? These are things I would like to learn, together with the details in connection therewith, and what was the money used for by the national system?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Why do they not make the grant direct?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Section 3(1)(c) covers authorization for $90 million for new equipment. I think we should know something more about that.

Section 4 provides for the issue of securities not to exceed $50 million at any one time. If $50 million is raised by the issuing of securities, I wonder how the balance of these huge sums has been provided for. Was the money paid for out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund, or was it borrowed, or how was it raised? These are questions that occur to me, and which to my mind are not simple at all but very much involved. If this money is being paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund and not borrowed it will have to be paid later by taxation; in other words, we will have to tax the people of Canada to pay the money that has been taken or is being taken from the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

Usually when a corporation like the Canadian National Railways needs money for expansion, for capital expenditures, it is borrowed and future generations have the opportunity of paying their share of it.

I am not going into the other matters which were mentioned by the sponsor, Senator Benidickson. Sections 5 to 13 inclusive are the usual sections contained in bills of this kind and need little explanation.

I am pleased that the sponsor suggested sending this bill to a committee of the Senate for complete study. I hope that will be done and that the officers of the railway company and Air Canada will be present to give us the details we feel we should have.

In dealing with this whole matter of a national railway, we have to keep in mind that this railway system of ours belongs to the people of Canada and is being financed and operated by the Government of Canada. Sometimes we overlook the fact that it is the largest railway system in the world. It operates 25,000 miles of track and employs 92,000 people. Over the years the system has been re-financed and many millions of dollars have been pumped into it, but I for one do not see how we could carry on without doing so.

Mr. Donald Gordon became president of the company in 1950 and retired at the end of 1966, and I think this is an opportune time to mention some of his accomplishments. Of course this has nothing to do with the bill itself but I feel that he deserves some consideration and that we should acknowledge some of the things he accomplished.

When Donald Gordon took charge, the railroad was in deep trouble. The passenger service was losing heavily and it looked as if it would be abandoned altogether. However, he first concentrated on building up the freight business. To do so he had to spend money. He bought $500 million worth of diesel locomotives, and 40,000 freight cars, and built 7,500 miles of new tracks. He introduced automation in the company's affairs and made many other improvements.

In my opinion, Donald Gordon got fair results. The freight revenue in 1949 was $395 million, but he increased it to $613 million by 1956, and the increase has kept on accumulating since that time.

Mr. Gordon must be given some credit for this and the fact that by automation and other up-to-date methods he was able to reduce the work force by several thousand persons. However, during the time he was building up the freight revenues the passenger losses of the railway continued to mount. By 1961 the C.N.R. had dropped 25 per cent of its passenger service and hoped to get rid of the rest, and probably would have done so if the Board of Transport Commissioners had not intervened. Finally, Mr. Gordon made up his mind to do something about the passenger service. He found that raising rates merely drove passengers away. Therefore, he and his vice-president decided to reduce fares, streamline the operation and speed up the runs.

Honourable senators who have travelled on Canadian National Railways in recent months will have noticed the red, white and blue pricing system that has been initiated by the railway company. On 161 red bargain days the rates are lower. On 146 economy white days the rates are a little higher. On 58 blue days, which includes Sundays and holidays like Easter and Christmas, the rates are a little higher. If you buy a ticket on a red bargain day you pay less for it and get free meals in addition. The same applies to tickets you buy for white days and blue days. This system is working to considerable advantage. I use it myself quite frequently and find it convenient and comfortable. It is much better than it was in days gone by.

As a result of this system, which has been introduced at considerable expense I will admit, we have the slick Ocean Limited which runs from Montreal to Halifax with passengers, and which is making money. Senator Isnor looks at me in a suspicious way, but I believe that last year the company made $1 million. I am told that it is a fine railway now, that the service is good and the meals excellent.

Then, as a result of this system, the Montreal and Toronto Rapido train, running at 90 miles an hour, with a fare of $15 to Toronto and a very good dinner, is also doing well. The Supercontinental and the Panorama from Montreal to the coast are also making money. Of course, if you take a coach ticket, you do not get these meals I have mentioned. They only go with a roomette or drawing room; otherwise you have to pay for meals.

The cost of this experiment has been $10 million but the passenger revenue is up from $44 million in 1961 to $70 million in 1966 and is still rising at the rate of 25 per cent a year.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Very good.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: The trains are crowded and the railway company is making money. You have to apply some little time ahead to get a reservation. The trains are comfortable, convenient and fast.

Honourable senators, I take advantage of this opportunity to bring these facts briefly to you, to show that even though the railway company has been costing a lot of money, every time Donald Gordon spent money he increased the revenue. I hope that in time to come this railway will pay its way. I think we owe Mr. Gordon some thanks for the efforts he has made in this connection.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I am glad the bill will be going to committee. I am sure honourable senators will have many questions to ask. This will be an occasion to look into the affairs of the railway and of Air Canada more fully, things which should have been done much earlier but which in the circumstances it was impossible to accomplish.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, my intervention will not be lengthy. First, I would like to thank Senator Benidickson for his lucid and crystal-clear explanation of a bill which has always been somewhat of a mystery to me, because it involves great boxcar figures and financial transactions of magnitudes much greater than the ordinary mortal normally has to contemplate. What he has done here this evening has been a credit to him and to the Senate.

I thank my old friend Senator Aseltine, who with his usual capacity for putting his finger on points of importance as well of interest, deserves our gratitude for the way in which he has spoken. I do not know whether he was upgrading or downgrading the position of the Leader of the Government in the Senate, but I can tell you that when Senator Aseltine graced this office it really was graced.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I do not know whether honourable senators spend all their newspaper reading hours reading the Ottawa Journal, as I do for the most part.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Why not?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): However, this evening I wish to mention a competitive paper, the Montreal Gazette and especially its Centennial Gazette, which is part of the editorial page. Mr. E. A. Collard, a former editor of the Gazette, has been editing this feature, running on Saturdays in that very fine news organ in Montreal.

I wish I had last Saturday's issue here, as it spoke of some of the problems which faced this new country a century ago. One of the things pointed out was the importance of binding the country together with hoops of steel, with steel rails, and what a difficult prospect this was for a people who were so small in number, for a country which was so sparsely settled, which was at that time nothing more than a few scattered settlements and a ribbon along the border, and even that ribbon was broken in many places.

When we think of the prospect that the editorial of the Gazette of that time portrayed, and which Mr. Collard has quoted, the prospect that all Canadians of his generation faced, and when we think of what has been accomplished since then—even if we restrict it to the work done by the railways—Canadians generally can look back with great satisfaction, not only to the achievements of this railway and its predecessors, the other Government-owned railways, but indeed to those of the private railway, the Canadian Pacific Railway.

I know that over the years parliamentarians and politicians have risen in their seats and complained about many things, and in certain cases there have been causes for complaint about the management of railway affairs. But, by and large, without the enterprise and the courage shown by public figures, and by railway men, the progress we have made in this hundred years would not have been achieved.

I do not wish to make a general Confederation speech, but I believe it is due the railways to say at least this much about them.

Senator Aseltine referred also to the annual deficits we are called upon to review, and to the fact that there is not much information available to us. We get the annual statements promptly, not only of the Canadian National but of Air Canada and of the affiliated and associated organizations within this system. These are before us, and even though the bill may come too late for real consideration by parliamentarians—due in part to the protracted sessions we are having now—at least we know the position from year to year because we get the statements of what is being done in these Crown-owned companies.

What must be emphasized, however, is that through the years parliamentarians have become more and more apprehensive about whether the nationally-owned railway will ever get itself out of the financial morass in which at times it finds itself.

When I think of Mr. Collard's column and consider the situation and our prospects today, I for one feel optimistic that as time goes on, and our population of now 20 million continues to increase—I heard on the news tonight that we had a record number of 200,000 immigrants last year—and as the labour force grows, and as we increase our trade both at home and abroad, and imbue our transportation systems with all of the modern equipment and facilities that are available, we will see not only better but, I venture to say, more profitable days.

Again I am impelled to refer to one of the remarks made by Senator Hugessen to which I referred the other day when speaking of his regretted retirement. He was impressed with the fact that at times it was important for a country to incur debt in the interests of development, so that future generations would have facilities otherwise unavailable to them. Perhaps the railways, particularly the publicly-owned lines, are a good example of just this kind of statesmanship—and that is the way I purposely describe it.

Now, I am very pleased too that Senator Aseltine referred to Mr. Donald Gordon. We have had many distinguished public servants in this country, and can point with great pride to their achievements within the public service of Canada. With the advent of the crown company we have had to get capable people to run these adjuncts of the public service of government. Mr. Gordon was born abroad in Scotland, and perhaps that did not hurt him but helped him. I think we can be very proud, as he can be, of his record of great service on behalf of the people of Canada as a whole. He started the most important part of his career with the Bank of Canada and, although I am speaking extemporaneously, I think he was its first Deputy Governor. In any event, he brought to the bank a great capacity and, with its first Governor, gave it a direction towards a goal which has always been valued.

He was not only interested in the job he was doing from day to day, although it was heavy enough, but he was a capable speaker. I can still remember when he was President of the Canadian Club in Ottawa—as perhaps many honourable senators can recall—at times it was more interesting to hear his vote of thanks to the speaker than it was to listen to the speech that had been made. He had great capacity for language, for felicity of phrase, and he could sum up a speech, particularly if it was a bad one, so well that by the time he got finished with it it sounded good. I do not think I exaggerate when I say that.

The work that Donald Gordon did with the able assistance of Senator McCutcheon, who I am sorry to say is not present tonight, during the war years with the Wartime Prices and Trade Board, is a service that Canada should long remember. I need not elaborate upon the distinguished career he has had with the Canadian National Railways, and, in accordance with what Senator Aseltine has said, he should feel proud indeed of his accomplishments as its first officer. Now he has gone on to other endeavours in the private sector of the economy, and for the years that are left to him he will undoubtedly make a great contribution there too.

I agree with Senator Benidickson and with Senator Aseltine that this is a highly appropriate bill to go to committee. I would suggest that we, as is our custom, send it to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, which can deal with this measure after it has dealt with the transport bill now before it.

I hope that the new President of the Canadian National Railways, Mr. MacMillan, might be induced to come to Ottawa for this occasion, and I ask him publicly here in the Senate to do so. I will try to make arrangements to bring this about. Mr. MacMillan is known to honourable senators, because he came to our committee many times to explain the statements of the Canadian National. I can remember how on one occasion Senator Haig's father welcomed Mr. MacMillan particularly because he was a Winnipeg boy and because he had virtually grown up in his house. So Mr. MacMillan will find many friends here in our committee, if time permits him to leave his duties.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I asked a question earlier in the debate with regard to the auditors, who apparently had not been appointed for the years 1965 and 1966. It has been explained that the auditors were given authority for 1965. I think it is fair for me now to call attention to section 13 of the bill, which provides that auditors shall be appointed "as independent auditors to make a continuous audit of the accounts for the years 1966 and 1967." So, my question has been answered satisfactorily.

Hon. G. Percival Burchill: Honourable senators, I want first of all to congratulate Senator Benidickson on his very capable presentation of the bill. It was clear to all of us.

However, as a citizen of the Maritime provinces—

Hon. Mr. Croll: Surely as a citizen of Canada living in the Maritimes?

Hon. Mr. Burchill: That is all right, but as a citizen of the Maritime provinces I cannot resist the temptation to remark that the Canadian National Railways makes a distinction which I will explain presently. In any event, I cannot allow the bill to pass without making just one or two remarks.

On Friday afternoon, speaking on the transportation bill which was then before us, I pointed out that the building of the Intercolonial Railway was a part of the agreement under which the Maritime provinces came into Confederation. At that time they were the Maritime provinces—I presume if Newfoundland had been with us at that time the reference would have been to the Atlantic provinces.

However, the Maritime provinces came into Confederation with the building of the railment. Since that time the Intercolonial Railway, as we all know, has been assimilated into the great Canadian National Railways, and I want to point out one fact to show how insignificant the Atlantic provinces, as we now know them, have become in the ramifications of the Canadian National Railways.

Those of us in the Maritimes who do not live near an airport and are compelled, and for the most part happily, to travel on Canadian National Railways have a problem with regard to connections. Let me at this stage say that the Ocean Limited, the train that connects Montreal with Halifax, is one of the finest on this continent and I pay tribute to the people who designed it, who manage it and who operate it; they are all most courteous and very co-operative. But we who come to Parliament and who use the Ocean Limited arrive in Montreal just fifteen minutes after the Montreal to Ottawa train has left for this city. We have to wait there in the Central Station until approximately 10.35 a.m. and then get a slow train which arrives in Ottawa some time after one o'clock. If we could connect with the earlier train we would arrive in Ottawa about 10.30.

I have written two or three letters to the headquarters of the Canadian National Railways, and my friend from Halifax (Hon. Mr. Isnor) has written many letters, as has my honourable friend on the other side of the chamber, Senator Macdonald (Cape Breton), and many others, appealing to and pleading with the management of the C.N.R. to allow us to make connections. But we might as well write to the wall! We get very little satisfaction. I emphasize this to show what the situation is so far as the Atlantic provinces are concerned.

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: Will the honourable senator permit me a question? What was the reason given by the company in this particular case for not granting this request?

Hon. Mr. Burchill: I am very glad you brought that up. I was going to mention it, but I did not want to hurt the feelings of people from Montreal. The answer we received was that the business and professional people of the City of Montreal desire a train to leave Montreal at a certain hour in order to arrive in Ottawa at a convenient time for them, and their wishes must be obeyed. That is the whole crux of my remarks. That is the importance which the people of the metropolitan areas of this country have assumed in the management and direction of the Canadian National Railways in comparison with the people down by the sea.

I am very happy indeed that the Leader is going to invite the president of C.N.R. to attend the committee. I hope I can be at the meeting because I would like very much to ask him why it is not possible to re-schedule that train or to make some arrangement so that we can make a more convenient connection for Ottawa. I speak not only on behalf of parliamentarians, but of all people from the Maritime provinces using that train to visit our national capital. This situation has been in existence for several years.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West) bill referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

STANDING COMMITTEE ON TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

NOTICE OF MEETING

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, before we adjourn I draw the attention of honourable senators to the fact that the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications will meet tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock in Room 356-S. The Minister of Transport and the officials will be present at the meeting.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, February 7, 1967

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

Copies of letters, dated January 26 and February 1, 1967, exchanged between the Prime Minister of Canada and the Premier of the Province of Ontario concerning a proposed conference on the future of Confederation. (English text).

NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION BILL

AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Acting Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, presented the following report of the committee on Bill C-231, to define and implement a national transportation policy for Canada, to amend the Railway Act and other acts in consequence thereof and to enact other consequential provisions:

Your committee recommends that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 300 copies in French of its proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I move, with leave of the Senate, that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

LA FÉDÉRATION DES CAISSES POPULAIRES DU QUEBEC

ASSEMBLÉE À HULL, QUÉBEC

Hon. Cyrille Vaillancourt: Monsieur le président, before the Orders of the Day are called, I have a few words to say. It is a big day for me.

[Translation]

Today is a big day for me, because I spent the whole morning with the representatives of the Federation of Credit Unions of Quebec who are meeting in Hull. In addition, tonight I will entertain those people who are, as you say in English, the cream of the crop, the best people from the co-operative movement in Quebec, the Caisses Populaires and the credit unions. As I said, the cream of that movement of social salvation is here today.

They represent almost two million members. They are the leaders of what we call at home the Desjardins movement which includes not only caisses populaires but also general insurance, and life insurance companies, adult education institutions, trust companies, whatever will help our fellow citizens.

Those people work all year round without pay. That reminds me of an idea I had a little earlier. Many people are now asking the government to tax these co-operatives. But keep in mind that all those directors, those 18,000 directors, are volunteers; they are working without pay. Members of the credit boards meet at least once a week; the members and the directors of the supervising boards meet at least once a month, to help their fellow citizens. I said this once to a former colleague, who was at one time Minister of National Revenue, the Honourable Senator Euler, and he asked me: "Are there still among us people who work for nothing?" I replied: "No. They are not working for nothing. They are working for something much bigger because the reward these people are expecting is one that cannot be taken away from them; whatever wealth we may have, death will take away, but whatever good we do, God will pay us back for it."

That is why these people truly apply to our modern world the Golden Rule which is to help one another while loving one another. These people have yet another motivation: They are Canadians. They are working for the greatness of their whole country from Halifax to Vancouver. They are not separatists. But they want to be considered on the same footing either in Quebec, in Ontario or in British Columbia. And with this practical spirit, this lively state of mind, they want to contribute to the happiness and the prosperity of our great country. Frequently at our meetings, when we raise our voice in song, we proudly sing these words written long ago by one of our poets:

Ô Canada, mon pays, mes amours.

This is the frame of mind in which those people have come today to hold their meeting within a stone's throw of the federal capital; indeed in a few minutes they will be within the Houses of Parliament. Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your courtesy.

[Text]

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I think it might be ungracious not to say a word in reply to what our distinguished colleague, Senator Vaillancourt, has said this afternoon. He has mentioned the fact that Mr. Desjardins was the originator of this co-operative movement which now involves some two million people in an organization which has promoted the idea of initiative and of constructive work in many communities across the land.

It is not necessary for me to elaborate, as he has done, upon the value of this movement to the communities where it has been allowed to develop. I am impressed too, as we all have been, with the attitude this organization has inspired, which is due not only to the idealism of its founder, but to the leadership of a distinguished Quebecker, and indeed a distinguished Canadian, our colleague Senator Vaillancourt.

While I cannot close in the poetic manner of our honourable colleague, I am constrained today, particularly having regard to the temperature outside, to add to what he has said these words: Mon pays, ce n'est pas un pays, c'est l'hiver.

INCOME TAX AGREEMENTS ACT

BILL TO IMPLEMENT AGREEMENTS BETWEEN CANADA AND TRINIDAD AND TOBAGO AND CERTAIN OTHER COUNTRIES AND TO IMPLEMENT A CONVENTION BETWEEN CANADA AND THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA—SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from Thursday, February 2, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Hayden, for the second reading of Bill S-56, to implement agreements for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax between Canada and Trinidad and Tobago, Canada and Ireland, Canada and Norway and Canada and the United Kingdom, and to implement a supplementary income tax convention between Canada and the United States of America.

Hon. Gunnar S. Thorvaldson: Honourable senators, some years ago when those of us now on this side of the chamber occupied the other side it was my privilege to introduce bills of the kind introduced by Senator Hayden the other day. I refer of course to Bill S-56, known as the Income Tax Agreements Act, which deals with the problem of avoiding double taxation.

As honourable senators know, we find it necessary in our international relationships especially in regard to those countries with which we have close commercial and business relationships, to deal with the problem of double taxation. Of course the most competent expert in this house in regard to these matters is the honourable Senator Hayden; after he has spoken on a bill such as this the subject is usually so clear that little more need be said on the subject. At the same time one must realize that the explanation of a bill such as this must to some extent be in technical phrases because the subject matter itself is extremely technical. However, this bill contains the substance of five conventions which we are now ratifying in the same way as Parliament is required from time to time to ratify treaties with other countries.

As you observe by referring to the bill, the countries with whom we are now dealing in this manner are Trinidad and Tobago, Ireland, Norway, and the United Kingdom; and we are also implementing a supplementary income tax convention between Canada and the United States.

Senator Hayden made clear with regard to Trinidad and Tobago that the reason we are making this agreement is because Trinidad and Tobago is now an independent country. It was formerly a dependent part of the Commonwealth and, consequently the agreement we had previously with Great Britain applied to it. However, it has now become an independent country, so it is appropriate to have a separate convention with this territory.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): But it is still, fortunately, within the Commonwealth.

Hon. Mr. Thorvaldson: Yes of course it is still within the Commonwealth.

These agreements are of great importance, and if you refer to the schedule Senator Hayden placed on Hansard last Thursday, February 2, at page 1372, you will see that it gives one a bird's eye view of the enormous number of subject matters of taxation which are affected by these agreements. For instance, some of the important items are fiscal domicile, permanent establishment, shipping and air transport, dividends, interest, copyright royalties, film royalties, and a number of other subjects which come into the field of income either of Canadians resident in those other countries or their residents in Canada.

It must be said also that these agreements can have a great deal to do with the question of national policy in regard to such things as our investments abroad and foreign investments here. For instance, as you are all aware, the problem of the withholding tax on interest and dividends as between Canada and the United States, Canada and the United Kingdom, and Canada and other countries, has been the subject of more or less continuing negotiation with various countries. Indeed, I recall many changes in the withholding tax between Canada and various countries since I was appointed to the Senate some years ago. For instance, I recall that at one time under the 1946 agreement with the United Kingdom there was a most peculiar provision in regard to the withholding tax on dividends.

By the way, Senator Hayden explained that the 1946 agreement with the United Kingdom was an interim agreement and only last year a new and permanent agreement was enacted with that country. But in the agreement of 1946 we had a situation where there was a withholding tax of 15 per cent on dividends emanating from Canada payable to citizens of the United Kingdom, where the dividends resulted simply from holdings of shares in Canadian companies by United Kingdom residents. On the other hand, if the Canadian company happened to be wholly owned by a British corporation Canada charged no withholding tax whatsoever. Honourable senators can understand, therefore, how this was completely contrary to the present policies by which we are trying to obtain a greater ownership in Canada ourselves.

There was therefore a great incentive under the 1946 agreement between Canada and the United Kingdom for citizens of that country in buying Canadian businesses to buy a Canadian corporation by the purchase of 100 per cent of its capital stock. If they obtained 100 per cent of the stock there was no withholding tax, but if they held less than 100 per cent of the stock there was a 15 per cent withholding tax charged. As a result there was an incentive to purchase the whole of a Canadian company rather than a part of it, thus preventing any Canadian participation in the venture.

That, of course, can no longer happen because of the 1965 agreement, and the current ones have done away with this abuse.

Honourable senators, there is really nothing more I have to say in connection with this bill. Without these agreements the commercial situation between our country and other countries would be a tax jungle. These tax conventions are therefore most useful in clarifying our tax relationships with these countries.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Hayden moved that the bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for third reading at the next sitting.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, before the next item on the Orders of the Day is called I should like to suggest to the house that all the remaining items stand for today. I make this suggestion because Bill C-231 is now before the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. The committee made good progress this morning, and it plans to reassemble when the Senate rises this afternoon. It might suit the convenience of all honourable senators and speed up the consideration of the legislation before us if this course were adopted.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: I gather that there is no urgency with respect to any other item on the Order Paper?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): No.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Acting Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, reported that the committee had considered Bill C-231, to define and implement a national transportation policy for Canada, to amend the Railway Act and other acts in consequence thereof and to enact other consequential provisions, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Jean-Paul Deschatelets: I move, with leave of the Senate, that the bill be read the third time now.

Hon. Norman McL. Paterson: Honourable senators, it is not often that I speak in the Senate, but as I have been close to transportation all my life I felt that this was an opportunity for me to relate a little of the history of the west in connection with railroading.

I hope I can make what I have to say interesting, but first I would like to speak for a moment of something I have wanted to say here for quite a while, although I have been a bit diffident about doing so. I would take this opportunity to congratulate Senator Choquette on his perfect English. I have been in the Senate with him for a number of years and I have admired his diction, his pronunciation and his general command of the language. He puts a good many of us English-speaking Canadians to shame.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Paterson: Honourable senators, I would say that even when he damns this side of the house I like to hear him.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Paterson: I turn now to another personal matter. Along with Senator Arthur Beaubien and Senator Hayden, I was appointed to the Senate on February 9, 1940. Tomorrow we will celebrate our 27th year together. The three of us roomed together until Senator Beaubien was appointed Deputy Government Whip—and now he is Whip. But Senator Hayden and I have been roommates for 27 years and it has been a very pleasant association. The only sad thing to relate is that in those 27 years we have seen more than 150 senators come and go; most of them have passed on and a few have resigned. But that is a matter one cannot help.

Now I shall get on with my story about railroads. I was born in Portage la Prairie in 1883. My mother told me that that was the year the railroad went through. Portage la Prairie is 56 miles west of Winnipeg. The Canadian Pacific was built westward to the east bank of the Red River in St. Boniface. It was built from the west to the west bank of the Red River, and in the interim they were building the Louise bridge in Winnipeg. When they got the bridge completed the trains ran through Portage la Prairie, which was a wonderful day. I, of course, do not remember this, but this is as it was told to me by my mother who was there at the time and who had come west via St. Paul and then by boat from St. Paul to Winnipeg.

I knew D. B. Hanna at an early age, because I was told that he turned me over on his knee in the Presbyterian church after the service and gave me a sound thrashing for writing with a pencil in his hymn book. However, in 1898 when I was fifteen I wrote him a letter asking him for a job. I got a job at $15 a month with the Lake Manitoba Railway and Canal Company. This railway was one of Mackenzie and Mann's creations. They had been contractors on the C.P.R. and had made some money. They were very ambitious. Later both William Mackenzie and Donald Mann were knighted. They were financed in building the railroad on a mileage basis, and when one looks at some of the railroads they built one would think that instead of taking stumps out they went around them to get a longer line.

At this stage, honourable senators, I should tell you something about D. B. Hanna who was assistant manager to the Manitoba Northwestern Railroad which ran from Winnipeg to Yorkton. It was superintended by W. R. Baker. D. B. Hanna lived in Portage la Prairie, and he was hired to run the Lake Manitoba Railway and Canal Company which ran from Gladstone to Dauphin, Winnipegosis, and later from Sifton to Swan River and other places. Only 13 men and a boy were employed by the railroad at that time, and I was the boy. It may be that I am the last remaining link.

In any case, we had lots of hardships and hard times. One incident was that the train going from Gladstone to Dauphin killed a cow. The crew, along with Mr. Hanna who was on the train, loaded it into the car, dressed it and sold it for $54 in Dauphin and paid the farmer for the cow.

We had running rights over the Canadian Pacific from Winnipeg to Portage la Prairie, and from Portage la Prairie to Gladstone over the Manitoba Northwestern line, and from Gladstone to Winnipegosis over our own line.

Before I get to building east, we bought the Northern Pacific from Manitoba. At that time Mackenzie and Mann were in fairly deep both to bondholders and the banks. As the office boy I often held the horse of Sir John Aird, who was head of the Bank of Commerce in Manitoba and who drove to our office nearly every day. He was the grandfather of our present Senator Aird, and I knew Sir John quite well because I was the office boy who held his horse.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Paterson: I learned telegraphy and shorthand and became private secretary to Mr. Hanna. When we took over the Northern Pacific and Manitoba Railway we inherited private car No. 99. It had a cook on it named Fred Sissons. One day I noticed above the door a coin and asked, "Fred, what is that for?" He said, "Hugh Sutherland"—he was associated with Mackenzie and Mann— "was on this car for 10 days and when he left he gave me that dime. I thought it was so valuable I put a hole in it and nailed it up."

We were coming out of Brandon one day, travelling down quite a grade; I was sitting at the table and we were having breakfast. Mr. Hanna was looking towards the rear end of the train and the speedometer was on the sill of the door. He said, "Norman, it is going 40 miles an hour." Then he told me it was going 50 miles an hour, and his eyes were bulging out. The train got up to sixty, which was unheard of, and he leapt to the bell rope, which was not attached to anything because we did not have air brakes and it did not even have a bell on it. He upset the table, and I got two plates of porridge right in the face. However, on that particular trip we did not go off the track, as we quite often did.

About that time we started to build the Manitoba and Southeastern out of Winnipeg, which went through Sprague, Warroad, Rainy River, and across the Rainy River into Fort Frances. We were a long time building it, and it involved terrible hardships because we were short of money and good equipment. We never bought anything new but always bought old, second-hand cars.

In the meantime the Ontario and Rainy River road was being built from Port Arthur west to meet at Fort Frances. I was sent with Mr. A. J. Gorrie, who took over the road called Port Arthur, Duluth and Western—nicknamed Privation, Adversity, Desperation and Want—which had good terminal facilities which we wanted. For a while we operated the best way we could. Then I got appendicitis, and when I got back to Winnipeg Gorrie had been sent to Quebec City because Mackenzie and Mann had bought the Chemin de fer du Grand Nord du Canada—in other words, the Great Northern Railway of Canada—which had running rights from Quebec over the line of the Quebec and Lac St. Jean Railway which ran to Roberval and Chicoutimi. We had running rights to a place called Riviere-à-Pierre, and from Riviere-à-Pierre this road was built from St. Jerome and Hawkesbury to join up with John R. Booth's railroad, called the Canada Atlantic, by which they hoped to bring a lot of corn from Georgian Bay, freighted over by boat, to Quebec City.

I think Senator Power will remember J. G. Scott who was superintendent of the Quebec Lac St. Jean Railway. There were great hopes of having a tremendous traffic into Quebec through this movement of corn, but it never materialized greatly for one reason or another. I think they found it was too costly, or Europe quit buying American corn at the time. Anyway, I want to tell you about one interesting thing.

We had running rights up as far as Ste.-Anne-de-Beaupré. With the few passenger cars we had we ran a Sunday excursion up to the shrine at Ste.-Anne-de-Beaupré. All the people were at the station, but the engineer said he had no coal. I asked him why not, and he replied that they would not give him any more. I got on the engine with the ticket money, went down to the coal dock and asked what was the trouble.

The coal dock was owned by Senator Webster. He said we owed them $7,000, and he would not give us any more coal. So I paid for the coal with the ticket money, and we ran a very successful excursion. But, for years after that, every time I saw Senator Webster, who sat where Senator Aseltine sits now, I thought of that incident.

One day A. J. Gorrie—he liked his comforts, but we had no private car and travelling was dradful—said to me: "There's an accident up there between Riviere-à-Pierre and St Paulin. You had better investigate". So, I went on the train to this place. There was a trainload of wood pulp in cattle cars which was travelling from Riviere-à-Pierre to Hawkesbury, I think. The engine ran out of water so the crew cut the train, and with six cars still attached to the engine they went to St. Paulin, but never noticed that one of the cars had shaken loose on the way. They only had six cars when they started but they never counted them. They went back full tilt and hit this car which was standing on the main line and broke it all to pieces, as well as three other cars. I fired them all, but they were all back within two weeks—every one of them was related to some Member of Parliament.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Paterson: Perhaps the ladies will forgive me for this anecdote that I am about to relate. Pete Lariviere said to me at Riviere-à-Pierre: "I know a restaurant here run by an Irish woman where we can get something to eat." We went in there and it was pitch dark. I saw Pete, after he had eaten quite a bit, scoop some crabapples with stems on out of a dish which was sitting in the middle of the table. He chewed away for a while and then said: "Bring me that light. I never ate a crabapple with bones it it before." They brought him a light, and with it he saw that he was eating a mouse.

Perhaps I should not be telling stories like this—

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Go right ahead.

Hon. Mr. Paterson:—but I want to illustrate some of the hardships we went through to build the Canadian National of today. It was built in chunks here and there which were joined up later, and it caused a lot of trouble, grief, joy and financial difficulty. Most of the original people have passed on, and I thought the story thus far would be interesting.

I want to divert a little, if I may, to say that this bill that is about to pass is timely. The advent of the internal combustion engine has changed the lives of all of us in Canada, and probably in the world, and the regulations of transportation must also be changed.

I wish to say that the last hundred years have been so marvellous that if the next hundred years are marked by such continuing progress—and none of us here will live to see the completion of that era—our successors will look back upon a hundred years of miraculous progress.

To illustrate my point, I read an article in a recent issue of the Royal Bank Monthly Review, which related that in 1906 Canada had 600,000 acres in the West cultivated to wheat. The crop in that year was four million bushels. Last year we had in excess of 29 million acres under crop for wheat, and we grew 844 million bushels. Senator Aseltine says it was nearer 900 million bushels. In any case, with wheat, oats, barley, rye and flax seed, and the new rape seed, the crop if sold would net more than $3 billion.

No one need fear for this country when we can make progress like that in the past 60 years.

While I am on my feet, I want to give a little comfort to those people from the Maritimes who are worrying about the Seaway. Since the advent of the Seaway, the firm which bears my name has increased its trade to Halifax by boat tenfold, and it will continue to increase with the growth of Canada. No one in Canada need fear the future; it has had a marvellous past and will have a still more marvellous future.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Orville H. Phillips: Honourable senators, before third reading of this bill is completed, I would like to make a brief reference to the committee meeting which met yesterday morning and at which the Minister of Transport appeared. I questioned him as to whether the Northumberland causeway would come under the new transportation commission, and I was advised that it would. I then asked about the method used in setting the tolls, and received an unusually frank answer—he said he did not know. I appreciate an honest answer like that from a Cabinet minister. Usually, as you know, ministers talk around the subject.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Not all!

Hon. Mr. Phillips: This minister was unusually frank and honest. However, what disturbed me was the fact that he thought tolls would not be established until the crossing was completed and that it would be the responsibility of a new minister and a new regime. I share the hope it will be a new regime.

However, I would like to point out to the Senate that there are certain disadvantages to Prince Edward Island of delaying the rate setting until completion of the causeway. We are attempting to entice industry to the province, pointing out the fact that the crossing will provide much more ready access to the mainland to new industries. Naturally they are going to ask what the rate will be on the causeway before they consider locating in Prince Edward Island. I am sure the Government has not considered it in this light, and I would like it to take this fact into consideration and to give us the rates at the earliest possible date.

Hon. F. Elsie Inman: Honourable senators, I welcome the National Transportation bill, C-231, and I wish to congratulate the sponsor of this bill in the Senate for the very clear and concise way in which he presented it to us. I heartily support the arguments put forth by my colleague, Senator Phillips, in reference to this bill.

There is no doubt that the Canadian transportation system has been suffering from legislation passed when conditions were very different from those prevailing today. With the ever-increasing number of automobiles, bus services, and trucking systems, the railway must be allowed more latitude and ability to compete.

However, Canada is a country of many economies, varying from the urban industrialized areas of Ontario and Quebec to the sparsely populated but economically important north with its minerals and oil, to the farmlands, and to the coastal areas, some parts of which are remote. These must have facilities for bringing minerals from the mines, food from the farms and sea products from the coasts, to the rich market areas.

The Crowsnest Pass freight rates principle was maintained in debating this bill in the other place and here. These rates have always been a problem to the West, but in my province of Prince Edward Island we have the Northumberland Strait which poses a very great transportation problem indeed and which handicaps to a great extent the establishing of industries on account of the difficulties and expense of transportation.

Potatoes, one of our important products, are a perishable commodity. Potatoes are exported in large quantities and our seed potatoes are in great demand. Potato growers and shippers have very often to use the railway to move our potatoes out, and they must be moved within a certain period of time. They can be kept for a few months at most, even in the best equipped warehouses. Because of bad weather it is not always possible or feasible to use water transportation—in fact, it is impossible when deep winter comes to us—or air transportation, so the producer must at times use rail and/or auto-truck transport.

I suggest that our Maritime provinces, which have experienced a steadily deteriorating rail transportation service for the past few years, be considered just as special as any other part of the country when it comes to Government support for transportation facilities and reasonable rates.

Finally, I should like to comment briefly on the hopelessly inadequate passenger rail service to Prince Edward Island. Without criticizing other forms of transportation, I suggest that the rail travel is the necessary mode for some people, especially during winter months. There have been several occasions during the past four years when I could not have reached my home in Montague from Charlottetown other than by rail, as at times the roads were impassable for either cars or buses, and planes reach only Charlottetown and Summerside.

It is true that I have travelled in a car with 3,000 day-old chicks: it was not very comfortable, but at least I got there.

It appears to me that there is a moral obligation on the federal Government to maintain an adequate train service, especially in winter, to those areas of the Maritimes which have traditionally depended upon that form of transportation.

I could tell much more about my experiences of the transportation between Prince Edward Island and the mainland, as we call it. I was out for a week at one time, stuck in the ice, and was taken out at 5 o'clock in the morning because the ice was building up under the boat. We were blown 25 miles down the Strait of Northumberland and did not know when we were going to pile up on the shore.

I have had many more experiences but I shall not take up more of honourable senators' time now. I hope that the Maritimes, and Prince Edward Island in particular, will be given every consideration when the terms of this bill are being put into operation by the new transportation commission.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

DIVORCE

SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO HEAR BIEGA APPEAL —ADDITION TO MEMBERSHIP

Hon. Arthur L. Beaubien, with leave of the Senate, moved:

That the name of the honourable Senator Macnaughton be added to the list of senators serving on the Special Committee of the Senate on the petition of Joyce Regina Nagine Biega.

Hon. J. Campbell Haig: Honourable senators, before this motion is adopted may I advise the members of the committee that there will be a meeting on Tuesday, March 21, 1967, at 10 o'clock, in the Victoria Building. The members of the committee will meet prior to that to discuss the method of operation.

Motion agreed to.

INCOME TAX AGREEMENTS ACT

BILL TO IMPLEMENT AGREEMENTS BETWEEN CANADA AND TRINIDAD AND TOBAGO AND CERTAIN OTHER COUNTRIES AND TO IMPLEMENT A CONVENTION BETWEEN CANADA AND THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA— THIRD READING

Hon. C. G. Power moved the third reading of Bill S-56, to implement agreements for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax between Canada and Trinidad and Tobago, Canada and Ireland, Canada and Norway and Canada and the United Kingdom, and to implement a supplementary income tax convention between Canada and the United States of America.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

CANADIAN FILM DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Jean-Paul Deschatelets moved the second reading of Bill C-204, for the establishment of a Canadian Film Development Corporation.

He said: Honourable Senators, I think this is an interesting bill not only because it deals with a very popular way of entertainment, but because it intends to bring, if not a solution, at least the beginning of a solution to a situation which has surely intrigued many honourable senators over the years. The continuous flow of foreign feature films into Canada and the unsuccessful efforts of Canadian producers to create a feature film industry have no doubt been of some concern to honourable senators. Considering Canada's enviable achievements in so many other cultural fields, it seems a paradox that in the field of feature films we have to rely on foreign productions, principally from the United States, Great Britain and France.

At first sight we are tempted not to give to this problem the national dimension it has, but on reflection we realize that the problem has more depth to it than we had thought. For half a century we have in fact been presented, through the media of foreign productions, a certain way of thinking and living which surely is not basically our own. We Canadians have a national identity, and there is no doubt that a Canadian feature film industry, when well established and organized, would have a great influence in promoting a true image of Canada as a nation both at home and abroad.

We have spent and are still spending considerable sums of money, and rightly so, for our Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and National Film Board. We are also spending certain sums of money through the Arts Council in order to develop our young talents in every field of art and culture.

In this bill we are asked to provide the sum of $10 million to assist in the development of a feature film industry in Canada and, if we succeed, we will not only serve the national interest of all Canadians but at the same time we will give to Canadian film makers, as well as to authors, composers, performing artists and technicians of all crafts associated with film making, the opportunity to play an effective role in the cultural development of this country. Although this is a very remote aim, we might at the same time in a limited way get economic returns in doing so by creating new fields of activity for young Canadians and increasing tourism and foreign exchange earnings.

As honourable senators know, several attempts have been made by Canadian producers through the years to produce commercial feature films. Despite modest budgets, some outstanding Canadian feature films have already been produced, but these have been the exception confirming the general rule.

We are all aware of several unsuccessful ventures in this field of activity in which many Canadian businessmen, pioneers in that field, not only lost money but sometimes lost their shirts. And yet, honourable senators, Canadians are fond of feature films, and, although we have a limited market in terms of population, I am told that we have in this country 1,400 movie halls and that close to 100 million admissions will be sold in the current year.

If the Canadian production of feature films has been very restricted so far—and we have to admit that it has—we must, however, and this is the occasion to do so, praise the achievement of both the C.B.C. and the National Film Board in producing short films and documentaries.

We are all aware of the great number of awards that have been won abroad by these two bodies. This is an indication that we have already in this country the necessary elements to venture into the production of feature films.

Having said that, I raise the question: What are the reasons or factors responsible for our complete dependence on foreign feature films? Many reasons can, of course, be brought forward, and surely the Canadian movie market which is too limited to sustain a continuous film production is one factor. But the main reason, honourable senators, is undoubtedly that Canada is the only country in the western world, except for the United States, in which the making of films is not supported by the state, and the obvious result is that in the western world, Canada is the only country of its importance and prestige without a feature film industry.

If there is a principle behind this bill, I think it is the suppletive help of the state to public enterprise in a domain where national interest is involved and where experience has shown not only here but elsewhere that private enterprise cannot succeed alone.

The bill therefore proposes the establishment of a Canadian Film Development Corporation. Its objects and powers are enumerated in clause 10 of the bill as follows. The corporation will be empowered to:

> (a) invest in individual Canadian feature film productions in return for a share in the proceeds from any such production;
> (b) make loans to producers of individual Canadian feature film productions and charge interest thereon;

I would point out that these two provisions are based upon the aid schemes established in the United Kingdom through the National Film Finance Corporation.

The section goes on:

> (c) make awards for outstanding accomplishments in the production of Canadian feature films;
> (d) make grants to film-makers and film technicians resident in Canada to assist them in improving their craft; and
> (e) advise and assist the producers of Canadian feature films in the distribution of such films and in the administrative functions of feature film production.

So far as these last three subclauses are concerned, this pattern has been copied from several European countries.

The corporation will consist of six members to be appointed by the Governor in Council together with the person holding office from time to time as the Government Film Commissioner.

Each member of the corporation shall be appointed for a term of five years, with the exception that of those first appointed, three shall be appointed for a term of three years and three shall be appointed for a term of five years. This system will permit at the beginning a more flexible rotation.

The Governor in Council shall designate one of the members of the corporation to serve as chairman of the corporation. The minister may on the recommendation of the corporation appoint an advisory group, broadly representative of the professional associations in the Canadian film industry to advise the corporation on matters which the minister or the corporation may refer to it.

The amount of $10 million, as I said before, which will be appropriated to the corporation will be used as a kind of revolving fund. I say "a kind of revolving fund" because the entire amount will not be invested. At the discretion of the board a certain amount will be used as awards, and of course this part cannot constitute a revolving fund.

Essentially the corporation will join with private producers in financing Canadian feature films, and for this purpose the sum of $10 million will be employed by the corporation in a variety of ways. As you will see in section 10, it will be the prerogative of the board to decide which way in their judgment will best contribute to expanding and strengthening Canadian enterprise in this field. This will mainly be by means of loans and investments, but there will also be, as I said before, grants and awards.

As honourable senators know, the making of a good commercial film requires at least three fundamental elements: a good story, established artists, and a competent director. However, the real problem from the financial point of view does not lie in the making of a film, but in its wide distribution. The common practice both in Europe and in the United States is that a film is never started unless its distribution is guaranteed. I am not talking here of these super productions. When the distribution is guaranteed, it is relatively easy for the producer to raise the necessary sums of money to produce the film.

Therefore, honourable senators, I feel that the provisions of the bill will bring to Canadian producers the necessary help in two ways. First, an attempt will be made, and there is no reason why it should not succeed, to come to an agreement or arrangement between Canada and other countries, principally the United States, Great Britain, France and Italy, whereby films produced by the two countries involved, and conforming to the normal commercial standards, will be regarded by both countries as national films. This can cover co-productions as well as private productions by the two countries.

The Secretary of State in the course of her remarks in the other place has indicated that steps have already been taken in this regard. A cultural agreement was reached with France a few months ago, which would cover this particular field; and I am informed that steps have already been taken by the minister in connection with two other countries, Great Britain and Italy.

Secondly, direct financial help to Canadian producers or corporations incorporated under the laws of Canada or of a province will be provided by this measure, but before the taxpayer's money is invested, it is my impression that the board in considering applications must be expected in the ordinary way and, I would add, in a cautious way to study and examine the background of the company or the person making the application, and to examine in detail the submission and especially the budgetary aspect of it. A further important provision in the bill covers the adequacy of Canadian equity participation because, after all, this is primarily intended for Canadians.

I have not the slightest doubt, honourable senators, with the calibre of men who will be selected, with their background and past experience, that if an eventual loss is suffered on one production, which is bound to happen, it will be counterbalanced by successful ventures.

If honourable senators are interested in knowing the kind of bad investment the board could make, especially at the start, in my view, it would be a million-dollar production without the valuable guarantee of a well-established distributor; but I am sure that with the safeguards mentioned in the bill this will not happen. However, I am merely giving this as an example of what could be a dangerous investment in this field.

The bill does not attempt to set out in detail the policies by which the corporation should seek to realize the objects covered by section 10. In fact, the corporation itself will determine the methods, will establish the criteria and make the rules purporting to encourage and promote the development of the feature film industry in this country.

The film, the movie picture, is an art known as the seventh art, and probably the most lively one, but past experiences have shown that it is also a business, a business which in 1964 took in $70 million at Canadian box offices alone, not including the other related profits such as concessions. It is the intention of the Government, as the minister has herself indicated in the other place, to see that those who run the corporation will be individuals not only from the world of the arts but also from the business world; and if this is so, I know you will all agree that this is the right thing to do.

Some honourable senators might have the impression that this corporation will merely be given a blank cheque with not enough strings attached. However, I do not know of any other practical way of doing it. If we want this measure to succeed in its aims, the greatest possible flexibility should be given the corporation and its members.

Under section 14 the bill provides for the establishment of an advisory group broadly representative of the professional associations, exhibitors, distributors and unions in the Canadian film industry, and I am told that it is the intention of the Government to set up this advisory body as soon as possible after the coming into force of the legislation. This will make it possible for the corporation to have the benefit of the industry's advice in the initial stages of its work.

On the other hand, some honourable senators might say that $10 million is not enough to establish firmly an industry of this kind in Canada. I would fully agree, if the bill was intended to do that, but this sum of money in fact represents the Government's share in support of the industry, and it is expected, and the signs are already there, that Canadian investors will enter the field with equal enthusiasm. It is intended to be a joint venture between the board and private industry; and, if this formula has proved successful elsewhere, there is no valid reason why it should not succeed here.

I might say—because I want you to have all the possible information, especially as to what has been done elsewhere and with what result—I am told that the sums of money put at the disposal of the British producers under similar legislation are now nearly exhausted, and the British Government is about to decide whether or not this fund should be replenished. Whatever the decision will be, I want to point out that similar legislation has worked remarkably well in the United Kingdom, and that they now have a well-established feature film industry. According to the information we have, nearly identical legislation to this was enacted for the launching of the feature film industry in Great Britain, and honourable senators are aware of the remarkable motion pictures emanating from that country.

Honourable senators, before I conclude my remarks I should like to say a few words about the dubbing of a film. This is an important aspect because Canada, being a bilingual country, will have to produce films in both the English and French languages. If we want films produced in Canada to have the widest distribution possible they must be made in English and French, and in that respect dubbing is necessary.

I mention this because I am told by the experts in this field that this is no problem at all today. I was under the impression that the dubbing of a film had much to do with the cost of it, but I am informed that this is not the case.

I should mention another very short point. The debate in the other place on this measure was quite brief. It seems that members from all corners of the house were waiting to have this bill made effective as soon as possible. During the past two years before coming to this formula, the Government, directly or indirectly, considered the opinions of many people engaged in the motion picture industry in this country. Representations were received. Advice was obtained from abroad. For instance, advice was obtained from the director of the National Film Finance Corporation which, as I have said, is a comparable agency in Britain, and also from specialists attached to the various public agencies in European countries. The Government believes, therefore, that this bill represents an effective basis upon which a Canadian film industry can be launched.

Honourable senators, I should like now to say a few words in French.

[Translation]

I should like to point out to honourable senators that three of the most important French-speaking film makers were interviewed by a reporter from the newspaper La Presse about the bill now under consideration. They are Messrs. Clément Perron, president of the Professional Film Makers Association, Jean Dansereau, director of the Associated Film Makers, and Pierre Patry, founder of a company called Co-operatio. Although all three feel that this bill does not go as far as they had hoped, they all agree that it comes at the right time. They said, in short, that when this bill is passed, it will be possible to lay strong foundations for a feature film industry in Canada.

[Text]

Honourable senators, I think those are the important features of the bill which, by the way, is drafted in a very comprehensive manner. Since I have referred in my remarks to the artistic as well as the financial aspects, because both are very closely related in this bill, I should like to conclude by recalling a conversation which is supposed to have taken place between the late George Bernard Shaw and Samuel Goldwyn. They were negotiating the film rights of one of Mr. Shaw's plays, but were unable to reach an agreement. Mr. Shaw said, "The trouble is, Mr. Goldwyn, that you are interested only in art, and I am interested only in money."

Having said that, honourable senators, I commend this bill to your attention.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Halifax North): May I address a question to the honourable sponsor of the bill?

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: With pleasure.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Halifax North): What happens to the National Film Board under the set-up envisaged in this legislation?

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: It would act only in an advisory capacity. The National Film Board and the C.B.C. directly have nothing to do with this corporation except to act in an advisory capacity.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Halifax North): Then, the National Film Board continues to function as it is functioning now, or will it do so with amended responsibility?

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: No, honourable senators, there is no amended responsibility. However, I should have pointed out that the chairman of the National Film Board will be a member of this board.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): You mentioned that.

Hon. Mr. Deschatelets: Yes, but I do not think I put enough emphasis on it. He will be a member ex officio of the board, and his role will be to assist and advise not only the board but the minister in the field of motion pictures.

Hon. M. Grattan O'Leary: Honourable senators, I am sure we are all indebted to Senator Deschatelets for his interesting and, I thought, beguiling explanation of this bill. This bill, of course, is a further adventure into state socialism. It is a further adventure into paternalism. It adds to the beaurocratic apparatus of the Government. But I am not going to discuss its philosophy. I think it was Lord Roseberry who once said at the turn of the century: We are all socialists now.

Sometimes when I look over the programs of our parties I find nearly all of them embracing statism to some extent, and some to a very large extent. I have a bit of difficulty in distinguishing between them, but I do want to discuss some of the provisions and implications of this bill.

The problem which this corporation will have to deal with will not be one of developing talent, but of distribution. I am perfectly certain I could get together a dozen or more journalists within a reasonable time who would perhaps turn out the best newspaper in the world, but if that newspaper remained on the presses I would soon lose my advertisers and also my shirt.

It is the same with films. We are talking about feature films, not documentaries. They are feature films, and if we produce them and they remain in cans, then this $10 million will go down the drain.

We are not here competing with Hollywood; we are going to have to compete with the extraordinarily creative ability of the Italians, the French, the Scandinavians and the British.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): And the Americans.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton): And the Americans. But I think Hollywood would be the least. The great creative talent in the film industry today is across the seas; Hollywood is no longer the cinema capital of the world.

I think we have talent. Our National Film Board has produced some excellent documentaries. It has won prizes all over the world. In addition, we have some very capable private enterprises, notably Crawley Films, which is located right here in Ottawa. These people with their own finances, with slight help from outside, produced two full-length feature pictures in Ottawa in the last three or four years. One, "The Luck of Ginger Coffey," is now being distributed in the United States, but Crawley Films kept complete control of the production.

Senator Deschatelets, at the conclusion of his speech stated that he saw no valid reason why this corporation would not succeed. I am sure that on second thought he does not believe that. There are many scores of valid reasons why this corporation will not succeed, and I would hope that when the Government is appointing a chairman it will appoint a good, sound businessman, and not leave the thing to be run by the go-go girls and the swinger boys of Toronto's Yorkville. This is what you always encounter in an endeavour like this.

I know that every nation in Europe, as well as the United Kingdom, has subsidized its film industry. I think it is right, and that perhaps the great success of the Italians, the Scandinavians and the French, as well as the British to some extent, though not to the same extent, has been due to the fact that the governments of those countries regarded the production of their films as a matter of national prestige throughout the world. However, I make this prediction, that under the proposition contained in this bill, this corporation will only gain its ends over a period of years. It will only gain its ends if the Canadian Film Development Corporation is operated on the principle that the initiating enterprise and heaviest risks are shouldered by Canadians whose experience and talent seem to warrant the conclusion that commercial success in the world market is likely to result.

There is no sense in talking about our making films and selling them in Canada. We could sell them, but our market is not sufficiently large. We must have export markets for the films. Therefore, they must have extraordinary quality, and there must be extraordinarily good business ability behind the enterprise to see that they are properly and sufficiently distributed.

There are some other features in this bill about which I am at least doubtful. Unless the applicant for a grant by this corporation has a script of merit realistically budgeted with at least 60 per cent of the money already raised or guaranteed, and unless he is prepared to assure completion of the film, the application should be turned down. If this corporation starts handing out money here and there to anyone who comes to it with a film, then inevitably the money will be lost, and not only lost but it will discourage further help to a film industry later on.

There are one or two other features of the bill that I think should be looked at very carefully: for example, section 10(1), paragraphs (c) and (d), provide for awards to persons writing scripts. I think these sections should be dropped from the bill, and if not they should not be used by the corporation.

What are you going to have under these provisions? Do you realize that a magazine such as Maclean's, for example, gets something like 25,000 unsolicited contributions in the course of a year, and that a small newspaper like the Ottawa Journal receives five or six pieces of poetry in a day? Just imagine, with the promise of these awards what is going to happen to this corporation, with people submitting scripts. They will be deluged with scripts, and the worst feature is that there will be regional jealousies and competition in producing those scripts. I would not want to be one of the judges making the decision as to who should get the awards and where they should go. This is absolute nonsense! In fact, it would overwhelm any judging panel that would attempt to make a decision.

There is one other factor about this bill. It was mentioned by Senator Deschatelets in answer to a question put by Senator Connolly (Halifax North) about the film commissioner being a member of this board. I submit that this is a mistake. The National Film Board is a producer of films and will be in competition inevitably with private enterprises also producing films under this arrangement. On that board he would undoubtedly take a position that would in his view benefit the National Film Board as against the private producers. I do not think he has any place whatsoever on that board. We should bear in mind that although we are just setting up this film corporation, we have been spending a great deal of money, or having other people spend it for us, on films. The National Film Board and the C.B.C. between them last year spent approximately $50 million on the production of films, so you cannot say we have neglected the enterprise entirely. However, if you have the commissioner of the National Film Board on this corporation as a member, then surely he is going to be the influential person there and will want to give any advantage that he can to his own film board.

Perhaps I should mention that it was stated in the other place the other day that there exists in the United States an organization called The International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and Picture Machine Operators of the United States and Canada. My understanding is that the United States end of this is in complete control, and it is quite certain that the pictures we might produce in Canada could be boycotted, could be picketed, could be interfered with by this international alliance, if they felt that in the production of the pictures we had not adhered to their particular rules and regulations.

I remember during the last war—and I am sure the Government leader will also remember—that we attempted to take the navy show to the United States. A member of the Naval Defence Department—and perhaps it was Senator Connolly himself, who was executive assistant to the minister at that time—had to journey to New York and see Mr. Petrillo, the czar of the music industry in the United States, to get his permission to have the show put on in the City of New York. It is easy to see what effect an organization like that can have.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): The air force band had the same trouble, I think.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton): Yes. On occasions here in Ottawa a show would be stopped dead at the Capitol Theatre because the organization of American musicians would say: "We will do the playing, but unless you bring stand-by musicians as well, your show does not go on." This was making it double; this was featherbedding with a vengeance.

I would like to see some appropriate provision to cover this situation in the bill. At least I would like to think that the corporation itself would be aware of it.

Honourable senators, it appears to me that this should be essentially a business operation. I have great respect for the talent of some of those young people—we see them in the press, in the C.B.C., in the Film Board —but I have not got too much faith or confidence in their business ability. If every genius, by baptism or desire, comes to the corporation with a script and says, "I want you to buy this," and it is bought, we all know what is going to happen to the corporation.

This is why I would stress that the head of this organization should be a businessman who would recognize from the beginning that the problem here is not one of production but of distribution. We simply cannot content ourselves with selling these films in Canada. We have not the market and we will not have it in the foreseeable future. If we are to compete with the Italians, the British, the Scandinavians, we must produce good pictures, first of all, but that will be the lesser problem. The greater problem will be to compete with those people in the markets of the world. It is an operation which can be handled only by first-class businessmen.

Honourable senators, the success or failure of this corporation will depend almost entirely on the calibre of its administration. They will need a lot of luck to help them in their difficult task.

Hon. Donald Cameron: Honourable senators, I welcome the introduction of this bill in the Senate. It will mark a further step in the development of the cultural aspects of Canada. Coming as it does in our Centennial year, because the climate for such a development is favourable, it will help to crystallize in the years to come that Canadian image which is beginning to emerge already as a result of our Centennial activities.

Together with my distinguished colleague, the Clerk of the Senate, Mr. John F. MacNeill, I had the privilege of serving on the National Film Board from 1942 to 1949. This board was initiated through the persuasion of the late Prime Minister Mackenzie King who wanted to develop a medium for selling the war effort, and the sacrifices that were part of it, to the Canadian people.

Honourable senators will remember "Canada Carries On" films, and others of that nature. There was a distribution agency set up from one end of Canada to the other, under the National Film Board in co-operation with the extension departments of the universities, and it was very sucessful.

In the years since I had anything to do with it, the Film Board has gone on to make a very distinguished place for itself amongst film makers in the world. It has demonstrated its capacity to make good films by consistently winning awards at the Venice International Film Festival, the University of Michigan International Film Award Centre and others.

In the same period of time, the private film makers have done very well by Canada. Senator O'Leary (Carleton) referred quite rightly to the role played by Crawley Films in Ottawa. We owe a great deal to Budge Crawley and his associates, who have done a magnificent job and who have helped to put Canada on the map, nationally and internationally.

There are others not so well established as Crawley Films. I refer to a group in Calgary, Master Films of Calgary, to Canawest of Vancouver and others, and particularly to the film makers of Quebec, who have done a first-rate job and will be able to hold their own in an international situation when they get some further encouragement.

The role of film making for the C.B.C. televison offers an almost unlimited opportunity for the making of good films, for the utilization of Canadian artists in music, drama, ballet, painting, designing and so on.

Senator O'Leary (Carleton) mentioned that the C.B.C., the television people, and the National Film Board spent $50 million last year. It sounds like a lot of money, but this is a big money industry. We are proposing now to put $10 million more into that industry. Ten million dollars is not a lot of money. I would like to look upon this money as what we call in our business "seed money." It is money invested in a revolving fund of this kind to stimulate and to encourage production, and you hope to get it back.

I could not agree more with Senator O'Leary, (Carleton) that the head of this board must be a first-class businessman and he must be tough. He can hire the artists and the technicians and the film experts by the dozen to give him the technical advice necessary, but if this proposal is to succeed it must be as a business proposition. I am sure this will be taken care of by the board when selected.

I noticed in reading the discussion in the other place that some time was given to section 3, which makes provision for the director of the National Film Board to be a member of this board. Senator O'Leary does not agree with this, and I admit that there are grounds for having some misgivings. Frankly, I think the positive values outweigh the negative ones.

I do not think the Film Board is going to be too worried about the competition from private industry, or that private industry will be unduly concerned about competition from the Film Board. The Film Board is not going to have that kind of budget.

On the positive side, the director of the National Film Board, the Film Commissioner, is the Government's official liaison man on the making of films for Government departments and other agencies in Canada. Even more than that, he is the man who will have the liaison with other governments, with the French, the Italians, the British; and it is in this sense that the appointment of the commissioner to the board is more than justified.

I referred a moment ago to the question of this being a good time to set up this institution and that I think it will help to a very great extent to develop the Canadian image in the sense of nationality and purpose. This is a good place for me to make a brief diversion to refer to the remarks made earlier this afternoon by my friend Senator Paterson.

First of all, I was delighted with the remarks he made. I wish he would reminisce more often. This is not unrelated to what we are trying to do in setting up this board. We are at a stage in our Canadian development today when we are concerned with preserving the colour and flavour of this country, and there is a group of Canadians today working unofficially trying to create a body to finance and sponsor a library of oral history for Canada.

The initiative for this came from a free-lance writer and journalist in Montreal, Lawrence Noury. Some of you may have met him because he has interviewed many Canadians from one end of the country to the other.

All I want to say is that the kind of story Senator Paterson told this afternoon is the kind that lends colour and flavour and interest to the Canadian personality. I hope that this kind of thing will become part of the library of oral history. So, if somebody comes after you some day wanting some money to help develop this library, I hope that you will listen sympathetically, for it can be a very vital and important element in developing the Canadian personality.

I agree with Senator O'Leary when he says that the crucial point of this discussion is the question of distribution. I think if this bill goes to a committee we should ask some very searching questions there, because, as Senator O'Leary pointed out, there is nothing in the bill to indicate how the distribution is going to be brought about. He was quite right that the Canadian market is not large enough to build up a profitable industry, although I think the market is bigger and better than most people think. But here again is where the co-sponsorship with Italy or France or the U.K. comes in. Again this emphasizes the importance of the dominion Film Commissioner being tied into this board.

The Italian film makers in particular have demonstrated what can be done with low-budget films. Certainly any feature films in Canada are going to be low-budget films. We have not the kind of money to try to emulate Hollywood, and we should not. We do not need to. Some of the best films we see in the world today are low-budget films produced in France, Italy and in the United Kingdom.

Now, that is all I want to say by way of introduction, but under the objects and powers of the Board as developed in section 10, here again I find myself in an amazing degree of unanimity with my friend Senator O'Leary. I do not take clauses 10 (c) and (d) as seriously as he does. As to making awards for outstanding accomplishments in the production of Canadian feature films, which is clause (c), it is a nice thing to give awards, but I am not sure that the money should come from this appropriation. Even if it did, my experience with awards is that they are not very generous. It would not be very much money. It is the recognition that counts, and if we were to give $500 or $1,000, surely that would be sufficient.

Hon. Mr. O'Leary (Carleton): They get the recognition now. Awards are already granted by an organization which exists for that precise purpose, but we do not need money awards.

Hon. Mr. Cameron: I realize that, and I would have no objection to this clause being deleted. It is not an important clause in any event.

The making of grants to film makers and film technicians resident in Canada in order to assist them to improve their craft, which is section 10(d), means essentially scholarships. Now, I am sure that the investment return that we get from scholarships in any field as a rule is the biggest return we get on any investment we can make. To that extent I am in favour of that particular clause, but I would say again that the selection of people to receive grants must be very carefully made.

Then, in section 10 (2) (a) the question of Canadian control is important. This is a very important clause and I am not just sure what the safeguards are to ensure that this development will not be taken over by an American firm.

In saying this I am not being anti-American, but I believe there is a place and a need for development of a Canadian feature film industry and it cannot go on to thrive and prosper if it is run by someone from outside.

This brings me to section 14. Again Senator O'Leary referred to this. It is the role of the unions, particularly IATSE, as I think they call it, the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and Motion Picture Machine Operators of the United States.

I have reason to believe that on occasion these people have literally taken over the work of Canadian film technicians and are the ones who have had their names on the scripts in a senior position to our people. Again I want to emphasize that I am not anti-international union, but I think the time has come, particularly in an area of this kind, when we must insist that there be some new regulations which would permit the technicians employed to operate with some degree of Canadian autonomy.

Then, in section 18, we come to the financial arrangements. As I said earlier, $10 million is not a lot of money in an industry of this kind. On the other hand, if you look on it as the yeast money or the seed money invested to help an industry, this can play a very important role and if this organization succeeds as we hope it will, the money can be increased at some other time. I feel that this is a step in the right direction, and I am delighted to see the bill coming before us. I hope that it will get the support it deserves.

In conclusion I want to emphasize again that this is just the second step in the development of a Canadian film industry, and its timing is good because it can play a vital role in creating or helping to create a sense of nationality and understanding among the Canadian people.

My final words are again to compliment Senator Deschatelets for his usual modest and lucid presentation of legislation.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Deschatelets, bill referred to the standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

STANDING COMMITTEE ON TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

NOTICE OF MEETING

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, before we adjourn I draw your attention to the fact that the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications will meet tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock to deal with Bill C-229, the Canadian National Railways Financing and Guarantee Bill. The witnesses will be Mr. MacMillan, President of the Canadian National Railways, Mr. MacDougall, senior counsel, and other officials. I would ask that as many honourable senators as possible attend the meeting.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

Thursday, February 9, 1967

THE SENATE

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that he had received the following communication:

GOVERNMENT HOUSE

Ottawa 9 February, 1967

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Robert Taschereau, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, acting as Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 9th February, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
A. G. Cherrier,
Assistant Secretary
to the Governor General.

The Honourable
The Speaker of the Senate

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

JOINT COMMITTEE—CHANGE IN COMMONS MEMBERSHIP

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that a message had been received from the House of Commons to acquaint the Senate that the name of Mr. Gilbert had been substituted for that of Mr. Brewin on the list of members appointed to serve on the Special Joint Committee respecting Mr. Justice Landreville.

DOCUMENTS TABLED

Hon. John J. Connolly tabled:

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS FINANCING AND GUARANTEE BILL, 1965-1966

AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. T. D'Arcy Leonard, Acting Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, presented the following report of the committee on Bill C-229 to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways System for the period from the 1st day of January, 1965 to the 30th day of June, 1967, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company:

Your committee recommends that authority be granted for the printing of 800 copies in English and 300 copies in French of its proceedings on the said bill.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Leonard: I move, with leave of the Senate, that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Leonard, Acting Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, reported that the committee had considered Bill C-229, to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways System for the period from the 1st day of January, 1965 to the 30th day of June, 1967, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company, and had directed that the bill be reported without amendment.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Leonard: I move, with leave of the Senate, that the bill be read the third time now.

Honourable senators, perhaps I should say a few words on the motion for third reading with respect to the meeting of the committee this morning.

The committee had before it the new President of the Canadian National Railways, and I must say that he made an excellent impression on the committee. Mr. MacMillan succeeded Mr. Gordon only a few months ago, but actually his experience in the Canadian National Railways System goes back over many years and he is familiar with all aspects of its operations.

In his evidence before the committee this morning Mr. MacMillan displayed a complete knowledge of the operations of the railway, including its finances.

Although in some respects he did not satisfy member senators as to whether trains running from Nova Scotia to Ottawa would make connections at Montreal, he certainly gave complete explanations on all questions relating to this bill.

In the debate the other day a number of honourable senators raised points as to the authorization of several hundreds of millions of dollars of expenditure made during 1965 and 1966 and the issue of securities in connection therewith. Mr. MacMillan's explanations in this respect were complete, adequate and quite satisfactory to the committee. His presence there gave us an opportunity to congratulate him. I am sure he will be very welcome at future meetings of the committee.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, before this bill is read the third time I should like to make a few remarks, and I am inspired to do so by the most delightful speech made yesterday by our colleague Senator Paterson.

Because this is Centennial year and because the railways have meant so much to the development of this country, it seemed to me appropriate on this occasion to refer back to the Debates of the Senate for 1884. Over the years I have made a practice of reading as much of these early Hansards as I can, and I must say that if one wants to review the history of the times these old volumes of the debates contain a wonderful reflection of the development of the country.

This afternoon I should like to read briefly some extracts from the Senate Hansard of March 14, 1884, and particularly the speech of the then Senator Power from Halifax who, I might say, was more of a stormy petrel in this house than the present honourable senator of that name. He was talking on that occasion about Pullman cars on the Intercolonial Railway, and what he had to say was in the nature of a complaint. For example, he said:

> Then these Pullman cars are less airy and wholesome than they should be ... the lights in the Pullman are not good enough to enable one to read at night.

Later he added:

> The sections of the car are not shielded from the passengers outside, as they ought to be; and the berths in the sections are not separated as they should be from each other.
> Hon. Mr. MacDonald: The sexes?
> Hon. Mr. Power: My honourable friend makes some suggestion as to the sexes. One can imagine—it is a case which very often happens—that a lady passenger may occupy the lower berth of one of those sections and a male passenger the upper berth. There is no curtain, and nothing else to give the passenger in the lower berth the complete privacy and isolation that she ought to have from the passenger in the upper berth. The only way in which either an individual or family can secure anything like complete privacy is by taking the drawing-room, and that apartment is the most unwholesome and objectionable portion of the car. There is almost no ventilation in it. Then the arrangements for washing and dressing in those cars are not all what they ought to be. They were thought very good sixteen or seventeen years ago, but they are now behind the age.

He goes on a little later to say:

When the ventilators are closed, the cars get very warm and the air becomes foul; and if the ventilators are open there are draughts through the cars, and passengers are very apt to catch cold.

Then there was this interjection by Senator Plumb:

Does the hon. gentleman like to have them open or kept shut?

They were not as polite to one another in those days, because Senator Power replied:

There is one particular opening that I should like to see kept shut more than it is, and that is the mouth of the honourable gentleman from Niagara.

After which are enclosed in brackets the words "prolonged laughter."

The Honourable Mr. Almon, at a later place, said:

I asked that the cars should be supplied with thermometers, and that a maximum temperature be established, and then when you appeal to the Shadrach, Meshech and Abednego who were piling on the coal that you objected to having any more heat, they could be prevented from doing so. Another thing I asked for was that the cars should be supplied with pure cold water. I should hope that those hon. gentlemen who are now thrusting the Scott Act down our throat—

And I am sure that all honourable senators know what the reference is in that respect.

—would not object to giving a passenger a glass of clean cold water. In those cars the tank is placed near the stove, the water is supplied through a hose, the supply end of which is no one knows where, and passengers are forced to use dirty, unfiltered water. A common filter would not cost more than $2, and it would not be difficult to supply good water. There is a tank in the ladies' water closet, but male passengers are not allowed access to it. These two facts, the difficulty of obtaining a decent glass of water, and the overheating of cars, I protested against two years ago, without any advantage to the public. There is another matter against which I protest as a medical man: you get into your berth, and the porter puts down the other berth above you. You ask him why he does so, or if it is going to be occupied by another passenger. He says it is not; it is simply putting on the thumb screws to compel you to give him $2 more to secure the whole section in order to save yourself from being smothered with carbonic acid gas.

Then the Honourable Mr. Bellerose got into the debate, and he talked about delays of the trains as follows:

A train left Montreal at 4.30, during very stormy weather, and had only been running about 30 minutes when it was completely blockaded by snow. Another train, according to the rules of the company, left Montreal ten minutes later than the train which was blockaded, and ran into it. The weather was such that the engineer could not see more than a few feet before him, and no one could fairly be censured in connection with that accident.

Then he goes on to describe the difficulties of the passengers on that train, and winds up in this way:

There was a curve upon the line, where the bush was thick, so that the engineer could see nothing ahead of him, and upon reaching that curve the passenger train ran into the two engines and it was only by a miracle that no lives were lost, as the trains were running at a speed of 28 or 29 miles an hour.

Then Mr. Odell got into the argument, and he said:

I have had a good deal of experience while travelling over this road, and I must say that the Pullman cars upon it are completely run down. Whether it is that all the cars which are out of repair are put upon that portion of the road or not, it is certain that they bear no comparison with those running westward. They have become so bad that it really is a service of danger to go into the washroom and attempt to wash in the morning. Whether it is that the springs are out of order, or the underwork is impaired, I cannot say, but the swinging motion is so bad that it is worse than any little sailing vessel I was ever in. Really, it is sometimes with the greatest difficulty that one can avoid getting a serious fall, or a blow in the face if you attempt to put it down in the basin.

After reading passages like that from the earlier Debates of the Senate about the perils of railway travel in Canada perhaps we can realize that in this year 1967 we have come a long way along the right lines.

Motion agreed to and bill read third time and passed.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I move, with leave of the Senate, that when the Senate adjourns today it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, February 28, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

Before the motion is carried, perhaps I should warn honourable senators that there is a real possibility that we may be recalled to consider urgent legislation from the other place some time next week. It is our rule of course that senators are subject to recall during such an adjournment. Therefore, I would ask honourable senators to keep in mind that the date of reassembly is not at all meaningful at this stage of the session.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: May I at this time inquire from the honourable Leader of the Government what we may expect after the two weeks adjournment. We all know there is a considerable backlog of legislation which is at different stages, some bills having received second reading, others are before the Committee of the Whole or special committees, and some are at the resolution stage, all of which are probably more important than those that have had further debate. I am sure all honourable senators would be greatly appreciative if the honourable leader could tell us what legislation we might expect after the adjournment.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, as the lawyers say, without in any way dispensing with the generality of what is to follow, may I say that I believe—and it is only an educated guess—that it is a strong possibility that the Senate will be required to deal with the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation legislation sometime next week. There will be legislation arising out of the budget resolutions once that debate is concluded, and that legislation will come to us in due course. The Immigration Appeal Board bill, which is on the Order Paper in the other place, will also reach us in due course. I do not classify it as a major piece of legislation, important though it may be.

Before the end of this session we can expect the bill to amend the Bank Act and the Quebec Savings Bank Act. We can also expect a bill to amend the Canadian Vessel Construction Assistance Act, as well as some legislation in respect of pension plans in federal undertakings. Though not a major bill, it is of some considerable importance.

The Canadian Forces Reorganization bill is now before a standing committee in the other place, and in due time we will be called upon to consider that legislation. A bill entitled Industrial Research and Development Incentives, to amend some of the legislation already on the statute books in respect of incentives for research, will be coming to us.

There are three bills with reference to the public service, dealing respectively with staff relations, employment, and amendments to the Financial Administration Act. These are bills that have been before a joint committee of the two houses and will come to us in due course.

I do not pretend to have given a complete list of legislation which may reach us, but I think I have touched upon the major items of legislation which we are likely to be called upon to consider.

Motion agreed to.

UNIVERSITY FINANCES

The Senate resumed from Tuesday, December 20, the adjourned debate on the inquiry of the honourable Senator MacKenzie calling the attention of the Senate to the question of university finances.

Hon. G. Percival Burchill: Honourable Senators, I want to congratulate Senator MacKenzie and Senator Leonard for the very excellent speeches they made on the subject of university finances.

As I have had the great privilege of being a member of the Senate of the University of New Brunswick for about 35 years, I think I know something of the problems in connection with financing of universities. But before I comment on that subject I want to remind this house that Senator MacKenzie at one time was the President of the University of New Brunswick, and I claim some share of the credit in persuading him to become a university president.

In 1939 when we were in search of a president I was delegated along with two others from the Senate of the University of New Brunswick to interview a couple of gentlemen in Toronto. At the same time we were to have a conversation with Senator MacKenzie. He was then on the staff of the University of Toronto, and Canon Cody, the President of the University of Toronto, had recommended him to us as a very suitable gentleman to assume the duties of the President of the University of New Brunswick.

I remember that Senator MacKenzie stipulated that he would not be interesteed in the position unless we were able to pay him the colossal salary of $6,000 a year, which was almost double the amount we had been paying his predecessor.

On our way home from Toronto we met the Premier of the province and some of his colleagues in Montreal, and I was charged with the responsibility of selling Senator MacKenzie, along with his colossal salary, to the government of the Province of New Brunswick. How well I succeeded, honourable senators, can be seen from the fact that Senator MacKenzie came down and joined us and stayed with us for four years. During his term of office he laid the foundation for the program of expansion which has overtaken us down there. When he left in response to a call from the University of British Columbia to go to the west coast, he and Mrs. MacKenzie left behind them a great host of friends and well wishers in the Province of New Brunswick. These friends have watched his subsequent career with great pleasure and justifiable pride.

Hon. Mr. Brooks: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: So I claim at least some share in Senator MacKenzie's outstanding achievements as a university president, because I was one of those who discovered him on the staff of the University of Toronto and persuaded him to come to New Brunswick.

This program of expansion, adapted first to take care of the returning veterans who rushed to enter college, has continued under his successors, Dr. Milton Gregg, V.C., Dr. Albert Trueman, and since then by our present dynamic and able President, Dr. Colin MacKay, who during his time has planned and constructed twenty new buildings on the campus, involving an expenditure of more than $20 million.

Even with all that expansion, the university has been obliged to restrict for lack of space the number of students wishing to enroll from outside the province.

The University of New Brunswick is one of Canada's oldest universities. Uprooted from their old homes by the American Revolution, the Loyalists brought the standard of Harvard and King's College, New York, with them to the New Brunswick wilderness. It was, therefore, natural that when they founded the loyalist province in 1784, they should have made provision for the education of the young people; and so a memorial to the Governor in Council on December 13, 1785, signed by Ward Chipman, William Paine and a number of other loyalist founders of the province, resulted in the granting of a draft charter modelled on that of King's College, New York.

Thus the University of New Brunswick received its birth, and since that time it has been the crown of the educational system of the province and has turned out graduates who have taken their places among our Canadian leaders in building this great nation, in the fields of state, education, religion, commerce and literature.

At the present time the university is facing a serious financial crisis. In New Brunswick, as in other provinces of Canada, we have been experiencing a student explosion which was confined not only to the University of New Brunswick but to the other universities in the province. The whole problem of higher education, involving finances, became so acute that in 1961 the provincial government appointed a commission under the chairmanship of Dr. Deutsch, to investigate every phase of the problem and make recommendations, which they did. But notwithstanding the formula for Government grants which was based upon a projection for five years, which they deemed adequate then and which has been implemented, revenues have fallen so far short of actual costs that for the past year, ending June 30, 1966, the university had a deficit of over $300,000 on operating costs alone, which still stands on the books.

Therefore, the University of New Brunswick welcomed an announcement by the Government that the same three commissioners had consented to a review of the financial requirements for the period 1967-1968 to 1971-1972. They have hailed that announcement with great relief. That review is under study at the present time, and I understand the provincial Government is awaiting its report before announcing what operating capital grants will be available. The needs of the university for the next five years are based on enrolment trends prepared by a Joint University Committee under the chairmanship of Mr. B.F. Macaulay, Vice-President, Administration, in the University of New Brunswick.

The operating deficit to which I have referred occurred even after the university had been forced to increase tuition fees until today its charges are as high as any in Canada. Over the five-year period they have increased from an average of $400 to $570 this year.

The Deutsch Commission pointed out in its 1961 report that,

> One of the primary causes for rising expenditures has been the requirement for higher salaries to retain properly qualified instructors. With total University and College enrolments in Canada expected to triple during the next ten years, the competition for able teachers will become even more intense. As academic salaries in New Brunswick institutions are already significantly below the national average, it will be necessary to improve their salary schedules on a regular basis if New Brunswick students are not to suffer from the continued loss of good teachers.

When we turn to capital requirements, the situation is even worse. Ten years ago there were 1,022 students enrolled at the university. Last year there were 3,342. The appraisal of students trends in university and college enrolment, to which I have referred earlier, indicates that the University of New Brunswick will be obliged to provide facilities in the next ten years for 7,150 students, and if all financial obstacles were removed the figure would reach over 8,000. Last year the entire province's college and university enrolment worked out at 11.3 per cent of the population as compared with that in Canada as a whole of 16.1 per cent; and the projected percentage for 1975-76 is 16.5 per cent as compared with the Canadian average forecasts of 26.7 per cent. Of the student enrolment at the University of New Brunswick in 1961-62, 56 per cent of the student body came from outside the province but, due to the university being obliged to restrict applications from beyond the province, the figure dropped to 37 per cent. It is interesting to note that from 1956 to 1962, enrolment in the province's three English language universities increased by 59 per cent, and in the French language institutions by 72 per cent. Seventy-six per cent of this increased enrolment at the French language institutions had come from New Brunswick residents, compared to 31 per cent for the English language institutions.

To provide facilities for this expansion in the number of students, we were faced with the necessity of undertaking a large building program which is still continuing. This program involves the erection of 20 new buildings, three of which were completed last year, and we hope eight more will be ready in 1967. These include buildings in Saint John, where a branch of the university has been established and where students are registered in the first two years of Arts and Sciences.

The total expenditure in the period from 1966 to 1970 on capital construction is estimated to be $33,280,000. Following the formula recommended by the Deutsch Commission in 1961, the province has been making an annual grant of $550,000 towards capital costs and this, with approximately $6 million realized from our financial campaign, represents the total source of capital funds.

Honourable senators, it is not necessary for me to repeat what previous speakers have said as to the need for higher education. I am sure we all agree that if this country is to grow and develop in the way we want it to, education must be the answer. Senator O'Leary (Carleton) in his able speech on the establishment of a Science Council of Canada pointed out that if Canadian industry is to compete in international markets, it must not only have the best knowledge, it must be able to apply that knowledge and should also be equipped with the best tools. I could not agree with him more.

However, in carrying out that objective, I am concerned with the difficulties facing universities in sections of Canada where the financial resources to maintain standards and render the best service to our youth are not easily available. For that reason I have ventured to give the Senate this sketch of our experience in New Brunswick which illustrates the gap between what is happening there and the story which Senator Leonard told of the amazing progress made by York University in Toronto. Other instances of institutions in Canada could, of course, be cited, but here we have a new institution which had only a name in 1960, but in six years has erected an imposing set of buildings and equipment at a cost approximating $40 million. That is an amazing achievement, and I salute the governors of that university.

However, honourable senators, the point I wish to underline is that if there is to be equal opportunity for Canadian youth to acquire higher education, funds should be made available for institutions in less-favoured provinces so that these opportunities would be open to Canadians everywhere, no matter in what province they happen to live. This is a national responsibility and in my opinion should not be passed on to provincial authorities who have their hands full with provincial problems.

I go further and say that in my view it would be a wonderful idea to mix young people from the various provinces at the different Canadian univeristies so that they would get to know one another and form college friendships. Such friendships can last a lifetime. As an example, I would mention that my friend the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks) was a fellow student in my class at the University of New Brunswick. Such friendships grow with the passing of the years, and I can see no better way of bringing about a united Canada than to have students from all parts of Canada intermingle at the university level. I know that the scheme for the interchange of school boys and girls from east to west and vice versa has been very successful, and each has learned more about the other parts of the country. At the University of New Brunswick we have students from several provinces of Canada, and indeed some from outside of Canada, and we wish we were in a position to take more.

I have in my hand a quotation from the Ottawa Citizen, written by Charles Lynch. Speaking about New Brunswick, he has this to say:

> One of my sons was dispatched there for educational purposes, it being the family hope that he would bring away some of the native philosophy that had served father so well around the globe.
> You know what? We can't get him out of there.
> He regards New Brunswick as a great place and likes the people and the pace.

We in New Brunswick only regret that we are not financially able to take care of all the students from outside the province who would like to be enrolled at the University of New Brunswick.

In closing I want to say that I think the presence of those young people as students in New Brunswick has been a good thing for that province, and what is good for New Brunswick is good for Canada.

NATO PARLIAMENTARIANS

TWELFTH ANNUAL CONFERENCE AT PARIS, FRANCE

The Senate resumed from Friday, December 16, 1966, the adjourned debate on the notice of the honourable Senator Aird that he will call the attention of the Senate to the Twelfth Annual Conference of NATO Parliamentarians held at Paris, France, 9th November to 14th November, 1966, and in particular to the discussions and proceedings of the Conference and the participation therein of the delegation from Canada.

Hon. A. J. Brooks: Honourable senators, it is not my intention this afternoon to speak on this item which has been on the Order Paper now for some time. I wish to yield to my very good friend Senator Lefrançois. Before doing so may I thank my honourable friend Senator Burchill for his very kind reference to me as being his classmate at the University of New Brunswick. May I also say that I endorse fully what he has said in his appeal in support of that of Senator MacKenzie and others for more assistance to universities in general and, in Senator Burchill's request, the University of New Brunswick in particular.

Before giving my reason for not continuing the debate on NATO this afternoon, may I congratulate Senator Aird on his excellent address and report on the proceedings at the NATO Parliamentarians' Conference in November last. I was not on the same committee as either Senator Lefrançois or Senator Aird. I was on the Defence Committee, and all my time was devoted to it. I wish to speak on defence when the bill mentioned by the honourable Leader of the Government, the amendment to the Defence Act, comes before this house for consideration. It would only be a duplication were I to speak on NATO defence now and then repeat it along with other defence matters later.

I take great pleasure in yielding my position to the honourable Senator Lefrançois who, I may say, was most attentive to the work of the NATO delegation. I am sure he took every opportunity we had in Paris of looking after the interests of NATO and our Canadian delegation.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, has the honourable Senator Lefrançois leave to proceed in place of the honourable Senator Brooks?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. J. Eugène Lefrançois: Honourable senators, I intend to speak in French today, but before doing so may I pay tribute to my colleagues, the honourable Senators Brooks and Aird, whom I accompanied to the NATO Parliamentarians' Conference in Paris in November last. They certainly contributed to making this trip most enjoyable and interesting for me, and I wish to thank them for their courtesy.

I am also very grateful to the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Brooks) who has given me the opportunity to speak this afternoon on the NATO Conference. I am sure that when the time comes for the Leader of the Opposition to speak on defence he will have very interesting things to say about the conference.

[Translation]

Honourable senators, like the honourable Senators Brooks and Aird, I had the privilege of accompanying the Canadian delegation to the meeting of the NATO parliamentarians held in Paris last November.

Although this was not my first experience, I found the tour of our military bases in Europe, as well as the discussions held in Paris, most profitable.

What struck me was the excellent morale of our troops overseas, in spite of the concern expressed by the air force people stationed at Marville about their immediate future.

When the main topic of discussion by the NATO Council was on the military power of NATO and the composition of the forces, all participants noticed that the conference took on a special character.

I am pleased at this time to call attention to the regular attendance and the earnest participation of Canadian parliamentarians in committee work, as well as in the plenary sessions. Several delegates from other countries noted with satisfaction the interest shown by Canadians in NATO matters, especially their broadmindedness when problems as serious as the proper position of France within western Europe, under the aegis of the military structure of the Alliance, must be fully looked into.

I would be remiss if I failed to congratulate the new president of the NATO Parliamentary Association. Incidentally, from now on this organization will be known as the North Atlantic Assembly. I am sure—and my colleagues will no doubt agree with me—that Mr. Jean Eudes Dubé, young and brilliant member for Restigouche-Madawaska, will succeed in reflecting on the whole country the honour bestowed on him of presiding at this assembly called upon to effect the greatest transformations within the alliance since its establishment in 1949.

I must also point out the fine work performed by the president of the Canadian delegation, Mr. Perry Ryan, whose sense of humour, devotion to duty and quick wits were greatly appreciated by every delegate. I must add that his technical information left nothing to be desired.

Before dealing with the main problems of the alliance, that is, the withdrawal of France and the economic co-operation of European member countries of NATO, I should like to stress certain details which were not overlooked by the French-speaking members of the delegation. I appreciate the special efforts made by the Minister of Defence (Mr. Hellyer) to change the spirit prevailing within the armed forces so as to give more and more importance to French-speaking military personnel.

I regret however, as other colleagues from the House of Commons do, that the operation of our overseas bases is carried out exclusively in English.

While I realize that efficiency and proper functioning of the forces require a certain uniformity in the working language, I feel that our troops in Europe are ambassadors from this country. As such, they should reflect a true Canadian image. They should give French as much importance as English. If the world is to be shown that we are living harmoniously, while speaking two official languages, this is a splendid opportunity to make the most of the presence of our military in Europe to apply these principles which reflect a true image of Canada.

For instance, I find it unacceptable that in the areas under Canadian military jurisdiction, in France especially, no account is taken of the fact that on this side of the Atlantic six million French Canadians speak their own language daily, but this is not reflected at all overseas. I am making this remark to the Government in good faith, in the hope that it will be noted.

Honourable senators, as Senator Aird has indicated, the problems of NATO are no longer exclusively military and political. They have become mainly economic problems. To ensure the stability of Europe, the Atlantic countries are not only responsible for the difficult mission of building up against the Russian military might the most modern and the most efficient defensive network, they must also ensure in the member countries, particularly Great Britain, France and Germany, the economic stability, the trade and industrial momentum which will operate as a magnet to encourage them to strengthen the alliance and to enjoy their own security.

During this most profitable conference, several parliamentarians expressed the opinion that the Soviet menace, if less imminent on the military front, is as real and as dangerous on the diplomatic front. These experts saw their theory gain strength recently, following the visit of President de Gaulle in the U.S.S.R. and the triumph of Premier Kosygin in France several weeks ago.

I do not think such problems can be solved easily and a magic solution to the withdrawal of France and the progressive disarmament of the military zone in the West cannot be found by a simple conjuring trick.

I agree with Senator Aird that the defensive organization of NATO, with its present forces, must be maintained in order to reassure peoples exposed to attack in this sector and to promote the economic development of countries once occupied by the Nazis.

However, I hesitate to accept the idea that it is necessary to punish France in some way for its decision to withdraw from the military structure of the alliance.

Honourable senators will remember the words of the Minister of External Affairs who recently asked for progressive disarmament of the two military zones, both East and West.

This, I think, is the view of General de Gaulle, who has more faith in diplomatic negotiations with the eastern countries than in the construction of military strongholds when it comes to creating closer ties and making Europe economically stronger.

It is understandable the Americans are disappointed that they should have to fight alone in Viet Nam without the assistance of the NATO countries and, in some cases, under stinging criticism on their part. However, this does not mean that the Americans are obsolutely right in the matter of restoring to Europe a prestige and an autonomous strength which would immunize it against Soviet power as well as the insatiable economic appetite of our next door neighbours.

Canada has shown a great deal of good will during the last few years with the countries signatories of the Warsaw pact. Mr. Paul Martin's recent trip in the Soviet zone shows how much our country, too, favours dialogue and a positive easing of tension increasingly centered on trade and cultural exchanges.

Such a policy between members of NATO would be the first step towards strengthening the alliance and providing it with a new purpose in addition to its military role.

I was interested in the discussions concerning the economic problems of Great Britain, and the various solutions suggested to make sure that France, Germany and the United Kingdom would have a major influence consistent with their economic interests in the economic struggle between eastern countries.

In this respect I would point out that the first action taken by the new minister of External Affairs in Chancellor Keisinger's cabinet was to express hope for increased relationships with the French government, with a view to progressively integrating the economic interests of Europe into the world market.

I, therefore, suggest that France's withdrawal, if it poses painful problems from the diplomatic and military standpoints, shows on the other hand—and the lesson is good particularly for the Americans—that an alliance cannot endure without constant adjustments and compromises which are sometimes difficult to accept by the wealthier members of the group, who are reluctant to relinquish their economic dictatorship but who do not hesitate, in support of their positions, to advance sentimental arguments which can easily be challenged.

Therefore, I wish that Canadian members of parliament and senators would take a close interest in the future workings of the Atlantic Alliance, to try and give this connotation of objectivity and sober second thought characteristic of Canada's interventions on the world scene, and which made our country famous as a fair observer in great conflicts, whether it be ideological, economic or military.

I hesitate, honourable senators, to tackle the German problem, in view of the fact that recent political events in the Federal Republic have somewhat spread confusion and that certain conclusions might have been drawn too early, particularly in regard to the election success of extreme right wing parties and the new direction of the German foreign policy under the leadership of Willy Brandt.

However, I feel it would be unwise for the Americans, or the Canadians, to withdraw too quickly their contribution to the defence of Germany by shifting to the shoulders of the German people a greater part of the expenditures for the defence of the free world in Europe.

On the other hand, I feel that the time has come for the members of the alliance, starting with the Federal Republic herself, to soften their policies towards the countries of the East, especially the Democratic Republic of Germany, to find at last an adequate solution to the Berlin problem.

Honourable senators, a few years ago I had opportunity to attend a NATO conference and the experience gained at that time enabled me to benefit even more from this year's conference.

Canada played a most important role in the creation of the alliance. I came back from that conference more convinced than ever that Canadian parliamentarians have an important part to play in the changes which are now taking place within the North Atlantic Alliance.

CONSUMER CREDIT (COST OF LIVING)

FIFTH REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE TABLED

Hon. David A. Croll, Joint Chairman of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Consumer Credit and Cost of Living, tabled the fifth report of the committee.

NATIONAL AND ROYAL ANTHEMS

FIRST REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE ADOPTED

Hon. Maurice Bourget, Joint Chairman of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on the National Anthem and the Royal Anthem, presented the first report of the committee:

> Your committee recommends that its quorum be fixed at seven members, provided that both Houses are represented.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Bourget: With leave of the Senate, I move that the report be adopted now.

Report adopted.

CONSUMER CREDIT (COST OF LIVING)

MOTION TO PRINT REPORT AS APPENDIX TO DEBATES OF THE SENATE AND MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS

Hon. David A. Croll, Joint Chairman of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Consumer Credit and Cost of Living moved, with leave of the Senate:

> That the fifth report of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on Consumer Credit and Cost of Living, tabled today, be printed as an Appendix to the Debates of the Senate and to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this day and form part of the permanent records of this House.

He said: Honourable senators, I ask your indulgence in allowing me to say a few words. I shall not be long.

The fifth report of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on Consumer Credit and Cost of Living, which was tabled today, was three years in the making. It is the result of a careful study by dedicated members of this chamber and of the House of Commons representing all parties.

Our combined experience as consumers and in business made it possible for us to weigh the many diverse points of view which were presented to us and the steps that we should take to insure that consumer credit, a great convenience to those who understand it and can afford to use it, did not become a menace to families with small incomes. This is apt to happen if the cost of the credit is not made clear so that the consumer may choose whether to use part of his income to purchase credit or to spend that money in some other way.

In a market economy it is assumed that the shopper is free to make his choice, and we did not attempt to interfere with that assumption. Obviously freedom to choose depends upon understanding what are the alternatives. When an individual decides to buy on credit—and most people can obtain the largest items in no other way—he must be free to choose the particular kind of credit that is best for him to buy. If the consumer is to be in a position to compare the cost to him of different kinds of credit, the cost must be expressed in the common unit of measurement.

During the entire hearings of the committee no good reason was advanced as to why the age-old measure of annual interest rates, which is used in calculating the cost of mortgages and which businessmen use when considering the cost of money to themselves, should be abandoned when the man on the street, the consumer, is the borrower.

I am not suggesting that the cost of borrowing money is the only cost involved in consumer credit lending. Indeed, it is very difficult today to decide whether the main transaction is the lending of money or the sale of goods. Other costs of various kinds at times exceed the cost of borrowing the money. However, there is no reason for departing from the traditional method of expressing to the borrower in annual percentage terms the cost of money to him.

We wanted to make the game of shopping a fair one, and this we think we have done. I am very pleased therefore to report that the joint committee recommended that lenders and vendors be required to tell the truth about interest rates and finance charges, not only at the time the loan or credit sale is made but also in advertising loan or credit. Today few people quarrel with that proposition; but I should be forgiven if I remind this house that we who favour truth in lending were a much smaller band several years ago when I first introduced the Finance Charges Disclosure Bill in this house. However, thanks to the efforts of members of both Houses of Parliament, as well as support from welfare agencies, social agencies, farmers' organizations, the Congress of Labour, individual citizens and many sections of the press, opposition to the idea has practically melted away, and in recommending full disclosure I feel that we have been overtaken by events.

It was very pleasing to hear the Minister of Finance say the other day that they will use the nominal annual rate for disclosure. And that is a very simple one. All you do is to take the monthly rate, multiply it by twelve, and there is your answer. It is as simple as that, in spite of all you have heard from time to time that it could not be done.

Hon. Mr. Everett: Would the honourable senator permit me a question? He states that you take the monthly rate and multiply it by twelve. I wonder if he could go over that calculation again, because it would seem to me that would result in a discount rate rather than a simple interest rate.

Hon. Mr. Croll: The term used by the Department of Finance is the nominal annual rate, and I am giving their definition of it.

Honourable senators, another recommendation of great importance—and this one originated with our committee—is intended to fill the gap in the consumer picture, which came to the fore time and again during our hearings. I refer to our recommendations that the Government undertake to guarantee loans at low interest rates to people with limited incomes who require credit for what we call, and mark these words, "provident and productive purposes related to the preservation of home and family."

The purpose behind this is that we felt the poor people did not belong in finance company offices—they should be out of bounds to them. But we must have for those people an alternative, and that is what we are proposing.

In the course of the evidence we found that there was a growing number of poor people in this country. They are more gullible, more easily cheated, less conscious of quality of goods, more likely to over-reach themselves, less aware of credit costs, and they are less able to assert their rights. For them a missed pay cheque is a disaster.

So we suggested that the Government do something to fill that gap.

These low-cost consumer loans would be made available through the regular banking system. The banks have years of experience, knowledge, competence and availability. In 1954 they had an infinitesimally small amount of the consumer credit business, and now they have 35 per cent. Where better could we send these people for guidance and help?

The suggestion is that the Government provide, through the banks, low-cost loans under specified conditions for either economic or social objectives. Indeed, the Government does it now for home owners and for students, for fishermen and for small businessmen. They have all benefited from this sort of thing. The idea is to extend the same kind of facilities to the consumers, because these are poor and needy people.

We said that all persons with a family income of not more than $4,000 a year could borrow not more than $1,500 at prime interest rates—if there is anyone who needs these prime interest rates it is those people—with as long a term to repay as they require.

The interest of Government in helping to preserve and strengthen family life is well known. Strains on family ties which result from unmanageable debt gave rise to the old adage, "Love flies out the window when poverty comes in the door." Many young marriages flounder because of insurmountable financial problems. Those persons without assets to pledge as security who borrow from commercial lenders must pay extremely high rates of interest, if indeed they qualify for loans at all. The low-income group includes, in addition to young people struggling to establish a home and family, men and women of all ages faced with unexpected expenditures that cannot be met from current income. There are also immigrant families, working as hard as they possibly can, who have not been able to establish credit, yet are good risks. Last but not least, with respect to a high proportion of Canada's original inhabitants, the Indians, this proposed legislation should greatly assist the efforts of governments to establish them in the mainstream of Canadian life.

I do not propose to go through the eighteen recommendations that are set out in the report—now part of our official record—but I shall mention a few highlights.

We recommended that the extension of the protection accorded to borrowers under the Small Loans Act be applied to new loans up to $5,000 rather than $1,500. We suggest that steps be taken to provide for a regulation of so called "captive sales financing." At the present time the Combines Investigation Act provides for goods but not for services, and the service end of the economy is becoming greater and greater. We point out the need to require those buying credit agreements to assume obligations to the consumer as well as rights to recover from him, so that the one who buys the paper takes the obligation to live up to the warranties that were given to the one who originally signed the paper.

We advocate that a cooling-off period be allowed for reconsideration of credit purchases from itinerant salesmen. We would have all consumer credit sales covered by a standard form of agreement, with the purchaser having the right to prepay without penalty. We urge the implementation in all parts of Canada of the new Part X of the federal Bankruptcy Act dealing with orderly payment of debts, which has been so great a help to those provinces which took it up in earlier days.

We endorse the principle in unconscionable transactions relief legislation. We suggest a plan for provision of general information to all consumers, and individual advice from an independent counsellor to those who need it.

Because the sale and purchase of used cars has become a social problem we recommend special provisions that should apply to these transactions. We emphasize the need for attention to the problems arising from the new system of accounting, collectively known as revolving credit and which is clothed in mystery for all people who participate in it.

Our final recommendations relate to the need for continuous attention by responsible authorities to the elimination of abuses in consumer credit and the need to watch over the interest of consumers which, in the last analysis, is none other than the public interest.

You will find the report interesting. You will find it informative. I do not suggest that you will agree with all that we have said in the report. It took us a long time to reach agreement. However, I do think that it points out more than ever what the Senate can do in undertaking an investigation of this nature because it has within its ranks men and women who have knowledge and experience and the desire to do useful work.

I hope that these various undertakings we have had from time to time will prove to the public that if we are given tasks to do we are capable of doing them.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, I do not rise to discuss this report because the motion is simply that it be printed and appear in the Hansard of today. After it has been read it will, I am sure, be the subject matter of consideration, not only by members of both Houses of Parliament but by the Government itself, because a joint committee of both houses has made these recommendations and the question of implementation is a matter which must rely upon executive action.

I rise today to do something that I have done a good many times. In fact, I think I can say that I have done it so often that the impression gets abroad within the Senate, that every time a job of work is done I feel it my duty to stand up and use extravagant words of praise for those persons who have performed it. I make no apology if that is the criticism that is made, because I think there is good reason for pointing out through our Hansard the kind of initiative that is taken in this house, which can provide such a fine forum for a discussion of urgent public matters not immediately concerned with legislation.

Just the other day we pointed up something worth while being taken notice of throughout the country, namely, the extraordinarily superb career as a parliamentarian which Senator Hugessen had in this country in the past 30 years, all of which took place in this chamber.

The speeches made on that occasion, particularly that of Senator O'Leary (Carleton), were worthy of the finest deliberative chamber anywhere in the world. Yet, despite the efforts I made to see that this debate reached the press both in his native City of Montreal, in Ottawa and in Toronto, no report appeared. This, as we all know, is the normal practice but I still intend to persist in this line of discussion, and I think in the end it will prove fruitful.

I was very pleased, however, to note that the most interesting speech made by Senator Paterson a few days afterwards about the early days of railroading in Canada was highlighted by my favourite newspaper, except during election periods, the Ottawa Journal.

This brings me back to what I started out to say, honourable senators, that there is no one—and I make no exceptions, nor do I make invidious comparisons—who has been more persistent and who has shown more initiative or taken a more active role in initiating important and responsible studies by Parliament than the co-chairman of the committee whose report is now being discussed in this chamber, Senator Croll. Everyone may not agree with some of the findings of his committee, and perhaps we may not always agree with some of his views, but I do not think that matters. The important thing is that he sets an example to parliamentarians of both houses of the kind of initiative that can be taken in matters of this kind. In singling him out I do not forget that he had with him from this house and from the other house—I refer particularly to the members of this house—committee members who have stayed here when the house was not sitting, who have worked very diligently since the committee was set up last summer, and who have spent long hours listening to a great array of witnesses. But Senator Croll and the other members of the committee deserve the commendation of all the members of the Senate.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Honourable senators, may I inquire from the Joint-Chairman of the Special Committee on Consumer Credit if the committee in its report has laid down a formula for the handling of revolving credit accounts?

Hon. Mr. Croll: I think the Department of Finance will be laying down such a formula.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Your committee did not deal with this aspect?

Hon. Mr. Croll: We did not produce a formula.

Hon. Mr. Argue: Honourable senators, in adopting this motion, does it mean that we are adopting the recommendations or merely that the report be printed in the record?

Hon. Mr. Croll: It simply means that the report will be printed in the record.

Hon. Mr. Argue: If the motion is approved, will there be an opportunity to speak on this very important report at a later date?

Hon. Mr. Croll: It is not normal, but there will be an opportunity if somebody wishes to do so.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Discussion may be initiated on the report if somebody so desires. We have this privilege in this house but we do not often make use of it. However, if an honourable senator wishes to debate some matter in the report, it is his privilege to draw the matter to the attention of the house.

Motion agreed to.

CANADA DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION BILL

SECOND READING

Leave having been given to revert:

Hon. John J. Connolly, with leave, moved the second reading of Bill C-261, to establish the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation.

He said: Honourable senators, Bill C-261, to establish the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation has, as I am sure all honourable senators are aware, a philosophy behind it. That philosophy may be summarized by saying that the purpose of the bill is to ensure the safety of the savings of individuals who as depositors use the financial institutions of this country for that purpose. It is also intended to stimulate confidence in our deposit-taking institutions in a country where, with sound management of our affairs, the expansion in business activity and the multiplication of banking facilities and deposit-taking institution facilities are almost certain to develop rapidly as our economy grows.

Honourable senators, let me first deal with the basic mechanics proposed in the bill. First, it is proposed to establish a crown corporation, an agent of Her Majesty, to be known as the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. This corporation will have power to acquire and dispose of real and personal property, the title to which will be vested in the Crown in the care of the corporation. Legal actions by or against the corporation may be conducted in any court of competent jurisdiction in the land. This means that suits in which the corporation is involved need not be confined to the Exchequer Court of Canada.

The head office of the corporation shall be in Ottawa, but branches and agencies may be established elsewhere in Canada.

The board of directors shall consist of five persons. The chairman shall be a person of proven financial ability and shall be appointed by order in council, and there will be four other officials of the public service who will act ex officio. They will be: the Governor of the Bank of Canada, the Deputy Minister of Finance, the Superintendent of Insurance, and the Inspector General of Banks.

There is provision for replacement of any director in the event of absence or incapacity, and also for the payment of the expenses incurred by directors in the performance of their duties.

The term of office of the chairman shall normally be for five years, but he may be reappointed or be removed for cause. He must be a Canadian citizen, not a member of Parliament or of a legislature, and not a director or employee of a federal or provincial institution. He must not have attained the age of 75 years, and normally he will preside at all meetings.

The only shareholder of the Corporation will be the Minister of Finance, who will hold shares of the Corporation in trust for the Crown. The authorized capital will be $10 million, divided into ten shares, and the shares shall not be transferable.

The board shall administer the affairs of the Corporation, and it will be empowered to make by-laws consistent with the corporate objects set out in the bill.

Referring now to section 12 of the bill, these by-laws will deal with such matters as the general administration of the corporation, the duties and remuneration of employees, the appointment of committees for special purposes which may emerge from time to time, the issue of shares, the payment of dividends, and the time and place of meetings.

The by-laws will also define, subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, the term "deposit," and they shall prescribe standards of financial practices for institutions which insure with the Corporation. All these by-laws must be approved by the Governor in Council before they become effective.

The fiscal year of the Corporation will be the calendar year. The receipts of the corporation will be deposited with the Bank of Canada; but the Corporation is empowered to use other banking facilities, particularly when it acts as curator or liquidator of a member institution.

The investment of corporation funds, the safekeeping of its securities, and the collection of its accounts may be entrusted to the Bank of Canada.

Dividends which the corporation may from time to time find itself able to pay shall be limited to the rate charged for money on crown loans to crown corporations.

The corporation may borrow from the Crown up to a limit of $500 million; and the corporation will, not only with this money but with other moneys it might have, be a lender of last resort for member institutions.

In that portion of the act from section 36 on, provision is made for the employment of staff, and the responsibility for the employment of staff will rest with the corporation, not with the Civil Service Commission. This is the customary practice for crown corporations. However, for pension purposes the Public Service Superannuation Act provisions shall apply to employees of the corporation.

Section 38 provides that the corporation cannot be wound up without parliamentary approval. It must also report annually to Parliament.

Sections 39 to 42 prescribe certain penalties, the details of which I need not enter into at this stage.

I have been talking in a general way about the mechanical aspects of the set-up of the corporation. I am sure all honourable senators will feel that, generally speaking, the proposed corporate structure is not a form that is unfamiliar.

May I now revert to section 2 of the bill which contains the definitions. I do not want to go into much detail, but under the interpretation section a "bank" means a bank to which the Bank Act or the Quebec Savings Bank Act applies. "Corporation" means the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation established by this act.

Hon. Mr. Bourget: Does that definition include the caisses populaires?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): If it takes deposits, the caisses populaires might well become a member institution which can be insured under the provisions of the act.

Hon. Mr. Bourget: Thank you.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I think the definition of "federal institution," under section 2(f), is important. It means a bank or company referred to in section 9. For easy reference, I summarize the provisions of section 9 by saying that a federal institution is therein defined as a bank, as a federally incorporated trust and/or loan company, or a company otherwise incorporated but whose incorporation is continued by Act of Parliament.

Perhaps the example that comes most readily to our minds is the merger that took place between the federally incorporated Canada Permanent Mortgage Corporation and the provincially incorporated Toronto General Trusts Corporation which continued as a federal corporation and which was the subject matter of debate and discussion in committee in this house in 1963.

Section 2(g) contains the definition of a "member institution." A member institution means a corporation any of whose deposits are insured by the corporation pursuant to this act. So, it may well be a caisse populaire; the caisses populaires could become member institutions within the definition laid down here.

The definition of a provincial institution is also important. It is as defined in section 10. I summarize that section by saying that a provincial institution is a provincially incorporated trust and/or loan company which accepts deposits from the public.

A "policy of deposit insurance" or "policy" means the instrument evidencing a contract of deposit insurance with a provincial institution.

Perhaps I should pause here to say that so far as federal institutions are concerned, all those which take deposits are required to subject themselves to the provisions of this bill. So far as provincially incorporated institutions are concerned, it is optional for them to come under this act; and if they do they must have the approval not only of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation but also the approval of the provincial authorities in which province they were incorporated.

Hon. Mr. Walker: Then there will be no overlapping between the Ontario act and this act?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): There need not be and, as the honourable senator knows, there is provision in the Ontario act whereby overlapping is avoided. In other words, while at the present time, as I understand it, all provincial institutions in Ontario which accept deposits are automatically covered by the Ontario act, if any one of those institutions desires to come under the umbrella of this act, it will be optional for it to do so, but it will have to get the permission of the Ontario authorities.

I understand from discussions that have gone on between the federal and provincial authorities in Ontario that a great many of the Ontario institutions do propose to take advantage of this act and thereby be relieved from the compulsive provisions of the provincial act.

I come now to the powers of the corporation. Normally on the second reading of a bill I would not refer specifically to the sections, but in this case I think it will be helpful to honourable senators if I do indicate occasionally the section to which I am addressing my attention.

I can summarize section II, which deals with the general powers of the corporation, by saying that it will be empowered to make loans to and to guarantee the loans of member institutions, and to guarantee the deposits of member institutions for the purpose of averting a loss to the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation which may result from the insuring of member institutions.

In the second place, the corporation may borrow from the Government of Canada, and may issue bonds and debentures for such borrowings. The corporation may act as a curator, liquidator, or receiver of a member institution in cases where it deems it appropriate to do so. In this connection it would normally and specifically have the power to assume the costs of winding up such member institution if necessary, and to acquire the assets of a member institution from another liquidator appointed by the courts to deal with the liquidation of such member institution, if that were required.

The corporation is also empowered to make advances to a member institution while it is acting as liquidator of such institution in respect of any insured deposit.

The corporation—and this is a very important power—is authorized to make inspections of member institutions.

I should like now to deal generally with the question of deposit insurance as it is set out in section 13 of the bill. The deposits which it is contemplated should be insured by this corporation must be payable in Canadian funds in Canada. No deposit will be insured beyond the limit of $20,000. In other words, by this provision it is enacted that it is primarily the smaller depositor who is to be protected. In my view a deposit of $20,000 does not make a man a small depositor but, at least, when the limit is $20,000 then all small depositors are certainly brought within the protection of this act.

A Crown deposit is non-insurable. In other words, no deposit is insured if the Crown is a preferred creditor therefor, because under the Bankruptcy Act and similar legislation, and indeed probably under the Bank Act itself, the Crown as depositor is in a preferred position as a creditor of the institution in which the deposit is made.

Section 13 also covers the method which the corporation will employ for payment in the event that it is called upon to pay under the insuring provisions of the act. Payment can be made by the corporation by depositing the insured amount of the deposit in another member institution, or by direct payment to the depositor whose deposit is in jeopardy. Such a payment relieves the corporation of any further liability and, of course, by making the payment the corporation is subrogated to all of the rights of the depositor so paid with reference to the member institution in respect of which the payment has been made.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Does that mean that the depositor could have any number of deposits, each one of which would be guaranteed up to the amount of $20,000?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Not in the same member institution. I understand that one deposit in one member institution is all that is intended to be covered. It may be, however, that there will be individuals who might have deposits of less than $20,000 in various member institutions, and if so those deposits will be individually covered.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: But covered to what extent?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): To the extent of $20,000.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: That is gross.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): No. I think it will be $20,000 in respect of each institution.

Let me take a very extreme example. Suppose I have $35,000 which I want to put in a bank—that would be a very extreme situation. I may decide for the purpose of security to put $20,000 in one bank and $15,000 in another bank. If both banks go broke and this corporation is called upon to pay, I will be paid $20,000 on account of my deposit in Bank A and $15,000 on account of my deposit in Bank B. But if I put the whole $35,000 in Bank A, then I would be covered for only $20,000, and in respect of the balance I would be an ordinary creditor, I assume, on the winding up.

I welcome these interventions firstly because I realize that in speaking as I do, and keeping strictly to the provisions of the bill I can be very obscure in the language I use—particularly to those honourable senators who are not lawyers, and probably to the lawyers as well—and, secondly, because they give me an opportunity of providing an example of the problem.

I should say here that it is intended that this bill be sent to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce tomorrow morning —I hope I am not being presumptuous when I say that—and it is also intended that the Minister of Finance and the various officials will attend before the committee and will answer whatever questions honourable senators have.

I come now to the effective date of the insurance, which generally is dealt with in section 14, for federal institutions first and then for provincial institutions. For federal institutions the effective date of the insurance will be the date upon which section 14 is proclaimed. From that date on the provisions of the act will apply to every federal institution then existing, or to every federal institution when it is incorporated, as well as to every provincial institution from the moment that its application for insurance is accepted.

Hon. Mr. Walker: That is automatic, then.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It will be an automatic coverage for federal institutions, yes. There is no such thing as a policy of insurance issued to a federal institution. They will be automatically covered under the provisions of the act. However, they will be issued a certificate of membership.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Do they pay a fee for that membership?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I think the only fee they will pay will be the premium, and in view of the level of premiums and perhaps the amount that is ultimately going to be paid in by way of premiums, the Department of Finance might throw in the certificate free of charge.

In order for provincial institutions to qualify for coverage they must first decide that they want the coverage under this act. They must have the approval of the appropriate authorities of the province in which they are incorporated. The corporation itself must decide whether or not the provincial institution desiring incorporation is one that should be covered. The provincial institutions which are likely to apply for coverage are such institutions as generally are governed by the provisions contained in the federal Trust Companies Act and the federal Loan Companies Act. Section 17 provides for the form of policy that is to be issued to those institutions.

I come now to the question of the amount of the premium, section 19. I should say that it is an annual premium payable in two instalments, the first by June 30 and the second by December 31 of any year. The amount of the premium is the greater of either $500 or one-thirtieth of one per cent of the deposits of the institution insured on April 30 in the appropriate year. There is provision in this section for payment of premium for part of the year, because some institutions will be coming in not at the beginning of the fiscal year of the corporation, and so the premium would be prorated.

There is also provision for reduction of premiums when the fund is thought to be inadequate to look after the requirements and the responsibilities of the corporation. That provision for reduction is contained in subsection 5 of section 19 of the bill. Perhaps I should say a word about this.

The annual premium, as I stated, is the larger of either $500 or one-thirtieth of one per cent of the deposits at a given time. After five years a member institution shall have paid in by way of premiums an amount equal to one-sixth of one per cent of its deposits, which of course is five times one-thirtieth of one per cent of its deposits. For the sake of argument, if the level of its deposits remains stationary for a number of years thereafter the only premium that would be required as long as the level of deposits remains stationary would be the minimum premium of $500. Perhaps it is a little difficult to extract a simple explanation from such complicated wording, but that is the situation.

Likewise, if the deposits increase over the amount of one-sixth of one per cent, perhaps the minimum premium would not be payable in that year. It would not be as much as one-thirtieth of one per cent, but would be one-thirtieth of one per cent only on the excess. Perhaps that is the simple way, if there is a simple way, to explain that subsection.

Section 21 is important because it provides for inspection. The inspection procedures which are to be applied in respect of banks will be done by the Inspector General of Banks. For federal trust and loan companies the inspection will be done by the Superintendent of Insurance, who inspects now for federal institutions. For provincial institutions who become member institutions under this bill the inspection will be done by such persons as the corporation may designate. I think it appropriate to say that in all probability the inspection of provincial institutions will be done by the Superintendent of Insurance, who is the one who will be concerned with corporations that are assimilated to corporations such as those subject to the provisions of the federal Trust Companies Act and the federal Loan Companies Act.

There is a provision in the bill for an adequate report to be made upon the affairs of a member institution, and also a provision for a report to be made upon the soundness of the operations which the member institution conducts. Section 25 makes it possible, if such a situation should arise in respect of provincial institutions which become members, for the termination of policies of insurance with which they have been issued. These policies of insurance may be cancelled if the provincial institutions conduct business practices which are considered to be unsound or if they breach any of the other requirements of the act or the regulations or bylaws passed by the corporation.

I should say that the cancellation of a policy of insurance under this act which has been issued to a federal institution will not be effective as against depositors until a period of two years has elapsed after the member institution has been deemed to be unworthy of insurability. If it takes deposits after that date, those deposits will not be subject to the insurance.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Would the honourable leader elaborate on that?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I think the best way I could express it would be in this way. Let us suppose I have $15,000 deposited in a provincial trust company which is subject to the provisions of this act. If upon inspection it was found that this organization was not conducting its affairs as required by the law and the regulations of this corporation, and the policy of insurance which had been issued by this corporation to that provincial institution had been cancelled, my deposit would continue to be insured for a period of two years.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Would it be frozen?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): No, it would not be frozen. It would still be subject to the insurance coverage. I could take it out with assurance at any time, and if the provincial institution was unable to pay, then the insuring corporation, under the provision I referred to earlier, would pay it.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: But no new deposit would be insured?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): As I understand it, after the policy is cancelled no new deposits would be insured.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: When you went in with your $20,000, how would you know that that trust company or bank had insurance coverage?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): It is covered in the bill. This can be discussed in the committee.

First of all, all federal institutions are automatically covered. Everybody will know that. Provincial institutions which come under the provisions of this bill will be entitled to coverage and I am sure will have notices displayed prominently for the public to realize that they are covered by its provisions. There are very strict provisions here as to the kind of notices that can be displayed and the way in which the contents are shown. Section 30 has the detail of the way in which the public is advised as to the situation in respect to the companies.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: That is, on termination.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Upon termination or cancellation, of course, these notices must come out.

Hon. Mr. Hollett: I am thinking of the ordinary individual going to a trust company or a bank—how does he know?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): If it is a bank, he will know it is insured automatically. If it is a provincially incorporated trust company, there is provision for notice to be given to him.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Is there a double guarantee—that is by the province as well as by the federal authority—for a provincial institution?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): The honourable gentleman has asked a very good question. It is a double-barrelled question and perhaps more complicated than I would prefer to answer at this time. Generally speaking, I would say no. In the interim period, before the inspections take place, and immediately after this act comes into effect, there will be for provincial institutions—and they will get provincial authority to do so—a coverage, and the premium will be payable; but if in that interim period there are situations which are uncovered, then this corporation will require, as I understand it, the provincial authority to stand behind any losses which this corporation may sustain as a result of having insured one of such institutions. To that extent there would be at least a double guarantee, if not total coverage.

This is similar to the question which Senator Walker asked earlier. In his question, I think he was talking particularly of a case of a bona fide company which insured under the Ontario act and was found to be in sound condition, and where, for some reason or other—perhaps encouraged by the provincial authorities or otherwise—permission was given to incorporate under this act. I think there would not be double coverage in such a case. At least that is my understanding. When it withdraws from the provincial scheme and comes under the federal scheme. I think one would take over where the other left off.

Honourable senators, I believe I have given you the bare bones of the legislation. I have not attempted to argue the wisdom of the legislation. I think it is important and it is urgent that it be passed quickly.

There have been events in the past few months which may have created more urgency for this kind of legislation than earlier prevailed. Every one of us was concerned, and rightly so, that there should have been a run or an attempted run on a federal institution, one of the most conservative and soundest institutions in the country, the Montreal City and District Bank. Through some ungovernable factor, some rumour, the run started, in a completely unjustifiable way.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: Would not a run occur, similar to that which the honourable senator has mentioned, were the corporation ever to give notice that they will guarantee only for a period of two years? Would not this cause the deposit corporation to go almost bankrupt over night?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): That is the purpose of the legislation, of course. Its purpose is to insure the small depositor in a corporation of that kind. Honourable senators are quite aware of the great powers of control that the Superintendent of Insurance has over insurance companies. I would venture to say that there have been many cases in which the superintendent has stepped in and said, in effect, "You must conduct your affairs thus and so, or else." This is what prevents the kind of situation developing to which honourable Senator Choquette has referred, and I think it will apply now to deposit companies also.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Before the honourable senator sits down, would he mind looking at Section 10? It reads:

> For the purposes of this Act, an incorporated company that carries on, under a provincial Act or a constating instrument under provincial jurisdiction—

Would he tell me what that means?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): May I read the section?

> For the purposes of this Act, an incorporated company that carries on, under a provincial Act or a constating instrument under provincial jurisdiction—

Is that the phrase to which my friend refers?

Hon. Mr. Choquette: What does that mean?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): The equivalent of an act.

Hon. Mr. Walker: Similar.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): The word means "similar" under a provincial act. Perhaps the best way is to give an example. It is conceivable that a provincial institution may be incorporated by an act of the legislature. It may be incorporated by Letters Patent. There may be cases where it is established by articles of association. I am not sure about this in Ontario, but it can apply in other provinces. These would be simulated to a provincial institution for the purpose of the definition. No matter how recognized or how duly established it is, or how properly established it is under provincial law, it would be considered to be a provincial institution.

Hon. Mr. Choquette: They might have found a more appropriate and less complicated word than "constating."

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): I would think so too.

Hon. Allister Grosart: Honourable senators, we have had as usual an excellent exposition of the principle of the bill and a full explanation of its provisions from the honourable Leader of the Government, and I congratulate him.

I rise to support the principle of the bill. The principle of deposit insurance is an important assumption by the federal Government of additional responsibility for the protection of the depositing public and the general stability of our financial institutions.

In the main, I would also support the method by which it is proposed to achieve this worthwhile objective. I should perhaps say at this time that I am personally associated with one of a group of the newer trust companies that made representations to the Minister of Finance and later to the House of Commons Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, recommending that deposit insurance and lender of last resort recourse be extended to such institutions as are covered by this bill.

There have, of course, been criticisms of the bill from the financial community and some legislators in the other place. It has been criticized on the one hand because it is said to go too far, and on the other because it is said not to go far enough. Perhaps it is fair to say that in an urgent and controversial matter such as this, these two polarized criticisms indicate that the minister has exercised the better part of wisdom in taking the middle road.

The Leader of the Government did not deal at any length with the stated principles behind the bill. The Minister of Finance says there are three. First, and I think we would all agree it is the most important, is the protection of the public. Protection as provided by the bill is not universal, nor is it absolute. No government has ever found a way to protect all the people all the time from all of the ways they can find to part with their money.

It does, however, cover a very substantial number of financial institutions which fall into the general category of deposit-taking institutions. I was rather surprised to hear the Leader of the Government say that the caisses populaires were included, or are to be included, in the regulations under the act. Unless there has been a last minute change, my understanding was that for the time being at least the caisses populaires would not come under the act. That may or may not be so.

I said a substantial number of financial institutions are included. One of the criticisms of the bill is that it does not include those institutions which would appear to need the deposit insurance the most.

Secondly, the bill authorizes the corporation to act as a lender of last resort for its own member institutions. I personally do not like that phrase. It always seems to me to connote dire financial difficulties. At best it is an unfortunate phrase. A better phrase might be the ultimate lender or, as someone suggested, reserve lender. However, I have some doubts concerning the connotations which might be given to the word "reserve" in that particular context.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien (Bedford): It might be a benevolent lender.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: The honourable senator says that it might be a benevolent lender. I think it was Robert Louis Stephenson who said that a friend is someone who knows all about you but still loves you. Might we say then that an ultimate lender is somebody who knows all about your business but still trusts you?

The Bank of Canada at the present time fills the role of ultimate lender to chartered banks and banks proper, and under this bill the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation will, as I understand it, perform the same role for its member institutions.

The use of the lender of last resort availability is quite common today. Nobody would suggest that, by and large, our chartered banks are not in a very sound position, but it is rather surprising when examining the reports to see how frequently they avail themselves of that privilege.

The third purpose of the bill, as it was so rightly stressed by the honourable sponsor, is that it provides regular inspections, and indeed control to some extent, of the financial affairs of the corporations who will be member institutions. The minister suggested that there will be a degree of paternal benevolence in the operations of the corporation, and I think this is all to the good. He said:

> It will be an objective to bring about a gradual improvement in the minimum financial standards of deposit acceptance institutions across the country. There will be a genuinely sympathetic and helpful attitude toward institutions which wish to co-operate in this objective.

The bill has shortcomings, of course. They are largely due to the fact that the jurisdiction in the field intended to be covered is divided between the federal Parliament and the provincial legislatures. I stress Parliament and legislatures because that is what the British North America Act says. I have congratulated the Government of Quebec on another occasion for the same reason that I now congratulate the Government of Ontario for dealing with this matter as expeditiously as it has, and by an act of the legislature rather than by a process we have sometimes been exposed to here, whereby we have been told of notes, phone calls, verbal statements and so on—these things having been offered to us as proof or evidence of acquiescence by one level of jurisdiction or another to a transfer of jurisdiction under the B.N.A. Act.

The Leader of the Government on another occasion expressed surprise once when I suggested that there was an obligation at both the federal and provincial levels for the closest co-operation in all matters that fall in this area of divided jurisdiction. I am glad to say on this occasion that the present bill is an excellent example of the acceptance of that obligation on the part of the federal executive.

On the other hand, there has been quite strenuous criticism of the bill on that very account, for some have insisted that because banking is wholly within the jurisdiction of the federal Government, that Government should have made this bill compulsorily applicable to all institutions, whether provincially incorporated or otherwise, which are engaging in the business of banking. The federal Parliament, they say, should assert exclusive jurisdiction over any corporate activity that falls within the various juridical definitions of "banking".

I would not deny for a moment that the taking of deposits appears to be the heart of banking. It has been held on high judicial authority that trust companies, which will constitute the majority of institutions coming under the bill, are banking institutions. The Porter Commission endorses this view. I imagine that the Minister of Finance, who is the sponsor of this bill in the other place, has no doubts on that score either. I imagine he would be the first to agree.

However, facts are facts. Trust and loan companies have for 60 or 70 years been incorporated under provincial legislation to carry on banking business under the authority of the province, and generally without reference to or interference from federal authority. In other words, the federal Government, for some reason, has never seriously asserted its right, assuming that it has the right, and everybody seems to agree that it has, to control completely every corporate activity that could be defined as "banking".

The minister has explained why he has not gone that far in this bill. He has said that in the first place this matter is urgent. Secondly, recent events indicate that there would be danger in the assertion of that federal power in this bill—the danger that it might be tested in the courts and long delayed in coming into effect.

Another criticism which has been made of the bill is that it covers only a part—although a very substantial part—of the deposit-taking institutions. Some of the older institutions, such as the banks proper and the older trust companies, have complained that they are required by this bill to contribute to the stability of their competitors. They point out that it is 40 years since there was a bank failure. As far as I have been able to discover there has never been a trust company failure since the first company was established in Ontario in 1882. Some honourable senators might then ask what all the fuss is about and why the urgency. In reply it is hardly necessary for me to point out that there have been some serious failures in other financial institutions in fairly recent times, some of which, but not all, would have been covered by this bill.

This raises the question as to the position of those who remain outside the protection afforded to the public by this bill, particularly those who are generally called "finance companies," a phrase that I think should be used with extreme caution in this context. It is an important question. The Minister of Finance says he expects to be able to get together with the provinces in due course to work out some arrangement by which these "finance" companies, like those involved in the recent difficulties and failures, will be brought under coverage of this act when passed or under some similar coverage.

I think it is anticipated by the minister and by the officials that this bill will provide very powerful levers to persuade these other companies to seek this kind of protection. It is obvious, as the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) said in reply to Senator Hollett, that those companies coming under the bill and having their deposits guaranteed individually up to $20 000 will advertise extensively, although I am very glad to see that the bill does provide for the control of such advertising. If one looks at some of the trust company advertising in the United States it becomes obvious that even a good thing like this can be abused.

The Porter Commission was not very optimistic about the efficacy of voluntary control, although I think that the commissioners, looking at this question again in the light of recent events, might change their minds. They sought what they considered to be better ways, largely a rather extreme extension of control and inspection, but I imagine that it was fairly easy for the commissioners to reach that conclusion because, unlike the minister, they did not have to consider the problem of divided jurisdiction.

The bill, of course, has the double virtue of providing immediate coverage of all financial institutions.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): All federally incorporated financial institutions.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: The Leader of the Government points out that this applies to federal financial institutions, and in that he is quite right. I would like to qualify that, because my understanding is that it will be immediate for all corporations that qualify at the time the act is proclaimed, and that is a most important aspect, because obviously if this bill comes into effect—and the minister has recognized this—before the provinces have had the opportunity to bring their provincially incorporated institutions under it, a very unfair advantage would be given to the federally incorporated companies, an advantage which might very well cause serious problems for the provincially incorporated companies.

The minister has, as I said, recognized this problem and will be taking steps to prevent this happening, although I am rather surprised to see that the 30-day waiting period between the date of proclamation and the effective date of section 14 has been removed from the original bill.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Would the honourable gentleman permit me to interrupt him here? My understanding of the removal of the 30-day provision from the section to which he referred—and this was done in committee—is that it was to enable the officials to take such steps as may be required to get the house in order before it begins to operate. It may very well have the effect, and I hope it has, that he has actually referred to, namely, that certain provinces, unlike Ontario, where this legislation does not exist, may want their provincially incorporated deposit-taking institutions to come under the umbrella of this act forthwith. I think this was one of the purposes in the mind of the minister when that amendment was made. I am glad the honourable senator has referred to this because it can be a source of embarrassment and possibly trouble.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: I thank the honourable Leader for his explanation. I suspected that that was the reason, but I hope it does not mean that the officials believe they are going to need more than 30 days after proclamation to bring the institutions under the act.

There is, of course, another side of the picture. Ontario, as we all know, has passed its own deposit insurance act which provides for immediate coverage of all Ontario provincially incorporated trust and loan companies, and the present situation for those companies is that their depositors are now protected.

The fear I expressed about the advantage accruing to the federally incorporated companies could now apply to those companies incorporated in Ontario, except that there is provision in the act again for the control of advertising so that no advertising can take place until the corporation is set up and has proclaimed its regulations.

This raises another point: It seems to me that this bill does not give the corporation the necessary powers to prevent the failure of its member institutions. This was the point raised by Senator Choquette. Now that power is given to member corporations under the Ontario act. Under the federal act the corporation may acquire but not seize assets; it may prescribe standards; it may examine the company; it may make a report; it may require the report to be brought before the directors, but any condition complained of cannot be remedied except by the withdrawal of the insurance policy.

The Ontario act gives the Registrar the power to:

> ...order the Corporation forthwith to take possession of the property of the member institution and to conduct the business thereof and to take such steps as in its opinion may be taken toward the removal of the causes and conditions which have made such proceedings necessary.

That is under section 33 of the Ontario act, which corresponds to clause 25 of the bill.

I should say that the granting of these powers has already outraged one headline writer in the current issue of the Financial Post. The headline reads: 'Draconian power' in deposits law?

Among other things the writer says that the Ontario Deposit Insurance Corporation Act provides:

> ...an amazing extension of government power over business by giving the newly created agency the right to seize and take over a company.

Honourable senators, I am not unduly alarmed over the granting of that power in the Ontario act. In fact, I would go so far as to suggest that this federal deposit corporation may find itself in a very awkward position if one of its member institutions is obviously heading for the brink and all it can do is counsel, advise and make reports. Surely, if this corporation is to grant the privilege of deposit insurance in these very large amounts it should also have the power to protect its own projected pay-out by doing something to stop the corporation from going out of business. As far as I can see, no such power is granted to the corporation under this act, and I would suggest there might well be a deficiency here that could be remedied in our committee. It is a sound principle that anyone charged with responsibility should also be charged with authority to carry it out.

Perhaps it may be said that some such power will be given to the corporation under the regulations. I hope this is not so. It is my own view that we have far too many instances in our legislation and in the administration of our laws of powers being assumed by Order in Council which are not granted in the act itself. If this particular power that I am speaking of were granted to the corporation by Order in Council, it would obviously be a case of the Order in Council granting far greater powers than the enumerated powers in the act itself. I might say that if that happened it would not be the only case in our legislation. I am told there is an extra-governmental study being made of current abuses in this area.

Compared to the Ontario act, there is another striking difference. The federal bill does not define "deposits"; again, it is left to the Governor in Council. I make no strong objection to that, except that here again the Order in Council would usurp the jurisdiction of the act itself, because in defining "deposits" it would be defining who and what is going to come under the act.

The Ontario act, again—and I hope I will not be accused of making invidious comparisons, because I agree, as usual, with Mr. Shakespeare, who said that comparisons are odorous.

Some Hon. Senators: "Odious"!

Hon. Mr. Grosart: With all due respect to the Shakespearean scholars here, Mr. Shakespeare did use the word "odorous," and I think it adds greatly to the effect of his comment.

The Ontario act defines "deposit" in a way dear to our legal friends and draftsmen. In the interpretation section it says:

> "Deposit" means a deposit as defined by section 23;

Section 23—and I think it is perhaps worth putting into the record—reads as follows:

> For the purposes of this Act, a deposit shall be,
> (a) moneys deposited with a member institution in respect of which such institution is liable to the depositors;

I would have to agree to quite an extent that that definition begs the question as to what "deposited" means, but its scope is large enough to bring those that the Ontario legislators would like to include under this act.

> (b) moneys received under section 82 of The Loan and Trust Corporations Act by a trust company that is a member institution; and
> (c) debentures or like obligations issued by a loan corporation that is a member institution.

I think there is some doubt as to whether the debentures will be regarded as deposits under this bill. I would say there is general agreement among those who have studied the two bills that it is a wise inclusion. I suppose it is on the assumption that a debenture is really a receipt for money deposited where there is the full obligation for the return of the money. In other words, it is not a stock investment; it is a deposit of money under certain conditions, with an explicit guarantee that the money will be returned in due course.

The question has been raised as to whether these two acts—when this bill becomes an act, as I presume it will—will be in competition. The Ontario act specifically excludes from those corporations which will be covered—that is to say, it excludes from institutional membership in its Corporation any company that is already under federal deposit insurance. The problem of conflict here is quite a serious one; it is not as simple as it appears on the surface.

I do not know how effective or how far-reaching the Ontario Act is. Certainly it was introduced in special circumstances; it was passed expeditiously by the legislature, and perhaps for a quite specific purpose; however, if one examines the scope of the Ontario act and its possible effectiveness one is immediately aware of the reason why "deposit" insurance must in this field be a federal initiative.

Under the Ontario act, an Ontario incorporated trust company whose deposits were insured by the act up to, say, $20,000—the figure is the same in both acts—would be in the position of insuring only deposits made in its head office or branches in the Province of Ontario. It seems clearly beyond the competence of the province to insure deposits in another province, or even to inspect branches of its provincially incorporated company in other provinces. However, we are going to have federal insurance so that is merely an academic problem. From all the information I can gather, the Ontario act, whatever its future may be, has already served a very useful purpose.

It is rather strange that for some reason or other the fact has not been mentioned that Ontario was the pioneer in this legislation, because four years ago the Legislature of Ontario passed an act which had the very significant title of "An Act Regulating Deposits Solicited from the Public". However, it dealt almost entirely with the question of liquidity, and it required corporations that came under it to maintain liquidity at 60 per cent.

I have mentioned the complaint of the chartered banks and the older trust companies. I have some sympathy with that because it is clear that the premiums they will pay are going to be an added cost of doing business. They can well argue that they do not need the protection. But, I find I have the same sympathy for the bachelor or the spinster who is required to pay school taxes.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Cape Breton): That is right.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): And there are a few around.

Hon. Mr. Grosart: Now that Senator Macdonald from Cape Breton has brought the subject up, I may say that I have a good deal of sympathy for some honourable senators, of whom I am one, who are required to pay $720 a year into a pension plan for their retirement, for which there is no statutory requirement of which I know. We are all hopeful that we shall not be prevented by any of the other contingencies, such as committing a heinous felony or bankruptcy from contributing—I do not know whether happily, but perhaps just as happily as the banks in this case anyway—for many years to the retirement pension of these very fine young men who have recently come amongst us. I think it was my good friend Senator Davey who, shaking his head, once told me that he would be compulsorily retired from this place in the year 2000 A.D. When he draws his pension I hope he—

Hon. Mr. Leonard: How long will he last as Commissioner of the Canadian Football League?

Hon. Mr. Grosart: I might say to Senator Leonard that I have not been in this place long enough yet to qualify me to deal with questions of that magnitude or difficulty. However, I do hope that when Senator Davey and others draw their pensions they will look back and say that Grosart and others did not really begrudge their contributions, although there were times when they could have thought of other less altruistic ways of spending their money in their declining years.

It will be different with this deposit insurance. The banks and the larger trust companies will get some very definite benefits from it. They will get the benefit, of course, of the increased stability that will be brought about in the entire financial community, and the increased confidence of depositors. Unless there is a very great change in the direction of our financial economy, the banks and the older trust companies will still get most of the business.

Mr. J. Wilson Berry, the very distinguished president of Guaranty Trust Company of Canada dealt with this matter rather well in a comment printed in the Financial Post of February 4 last, which I will ask the permission of the house to read. Mr. Wilson said:

> Although the Federal Deposit Insurance Bill does not seem to be in final form—

And then he qualifies that.

> —the arrangement will be costly to institutions such as ours. Already it has been represented that its cost will be onerous to those institutions, which by their financial strength do not think their depositors need such insurance. I have some sympathy with these views but I do think the bill with certain modifications is in the overall public interest. The essential purpose is the protection of depositors in recognized deposit institutions. This seems desirable because there is no way for most depositors to determine for themselves the soundness of the deposit institution. Knowledge that there is deposit insurance will resolve this difficulty.

He goes on:

> Some of us are old enough to remember the reasons why Federal Deposit Insurance was introduced in 1933 in the U.S. In the intervening years the wisdom of such a step has never been seriously questioned. It is true their deposit institutions were, and still are, of a very different form to those in Canada, but nevertheless the principle is sound.
> In some circles we—

And he means there the trust companies.

> —are referred to as "near-banks". Whether this is deprecating or not I do not know. But in many cases the context is not too friendly. I object to the inference that we are some kind of a poor relation in the financial community. I would hope that when the banks receive power to enter the conventional mortgage field and to issue debentures they will not be referred to as "near trust companies".

Honourable senators, on that note I conclude my remarks. I repeat what I said at the beginning, that I support completely the principle of the bill. It is, in my opinion, well drafted, having in mind its objective. I leave with honourable senators and the committee to which this bill will be sent the suggestions I have made because they may find in them something that will add to the value and the effectiveness of the bill.

Hon. L. P. Beaubien: Honourable senators, I should like first of all to congratulate the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Connolly, Ottawa West) for explaining this bill fully and extremely well. I want also to congratulate Senator Grosart for reviewing the whole subject so thoroughly. In fact, Senator Grosart's review has been so complete that I am going to deal only with one small point, and that only briefly.

While speaking to one of my banking friends who is in a position to make a good educated guess, he told me that as far as he could judge this premium of one-thirtieth of one per cent per annum of the deposits insured would cost the big big banks between $4 million and $5 million a year.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Cape Breton): That is all the banks together?

Hon. Mr. Beaubien (Bedford): Yes. It will cost, as he put it, one of the big banks about $900,000 a year. This seems to be quite a big initiation bill to hand to the banks, which, after all, have carried on their business in such a way that there has not been a failure in 42 years.

I want to say right away that I am going to vote for this bill. I am not against it at all. Even if we could define "a bank"—which is very difficult to do, and which nobody has done—it would make no difference because all the institutions being brought under the provisions of this bill, including the weak ones, would also be included in such a definition. We are bound, therefore, to have all of these institutions brought under the provisions of this act and among them will be many weak sisters. The insurance must, therefore, be absolutely obligatory. We must have it.

Honourable senators, I should like to make one suggestion. It seems to me that we might empower the board of directors of this corporation to classify the different types and kinds of institutions that come under this insurance as far as risk is concerned. Surely, it is not fair to charge one of our big banks, which could not be better run, the same premium for insuring its deposits as is charged an institution that has been borrowing short and lending long, and hanging on for dear life in order to keep its head above water. It seems to me that if it were left to the discretion of the board of directors, all of whom would be knowledgeable persons and the best of all people in Canada to recognize what are the risks in each case, it would be extremely fair. In any event, it is something we can discuss in committee.

I am in favour of the principle of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: If the honourable leader speaks now it will have the effect of closing the debate.

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, first of all, I wish to thank Senator Grosart and Senator Beaubien (Bedford) for the help they have given in throwing light upon what appears at least to be a complex bill, but which in effect is really quite a simple one.

Before I deal with anything which Senator Grosart said—and I do not propose to be exhaustive in what I say now—I want to say how pleased I am to see Senator Beaubien taking part in this discussion, because he is very knowledgeable and he expressed himself so clearly that it was a pleasure to listen to him. I discovered that on one of our famous excursions overseas, and I have ever since had a high regard for him, as indeed we all have.

I have a great deal of sympathy for the position Senator Beaubien takes. The minister may find it extremely difficult at the beginning to classify risks, but I would hope that with some experience perhaps this idea could be injected into the operation of this organization. It would mean a change in the legislation, but I would not be at all concerned about introducing amendments here to accomplish this if it were thought to be desirable to do so.

Senator Grosart referred to the fact that in the Ontario act the word "deposit" was defined, while it is left here to the bylaws of the company to define.

Perhaps I should say that the feeling of the Government is that in defining "deposit" we propose to consider a deposit as moneys received by a member institution that are repayable on demand, on notice; moneys that are repayable on a fixed date not more than five years after the date on which the money is received.

We are dealing here with a deposit insurance bill, not a debenture insurance bill. What we are looking at particularly today is to insure smaller short term or demand situations. Deposits, drafts, money orders and such instruments would also be covered. However, it is not easy, because of the practices that have grown up and the diversity of practice that has grown up with the individual trust companies, to say in fact what is and what is not a deposit at this time. I think it will take some time and experience to give a proper definition for "deposit".

Someone said to me the other day, "What about a guaranteed investment certificate? Say it has to run for ten years, is it a deposit or is it a debenture?" Now, you do get the practical situation where you might own a guaranteed debenture certificate of a trust company which has less than ten years to run, perhaps only two or three years. Is this one of the items that should be included in the definition of "deposit"?

The Ontario act is wide open even as to time, and the thinking of the Government, and I say this purposely here, is that we should restrict ourselves to short-term rather than long-term obligations which trust companies incur. I put that information on the record for the help of honourable senators in committee tomorrow when they will be discussing the matter with the minister and the officials.

Senator Grosart questions whether or not there should be provision in here for this corporation to take over a member institution. I think the feeling of the Government on a policy matter of this kind is that this is perhaps a little more drastic step than we should take at this time. We all realize that under the Bank Act the Inspector General, and under the Trust Companies Act and the Loan Companies Act the Superintendent of Insurance, have wide searching powers; and we feel that these can be relied upon without taking the further step of empowering the corporation actually to take charge of the operation of the day-to-day administration of a member institution which may be in difficulty.

I would like just to touch briefly on one other point raised by Senator Grosart, whose speech was of the kind we all like to hear in the Senate, because it was directed to the bill. He need not worry in the least about comparisons, invidious or otherwise, of what is done in similar legislation in other places, because people who prepare a bill, either for a legislature or for Parliament, are bound to go through processes, and sometimes ideas become more firmly fixed in the mind of one than of another. That is why in the draftsmanship one finds shades of difference in thinking reflected. As a matter of fact, I think as between officials who put their minds to the problem of preparing a bill for Parliament, very often a slant is given in the draftsmanship that might not have been given if the opinion of another person had prevailed.

Another point I want to make is that I quite appreciate the fact that banking—and in Lord Denning's definition the taking of deposits is part of banking—is under the British North America Act a power of the federal authority.

Perhaps in years gone by a stronger stand should have been taken about asserting the right to control banking in all of its forms. The practice has grown up in provinces of establishing financial institutions which are near banks, if you will, which do take deposits. These institutions may not have the authority that the provincial legislature confers upon them. Some of this legislation perhaps should have been disallowed. Who are we to say, because the courts have never really passed upon the point. I am sure honourable senators will agree that now is not the time to have a constitutional battle as to whether this is within the competence of a provincial legislature. That time may come.

What has been sought by this legislation—and there have been discussions at the official level with all of the provinces—is an attempt to try to work out an instrument which would provide protection for the small depositors. With that objective, which is clear in all our minds, I am sure we all agree. I hope that the legislation will commend itself, certainly in principle, to the Senate this afternoon.

Motion agreed to and bill read second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Connolly (Ottawa West): Honourable senators, I move that this bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Before the motion is adopted, may I give notice that the committee will meet tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock, and the minister and the other officials required will be in attendance.

Motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

NOTE: See Appendix No. 1 for list of all who served on the Committee during investigation of consumer credit. In September 1966 the Committee was instructed to look into "the trends in the cost of living in Canada and factors which may have contributed to changes in the cost of living in Canada in recent months;" an enquiry which is now under way.

ORDERS OF REFERENCE

EXTRACT from the Votes and Proceedings of the House of Commons of 15th March, 1966:

"Mr. Hellyer for Mr. Sharp, seconded by Mr. Pennell, moved,—that a joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons be appointed to enquire into and report upon the problems of consumer credit, more particularly but not so as to restrict the generality of the foregoing to enquire into and report upon the operation of Canadian legislation in relation thereto;

That twenty-four members of the House of Commons to be designated by the House at a later date, be members of the joint committee, and that Standing Order 67(1) of the House of Commons be suspended in relation thereto;

That the said committee have power to call for persons, papers and records and examine witnesses; to sit while the House is sitting, and to report from time to time and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as many be deemed advisable, and that Standing Order 66 be suspended in relation thereto; and to engage the services of counsel, accountants and such other clerical and technical personnel as may be deemed necessary, that the Minutes of Proceedings of and evidence given before the joint committee during the Twenty-Sixth Parliament be referred to the said committee and be made part of the records thereof; and that a message be sent to the Senate requesting that House to unite with this House for the above purpose, and to select, if the Senate deems it advisable, some of its Members to act on the proposed joint committee.

And debate arising thereon, by unanimous consent, the said motion was amended to read as follows:

That a joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons be appointed to enquire into and report upon the problems of consumer credit, more particularly but not so as to restrict the generality of the foregoing to enquire into and report upon the operation of Canadian legislation in relation thereto;

That twenty-four members of the House of Commons to be designated by the House at a later date, be members of the joint committee, and that Standing Order 67(1) of the House of Commons be suspended in relation thereto;

That the said committee have power to call for persons, papers and records and examine witnesses; to report from time to time and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be deemed advisable, and that Standing Order 66 be suspended in relation thereto; and to engage the services of counsel, accountants and such other clerical and technical personnel as may be deemed necessary, that the Minutes of Proceedings of and evidence given before the joint committee during the Twenty-Sixth Parliament be referred to the said committee and be made part of the records thereof; and that a message be sent to the Senate requesting that House to unite with this House for the above purpose, and to select, if the Senate deems it advisable, some of its Members to act on the proposed joint committee.

And the question being put on the said motion, as amended, it was agreed to."

LÉON-J. RAYMOND,
Clerk of the House of Commons.

EXTRACT from the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of 23rd March, 1966:

"The Honourable Senator Connolly, P.C., moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Croll:

That the Senate do unite with the House of Commons in the appointment of a Joint Committee of both Houses of Parliament to enquire into and report upon the problem of consumer credit, more particularly, but not so as to restrict the generality of the foregoing, to enquire into and report upon the operation of Canadian legislation in relation thereto;

That twelve Members of the Senate to be designated by the Senate at a later date be members of the Joint Committee;

That the said committee have power to call for persons, papers and records and examine witnesses; to report from time to time and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be deemed advisable, and to engage the services of counsel, accountants and such other clerical and technical personnel as may be deemed necessary, and to sit during sittings and adjournment of the Senate;

That the minutes of proceedings and evidence given before the Joint Committee during the Twenty-Sixth Parliament be referred to the said Committee and be made part of the records thereof; and

That a Message be sent to the House of Commons to inform that House accordingly.

After debate, and—
The question being put on the motion, it was—Resolved in the affirmative."

J. F. MacNEILL,
Clerk of the Senate.

EXTRACT from the Votes and Proceedings of the House of Commons of 9th September, 1966:

"Mr. Sharp, seconded by Miss LaMarsh, moved,—That the Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons appointed by this House on March 15, 1966, to enquire into and report upon the problems of consumer credit, be instructed to also enquire into and report upon the trends in the cost of living in Canada and factors which may have contributed to changes in the cost of living in Canada in recent months;

And that a Message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours thereof and to request the concurrence of that House thereto.

And the question being proposed;

Mr. Pickersgill, seconded by Mr. McIlraith, moved in amendment thereto,—That the motion be amended by striking out the words "by this House on March 15, 1966," where they appear in the second line thereof and by inserting in the motion as the second paragraph the following:

"That the Committee have leave to sit notwithstanding any adjournment of this House;".

And the question being put on the said amendment, it was agreed to.

After debate on the main motion as amended, it was agreed to."

Clerk of the Senate.

NOTE: The Committee was first constituted in November 1963. It was reconstituted in March 1964 and in March 1966.

FOREWORD

In nineteen meetings of our Committee, mainly concentrated in a period of ten months, we believe that most aspects of consumer credit—certainly those of greatest concern to the general public—were thoroughly aired. We have been impressed by the tremendous increase in consumer credit in recent years, and its growing influence on the economic life of the country. When you consider that consumers account for about two-thirds of national expenditure, the importance of the manner in which this expenditure is made can hardly be overemphasized. Consumer credit has been the subject of detailed study in many parts of Canada—particularly in Nova Scotia, Ontario, Manitoba and Alberta. We have benefitted by these investigations, and our meeting with the Ontario Legislative Committee on Consumer Credit was most helpful. We have also learned a good deal from enquiries that have been going on south of the border as well as reports emanating from Britain.

Members of the Committee are well aware of the social as well as the economic implications of the upsurge in consumer credit purchasing. We are all consumers of goods and services, and there is hardly an individual, particularly in the growing urban areas, who has not at one time or another made use of credit. Many people who "Buy now—pay later" have attained a higher standard of living than would otherwise have been possible. But there are also those—we believe them to be a substantial minority—who are piling up trouble for themselves and their families in the enticing world of easy credit. These are the people who, through lack of understanding, commit their small discretionary incomes to buying beyond their means and paying such high rates for use of money that they may even be left without any discretionary income for the foreseeable future.

In the area of consumer credit as in other areas of business, interests of various groups in society are not identical. To some extent they are bound to conflict. Borrowers do not see eye to eye with lenders. Those who have sufficient assets to pledge as security are usually in a good position to borrow at relatively favorable rates from a bank, or at even lower rates if they have a life insurance policy on which they can raise a loan. For them, the important thing is to maintain these rates. It is the lower-income groups, with little or no assets who, when in need of money, have no other source than the money-lenders and small loans companies. What they want is to be protected from unreasonably high charges for the use of the money, and when the door to commercial borrowing is closed to them, to have some place to which they can turn as a last resort.

Borrowers of small sums are already protected to a considerable extent when the transaction is a pure and simple one of lending money, but not all loans to consumers are of this type. Many difficulties in which lower-income families find themselves today arise out of debts incurred in a transaction where the main business is the purchase of goods, with the borrowing of money directly related to financing the purchase. The kinds of credit offered to consumers have changed so drastically in recent years that more and more people are finding it difficult today to understand the nature of their commitments. Indeed, in certain kinds of transactions, which are becoming standard practice in some large department stores, to figure out the rate charged for financing is obviously beyond the powers of any customer, since he is not in possession of the factors taken into account in the calculation. The lender makes the calculation after the consumer has committed himself to the purchase.

Although there are broad areas of agreement, the interests of lenders vary according to the nature of their business. Finance companies as well as retail merchants have a stake in maintaining a high level of sales. Individual members of credit unions may be savers and borrowers. The Canadian Federation of Agriculture reminded us that farmers are consumers as well as producers. Similar illustrations could be multiplied. It is a natural human tendency to equate one's own interest with the public interest, but recent events have demonstrated that irresponsible actions by a few businessmen can help to shake public confidence in financial institutions. There is widespread public demand for regulation of the operation of finance companies in the interests both of those who lend them money and those who borrow from them. The latter group is the particular concern of this Committee.

Remembering that Parliament, and Parliament alone, represents the interest of all citizens, we have tried to evaluate the strength and weaknesses of the many arguments presented to us. We were greatly aided in this by the appearance before us of able people with special knowledge of the multifarious aspects of the consumer credit business.

We cannot praise too highly the help we received from Mr. K. R. MacGregor, former Superintendent of Insurance. The broad sweep of his knowledge, obviously combining extensive academic studies with long administrative experience, gave us an intimate understanding of the place of small loans in the whole field of consumer credit. The over-all story of the development of consumer credit as an important part of the Canadian economy was presented by the Chief of Research of the Bank of Canada, Mr. Gerald K. Bouey. Professor Jacob S. Ziegel of the University of Saskatchewan placed this phenomenon in perspective by giving us the benefit of his studies of the evolution and contemporary situation of consumer credit legislation in Canada and in other parts of the world. Last, but not least, we learned from Mr. Douglas D. Irwin, financial consultant to the Ontario Committee on Consumer Credit, how actuarial science can reduce the most complex and varied factors to simple terms and tables which can be used by us ordinary mortals.

It is inevitable in a study of this kind that the evidence tends to stray beyond the terms of reference. We heard a good deal about many areas of concern to consumers, particularly the broad and related aspects of quality and prices. The whole question of the need to protect consumers in the market place is receiving consideration elsewhere, and since this Committee has now entered into a new phase of study dealing specifically with prices and also advertising and packaging, weights and measures, we decided, except when it was necessary for orientation to go beyond the subject, to confine our report strictly to consumer credit. Other consumer problems will be dealt with in the forthcoming report on Consumer Credit (Prices).

It will be apparent to readers of this report that members of the Committee have no desire to regulate simply for the sake of regulating, but where we are convinced that the public interest requires that action be taken, we accept responsibility for considering what changes are needed and recommending how desirable ends can best be achieved.

Because the evidence presented to us is printed in the public record of our hearings we are not repeating it here, except to indicate the more important ways in which it has influenced our thinking. Other selected sources are listed in an appendix for the benefit of students of the subject who may wish to follow it further.

We acknowledge with thanks the continuous interest maintained throughout by our staff, all of whom assisted substantially in bringing to completion this complicated task. We appreciate also the help received from permanent employees of the Senate. The contribution of each individual is outlined in the note on Procedure.

The Parliamentary Librarian, Mr. E. J. Spicer, and his staff gave us full co-operation throughout the study, and this was particularly appreciated in the critical period when our report was being prepared.

PROCEDURE

All meetings of the Committee were held in Ottawa, and the work was carried on with a small but competent and devoted staff. At the outset Mr. John J. Urie, Q.C. was engaged as Counsel and Mr. Jacques L'Heureux as Accountant. These two experts in fields of knowledge so important to an understanding of consumer credit attended hearings regularly and prepared useful background information. Mr. Urie's knowledgeable questioning of the witnesses brought out significant aspects of the subject and contributed much to our understanding of complex matters. We benefitted especially by his insight into constitutional law, and he prepared the section in the report dealing with constitutional issues involved in consumer credit legislation.

Mrs. Svanhuit Josie, an experienced research economist, joined us as Consultant in July 1966 to assist the Joint Chairmen in preparing a draft report. For six months she worked with them, particularly with Senator Croll, helping to fashion a report which would truly reflect the evidence and the considered views of the Committee.

The permanent staff of the Senate assisted the Committee at all stages of this undertaking. Mr. E. R. Hopkins, Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel, gave us the benefit of his wide experience. The Committees Branch carried out the exacting and time-consuming work of arranging for meetings and the many other tasks that are an inevitable part of enquiries of this kind. These responsibilities fell mainly on Mr. John A. Hinds, Assistant Chief Clerk of Committees, and Mr. Dale M. Jarvis who acted as Clerk of the Committee throughout the hearings on consumer credit, except for the last meeting when Mr. Jarvis had left to take another position and Mr. Hinds took over.

Both day-to-day committee work and preparation of a report involve a great deal of secretarial work and typing. During the hearings Miss Marion I. Ballantyne served competently as secretary and typist. The important task of typing and re-typing the manuscript was done well and cheerfully by Miss Barbara Anne Berrigan.

I CONSTITUTIONAL ISSUES

Your Committee did not investigate in depth the constitutional problems involved, but sufficient evidence was adduced to indicate that the problems of divided legislative jurisdiction, as between Parliament and the provincial legislatures, affect the area of consumer credit as they do many other areas of our economy. It was decided, therefore, to make recommendations without precise regard to the division of legislative power. Certain of the recommendations are clearly within the competence of the Parliament of Canada, e.g., the amendment of the Small Loans Act to raise its monetary ceiling and the proposal for the guarantee of loans to low-income families. On the other hand, certain other recommendations are either in a doubtful area or within the legislative competence of the provincial legislatures.

The main relevant heads of federal jurisdiction in the field of consumer credit under which Parliament might legislate are: Census and Statistics, Banking, Savings Banks, Bills of Exchange and Promissory Notes, Interest, Bankruptcy and Insolvency, and Criminal Law. The regulation of Trade and Commerce under Head 2 of the British North America Act has been omitted from the list because it has in practice been invoked only in support of some other head of federal jurisdiction.

The jurisdiction of Parliament to legislate under the head of "Interest" creates a special problem which has not been clarified by the recent decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in the Barfried case. That Sphinx-like case appears to give to the provincial legislatures a green light in the field of cash loans—and presumably also in the field of consumer credit in its broadest aspect—in holding that the provinces may legislate in this field, thereby dealing, although only incidentally, with interest. Interest was defined somewhat narrowly in that case and the Court did not direct its attention to the fundamental question of whether Parliament, in legislating in respect of interest, might also deal with other charges forming part of the total cost of a loan, or an extension of credit, as being necessarily incidental or ancillary to interest as defined in the Barfried case.

The evidence submitted to your Committee indicated clearly that in order to deal effectively with consumer credit it is necessary to legislate with respect to the total cost of that credit, just as the Small Loans Act deals with the total cost of a cash loan under $1,500. The Supreme Court of Canada in the Barfried case, did not advert to or impugn the validity of the federal Small Loans legislation, but the question of its validity was not specifically in issue. In his evidence, Mr. K. R. MacGregor, the former Superintendent of Insurance, expressed the view that the Supreme Court of Canada might well hold that disclosure legislation in respect of the total cost of consumer credit might be upheld as valid by analogy to the Small Loans Act. It might indeed be that both Parliament and the provincial legislatures may deal in different aspects with the total cost of loans and credit extensions. There would appear to be a certain logicality and colour of right in extending the principle of the Small Loans legislation, now occupied by the Parliament of Canada, to similar areas involved in the advancement of consumer credit. All of this is of course speculative, and the precise ambit of Parliament's jurisdiction in relation to "Interest" remains undefined by the Supreme Court.

Accordingly, your Committee decided to make its basic recommendations as if Parliament had complete jurisdiction in those areas covered by Recommendations 1 to 5, inclusive, hereinafter set forth. The remaining recommendations are in areas in which the provincial legislatures have jurisdiction or in which there is doubt as to which of the legislative bodies in fact has jurisdiction. It appears to your Committee that if the problem is to be attacked completely, there will be need for the utmost federal-provincial cooperation, bearing in mind the respective fields of jurisdiction, and that at some point the jurisdictional problems involved may have to be resolved, if not by a constitutional amendment agreed upon between the federal and provincial authorities, then either by a test case or a formal reference to the Supreme Court of Canada.

II CONCLUSIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

Introduction

The evidence presented to us during our many hearings, and the substance of the numerous bills referred to us, have now been assessed in the light of our broad terms of reference in the field of consumer credit. It seems reasonable that the Committee should recommend, without restraint or qualification, whatever needs to be done to assist consumers to meet the pressing problems of the nineteen-sixties, leaving it to the appropriate governments and the legislatures to work out cooperatively the means of achieving the desired ends.

Of the many problems arising out of consumer credit which were brought to our attention during the hearings, two have been identified which appear in various forms and which stand out above the others. The first concerns the troubles besetting those who buy on credit without understanding the price they are paying for borrowing. The second concerns the plight of low-income families who are from time to time in desperate need of credit for necessary goods or services but to whom commercial credit is either not readily available or not available at all. The first three of our recommendations accordingly deal with these important and urgent matters. The recommendations in summary form are presented first but some of our more general impressions and considered opinions leading up to the recommendations are set out in the Conclusions.

Recommendations

1. We endorse the principle of what is popularly known as "truth in lending": that is, the principle embodied in the disclosure bills that have been repeatedly introduced in the Senate and in the House of Commons. Specifically, we recommend that every person, firm or corporation, including every chartered bank, carrying on the business of extending consumer credit, shall be required by law to disclose to the consumer the total cost of that credit, expressed both as a lump sum and in terms of simple annual interest.

Support for legislation of this kind is now almost universal; it has developed into a popular demand for action. Disclosure legislation was endorsed by the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance, and many responsible groups have urged on this Committee the need to proceed with it at once. There is no doubt that it would be in the public interest, that the time is ripe, and that it should be done now.

2. The principle of "truth in lending" should be extended to provide protection for all potential borrowers, whether or not they are at the point of committing themselves to a purchase or a loan. For this reason it is essential that all advertising of credit should truthfully and accurately state the total cost of the credit to the consumer.

We therefore recommend that all advertisements which offer credit or lending should be required to set out in annual percentage rates as well as in dollars and cents the added cost to the consumer for the use of the money. False and misleading advertising (such as advertisements quoting "special low rates" as if these were of general application when in fact they are available only to a select few) should be prohibited. "Truth in advertising" should go hand in hand with "truth in lending".

3. In order to prevent low-income families from becoming mired in debts from which they can never hope to extricate themselves, we recommend that the federal government make available, through the regular banking system, guaranteed consumer loans under specified conditions to all with annual family incomes of $4,000 or less. The loans would be repayable over an extended period, and would bear a low rate of interest. They would be made only for provident and productive purposes related to the preservation of home and family. The maximum size of such a loan would be $1,500.

It would greatly aid the fight against poverty if needy people were given access to credit on reasonable terms. Those with low incomes are much more likely than others to require cash loans for necessary purchases. We believe the plan we propose would help to strengthen family life by relieving a vulnerable group of Canadians of a tremendous economic, social and psychological load. Not only would it meet an urgent need, but it would encourage thrift and independence, if we were to add to the statute books "An Act to Facilitate (under Guarantee) the Obtaining of Loans for Necessary Goods and Services at Low Rates and with Extended Time for Repayment". Experience suggests that the risk of losses would be small.

4. We recommend that the Parliament of Canada extend the protection accorded to borrowers under the Small Loans Act so as to include loans up to $5,000 rather than loans up to $1,500, with appropriate interest ceilings. There was widespread support of this indicated in the representations made to us and in the report of the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance. Under the Small Loans Act there is a maximum rate of 2 per cent per month on the first $300 borrowed, the rate falling to 1 per cent in respect of amounts between $300 and $1,000 and to one-half of 1 per cent in respect of amounts of between $1,000 and $1,500. (The Royal Commission on Banking and Finance recommended that the formula retain the present 2 per cent per month maximum on the first $300 borrowed and that a flat rate of 1 per cent a month apply to all higher amounts up to $5,000.)

5. We are concerned about the practice known as "captive sales financing", which is common in the merchandising of consumer durable goods, particularly in the sale of motor cars. Parliament has expressed, in the Combines Investigation Act, its desire to encourage the regulation of industry by free competition. However, the Act does not at present apply generally in respect of service industries. The Committee recommends that the scope of the legislation be enlarged, so as to ensure that such free competition will obtain, at least in the sales finance industry, by providing for the regulation of so-called "captive sales financing"; that is, of the operations in that field of manufacturers, distributors, dealers and others not principally engaged in sales finance.

6. Consumers are sometimes compelled to pay for faulty or defective goods, or even for goods they never receive. This is particularly hard on the consumer when, as occasionally happens, the purchaser of his obligation to pay has no knowledge of the original transaction. To prevent situations of that kind, we recommend that every bill or note given in connection with a retail credit transaction be required to be so marked on its face. Along with the purchase of the right to collect the consumer's money should go any undischarged obligations to the consumer that formed part of the original transaction. The party making the sale to the consumer would not be prevented from selling the paper to a third party, but the new creditor would in effect step into his shoes vis-a-vis the consumer, assuming both the rights and the obligations involved in the original transaction. This should protect consumers against fly-by-night operators who leave the customer responsible for payments to some third party who has no obligations to him.

7. A cooling-off period of three days should be allowed for the reconsideration by the buyer of purchases made on credit, off store premises, during which the purchaser may without penalty return the goods and recover back any monies paid by him.

8. An appropriate government agency should prepare and distribute to dealers and retailers a standard form of agreement applicable to all sales of goods on credit. A copy of the agreement should be given to every person who assumes an obligation under it.

9. Every retail credit sale should contain a clause giving the purchaser the right to prepay before the normal term without penalty and with a proportionate rebate of prepaid charges.

10. Collection agency practices sometimes harass the poor and unsophisticated. Present practices in this area should be carefully examined with a view to their strict regulation and supervision. We recommend in particular that collection agencies be prohibited from obtaining wage assignments from debtors and that wage assignments in favor of credit grantors be permitted only if the assignment is contained in a separate self-contained document.

11. We urge the implementation in all parts of Canada of the new Part X of the Federal Bankruptcy Act, which provides a procedure for the orderly payment of debts under court supervision. This would provide an alternative for many who are now forced deeper into debt through arrangements made with finance companies. Part X may be brought into force in any province on the request of its Lieutenant Governor in Council.

12. Your Committee fully endorses the principle embodied in existing legislation providing relief from unconscionable transactions, and recommends its extension to all parts of Canada.

13. Information and education—sometimes called money management or budget advice and counselling—would not solve all consumer credit problems, but we believe that their institution would constitute a step in the right direction. Objective and authoritative general information would be prepared and widely distributed. This would explain in clear and understandable language what all potential credit-buyers should know, including:

(1) Interest costs, with tables in both percentage and dollar terms, particularly illustrating the effect on costs of re-financing and consolidation of debts.

(2) The kinds of outlays for which it is not unreasonable even for lower-income individuals to incur debts.

(3) The minimum net or disposable income which safely permits credit buying, and for those above that level, what percentage can reasonably be pledged for future payments. (Examples might illustrate the need to take into account present commitments as well as current income and the likelihood of it continuing, increasing or decreasing, depending on such factors as age of the individual, his prospects of continuous and continuing employment, contributions by other family members now made or contemplated.)

(4) The nature and extent of the protection and assistance available to consumers under existing law.

14. In addition to receiving information of a general nature that is widely applicable, a minority of Canadians require personal financial advice and counselling on an individual basis. It is essential that help of that kind come from agencies free of ties with companies primarily interested in increasing the credit outstanding. Consideration might be given to making government grants to family agencies and to credit unions and caisses populaires to enable them to employ for this purpose persons with a specialized knowledge of financial matters.

15. We have already set out the reasons why we believe that the financing of used cars has become a social problem. We therefore recommend, in the public interest, that:

(1) In order that prospective purchasers may ascertain the history of used cars before committing themselves to purchase, a central registry of all cars should be set up in each province, with the same number associated with a car throughout its lifetime.

(2) A maximum rate that may be charged for financing used cars should be fixed by law. This would of course include all charges.

16. Although we have not decided on any specific annual interest rate in respect of credit transactions which would in all circumstances be considered exorbitant, it would appear to be in the public interest to fix some such upper limit. Because of the tremendous increase in recent years in the use of open-end accounts of various types—sometimes called revolving accounts, cyclical accounts, easy-payment or budget accounts—with no statement to the customer of the annual interest rate at the time the purchase is made, and with a minimum effective annual interest rate of some eighteen per cent, but no effective ceiling, we urge that immediate consideration be given to this important matter. An accounting system which is clothed in mystery is a potential danger to those of limited income.

17. We recommend that the continuing joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons which we trust will be set up as a result of the recommendation in the Interim Report of the Joint Committee on Consumer Credit and Cost of Living (Prices) "to review consumer affairs and the state of the Canadian economy", be specifically charged with assessing contemporary practices and developments in the field of consumer credit. This joint committee would be in a position to recommend to the Government any needed changes in policy or legislation. The current investigation of prices has demonstrated the value of public hearings, stimulating immediate and widespread public reaction.

18. Finally, in order to work towards uniformity in legislation, and to ensure that legislation is developed to complement appropriate federal legislation, and to eliminate abuses and loopholes as far as possible, we recommend that a continuing federal-provincial committee on consumer credit be set up on the technical level.

Conclusions

Consumer Credit Problems

The evidence bears out the assumption in our terms of reference that consumer credit is a problem. It is clear that "the operation of Canadian legislation in relation thereto", which we were asked to "enquire into and report upon", leaves much to be desired. We are convinced that consumer credit has become a major industry, standing on its own feet, and in the words of an expert witness, "separate and apart from the sales which underlie it." It has, to a considerable extent, replaced money as the means by which the average man acquires what he needs for daily living and what luxuries he is able to secure. In view of these developments, the former Superintendent of Insurance put the interests of the Committee well in these words: "the various kinds of consumer credit, the sources of it, and especially the cost of it; perhaps, more particularly still, the ways in which the cost can be controlled or influenced by legislation designed to ensure that the public is not charged an exorbitant cost."

What Everyone Needs

Although consumer credit is admittedly a problem, it is not a problem for all, and for many it is a great convenience to be able to fulfil present needs from anticipated and fairly certain future income. Individuals in a secure financial position are usually able to get loans at reasonable rates. They require little protection beyond the normal need of all citizens to be able to assume that dealings are honest and fair, and that all the cards are on the table.

Full Disclosure (Information)

Whether or not he acts rationally on the basis of the facts, when a person is about to enter into financial obligations, sufficient information should be available to make it possible for him to understand what he is undertaking. Every written contract should state the total obligation; how the cost of borrowing is made up (in annual percentage rates as well as in dollars and cents); and in the sale of goods, the difference between the cash price and the price on credit. From the customer's point of view this is essentially what is meant by full disclosure, and it is the purpose of proposed disclosure legislation to bring this about.

But lenders have a different interpretation of the word "disclosure". They profess to favor full disclosure, and they say they are practising it now when they reveal the cost of borrowing in dollars and cents. What is given the greatest attention by credit grantors, and what the finance companies maintain is "the most important public policy issue surrounding the field of consumer credit" is not whether the customer should be given the information he needs to understand the cost of the money to him, but rather "the manner in which the finance charge is disclosed to the consumer." Their real objection boils down to revealing interest in the traditional form of rates, particularly rates per annum. There is some reluctance about revealing monthly interest rates, but that seems to be considered a lesser evil compared with disclosing the annual rate. In any case, the word "interest" is studiously avoided by lenders, who generally decline to break down "service charges" to show interest and other components separately. It may very well be that the cost in dollars and cents is more meaningful to the average man than annual percentage rates, but it is obviously wiser to make available more information than a man needs than to deny the information essential for making a rational choice.

Disclosure laws, first vigorously opposed, are now accepted as necessary to protect shareholders in business. The need for rules of some kind to safeguard the interests of consumers in credit buying is beyond dispute. The sales finance companies object so strongly to disclosing annual interest rates that they would even prefer ceilings such as are fixed by law in New York and California, to disclosure of rates. A spokesman for them said that "realistic ceilings, with a reasonable opportunity for review in the light of changing circumstances, would be a safeguard for the industry and for the consumer also." A retail instalment sales act which went into effect in Massachusetts on November 1, 1966, provides that retailers will have to disclose to instalment buyers the total cost of credit charged them both in terms of dollars and in true annual interest.

Canadian opinion seems generally to favour overwhelmingly the disclosure type of legislation. The banks are prepared to disclose the full cost of borrowing to the lender, and the revised Bank Act now before Parliament requires them to do so. The big problem is in connection with financing retail credit transactions. Whether the credit is supplied by the retail dealer himself or by a sales finance company or an acceptance company, it is not customary to make clear at the time a retail credit transaction is entered into, the cost in percentage terms of borrowing the money. All but those who are now withholding that information seem to agree that it should be provided to the consumer.

The Royal Commission on Banking and Finance is clear and unequivocal in dealing with this question. They recommend:

> "...that it be mandatory to disclose the terms of conditional sales as well as cash loan transactions to the customer. In addition to indicating the dollar amount of loan or finance charges, the credit grantor should be required to express them in terms of the effective rate of charge per year in order that customers may compare the terms of different offers without difficulty."

The Royal Commission does not go along with proposals that revolving credit plans be exempt from the disclosure requirements. On that subject they have this to say:

> "While we recognize that there is great difficulty in calculating the exact charge if use is made of a revolving credit, there is no reason why the customer cannot be shown the effective charge if he follows a typical plan. Borrowers may indeed be more interested in the dollar amounts of the finance charges and monthly payments than in the effective interest rate, but it will certainly not do any harm—and may well do much good—to let them know the effective rate as well. The distribution of approved rate books by the grantors of credit would minimize any difficulties of calculation from their point of view."

The Porter Commission goes on:

> "Finally, this legislation should impose stiff penalties for excessive charges or failure to disclose. At the least, the lender should forfeit all principal and interest on the illegal transactions. In addition, fines should be imposed and, as now, the authorities should have the power to suspend the licences of lending institutions in cases of flagrant violation."

Obviously, enforcement would require provision for licensing and inspection of books and premises, somewhat along the lines of the Small Loans administration. The responsible Department would issue a standard form of contract which would be attached to every retail credit sale.

Finance companies and retail dealers calculate their own borrowing in terms of annual interest rates. They are being asked to provide the same kind of information when they themselves are lenders instead of borrowers. The recommendation of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture that disclosure legislation should apply equally to farm supply and machinery companies, is a reasonable one, and we support it.

The truth concerning the cost of credit should be public knowledge, available to all. It is therefore of the utmost importance to prohibit advertising which misleads gullible people into under-estimating the cost.

Full disclosure to consumers of the cost of credit will benefit the business community by increasing public confidence in its integrity. We agree with the representative of the Credit Union National Association that legislation to bring this about would "force the minority, who might be unethical to tell the truth, which means that the honest seller is no longer at a disadvantage." Full disclosure is in complete harmony with the classical free-market theory of economics. If bargaining in the market place is to result in reasonable prices, information provided by the seller or lender must be reliable. A member of this Committee aptly summed up our views in these words: "I think the legislators generally are of the mind that the consumers of credit must be apprised of the cost of credit just as simply and effectively as they can tell now the price of the product itself."

Outlawing Unfair Clauses

Because of the situation peculiar to the sale of goods, which is often further complicated by re-sale of the agreement to pay for them, the bargaining position of the consumer is, generally speaking, extremely weak. He commonly undertakes a water-tight obligation to make payments to an impersonal company which accepts no responsibility to him. The finance company claims to be neither merchant nor money-lender and abdicates all responsibility for the transaction with the consumer. This is hardly cricket when, as a rule, conditional sale agreements contain clauses which are unfair to the consumer. Examples of those in common use are clauses:

1. excluding all warranties and conditions;

2. permitting the seller to assign the agreement to a third person who takes free of all defences that might be urged against the seller;

3. including a promissory note which can be endorsed to a third person, giving him the status of a holder in due course.

Conditions of this kind should not be permitted, whether or not the consumer is presumed to be able to take care of himself in the market place.

Some Need Special Protection

Many people of modest means have little or no understanding of business, and they are the ones who are in special need of protection. For them, the temptation of being able to obtain rather easily what is desired now, with a promise to pay later, can be too great, especially if, as is so often the case, they do not understand their commitment. Their need for education in consumer credit is urgent. As in other areas, it takes time for official policies to adapt to social changes, but in our judgment the time has come to take account of the virtual revolution in methods of paying for consumer goods that has taken place since the end of World War II.

Education and Advice

Assuming that information is made available to all, there will be some who require further protection. What they need is education and advice (sometimes called counselling). The Federated Council of Sales Finance Companies told us of their policy of co-operating in consumer education with high schools, universities, newspapers, radio, television and Better Business Bureaus. The Consumers' Association of Canada and the Consumer Loan Association advocate the teaching in secondary schools of family financing, use of consumer credit and money management. The latter maintain that conscientious lenders now carry the responsibility of assisting and advising unsophisticated borrowers who are not acquainted with business dealings "as to the choice of the best loan for their circumstances."

Since those who sell credit are hardly in an independent position to instruct potential customers, we feel that advice should come from an independent source. It may even be that lenders as well as borrowers could learn something about probable social and economic consequences of credit purchases when unpredictable but not improbable events occur in the life of the consumer. Government has long accepted responsibility for establishing and enforcing standards for products affecting health and safety. Now the need for advice concerning buying and budgetting is equally urgent. The time is clearly ripe for development of a broad program of consumer education.

Everyone should be able to rely on the truth of statements of fact made in advertising, and sponsors of false advertising must be firmly dealt with. But the advertiser, whose business it is to persuade, can hardly be called to account for selecting from his own point of view the information he uses. Neither can he be expected to confine himself to the facts alone. There must be other sources to which the consumer can look for purely objective information and advice.

Government Regulation to Protect the Weak

Government regulation has long been applied to banks. In the twenties large consumer loan companies were regulated to some extent under private acts. In the thirties the need to regulate all small loans had become apparent, and this resulted in the Small Loans Act. In spite of opposition from some money-lenders, it received the support of a substantial part of the industry, and today it is unanimously praised by those in the business, whose assistance in enforcing its provisions is acknowledged by the administrators. Representatives of the consumer loan companies told us that before the Small Loans Act was passed the bargaining position of the lower-income borrower was weak.

The Small Loans Act has not been revised since 1957. In the meantime the cost of goods and services has greatly increased, and the value of the dollar has dropped, making it necessary to reconsider the area within which this strengthening of the bargaining position of the consumer is essential in the public interest. It is where the bargaining power between two parties is not equal that, in the words of Professor Ziegel, "the legislature is more than justified in intervening...."

Consolidation of Debts

In recent years the average size of loan made by consumer loan companies and money-lenders has been growing, and the high proportion of loans used for what is known as consolidation of debts or refinancing gives rise to some misgivings. Consolidation of debts is being widely promoted through advertising, and a spokesman for lenders said, "I very definitely feel that the consolidation of debt is one of the most important services that we perform." We do not question the need of those who find themselves with debts beyond their ability to cope, for a means by which they can pay them off in an orderly fashion within some foreseeable time. But ability to do this becomes highly doubtful if the process of refinancing involves heavy additional interest charges. That is apt to happen if the system is in control of the creditor. The Nova Scotia Royal Commission on the Cost of Borrowing Money, Cost of Credit and Related Matters, noted that those on the books of finance companies—and this is related to the large number who consolidate or refinance—are likely to remain on the books for seven years. Seven years is a long time in the life of a family, and it is time enough to take children through the most critical period in their lives. But what is the alternative?

Orderly Payment of Debts Acts

The Family Bureau of Greater Winnipeg dramatically illustrated the devastating effect on a family of medium income with six children and heavy debts which they had been paying off for two years at $60 a month when the Supreme Court of Canada declared the Manitoba Orderly payment of Debts Act unconstitutional because it dealt with bankruptcy legislation, a federal matter. When this happened the man's wages were garnisheed. As a result he lost the job he had held for five years, his wife suffered a mental collapse and entered a psychiatric institution, and the whole family was reduced to public assistance. The brief presented to us by the agency urges the Federal Government to amend the Bankruptcy Act "to enable re-establishment of an Orderly Payment of Debts plan in this province, and the enactment of similar legislation in other provinces." We are pleased to report that a bill to that effect, which originated in the Senate, passed the House of Commons, with amendments, on June 20 last. It contains a provision which commends itself to us, laying down special conditions that must be fulfilled if a consolidation order does not provide for payment in full of all the debts within three years. Setting up this specific three-year goal should help to maintain the morale of the debtor as well as the patience of the creditor.

Conditional Sale Agreements

We are equally concerned about a related problem, and one that is growing in importance. It has to do with the large part of the money owing by consumers today that results from purchase of goods, with debts accruing either to retail dealers or to third parties who buy conditional sale agreements, known in the trade as "paper". Lending by retail dealers or by sales finance and acceptance companies does not come within the scope of the Small Loans Act, and with a few exceptions in certain provinces, it can be said to be unregulated. We learned that complaints received from the public by administrators of the Small Loans Act are more likely to arise out of these conditional sale agreements over which the Department has no say, than from the small loans over which they have jurisdiction. When he enters into a conditional sale agreement, the weak bargaining position of the consumer today is somewhat analogous to that of the borrower of money before the Small Loans Act was passed. So feeble is his bargaining power that it is now a regular practice to have him sign a waiver of his rights under the law to assurance that the goods are "merchantable" and "fit for the purpose for which they have been bought." The purchaser's obligation to pay for the goods goes on whether or not the merchandise is of any use to him. This is particularly hard on buyers of used cars which break down on the way home from the used-car lot. Since this Committee is trying, in the words of one of our members, "to make the game of shopping a fair one", something must be done to shore up the weak bargaining position of the purchaser of goods on credit.

There appears to be general agreement that the consumer needs more protection in the modern world of credit which is now so complex that it is beyond the comprehension of the common man who is among its best customers. The question is, then, what is to be done, and by whom.

How Protection Develops

In the four countries whose legislation for the protection of consumers Dr. Ziegel[1] studied,—Canada, U.S.A., England and Australia—the development has been uneven, but he notes that "the pattern of evolution is similar in all four countries."

1. Initial concern is protection of the buyer's equity.

[1] See footnote on p. 2862.

2. Prohibition or regulation of unfair contractual clauses—especially concering warranties and conditions.

3. Belated realization of importance of regulating financial terms of the agreement. Hence:

(a) Disclosure requirements,

(b) Limitation of finance charges, and

(c) Statutory recognition of buyer's right to rebate in case of repayment.

He has stated that ". . . the provinces between them now have more than sufficient legislative experience in all spheres except possibly that of regulating finance charges and maintaining licensing requirements (and here the federal small loans provisions should prove helpful) to provide the basis for a comprehensive uniform act. . . . Two provinces, Alberta and Quebec, have disclosure requirements, but only one, Quebec, attempts to regulate minimum down payments and maximum maturity rates directly. Alberta and Saskatchewan, however, in a very real, if heterodox way, do so indirectly, in so far as they eliminate the seller's right to sue for any deficiency after repossession. Quebec, again, is so far the only province which has shown any appreciation of the importance of prohibiting excessive finance charges..."

Revolving Credit

Twenty years ago more than 60 per cent of all retail sales were for cash, often involving a discount to the purchaser. In department stores the percentage of cash sales was even higher than in other retail outlets. This pattern of trade continued throughout the forties, but in the fifties there was a noticeable change, until today some 40 to 50 per cent of department store business is done on credit. Increased use of retail credit is largely attributable to development of the open-end system of accounting generally known as revolving credit, but also called "cyclical accounts," "budget" or "easy payment" plans,—a system which has found favor with younger families and is associated to a considerable extent with sociological changes which have been the subject of wide comment. The post-war pattern of younger marriages—with home ownership and a heavy mortgage even for families of limited income, and development of suburban shopping centers displaying a tempting variety of consumer goods—is obviously fertile soil for a system of buying which separates the pleasure of acquisition from the pain of payment.

An official of Simpsons-Sears informed the Committee that 85 per cent of their credit business is now done on the revolving account system. Revolving credit is much less important for Eatons and the Hudson's Bay Company, but both companies have developed similar plans. Some other retail chains, known as junior department stores, already do a large part of their business on revolving credit, and the system is spreading. We therefore considered it of prime importance to assess whether or not this development is in the public interest.

We have carefully weighed the arguments for and against the system, and because we are informed that its very existence would be placed in jeopardy by requiring disclosure of service charges to the customer in annual percentage rates, perhaps it is time to consider whether or not the advantages outweigh the disadvantages.

Representatives of the Retail Council of Canada maintain that this method of selling is a service to their customers; that they are not interested in it as a revenue producer, but only as a means of stimulating sales and "as a basis of achieving economy in the use of credit staff." The main arguments advanced in favor of the system by businessmen who use it or participate in its financing, are these: (1) that the widespread use made of revolving credit demonstrates that it is what the customer wants; (2) that it is so organized as to reduce to a minimum the cost of administration; (3) that it provides an important stimulus to sales, increasing the business of the establishment and therefore helping the economy; (4) that "the traditional way" of doing consumer credit business should not be lightly tampered with "except when absolutely necessary to protect the public against abuse or unconscionable charges."; and finally, (5) that, "Legislation which would require the expression of simple annual interest rates on all types of credit account would require retailers to abandon cyclical type accounts and probably bring about severe repercussions on the national economy."

There seems to be no doubt that the revolving account system, which gives the customer possession of the goods without any discussion, let alone revelation, of the cost of "credit service", can cause no hardship at that time. Whether or not he would choose to wait till pay day if he understood that he would be paying at least 18 per cent per annum and probably a much higher rate, for the privilege of buying on credit, is another question. A spokesman for the Retail Council of Canada told us that, "Control of the amount borrowed and the customer's mode of operation of the account is firmly exercised by the retailer." The Council's brief puts it this way: "...the authorized balance is controlled by the good judgment of the authorizer." The customer learns the details of his commitment not at the time of taking possession of the goods but at a later and unspecified date, when the bill comes from the accounting department. The game appears to be one in which all the cards are in the hands of one player.

We understand that the saving in administrative costs results from making the best use of staff by spreading the work of servicing the accounts over the whole month. This involves billing the customers, not at the end of each month, but according to the company's system of filing accounts, usually alphabetically by customers' names or addresses. This may very well be convenient for the company, but as far as the customer is concerned the result is that if he happens to make a purchase shortly after the day on which his account has been "serviced" the cost of "service" and the change in his over-all account will not be brought home to him until several weeks later.

The rapid rise in credit accounts of the large department stores since the institution of the open-end accounting plan supports the view that the system does stimulate sales, but what part of these purchases would in any case be made later for cash, or would be made in other retail stores, is not clear. There would inevitably be a tendency for customers to concentrate their buying in outlets where they had accounts of this type, perhaps also to pay less attention than formerly to comparative shopping. These considerations raise questions about the impact of the system on the competitive position of other retailers, and on the whole economy.

Compared with the age-old and universal method of showing charges for the use of money as interest rates—a method now readily abandoned by many—the relatively new and evolving plans collectively termed "revolving credit" can hardly be called traditional. We have been reminded that most laws which change the status quo are opposed by a section of the community. But the fact is that in a market economy the status quo is undergoing continual change by forces other than the law. It is quite legitimate for various segments of business to devise methods which will increase their own advantage. Many examples come readily to mind. The trucking industry and the airways have cut into the business of the railroad. There is a constant battle in packaging among the paper industry, various metal groups, glass and plastics.

Confining our attention to the field of consumer credit we see that not only is the consumer credit pie growing, but shares of different interests are shifting, and "outsiders" are edging in. More companies are financing their own credit sales rather than selling their paper to finance companies. An official of one of the largest department stores admitted to us that the credit business "reflects a profit." We were told by various witnesses that the purchase of appliances reduces the amount of money spent on services; that the move by finance companies into car rentals has cut into car sales; that some builders are selling stoves and refrigerators in a package deal with new houses, thus cutting out both the retail dealers in these goods and the finance companies. Changes of this kind are bound to result in gains for some groups at the expense of others, and those who lose out must seek new areas of business in the same way as was done by the consumer loan companies after the 1956 amendments in the Small Loans Act.

Smaller businessmen can be seriously affected by innovations instituted by powerful corporations with a view to increasing their own share of the pie. In those circumstances they are in no position to protest as they have a right to do if the power is exercised by government. They can ask that any public regulations be applied equally to all. This is in fact what representatives of smaller businesses have asked for.

Should disclosure legislation necessitate abandonment of the cyclical type of account, the question as to what effect this would have is still open to argument. It would undoubtedly cause some shift in buying and lending patterns. Professor Donald McGregor of the University of Toronto told the Ontario Committee he thought shifts resulting from disclosure legislation would not be major shifts. The Confederation of National Trade Unions believes revolving accounts to be such a menace and an erosion of the purchasing power of consumers, that they should be abolished. That exemption from general regulations of certain types of accounts could open the door to abuse is implied by the unanswered question put by a committee member to a spokesman for the Retail Council of Canada:

> "In the event that there was legislation proposed that made disclosure mandatory for the non-cyclical and non-open-end accounts, is there any definition that you can suggest to the committee as to the type of accounts which should be exempt from disclosure which would not lend itself to abuse? Naturally, if there is disclosure in simple annual interest for one group and not for another, every person trying to abuse the laws would strive to get into the group where disclosure is not necessary."

The real problem seems to be that there is no specific and uniform definition of revolving or cyclical accounting, the method being adapted to suit local circumstances and individual firms. The definition evolved in Alberta was "continuous deferred payment plans", but a spokesman for the Retail Council of Canada was unable to suggest a solution for the problem of possible abuse through changing the form of the plan.
