WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 1850.

We cannot be supposed to entertain feelings of animosity towards men, whom we have neve seen; and of whom, we know nothing, save that information, which, in common with other reader we acquire through the public journals; hen when we declare, that we hall with satis the verdict, which indicts upon the Captain, and Mate, of the Steamer Orion, the punishment they so richly deserve; we express our cold indifference for the criminals, because it is fitting that neglected responsibilities should not escape chasisement. The supreme authority which a Captain exercises on board his vessel-a power which no sailor dare resist, no passenger dare question -invests him with an absolute control over our lives and our fertunes when voyaging from land to land. It is but right, that where such important interests are entrusted to the guardianship of an individual, he be taught the penalty entailed upon neglected obligations. The following brief summary of the cause of the calamity must extinguish every sentiment of pity for the Portparrick. The water poured into the vessel, and the passengers rushed to the deck. The lifebefore assistance could be rendered from the shore, beings had sunk to rise no more. The Captain and the second Mate were indicted, and a thorough legal investigation was had. It was established that the former was asleep during a part of the voyage, which, on account of the rockiness of the coast, was dangerous, though the weather was perfectly fair; and that the latter, though a man of skill, experience, and sobrietely, had, in order to shorten the route, caused the vessel to be steered among dangerous rocks, which were accurately land down on the chart. We learn that yesterday morning the body of a child, about eighteen months old, was found buried in the sand on the Beauport shore. The attention of the parties who discovered it was first attracted by dogs, which were with them, tearing up the sand, and going to the spot, and removing the sand, they found the bag containing the body. We are informed by a medical gentleman that there are wounds on the back part of the head, indicating that the child has been murdered. This delightful article is totally different and far superior to anything yet invented for shaving. The base of it is derived from the Amole, or "soap plant," of California, an article used by the natives of that country for washing; and thus the use of strong silatis, so buriful to the skin, is avoided. Its vegetable and detergent properties have the purest and most nourishing effects on the skin, "it soches and allays irritation, and has a fine, thick, creamy lather, which does not dry on the fines.
