Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, of course the estimates come before the committee. The government, in respect of all estimates, is prepared to submit them to the fullest possible scrutiny. This goes without saying. I am afraid that what the hon. gentleman wants me to do is to accept these insinuations and say we will let you have another run at it. I feel it is my duty to deny baseless charges. The hon. gentleman says I will not answer questions. I have answered in writing 17 out of 20 questions placed on the order paper. The hon. gentleman did not ask one single question tonight, except the sly kind of question with which some members of the house will be familiar, such as what happened to the television sets. What television sets is he talking about?

Mr. Nielsen: I assume the ones in respect of which the R.C.M.P. conducted an investigation. What were the results of that investigation?

• (11:30 p.m.)

Mr. Drury: If the hon. gentlemen will read the answer he will find that the results of the investigation were nil. The R.C.M.P., operating as they frequently do, on the basis of gossip, have chased this down and discovered nothing, and so the hon. gentleman was informed. He is not satisfied with that answer. The fact that the R.C.M.P. examined an alleged condition in the printing bureau and found nothing is to him a cause for further suspicion. I do not know how that kind of a suspicious nature can be satisfied. If the hon. gentleman has questions to ask I will be glad to answer them because I am persuaded that the fullest kind of information about the Canadian Government Printing Bureau will redound to its credit. I am prepared at any time to answer any and all questions, and I will be delighted to do so, but I do not like at all sitting here hearing expressions such as that quoted alleging shortages of stock.

The hon. gentleman knows that the Auditor General peruses the entire accounts of the Canadian Government Printing Bureau annually. He knows that is a customary practice because he has looked into the operations of the printing bureau. He knows that book shortages are surveyed annually and written off. He also knows, because he received a written answer to his question, that obsolete and surplus equipment are declared surplus and written off, and then disposed of by the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation.

What questions did the hon. gentleman ask me? I suggest he asked me none; he merely made allegations.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I listened to the hon. member for London and I found more substance in his questions than the minister would like to have us find. If the minister is prepared to say now that he would be more than willing—

Mr. Drury: I have already said that I am.

Mr. Nielsen: The minister has not answered because he has not heard the complete question I want to ask him. If the minister is prepared now to assure the members of the committee that when his estimates come before the standing committee of the house later this session, officials and other witnesses referred to by the hon. member for London will be given an opportunity to appear, I am sure that all the members of this committee will be happy to allow the matter to stand there.

Mr. Drury: I repeat that I have given that assurance.

Mr. Nielsen: The minister has not given us that assurance. He has only said that he would be willing to answer the questions asked of him.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nielsen: I hear groans from the other side. I am sure that hon. members will find a distinction between the minister appearing and the officials of the printing bureau appearing, and that is what the hon. member for London asked for, as I understood his remarks.

If the minister is prepared to give us the assurance that he will give an opportunity to the officials and employees of the printing bureau to appear before the committee I am quite sure the members of this committee will be happy to let the matter stand.

Mr. Irvine: I have in my hand a rather lengthy answer to question No. 327, having to do with certain items of equipment that were allegedly written off, and I am sure that they were. This shows that one item, according to the board of survey No. 5, was considered obsolete and unserviceable equipment, made up of printing and duplicating equipment, bindery and allied equipment, spare parts and miscellaneous equipment in the amount of $121,953.47. This was listed as a gross write-off. Surely there must be some salvage value, and that was the substance of the question I asked. Surely this equipment would be turned over to the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation, because $121,000 worth of equipment and machinery would have some salvage value. I do not wish to belabour this point but I think it is very important.

Mr. Drury: I am confused, Mr. Chairman. Is the hon. gentleman referring to the answer to question 327?

Mr. Irvine: Yes.

Mr. Drury: Will the hon. member tell me where he gets these figures; is it out of the answer to question 327?

Mr. Irvine: The answer is detailed as follows:

June 1, 1965, Schedule I. Canadian Government Printing Bureau—Board of Survey No. 5. Summary.

Under this heading is listed:

Obsolete or unserviceable.

Then below that:

Printing and duplicating equipment, $92,383.45; bindery and allied equipment, $23,368.53; spare parts and miscellaneous accessories, $6,201.49.

This gives a total of $121,953.47.

I will leave that matter with the minister for a moment. I am quite sure the minister has nothing to hide, but why would he not want to turn this matter over to a parliamentary committee and have it checked out? I am very interested in the question and suggest that the minister follow this course. There is another matter in which I am very interested; it is that the minister should withdraw the word "dishonest" because it is not in keeping for any member of this house, let alone a minister of the Crown, to use that kind of word when addressing a fellow member of the house.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, if I did use the word "dishonest", I recognize that it is unparliamentary and withdraw it.

Mr. Irvine: Thank you, Mr. Minister.

Mr. Nielsen: All we need now, Mr. Chairman, is the minister's assurance in reply to my question, as far as I am concerned.

Mr. Churchill: Then we might pass the estimates.

Mr. Drury: I shall be glad to make provision for the fullest examination of the estimates of the Canadian Government Printing Bureau when they are placed before the committee studying those estimates, and facilitate the appearance of officials to give evidence before that committee.

Mr. Nielsen: I would include in the term "employees" the witnesses to whom the hon. member for London has referred.

Mr. Drury: I have no control over witnesses. If the hon. member for London has some friends from whom he is receiving his information and wants to bring them before the committee, he can do so; but I am not going to sponsor them.

Mr. Nielsen: Perhaps the minister would extend this facilitation to include employees as well as officials in the appearance before the committee. There would be no objection to employees appearing before the committee?

• (9:40 p.m.)

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman accused the Minister of Public Works of splitting hairs, but this is the finest hair-splitting I have seen this season. We will include all employees, both male and, if necessary, female, so there will be no misunderstanding. I do not want to hide anything.

Mr. Nielsen: The minister is being facetious now. We all know how the standing committees of the house function. The majority lies on the government side and their friends to my left, and more often than not when the opposition asks for witnesses to appear or documents to be produced before committees we are frustrated in that objective. The minister has given his assurance that he will facilitate the appearance of these witnesses from the printing bureau. I for one am happy with that assurance and I would imagine the hon. member for London is also.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 1 carry?

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Chairman, I would just like to ask the minister one question with respect to the heavy water operations in Glace Bay. Could the minister indicate what the requirements are at the present time for heavy water in this country and whether any progress is being made in the awarding of a second contract to the Glace Bay plant?

[Mr. Nielsen.]

Mr. Drury: I would be delighted to furnish the information if I had it, but responsibility for the production of heavy water now rests with the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys.

DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRY

1. Departmental administration, including grants as detailed in the estimates, $6,007,600.

Mr. Hales: Is the minister going to make any statement on the Department of Industry.

Mr. Drury: I think, having regard to the lateness of the hour, this would not be welcome, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Hales: I realize the hour is late, but there are one or two things the minister should answer at this time. I feel he may be expecting me to say something about the Canada—United States car treaty, but I do not propose to say anything about it. The government has a resolution on the order paper and the house will be asked to give approval of that later.

In so far as the Department of Industry is concerned, it is only three short years ago since this department was established. At that time we suggested to the minister and the government that it was not necessary to set up such a department; that the work the department intended to do could quite easily be done by the Department of Trade and Commerce. We even suggested the name be changed to trade and industry. I realize that the Canadian Manufacturers' Association perhaps made requests to have some department in Ottawa for industry. At the same time, I feel they would have been quite satisfied to have a branch of industry within the Department of Trade and Commerce headed by a Deputy Minister.

When we realize that this department started three years ago with around 50 people and has now grown into one of the fastest growing empires on parliament hill, we feel the minister is duty bound to explain to this committee just what all this is about. Where is all this money going, and where are all these people employed? In the 1964-65 estimates there were $24.5 million allotted to this Department of Industry with a staff of 573 people. The next year's estimates indicate a jump of $10.5 million would be needed to operate this department with a staff of 583 people. Then, when we look at the estimates for 1966-67 we see this department needs $50.5 million with a staff of 635.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we of the official opposition want to know where this money is being spent and what these people are doing. Why is this necessary? What is this Department of Industry doing? We want to know more about the results being achieved for all this money that is being spent. We want to know the results which are being achieved for the expenditure of the taxpayers' money.

Time is very short and there are many things I should like to enlarge upon. However I reiterate that this is the fastest growing empire on parliament hill and I think it is high time the opposition knew something about these great expenditures.

I am only going to mention a few things concerning the free trade pact as it applies to car parts manufacturers. This is one thing the Department of Industry has done: It has put out of business the Canadian car parts manufacturers. They have dropped out of business like flies in all parts of the country. I have one specific case in my own riding in which a man is in the business of making electrical car harnesses. He tells me he has simply got to go out of business because he cannot compete in view of the cost of the wire which is based on the price in the United States, plus the cost of transportation and importation. This makes it impossible for him to compete on a free trade basis.

I know that the minister, and through him the department that deals with taxation, has said to this man, "You can bring this wire in duty free so that you can compete with United States competitors, but it has got to be cut in lengths. It has got to be in varying lengths rather than in a roll." Theoretically that is of great help to this man, but practically it is not worth a sou. Therefore the man I talk of has got to get into another line of business to do, perhaps, with boats, tractors, or forked lift trucks. But so far as the car business is concerned he is out.

In this country we have car parts manufacturers trying to compete with manufacturers in the United States. They have to bring in extra machinery, they have to enlarge their production, increase their efficiency, and the first thing that is done is that the 11 per cent production tax is put on. I hope that the minister will have a word with the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I hope that communications in cabinet are good, because the minister has said, tonight, that he was all for removing the 11 per cent sales tax. We have car parts manufacturers saddled with an 11 per cent sales tax that their counterparts do not have. Firms making replacement parts, not new parts, for cars are now very concerned that the free trade agreement is going to apply to them as well, and they are concerned that they will be put out of business, as have been the car parts manufacturers. I am not talking about cars at the moment. So far as the manufacturers of parts are concerned, they have had a rough time. I agree that a few of the large operators will survive. Those people who can get adequate capital, buy extra machinery, and so on, will survive. But smaller operators I am afraid are out of luck. I feel sorry for them. They have had the course, due to this treaty that was brought in by the Liberal government.

The other day tool and die labour people were in Ottawa. They saw the minister of manpower, and told him that their problem was due to the shortcomings of the Canada—U.S. Free Trade Agreement. This is a big subject which we have not time enough to go into tonight. We want to know about the area development program mentioned here through the designated area legislation. No matter what happens with respect to that, you are in trouble. If you move the line from here to there, you are still in trouble. Ever since this legislation has been brought in it has been nothing but discriminatory from beginning to end. I had experience in the early days of it. One of my first experiences with it was when Brantford was made a designated area, and the city of Guelph was not. So far as the designated area and area development legislation is concerned, it has been nothing but trouble from that day to this.

We want to know something about the industrial technology that was introduced, I think, last June. The hour is late, and there are very many things I should like to go into, in more detail. We want to know about the Department of Industry, because we were told when it was set up that it would be staffed by people moving from the Department of Trade and Commerce and from the Department of Defence Production. I have a question on the order paper, asking for the staffs of these departments as of certain dates. I have not received the answer yet. However, I am as sure as I am standing here that there will be a staff increase in every one of these departments. Yet we were told that the staff would come from other departments. There has been nothing but confusion in this from beginning to end.

If a man comes to Ottawa and he wants to talk to somebody down here about textiles, or chemicals, or food products, or certain types of machinery, he can go to any one of these departments—Industry, Trade and Commerce, and Defence Production—and find somebody to talk to in each one with respect to what he wants, but he will have the run around until he finds the right man. He will find that what he seeks is not here; that he will have to go over there.

• (11:50 p.m.)

It has been nothing but confusion from beginning to end since this department was set up. I think it is high time we got things on to an even basis and end this duplication and overlapping. When we realize the cost has risen to $50 million and that we have a staff of 635 people in the department we are entitled to know where this money is going, what all these people are doing and what are the results.

NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL, INCLUDING THE MEDICAL RESEARCH COUNCIL

1. Salaries and other expenses, $27,973,900.

Mr. Cantelon: I do not doubt that I shall be one of the most unpopular members of this committee for a few minutes but I believe national research is a subject on which some comment should be made. I feel sure that in a country such as ours there is no more important thing for the future than research. It is on this basis that I make these few comments.

Two or three weeks ago I asked the Prime Minister a question about the amount of research money which is coming to us from the United States. Unfortunately, the information which Dr. Polanyi gave in the course of a broadcast dealing with the subject was not quite correct and the Prime Minister pointed this out. Nevertheless the fact remains that there is a substantial amount of money coming to us from the United States for use in research. I fear we shall lose much of this money as a result of restrictions in connection with the transfer of funds from the United States to Canada. This makes it imperative in my view that we should increase our research grants.

I know that a great deal could be said about the subject but it is my intention to be brief. I hope the minister when presenting his estimates for the coming year will take this matter into consideration and see that his colleagues increase substantially the grants which are made to the National Research Council and to the Medical Research Council.

There are many points I could bring out to support this contention, but time is short. However, I want to illustrate what is happening by referring to the two gentlemen who were mentioned on the broadcast to which I have referred, Dr. Bartlett from the University of British Columbia and Dr. Polanyi of the University of Toronto, who made the broadcast. Dr. Bartlett, I am afraid, is leaving for Princeton though other universities in Canada have done their best to keep him here. Since he has won not only the Steacie award but another award, the research corporation award for 1965, worth $10,000, he is obviously the kind of man we would like to keep in Canada. If we are to do this we must not only see that these men are well paid, we must see they get the students who can work with them, places in which to live and the equipment necessary for them to carry out the research they want to do.

Much of it may seem to be research that does not mean anything, but in the long run often means a great deal. We need the buildings which will accommodate this research, so I make a plea to the minister to see that in his new estimates full consideration is given to this fact, so that research grants will be greatly enlarged, and I mean greatly enlarged.

The best estimate the Canadian Association of Graduate Schools was able to come up with was that expenditures should be $160 million a year by 1970-71, and over $250 million a year by 1975. These are almost astronomical figures in relation to what is being done today, but I hope this will be given the fullest consideration and that more generous grants will be made.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, since we have gone along this far I think I should join the hon. member for Kindersley in doing my little bit to assist the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre in achieving his objective of sitting until midnight.

Mr. Churchill: Thank you very much. I said one o'clock.

Mr. Barnett: Earlier this evening we had some discussion on designated areas, which the minister said were designated because they contained so little industry and had such high unemployment that the government felt something should be done about the situation. I suggest we are reaching a point where there are other areas in the country which should be designated because of the fact that they contain so much industry that they are reaching the stage where they are no longer fit for people to live and work in them.

This is because industry has been allowed to develop in a way that its operations create pollution of the air and neighbouring waters, pollution which is reaching an acute danger point so far as the welfare of people is concerned.

I discussed this matter for a few minutes the other night when the estimates of the Department of Forestry were before us, with particular reference to one research item. Also, as the Minister of Industry may have noted, I have a question on the order paper, but apparently I am not alone in that, in attempting to find out what the federal government is doing through its various agencies in the field of research into air and water pollution.

So far as I am aware, the National Research Council is the most important research organism in the whole establishment of the federal government, and this item of the estimates is of interest to me.

I have noted a resolution on the order paper respecting certain changes in the operation, as well as the title of the research council. I am sure the government house leader is anxious that that resolution be discussed at the earliest possible date. However, one of the reasons I am rising tonight is to draw to the attention of the minister the fact that my question has been on the order paper since February 9, and to say I hope I shall receive an answer to it before we come to deal with the resolution preceding legislation respecting the National Research Council. I am referring to question No. 555, and I hope I receive the answer before we come to discuss what the future nature of the federal government's research activities should be.

• (12 midnight)

I am not going to pursue this question at any length tonight, except to say that I would appreciate it very much if the minister could, out of hand, name for me any of the major efforts presently under way by the National Research Council in the field of air pollution research or water pollution research, if such in fact do exist.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry I cannot give the hon. gentleman a precise answer to his question, but I will inform myself and inform him.

Item agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: This concludes the estimates of the Department of Defence Production, the Department of Industry and the National Research Council. We will now proceed to study the estimates of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. Knowles: Oh no we don't.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, I think we would be prepared to sit and conclude the estimates of the Department of Agriculture but I have been discussing this matter with the government house leader and we have taken into consideration the staff, the Hansard reporters and the translators who now are fairly tired. In view of the situation I think we have had enough for tonight.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, it is very commendable to hear the hon. member for Ontario express his consideration for the staff. I also would remind you, Mr. Chairman, that we agreed to sit through these estimates we just now have completed. Because there are a number of members who are interested in the agricultural estimates, who are not here now, we would not wish to continue further.

[Translation]

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It being now past ten o'clock, shall I rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again? Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

[English]

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order; would the house give unanimous consent for the two questions which were posted for the late show tonight to be stood over for another night and hold their position.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Is it agreed that the questions which were to be heard tonight after ten o'clock should be put forward to the next day.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 12.07 a.m.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

ANNOUNCEMENT OF ALLOCATION OF INVESTMENT FUND

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a statement on the Canada Pension Plan investment fund.

Under the Canada Pension Plan, all funds received but not required at the end of each month to meet expenses and payments of benefits during the following three months are transferred to the Canada Pension Plan investment fund for the purchase of securities of the provinces or the government of Canada. These are special non-marketable securities, with terms of up to 20 years.

The allocation for purchases of provincial securities by the Canada Pension Plan investment fund is proportionate to the amounts of contributions paid in each province. Any balance not taken up by the provinces, together with funds collected in the Yukon and Northwest Territories, must be invested in special non-marketable securities of the government of Canada. The securities issued for this purpose by the government of Canada are subject to the same conditions as those issued by the provinces.

The first funds were available for investment by the Canada Pension Plan investment fund at the end of February. These were derived from contributions paid in January and amounted to $34,852,909. Provincial treasurers have been advised that the amounts available for the purchase of their securities up to and including March 10, 1966, are as follows: Newfoundland, $655,000; Prince Edward Island, $108,000; Nova Scotia, $1,248,000; New Brunswick, $972,000; Ontario, $20,110,000; Manitoba, $2,077,000; Saskatchewan, $1,432,000; Alberta, $3,064,000; British Columbia, $5,085,000.

If the provinces take up the above amounts as expected, the amount available for the purchase of securities of Canada will be $101,909. The rate of interest applicable to these securities, as determined by the Minister of Finance under the act, is 5.29 per cent. Interest is payable semi-annually.

A statement was issued in the form of a press release on February 4 giving a preliminary forecast of the amounts which might be available to the investment fund for the purchase of provincial securities. Because of lags in the receipt of contributions and the need to deduct administrative expenses which had already accrued, the amount available for investment in this first month was somewhat below the preliminary forecast.

I am making this statement, Mr. Speaker, because I believe there is some interest among members in this initial allocation of pension plan funds. In future the provinces will be notified directly of the amounts available, and I do not intend to make such an announcement each month.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. minister for having sent me an advance copy of his statement. In it he mentions that the required expenses for the next three months are retained, and also that any accrued expenses have been deducted from the initial allotment. It looks as though, on this basis, the total amount for the provinces will be somewhere around $450 million in the first year.

The minister does not point out that this first deduction undoubtedly includes a very high amount, some $2 million, which was spent during the election campaign to attempt to advertise the pension plan.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, following the statement just made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) I wish to point out to him that we have not been handed an advance copy, a privilege which was granted to members of the Conservative party.

I feel this is an appropriate occasion to urge the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) to ask his ministers in future, when they have motions or statements to make, to hand over a copy not only to an opposition party, but to all parties, so that all opposition parties may be on the same footing. I hope the Prime Minister will take this request into consideration and advise all his ministers accordingly.

Canada Pension Plan

Mr. Speaker, I notice that concerning the Canada pension plan, the amounts available will be invested in provincial or federal government bonds, and what strikes me is that interest of 5.29 per cent will be charged the provinces getting these amounts. I wonder if the Minister of Finance should not arrange to have these amounts available to the provinces without interest, so as not to increase the interest charges the provinces are already carrying.

I wonder if the minister could not see to it that the sums made available to public finance be used to develop the country instead of increasing provincial debts, because every month from now on, the provinces will have an additional source of indebtedness. To my mind, these amounts should serve to develop the country rather than increase the provincial debts.

[English]

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to comment in any great detail, but I do think the Minister of Finance with his sense of fairness and good judgment should have sent each of us a copy of this statement. This would have saved the time of the house and would have been most helpful and equitable to everyone.

Whether or not it is to the best advantage of the Canadian people to have a funded pension plan of this type is irrelevant at this time, but we do appreciate that the government is making these funds available on an equitable basis to the provinces. It is interesting to note that provinces which have no direct debt, such as Alberta and British Columbia, will be able to use the funds for parity bonds or for municipal finance corporations, which will directly assist the people who are providing this money.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I offer just a brief comment. First of all I appreciate the fact that the Minister of Finance does not feel that he should take the time of the house every month to indicate the allocation of funds, but I hope he might find some way in which to lay the figures before parliament, even if he does not rise in the house to do so.

The other comment I want to make is that in our view and in the view of parliament generally, the purpose of the Canada pension plan is to pay pensions to the contributors to the plan. I hope, therefore, the minister will not pay too much attention to suggestions that are made which would have the effect of cutting down the funds available. We are glad the Canada pension plan is a going concern, and we hope the government will soon match it with improvements in the old age security pension as well.

[Mr. Grégoire.]

RECOGNITION OF CHINESE GOVERNMENTS

Question No. 14—Mr. Allard:

1. Has Canada recognized the Chinese nationalist government of Formosa and, if so, when and how did this recognition take place?

2. What other countries have recognized the said government to this date?

3. Does Canada regard the government of Formosa as a de facto government or as a de jure government?

4. Does Canada regard Formosa as a state, or simply as a government, or as both?

5. Without recognizing at present the communist government of Peking, does Canada continue to recognize the continental Chinese state?

6. What countries have recognized communist China since 1949 and what are the dates of recognition?

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Canada recognized the Government of the Republic of China as the de jure government of China on December 20, 1928. On that date, the United Kingdom minister in China, with the authorization of the Canadian Government, undertook an exchange of notes with the Chinese National Government which had the effect of renouncing the rights of Canada to benefit by the provisions of existing treaties limiting the right of China to settle her national customs tariff or to impose tonnage dues. It was the express intention of the then Canadian Government that this exchange of notes constitute recognition by Canada of the Government of the Republic of China. A Canadian Legation, later raised to the status of an Embassy, was opened in China in 1942, but closed after the National Government left the mainland to establish itself on Formosa in 1949. The Canadian Government continues to recognize the Government of the Republic of China at its present seat of government.

2. The Canadian Government does not consider that it ought to comment on the nature of relations existing between other governments. The following is a list drawn up from various public sources, of countries which, so far as we know, recognize the Government of the Republic of China:

Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, Cameroon, Canada, Chad, Gabon, Greece, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Iran, Italy, Ivory Coast, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Republic of Korea, Lebanon, Liberia, Libya, Luxembourg, Malagasy Republic, Malta, Mexico, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Niger, Chile, Colombia, Congo (Leopoldville), Costa Rica, Cyprus, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Panama, Paraguay, Peru, Philippines, Portugal, Rwanda, Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone, Spain, South Africa, Thailand, Togo, Turkey, United States of America, Upper Volta, Uruguay, Venezuela, Republic of Vietnam, Kuwait.

3. See reply to question 1.

4. Canada regards the island of Taiwan (Formosa) as the present seat of government of the Republic of China.

5. See reply to question 1.

6. The Canadian Government does not consider that it ought to comment on the nature of relations existing between other governments. The following is a list drawn up from various public sources of countries which, so far as we know, have recognized Communist China since 1949:

BRIDGE OVER SAINT JOHN RIVER—FEDERAL COMMITMENT

Question No. 59—Mr. MacRae:

1. Have any financial commitments been made by the government of Canada to the province of New Brunswick in connection with the building of a bridge spanning the Saint John river at Maugerville and Burton, Sunbury county?

2. If such commitment was made, when was it made?

3. If such a commitment was made, what is the amount of the financial commitment?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by several departments as follows:

1. No.

2 and 3. Not applicable.

Questions

GRANT TO PEACE RESEARCH ABSTRACTS

Question No. 72—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

Has the government received representations concerning a grant to Peace Research Abstracts and, if so, what response has been made to such representations?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The government received a request from the Canadian Peace Research Institute on October 8, 1965 for a grant of $35,024 to assist the work of Peace Research Abstracts in the year 1966. I replied on January 24 as follows:

The government is sympathetic to the objectives of the CPRI and regards the Peace Research Abstracts as a constructive and useful publication. We have also been happy to note the decision by UNESCO to grant assistance for the publication of the Abstracts. We also believe, however, that projects of this kind are best supported by private means or, if they qualify, by the Canada Council, which as you know does make grants available to scholars or organizations concerned with the social sciences. The fact is that the Department of External Affairs does not subsidize research or publications in this field, although we do help the United Nations Association of Canada because it performs tasks which are directly related to publicizing the objectives of the United Nations and Canada's part therein. You will, I am sure, appreciate that a grant for the publication of Peace Research Abstracts would be likely to attract requests for the support of similar projects by other institutions or individuals. There is no legislation or machinery which would enable us to evaluate such requests and to reach sensible decisions on them. I do not rule out the possibility that this situation may change. I am aware for example that the governments of Norway and Sweden have approached this matter differently. For the present, however, and for the reasons given I regret not being able to respond favourably to your request. Please be assured that we shall continue to be glad to extend informal assistance and advice to the CPRI whenever you consider this useful or appropriate.

POSTAGE STAMP DEPOTS, WESTERN PROVINCES

Question No. 98—Mr. More:

1. As of December 31, 1965 (a) how many postage stamp depots were being operated in the provinces of Alberta, Manitoba and Saskatchewan (b) what are their locations (c) when were they established (d) what is the floor space occupied by each (e) when did they occupy their present quarters (f) what is the staff at each depot (g) what is the value of postage supplies sent by each depot to its dependent offices for sale during the fiscal year ending March 31, 1965 (h) what is the combined cost of staff salaries and cost of space assessed against the Post Office Department by the Department of Public Works (i) how many offices did each depot serve?

2. Since the elimination of the Regina depot on April 1, 1965, what savings have been effected in (a) staff (b) accommodation (c) correspondence and telephone calls (d) transportation (e) general management?

[Miss LaMarsh.]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): 1. (a) Four. (b) Calgary, Edmonton, Winnipeg and Saskatoon. (c) Calgary, April 1, 1934; Edmonton, April 1, 1934; Winnipeg, April 1, 1934; Saskatoon, October 1, 1934. (d) Calgary, 1,135 sq. ft.; Edmonton, 2,400 sq. ft.; Winnipeg, 3,350 sq. ft.; Saskatoon, 1,600 sq. ft. (e) Calgary, May 8, 1961; Edmonton, April 1, 1934; Winnipeg, May 31, 1958; Saskatoon, September 2, 1961. (f) Calgary, 8; Edmonton, 7; Winnipeg, 11; Saskatoon, 10.

(g)

Depot	Amount
Calgary	$4,410,189.51
Edmonton	$4,551,617.43
Winnipeg	$6,257,117.60
Saskatoon	$2,594,736.97

(h) The combined cost of staff salaries, which are based on new salary range as of 1st October, 1965, and the cost of space assessed against the Post Office Department by the Department of Public Works is: Calgary, $36,305; Edmonton, $36,148; Winnipeg, $56,003; Saskatoon, $45,254.

(i)

Depot	Number of offices served
Calgary	711
Edmonton	698

2. (a) None.

(b) Although this department does not actually pay rental for space supplied by the Department of Public Works, based on the revised rate of $3.40 per square foot for 1965, the reduction in assessment by the Department of Public Works would be $2,805 from the 31st March 1965 (when the space was returned to that department) until the 31st December 1965.

(c) It is not possible to assess the savings effected in telephone calls or correspondence as no records are available as to the number and cost of telephone calls between the Calgary and Saskatoon district office headquarters and the Regina postage stamp depot when it was in operation. There was, however, an exchange of both telephone calls and correspondence which is no longer required because of the consolidation of the stamp depot activities.

(d) It is not possible to assess a dollar saving in transportation costs as post office operating supplies are transmitted through the mails free of charge in accordance with Section 19 (2) of the Post Office Act.

(e) It is difficult to assess an economic saving pertaining to general management. However, the consolidation of postage supplies has resulted in an improvement of administrative procedures and provides improved control.

POSTAL STORES DEPOTS, WESTERN PROVINCES

Question No. 99—Mr. More:

1. As of December 31, 1965 (a) how many postal stores depots were being operated in the provinces of Alberta, Manitoba and Saskatchewan (b) what are their locations (c) when were they established (d) what is the floor space occupied by each (e) when did they occupy their present quarters (f) what is the staff at each depot (g) what was the total operating cost of each depot for their last annual accounting period (h) how many offices did each depot service?

2. As a result of the closing of Regina depot on February 13, 1965, and the Calgary depot on February 28, 1965, what economies have been effected in (a) staff (b) accommodation (c) maintenance and control of inventories (d) transportation (e) general management?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): 1. (a) 2; (b) Winnipeg and Edmonton; (c) Around the end of world war I; (d) Winnipeg 5,236 sq. ft.—Edmonton 7,200 sq. ft.; (e) Winnipeg 1958—Edmonton, around the end of world war I; (f) Winnipeg 7 positions—Edmonton 5 positions; (g) Winnipeg $40,962—Edmonton $38,502 (these figures include staff salaries and the cost of space as assessed by the Department of Public Works); (h) Winnipeg 1991—Edmonton 1174.

2. (a) 1 position; (b) 8,880 sq. ft.; (c) and (e) The maintenance and control of inventories and the general management of the departmental stores system is centralized in Ottawa, and it is not possible to isolate specific economies within these functions which may be attributed to the closure of postal stores depots. Since the total number of postal stores depots in Canada was reduced from 11 to 8, some economies were effected, but within these functions the main benefits derived were in the area of greater efficiency rather than actual economies; (d) One of the principal objectives of the rearrangement of areas served from postal stores depots was to reduce the amount of transportation of supplies involved by eliminating, to the greatest extent possible, the backtracking of supplies from postal stores depots. No dollar savings in transportation costs are available since costs of transportation of supplies are not maintained, as post office operating supplies are transmitted through the mails free of postage in accordance with Section 19(2) of the Post Office Act.

ROY WOOLAM—EMPLOYMENT BY B AND B COMMISSION

Question No. 119—Mr. Ormiston:

1. Has Mr. Roy Woolam been employed by the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism?

2. If so, what were his detailed terms of reference?

3. What remuneration has he received from the government of Canada for services rendered to the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism?

4. What was the nature of his employment immediately prior to joining the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism?

5. What are his qualifications in respect of his duties with the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism?

6. Did Mr. Woolam undertake surveys or studies on behalf of the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism in the province of New Brunswick and in St. Boniface, Manitoba?

7. Is Mr. Woolam bilingual?

8. Was Mr. Woolam recommended to the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism and, if so, by whom?

Mr. John R. Matheson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): I am informed by the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism as follows:

1. No. The royal commission has contracts with Group Resources Consultant Services Limited, Calgary, Alta. Mr. Roy Woolam is managing director of this company.

2. See answer to part 1. The company referred to contracted to investigate the following matters: (a) In a pilot study by interviews of officers of the departments of education and of French Canadian education leaders in western provinces to obtain a broad impression of the school system in French language communities, with special emphasis on the use of French and the extent to which it is unofficially used as a language of instruction. (b) "A study of attitude patterns of selected ethnic groups as represented by (12) schools in four western provinces with special reference to the role of the school in preparing young people for adult careers and in expressing the cultural values of the several groups". This study was carried out in St. Boniface, Winnipeg, St. Malo and Gretna, Manitoba; Gravelbourg, Saskatchewan; Thorhild, Legal and Red Deer,

Alberta; Port Coquitlam, B.C. (c) "The attitudes of selected Acadian communities in New Brunswick toward the provincial education system." This study was carried out in Sussex, Moncton, Bathurst and Allardville, N.B. (d) "The ethnic participation and influences in local government in the Maillardville-Coquitlam community of British Columbia."

3. None. Any payments to Mr. Woolam would be made by Group Resources Consultant Services Limited.

4. Not applicable. See answer to Part I.

5. Not applicable. See answer to Part I.

6. See answer to Part 2.

7. No, but the Group Resources Consultant Services Limited advise that 15 of the 25 interviewers employed by the Group Resources Consultant Services Limited for royal commission contracts were bilingual.

8. The Group Resources Consultant Services Limited was recommended to the commission by its research officers, after receiving information as to the group's capacity to perform the work assigned. The decisions concerning research contracts were made after a pilot study had been carried out by the Group Resources Consultant Services.

FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION TO SHIPYARD, MARYSTOWN, NEWFOUNDLAND

Question No. 238—Mr. MacEwan:

1. Is or will the government be contributing financially to the construction of the shipyard at Marystown, Newfoundland?

2. If so, what will be the amount of the federal contribution and under what authority will the contribution be made?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): 1 and 2. No request for assistance in the construction of the shipyard at Marystown, Newfoundland, has been received by the Department of Industry.

RESTORATION OF WOLFE'S MONUMENT

Question No. 363—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. Was Wolfe's monument in Quebec city, following its dynamiting by separatist elements, restored to its original form?

2. If not, what alterations were made, for what reason were they made, and who authorized the changes?

3. Was there any earlier restoration of the monument and, if so, was the original motif maintained?

4. From what sources were the funds raised for (a) the original monument (b) any succeeding restorations?

[Mr. Matheson.]

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): 1. I am informed by the National Battlefields Commission as follows: Yes, the same form as its immediate predecessor; however, this monument was apparently toppled by a truck using a cable strung around column's centre.

2. N/A.

3. Yes, five monuments were built. The first monument, a large stone, was erected in 1759; the second in 1832, the third in 1849, the fourth in 1913 and the present monument in July, 1965. The present monument reproduces the third monument.

4. (a) By the British Army stationed in Canada; (b) In 1832 and 1849 by the British Army stationed in Canada; in 1913 and 1965 by the National Battlefields Commission.

EMPLOYMENT OFFICER TESTS

Question No. 383—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Were members of the staff of the National Employment Service who were engaged in interviewing, counselling, or placement work in local offices, or permanent staff in supervisory positions at local, regional and head offices required, during 1965, to write a test to become eligible to enter a new employment service officer classification?

2. If so (a) what was the nature of the test (b) what knowledge on the candidates' part was the test designed to judge (c) on what date did the test take place (d) how many persons wrote the test, how many members of the N.E.S. other than clerical staff wrote it, how many persons who were qualified for entry to the new class took the test, and how many in each of these mentioned categories failed the test (e) was the test seen previous to being taken by any member of the staff of the N.E.S. or the Department of Labour (f) was the test authorized by either written or oral instruction, by the Treasury Board, the Civil Service Commission, or the Department of Labour and, if so, who was the author and who the recipient of such authorization (g) if any employees of the N.E.S. are reclassified because of this test, in what way will their duties differ from those performed by the present or former classes of employment officer, employment and claims officer, employment and insurance officer, and unemployment insurance officer?

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): 1. Yes, if they applied for the new class series.

2. (a) It was an intelligence test. (b) The test was designed to assess the extent to which the applicants have the intellectual ability normally possessed by persons capable of achieving university standing. (c) The test took place on 11 December, 1965. (d) 3,062 N.E.S. employees wrote the test, of which number 2,481 were other than clerical staff. All employees of the N.E.S. were eligible to apply for the class. It will not be known how many are qualified for entry to the new class until each person's qualifications and past and potential performance have been evaluated by an appraisal board. The test was an instrument to aid in the over-all evaluation of applicants. (e) No. (f) The use of the test was authorized by the Civil Service Commission as an integral part of the Civil Service Commissions's class standards for all entrants to the new employment service officer class series, and the Department of Labour was the recipient of this authorization. The Civil Service Commission established and administered the test. (g) The duties of the new class series are at a professional level, with corresponding salaries, and the qualifications required are at a university level. The appraisal process is designed to give an opportunity for entry to the new class series to existing N.E.S. staff who would otherwise be excluded because of the test of academic standing and qualifications which attaches to the series.

NATIONAL EMPLOYMENT COMMITTEE RESOLUTIONS

Question No. 386—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Did the national employment committee, during its meeting in 1965, pass a resolution (or resolutions) protesting the written test given to permanent staff members of the National Employment Service?

2. If so (a) to whom were these resolutions addressed (b) were these resolutions actually received by the then Minister of Labour or any officer of his department, and (c) what were the aforementioned resolutions and what action was taken on them?

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): 1. At its 91st meeting, on August 31 and September 1, 1965, the national employment committee passed one resolution respecting personnel matters of the national employment service, including the written test.

2. (a) The resolution was addressed to Hon. Allan J. MacEachen, then Minister of Labour. (b) Yes. (c) The resolution was as follows:

That the national employment committee is pleased to learn of the substantial upward revision of salary rates for employment officers as a result of the introduction of a new series of employment service officer, and the upgrading of the basic qualifications of applicants for such positions. The committee also welcomes the decision to establish 948 new positions in the National Employment Service. It is felt that these changes should greatly improve the quality of the staff generally, and the efficiency of the National Employment Service. The committee notes with concern the fact that the filling of vacant position has been frozen pending the development of a test and appraisal program, and urges that a decision in this matter be arrived at as quickly as possible, so that the already excessive number of vacancies will not result in a serious impairment of the service. The national employment committee also notes the intention of the Civil Service Commission to require present NES staff to pass a written test in order to gain access to the new series. This procedure, we understand, is causing considerable unrest among the employees and it is the view of the national employment committee that the stipulation with respect to the written tests of present employees should be considered and that the appraisal program for entry into the new series be administered so that decisions affecting present employees will be based upon their performance in the National Employment Service. The national employment committee is strongly of the opinion that the National Employment Service should be represented on the body responsible for appraisal of present staff.

Following consideration of the resolution, the Minister of Labour informed the Chairman of the national employment committee that an objective test was necessary because previous experience had clearly indicated that it was not sufficient, in introducing a major personnel change such as the employment service officer series, to rely solely on appraisal of past performance. The chairman was subsequently informed of the precise role of the written test as an aid in the evaluation of candidates, and also informed that all the appraisal boards responsible for these evaluations would include representation from the NES.

V.L.A. LAND PURCHASES, P.E.I.

Question No. 417—Mr. MacDonald (Prince):

Did the government of Canada recently purchase land in Prince county for use under the Veterans Land Act and, if so (a) how many acres have been purchased (b) what price was paid per acre (c) were public tenders called for this purchase (d) who was the land purchased from (e) what is the name of the attorney who did the legal work for this purchase (f) what fee was paid to this attorney (g) is the attorney a shareholder in the company which sold the land to V.L.A. (h) how far is this land from the nearest school or shopping centre (i) was any attempt made to acquire land nearer to a school and shopping centre (j) has any land been resold since this purchase (k) is there an option for additional land and what is the length of the option time (l) how much land is under option (m) what will be the price per acre as stated under the option (n) has any land been purchased in Summerside, Charlottetown, or any other village under the Veterans Land Act (o) is it the policy of the Department of Veterans Affairs to purchase land without calling public tenders (p) did V.L.A.

relieve the previous owner of such land of a tax agreement with the village of St. Eleanors (q) has a tax agreement been made by V.L.A. with the village of St. Eleanors (h) how was the evaluation arrived at for the purchase price of this land and is this the same land that was offered for sale to the Department of National Defence for the construction of 275 houses in connection with RCAF station in Summerside, in 1963?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Yes. (a) 6.7 acres subdivided and served with sewer and water. (b) $2,164.20 per acre. (c) No. (d) M.C.L. Development Corporation, Summerside, P.E.I. (e) G. Bruce MacDonald, LL.B. (f) Fee not yet paid. Estimated fee $145. (g) No. (h) Elementary school .75 mile, region high school 2.9 miles, vocational school 2.6 miles, transportation to each school by school bus; post office and store .75 mile; shopping centre 1.7 miles. (i) Other land was considered. (j) No. (k) No. Vendors have submitted offers on two other parcels, one offer expiring September 1, 1966 and the other December 31, 1966. (l) None. Vendors' offers relate to 9.3 acres partially serviced and 10 acres not subdivided or serviced. (m) Based on vendors' offers $1,345.16 and $1,000 per acre. (n) Yes. Since April 1965, 48 parcels have been purchased on Prince Edward Island for veterans under the Veterans' Land Act. (o) The director follows the usual practice of purchase by negotiation. (p) The vendor is required to pay taxes to the date of purchase. (q) VLA will be subject to the usual tax assessment on the same basis as any other ratepayer in the village of St. Eleanor's (r) The value of the land was arrived at by the appraisal methods used by the Veterans' Land Administration and the Appraisal Institute of Canada. Suitability for VLA purposes, location, topography, installed services and roads, sale prices of comparable parcels, are among the factors considered.

On May 17, 1963, Laurie Coles and Associates acting on behalf of M.C.L. Development Corporation advised Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation it had land for sale at St. Eleanor's P.E.I. No price was mentioned and no negotiations were carried out by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

FRENCH SPEAKING FILM BOARD EMPLOYEES, MARITIME PROVINCES

Question No. 446—Mr. Fairweather:

1. Is the Secretary of State aware of the protest of the Acadian Education Association that there are no French speaking employees of the National Film Board in the maritime provinces?

[Mr. MacDonald (Prince).]

2. If so, what steps will the Secretary of State take to ensure that this situation is remedied at once?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): 1. Yes.

2. I have discussed this matter with the National Film Board and wish to report as follows: The board has had for many years two French speaking field representatives in New Brunswick. Their positions became vacant, the Moncton position on January 1, 1966 and the northern New Brunswick one in May, 1965. Recruitment has now been completed and appointments will be announced shortly.

I would like to add that the National Film Board will conduct its activities with regard to the French speaking population of the Atlantic provinces from Moncton, establishing there a central film library and distribution system particularly aimed at the French speaking population. The officer will be designated as co-ordinator of French distribution and his level will be that of assistant regional supervisor.

TENDERS FOR DESTROYER ESCORTS

Question No. 455—Mr. MacEwan:

1. When will tenders be called for four new destroyer escorts for the Royal Canadian Navy?

2. Will tenders be called on a national or regional basis?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): 1. Present plans are to request bids for the four Royal Canadian Navy helicopter destroyers during the first quarter of 1967.

2. It is planned to call tenders on a national basis in accordance with the shipbuilding procurement policy announced by the government on July 19th, 1965.

ASSISTANCE FOR MENTALLY RETARDED TRAINING CENTRES

Question No. 507—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

Has the government received representations from the Ontario Association for the Mentally Retarded, requesting greater federal aid and support for adult training centres and, if so, what action is proposed, and what reply has been made?

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Yes, the government received a letter from the Ontario association for the mentally retarded in which they requested information about additional financial support that the government might make available to adult training centres for mentallly retarded in co-operation with the provinces. The letter was acknowledged and received essentially the same reply as I gave in the house recently, that the government is giving consideration to various ways by which additional assistance may be provided for rehabilitation of the mentally and physically disabled.

POWER GRID BETWEEN MARITIMES AND NEW ENGLAND STATES

Question No. 519—Mr. Coates:

1. Have any negotiations been carried out by the federal government, or any of its agencies, with the government of the United States, or any of its agencies, related to the development of a power grid between the maritime provinces and the New England states of the United States?

2. If such negotiations have been carried out, what is the state of these negotiations at the present time?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. No. In an exchange of notes dated December 18, 1965 between myself and the United States ambassador in Ottawa providing for the opening of negotiations on the co-operative development of the Saint John river, it was agreed that the Governments of Canada and the United States would continue their studies of the benefits of interconnected operation of the power systems of New England and the maritime power pool. A copy of this exchange of notes was tabled in the house on February 9.

2. Answered by (1).

*CYPRUS—ROTATION OF CANADIAN TROOPS

Question No. 526—Mr. MacEwan:

1. Will Canada continue to supply troops for the United Nations peace keeping operation in Cyprus beyond March 26, 1966?

2. If so, when will rotation of the present troops be carried out?

3. What units will replace the present units there, namely, the 2nd battalion Canadian Guards and the RECCE squadron of the Royal Canadian Dragoons?

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the answer to this question is as follows:

1. The security council of the United Nations on December 17 extended the mandate of the United Nations force in Cyprus for a period of three months ending March 26, 1966. It is expected that the security council will meet before that date to consider whether to extend the force for a further period. If the security council should decide to do so and if the Secretary General of the United Nations requests Canada to continue its participation in the force the government will take a decision on such a request in the light of all the circumstances existing at that time.

2. If the security council should extend the force after March 26 and the government should decide to continue Canadian participation in the force, the rotation of Canadian troops would be expected to take place between April 2 and April 16, when the contingent at present on Cyprus would be due to return to Canada.

3. If the force should continue to exist after March 26 and the government should decide to continue to contribute a Canadian contingent similar in size and composition to the present one, the second battalion, Canadian Guards, would be replaced by the second battalion, the Black Watch (Royal Highland Regiment) of Canada and the reconnaissance squadron, Royal Canadian Dragoons by B reconnaissance squadron, 8th Canadian Hussars.

WINTER CONSTRUCTION BONUS FOR HOME EXTENSION

Question No. 580—Mr. Lefebvre:

1. Will the government study the possibility of granting the winter home construction bonus of $500 to home owners who extend their homes, bearing in mind that only one bonus will be paid per home?

2. Has a study been made by the government to consider the effect of granting such bonus to small home owners who wish to enlarge their homes and, if so, what is the result of any such study?

Mr. B. S. Mackasey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): 1. Yes. The feasibility of providing a financial incentive for home improvements including extensions to existing homes when carried out during the winter months is a matter which has been receiving continuous consideration and will receive further study.

2. Yes, as indicated in the reply to No. 1. A considerable portion of home improvements cover indoor work which involve no additional costs by reason of winter construction. Consequently the need for a financial incentive requires careful consideration. Under the winter employment campaign home owners are encouraged to carry out home improvement projects during the winter through the use of home improvement loans. These efforts have been successful in shifting a large volume of home improvements from the summer to winter.

CABINET MEETINGS, NOVEMBER-DECEMBER 1965

Question No. 588—Mr. Korchinski:

How many cabinet meetings were held each week commencing November 14, 1965, to December 18, 1965?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): The arrangements made for meetings of the cabinet for the discharge of the business for which it is collectively responsible are not customarily disclosed.

POST OFFICE CONSTRUCTION, DARTMOUTH AND UPPER MUSQUODOBOIT, N.S.

Question No. 608—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Has the government under consideration the expansion of the present post office in the city of Dartmouth?

2. Has the government considered the matter of a new post office to serve Upper Musquodoboit and, if so, what decision has been reached?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): 1. At this time the Post Office Department has no plans for expanding the post office at Dartmouth, N.S., although a complete review of postal facilities is being undertaken.

2. The post office at Upper Musquodoboit, N.S. is in the category of offices where the postmaster is normally responsible for the provision of suitable accommodation as a condition of employment. There are no plans for the construction of a post office building as this location is not in an area designated by the Department of Labour as one of high winter unemployment.

TOBACCO RESEARCH

Question No. 611—Mr. Honey:

1. What steps, if any, have been taken to establish and develop a program of market research for the Canadian tobacco industry as recommended by the standing committee on agriculture and colonization in its report dated August 12, 1964?

[Mr. Mackasey.]

2. What amounts have been spent for tobacco production research in Canada in each of the years 1955 to 1965, inclusive?

3. What steps, if any, have been taken in the field of research directed to the development of a milder cigar tobacco and a more acceptable pipe tobacco as recommended by the standing committee on agriculture and colonization in its report dated August 12, 1964?

4. Are there any vacanies at the present time in the establishment of the experimental farm at L'Assomption, Quebec, and, if so, which positions are now vacant?

5. Have any steps been taken to establish a research advisory committee as recommended by the standing committee on agriculture and colonization in its report dated August 12, 1964?

6. What enlargements or improvements, if any, have been made to the tobacco experimental station at Delhi, Ontario, in the years 1964, 1965, and 1966, what was the cost of any such enlargement or improvement and what further enlargements or improvements, if any, are planned for the said tobacco experimental station?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): 1. There are no formal market research studies relating to the Canadian tobacco industry under way in the Canada Department of Agriculture, but a continuing watch is maintained on developments in this industry and departmental situation and outlook reports dealing with production, price and marketing developments in the tobacco industry in Canada and foreign markets are prepared and published regularly.

The Department of Trade and Commerce collects and disseminates information on world tobacco production, consumption, export and import trade to serve the tobacco industry in the development of export trade. The department maintains close contact with all segments of the tobacco industry, particularly the growers organizations and the tobacco exporting companies. In connection with export promotion and market research the Department of Trade and Commerce has also participated in the formation of an industry wide group to be known as the Canadian tobacco export council and has agreed to supply all of the tobacco marketing information which may be required by this industry group as it becomes actively involved in export promotion. The department appointed in January 1965 a commodity officer who is exclusively responsible for serving the needs of the tobacco industry in relation to export market research and trade promotion.

2. Cost of tobacco production research

1955-56	355,129
1956-57	324,112
1957-58	372,336
1958-59	362,373
1959-60	360,448
1960-61	403,368
1961-62	477,385
1962-63	473,421
1963-64	447,051
1964-65	575,414
1965-66 (estimate)	490,033
	$4,926,097

3. For many years, research at L'Assomption, Quebec, has been directed toward the development of varieties of cigar filler tobacco possessing milder smoking qualities. A new variety, named Ottawa 705, was released to Quebec growers in 1965. A plant breeder was added to L'Assomption staff in 1964 to increase the effort in breeding milder cigar tobaccos. A chemist was added to L'Assomption in 1965 to assist in this work.

Research at L'Assomption has also brought forth new cultural methods which are of great importance in producing mild cigar leaf. The new recommendations were released to growers in 1964.

The recommendation on pipe tobacco, made by the standing committee on agriculture and colonization, was considered carefully. Since the qualities of pipe mxitures depend greatly upon processes developed by manufacturers, and since burley and flue-cured tobaccos are used in varying quantities in pipe mixtures, in addition to pipe tobaccos, and since acreage planted to varieties designated as pipe tobacco is very small in Canada and not likely to be increased, it was not considered practical to devote additional effort to developing pipe tobacco varieties at the expense of the flue cured, burley and cigar types. If better pipe tobaccos are to be made from Canadian tobacco, it is a manufacturing problem and not necessarily a research problem at the agricultural production level. As stated in the report of the Standing Committee, research in the manufacturing field is chiefly the responsibility of the companies concerned.

4. There are no vacancies in professional staff at the experimental farm, L'Assomption, Quebec at present.

5. Yes. Preliminary discussions have been held. The subject will be further reviewed at the next meeting of the research section of the Canadian agricultural services co-ordinating committee in April 1966.

6. Improvements to the experimental farm at Delhi are as follows:

1964-65—Site development survey	$ 655
Extension of chemical laboratory	5,503
Purchase of land	75,000
1965-66—Converted cottage to entomological laboratory	$ 4,000
Fit up laboratory in office building	4,350
Air conditioning greenhouse	1,600
Underground irrigation line	6,888
Fencing	500
Projected but not begun:
Flue chamber building	$110,000
Air conditioning—physical laboratory	8,000
Headerhouse	600,000
Greenhouse	100,000

POST OFFICE CONSTRUCTION

Question No. 623—Mr. Webb:

1. How many post offices have been constructed, or construction started, in the years 1963, 1964 and 1965?

2. What is the number of post offices constructed, or construction started, in these years in each province?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): 1. 526.

AMHERST, N.S., POST OFFICE

Question No. 624—Mr. Coates:

1. How much additional space will be provided with the proposed enlargement of the Amherst post office?

2. Will public tenders be called to carry out the improvements and, if so, when will these tenders be called and how long will the proposed enlargement take?

3. Does the plan contain an improved method of entrance for patrons of the post office?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): 1. Approximately 1200 square feet net.

2. Yes, during the 1967-68 fiscal year. The period of enlargement is not yet known.

3. The plans have not yet been completed.

HOUSE TO HOUSE MAIL DELIVERY, SPRINGHILL, N.S.

Question No. 625—Mr. Coates:

1. Does the town of Springhill qualify for house to house mail delivery and, if not, for what reason?

2. How many towns have been selected for this type of delivery in the past six months and what is the population of each town selected?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): 1. The town of Springhill N.S., does not qualify for house to house mail delivery because it does not have the 2,000 available points of call required for the establishment of this type of postal service.

2. Letter carrier delivery service has been established in 3 communities during the past 6 months. Nineteen additional communities at which this type of delivery has been authorized will receive service when 80% of the homes are equipped with the necessary mail receiving facilities. The Post Office Department does not maintain population figures for the communities involved since the establishment of letter carrier delivery service is based on the availability of 2,000 points of call in a compact, well built-up area.

NEW VOCATIONAL SCHOOLS

Question No. 643—Mr. Starr:

1. How many new vocational schools or additions have been approved under the amended Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act from June 1, 1961, to date?

3. What is the total cost of these projects?

4. What is the federal government's share of the cost?

5. How many new technical schools or additions have been approved under the amended Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act from January 1, 1965, to date?

6. What student capacity has been added in the period January 1, 1965, to date?

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): 1. 880 new vocational schools and additions have been approved April 1, 1961 to January 31, 1966.

2. 337,878 new student places have been provided under the Technical and Vocational Training Act, April 1, 1961 to January 31, 1966.

3. Total cost of approved projects, $1,054,195,238, April 1, 1961 to January 31, 1966.

4. Federal share of approved projects, $598,507,015, April 1, 1961 to January 31. 1966.

5. 228 new technical schools and additions were approved in the period January 1, 1965 to January 31, 1966.

6. 140,622 additional student places have been added in the period January 1, 1965 to January 31, 1966.

MUNICIPAL WINTER WORKS PROGRAM

Question No. 647—Mr. Starr:

1. How many applications under the municipal winter works program have been received during the current winter from the starting date to January 31, 1966?

2. How many were received last winter in the same period?

3. How many of the applications were accepted in that period under the (a) 1964-65 program (b) 1965-66 program?

4. What was the estimated number of men to be hired during the period to January 31 in (a) 1964-65 (b) 1965-66?

5. What was the number of participating municipalities or local authorities to January 31 in (a) 1964-65 (b) 1965-66?

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): 1. 5,165.

2. 5,393.

3. (a) 5,254; (b) 5,106.

4. (a) 140,128; (b) 139,318.

5. (a) 2,348; (b) 2,290.

VETERANS AFFAIRS LAND PURCHASE, ST. ELEANORS, P.E.I.

Question No. 652—Mr. Douglas:

1. Has land been purchased since January 1, 1965, by or for the Department of Veterans Affairs at St. Eleanors, Prince county, Prince Edward Island?

2. How was the land purchased?

3. Who was the land purchased from?

4. How many acres of land were involved and what was the purchase price per acre?

5. What is the purpose for which this land is to be used?

6. Will any of this land be made available for purchase by veterans?

7. If so, what will be the selling price per acre?

8. How many houses have been built for veterans by or for the Department of Veterans Affairs or any of its agencies in each of the years 1961, 1962, 1963, 1964 and 1965 at St. Eleanors, Prince county, Prince Edward Island?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1. Yes.

2. The director follows the usual practice of purchase by negotiation.

3. M.C.L. Development Corporation, Summerside, P.E.I.

4. 6.7 acres subdivided and serviced with sewer and water at $2,164.20 per acre.

5. For assembly into thirteen half acre lots for resale to qualified veterans under the provisions of the Veterans' Land Act.

6. Yes. It will all be resold to veterans.

7. Approximately $2,165 per acre. No more than one half acre lot will be sold to a veteran. Price per serviced half acre lot will be approximately $1,100.

8. 1961, three houses; 1962, 1 house; 1963-64-65, no new house construction.

INCOME TAX EXEMPTION ON TOOL DEPRECIATION

Question No. 657—Mr. Hamilton:

Has the Minister of Finance received any representations for depreciation allowance as an exemption from income tax on the tools of (a) automobile mechanics (b) plumbers (c) carpenters?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): In August 1965 the National Automotive Trades Asociation made a representation requesting that the cost of tools purchased and used by mechanics in the course of their work be deductible as an expense in computation of the personal income tax of the mechanic.

Some individuals in letters to the Minister of Finance have suggested that amounts spent for tradesmen's tools be deductible for income tax purposes.

Questions

POST OFFICE CHARGE FOR FRANKING PRIVILEGES

Question No. 658—Mr. Webb:

What was the post office charge for revenue purposes for the franking privileges covering parliamentary and departmental mail in the following years: 1959-60, 1961, 1962, 1963, 1964 and 1965?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): The Post Office Department determines the value of the franking privileges covering parliamentary and departmental mail but there is no actual payment made to the Post Office Department. The value of this service to each department is included in a list which shows the approximate value of major services not included in the estimates. The total amount is as follows:

Fiscal Year	Amount
1959-60	$6,201,000
1960-61	$5,200,000
1961-62	$5,227,000
1962-63	$5,676,000
1963-64	$5,500,000

KERWOOD, ONT., POSTMASTERS

Question No. 660—Mr. Thomas (Middlesex West):

What were the names of all postmasters at the Kerwood (or Kerrwood), Ontario, post office in Middlesex county, from its inception to the year 1900, with the period for which each served?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): The post office was established on February 1, 1861 under the name of Kerrwood. The name was changed to Kerwood in 1950.

Postmasters J. H. Thomas, February 1, 1861 to September 30, 1866; James Irving, October 1, 1866 to March 31, 1875; Charles Foster, April 1, 1875 to June 30, 1888; John C. Jury, July 1, 1888 to January 31, 1896; Jos. B. Denning, February 1, 1896 to November 22, 1898; Alfred Rogers, November 23, 1898 to January 18, 1934.

CF-100 AND SABRE JET AIRCRAFT—ORENDA ENGINES

Question No. 674—Mr. Hales:

1. How many CF-100 and Sabre jet aircraft were in use by the Department of National Defence as of December 31, 1965?

2. How many Orenda jet engines were left in stock for replacement purposes after the sale of the 65 engines to Crown Assets Disposal Corporation at the close of the calendar year, 1965?

Questions

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): 1. 28 and 24 respectively.

2. 346.

*EXCISE TAX ON JEWELLERY PRODUCTS

Question No. 676—Mr. Irvine:

1. Was representation made by the Canadian Jewellers Association on or about January 27, 1966, with regard to the special excise tax on jewellery products?

2. If so, what were the results of these representations?

3. Is consideration to be given to this association by way of part or total removal of this tax?

[Translation]

Mr. Jean Chrétien (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question is yes. With regard to the second and third parts, representations asking that this tax be removed, as well as representations on a wide range of other tax subjects, are being studied during the preparation of the budget.

*PURCHASES FROM WHEAT BOARD BY DEALERS

Question No. 681—Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. How many grain merchants or dealers purchased wheat from the wheat board since the 1st day of January, 1965?

2. What are the names of such purchasers and the respective dates and amounts of such purchases?

Mr. Bruce S. Beer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, question 681 is divided into two parts. One answer is provided.

The Canadian Wheat Board advises that it is not its policy to disclose the competitive position of grain companies with regard to their transactions with the board. Furthermore, to reveal the information requested would in the opinion of the board be prejudicial to its marketing operations.

CENTRE FOR PERFORMING ARTS, OTTAWA

Question No. 682—Mr. Aiken:

1. When is the Ottawa centre for the performing arts now expected to be completed and ready for performances?

2. What was the original estimated cost for the centre?

3. What has been the cost of the construction to date?

4. What is the current estimate as to how much this centre will finally cost in total?

[Mr. Hales.]

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): 1. April 1969.

2. The original cost estimate was $18.2 million.

3. The cost of construction to date is $3,815,-500.

4. It is not customary to reveal estimated cost before tenders are called.

*COMMUNICATION WITH U.S. ARMY AGENCY

Question No. 689—Mr. Fulton:

Has the Secretary of State for External Affairs or any official of the department had any communication with any official of the government of the United States concerning any proposed activities to be carried out in Canada by, or under the direction of, the special operations research office of American University, an agency under contract to the United States Department of the Army and, if so, what was the nature of the communication?

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the answer on behalf of the minister is as follows:

I have had no communication with any official of the government of the United States about any proposed activities to be carried out in Canada by or under the direction of the special operation research office of American University, and inquiries I have had made indicate that no official of my department has at any time received any proposal concerning such activities by American University from any official of the government of the United States.

INTEGRATION OF CADET CORPS

Question No. 691—Mr. MacRae:

1. Is it the intention to integrate the cadet corps of the navy, army and air force?

2. If so, when is this policy expected to be implemented?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): 1 and 2.

The Royal Canadian Sea Cadet Corps, the Royal Canadian Army Cadets and the Royal Canadian Air Cadets operate under a partnership between the Canadian forces and the civilian sponsors of the corps. The integration of the Canadian forces and the establishment of an integrated directorate of cadets at Canadian forces headquarters will probably result in some adjustments to this partnership and the whole matter is now under study.

POST OFFICE FACILITIES, MEATH PARK, SASK.

Question No. 699—Mr. Douglas:

1. When was the last inspection made of the physical facilities of the post office in Meath Park, Saskatchewan?

2. Were any recommendations contained in this inspection report and, if so, what were they?

3. Have any requests been made for the construction of a new post office in Meath Park and, if so, who made the requests?

4. Is it the intention of the government to build a new post office at Meath Park?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): 1. September 15, 1965.

2. No.

3. Yes. On January 22nd, 1964, village of Meath Park, A. E. Semchuk, overseer, Peter J. Kyle, secretary treasurer. A request was also received on February 16th, 1966 from the council of the village of Meath Park, Peter J. Kyle, secretary treasurer.

4. No. Meath Park is in a group where it is the responsibility of the postmaster to furnish adequate and suitable accommodation. However, we are having the district director, Saskatoon, inquire into the suitability of the present quarters.

FARM MACHINERY—COST AND VALUE

Question No. 700—Mr. Korchinski:

1. Using the base period of 1949, what was the index of the cost of farm machinery each year to date?

2. Since 1949, what was the total value of all farm machinery sold in Canada in each year to date?

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Trade and Commerce): 1. Index numbers of prices paid by farmers for farm machinery Canada—1949-1965 (1949=100): 1949, 100.0; 1950, 104.3; 1951, 118.0; 1952, 123.4; 1953, 124.3; 1954, 125.0; 1955, 125.6; 1956, 132.3; 1957, 141.4; 1958, 149.1; 1959, 156.5; 1960, 160.1; 1961, 164.7; 1962, 169.4; 1963, 172.4; 1964, 176.6; 1965, 180.0.

2. Farm implement and equipment sales (including repair parts), Canada, 1949-1964 (value at wholesale prices): 1949, $245,194,190; 1950, $248,049,154; 1951, $264,393,214; 1952, $281,509,187; 1953, $269,869,172; 1954, $174,038,491; 1955, $181,576,398; 1956, $202,592,127; 1957, $183,721,649; 1958, $205,993,039; 1959, $251,118,817; 1960, $258,777,808; 1961, $241,420,086; 1962, $282,676,676; 1963, $337,561,595; 1964, $380,132,718; 1965, $424,270,000 (estimate only).

FARM STATISTICS

Question No. 702—Mr. Korchinski:

1. In each year since 1949, how many farmers were there in each of the provinces of Canada?

2. In each of the years 1950, 1955, 1960 and 1965 (a) what was the average size of farms in each of the provinces (b) what was the total capitalization of each farm?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): 1 and 2. Information requested is not available for the years specified. According to the censuses of Canada, data available are as follows:

The number of farmers, stockraisers, farm managers and foremen, by province, 1951 and 1961:

INCOME TAX DEDUCTION OF RESIDENTIAL TAXES

Question No. 707—Mr. Irvine:

1. Is it the intention of the government to introduce legislation to permit municipal taxes on owner-occupied residential properties as a deduction on federal income tax returns?

2. If not, is there any justification in what would appear to be double taxation?

3. If so, can this legislation be anticipated during the current session of parliament?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): This question concerns budget policy. If the government proposes any change in the income tax law it will be announced when the budget is presented.

ARMY "CALL-OUTS" RELEASED FROM SERVICE

Question No. 709—Mr. Irvine:

1. Have all Canadian army "call-outs" been released from service and, if not, how many are still on strength?

[Mr. Winters.]

2. What benefits were awarded those who have been released or struck off strength?

3. What annual or other leave was granted at the time of release?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): 1. No, as of 1 February, 1966, 253.

2. and 3. As a result of the reorganization of the militia in 1964-65, militia personnel who had been on full time employment in militia orderly rooms and quartermasters' stores were granted 30 days special leave on cessation of employment, in addition to the normal annual leave entitlement of 2½ days per month of employment. They were also given 90 days notice of cessation of employment.

RECREATION PROGRAM, P.E.I. PARK

Question No. 733—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. What were the reasons for the removal of the recreation hall at the Cavendish area of the P.E.I. national park?

2. To what use was it put in the 1965 season?

3. What organizations or individuals have protested this move?

4. What recreation program is to be carried out in the P.E.I. park this summer?

5. What personnel will be responsible for this program?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): 1. The recreation hall at Cavendish in Prince Edward Island national park was erected in 1950 to provide a centre for recreation and the entertainment of park visitors. At that time, overnight camping and picnicking were permitted at Cavendish beach near the junction of Cawnpore lane and the Gulf Shore Road. Activities carried on under a recreational director included film showings, square and round dances, camp fires and sing-songs and a daytime program for children, including games.

With the development of a new campground at New London bay and the termination of camping at the Cavendish beach site, a recreation hall at that location had outlived its original purpose, and in the latter years of its operation, the evening programs were frequently interrupted by rowdyism and special policing measures were necessary. These disturbances were mainly related to the attendance of persons from points some distance from the park. Furthermore, the officer in charge of recreational programs in 1963 received requests to curtail or rearrange the dates of dances so as to not conflict with those held by organizations located in communities adjacent to but outside the park. These included the Rustico recreational committee, New Glasgow junior farmers, and Stanley Bridge Hall committee.

Following the development of a national park interpretation and the appointment of a seasonal park naturalist, the former recreation program at Cavendish beach was discontinued. The park interpretation program is directed principally from the Dalvay region which contains the park headquarters. Activities are carried on in both the Dalvay and Cavendish areas with emphasis on attracting the park campground populations.

With the change in the park emphasis to an appreciation of the natural features of the park, and the appointment of a park naturalist to develop a new program, the recreation hall was relocated from the congested area at Cavendish beach to the new Cavendish camp ground. It seems that the recreational function that the hall served in its previous location can best be carried out by private enterprise outside the national park.

2. As a centre for the park naturalist's interpretation programs including lectures and films in inclement weather and as a focal point for the commencement of conducted trail outings.

3. The Honourable J. Watson MacNaught, Summerside, P.E.I., Mr. John C. Mullally, Souris, P.E.I., Mr. R. S. Humphreys and the Cavendish Resort Association.

4. An interpretative program is being carried out in the park this summer. Primarily educational, this program is also recreational in character. It endeavours to show and present to the public points of interest, gives facts of natural history that the public might not otherwise know about, and provides recreation, educational and informal instruction to the park visitors giving a better understanding not only of the park and its natural features but also of the purpose which the park serves. It consists of talks accompanied by films, conducted trips and a self-guiding interpretative trail.

5. The park naturalist.

DIVISION OF BUDGET EXPENDITURES

Question No. 736—Mr. Godin:

What is the percentage of the total Canadian budget spent on (a) family allowances (b) debt charges (c) defence production (d) national defence?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance):

	Fiscal year ended March 31, 1965 Per Cent
Total budgetary expenditure	100.0
(a) Family allowances	7.6
(b) Public debt charges	14.6
(c) Defence production (excluding non-defence expenditure)	.3
(d) National Defence	21.3

UNCLAIMED TAX DEDUCTIONS

Question No. 742—Mr. Dionne:

1. What was the amount of taxes deducted at the source under the Income Tax Act which Canadian tax-payers did not claim in 1963-64?

2. What is the procedure followed by the Minister of National Revenue with regard to the utilization of the amounts deducted at the source under the Income Tax Act which remain unclaimed?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue): 1. For the taxation year ending in the 1963-64 fiscal year, deductions at source from salaries and wages for taxes under the Income Tax Act and the Old Age Security Act which remain unclaimed by taxpayers amount to $45,871,907.74. This does not include deductions at source under the nine provincial income tax statutes administered by the Department of National Revenue which remain unclaimed. The amount of deductions at source remaining unclaimed for the same period in respect of these provincial statutes is $6,273,563.96.

2. Unclaimed deductions at source under the Income Tax Act and the Old Age Security Act are included in consolidated revenue. Unclaimed deductions at source under the provincial statutes are paid to the respective provinces pursuant to the tax collection agreements with these provinces.

DRAFTSMAN'S TRADES, AIR FORCE AND ARMY

Question No. 755—Mr. Madill:

1. Will the draftsman's trade A.E.M., R.C.A.F. disappear with the integration of the armed services?

2. Will the draftsman's trade R.E.M.E. of the army trade disappear with integration of the armed services?

3. Will civilian tradesmen be hired for this work if these trades are removed from the R.C.A.F. and army?

Questions

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): 1, 2 and 3. The functions of the air force trade of draftsman aeronautical, electrical and mechanical, and the Army trade of draftsman electrical and mechanical (RCEME) will continue to be a requirement in the Canadian forces.

Studies are being conducted to determine whether these duties should be performed by service personnel and whether to have a single unified trade called draftsman. Within this trade, men would be specialized in specific fields of aeronautical or electrical and mechanical drafting.

TAX EXEMPTION OF MUNICIPAL COUNCILLORS

Question No. 768—Mr. Saltsman:

1. Has the Minister of National Revenue received representations from the Ontario municipal association requesting increased tax exemption on remuneration paid to municipal councillors?

2. If so, what action is contemplated by the minister with respect to this request?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue): 1. Yes.

2. It has been referred to the honourable the Minister of Finance for consideration in the course of preparing for the budget.

GOVERNMENT ANNUITIES BRANCH

Question No. 784—Mr. McCutcheon:

1. What dollar volume of new business was placed on the books by the government annuities branch in 1960, 1961, 1962, 1963, 1964 and 1965?

2. What is the annual cost to taxpayers for operation of this branch in the years mentioned?

3. How many persons in Canada are receiving annuity payments from the government annuities branch?

Mr. B. S. Mackasey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour):

Fiscal Year	Value at Maturity of annuity
1960-61	$177,134,000
1961-62	140,151,000
1962-63	89,413,000
1963-64	67,160,000
1964-65	58,846,000
1965-66	56,580,000 (estimated)

2.

Fiscal Year
1960-61	$ 1,161,924
1961-62	1,191,114
1962-63	1,199,387
1963-64	1,159,096
1964-65	1,207,143
1965-66	1,150,000 (estimated)

3. As at March 31, 1965, 93,342 annuities were being paid.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

RIDING MOUNTAIN NATIONAL PARK

Question No. 364—Mr. Mandziuk:

1. Has the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources purchased farm land from the resident farmers south of the Riding Mountain national park since 1957?

2. If so, what is the legal description of each parcel, the date of purchase, consideration paid, and the name of each vendor?

3. What are the reasons for these purchases?

4. What annual grants has the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources paid to the resident administrator since 1957 as compensation for the loss of tax revenue to the municipality?

5. What portion, if any, of the said grant is earmarked for school purposes?

6. How long will these grants be continued?

Return tabled.

RECLASSIFICATION OF LABOUR DEPARTMENT STAFF

Question No. 385—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Were any members of the staff of the Department of Labour reclassified, during 1964, 1965 and 1966 to date, following a study of their duties and performances?

2. If so (a) how many persons were so classified in each branch of the said department (b) were members of the staff of the National Employment Service required to qualify by written test for reclassification and for what reason?

3. Were any protestations from the staff of the NES received during 1965 by the Department of Labour or any official thereof concerning the requirement to write a qualifying examination to determine eligibility to enter the employment service officer class and, if so, what were these recommendations, to whom were they made, and what action, if any, was taken thereon?

Return tabled.

Mr. Speaker: The remaining questions stand.

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, before we allow the remainder of the questions to stand I should like to draw your attention to question No. 5 which has been standing on the order paper since the first day of the session.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. Coates: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member should so state when he rises.

Mr. Coates: Question No. 5 has been on the order paper since January 18, the day this session began. It is not a complicated or difficult question. Question No. 163 has been on the order paper since January 21; question No. 210 has been on the order paper since January 24. All these questions should have been answered far sooner than March of this year. I urge that the government provide us with answers as quickly as possible.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I also rise on a question of privilege arising out of the answer to question No. 681, in which I asked how many grain merchants or dealers purchased wheat from the wheat board since January 1, 1965 and what were the names of such purchasers. The reason of the wheat board for refusing to give this information is one that is untenable. Parliament has a right to this information which in no way reveals the competitive situation of the several merchants but it will reveal facts that ought to be known by the Canadian people.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, notice of motion No. 95 is acceptable to the government.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house that notice of motion No. 95 be passed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Carried.

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Speaker, notices of motions Nos. 96, 98 and 99 are acceptable to the government, subject to the usual reservations regarding classified documents and subject to the approval of the provincial authorities concerned. I would ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining notices of motions stand.

[English]

Motion No. 95—Mr. Orlikow:

ADMISSION TO CANADA OF FOREIGN DOCTORS

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all correspondence during the past three years between the federal government and the Canadian Medical Association, the Ontario Medical Association, the Ontario College of Physicians and Surgeons, or any other organization representing the medical profession, regarding the admission of foreign doctors to Canada and the standards of their education which might affect their right to practice medicine in Canada or any of the provinces.

Motion agreed to.

GARIBALDI PARK, B.C.

Motion No. 96—Mr. Douglas:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence and other documents between the federal Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources and the federal Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys and the Minister of Recreation for British Columbia since April 8, 1963, concerning Garibaldi park in British Columbia becoming a national park.

Motion agreed to.

OTTAWA-HULL BRIDGE ACROSS LEMIEUX ISLAND

Motion No. 98—Mr. Caron:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence exchanged between the federal government and the governments of Ontario and Quebec, with regard to the proposed construction of a bridge from Hull to Ottawa, across Lemieux island.

Motion agreed to.

DEVELOPMENT OF HIGHWAYS 8 AND 11, HULL

Motion No. 99—Mr. Caron:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence or communications exchanged between the federal government, the Department of Public Works, the national capital commission and the Premier of Quebec, the minister of public works of Quebec or any government body, with regard to the development of highways Nos. 8 and 11 to Hull.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): May I ask, in connection with notice of motion No. 21 that this be transferred for debate? I asked the question in January and it still appears in March.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Order; it has to be called before the hon. member can ask that it be transferred for debate.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST FOR ROYAL COMMISSION TO INVESTIGATE ORGANIZED CRIME

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to direct the attention of the Prime Minister to a request made to him yesterday in an appeal by the Minister of Justice of the province of Quebec, asking for the appointment of a royal commission on organized crime. In dealing with the state of emergency during the course of his statement he said that the crime lords of Canada are known but there must be full co-operation if their nefarious wrongdoing is to be made known, and only through a royal commission would it be possible to ferret out the serious infiltration of these crime lords into Canadian life.

I ask this question of the Prime Minister because this further statement by a reliable man such as the Minister of Justice of Quebec indicates what the condition is. What does the Prime Minister intend to do about setting up a commission of federal and provincial representatives?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I said in reply to a similar question by my right hon. friend the other day that the matter would be considered by the government. Such preliminary consideration was given at our meeting of cabinet on Tuesday, at which unfortunately the Minister of Justice was not able to be present. This consideration will be continued tomorrow at cabinet when the Minister of Justice will be present, and when a decision is reached it will be announced in the house.

[Later:]

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. In the light of the increasing demand for a thorough study of crime in Canada, is the government considering issuing, perhaps, a white paper that will report on the situation with respect to crime and security in this country, so the general public can at least have some knowledge and some assurance that this particularly important aspect of our society will be looked into properly?

[Mr. Cowan.]

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to consider that suggestion. However, I ought to remind my hon. friend that not many weeks ago a conference was held between the attorneys general of the provinces and the federal government on this very subject, at the end of which a statement was issued. I shall be glad to see if a supplementary white paper could be of value and of some use.

Mr. Thompson: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does not the Prime Minister believe that the very outcome of the conference with the attorneys general of the provinces would be the basis for such a report?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is put in the form of a debate. The hon. member asks whether the Prime Minister believes this or something else. I suggest that that question is not properly worded.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ALLOCATION OF TIME FOR DISCUSSION OF ESTIMATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister or the government house leader. In view of the understanding that when the present estimates are disposed of a supply motion will be brought in to open up ten departments, and these departmental estimates will then be sent to the various committees, I want to ask whether consideration would be given to having a meeting of house leaders with a view to allocating time so we could clear up all the present estimates by the end of Friday's sitting. It seems to me this would be possible if some allocation of time could be arranged. We would be agreeable to such an arrangement.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am very grateful for the suggestion which has been made by the hon. member, and I will certainly be glad to convene a meeting of the house leaders.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order in regard to the matter which has now been raised. The Conservative opposition in the House of Commons has made at least two suggestions as to how best—

Mr. Pearson: Oh.

Mr. Starr: The Prime Minister need not say "Oh!"; all he has to do is confer with the house leader, who will verify the fact that we have brought forward certain suggestions which have facilitated the estimates of certain departments. We are willing to sit. This is how far away the Prime Minister is from keeping in touch with the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before we get into a debate on this matter I might remind hon. members that Wednesday is a short day with only 30 minutes allowed for questions. Therefore I doubt whether hon. members would want to spend 30 minutes, or a substantial part of it, discussing the matter which has been raised by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam. It may be that after we have completed the question period a point of order might be raised, and I suggest this would be the proper way to proceed.

Mr. Starr: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I want to say this about the remarks made by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam. It is the house leader of that party who has not been able to give firm commitments—

Mr. Lewis: Oh, come on.

Mr. Starr: That is right—in order to allocate time. That is the case.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, may I just thank my hon. friend for his ready agreement to the proposal that we should allocate time as a result of a meeting of the house leaders, which will facilitate introduction of the proposals which will be coming before the house after we get the estimates through.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, it is the house leader for the N.D.P. who does not speak for his members, and he should keep that in mind.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have been able to back up my commitments just as much as the hon. member for Ontario has been able to back up his, if not more so.

Mr. Starr: Far from it, and you know it.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, may I just take a moment or two of the question period to say that we had every evidence yesterday of excellent co-operation from the official opposition. I will be very happy to convene a meeting of the house leaders to see what can be done to best serve the interests of all hon. members of parliament so we will not only have a full discussion of the estimates, but with the secondary purpose in mind of trying to complete this year's estimates on Friday night.

I do not want to get into any discussion of what was said at house leaders' meetings, but I do want to make it clear that I am appreciative of the co-operation I have had from the leaders of all parties opposite.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, there was an excellent example of obstruction last night on the part of the N.D.P.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—DELEGATION PROTESTING CANADIAN SUPPORT OF U.S. POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, we are going to change the subject and revert to questions. My question is directed to the Prime Minister. Did the Prime Minister receive, yesterday or today, a delegation or representations from a group of professors and university students concerning the support the Canadian government is giving American military operations in Viet Nam? Is the Prime Minster in a position to tell us what answer he gave to such a delegation?

[English]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I did not receive this delegation. It was received by the Secretary of State for External Affairs this morning.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. Would the Secretary of State for External Affairs give us an answer?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I received the delegation this morning and considered its representations. I told the delegates we were doing everything in our power to promote negotiations as a member of the control commission. I hope that I have impressed the delegates.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put another question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs who said he impressed the delegation.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I hope so.

Mr. Caouette: The Secretary of State for External Affairs may not be aware that, according to some delegates, the delegation is in complete disagreement with the present attitude of the government toward Viet Nam.

[English]

[Later:]

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Though the Prime Minister informed us earlier that he had not received the delegation with regard to peace protests on Viet Nam, and since all of us I am sure have received a lengthy letter in this regard, with the recommendation that there should be a full debate—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member should put his question.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): Is the Prime Minister giving consideration to an immediate discussion of this matter in the external affairs committee?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, it is, of course, the right and privilege of any member of that committee to raise any subject for discussion, and I have no doubt this particular one will be raised.

VIET NAM—EFFORTS TO BRING ABOUT PEACE CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I was going to ask this a little earlier. Is the minister in a position to inform the house whether there has been any further progress in the attempts by himself and others to start discussions toward a conference on peace in Viet Nam?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think I can say there has been some progress. I cannot report that there has been any final agreement. There has been an indication by the government of India that it would be prepared to join with Canada in the use of the commission for the purpose which was discussed with the Secretary General of the United Nations. India has taken the position, and I think correctly, that before the commission can act it must have the agreement of all three member states.

The third member is seriously and sincerely engaged in discussions with us on this matter. All three countries are doing whatever they can, having in mind their respective obligations to other countries, to try to reach a decision which would place this instrument, which the Canadian government believes now to be a potentially effective instrument, in a position to bring the parties together in this regrettable dispute.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

REPORTED STATEMENT IN MONTREAL BY MINES MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): My question, Mr. Speaker, is directed to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys, and has to do with a speech he made in Montreal yesterday. As reported in Le Devoir he said that as far as he was concerned a written constitution is not worth the paper it is written on. Is that the view of the minister; and did he, in uttering those words which are quoted in several newspapers, express the views of the government in that regard?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, it is well recognized by constitutionalists all over the world that a written constitution is only one of many elements entering into the formation of the real constitutional system of any country. The British North America Act is only part of the Canadian constitutional system. The conventions of the constitution are important. Legal interpretation is also important. Ordinary laws with constitutional contents passed in this house are also important.

Mr. Diefenbaker: May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has some doubt whether the question was in order in the first place. Perhaps the answer was not in order either. There is a discussion of a constitutional point between the right hon. Leader of the Opposition and the minister. My understanding of the rules is that perhaps the right hon. Leader of the Opposition might ask the Prime Minister whether a statement made outside the house by the minister represents the policy of the government.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I asked the minister a question. I asked him whether he made such a preposterous statement, and his reply was not to answer the question. I ask him again. There is no other direct quotation in the statement except that the constitution is not worth the paper it is written on. Then the newspaper went on to say that the minister was going to resign unless he got what he wanted.

Mr. Pepin: I was not talking about that when I said I might resign, I was talking about bilingualism in the civil service.

Mr. Starr: You might end up in the salt mines.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO ASSISTANCE TO GOLD MINING INDUSTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In view of the recent announcement that the production of gold dropped by some 11 per cent in the last year, and in view of the announcement this morning that two more gold mines will be closed down with a third one to be closed in six months, will the minister tell the house whether the government has any plan or policy that is going to prevent the complete extinction of the gold mining industry in this country?

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that the hon. member is asking a question in very general terms, requiring a statement of general policy, which cannot be asked at this time.

TRADE

MATTERS TO BE DISCUSSED AT CANADA-U.S. MINISTERIAL MEETING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I was unable to find the occasion on yesterday's estimates to obtain an answer to a question I directed to the Minister of Finance on Tuesday. I wonder if I might be permitted to ask my question again. It deals with the agenda of the ministers' meetings at Washington, concerning the relations between the Securities Exchange Commission in the U.S. and the potential national securities exchange commission here, also the relationship between the federal power commission and the National Energy Board. Will these matters be on the agenda on this week end's meetings?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the first of the items mentioned by the hon. member will be on the agenda. At that meeting we shall be protesting against the extension of U.S. security regulations to Canada. We shall be pointing out to the United States authorities that arrangements are already in hand by the federal government to promote more adequate securities regulations in Canada. I believe these two questions are quite closely related, and so does the government.

With respect to the second item raised by the hon. member, that matter is not on the agenda.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question to the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker. Is it also the intention of the Canadian ministers who will be attending the conference in Washington to make any protests regarding some of the other aspects of the U.S. guide lines policy.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that there will be the fullest discussion of all these questions. I am sure the representatives of the U.S. cabinet who will be attending these meetings are very well aware indeed of Canadian views on this subject.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Speaker, I would like to seek additional information. Would the minister consider raising the second matter, possibly on an informal basis, with his counterpart in the U.S., with particular reference to the hearings now being held before the F.P.C. on the gas transmission line from the west to the east in Canada via the U.S.A. because I think this has implications concerning our national sovereignty.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, may I suggest to the hon. gentleman that I do not think an independent judicial tribunal in the United States would welcome intervention by the Canadian government, any more than we would welcome intervention by the United States government before a board like the National Energy Board, and I feel it would be inappropriate for us to raise that sort of question at this time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: About Canada's sovereignty?

Inquiries of the Ministry

[Later:]

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister of Finance a supplementary question with reference to the questions asked by the hon. members for Qu'Appelle and Burnaby-Coquitlam on United States guide lines. Is the minister aware that the Chrysler Corporation has announced plans to raise $15 million outside the United States, and is he aware whether any portion of this is going to be raised in Canada for the corporation's capital requirements outside Canada?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of these facts, but I shall be very happy to make inquiries.

MEMBERSHIP OF MISSION TO JAPAN AND KOREA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Moore (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce in connection with a news release from his department yesterday which stated:

> A seven man federal trade mission will leave Canada on March 11 to spend about two weeks promoting the sale of Canadian livestock, particularly Holstein-Friesians, in Japan and Korea.

Mr. Speaker: Order please. Would the hon. member put his question.

Mr. Moore: Yes. I notice that all the members of the mission were chosen from Ontario and Quebec. Why was there no representative from other parts of Canada, in particular western Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt if this question is in order at this time, because the hon. gentleman is dealing with something that has happened. I suggest he might place his protest on the order paper.

FISHERIES

BAY OF FUNDY—ALLEGED DISCRIMINATION AGAINST NOVA SCOTIA FISHERMEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. It arises out of an answer he gave yesterday to a question directed to him by the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan). In view of the minister's statement that all four Atlantic provinces are part of Canada, will the minister inform the house when the discriminatory regulation which denies the right of herring seiners to operate on the New Brunswick side of the bay of Fundy, on a year round basis, will be lifted?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, this question is very important to Nova Scotia and maritime fishermen in general, and I think the minister should answer.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question has not been put in a proper way. That is why it has not been accepted by the Chair.

Mr. Crouse: On a point of personal privilege, Mr. Speaker, the minister stated yesterday that all four Atlantic provinces are part of Canada. I ask the minister, when is he going to start treating all fishermen in the Atlantic provinces on an equal basis?

AIR TRANSPORT

REPORTED REDUCTION IN INTERCITY SERVICE IN WEST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. E. Pascoe (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Has the minister received a wire from the Regina Chamber of Commerce expressing concern at the report of possible discontinuance of intercity air service by TransAir; and will he assure the prairie cities of his intention to see that this air service, or some similar service, is continued?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question might be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Pascoe: With all respect to you, sir, this is a very pressing question to the people out there. It is something which is coming up very shortly. I gave the minister notice, and I think he should answer.

Mr. Speaker: Well, if the minister feels the question is of such urgency that it should not be placed on the order paper but answered now, certainly the Chair has no objection.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in this particular case since the hon. gentleman did me the courtesy of giving me notice I think I should answer. Further, I think this matter is urgent because there was a quite erroneous statement—I am not blaming anybody—in the press this morning about the matter.

It is true that the Air Transport Board has permitted TransAir to suspend the service between Yorkton and Saskatoon within the next ten days or so, but so far as an application for suspension of the rest of the prairie services is concerned, the board has decided to hold a hearing on this matter, and the services will not be suspended until a hearing has been held and a decision rendered.

INDUSTRY

AUTOMOBILES—REPORTED INCREASE IN IMPORTS FROM U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Industry. In view of the serious imbalance of trade between Canada and the United States, and the information just released today by the D.B.S. people stating that for the first nine months—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member cannot give an observation or information. He should ask for information by posing a question.

Mr. Hales: I will rephrase my question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the serious imbalance of trade between Canada and the United States, what steps does the minister propose to take to halt the fantastic rise in the importation of automobiles into Canada which took place during the first nine months of the operation of the free trade deal? The statistics show that the increase is 50 per cent.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): If I may give a very short answer—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest the hon. member should place his question on the order paper.

SPORTS

MONTREAL—ASSISTANCE IN GETTING 1972 OLYMPIC GAMES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare or his parliamentary secretary. Would the minister tell us whether the mayor of Montreal has requested assistance from the federal government in his attempt to obtain the 1972 Olympics for Montreal?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question should be placed on the order paper.

Inquiries of the Ministry

UNITED NATIONS

EAST GERMANY—CANADIAN ATTITUDE TOWARD MEMBERSHIP APPLICATION

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of yesterday's announcement that East Germany has applied for membership in the United Nations, could the minister say what will be the attitude of the Canadian Government toward that application?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter that would go first before the Security Council. Canada is not a member of the Security Council, so we would not now have the opportunity of expressing our judgment, but I suspect that, because there is no peace treaty, UN membership for East Germany is something we may not readily expect.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

GEORGE VICTOR SPENCER—REQUEST FOR JUDICIAL INQUIRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Justice whether he has received any recent communication from Victor Spencer which would constitute further evidence in support of a judicial hearing, as has been demanded by the opposition in this house?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Minister of Justice): No, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether he has received any recent communication from Victor Spencer which would constitute further evidence in support of a judicial hearing into this matter?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend will be disappointed when I say no.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this is supplementary to the question asked by the hon. member for Yukon, and is directed to the Prime Minister. During the course of the investigation and during the last few months has the government of Canada received a letter from Spencer setting forth his side of the case and, in that letter, giving a great deal of information?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the government of Canada has received a communication from Mr. Spencer, signed by him, explaining—

Mr. Nielsen: Exactly.

Mr. Pearson: This was many months ago—explaining the nature of his own improper conduct. The government also received a communication from Mr. Spencer some weeks ago—"To Whom It May Concern"—thanking the R.C.M.P. and others who have been with him during these difficult months for the courtesy and consideration he received.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, now having the interpretation of these two letters, I ask the Prime Minister to table them. Let us get the facts.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a supplementary question to the hon. Minister of Justice. Can he tell us if an hon. member has approached him with a view to meeting Mr. Spencer?

Mr. Cardin: No, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have just returned from Vancouver and I should like to ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Justice and the Prime Minister. I made inquiries of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in Vancouver from eleven o'clock Monday morning until five o'clock Monday afternoon. The Royal Canadian Mounted Police informed me they did not know where Mr. Spencer was. Will the Prime Minister or the Minister of Justice tell me whether they know where Mr. Spencer is?

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Speaker, if I may answer that question, I might say I understand that the hon. member for Vancouver East spoke to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police about seeing Mr. Spencer—

Mr. Winch: How did you know?

Mr. Cardin: —and that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police gave the member for Vancouver East the address of Mr. Spencer—I am sorry—gave Mr. Spencer the address of the hon. member for Vancouver East and said that if Mr. Spencer wanted to communicate with the hon. member for Vancouver East he was certainly free to do so.

There was also a further question. The hon. member for Vancouver East was advised that Mr. Spencer might in fact want to see him, and the hon. member said he was going to Ottawa and that if Mr. Spencer wanted to see him he should write him a letter.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. In what has just been stated by the minister you will have noticed how the minister had to correct himself. I was at no time given the address or a telephone number. All this is most important on my question of privilege. I telephoned the only place I thought I could phone, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, because I felt it was important to Mr. Spencer. For six hours I received no definitive answer.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member kindly resume his seat. I have to advise the hon. member that I do not think there is a question of privilege at all in what he is saying now. He asked a question of the minister and a reply was given. I do not see how the exchange could have given rise to a question of privilege in any way. If there are other facts which the hon. member feels give rise to a question of privilege it is not my intention to deny him the right to raise such a question, but certainly to this point there is nothing to indicate there is such a question.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps we might allow the hon. member for Vancouver East, who seems to think there are additional arguments to bring forward, the opportunity to do so, so the Chair can give the matter further thought.

Mr. Winch: I will do so right now, Mr. Speaker. This is a most important matter. The information given by the Minister of Justice is not correct in respect of my endeavours to get in contact with Mr. Spencer in Vancouver. I tried to get in contact with him at ten minutes to eleven on Monday morning. After going through sub-inspectors and sub-inspectors I finally received an answer at 14 minutes after five o'clock at which time I was told that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police were not able to get in touch with this man under surveillance to tell him that I wanted to see him. At 14 minutes after five o'clock on Monday I said "Will you then convey a message to him that I am trying to get in touch with him, because I am leaving for Ottawa at 9.15 tomorrow morning and he can contact me by phone or by mail". Sir, for six hours the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, having this man under surveillance, said they could not get in touch with him to convey my message.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There is still no question of privilege. The question period has expired.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Rinfret in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Administration—

1. Departmental administration, including the Canadian agricultural services co-ordinating committee, contributions to the commonwealth agricultural bureaux and a special contribution not exceeding $62,000 to the agricultural economics research council, subject to approval by the treasury board, $4,186,600.

Mr. Greene: Mr. Chairman, these being the first and I sincerely hope not the last estimates I shall have the honour to present before this committee I should like to say that as these estimates are the estimates of the past year I hope hon. members will not think it inappropriate if I do not have too much to say by way of an opening statement in respect of them. I am sure hon. members opposite are waiting with bated breath for my words of wisdom in this regard. I do think, however, that it might be best, in as much as these estimates are the estimates of the minister who preceded me, if I do not say too much in opening except to say I would be pleased to try to answer any questions which hon. members may have.

Very briefly in opening I think I should thank hon. members on both sides of the house for the great courtesy they have shown me since my appointment and for the help I have received on all sides of the house. I trust that during my tenure as minister we will be able, with the co-operation of members of the house, to evolve policies and measures which will be in the interests of the farm community generally.

I think we all rejoice in the fact of the good prices which generally have been enjoyed in the agricultural community in the past few months and in the past year. I know that this does not mean in any way that the job is done. It is far from being completed. I think there is still a great deal to be done. Certainly on the question of farm income, relative to that enjoyed in the industrial community in this period of boom and expansion there is a great deal yet to be accomplished.

I think the D.B.S. statistics, if I recollect them correctly, indicate that in the year 1951 farm income was of the same general level as industrial income. Today, I think probably by virtue of the great boom and expansion in the industrial community, farm income generally is now something like 30 per cent below the average income enjoyed by working men and women in the industrial community.

As long as this state of affairs exists I believe there is a great challenge to us who are interested in or responsible for the interests of the agricultural community generally. I hope that the government measures announced in the Throne Speech for the purpose of improving the situation will be efficacious and successful. I certainly pledge myself and the department to the end that this discrepancy will be removed. As hon. members know, the general policy of the government is to the effect that family farm incomes will be, through the use and application of effective measures, generally of the same proportion as incomes enjoyed in the industrial communities. In the past year or two the average industrial income has been somewhere between $4,500 to $5,000 per year. Certainly the policies of the government are geared to the end that the minimal income of the viable economic farm unit will be of the same measure, of the same nature and in the same economic bracket.

With those brief words, Mr. Chairman, and with the hope that our policies will be successful and that we will get the co-operation of the house, as I know we will, in bringing about these effective policies when they are before us. I can only say that during my tenure of office I hope we can achieve improvement in the farm economy generally and that with the passage of our legislation as it comes forth there will be an improvement in the farm economy across the whole of this great country.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, first I should like to thank the minister for the courtesy he has shown in making a statement. On behalf of the opposition I should like to thank him particularly for his deliberate course of action in staying completely away from the partisan political role. I am sure he will find that, because of his determined course in this respect his estimates will receive ready acceptance from this side of the house.

One of the important aspects in the agricultural field in the last few years relates to a feeling by the farmers of this great nation that partisan politics have been creeping into the department in such a way that its efficiency can be crippled to some degree. I am not going to elaborate on this in a partisan manner because I hope to stay absolutely away from partisanship, but I do wish to point out three examples where this was very evident.

In Ontario the sugar beet growers were very much disturbed last fall by the fact that subsidy cheques which they had earned and which were owing to them were delayed for many weeks. All interrogation of the minister and the department by members on this side of the house failed to procure any kind of statement why this situation existed. Is it not strange that on the Saturday preceding the last election, after weeks of delay, thousands of dollars in subsidy cheques poured into the hands of the sugar beet growers not because of the benevolence of the government but because the money was owing to these farmers. This cannot be regarded as a coincidence because the cheques did not arrive on the usual staggered basis but were directed to all mail routes so that they arrived simultaneously.

The farmers of the area concerned took a very dim view of this because they felt that not only were partisan politics involved but pressure had also been brought to bear on the Department of Agriculture to make such a course of action possible. I want to congratulate the minister, however, because he stayed out of party politics, which was not the course of action followed by his predecessor. I am sure one little incident will bear out what I mean in this regard.

I posed a question in the house to the previous minister of agriculture and he took the question as notice. I had no objection to that because it was his privilege to do so. However, I object very strenuously to the fact that having taken my question as notice his office telephoned the next morning to the local Liberal M.L.A. and gave him the answer before it had even been given to me in the house. That gentleman then telephoned the local radio station which in turn made it available to everyone over the air. Surely that is partisan politics.

I should like to outline one more incident of this type and then leave this subject. I was most unhappy and disturbed when I visited a great farm community group who wished to present their views to the government as to what should be done in the field of agriculture because it appeared to me that at that meeting they were combing their membership for known government party workers to present their brief. They did not feel their views would be listened to unless they were presented by known party workers. That is a sad state of affairs.

I wish now to congratulate the minister on his appointment to office. Following his appointment there were two questions which arose in the minds of farmers across the country. The first related to the fact that the hon. gentleman appointed to the ministry was a member of the House of Commons for an eastern constituency. What was the reaction to that appointment? I am delighted to say that the reaction so far as I was concerned, and as far as I could ascertain from a large group of farmers, was that they had no concern at all whether the minister was from the east or from the west as long as he delivered the goods, because that is what they are interested in.

The next question was related to his background. Was he a farmer? The farmers did not care whether or not he was a farmer. Farmers today are interested in what is ahead of them and what is to come. They want to know how the minister will receive their delegations, whether he will be sympathetic and what action he will take. They want to know whether he will direct the Department of Agriculture to assist them. That is the interest of the farmers of this country, not whether he is a farmer. I am very pleased that they are not interested in that aspect.

We could not of course expect the minister, who is new to one of the greatest departments of government and no doubt has a tremendous amount to learn, to make a policy statement today, especially in view of the fact he is dealing with the estimates of his predecessor. However, one of the things that has troubled us about the Department of Agriculture during the last three years is that there has never been a definite statement of policy made by the minister of agriculture, the Prime Minister or anyone on that side of the house.

Today there was no indication of appreciation of or concern for some of the main problems that face the agricultural industry at this time. We were hoping that the minister would give some indication of government thinking in this regard. One of the big problems in the agricultural field today relates to the dairy industry. What lies ahead for that industry? The new year, so far as the dairy industry is concerned, is just ahead of it. What action does the government contemplate and where is it going in this area? I do not choose to deal with dairy problems because speakers who will follow me will do so in some detail but I wanted to point out that there is a problem in this regard.

Another problem is the extreme poverty that exists in some rural areas today. Farmers are faced, as are all other Canadian citizens today, with a tremendous increase in the cost of living that far exceeds the increase in their incomes. They are also faced with the ever-increasing cost of farm machinery and have to contend with this problem. Another problem that is becoming increasingly important and vital to the farmers is the lack of skilled, semi-skilled or even day labour to assist them. The lack of farm labour has very serious implications.

We are also concerned about the lack of any evidence of an over-all agricultural policy on the part of the government. I do not intend to spend the time allocated to me in dwelling on what the Conservative party did when it was in office. We made attempts in two basic areas. We started on a deliberate dairy policy for the nation as a whole. There are some indications that the government is carrying this policy even farther. We established through ARDA and other programs a policy designed to aid farmers, especially those in the more rural areas where poverty has become so evident.

We set up ARDA for this purpose, and there are indications that the government is carrying this project even farther. But we on this side of the house are concerned about the fact that most of the policies of the government have been based on policies that we established. They increased farm income; they increased farm loans; they increased Farm Credit Corporation loans; they made it possible through syndicates to buy more machinery. We had worked on these policies which were set up to help farmers.

However, Mr. Chairman, unfortunately conditions have changed to such a degree that in many instances these measures have created hardship. Increasing the amount of farm loans did three things. First, it did not solve anything. It put farmers deeper in debt because their obligations were increased. Second, since it gave young farmers more money with which to buy land a greater demand for farm land developed and its price increased. Third, when the machinery companies found that farmers had more money to spend, they took advantage of this fact and raised the price of farm machinery to some extent. So this policy did not settle anything. It did not meet any of the main problems it was designed to meet.

We in the opposition believe that the policy which was designed to help farmers in their distress in 1955, 1956 and 1957, and which we feel was successful, is not an absolute policy and should not be followed today. Conditions have changed vastly since that time and we believe a new policy should be introduced that will meet the conditions of farming today.

Hon. members on both sides of the house have to rely to a marked degree on recommendations made by farm groups which make a study of basic conditions in the industry. The farm groups have made recommendations. The Standing Committee on Agriculture listened to these groups. The groups made recommendations to the committee and the committee made a report to the government last March, but not one single policy advocated in the report has up to this time been introduced by the government.

One recommendation very dear to the hearts of the farmers in my area was that the feed subsidy paid by the government on the freighting of western feed grain into eastern Canada be paid in respect of feed grains moving from Ontario into traditional markets in the east. This was asked for and was recommended by the committee but it was turned down by the government. No doubt it was turned down by the government for what they felt to be good and sufficient reason, but I do not understand their reason and I hope at a later date to have the opportunity to debate this very important matter.

We are also very concerned about the Department of Agriculture as a department. Our great Department of Agriculture is made up of men who for the most part have spent all their lives in some field of agriculture. The Department of Agriculture has through the years established an international reputation not only with regard to assessing problems in agriculture on a day to day basis but in assessing the future of agriculture and providing measures to meet tomorrow's situations.

The department has evolved various agricultural projects which have made farming so successful. We have increased production and have adopted new practices, thanks to the Department of Agriculture. We have extended the areas in which various crops can be grown, thanks to the work of the Department of Agriculture.

But what alarms us very much today is the fact that the government has taken the Department of Agriculture and divided it into several departments which have been placed under different ministers. This is of extreme concern to those of us who are so vitally concerned with agriculture, because it is directly contrary to the action of the Department of National Defence which has said that by amalgamation it has been able to cut down expense and increase efficiency. We want to know whether splitting up the Department of Agriculture will increase expense and cut down efficiency. Surely this does not work both ways. We believe we shall have to take a long look at this problem and find out exactly what the reaction is across the country to the division of the department. If the division of the Department of Agriculture will increase efficiency and help farmers and farm organizations, then we in the opposition will give credit to the government for its action, but until we have some tangible proof that it will have this effect we shall view the whole operation with suspicion.

We hope that the government will live up to its intention of placing before the Standing Committee on Agriculture the estimates of the Department of Agriculture for the next fiscal year. We shall ask the minister whether this is the intention of the government because we want departmental officials to appear before the committee in order that we may ask them questions. We do not want to persecute them but to find out if they are hampered in any way in their activities. We want to know whether they feel they have enough money for research in agriculture, which is so important today and so necessary for the future of the industry. We want to know whether they have the facilities with which to work. We want to know whether they are given the opportunity to attend agricultural functions and meetings throughout the world because agriculture is of world wide importance now and is not limited to Canada. We want to find out just what the policy of the government is, in what direction they are going and whether they are providing the necessary funds and opportunities to carry out this policy.

We have been alarmed during the last two years when ministers of agriculture have stood in their place and announced that action had been taken in regard to agriculture which would result in the saving of millions of dollars of the taxpayers' money. We all like to save money, but anyone engaged in the industry knows that drastic cut-backs by the government in this field mean that some section of the industry has to suffer an economic squeeze. We do not want to see this happen.

There is one other matter I should like to bring to the attention of the minister in regard to the position of agriculture today. I wish to commend some of the provincial governments for taking an absolutely new look at the problems of agriculture and approaching them from a new angle. Some provincial governments are approaching these problems from the viewpoint that agriculture should encompass every phase of food production and use from the producer to the consumer and should be under one department. I am one of those who feel this is a step in the right direction.

Surely we should know if the consumer is paying too much for a commodity. We should know if the primary producer is receiving too little for a commodity. We should know the amount of money it costs to take primary products from the farmer to the ultimate consumer. If all this information were available within the Department of Agriculture, we would then be in a position to look at the entire picture and perhaps not only make food more readily available to the consumer but through efficiency make our farmers more competitive in world markets. Perhaps we could reduce some expenses that are hurting the primary producer.

There are two other aspects of agriculture that I feel are in dire trouble. I do not believe the government is approaching them from the right angle. We have heard of the government proposition to buy submarginal farm land, convert it and sell it back to farmers. I do not believe this approach is feasible. I think it is too costly and I do not believe it will achieve the result desired.

When we look at the program to help farmers we must realize that today there is a new type of farmer who is increasing in numbers. I refer to the farmer who makes only part of his living from the land where his home is situated and part of his living working in industry or from some other position. In other words, he is a part time farmer. We must realize that such farmers are not only here but are entitled to the opportunity to earn a living in this way. They are entitled to help. We must recognize that this type of farmer is a growing part of our agricultural picture and must receive every consideration.

Surely there must be some other way of helping a farmer than buying his land and moving him away. Perhaps another method would be the building of new roads into certain inaccessible areas, thus bringing in tourists, people who would build new cottages and create a need for more labour. A new motel, a new marina or a fishing resort might be developed. This is the sort of thing into which we should be looking now rather than curtailing the activities of the man who is making a living off the farm.

There is another change taking place which I do not believe most men engaged in agriculture expected. I refer to the dire plight of the large mechanized farmer, the man who has specialized or taken part in vertical integration. These large operators need help badly because they cannot find men to operate their extensive holdings. They have made tremendous capital expenditures on machinery but because of the labour picture are unable to obtain labourers to run the machines which are becoming ever more complicated. In addition, these large operators find they can no longer engage competent managers. As a result there is great inefficiency and a tremendous rise in costs. They thought they would make money because of their large production but they find the reverse is true and because of the extensiveness of their holdings they are suffering even greater hardship.

These are the things into which we should be looking. What can we do to help these men? More farm labour is going to have to be brought into this country in order to plant and harvest the large crops. We are going to have to comb every place in Canada where there is an excess of labour and try to engage these people on a seasonal basis for those areas where labour is needed. I feel that this method alone will not provide the answer to our labour problems. Other steps will have to be taken. I am encouraged to know that we are not alone in our concern. Members in all parts of the house are not only concerned about the situation but are taking concerted action to do something about it.

Finally I should like to say this to the minister. He is from eastern Canada and is therefore in a position to assess and be familiar with the problems of eastern Canada. He is a new minister without an agricultural background and probably has the advantage of having no preconceived ideas. He can listen to the officials of his department and take the advice of the great farm delegations that come here periodically. He can assess the tremendous needs of agriculture today and by directives can formulate a policy that will once more put the agricultural industry of Canada into a position of being envied throughout the world as once was the case.

Unfortunately this image has been fading lately because we are not delivering the goods. In my honest opinion, one of the great areas in which this country is falling behind is in the field of research development and sale of agricultural products throughout the world. Tremendous steps are being taken in this direction by other countries. There have been tremendous developments in the production of food. Make no mistake about it, Mr. Chairman, in the next few years we in this country will see the time when food and clean water will be as valuable as many of the base metals. We might just as well face this fact now and try to take steps to take advantage of the situation by keeping our water clean and providing the necessary agricultural commodities that will sell throughout the world. We can only do this by planning and by the work of our agricultural technicians. I have visited establishments that are only waiting for the word to go and they will give us the necessary products to sell. If we do not sell our products, if we do not make them competitive, we are going to find ourselves in the position where the nations of this world, by the use of carbon and other base materials, will possess synthetic foods produced through chemical processes and will not need our products to the degree they do today.

Let us provide the products they need. We have such a golden opportunity. Many millions of people in the world are starving to death because of a lack of protein and carbohydrates, two essential food elements which we have in excess in this country. Some success has been achieved in processing these elements in a form in which they can be shipped to all needy countries. We are going to have to have a program, we are going to have to barter, we are going to have to exchange goods for goods. This is the sort of program the Department of Agriculture should be adopting. The department should ascertain what we need from these countries. Let us trade with these countries. They do not want extended credit; they want to trade. Certainly they have some things we can use. I feel the time has come when we should move into this field. Let us find out what they can use. Let us provide it for them at a price they can afford.

This government has used subsidies and marketing schemes as a means of answering farm problems. Previous governments have done the same thing. This is a common practice of provincial administrations in the field of agriculture. The men who are engaged in agriculture have come to the definite conclusion that subsidies and marketing schemes do aid in times of dire trouble but that they are not an answer to all agricultural problems today. We have to take a new look at these problems. We have to move into new fields. Agriculture is an industry with tremendous horizons. Now is the time to move into new fields. The only way we can do this is to go to our technicians in the industry who, I say with utter conviction, are second to none in this world, and give them an opportunity to place Canada in the forefront. Let them tell us what the problems are. Let them suggest solutions and let us back them with our support and taxpayers' money. I assure you it is my conviction that this approach will be cheaper to the taxpayer in the long run.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I realize the minister has been very brief in his remarks in introducing the estimates of his predecessor and I do not blame him for this for two reasons. First of all, the money is pretty well gone and, second, there is really nothing creditable in the operations and stewardship of the previous minister of agriculture. None of the problems he faced originally were solved and the condition of agriculture now is no better than when he was first appointed minister.

Whether or not the new minister from eastern Canada will change this state of affairs I do not know, but let him remember that if he fails he may be pensioned off to the other place, which perhaps would not be a bad thing either. However, the Canadian public are looking to the federal government for assistance which they have not been getting and I personally am looking to the new Minister of Agriculture to consider some of the problems he now faces.

I was very pleased to hear him be so brash as to say that much of the responsibility for the problem in moving grain in western Canada rested entirely upon the shoulders of the management of the Canadian Pacific Railway, who had failed to provide box cars for the movement of wheat when requested to do so. The fact that he is not going to do anything about it is not necessarily his fault but the fault of his friends in the cabinet who are failing to take the necessary steps so apparent to the new minister who knows the problem and sees the solution. When the officials advise him that you cannot force the Canadian Pacific Railway to provide box cars and that you cannot provide larger quotas for some of the points shipping grain, then they make the problem even more difficult for the minister. However, I hope he will be able to continue taking that fresh look which he apparently took of some of the problems which have faced us over the years in western Canada which though not yet solved are not without solution.

In speaking on the estimates last year I made reference to a problem which had developed in Ontario and in particular in my part of Ontario. It is one which last year caused a disaster. I have on the order paper a bill to introduce legislation to govern, license and regulate the operation of rainmaking machines. No doubt each hon. member has his own opinion whether or not rainmaking machines do produce rain, but in any case both the Prime Minister and the Minister of Forestry are aware of the fact that a superabundance of rain fell last year in the northern part of Ontario creating a problem completely foreign to the Minister of Agriculture who comes from an area which suffered to about the same degree for exactly the opposite reason.

The farmers in my area believe that the rainmaking equipment used by the Ontario Department of Lands and Forests, the Ontario Hydro and by private pulp and paper companies had a great deal to do with the fact that it rained almost every day last year and destroyed a large percentage of the hay and grain crop in my area as well as almost all the seed produced in the area which amounts to about half the total production in Ontario. It is interesting to note that the Ontario government spent a quarter of a million dollars on the installation of rainmaking equipment in the minister's riding last year to produce rain. Whether or not there can be compatibility in the use of such equipment in different areas is a moot point and one which will be kicked around at farmers' meetings probably for the next couple of years.

I believe that the Department of Agriculture should give some consideration to the various aspects of rainmaking and should investigate the potential of this operation. If it works in areas where there is a drought it would be advantageous. If it works in areas which have an abundance of rain, then I suggest that probably some compensation should be made available to the farmers. In my area between 50 per cent to 80 per cent of the hay crop was submarginal. This was not because we did not have a good crop. We had a bumper crop. The same was true of grain. However, it rained all through the haying season and most of the hay that was cut stayed on the ground. Also, a lot of it was not even cut and much of it put into the barns was not fit to feed to stock and in many cases was dangerous as feed owing to its condition.

A somewhat similar situation exists with regard to grain. I estimate that in Timiskaming the farmers received something less than a 50 per cent return on their grain. In the Cochrane district they probably received less than 30 per cent.

The reason I raise this matter is that the federal government has been interested over the years in crop insurance. They have also been interested in natural disasters. They introduced the prairie farm rehabilitation scheme and have given assistance in cases of disaster for some time. In Ontario assistance is given with the co-operation of the provincial government but for the last few years the Ontario government has not looked farther than the edge of Toronto. If the grass is green on the lawn of the parliament buildings, then agriculture in the province must be in fairly good shape.

How little attention is paid to northern Ontario is seen by the fact that the situation to which I have referred became so acute that it was made an election issue, and the Prime Minister of Canada became involved and made all sorts of silly promises, as did others. The Ontario department decided to apply the same drought program in my area as was applied in the Renfrew area, which means that coupons were issued to the farmers to enable them to buy grain and hay. Assistance is provided up to $30 per ton for feed grain and $15 per ton for hay. The difficulty is that no hay is available. Most of the farmers have insufficient money to make up the difference in the cost of grain, which is about $30 to $35 per ton in addition to the government subsidy. I think the minister will agree that this is not good legislation. I think he will agree that further assistance must be given to these farmers.

I had hoped that the Minister of Agriculture would be from the province of Quebec. While many people have spoken of backward conditions over the years in the province of Quebec, anyone who looks at Quebec today will find that agriculture in the province is much more advanced so far as assistance to farmers is concerned and certainly more advanced than agriculture in the province of Ontario, of which I have some knowledge. I was quite surprised and pleased to find that in the last throne speech in the province of Quebec another $9 million was allocated to the Lake St. John disaster area to meet the situation that arose in 1964-65, whereas in Ontario the government is willing to make only a 50 per cent contribution to the livestock program to keep cows alive during the winter so they can go on pasture in the spring. It is an animal-humanitarian type of program which really does not do much to help the farmers stay in business.

When the Prime Minister visited my area during the election campaign I was surprised to find him talking about the fact that the government was going to buy a number of farms in different areas, take them over and operate them for a while and when they became operating units sell them back to the farmers. I suggest that perhaps the crop disasters in my area have helped the government considerably because it looks as though a lot of these farms will become available without the government having to buy them.

It is a type of crisis prevalent throughout the country and particularly in my area. In Canada we are faced with a type of agricultural disaster. Farmers are no longer able to carry on for any period of time because they are working on a very close margin. I am sure the minister knows these facts. I am not sure what he is going to do about his officials when he brings farm problems to their attention. I believe that with very few exceptions there will be very little change so long as the officials of the department have their present attitude, which seems to be a fairly political one, as a result of which they act in such a manner that they will just get by.

I think that many officials in the Department of Agriculture will have to look at the effects of redistribution because from that will come changes that the officials will have to take into consideration. There will be a great shake-up in the Department of Agriculture when there is no support for the program which they have been carrying on for some time. I repeat that agriculture is in a very serious crisis. It is in a state of crisis not only respecting disasters, because the department helps nobody in disasters, but is in a state of crisis in many other areas.

I spoke to a man the other day who indicated that he had gone over the books of a young farmer who had spent considerable money in the buying of a large farm unit in which he had combined a number of smaller farms. He had gone into the meat production field, found himself in serious difficulty because of the lack of crop last year, had sold his cattle at a very large loss, had extended himself into the dairy products field, and now finds that he is plagued with the same problems as other dairy farmers are. Those problems arise from the lack of a dairy program in Ontario. Consequently he finds that he is selling about 25 per cent of his production on a quota giving him $25 a hundred while three quarters of his production is going at the surplus price of $2.85 which is considerably below his cost of production.

This farmer is going to be out of business very shortly unless something is done. We have talked of $4 milk in the house. A dairy commission has now been established in the province of Ontario and I am hopeful, as are the farmers, that the result in a short time will be the establishment of a unit price of $4 across the province so that all dairy producers will receive this price. I think assistance from the federal government will be required. If the program I have referred to is not successful then you will find we will have a situation with considerable competition across the borders between provinces and surplus milk being dumped from one province into another and so on. For instance, it might be found that casein is being dumped in one province and fluid milk in another, or it might be found that butter is being dumped in one province and cheese is being moved in the opposite direction.

It is interesting to note that the provincial government of Quebec has a 25 cent subsidy that has helped to create a problem with respect to movements of milk across the border. This, I think, is a field to which the minister will have to give consideration.

If agriculture as a whole is to survive, then the prices of agricultural products must rise. The cost squeeze on farmers must be reduced. At the same time there is another point that farmers are not taking into consideration but that the minister and the government must take into consideration. I refer to the unholy rise in the price of every commodity that people eat. Almost all these commodities are agricultural products. In this country we could very easily get into a position where consumers would not be able to buy the commodities that are produced, no matter how high the subsidy is. In this country as in the United States, we could find ourselves in a predicament where the government will have to provide subsidies to keep land out of production. If that were to happen, I think the failure of the federal Department of Agriculture would be known to everyone and it would be almost complete.

The farmers will agree, I think, that if the country has to pay a subsidy to keep land out of production something must be badly wrong with the whole scheme of things. Something must be wrong when you deny starving peoples of the world the commodities which would have been grown had land not been taken out of production.

Many problems face Canada today in the agricultural field. I am not one of those who particularly want the agricultural estimates to go before the agricultural committee this year. I am not interested in farm machinery prices being discussed before the agricultural committee. I say that because I have not, nor has any other member of the house, any assurance that anything will happen with respect to any thing discussed before that committee. In my office I have a thick file of documents containing facts, figures and statistics from an inquiry which we made not more than two or three years ago into the reasons for rising prices of farm machinery. This government and the previous government did absolutely nothing about that even after the committee had made several recommendations that any government could have implemented if it had wanted to.

Unless the minister gives an assurance that he is prepared to do somthing about farm problems there is absolutely no point in the farmers of Canada thinking that anything will be accomplished by agricultural matters being referred to the agricultural committee. When I find that the Minister of Agriculture is not the least bit interested in what is going on in the agricultural committee I am always concerned. I am concerned when the minister sends his parliamentary secretary to see that the committee does not do anything and does not step out of line. His department even sends a sort of adviser to make sure that nothing happens, to make sure that a quorum can be maintained and to see that nothing is slipped in which might accomplish something.

I may be unfair in thinking that previous ministers have not really wanted to do anything about agriculture. I am quite sure that the last two ministers have not really wanted to do anything about agricultural problems. In fact, I thought that the last minister did not understand the problems. A million dollar farmer is not the average farmer that I represent. The problems of the million dollar farmer really do not interest the farmers I am associated with. Their problem is to try to live on $3,500 a year, a level which in some cases they are not even successful in reaching. This is the type of farmer about whom I think we must be concerned. To be successful in dealing with the small farmer's problems we shall have to consider all possible potential means to solve his problems.

The other night I discussed some of the problems facing ARDA. ARDA is not a matter that should come under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Forestry. Its problems concern the Minister of Agriculture. The minister is well aware of the long term potential of the ARDA program because in the long run it offers a solution for agriculture. The minister is as well aware as I am that many farmers in Renfrew and Timiskaming should not be on the farms they occupy today. Our problem is to find a solution to get them off the farms without bringing about the bad effects of great dislocations in communities and among the people who are going to be displaced. The solution to this problem will have to be considered over a long term. Standards will have to be set. Surveys will have to be made in the national interest to find out in what areas these displacements must take place.

This has not been done. Over the years we have given lip service to the ARDA program but we have not really implemented it. We have used it as a patronage machine in Ontario where the provincial government is getting the advantage of the patronage for which the federal government provides the cash. Everyone here knows this is true. That cannot be changed unless the federal government provides leadership in setting out the type of proposals that should be implemented, surveying large areas, and deciding what changes should be made.

At present a member of the provincial legislature can say, It would be very nice to have a little park here and a duck pond there; the federal government will give the money for them and I will get the credit. This is happening everywhere in Ontario. Is this our long term approach to agriculture? I say that if we do not do anything about the long term problem there is no use doing anything about the short term problem because it in fact is dying off.

The average age of farmers in Ontario is well over 50 years. They cannot hire extra labour. Seasonal help is a necessity. The United States government allows transient workers to enter that country from Mexico but as the season advances and those workers reach our borders we do not allow them into Canada because the federal Department of Agriculture has never introduced legislation to allow them to enter on a temporary basis. If we do allow these workers to enter Canada we shall have to make sure our farmers provide them with proper accommodation and wages, but tobacco harvesting, berry picking and other types of seasonal agriculture are capable of providing fairly reasonable salaries.

We have been very interested in the political manipulation of the eastern feed grain agency. I do not know where it stands now but the farm organizations are in favour of it. There is resentment in western Canada about an agency that is going to buy and sell, but the committee which studied this matter took that into consideration. It was quite prepared to have western representatives on the eastern feed grain board to see that an advantage was not established in eastern Canada which would be detrimental to the operations of the Canadian Wheat Board in western Canada.

I do not believe the eastern farmers are interested in gaining an advantage. All they want is to be protected against the discrimination which hurts them now because of storage problems and the vast difference in the cost of feed grain in eastern Canada compared with the cost in western Canada. There is the cost of moving the grain but the federal government pays for its storage. Yet the grain costs $15 to $20 a ton more during the winter months than in the summer months. The feed grain policy is already established.

I suggest that both the farm machinery problem and the feed grain agency problem will have to be settled by the minister himself. If he refers them to a committee nothing will be done this year and nothing may ever be done about them. Our committee on farm machinery prices sat for four or five months and took a lot of my time and the time of other hon. members but it resulted in absolutely nothing. I may be unfair in saying that because for a four or five month period the farm machinery companies were cautious about raising their prices. However, they made up that time lag once they found out we really did not intend to do anything about the problem except have an inquiry.

The workers of Canada, the white collar people of Canada and even those on pension have decided that the income they receive must be reasonable enough to maintain a decent standard of living. When we find the automobile industry in trouble we give it a $50 million handout. When we find the old age pensioners in trouble we try to give them an extra handout of $25. We are seized of the problems facing most other areas of production in Canada but not in the agricultural area.

We can provide subsidies. I was very interested in the motion moved the other night by the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale but I did not participate in the debate because I wanted to see it come to a vote and pass. However, a member from Vancouver, with no knowledge of agriculture at all, spoke on the motion and talked it out. I had hoped it would pass because it would provide an extra 5 or 6 cents a dozen for eggs in western Canada. There, eggs are selling for 17 and 18 cents a dozen, but people in eastern Canada have to pay 75 cents a dozen. Surely we can do something to equalize that situation and see that the producers get a fair percentage of the retail price. However, the motion was talked out.

In my opinion subsidies are not the answer but unless we can devise a better system we shall have to provide subsidies. If we do there should be a limit so that we do not end up with a vertically integrated industry that will be only a financial operation. If we provide subsidies it should only be done for farmers who are operating efficiently and the subsidies should only be enough to help keep them in production.

We also have need of national marketing legislation because if we introduce a subsidy program and build up production to a reasonable level we are likely to create surpluses and national marketing legislation will be necessary to dispose of them. There is really no surplus agricultural production in the world today. There is a deficit. There is a great need for agricultural products all over the world. Yet Canada and the United States are faced with the problem of providing a decent level of income for the farm community and we have a surplus problem.

We had a surplus problem with wheat which to some extent has been solved. We did not solve it in the old manner of having people come here and buy it. We went out and sold it. It is true there have been disasters throughout the world. It is true the large sale to Russia a couple of years ago was a Godsend to wheat farmers. But people who have been in Russia say that country will need wheat for some years to come and we must do our best to maintain that market.

This year we will probably not have surpluses in agricultural commodities except with respect to two products. It is hinted that by fall we will have a deficit in butter production and that it may be necessary again to import butter into Canada. If we have to do this, it is an indication that we have not been providing the proper support for the dairy industry; otherwise we would not have found ourselves in this position. There is a potential for almost double the production in the dairy industry if that industry is assured of a market for its products. The support will have to be national in scope because there is a problem between provinces in matters of trade with one province cutting the throat of an adjacent province. This is quite evident in eastern Canada.

There are many other problems in agriculture which we will have to face. In my opinion, before his estimates are passed the minister will have to make a statement in respect of what he intends to do. While he is not really responsible for these estimates, let us not knock them because they did get the former minister of agriculture a seat in the other place. However, I think the minister has an obligation to outline what kind of legislation he proposes because it is not good enough to send the estimates to the standing committee if we are not sure what the minister wants to accomplish. I hope we will have a report from the minister indicating the solutions he has in mind which he hopes parliament will approve in respect of Canada's agricultural problems.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, I shall not speak at length on these estimates, since these are last year's estimates and, moreover, it is not even the present Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene) who took part in the implementation of this policy. Therefore, we cannot praise or even less blame him for the deficiencies that might have existed under the former minister.

I shall therefore confine myself to putting a few questions to the minister and telling him that we set all our hopes on him and that we are anxious to take cognizance of his next estimates as soon as possible. I urge all members of the house to pass the remaining estimates of the Minister of Agriculture, so that we may go on to more urgent matters.

Mr. Chairman, if these estimates were to be given the same treatment as those of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin), it would be a second disaster, because it is obvious that the Minister of Justice is now in a dilemma due to the time wasted so as to prevent the house from undertaking more serious work.

Mr. Chairman, I ask the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene) if he will bring forward legislation establishing a Canadian dairy commission this year, in 1966.

We, in Quebec, have long been asking for a Canadian farm products commission for the east. The minister indicated that such legislation is intended. To my mind, this is the first step toward granting us what we have so often been asking for in this house. We ask him to go further in his efforts in this connection, so as to cover not only the dairy industry—I am referring especially to Quebec and the eastern part of the province—but all the various farm products of the province of Quebec, in order that they too may benefit.

For many years western farmers have been benefiting from the advantages offered by the Canadian wheat board. Wheat is their main product, and we are glad for them. On the other hand, the time has come for us, in 1966, to be able to congratulate a Minister of Agriculture who will put before us an act for the setting up of an eastern farm products board.

I told the minister that I would be brief. I shall summarize, because I do not want to take up too much of the time of the house. The second item I wish to deal with is the dairy policy which guarantees a maximum price of $4 per cwt. excluding transportation costs, to all sectors.

Well, there is also a paragraph which must get the minister's attention. Because of the failure last year to add "excluding transportation costs", our Quebec farmers sustained a loss of 20 cents, 22 cents, 23 cents, 24 cents per cwt. of milk, when the government had just decreed a price of $3.50 per cwt. of milk. Therefore, when $4 is mentioned, let it be clear that that $4 will be paid in addition to transportation costs.

In fact, last year, it was realized that the farmer did not get $3.50 any more, but only $3.22, $3.21 and even $3.20, depending on transportation costs. I see the minister making notes. I know that he will take the necessary measures to ensure a fair treatment for all farmers. Some farmers will get $4, while others, not so well located from the transportation point of view, will not get it.

The third point, Mr. Chairman, deals with the Crop Insurance Act, in which we take a strong interest. The government expressed its desire to amend this act, and we are confident that it will be amended so as to allow Quebec farmers to have their share of the benefits of crop insurance which, up to now, has helped only western provinces. I am not blaming the western provinces. On the other hand, one would say that this act was created and intended for western farmers and with a view to western production. Now, in my opinion, this is the reason why this act cannot apply to all Quebec farmers. I did not have any discussion with the Quebec authorities to ascertain why they had not sought to have the benefits of the Crop Insurance Act extended to their farmers, but I think that the Quebec farmers were not included because of the shortcomings of the act.

I point out, at this time, that the act should be amended so as to include not only dairy production and grain, but all crops.

I remind the minister that the Quebec farmers are asking that all the crops be included in that legislation and also that the indemnity for loss be set at 90 per cent, whatever the cause of the loss.

We know of several causes and, as mentioned a while ago by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), we also learned last year about the rainmaking machines. At first, when we talked about rainmaking machines in the house, most hon. members thought it was funny; those who did not laugh refrained from doing so only because they felt a little sorry for us; others did not believe us at all. Today, all hon. members are convinced that such machines exist and have been operating full time for ten years during the summer. Consequently, it is easier for us today to ask the minister to do something about those rainmaking machines.

When I talk about rainmaking machines, I mean both kinds. As a matter of fact, there are the rainmaking machines on land. They are set up in forests, on farms, on farmers' plots. I am not asking you to legislate about those, because that matter comes under the jurisdiction of the provincial government. But with regard to the seeding of clouds by plane, the federal government must assume its responsibility. In that case, it is a matter of air pollution by plane. I do not know if the federal government can call on some legislation to deal severely with that case. It would have to be very harsh, because some companies would have us walk in swamps to serve bigger interests and not the people.

I previously mentioned in the house some of those interests, particularly the Quebec Hydro which has been letting rain fall on our heads for three years, because it must fill its Manic I, Manic II, Manic III, Manic IV, Manic V dams with 40 per cent of artificial rain. I say that the welfare of the people must come before financial interests, that the health of the people must come before financial health and that our government would do well to pass a law to control the seeding of clouds by plane.

I would also like to deal for a few minutes with the health of animals. Brucellosis has been endemic in our region for two or three years. Well, that epidemic carried away approximately a third of our dairy herds. The government did give the people some compensation but I believe that act is some 20 years old. It is no longer appropriate in view of the current price for stock. In fact, $140 is still given for a purebred dairy cow, whereas a farmer cannot buy one for less than $300; and $70 is given for a cross-breed.

[Mr. Gauthier.]

I am therefore humbly suggesting to the minister that the act be amended in order to give $100 for a cross-breed and at least $200 for a purebred dairy cow. It seems to me that would not be exaggerating at all, considering the farmer whose herd is being depleted by that disease. I have seen herds of 50 to 55 heads having to be completely done away with.

And so, if the government gives $200, and the farmer sells the meat of the animal for probably $100 to $125 to a slaughter-house, this will allow the farmer to get $300 and renew his herd without suffering heavy losses. On the other hand, because of all those changes, he will surely not be able to produce before five or six months and he will have to take a loss anyway.

There is also the question of the farmer's income tax and property taxes. I also want to bring this to the attention of the minister. I have always found it odd, for instance, that paper companies—I mention paper companies because I am more familiar with them—are exempted from the tax on stationary machinery while farm land is taxed to the hilt. This is absurd, because if there is anything stationary in the province of Quebec, and in the country as a whole, it is farm land. Before exempting those big companies from the machinery tax, farm land should be exempted, because, for the farmer, his land is definitely an instrument.

I do not consider the land so much as a real value for the farmer, because if his farm is productive, it is because he cultivates it. Let the farmer leave his farm, as occurs in 40 per cent of the farms in our area abandoned in the last 10, 15 or 20 years, and that farm loses all its value. It can actually be bought for $300 or $400, whereas when the farmer cultivated it, it was valued at $7,000 or $8,000. This shows that the land is only the farmer's tool and that it should be tax-exempt. Let the income be taxed, but stop taxing the landed property which is comparable to the heavy plant of big companies.

I now wish to say a few words about farm credit. If the minister studies the present Farm Credit Act, he will find that it is not at all consistent with the needs of our area.

I do not know what is wrong; I do not know whether this is due to the administrative staff or whether our area is different from the others, but our farmers have a hard time securing a loan under the Farm Credit

Act. I think the Minister of Agriculture should investigate.

I found out last year, one case among others, about a farmer, in a position to use easily from $40,000 to $45,000. He has nine lots under cultivation with the most up-to-date machinery. After fighting for a year, do you know how much he got? Ten thousand dollars. Ten thousand dollars were promised to him to build a barn in which milk cows could move about freely. He was given a loan of $10,000 but, a year later, he has yet to receive a cent. I do not know where the trouble lies or whether the federal government is to blame. I do not wish to accuse the minister, because he is new to his job and I know that he wants to improve his department. We saw less of his predecessor and I know that we will see this minister more often. The former minister was thanked by his fellow-citizens because they did not send him back but he was promoted to the Senate by the Liberals. I hope the present minister will start an inquiry. I do not know whether this depends on the government of the province of Quebec; I do not know what is wrong, but the loans that should be available cannot be obtained in our region.

Those underhand practices must cease. I say "underhand practices" because I hear too much talk on all sides; there is no smoke without fire.

I merely wish to draw to the minister's attention to the Farm Credit Act. If there is a change to be made, an amendment to be brought in, it should be done so that that act can finally be adapted to our area and to the province of Quebec, where farmers who have 300, 400, 600 or 800 acres of cultivated land cannot benefit from the advantages of the act as it now stands.

Once again, I should like to bring to the minister's attention the 25 cents premium per cwt. for the transportation of milk. At the present time, the act provides that the premium may be granted for a minimum production of 10,000 lbs. of producers' milk. I suggest that this is rather high as far as some Quebec producers are concerned. We have some who are producing consumer milk, fluid milk, and others manufacturing milk. They always ship the balance of their manufacturing milk and there are times when they do not have 10,000 lbs. of milk. So they lose the premium on that amount.

Those responsible for paying this premium called me some two or three hours ago to tell me that with 9,986 lbs. one could not obtain the subsidy. In my opinion, a slight adjustment to the act would allow all farmers to be treated as fairly as the milk producers.

All in all, those were the remarks I wanted to make, Mr. Chairman.

The member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) said a while ago that there was an agricultural crisis. That is quite true, but I feel it is mainly a crisis of adjustment. Quebec agriculture is going through a period of readjustment, and legislation will simply have to be passed to enable it to adapt itself to the new developments in the farming industry.

[English]

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I shall be very brief because I want to continue the co-operation that our party has shown in trying to get the estimates for 1965-66 through the committee as quickly as possible. I also know we will have an opportunity very soon, or at least I hope so, to question the Minister of Agriculture in the standing committee. At that time we will have an opportunity of discussing with him many of the policies and new programs which I hope he will be bringing in as government policy in keeping with some of the comments the minister made in his opening statement. I want to say also that I congratulate and commend the minister for what I regard as getting right to the nub of the problem in agriculture in that part of his opening statement wherein he suggested that the greatest problem in agriculture is the net income of farmers relative to the incomes of people in other sectors of our economy.

I should like the minister to know that we in this party will give him every co-operation in setting up new policies and programs that will achieve the very desirable end result about which he talked. I say to him as well that when he made his tour of western Canada in early January a number of the statements which the minister made, according to the press, were very well received by western farmers. I know there were some attempts to criticize him and other members of the cabinet after he arrived back in Ottawa in that perhaps he had been a little extreme in his criticism of the railroads with regard to their performance respecting the movement of grain.

I want the minister to know that we in this party support for the most part the criticism he made because we are convinced that here again he got right to the heart of the matter and put his finger on the real problem in so far as the movement of grain in western Canada is concerned. I shall not go into that matter in great detail today because it was discussed yesterday and on a number of other occasions. But I certainly hope the minister will not be discouraged from pursuing the same line in the future in the interests of the grain producers on the prairies. I would say too, that I believe there was some immediate improvement after these statements were made by a responsible minister of the federal government.

I remember that when the minister made his "some turkey, some plucking" speech in the House of Commons he drew the attention of members to the fact there was an improvement from some 325 or 330 car unloadings in Vancouver per day to 600 per day. I think the Canadian Pacific particularly but the railways generally understand the language of federal ministers when they express their concern in this way. They understand that they need to make an additional effort. I commend the minister for that and, as I said, I hope he will not be discouraged from making other statements of this kind when he sees the need.

I say to the minister with respect to this matter that everyone can understand that during the very short time he was in western Canada he would not have had time to make a personal inspection of the problems and the bottlenecks in the movement of grain. Therefore I think what he was doing was listening to many responsible men in western Canada who are intimately involved in the movement of grain such as the Canadian Wheat Board, the leaders of the wheat pools, the line elevator companies, the heads of terminals and so on.

I believe what the minister was doing was engaging in the same kind of reflection and thinking as these very responsible men and I think this was a good thing. I hope the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Finance to some extent are unable to squelch that kind of attitude.

There are one or two questions I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture because there is some apprehension in the country—perhaps "apprehension" is not the right word—some question in the minds of people about whether or not some of the policies commenced under his predecessor are going to be continued or if some of the plans which appeared to be under way are going to be carried forward into policies and programs.

One of the questions, is the almost complete reclassification of the various classes at exhibitions so far as prize money is concerned and what the new classes will be. I am not going to go into detail on that now but we would like to know if the present minister intends to carry forward these plans which appeared to be under way. As a matter of fact, there were some changes but all of the changes that were planned had not been made. I understand that there was a meeting in Ottawa within the last few days or the last week at which there was some further discussion. I should like to know what the plans are for the future.

One other thing we would like to know is whether or not the minister intends proceeding with plans to set up a fund from which exhibition corporations can borrow money on a long term basis for the purpose of constructing multiple purpose buildings. There are quite a number of exhibition companies across the country, including the Medicine Hat Exhibition and Stampede Company, who are particularly interested in this plan, and we are still waiting to see whether the federal government is going to set up this fund and make money available on a long term and perhaps low interest basis.

I do not want to keep the committee very long but I want to say to the minister that we in this party believe that the major problem facing Canadian agriculture and all of those who are engaged in it is that our whole price structure is too low and that some policies need to be evolved to improve the structure. We believe that this can probably best be done by an all-party committee that can go into some of these matters in the planning stages rather than always waiting until the government has considered these things and comes before the house with final plans completely worked out. I believe this can be done very effectively if all parties are less interested in who gets the political credit for the actual result of bringing these new policies into effect.

I commend the minister for pointing to this problem in his opening statement and also the hon. member for Kent (Ont.) who spoke and intimated—at least I took this to be so from what he said—that his party was willing to give the kind of co-operation necessary to work out policies so that the whole price structure can be raised. I know that the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, for example, only a few days ago stated in its brief to the cabinet that even well established farmers are having problems in meeting the so-called cost squeeze. In other words, costs of operation are going up but the receipts are not going up accordingly. This is something that many of us who are well acquainted with agriculture in our constituencies have known for a very long time. Many well established farmers have come to me within the last few months, more than at any time in the past, complaining about the cost-price squeeze. Therefore anything that we in this party can do in co-operation with the government and other opposition parties which will change this situation we certainly intend to do. We believe that some very positive steps can and should be taken respecting a national sugar policy. We also believe that some steps ought to be taken to set up a two price policy for wheat. There seems to be some measure of support for this kind of a program in all corners of this house. We want to co-operate with the minister in completing a new dairy policy for Canada.

I believe that if any plan to raise the whole price structure for farmers is going to succeed it is also going to require some tariff amendments. I do not say that we need them for the purpose of restricting trade but we need some co-operation from the Department of Trade and Commerce and from the government, through instructions to the Tariff Board and so on, to insulate our own domestic markets from the influence of the prices of dumped or surplus products from other countries. This is particularly evident in the price of sugar, turkeys and lamb from time to time as well as potatoes and many other things. We have some legislation at the present time but it is not effective because some of the dumped or surplus products can and do in fact from time to time break down our whole price structure. They affect our whole price structure in a way that bears no relationship to supply and demand within Canada in so far as our own production is concerned.

Therefore it is not a matter of entering into a new round of tariff changes which would be designed to restrict trade but simply a case of protecting our own domestic producers in our own home markets. I think it is fair to say that many of the other countries in the so-called western world have already done this and there would be no problem by way of retaliatory action from other countries if we did the same thing in self-defence.

In closing I should also like to ask the minister to provide the house with a clearcut statement of policy respecting cost-shared emergency assistance programs in so far as the federal government is concerned. The minister has taken some criticism on the floor of the house respecting this matter during this session. As I said, I do not want to take a lot of time now but there are some provincial governments across the country, particularly Alberta in recent weeks, who seem to think, and I believe with some justification, that the federal government does not have a policy or at least does not have a policy that is consistent for all the provinces. We believe that there should be some statement so the provinces will know what to expect by way of response from the federal government.

We were under the impression for many months that at any time a province set up an emergency assistance program toward which it was prepared to pay 50 per cent of the cost the federal government would match that percentage. We believed this because it had been stated over and over again in the House of Commons by the former minister of agriculture and I think by the Prime Minister on more than one occasion. Therefore we think there is some discrimination on the part of the federal government as to which request it accepts and which it does not. I would ask the minister to provide us with a statement of policy and to apply that policy to all provinces on the same basis.

I am going to conclude my remarks with this very brief statement. I inform the minister that he can expect full co-operation from us in his determination to bring agricultural incomes into line with those in other sectors of our economy. He can also expect co-operation in the Standing Committee on Agriculture if he will come to that committee with his plans and discuss them before they become hard and fast government policy. So far as we are concerned we do not care whether the government or the opposition gets the political credit as long as we do something positive soon to meet the cost-price squeeze which at this time is hurting even well established farmers.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, I will not be long, for I have only a few remarks to make on agriculture.

Supply—Agriculture

Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that the constituency which I represent is almost exclusively agricultural, I am of the opinion that if agriculture is to prosper, then we must see to it that it be given a framework within which it can endure. A framework must be established for agriculture and it is the government's responsibility to set it up.

I know that the matter of farming is of both provincial and federal jurisdiction, but I also know that the federal government has a large part in it.

When speaking about assisting apgriculture, the first thing to do is to establish budgets. I have examined the budget of the Department of Agriculture for the year 1965-66, which totals $121,815,100.

• (5:10 p.m.)

To distribute among the farmers their share of this budget, considering the cost of administration, we see that there is not much left for the farmer. Almost everything is spent on administration. It is a budget of $125 million, and I will tell you in a few moments how little is spent on agriculture itself.

For instance, if you look at the details of vote No. 1, you will see:

Civil salaries and wages, $54,461,200; Civil Allowances, $169,500; Professional and Special services, $2,607,700; Travelling and Removal expenses, $3,522,-100; Freight, Express and Cartage, $228,400; Postage, $124,800; Telephones, Telegrams and other Communications media, $458,600; Publication of Reports and other Material, $520,000; Exhibit Material, Advertising, Films, Radio and Displays, $150,400; Office Stationery, Supplies and Equipment, $1,276,-500; Materials and Supplies, $3,626,300; Construction or Acquisition of Buildings and Works, including lands, $31,602,000; Construction or Acquisition of Equipment, $2,698,900; Repairs and Upkeep, $932,-600; Rental, $97,700; Town Services, $1,019,400;

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, it cost nearly $100 million to distribute $121,815,100; there remains $15 million for agricultural purposes.

Can agriculture really be assisted, with such an administration? The minister will have to look into the cost of administration. The trouble, in all this, is administration. The cost of administration is tremendous. If it cost $100 million to distribute $15 million, I say to the Minister of Agriculture—I know very well that it is not his fault because he has not always been there—that it is his responsibility to correct this anomaly in administration.

If it is going to cost $100 million to distribute $14 million to the farmers, I think that other ways would cost much less. Right now, it does not make sense.

[Mr. Latulippe.]

If agriculture is going to be organized, money must first be distributed to farmers.

In my riding, for instance, 60 per cent of farm loans are turned down; all those who ask for $5,000, $10,000, $8,000, $4,000, cannot obtain them; all are refused. Many loans of $15,000, $18,000, $20,000, are also refused.

There is no money left to help the farmer; all is spent on administration.

When agricultural reform is mentioned, we are referred to ARDA which covers another area. ARDA was supposed to solve every problem, but ARDA has not solved anything up to now. If I had the figures with me on ARDA administration, you would be surprised at the cost of administering this organization from which farmers hardly get any benefit.

We are being told that in the province of Quebec, the farm income is 30 per cent lower than in other provinces. This is ridiculous. Steps will have to be taken by all means so that farmers may take advantage of their production or derive a profit from it. The farmer would not need the government so much if he had an income, but he has not. He manufactures for less than the cost price and he is not the one who prices his products. Most of the time, when he has a product to sell, its price is established by other organizations beyond his control.

With regard to feed grain, I must say that I have been sitting in the house for three years and during this period, farmers have been submitting briefs to us and asking us to see to it that they obtain feed grain at a reasonable price. The price of feed grain is too high; the implementation of the program is too costly. The farmer does not benefit from it, because he pays too much for the feed grain he needs.

They recently presented a brief in which they request the setting up of an eastern feed board and ask the minister if anything has been done in that respect. I do not know if it will do any good. If the administration costs are as high as in all the other departments, it will not be worth anything. On the other hand, if costs are kept down to a minimum, it might be useful to the farmer.

In their brief, the farmers also say that Canada will be short 500 million pounds of milk this year.

Farmers are giving up the land and dairy herds because there is no money in it. They are asking for a cost price of $4 per cwt. of industrial milk.

When we ask questions in the house, we are told to put them on the order paper, because they are of a general character. Therefore, today I will ask the Minister of Agriculture a question. Is he willing to see to it that the farmers will get the price they are asking for, that is $4 per cwt., to allow them to make a small profit, to encourage them and to enable them to meet their needs?

I would like to deal with all kinds of things, but I do not want to take too much time.

With regard to the cost of machinery, farmers are complaining that it is too expensive, that there are too many taxes on machinery. I ask the Minister of Agriculture to consult with his colleagues, especially the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp), to see if a way can be found to manufacture farm machinery cheaply. The first thing to do is to remove all taxes on that machinery.

The government should also be asked for subsidies to help the farmers. If it really wants to do something for the farmers, it should grant subsidies on farm machinery. It would cost less to finance farm machinery than defence equipment. A tank costs a million dollars, if not more. With the price of a tank, several pieces of farm equipment and tractors could be manufactured; they would help agriculture and be useful. It would be much less expensive for the government to manufacture farm machinery than cannons, tanks or war equipment which will never serve.

If we want to fight poverty, we must not forget that poverty prevails in farming. If we make farming prosperous, all the other classes of society, as well as the country's economy in general, will be prosperous. The farmer is the greatest consumer in Canada. He buys all sorts of things and has varied needs . The farmer is an important factor—the most important one—of Canadian industry. Let agriculture prosper and so will Canada's economy.

The Minister of Agriculture should press the Minister of Finance to abolish the famous 11 per cent tax on the farmer's building materials. Farmers are always building. They need all sorts of buildings. They build "terrible" buildings, and this tax is put on their building materials. The farmers are in a state of stagnation. Let the necessary pressures be applied in order to abolish this famous 11 per cent tax.

Mr. Chairman, I could say a lot more. For example, I mentioned earlier the agricultural loans which are refused. There is much to be done in this respect. Inquiries must be made. That would not be difficult because the farm loan board does not have too many offices in the province of Quebec and in Canada. The minister has only to ask those officers if he wants to find out the percentage of loans that were refused.

There are many farmers who, thanks to a small loan of $5,000, $6,000 or $10,000, could buy more land, improve their farm buildings and remain there for quite a while yet. But they abandon their farms because they are refused such a loan.

In the last five years, 60 per cent of the farms have been abandoned in a certain part of my riding. Every day, those who remain are like the bird in the tree. They want to go because they are not making any money. It does not pay.

We expect a lot from the minister. We realize he is new at the job, but we know he is eager to help. I wish to congratulate him and thank him for the interest and goodwill he has shown towards the farm people. I am sure he will do his duty and provide agriculture with services that will really help the farmer while promoting the growth of the farming industry.

• (5:30 p.m.)

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Chairman, I should like to take this first opportunity to offer my most sincere congratulations to the new Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene) on his appointment. As he has found, we, on this side of the house, have no objection to the Minister of Agriculture coming from either the east or the west, from the province of Quebec or the Maritimes. What we want is a Minister of Agriculture who keeps his eyes open, cocks his ears and is ready to accept suggestions from members of rural constituencies in this house.

Therefore, we are proud to have, at the head of the Department of Agriculture, a minister from the east, but I should like at the same time to tell the Minister of Agriculture to ask his colleagues, particularly some of them, not to indulge in partisan politics and not to place too much reliance of the fact that we have an eastern Minister of Agriculture who speaks French—I congratulate the Minister on this—in order to believe that they will win the support of all the farmers in eastern Canada.

I do not want to refer in any way to certain words of the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette). It is not enough to have a Minister of Agriculture from the east who speaks French, we also need a Minister of Agriculture who can take in hand the future of agriculture in Canada.

The Minister of Agriculture told us some moments ago, at the start of his few remarks, that we must rejoice for the good prices of farm products in Canada. In this connection, I will simply tell him that, as far as the dairy industry is concerned, this is not the opinion of dairy producers and that, as far as wheat producers are concerned, they do not share his opinion, for they suffered a price reduction recently.

The minister should not start making statements that prices are good and that problems are going to be settled. I would not like the present minister to go along the lines of his predecessor, who stated that, with six cows and two hogs, a farmer could earn an annual income of $2,400 and that that was enough.

Mr. Choquette: He did not say that.

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Chairman, I was precisely expecting the intervention of the hon. member for Lotbinière. I have here some statements of the former Minister of Agriculture and of the hon. member for Lotbinière, but I will have another opportunity to quote them, for I do not think we have time this afternoon to place, on the official report, statements which have actually been made a year or two ago.

The minister told the house a few moments ago—and we are ready to repeat it ourselves —that we were going to give him our co-operation in putting through legislation very advantageous for Canadian farmers. He is already assured of our co-operation now, and we are also going to ask him for his, because if we take a look at the order paper, we find that there is nothing about agriculture or his department.

I would like to talk about some priorities, including the setting up of a Canadian dairy commission, the setting up of a livestock feed agency for eastern Canada and the crop insurance program which will complete the present one.

There is no resolution on today's order paper and I would ask the minister, at least as far as his department is concerned, to table his resolutions as soon as possible, to enable us to advise him, and also to elaborate that policy without delay.

With regard to feed grain, I will have the opportunity to come back to that when we study the resolution of the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé). For months now, even years, the Minister of Forestry has been talking about a feed grain agency and I admit that I am beginning to question his sincerity. I have kept a rather extensive record of his statements, in the house and outside, and I hope to be able very soon to ask him many questions on that subject.

With regard to the new dairy policy which is to become effective within a few days, that is next April 1, I would like the minister to tell us when he intends to announce it. I have here the dates of the announcements made about the dairy policy since April 1958, and I think that the last day on which the minister could announce the new program for the dairy year which will start next April 1, would be March 10, that is 20 days before the start of the new dairy year which was put forward a month last year.

I would also like to ask the minister to tell us immediately if he intends, under the new program he will announce, to guarantee a minimum price of $4 a cwt. for industrial milk.

You know, Mr. Chairman, that the dairy industry in eastern Canada is of vital importance not only to the farm economy throughout the country but also to the eastern farmers' income which is already too low.

The minister must do all he can so that the new dairy program will set a minimum price of $4 per cwt. of milk.

I would also like to ask the minister if he consulted with representatives of the dairy producers with regard to the elaboration of that program, if it is not too late. I would ask the minister to do so because it would allow him to find out what the milk producers' views are before bringing in the new program, and to avoid the unpleasantness which occurred last year or two years ago when his predecessor brought in a program which was criticized by almost all Canadian milk producers.

Finally, as it will probably be impossible for the Committee on agriculture, forestry and rural development to study this new policy, I would ask the minister to allow hon. members to meet him informally to express their views on this dairy program.

Mr. Chairman, before resuming my seat, I should like to say a few words about the Canadian dairy commission. Last year, the Minister of Agriculture announced that the Canadian government would, at the first opportunity—this was on March 26, 1965—introduce a bill to establish a Canadian dairy commission. According to the minister, the commission would work in co-operation with the provinces and look after general relations between the government and the dairy industry.

Mr. Chairman, that was on March 26, 1965, and the government was then getting the bill ready for early presentation; this is March 2, 1966, and it has not been introduced yet.

Questions are being raised and I shall put them myself to the minister. Will this Canadian dairy commission to be able to ensure to milk producers a uniform price for milk? In other words, will the milk producer who has no possibility whatsoever to make cheese, powdered milk or butter with his milk, be able to obtain the same price as the one who ships his milk to another factory? This is very important. Whether it be a producer who ships his milk to a cheese factory, a butter factory or a processing plant, or a farmer who manufactures milk powder, skim milk or casein, I feel that such farmer should be paid the same price as the other farmers in his area.

So, I ask the minister: Will the Canadian dairy commission ensure that all milk producers in Canada will receive a uniform price?

My second question: Will the Canadian dairy commission exert a deep influence on milk quality?

I have only a few words to say on this, Mr. Chairman. You have, for instance, a farmer who ships his milk and does all he can to have a clean and excellent milk production. If his neighbour or second neighbour produces an inferior milk, the price of this good farmer will decrease because his neighbour or second neighbour produces milk of an inferior quality.

Will the proposed Canadian dairy commission try to diversify production as much as possible all year round to encourage farmers to produce more milk during the winter months? That is very important for the future of the Canadian dairy industry.

Fourth question: Will the commission definitively deal with this question of milk transportation?

In my province, as I believe is the case in other provinces in Canada, milk is widely transported.

• (5:40 p.m.)

There is milk that is carried 100, 200 and 300 miles every day. In the province of Quebec, you have milk which leaves Sherbrooke to be sold in Montreal and from there it goes to Trois-Rivières and then on to Quebec city. Milk goes from one place to another just like that and who is paying? Once again, it is the farmer.

The Canadian dairy commission will have to co-ordinate milk transportation to ensure that the producer will get the highest possible income and that 25 or 35 cents per cwt. will not be spent for nothing.

Fifth question regarding the Canadian dairy commission: Will it make a lot of publicity to promote dairy product consumption?

Sixth question: Will the commission deal with dairy product exports?

In 1900, 1901 and 1902, Canada exported more than 100 million pounds of cheese annually to England, and the minister can check these figures if he wants to. Today, Canada is producing about 130 million pounds of cheese and exports only 30 million pounds. Now, cheese really sells at a good price in England.

Seventh question: Will the Canadian dairy commission have a part to play in the importation of milk products in Canada, such as the cheese being imported at present, and also in the case of butter which will eventually have to be imported within a few months or a year, because butter will probably be scarce in Canada?

Those are questions which we are asking and to which we should like to get answers.

We should like to know whether the Canadian dairy commission will try to find answers to those seven specific questions I have raised.

Mr. Chairman, I shall now conclude my remarks by reminding the minister that the dairy industry is of the greatest importance to eastern farmers. It is imperative, this year, that we get for our dairy producers, who are insisting upon it—and it is only normal—a minimum price of $4 per cwt. for all industrial milk.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Chairman, I feel I must rise after the hon. member for the constituency next to mine, because we represent the two most beautiful rural ridings in the province of Quebec. I do not wish to quarrel with the hon. member—

[English]

The Chairman: Order, please. Is the hon. gentleman rising to ask a question?

Mr. Choquette: No, Mr. Chairman; I am just making a short speech. I should like to ask a very short question of the minister.

Mr. Churchill: What is this? A filibuster?

[Translation]

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Chairman, I was simply saying I did not wish to disagree with the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska. I always enjoy talking about farming and I would suggest that we have a televised discussion to settle this controversy that has been going on between us for three years—station 13 would be an ideal place.

Here is my question to the Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Chairman, because I am anxious about crop insurance. Thus, I will show the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska that I can look quite objectively at my government's policy.

One thing worries me with regard to the famous Crop Insurance Act. I put a question to the Minister the other day, arising out of the federal-provincial consultations at the civil servant level. As we know, at the time the problem which seemed ticklish for Quebec provincial authorities was this one: would fodder production, or what is still commonly known as field-crops be covered by the new provisions of the Crop Insurance Act so that Quebec farmers might be able to benefit from it?

But I see things seem to drag, and the Quebec Minister of Agriculture does not have much to say. I should like to know if arrangements are being made, if consultations are being held with the Quebec authorities so that we might keep our promise to our electors, to the effect that we would implement a Crop Insurance Act for the benefit of the farmers of the province of Quebec.

I am simply letting the minister know about my anxiety in this connection, and I would like to know if there is any progress.

[English]

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I am going to speak for only two or three minutes because I know all parties in the house want to see these estimates completed as soon as possible.

[Mr. Choquette.]

I am also a member of the Committee on Agriculture, Forestry, and Rural Development and will have plenty of opportunity to ask questions later. I should like to congratulate the minister on his appointment. We are all looking forward hopefully to his administration of the department because we believe his heart is in the right place and we think that with experience he will know what the farmers of this country want.

I also should like to congratulate the Parliamentary Secretary who is an alumnus of the same college I attended. In addition I should like to congratulate the officials of the department. When I look at the row of handsome officials I am reminded of pigeons sitting on a hemlock bough, but they carry on a very important work which is largely unrecognized by the daily press of this country, although they do recognize the divorces of movie stars and things of that sort. The officials of the department do very important work in the administration of our economy. When I look at them I am inclined to think of two lines from Gray's "Elegy In A Country Churchyard":

> Full many a flower is born to blush unseen,
> And waste its sweetness on the desert air.

The Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the farm unions, the British Columbia Fruit Growers Federation and other agricultural producers have presented their briefs to the government and in most cases to the various caucuses of the parties of this house. I will not deal with them at this time. As I see it, we have immediate problems and long term problems. I would say the immediate problems which the committee has to study first of all are the questions of farm costs, farm taxes, the cost of farm machinery, manpower policy with regard to farm production, the application of unemployment insurance to the agricultural industry, and crop insurance. Those, I think, are the immediate problems that will be facing the agricultural committee.

The long term problems are research with regard to an inventory of our soil and water resources, because we know that food is a major concern of all the people in the world today, research with regard to diseases and pests and biological control of pests, and research with regard to an economic survey of our national and international needs so far as food is concerned. Out of the considerations of the committee and the agricultural organizations and the contributions made by members of the house I hope the government will then be able to evolve a logical, long term agricultural policy.

With those few remarks I will resume my seat in the hope that the committee will have an opportunity to inquire into the important questions I have just mentioned.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Chairman, at this time I would ask only that the minister in his closing remarks make reference to one particular matter raised by my colleague from Medicine Hat, namely, loans or grants to agricultural fairs. The minister knows I raised this matter on another occasion and also attempted to put a question the other day which was ruled out of order. We are particularly concerned about this matter. A meeting was held last week and I should like the minister to make reference to that meeting and the results which we may expect to flow from those discussions.

Mr. Greene: Mr. Chairman, if I might answer that question since it has been asked by two or three members, I might say that, as the hon. member knows, I was anxious to see what the breeders association and the exhibitors and exhibition associations felt both in respect of the livestock prize program and the policy regarding loans and grants. Accordingly we invited the interested parties here for a meeting last week. At this meeting we had a full day's discussion with regard to these programs.

With regard to loans and grants I do not think I would be out of place in giving the gist of the discussions. Hon. members will be pleased to know that a great number of these gentlemen who came to this meeting from all over Canada were in favour of both loans and grants and were not going to turn down either if they were available. This is the general view. I can only say with regard to our own local program that there has been no change in respect of the government's position in this regard.

When the loan bill is ready it will be presented to the house, but it will show no change in policy. Since I took office there has been no change in policy in regard to long term loans for multipurposes. I think that is what the hon. gentleman was interested in. When legislation comes before the house in due course there will be ample opportunity to discuss these ramifications at that time.

In regard to grants under the prior program, and the maximum of $100,000 on a 50-50 basis, as hon. members know this program was curtailed under the austerity measures of 1962. It has never been revived and up to the present time the government has nothing further to announce. The re-establishment of this program is being reviewed and I will certainly bring the views of the representatives at our meeting last week to the attention of my colleagues. Those views were in favour of the reinstatement of the program, in its two aspects. First, there were the representations of those who have not yet received a grant under this program and, second, the representations of those who had received a grant but want another bite at the program if and when it is reinstated.

I do not think there is anything further to announce with regard to whether the program will be reinstated. I want to be perfectly honest with the committee in this regard. As the committee knows, the reinstitution of such a program would affect the government's general spending plans in the area of construction. As hon. members know, there are inflationary pressures upon our economy and programs of this kind particularly geared to construction may have to be considered in the light of the general economy of the whole country. With that exception the loans program has not been changed in any way and the question of reinstating grants for construction is under current review by the cabinet.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, I see that it is nearly six o'clock and I realize that there is a desire to put these estimates through. I had some extended remarks I wished to make on this occasion but I have cut them down considerably. I will speak in greater detail on another occasion. I would not even make these brief remarks except for one thing and that is the situation facing dairy farmers in the province of Ontario.

I know the minister is very sympathetic to this subject and I am sure he will do what he can to influence his colleagues to take some action. Putting it very briefly and bluntly, the dairy farmers of Ontario must in some way or other be guaranteed a minimum of $4 per hundred pounds for their milk regardless of where that milk goes. This is essential because the income of all other groups in the community, including labour, management, service jobs and the professions, has gone up. I know that some of the government members from Toronto and Montreal will suggest that they are paying more for milk and that may be true, but it is the large dairies such as Bordens and others which are receiving the extra amount of money rather than the dairy farmers.

Another popular misconception is that the farmers who have fluid milk contracts—for the benefit of city members, that refers to milk used for drinking—receive $5 per hundred pounds of milk. That is true in respect of the amount of milk they sell for fluid purposes but for much of their milk they receive only about $2.60 per hundred pounds because the amount of milk produced over and above their fluid contracts goes for manufacturing purposes.

There is one other thing I should like to say for the record. As has been pointed out in some newspapers, farm income for 1963 was up 13 per cent. That is true, if statistics can prove anything, but not true in respect of all farmers. I may say that statistics would indicate that the income of farmers on the prairies has increased 30.5 per cent. That is fine and we are all delighted to see that the people in the west are doing so well because in past years they had the tough end of the stick, but so far as Ontario farmers are concerned their income in 1964 was down 7.1 per cent from 1963. I think if we remove specialized crops from that figure, such as tobacco and fruits, we will find that the income of the Ontario dairy farmer was down even more than 7.1 per cent.

It is up to any government to make sure that the various groups in our society get their fair share of our buoyant prosperity, but the dairy farmers are not receiving their share. In fact, they are losing money. In this regard I am sure the minister is aware of a most dangerous situation, namely, that dairy farmers are giving up, selling their herds and getting off the farms altogether because they cannot make ends meet. Unless something is done soon—perhaps deficiency payments may be the best answer—to increase to $4 per hundred pounds of milk the price paid to Ontario dairy farmers, there will develop a serious situation. I think something in this regard must be done by the minister, his colleagues and his administrative staff as soon as possible.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, the point I have to make can be made very briefly. On March 31 of last year this house, or its predecessor, ordered the production of papers dealing with matters between the agricultural stabilization board and W. J. Lafave and Sons Limited of Montreal. This return was never made. On June 22 of last year I wrote the minister's predecessor but received no answer. I inquired of the parliamentary returns office, but despite the order of this house these documents have not been filed. I gave the minister plenty of time to get accustomed to his work and I wrote him on February 11 asking him to look into this matter. I now ask him again to look into it personally to find out why these papers have not been produced as the house ordered. I assure him that if they are not produced fairly soon my suspicions will begin to grow.

Item agreed to.

Production and marketing—

15. Administration, operation and maintenance including the administration of the Agricultural Stabilization Act, contributions to assist in the marketing of agricultural products subject to the approval of Treasury Board and payment of expenses not exceeding $100,000 for a travelling Canadian livestock and seed exhibition outside Canada, $2,110,100.

Mr. Baldwin: I understand this is the vote having to do with the P.F.A.A. and that is what I wish to discuss. Perhaps I could do so under item 35 which deals with grants and subsidies, if the minister will not take exception to that. I am prepared to defer my remarks until we reach that item on the understanding that the minister will not object at that time.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, we have asked the minister a number of questions which I think should be answered. I want to know what the minister's intention is in regard to several matters and I do not think it is sufficient to say that next year's estimates will be referred to the committee on agriculture. It is important to know what the minister intends will be the work of that committee. One of the major problems brought to our attention by farm organizations is that relating to the establishment of national marketing agencies, particularly in respect of products where surpluses are apt to develop and have developed. This raises the whole question of the Agricultural Stabilization Act and the government's intention.

I also want to know specifically why the government objected to the proposal put forward the other day by the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale in respect of regional payments. The hon. member named two commodities, hogs and eggs, with regard to which regional stabilization payments should be made on a district and also an area basis. This would benefit these producers and would fit into a national marketing policy to solve these problems. There is already quite a problem developing in the dairy industry of Ontario which has received some consideration through the establishment of a dairy commission. I would imagine this is a forerunner of trying to establish a price of $4 for milk in Ontario which if it is not matched by and related to other provinces will cause a considerable displacement in terms of the marketing of products.

These problems have been raised over the years and have not received any consideration. I personally, and I think most members of the house will agree with me, am not as interested in having the estimates go before the committee as in having the minister make a decision with regard to what he wants the committee to do. We should have some foreknowledge in this respect.

Mr. Greene: Mr. Chairman, I think I should briefly answer the hon. member in this regard. In so far as national marketing policies are concerned, in the short time I have been with the department I have found it to be one of the areas of very grave difficulty because, as the hon. member knows, the Privy Council in the 1930's decided that agricultural marketing was a provincial and not a federal matter. I think that in the east in particular farmers are very much taken with the example of the wheat board and feel that if they could market on a national basis in a manner analogous to what the wheat board has been able to do for the western wheat producer, their marketing procedures would be more effective and beneficial.

Bearing in mind the constitutional difficulties, I am very hopeful that the approach of a national dairy commission, which I think will be a successful advent in regard to marketing in this area, will lead to a solution of this problem. This can only be done in conjunction with provincial agencies such as the Ontario Milk Marketing Board which was set up last fall. As the hon. member may have noticed, in the speech from the throne in the province of Quebec it was announced that they are going to set up a provincial milk marketing board.

It would be my hope that this general pattern of provincial boards working in conjunction with and under the aegis of a federal board could achieve all the benefits of national marketing. But there would have to be a provincial-federal meeting of minds in this area before it could become possible. I am very hopeful that in the dairy industry we will be able to achieve this and that a national dairy commission working in conjunction with provincial marketing agencies will set the pattern for national marketing to which I believe my hon. friend is referring. It may be that if this pattern is successful it could well be continued in other spheres and areas of agricultural products to give the agricultural producer the kind of stability and certainty of price that he needs if he is to be able to afford to form the sort of economically viable unit which will be productive and rewarding in the future.

With respect to the committee's consideration in these areas I think, with respect, it would be presumptuous of me to tell the committee what to do, what studies to make or the areas in which they should involve themselves. I can only assure the hon. member and the committee that certainly I and my officials will be only too pleased to appear before the committee and discuss any of these matters that the committee wishes to discuss, subject always to the rules which prevent our disclosing legislation that is in the mill. I may say that I hope to have some of these items on the order paper in the not too distant future. If there is one thing I have learned in a very short time it is that if the wheels of justice grind exceeding slow, so do the wheels of legislation.

Mr. Baldwin: You have not got Spencer though as the Department of Justice has.

Mr. Greene: We may have legislation in mind and announce it on the election platform as being party policy but it still takes a great deal of administrative work to get the bills ready, through the Department of Justice and so on and present them on the order paper for the consideration of hon. members. I can assure the committee that I will push these measures that are in the mill in the agricultural area to the best of my ability and hope they will be before the house in short order so that members may consider the bills in committee. At that time they will be open for suggestion and consideration.

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Chairman, may I direct a brief question to the minister? Is the minister in a position today to tell us when he thinks he will be able to announce the new dairy program?

Mr. Greene: Mr. Chairman, as the hon. member has very properly pointed out, the time is rapidly drawing nigh. He rather frightened me when he mentioned the date of March 10. I do not know whether it is essential or possible to have the program announced by that date but certainly it will have to be announced very shortly. I might point out that one of the difficulties timewise with regard to an approach such as I outlined earlier with respect to a national dairy commission and a national dairy policy working through and in co-operation and conjunction with these provincial agencies is the length of time necessary for negotiation and discussion with the various provincial agencies, which slows down the wheels of progress to some degree. It may be this is one of the reasons we have not yet been able to announce the policy. I can only say to my hon. friend that I certainly hope to place it before the house very shortly.

Mr. Vincent: I have just one other question, Mr. Chairman. Is the minister in a position to tell us today whether he can give us any hope that this program will be directed at ensuring a price of $4 for milk, or more if he thinks this would be better?

Mr. Greene: I can only give my hon. friend the assurance that I will do my very utmost with any humble abilities I may have to persuade my colleagues in the government to do what is in the best interests of the farmers.

Mr. Coates: On the same point, Mr. Chairman, I should like to suggest to the Minister of Agriculture that we in this parliament, as in the previous parliament, have listened for a long period of time to the government telling us that the legislation is ready and there were no problems at all. We went through two election campaigns discussing these subjects. There is no problem apparently except that when we pick up the order paper we find there is nothing there. The minister says that perhaps March 10 is too early to expect to have this legislation on the order paper. I do not know why it should be too early. It was supposed to be ready for the order paper in the last parliament. If the minister envisages some new concepts which should be included in the legislation and which the previous minister did not envisage, I can understand some further slight delay being necessary.

Mr. Greene: I do not think the dairy policy requires legislation; it can be announced. I believe this is what the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska was referring to when he mentioned the date March 10. It will not require legislation.

[Mr. Greene.]

Mr. Coates: In so far as legislative items are concerned, what is the reason for the delay in putting them on the order paper? If they are not put on the order paper they cannot be passed by parliament. The matter that concerns me more, however, is that we are told we will have banking legislation and railway legislation and the ministers involved in those matters are quite senior to my good friend. I realize the minister has a great deal of persuasive ability. I hope this ability is effective and he is able to get his agricultural legislation before the house. He will certainly receive the co-operation of this party if he places it before the house so we may take some action in regard to it.

• (6:10 p.m.)

In order to give the minister an example, if he is not already aware of it I should like to quote from the Halifax Chronicle-Herald of February 28 in which this statement is made:

> Cash farm income in Nova Scotia for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1965 dropped below the previous year's total, but was on the road to recovery.

This is a quotation from the annual report of the marketing branch of the department of agriculture of that province. This is a sad state of affairs when you find your province going backward in the field of agriculture and when you are told that everything else is going forward. Certainly one of the reasons for the situation is the fact that we have not had the kind of legislation which we had ready in 1962 and which your party prevented us from bringing into effect because they were more interested in going to the people than they were in legislation that would be of assistance to the people.

Something has to be done to eliminate the backward trend in agriculture in Nova Scotia. I am sure the minister appreciates that the government of Nova Scotia, the Department of Agriculture and ARDA are doing everything they possibly can to put agriculture on the right track. I have been told that in so far as the ARDA legislation is concerned Nova Scotia has taken greater advantage of the benefits available from that legislation than any other province in Canada. They are doing everything they can within the confines of their financial resources. However, what we depend on most in Nova Scotia is the right kind of policies coming forward from Ottawa. Surely the situation indicates that the legislation which was envisaged in the Speech from the Throne in this parliament, in the previous parliament and by our party in the parliament previous to that is the kind of legislation that will get us out of our difficulties. I ask the Minister of Agriculture not to let his senior colleagues push him around. He comes from one of the areas in Canada that badly need this legislation. If we hope to give farmers an opportunity to progress the way they should along with other sectors of the economy of this country, then we have to have this legislation and we have to have it very soon.

Mr. Hales: I just have a friendly reminder for the Minister of Agriculture. I understand that this week end he is going to attend a ministerial conference with his counterpart in the United States. I hope he is prepared to put up a good argument against the ridiculous quota of 600,000 pounds of cheese allowed entry into the United States while the United States is permitted to ship unlimited quantities into Canada.

Mr. Loney: I should like to ask the minister under this item why there is such confusion in connection with stabilization payments to dairy producers. I think the minister is well aware of the fact that it is almost one year since this policy was announced, March 26, 1965 to be exact. In that announcement the minister stated that complete details of the program were being developed by the Agricultural Stabilization Board and would be made known to producers and the trade at the appropriate time.

Representations have been made to me in the past year to the effect that this has proven to be wrong. There was another announcement on June 4, 1965, which stated that claim forms for supplementary payments provided under the new interim dairy policy were being mailed the week of June 4 to some 200,000 registered shippers of manufactured milk and cream. I should like to draw to the minister's attention that even at this stage some dairy producers in my riding have not received their application forms, let alone their payments. This same announcement said the claim forms should be mailed by July 31 to ensure consideration. If there are dairy producers who have not yet received their application forms I would ask the minister to take this into consideration.

On August 30, 1965 the minister announced that the first cheques for supplementary payments to farmers under the new federal policy had been mailed. It was stated also that approximately 205,000 of these claims were being settled at the rate of 1,000 claims per day. I know there is an awareness within the department that in many cases the dairy producer misunderstands or misinterprets the instructions but surely something can be done to rectify this situation and to ensure that simple instructions will go out to the producer and to the buyer of his product.

There is another situation I should like to bring to the minister's attention under this item and that is the fact that when this program was instigated many of the buyers began making subsidy payments to the producers. They continued this for several months until they made application to the stabilization board for reimbursement cheques. At that time they found that some producers to whom they had been making these payments were not fully accredited; they were not yet registered. In some cases repayment was asked of the buyer or the amount was deducted from the buyer's next cheque. In some cases the payment was refused. I asked the minister to give some consideration to reimbursing these buyers of dairy products so they will not have to bear the loss which in the case of one creamery amounted to roughly $900.

In fairness to the officials of the stabilization board I must say they are making some effort to rectify this situation. However, I did wish to bring this to the minister's attention at this time. A moment ago I said there were many dairy producers within the riding I represent who have not received their stabilization payment. Again, in fairness to the officials of the department, may I say that where representations have been made every effort possible has been made by these officials to rectify the situation.

I referred initially to the delay and confusion but I should like the minister to bear in mind that I am still receiving letters. I will not take the time of the committee to quote from these letters. I was receiving them as far back as September, October and November. Here is one letter dated November 24, 1965, which is typical. The writer says he has not yet received any supplementary payment from the stabilization board. He goes on to ask me to make representations. In this case I did. I understand the stabilization payment has now been received but it took about six weeks.

Here is a letter dated December 17 in which it is stated the producer wrote to the stabilization board three weeks ago and has not yet received an answer. I have many more letters like these. Then we come to 1966, January and February. Here is a letter which I should like to bring to the Minister's attention dated February 27. Reference is made to the fact that an application for a stabilization payment was made in July, 1965, but no payment has been received even though the producer has written twice to the data office. These are some of the situations which have arisen and I ask the minister to take this matter under consideration to see what he can do to rectify it.

• (6:20 p.m.)

Mr. Moore: Mr. Chairman, before I mention my question I should like to support what the hon. member for Bruce has said about delay and confusion. I believe this exists in all areas of Canada. I must say that we get letters every day of the week asking, where is my money? Many of these people say that they wrote to the Department of Agriculture some time ago but did not receive a reply.

My question to the minister deals with the stabilization price of hogs. The present guaranteed price of hogs, I understand, is $23.65 a hundredweight for A hogs at Toronto. This is out of line with the present price of hogs which is close to 40 cents a pound at this time. You might say that because of that there is no problem, but why have a stabilization price if it does not protect the hog producer? The cost of production makes the present stabilization price of $23.65 seem rather ridiculous. I think the minister should take another look at this problem and consider a price of say 29 cents. If market prices ever went down as low as $23.65 for A hogs at Toronto the hog producers would be forced out of business.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, in his reply to me the minister indicated that he could not direct the committee as to what they should discuss. My understanding is that the government does do this. It is they who move matters for consideration by the committee. I had hoped the minister would say that he was willing to put some of these matters before the committee rather than just the estimates. As I see it, the committee would not be able to go into all these matters on its own, but if the minister would refer some of these problems to the committee the committee would be seized of them. Some of the specific problems are the dairy industry and farm machinery prices, and I am sure the minister is also concerned about crop insurance.

The second matter referred to by the minister was marketing legislation. In the past provision has been made under the stabilization act to dispose on a national basis of products bought by the government when their price dropped below a certain level. Things accumulated and the government dumped them or disposed of them.

Very shortly the dairy industry will have discussions with the province of Ontario and the province of Quebec in relation to butter, cheese, fluid milk and other dairy products. If this matter could be referred to the committee and an over-all policy decided upon from the point of view of the federal government, then the difficulty of bringing together the two provincial governments, would not seem a very large one.

I hope, though I will not press the matter at this late hour, that the minister and the department will set forth some of the problems which they are willing to ask the cooperation of the members of the committee to solve. These items could fall into three basic categories, namely, the marketing of dairy products, farm machinery prices and security of farm prices. I suggest that the minister has more responsibility in this regard than he may have assumed. The committee does not decide what it wants to do. The house puts before the committee what it wishes it to do and in the final analysis I believe the minister would be the one to give leadership in this field.

Mr. Nasserden: May I ask the minister whether the stabilization act will be brought before the committee this year? Last year I brought this question up on a number of occasions but the minister and the government gave us the run around each time.

This act has been in operation now for a number of years. When it was brought forward in the first instance the thought of the government at the time was that it was not perfect and would need revision as time went on. After the period of years that it has been in operation I think parliament is now in a good position to study the act and to make the necessary revisions to ensure it is really workable for the Canadian farmer.

Mr. Loney: I have just one further matter on item 15, Mr. Chairman. What consideration has the minister's department given to some type of freight assistance to Ontario grown grains moving to the eastern provinces? I have in mind Ontario wintergrown wheat and Ontario corn.

The reason I ask the question is that we are well aware of the fact that these Ontario grown cash crops are in direct competition with grain moving in from the west which receives freight assistance at the Lakehead. The producers of the grain in Ontario also compete directly with United States storage corn, and under their system the producers in the United States can move it into Canada a lot cheaper than we can produce it. Our cash crop dealers are facing direct competition in this field.

I should like the minister to take into consideration a request which was made in a statement issued by the Ontario Federation of Agriculture which I should like to put on the record. The statement recommended that Ontario wheat shipped to any destination in Quebec and the Maritimes receive freight assistance at a comparable rate to that of western wheat moving to the same destination. This would permit the Ontario wheat producers marketing board to move surplus stocks of winter wheat into feeding areas on a competitive basis with feed wheat from western Canada.

25. Grants, contributions and subsidies in the amounts and subject to the terms specified in the sub-vote titles listed in the details of estimates, $11,829,400.

Mr. Scott (Victoria (Ont.): Mr. Chairman, I wish to congratulate the minister on his appointment. I am sure he will find it very challenging and I wish him the very best of luck. At this time I will make my remarks brief. I should like to impress on the minister that consideration must be given to our agricultural fairs. Ten million people in Canada attend these fairs each year. It is the greatest agricultural show window of our nation. But today most of our societies are suffering from a lack of accommodation, with no facilities to display their goods.

Fairs are an institution in this country and are much older than Confederation. They have always been, as they are today, a great social as well as an economic factor in our way of life. In Ontario alone there are approximately 265 agricultural societies, 57 of which are class A or class B fairs, the rest being class C. The distinguishing factor is that a class C fair does not spend $3,000 or more on its prize lists for what are classed as agricultural purposes for three consecutive years; yet it may contribute as much or more to agriculture than some of the class B fairs.

It is the opinion of people connected with agricultural fairs that the ceiling of $3,000 on prize money for class C fairs should be lowered to $2,000 in prize money paid for agricultural purposes. We would also ask for a reinstatement of the major capital improvement grant to class A and class B fairs. We head the minister say that he had received representations some time ago to this effect and we beg the minister's department to consider this.

We also insist that the minister give further consideration to a long term loan policy for class A and class B fairs, with an interpretation broad enough to embrace community activities, the money to be provided at a reasonable rate of interest and with a forgiveness clause. Some of the smaller country fairs have done more to improve agriculture with respect to livestock and agricultural products through their 4H clubs than have many larger institutions. We must remember that if all the tributaries flowing into our great lakes were suddenly to cease the lakes would dry up. Do not let this happen to our own show, the agricultural show.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Chairman, I will take only a few moments to state my position and to endorse some of the statements which have been made by people primarily from agricultural regions. I should like to ask the minister, as other members of the house have today, to reinstate the capital grants for fair construction purposes. In 1960 the government spend $460,000, in 1961, $500,000, and in 1962, $665,000 for this purpose.

I would submit to the minister that that was probably some of the best spent money that the Canadian government ever spent. For a relatively small sum of money the Canadian government enabled many communities to improve not only facilities devoted to agricultural interests but community facilities as well.

The city of Galt is one of the communities interested in improving its facilities for agricultural interests. It also wishes to combine those facilities with a recreational centre that would serve the interests of all citizens. I ask the minister to give this matter serious consideration and to reinstate the grant program. I feel that such federal initiative would be widely welcomed throughout the whole country.

Mr. Moore: Mr. Chairman, with the new dairy policy coming up, and with the promise of possibly $4 per hundred pounds for manufactured milk to be considered, I should like to mention the plight in which these provisions might leave the fluid milk shipper, especially in view of the fact that at the present time there is no subsidy on surplus milk to the shipper. Any subsidy on surplus fluid milk was taken off during the term of the previous minister who said that it was taken off to save money. Quite possibly money was saved. However, I think we have to take a look now at the position the fluid milk shipper will be in if manufactured milk goes up to $4 a hundred pounds. The prices now paid to the shipper for fluid milk range from possibly $4.95 a hundred pounds to $5 and over per hundred pounds. As anybody knows, the fluid milk shipper is on a quota, sometimes small, sometimes large. He cannot survive without producing surplus milk. In order to maintain a quota, which he must maintain if he is not to lose part of it, he must produce surplus milk. When his cows go out to grass in the summer they produce it on their own.

It may well be that the fluid milk shipper will be receiving a lower average price per hundred pounds of milk than is paid to the shippers to manufacturing plants. In my own home town one shipper is already in this position, an it is a ridiculous position in which to place a fluid milk shipper. His costs of operation are so much higher than those of any other dairy producer. Costs must of necessity be higher because the regulations are very stringent. The producer must produce good milk of a very high quality or go under. I hope that the minister and his department will take a close look at the particular problem that may come up when and if prices rise.

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Plant and plant products—

35d. Grants, contributions and subsidies as detailed in the estimates, $10,450,000.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I have no apology for keeping the committee a few minutes longer. I have just come back from having spent three days in my constituency. Having seen the condition of several thousand people there and as a result of my studies and discussions during the last three days I have been reinforced in the view that I should be derelict in my duty if I did not make one more to persuade the government and the minister to change their rejection of the request of the Alberta government to co-operate in providing financial assistance to the people of my constituency.

I speak to the minister more in sorrow than in anger. I think his heart is in the right place. I realize his difficulties lie in trying to persuade his colleagues, as he said a few minutes ago, to view the whole problem in a palatable light. Hercules in cleaning up the Aegean stables perhaps had no more difficulty than has the minister in trying to paint his colleagues to appear in an attractive light with respect to agriculture in Canada.

When the minister spoke on January 26 he put his case for rejection specifically and quite fairly on two grounds. The minister said that there was a constitutional barrier which prevented his giving effect to the request that had been made. He also indicated that for the federal government to make payments in co-operation with the province to help farmers in the Peace River area and other parts of Alberta who are in distress because of unusual weather conditions, might create a precedent. I want to deal with this matter briefly because I do not want the impression to remain on the record that such a statement was made and not answered.

With regard to the constitutional barrier I suggest to the minister that the British North America Act gives a concurrent jurisdiction to both federal and provincial governments. That provision is in the same section giving jurisdiction with respect to immigration. No one that I know of has ever questioned the sole right of the federal government to deal with matters affecting immigration. The program and policy here indicated is not one of welfare. It is a policy related to agricultural problems and linked with crop insurance and Prairie Farm Assistance Act programs. It is a supplementary payment by way of assistance to farmers. I think it comes squarely within the four corners of section 95.

I will leave it at that. I do suggest that there is no right on the part of the government to offer as an excuse that there is a constitutional barrier to the implementing of the program I have referred to. There was a precedent in 1959 when P.F.A.A. paid millions of dollars to farmers in western Canada who had sustained losses because of crop conditions at that time.

In further proof of what I say and to indicate what was in the minds of members of the minister's party I wish to refer to a passage taken from the Fairview Post of January 27, 1966.

Unsuccessful Liberal candidate in the Nov. 8 federal election, Charles MacDonell of Grande Prairie says he is bewildered by refusal of federal authorities to sanction any crop assistance to many needy farmers in the Peace. Following is a statement by the Grande Prairie barrister:

• (6:40 p.m.)

The refusal of the federal Minister of Agriculture to participate in provision of this assistance is a direct reversal of the federal policy which was in existence during the election campaign. At that time the policy was to participate on an equal basis with the province in any program which the province was willing to formulate and administer.

Then he goes on to suggest what should be done, with protest meetings, marches to Ottawa and so on. There is no question about it. This was the understanding at the time, and there was every right for the people of Peace River and myself to believe that when, and if, the provincial government did undertake to make payment, and to ask the federal government for assistance, that request would be met.

Urgency arises because the provincial government has agreed to proceed with its program. It has made available about $1¼ million. Applications have been taken from farmers. These applications have been processed, and when I was in the north I found that already some cheques were starting to come out. The question of urgency is that these people will require the full amount in order for them to carry on in an effective way during the coming crop year.

I know this is a long distance away. I have heard the suggestion that it may be all for the good of these people that they should leave this land and find a means of making a livelihood elsewhere. But many of them are farmers who came up under the homestead program. They have been there, three, four, five and six years. They are soldiers in a front-line settlement. They are farming the same kind of land I saw people farming 30 years ago—gray wood soil. It needs careful intensive cultivation. There are some 10 million to 12 million acres of this type of land, and I suggest that a continued refusal by the federal government to participate in this scheme will not drive these people away, but that it will constitute a rank injustice, an inequity. I appeal to the minister to review the situation with his colleagues.

If there is a barrier to bringing the program under P.F.A.A. possibly the minister might consult with his colleague the Minister of National Health and Welfare, with respect to the unemployment assistance program, which is very wide in scope. There is ample opportunity for this to be done. One must keep in mind the statement made by the Liberal candidate up there. After all, this was election time—and I think somebody said old age cannot wither nor custom stale the campaign wiles of the Liberals. I do not want to dwell on that at this moment, but I do urge the minister to review the whole program, consult with his colleagues and see if ways and means cannot be found to provide assistance on an equal share basis with the province of Alberta. I urge him to do this, having in mind the principles involved, having in mind that several thousands of people are involved, and having in mind the feeling that there has been discrimination against them.

Mr. Greene: Mr. Chairman, I think this deserves an answer. The hon. member has brought up the question previously and I believe I should clear the record. First of all, I understand there has been some controversy in the Alberta press as to the series of events in this matter, and I think I should clear that up in view of the contradictions that have appeared.

First of all, the minister of agriculture of the province of Alberta did request in December that we share in this program, but there has apparently been some misunderstanding in that regard. In answer to several questions in the house I have announced that there has never been any subsequent request for any method of approach which would be anything but supplementary payments over and above the P.F.A.A. payments. I can in no way blame my colleagues in this matter. The decision has been my own and I must stand on it. Contrary to what hon. members opposite may believe, my colleagues in the cabinet are kindly, benign, delightful gentlemen, and I can assure you they would do anything they could to help anyone in trouble.

I do not deny for one moment the grave difficulties in which these people are finding themselves. I appreciate the deep sincerity of the hon. member for Peace River, and of the hon. member for Medicine Hat, who also has drawn this matter to my attention. My difficulty is simply that here is an area under P.F.A.A., in which some people have received P.F.A.A. payments. They have received P.F.A.A. because of the fact that they have had three bad years in a row; but I would like to point out that other P.F.A.A. areas have received P.F.A.A. payments as many as 25 out of 26 years. How then can we justify preferring one area under P.F.A.A. and saying to the people there, "You will not only receive your P.F.A.A. payments, but we are also going to give you an extra $1 million or $2 million of federal money"? This is the quandary in which I find myself.

In 1959, with due respect, the whole of the prairie provinces suffered from early frost or snow so that bins could not be counted and P.F.A.A. could not be brought into effect. Therefore the entire P.F.A.A. area was covered by emergency payments. There was no preferring of one area over another, and I might point out that in the province of Manitoba, in their administration of the 1959 program, they specifically did not pay anyone who had received P.F.A.A. They took exactly the same view as we find we must take in this case.

I have repeatedly sought a way—and I point no finger at anyone because I have been no wiser than anyone else in this regard—to see if we could make a contribution without in fact preferring several P.F.A.A. areas over the rest of the P.F.A.A. areas, many of which had also suffered losses for more than three years in a row. This is the quandary with which I am faced and I have not been able to find a way around it.

Many of the questions asked have been to this effect: Has there been any request from the provincial government for aid in this emergency which would not in fact be a payment supplementary to P.F.A.A. payments, thus preferring one, two or three P.F.A.A. areas over others? I have had no request in line with this approach. Had we had such requests, so that in fact it was not a preferring of some P.F.A.A. areas over others, and if there was some other method of handling it, then it might well be we could participate; but I do not see how we can discriminate against certain P.F.A.A. areas as compared with others.

If we are going to have emergency payments for the Peace River area over and above P.F.A.A., then surely we must do the same for other P.F.A.A. areas which have suffered for more than the three years. This is a quandary. I appreciate very much the hon. member's sincerity, and I only regret I have not been able to figure a way around the problem.

Mr. Baldwin: Will the minister take into consideration the suggestion I made about the possibility of extension of unemployment assistance? I make that request having in mind that much of the land involved is in the frontier area, and there have been many cases where farmers have been able to break and bring under cultivation only 80, 100 or 120 acres. As the minister knows there is a limit under P.F.A.A.—half the cultivated acreage—and the minister can readily see how half of 80 or 100 acres, at a payment of only $2 an acre, does not provide much. The amount of money is not to be considered in the same sense as larger areas in the western provinces where farmers have much more cultivated acreage and the payments they get can come up to the maximum of $800. There is a clear distinction to be made in that regard, and it is in that sense that the provincial government approved the program. I think the minister should look at it in that light.

• (6:50 p.m.)

Mr. Moore: Mr. Chairman, I was going to make the same plea that has been made by the member for Peace River in respect of the farmers in west central Alberta. The problems are very similar. Since the minister gave a very considered answer, I do not have to go into it in detail. I would however like to make one comment. He spoke about the technicalities, and I can understand his problem. I know he is sincere in this; but these technicalities will not bring gas, oil and seed to these farmers who have no other way to obtain them.

I think that, if you look at the P.F.A.A. payments you will find in certain areas they are either very small or are not in existence at all. I receive letters from many people who say they are not covered by P.F.A.A. and are in difficulty. I beg the minister to look into this further. Possibly some assistance in providing interest free loans to buy oil, gas and seed might be a solution; I do not know.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, there are just one or two points I have in mind at this time for clarification. I would like the Minister of Agriculture to know that I do not want to misinterpret what he says, but what I believe he said was that the minister of agriculture for the Province of Alberta had asked for supplementary P.F.A.A. payments. That is not the context in which the request was made.

The request was not for supplementary payments above the regular P.F.A.A. payments that might have been made in these two specific areas. What was asked for was a 50 per cent sharing of the cost of the emergency assistance program set up for two specific areas for what they considered to be good and sufficient reasons. The technicalities and problems that the Minister of Agriculture discusses here, so far as I and the minister of agriculture for Alberta are concerned, are superimposed difficulties because they try to hang it on P.F.A.A. I know the view of the provincial government in Alberta is that there should be no relationship whatsoever between the request for a cost sharing program and P.F.A.A. I wish to clarify this because I think that is the intent of the minister of agriculture for Alberta, and I think perhaps on reflection of the federal Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Greene: This is perfectly correct. If I left the impression that the aid was requested specifically as being supplementary to P.F.A.A. payments, it is not so; it is exactly as the hon. member has stated. It was requested for a specific area, but in fact these were P.F.A.A. areas and, therefore, our conclusion was that this would have resulted in supplementary payments for those P.F.A.A. areas in particular. However, the request did not come from the minister specifically on the basis of being supplementary to P.F.A.A. The hon. member is quite correct.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I might ask a question. I know the item under which this question should have been asked is passed. Would the minister be gracious enough to afford me the privilege of asking the question? I am referring particularly to class B fairs and the suspended grants. Is the policy being changed, and when does the minister expect to change that policy in order to extend those grants again to the class B fairs.

Mr. Greene: Mr. Chairman, the policy of payment which was suspended in 1962 was reactivated. I can tell the hon. member that both the grants program and the new loans suggested by my predecessor are under consideration and I hope we will have a decision from the cabinet in this regard in the not too distant future.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, I have a supplementary question. Does that mean that the loans program will be substituted for the grants program, or will there be both?

Mr. Greene: Both are being considered; there is no decision. At the meeting with the fairs people the contention, strangely enough, was that they all were in favour of both; they were not going to turn down either the grants or the loans, if they were going to be available from the federal government.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister, while we are on this item, whether he would indicate briefly to the house what the situation is in respect of the golden nematode invasion on Vancouver Island. I know a situation was developing there where some of the producers were going to face considerable difficulty because of the embargo placed on the marketing of their potato crop. I am wondering where this matter stands at the moment, so far as the federal Department of Agriculture is concerned.

Mr. Greene: Mr. Chairman, a rather complex program is in effect. If the hon. member would permit me, I would be pleased either to write him about it or discuss it with him personally, because it is lengthy. However, briefly I can say that there is a program of relief in effect.

When I was in Victoria in January I had a meeting with these people. It was a lengthy, and I think worth-while meeting. The details and administration of the program were discussed fully with them. I do not think there is going to be an easy or facile solution. I am sure it is a very complex problem. To date I think the program has been working satisfactorily; but I feel certain there will be problems as we go along, and I can only hope that we will be able to meet them to the satisfaction of the persons involved. However it is a very difficult problem to solve, because there are several aspects to it.

First of all, I think the question of paying for crops that had been destroyed—crops of various kinds, including nursery stock—is one problem that is not too difficult to remedy. I think there is the matter of the compensation for land which must be taken out of production for a certain length of time, and again there is the third category of land which must be taken out of production for a much greater length of time and perhaps virtually permanently. Compensation in those areas is not an easy thing to determine.

We are attempting, and I hope successfully, to negotiate settlements which are satisfactory to the individual farmers, and if we can do this, that will be the end of it. I hope we can do so. If not, some method will have to be evolved whereby we can assess compensation upon some equitable basis.

Mr. Barnett: There is one particular aspect of the problem which has not been touched upon; that is the situation of the growers who were outside of the immediately affected area and who were not going to be able to market their crop, such as seed potatoes, because of the embargo on exports from the area. Is the minister satisfied, so far as his department is concerned, that the present program is working in a manner which will prevent such farmers being in a situation of hardship?

Mr. Greene: I think this is one of the difficult areas in which to assess fair and just compensation, in order to be fair to the taxpayer whose money it is we are dealing with, and at the same time be fair to the affected grower. However, to the best of my knowledge the program is working satisfactorily and certainly is being reviewed from time to time. If any of the growers who are concerned are not happy with it, I would be only too pleased to hear from them in order to see whether we can work out solutions which are satisfactory to them. To the best of my knowledge the program is working satisfactorily.

Mr. Barnett: We will write to ask for a full explanation.

Mr. Loney: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister whether further consideration has been given to the numerous requests by members on this side of the house in respect of some means to bring about a way to alleviate the serious crop loss as a result of early frost and early snow this past fall. I refer, Mr. Chairman, to those areas in western Ontario which are not among the 22 townships which were designated, and particularly the townships in the county of Bruce.

• (7:00 p.m.)

Mr. Greene: Mr. Chairman, I am sure the hon. member is aware of the fact that the initiation for such a program must come from the province. We have had no requests from the province of Ontario for contributions, to any of the communities to which he referred.

[Mr. Greene.]

Mr. Loney: I have a supplementary question. We are all aware of the representations which have been made by various members of this house and organizations concerned with the future of agriculture in this province. My question is prompted by a reply which appeared in Hansard on February 28 to a question asked by the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe, which set out in detail a reply given to the Farmers Union of Ontario. In this regard, has the minister met recently with the vice president of that union, Mr. Walter Miller, to discuss crop losses in western Ontario? Perhaps the minister can also tell the house what promises were made to Mr. Miller. I am not asking the minister to betray any confidence because, following that meeting with the minister the vice president met with members of the Conservative party who are concerned about crop losses in the areas they represent and intimated that certain promises had been made along the lines just stated by the minister, that the initiative should come from the province of Ontario. He also intimated that the only way to handle this government was by opposition members putting pressure on them to take action.

The Chairman: Shall item 35d carry?

Mr. Loney: Mr. Chairman, may we have a reply from the minister?

Mr. Greene: Mr. Chairman, I can assure the hon. member that I have at no time encouraged anyone on the premise that it was a good idea for the opposition to put pressure on the minister to do anything. I hope the opposition will approve of the fine policies brought forth by the minister to the extent that they will co-operate with him. I can assure the hon. gentleman that if such a representation were made, it was not consistent with the facts.

Item agreed to.

Health of animals—

40. Administration, operation and maintenance including Canada's fee for membership in the Office International des Epizooties, and authority, notwithstanding the Financial Administration Act, to spend revenue received during the year from packers requiring special services, $12,756,000.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, in respect of vote 40, I appreciate that the minister cannot provide answers to the questions I wish to pose at this time, but I want him to give us an undertaking before this item passes that he will attempt to provide me with these answers. I refer to the mystery or rumour which from time to time surrounds the importation of cattle from Charolais, France, where there is some concern about an outbreak of hoof and mouth disease. Can the minister provide the house with an undertaking that this program as it is being carried out will be explained in detail, giving the specific number of animals involved, the quarantine steps and the names of the purchasers?

I am concerned about two things in this regard, Mr. Chairman. I should not like to see this become an avenue for the circumvention of restrictions on importations from foreign countries. There might well be a great deal of speculation in this regard and I am very concerned about it. Is this to be an operation which will benefit the cattlemen of Canada and North America? If so, I am very desirous to see that it proceeds. On the other hand I should like to make sure that precaution is taken to prevent any disruption in respect of the importation of cattle to this country and to our neighbour to the south. I am sure the minister is concerned in this regard, and perhaps he will give a complete picture of this program in order to allay the suspicions which have been aroused. This would give the members of this house an opportunity to consider this program, which I personally feel has some merit.

My second concern is about the program instituted by the previous minister relating to the provision of dairy products and beef from the same cattle. I am sure the minister is familiar with this program. I would like to obtain more details in this regard. Perhaps the minister at a later date could provide a complete outline of this program.

Mr. Chairman, I am also concerned about the travelling livestock show. I think there is a great deal of interest in this subject, and perhaps the minister could give us a complete outline and understanding of its purpose, setting out the type of animals involved, and its scope. If the minister will give me an undertaking regarding the three items I have mentioned I am perfectly prepared to let this item pass.

Mr. Greene: Mr. Chairman, I want to be certain as to procedure before answering, but I should think the best time to deal with the first two items mentioned is when the estimates for the current year are being examined by the committee. If that is satisfactory I am pleased to undertake to provide the details requested.

Regarding the third item, let me point out that the travelling livestock exhibit comes under the jurisdiction of the Department of Trade and Commerce and, for that reason, I do not know how or in what way I could present the information requested. I would be very pleased to give the hon. member a written report. However if that is not satisfactory I will try to find the best way of making that information public so that the hon. member will have access to it. As I said, the first two items can be best dealt with when estimates for the current year come before the committee.

Board of Grain Commissioners—

50. Administration, operation and maintenance including authority to purchase screenings, $6,610,700.

Mr. Watson (Assiniboia): Mr. Chairman, I want to congratulate the minister on his appointment to the agricultural portfolio, and his trip throughout western Canada, during which time certain statements were made to the effect that it was unfortunate the government had no representation in the province of Saskatchewan.

Let me assure the minister that I will co-operate with him at all times in attempting to improve the agricultural situation in the province of Saskatchewan. Specifically I should like to deal with the matter of terminal elevators in western Canada. Many of these elevators are sitting empty. I have placed several questions on the order paper pertaining to this elevator operation, and I had hoped that some of these questions might have been answered before now. I am sure the Minister of Agriculture is interested in the items to which I have referred in my questions.

In the western part of this country we refer to these elevators as great white elephants. As an example of why this is so, let me refer to an empty elevator in my riding with a capacity of 5,500,000 bushels, which has modern drying and cleaning facilities. This is the type of thing which leads us to refer to these elevators in the way I have indicated.

• (7:10 p.m.)

Mr. Chairman, I am not going to take up much of the minister's time, but I do suggest he look into this situation and use his influence to correct it. I know the minister realizes that the farmers must get their wheat off their land on quotas, and can do so only by putting pressure on the wheat board and the railways to move it from these elevators. When this happens we always get the runaround and are told that for this or that reason it cannot be done. I urge the minister to take a good look at the situation with regard to these terminal elevators. Let us make some use of them. We pay large staffs to sit there and do very little if anything. I realize these people have to be kept on but the elevators should be used for the purpose for which whey were intended, that is storage.

I realize also that other questions enter into this matter. There is the question of drop-off charges, and so on. These charges are given as an excuse for the final payment in regard to wheat being something similar to that paid last year, which constituted a drop of 10 or 15 cents a bushel. I maintain that we are paying a permanent staff to operate these elevators, the facilities are there and they should be used. These are Canadian government elevators and if the grain was put into them and no charge was made for storage the situation would be no different than it is at present, when employees are sitting there year after year and no grain is going through the elevators.

I am not saying this is the situation in all elevators but it is the situation in two or three elevators which I have investigated and which are empty at the present time. Last year when the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre and myself put some pressure on the government to have some grain put into them at the end of July, 238,000 bushels of wheat were put into one of the elevators but it was taken out again within two or three weeks. At the present time we have a 5½ million bushel capacity elevator in the city of Moose Jaw that does not have a bushel of grain in it. I do not say this situation exists in regard to other elevators because I have not the figures before me, but if it is the case I think the Minister of Agriculture should take a good, hard look at this situation and see what can be done about it.

I would draw another matter to the attention of the minister. It may not come under this item but perhaps the minister would bear with me for a moment. I would ask the minister to use his influence with the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Revenue in this regard. I am referring again to the question of storage. Under a bill that was passed last year—this came under the eastern feed grain policy, I believe—a farmer who built storage facilities was eligible for a 25 per cent write-off on them if they were built between May 1, 1965, and December 31, 1966. The Minister of Agriculture should take a good, hard look at this situation and use his influence with his colleagues in the cabinet to have this program put on a permanent basis. I am sure it would help all the farmers of Canada a great deal.

[Mr. Watson (Assiniboia).]

Item agreed to.

The Chairman: This completes the estimates of the Department of Agriculture. The committee will now proceed to the estimates of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys.

Mr. Peters: Six o'clock.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether I could remind members of the committee that my hon. friend the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys is one of those ministers who are expected to be in Washington tomorrow. I would point out that the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, who will be here, is in a position to deal with what I think will be one of the most interesting subjects to be discussed under these estimates, namely the question of water. There would be no technical restriction put upon the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources in dealing with these estimates.

In view of the fact that the minister will have another set of estimates to put through for the forthcoming year, and that there are several other departments to deal with, I wonder whether the committee would consider dealing rather briefly with the minister's estimates and doing it today.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, we have been trying to co-operate in passing these estimates. It was only the day before yesterday that the house leader approached us and said it had just been brought to his attention that these five ministers had to be in Washington to attend the joint United States-Canadian committee, and consequently we co-operated in passing the estimates.

Unfortunately, even though we sat long hours yesterday and we are doing so again today, the estimates of one of those departments have not been passed. In view of the fact that many members on our side have co-operated by withholding their remarks on the first item of the estimates of the Department of Agriculture in order to expedite the passage of those estimates, and that there are four or five at least, possibly six, members who feel very strongly about certain matters relating to the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys and wish to express their views and find it difficult to forgo this opportunity. I would suggest that the minister go to Washington—while he is there he could probably re-write the constitution—and in his absence another minister, possibly the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, as the Minister of Transport suggested, could pilot his estimates through committee. I believe there are the estimates of nine more departments to be considered, and we have Thursday, Friday and possibly Monday to consider them. It would be agreeable to us if this procedure were followed.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I do not rise to disagree with the hon. member for Ontario but I wonder whether I might make a suggestion for consideration. If it is possible for the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources to deal with any of the issues that might arise, could there be an understanding that we pass the estimates of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys without any debate, without taking any time, on the understanding that we may ask any questions about that department when the estimates of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources are before us?

Mr. Starr: I think we have made our position quite clear. There are a number of members who feel very strongly about certain aspects of these estimates and on which they wish to say a few words. For some hon. members there are matters of particular significance in this department. Under those circumstances, if the government would take the course that I suggested we would appreciate it.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I know that the members who are here are not able to bind those who are not here, but I wonder if they would be satisfied in the circumstances, since the government has no authority to go on if hon. members do not wish to do so—we are suppliants in this regard—if the acting minister did pilot the estimates for the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys, in order that the minister could keep this engagement with regard to a matter which is in the opinion of the government, and I think in the opinion of the house, of great importance to both countries.

Mr. Churchill: It is not a constitutional matter, though.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, it is an extraconstitutional matter; it is an unwritten constitution.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Chairman, with regard to the suggestion made by the Minister of Transport, I speak only for myself but I would be perfectly willing to follow the course he suggested, with one proviso. As I mentioned, I have a very important stake in this matter and if the government would undertake to have the Minister of National Health and Welfare act on behalf of the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys, I would be satisfied.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, we would have to abide by the rules, and I think the only minister who would have the right to act for the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys would be the acting minister.

Mr. Churchill: So long as it is not the Minister of Transport, because he talks too much.

• (7:20 p.m.)

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Would the Minister of Transport indicate who that acting minister would be?

Mr. Pickersgill: I understand that the acting minister—I have not looked at the list—is the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): To get back to our own particular problem, I cannot foresee the possibility of carrying on with the estimates of the mines department unless the minister himself is here—or the minister who took so much responsibility in the last few months, so far as we are concerned, the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Mr. Olson: So far as we are concerned we would agree to go ahead with these estimates tomorrow with the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources taking them in his capacity as acting minister. Inasmuch as there are a number of members who want to make some inquiries, whether or not they get full answers, I do not think it would be a good idea to pass these estimates without debate, even with the reservation that we could ask some questions.

There is only one problem with having the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, and that is that after some of the statements he has made recently we would be tempted to talk about parks, and we would be here for a long time. As a matter of fact, the meeting in Washington is very important and we think the minister who will have the responsibility for energy and water resources ought to be there, in spite of the fact that we know he has been in Winnipeg recently discussing some of the things in which we are particularly interested. However, we would excuse him while he carries on the business of Canada.

Mr. Knowles: We would have liked to have the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys here for his estimates. However, we think the suggestion is a good one and we wish him godspeed on his trip to Washington.

Mr. Starr: May I ask the Minister of Transport if he would agree that, in addition to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, the Minister of National Health and Welfare will be present also during the discussion of these estimates?

Mr. Pickersgill: I cannot imagine, sir, that the Minister of National Health and Welfare, if it were humanly possible for him to be here, would deny himself the pleasure of listening to the hon. member for Cape Breton South.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Since the Minister of Transport wants to pinpoint this matter, I can be just as stubborn as the next fellow and insist that if the minister wants to look after the business of Canada, the best place to do it is in Canada. We have a particular problem here. We have been denied the opportunity of asking questions since the house opened, and denied that opportunity in a most peculiar way. We have been denied the privilege of asking the Minister of National Health and Welfare questions, as the minister from Nova Scotia; yet there are thousands of precedents for such questions. This type of question has been asked for years. So far as we are concerned, the Minister of National Health and Welfare is the man who has the answers in respect of our own particular problem. If we do not get the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys, we want the Minister of National Health and Welfare who is responsible for the kind of statements that were made.

Mr. Pickersgill: I will undertake to let the Minister of National Health and Welfare know of the desire of the hon. gentleman. I feel quite sure he will be here if it is humanly possible.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): If I may make a compromise suggestion, I am inclined to agree with my colleague the hon. member for Cape Breton South, but I am sure the acting house leader, despite his offhanded remarks at times, realizes this is a most important subject, namely coal mining and assistance to coal mining. As a happy compromise, could we not have assurance—I am sure the hon. member for Cape Breton South would agree with me—from the acting house leader that the $25 million that was promised as assistance for the coal mining industry in Nova Scotia would be forthcoming, with no strings attached, and without waiting for Ritchie Donald's report? I am sure the hon. member for Cape Breton South and I would not wish to participate in any debate at all, as long as we knew this money was forthcoming, without any restrictions at all,—just a straight $25 million for assistance to the coal industry. If we could have this assurance from the acting house leader, possibly my colleague would be quite happy and you would not have to listen to either of us.

Mr. Pickersgill: I can assure the hon. gentleman that the undertaking that was given by the government was not given lightly, and that it is the intention of the government to carry it out.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I do not wish to contradict my colleague, but we already have the assurance of which he is speaking, although we do not have the delivery.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): We want the delivery, without any strings.

The Chairman: Shall I rise and report progress?

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I want a complete understanding from the house leader. Do we have the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys here tomorrow, or don't we?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am only acting for the house leader, who has been here almost all day but who had to carry out another engagement. I understood there were some other departments to be taken up tomorrow and I would not like to say what department would come first tomorrow. I feel the house leader would have to consult with hon. gentlemen opposite because my understanding was that yesterday and today we were going to take these five departments. I do not believe it would be wise for me to commit the government in any way without consultation. I understood we were going back to the Department of Justice tomorrow.

Mr. Knowles: That is right.

Mr. Pickersgill: If hon. gentlemen would consent to go on with these estimates for half an hour, the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys is here right now and could listen to both hon. members from Cape Breton, as well as anyone else who wished to speak. So far as we are concerned on this side of the house, we will go on as long as it is necessary in order to pass these estimates now.

If we do not pass them now, I do not believe I have authority to commit the government as to what order the departments will be called or when the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys will come again. It was for this reason I was hesitant. If the hon. gentleman had asked me about my own conduct, I would not be hesitant. I am hesitant however about committing another minister without consulting him. I think it is quite reasonable to assume that the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond—I refer to him that way for obvious reasons—is just as much interested in the coal problem as any other member. I am sure be will wish to be here when it is discussed, if it is possible for him to be here.

I wonder if we could not get agreement to go on for another half hour so both members from Cape Breton could make their speeches right now?

Mr. Starr: This has always been the trouble. The Minister of Transport speaks too long, uses too many words and he injects into his speech the political feeling he always has inside his body and his mind. There are $8 billion of estimates to be considered. No estimates have been considered in this house for the past year and a half, and now the government says they are willing to sit. We have been sitting here for three weeks and three days, but if the government had carried out its responsibility for governing the country properly last year, instead of calling an election, we would not have found ourselves in this situation.

It is our responsibility, as an opposition in a democratic form of government, to be the watchdog on behalf of the taxpayers of this country. I think the taxpayers expect us to scrutinize these estimates. I do not believe three weeks and three days is too long a time to take to scrutinize carefully $8 billion worth of expenditures.

Mr. Knowles: In order that we can settle this, could there be an understanding that we revert to Justice tomorrow and that the house leaders consult as to what arrangements we may make for the rest of the departments?

Mr. Pickersgill: I think that is the only possible course to take in the circumstances. I will refrain from saying anything, except that I understand the government will have to try to be as agreeable as possible on this matter. I understand it is the general consensus of hon. gentlemen opposite that the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys would be justified, in the national interest, in going to Washington.

• (7:30 p.m.)

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Chairman, the suggestion of remaining to discuss further the minister's estimates this evening is acceptable to me, though I cannot speak for anybody else. I would remind the minister there is a second lady behind me.

The minister left the impression that we are trying to deny the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys the opportunity of representing Canada abroad. What I am concerned with is the representation made by that minister at home, in Canada. He is talking of making commitments. He says he does not want to commit the government or any individual member of the government, but what he and the government have done in the last few weeks is to commit all members of parliament. This announcement about five members going to the United States could have been made long before now and preparations made to handle the estimates, instead of waiting until the eleventh hour.

The Chairman: Order. Shall I rise, report certain resolutions, and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, March 3, 1966

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

FINANCE, TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS—CONCURRENCE IN SECOND REPORT

Mr. H. E. Gray (Essex East) presented the second report of the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member the unanimous consent of the house to present the said motion?

Mr. Caron: Mr. Speaker, if the motion is to apply to today only, I agree; but if it is for more than today, I refuse.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, this report applies to today only and its purpose is to enable the committee to complete the taking of evidence that was begun this morning. In general it is to enable this committee to carry out the duties entrusted to it by the house.

Motion agreed to.

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS—CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT

Mr. Joseph Macaluso (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, if I may have the unanimous consent of the house I move, seconded by Mr. Blouin:

> That the first report of the standing committee on transport and communications presented to the house on Tuesday, February 22, 1966, be now concurred in.

That report which was tabled was to allow the committee to sit while the house is sitting to enable representations to be heard from delegations from the Canadian Pacific Railway on a matter referred to that committee by this house on February 8, 1966. We anticipate that we will require this delegation to be here today and tomorrow, and perhaps next week, but I am asking for unanimous consent in regard to today and tomorrow only.

[Translation]

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): Mr. Speaker, for the reasons I gave last week when the adoption of the report of the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs was moved, I objected to the committee sitting when the house is in session. Today the member for Hamilton West (Mr. Macaluso) asks again that the committee sit at the same time as the house. I think this would be nonsense; with the 22 committees we have, if all committee chairmen ask for the same permission, we will never have a sufficient number of members so that the house can sit.

We have a responsibility toward the House of Commons, and that is why I object. If the hon. member wants the committee to sit today and tomorrow, I see no objection to it. On the other hand, if he is trying to get permission to sit next week, I do object, because I feel that is not necessary.

I am told that C.P.R. officials have arrived; I could not care less, and the C.P.R. president can come back; he can spare the time. I would not object, however, if these people were from out of town. Similar requests have been made in the past and I have voiced my objection every time. I am just as much against it today as I was when in opposition. I was very happy to see that the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) changed his mind so quickly to support me. If there is not enough time for committees, Wednesday afternoon sittings of the house should be cancelled to allow committees to sit. I have always objected to granting a blanket authorization in this regard, and I am objecting again today.

[English]

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the hon. member for Hull that the hours of sitting of the committee should not be extended to while the house is sitting, particularly in view of the fact that we are sitting long hours in the house now and I think it would be rather foolish if we divided the strength of the house into committees at the same time.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, for the same reasons, I object to the committees sitting at the same time as the house. I remember quite well that, during the last election campaign, a minister criticized us for not attending committee sittings, but he forgot to say that committees were sitting at the same time as the house. We were blamed at the time for not attending committee meetings while the house was sitting, and if the same policy is to be followed, steps should be taken to enable members to be present in the house and in the committees. On the other hand, we should not be asked to dislocate ourselves. We are already too few to be required to submit to dislocation and, besides, we do not suffer from that disease.

If the hon. member wants this permission only for today and tomorrow, that is fine with us, but if it is for a longer period, we object and we shall ask for a vote on the matter.

[English]

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): So far as we in this party are concerned we realize that while it may be a strain for some members to attend committee meetings while the house is sitting, at the same time we have to realize that it has been difficult to get all the business done during the session. So far as we are concerned, we are prepared to give consent to some of these committees to sit while the house is sitting because this privilege has not been abused. I believe the only time this permission has been used extensively has been when witnesses have been called to Ottawa from long distances. Certainly we should be able to do that.

However, if there is a great deal of objection to giving blanket permission for the balance of this session, then I would think there probably is a misunderstanding, and perhaps the mover of the motion would agree to have that motion apply to today and tomorrow only. Following that there should be some negotiation between what is called the usual channels to see if we cannot arrive at some agreement with respect to what we are going to do with these motions to allow the committees to meet while the house is sitting.

Mr. Macaluso: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Hamilton West can only speak a second time with the unanimous consent of the house.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Macaluso: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member on this side of the house who objected had listened to the motion, I only asked that it apply today and tomorrow. I asked for unanimous consent for the committee to sit today and tomorrow because we do have the president, the vice president and other officers of the Canadian Pacific here with us now.

[Mr. Grégoire.]

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the hon. member should have leave to amend the motion so that the report will be to the effect that the committee can sit today and tomorrow?

Mr. Macaluso: Mr. Speaker, if I may, with all due respect I did not move for blanket consent. I moved that the committee sit for today and tomorrow only.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Caron: With the amendment that was introduced? Mr. Speaker, if the motion is amended as mentioned, I agree.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Hamilton West has explained very clearly that the motion is to take effect today and tomorrow only. This is the motion which has been agreed to by the house.

Motion agreed to.

OTTAWA TERMINAL RAILWAY COMPANY

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. S-2 (from the Senate), to incorporate the Ottawa Terminal Railway Company.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST FOR ROYAL COMMISSION TO INVESTIGATE ORGANIZED CRIME

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Prime Minister is now in a position to inform the house whether the cabinet, having met, has come to a conclusion regarding the request I had made several times for the setting up of a royal commission to inquire into the ramifications of international crime in Canada. I would ask him whether he has communicated with any of the provinces to secure co-operation in this regard, and whether he does not believe that the almost unbelievable circumstances of the theft of gold yesterday in Winnipeg adds further argument to the necessity for the fullest investigation of the crime situation.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the cabinet has been considering this matter and will be considering it again. After the cabinet has given such further consideration, of course, and in the light of the consideration given, there would be a requirement to communicate with the provinces. After all, if this commission were set up it would be inquiring into the administration of justice in the provinces, for which the provinces would have responsibility. So it will be some time before I am in a position to announce a decision in the house.

Mr. Diefenbaker: May I ask a supplementary question. Would the Prime Minister say whether there has been any communication with the provinces, or any of them, to secure their co-operation in this regard?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, we are considering the matter as a government. When that consideration has been completed, or at the least the first part of it, we will then get in touch with the provinces.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister.

Is the Prime Minister aware that the Minister of Justice of Quebec has recommended such an inquiry by a royal commission made up of provincial and federal representatives? If so, does the Prime Minister envisage or fear that, in such a case, Quebec might withdraw from such a joint program after having proposed it?

[English]

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I have learned about these considerations which have been advanced by the Minister of Justice of Quebec only from what I have read in the newspapers. No doubt I will get further information if and when we get in touch officially with the government of Quebec.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENT OF LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of our being reminded by news reports from the United Kingdom that a general election in that country can be held within three or four weeks, is the government considering proposing any amendments to the Canada Elections Act at this session so that particular kind of improvement, as well as other changes might be made in our own election machinery?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest to the hon. member that this is not a question which is so urgent that it requires an immediate answer on the part of the government. Perhaps it can be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Knowles: Are you sure, Mr. Speaker?

[Later:]

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State. Will the Canada Elections Act be referred to the committee on privileges and elections at this session for a study of possible amendments thereto?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I have not yet had an opportunity to discuss this matter with the house Leader or members of the government, so I am not in a position to answer at this time.

OLD AGE SECURITY

IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS OF SENATE COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Does his suggestion last night in Regina, in which he expressed favour toward the recommendation of the Senate committee on aging that there be a guaranteed annual income for every Canadian citizen mean that he is intending to introduce such legislation in this house in the immediate future?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether this question is not of the same type as the one asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I doubt that it should be answered at this time.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, this question was raised last night by the minister, and from his speech it seemed to be something which he was intending to implement immediately as government policy.

[Translation]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

ENCOURAGEMENT TO UNEMPLOYED TO WORK IN GOLD MINES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the future minister of manpower. Since the shortage of skilled labour is one of the main reasons why a mine was said to be closing down this month in the Timmins area, could he tell the house whether he intends to take steps to direct our Canadian unemployed toward the mining industry?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest that the question is of such a general nature that it could be put on the order paper.

[English]

HIGHWAY SAFETY

MANDATORY SAFETY FEATURES FOR AUTOMOBILES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, in the unavoidable absence of the Minister of Industry I direct my question to the Prime Minister. It is based on yesterday's announcement by President Johnson in which he asked that nation-wide safety standards for all vehicles be made mandatory if after two years the industry has not voluntarily adopted standards deemed necessary by the government.

My question is this. In view of the fact that codes relating to safety standards in motor vehicles are now being drafted by the government, can, the Prime Minster assure the house that the government will seriously consider such mandatory provisions for all motor vehicles produced in or imported into Canada?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, perhaps my hon. friend will permit me to look into this particular aspect of the question, so that I may give him a reply as soon as possible.

REQUEST OF COUNCIL FOR INCREASED GRANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey North): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare; I have given him notice. In view of the fact that the Canadian Highway Safety Council has ambitious plans for the promotion of all aspects of highway safety, will the government give early assurance that a respectable increase in the grant will be forthcoming for that organization?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that this question be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Noble: I think this is important, because the council will be holding its annual meeting in May. It is a promotional meeting, and they want to know what funds will be available to them.

[Mr. Laprise.]

Mr. Speaker: If the meeting to which the hon. member refers is to be held in the month of May, there is a chance he will get a reply.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

WINNIPEG—THEFT OF GOLD AT AIRPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. R. Sherman (Winnipeg South): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Solicitor General. Can the minister advise the house as to the manhunt at present going on for the bandits who stole a gold shipment at Winnipeg airport on Tuesday night?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

SUGGESTED RESTORATION OF GRAVE OF D'ARCY MCGEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. B. S. Mackasey (Verdun): My question, Mr. Speaker, is addressed to the Secretary of State. Will the minister recommend to the centennial commission that as a centennial project the grave of one of the fathers of confederation, Thomas D'Arcy McGee, be marked with a suitable monument, and that funds be provided for the upkeep of that grave in the future?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question should be put on the order paper.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

DEDUCTIONS FROM EARNINGS OF PART TIME FEDERAL EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue, Mr. Speaker, and ask him whether instructions have been issued that Canada Pension Plan deductions must be made from payments to part time government employees such as members of boards of referees of the Unemployment Insurance Commission, even in cases where those deductions are also being made from the individual's regular earnings.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I shall have to look into the matter of what instructions have been issued. Generally speaking all wages which are paid are subject to pension plan deductions. Any employee's overpayments because of having too much deducted by employers are refundable to the employee at the end of the year.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the minister if there is not some way in which this duplication can be avoided, by means of the use of social insurance numbers. I thought this was one of the purposes in having them. I should also like to ask what is the rate of interest which is paid on these double deductions when they are refunded.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I shall be pleased to look into the matter, to see whether there is a method of avoiding the duplication of deductions when people have two jobs, such as being members of parliament and having some other occupation. However, I do not think any easy method can be found for avoiding duplicate deductions.

I do not think overdeductions made during the year would be subject to any interest payment at the end of that year. I should like to point out to my hon. friend that the maximum deduction under the Canada Pension Plan is $79.20, and that the amount of interest on a total deduction of $79.20 spread over the year would not be very much during the year.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of National Revenue, Mr. Speaker. Is it a fact still that the Unemployment Insurance Commission will not be able to recover the overpayments where duplicate payments have been made in respect of members of the boards of referees and other officials?

Mr. Benson: Quite correct, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Another supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister if the Canada Pension Plan Act provides for duplicate or triplicate payments. I am interested in the legal principle of this.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. As the hon. member realizes, he is asking for an interpretation of law with respect to a statute. I suggest that type of question cannot be asked at this time.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

QUEBEC—REPORTED DEATHS FROM TRICHINOSIS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare? Is the hon. minister aware that the newspapers of my region are reporting cases of death due to trichinosis, and if so, does his department intend to take emergency measures to prevent the spread of the disease?

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member repeat his question? I was unable to hear it.

Mr. Mongrain: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Is the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare aware that the newspapers of my region are reporting cases of death due to trichinosis, and if so, does his department intend to take emergency measures to prevent the spread of the disease?

[English]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I understand that the provincial and municipal authorities are aware of this occurrence, and that the Department of National Health and Welfare will assist the province if requested to do so.

PENSIONS

POSSIBLE FREEZING OF OLDER WORKERS TO PRIVATE PLANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): My question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare; I have sent him notice. Is it the intention of the government to introduce legislation which would freeze contributions by workers to private pension plans affecting workers 45 years of age and over, restricting withdrawals of contributions to 25 per cent?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I appreciate the hon. member giving me notice of this question. I have looked into the matter, and though it affects my department it rests more directly with the Minister of Finance. I would be glad to take the question as notice for my colleague and let the hon. member have an answer later.

FIRES

MONTREAL—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE FOR FAMILIES AFFECTED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (St. Ann): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Can he give to the house information about the fire which left 30 families homeless in Montreal this morning? Can the federal government help those striken families?

Mr. Speaker: Order. There is no doubt that this question is urgent to a certain extent, but only in a certain area and I suggest to the hon. member to communicate directly with the Prime Minister's office or to put his question on the order paper.

[English]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

HEALTH AND MORALE OF NAVAL PERSONNEL IN BRAZILIAN WATERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Is the minister now in a position to answer the question I asked him a week ago with regard to conditions aboard the R.C.N. vessel Cape Scott?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): I believe the report has now been received and I will be in a position to answer the question on Monday.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

WINNIPEG—REPORTED SUSPENSION OF PRODUCER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Secretary of State. I might say, Mr. Speaker, that I like addressing questions to a compassionate lady who believes in justice. My question is based on a report that a Winnipeg C.B.C. producer was suspended from a program that was supposed to be uncomplimentary to German troops in Canada. He says he has been relegated to devotional programs to "contemplate my sins". Mr. Edmunds—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Questions should not be prefaced by long statements. I would invite the hon. member to put his question.

Mr. Herridge: I have just arrived at that point, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Edmunds mentions that the statement he made was that no doubt the Germans were glad to leave our prairie weather, and that some Canadians were glad to see them go. That was an objective and true statement.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Mr. Loiselle.]

Mr. Herridge: Would the minister investigate the circumstances surrounding the suspension of Mr. Edmunds from his program?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question should be placed on the order paper.

REPORTED STRIKE DEADLINE BY WRITERS AND PERFORMERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): I have a question to ask the Secretary of State. Is the minister in a position to reply today to the question which her parliamentary secretary took as notice a few days ago, in relation to the dispute between the C.B.C. and some of its employees? I asked whether the minister could make a full statement with regard to the strike which is being proposed by the writers and performers.

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I have been in touch with the president of the C.B.C. on this subject and can report the following to the house.

As has been reported, the president of the C.B.C. has wired Mr. Comor of ACTRA offering to meet with him informally tomorrow to explain the reasons behind corporation policy in regard to increased work opportunities for Canadian talent. Mr. Ouimet informs me that he is meeting Mr. Comor for lunch tomorrow.

Mr. Comor has, at the same time, sent a telegram to the Prime Minister requesting a meeting with various members of the government to discuss the situation. Consideration is now being given by the government to this request.

As to the issues in dispute, I think the house should note there is no disagreement over the basic principle involved, namely that increased work opportunities should be provided by the corporation for Canadian writers and artists. The corporation's agreement with this principle has been stated several times both by its board and its chief executive officers, and was implemented in the C.B.C.'s announcement of February 23 that it has committed an additional $850,000 of its 1966-67 operating budget to provide increased work opportunities for ACTRA members. This represents a very substantial increase, about 20 per cent, in funds committed to this specific purpose.

The point currently at issue is whether this public commitment should be formally written into the union contract as a work guarantee. The corporation, for its part, has taken the position that such a procedure would be unacceptable in that it would limit essential program flexibility. The result of such a step, in the C.B.C.'s view, would be of real benefit neither to its performers nor to the listening and viewing public.

Mr. Speaker, that in brief is the current situation, I am informed.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): On a point of order, I respectfully submit that the Secretary of State has done an injustice to the bargaining procedure by making a statement in this house which sets out the reasons why the employer refuses to put something into a collective agreement, without at the same time telling us the reasons why ACTRA want it put into the agreement. I, as one member, object to this being done.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has not referred to the standing order which the Secretary of State is supposed to have transgressed. I suggest there is no point of order. There may be an argument, but no more.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Would the Secretary of State advise the house whether there is an application before the Canadian Labour Relations Board for recognition of the Société Générale de Cinéma et de Télévision, and if so, what is the government's attitude toward such an application?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The urgency of this question is not readily apparent. I suggest the hon. member put it on the order paper.

LABOUR RELATIONS

SARNIA—REQUEST FOR CONCILIATION BOARD AT POLYMER PLANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Walter F. Foy (Lambton West): I have a question for the Minister of Labour. Has the minister any up to date information on the progress of negotiations between O.C.A.W. and Polymer Corporation?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): I think I answered that question yesterday. Perhaps my hon. friend would look at Hansard.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Foy: On a question of privilege, I was wondering whether the minister had some up to date information.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nicholson: I think that inquiry merits an answer. At the request of the union concerned, a conciliation officer has been designated; he is probably in or on his way to Sarnia now following the matter up.

Mr. Foy: I appreciate that.

Mr. Nicholson: Thank you.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

INQUIRY AS TO DEFERMENT APPLICATIONS BY RAILWAY COMPANIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour and ask him whether he has reached a decision yet on the application of the railways for deferment under part I of the Canada Labour (Standards) Code. If not, when will he be making that decision?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): The matter is under study.

Mr. Orlikow: Is the minister aware that in meetings with the unions concerned his deputy minister assured the unions that an early decision to end deferment would be made?

Mr. Nicholson: Of course I am familiar with the announcement made by my deputy, but I said a decision has not yet been made. When it is made it will be announced.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REPORTED STATEMENT BY MINES MINISTER RESPECTING BILINGUALISM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

In a speech made in Montreal, the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Pepin) stated that the government would make an announcement to the effect that bilingualism would be one of the criteria for promotion within the civil service.

Can the Prime Minister tell the house if the government intends to take such action soon?

[English]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this matter has been under consideration for some time by an interdepartmental committee. That committee has made its report, and the report has been considered by a cabinet committee of which I was chairman. The cabinet committee now will be reporting to the full cabinet, and I will be making a statement in this house on the matter next week.

Inquiries of the Ministry

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GHANA—INQUIRIES AS TO PRESENT POSITION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Enns (Portage-Neepawa): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether the government has any information to confirm the news stories reporting that the deposed leader of Ghana has today been installed as the new leader of Guinea.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend knows there has been a loose constitutional relationship for some time between Guinea and Ghana, which are separated by the territory of the Ivory Coast. This loose constitutional relationship might now become a closer one, but we have no official information on this as yet.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I also have a question for the Prime Minister concerning Ghana.

An hon. Member: Not Guinea?

Mr. Macquarrie: No, not Guinea. In view of reports that nationals of certain countries are being asked to withdraw from that country, has there been any interference with Canadians in Ghana, or any suggestion that they be returned to this country?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker. On the basis of the latest information I have received there has been no interference with Canadians in Ghana.

Perhaps I should clarify my earlier answer when I spoke about the loose arrangement between Guinea and Ghana becoming closer. I had in mind that there might be a closer relationship between Guinea and the former head of state of Ghana.

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Prime Minister. In the light of the almost certain attempt of the former president of Ghana to return to his country, and in the event of hostilities ensuing between the present regime and his forces, is this government prepared to make any statement regarding its position in the event of such hostilities breaking out?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question at this time appears to be hypothetical.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

STEPS TO MEET INCREASE IN COST OF LIVING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Prince Edward-Lennox): Mr. Speaker, my question also is addressed to the Prime Minister. Has the government any plan or policy which will deal effectively with the rapidly rising cost of living which now is a hardship on so many Canadians of limited means?

Mr. Speaker: The question is in very general terms and refers to a matter of policy, and should not be asked at this time.

TELEVISION

PUBLIC CALL FOR BIDS RESPECTING CHANNEL TRANSFER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State. In the light of the fact that the Board of Broadcast Governors will not be hearing the application for transfer of channel 3 on April 26, could the minister tell us whether the board will now call publicly for other bids in respect of this public channel?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): No, Mr. Speaker. My information is gleaned from the same source, I assume, as the hon. member's information; that is, the newspapers.

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Has the right hon. gentleman any other plans for reform of the other place?

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. Could the hon. lady inform the house whether she is aware of and taking any action in respect of the possibility of a demonstration by the members of the C.S.N. in Montreal, Quebec city or Ottawa?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I do not know to what the hon. member refers; what demonstration?

AIR TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE FOR REGIONAL SERVICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. K. H. More (Regina City): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. In view of the uncertainties surrounding regional air services these days, may we expect an announcement of policy from the government which would enable these services to maintain their present runs?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think not too soon.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, in connection with that announcement, would the minister consider the possibility of a subsidy to these regional air lines?

Mr. Pickersgill: I should think any reasonable proposal would have to be considered.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

VICTOR SPENCER—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Prime Minister referred to two letters which the government had received from its pen pal, Victor Spencer, and I asked whether the government would table those letters. Did the Prime Minister come to any decision?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): The first communication signed by Mr. Spencer is one which could not possibly be tabled on security grounds and in the public interest.

Mr. Diefenbaker: To whom was it directed?

Mr. Pearson: It was a statement directed to the officials who had conferred with him, and signed by Mr. Spencer. As my right hon. friend the Leader of the Opposition will understand, since he was Prime Minister, there are many things in this communication which could not be made public without prejudicing the security services of the state.

As I think I indicated yesterday, the other communication was addressed "To whom it may concern". It was a letter drafted by Mr. Spencer and made available to certain officers, doctors and nurses who had been looking after him. It was dated in January. Although I would have no objection to making it public, I do not think this could be done without Mr. Spencer's approval.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What date was it?

Mr. Pearson: January 15, 1966.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, this question is supplementary to the question asked by the Leader of the Opposition. Would the Prime Minister inform the house whether the government received any letter from Mr. Spencer's solicitor in Vancouver at about the same time as the letter of January 15, and whether that letter has as yet been answered; and if not, when it is intended to answer it.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, to the best of my knowledge the only communication I received—although I would be glad to check the files—from his solicitor concerning the Spencer case was one requesting the order in council which dealt with the dismissal. That was answered and the order in council was sent to him.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Perhaps the Prime Minister said this and I may not have heard him. Would the Prime Minister look into the question of whether the solicitor followed up that letter with another letter asking for a further explanation?

Mr. Pearson: I would be glad to look into that and consult my colleagues who might have received something.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION INTO GASPÉ-MATAPEDIA SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Keays (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, this question is addressed to the Minister of Transport and is further to my question which I asked on February 22. I wonder whether the minister has looked into the possibility of an inquiry into the passenger transportation service given by the C.N.R. on la Baie de Chaleurs.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I did direct the hon. gentleman's previous inquiry to the appropriate authorities and I have not yet received a report, but I will make inquiries.

• (3:20 p.m.)

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Rinfret in the chair.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, may I ask whether the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, who is the Acting Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys and who we understand is going to assume the responsibility for these estimates today, intends to make an opening statement? I may say that we urge him to do so because I think it would have the effect of shortening the debate and that is the desire of all hon. members.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I think I misled the committee inadvertently last night when I tried to guess who would be the acting minister. I thought it would be the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. I now think it is the Minister without Portfolio. I do, however, stand by my statement of last night in that the Minister of Northern Affairs and Natural Resources is perhaps the greatest expert on water in the house. I am sure he will be glad to assist the second greatest expert, who is the Minister without Portfolio, and I know that in that event the house will be well illuminated on the subject.

Mr. Knowles: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, can we have it clear what the order of business is for the day? According to Hansard of yesterday we were supposed to revert to the estimates of the Department of Justice today. I know that the government house leader spoke to me during the lunch hour as to the possibility of making a change but it seems to me that we should have it regularized. We in this party were expecting to go back to the justice estimates today and if we had a choice that is what we would be doing.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, I readily admit that there is some real ground for confusion as to which estimates were to be called first today. Unfortunately I had to leave the chamber last night before the adjournment. A good deal of discussion took place in my absence and matters took a change with a rather different outcome than I had anticipated.

Perhaps I can clarify this matter now in an effort to move forward in an orderly way. I should say that we will first be calling the estimates of the Departments of Mines and Technical Surveys, Northern Affairs, Labour, and Citizenship and Immigration. In view of what I believe is the wish of some hon. members I will undertake that we will call the estimates of the Department of Justice first tomorrow, when we reach the stage of calling estimates, regardless of which estimates we have before us when we adjourn tonight.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, if that undertaking is as clear as I understand it, namely that no matter which estimates we are considering at the adjournment tonight we will take up the estimates of the Department of Justice as the first estimates to be considered tomorrow, we will be happy with that arrangement.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, I have indicated the first four departments we propose to call today, but I should like to feel free to call any of the other departments except justice later in the day. I will be in consultation with the leaders of the parties during the afternoon as to what estimates we should call after the estimates of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration.

Mr. Kindt: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the house leader whether he thinks it is correct and proper to consider the estimates of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys in the absence of the minister.

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I think it is for several reasons, the main reason being that the matter was settled yesterday by the members of this house. That having been done, I think it is completely correct and proper for these estimates to go forward without the minister being present.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I may say a word or two on this matter. I fully agree with the government house leader that in the circumstances in which we find ourselves now, where there is a willingness to make a co-operative effort to try to deal with these estimates, we almost have to schedule ourselves from day to day depending on the circumstances. It is quite agreeable to us to follow the program outlined. We realize the minister was not here but we agreed last night to another minister piloting these estimates through the committee. We are very happy that the young Minister without Portfolio, with the assistance of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, will be able to get his feet wet today. We are agreeable to the program that has been outlined.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I must say that we are somewhat surprised at the turn of events.

In fact, we learn at this very moment that the first estimates coming up today are those of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys, and that after that we will consider those of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

We thought we would start with the Department of Justice and the government house leader did not deem it necessary to notify us. We have had no notice this morning that we would start consideration of the estimates of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys, and that we would then carry on with those of the Departments of Northern Affairs and National Resources, Labour, and Citizenship and Immigration.

I think that, as far as the other departments are concerned, the government house leader would do well to keep us informed of what is happening, as otherwise there will come a time when we will have to object, if we are given only two minutes notice about the business of the house.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, we do want to co-operate with the minister and go on right away to consideration of the estimates of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys, but the house leader has known for a few days that the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Pepin) would be away from Ottawa.

Why did he or the government not allow the house to consider the estimates of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys while the minister was here?

An hon. Member: That is what we wanted to do yesterday.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, that should have been done at the time because it was known beforehand that the minister would be away.

Mr. Lewis: We tried.

Mr. Caouette: As I have just said, we do want to co-operate, but the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) is quite right when he asks that we be advised beforehand about the business that the house leader wants us to consider.

[English]

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I should clear up two or three matters. First of all, on February 9 the expected absence of these ministers was announced, so that members of the house could have that information. I have tried my best to call the estimates of the various departments in a way that would be agreeable to most members of the house and I worked as closely as I could in co-operation with the house leaders to arrange a suitable sequence. Having said that, I have to plead guilty to the latter charge of not having advised the house leaders in time as to what department we would call first. But I must say that my difficulty in that connection was very real, because I did not know this morning what departments we would call or in what order they would be called. I could not very well advise anyone about something I did not know. I apologize, however, for any embarrassment which this arrangement for today may have caused hon. members.

DEPARTMENT OF MINES AND TECHNICAL SURVEYS

Administration services—

1. Departmental administration, including the administration of the Explosives Act and Canada's fee for membership in the Pan-American Institute of Geography and History, $2,506,600.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, now that we have settled the question of what business we will actually be dealing with I hope we may expect that before too long the government will settle the question of which ministers are responsible for the various aspects of business. It seems to me that we have seen today an example of the hopeless and confused state of administration on the part of the government. One can but hope, bearing in mind the important matters and problems that are confronting us, that this situation will be cleaned up as soon as possible. I do not know whether we are supposed to expect answers from two ministers. I see that the senior acting minister is leaving so I suppose—

• (3:30 p.m.)

Mr. Churchill: He is coming in again.

Mr. Fulton: Then I beg his pardon.

Mr. Pickersgill: You will have a double dose.

Mr. Fulton: I take it that the two ministers, the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources and the Minister without Portfolio, will be answering questions. I should like to repeat my question, which I thought was a simple one although it gave rise to a good deal of rather confused discussion. Does either of the ministers propose to make an opening statement with respect to the work of the department and particularly with respect to the policies which will guide the government as it sets up and administers the new Department of Energy, Mines and Resources?

Mr. Laing: Mr. Chairman, I want first of all to thank members of the committee for having permitted us to proceed in this way. I am quite certain that all of us regret very much that the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys has been called away today. The Minister without Portfolio and myself will do our best to deal with the estimates and endeavour to answer all the questions put to us.

The only preliminary statement I would make, and it will be very short, is that I think there is general agreement in the house, and certainly I feel there is in the country, that there is a great advantage in bringing together under one department the consideration and administration of the resources of Canada so far as they come within the federal responsibility.

We are a resource rich nation and I would remind my hon. friend from Kamloops, who knows this as well as I, that in the field of resources those resources which lie within each separate province are jealously guarded by the province concerned. After all, the resources that lie there are their main sources of revenue; they are the main means by which they can develop industry and enhance the economy within their own provincial boundaries. It would be unusual, indeed I think we would agree that the provinces would not be doing their duty if this were not the case, if they did not keep a jealous eye on their resources.

However, from a national point of view we must recall that the resources of Canada were not shared equitably when they were placed by divine Providence. We must remember too that there are tremendous advantages in using these resources as broadly as we possibly can and living off of them within Canada without importing by extending the products of resources, for example, power, to more than one province. Therefore there is a very great place for a national policy, national incentives and national leadership.

That being the case, Mr. Chairman, the Prime Minister decided in co-operation and consultation with the ministry to put the resources of Canada in their national context under one minister. I wish to compliment that particular minister because he has been placed in charge of a most interesting department dealing with falling water, electrical energy, thermal energy, atomic energy, the possibility of having strings of wire across this country serving more than one province and the study of the rivers of Canada. Again, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Kamloops and I are very conscious of those values to the provinces themselves since we come from British Columbia where we think we have a potential in excess of 30 million kilowatts of falling water electrical energy alone. We have in recent years gone a very great way forward in supporting the provinces in these fields and I am quite certain that with the new dispensation in respect of the department we shall move forward very quickly indeed.

[Mr. Laing.]

I think there is general agreement within the house that the new minister is young, energetic and extremely able. I believe he will develop this department very well indeed and to the great credit of Canada. What we want to do, in all these matters, without invading the rights of any province, is to bring together the collective advantages of the resources that lie within the provinces and utilize them in such a way in a national sense that, hopefully, they will mean more than a simple addition to the resources within the various provinces. That is our objective, of course.

I wish to pay a compliment now, as I have before, to the work of one of my predecessors who in 1961 convened the resources conference in Montreal. I have said, and I say again, that I wish this great report were required reading for every Canadian because there is contained in it a tremendous amount of valuable information concerning all Canadian resources.

I hope the new minister will redouble the efforts we have made in recent years to bring together the resource ministers of the 10 provinces and keep in constant touch with them in order to get their co-operation, add together the collective resources of the individual provinces and by a national and purposeful policy make them more valuable than they are today.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I thank the minister for having made this statement although I would wish it might have been somewhat more enlightening as to the bases upon which this policy is to rest. I think this would have been helpful in that we do not wish to prolong debate at this stage for a variety of reasons but we would like to have had a statement on the position of the government. Such a statement could have been considered in the meantime and would have served as a starting point in considering the estimates of the year 1966-67 when they come before us.

In light of the fact that we are prepared to extend our co-operation with respect to expediting the passage of these estimates, I think we might well have been favoured with a somewhat more detailed statement of the position.

However, perhaps we can leave it on the basis that during the course of what I have to say I will serve notice as to areas which we feel are of greatest concern and which we will discuss when the new estimates are before us. At that time we shall expect the fullest information. We take this position because we do not feel we should take very long in the discussion of these estimates. After all, although we have a new minister these are the old estimates for the year 1965-66. Eleven-twelfths of them have now been spent. We intend therefore to leave the main discussion for the 1966-67 estimates, at which time I think the new minister, to whom we extend the best of personal good wishes as he undertakes these very important responsibilities, will perhaps be more fairly expected to be thoroughly conversant with the matters about which he will be questioned.

But we are dealing here with what is one of the most important fields included within the area of government responsibility. We therefore do not intend just to pass this subject by without stating some of the considerations which we think should apply in developing policy in this field. After all, Mr. Chairman, the field of resource policy, which embraces the whole complex and vital area of water use, the area of energy development, distribution and marketing, the area of mines and minerals development and the policy regarding the disposition of the products of the mine—all this comprises a policy field which to no country is more vital than to Canada.

For it is true that in this area there lies the potential for Canada's future greatness. It is also an important and basic truth that in wise policies and only in wise policies for the development and conservation of our resources in these areas lies the answer to the question of whether we shall have a Canadian identity and continue in the future to exercise control of our own affairs. In the existence or in the absence of such wise policies lies the answer to the question of whether or not we slide down the slope called continentalism into the extinction of anything which might be called nationhood on the basis of which we could have a separate Canadian identity.

This is the vital question, the solution to which I feel lies in the fields we are discussing today, the fields of energy, mines and resource development and the development of policies which should govern those fields. We will naturally be expected to watch the government and to watch the new minister with the greatest interest, and we are entitled to expect from the new minister and the government an early and full declaration of the policies and the principles which will guide the new department which has the opportunity to play such a fundamental role in the future of Canada. We shall then serve notice now as to some of the areas about which we will expect full discussion and action by the time the estimates for 1966-67 are before us. I should also like to lay down on behalf of the Conservative party some of the principles that we feel should guide the development of policy in this field.

We feel, first, there should be the earliest possible assessment of Canada's full potential in terms of resources and of Canada's full potential requirements for those resources. After all, a knowledge of your inventory and a knowledge of your needs is the cornerstone of any sound policy. We hope, therefore, to receive assurances that there will be, by means of the conference of resource ministers and other agencies, the earliest and most aggressive pursuit, in co-operation with the provinces, of the completion of the inventory of Canada's storehouse and of the inventory of Canada's present and future requirements.

Second, we urge upon the government that all policy and action in this field be based upon the general principle of conservation to meet Canada's known and potential requirements. There should be a statement of the perimeters of these requirements and of this principle as the basis upon which all Canadian policy will be founded, and without it there should be no negotiation or consideration of negotiation for the disposition of these resources beyond our borders.

Third, and equally important, of course, as a cornerstone of policy in this field, is the necessity of the utmost co-operation with the provincial governments in every aspect of resource development policy. This has been alluded to by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources and I confirm my complete agreement with him in his statement of that position. I think it is important not just to say we intend to co-operate but that we should avoid taking any position in this area, especially publicly, which appears to involve a statement of federal policy and objectives in an area which lies within provincial jurisdiction before the matter has been discussed fully with the provinces. I think it is not unnatural that the provinces are expressing concern about these matters and about the future of confederation when they find that so frequently the federal government is stating publicly its objectives and its positions on matters which are also of provincial concern, without such discussion. I have referred to this matter before and I am not going to go into detail again. But such a course naturally rouses the greatest resentment on the part of the provinces and is the one thing calculated to frustrate co-operation rather than advance it.

Fourth, sir, I would lay down as a basic principle which should serve as a guidepost of policy the co-ordination of federal agencies and the working out of sensible, steady and progressive federal initiative for action. We have had some discussion already of the proliferation of agencies in the field of water use and control policy. I have a feeling there are similar examples of the proliferation of agencies and committees in many other areas of resource development and policy. Therefore I endorse, on behalf of the Conservative opposition the general statement made a moment ago by the minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources when he said that there was great advantage in bringing together in one department the consideration and administration of the resources of Canada in so far as they lie within the field of federal responsibility. That is an admirable statement of the purpose to be served in the setting up of the new Department of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Unfortunately, sir, it is a statement of purpose which far transcends the pattern already set by the actions which have been taken, from which we must gather what will be the final result. Here we come to the very important consideration of the details of administration in this field. Certainly we should have co-ordination of responsibility for the development of policy with respect to the resources of Canada gathered in one department and made the responsibility of one minister. But this is far from what we are going to have.

If you look at the Order in Council P.C. 1965-2284, contained in the Canada Gazette for January 12, which transferred to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys, as he now is, responsibility for the administration, and duties and authority which we understand are to be his when legislation formally setting up the department is introduced and passed, you will find there is a very important and very substantial gap in the sphere of his responsibilities. A huge hole has been torn out of the side, as it were, of the structure which is here being erected.

I refer, of course, to the conspicuous omission from the sphere of the new minister's responsibility of the whole of resource policy for the Yukon and Northwest Territories. Just think of the implications of this, Mr. Chairman, in the light of what the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources said when he was making his statement about bringing together under one department consideration and administration of the resources of Canada in so far as they lie within the field of federal responsibility. The only area where the federal government has undivided and exclusive jurisdiction is in the territories, an area of vast importance in terms of the amount as well as the strategic importance, of the resources of Canada. Yet, sir, as I read this Order in Council—and I may say I checked this also with the minister's office—this whole area is to be left out of the responsibility of the person who will be minister of the new Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. It will be left presumably with the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

Now I can well understand the conflict which has been going on here and I can well understand the position of my hon. friend who is a minister from British Columbia. I like to see him have a good deal of administrative responsibility. I also understand his reluctance to part with that responsibility. This is an important and a growing area; it is an area of increasing importance in the policies of the government of Canada. But it is illogical in the extreme—"illogical" is a mild word; a far stronger word would do—to allow personal considerations to govern the sound administration and sound outline of government policy.

In fact it is farcical, and I do not hesitate to use that word, to set up a department with a great fanfare and to say: We are now going to co-ordinate policy in the field of resource development, and then to carve out of it one of the most substantial and important areas, if not the most important area, in the field of federal responsibility, leaving the minister responsible for resource policy co-ordination and development with only part of the jurisdiction.

Compare what is happening, Mr. Chairman, with the expectations aroused by the Prime Minister when he was discussing the setting up of this department. I should like to refer to a report in the Toronto Star, which I do not think could be considered unfair to the government. In its issue of December 18 last, there was the following:

A department of resources and energy.

The aim here is to bring all energy and resources affairs under one cabinet roof.

Certainly that is a logical and proper objective. The article continues:

At present they're scattered among a number of departments and ministers.

The new department—under Quebec's 41-year-old Jean Luc Pepin—will take on the job of producing a national water policy, and this involves the hot issue of exports to the water-hungry United States.

How can you have, Mr. Chairman, a national water policy administered by the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys when one half of the responsibility, one half of the area of our water resources, is excepted from his jurisdiction? The article continues:

"One focus of federal responsibility is needed," said the Prime Minister in his announcement of the new department, "in order both to make possible closer co-operation with the provinces and with industry and to achieve a more integrated national (energy) policy."

What the Prime Minister said is a statement of fact with which we are all in accord. So why did he not carry this policy out? Why did he not set up a department which would reflect in fact the statement of principle he enunciated?

Let me make this quite clear, Mr. Chairman. It is not our suggestion that responsibility for the administration of northern lands or of lands in the territories should be taken from the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources and vested in the new Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. But we do say that the responsibility for the development and co-ordination of policy in the resource field—responsibility in the whole field of resources embraced within the compass of this new department—should come within the purview of the minister of that department.

There is nothing new in the idea of responsibility for the development and co-ordination of policy being with one minister, and the detailed administration being with another. I want to make it clear that we do not suggest that the new department be burdened with or have added to it the responsibility for the administration of northern lands or resources. But we do say that it is incongruous, that it is a contradiction in terms, in purpose and in fact, to say that you will set up a department responsible for the development of policy in the field of resources and energy and then to except from its responsibility with respect to policy probably one half, certainly a very substantial portion, of that field so far as it lies within the responsibility of the federal government. So I give notice now that unless the legislation setting up this department takes account of these views and includes responsibility for development and co-ordination of resources policy overall, it will fail to command our support.

There are a number of other areas with regard to which we think we should serve notice now. One is the field of hydroelectric power so far as it lies within the jurisdiction of the new department. Recently some very far reaching announcements in this field have been made, announcements which I am sure will have aroused a measure of approval and support on the part of all the people of Canada. I am sure that none of these is more characteristic in that respect than the announcement of agreement between the government of Canada and the government of Manitoba with respect to the Nelson River project. This announcement, in the light of the general information so far available as to the basis of agreement, has our full support.

Incidentally, we note that the exchange of letters between the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys on the one hand and the premier of Manitoba on the other does indicate that one of the objects of the arrangement is to ensure that from this great project there will be a potential supply of power to neighbouring provinces, the immediate ones being, of course, Saskatchewan to the west and Ontario to the east. This brings to mind at once some questions in the field of power development which we think important to raise now, because the relationship of the Nelson river project to these questions typifies the situation which we find in many parts of Canada.

We are in full support of the Nelson River project and we will support its implementation and completion at the earliest possible date. But we are critical of the federal government because the government has not made clear its ultimate plans and intentions. We believe we in this house are entitled to, and the country requires, an early statement on ultimate plans and intentions not only with respect to the Nelson River project but also with respect to the whole question of power production and distribution in Canada generally.

Again bearing in mind that this must be a co-operative field so far as resources within provincial jurisdiction are concerned, there is nevertheless urgent need for the federal government to work out with the provinces a policy and to let us know how these great projects such as the Nelson fit into that policy, particularly with respect to a national transmission grid.

Because we attach particular importance to this field we decided that it would be appropriate for me, on behalf of our party, to write a letter to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys before discussion of his estimates commenced today. I will be frank and admit that the letter did not give much notice and therefore I will not complain if no full answer is given. Indeed, we have now agreed to leave detailed discussion of these matters until a more appropriate occasion but I think I should place on record now, so that it will be available and will be in context for consideration of the matter, the general outline of what concerns us here and the information which we think we should have.

I should like to quote from that portion of my letter in which I deal specifically with these questions. I start as follows:

> Specifically, we would wish to receive information—possibly by way of an opening statement by you—on the following:
> 1. Progress made in, and the present status of, studies of a national transmission grid, with specific reference to the current view of the feasibility of such a grid and any estimates of the timing and staging of its construction.
> 2. The policy and plans of the federal government with respect to furthering the project.

● (4:00 p.m.)

> 3. The relationship between a possible national transmission grid and the Nelson River project, and an outline of plans for the integration of the Nelson River Project into the national grid.
> 4. The same information as requested in paragraph 3 above, with respect to the Hamilton Falls (Brinco) Power Project. Have any discussions been held, or are any contemplated, with the provincial governments concerned in this regard? If discussion have been held, what has been the result?
> 5. The same information as sought in the last two preceding paragraphs with respect to the Columbia and Peace Power Projects.
> 6. What studies have been made of potential power development on the Yukon River? What is the present thinking on the integration of such developments into an east-west transmission grid?
> 7. In the light of certain projections which seem to indicate that, as the market load requirements in Canada grow in the future, and as other sources of energy—including atomic power—become more available, hydro power will be used more for peaking purposes, it is important to obtain some factual—

The word in the letter is "actual" but it should be "factual".

> —information as to the economic factors involved. Specifically, it would be desirable to have information as to the comparative costs (actual and potential) of production and distribution of hydro power in the various regions of Canada; and as between Canada and the United States. It will be appreciated, therefore, if you will be prepared to answer questions in this field as well, in the course of the discussion of your estimates.

[Mr. Fulton.]

Sir, it may be that the minister will feel that he can give us some answers in this area now. I think he will agree with me that in the field of energy these are very important questions to have answered and that it is essential for the government to have an over-all program or plan and an over-all objective in mind with respect to the use of a national power grid, and to have this clearly concerted with the provinces in order that they may intelligently discuss and make arrangements with respect to that now and so that the various individual power projects as developed will fit into that concept.

One other area, sir, that perhaps should be mentioned is the area of water use and pollution. A number of questions have been asked in this session on orders of the day, I regret to have to say that so far most of these questions have not been answered. They have been met generally with such statements as "We are going to discuss that with the chairman of the International Joint Commission tomorrow" or "we will discuss it with the Ontario government next week" or "this is one of the matters which will come up for discussion with the government of the United States the week after next". But we have had no answers to our questions so that we might be able to discuss the problem here, in the House of Commons, this week.

We have not had any answers which have indicated an intention, for instance, to get on with the job of instituting a program of anti-pollution and de-pollution in the Great Lakes system. I certainly hope that this is one of the areas the minister will be discussing in Washington. This is one of the areas that he should have discussed two weeks ago with the government of Ontario rather than tomorrow or next week. I hope the government will lose no time in getting on with the discussion of this and other very important and pressing matters in the field of water use and pollution.

One could go on, Mr. Chairman, with an outline of the important considerations in the field of oil and gas development. We have seen again very important announcements made in the last 48 hours in this regard. I should like to ask the minister if he would let us know about that situation before these estimates carry or perhaps answer this question. What, if any, further clearances at the federal level, either by the government or any agency of the government, are required in order to implement the applications to which reference has been made in the press recently, that of Trans Canada Pipe Lines Limited on the one hand and that of West Coast Transmission on the other.

The application of Trans Canada Pipe Lines Corporation is to build a line south of the lakes through to Sarnia and that of West Coast Transmission is to double or, as I am told, triple the rate of export of natural gas to El Paso. What further steps involving federal approval are necessary in these matters?

In view of the undertaking we gave to expedite the consideration of these estimates, and in view of the desire of other hon. members both in this and other parties to participate in the discussion, I think I should conclude now. There is a great deal more I had wanted to say. But I think I have said enough to convince the minister that we are expecting much from this department and from the co-ordination that should follow in the policy fields I have mentioned.

We shall be expecting much and we shall be holding the government very strictly accountable primarily because in the whole field, the field of wise plans for the early development and use of our resources on the one hand and the field of wise policies with respect to their conservation to meet the requirements of future generations on the other, lies the basic solution of the problem of whether Canada is to maintain her identity as a nation. I assure the government that we have every good wish for the success of the minister in his work but we shall be holding him strictly accountable in that light.

The only other matter I wish to mention is the responsibility of the department with respect to the Dominion Coal Board. My hon. friend from Cape Breton South has already indicated his intention to raise questions in this respect and with respect to the details of the implementation of the government's promise made at election time that $25 million would be available for Nova Scotia coal, a promise delivered in person by the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I think the Minister of National Health and Welfare should be here to explain his promise and to answer with respect to its implementation, while my colleague from Cape Breton South takes it up in detail.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I cannot resist once again congratulating the hon. member for Kamloops and the Progressive Conservative party for swinging in behind the New Democratic Party in support of our demand for a national water policy. It does my heart good to see us co-operating in this respect. I know other hon. members want to make a few remarks—

Mr. Fulton: I shall have to reassess my position if I find the hon. member's party is such an ardent ally.

Mr. Herridge: The hon. gentleman need not reassess his position. He will be following a good lead. Like the hon. member, I should have liked to hear the minister give more information as to the government's purposes and objectives with respect to a national water policy. I realize the difficulties. The government must recognize the responsibilities of the provinces. There will be conferences and discussions and a water policy is not going to be devised overnight. I should like to have the minister tell the house what the government's purpose is and what its objectives are so far as the future is concerned. Like the hon. member for Kamloops—I am quite sure hon. members have heard me say this on a number of previous occasions—we believe that there is a necessity for an inventory of our water resources in Canada and an inventory of our needs for this generation and for some generations to come.

I want once again to pay tribute to General Andrew McNaughton who recently brought this matter to the attention of the Canadian people through an address to the Engineering Institute of Canada and, I think, to the Canadian Club in Montreal during the election. I notice that various candidates discussed the questions he raised more fully after his address. In that connection may I draw the attention of hon. members to an article written by Mr. Walter Stewart, found in the Star Weekly magazine of February 26, 1966. I want to quote briefly from the article because I think it says very succinctly what the hon. members for Kamloops and Kootenay West wish to say in this regard:

> We were "skinned alive".
> "With the knowledge that water is going up in value 10 or 15 per cent a year . . . the average over the 30 years (the first stage of the treaty) can certainly be taken at $10 an acre foot. To show you that's not unreasonable, the value of water today in a citrus field is about $70 an acre foot. So 15.5 million acre feet made available is $155 million a year—

The reference to $70 an acre foot is in the United States.

• (4:10 p.m.)

The value for power purposes was put at $501 million for 30 years, whereas if you take $155 million a year as the figure, even allowing the Americans a good discount because they are paying in advance, you'll find it works out to $2.65 billion over the 30 years.

"In other words, the consumptive uses of the water, which are not provided for in any way in the treaty, are worth five times more than the power benefits paid Canada."

I am glad to see that the house is not divided on this occasion and that the majority of the members here are not going to let this happen again so far as the disposal of our water resources is concerned.

Recently I had occasion to attend the annual meeting of the Royal Geographical Society. Professor Trevor Lloyd was the guest speaker. He gave what I thought was a most interesting address. I wish to quote briefly from it because he concluded by in effect supporting the approach taken by General McNaughton, an attitude which has been adopted by numerous other engineers in this country. His address is reported in the Globe and Mail of Friday, February 25, in an article headed "Scheme To Divert Canadian Water Assailed". The article reads:

A leading Canadian geographer last night described a scheme to divert Canadian water to the United States as "an exercise in sophomore civil engineering"—

He described the NAWAPA scheme in these terms:

"Water from the Canadian cordillera will be turned south to meet the supposed needs of the United States Southwest. Anything which survives after passing Southern California will go on to the arid areas of Mexico.

An incidental but unavoidable result of the scheme would be to drown out most of the usable level land in interior British Columbia.

The water needs of Canada are not overlooked. The Prairies will be allocated at least as much of the water as will Mexico."

He took note of plans under the scheme for a seaway to James Bay, "where, as is well known, the offshore waters are so shallow that even a canoe cannot be assured of getting within sight of land at low tide."

Prof. Lloyd called for the formulation of a national water policy for Canada, but placed consideration of diversion to the United States last in his list of seven policy requirements.

He noted he had "ventured outside the usual academic pale to comment on public policy. It is apparent that water has now become a subject of major concern within Canada and that it will influence relations between this country and the United States in the years ahead."

[Mr. Herridge.]

I may say that I agree with him in this respect and so do other members of this group. The article continues:

"It does not appear, for example, to have worked smoothly in relation to utilization of the Columbia River water. The suggestion has been made that, in a strictly technical sense, Canada has not always been sufficiently skilful to maintain its authority in the partnership."

He cited water demands in California as an example of increasing pressure on Canada by the United States and quoted the governor of California, Edmund Brown, as saying: "Whether we bring it from the Snake, the Columbia or the Volga, we will have to have it."

I place this on the record because I am in the habit of sending out copies of Hansard to a number of people in my constituency and this is a cheap way of letting them know what Professor Lloyd had to say on this occasion.

I turn now to another aspect of this matter. It appears there has been considerable trouble over the construction of the High Arrow Dam. In fairness to some people who are closely connected with this job, I cannot say much about what they have told me. To be quite safe I will quote from the Nelson Daily News of February 24, 1966. Under a headline "Error Delays Arrow Dam Project" we find the following:

Vancouver sources reported Wednesday that the construction schedule at the dam has been hard hit by inaccuracies in engineering data supplied to the dam builders. Core drillings reportedly showing solid bed rock proved false when the underlying structures were found to be weakened by dirt seams and cracks.

The project is really in much greater difficulty than would appear from this article. I think this proves that General McNaughton's scepticism before the committee was well justified. Then the article goes on to say:

Nearly 10,000 extra cubic yards of rock will have to be removed from the north end of the dam site. Misinformation will cause an added three weeks work to be crammed into an already rigid schedule, the sources said.

The article continues:

The north end is not the only unknown factor. A centre section of the concrete half, running about 300 feet along its baseline is as yet unexplored. Rather than waste time by drilling, crews are blasting the surface of this area off in layers to reach solid ground.

The article then goes on to deal with other difficulties which are being experienced. I mention this because of General McNaughton's expressed concern about the foundations of this dam when he was giving evidence before the External Affairs Committee.

As a result of the signing of this treaty we have what is known as a permanent engineering board. I understand there are two representatives of this country and two representatives of the United States. Provision is made in article 9 of the agreement for regular reports. The article reads:

As required by Article XV of the Treaty the board will make reports to the governments of Canada and the United States at least once a year. Reports to the government shall be made through the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources for Canada and the Secretary of State for the United States. The initial report by the board will be submitted by December 31, 1965.

I should like to ask the minister whether he intends to table this report, for it is one which will be of great interest not only to members of this house but to many people throughout the country. I understand that the information contained in the report is already available to people in the United States. I am sure it would contain some most interesting information as to the amount of money spent up to December 31, 1965, on the construction of the three dams in question, on the clearing of the reservoirs and in compensation to various owners who have been approached to date by B.C. Hydro. I trust the minister will agree to tabling this report for our information.

I have referred to these few matters briefly. I realize there is a long road to travel before we can finally have a national water policy. As I say, I wish the minister would inform the house more fully as to the government's purpose and objectives in this respect after it has had an opportunity to discuss these matters with the provinces particularly concerned.

I have always been interested in keeping our water clean and free from pollution. It is a serious question and one of growing concern in the area I have the honour to represent. There is pollution in the upper Columbia. There is pollution in Kootenay Lake. There is some pollution in the lower Columbia before it enters the United States. This situation has caused alarm to rod and gun clubs, chambers of commerce and labour organizations who believe we can only deal effectively with pollution of rivers of this type when we have a national policy which will provide for co-operation between federal, provincial and municipal governments.

• (4:20 p.m.)

That is all I have to say at this time. I shall look forward to what the minister has to say with regard to our request for the tabling of this very important report.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, we are now studying the estimates of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys. The people I represent are very much interested in mining development and the development of new mining industries in Northwestern Quebec.

I note, in the estimates of the department, that an amount of $16 million is allotted to help the gold mines in Canada. I have not made a break-down of the subsidies granted each mine, but we have a table of these figures.

I feel the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys should give far more attention to gold mines than it does at the present time.

Here is what I read in the report on the administration of the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act:

The annual average of the weekly buying prices in Canadian funds at the Royal Canadian Mint in 1964 was $37.75 per fine ounce of gold. This compares with $37.75 in 1963 and $37.41 in 1962. The price of gold in Canadian funds is governed by the fixed buying price of $35 per fine ounce in United States funds by the United States Treasury and the exchange rate between the Canadian and United States dollars. Since May 2, 1962 the value of the Canadian dollar has been set at $0.925 United States funds. At parity, the Mint buying price for gold is $37.84 per ounce in Canadian funds. The market value of the Canadian dollar may be permitted to fluctuate by 1 per cent either side of parity. Thus, the Mint buying price in Canadian funds may vary between $37.46 and $38.22 per ounce. In 1964, the Mint price varied from $37.54 to $37.86 per ounce.

When the government starts helping the gold mines or granting subsidies to the gold mines:

The average cost of production per ounce of gold, computed on all ounces of gold produced from the mine during the designated period, must exceed $26.50.

—and not more than $45.

It means that the government helps between $26.50 and $45, for a total of $12.33 per ounce, which is the maximum rate paid to gold producers in Canada.

On page 9 of that blue booklet, one can read:

The Gold Export Act and Disposal of Canadian Gold

The Gold Export Act, passed in 1932, authorized the Governor in Council to make regulations regarding the export of gold from Canada. On March 21, 1956, the regulations, which prohibited the export in any form except under licence issued by the Minister of Finance, were revoked. Thus, since March 1956, producers have been free to sell their gold wherever they wish.

Mr. Chairman, I think that practice is not followed at all although it would be practicable since there are countries which would pay more than $35 or $37 per ounce for gold produced in Canada.

But here is the problem with regard to assistance to gold mining. In my region, and the other gold producing regions, the employees, those who work in a gold mine are paid $1 or $1.50 in some cases, less than those who work in other mines such as copper, nickel, zinc, etc.

In gold mines, we still have people working at an hourly rate of $1.40 or $1.45, and subsidies are paid to mines to keep them in operation.

I see no objection to that, sir, and I would even urge the government to give more subsidies so that a greater number of gold mines remain in operation, but those supplementary subsidies should be subject to the provision that the wages of miners working in those mines are to be adjusted so that their standard of living is as good and as high as that of miners working in other mining enterprises.

I believe that is a very serious shortcoming that the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys should correct as soon as possible. We have been asking for several years to the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys to consider the question—not on the surface but in depth—in short to consider the situation as it is.

A few months ago, I attended the official opening of a new gold mine in our region, the Wasamak mine located about six or seven miles from Rouyn-Noranda, and the owners of that mine make applications to, and apply the pressure on the government in order to derive profits from their operations.

Those who provide capital and equipment for the operation of a mine want to make a profit, and you cannot blame them. In my region, a number of mines only make a profit because of the grants received from the federal Department of Mines and Technical Surveys. They cannot, of course, raise miners' salaries so that the men would make a decent living, and that is the problem.

A miner working eight hours a day, either underground or in the plant, is putting in a hard day's work. He has a rather serious responsibility and must often work under dangerous conditions.

[Mr. Caouette.]

Therefore, I urge the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Pepin) to study the question of gold mines in our region and to consider the possibility of helping them or of suggesting to other departments, the Department of Industry for instance, the establishment in our region of secondary industries to process the ores, either for the domestic or the export trade.

But one point on which I want to insist is that adequate subsidies be paid to the producing gold mines in our region to enable their owners to grant salary increases to the miners who could then give their families better living conditions. It is not that they do not want to but they are unable to do so because of the economic conditions resulting from this niggardliness on the part of the government which will not give more help for the operation of gold mines in our region.

When I think that Canada is giving millions of dollars to other countries to help underdeveloped and needy people, when I hear the ministers, one after the other, talk about fighting poverty and misery in Canada, I say that the gold mine employees are now the victims of that poverty and that it is the responsibility of the government to help them by increasing subsidies for gold production. Not to increase the wealth of company presidents, but to enable the companies to pay their employees higher, more adequate salaries, taking into account the present needs in our area and in all similar regions.

Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to pursue the subject, but I strongly urge the minister concerned to study thoroughly and in detail this matter of gold mines and the industries which could be established in our region, so as to help increase Canadian production including that of our province.

I strongly urge that the problem arising in my region be considered and that the different cases be studied and dealt with, not by means of political partisanship, but effectively, so that our people may receive fair and equitable treatment.

[English]

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Chairman, because of our concern for the Nova Scotia coal industry and our greater concern for the number of miners and their families involved in this industry, it is most important that we impress upon the government today the need for assistance. I regret very much that the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys is not available today and that we have to put our case to two ministers who are quite far removed from the problem, although we do have present the Minister of National Health and Welfare, not because of his own initiative, I might say, but because of an arrangement made by his house leader.

Since the house opened we have been denied on any number of occasions the opportunity of pinpointing this particular problem. The Minister of National Health and Welfare gleefully hides behind a ruling of the Chair to the effect that we can no longer ask questions of ministers on the basis of the province from which they come but only questions which refer immediately to their departments. The Minister of National Health and Welfare has been able to hide behind that ruling which has been invoked during this session but which was never before applicable.

I hope it will be possible before the estimates of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys are passed to hear some answers from the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In the meantime I hope the Minister without Portfolio and the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources will listen to the arguments put forward today and realize that the government has to take immediate action in order to salvage and save the Nova Scotia coal industry.

I should like to thank the hon. member for Kamloops for making reference to the fact that I would have something to say regarding the Dominion Coal Board. However, I intend to range a little wider than that. In thanking him I am reminded that this was not his only concern or the only concern of the government of which he was a member. The former Conservative government took every possible step to assist the Nova Scotia coal industry and met every demand made by that industry. In fact, on one occasion, in order to extend the life of a colliery that was to be closed, the government of that day offered assistance but the company did not see fit to accept it with the result that we lost one coal mine.

The importance and urgency of this matter are with us every day. We have had another mine closure and we are now expecting to have a mine opening. I should like to take exception to what the hon. member for Kamloops referred to as a political promise made during the election campaign. I want the government and the three ministers now present to understand that it was not a political promise. In that regard I can quote the words of the Minister of National Health and Welfare who said in a statement made in Halifax that it was not a political promise, not a part of their platform at all, but was a definite commitment on the part of the government to make $25 million available to the island coal industry.

In order to emphasize this matter I state here and now that the minister and his colleagues in Nova Scotia relied heavily on this $25 million commitment to the Cape Breton coal industry to get elected. Again I emphasize the fact that the Minister of National Health and Welfare said this was not a political promise or a part of the Liberal party's platform but was a definite commitment on the part of the government.

To back up the fact that this was a commitment I should like to quote from the instruction that every Liberal poll worker in Cape Breton South had. This instruction reads:

> The Liberal Government and Allan MacEachen got 25 million dollars for the coal industry. No matter how you voted in the past Liberals should have your vote this one time. The Liberal is Joe MacEachern. Voters should be shown the sample ballot in this book.

Again I say to the minister that I have every indication that a number of Liberal workers who are more concerned about the coal industry in Nova Scotia than they are about the Liberal Party are prepared to sign an affidavit to the effect that this was the instruction they were given on election day.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): The instruction pointed out that the candidate running for the Liberal Party in Cape Breton South was Joe MacEachern. They were depending on confusion between the names MacEachern and MacEachen with the hope that the name MacEachen might provide some incentive to the people to vote for the Liberal candidate and provide him with a victory in that area. I am told that there was confusion and the result was not what they expected. The result was the opposite of what they expected.

Mr. MacEachen: We got 5,000 more votes, Donald.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): For $25 million the return was not too good. With respect to how they emphasized the $25 million in aid for the coal industry I should like to refer to the headlines in the local papers, and the publicity in which the Liberals basked. Again I suggest they depended on this commitment, not promise, to be successful. Under the heading "Massive Aid Pledge For Nova Scotia Coal Industry" there are the subheadings: "New mine assured." "Ottawa prepared to invest 25 million dollars." I might say at this point that since this announcement was made the government has been hiding behind what they refer to as the Dr. Donald report which had nothing to do with the $25 million. In this regard I can quote the words of the Minister of National Health and Welfare who, when speaking of the $25 million in aid, spoke of it as being an accomplished fact. I will remind the minister of his own words and indicate where and when he said them. It is imperative that we get this money and get that mine operating within the time limit mentioned by the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

The article to which I referred states:

> The federal government will dip into the treasury for at least 25 million in a long range gamble to shore up Cape Breton's erratic coal industry.
> Labour Minister Allan MacEachen held court at a press conference in Halifax Tuesday and in less than 500 words spelled out a formula that could herald a new era for coal.
> Mr. MacEachen said the government was prepared to "invest" at least 25 million dollars in Cape Breton coal mining future including the first major mine opening in more than two decades in the Province.
> "Good news." "Fantastic." More than we had hoped for from the federal government was the immediate comment from District 26 President, Bill Marsh who sat beside Mr. MacEachen for the official announcement. Dominion Coal Company President Earl Clubb checked in fast with similar words of praise.
> "This announcement will be received with enthusiasm by the people of Cape Breton", Mr. Clubb said. "This will do much to stabilize the industry."
> Mr. MacEachen said that 10 million dollars would be spent to open a mine at Lingan and another 15 million allotted to rehabilitate and automate the coal mines now operating.
> It was Allan MacEachen's stature in the cabinet that was the turning point in the long negotiations.

• (4:40 p.m.)

One of his high priced hired help who was along at the time made this statement to the press:

> He had an extremely rough time last week convincing certain ministers that the expenditure was warranted.

Every bit of publicity in the press about this tremendous aid to the Cape Breton coal industry was, of course, accepted by the minister as his complete responsibility, despite the fact that he had a hard time convincing some of his cabinet colleagues that the expenditure was necessary. Then there is this quotation:

> $25 Million Boost for Coal!
> Pit for Lingan
> It was a day of good news—multimillion dollar news—yesterday for the ailing Nova Scotia coal industry.
> In Halifax Labour Minister Allan MacEachen announced that about $25 million in federal funds would be invested in the coal industry to provide for a new mine at Lingan and to modernize production machinery at other mines.
> An estimated $25 million funds will be poured into the Cape Breton coal industry to provide for the capital investment of opening a new mine at Lingan and modernizing production machinery in other mines in the area, Labour Minister Allan J. MacEachen announced yesterday.
> Mr. MacEachen made the announcement to a chorus of praise from U.M. Workers' President, William Marsh and J. E. Clubb, President of the Dominion Coal Company.

On many occasions during the election campaign the former minister of labour continued to quote the praise that was uttered by the President of the U.M.W., Mr. Marsh, and the Dominion Coal Company President, Mr. Clubb, in regard to this federal program.

Mr. MacEachen: Right.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): The minister says "Right." I hope Hansard has recorded the minister's remark:

> I am sure the announcement will be received with enthusiasm by the people of Cape Breton—

He was quite sure.

> —as the government's decision will do so much to stabilize the industry, Mr. Clubb added.
> Mr. MacEachen estimated the opening of a new mine at Lingan could provide up to 900 jobs. He termed it a capital investment by the federal government in Cape Breton coal fields.
> An estimated $10 million will go to the proposed Lingan mine, which is situated on the Sydney side of Lingan Beach.

Reference was made also to the fact that this new mine opening could be used to tap both the harbour seam and the Phalen seam and that plans to do just that have gone ahead. The only thing that is holding them up is the $25 million which, according to the former minister of labour and the former minister of mines and technical surveys, was all but delivered to Cape Breton. Yet they hide behind Dr. Donald and his report.

I inquired about Dr. Donald only last week from officials of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys and the U.M.W. executive. I asked whether Dr. Donald had visited Cape Breton and gone underground. To their knowledge he had not. Nobody could say he had and nobody could say he had not, but nobody could support the idea that he had gone underground.

What is Dr. Donald going to do? My understanding of Dr. Donald—I am not criticizing him because I have no idea what the man's particular job is and I am waiting with interest the results of his report—is that he is an engineer in the chemicals field. The name of the former minister of mines and technical surveys was mentioned and I will get to him a little later. I might also say that the former minister of labour took great exception to the remarks made. He happened to get bumped down to National Health and Welfare but nevertheless he is still representing Nova Scotia and should take the opportunity under our practice to enlighten the people of Nova Scotia in respect of his commitments prior to the election, what his intentions are now and whether he will meet with the same success with his cabinet colleagues. Here I quote the minister himself:

> And just last week I had the great privilege, and it was a privilege because I had worked hard to bring it about—

I am sure the Minister of National Health and Welfare will not take objection to these words. They are his own and I will repeat them:

> And just last week I had the great privilege, and it was a privilege because I had worked hard to bring it about, to announce the new plans of the federal government for the coal industry, bringing relief and a sense of particular joy to the coal miners and their families living in so many communities in this part of Nova Scotia; a plan that will modernize and re-equip the existing industry; a plan that will make it possible to open a new mine, something that has been sought and asked for, something that has now been done by a federal Liberal government at Ottawa.

I emphasize the minister's own words:

> —something that has now been done by a federal Liberal government at Ottawa. This is quite a story of achievement, in my view, for the people of Cape Breton and eastern Nova Scotia. It has been done by a government that is deeply interested in developing all parts of Canada.
> I can say, I am sure with absolute certainty, that no government in the history of this country has done as much for the island of Cape Breton and eastern Nova Scotia than this present government at Ottawa in 30 months of its life.

Here again I may say—

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, may I ask my hon. friend a question? I am not denying the words at all but I would like to know what he is reading from. Is it a newspaper account? I would just like to know the source of that quotation.

Mr. MacEwan: Don't you remember the words?

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): As the hon. member for Pictou has said, you would think the minister would remember his own words.

Mr. MacEachen: I want to know the source of this quotation.

An hon. Member: He wants to know who dared print it.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): It is going to be very difficult for the minister to eliminate these words because they were used in a radio address and I have a direct copy from the tape. I cannot possibly use the tape here but I will give the minister the date.

Mr. MacEachen: All I wanted to find out was the source of the quotation and I thank my hon. friend for telling me that it is from a tape.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): If the minister wants to know what the source was, he was the source. The minister went on to say:

> And I want to say as well—

I emphasize the "I":

> —that I have been at the cabinet table as a native Cape Bretoner, putting forward the needs and problems of the people of this island, and I believe that my advocacy has some real results. Because of the list of accomplishments I have been able to mention to you tonight, it hasn't hurt at all to have a native Cape Bretoner as a cabinet minister sitting at the council table putting forward the needs of this island.
> I believe that we now need a majority government, a majority government in Canada, with support in all parts of Canada, so that we can carry on with our programs of development in eastern Nova Scotia and elsewhere. And I believe that on the basis of this record that I have mentioned it is appropriate for me to appeal to all the voters of Cape Breton Island and all the voters of eastern Nova Scotia to help us get that majority, to help me continue my work in Ottawa for Nova Scotia, by giving me the support of Liberal members elected in all these constituencies.
> This is what I am asking, I am asking the people of Cape Breton to support the Liberal policies of growth that have done so much for Cape Breton in a short space of time, and the best way to give that help and to ensure a continued application of these policies, is to support all the Liberal candidates on Cape Breton Island.
> I appeal for support myself in the riding of Inverness-Richmond and Cape Breton west, whose people have been so generous to me in giving me support in many previous elections, but I appeal also to the voters in Cape Breton North-Victoria to give us a hand by voting for the Liberal candidate, and the same appeal I make to the voters of Cape Breton South.

All the ridings of Cape Breton can, I believe with a good heart, support this present Liberal government, because no government in the history of Canada has done as much for Cape Breton as the present government at Ottawa.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): How many times is the pronoun "I" used?

An hon. Member: Read on.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I think you have heard enough of that particular speech. I will give you another one. Again, if the minister is concerned with the source, he is the source.

Mr. Stewart: They are very good speeches and should be put on the record.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Oh, we hear from the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough. Are we to get these remarks on the record?

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Get off your brains and speak.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, I said they were very good speeches and should be put on the record.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I know the member for Antigonish-Guysborough thinks they are good. The Minister of National Health and Welfare, who originated them, has other thoughts on them at the moment. He did not recall where they came from or who made them but I have identified them as being his words.

• (4:50 p.m.)

I should like to quote the minister again:

On October 5 of this year I announced that the federal government would make large scale investments in the Cape Breton coal industry. I also stated that the opening of a new mine at Lingan is a necessary part of a long term program for the coal industry. Large amounts of money are involved—for example, one estimate for the opening of Lingan itself is ten million dollars.

This firm decision by the Liberal government—it is not a promise or part of a campaign platform—

I take exception to the reference by the hon. member for Kamloops who said this was a campaign promise. I prefer to depend on the words uttered by the former minister of labour when he said this was not a promise or part of a campaign platform.

—has long been asked for by miners, union leaders, clergymen, and mayors of the coal mining towns. It is not surprising that the President of the United Mine Workers described this decision as a blessing, a godsend, and more than asked for.

[Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South).]

Here I remind you, sir, that throughout the campaign the former minister of labour, now Minister of National Health and Welfare, continued to quote what was said by the President of the United Mine Workers of America, that it was a godsend. I continue the quotation:

Mr. Marsh is quite right. This policy represents a major breakthrough for our economy, for the miners, their wives and families. No other government in Canada's history has demonstrated such willingness to support and maintain the coal industry of Cape Breton.

I am sorry that Premier Stanfield and his followers have failed to appreciate the significance of this tremendous undertaking.

I interrupt at this point to emphasize the fact that this was not a political promise, it was not a campaign promise and it was not part of their platform, but boy did they use it.

Fortunately their negative attitude has received no support whatsoever from the miners and their leaders. The miners realize that without this decision the coal industry would have a very short life indeed.

I repeat the fact that the Minister of National Health and Welfare is not here on his own initiative but because his house leader arranged it and I would ask him respectfully to pay attention to his own words.

Now, it has a chance to survive and, we hope, to prosper. I also stated on October 5 that a comprehensive long term program for the coal industry would be introduced in 1966.

We are still waiting.

The decision announced by the federal government on October 5 is the most important ever made in the life of the coal industry and it will place this vital industry on the kind of firm foundation that is necessary for its survival.

There is a notation on the bottom of this statement that the preceding was sponsored by the Liberal party. This had nothing whatever to do with politics; it was a firm commitment. It was something that was accomplished.

I want to refer to the fact the former minister of mines and other ministers came into the area. Unfortunately these other ministers had no responsibility for these estimates. Nevertheless there were other ministers along to hear what the former minister of mines had to say to the people of Cape Breton:

Canada's Minister of Mines, the Honourable J. Watson MacNaught, expressed the hope when addressing the Liberal rally here Thursday night that the people of Cape Breton North and Victoria will vote for a Liberal government in appreciation of what had been done for the coal industry of Cape Breton in form of the recently announced investment of the federal government of twenty five million dollars in this particular industry.

He termed this move on the part of the federal government as one that would without doubt give new blood to the coal mining industry. In fact, he added: "This move will assure the stability of the industry and income for miners in this area for many years."

Here we have $25 million for 5,000 votes and $20,500 a year for the former minister of mines for making that statement and for no other reason. I cannot think of any appointment the government has ever made more ridiculous than the recent appointment of the former minister of mines to the position of chairman of the Dominion Coal Board. It is an insult to the employees and officials of the coal board. This man who has now been appointed chairman of the Dominion Coal Board has been described by many people. I have nothing but sympathy for the many men on the Dominion Coal Board who have worked so hard in an effort to bring about improvement in the coal industry of this country and who are now to be saddled with a chairman who does not know anything and who will not learn enough in the next 20 years of his life to take even a minor position with the coal board let alone the position of chairman.

I am not sufficiently familiar with the members of the Dominion Coal Board to know how many of them are competent to take this position. However, I know from experience that there must be many men in the employment of the board who could do a very good job. Since I am not familiar with too many of them I will mention one name in particular, Mr. Alec Brown. I might point out that the former minister of labour was very busy in Cape Breton last summer promising the position of chairman of the Dominion Coal Board to a number of people in that area.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I would ask my hon. friend to withdraw this misstatement because it is a total misstatement.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): It is a strange thing, Mr. Chairman, but we operate in this house under most peculiar circumstances. The Chairman can rest assured that I am going to withdraw the remark. I am withdrawing it for only one reason but at the same time I object. Despite the fact a member may say something that is truthful, he is required under the rules to withdraw it if there is an objection from the other side. Now, Mr. Chairman, only because the rules of the house demand that I withdraw this statement unless I am prepared to make—

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order—

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Will the minister allow me to finish?

Mr. MacEachen: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend suggested quite categorically—

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: Order. Is the hon. gentleman on a point of order?

Mr. MacEachen: I am on a point of order.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Chairman, I must insist. This is a question of privilege.

The Chairman: Order. The minister is rising on a point of order.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I am rising on a question of privilege.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Cape Breton South.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): My question of privilege, sir, is that the Minister of National Health and Welfare was about to make remarks in respect of what I had to say and I have not completed my remarks. It is possible that when I complete my remarks he will have no point of order. Furthermore I would remind you, sir, I was on my feet and I did not relinquish the floor. The former minister of labour, without recognition from the Chair, was prepared to speak on a point of order.

My question of privilege is, as I have stated, that the rules provide I must withdraw a statement if there is a protest from the other side despite the fact it may be a true statement unless I am prepared to bring before the house an actual affidavit to the effect that in this case he did approach, let us say, a certain person in the city of Sydney to accept the position of chairman of the Dominion Coal Board. I am not prepared to involve individuals any more than I am prepared to ask Liberal workers in Cape Breton, who I maintained earlier are more concerned with the coal industry, to give me an affidavit on this particular statement. The minister raised no objection at that time on this particular matter. I have finished my remarks so let us hear his point of order.

The Chairman: The hon. member has now stated his question of privilege. The Minister of National Health and Welfare.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. MacEachen: I rise on a point of order based on the statement made by the hon. member for Cape Breton South that I had promised the position of chairman of the Dominion Coal Board to several persons in Cape Breton. That is a completely false statement. The point of order is simply that these events are within my own knowledge. If I state it to be a matter of fact within my own knowledge, then under our rules of the house another hon. member must accept the statement. If he refuses to accept it his recourse is very clear.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I will accept it, Mr. Chairman, but I will bring the question up with the particular individuals involved at a later date. Perhaps I will then come forward with an affidavit and the minister will have to withdraw. In the meantime I accept the statement of the minister.

I was speaking of the former minister of mines, the situation which has developed in regard to the Dominion Coal Board and the callous approach of the government to matters concerning a vital industry and the miners and families connected therewith. I should like for a few moments to refer to a recent article which outlined the capabilities of the former minister of mines. The article appeared in the Toronto Star of March 1, 1966, and I think it is something which should be placed on record because it once again indicates the attitude of the government toward a very vital aspect of our economy. The article reads as follows:

It's a good indication of how disillusioned Ottawa has become with the Liberals' so-called "new politics" that no one here was very upset or surprised when the Prime Minister last week once again used loyalty to the Liberal party as his criterion in appointing the latest batch of senators.

I might say that the heading of the article refers to the former minister of mines and is entitled: "A Leg Up For 'J. Watson MacZero'". The article continues:

What did anger Ottawa insiders was the appointment (announced the day before the new Senate list) of Hon. J. Watson MacNaught as chairman of the Dominion Coal Board.

This resentment was based on the feeling that naming partisans to the Senate, where they can do little harm to the governmental process, may be a commonplace.

But it becomes a matter of grave concern when a failed politician is placed in a responsible position within the public service, where competence and knowledge, not party affiliation, must be the decisive factor.

[Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South).]

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Sounds like Trudeau before conversion.

The Chairman: Order. I must advise the hon. member that the time allotted to him has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Chairman: Does the committee give unanimous consent for the hon. member to continue?

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): I was just wondering, Mr. Chairman, what estimates we were on while I was listening to the hon. member. It was very hard to tell.

Mr. Nielsen: He is talking about the former minister of mines.

The Chairman: Does the committee give unanimous consent for the hon. member to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Chairman, if the minister cannot understand my references to the Dominion Coal Board, perhaps he had better go back to licking stamps. If he cannot understand me I suggest that he move over and sit with the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): He does not know what the coal board is.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): The article continues:

J. Watson MacNaught has seldom demonstrated either quality. He's a gentle nonentity from Summerside, P.E.I. who earned a reputation as the Liberal government's least effective minister and was known by the irreverent in his party as "J. Watson MacZero".

If the Minister of National Health and Welfare is interested in the origin of that remark, it comes from within his own party.

Pearson's appointment of McNaught demonstrates a strange approach to the public service from a man who was, for 20 years, one of its most distinguished members.

Even John Diefenbaker, who strongly believed in rewarding his faithful followers, was much more circumspect about making appointments of this nature.

He did name the former M.P., A. D. McPhillips, to be a member, though not chairman, of the Tariff Board.

But in 1961 when the Conservatives had to pick a new chairman for the Dominion Coal Board, Diefenbaker chose Colin Lewis O'Brian, a 40-year-veteran of the public service.

O'Brian, who is a professional engineer—

I might say here that so also is Mr. Brown who was overlooked.

—had served with distinction on the coal board for the preceding 19 years, was the author of many technical papers on coal and energy, and was generally regarded as the most knowledgeable expert in his field.

While chairmanship of the Dominion Coal Board is hardly one of Ottawa's more important positions—

That, of course, depends on your point of view.

—it's not a trivial appointment either. The chairman (paid $20,500 annually, which is $5,500 more than a Senator) is responsible for a $22 million a year budget.

It's essentially a technical department of government, concerned with administering coal subventions and recommending policies to the government on the production, import and distribution of coal.

The coal board chairman, along with seven members of his board, recommends, through the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys, what the government's policies should be.

O'Brian is now succeeded in this responsible post by the Hon. J. Watson MacNaught. An active Liberal since he was a law student at Dalhousie University in the late twenties, MacNaught practised criminal law on the island and became law clerk of the P.E.I. legislature.

He won a Liberal seat in the 1945 election, lost it in 1957. And won it back in 1963.

When he picked his first cabinet, Pearson put MacNaught into the Solicitor General's office, then the most junior of portfolios.

During the next three years the P.E.I. lawyer established himself in Ottawa as a man very nearly innocent of the arts of statesmanship.

During a private dinner given at Ottawa's Country Club, shortly after the government was sworn in, he interrupted two Quebec ministers deep in animated conversation and repeatedly asked them to speak English.

Mr. Trudeau: Can you speak in French?

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I would give you some Gaelic if that were permissible in the house.

The government used him for routine assignments such as representing Canada at the inauguration of a new president of Mexico, on December 1, 1964.

Official Ottawa was baffled when in the summer of 1965, MacNaught was suddenly promoted to the mines and technical surveys portfolio. This seemed particularly illogical since P.E.I. happens to be the only province of Canada which has no known mineral resources.

"I'm going into the department with a very open mind," MacNaught stated firmly at the time. When he was being sworn in, MacNaught was asked what he intended to do about the Dominion Coal Board. "I guess I'll have to look into it, if that's the word," was his reply.

Later he explained his appointment to a reporter from the Sudbury Star, after touring a mine shaft for the first time in his life: "Mr. Pearson just thought I was the best man for the job. Many government representatives are appointed to posts about which they have little or no previous knowledge."

In the 1965 election, MacNaught probably had more going for him than any other cabinet minister, since shortly before the campaign started, the government had pledged $148 million toward the construction of the long-promised P.E.I. causeway.

That is considerably more than the $25 million which the Minister of National Health and Welfare had.

But he lost both Liberal seats on the island, including his own. He managed this feat by deliberately neglecting to invite Walter Shaw, the premier of P.E.I., and a Conservative, to the sod-turning ceremonies for the causeway, which MacNaught had thoughtfully arranged for just three days before the November 8 vote.

"Narrow and nasty."

Now MacNaught has been assured a sinecure as chairman of the coal board. One reason he was not appointed to P.E.I.'s existing vacancy in the Senate was that a delegation of progressive Prince Edward Island Liberals descended on Ottawa a few weeks ago imploring the Prime Minister not to name MacNaught, thus perpetuating his political power on the island.

By choosing instead to place him in a responsible position within the public service, Lester Pearson appears to be bidding a final farewell to the "new politics", which he described in the hopeful springtime of his stewardship as the abandonment of "narrow and nasty, short-sighted and selfish partisanship".

• (5:10 p.m.)

Mr. Nielsen: He never said hello to him.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Chairman, we are again faced with the situation that the livelihoods of miners and their families in Cape Breton depend not on words of the former minister of mines or the Minister of National Health and Welfare uttered as a political promise but on a commitment referred to as an accomplished fact, referred to by the former minister of mines and by the chairman of the Dominion Coal Board as something that has already been delivered. The question that is often asked is, "In which bank did they put the $25 million"?

We are now told that the Donald report is going to have some bearing on this matter despite the fact that on one occasion the minister said that the Donald report would be used only as an aid. I am interested to find out what is going to be uncovered in the Donald report that has not already been covered by Lord Robbins and Mr. Sheppard of the United Kingdom Coal Board as the result of studying the situation. What about the organization set up under the Minister of Finance? What has it come up with? Why wait on Doctor Donald before doing something that has already been referred to as an accomplished fact, something that is most necessary to the coal industry in Cape Breton?

Again I refer to the fact that the Minister of Transport said last night that the Minister of National Health and Welfare was so interested in the matter that he would be here. He is not here of his own initiative this afternoon. I hope he takes the responsibility to see that there is payment of the $25 million immediately because the company is prepared and ready to go ahead with its plans. Let us hear from the minister now despite the fact that he is here at the insistence of his house leader rather than on his own initiative and not because of his interest in the Cape Breton coal industry. Let us hear him explain to the Cape Breton people why there has been this delay. Let him also elaborate what the government is prepared to do in respect of providing protection for the market that may be available for coal.

I also want to call the minister's attention to the fact that investment in the Cape Breton coal industry is wise at this particular time because the need for coal today is increasing. If the minister wants some further authority in that regard, despite what Doctor Donald may report, despite the fact that the former parliamentary assistant to the Prime Minister, the hon. member from British Columbia whose constituency escapes me—

An hon. Member: Coast-Capilano.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): —advocated cutting back on coal production, despite the fact that the Rand Commission recommended a reduction in coal production, I point out that he will find it if he takes time to refer to the recently issued Dominion Coal Board report for 1964-65 which indicates that there is an increasing need for coal in this country.

I suggest that the minister go back to cabinet and then come back to the house and report that he has got the money for the Cape Breton coal industry. Let us get on with the opening of the new mine at Lingan which the minister said would employ as many as 900 people and would be opened in a short time. There is not much time to be lost if that is to be done. Now is the time to make the money available. Now is the time to start the machinery which will result in the opening of the mine at Lingan. The minister fully realizes that No. 18 colliery closed down in January and 700 more miners are idle in that area. If the Stanfield government had not concerned itself with the welfare of the miners in that area by making available voluntary retirement pension plans to allow some men to replace others, those people would be in a bad way.

[Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South).]

Let us have some action from the minister. Let us have some action from the government. Let us have delivery of what was referred to as an accomplished fact on a number of occasions. I repeat that the minister said it was not a political promise but was a commitment. I pointed out that the commitment was said to have been made because of the minister's hard work in cabinet sessions. There was reference to the hard time the minister had in convincing his colleagues that such consideration was necessary. The Prime Minister referred to the fact that there was very considerable discussion of the matter before this policy statement was made. Having made the policy statement and that policy statement having been supported by a number of cabinet ministers, it is time for the government to report to the people, to report to the Cape Breton miners and to the coal industry that this promise will be implemented, that this government will carry out the commitment that was so strongly emphasized during the election compaign.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I welcome this discussion and opportunity to express my view on the matter of coal policy and, in so far as I am capable, to bring the house up to date on this particular aspect of government activity. Before I do so I should like to tell my friend from Cape Breton South that I am in the house today as a result of my own initiative and my own readiness to participate in the debate and not as a result of any discussion with the house leader. I have had no discussion whatsoever with the house leader with respect to these estimates.

Mr. Nielsen: You would not be speaking on them if you had.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): A point of order, Mr. Chairman. I want to explain fully why I made references to the fact that the minister was here because of an arrangement by the house leader. Last evening, when the question was put whether we should continue discussion—

The Chairman: Order, please. There is no point of order. The hon. gentleman is making an explanation.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): The point of order is that I was informed that the house leader, just before these estimates came up, had made arrangements that the minister would be here. The minister is denying that.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I respect the ruling made by Mr. Speaker in the chair that questions with respect to the coal industry should not be answered by the Minister of National Health and Welfare. However, I want to assure the house and my friend that I am quite anxious, quite eager and willing to answer questions with respect to any matter within my responsibilities. If the Speaker had permitted the questions I would have answered them on the spot.

I take considerable exception to the effort of the hon. member for Cape Breton South to suggest that there was a lack of willingness on my part to deal with this important matter in the house. The only reason I did not deal with it is the ruling of the Chair which I respected and will continue to respect.

As a matter of fact, the speech made by the hon. member for Cape Breton South was unnecessary. It has contributed nothing to our understanding of the coal problem. He has made no constructive suggestions in his speech nor in any other speech that he made in the last parliament in connection with the coal industry. It would be a welcome change for the hon. member for Cape Breton South, instead of addressing himself to destructive comments about members of the house and persons not in the house, such as the newly named chairman of the coal board, to address himself to the problems of the Nova Scotia coal industry and make some contribution to the solution of an important and great problem.

• (5:20 p.m.)

You can search Hansard in the last parliament and in the speeches of the hon. member you will not find a shred of an intimation of a hint of a constructive proposal on his part with respect to the coal industry of Nova Scotia. His speeches in the house in the last parliament were totally barren of any constructive ideas and we have had a repeat performance this afternoon—

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Will the minister permit a question?

Mr. MacEachen: —in an effort to blow up—

The Chairman: Order. It is obvious that the hon. gentleman who has the floor does not wish to receive a question.

Mr. MacEachen: —in an effort—

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Is the minister going to accept a question?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, I will.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Will he explain his criticism when he says I have never brought forward anything constructive either this session or last session? Will he explain that statement in the light of the fact that 90 per cent of the words I used today in my speech were quoted from his own words?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacEachen: If reading extensive quotations from my speech is a defence, surely I do not have to call witnesses to defend my statement about the hon. member's performance.

I did not originally intend to make any comment about the hon. member from Cape Breton South but I thought it was unfair that he should have devoted a large part of his speech to an attack on the newly named chairman of the Dominion Coal Board who is beginning to carry out important functions not only for the government but for the industry and for the hon. member's constituency. It is unfair that within a week of Mr. MacNaught being named he should be subjected to a vicious personal attack by the hon. member for Cape Breton South who, completely aside from the quotation from the article by Mr. Peter Newman, said that Mr. MacNaught would not learn anything about the coal industry even if he had 20 years in which to do it.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I said "not learn enough".

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. member's approach to this problem has been completely negative, completely partisan and invariably destructive and there has been no greater evidence of his destructive capacity than his attack on Mr. MacNaught who is no longer a member of the house. He sat in the house in the last parliament and was in a position to defend himself so far as the coal board was concerned but no effort was ever made by the hon. member to get him into debate. I had occasion to come to this house, as did other members, just after the former member for Inverness-Richmond, a former opponent of mine, had been named chairman of the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission. It was a good appointment and nobody on the Liberal side undertook a week or two after it had been made to undermine his capacity to perform his functions as chairman. It was a political appointment, of course. He was a defeated Tory candidate and he was appointed by the former prime minister. He is continuing in his job without partisan criticism, as he should be allowed to do. I wish the hon. member had followed that custom this afternoon.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): He had a professional background.

Mr. Caouette: Would the minister permit a question? When he says a Tory candidate was nominated for political reasons and so on, is he saying at the same time that the appointment of Mr. MacNaught was definitely a political appointment?

Mr. MacEachen: I stated that Mr. MacLellan's appointment was a political one. Of course it was. No attack was made against him and he was allowed to carry on his work as Mr. MacNaught should be allowed to do. This is why I commented on the speech of the hon. member for Cape Breton South who has been running wild in this house and who feels himself above the Chair and above the normal courtesies which ought to be followed here. I think he has descended to a new low in his attack on the chairman of the coal board. He has blown up quite a storm about a so-called departure from government policy with respect to the coal industry.

On October 5 last I made a statement on behalf of the government of Canada on coal policy so far as it affects the province of Nova Scotia. That statement was made in public. It has been circulated. I have a copy of it here and it still stands as a statement of government policy. There has been no departure from it. It is the result of a cabinet decision. This decision was incorporated in the statement on government policy which I made on October 5. In that statement the government of Canada undertook to make large scale investments in the Cape Breton coal industry in the immediate future and it undertook to introduce a comprehensive long term program for the coal industry early in 1966. The statement says "early in 1966", not "late in 1966". That still stands. The government undertook to assist in the financing of the opening of a new mine at Lingan which we regard as an essential part of a program to make the most effective use of the capital to be invested in the Nova Scotia coal industry.

In my statement I referred openly, frankly and extensively to the fact that we had secured the services of Dr. Donald, that he had been commissioned by the government of Canada to undertake special work in connection with the coal industry. He was asked to prepare as a matter of urgency, with the aid of a special committee of government officials, comprehensive recommendations for the organization, modernization and re-equipment of the industry. That still stands. The study is being carried on with the co-operation of the industry, trade unions and the government of Nova Scotia.

The hon. member read from a television broadcast which I made. It was a political broadcast, of course; we were a week away from the election. I am sure the hon. member was making non-political telecasts during that week. I was making political statements. I have a copy—

An hon. Member: Surely they were truthful.

Mr. MacEachen: Of course it was truthful. I will read it to hon. members in order to illustrate the sincerity of my intentions as a member of the government, because my statement on that date is exactly on all fours with the statement I issued on October 5, and it is on all fours with the statement I will make today in the house on behalf of the government of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. MacEachen: What greater consistency could there possibly be?

Mr. Fulton: Would the minister permit a question on the basis of the statement he has just made? Does he not thereby stand convicted himself of making a political issue out of a matter of government policy?

Mr. MacEachen: If the coal industry is a magnet for political discussion it falls into the same category as any other.

Mr. Fulton: Then do not complain that members of the house are making a political issue out of it.

• (5:30 p.m.)

Mr. MacEachen: I am not complaining about that. I have not complained that a political issue has been made of it. Naturally these are political issues and I hope they will continue to be political issues. What I am saying is that my hon. friend is accusing the government of departing from its policy pronouncement of last October. There is no departure whatsoever. I should like to read the final paragraph of this telecast.

Mr. Peters: Would the hon. minister permit another question?

Mr. MacEachen: No. I am sorry, but I want to complete this. In this telecast, the transcript of which was read by the hon. member for Cape Breton South, I made this statement:

I also stated on October 5 that a comprehensive long term program for the coal industry would be introduced in 1966.

That still stands.

Dr. J. R. Donald, the consultant especially appointed for this purpose will produce comprehensive and detailed recommendations for the reorganization, modernization and re-equipment of the industry. This program will be prepared in co-operation with the industry, the U.M.W. and the Government of Nova Scotia. All interested parties—

Mr. Diefenbaker: They did not get any funds.

Mr. MacEachen:

—will have a chance to express their views, offer their advice and ask any questions they wish.

That was a statement made a week before the election. That is still the attitude of the government of Canada. I wonder what all the storm is about? What is the fuss all about?

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Twenty five million dollars.

Mr. Nielsen: The $25 million.

Mr. MacEachen: We designed a policy for the coal industry that was long tested, long needed and long demanded by the miners, the leaders of the community, the union leaders, the clergy, and all the people who represent the best interests of the people in the coal industry. They have been asking for this for a long time.

I have a letter here from the town clerk of Glace Bay commending this policy. There are innumerable quotations from the United Mine Workers commending this policy. It has been acclaimed in many parts of the province of Nova Scotia. It is a good policy. It still stands as part of the policy of the government of Canada. So what is all the fuss about?

An hon. Member: We just want some action.

Mr. MacEachen: What is all the anxiety about?

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Do you want an answer?

Mr. MacEachen: Just let me finish the point. We have a new Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys who has been called away to carry on important work in Washington.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): His most important work is in Canada and not Washington.

Mr. MacEachen: I am delighted that we have as Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys a man with the capacity, the intelligence and imagination that the new minister possesses. I am glad about it. However, I want to assure the house in his absence, that the minister—

Mr. Nielsen: He said he is going to resign.

Mr. MacEachen: —is very seriously interested and very seriously concerned about this problem and about implementing the policy of the government of Canada. It is a long term policy; it requires the development and the proper use of the manpower on the Island of Cape Breton. It involves a rationalization of the coal industry.

These mines at present need new capital in order to become productive and efficient. If the new capital is not available these mines will have to close down. There is no doubt about that. We have a very big problem here. It requires not only the participation of the government of Canada but also the participation of the government of Nova Scotia, the industry and, even more than any other, the co-operation and interest of the union leaders and the miners in order to solve the great manpower problem.

The purpose of the government of Canada is to reach a solution that will produce maximum employment opportunities on the Island of Cape Breton and stabilize the economic levels, the production of coal and employment in that industry in Cape Breton. We did not require the intervention, although we welcomed it, of the hon. member. The Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys had already decided to go to Nova Scotia to visit at first hand those who are responsible for the development of new policies along with the federal government.

In March I hope to join the minister in consultation with the provincial government, the industry and the union leaders in respect of our policies for the industry. We still are awaiting the report of Dr. Donald. Nobody misled the people of Nova Scotia on this point. It was clearly stated last October and November that the development of a long term policy was contingent upon the receipt of the report from a special government commission. So we are completely consistent not only in the declaration of our policy but in the implementation of our policy.

I should like to assure the hon. member for Cape Breton South that we are serious about this matter, that our policy has not changed and that it is going to require the co-operative effort of a lot of people including himself in order to reach a good solution to this problem.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Would the minister permit a question now? Since the minister has indicated that there has been no deviation from policy, how can he explain the fact that there has been no delivery of any funds to initiate the policy at Lingan or to assist the colliery in that area in as much as he and the former minister of mines and technical surveys referred to this as an accomplished fact and in addition the minister also stated that Dr. Donald's report would be used only as an aid? This report has nothing whatever to do with the allotting of $25 million to the Cape Breton coal industry, which was referred to by the minister himself and the former minister as an accomplished fact before November 8.

Mr. MacEachen: That is an involved question. It is an argument. However, I can say that we have repeatedly stated that Dr. Donald's report was necessary in order to develop a long term policy for the industry. The report is an aid; of course it is an aid. Any reference to an accomplished fact is nothing but a simple logical reference to the fact that a basic policy decision had been taken by the government of Canada with regard to the coal industry, something the government my hon. friend supported failed to do. That is all we are talking about when we speak of an accomplished fact, it is, that a specific policy decision was taken which we are implementing in accordance with the statement made last fall.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister to withdraw a false statement he made with reference to the former government failing to do anything, because I have written evidence from many in the mining areas to support my statement that the former Conservative government offered money for the extension of the life of No. 4 colliery at Glace Bay but Mr. Fairley, the president of the company, did not accept the offer. I would ask the minister to withdraw the remark he made in respect of the former government.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Chairman, I have been listening with a great deal of interest and a certain amount of amusement to the display we have had for the last hour and a half. Not being an expert in mathematics I am not sure whether the funds that did not get to Cape Breton Island cost the Liberals more than the votes they did not get in Prince Edward Island. In any event, one thing that this display did point out is that the practice of appointing political hacks to responsible jobs, which has gone on far too long in this country, is one with which Canadians are becoming extremely fed up. If a man has the qualifications for a job he should be appointed to that job regardless of his politics. Men should not be appointed to jobs simply because they support a particular political party. Canadians have had enough of this policy. It has been going on for 98 years and it is about time it was stopped.

As an individual who was the recipient of special attention by the Liberal party during the last election campaign I may say that in my part of the country the results were somewhat similar to the results mentioned by other hon. members. There was no suggestion of $25 million or $150 million thrown around in my area but we did receive special attention from the Prime Minister and others. Let me point out to the government and to the minister that it is not by election promises that they are going to garner the votes they seem to want so badly at elections in those areas to which they pay so little attention at other times.

Abraham Lincoln made an extremely interesting statement upon which I think the government should ponder when referring to the mining industry in Canada today. He said:

> If we could first know where we are and whither we are tending, we could better judge what to do, and how to do it.

Two announcements appeared in the newspapers recently, one yesterday and one about two days earlier, regarding mining matters. I should like to refer to these announcements at this time because I have learned from past experience that the only time one can discuss the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act is during the consideration of vote No. 1 of the estimates of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys. A couple of days ago we saw a report to the effect that the production of gold last year in Canada dropped some 11.4 per cent in one year. Yesterday when we picked up the Globe and Mail we saw the following headline: "Labour Shortage Forces Shutdown Of Two Gold Mines". In the body of the article there appeared this subheadline, "Pickle Crow May Close". It is not new in this country for gold mines to close. That has been the sad pattern for 18 years.

The only thing this government or any previous government during the past 18 years has ever done in respect of the gold mining industry has been to hide behind the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act. Governments have tried to salve their conscience through the use of this Act, thinking that they are doing something and have a gold policy. Let me point out that while they have had this policy on gold the number of gold mines in this country has dropped from over 250 to less than 40 today, and they are closing down at this time at the rate of three, four or five per year. If this trend is continued for another five years we may find that the gold industry has become extinct in Canada.

If the government is happy to permit this industry to become extinct I wish they would get up and say so. I think the people engaged in gold mining would be very interested to know that the government does not give one hoot about gold mining communities because, having learned that, they could then make future plans. They would know what to do rather than not knowing and just sitting and waiting day by day and week by week for the axe to fall.

As I have pointed out on other occasions in the house, there is no doubt that we have gold in this country. We have plenty of gold but it is uneconomic to mine it. This government has not done anything about that situation. The Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act is a sort of temporary old age pension scheme for the mines that exist at this time. Everyone knows that every existing mine will be worked out at some time or other. We have had mines closing down for the past 15 or 18 years but they are now closing down for an entirely new reason, as stated in the article in the Globe and Mail to which I referred under the headline "Labour Shortage Forces Shutdown Of Two Gold Mines". The article quotes the president of Porcupine Paymaster Limited as saying:

> If we had been able to obtain the men we needed eight months ago, we could have lasted a lot longer—

I know that to be the fact, Mr. Chairman. I know that the Paymaster mine has more gold reserves than any other mine in the Timmins region but they do not have the men to mine it. We do not have the ability to mine this mineral economically in Canada today.

This whole question is complicated and difficult to deal with during our consideration of the estimates of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys because it is so interwoven with other government departments that it has not become the responsibility of a single minister but rather the responsibility of the government as a whole. The Minister of Finance is brought into the picture because his department has some responsibility regarding the price of gold and Canada's position in regard to gold in the international field. Other mining operations come under the department of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. We received a couple of announcements last week in this regard which I should like to deal with briefly.

The Minister of Labour is involved in this industry because of the new manpower resources program. His department should be very much involved in this field because of the fact that mines are closing down as a result of a labour shortage. Is there nothing the government can do in this regard or is it just not interested?

It was not my intention to speak at all during the consideration of these estimates because I realize, as almost everyone across Canada must realize, that we are really talking about something in the past. This is the last month of the current fiscal year and the funds we are now discussing have almost entirely been spent. The whole mining industry is a matter that requires urgent attention. It calls for immediate action and some announcement from the government as to its policy and intention. We cannot wait for action, as we have waited so long, because at the end of this month 250 men will be out of work as the result of the closing of one mine in the Timmins region.

The closing of one mine in any area affects a great many people throughout the country. For instance, a closed mine will no longer consume the things normally consumed. The suppliers of these goods will no longer have that market. I am sure that a great many more than 250 men will be affected by the closing of the one mine in the Timmins area.

Surely it is time for the government to take the situation in hand and, to use the words of Lincoln, first find out where they are going and what they want to do, because then and then only will they know how to go about it and how to do it. I hope the government will not continue to stumble along as they have been stumbling for so many years, because that is how we get into situations like the one which exists now in the mining industry.

A few days ago the Minister of Trade and Commerce made an announcement pertaining to the export of copper which I am sure is of great interest to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. However, as I said before, the whole mining industry is so interwoven with other government departments that it becomes a matter of government concern rather than the concern of one minister. I should like the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys or the minister speaking on his behalf to inform the house whether the step taken the other day is a first step toward the processing of our minerals in this country.

I am sure this must be the objective. I do not think even the government could argue against that kind of objective for this country. I believe that the sooner the government of Canada announces this as being the policy with regard to minerals in this country, the better off we shall all be.

There is something else the minister could do at this time. He could inform the house what specific measures are being taken to ensure equity in the issuing of permits for the export of copper and what measures are being taken to ensure that no undue pressure can be brought to bear on producers in this country. I believe this is of vital importance. There are many new copper mines going into production in Canada at the present time and I think it is only fair that they should know where they stand and that they will receive equality of treatment and will not be put under the thumb of or subject to the whim of the cabinet in these years of frequent elections. These are matters about which I think the minister might inform the house before we move from item No. 1 of his estimates.

But most important and urgent of all at the present time, in view of the matters I have mentioned, I think the Canadian people and the members of this house want to know what are the government's intentions. Are they really going to do something about this industry or are we to sit idly by and let the industry die?

Mr. Kindt: Mr. Chairman, the hour is getting late and I shall try to make my remarks as brief as possible. I was very much impressed by the words of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I thought, however, that there was more heat than light in what he had to say about the coal industry. He mentioned that he would bring us up to date on the situation in the coal industry but in his mind there is only one coal industry and that is in Nova Scotia. He fails to realize that in western Canada we have about 7 per cent of the world's supply of coal. How can the minister, when speaking for the coal industry of Canada, overlook that fact? I know the question of politics is involved in regard to Nova Scotia but this does not excuse him not bringing us up to date in regard to the situation in the coal industry in all parts of Canada.

Before this debate started I asked whether the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys would be present and the house leader gave us the answer to that question. The Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys is an easterner and as substitutes for him we have two good ministers from the west. I am sure they will listen attentively and give the coal industry of the west a fair deal.

The Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys is from the east, as I have said, and my guess is that the knows little or nothing about the west or the western coal industry. Therefore I would suggest that the two hon. gentlemen who are substituting for him bring to his attention the fact that we would like the minister to come out west. We would like to get to know him and we would like him to become educated as to our problems.

I have said on other occasions in the house that when he comes west he should talk to the right people. Let him talk to the Members of Parliament in those areas. If the minister gets in touch with me I will be glad to take him to the Crowsnest Pass and vicinity and introduce him to people with knowledge of this industry so he will be able to come back with some real knowledge about the problems of the area. I would be very glad to do that. I see that the Minister without Portfolio smiles but he knows that what I have said I mean. I leave that matter there, Mr. Chairman.

At this time I shall not find fault with the Dominion Coal Board but will leave that to another time. However, in my opinion the chairman of the coal board should come out west and familiarize himself with our problems. Speaking of the coal board, I wish to pay tribute to one of the greatest civil servants in the whole body of the civil service of Canada. I refer to Mr. O'Brian the former chairman of the Coal Board. He was always approachable; he had a job to do and he did it. I have not met anybody who has said anything derogatory about the services, ability or anything else in regard to this great civil servant. I pay that tribute to him. As head of the Coal Board for a period of years he did an excellent job.

In 1957 the government of Japan lost the traditional source from which they purchased coal. They used to get it from Manchuria. There was some difficulty between the government of Communist China and the Japanese so the Japanese had to find other sources of supply of coal. They obtained some of their coal from the United States, some from Australia and some from Canada. With regard to the coal they obtained from Canada, this development took place in about 1957 and as a candidate in the Crowsnest Pass I was the one to make recommendations for the export of coal to Japan. I promised the people of the Crowsnest Pass that if elected I would ask my government to do everything possible to get coal moving to Japan.

When I was elected in 1958 I approached Right Hon. John G. Diefenbaker and his cabinet with a recommendation that a subsidy be paid to help start the movement of coal to Japan. That was done. At first Japan bought our coal on an experimental basis. We shipped a few tons because the Japanese wanted to make tests; they wanted to mix it with their own coal and utilize their own product. They wanted our coal because of its high bituminous content for metallurgical purposes. Therefore they imported coal from Canada to mix with their own.

Mr. Chairman, may I call it six o'clock.

The Chairman: Order. It being six o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business in accordance with subsection 3 of standing order 15.

• (6:00 p.m.)

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED UNDER ADJOURNMENT MOTION

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment tonight are as follows: The hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Saltsman), Labour Conditions —Windsor—lay-off of Ford workers; the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Vincent), Agriculture—inquiry concerning new dairy policy; the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey), Canadian Centennial—suggested restoration of grave of D'Arcy McGee.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

SUGGESTED RELINQUISHING OF PRIVATE MEMBERS' HOUR

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, may I ask that private members' hour be deferred tonight so that we can continue with the discussion of estimates in committee of supply.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the house agree to suspend private members' hour and continue with the discussion of the estimates of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF MINES AND TECHNICAL SURVEYS

Administration services—

1. Departmental administration including the administration of the Explosives Act and Canada's fee for membership in the Pan-American Institute of Geography and History, $2,506,600.

Mr. Kindt: Mr. Chairman, in 1957 when the Canadian Pacific switched over from the use of coal burning engines to diesel engines there was a tremendous amount of unemployment and distress in the Crowsnest Pass area. Many of the people were at their wits' end to know what they were going to do. Some people moved out. However, the shipments of coal to Japan, the winter works program and other things gave some employment to the people who remained in the area and enabled them to remain in the area until times got better.

The subvention which was first paid on these coal shipments was around $4.25 per ton whereas today it is $2.73. The cost of transporting coal from the Crowsnest Pass to Port Moresby jumped from $5.13 per ton to $5.28 per ton, another 15 cents. This brings me to the point I want to bring to the attention of the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. At the time these coal shipments to Japan were arranged our understanding was that after these shipments had reached a certain volume there would be a reconsideration of the question of subventions. I may say that these shipments have reached approximately 800,000 tons, which amounts to a considerable business. The present government went along with the program and paid the subsidy on another 200,000 tons, bringing it up to around 800,000 tons.

This action by the present government gives me a lot of satisfaction because I was the originator of the coal shipments to Japan. I fought like a tiger to bring them into being and to make sure that economically it was a sound development.

As a matter of fact, everyone in the coal business of the West is solidly behind this development. Where are we now? We want the Canadian Pacific Railway to cut the cost of transporting the coal from the Crowsnest Pass to Port Moresby. As I have said, they are charging $5.28 per ton. Our intention was, if we could get volume shipments, to have the Canadian Pacific cut their cost a little bit, that the operators would perhaps take a little less profit, the handling charges at Port Moresby could be lowered a little bit and we could get the Japanese to pay a little bit more and thus do away with the $2.73 subvention. These shipments are made for the most part in Japanese bottoms.

That was our intention at the beginning. Today, after some six or eight years, we have reached the position where the operators are within sight of accomplishing that end and we could increase the shipments of coal to two million or three million tons. The Japanese want the coal. Lord knows, we have enough coal of that type to last us for 2,000 years. We need not feel that we are digging into something we are going to need tomorrow.

Our sales of coal to Japan are going to help the economy of western Canada and help employment in the industry. The Crowsnest Pass area is going to boom. It is going to help Canada's exports. This is an economic development of great value to Canada. I hope that the log jam which is now preventing that development from taking place can be removed. What is the log jam? It is the fact that the Canadian Pacific, instead of lowering their rates, increased them by 15 cents a ton in October during the last election campaign. The rate is now $5.28. If the Canadian Pacific would give us a commuter train from Coleman to Port Moresby, a quick turnaround train such as they have in the United States, we would be able to cut the cost of transporting the coal by $1.50 per ton. If this is done I believe that the $2.73, by taking a chip off here and a chip off there, could be eliminated and the operators could obtain contracts with Japan for increased coal shipments amounting to two million or three million tons.

[Mr. Kindt.]

• (6:10 p.m.)

That is where we stand on the shipment of coal to Japan and on the whole problem of exporting coal from western Canada. May I summarize what I have said by asking two or three questions? First, I wonder whether the minister is familiar with the problem? If he is not, let him go out west and find out. This is what we want. We do not want any more fooling around with this thing. We have been talking to him gently in the hope he would see the light and be interested enough in western Canada to go out and familiarize himself with the problem and develop an action program in co-operation with the people out west. Then we want to have a discussion with the Canadian Pacific to get this idea across. How active have the minister and his associate been in helping to arrange the C.P.R. commuter train desired by all associated with the industry? What attitude does the C.P.R. take with respect to commencing a commuter train service, cutting costs and bringing about this entire development?

These are questions to which I hope the new minister will provide answers, Mr. Chairman. I shall reserve any further discussion until the estimates for the coming year are before us for debate during the course of the next few weeks.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few brief comments on these estimates. Before I do so, however, I should like to recall the attention of the committee to some comments made while the hon. member for Cape Breton South was reading from an article which I understand was written by that great worshipper at the shrine of Liberalism, Mr. Peter Newman. When the hon. member came to the part where the article stated that the former minister of mines, now chairman of the Dominion Coal Board, had interrupted two French speaking individuals to suggest that they speak English the hon. member for Mount Royal—I am sorry he is not here—who was formerly designated one of the three wise men but who is to my mind now one of the three unwise men, interjected to ask, "Can you speak French?"

I do not know what he meant by that, Mr. Chairman, but I will say this. Had it been a Conservative cabinet minister who made a statement of that nature I can well imagine what would have been said by the hon. member for Mount Royal and others on the other side. I can imagine the uproar, and certainly I do not approve of a statement of that nature.

What the interjection meant from the unwise member for Mount Royal I am unable to understand. My colleague from Cape Breton South and myself regretfully, know only a few little words in French. We also know a few words of Gaelic, which is a quite common language on the island of Cape Breton. I am sorry we are not fluent in the French language. I just bring that to the attention of the committee as well as the hon. member for Mount Royal.

Before I go further I should like to take this opportunity of extending my congratulations to the new minister of mines and I wish him well. My spies have told me that he has shown a very keen interest particularly in coal mining and I trust and hope that this will continue. I am sure he must feel highly honoured today in that we have the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, the Minister of National Health and Welfare as well as the Minister without Portfolio—I should say "Member of the Administration"; that is his new title—filling in for him while he is in Washington. It appears that it takes three cabinet ministers to replace him when he is out of town.

Mr. Turner: It is a very important subject.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Yes, I realize it is a very important subject. I wish to quote what the minister, according to the Ottawa Journal, is reported to have said in Montreal yesterday. The heading is, "Pepin Threatens To Resign", and the article continues:

> Jean-Luc Pepin, federal minister of mines and technical surveys, said Tuesday that if bilingualism and biculturalism do not become realities soon "I will resign."

If he does not act in the manner we expect him to act in regard to the coal mining industry and show as much interest as we in Nova Scotia and the coal mining areas in Canada expect from him, then I suggest that he should resign. If he wants to make marks for himself in the coal mining areas, all he has to do is to indicate how soon something will be done about the announcement by the former minister of labour, now Minister of National Health and Welfare, which was made on October 5. I do not know why the statement was made at that time, although there was an election on November 8. I hope he will do everything he can.

I was going to invite him today to visit the coal mining areas. The Minister of National Health and Welfare said the new minister was planning to do this. I think it is an excellent idea to go to the scene and to see at first hand what a mine looks like. Perhaps the minister has been down coal mines before. I do not know, but I think it is a very good idea and I commend it to the minister. He will receive a very warm welcome, I am sure, in Cape Breton, provided that he attends a press conference there and spells out in detail just what the $25 million which supposedly has been appropriated for assistance to coal mines is going to do.

At this time I should also like to pay tribute to the retiring chairman of the Dominion Coal Board, Mr. C. L. O'Brian, who is rounding out, I understand, 40 years in the civil service. He is a man who has been most capable and still is. He very graciously stayed on in his position at the request of the previous government and the present government. He is a man who came to the old fuel board, as it was known, in 1935 and became chairman of the Dominion Coal Board in 1961. He will certainly be a great loss to the coal industry, though I hope he will not be leaving the public service entirely. I would suggest that the government retain Mr. O'Brian in an advisory capacity because his services are certainly going to be needed.

Some mention has been made of the new coal board chairman. I am not going into that other than to say that I am firmly convinced that the new chairman is going into a field for which he has no background whatever. Contrary to what has been suggested by the Minister of National Health and Welfare concerning an appointment as chairman of the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission made by the previous administration, the former member for Inverness-Richmond was well qualified for a position of that nature. He was a professional man and has certainly made his mark as chairman of that board.

I should also like to pay tribute to members of the house who are with us no longer, the late Hon. George Nowlan and the late Hon. Paul Comtois. Mr. Nowlan and Mr. Comtois worked very well together. Mr. Comtois was minister of mines and did a very good job. Did the hon. member wish to interject?

Mr. Foy: No, carry on.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I thought the hon. member was commenting on my statement about the late Mr. Comtois.

Mr. Foy: No, I would not do that.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I would not expect you to do that.

Mr. Foy: You are right in your expectations.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): As I was saying, this gentleman worked well as minister of mines and had great interest in the coal mining industry. The late Hon. George Nowlan, the cabinet representative from Nova Scotia, worked with Mr. Comtois in the previous administration. They did a tremendous job when the coal mining industry was facing very serious times, and through no fault of the government. If one were to check the amount of money spent in subventions and other assistance to coal mining in Nova Scotia, I am sure you would find that from 1957 when the Conservative government came into power this expenditure increased very greatly.

• (6:20 p.m.)

It was through the action of the Conservative government, Mr. Nowlan, Mr. Comtois, Mr. O'Brian of the Dominion Coal Board and others who were very interested in this industry that eventually we got into the Ontario hydro market. Because of these people subventions were provided which have allowed the coal mines to operate comparatively steadily ever since.

Another point I should like to bring to the attention of the minister concerned is that I hope the government has no intention to have the Dominion Coal Board swallowed up by the National Energy Board. I do not think this would be good for the coal industry. I think the interests of the coal industry would be lost and the coal miners also might be lost if this were to happen. I hope that the minister who is replying will make a statement whether the government contemplates such an action in the future and that the reply will be negative.

My colleague from Cape Breton South and the Minister of National Health and Welfare quoted from a statement made by the minister on October 6. I want to go into this a little further. In the Cape Breton Post of April 6 the minister is quoted as saying in relation to the coal industry:

> Mr. MacEachen said other measures will be taken to stimulate the Cape Breton economy. He would not elaborate.

I do wish he were in the house at the moment. If someone has nothing better to do they might send a message for him to come to the house because I think this is most important. He indicated he was vitally interested in the coal problem.

Mr. Nielsen: He shot his bolt.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): He said he did not have to be persuaded to be here. However, I do hope he will be here later tonight to provide answers to the questions that we are going to put to him. It would be unfair to expect the "member of the administration" and the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources to have answers at hand. I am sure that one so fully familiar with this matter as the Minister of National Health and Welfare will be only too glad to come into the house and provide all the answers necessary. The news item continues:

> There was no clear cut definition of the terms of the grant to Dominion Coal. It appeared to be almost an outright gift although it was possible the government would become a shareholder in the company to permit a certain amount of policing.

I would go along with that. I do not think that this government or any government should hand over $25 million to any company and not have it policed. In fact, I suggest to the government that when it finally comes through with this arrangement, and I hope to pose some questions about this later, it will insist on having a representative on the board of directors of the Dominion Coal Company to look after government interests respecting this grant, or whatever it may be, of $25 million.

To go on:

> Mr. MacEachen said that these details will be worked out at a later date.
> The federal government has directed the National Energy Board to study and report on the best means to bring about the further use of coal for thermal power on a substantial scale to feed the Maritime provinces grid.

The article then says "furthermore" which I presume means "in addition."

> Furthermore, Mr. MacEachen said, "the government commissioned a distinguished industrial consultant and engineer, Dr. J. R. Donald, in June to prepare, as a matter of urgency, comprehensive recommendations for the re-organization, modernization and re-equipment of the industry.
> This work is being carried out with the co-operation of the industry, the trade union, and the government of Nova Scotia, which also has appointed a special committee to deal with certain aspects of the coal industry."

The article continues:

> Mr. MacEachen stressed that Dr. Donald has been asked to consider not only the situation of the Dosco mines but also that of the independent coal operators.

An hon. Member: That was last June.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I am pleased to see that is in there and that every consideration will be given to independent coal operators with regard to any moneys that should be forthcoming from the government to assist the industry. I continue quoting:

"Pending the completion of the comprehensive review now in progress, the government will provide substantial capital for immediate needs."

He says, "pending the completion of the review". You will note in this news item that $10 million is for the new mines and $15 million will be to rehabilitate and automate coal mines now operating. This is an afterthought with reference to Doctor Donald. I cannot see why a recommendation that may be brought in by Doctor Donald should have any effect on what the government is going to do financially.

I should also like to refer to an item in the Cape Breton Post of October 29. I see that the minister has just arrived in the house. I hope he will listen intently and be prepared to answer all questions that are posed before we adjourn tonight.

This news item is headed, "No Information; $25 Million Questioned." Then the article relates how the minister announced this on October 5. I continue with a quotation:

The following day Premier Stanfield wired Hon. Mitchell Sharp—

How in the world the Minister of Finance got into this I do not know. The normal method of doing things in the province of Nova Scotia is to have the cabinet minister from Nova Scotia look into the matter. It was handed to an inter-departmental committee. The next thing that happened was that the Minister of Finance had something to do with it. I presume that is why Premier Stanfield wired the Minister of Finance. I continue quoting:

The following day Premier Stanfield wired Hon. Mitchell Sharp in Ottawa as follows:

"Have read press accounts of Minister of Labour's announcement regarding coal mines in Nova Scotia. Welcome willingness of government of Canada to invest in new mine at Lingan. Assume government of Canada has decided to support market for coal large enough to avoid closure of any existing mine when new mine comes into production. Please advise size of market for Nova Scotia coal government of Canada is prepared to support. Minister of Labour further announced that government of Canada will make large scale investment in Cape Breton coal mining industry. Please advise me the amount of such investment that has been authorized."

The article continues:

On Oct. 9—three days after the Stanfield telegram, —there arrived from Mr. Sharp the following telegram to Mr. Stanfield:

"Re your telegram re Nova Scotia coal mines, since Minister of Labour made original announcement I have asked him to reply to you after consultation with me. Warm regards."

That is all there was in that telegram. There was nothing from then on until October 25 when the then minister of labour had time to reply to the premier of the province.

An hon. Member: They were busy with the next election.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Yes. He wrote a letter and said:

Hon. Mitchell Sharp, minister of trade and commerce, has told me that you have been in touch with him following the announcement I made in Halifax on Oct. 5, pertaining to the Nova Scotia coal industry.

As you know, there is an important additional source of coal in the Lingan area. It is expected that a new mine to tap this source could, with modern equipment, produce coal at a lower cost per ton.

The comprehensive review, which I have mentioned, is being made to determine what additional steps might be taken in co-operation with the industry.

In case you have not seen a copy of the press release issued in connection with this announcement, I am attaching one for your information.

With best wishes,

Yours sincerely,

Allan J. MacEachen.

Mr. Stanfield's comments on this letter were:

Clearly Mr. MacEachen has not answered my questions. He says nothing about the size of the investment the federal government is prepared to make. He says nothing about the size of the coal market the federal government is prepared to support. He says nothing about the market for coal. He doesn't say the coal from Lingan will be marketed in addition to the output from existing mines. In fact, he doesn't say anything.

• (6:30 p.m.)

Mr. Chairman, I should like to pose several questions to the Minister of National Health and Welfare and ask him this question.

Regardless of what the Donald report says, is it the intention of the government to go ahead with this $25 million grant? Would the minister tell me also that it is not the intention of the government in the foreseeable future to agree that there shall be a cut-back in the work force of the coal mining industry as suggested in an issue of the Financial Times, I think it was? It was suggested there that the work force would be cut from 6,000 to 4,500 men. Has the Minister of National Health and Welfare met with representatives of the Dominion Steel and Coal Company and said he would be agreeable to making this degree of assistance available, that is to say, the $25 million, provided there was a cutback in the work force? Can the minister ensure the committee that if and when this assistance is made available the government will not curtail or reduce subventions in connection with the transportation of coal to the central Ontario market, subventions which are absolutely necessary to the industry? Can the minister assure the committee that the government has no intention to reduce or eliminate the tariff on United States coal?

When the minister was speaking I noticed he emphasized the need for changes in the industry. He emphasized the question of manpower. That is why I put these questions to him. Is it possible that it is hoped to reduce the number of men employed in this industry consequent upon this offer of assistance?

I do not wish to hold up the committee for very long provided we get answers to some of these questions. I am sure everyone was pleased with the announcement the minister made and with his timing of the announcement during the election campaign. He said a few moments ago that he had been commended by everybody on this announcement. This is true. Everyone is happy and pleased. But we want action and we want to learn just what the government has in mind. We are concerned about possible deals—I do not want to use that word—we are concerned whether everything has been told us by the government about the arrangements which may have been made in connection with this grant.

I note that the president of district 26 of the United Mineworkers of America has stated, along with others, that there is a market for coal and that there is certainly a market for the production from new mines. So I hope there will be no curtailment of employment. I see a comment by Mr. Marsh of local No. 12, U.M.W., in the Cape Breton Post of February 23. This report reads:

> Mr. Marsh said he saw no point whatsoever in the Donald study, that the coal industry was studied and restudied hundreds of times over and the federal government had adequate information on hand to guide it in directing financial aid to the coal industry. He said that the government had committed $25 million to aid the industry and no delay should be made in directing this to the revival and expansion of the industry.

I had posed one or two questions before the minister came into the chamber. One of them was: Are there any plans which would lead to the absorption of the Dominion Coal Board by the National Energy Board? I do not think this would be good. I hope the minister can tell us something about this.

There have been many comments on the proposals which have been made affecting the future of this industry, most of them reflecting uncertainty. Here is a heading from an article in the Post of October 26: "Seek Details of Coal Aid". A local union is asking its officers to seek an early meeting with the hon. gentleman to clarify the matter. Here is a heading from the Herald of November 27: "Top-Level Meetings Urged In Bid To Get $25 Million Grant". On December 3, in the Post: "Coal Loan Questioned—Wants Details". On December 22 we find the headline appearing, "No Sign of Vital Report". The reference is to the Donald report. Here is another heading which appeared on December 29: "Dr. Donald Says Findings May Be Submitted In Two Parts".

Can the minister tell us whether any part of this report has yet been received? The Herald on January 20 said, "Government Waiting For Coal Report". The next day we find a story under the heading "Coal Report In 'A Few Weeks' ". So the headings go on and on. There is nothing concrete.

I must say I was pleased that my hon. friend from Cape Breton South succeeded in rousing the minister to the point where he finally provided some information. I was also pleased that last night, in reply to a question which I put to him, the Minister of Transport said:

> I can assure the hon. gentleman that the undertaking which was given by the government was not given lightly, and that it is the intention of the government to carry it out.

We were all happy to hear that. The question now is one of time. While the minister was absent from the house I referred to his statement, to be found a little later on in the text, when he referred to the work of Dr. Donald and added: "Pending the completion of the comprehensive review now in progress the government will provide substantial capital for immediate needs." Would the minister advise us what capital has been provided for immediate needs during this period when the Donald report is being awaited? I will let the subject rest for the moment and hope to participate in the discussion later in the evening after we have heard from the minister.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I was very interested in hearing this afternoon a discussion between representatives of one section of Canada and their minister. I wanted to ask whether that minister believes he has authority to speak on behalf of the Department of Mines and Technicial Surveys and make this promise of $25 million. If there are possibilities of this kind we in other parts of the country are interested in adopting the minister for ourselves.

I noticed that the hon. gentleman was willing to defend a new appointment to the coal board and he made a number of statements about appointments and patronage such as goes on in the maritimes. It seems to be a fairly open subject in that part of the country. I am not saying it is bad but if there is a constitutional basis for this kind of representation I should like to know what it is because some of the rest of us would like to have it. I am sure hon. members from British Columbia would find a minister of this kind very valuable if he were willing to make the same kind of commitment as that which has been made with respect to the Maritimes.

I was also interested in the remarks made by hon. members with regard to the coal situation in the Maritimes. There is no coal in my area or in northern Ontario generally but there is a great similarity between the problems there and the problems which face the Maritimes. We are dependant on natural resources and on the mining industry for much of our wealth and we are now facing a situation which people in the maritimes have been facing for a long time, the closing of mines which are coming to the end of their operation. We do not seem to be doing anything about it.

We are not particular about having promises such as they seem to have had in the Maritimes; they certainly seem to have had a whole lot of them. There have been many promises of a political nature in the Maritimes in the last two years in respect of what was going to be done. I think the problem in the Maritimes is one which has to be solved, because when a solution is found it probably will apply also to the mining industry in northern Ontario.

I am interested in another field today. I am well aware of the fact that the two ministers here probably are more competent in the field of water resources, since I have had some experience with them in a committee on this subject. I should like to go into the matter of the diversion of water from James Bay and Hudson Bay into the waters of the Great Lakes chain, because I am sure we probably would get more answers in this regard than in some other fields. However, I think the other fields probably are more important to the people whom I represent.

I will be a little like the hon. member from the Maritimes and will speak mainly of an area in northern Ontario which has problems very similar to the problems to which the hon. member from the Maritimes referred. I am referring to the area encompassing Sudbury, Timmins, Timiskaming, Cochrane and several ridings on the Quebec side of the border. One of the problems we have is in relation to the gold mining industry. If there ever was anything closely connected with government, it certainly is the gold mining industry because of the manipulations which have been carried on by governments not only in Canada but throughout the world with regard to this very important commodity, gold.

I am not particularly sure that we should go back to the gold standard but I am of the opinion that the Canadian government must give consideration to what they really want to accomplish in respect of gold and other precious metals and the relation these have to our international trade, the international monetary fund and, yes, the gold of the Canadian nation. We allow gold to be sold at a fixed price in the United States when there are markets across the world which will pay two or three times the amount of money that the United States is prepared to pay.

Our whole gold system in Canada is in chaos. We, as are other countries, are faced with the fight that is taking place in respect of the backing of currency by gold or by the United States dollar. I think it would have been interesting if Mr. de Gaulle had been a few years younger and had had a few more dollars in bullion under the bed to recall in gold the money lent by the United States to France and then decide whether the backing for United States dollars should be by the International Monetary Fund or whether gold should be the commodity.

It is interesting, when speaking about the role of gold in currency, to point out that when the United States was in serious difficulty in the early 1930's President Roosevelt raised the price of gold from $28 to $35 and at the same time put in a clause to the effect that under the same Act gold could be raised to $50. It is also interesting to note that when the Republicans at a later date decided to raise it to $50 they found there was a clause there which meant that the whole matter had to be reviewed again in the manner which President Roosevelt had followed and the government of the day did not decide to do this.

I think the Canadian people should consider gold as another commodity. We should either keep it in Canada and decide for ourselves what the commodity should be worth —I presume we could sell it internationally at $70 an ounce—or we should decide to keep it in Canada in the reserves of the nation so that we too could deal with the United States in terms of currency and leave the gold in storage in Canada until something is done about it internationally.

It is fair to say that this government has no intention of increasing the price of gold; it is also a fact that the previous government had no intention of increasing the price of gold. I think it will be some time before a minister of finance from Canada will go to the international monetary fund with a few of his colleagues and ask for an increase in the price of gold, even with the support of some of the other nations who are going to ask for it.

I think we should be prepared in Canada to decide for ourselves the price of gold and to allow such prices for that commodity in the gold mining industry which would expand that industry so that it can pay wages and operate the mines. This would result in a great increase in the production of gold and in the development of many areas in Canada. If we do not intend to do this, then let us close down the gold mines and do something for the people of those communities and not keep dragging our feet to the extent, as the member for Timmins pointed out, that gold mines in Timmins have had to close down.

If gold is a commodity which we can sell and is a worthwhile commodity, then let us decide nationally to support it to the extent that we can mine it or, if not, get out of the field. I suggest that, if the solution is an increase in the emergency gold mining assistance program—we are paying a large sum of money at the present time to that industry—let us do it in such a way that part of it will go to the miners in the form of wages and part of it to the communities to enable them to pay the taxes to operate the municipalities rather than make it necessary for the people living there to pay abnormally high taxes to support education in areas in other parts of Canada when they are not going to get the benefit of the training that is not now being provided in all the northern areas. Had we done this in the first place, sums of money would have been available to the gold mining communities of northern Ontario to enable the industry to pay wages and subsidize the maintenance of new industries until they were vibrant.

[Mr. Peters.]

There are other industries in the mining field which have not received much assistance. One of them is the silver industry. I can remember Mr. Lynch, the former president now deceased, of Siscoe Mines going before the United States Senate and the United States House of Representatives and telling them that if they did not face the problem of finding a method to allow silver to seek its natural level they were going to have to debase their coinage. They have now had to do this, as Canada will have to do as well, because they did not take the advice of the people who were completely familiar with the history of the silver mining industry and the maintenance of sound solid sterling currency in their own countries.

• (6:50 p.m.)

The silver mining industry in Canada has been a very important industry. It has made Bay Street, it has made St. James Street, it has made fortunes and has supported many industries in all parts of Canada, as has the gold mining industry. I think these industries deserve some guarantee as to their future just as I believe the gold mining industry deserves some guarantee as to its future. The solution to this problem is easy and can be effected in my area if the government has the guts and courage to take action.

There is a new captive iron mine opening in my area which is owned by a Pittsburgh steel company. I suggest that the production of iron in that area has been subsidized in many ways, including cheap transportation over our provincially owned railway, to such an extent that we receive no royalty at all for the iron taken out of the ground. The only benefit we receive in this regard is employment for 200, 300 or 400 people in the area. It seems to me that if this industry was operated properly and a steel mill was established in northern Ontario there would be jobs for 2,000 to 5,000 individuals, each of whom would pay provincial taxes, municipal taxes and federal taxes. I am sure in this way the money necessary to develop that steel industry would be repaid in less than 20 years.

Do we want a Canada or are we just to be hewers of wood and drawers of water for the United States? We are going to have to think about this. I agree with everyone who says that one small mine will not support a steel mill but a Timagami mine is being opened by Dofasco. I refer to the Sherman mine, It is to be financed independently and has no captive-market. It is going to sell its own ore. This ore could go to a most lucrative market if there was a steel plant in that area.

The minister from the Maritimes is interested in developing projects in the Maritimes. I suggest he has a difficult proposition because he has not faced the problem referred to by a previous speaker, that is, where are the markets to be? We have markets in northern Ontario for steel to meet Canadian demands which are not being met in Canada today. We have iron ore right at Cochrane. There are two or three deposits in my riding and there are deposits across the border in Quebec. I suggest there are enough iron ore deposits in my part of northern Ontario to supply such a steel mill for the next 50 years, but even that amount would not satisfy the entrepreneurs who would develop this steel mill. They would need a longer guarantee of supply than 50 years.

If we want to develop a long range steel production project in Canada we should consider the iron ore deposits on Belcher Island in Hudson Bay. There is enough iron ore there to make it economically feasible to bring it to northern Ontario to supply a steel mill there for at least another 50 or possibly 100 years. When that iron ore has been used I am sure there will be much more found in that area because in my opinion the surface has only been scratched.

Such a project could be carried out if the government really wanted to do something in this way, but it will have to put up the money. I don't give a damn who runs the mill, whether it be private industry or the government. I could not care less. But there are legitimate reasons why the company that already has a mill established in Pittsburgh will pay any type of premium and make any kind of investment to obtain a captive mine in Canada, particularly when the government makes arrangements for the iron ore to be transferred to the United States at the lowest possible cost. I do not blame the entrepreneur in Pittsburgh in this regard but I believe that if we are really anxious to be Canadians and have Canadian industries we are going to have to put up some money.

I have heard a lot of wisecracks made by western members about the steel mill in Regina. I suggest that if there ever was an illogical place to put a steel mill it is on the baldheaded prairies where there is no market and no iron ore. However, a steel mill was established there with government support for the simple reason that the west needed steel to develop an industrial empire on the prairies. The provincial government put up money to make sure that a steel plant was developed there. Some may point out that there have been difficulties encountered since its construction but steel is being manufactured on the baldheaded prairies. In my opinion that is not a place where the officials of the Department of Industry would recommend that a steel mill be built because you cannot establish an industry unless you have the basic materials and resources in the area where it is to be established. You also require a consumer market.

I suggest that the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys has been a useless asset over the years so far as the communities of northern Ontario are concerned. It is true that the department has done a great deal more in other fields than mining, and much of the difficulty has revolved around the fact that natural resources come within provincial jurisdiction. For that reason the provincial departments of mines have a much greater responsibility than the federal department. On the other hand, I do not believe the people in Toronto would try to discourage the federal government if it were willing to invest money to develop the industry in northern Ontario. I am sure they would not be in disagreement provided it did not cost them anything.

I used the iron ore industry as an example but what I have said is also true of the copper industry in the Timmins area. This is also true of zinc and silver mines. It is interesting to note that the Timmins area will provide a great amount of ore over a long period of time and will have great influence on copper production in Canada. I think it is a disgrace if the companies involved are allowed to export this raw material to other countries.

The Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources has been interested in the export of ore from Canada. I am sure he is aware of what happened in Australia not long ago when the government told a Japanese company that it could take part of the ore mined in Australia out of the country if in return it developed a processing mill in Australia. The government told that company that if it did not agree to these terms it could not take any ore. Why should we be so generous with the United States because the interested people there have a few bucks? Are we willing to sell our souls, our Canadian nationalism and our Canadian nationhood for a few dollars and cents? I am sure if you ask that question of the businessmen of this country their answer will be yes, as long as they pay us more bucks than we can get in Canada. I do not think that is true of the Canadian public and I hope to God it is not true of the Canadian government. Surely it is time now for some of our government officials to stand up and say that this is not true.

We hear a lot of talk about gold and silver and the fact that they are only precious metals which do not make the wheels of industry go around, but there are a lot of people engaged in space exploration who will tell you that without silver there would not be much activity in that field. I think that argument can be carried into the basic metals industry. We have an abundance of these metals in northern Ontario.

I have often said that we should not be interested in moving people from one industrial area to another. We must bring industry to the areas where these people live. You can say that the people who live on Belle Isle are poor and depressed, you can say that the people of the Maritimes are poor and depressed, but let me point out that some miners in northern Ontario are working underground for less than $2 an hour.

I say that is a depressed wage. This situation creates a depressed area and something must be done for these people. I suggest that if you agree with this proposition you also have to agree that the solution is not in uprooting the people from the areas in which the mining industry has developed very up to date communities; the solution is in helping the mining industry rebuild their communities, particularly in those areas where the industry has changed and where the type of industry lends itself to the development of other industries.

The Prime Minister came into northern Ontario. I had the benefit of having him start his campaign in my riding. I hasten to say that I do not disagree with what the Prime Minister said in my riding, because he said he would see that something was done about industrial development in Timiskaming. He said he would do something for the farmers in Timiskaming. He said he would help industry develop in northern Ontario. With these objectives I agree. I suggest that if a Liberal or a Conservative had been elected in Timiskaming they also would have come to Ottawa and demanded government assistance to develop the industries of our area.

The people of northern Ontario, no matter with what political party they are affiliated, are first northerners and second politicians. I believe they are all convinced that if we in northern Ontario are to survive something must be done for the industries in this area. Certainly the Minister of National Health and Welfare knows something of this problem because he had something to do with it. He knows there is a great reluctance on the part of the people of northern Ontario to move out of this part of the country into the cities, even though the jobs there pay a great deal more money. He knows it is difficult to move people from Glace Bay into Toronto and Montreal. He knows it is difficult to move people from any area in which they live and have been raised if they are satisfied with everything in the area but the lack of business and employment opportunities. If the minister agrees with what I have said, he has no alternative in my opinion but to support the proposition that the federal government through the Department of Labour, the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys and the Department of Industry, should take the resources that we have, subsidize them if necessary, and create around them viable industries that will grow and develop in the area. If private industry does not do it, I suggest that the governments of the provinces in co-operation with the federal government will have to do it.

I am very pleased to live right on the border of the province of Quebec because I have heard that their Minister of Resources, Mr. René Lévesque, went into Noranda and told one of the richest, most despotic and dictatorial companies ever to exist on the North American continent that if they did not do something to improve wages in the base metal industry he would do something about it, and nationalize them. I do not think he has to nationalize them; all he has to do is threaten to do so.

It is about time this government considered what happened there, because the company settled its differences with labour very shortly afterwards. Mr. Lévesque called both labour and management representatives to Quebec city and told them, "Sit down and negotiate a solution to these differences or I will run your mines and make the decisions for you". We are told that this is a government of free enterprisers, if there is such an animal left. Free enterprisers is a term applied to the gold mines, because we give them a million bucks a month to run the business they want. Yet, they are not willing to pay proper wages to their employees or contribute anything to the well-being of the community.

I come from a community in which one individual has made millions of dollars but has not put one red cent into the community. He did build lovely parks in Welland and established beautiful estates in Bermuda, but he did not put one cent into the community in the form of assistance. Yet these are the people we are willing to subsidize, not the workers, communities or industries that are capable of developing.

The government says this area does not meet the criteria. Criteria be damned; the Department of Industry has no criteria. The Prime Minister sits down with the Premier of Ontario; they play shuffleboard with the criteria and decide, "This place in my riding will be designated and in return I will designate one area in your riding". Is that applying criteria? It is about time we threw this idea of criteria out the window and decided to do something fundamental in regard to developing industry. This can be done. It has been done in the Scandinavian countries.

I do not think I should agree to any concessions in regard to the departments which we are considering because this government has not through its ministers made any concrete proposals in keeping with the suggestions the Prime Minister made in my riding, when he promised he would help solve the problems of the distressed areas, those of the gold mining industry and the lumber industry, and establish a program for the base metal industry that would provide the people there with more than minimum wages for digging out the minerals.

The mineral wealth of northern Ontario is beyond comprehension. I do not think there is any geologist in Canada who would dare to estimate in hundreds of billions of dollars the amount of mineral wealth that will come out of northern Ontario in the next 100 years. In return for this great potential I believe we the people of northern Ontario, yes, we the people of Canada, deserve action on the part of the government to assist this industry. Something should be done about developing the natural resources of our nation for the betterment of the people of Canada.

I certainly hope that the minister who is going to represent northern Ontario, whether he be from Montreal or Vancouver, will stand up and say he is prepared to recommend to the government that they do something about the desecration of our raw materials in northern Ontario and help us produce the wealth which is there and get the benefit in Canada of the wealth we are producing.

Mr. McLelland: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few briefs remarks at this time and ask the ministers responsible whether the federal government has taken the necessary steps to see that the waters which flow into and make up the South Saskatchewan river will have strict controls placed on them as to water pollution substances.

As everyone knows, the dam being built on the South Saskatchewan river will create a large lake practically in the centre of southern Saskatchewan. It is of great importance that these waters be kept free of all pollution, because if they are not the lake that will be created could become a natural cesspool in years ahead.

We hope the federal government has a rigid pollution policy that is acceptable to the provincial governments of Saskatchewan and Alberta so that the necessary safeguards can be applied in order to keep these waters relatively free of all pollution. Saskatchewan has waited many years for this project to become a reality and waits with pride and expectation to the time when it will have a recreational area in what was once considered a dust bowl in Saskatchewan. This lake will be used as a recreational area by many people from all parts of Canada in years to come.

For this reason I would plead with the federal government to put into effect a rigid water pollution policy governing these waters as well as other waterways in western Canada. I would expect that if the federal government takes the initiative they will receive the co-operation of the provincial governments concerned. This is of importance at this time because the lake has started to become a reality and steps should be taken now regarding water pollution.

• (7:10 p.m.)

Mr. MacEwan: I wish to make a few remarks on the estimates of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys. First of all, I should like to refer briefly to the words of the Minister of National Health and Welfare when he mentioned the hon. member for Cape Breton South. He said the member had not brought forward any constructive ideas about coal mining in the province of Nova Scotia in this or any other Parliament. I remind the minister, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria, the hon. member for Cape Breton South and myself come from coal mining areas. The very fact that these members have been sent here by their constituents shows that they have a right to get up in this house and speak on behalf of their constituents. The hon. member for Cape Breton South is well versed in the coal mining industry of Nova Scotia, having worked in the mines. The hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria broke his back working in a coal mine. I worked in a mine, too, and although I do not know how much coal I got out, I was brought up in a coal mining family, a fact of which I am very proud.

May I just remind the minister we are not back in the old days of the former Liberal regime, when our people came to Ottawa with their hats in their hands to see the great white father. This idea went out the window in 1957. At that time, I was pleased to come to Ottawa, with my two colleagues, and put forward representations from the coal mining areas. We intend to carry on for some time to come.

You ask, what is the problem in the coal mining industry? The hon. member for Timiskaming thought that perhaps markets were our problem. Until a few years ago this was the case. I am going to quote briefly from the Dominion Coal Board report for 1964-1965, page 10, where I find this:

> Coal production in Nova Scotia in the year under review was 4,316,000 tons. The decrease of 159,000 tons reflected circumstances at the mines and failure to meet production targets, not lack of markets.

The report goes on to point out that the trouble with our mines is their inability to generate the capital required for a systematic renewal of equipment. In other words, there are two problems. This fact was pointed out in a brief presented by the United Mine Workers of America not long ago when they appeared before the provincial government at Halifax. I believe they want to come up and visit this government. The minister asks the question, what is the hurry? I think there have been a lot of resolutions coming from Cape Breton. I received a copy of one from the Sydney Board of Trade. The people of Cape Breton, the people of Nova Scotia, are getting most impatient. They want to see this undertaking commenced immediately.

There are two problems. There is the matter of the older mines in which it is costly to produce coal, and there is the matter of setting up new mines, which will provide enough coal to satisfy the markets which we have. Perhaps in this regard I could point out briefly the problem in my own constituency. In that area, we have two independent mines. I hope the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys will not forget to give assistance to the independent mines. There is one mine owned by Dosco, the McBean mine which, according to the latest figures has a life of approximately three years. I am glad to report that just last week the United Mine Workers of America executive met with the officials of the department of mines and with the United Mine Workers executive in my own area, and a decision was made to do some drilling in that area in order to find new seams to open up a new mine in the Pictou County area. I do not expect the minister, or indeed our Nova Scotia minister, to do anything at this time except co-operate with the provincial government in order to find a possible opening in that area.

I made a statement on this matter before coming to Ottawa, and I attempted to raise it in the house. However, I was ruled out of order by Mr. Speaker. I fell that the federal government should provide assistance to find an opening in our area. I am led to believe that $25 million will be necessary for the modernization of the mines in the Cape Breton area and the new opening at Lingan. I am asking for an additional amount to assist in the opening of a new seam in the Pictou County area. The McBean mine employs about 400 men. During the last few years we have secured new industry in the area, namely the Scott Paper Company pulp mill, as well as the Clairtone Sound Corporation. I know that this company intends to venture into colour television sets in the spring. As has been pointed out, and this is most important, we cannot replace present industry with other industry. We must keep our present industry as well as get new ones. I put before the minister, and indeed before our Nova Scotia minister, the necessity for a guarantee that there will be adequate assistance for a possible opening in our area.

The cost of our coal is high. As has been pointed out by the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria, we had some contracts during the last few years with the Ontario Hydro Commission. These have been a great help and we hope they will continue. I believe, as was pointed out by the efficient chairman of the Dominion Coal Board at the meeting in Victoria, that our hope for years to come for the production of power is in the thermal plants. As pointed out in the Dominion Coal Board report, this substantial rise in bituminous consumption largely reflects the accelerating rate at which coal is now being used in Canada for electric power generation. So far as I have been able to ascertain in my research, this is the area toward which most authorities in Canada look today in the matter of coal production. Our hope lies in supplying coal for the production of power in thermal power plants. My own area has one such plant, at Trenton which I hope will be enlarged. It is for this reason I am pressing for the new opening. This plant has used a great deal of coal in the last few years and it looks as if it will use more.

We do not have a sufficient supply of coal to look after our domestic needs, so we have to import coal from the former Island of Cape Breton. Certainly, we like to use that coal. I do not know whether it generates any more coal dust than was generated in the chamber this afternoon. In any event, I want to agree with my two friends, the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria and the hon. member for Cape Breton South, whom I will call the coal dust twins. I completely endorse the remarks they made in this debate.

In conclusion, I will turn from coal for a minute to the matter of technical surveys. I am going to make a speech which I have made in this house every year since I have come here. It will only take two or three minutes. I refer to the Canadian hydrographic survey ship Acadia which has been berthed in my riding at Pictou since 1947, along with the C.H.S. Cartier, which probably will not be used too much longer and is now on the Great Lakes. I have been referring to this subject since Hon. Paul Comtois was minister and visited our area and the coal mine where my father was the manager. I have pointed out to successive governments that the berthing of this ship in that area during the winter period when it is not used, has certain advantages.

The crews are located there, they have their homes there. The local shipyards have an opportunity to do the refit work and the local suppliers provide supplies. I hope that the minister will read these remarks in Hansard and that these ships will continue to be berthed in the port of Pictou.

• (7:20 p.m.)

Before I close, sir, perhaps I could recall to mind a song with twenty some verses concerning coal mining, one verse of which went something like this:

> Down in the coal mine underneath the ground,
> Little rays of sunshine never can be found.
> Little dusty diamonds shining all around,
> Down in the coal mine underneath the ground.

We members who came from that area— the minister himself comes from a coal mining area—know what this means. We must keep those little dusty diamonds shining all around.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I hope you will not be too hasty in calling me to order if I preface the few remarks I want to make by quoting a section from the Fisheries Act. Section 61 says, in part:

> Every person who causes or knowingly permits to pass into, or puts or knowingly permits to be put, lime, chemical substances or drugs, poisonous matter, dead or decaying fish, or remnants thereof, mill rubbish or sawdust or any other deleterious substance or thing, whether the same is of the like character to the substances named in this section or not, in any water frequented by fish, is liable, for the first offence, to a penalty of twenty five dollars and costs—

The section then goes on to provide that for second and third offences the penalties will be increased.

The reason I have quoted that section of the Fisheries Act is that as far I am aware that is the principle, and almost the only, piece of legislation in the federal sphere that deals directly with the question of the pollution of the water resources of our country. I have quoted it because there is a reaction, and a very understandable reaction, on the part of the people who find serious pollution at their doorsteps, immediately to say "There should be a law which stops this". Up to a point I think this is certainly true. However, I would agree with opinions which I know are held by other members of the house, that this is not the only and the complete solution to this question.

I am sorry that the minister who is to become the minister of energy and resources and who will take a particular interest in this matter in the future is not with us today, but

I am glad the minister who is taking his place for the time being happens to be the minister who has had the matter of water resources under his jurisdiction up till the present time, and is therefore familiar, not only in his capacity as minister but also, I am sure, in his capacity—to go back to a reference which was made a little earlier—as minister from British Columbia, with the importance not only of the question of the general use of our water resources, but also the question of conservation in the sense of avoiding the ever increasing pressure to pollute those resources.

When we were considering the estimates of the Department of Industry the other night, and there was considerable discussion about designated areas, I suggested that as far as some communities in Canada were concerned they should perhaps be designated as areas rapidly becoming unfit for human habitation, because of the level to which pollution of the water and also of the air was reaching.

I have been seeking some information about the activities in which the federal government has been engaging to deal with this question, in particular its activities in the field of research. The Minister of Industry, when I raised the question in respect of the activities of the National Research Council, said that he would inform himself and then inform me. Possibly the minister who is piloting these estimates through may be a little more immediately knowledgeable on this question, and if he has some information on this subject which he could briefly give the committee I for one would certainly welcome it while the subject matter of this department is before us.

I would draw to his attention, as I did to the attention of the Minister of Industry, the fact that I have on the order paper a question which was put there on February 9—perhaps that is not an undue length of time in view of the nature of the question—and which asks for specific information about what is being done by various departments or agencies of the federal government in the field of pollution control research.

I am not going to attempt at this time to launch into this question with the eloquence with which the hon. member for Timiskaming made his plea for development of the mining industry in northern Ontario. If the minister from the maritimes whom he named would ship some of his coal to the smelter in northern Ontario, then if they run out of iron ore perhaps I could send some iron ore from my constituency to the maritimes, this would provide a real example of national development and unity, and incidentally provide a lot of business for the railways. However that may not be the most feasible solution to that particular problem.

One other question I would specifically like the minister to answer relates to a forthcoming event of which I know he is fully aware. I refer to the conference to be held this fall in Montreal on the subject of pollution and our environment, under the sponsorship of the Canadian Council of Resource Ministers.

I have in my hand a pamphlet which indicates some of the details of the planning of this conference. It also indicates that a brochure is being prepared and distributed, outlining further details. This brochure is being distributed throughout Canada to interested governments, institutions, associations and individuals. Then it goes on to say that invitations to the conference will be extended by the federal and provincial governments.

One of the questions I should like to have answered is whether or not the government of Canada is going to extend such invitation to members of parliament who might be interested in participating in that conference. I find myself rather impatient, even though I recognize there are some complexities in planning this matter, at the fact that we are not any further along the way toward an effective dealing with the acute problems of pollution which exist in some areas, including at least two areas in my constituency which I could name, than to be thinking about a discussion or a study conference on the subject next fall.

Nevertheless, from what little reading I have done about the planning for this conference, I readily agree that there may be some quite worth-while things come out of it. I only hope that its results will reflect themselves very quickly in effective action both at the federal and at the provincial levels of government.

The bulletin to which I referred earlier contains this statement, made by the man who I believe is currently chairman of the Resource Ministers Council. He says:

> The continuing pollution of our water, of our air and of our soil rests upon our conscience. It is a problem to which every Canadian must turn his attention.

• (7:30 p.m.)

Mr. Chairman, this is a statement with which a great many of my constituents would agree. I do want to say, without further prolonging my comments, that a good many of my constituents are becoming increasingly impatient with the continuance of the situation, and the conditions under which they have to live. Unless some effective action is forthcoming rather speedily following this conference, they are going to become even more impatient than they are at the present time.

Mr. Southam: Mr. Chairman, I realize that the committee wants to get on with the passing of these estimates, and I as a member of the official opposition on this side of the house have refrained from taking part in the debate so far. However, I should be remiss in my duty to my constituents if I did not direct a few remarks to the minister about the development of heavy water in Canada. Recently, when I directed this question to the Minister of Industry I was informed that it did not come under his purview. I feel justified in bringing the matter before the committee at this particular time.

Just to recall a few of the facts, hon. members may remember that this matter was introduced by the Minister of Industry one year ago last November, at which time he went through the process of explanation in the house. It was stated, and carried forward then, that a heavy water plant in Canada was nearing completion at Glace Bay, Nova Scotia. The minister announced that a market was available; that it was time Canada took steps to see that a second heavy water plant was developed. Tenders were called and, I believe on January 29, 1965, which was the deadline, four responsible companies made a bid. I think all members of the house will recall the excitement and anticipation engendered in certain areas that thought they might be affected by this development. There was much excitement and approval at Estevan as a result of that announcement. Estevan is in the province of Saskatchewan, and I make these remarks because of the importance of this subject to my riding.

Hon. members may recall that Estevan was selected as the site for the erection of this heavy water plant, as a result of a supplementary statement by the minister. Naturally as a result of the minister's statement that Estevan, Saskatchewan, was the site and Western Deuterium Limited of British Columbia, the successful bidder, the city immediately took steps to be prepared for this development.

Considerable sums of money were spent; facilities were built to accommodate the extra industrial and technical populace which would be coming in to develop this plant, which it was anticipated would take three years to complete, and which would have from 500 to 1,000 workmen working on it. The city aldermen and various other authorities took steps to improve facilities such as sewers, water, and the like.

Then it was realized, in July 1965 to the great consternation of the city of Estevan, that Western Deuterium Limited was not going on with the proposed plant. The authorities in the city were under the impression that a positive announcement had been made by the minister about the development, similar to that made with respect to the heavy water plant at Glace Bay.

It turned out that although Western Deuterium Limited had acted properly, there was nothing cut and dried. The whole scheme was just a proposal, and must have been a premature announcement on the part of the government. It was to be, in the first place, an announcement of policy. If that announcement had been cut and dried, and the contract to develop heavy water undertaken, things would have turned out differently. Naturally we are still very much interested in this. After that, when inquiries were made, we learned that Atomic Power Corporation of Calgary, the second lowest bidder, would be invited to take over the contract of Western Deuterium Limited. This also failed to carry through.

Then, the latest information was that Canadian General Electric of Peterborough were invited, some three months ago, to make a follow-up survey of the prospects of building a second heavy water plant, and of discussing as soon as possible where it should be constructed.

I have done my best to inquire into the determinations of this policy. A lot of money has been spent in my constituency, and there is still a vague shadow over the policy surrounding this proposed project.

I would ask the minister if he could advise this committee now as to what actually is the status of this heavy water plant, and when it is expected to have something finalized about it. I am sure that the people of Saskatchewan and the people of Estevan Point, Saskatchewan, are very much interested, as I think the government is. I hope we shall hear something definite before long, because the people in my constituency and particularly Estevan have been put to a great deal of expenditure and have faced much uncertainty.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I wonder if the minister from Nova Scotia is in a position to reply to the several questions that I posed to him?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I am not sure whether I can answer all the questions which have been put to me by the hon. gentleman. However, before I attempt to answer any of them I think I should refer to a comment made by the hon. member for Timiskaming who wondered why a minister of national health and welfare is taking on the role of answering for the coal industry.

Mr. Starr: Do not start a fight; you want to get your estimates through?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, in so far as Nova Scotia is concerned, the Nova Scotian representative in the cabinet is usually held accountable in that province for whatever happens in any department of the federal government. It would be as unrealistic for a minister representing Nova Scotia in the cabinet to ignore coal as it would be for a minister representing Saskatchewan to ignore wheat.

Mr. Nielsen: Precisely.

An hon. Member: Which minister represents Saskatchewan?

Mr. MacEachen: It has been an accepted tradition in the past that the Nova Scotian minister involves himself very deeply in coal policy. That, of course, was characteristic of my immediate predecessors, the late Hon. George Nowlan and Hon. R. H. Winters. For that reason I have involved myself in this problem. Because of the request of the hon. gentleman opposite I have attempted, in the minister's absence, to give some answers.

I would say in reply to questions asked by the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria with respect to the Coal Board, for example, that I would take as dim a view as he does of any liquidation of the Dominion Coal Board, in the existing circumstances. There has been no discussion and no decision, to my knowledge, with respect to any alteration in the traditional system of subventions. There has been no discussion or decision to abolish the tariff on United States coal. Policy decisions with respect to investments in the coal industry stand on their own feet. In other words, the government has made a decision with respect to investment in the Nova Scotia coal industry, and that decision stands.

One of the purposes of the development study is to provide assistance in determining implementation of the long term policy for the coal industry. It is clear to me from my study of the industry that there are various proposals, and various combinations of proposals which could be considered in respect to the expenditure of various amounts of capital. We are looking forward to the Donald report to provide assistance in reaching conclusions on some of these points.

The hon. member for Pictou talked about the independent mines. It is true that Dr. Donald is paying particular attention to the independent operators, one or two of whom are in my own constituency of Inverness-Richmond, Cape Breton West. Most of the industrial complex we have been discussing this afternoon is in the constituencies of the members for Cape Breton North and Cape Breton South. I hope the constituents of Pictou and Inverness-Richmond will also be beneficiaries of this policy which will, I trust, assist considerably the operations in those other two ridings.

These are all the answers I have at the moment to the questions asked by the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria. I would conclude by saying that my reference to manpower had to do with the services of the department of manpower, which the government would want to use in its implementation of long term policy. The purpose of the whole exercise is of course to create and to maintain maximum employment opportunities in the Cape Breton area.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I should like to make one or two brief comments. Am I to take it from the minister's reply that the provision of this assistance to the coal industry is not contingent upon the restriction of coal production to its present volume, or reducing it from the present annual figure? Would he give us an assurance, too, that this assistance is not contingent upon there being any reduction in the number of workers in the coal field, say from 6,000 to 4,500?

Mr. MacEachen: All I can say in reply to that question is that no decisions have been taken with respect to production levels or manpower requirement. Only when we have received the report of the Donald commission, and then in consultation with the provincial government, the industry and labour would it be possible to reach any conclusions about these very important points. The effort is, of course, to maintain maximum employment. But no decisions have been made about those matters.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): One further question. The minister ended his statement by saying that pending the completion of a comprehensive review the government would provide substantial capital for immediate needs. Would he advise the committee what capital has been granted to the companies concerned, if any, and for what purposes? Has any money been provided during this interim period while the report is being awaited?

Mr. MacEachen: As I recollect, there was a particular coal mining machine which was under investigation for possible use in the industry. It was intended that capital should be available so that this machine could be used for testing purposes. I am not sure what capital, if any, has been spent on this project, but I will draw the attention of the minister to this question and get an answer.

Mr. Nasserden: I have only a few remarks to make at this time but I do not think I should let this opportunity pass without referring to what has been perhaps the most spectacular development in mining in Canada during the past year. I refer to the development of potash in the province of Saskatchewan.

Most of the latest developments in this field are within the boundaries of the constituency I have the honour to represent. We are looking forward to great things from this industry. As a province we have the welcome mat out for those industries which will be complementary to the potash development. The provincial government is anxious that such industries be established to make full use of the resources we have in this respect.

I should like to point out that there still remains a problem with respect to taxation of solution mining in Saskatchewan. I believe some steps have been taken in an effort to clear up this situation, but the difficulty has still not been settled to the satisfaction of the companies concerned. While this is possibly not of direct concern to the department of mines, it is one of the matters with which this government should be dealing.

I should like to compliment the Minister without Portfolio. It is pleasant to see a young man seeing these estimates through the house today. Of course, he is sitting beside the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources who is a favourite of mine, and if he follows in his footsteps he should do all right.

Mr. Southam: Could the minister answer the question I put to him a few minutes ago, before this item passes?

Mr. Turner: With the permission of the committee I intend to comment on a number of questions, taking them together.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): It is interesting to note that nobody on the other side is aware that the estimates of Atomic Energy of Canada have already passed the committee under the guidance of the Minister of—

Some hon. Members: Finance.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Well, Finance—under the heading of Defence Production or whatever portfolio he is holding. This item has already been dealt with. Yet we have ministers who are willing to accept questions on matters which have already been passed by the committee.

Mr. Turner: As a matter of courtesy we listened to the hon. member for Moose Mountain, who had not been given an opportunity to ask the questions he wanted to ask on the other estimates.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): But this is a government which is always talking about the importance of rules and procedures. Now they are not only willing to give an hon. member the opportunity to revert to ask questions on other items, but they are willing to revert to an entirely different set of estimates. I had asked the same question and when I got my answer I left it at that, fully realizing that whoever gave it to me did not know what he was talking about. I did not pursue it, simply because it emphasized the fact that a number of the statements which have been made in this committee about heavy water were in contradiction to statements made by other ministers.

To get back to the minister from Nova Scotia for the time being. I would ask him to enlarge upon his answer to the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria with regard to a possibility of a reduction in coal production. The minister said in effect that no decision had been taken. I hope it is not correct to gather from that answer that somebody within government circles is leaving the impression that a reduction in the production of Cape Breton coal should come about.

• (7:50 p.m.)

I fully recognize the danger which was pointed out some time ago by a former parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister, when he was talking about a cut-back and about subventions. I recognize there is a danger in even discussing this matter, although it may be connected with the recommendations of the Rand report, a report which in my opinion is full of contradictions. At one point it talks about the potential of the Cape Breton coal industry, while the next minute it refers to a cut-back in production. This is contrary to the expressed opinions of the Dominion Coal Board. According to the latest of the annual reports in recent years, a distinct upturn in demand for coal is in progress. I would ask the minister to keep that in mind and not allow those who want to discuss a cut-back in respect of Cape Breton coal to get off the ground. I would ask him to explain the circumstances surrounding the decision of the federal government to convert the central heating plant from coal to gas. This has cost the coal producers a loss of about 18 thousand tons of coal a year. Would the minister also explain why this decision was announced by an official of the gas company at the same time the minister was discussing ways and means to assist the coal industy. Last September, from his own department in the Jackson Building, 300 people had to go home because there was no heating for their offices. This also has caused a great deal of discomfort in the offices of the House of Commons here in winter. I could get support in this regard from members on the minister's own side of the house who have complained about the heating since the conversion took place.

The late Hon. George Nowlan, during his period of office from 1957 to 1962, met many delegations representing the clergy, municipalities, and other people speaking on behalf of the coal industry. I would ask the minister why it is that since this government took office no such meetings have been convened in Ottawa? Why is the minister not meeting the situation in Cape Breton or Nova Scotia today with the same approach that was taken by the late Hon. George Nowlan in dealing with these questions? I think it is interesting to note that no such meetings have been held since the government changed.

I would also ask the minister what a long range program has to do with the opening of a new mine at Lingan? This is something which is short term and which should take place immediately to provide for the 1,100 men who were laid off in January. The company is prepared to go ahead with this immediately, provided the government makes available that portion referred to specifically by the minister, the $10 million, to open that new mine.

This is not a long range program. The minister has made the statement that this mine could be in operation in two or three years. I have no objection to a government's taking precautions to ensure, when any money is spent by an industry or a company in respect of mechanization or a new opening, that some person is there as a watchdog of the federal government to see that every cent is used out of every dollar of federal money put there. There are persons who are available to the federal government, and I might mention in particular Mr. Alec Brown of the Coal Board, a most competent man, who could be the necessary watchdog. I do not wish to connect the term watchdog with Mr. Brown, but I am sure he would be capable of ensuring that the expenditures made by the government to open a new colliery at Lingan immediately would be very well taken care of. In this respect the government would not have to set up some commission and bring in somebody else to ensure that their money was well spent.

This is not a long term plan. The minister himself refers to getting into production in two or three years. He may have exaggerated the number of people who may be working there and may also have exaggerated in respect of when they hoped to get into full production. Nevertheless that requirement is there, and he also has assurance from the Dominion Coal Board that markets can be found for the expected production. There is absolutely no reason that we should wait for the Donald report in order to make available that $10 million to start the new mine at Lingan.

I would hope the minister would take this into consideration and disregard the statements made by others in respect of what is required there. I am sure the minister can recall the statement he made about this, and statements made by the leader of the Liberal party in Nova Scotia today; you remember the Liberal leader, the former member for Halifax.

An hon. Member: He has gone to the Senate.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): No; the childish member. These are not my words. The former speaker referred to him as the childish member, and he is still acting childish. The leader of the Liberal party in Nova Scotia wanted to come up and meet with the minister, but the minister said there was no need for Mr. Regan to come to Ottawa. The opening of the new mine at Lingan is not something which is long term. It has absolutely no bearing on the Donald report. I would like the minister to make available at once the $10 million required for the new opening, and I would ask him to point out, if he can, whether any provisions are made for the advancing of this money, in the estimates or anywhere else?

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Chairman, when the minister replies, would he give us his view in respect of the suggestion I made earlier this afternoon to the effect that the services of the former coal board chairman—or the almost former chairman in a day or so I understand—be retained by the board, because I am sure his knowledge and experience in the coal industry is certainly valuable to all of us in Nova Scotia and to the rest of Canada.

I also would like to have the minister's view on the suggestion I made earlier this afternoon with regard to the statement I made when we were dealing with the $25 million grant, when I pointed out that the government should have a representative, as it were—and this also has been suggested since by the member for Cape Breton South—sitting on the board of the Dominion Steel and Coal Company, if they are the people who will get these millions. I would like to have the minister's view on that also.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I hope, so far as I am concerned, that this is a wrap-up with regard to the coal industry. I share the high regard that the hon. members for Cape Breton North and Victoria and Cape Breton South have expressed for the retiring chairman of the Dominion Coal Board. It seems to me to be a good idea that his services be made available on a consultative or continuing basis. I share also the high regard expressed for the technical officer of the board, Mr. Brown, whose services are valuable and essential to the efficient operation of the board. These comments certainly will be kept in mind by the government.

On the matter of production levels of the Nova Scotia coal industry, hon. members will recall that an understanding, to put it in its weakest terms, was reached in the days of the former government that subvention assistance for the coal industry would be maintained at or around the four million production level. That policy has been continued. This government has not departed from the subvention policy and the understood production levels that had been accepted as realistic by the former government. No decision has been taken to depart from that policy, and I certainly will keep in mind the comments made on this point by the hon. member for Cape Breton South.

The shift from coal to gas in one of the government buildings was a matter of discussion among myself, the government and the minister of mines of Nova Scotia. The Minister of Public Works and I discussed and considered this. I have not had an opportunity to refresh my memory as to details, but at any rate the level of production involved, though important, was not great, and because of other reasons, in accord with established fuel policy within the department, this switch was made.

Having regard to the matter of delegations, the premier, for example, has not requested a meeting with the government regarding the coal industry, and normally he has led these delegations to Ottawa. If he did make a request I am sure that we would be quite glad to meet with him and any other person who might be part of his delegation. It is true that the president of the United Mine Workers has requested a meeting with the government at an early date, and it is my expectation that as a first step the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys and I will be in a position to meet with interested parties next week to exchange views.

I do agree, as I have indicated, with the comments made by the hon. member for Cape Breton South regarding the Lingan opening. The rationale for the opening of the new mine, is, of course, to provide a reduction in the production per-ton cost of coal and to give a sweetening effect, in the economic sense, to the total output of the industry. In that way the production and the new opening at Lingan is related to the total production of the industry itself. I have had in mind, and have had discussions on, the question whether it would be possible and realistic to consider a decision about Lingan itself before the elaboration of our total policy in the coal industry, and in that sense I appreciate the remarks of my hon. friend, the member for Cape Breton South.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I should like to ask the minister whether it is correct that the executive officials of district 26 of the United Mine Workers of America have asked for a meeting with the government?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): What are the minister's views with reference to the possibility of having someone from the government on the board of any company that is going to deal with these millions of dollars?

Mr. MacEachen: That would be a matter for the government as a whole to decide, but I certainly share the view of the hon. member that if public funds are to be made available the government ought to set up a mechanism to ensure that the funds are spent for the purposes intended and in the most efficient way. I am sure that, whatever arrangements are made, ultimately this will have to be done, and it may be that the suggestion of my hon. friend will receive consideration. This is a matter for the government to decide. While there has been consideration, no decision has been taken.

Mr. Turner: Mr. Chairman, may I say first of all that the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources and I, along with the Minister of National Health and Welfare, appreciate the courtesy of the committee in allowing us to defend and pilot these estimates in the absence of the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys.

I should like to make a few brief comments relating to the remarks of hon. members opposite this afternoon and evening. First of all I should like to say that we listened with great interest to the contribution made by the hon. member for Kamloops. We do not disagree with much of what he said. We believe that Canada's future depends on what type of national resources policy we have in Canada, and that Canadian identity is closely linked to that resources policy. I am sure the hon. member knows that the minister of northern affairs and I are on record in respect of this subject.

We believe in a national resources policy. We believe in a co-ordinated policy between federal and provincial governments for the development and management of our water, our soil, our air and our minerals. We believe that this national policy must be achieved in co-operation with the provinces, but by way of a national catalyst or initiative—by federal co-ordination with the provinces on policies achieved on a national basis.

We believe also, Mr. Chairman, that the growth of Canada depends on development on a national basis of our natural and renewable resources. Although I will deal with this more specifically, I want to say to the hon. member for Timiskaming that in our vocabulary, this growth must be developed profitably for all Canadians in Canada. This is true of everything that we have on and under the ground and in the water. We believe that the development of a national resources policy includes as a corollary a resources policy for all of Canada and particularly for the northern areas of the country.

Mr. Caouette: It is possible.

[Translation]

Mr. Turner: I admit that and I shall discuss later the particular problem of the member for Villeneuve.

[English]

I suggest that we need national co-ordination of various provincial policies. We need research into what we are doing because facts must precede policy. We believe that an inventory, as mentioned by the hon. member for Kamloops and others, is absolutely a prerequisite to such a policy. We need at the same time to develop a cost benefit ratio for the development of these resources and to set priorities, if necessary, on a national scale as to the resources we can profitably bring into production in series.

I should like to list the steps of what we conceive to be a national resources policy for this country. First of all we have to make an inventory of these resources. There are already programs in this country for the setting up or establishment of a Canadian land inventory. I feel we also have to proceed with an evaluation of our water resources and needs. We must analyse the quality of the air above us, and the hon. member for Comox-Alberni made special reference to that. So we are talking in terms of an inventory of our forests, lands, recreation fisheries and wildlife and, particularly within the text of this department, our mineral resources.

After having made that inventory we conceive that Canada must have co-ordinated management of those resources, and that the federal government must achieve through the national council of resource ministers some standardization of inventory and management, as well as some recognition of the amount of budgetary support that each province will have to devote to the development of any particular resource.

Once the inventory and co-ordinated management policy have been worked out with the provinces, we believe that priorities related to production ought to be established between those resources and various areas so that the development of these resources can follow. We believe this should be linked with a policy directed toward increasing the processing of these resources in Canada. We believe also that a deliberate national development of resources depends on certain ancillary policies, and that we must co-ordinate our tariff policies so the whole range and purpose becomes consistent with what we are trying to achieve.

Taxation must reflect this policy as well, and tax abatement and accelerated tax depreciation must be co-ordinated with the development of those resources. Fiscal and monetary policy can also be used to the same effect, as can transportation policy, whereby the government of Canada provides access to markets and access to development by road, rail, water and air. In this connection, Mr. Chairman, I want to recognize the tremendous results of the Roads to Resources policy initiated by the previous administration. In other words, resource development in our vocabulary means growth, and growth means manufacturing complexes within Canada, bringing employment and people with them.

Turning to another point raised by the hon. member for Kamloops, with which we disagree, he pointed out that to his mind the setting aside of the resource development north of the 60th parallel and leaving it with the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources lacked consistency, because if Canada were to have a co-ordinated national resource policy the resources of the north should be brought under the jurisdiction of the new minister of energy, mines and resources. I suppose we might discuss with profit on some other occasion the difference between the policy of the management of those resources and their administration. But I would say to the hon. member that to our mind northern development that is development in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon, needs to be under the jurisdiction of the same administrative authority responsible for the development of the resources which should go along hand in hand with the economic and indeed the political development of that region of Canada.

In order to develop the north, the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources would need to have under his jurisdiction the resources of the north. We intend therefore to leave—

Mr. Fulton: That is not what the minister's colleague said this afternoon. But let us not get into a debate on that matter now.

Mr. Turner: I think the minister would agree that he and I have had as intimate a chat on the subject as the hon. member for Kamloops and the hon. member for Yukon, who I noticed were in earnest discussion on this subject. I think we could reach agreement on it quite easily. In any event, we want to leave the Territories with their resources for the future political and economic development of that region.

The hon. member for Kamloops referred to the Nelson River development and put some questions in that respect. Because of the detailed answer required, with the permission of the hon. member I will bring to the attention of the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys his contribution as it appears in Hansard and hope that when the minister's estimates for 1966-67 are before the committee he will deal with this matter. I wish to thank the hon. member for giving notice in this respect.

On the question of pollution, Mr. Chairman, I can provide the hon. member for Comox-Alberni with all the information he needs with respect to the conference in Montreal entitled "Pollution in Our Environment" which will be held in October and November of this year. I will put to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys the suggestion that perhaps members of parliament with a particular interest in the subject should receive invitations.

I am limited in time but I would not want to neglect the hon. member for Kootenay West. I think he knows where this government stands in terms of a national water policy. In any event, he knows the position of the ministers sitting here since we have continually kept him on our mailing list and have enjoyed the correspondence we have received from him in reply.

Mr. Herridge: I appreciate it.

[Translation]

Mr. Turner: With regard to the remarks made by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette), I shall call the attention of the minister concerned to the gold mine problem in his riding. I realize it is very important for the region he represents, and when the estimates for 1966-67 are introduced by the minister himself, I think he will discuss this particular problem more specifically.

[English]

The same would apply to the hon. member for Timmins and the hon. member for Timiskaming with regard to special provisions relating to the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act. If these hon. members would allow me to draw this matter to the attention of the minister, he will deal with it in detail when his estimates for 1966-67 come before the committee, shortly.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Chairman, would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Turner: Yes.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): I appreciate the position the minister is in but I should like him to realize that 250 families in Timmins have only until the end of this month to wait for the minister's 1966 estimates. We had to wait a year and a half for the 1965 estimates to come before us, so it is not a very encouraging picture for these 250 families.

Mr. Turner: Mr. Chairman, we hope the estimates will be referred to the committee next week. In any event, I shall ask the minister on his return to get in touch with the member on this particular subject.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Turner: Other hon. members raised questions, Mr. Chairman, but I see there is the unanimous opinion that I should sit down.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I have just one question to ask the minister. In concluding my very brief remarks I asked whether the minister would table the report of December 31, 1965, of the permanent engineering board.

Mr. Turner: Mr. Chairman, we will table it tomorrow when Mr. Speaker is in the chair.

[Mr. Turner.]

Mr. Herridge: Splendid.

Item ageed to.

Research in astronomy and geophysics—

55. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, $1,749,000.

Mr. Fulton: On vote 55, Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the minister could say a word with regard to the timetable of the aeromagnetic survey. Is that survey reasonably well up to schedule or does something more have to be done in order that the survey may be completed in accord with the planned schedule?

Mr. Turner: Mr. Chairman, my understanding is that it is progressing well, but I will see that a direct answer is given to the hon. member.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF NORTHERN AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL RESOURCES

Administration and general—

1. Departmental administration including a contribution to the Canadian Council of Resources Ministers in an amount equal to one half the aggregate contribution of the provinces but not exceeding $55,000 and $145,000 for grants for northern research and for northern scientific research expeditions, $1,817,000.

• (8:20 p.m.)

Mr. Dinsdale: With the spirit of co-operation that prevails in this chamber tonight, I think we can safely conclude we will be able to complete the consideration of the estimates of the Department of Northern Affairs by the time we are ready to rise at the normal hour at ten o'clock. I think I should point out that the members of the opposition, in co-operating in this fashion, do not want in any respect to neglect a thoroughgoing discussion of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources, as it used to be. We are co-operating because of our desire to help out the government which, as a result of its own maladministration, has boxed itself into this unfortunate position. We are also co-operating because we are so far behind in the schedule for the consideration of the 1965-66 estimates. We realize, however, that it will be only a comparatively short time before we will have an opportunity for a thoroughgoing discussion on the reorganized Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

This department has had a rather checkered career since it was first inaugurated in 1952. When I was the minister responsible for it there were many interesting facets of operation and administration that were not directly concerned with northern affairs or even resources, as such. It had come out of the old department of resources and now, if all goes well in the reorganization contemplated, a good part of the administrative responsibilities of northern affairs will return to the new department of resources. I believe without prejudice we can say that many of the functions that came out of the old department of resources are returning to the new department of resources in a considerably enhanced state. I was pleased to hear the Minister without Portfolio in his brief enunciation of the schemes and programs contemplated to achieve a co-ordinated national resource policy indicate that they stemmed from the blueprint that was laid down by the former administration.

My colleague the hon. member for Kamloops has dealt with, and I feel adequately, the problems of resource developments as they refer to power and water resources. These policies again were laid down with considerable care and detail by the former administration. There has been a slowing down of the forward momentum during the past two years and I hope that with the reorganization contemplated the pace will step up once again.

I would just like to repeat for the sake of brevity tonight the three fundamental points that emerged out of the Resources for Tomorrow conference in 1961 and which were laid down by the then Prime Minister, the right hon. member for Prince Albert, when he recommended the establishment of a national resource council, the establishment of a national advisory land and water use coordinating board and the convening of periodic conferences in the field of resource management. We have the Resource Ministers Council functioning as an organization. Unfortunately there have been difficulties because of frequent personnel changes among the staff of the secretariat. I do hope, in the interests of continuity and in the interests of co-ordination, that we will be able to gather together a permanent secretariat of the highest possible qualifications who can get on with the job of assisting in the task of wise management and the multiple use of Canada's resources.

However, nothing has been done with respect to the National Advisory Council of Water Resources. This was regarded as a fundamental necessity in 1961. The need has become more urgent in the intervening five years and the problem now, is recognized by all concerned as having long passed the point of no return. I remember some two years ago when this party moved an amendment to the motion to go into supply which recommended the establishment of an advisory co-ordinating committee of water resources, that several members from various parts of the house, as well as the press, yawned in boredom because they believed that the subject of conversation of water resources as a topic for a supply amendment was moving into an area in which there was a complete lack of necessity for discussion. This was only two years ago; but since that time we have had views from many groups in the country urging immediate action to get a national perspective on the management of our water resources.

I trust that under the new reorganization contemplated, Mr. Chairman, this point No. 2, which I think was just as important as and which indeed springs out of the establishment of the National Resource Ministers Council, will be given primary consideration. Indeed it is unfortunate that the National Resource Ministers Council itself has not come to grips with the establishment of such a national advisory committee on the management of our water resources. That is all I intend to say on this subject at this time.

The third point is of course being carried out in the pollution conference which will be held in Montreal under quite similar circumstances to the original conference in 1961. This is the first convening of a conference dealing with specific areas of renewable resources since 1961. It is a five-year interval and I hope in the future we will be able to move at a much more rapid pace.

Now coming specifically to northern affairs, I am going to cut down my remarks and deal with only two aspects of current responsibility. As in the past, when we had responsibility for administration, we carried out policies on an organized and co-ordinated basis. I am therefore going to call upon my colleague from the Yukon Territory who will deal with some of the specifics of northern administration. I am sure we all agree there is no one in the house more competent or qualified to speak on this subject, and certainly no one in this chamber who has made a greater contribution to bringing the needs and problems of the north to the attention of this house as well as to the attention of the people of Canada as a whole.

I shall depend on my hon. friend from Jasper-Edson to deal with the current problems through which parks are passing.

There is another matter I should like to bring to the attention of the minister of northern affairs which I feel indicates shortsightedness and that lack of the vision which is necessary if the program of northern development that was launched with such great enthusiasm in 1957 is to contine to move forward.

I refer to the decision to change the location of the new administrative headquarters for the department of northern affairs. At the time we left office the decision had been made to add the new northern affairs building to the interesting complex that had been developing in that section of the city of Ottawa known as Confederation Heights. It seemed entirely fitting to me as the minister responsible that the department which had to do with the development of Canada's last frontier should occupy an important and prominent position among the complex of buildings at Confederation Heights. As the current minister knows, plans were finalized and completed to proceed with the construction of a building that would not only be useful and functional but also symbolic of the fact that Canada is a northern nation with a northern heritage and a northern destiny.

We wondered why the delay in proceeding with this particular project. The story has now become available in the current report of the Auditor General, which indicates that the minister made the decision to continue the location of the northern affairs headquarters in the heart of the nation's capital on the ground that our administrative facilities were becoming too widely scattered; that everything should be crowded into the downtown area. This seems to me to be entirely the antithesis of the thinking of a department which concerns itself with the development of the last frontier, the wide open spaces, the million and a half square miles of area which makes up the Northwest Territories and the Yukon territory.

I have been continually amazed since I came to Ottawa as a member of parliament in the early fifties to understand why those who are responsible for the planning of the nation's capital have such a myopic and narrow perspective of architectural development and city planning prospects. It seems that unless everything is crowded within a few blocks of Parliament Hill, then we have not got the proper planning perspective.

In visiting other capitals, for example the capital of our neighbour to the south, the attractive feature of the city of Washington in the District of Columbia is the wide open thoroughfares and spaces which have been made possible by deliberate planning in consonance with the broad developmental viewpoint of the United States administration.

It is a retrograde and a backward step to reverse the decision to locate northern affairs in what was regarded as the most strategic location site of Confederation Heights. Overlooking the R.A. Centre and facing towards the north, what could be more symbolic of the new forward step in the nation's thinking and planning? The change was made at considerable expense to the public treasury, as the Auditor General pointed out. The architects' fees had already been paid and the plan had to be scrapped. As I recall, some $200,000 went down the drain.

The new building is not owned, it is rented. It is the Campeau Confederation Towers. It borrows the name from Confederation Heights but has the confederation symbolism in name only because it certainly does not carry the architectural and planning motif that is present in the Confederation Heights development. I understand the buildings are rented, according to the Auditor General's report, at an annual rental of $688,000, almost double the rental formerly paid for northern affairs facilities in Ottawa.

Even though the responsibilities of northern affairs have diminished substantially, with museums departing, with resources departing, with water resources departing, with tourism departing, as well as other areas of responsibility, the cost of rental has doubled.

Mr. Turner: There is the Indian affairs addition.

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes, there is the addition of Indian affairs. Whether that makes up for the diminished responsibilities I am not in a position to say.

To sum it up, we find that over the leased period provided for it will cost the government and the people of Canada almost $14 million, which is considerably more than the cost of the original building, which had been so carefully planned. This expenditure of nearly $14 million results, of course, in no tangible asset by way of public buildings around the city of Ottawa.

I know that the decision has been made and that the move has been made. But I suggest to the minister that he might well review and consider the original plan for the new building, and when the five-year period has expired—I believe the lease is for five years, renewable for ten—he might then reconsider the prospects of reverting to what I felt was an excellent plan in harmony with the functions of the department of northern affairs. Of course, it may well be that there will be another administration in office within five years making this decision, and we will certainly have no hestitation as to what would be the decision in this regard.

There are one or two further brief matters. As I have already intimated, my hon. friend from Jasper-Edson will be dealing in some detail with parks. However, I repeat once again what should be entirely obvious to everybody concerned in these matters, namely that there is a great and urgent need for expanding Canada's park facilities. The pressure on our national parks is reaching beyond the point of endurance, month after month, year after year, yet no dynamic steps are being taken to deal with the urgent demands of an age of leisure as well as the growing economic demands of a rapidly expanding tourist industry.

As I have told the minister and his colleagues in the government times beyond number, it is high time we got cracking, to use a good air force phrase, on a recreational parks development program, something which was in the works when the government changed but on which no specific action has been taken.

• (8:40 p.m.)

I notice the National and Provincial Parks Association in the current edition of their excellent magazine, put forward a program of their own, which they call the Recreational Parks Development Program. They say it is an entirely new idea. With respect, it is not a new idea. They talk about it as a national recreational reserves development program. Now that we have the support of that group primarily concerned with the development of our park resources, I trust that we will at long last have the ear of the administration.

I want to ask questions now about historic parks. A program was launched, in 1961, to ensure that there would be a major historic park development in each of the provinces and the territories to make sure that parks would be available for the influx of visitors during our centennial year.

We are hearing how much Expo '67 will cost. How much is it now? It goes up day by day. An hon. member tells me that the cost will be $84 million. What will visitors coming to Canada to take part in the celebration of 1967 do, after they have seen the great centennial world fair? They are going to spread out across the rest of Canada, we hope. I should like to remind the administration that we have got to present other aspects of Canadian history than will be presented at Expo '67 at such tremendous cost.

The program of developing historic sites extended, from Signal Hill in Newfoundland, Louisburg in Nova Scotia, right up to the old gold rush city, in Dawson City. Dawson City was declared an historic complex. No doubt there will be a tremendous influx of visitors into Dawson City next year.

Through the writings of Robert Service, and the writings of other famous authors such as Jack London, perhaps one of the best known sites in Canada is old Dawson City. I trust that the minister, who I understand is still responsible for these matters, will be moving forward to ensure that in each province we have a major development ready to receive the visitors. I hesitate in mentioning the keystone province, Manitoba, because I might be regarded as prejudiced in this regard.

However, I hope that Fort Garry is proceeding on target. Something that would make historic sites interesting, I think, is animation. We had planned that these historic sites would be animated much along the same lines as Fort Henry which has become one of the great tourist attractions in the province of Ontario, a tourist attraction which has been developed by the government of Ontario. I trust that the same sort of animation will be implemented in each of the major centres in each of the provinces.

I do not think I need take more time of the committee at this stage. I will pass the torch to my colleagues, as I have intimated. However, I did notice the minister in recent weeks and months has been making regular announcements about roads, airports, railways and so forth. I want to congratulate him on carrying the torch that was ignited by the former administration. As I look at the roads policy, announced I think during the last election compaign, and as it is presented in the current issue of the magazine North, it seems to me that I have travelled those roads before. It seems to me a regurgitation of the northern development roads policy laid down by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, and reinforced by myself when I became minister. I see no new roads indicated in the development program, as it is outlined in the magazine North. The airport construction program especially has a familiar ring.

We are flattered by your acceptance of our programs and policies. We wish you would only get on with them with the same expedition and enthusiasm that was applied during those wonderful years of 1957 to 1963.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): Mr. Chairman, I want this evening to talk about national parks. I wish to take some time to point out that 58 per cent of the land area of the national parks of Canada is in the province of Alberta. I want to take some time because, as I mentioned in the Throne Speech debate, some 7,000 people living in the national parks in Alberta are second class citizens and do not have the rights enjoyed by the people in other parts of Canada.

For the past seven or eight months there has been a continuing fight between the minister and the people residing in the parks. On January 18, shortly after this session opened, I asked him whether he was ready to set up a committee of inquiry to study this problem, and he answered at that time as reported at page 26 of Hansard:

> Mr. Speaker, we have had a continuing series of discussions with the people living in our national parks and have arrived at certain understandings. I cannot accept for one minute the statement made by the hon. gentleman in his question that there is great consternation in those areas.

He goes on to say:

> I am stating the facts, and I am in touch with the people living in those parks.

This prompted the people in Jasper Park to send a telegram to the minister, which reads as follows:

> The following is a copy wire sent to Honourable Arthur Laing this date. "Your statement appearing in January 19th Hansard regarding situation with respect to residents of Banff and Jasper Park is generally misleading because first, great consternation and uncertainty still exists among the people residing in these parks and second we are definitely out of touch with you since our last meeting took place in Jasper on September 12th 1965 without any understanding being reached".

That is the end of the telegram. There is not any understanding. There is great consternation. Both the minister and the Prime Minister in the recent election campaign assured these people that they would be given a fair hearing. I want to suggest to the minister at the outset that in view of the fact he is going to bring in national parks legislation, he give immediate consideration to setting up a joint committee of this house and the other place to study the question of a national parks policy. I am not alone in my concern, because hon. members from Bow River, Lethbridge and Macleod are also concerned about this. It is not just our concern, it is the concern of the province of Alberta. We had something to do with getting people living in the parks to approach the premier of Alberta, to request his support in this regard.

I am sure that the minister has recently received a copy of a brief from the minister of industry of the Alberta government. I want to quote extensively from this brief because, Mr. Chairman, it is excellent. It is a brief that I hope the minister will read carefully and will take into consideration. It reads as follows:

> The thesis of this report is that National Parks Policy is unfair to the citizens of Alberta and of serious detriment to the third largest industry in the province—tourism. This conclusion applies to both the written policy and the administration of the policy by the federal department in charge.

I shall have something more to say about the administration. The brief goes on to say:

> The people of Alberta are equally concerned about the contravention of citizens' rights implicit in the new policy as it affects leaseholders in the National Parks in Alberta. The legal and moral aspects of this problem have already been the subject of an urgent letter from Premier Manning to the Prime Minister, and they are dealt with in greater detail in an accompanying brief.

• (8:50 p.m.)

I want to say something with regard to the letter from the Premier of Alberta to the Prime Minister, and the Prime Minister's reply. The Prime Minister's reply showed that the right hon. gentleman is not aware of the situation. This is a continuing operation of the senior civil servants in the minister's department—a fog thrown over the facts to try to hide behind the great conservation wave, away from the basic issue. The basic issue is the question of the townsites in these parks, the question of these people who have been invited into the parks in earlier days being allowed to live in them like Canadians, with a full concept of what is meant by the national parks as their guide. We think the minister has not allowed them a fair hearing. I believe he has been taken in by the senior civil servants in his department, who have for a number of years tried to turn themselves into the commission. They do not believe there should be townsites in the national parks. They are so unaware of the situation in Alberta that they do not appreciate the distances involved.

They have no idea about service centres in an area such as Jasper, which is 230 miles from Edmonton. They have no idea how to look after the increasing numbers of people who have come to these parts since the development of better roads. Their thinking with regard to the proper development of these parks is at cross purposes. When this party formed the government we brought out a policy of zoning, providing for wilderness, recreation and service areas. We must have zoning of this type in Jasper, Banff and Waterton.

The conservationists tell us: The wilderness will be spoiled. They say we are going to turn the parks into a Coney Island. Nonsense. Immediately we criticize the administration of the national parks we are called Coney Islanders. They have gone so far as to solicit support from the press by giving them biased material on which to write articles. They have done this, apparently, with the approval of the minister. I prefer to believe, as a westerner, that he has been taken in.

There is a better way to run our mountain national parks. And, let me say, there is no similarity whatsoever between the running of national parks such as we have in Alberta, particularly the Rocky Mountain parks, and national parks in the rest of Canada. There is no similarity at all. The National Parks Act says these areas should be set aside for the benefit and enjoyment of Canadians. What does "enjoyment" mean according to these people in the department? It means the enjoyment of nature. We need a public inquiry with regard to the interpretation of this word because the present interpretation is not the right one. I want to quote something in this regard, later, from the brief of the Alberta government. To suggest that the enjoyment of our national parks is only to enjoy nature, is nonsense according to the normal and commonsense interpretation of the word and, I am sure, according to the interpretation which was in the minds of those who established this legislation back in 1930. Their interpretation would mean, I suggest, that we could have recreational facilities within these parks.

In our mountain national parks we have more than half the entire area of Switzerland. In Switzerland they have all these mountain resorts, five or six major towns and between five million and six million people. We have 7,000 people living in the cities in the centres of these parks, taking up one per cent of the available area. We have roads leading to only about 5 per cent of the area of these parks. Are we going to desecrate the wilderness if a program of the type advocated by some of us on this side of the house is adopted? The Parks and Recreation Association of Canada, which has supported the attitude taken by the department on occasions, has now come round to our way of thinking and suggested that part of these parks be turned into recreational reserves within the parks system. What is this if it is not zoning for recreational purposes? How far is this away from zoning for service centres?

Reference has been made to congestion in the parks. I can give the minister the whole picture. The idea that in a 4,000 square mile park where you have at the most 100 acres taken out for a townsite there is any real likelihood of spoiling the wilderness, or that you cannot have proper regulations for the development of these towns, is an absurd one. I know the parks department officials would like to see these towns moved out altogether. They fail to appreciate that Banff and Jasper were there before the parks were set up. Jasper was a railroad town, and it still is. Jasper is as concerned about keeping the concept of the national parks as are the people in the department. But the people who live in Jasper are democratic Canadians and they feel they can do a better job than the civil service can.

It comes down to the question of the townsites and how they are to be administered. The feeling became so bad in Banff that the advisory council, which is an elected body, would not talk to the minister. I could read into the record verbatim reports of that meeting; it is not of any credit to the minister. These people deserve representative government and the right to the self-determination of their local problems within their townsites without having to come to Ottawa about every minor decision. This is only just.

What about leaseholding? The minister suddenly wants to change the system of leaseholding and prevent families concerned from building up estates within the national parks. He is going to turn our buildings into sheds or temporary structures which will last just the length of the lease, and then revert to the government. He knows that many of the services which have been provided have been supplied by family concerns, and he intends to get these people out. The parks department seems to think that everybody in Canada wants to live in the mountain parks. They will not even allow anyone who has moved out of a park for six months to be buried there. This kind of thinking is archaic. It cannot be understood by reasonable people and it is contrary to common sense.

I suggest the minister should give consideration to these points. I want to call attention to what Hon. A. R. Patrick had to say last Friday in the Alberta legislature with regard to the policies of this government:

> Calling the policies "unfair to the citizens and of serious detriment to Alberta's tourist industry," they can only result in "poor construction, drab facilities and higher prices for visitors," he said.

• (9:00 p.m.)

The minister steadfastly has refused even to listen to the delegations which have come to him from Banff, Jasper and Waterton. He has convinced the Prime Minister to send this letter to the Premier saying in part—and I quote from the Prime Minister's letter to the Premier:

> From this point of view I would certainly be disturbed if even the legal exercise of governmental powers resulted in the serious disturbance of any present leaseholder of park lands in his occupation of these lands or caused significant damage to the operator of any legitimate business enterprise in the parks.

What about these people who will lose their businesses, because the government has taken them over? Has this not already caused some disturbance in our national parks, and yet the Prime Minister writes that letter to our Premier. He goes on to say:

> In the case of residential leaseholders they are assured of continuity of tenure for at least another 42 years with compensation at fair market value—

This was obtained only after representation was made to the minister. Additionally in this letter he says:

> In short, there seems to be no evidence that the substitution of a term of at least 42 years from the present time in lieu of the so-called perpetual renewal clauses has had any significant effect on the present day worth of the leasehold interests concerned.

Now, if anybody is going to be asked to swallow that, it is absolute nonsense, because all property in the national park has depreciated at least 20 per cent since the minister announced his policy. He knows that as also do the people in his department. The Prime Minister went on:

> I do not believe there is anything in this government's policy which will prevent a continuation of the rapid growth in public use of these areas experienced in recent years.

[Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson).]

That is absolutely false. The situation in Banff, Jasper and Waterton is at the stage where there is not sufficient accommodation for the people who go there in the summer time to service our tourists. No new lots have been made available in Banff in years. We finally have had some made available at Jasper, but there is a crying need for more accommodation in the town of Jasper; there is a crying need for land for churches and service club buildings, which it has been very difficult to get out of the department. I could go on and give examples of applications which took years to be processed through that archaic department which the minister has the honour to head.

The Prime Minister went on to say:

> I can assure you that policy of this government is to depend to the greatest extent possible on the private sector of the economy to establish and operate the commercial aspects of park operations.

How are you going to get private enterprise to go in there? The park and departmental officials do not want private enterprise to go in. The senior officials of the department would like to own everything in there, and have so admitted. They would like to get rid of the school of fine arts and other activities.

The Prime Minister says to the Premier that there is no difficulty. I have a letter here from Waterton that tells us of part of the difficulty. There is no disturbance in the ordinary business in these national parks? The businessmen there are having trouble getting insurance. In a telephone call the insurance agent who handles quite a large percentage of the insurance in Waterton informed me that the owners of property in the Waterton Lake and national park area were no longer considered to be a good risk by the insurance company and that these companies would no longer give complete coverage on park property. And this did not disturb business in these parts? Surely the Prime Minister was led down the garden path in that regard.

I would hope that the minister would follow through on the pleas made in the past in respect of the national parks and that he would allow these people an inquiry here in Ottawa. I would hope that he would back up the Prime Minister in his speech in October in Calgary when he promised the people in the national parks in Alberta that they would receive a fair hearing. I suggest to the minister that with the acquisition of the three hon. gentlemen who joined the other place the other day, from the province of Alberta, that they have sufficient numbers in the other place so that we could provide our part of the committee, and that we should form a committee to delve into this problem of national parks policy.

I believe this is necessary if we are going to develop these townsites, which will remain despite the fact that the director of the national parks does not believe that they should be there. They will remain. Let us have a realistic look at this and not just play politics with it as has been done on occasion. It is necessary to have this inquiry so that interested groups on both sides of the fence, the purists, the sensible people, the residents of the parks, the province of Alberta and other provinces which have national parks—if they are contemplating the creation of other national parks—will have an opportunity to enter into the discussions.

I suggest that now is the time to define the policy and make sure that the residents in these parks know about it, and know that it is not something that is slipped through. Let us have this committee of inquiry; let us have a joint committee of the house and the Senate set up to investigate this matter and bring in a recommendation in respect of national parks. Surely it is only right that there should be a body where interested people and groups, such as the Association of National Provincial Parks of Canada and others could come to express their views.

This is a most important matter so far as we in Alberta are concerned. The 1972 Olympics may be prejudiced by this federal policy. I am sure the officials of the department do not want to see the Olympics at Banff, but there are many of us who do and I am sure it is the general consensus on the part of the people in Canada. These are important questions in respect of the national parks, and these questions have to be resolved. It is not enough that the minister should go and fight with the advisory council in Banff, and the advisory council at Jasper and Waterton; it is not enough that he should try to push it down their throats. It is necessary that we have an inquiry and that the people have an opportunity to express their opinions before a committee. The minister did not get a standing ovation from the residents of either of the three national parks, and did not get very many votes either.

Let us have a realistic look at these townsites; let us restore the policy of zoning. Let us give these people some self-rule in these towns so that the minister does not have to be the mayor. They are paying as much in taxes as any other town in Alberta.

Mr. Laing: What a statement to make.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): Each individual home owner pays as much as in any other town in Alberta.

Mr. Laing: We have a report on this—35 per cent.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): The minister is wrong and is again taking the word of the civil servants, who are not aware of the facts.

Why could not the minister set up a federal towns act which would allow these people to govern themselves within the framework of the concept of the national parks? The parks officials do not want that; they want the loose, dictatorial control which will give them authority to tell people where they can put a nail and where they cannot put a nail.

• (9:10 p.m.)

Immediately after he accomplished this he could do away with patronage and that would be a good thing. Let us put these leases out for tender on an equal basis and do away with the idea that one must put on pressure or know somebody in order to speed up lease applications through this archaic institution, and speed up policy decisions made by the office, in order that these people who live in national parks can lead a reasonable life.

The minister suggests that there has been trafficking in the sale of leases, yet there was only one man involved who made a major sale of a family business that was built up over a period of 40 years. Is he not entitled to any profit? I am defending this man and he is probably the best Liberal in Banff.

These things are important not only to the people who live in these national parks, but they are important from the point of view of the province of Alberta. As I said earlier, a major portion of national park acreage exists in the province of Alberta. We depend on tourism in these areas and we think that we can maintain these wilderness areas in the concept established when they became recreational park areas. We believe there should be some reasonable and sensible approach to the question of townsites within national parks.

Again I urge the minister to give serious consideration to the idea of setting up a committee of the house and the other place to investigate national park policy with particular reference to the mountain parks of British Columbia and Alberta, because the parks in British Columbia abut those in Alberta. The major roads from Alberta to British Columbia run through these parks, as do the major railways. We must have a more realistic and common sense approach to the administration of our national parks. I say this not only on behalf of the people of Jasper, Banff and Waterton, but on behalf of all the people of Alberta. I commend the excellent brief of Hon. Mr. Patrick and state that we support it wholeheartedly. I hope the minister along with the Prime Minister will fulfil their election promises and set up this inquiry without delay.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, now that we are discussing the estimates of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources I should like to refer in particular to a question or two regarding Indian affairs, as the responsibility for this department was transferred to Hon. Arthur Laing earlier this year.

Before commenting on this problem in relation to the Christian Island band I should like to pay public tribute to Hon. Rene Tremblay who, for a while, was minister of immigration and Indian affairs. When the estimates of this department were being considered a year or two ago I asked the minister if he would give consideration to the very earnest request of the Ojibway Indians on the Christian Island reserve in the lower Georgian Bay area for the establishment of a radio telephone service. I pointed out at that time that the Indians were still being forced by the department of Indian affairs to communicate with the mainland by smoke signal in the same manner Indians communicated with Christopher Columbus. Hon. Mr. Tremblay immediately busied himself with that request to establish a radio telephone system connected with Midland. As a result there was established a radio-telephone service, a stop and go system, but the Indians thought it was a tremendous operation compared with the system they had been forced to use for the past 300 years. Only last fall under the able administration of the cabinet this stop and go telephone system was greatly improved and, with the co-operation of the Bell Telephone Company of Canada, a mobile exchange was put on Christian Island. There are today 45 telephones in the homes of Indian families on Christian Island and they are able to communicate with people at any telephone number on the mainland, despite the separation of a mile and a half by water.

I should like to thank Hon. Rene Tremblay myself and on behalf of the Ojibway band of the Christian Island reserve for what he did, and the cabinet for carrying on even after Rene Tremblay left the department of immigration. I feel certain that Hon. Arthur Laing will pay as much attention to their present, sensible demands as did the minister before him.

The Christian Island band of Indians, who are of the Ojibway tribe, some years ago with the very earnest co-operation of Colonel Jones, who was a senior official of the department of Indian affairs, were able to establish a pheasant farm on Christian Island. They raise about 4,000 pheasants a year and it is possible to go and hunt there for seven months of the year. You are certain that there are birds before your gun; it is not a case of going into the wilderness hoping there is game. When you go to the Christian Island reservation pheasant farm you know there are birds there which were released the day before you arrived.

The problem that is facing the Indians today is this. There is no overnight accommodation available on the island for hunting. The nearest hotel accommodation to the Christian Island reservation is at Penetanguishene, 11 miles away. Very few hunters who go to Christian Island in the morning and have to go back to Penetang in the evening return to the island a second day. The Indians would like to have the hunters stay for two or three days at a time and they have made efforts to establish a hunters' lodge on the island, for which they could charge accommodation.

I have a letter in my hand written two weeks ago today by Chief Monague of the Beausoleil band of the Ojibway Indians on Christian Island. This letter reads:

Dear Mr. Cowan;

We had funds made available from supplement construction program and approval to erect a hunters' lodge to accommodate pheasant hunters. Some are reluctant to come, even though reservations for hunts had been made, due to the short length of time they would have here, there being no accommodations for them to stay over so that they can have a complete day. Inadequate transportation is also a source of trouble.

Since the approval and funds were made available for the lodge we have been advised that the plan has since been rejected.

I feel as if I am stepping over the heads of the Indians Affairs Branch to reconsider their decision but the Council felt that when we introduced the plans at our Council meeting this would help boost our revenue tremendously from the pheasant and tourist projects.

Please, may we have your assistance through your office to approach the Minister, Hon.

Mr. Arthur Laing, to have the Branch reconsider their ruling to our favour.

The phones are a godsend to us, the best way to contact our families who are off the Reserve. Thanking you.

Yours truly,
Leonard J. Monague
Chief, Beausoleil Band.

I should like to point out that this pheasant farm, which was established originally with the co-operation of Colonel Jones under the previous administration, and which has been encouraged ever since, has been a great source of revenue to the Indians, so much so that they are now considering establishing a wild turkey farm on Hope Island, and are considering putting deer on Beckwith Island. This will give them commercial hunting revenue similar to the revenue received from some of those big game farms in the United States. When this is accomplished we will have wild turkeys available for the purpose of hunting on Hope Island and deer on Beckwith Island. I am certain that these ideas are good and that they will work.

While I am on my feet, and I only want to speak for another minute or two, I should like to suggest to the minister of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources that he give very serious consideration to the acquiring of title to Giant's Tomb Island in the lower Georgian Bay area for the purpose of a national park.

Giant's Tomb Island is the biggest island south of Manitoulin Island and it is at the present time in the hands of an estate. We now have the Beausoleil Island national park, just off from Midland. Giant's Tomb Island lies between this national park and these three Indian reservation islands, Christian Island, Beckwith Island and Hope Island.

The province of Ontario has taken a great forward step under Premier John Robarts and Kelso Roberts, the minister of lands and forests, in acquiring 2,300 acres of land on the south shore of Georgian Bay. There are plans for a provincial park on this shore property, which is opposite Giant's Tomb Island, to be known as Methodist Point provincial park.

• (9:20 p.m.)

With Beausoleil Island already a national park, with the tremendous new provincial park which is coming up and the three Indian reservation islands, the acquisition of Giant's Tomb Island as a national park would be a mighty step forward on the part of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources. The five islands I have named and the new provincial park, Methodist Point Park, will be within 90 miles of metropolitan Toronto with a population of two million. There will not be another large national park within the Dominion of Canada so quickly and easily available to so many people as a national park developed in the lower end of Georgian Bay.

While Giant's Tomb Island is in the hands of the estate of a lady who recently passed away I would urge very, very sincerely that the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources look into the possible acquisition of this property to round out a beautiful system of national and provincial parks on the north side of Simcoe County in lower Georgian Bay. I hope the minister will make certain that the Indians are able to erect their hunters' lodge at this time. The pheasant season is open until March 31 on commercial game farms and then is closed to September 1. I trust the minister will look into my suggestion, of acquiring Giant's Tomb Island for development as a national park, in the same way as we have been operating Beausoleil Island for the past many years.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Nielsen: The government house leader cannot get away without a few remarks from me on the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Mr. Chairman, I should like on behalf of those of us in this party to direct my first words to the excellence, high calibre and dedication of the personnel in government service who go to make up the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources. I have known a good many of the personnel in the department for a number of years now and have for the most part had the most excellent co-operation from these government employees. We do not always agree. We did not always agree when I was sitting on the government side and no less do we find complete agreement now that I am sitting on this side of the house.

I think it appropriate, and I am sure the minister will agree with me, to draw the attention of members of the committee to the fact that the Commissioner of the Yukon Territory is sitting in the Speaker's gallery.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nielsen: I believe also, though I cannot see them from where I am standing, that the three-member advisory committee on finance, all members of the Yukon Legislative Council, are here as well to discuss with departmental officials the estimates of the Territorial government.

My remarks this evening will be directed to a matter that is becoming an increasing problem to the federal government, to the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources and one that is becoming one of increasing concern to the people of the Yukon and Northwest Territories. I was going to make some remarks in connection with the hon. member for Northwest Territories, but I shall refrain from doing that until another time when he is in the chamber to hear them.

I believe the minister will agree with me that one of the most important features of any democratic institution is the amalgamation of the executive with the legislative arm of government. The progress which has been made toward that end in the Yukon Territory, made under the previous government when the Yukon Act was amended to increase the size of the council from five to seven members and to establish the Advisory Committee on Finance of three members selected by themselves from among themselves, was a first step in achieving that executive control which is necessary before any institution can be called democratic.

Our ambition, notwithstanding the brief that has been submitted to the Carrothers Commission by the government of Alberta, notwithstanding the suggestion of Premier Bennett of British Columbia and notwithstanding several representations made by others in this regard, is to achieve full provincial status in due course. We in the Yukon, and I know the feeling is the same in the Northwest Territories, do not wish to become any provincial backyard.

I am sure these sentiments find favour not only with the minister and his officials but with the government as well. Having said that and having recognized, as I know the minister does, that there is a rising tide of resentment in both Territories against the continuing situation whereby people living in these Territories have no direct control over the development of their respective Territories, there must be evolved now some kind of plan which will bring us to the point of autonomy in the near future.

The provisions of the British North America Act, particularly those of section 146, provide the machinery whereby provincial status can be accomplished. In the Yukon we are moving in that direction. We have had over 65 years of history in the development of the institution of government and of an acquaintanceship with the machinery of that kind of government. Those in the Northwest Territories are not so fortunate.

Members of the committee will, I am sure, be aware of the fact that in the Yukon Territory the council is wholly elective, whereas in the Northwest Territories a minority of four holds elective office and an appointed five councillors hold the balance of power. I know this will be changed in the amendments to the Northwest Territories Act to be introduced during this session.

We believe that we in the Territories exist in a state of vassalage. We are ignored in all high level deliberations. It is not good enough to say with respect to the functioning of federal-provincial conferences that we can send an observer. There must be participation. Policies and projects cannot be evolved affecting the development of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories unless there is participation in the design of those policies and projects by those who live in these Territories.

All of the countries of the Commonwealth which now enjoy representative institutions and responsible government have passed through a provisionary period. That has been our history in Canada. That has been the history of any evolution of the territorial form of government through to the state or provincial form of government. There has to be a growth of population; there has to be a certain degree of political training which will prepare emerging areas for the responsibilities of autonomy.

• (9:30 p.m.)

I draw to the attention of the minister and members of this committee, and I do so now because when amendments to the Yukon Act and the Northwest Territories Act come up for discussion—I give the minister fair notice now—it will be our object to seek certain amendments to those pieces of legislation which will, we think, achieve the desired end of accomplishing this planned progress to autonomy in the Yukon and Northwest Territories. The Yukon was established as a separate district as far back as 1895. Well before the western provinces became provinces, the Yukon was already a separate district. In 1889, it was created a separate territory and at that time a council was set up. We have, therefore, evolving for well over 65 years a territorial form of government in which there has been participation in legislative function, and in that function only by the citizens in the Yukon.

My proposals, very briefly set out are these, and they are what the minister can expect as amendments proposed to the Yukon Act. I propose, first, that the administration of justice be passed from federal to territorial control in the Yukon. I am not speaking now of the Northwest Territories. The Yukon has been prepared for some years now for the acceptance of this responsibility, I mean some recent years. There should be set up in the Yukon an attorney general's office with full responsibility for the administration of justice. The remarkable, and I say this without any reflection intended whatever, increase in the thousands of dollars being now paid out to crown counsel and to other officials in connection with the administration of justice in the Yukon would seem to fully justify this proposal.

From a point prior to 1962, where the average for the previous decade was $12,000 to $15,000 a year paid out for this kind of fee and expense, it has increased in the last three years to $25,000 and $35,000 per year. This amount of money will support, and easily support, the establishment and existence of an attorney general's office. It will also allow salary scales to be raised to a level where capable professional people will be attracted. The minister knows the difficulty we have been experiencing in obtaining legal counsel there in the last three years. We have not found anyone yet. The reason is simple, the salary scale is just too low.

Second, I propose that the lands administration function that is now carried out in Ottawa by the minister's department in so far as the Yukon is concerned, be transferred to Whitehorse. It seems a ridiculous situation where you have a territory comprising about 207,000 square miles, and where it takes two, three or more months to obtain title to a 50 by 100 foot building lot. This situation simply is not acceptable any longer. I know the minister will agree with me that the accelerating influx of industrial activity in the Yukon and Northwest Territories, particularly in the Yukon, demands that decisions be made on the spot. Industries that are in the Yukon to set up mining complexes want decisions of a municipal nature now. They do not want to be bogged down by an exchange of correspondence taking months between officials in Whitehorse, officials in Ottawa and themselves. This is where time is consumed.

The next step in the evolution I suggest is increasing the size of the wholly elected council from seven members to 15. I know the minister is going to consider that a rather large jump, and will want some justification for it. Probably his officials will want to test the merit of that suggestion as well. I suggest 15 because of the existence of a state of affairs now where the 7 man council has developed into nothing more nor less than a sort of permanent opposition to the administration. Everything that is proposed in council by the administration is opposed by the council, and it is because there is no division of opinion on the council; it is because there is not that division that is found in a house such as this or in a house such as exists in the democratic institutions of the provinces. You cannot have a division of opinion with seven representatives.

I believe, although it may be more or less than 15, that that kind of division of opinion can only be had if you have a sufficient number of individual representatives on the council so that you are going to have emerge a majority opinion and a minority opinion. The second reason for increasing the size of the council is to attract to the elective offices the calibre of individual which it is so desirable to have form any representative institution. People of that calibre do not wish to run, for several reasons. One of those reasons is that they do not want to have a part in constantly opposing the administration, which is the situation now and will continue to be unless either my suggestion or some equivalent is adopted.

There is another reason for increasing the size of the council. By increasing its size you will allow that kind of flexibility which will permit the extraction from it of at least five representatives from among the members of the council who will be able to accept executive responsibility. I am opposed to any retrograde step or alterations of the suggestion I am making now to increase the council whereby you would appoint members to the council or to the legislative assembly. This principle of appointment denies the very principle of the democratic institution itself. The only argument of which I am aware in support of appointing people to legislative bodies in the state of development in which the territories are now, is that they will provide the expertise necessary and which perhaps the elected members of council in the Northwest Territories. for example, do not have. This is no justification because this expertise can be had by calling before council, as we have been doing in the Yukon for years, the necessary expert advice and testimony, including that of the very capable employees of the government from time to time. As a matter of fact, I can remember when the present member for the Northwest Territories appeared before the council to advise the council on the implementation of hospital insurance in the Yukon.

• (9:40 p.m.)

The next step would be increasing to five the size of the advisory committee, which now consists of three. These five members would be selected by the leader of the majority of the elected council of 15. In other words, you would have emerging from the 15 man elected body, a leader of the majority opinion, whether you called them red and white, Grit and Tory, or Socialist and Social Credit. You would have a split of opinion and the leader of that majority selects from it his advisory committee. There would have to be the clothing of that executive committee with executive responsibility. I do not know whether the minister is shaking his head indicating disagreement with these proposals.

Mr. Laing: I was just wondering what would happen when the friendly little group became invaded by five parties.

Mr. Nielsen: This is a real problem and we discussed the question the minister has raised with several of those in the Yukon. I had anticipated this problem, as had others. But if you think for a moment, no matter how you cut the pie, with 15 members you are not going to wind up with the undesirable situation that you have in this House of Commons. Regardless of how you cut it you are always going to have a majority numerically—and I mean a numerical majority. I am sure the minister will agree with me that even though you might find within a majority group shades of opinion, particularly in the Yukon, you are going to get from 15 members that kind of opinion that is close enough among seven or eight members so as to form a majority opinion. I do not know whether I have put across that idea to the minister, but none the less that is what would happen. There simply is not that kind of probability in the Yukon, as is the case in this house.

As the minister and his officials know, we in the Yukon are now looking after education; that is administered there. The whole forestry function is carried out in the Yukon, even though it is a federal responsibility. The game function is carried out there. We have the welfare function carried out in part there, though the administrative function could all be carried out there. The public works function territorially is carried out there. It is the plan to transfer the administration and the maintenance of the Alaska highway from the federal Department of Public Works to the territorial department of public works, or to highways or the engineering department, in April of 1967. So that these administrative functions are now being, or will be in the near future, carried out in Whitehorse.

It is but a short step to pass executive responsibility to the five-man nucleus of the cabinet that I suggest. At the moment, as the minister knows, the council has only one fiscal prerogative. It has only one control over the executive, and that is to refuse to pass supply. They had the same kind of power in the early days in Manitoba, in 1879, just before the district of Assiniboia became the province of Manitoba. The minister will well recall from his reading of history when Frederick Haultain led a group of dissatisfied Manitobans and refused to pass supply, and the civil service had to go out and cut wood to pay the rent and to eat.

I am not suggesting for a moment that the people of the Yukon will revolt in that fashion, but I am suggesting that the feeling in the Yukon, not only among the general population but among the employees in his own department and territorial civil servants, has now reached the stage of almost anti-imperialism. Our commissioner is resigning. It is embarrassing for me to refer to him when he is sitting above me, but as I understand it, what he is saying is that he cannot drive a team of horses with reins 4,000 miles long.

Because of the role the members of the council have adopted of constantly opposing the administration, this has placed the commissioner in the position of being torn between two responsibilities. He gets static from Ottawa because he cannot keep the council in line, and he gets static from the councillors because he cannot get what they want from Ottawa. So there has to be some kind of coming together of the legislative and executive functions there.

The opponents to this kind of reform will say that he who pays the piper should call the tune.

Mr. McIlraith: Carried.

Mr. Nielsen: Perhaps the minister will bear with me a moment or two. They then advanced the second argument, that there is not sufficient population in the Yukon to justify this kind of reform. I suggest that on both counts these arguments fall to the ground.

There is precedent for the population argument, since in the province of Manitoba you had a white population less than the population today in the Yukon upon formation of the district of Assiniboia into the province of Manitoba. At that time the province of Manitoba was heavily subsidized by federal moneys, yet executive control was passed over. Even today the province of Newfoundland and the province of Prince Edward Island are heavily subsidized by federal funds. The province of Prince Edward Island has a population of 100,000 people, with four members in this house and with Senate representation. There is no Senate representation for the north at all and there is no executive responsibility.

There is the precedent of yesterday and the precedent of today for saying that the fiscal argument should not affect this decision, as well as for saying that the population should not affect the decision. Surely the test should be: Is it or is it not desirable to erect democratic institutions in that part of the country where the people are going to have a real and effective voice in their own local affairs? This is not the case in the Yukon. You can pass resolution after resolution and give opinion after opinion, but this is not the same as evolving policy. A denial of this kind of reform is simply saying to the people of the Yukon that they do not have the kind of individual who is responsible enough to look after the territorial taxpayers' dollar and the Canadian taxpayer's dollar. Yet we are giving them this kind of responsibility now particularly in the field of education. As the minister knows, there is the whole structure of the territorial civil service quite separate and distinct from the federal civil service which now exists in the Yukon and has for many years, and which performs a wholly territorial function.

We bargain for federal moneys—indeed, this is one of the reasons the advisory committee is here now—on the same basis as the provinces. We negotiate separately and sign separately the same kind of federal-provincial fiscal agreements as does any province. We pay taxes in the territory. Granted, we do not pay enough to maintain government and services, but no more so than Manitoba did when it became a province and no more so than Newfoundland and P.E.I. do today. However, there is representation from those provinces on the decision-making bodies which prepare and complete the fiscal agreements with the provinces.

What earthly reason can there be for having no representation when these fiscal decisions are made under the federal government and the territory. Instead of that, what happened was that the federal government said, "Here is the contract; you sign it." That was the end of it. You could not say yes, no, or maybe.

It would be my suggestion, to round out these reforms that I proposed to the minister and to the committee this evening, that these executive responsibilities should be passed in the fields I have mentioned, to the enlarged executive committee. I do not suggest for a moment that water resources, oil and gas or mineral resources should leave the federal jurisdiction, no more than they left the federal jurisdiction when the western provinces were created in 1905.

A period is required during which the elected council must gain the skill of government before the important resource responsibilities pass to it. It took 25 years in the case of the western provinces. In my submission, perhaps it would take as much as three or four sessions of the new kind of assembly that I envisage in the Yukon to be ready to assume the whole resource responsibility.

I am suggesting that the term of the council be extended from the existing three years to four years. I suggest that the council be allowed to set their own indemnity. Surely if we have a representative institution that we are going to clothe with any kind of responsibility, the first kind of responsibility we must entrust to it is that of setting its own indemnities, instead of being told by this house how much they are going to get.

The Chairman: Order, please. I must advise the hon. member that the time allotted for his speech has expired.

Mr. Nielsen: I have another five minutes, if the members of the committee will bear with me?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: Does the committee give unanimous consent to the hon. member for Yukon to continue his speech?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nielsen: I thank the members of the committee for their graciousness in extending to me this time.

I know that the proposal will very likely be made, in the amendments to the Yukon Act to be brought before the house, that the house be asked to set the salary. Let the members of the council set it themselves. They are the ones who are going to have to accept the reaction of the electorate up there. If they set it too high they will not get back into office, and perhaps the taxpayers of the Yukon and Canada will be better off if that decision were left entirely up to the council.

I suggest, too, that the prohibition—and of course this would be a consequential sort of amendment that would follow upon the adoption of the reforms I have suggested—contained in section 24 of the Yukon Act be removed in so far as that provision affects the executive responsibilities in those departments which I have suggested should be transferred to the executive of the enlarged assembly.

Education, public works or engineering, or whatever it might be called, health and welfare, education, justice, revenue and finance, resources, except oil, gas, water and minerals, but including game, tourism, forests, would be transferred. These would pretty well take up the energies of the five man executive committee that I propose.

I urge the minister to take these very broad proposals which are alterable in the main into consideration.

Economic events of recent years in the Yukon should indicate to the minister the tremendous potential of the country itself. Problems that are arising because of this tremendous acceleration are becoming more serious as each day passes, and something has to be done. I believe the reforms I have suggested are reasonable reforms. They are not radical.

I believe that the real control of the federal government representing the taxpayer of Canada as a whole will be the fact that the federal government will retain control over the major resources responsibilities; therein lies the basic economic reality that the Yukon has to offer to the over-all national economic fabric.

When the amendments to the Yukon Act are placed before the house I would very sincerely hope to see incorporated in them the proposals I have put to the minister, or alternatives bearing very close resemblance to them.

[The Chairman.]

May I thank the committee for its indulgence.

[Translation]

Mr. Duquet: Mr. Chairman, I would like to take the opportunity afforded me tonight by the consideration of the estimates of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources to call the attention of the minister (Mr. Laing) to something which is dear to my heart and which, in my opinion, will also open a chapter in our history: it is about a park located in the riding of Quebec East where, in 1935, set foot the discoverer of our country, Jacques Cartier—

Mr. Caouette: In 1535, not 1935.

Mr. Duquet: Yes, that is right, in 1535. Mr. Chairman, I wish to point out to the minister the fact that this spot was made into a public park about ten years ago. Numerous representations have been made by the authorities of the city of Quebec, by public bodies such as the Société St. Jean Baptiste, citizens' leagues and others so that this historical site would be developed at last and steps taken so that the people could commemorate by a monument and visits, the event I mentioned, that is the discovery of Canada.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that it would be appropriate on the occasion of the centennial celebrations to give the development of the Cartier-Brébeuf park all the attention it deserves.

I would also like to point out to the minister, as I said before, that many representations were made over a number of years.

I remember that, during the 1958 election campaign, the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) paid a visit to that park and I remember also that he definitely promised that within a few years or months, the park would be built.

I would like to believe, Mr. Chairman, that there was no ill-will on the part of the present Leader of the Opposition, who later became Prime Minister, but I must point out just the same that nothing was done and the park is still waiting to be developed.

I call the attention of the minister to that matter and I dare hope that, when his next estimates are considered, or even before, he will have found it possible to do something to realize that project—

Mr. Caouette: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Duquet: —which the people of Quebec city, particularly the people of the riding of Quebec East, hold so dear.

Mr. Caouette: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Duquet: Mr. Chairman, I do not think—

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman—

[English]

On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I call it ten o'clock.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, could we not agree to sit, and could we not ask the hon. member to agree, so that we may get some further estimates completed tonight. I believe that is the wish of hon. members.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

• (10:00 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, if I understand correctly, the various house leaders have agreed that the estimates of this department should be passed as soon as possible.

We have been discussing item 1 since 8.15 this evening. During that time we have heard three speeches by Conservative members.

Now, if the understanding is that only the Conservatives are to be heard, well, for my part, since it is quite enough for me to have to listen to them all day, I do not see why I should be forced to listen to them all night.

Therefore, I object to our discussing those estimates any longer. When the Conservatives are able to understand that we are also entitled to voice our opinions, to say what we have to say, then we shall be more understanding and co-operative than I am now.

At this time, Mr. Chairman, I should like to draw to your attention the fact that it is ten o'clock.

[English]

Mr. McIlraith: I wonder whether we could not agree to go on further tonight with these estimates in an effort to finish them tomorrow. The situation will be quite serious if we do not finish them tomorrow. I think it is the consensus among most hon. members that it is possible to do this. I know that at these times there is always someone in the house who feels that someone else should not have taken up the time of the committee. But after all, this is a free society and all members have their rights. So perhaps we could show a little forbearance and try to go on. I wonder whether the hon. member for Villeneuve would consider permitting the committee to continue?

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, would the leader of the house state how much extra time he requires? He has already been granted five minutes.

[English]

Mr. McIlraith: I think the government time required would be less than one minute—not even sixty seconds.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: May we now have the assurance, Mr. Chairman, that Conservatives will not cause any further delay during consideration of these estimates?

[English]

Mr. Knowles: Members of the committee will not be surprised when I say I share the view of the hon. member for Villeneuve. But I also acknowledge the point made by the leader of the house, that it would be desirable to get along a little if we can. I think the leader of the house might be able to exercise some persuasion on the hon. member for Villeneuve if we could reach some kind of agreement as to how much we propose to do and how long we intend to sit. I think what bothers us most about these overtime sittings is the open-endedness we sometimes experience.

An hon. Member: It is the open mouth, not the open end.

Mr. Knowles: If we could finish up this department in half an hour or forty minutes I think it might be possible to sit on, but I do not think the minister should ask for any other department tonight.

Mr. Starr: I should like to speak for the official opposition. We have 97 members as compared with nine or 21. Consequently there are obviously members who wish to speak on particular items. However, if the clock is not seen until twelve o'clock we are prepared to finish this department, the Department of Labour, the Department of Citizenship and Immigration and the Department of Fisheries.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Starr: If the hon. member for Villeneuve does not want to listen to us, Mr. Chairman, he can go home.

Mr. McIlraith: Could we agree that the hon. member for Villeneuve be heard for whatever time he wishes on this department—or a member of his party, whomever he wishes. I think he should be heard now. I would like to get through this department and the other departments the house leader for the official opposition has indicated. If that is agreeable to the other parties, I think we should have some understanding that the official opposition would curtail their speakers within limits, because they have had a very good evening.

Mr. Knowles: I think the house leader would make more headway in his negotiations if he would confine his wishes to this one department.

Mr. Starr: I still repeat, Mr. Chairman, that in our responsibility and in looking over the estimates, we are prepared to pass the estimates of this department, the Department of Labour, the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, and the Department of Fisheries tonight before twelve o'clock.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Chairman, we in this group are prepared to go ahead and carry on with the estimates of this particular department. I would suggest that we do so and see how we get along with the estimates now before us, and then proceed to decide whether or not we should go ahead with any further estimates.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, the aim of the Conservatives is to force us to stay here all night to listen to them. I have always maintained that it is ten o'clock. We have to put up with them during the day, but we do not want to hear them at night. Mr. Chairman, would the government leader give us the assurance that the estimates of those four departments will be passed before midnight?

[English]

Mr. McIlraith: I would think, to the extent that any one person here can, that I can give that assurance. Certainly there will be no hold up on this side, and the official opposition have made their position clear, that they would pass those departments. I hesitate to bring this up, but a serious situation is developing if we do not finish by Friday night.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, could the house leader tell us whether we shall only hear Conservatives, because they are 95—they are not 95 at present—but will they be the only ones to have the right to speak here or will the Chair recognize us also?

[Mr. McIlraith.]

[English]

Mr. McIlraith: No. I am quite sure I would have the unanimous consent of the house to ensure that the official opposition would not take all the time between now and twelve o'clock.

Mr. Churchill: Would you give us assurance that only the ministers will speak on your side of the house.

Mr. McIlraith: I think the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre can safely leave that problem with the government house leader.

The Chairman: Shall item 1 carry?

Mr. Peters: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Kindt: Mr. Chairman, I have five minutes—

The Chairman: Order, please. Do I understand that the hon. member for Timiskaming has called it ten o'clock?

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I think I can speak for the hon. member for Timiskaming. The reason he has tried to call it ten o'clock is because the government house leader has showed no interest in our suggestion that we try to finish this department before considering anything else. He is asking too much.

Mr. Starr: The government house leader is not bootlegging any departments in. He is trying to carry out his responsibility, and we have offered to co-operate with him by passing those departments which I have enumerated. At your end we are getting no co-operation in the conduct of the business of this country.

Mr. McIlraith: I have a right to point out that I am not engaging in any bootlegging activities. The hon. member is quite right, if by that he means that I am trying to get departments through, because I know perfectly well what the consequences will be if these estimates are not passed.

• (10:10 p.m.)

Because we are well aware of the consequences if these estimates are not completed, I am quite sure it is not the wish of hon. members in any part of this house, who think about this, to needlessly delay items that can be carried. The consequence of a failure to carry these items would be an inability to pay money to people in this country who need the money and use it for their daily living requirements.

Mr. Chairman, I have hesitated to bring that fact before the house. I have not mentioned it publicly before because I thought the situation was well understood by all hon. members. I am sure most hon. members understand this condition, and I mentioned it in the spirit of goodwill so that we could arrive at a solution which is fair to all members of the committee, and will allow us to get on with our work.

The Chairman: Is the committee agreeable to the suggestion?

Mr. Peters: No, Mr. Chairman, it is ten o'clock.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report progress, and ask leave to sit again later this day.

The Chairman: Shall I rise, report certain resolutions and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house or later this day, as the case may be?

An hon. Member: Later this day.

The Chairman: Is it agreed that we should request leave to sit again later this day?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill):

That this house continue to sit this day until twelve o'clock midnight.

Mr. Fairweather: Now we will see the Socialists squirm.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It has been moved by Mr. McIlraith, seconded by Mr. Pickersgill, that under the terms of Standing Order 6(2) this house continue to sit until twelve o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: This is not a debatable motion.

Mr. Knowles: If this motion had been of an open-ended character we would have objected, but since the minister has proposed—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles: Since the minister has proposed—

Mr. Churchill: It is not debatable.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I do not have to sit down because of these cat-calls.

Mr. Churchill: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. This motion is not debatable.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The motion now before the house is not debatable.

Mr. Knowles: Even though it is not debatable, I could object to it; but I was announcing the reason we are not objecting.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. House again in committee of supply, estimates of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources, vote No. 1.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF NORTHERN AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL RESOURCES

Administration and general—

1. Departmental administration including a contribution to the Canadian Council of Resource Ministers in an amount equal to one-half the aggregate contribution of the provinces but not exceeding $55,000 and $145,000 for grants for northern research and for northern scientific research expeditions, $1,817,000.

Mr. Kindt: Mr. Chairman, we have taken almost 20 minutes to decide what has already happened in the past 10 to 15 minutes. I am quite willing to cut my speech down to about five minutes.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Kindt: There are a number of points that I must bring to the attention of the minister because my constituents have asked me to do so; otherwise I would sit down and say nothing.

The Chairman: Order, please. I would ask the hon. member kindly to come to the substance of vote No. 1 immediately.

Mr. Kindt: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I was just ready to proceed with my remarks on this vote. In essence I want to return to the question of national parks, and particularly Waterton Lakes. Nothing has yet been said to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources about the people of Waterton Lakes.

We want to bring out some policies asked for by the people of Waterton Lakes. The people there are asking for winter sports to be introduced in the park. I know the minister has said something about unsanitary conditions, and so on, but they are not troubled with this matter at Jasper or any of the other parks. Therefore why should it be necessary to use this reason as a roadblock for preventing winter sports taking place at Waterton Lakes?

The people of Waterton Lakes are asking that another amenity be provided in the park. When the surrounding farmers and others visit the park on Saturday or Sunday they would like to be able to play a game of baseball and then enjoy the beauties of the park. They are unable to play baseball because there is no diamond and no accommodation for them. Many resolutions which have been passed and submitted to the parks department have fallen upon deaf ears.

The third point I wish to make deals with the policy of this government as stated by, the minister with respect to the security of the people who live in the townsite of Waterton Lakes Park. We held a meeting there last fall—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. If some hon. members wish to hold conversations perhaps they could do so in an undertone so that hon. members who wish to listen to the hon. member who now has the floor will be able to do so.

Mr. Kindt: I was saying, Mr. Chairman, that we attended a meeting of the Chamber of Commerce in Waterton Lakes last year, which the hon. member for Lethbridge and myself attended. The people in attendance were above all concerned, and deeply concerned, about the policies of this minister and the government with respect to the security of the residents of that park. The people of this area think there is something drastically wrong with the attitude of the minister and this government with respect to this wilderness area.

It seems as though the government wants to get rid of the residents in the park. These people have made investments there and are enjoying their stay, but they want some security. There is no reason on God's green earth why these people should not have security. What is more, whether this government thinks so or not, with the clamour there is from the people, they are going to get this security.

I have lived adjacent to this wilderness area and I know something about it. We have a wilderness area extending 2,000 miles north. You can fly over that country, as I know the minister has, look down and see a tremendous lake with nothing more than a goose on it. You can do the same thing in the national parks. Certainly we want to preserve the naturalness of natural parks, but we also want to have people living in townsites, with security, in order to give service to the people coming from the outside to visit those parks. This is all I intend to say at this time. I hope the minister will call a meeting of representatives of this house, bring in witnesses and get at the underlying principles to smooth out government policy with respect to these park areas.

Mr. Simpson: I realize the committee expects everyone to be as brief as possible. I did have quite a number of things to take up while the estimates of this department were being discussed, but I will try to be brief. I want to point out one thing before I launch into my remarks. I have heard observations in the last three or four days, we heard them last night from the acting house leader and again tonight, to the effect that the government is anxious to get these estimates through. I also heard two people the other evening on the local television station, I believe Colin Parker and Mr. Tom Earle, say that if the Conservative opposition continued the filibuster the civil servants would not be paid.

I should like to say for the record at this time that if the government had handled the business of the country properly, if we had come back last September, as promised by the Prime Minister, we would have had time to scrutinize these estimates in the way the people of Canada expect us to do.

I should like to make a few comments with regard to the Roads to Resources policy. I know the minister or the chairman might say this Roads to Resources program has now been put under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. In answer to a question by the hon. member for Mackenzie, the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources directed the question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys who said, more or less, that a number of the provinces had not yet spent their allotment under this program.

Now, in the last session we were asking questions concerning the plans of the government for extending or re-establishing the Roads to Resources program. We were told at that time the government intended to come up with a different type of program which would be much better. If the program they have evolved is the program for the Northwest Territories, if that is the one they have substituted for the Roads to Resources program, I should like to suggest to the minister it will be of no help whatever to the people in the northern parts of the provinces. These people were grateful to the previous administration for inaugurating the Roads to Resources program. The Minister without Portfolio mentioned he thought this was one of the better programs that had been introduced in the last few years. I certainly agree with him. When we do not get an answer from the government regarding any extension or re-establishment, I wonder whether the Prime Minister has probably convinced his colleagues in the cabinet that, as he said once before, this would be nothing but roads from igloo to igloo.

I do not want to keep harping on that statement of the Prime Minister, but he did make it. If we do not hear something from the government fairly soon, the people in the northern parts of the provinces will become convinced that possibly this is the attitude of the government. I hope that the minister or his colleagues in the cabinet will study this situation, because if you talk to mining people and lumbermen and people in the tourist industry, they will tell you, if it is not already realized by those on the front benches, just how much necessity there is for a continuation of this program.

I want to speak very briefly on a subject which may not seem of too much importance to the committee tonight, with everyone being in a hurry, but it relates to one aspect of northern affairs, the Canadian wildlife service. I have discussed several matters with the director, Dr. Munro, who has been very helpful. At the present time we have this huge development coming along in Manitoba, the Nelson River power project. We have recently had other power projects developed in Manitoba. I feel, as do all members in the game and fish associations as well as interested persons in Manitoba, that a very thorough look should be taken by the Canadian wildlife service at the wildlife habitat in the Nelson River area. Correspondence has passed back and forth between the minister and various game and fish associations, and the minister has advised these associations that wildlife in the provinces, and renewable resources, come within the jurisdiction of the provinces. However, I would point out that under the Migratory Birds Convention Act the federal government has a distinct responsibility.

On looking at the estimates I see that the amount of money allotted to the Canadian wildlife service is very small, which means it is not always possible to do the work they feel they would like to do. Therefore I would suggest to the minister that he take a look at this with his officials to see whether it would be possible under the migratory birds treaty for the Canadian wildlife service to send men into this area to make sure that the wildlife habitat as far as geese and other migratory birds are concerned is well protected. I would ask the minister to ensure, particularly in view of the diversion of the Churchill River into the Nelson, which might result in lower water levels, that nothing will be done to disturb to a great extent, or disturb to any extent if possible, the wildlife habitat in the area.

The wildlife service has admitted that the watershed of the Nelson River in its northern region is recognized as a great potential geese habitat, something which must be protected for the benefit of future generations. However, I am not going to spend the time tonight on this subject, although I should like to; as I said, I do realize the situation.

• (10:30 p.m.)

I should like to spend a few minutes on some of the problems facing the Indian people, not only of the area which I represent but of northern Canada. Indian affairs, as I understand it, come under the Minister of Northern Affairs, with the new addition I believe of "Indian affairs." I know that the officials of the Indian affairs branch over the years have been spending countless hours trying to come up with some solution to the tremendous problems which face our Indian people. I do not profess to have the solution but I do feel that I have some constructive suggestions to make and I feel that the time is long past due when some of those programs should be adapted. In the area which I have the honour to represent there are 17 Indian reservations comprising some 13,000 or 14,000 people of Indian blood. They are still living on reservations. Over the last ten years that population has increased to its present figure from 7,000 to 8,000.

As the people in the Indian affairs branch realize, if something is not done about their problem soon, it is going to become much greater within the next 15, 20 or 25 years. People in the Indian affairs branch realize that something should be done, but sufficient money is not provided. I know that the director of the branch, Mr. Battle has a genuine interest in the welfare of the people, as have many of his officials. I also know that he is handicapped by insuficient money to spend. One thing which would not cost too much money is for those people who wish to remain there—and it is my intention to see that those who wish to remain there shall do so,—to have their conditions improved as quickly as possible. If the government keeps its promises, it will improve the situation of those Indian people. We have glaring examples in my constituency—

An hon. Member: Let us see some co-operation.

Mr. Simpson: —of situations which do not compare very well with some conditions which prevail in other reservations.

An hon. Member: It was twenty to twelve the other night.

Mr. Simpson: I would suggest to the minister that one of the most urgent considerations is to provide Indian people with electric power. I know that this seems to be almost impossible. I can tell the minister that in the province of Manitoba the provincial agency in charge of power has the equipment on hand, is prepared to go in and do those things, and do it now. It is just a matter of getting some financial assistance from the Indian Affairs Branch. I think the minister should look at the situation to provide financial assistance as quickly as possible, because if this is not done these people are going to be without these services for many, many years.

I hear people at the far end of the house and on the government side saying, "Let us get on with the estimates." However, I can assure those hon. members that I am not standing up here for any political reason. I am standing up here and speaking for 14,000 Indian people in northern Manitoba who sent me down to speak for them. I should like, in conclusion, to say to the minister that on some reservations conditions are quite good. For instance at Island Lake, conditions may be better, because it is the location of an agency. At Island Lake they have a saw mill; they have inaugurated a net hanging project which last year brought in between $6,000 to $10,000 in revenue for the people.

The people can do these things themselves under supervision. They instituted upgrading courses. They are very successful and in general they have a well run reservation. On some other reservations, nothing is done for them. No guidance is given to them, possibly for lack of funds. I say that improvements to these reservations could be made for very little money. Instructors must be sent in to guide these people. In more favourable circumstances these people could lead a much better life.

There is one final point I wish to make. It relates to the designated areas and I hope the minister will not say that I should be raising this subject with the Department of Industry. The area of which I have been speaking is one which I have been trying to get the minister concerned to recognize as being a designated area for two or three months. He tells me it does not meet the criteria—that the unemployment figures do not correspond with the figures which are acceptable.

I implore the minister to have his officials check with the Unemployment Insurance Commission. He will find that unemployment officers nearest the areas where these people live and where they would have to register are so far away that there are no figures whatsoever. On my way to Ottawa at the beginning of this session I ran into two people each of whom was willing to go into northern Manitoba and put up a fish processing plant costing in the neighbourhood of $200,000. They would put the plants up tomorrow if this was a designated area. Skilled labour is not necessary in this kind of work. The Indian people could do it. Each of these plants would provide work for 60 of the Indian people—they would need no more than a week's training.

I trust the minister will have his officials look into this matter as quickly as possible to see whether this area of northern Manitoba could not be declared a designated area. Whatever this might cost, the benefits would far surpass that cost.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I should like to co-operate also with the Conservatives in stretching out the debate as much as possible so that midnight comes fast.

We are now studying supply for the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources. I should like to know if the imbroglio between Ottawa and Quebec, with regard to the Quebec Eskimos, has been settled; if the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing) has complied with the requests, made time and time again, by hon. René Lévesque, that Quebec be given jurisdiction over the Eskimos in Northern Quebec? We should like the minister to tell us who has jurisdiction over Eskimo affairs in that part of Canada, namely in Northern Quebec.

A lot has been said about national parks these past few hours. Under that item, the department will spend this year $13,551,000. A number of national parks are listed from all parts of western and eastern Canada: Banff, Elk, Jasper, Kootenay, Revelstoke and Glacier; Prince Albert, Mount Riding, Waterton Lakes, Yoho. But there is hardly any mention of expenditures for another park, although it does come under jurisdiction of the federal government, I mean the Gatineau park in the Ottawa area.

I appreciate the fact that the department has already spent large amounts on the development of Gatineau park to accommodate tourists, but there are in the Gatineau, as most hon. members who have visited the area know, unlimited possibilities.

The population of the Ottawa-Hull area is almost as large as the population of Saskatchewan, that of Alberta or of the Maritime provinces taken together. This park contains beautiful lakes which should get more attention from federal authorities. I point out to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources that his department should pay more attention to the Gatineau park and develop more facilities there for tourists who come not only from Ottawa and the area, from eastern and western Canada, but also from the United States.

If the department can spend $13.5 million on national parks, it seems to me it would be possible to take part of that amount or increase it, if the minister decides to do so and the cabinet agrees, in order to improve the Gatineau park.

In another field, the minister is doubtless aware of a plan put forward by a Sudbury engineer, Mr. Kierans. This engineer established a realistic plan to feed the great lakes from James Bay, Hudson Bay and the Arctic Ocean through the Harricanaw river crossing Chapleau riding and part of Villeneuve riding, to raise the levels of the great lakes. This is a vast project involving hundreds of millions of dollars, but the minister surely knows that the United States has to raise the level of lake Michigan for instance, on the shores of which stands the great city of Chicago.

It would certainly be to Canada's advantage to make a thorough study of the project conceived by Mr. Kierans, the engineer, which, if it were carried out, would provide for a wonderful development all along the Harricanaw river and even along James Bay, into which this river empties. Then, it seems to me, Canada could export that water to the great lakes and the United States, while helping those Canadian cities which, at the present time, are complaining about the fact the water level of the great lakes is getting lower and lower each year.

Mr. Chairman, those were the few remarks I had to make and I hope that item 1 will be passed right away.

• (10:40 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I will be very brief. This arises out of a statement made by the minister the day before yesterday, which appears in a sentence on the right hand column at page 1948 of Hansard. This is a part of what he said:

> ...I shall later, but I thought it was an unusual brief because I find that with respect to the total park space in the provinces, combined federal and provincial parks, the province of Alberta is in third position because it has not provided provincial parks to any degree whatsoever.

Mr. Chairman, that statement is not only wrong, it is unfair and a callous and arrogant disregard for the viewpoint of the administration of the province of Alberta. The minister knows very well that all the Rocky Mountain area along the continental divide in Alberta is national park area, except for a very small piece in the Crowsnest Pass. How in the name of common sense can we have provincial parks where there already are federal parks? That statement is wrong because there is more national park area in the province of Alberta than in all the rest of Canada put together. I intended to get the exact figure, but I think there are more than 60 provincial parks in Alberta. There are five provincial parks in my own riding and that is not unusual in respect of other ridings. That same pattern is followed from the United States border to well north of Edmonton.

Mr. Chairman, the minister's statement is one of the most unfair and incorrect that have been made in this house. Let me suggest to him that this is not the kind of attitude the government and the people of Alberta expect from federal cabinet ministers, if there is going to be any kind of co-operation in evolving policies in respect of national parks which will be satisfactory to the people of Alberta.

I could say a great deal more on this subject but I will leave my remarks at that, because of the pressure of time.

Mr. Laing: Mr. Chairman, I must answer those remarks at once. The hon. member by his own words has confirmed what I said as recorded on the page from which he quoted. He pointed out that 60 per cent of national park acreage in Canada is located in the province of Alberta. What I said was that the combined area of national-provincial parks in the province of Alberta was only in third place, notwithstanding the fact that 60 per cent of national parklands are in Alberta. The point is that Alberta has given very little attention to the establishment of provincial parks. That is all I said.

Mr. Olson: That is the statement to which I took exception.

Mr. Laing: If that sort of factual statement on my part justifies the type of language used by the hon. member toward me I regret it very much indeed.

Mr. Olson: That is exactly the statement I objected to. The minister claims that the province of Alberta, and I use his own words:

—has not provided provincial parks to any degree whatsoever.

He was referring to the province of Alberta.

Mr. Laing: That is absolutely correct.

Mr. Olson: That is absolutely not the case. As I said to the minister a few minutes ago, there are more than 60 provincial parks in Alberta. There are five in my riding alone and that is not unusual. On the contrary, that is the pattern right across the southern half of Alberta. In fact, in so far as there is any density of population, these parks extend to somewhere north of Edmonton.

Mr. Chairman, I should like again to state that it is impossible for the provincial government to establish provincial parks when the federal government has all this so-called wilderness area where the topography is suitable for parks. In my opinion, and in the opinion of most of the citizens of Alberta, Alberta has made good use of the land which is suitable for parks and which is not already a part of national parks. When the minister says that the province has not provided any provincial parks to any degree whatsoever he is simply not being very careful with the facts.

National Parks—

15. Administration, operation and maintenance including wildlife resources conservation and development, administration of the Migratory Birds Convention Act and payments to land owners who maintain migratory bird habitat in accordance with agreements entered into on terms and conditions approved by the Governor in Council, payment to the National Battlefields Commission for the purposes and subject to the provisions of an Act respecting the National Battlefields at Quebec and grants as detailed in the estimates, $13,551,000.

Mr. Loney: Mr. Chairman, before vote 15 is carried I should like to put a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. My question deals with historic sites. In order that the minister will realize the significance of the question I wish to review briefly to my correspondence with the department. While my question is directed to the minister and, as I have said, concerns historic sites, I would point out that the correspondence dates back to August 21, 1963, and was directed at that time to Mr. W. F. Whitman, General Manager of the Real Estate Branch, Department of Transport. At that date I inquired as to the future usage of the lighthouse site at Point Clarke in the county of Bruce. On September 3, 1963, my letter was acknowledged and I was provided with this information:

The lightstation has now been converted to an automatic light thus making the lightkeeper's dwelling and the 2.13 acres of land and land covered by water forming the site, surplus to departmental requirements.

A number of people have shown interest in acquiring this property as well as the National Historic Sites Division of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources and no action will be taken towards the disposal of this property until we hear from that department as to whether or not this site is required as a national historic site.

The letter closes by saying:

Should it develop that this land is not required as an historic site, then in keeping with departmental policy, as a number of parties have shown interest in the property, we will arrange to have it advertised for sale by public tender.

That letter is signed by the minister of the department, George J. McIlraith. In November of 1963 I made representation on behalf of the Bruce County Historical Association to learn what had happened with regard to the possibility of this property being put up for sale and disposed of, being aware of the fact that the department thought it could possibly be acquired as an historic site. This representation was acknowledged on December 10, 1963. At that time I inquired into this matter on behalf of the society and was provided with information concerning the structure of the lighthouse. To show the significance of this historic site I wish to quote this paragraph:

> Unfortunately no plans or detailed descriptions are available since the structure was erected in 1859. However, we are able to inform you that it has a masonry exterior and is 35′ × 22′ × 12′ high to the eaves.

On August 13, 1964, I again inquired of the minister what decision had been reached relative to the disposal of the department's holding at Point Clarke. On August 18 my correspondence was acknowledged and the minister stated:

> As previously mentioned to you, the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources has indicated an interest in this property for a national historic site, and I am now informed that we are still awaiting a reply from that department before a decision can be reached. You may rest assured that we will keep you posted on any future developments.

On September 30, 1964, in answer to a question which I placed on the order paper I received this reply:

> The Historic Sites and Monuments Board of Canada has been asked to study this matter at its next meeting to be held this October. After the Board has presented its recommendations on the historical and architectural significance of the Point Clarke lighthouse, the minister will be in a position to reach the decision.

That was September 30, 1964, and I still have not received the decision.

On February 17, 1965, I placed this question on the order paper:

> Did the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources arrive at a decision regarding the acquisition of the Point Clarke light site for a national historic site when the historic sites and monuments board met in October?

The minister replied as follows:

> The historic sites and monuments board of Canada have not made any recommendations with respect to the Point Clarke light site.

Since we are now into 1966, Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister once again if a decision will soon be handed down?

Mr. Thompson: There are two comments I have to make under this item, one of which is related to general policy of the present government in relation to national parks. I just fail to understand the arrogance and determination—there are no other words to use—of the government to impose upon the people who live in these parks a policy which does not make sense, rhyme or reason to me as well as a lot of other people. The type of answer we have had here tonight, is indicative of this. The only thing we can say is that the minister is determined to completely end the existence of his party in the province of Alberta, because this is exactly what is going to take place. It is not just those who belong to the political party to which I belong, but the members of his own party and the citizens of the province of Alberta as a whole, who feel this way. The claim of the administration that they are retaining the wilderness of Canada for the good of the citizens of Canada is something we all accept and recognize as being correct.

But the park area should be developed in a logical way not only for wilderness beauty, and to deny such development is something that does not make sense. All of us who know Switzerland realize that the beauty of Switzerland has been enhanced by the development that has taken place in that country. As long as we have the natural beauty that we have in our own lofty mountain areas, anything less than the development of all aspects of them would be sheer folly. To separate, shall I say, the sport of skiing and other seasonal sports that quite logically fits within the natural setting of the mountainous area we have, is to deny the recreational facilities that are second to none in the entire world.

The attitude in regard to the proposed establishment of the winter Olympics in 1972 is indicative of a shortsighted, narrow minded policy. There is the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway going through Banff national park and the Canadian National going through Jasper. There is No. 1 highway going up the centre of Banff park and also an important highway going through Jasper. There is no reason why there cannot be an area on both sides of the highway and railroad reserved for commercial development, thus giving the people who live within the townsites confidence that we will adopt a system which will allow those who live in the area to serve the tourists and other essential services.

There is no reason why facilities cannot be developed for recreation in the summer and recreation in the winter. There is no reason why the hundreds of square miles of wilderness cannot be preserved in its natural beauty for other types of recreation that attracts so many tourists to the area. It seems to me that any logical park policy has to be adapted to three purposes, so far as the Rocky Mountain parks are concerned. First of all, the rights of the citizens who live within the park to service the facilities within the park, cannot be denied. These Canadian citizens earn a living that way. They are not just a lot of promoters and money makers either. They are Canadian citizens with just as much right to make a living in this part of Canada as anybody in any other part of the country. So let us be logical and give them an area where the commercial development which is required in parks can be situated. Let us provide facilities for sport and general recreation which is required by the Canadian people, and at the same time let us preserve the natural beauty of our wilderness areas. We not only can provide the type of recreation and sport facilities and essential business operations which are necessary, but we can enhance the beauty of our parks as well if we act properly.

I will be saying more about this in the estimates for next year, but I do want to bring to the attention of the minister just one example of administrative inefficiency which does take place sometimes in our parks. Rather than speak on the matter myself I should like to quote a letter which condenses the particular problem much more adequately than I could express it. It is written by the pilot of aircraft CF-NTS who, on February 26, had occasion to fly into the Banff townsite expecting to land at the airstrip there which is adjacent to the town, bringing with him certain personages on a charter flight. He says:

> Before making the flight I checked with the Department of Transport and they were unable to give me any information as to the runway and its condition. I then placed a telephone call to the Parks Department number given to me by the Department of Transport and there was no answer, so I then telephoned the R.C.M. Police in Banff, and they informed me that the strip was plowed, but only to a width of 45 feet and 1500 feet long. I, therefore, took off on this flight with three passengers on board, and before landing I flew down low over the strip and from my observation it looked safe to land. Upon landing I found that the strip had only been plowed to approximately 20 feet, and that on the right hand side of the strip there was a ridge of snow approximately 3 feet high. I further wish to state that at the end of the supposedly plowed runway, there was an airplane stuck in the snow, and that evening some seven of us pushed it out and it was taxied into a little small alcove near the trees. At this time I observed approximately half of the runway had been plowed, and the other half just partially plowed. I deemed this strip so dangerous that I had my passengers get a U-Drive and drive into Calgary. I was lucky enough by the grace of God to get off this strip by myself after dropping my three passengers, their baggage, and everything in the airplane that could be taken loose.

Is this the kind of service which is rendered by our national parks in servicing an essential airstrip, essential both at this time of the year as well as in summer. It seems to me that something better than this should be given those who wish to use this type of facility, certainly better than appears to be the case here. I trust that the minister will investigate this matter and see that something similar does not happen again.

Mr. Loney: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the minister would assure me that immediate consideration will be given to the question I put. I also have a similar file on a property of the department at the Griffiths Island lightsite.

I do not wish to hold up the estimates but I should like the assurance of the minister that he will meet with me and discuss this matter.

Mr. Laing: Mr. Chairman, I regret very much to hear from the hon. member that I have written him such a large number of indecisive letters. I will look at this question first thing in the morning and will try not to write him any more indecisive letters.

Northern administration—

45. Administration, operation and maintenance, including grants and contributions as detailed in the estimates, authority to make recoverable advances for services performed on behalf of the government of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon Territory, authority to sell electric power and fuel oil (and to provide services in respect thereof), in accordance with terms and conditions approved by the Governor in Council, to private consumers in remote locations where alternative local sources of supply are not available and to authorize the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources to provide in respect of Eskimo commercial activities for the instruction and supervision of Eskimos, the furnishing of materials, the purchase of finished goods and, notwithstanding any other Act, the sale of such finished goods, $27,008,700.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I have looked at the details of this item, and I am interested in the $27 million which is being spent on Eskimo commercial activities for the instruction and supervision of Eskimos, the furnishing of materials, the purchase of finished goods and, notwithstanding any other act, the sale of such finished goods.

Some time ago we had an opportunity to speak on this matter in connection with Eskimo handicrafts, and I was pleased at that time that the minister was willing to work toward the establishment of a copyright for native handicrafts in Canada. That gives some Canadian distinction, apart from the merits that such things are sold as native handicrafts.

While I do not want to ask the minister about what has been done and how extensive this is, I am as concerned as he is with problems that came out of the meeting one or two years ago when a meeting was held with some officials of northern affairs with respect to the problem of the development of the east shore of Hudson Bay, with relation to the control and monopoly of many of the activities of Eskimos by the Hudson Bay Company. The charges made at that time that the Department of Northern Affairs was really not acting on behalf of the Eskimos but was acting as a buffer between the Hudson Bay agents and the Eskimo population bothered me, because it seemed that the result was that the Eskimo got low prices for handicraft which was sold for much higher prices, and the middleman got all the profit.

With respect to Indians, the situation in my area, where there are not many, is that they do produce a small volume of goods. In northern Ontario I know that there are instances were a municipality has made a contribution which has resulted in a much more formal development of this handicraft business. In Quebec, close to my area, there is a fairly large Indian reservation making and selling merchandise, mainly outside the tourist industry. This is a fairly haphazard type of occupation. The Indian does not get much by it; the people who buy it pay more than it is worth.

I should like to ask the minister this question: How successful has the minister been in the establishment of a copyright for Indian and Eskimo handicrafts? How successful has been the operation of policing this type of designation. Second, is the department in a position to offer assistance to Indians in a similar manner to that in which it is offered to Eskimos?

• (11:10 p.m.)

Personally I am very pleased that the department has taken this interest in the handicrafts of the Indian and Eskimo population, which have benefited them in some areas considerably. I think it has done something for the market in other parts of the country as well. This is a worth-while effort. It has created between the Department of Northern Affairs and the Eskimo an atmosphere which has long been desirable. Many more Eskimos than formerly are now well disposed toward the department. An acquaintance of mine from northern Quebec tells me that if a vote were taken now they would be in favour of the "big government" rather than the "little government". I know the minister would regard this as an accomplishment.

I realize it would be more difficult to carry on a program of this kind among the Indian population because so many of the Indians are working in other industries as well. However, in the area I have in mind a great deal of this industry is of the cottage type. I hope therefore that the minister will give some consideration to extending this scheme to the Indian population in borderline areas where they might be able to profit from it.

When the estimates of the department next come before us I hope we shall see in the details a better estimation of the work the department has done, work which I believe has been successful and for which it should be given full credit.

Mr. Laing: I think the hon. member's intervention is worthy of a reply. We were successful with respect to the Eskimo carvings. We took time by the forelock. It will not be so easy in the case of Indian work, but we intend to try. Some of these Eskimo carvings were put in the name of the Queen so that should imitations arrive in this country it might be a matter for the Secretary of State for External Affairs to deal with. It will not be so easy in the case of Indian work, but we certainly intend to make an investigation to see whether we can provide some protection and set a standard whereby Canadian buyers will know they are buying the genuine article. We shall do as much as we can to support this effort.

DEPARTMENT OF CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

Indian affairs—

15. Administration, operation and maintenance including expenditures on works on other than federal property, grants, contributions and special payments including those specified in the sub-vote titles in the estimates, recoverable expenditures under agreements entered into with the approval of the governor in council with the governments of the provinces and territories and with local school boards in respect of social assistance to persons residing on Indian reserves other than Indians and the education in Indian schools of children other than Indian children, authority to make grants and contributions pursuant to agreements entered into with the governments of the provinces or the territories or other groups or authorities approved of by the governor in council for the provision of welfare and other services to Indians and to authorize the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration to provide, in respect of Indian commercial activities, for the instruction and supervision of Indians, the furnishing of materials, the purchase of finished goods and, notwithstanding any other Act, the sale of such finished goods, $60,261,600.

Mr. Barnett: As all members of the committee realize, this particular item appears in an unusual position. It is listed under the estimates of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration. Perhaps for that very reason it should not go unnoticed. Though I do not intend to speak at any length on this matter, let me say that this administrative change to another area of the operations of the federal government may in the long run prove to have been a valuable move.

One of the results would be that the whole situation in respect of the Indian people in the country will receive an increased measure of attention in line with what I think has been a dream not only on the part of the government but on the part of parliament. I would have liked to make several speeches on this particular question; but tonight I wish to deal only with one which, in my view, raises some of the more fundamental issues with regard to the Indian people in Canada, and that is whether we of European ancestry are going to be able to hold up our heads before them.

This question, so far as I am concerned, relates to what is going to happen on a matter that was the subject which brought about the introduction of several bills in the recent period of parliamentary activity. On December 14, 1963 the then Minister of Citizenship and Immigration introduced Bill C-130, An Act to provide for the Disposition of Indian claims. As members of the committee will recall this bill had its genesis in the joint committee on Indian affairs which brought out a report in 1961; but Bill C-130 after a preliminary stage in the house, was circulated widely throughout the country, and then on June 21, 1965 we had a successor bill, Bill C-123, which was to have been referred for consideration last fall to a special committee for detailed consideration.

At this time arrangements were under way for the appearance of Indian people and others before that committee, until the bill, along with a number of other things, came to an untimely end with the dissolution of parliament. I might also draw the attention of the committee again to the fact that in addition to the bills introduced on the government side, to which I have referred, there was in 1963 Bill C-67, entitled An Act Respecting the Canada Court of Indians Claims, introduced by my colleague the hon. member for Skeena. When we left here last fall for the recess, those of us who had been following this matter fully expected that this would be immediately the subject of a great deal of discussion and consideration in the special committee. We hoped that out of that would come changes in the bill, as it was introduced, in line with the thinking of the Indian people which would bring us near to what might be termed a complete solution of the ancient wrongs that were done to the Indian people, so far as it was humanly possible that it be done.

As we all know that bill died. Now, I would like to refresh the minister's attention and refer to a question which the member for Skeena asked him on February 14. This is found on page 1157 of Hansard. The hon. member said:

> Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. When may we expect the introduction in the house of a bill regarding the Indian claims commission? When the minister answers that question perhaps he might also indicate whether that bill has been delayed up to now by revision of any previous bill.

The minister will recall that he replied in these terms:

> Mr. Speaker, the delay that has eventuated has had more than one cause. It has come from the quarters with which my hon. friend and myself are familiar, namely, the province of British Columbia, where the Indian people seem to prefer to take a concentrated second look before proceeding.
> Some Indians of British Columbia indicated they would prefer to consider their particular position in negotiation prior to introduction of the bill. I have told the legal adviser of the Indians in the province of British Columbia that I am prepared to discuss with them this subject, and I have had a preliminary meeting with him, before any action is taken.

Mr. Chairman, I think the answer the minister gave to the house on February 14 re-opened this whole matter in several very important respects. It particularly re-opened the question as far as the Indian people of British Columbia are concerned, but it also leaves unanswered what the minister may have in mind as far as the Indian people in the rest of Canada are concerned in relation to the proposals that were put forward in the government bill that went down the drain when parliament was dissolved.

I realize that the minister was limited because this question was asked on orders of the day, but I think it is important, now that we have the estimates of the Indian affairs branch before us, for the minister to take this opportunity to expand somewhat on the brief preliminary statement he made in answer to that question which itself raised some very important and fundamental questions as to what he has in mind. I hope the minister will give a somewhat expanded statement and that it will be one which will be, shall I say, encouraging as far as I am concerned.

I might just remind the minister before he replies that some of us recall an attempt made in 1927 to settle this whole Indian question by a special Indian grant of $100,000 per year in lieu of treaty money, as it is often described, to the Indians of British Columbia. I mention that fact because I am hopeful that when the minister talks about negotiating with the Indian people of British Columbia in respect of the Indian land question and its settlement, in a broader context than was set out in the Indian claims bill, he is not thinking in terms of the kind of settlement that was made in 1927.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, there is no item in the estimates which deserves more detailed study than this dealing with Indian affairs and that is why it is a particular hardship to discard a carefully prepared speech. I want to mention only three things, sir. We expect early action during this session for the establishment of an Indian claims commission. We expect immediate action in respect of a complete revision of the Indian Act and an end to the stalling with respect to pigeonholing of the report of the joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons on Indian affairs. We expect that the estimates of the department will be referred to the standing committee, and referred as soon as possible for study.

The year 1967 is the centennial of confederation, but that is a mere incident in the long history of the Indian people of this country. Let us, who are the inheritors of this great nation, plan now to assure that the year 1967 will be the year in which the ancient rights of the Indian people will be safeguarded and extended so that the Indian people can be given new opportunities and take new pride in this their native land.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I also intend to be very brief in my remarks on this item. I believe that here in Ontario we are having a great deal of difficulty in respect of Indian problems. This situation has been brought to the attention of the public through television programs emanating from the Rainy River-Kenora area in the last few months.

I wonder if the minister when he replies would be willing to tell the committee the details of the arrangement he has made with the province of Ontario in relation to these welfare payments, whether this is a general program upon which the department has embarked, whether they have turned the responsibility for welfare completely over to the provincial governments, and what arrangement is made between the provinces and the federal government for the payment of welfare.

I notice that under the grants item the cash payments to Indians have risen considerably. I remember the remarks of the hon. member of a few years ago, the late Mr. Hardie, when speaking of the hardship that was worked on the Indians and the very small amount of money being paid to them in many parts of the country. If the grants were doubled, tripled or made even higher than that these people could still not afford to maintain a decent standard of living.

We have a responsibility, as the hon. member for Carleton has said, to solve these problems that have been facing us for a long time. I believe there is general agreement that there will not be much difficulty in establishing the Indian Claims Commission. During the election campaign I heard many candidates speaking of this commission as though it were an established fact and I heard many government members indicating that this was already part of the status quo. If this is true, I suppose there really is no objection to it. But we are interested in this question, and if the minister does not want to give us the information now perhaps he would send it to me. I should like to know the details of the agreement that has been worked out with the province of Ontario to solve the problem that has arisen in parts of that province and which has resulted in a change in the method of handling welfare payments.

The reason for my concern is not that the Indian will not be better off under the Ontario welfare scheme than he was under the federal government scheme, because I think it is a fact that he will be better off. He will probably be twice or three times as well off under the provincial scheme. But I believe we should not slough off all the problems that arise in relation to our Indians by thinking that integration can cure them. Integration is not what the Indian wants. Many Indian people have now received enough education to know they have a heritage that should be protected. Hon. members will have noticed from some of the magazine articles written recently about Indians that the Indians themselves are now doing something about their problems. This attitude has not been very apparent for many years.

If the federal government gives up responsibility in this whole field, it seems to me that while it may produce a financial gain at this time, in the end it will probably eliminate the ethnic background of the Indian peoples by reason of their integration. I do not believe that is in our interest or in the interest of the Indian. It is all well and good to have claims settled in regard to treaties that existed and were signed many years ago, although these claims should have been settled a long time ago; but there are other parts of the country where the Indians did not have signed treaties and no formal arrangement was made. In this field the federal government must maintain some type of support for the Indian.

I should also like to hear from the minister about the negotiations with the province of Quebec with regard to the Indian situation in that province. I should like to know what has been done in Quebec and, again, what is the over-all intention of the government with regard to the question of Indian problems and Indian claims.

An hon. Member: Filibuster.

Mr. Peters: I had intended to sit down, Mr. Chairman, but somebody said "filibuster" so I shall probably go on for another 15 or 20 minutes. We have a very interesting problem in connection with our Indians and it generates a great deal of enthusiasm if one puts his mind to it.

An hon. Member: You forget there are other people in this house.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, they wanted to stay, they are staying, so they might as well listen. I have no intention of passing this item without giving it consideration. If they don't like it, that is just too bad; it couldn't interest me less.

Mr. Fairweather: That is absolutely appropriate; it couldn't interest you less. The only thing that does is the sound of your own voice.

[Mr. Peters.]

Mr. Peters: If you wish to make a speech, stand up and make it.

Mr. Fairweather: I have some self-discipline.

• (11:30 p.m.)

Mr. Peters: Exercise it, then; you certainly do not appear to be.

I do not intend to ask the minister to give an explanation now. There are many parts of Ontario that are very concerned with the problem that has only come to the attention of many people recently. I think the minister should be in a position to provide information concerning the intention of his department. Fundamentally the province may have jurisdiction in the social field, but we hope that the federal government will remain in the ethnic field to protect the Indians themselves. I leave it to the discretion of the Minister as to how he will provide this information.

The Chairman: Shall item 15 carry?

Mr. Barnett: I have no desire to make another speech but I rather hoped to hear from the minister on the questions I raised with him. Perhaps other members may wish him to deal with questions they raised.

Mr. Laing: So that the hon. member does not have to make a third speech, I will deal with his question now. He asked what the situation was with regard to the Indians in British Columbia who had suggested to us, through their lawyer, that we should not proceed at the present time with the Indian claims bill but should first of all dispose of the B.C. land question. They are anxious that we proceed to do that first before introducing the bill. I told them, and their lawyer, I would be prepared to wait two or three weeks to see them and hear their proposals because they said they thought they could possibly negotiate the matter in a day or two. I did ask the lawyer how many of the Indians of British Columbia he thought he could definitely say he represented. He said he did not think it would be over 50 per cent.

However, they are anxious to dispose of the so-called British Columbia land question before proceeding to the claims bill. Since a considerable number of Indians live in British Columbia, I thought there would be little harm done in giving their legal counsel two or three weeks to discuss the matter.

Mr. Barnett: Did the representations the minister receive indicate that at least a substantial number of Indians in British Columbia felt the bill simply did not embrace within it the mechanism for dealing with the Indian land question of British Columbia?

Mr. Laing: As my hon. friend knows, the Indians there think they could not get proper redress unless the provincial crown was involved. Of course, this house cannot act in such a manner; we can deal only with the responsibilities of the federal crown. The history of the coming of the white man into British Columbia has resulted in the Indian contention that the treaties that should have been made and lands which should have been set aside after the province entered confederation were not done. This deprived them of their historic rights and this is the B.C. land question which they want to discuss first.

Item agreed to.

The Chairman: This completes the estimates of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources. The committee will now proceed to a discussion of the estimates of the Department of Labour.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

1. General Administration, including grants as detailed in the estimates; the expenses of the international labour conferences; the promotion of labour-management co-operation; the promotion of a program for the employment of the older worker; the promotion of programs for combatting seasonal unemployment; the organization and use of workers for farming and related industries; and the manpower consultative service, $4,833,500.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, like the hon. member for Carleton who had a full dress speech ready on the subject of Indian affairs but was willing and able to compress it into a few remarks, I had planned a full speech on the first item of the Department of Labour but I, too, will shorten it. I wish I could copy the hon. member for Carleton in one further respect. I wish I could say that we expect certain things from the Department of Labour in this session with the kind of confidence which I thought he exuded. My fear, from the experience we have had with the Department of Labour under this government, is that we cannot hopefully expect very much in so short a period of time.

Let me remind the present Minister of Labour, whom I congratulate on his appointment to this important post, that this is the fourth session of parliament since the present Liberal government was elected in 1963. There were three sessions in the last parliament, so that this is the fourth session since this government came into office.

In the session immediately before the present government came into office the Liberals, who were then in opposition, featured very strongly in debates on labour matters. They supported all the progressive proposals that were put forward. They also put forward a number themselves. They led us to believe that if only they could get over on the other side of the house we would get all this progressive labour legislation. They promised it in the election campaign of 1963, and of course they did not have to work very hard to put those promises together because they had had them ready since 1919.

In the first session of the last parliament, which was the first session after this government came into office, we were assured that early action would be taken on all the elements of a labour standards code; also of a labour safety code; that there would be legislation amending the Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act to bring employees who come under that legislation under the same protection provided under the other labour legislation; that there would be a revamping of the Unemployment Insurance Act; and that there would be a study in depth and the consequent amendments of the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act.

In November 1962, when the new government had been in office only a short while—

Mr. Munro: We were not in office in 1962.

Mr. Knowles: I am sorry, 1963; I thank my hon. friend from Hamilton for that correction.

In November 1963, just a few months after the government came into power, we were assured that action would be taken on all these matters I have listed.

In the second session of that parliament we did get action on the labour code, at least the standards part of it. I would remind the minister that at the beginning of that session we were assured that we would get both the labour standards code and the labour safety code that session. We were also assured that the Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act would be amended so that the effective date of the amendments to that act would correspond with the effective date of the labour code.

Well, Mr. Chairman, we did not get the labour safety code in that session, and we did not get it in the following session. Neither did we get the Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act. We did not get it in time so that its provisions would be effective at the same time the provisions of the Canada Labour (Standards) Code were to begin.

Today people are working on contracts coming under federal labour jurisdiction who do not get even the minimum wage provided in the Canada Labour (Standards) Code; their protection is only that afforded by the Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act as it now stands. The previous minister was categorical in his promise that a way would be found to make sure that the protection afforded in the Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act would be the same as that provided in the Canada Labour (Standards) Code, and that it would be effective on the same date. This has not been the case.

The minister will say that the bill to amend the Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act is now on the order paper, and I am glad to see it there. But its being on the order paper does not give the benefit of its protection to those who come under it We still have nothing at all before us with regard to overhauling the Unemployment Insurance Act. We still have heard nothing at all with regard to the study in depth being made of the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act.

I suggest to the present Minister of Labour that the record of the Liberal party and the Liberal government in these matters is not good. It has created an image that the Liberal party is for labour. But I suggest that this is a myth which is readily exploded when one looks at the things which have been promised and at the slow process of implementing those promises. As I say, I wish I could make my speech with the kind of confidence displayed by the hon. member for Carleton. Perhaps I should give the new minister a bit of a chance. The last minister was Minister of Labour for three sessions, and he put through only one piece of legislation. I hope that the unfinished business of the last parliament—the labour safety code, the amendments to the Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act, the amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act and the amendments to the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act—will be accomplished at this session. I suggest that nothing less than this program is worthy of the present Minister of Labour.

• (11:40 p.m.)

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I will not take more than a minute or two to draw something to the attention of the committee, which has to do with the Canada Labour (Standards) Code. I want to point out to the members of the committee that, while that statute is on the statute books, as far as I can see the effect is that not a single, or almost not a single employee coming within federal jurisdiction who has not already got the 40 hour week under a collective agreement, or a wage higher than the minimum one provided under the labour code, is getting any benefit under that code. A question is on the order paper asking the ministry to provide the names of industries which have asked for deferment. That has not yet been answered.

Someone took the trouble to help me go through the Canada Gazette. Almost every major organization, such as the C.B.C., railways, trucking firms, air lines, and so on have asked for deferment with respect to section 11, which deals with the minimum $1.25 wage. This can go on for 18 months, and the minister can then give to those industries a deferment for another 18 months.

There is no reason in the world why the Department of Labour should not by now make up its mind, and why the minister should not make up his mind with respect to the applications listed in the numerous sheets of the Canada Gazette for deferment. There is no purpose to having a statute on the statute books if it is not being applied.

As I say, as I looked through the Gazette there were literally hundreds and hundreds of names of firms, who were simply asking that the minister should let them stand. There is no point in having a statute on the statute books, when in fact it is not being applied except in situations where employees have already won these things through collective bargaining and agreement. As I looked through the list of, literally, hundreds and hundreds of firms under various headings I was astounded that the minister should let this stand. He has made decisions in the case of flour and feed mills, if I remember correctly; in the case of grain elevators and so on—decisions on deferment of wage increases which I am sure he reached after careful consideration. I am not criticizing those decisions. But he has not made decisions involving highway transport, shipping firms, longshoremen, stevedores or the trucking firms in every province which have asked for one deferment or another, mainly of hours. In my submission the strike of trucking employees in this province might either not have taken place or would be greatly shortened had the minister made up his mind about the applications for deferments.

I do not want to belabour the point, but I think it is a great disappointment to all of us interested in these matters to find an act on the statute books which is being prevented from having its effect because of long delays on the part of both the present minister and the previous minister with regard to applications asking for decisions.

Mr. Régimbal: We had been looking forward to a long debate on manpower and labour, but considering the mood of the committee and the urgency of passing these estimates we shall restrict our remarks to the minimum. I will make these suggestions as rapidly as I can, so hon. members will not have to bear with me for more than six or seven minutes.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, I should like to begin by offering my heartiest congratulations to the future minister of manpower on his appointment to that post and we should not envy him the double task he has to face, that of getting used to his duties both as a member of the house and as a minister. We congratulate him also for having decided to devote his energy, his experience and his talent to public affairs and political activities which he has had the opportunity, as I had myself, in the past, to criticize sometimes bitterly, especially with respect to labour and social legislation.

We feel confident that the presence of an expert in industrial relations both in the Department of Manpower and in the Department of Labour, is liable to speed up the taking of concrete steps that will make possible a climate of understanding that both management and labour need on the part of the legislator to develop their sector in an atmosphere of security and industrial peace.

The first lesson which one learns in the field of industrial relations is to avoid long speeches and broad definitions of principles and to concentrate one's efforts on the application of these principles to actions and facts.

I shall try to observe these rules in my remarks, especially as the opposition is willing to co-operate fully so that we may finish examination of these estimates.

However, Mr. Chairman, allow me to point out that co-operation must be a two-way street, and that the debate has lasted until now because the ministers have either refused to answer legitimate questions such as the ones concerning the Department of National Defence, or taken advantage of the debate to make long speeches on all sorts of subjects, as Mr. Pickersgill did, or refused to consider seriously concrete suggestions which we know to be fair, as in the case of the Justice Department.

Mr. Chairman, I would also like to point out that the co-operation we show by limiting our remarks is a sacrifice that the members of the opposition are willing to make to get the government out of difficulty because it has been two years already since the estimates were considered last and since that is the time when a member can deal with local problems which interest his constituents. It is a real sacrifice.

Let us not forget that the estimates should have been considered last September and that it is because of the needless elections held in November—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but I think that his remarks should deal with the estimates of the Department of Labour.

Mr. Régimbal: In any case, Mr. Chairman, the elections delayed everything and that is why we now have to speed up the business of the house to get the government out of the embarrassing situation in which it placed itself. If there is any delay, the responsibility falls entirely on the Prime Minister—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt again the hon. member—

Mr. Régimbal: We will come back to that, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. Would the hon. member resume his seat?

• (11:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order; I must say that I have listened with interest to the remarks of the hon. member, and in this instance I think that the matter to which he has been referring happens to be covered in the estimates of the Department of Labour. While the responsibilities have been transferred to the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, these matters still seem to come within the estimates of the Department of Labour.

[Translation]

Mr. Régimbal: Mr. Chairman, I feel it is important to remind the government, the pubic and the press of this truth which is too easily forgotten. It is all the more important because we will again be limited, in the next debate, to 30 days according to the amendment to standing orders.

In return, I feel we should be entitled to asking the various ministers to listen with particular care to the requests we might put to them directly—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but this is the third time the Chair has to intervene. The hon. member is referring to various departments, various attitudes of the government; I feel he should speak specifically of the Labour Department.

Mr. Régimbal: Agreed, Mr. Chairman.

[English]

I should also state that in matters of labour and manpower there was a great disappointment concerning the labour department, in respect of unemployment insurance for full-time farm workers and increased training allowances. It is significant to note that not a single new project has been brought up. This is the reason we will follow the activities of the new manpower department with great interest and expectation. If nothing new comes up, it would appear that this government figures that all is well on the labour front. Let us take another look.

We hope that the government will not make the mistake which it made in the late 1940's and early 1950's in not relying on the unemployment commission funds for the onslaught of a recession. Now is the time to set up the projects and crash programs to see us through as difficult a period as we will have to face probably after the centennial year.

The government knows very well that when the Conservatives came in in 1957 they were left with run-down conditions, a sick economy, and a deficit trade balance. It was left to the Conservatives to pick up the pieces, and get the country going again with progressive legislation and programs. The previous government did not seem to have a worry in the world because of the unemployment insurance commission's funds. In next to no time the cupboard was bare, because the whole country was made to suffer while the savings effect of new legislation was able to bear fruit.

It is significant to point out that the only working plans which we have today came out of that era, and still remain as progressive as the day they were born under Conservative management. I refer, first to ARDA, second to the winter works programs, and third, to technical training assistance through vocational schools. These are the types of projects that the present government must set up now to keep our labour force moving.

What have we had for labour since 1963 except efforts to keep these plans alive? Nothing new. As a matter of fact the slowness which has been shown in forwarding payments for winter works projects very often has created problems for our smaller communities which have been prevented from undertaking new work in the summer season because their credit was blocked at the bank for failure to pay commitments on time. Might we suggest that this be avoided in the future by faster procedures.

The $500 building bonus we will not even mention, because this government more than washed it way by imposing an 11 per cent tax on building materials, which it still stubbornly refuses to remove; and I am sure the electors will remember a long time the fact that government members voted against our amendment on this subject. We suggest that the government consider our recommendation to the effect that they make city and school taxes deductible from taxable income up to $500, as a direct assistance to the home owner and wage earner.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, in case the Chair does not know what comes under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Labour let me suggest that the $500 bonus in respect of winter works does come within his jurisdiction.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I was just making the observation to the hon. member for Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes that in so far as possible he should relate his remarks to the Department of Labour.

Mr. Starr: That is what he was doing.

Mr. Régimbal: Mr. Chairman, I shall try to contain myself a little more but it is very hard to speak on one subject, cutting off completely the many ramifications which are interwoven. I will do my best but perhaps you will keep reminding me.

Small industries must be made to prosper in our outlying districts from coast to coast and the minister must bring all pressure to bear on the Department of Industry to help create and develop small industries, because there is little use in offering training programs if the workers have to abandon our small towns for lack of work.

Training is all well and good, but something must be done by the manpower department to stop the drain of high priced talent to the United States labour fields.

I should like to quote from the C.N.A. Review dated February 19, 1966 as follows; under the heading "Lost to Canada"

> What is the cost to Canada of the so-called 'brain drain'? Figures newly made available by United States authorities provide some indication.
> They show that in the two-year period June, 1963, to June, 1965, more than 100,000 Canadians emigrated to the U.S. Over half of these—50,709 out of 101,149—were wage or salary earners who entered the U.S. labour force.
> Among them were 1,765 engineers and scientists, 1,187 technicians, 163 industrial designers, 258 university professors, 820 physicians and surgeons, 725 accountants and auditors, 2,040 trained nurses and 2,610 managers, officials and proprietors.
> An underpopulated but growing country such as Canada can ill afford to lose its best educated and most highly skilled people at such a rate. We can't prevent them going, but we can improve the incentives to stay by appropriate changes in personal income tax rates, changes which would allow individuals in the middle-income groups to retain a larger share of their earnings than at present.

Do not cut me off yet. The last paragraph states:

> Such action has to come sooner or later and as can be seen there are compelling reasons why it should be sooner. Your move, Mr. Sharp.

I would add to that, incentives yes, but manpower policies too; trade crusades as well to keep our labour force abreast of changing times.

Your attention is called to the province of Quebec particularly where almost 50 per cent of our unemployed are located—75,000 out of 171,000 in November, 1965. You know as well as I that after the building rush for the Expo year is over we will be in deep trouble. So again I say now is the time to prepare for this situation.

Finally, a human note on the application of unemployment insurance policies. Most of the people who are unemployed know nothing about the law and very often make innocent incomplete statements which deprive them of their benefits. Many lawyers, and I might add, many M.P.'s who are lawyers, are doing quite well in interpreting the law for them at a cost, without, however, batting one thousand as far as setting the victims straight and as far as obtaining benefits is concerned. A corrective measure for this would be to instruct the local officials, who are very competent, mind you, to act as counsellors and arrange things so that at least a tie will go to the runner, especially where older workers are involved who have paid insurance for years and who are barred from benefits because they were not properly counselled when they made their applications.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, I cannot close my remarks without mentioning the pitiful state of the legislation governing civil servants. I hope the future minister of manpower (Mr. Marchand) will spare no effort to solve the problem and set up a system whereby collective bargaining for civil servants will be unquestionably recognized. He has never been too enthusiastic, I know, about reducing or limiting the right to strike.

The Quebec experience is showing what damage can result from a strike in this field. It will be very interesting to watch the outcome of disputes in months to come. I am sure that he does not feel too proud at the memory of the developments which led to the postal strike last summer. This was the first time in my 20 years of experience in industrial relations that I heard an employer boast about having settled a strike.

A strike is a state of bankruptcy, a recognition of failure, and it seems to me that the minister of the day would have had more satisfaction and justification if he had avoided the strike.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, we appeal to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson) and the minister of manpower to offer their services and their advice in order to avoid the disquieting conflict that seems in the offing between our main trade unions.

It is less important at this time to concern ourselves about provincial or federal jurisdictions than to anticipate and avoid trouble which could jeopardize the progress and the benefits acquired through so many years of efforts.

Mr. Chairman, as I say, we only touched upon these problems, but we look forward to coming back to them in a more precise and detailed way when we have more time at our disposal.

Mr. Chairman: Carried.

• (12:00 midnight)

[English]

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, has the minister anything to say on these questions, and in particular can he tell us his intentions with regard to legislation in this session?

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, I will only take a moment or two. In view of the excellent co-operation that I have received in trying to expedite the passage of these estimates, I should like first to thank hon. members for the reminders they have given me of things to be done. I agree entirely that there is no purpose in having an act, such as the Labour (Standards) Code if requests for deferment are to be permitted to defeat the real purpose of the act. I assure hon. members that it is my intention to do everything within my power and responsibilities to bring about the real purpose of the act that was passed last session.

I should also like to thank the first speaker and the last speaker for their comments and for their congratulations. I think that perhaps the last speaker intended some of his kind remarks for my colleague the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. I would also point out that the hon. gentleman overlooked two additional items of legislation that were referred to in the Speech from the Throne. If he had heard the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre speak earlier this evening, he would have heard that hon. gentleman mention the amendments to the Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act and to the Safety Code, which were also mentioned in the Speech from the Throne. It is our intention to introduce this legislation as soon as the legislative program for this session makes it possible for us to do so.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, will there be legislation this session with regard to amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act and the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act?

Mr. Nicholson: The Speech from the Throne contains the assurance that the government intends to proceed with legislation amending or bringing up to date the Unemployment Insurance Act. The work is well advanced in connection with these proposed amendments. An interdepartmental committee has been studying this matter and I have been following their work very closely. If we continue to make the progress such as we are making tonight, I think I can give the assurance that we should be dealing with the amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act very shortly.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I merely wish to ask one question so as not to delay the proceedings. We know that a problem has arisen, a dispute has flared up in the field of labour, since the C.N.T.U. asked to be recognized as bargaining agent for the C.B.C. employees in Montreal.

We have asked the Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson) many times for a statement in this connection. I know that he has now as a colleague, a former president of the C.N.T.U. who must have kept some of the convictions he had then. It is not merely a matter of union recognition. Indeed, I feel that the problem goes deeper than that.

If we do not take the opportunity afforded by the Department of Labour estimates, in spite of the time, it will be very difficult to obtain information on this matter. Some people promote the idea of a single labour union for the whole of Canada, including C.B.C. employees, C.N.R. workers and crown corporations workers. On the other hand, a large number of Quebec workers would prefer the C.N.T.U.

I want to uphold the cause of the workers who want to join C.N.T.U. I know that the future minister of Manpower, if he wanted to, could be a better spokesman than I. He has more experience than I have in this field and I know that he is quite familiar with the administration of the C.N.T.U. Even if he is a cabinet member, he should clearly state his position in this regard.

This is not only a fight between two unions. There is more than that. A large group of Quebec workers want to be represented by the C.N.T.U. rather than by an international union.

There is also the principle of the freedom of association. Some fought a long time—and they will know what I mean—to see that right recognized. The first right is that the worker must have the right to choose freely the association he wants to belong to.

If, most of the employees decide to belong to that union or that association and that afterwards the Canada Labour Relations Board prevent the certification of that union, then the principle and the right of freedom of association is denied.

The future Minister of Manpower must understand what I am saying now. Even if it is late—and that does not matter—there is a more important principle than the lateness of the debate to fight for.

I think that the Minister of Labour should make a statement about that, as well as the future Minister of Manpower, not later than tonight, because that problem has been pending for a long time. We must not wait until all the doors are closed, until everything is decided because then it will be too late to change the decisions taken.

I think that the decision or at least the recommendations of the Minister of Labour to the Canada Labour Relations Board can be made before it is too late. Can the minister give us an answer?

[English]

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, it would take considerable time to deal with the subject raised by the hon. member for Lapointe. I might say, that I have had more than one meeting with the union representatives and the union organizations that are involved in this dispute to which reference has been made. I have met with the C.N.T.U. officials twice; I have met with the C.L.C. and I have met with the Railway Brotherhood. They all have points of view to put forward. I can assure the hon. member for Lapointe that if he will agree to come to my office tomorrow I will give him a full outline of what has happened.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, could the future minister of manpower make a statement on this matter?

Now that we are considering the estimates of the Department of Labour for 1965-66, I feel it is important for the future minister of manpower to give us an idea of the action he intends to take in order to protect the rights of Quebec workers who want to be represented within the C.B.C. by a Canadian union, such as the C.L.U., instead of an international union.

I think the future minister of manpower should make his plans clearly known to us in this respect.

[English]

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, with all due respect, the responsibility in this particular field still remains with the Minister of Labour. If the hon. member will come to see me tomorrow, I hope to be able to satisfy him of the soundness of the course we are following.

Mr. Grégoire: One question for the Minister of Labour: Has the minister of manpower made any representations to him concerning that problem?

Mr. Nicholson: In view of my oath as a Privy Councillor, if he had I could not tell you, Mr. Chairman.

Item agreed to.

Technical and vocational training assistance—

15. Payments to the provinces to carry out the purposes of the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act and agreements made thereunder and payments under agreements providing for the sharing of expenditures for research projects to provide information relating to vocational training and manpower requirements, $116,988,000.

Mr. Patterson: I wonder if the minister, under item 15, would give us a breakdown of the payments to the provinces to carry out the purposes of the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act? I am not asking for that information tonight, but perhaps the minister could let me have some information as soon as possible.

Mr. Nicholson: If my memory serves me correctly the information has been suppled in a recent answer to a question on the order paper. In any event, if it has not I assure the hon. member that he will get the information he has requested.

Item agreed to.

• (12:10 a.m.)

Annuities Act—

20. Administration and government's contribution to annuities agents pension account in accordance with regulations made pursuant to vote 181, Appropriation Act No. 5, 1961, $1,197,300.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, what are the arrangements in relation to annuities and grants in view of the Canada Pension Plan?

Mr. Nicholson: I cannot answer that without any officials here with me but I will undertake to write the hon. member and supply the information promptly.

Mr. Peters: It is my understanding that in some fields these annuities have been discontinued and the Canada Pension Plan substituted, with a certain amount of freezing of assets in the annuities branch.

Mr. Nicholson: There was a decline in the volume of government annuities in recent years, but I am happy to say that since rates for individual annuities and group annuities were improved in 1964 there has been a marked increase in annuity sales, up 135 per cent over the three previous years. This improved rate seems to have encouraged employers who may have discontinued plans to continue them.

I might also say that the advent of the Canada Pension Plan has removed to some extent the disadvantage of the $1,200 a year maximum, and it is expected that since the Canada Pension Plan is not intended to provide all of the retirement income which many Canadians may require, government annuities will be used for that purpose.

Mr. Peters: One final question. Is it the intention of the government to allow the withdrawal savings on the part of those who wish to discontinue this form of retirement pension in expectation of a retirement pension under the Canada Pension Plan?

Mr. Nicholson: That matter is under study. I have had some discussion with my colleague the Minister of Finance, but I cannot give an answer tonight, and perhaps not for another day or two. I will do so at an early date.

Item agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: This concludes the estimates of the Department of Labour.

The committee will now proceed with the estimates of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration.

Mr. Knowles: Twelve o'clock.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): We would be very glad to finish this department in 15 or 20 minutes.

Mr. Knowles: Twelve o'clock.

Mr. Starr: I think everyone on the opposition side was given the opportunity to participate in the discussion of the estimates since ten o'clock. Would it not be the wish of the members of the committee—I think we would agree on this side—to sit for another 45 minutes to get both departments through, Fisheries and Citizenship and Immigration?

Mr. Knowles: No. The staff of this house has to be back here at eleven o'clock this morning. We passed a motion to sit till 12 and it is now past twelve o'clock.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, the House leader for the Conservatives, the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr) told us at 10.10 o'clock that he expected that consideration of the four departments including Citizenship and Immigration would be finished by midnight. It is now twelve fifteen and two departments remain.

It seems obvious that he has little to lead in the house and that he is not the one to rule our actions. When he says everything will be finished within an hour, his statement cannot be relied upon. Really, we cannot be expected to remain credulous all night long.

There is a saying that you can fool some of the people some of the time, but that you can't fool all the people all the time. This applies to the hon. member for Ontario.

[English]

Mr. Starr: I readily admit I have no control over the hon. member for Lapointe; indeed, no one has in this house. As I said before, all members have had ample opportunity to speak and debate has not been curtailed. It is nobody's fault that we have not got everything through. We have a good objective in mind, and if we sat for another 45 minutes we could pass two more departments.

Mr. Lewis: I am not questioning the sincerity of the hon. member for Ontario and I will not take up time by making a speech. I just repeat that as far as we are concerned it is twelve o'clock, and the hon. member for Ontario and any other member might just as well save his time. We are not going to be dragged on from 10 till 12, and then from 12 till one and from one to two. That is a child's game and we are not going to take part in it.

Mr. McIlraith: The original motion was that we should sit until twelve.

Mr. Lewis: That is right.

Mr. McIlraith: It is now twelve. Without unanimous consent we cannot go any further.

Mr. Lewis: Of course it is twelve.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I understand that one hon. member has called it twelve o'clock.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

[Translation]

Mr. Clément Vincent (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, in view of the late hour, before you call for the motion to adjourn, I think it would be preferable as far as I am concerned to defer my question until next Monday night.

I think the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey) also agrees in order not to give additional work to the official reporters.

If the member of the New Democratic Party agreed, this evening, we could adopt that attitude.

[English]

Mr. B. S. Mackasey (Verdun): In view of the desire of the New Democratic Party to get to bed early I would imagine they would be the first to agree to postpone their question until Monday night. I would agree provided they will agree. If they do not, I intend to go ahead.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

LABOUR CONDITIONS—WINDSOR—PROSPECTIVE LAY-OFF OF FORD WORKERS

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): The hon. member for Waterloo South.

Mr. Vincent: What about the staff? That is the N.D.P., look at them.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo South): On Monday I raised a question concerning lay-offs of Ford workers in Windsor. The minister replied he was looking into the matter, that he recognized the urgency of the situation and would inquire into it and answer on the following day. This, he did, and I should like to express my appreciation to him for having looked into the matter so quickly. However, the lay-offs are to begin tomorrow and this is why it is important to have an answer from the minister or from his parliamentary secretary tonight—so that we, and the workers in particular, may know how they stand in terms of these lay-offs and what success has attended the representations made by the minister on their behalf.

I think the importance of this matter goes beyond the case of these specific workers in the Ford Motor Company now threatened by lay-offs. It is important to find out the attitude of the government in relation to the Canada-U.S. agreement on automobiles. We in this party have not objected too violently to the program outlined by the Minister of Industry because we considered there was some merit in the proposals of the organized industry. Our chief concern has been the attitude which the Departments of Industry, Manpower and Labour would take when dislocation of employment became imminent.

It is important that a statement be made at this time not only in terms of what success the minister has had in his representations to the Ford Motor Company but also as an indication of what he intends to do in the future as these problems arise. A brief from union local 200 U.A.W. points out that Canadian tool work is being replaced by United States tool work and that almost 95 per cent of the tools and dies used are coming in from the United States, though we have sufficient workers and industrial facilities to produce them here in Canada.

This raises a larger problem. The automobile companies are already doing much of their research in the United States, as is perhaps understandable. But if they begin doing all their tool work in the United States and leave Canadian workers merely slapping fenders on cars when they go by on an assembly line, this has serious implications for Canada. We shall become primarily assemblers and many of our most skilled and talented people will be drawn off to the United States unless a policy decision is made.

I think it is important we should know there will be employment opportunities for young Canadians when they graduate from our schools and that our schools will not be used as training grounds to provide the United States with skilled tool and die workers because there are no opportunities in this country.

I appreciate the urgency with which the minister has approached this question and I hope a statement will be forthcoming tonight which would indicate he intends to make a serious effort to speak boldly to the automobile companies. When I asked the minister whether he could give the house an assurance that no lay-offs would take place while we were negotiating, he apologized and said he had no authority to give such an assurance.

If the minister does not possess this authority, I think he had better get the authority, because fundamentally we have to make a decision in respect of whether the minister is going to make this kind of determination about our labour force, about protecting our labour force and securing jobs for our labour force, or whether the Ford Motor Company is going to make it. I would prefer to see the minister make it on behalf of the Canadian people.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as I stated yesterday or the day before, we have sent two men to Windsor, one representing the Department of Industry and the other representing the Department of Manpower.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order; the house entered upon the adjournment procedures here this evening, and I would call your attention to the fact that we no longer have a quorum in the house. Despite the wishes and desires of the New Democratic party to satisfy their concern about the staff of the house, we are carrying on with the discussion of a question they put before this house, without a quorum.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, I always have had a very high regard for the member who just spoke and I am glad to see how concerned he is about the staff of this building, but I am sure he must recognize that if it were not for the urgency of the problem facing the workers in Windsor—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order, please. Will the hon. member resume his seat. I think it is recognized that at this time we do not count the number of members in the house.

Mr. Marchand: We sent two representatives, one from the Department of Industry and one from the Department of Manpower, to meet with the parties, make inquiries, and try to find a solution. Today I have received a brief report stating that those two persons will be able to make a preliminary report on the whole situation tomorrow. That is the information I received today.

On the other hand, I know that 15 men are supposed to be laid off tomorrow. That is the situation as I know it tonight. Now, when the hon. member said I should find the authority to intervene, I would like to know what kind of authority he has in mind. I know of no law that will authorize me to compel the Ford Motor Company of Canada to keep those men.

Of course we can intervene and we can exercise moral pressure on the Ford Motor Company of Canada. This is what we are trying to do. How successful we will be, we will see tomorrow. In this particular case, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a statement. I think in those cases it is unjustifiable that an enterprise or union refuse to co-operate in order to avoid company lay-offs or the opportunity to look ahead so that an attempt can be made to place those men or arrange some settlement.

• (12:30 a.m.)

In this case I am not sure that the Ford Motor Company of Canada has co-operated with the union in order to solve this problem properly. Of course I must proceed with the instruments I have in my hands, just as the unions must proceed with the instruments they have in their hands, and that is why we must wait for the report of those two men. I hope I will have it tomorrow. If we can take some action I will be very happy to take it.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, D'Arcy McGee has been dead for 98 years. I do not think he would mind if I stood my question over until Monday night, provided the house will give me permission.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Does the house give unanimous consent to the hon. member to stand his question over until Monday at ten o'clock?

[Mr. Saltsman.]

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 12.34 a.m.

repayments on such loans to be credited to the account; to authorize the Minister of Labour, in accordance with regulations approved by the Governor in Council, to forgive the repayment of a loan or any part thereof made to a worker under this authority; and to authorize payments out of the fund to cover transportation costs incurred for the movement of workers on behalf of employers, subject to the fund being reimbursed by the employers in accordance with regulations approved by the Governor in Council, $5,000,000.

L28d. To authorize in the current and subsequent fiscal years, in accordance with regulations approved by the Governor in Council, loans to provide financial assistance to workers who move from one place in Canada to another place in Canada where employment is available, to authorize advances to cover transportation costs incurred for the movement of workers on behalf of employers subject to reimbursement by employers, to authorize the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, in accordance with regulations approved by the Governor in Council, to forgive the re-payment of a loan or any part thereof made to a worker under this authority and to authorize a special account in the Consolidated Revenue Fund to be known as the assisted movement account,

(a) to which all loans to workers and advances made on behalf of employers will be charged; and

(b) to which shall be credited

(i) all repayments of principal amounts of loans

(ii) all amounts reimbursed by employers, and

(iii) all amounts the payment of which is forgiven by the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration under this authority;

the total amount that may be charged to the account at any time not to exceed $5,000,000; and to repeal Labour Vote L28b as set out in supplementary estimates (B) 1965-66 and to apply to this vote the moneys appropriated for the purposes of Labour Vote L28b by Appropriation Act No. 6, 1965 and Appropriation Act No. 1, 1966, $5,000,000.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION

1. Administration of the Unemployment Insurance Act, $32,689,400.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, March 4, 1966

The house met at 11 a.m.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INDIA—ANNOUNCEMENT OF INCREASED FOOD AID

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a short statement on wheat supplies for India. As various international discussions will be taking place over the next two or three weeks regarding the very serious food situation facing India, and as it is most important that India should know as soon as possible what supplies she can count on, I should like to inform the house in general terms of the plans of the Canadian government in this matter.

Although the Indian government is making strenuous efforts to improve the situation, there can be no doubt, as the United Nations Food and Agricultural Organization has emphasized, that without large amounts of assistance from other countries food shortages in many areas of India would reach famine proportions. Fortunately, several governments are already taking steps to help. In particular, the government of the United States of America is providing massive support.

For our part we announced some time ago that out of the 1965-66 appropriations Canada would make available to India a total of $25 million worth of food, all of which is exepected to be shipped before the end of this month.

I am glad to be able to announce now that during the coming fiscal year the government plans to make available a substantially larger amount than last year. Most of this food aid will be in wheat, which India so badly needs. I expect shipment to take place after the beginning of the new crop year this July. We shall be working out the precise details in our further consultations with the Indian government and with the other governments concerned. I am satisfied that we shall be able to provide this substantial help to India and at the same time meet all our commercial orders. The fact that we can do so is a tribute to the hard work of our western farmers and the high productivity of our agricultural industry.

The situation in India requires a concerted international effort. I would hope that not only the food producing countries will help but also the many other countries which are capable of assisting with shipping, port handling equipment, fertilizers and other effective forms of aid.

Canada, Mr. Speaker, can be depended upon to make a contribution which will compare well with that of any other country.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the statement made by the right hon. gentleman I would say at once that the plan announced has the complete support and commendation of the opposition. We have consistently advocated additional assistance by way of food to meet the terrible famine conditions that face India in increasing measure.

• (11:10 a.m.)

In this connection I recall so well the NATO meeting that took place in Paris in December, 1957. At that time I advocated a food bank which would make available to famine stricken countries in all parts of the world food and assistance of that kind. The idea was not accepted at that time. Later on, within the commonwealth, we endeavoured to bring about this plan. It was accepted, but was not carried into effect because of the failure of some of the nations within the commonwealth to give their full approval. Hunger knows no geographical bounds. The hunger of people in all parts of the world must have a direct claim on the compassion of all of us. However, hunger within the commonwealth is of pre-eminent concern and must be so recognized by all of us.

At the same time I want to say that what President Johnson and the United States administration has done in this connection, in making available huge supplies of wheat in recent months, is further evidence of the extent to which the United States of America accepts its world responsibilites.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, we in this party welcome the Prime Minister's statement. We think that aid to the Indian people at this tragic time of famine in that country is not only called for by human compassion but also on higher political grounds. The whole democratic world is involved in the question of the stability of democracy in India. We will examine the Prime Minister's statement and future plans with great interest.

I am not quite sure that I heard the Prime Minister correctly, but I thought he mentioned the figure of $25 million last year and said it would be increased. We think in any event, that this increase should be on a generous scale. It should be treated as a matter of emergency, as if a similar problem faced our own people in this country, because it is of great importance.

Perhaps the Prime Minister could deal with this at some other time, Mr. Speaker, but I did notice that in the dispatch from the Washington correspondent of the Globe and Mail in this morning's newspaper it was stated that the United States representatives at the conference now being undertaken with cabinet ministers in Washington had said the United States is almost certain to complain that Canada is not doing its share to forestall the widespread famine arising in India. This may be quite false speculation but I would ask the Prime Minister, in view of the crucial importance of this matter, to let us know and at the same time take steps to see that this important subject is discussed in Washington so that our plans can be co-ordinated with United States plans to deal with this situation.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, we listened attentively to the Prime Minister's statement to the effect that Canada will do a lot this year to help India which is faced with a food shortage and which finds itself in the most abject misery. Indeed, according to India's new Prime Minister, 52 million Indians now lack the bare essentials and the role that Canada can play in such a situation is of the most vital importance.

The announcement made by the Prime Minister is encouraging. He stated that we will send mostly wheat. We will also send other things.

Canada is one of the wealthiest countries in the world. The whole world knows it. And yet, in our country, one of the world's wealthiest, among a population of 20 million people the farmers suffer because their production remains unsold year after year.

If the government or the Prime Minister looked closely into the situation, they would see there an opportunity to help Canadian agriculture by setting up a system of cold storage facilities which would guarantee to the farmers that their products would be sold when a situation similar to the one prevailing in India or elsewhere developed. As a matter of fact, we would then have on hand the products needed to help such people and we would help our agriculture and our farmers at the same time.

We must feel sorry for the Indians' plight —but we must also feel sorry for the plight of that class of our Canadian society.

In any event, we are happy to support the policy of assistance which our government will apply toward India and we hope that all the countries in the world which have a food surplus and can dispose of it, will follow the example of Canada, a country with a relatively small population which, at least, is kind-hearted enough to help the needy wherever they are in the world.

[English]

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I join with the other leaders in giving the complete support of our party to this project which the Prime Minister has announced. We trust that included in this immediate shipment of grain will also be supplies of wheat flour. We also trust that the transportation problems which have been so prevalent in these last months will not hinder the rail carriage of this particular shipment of food which is so urgently required by the starving millions of India.

Those of us who are associated with the freedom from hunger campaign, and specifically the Canada-Mysore project, have had brought to our attention the fact that in India approximately 20 per cent of all food produced is lost because of the lack of proper processing facilities. This includes storage, refrigeration and packaging.

I trust that the government, in giving this assistance which it is our responsibility to provide, will also consider ways and means of assisting to avoid the waste of food which is taking place in India owing to the lack of facilities. I would remind the members of the house that the Canada-Mysore project is specifically designed to preserve foodstuffs. This is one area where assistance could be given which would go beyond just the immediate need which has been filled by this particular gift.

I would also draw to the attention of the house the fact that while we in Canada are able to produce tremendous food surpluses, it is extremely difficult to dispose of these surpluses. That should be evidence again of the need to set up proper financing facilities for the sale of our surplus food products. This relates specifically to a two-price system which will make it possible for nations like India to purchase this surplus food which we have, and which will assist them in their over-all planning to meet such critical urgencies as they now face.

We give our wholehearted support, Mr. Speaker, to the initiative which has been taken by the government, and we assure them that in every way possible we will give them our co-operation.

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING APPLICATION TO CROWN COMPANIES

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-134, to amend the Financial Administration Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, the explanation is simple. The object of this bill is to ask Parliament to control more closely administrative expenses of Crown corporations in such a way that Parliament will always know what they do and how they spend the taxpayer's money.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

VICTOR SPENCER—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Prime Minister whether in the unravelling of the Spencer case, in view of the press report of this morning that letters were written by the solicitor for Spencer, those letters or any information regarding them will be revealed to the house. Will the Prime Minister now table them?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have no objection at all to tabling them. The two letters referred to were not letters to me, or to cabinet ministers. I assured the house about this yesterday. One letter I knew about, because it was a letter to the Privy Council, was from a solicitor in Vancouver. There was no indication on the letter that he was Spencer's solicitor. His name was Mr. Rankin.

The first letter asked for a copy of the order in council dismissing Mr. Spencer, and that was replied to at once. The order in council was sent to him. A second letter was sent to the deputy postmaster general who sent it to the Privy Council, asking to explain the meaning of the word "misconduct." I am paraphrasing what was in the letter. That letter was also replied to. That is all that was in it. As I say, that was a request that "misconduct" should be explained.

The reply, which was given by a member of the Privy Council staff, was that it would be inappropriate for him to explain what "misconduct" was, but he referred the inquirer to the Civil Service Act under which the dismissal took place, and in which misconduct is referred to.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Why was the house not told of this? Why was there all this concealment?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, there was no concealment of any kind. There was a letter from a lawyer in Vancouver asking for certain information, which he got.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There was a two day debate over that.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Prime Minister when the letter written by Mr. Rankin asking for an explanation of the word "misconduct" was answered? The Prime Minister said it was answered, but may I ask him when that letter was answered? And when, may I say, if you will permit me—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The only thing the hon. member can do now is ask a question. He cannot make a statement.

Mr. Pearson: It is a simple question. The letter was dated February 18, and it was replied to on February 24.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Since a formal request is probably necessary, may I now ask the Prime Minister to table the letters he appears to have in his possession on the Spencer matter?

Mr. Pearson: I will overlook the characteristically offensive way in which the question was put and point out that the first letter I had was, as has been pointed out, a letter from a lawyer asking for an order in council, which he received. Apparently my right hon. friend suggests this was concealing something. Everybody in the house knows about the order in council, including, I suppose, my right hon. friend.

The second letter was dated February 18 and it asked for information concerning the word "misconduct"; what constituted misconduct within the meaning of the law. That letter also was sent to an assistant clerk of the Privy Council and he answered it, to Mr. Harry Rankin, who was a solicitor in Vancouver. And I am informed he did not identify himself in this letter as Mr. Spencer's solicitor. I will read this letter if the Speaker gives me permission.

Mr. Nielsen: On a point of order, the question I asked the Prime Minister was will he table the correspondence. That is all.

Mr. Pearson: I will do more than that. I will read the correspondence.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nielsen: Rather than raise a point of order again, may I ask the Prime Minister whether he will request Your Honour's permission to obtain unanimous consent to table the letters he has in his possession.

Mr. Pearson: I have indicated that not only am I willing to table the communications, though I suppose I should get the consent of the lawyer who sent them, but I am also willing to read the letters. They are very short.

Some hon. Members: Read them.

Mr. Pearson: Perhaps it would save a lot of time—this is a very short letter—if I just read it together with the answer.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, we have had enough of these expurgated things and partial truths. We want the letters tabled. We do not want the Prime Minister to do the reading.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the right hon. Prime Minister asking for leave to table the letters or to read them?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I am asking for leave to read the reply to which reference has been made. I am asking for leave to read the reply right now and put it on the record.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Table it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

BROADCASTING

BRITISH COLUMBIA—INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF FRENCH RADIO STATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): I have a question for the Secretary of State. Can the hon. lady inform us whether or not there are plans on foot for the establishment of a French language radio station on the lower mainland of British Columbia?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question should be placed on the order paper.

FINANCE

STEPS TO CORRECT CURRENT ACCOUNT DEFICIT WITH U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the very strong steps being taken by the United States government to correct its imbalance of payments deficit of $1.3 billion with all countries, has the Canadian government any plans for correcting its $1.4 billion current account deficit with the United States as specified yesterday in Toronto by Assistant Secretary of Commerce Andrew F. Brimmer when speaking to the Toronto Bond Traders Association?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is a very general question and I do not think it should be posed or answered at this time.

Mr. Nielsen: On a point of order—

Mr. Hees: Just a minute.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: I believe the hon. member for Northumberland is speaking to a point of order.

Mr. Hees: On many occasions in this parliament I have been sent to the penalty box before even stepping on the ice. Today I really feel this is an important question, one which should be asked the Prime Minister on behalf of Canada, and I suggest an answer should be forthcoming.

Mr. Speaker: What I am suggesting to the hon. member is that the question is in such general terms that in its present form it is not a question of the type which should be asked on orders of the day.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I would like to rephrase my question to the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister instructed the Minister of Finance to advise the United States government, with whom Canadian ministers are conferring today, of the steps Canada proposes to take to correct the $1.4 billion balance of payments deficit which we have with that country?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am glad my hon. friend has got out of the penalty box. Of course this matter will be among those discussed in Washington at the ministerial meeting, and I would point out to my hon. friend—because this the first question he has asked me that I have been able to answer, the first one that has not been ruled out of order—that the figure he gave is a figure given in this country by an official of the United States government, not the Canadian government.

Mr. Hees: As a supplementary question, does the Prime Minister disagree with this figure? I have the speech of the assistant secretary of state right here before me and I will show it to the Prime Minister if he would like to see it. Does he disagree with this figure? Mr. Speaker, I ask the Prime Minister does he disagree with the figure used by Mr. Brimmer?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Hees: Come on, let's go.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Who is in the penalty box now?

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF LETTER RESPECTING AMENDMENT METHOD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, quite apart from this generally riotous performance I want to ask the Prime Minister a question on a very different matter. I call attention to the fact that the Prime Minister of Quebec is said to have tabled in the Quebec legislature further correspondence about a proposed new formula for the amendment of the B.N.A. Act. I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether he will table the further correspondence on this matter, and also whether he will undertake that the government will not agree to, or propose any new formula for the amendment of the constitution without the opportunity for debate in this house, and perhaps examination by a committee of this house.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, now that the Prime Minister of Quebec has made his letter public I have no objection whatsoever to having it tabled in this house. The correspondence to which my hon. friend refers is merely a letter from the Prime Minister of Quebec to me, dated February 17, and I shall be very glad indeed to table it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: And the reply?

Mr. Pearson: With regard to the second part of my hon. friend's question, I think there should be ample opportunity to discuss the question of constitutional amendment, in substance and in form, well before any new proposals are put before a federal-provincial conference.

[Later:]

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister, with reference to the most recent correspondence with Premier Lesage on the subject of the amending formula, whether the government has yet formed any intention to resume negotiations on this matter, and if so will he advise the house when negotiations on the means of bringing Canada's constitution home will be resumed?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker; we have given no consideration to the resumption of these discussions. In view of the fact that at a federal-provincial conference not so very long ago all the provincial governments agreed on a particular formula, and that that formula has now been postponed indefinitely, according to Mr. Lesage's letter, I would think that before further consideration can be given to this matter we in the federal government would be interested in receiving from the government of Quebec what changes it thinks would be desirable in the formula which all other governments have accepted.

Mr. Fulton: Will the Prime Minister make that inquiry?

Mr. Pearson: I shall be glad to make that inquiry.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REPORTED STATEMENT BY MINES MINISTER RESPECTING BILINGUALISM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Was the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys stating government policy when he said that in future for persons to enter or work in the civil service in Ottawa they must be bilingual?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the policy of the government in this matter has already been laid down. It has been laid down by me in this house and I have referred to it outside the house. Perhaps at this juncture I might repeat what I said on this particular point on March 11, 1965. I said then:

In working toward that objective—

That is, bilingualism in the civil service; and I put it forward as an objective and an objective only.

—in moving to make the services of government available in both languages and open to both English and French speaking employees—we must guard against prejudicing the position of people already in the public service. We must take great care that no injustice or injury is done to the prospects of advancement by people now in the public service who came here to provide the best service that they can for Canada, but who may speak only one of Canada's languages. That certainly is not the intention of this government and will not be the result, I believe, of the policies of this government.

I am glad to reaffirm that statement.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, what I asked the Prime Minister was whether the statement made by the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys represented government policy, that in future people entering the civil service must be bilingual.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I said yesterday, and I shall be glad to repeat now, that I will be making a rather complete, I hope, statement on this matter next week after the report of the interdepartmental committee on bilingualism has been finally considered by the cabinet over the week end.

Mr. Harkness: As a further supplementary question, have the Prime Minister and the government consulted the heads of the National Research Council, the defence research board, the heads of the research branches of the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys and other departments, in regard to what I believe would be the complete impossibility of recruiting and having adequate scientific personnel if this sort of proposition were put into effect?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, all the agencies of the government have been very carefully consulted by the interdepartmental committee whose work, I believe, extended over a year. The report of that committee to the government, which is exhaustive, not only makes certain recommendations but gives the nature of this consultation. This will be covered in the report I will be making to the house.

Hon. Théogène Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister what he means when he uses the expression "as an objective, and as an objective only"?

[Mr. Pearson.]

Mr. Pearson: Well, Mr. Speaker—

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not think this question is in order. The hon. member asks for an interpretation of a word or a phrase used in an answer. I do not think that question can be put in those terms.

[English]

HEALTH AND WELFARE

REQUEST FOR INCREASED ASSISTANCE FOR MEDICAL SCHOOLS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, in view of the serious and urgent implications involved in the Gundy report, recently put before the government, which in part alludes to a serious shortage of doctors in Canada and the necessity for increased federal assistance to our medical schools, I would like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare whether the government has studied this report, and will the government soon implement some of its recommendations by announcing a drive for medical care manpower?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that this question is again one of a very general nature and is not so urgent that it requires an answer at this time. Perhaps the hon. member would place it on the order paper.

[Translation]

PRIVILEGE

MR. CAOUETTE—LACK OF BILINGUAL TELEPHONE OPERATORS

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, it is more a matter of privilege than a question that I want to raise.

Last evening, I had long distance calls to make to my constituency and I met with a situation which is totally unacceptable and inconceivable. We have just heard about bilingualism. Last night not a single French speaking operator was available at the central telephone switchboard of the House of Commons and what I find wrong, or—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member may have a legitimate question of privilege, but under the rules, as he is well aware, he must give notice of it to the Speaker of the house one hour before the house sits.

As far as I know, such notice has not been given and the hon. member, therefore, cannot raise a question of privilege. He may put a question, if he so wishes, to a member of the government, if there is some responsibility on the part of the government in connection with the subject dealt with by the hon. member.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, could the responsible minister see to it that this situation is corrected so that we may have bilingual operators on the Parliament switchboard?

[English]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, if any minister has a responsibility in the matter I must be that minister. I will look into it at once to see what can be done.

AIR TRANSPORT

CHANGE IN REGULATIONS RESPECTING AIR CORRIDORS ACROSS ATLANTIC

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. I presume his attention has been called to the protest of the Canadian Air Lines Pilots Association about the recent change in the international regulation governing air corridors across the north Atlantic. In view of the exceptional record of Canadian air lines regarding safety, unsurpassed I think in the world, I wonder whether the minister is prepared to place the views of these pilots who are responsible for that enviable record before the international body and press for a revision or repeal of this international decision to narrow the corridors.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to look into the suggestion of the hon. member as soon as possible.

TRANSPORT

SHORTAGE OF BOX CARS ON C.P.R. WESTERN LINES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. S. Smallwood (Battle River-Camrose): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works and in his absence I should like to direct it to the Prime Minister. It arises from a letter I received this morning informing me that because of the C.P.R. the farmers at Derwent and Myrnam are still on a two bushel quota. I should like to ask the Prime Minister what action the government is going to take to see that these farmers get some box cars.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the responsible minister or ministers and the Prime Minister have taken note of the hon. member's inquiry, but I do not think this question can properly be asked at this time.

Mr. Smallwood: I should like to debate it on Monday at ten o'clock.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

HALIFAX—REQUEST FOR SUSPENSION OF JOB EVALUATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Associate Minister of National Defence. If I am directing it to the wrong minister I offer my apologies. My question refers to the growing concern among prevailing rate employees now termed as service and maintenance employees in Halifax. Would the minister and the government consider the suspension of the implementation of job evaluation at least until collective bargaining is a fact?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps this question should be placed on the order paper.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

PRESENCE OF OFFICERS DURING CONSIDERATION OF ESTIMATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State in relation to the estimates of her department, which we expect to have before us in the not too distant future. Can the hon. lady say whether it is her intention to have officials of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation available so we can obtain answers to some very pressing questions?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I have had most of the officials from the president on down here in Ottawa for the past week. So far as I am aware they will be around today.

MONTREAL—DEMONSTRATION RESPECTING JURISDICTIONAL DISPUTE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State. Is the hon. lady aware of a movement to destroy the membership in four national unions in the province of Quebec involving employees of the C.B.C.?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): No, Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any such matter.

Yesterday my hon. friend asked me a question having regard to some demonstrations, which puzzled me. I do not know with what reference it was associated, but I assume it was in respect of the C.B.C. He asked me whether I knew of any proposed demonstrations by the C.S.N.-C.N.T.U. I have checked with the C.B.C. and have been informed that they understand there is a demonstration planned in regard to the jurisdictional dispute at Palais du Commerce in Montreal on Sunday, March 13. They are not aware of any plans for such meetings in Ottawa or in Quebec city.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INDIA—INVITATION TO PRIME MINISTER TO VISIT CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Prime Minister. Can he tell us whether Mrs. Gandhi, the Prime Minister of India, will be visiting Canada when she is in North America shortly?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, Mrs. Gandhi was invited to come to Canada before or after her forthcoming visit to Washington. I received a telegram this morning through our high commissioner in New Delhi in which she expressed regret at not being able to accept the invitation partly because the Indian parliament is now in session and she feels she must go right back to India after her Washington visit. Perhaps her inability to accept at this time may be related not only to her own important duties in India in the present situation, but to the fact that the late and lamented prime minister of India, Mr. Shastri, visited us last year.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I should like to know whether someone in the government benches can tell us what was so pressing about that question that it should be allowed, with a reply, on orders of the day?

An hon. Member: As a matter of courtesy it should be answered.

[Mr. Winkler.]

INDIA—INQUIRY AS TO ITEMS COMPRISING ADDITIONAL AID

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question arising out of the statement he made this morning in respect of additional food aid to India. Have the government made any decision in respect of the purchase of the various commodities of food they intend to send to India, or have they just appropriated the additional money required? If there is a list of the commodities intended to be shipped, I wonder whether we can be provided with a copy.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge there is no detailed list as yet. We do know, in view of talks we have had with India, that India requires wheat above all else, but a discussion as to what other food commodities might be helpful is still taking place.

I should also like to remind the house that within the next two or three weeks there is to be an international meeting of the countries which are anxious to help share in aid to India in order to discuss the most effective ways that particular countries can assist in meeting this situation.

Mr. Olson: I have a supplementary question. I understood the Prime Minister to say that the balance of the $25 million in aid for the current year would be used to ship commodities to India before the end of this month, and that is what I am mainly concerned about rather than aid in the new fiscal year.

Mr. Pearson: I will look into the situation right away and obtain the information requested.

Mr. S. J. Enns (Portage-Neepawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to that question regarding Indian aid. Is the government taking every step to make certain that the aid pledged earlier this year will be provided India as early as possible?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I did not catch the last part of my hon. friend's question.

Mr. Enns: The government made an announcement regarding aid to India earlier this year, in respect of which contracts and tenders were received for purchases. Is every step being taken by the government to make sure this aid will be provided that country as expeditiously as possible?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we are taking every possible step to get it there and to get it there quickly.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question in connection with the statement made by the Prime Minister regarding aid to India. In his statement he said the general plan would begin in the next crop year which, of course, would be after July 31. Does the Prime Minister know the total amount that Canada will be making available between now and then to meet the immediate serious situation; and is it a fact that because of our other commitments, to which he referred in his statement, we are unable to give any additional wheat or flour assistance at this time?

Mr. Pearson: The aid for 1965-66 that we have promised will be completed very shortly. Indeed, in view of some observations that have been made in the United States I would point out that Canada has been able to provide every bushel of food aid requested by the Indian authorities up to the present time. We are now discussing with the Indian authorities and other countries concerned how much we can add to what we have done. We have not yet agreed on the amount or the nature of the food aid. We expect to do this within a week or two, and perhaps I will be able to make a more specific and definite announcement next week.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I thank the Prime Minister for that answer. I should like to ask him one further question. Who pays for the freight of the wheat? This was a matter of concern during my period of administration, and it is of very great importance.

Mr. Pearson: In the past—and I speak subject to correction—I believe the government receiving Colombo plan assistance in most cases paid the freight, but in an emergency of this kind I should think other arrangements might have to be considered. When I mentioned the possibility of aid from other countries which cannot supply food, I was referring to their providing aid in other ways such as shipping. But we shall be very careful not to let shipping costs prevent needed wheat getting to India.

NATO—REPORTED PRESSURE FOR REMOVAL OF BASES FROM FRANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question that I wanted to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Perhaps in his absence and with your permission I could direct it to the Prime Minister. Having in mind reports from Paris under today's date that the French government is pressing Canada for the removal of bases and personnel, can the Prime Minister say whether any official representations have been received from the French government on this matter?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have of course read these reports. We have also been in touch with our mission in Paris in regard to them and in regard to other conversations which are going on concerning NATO. I should like to repeat what the Secretary of State for External Affairs said the other day, that some of the reports have not been confirmed, and the government has not yet received any formal communication from the French government in respect of these matters.

Nevertheless, the reports I have read and to which my hon. friend has referred are consistent with the general position taken by President de Gaulle in his press conference on February 21. As I said in the house the day after that press conference, on February 22, we would expect the French government to put forward in some formal manner precise proposals to which Canada and other NATO countries would respond. We have not, as I just indicated, received such a communication. When it is received, Mr. Speaker, we will give it careful study. But I would reaffirm what I said the other day that Canadian forces are in France as NATO forces under collective security arrangements, and if those arrangements are to be changed at the request of any particular government this would be a very serious matter which would deserve very serious consideration.

GHANA—REPORTED REQUEST FOR FINANCIAL AID

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of continuing reports from Ghana I would ask whether the Canadian government has received any specific request for financial aid, either directly from Ghana or through the world bank or the United Nations.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I would have to look into that matter, Mr. Speaker. As of yesterday we had received no formal or official request. Something may have come in since then. I shall be glad to investigate.

WATER RESOURCES

DISCUSSION AT CANADA-U.S. MINISTERIAL MEETING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I wish to direct to the Prime Minister. Can he advise the house whether the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys will be discussing problems of water resources and pollution of boundary waters while he is in Washington?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt that this question will come up during the course of discussions there. I can not say specifically whether this subject is on the formal agenda, but I am sure it will be discussed.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO FEDERAL MIGRATORY BIRD LICENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack Roxburgh (Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to ask the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Is it true that the government has approved a federal migratory bird licence or duck stamp?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question should be placed on the order paper.

LABOUR RELATIONS

ONTARIO—REQUEST FOR INTERVENTION IN TRUCKING STRIKE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. William Dean Howe (Hamilton South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact that the teamsters' strike has continued for more than six weeks, will the minister consider taking a personal part in seeking a quick settlement?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the report I received early this morning would indicate that the teamsters are now considering a proposal that was submitted to them by the truck operators. This has been or is to be submitted to the different unions for their consideration. I am watching the situation carefully, and if and when I feel that the time has come when I should intervene, I will do so. I continue to receive reports at least once or twice every day.

[Mr. Pearson.]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

WINDSOR—PROSPECTIVE LAY-OFF OF FORD WORKERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. It arises from remarks he made earlier this morning in which he said that two men in Windsor were acting on behalf of his department in regard to the lay-offs at the Ford Motor Company. The minister said he hoped he would be able to report to the house tomorrow. I am not sure whether today is tomorrow, because of the early hour when his remarks were made. However, I would ask the minister whether he is in a position to report to the house on the progress his people have made in Windsor.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I hope to receive a report today but I have not yet received it. As soon as I get it I will make a report to the house.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Legal and other services—

1. Administration including the office of the Superintendent of Bankruptcy, grants and contributions as detailed in the estimates, gratuities to the widows or such dependents as may be approved by Treasury Board of judges who die while in office and authority to make recoverable advances for the administration of justice on behalf of the governments of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon Territory, $2,504,300.

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of supply, estimates of the Department of Justice for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1966, vote No. 1. Shall vote No. 1 carry?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, a few days ago when I concluded my remarks I said "I rest", which of course is the proper expression to use. I noticed an article in the press written by one of those who apparently do not understand the expression, because he said the significance of it was that I was tired. I am glad to be able to say that I used the term in the best and properly acceptable form. I also read in another article that the other day the Prime Minister played his trump card when he brought out certain facts. Well, Mr. Chairman, I am going to deal with that trump card today.

This has been an amazing series of revelations. As the days go by we get additional information, mainly through the press. You said a moment ago, Mr. Chairman, "Shall vote No. 1 carry?" We are generally in agreement that the various estimates of the Department of Justice shall pass and would be only too happy to agree thereto, provided it is made clear that it does not cover one dollar of the salary of the Minister of Justice.

I do not condemn the minister individually. I think he has been acting as his predecessor had to act on several occasions to protect the government. I have listened to the minister and endeavoured to understand what is behind all this evasion and even downright delusion.

• (12:00 noon)

Mr. Nielsen: Deception.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Deception is a word that has wide circulation and which is only used in particular circumstances, but I think in these circumstances the word is not overly strong. The government has hidden the facts right from the beginning. The other day the minister read a long screed, obviously extramurally prepared.

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. I presume the right hon. gentleman is subject to the rules of this house, just as the rest of us common mortals are, and I insist that they be applied.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is not the first time he read a speech prepared elsewhere; let me make that clear.

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Chairman, I can tell hon. members this; when it comes to writing anything about the right hon. gentleman I do not need any writers because it flows like magic.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Let me say that the last time he made a vicious attack, he made it when he knew I was not in the house and it was prepared elsewhere, and I know—

Mr. Cardin: That is not true.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I know who prepared it.

Mr. Cardin: That is not true.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Let me say to the hon. gentleman, just keep yourself calm.

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Chairman, I ask that the hon. member withdraw that statement. It is untrue. Let me tell him it takes more than two frustrated Conservatives to rattle me.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You know—

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There is nothing to withdraw.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. gentleman—

The Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: As I listened to the hon. gentleman again giving one of these exhibitions I thought of the words of Shakespeare, "Man, proud man, dressed in a little brief authority, most ignorant of what he's most assured".

Mr. Pearson: Get it right; remember Shakespeare.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Prime Minister had added to the ignorance of this house by not giving the facts. He has hidden them. He has hidden them always and I intend to deal with the record, the labyrinth of deception that has been built around this case. We have not been able to get the truth. We do not know the truth, yet we get the story day by day. If we read the Montreal Star we find that those in high authority gave information regarding the administration and dismissals that took place. Who are these people who give information to the press when the House of Commons cannot secure that information?

The Prime Minister smiles about this. You know, there is one thing you have to do and that is rely upon the word of the Prime Minister. I always follow that course. The other day—on February 23, was it—he spoke at length, but he must again have forgotten some things. We did not get much information. As I said, I go back to the beginning, to the communiqué that was issued on May 8, a communiqué that was not true if the statement made by the minister the other day was.

They thought they were going to play a trump on us by saying these things happened in 1960 and before in so far as Spencer is concerned. Nothing happened after 1963. This was a trump, was it? If it is true that no knowledge had been received by the mounted police, they did not know anything about it in 1960, 1961 or 1962; they did not know of the activities of Mr. Spencer.

Mr. Cardin: Of course they did.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then, Mr. Speaker, if the mounted police did, why was action not taken in this case?

Mr. Cardin: Why didn't you?

Mr. Diefenbaker: If that statement is true, then what about this statement in the press release that was issued:

Approaches made by two members of the Soviet embassy very shortly came to the attention of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

What does "very shortly" mean? It means very shortly before the publication of this release.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, shortly after that happened.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It means that if what the hon. gentleman has said is true, the time has come for a full and complete investigation. I want to go back; I want to cover the period from 1944 onward.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes, I want to cover that period. I want to see it fully investigated. The Prime Minister laughs, but I want to see as well that we make available to the commission meeting behind closed doors the revelations that have found their way to Washington and have there been placed in evidence that was taken in that body on security. We are not getting the facts. Today we asked what communications there were, and we received no answer at all. The indication was that so far as Spencer was concerned, he was satisfied. There was no suggestion at any time that Spencer's lawyer had ever written, that there had been any objection.

In the morning press the lawyer says he wrote asking for certain information and that he was retained for the purpose of looking into the question and securing the rights of Mr. Spencer. None of this has been revealed. We have had half truths placed before the House of Commons when, in a matter such as this, the full truth should be revealed. I have only to point out that yesterday the Minister of Justice in the province of Quebec issued as grave an indictment as has ever been made regarding this government's administration of justice. He says it is "pusillanimous". He says he can get no action. He says what is taking place is that this government will not act other than a pusillanimous way.

I ask the government, what are you going to do in this connection? What action are you going to take? Why will you not set up a royal commission now behind closed doors? Is there anything unusual in that? In 1944-45 the government of that day set up a royal commission. I was not in agreement with certain activities of that commission which, in effect, abolished habeas corpus. However, the commission was set up and it went thoroughly into the investigation. The assumption put forward that these things have happened over the years is of primary importance as a basis upon which to demand that there be such a commission.

I know of no newspaper that supports the stand of the government. In all parts of Canada the press is saying, set up a commission. Let us assure that our security shall be preserved. Let us go into this matter. Why do you not do it? Don't go around telling members of the press gallery: "If we were to tell what we know, we would be devastating". I say to you, let us bring out the facts. Establish a royal commission.

I want to go back to 1944-45 to see whether our security is what it should be. This Spencer case and the circumstances connected with the issuance of that never to be forgotten press release can only lead one to believe that at that time there was something that required a smokescreen, something at that time which had to be used to cover up certain circumstances. This is most unusual. Security does not work that way. It is a very difficult problem, but it does not work when you rush to issue a press release which, on the basis of what we have been told, was not true.

The other day the minister tried to carry us away by saying that Mr. Spencer was dismissed under a law passed during the days of the Conservative administration. Let us just look at it. The section in question had been in effect for years, though it was worded differently. I am going to read the two sets of wording. The sections were rearranged, and there was only a change of wording.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to ask the right hon. gentleman a question. Does the right hon. gentleman not take responsibility for the legislation that his government introduced?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes, all of it. There is nothing more helpful, Mr. Chairman, than that kind of interruption. We are trying to make the government responsible for some of the things they have been doing and which they have been hiding over the last several weeks. We have been smoking them out. The old section 52 of the Civil Service Act read as follows:

Subject to section 3, nothing herein contained shall impair the power of the governor in council to remove or dismiss any deputy head, officer, clerk or employee, but no such deputy head, officer, clerk or employee, whose appointment is of a permanent nature, shall be removed from office except by authority of the governor in council.

That was the law all through the years, but in 1960-61 the wording was changed and the section renumbered to section 50, which now reads as follows:

(1) The tenure of office of an employee is during the pleasure of Her Majesty, subject to the provisions of this and any other act and the regulations thereunder, and, unless some other period of employment is specified, for an indeterminate period.

(2) Nothing in this act shall be construed to limit or affect the right or power of the governor in council to remove or dismiss any employee.

The two sections, in effect, are identical, although the minister, not having read the earlier section, tried to leave the impression that something new had been added.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask the right hon. gentleman a factual question. Did his government not take the responsibility for the revised bill that was introduced in this house and passed?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, with the assistance of the hon. member and those who sit on the other side who were in the house at the time, who all agreed with the legislation. Some time ago the hon. gentleman himself joined in this, and I just have to recall it to his mind.

We are now dealing with the question of the security of Canada. The minister says he believes in truth. I would only ask, after the deception practised by this government in this matter, what is their definition of truth? It has been a sinuous course, revealing a bit here and a bit there.

As far as Mr. Wagner is concerned, he knows them well. He said he could not understand why they will not act. What is the reason that the government will not act? I should like the government to tell the truth in this connection. Why will the government not set up a commission on crime? Why will they not set up a commission to look into this matter in secret, while preserving and protecting the security of the nation? All we want is the truth, and from the very beginning we have not had it.

I had to read in the paper today that Spencer was a communist and that he was thrown out of the communist party. I had to read in the paper because we did not learn it in the house, what was his age. We have never been able to find out when he came to Canada, although there is an indication that he has been here quite a number of years. Why is the whole story not told? What is behind this? No matter whether the government is able to command a majority or is not, in every part of this nation people are asking what is behind this, why the government is not acting.

It is a difficult problem. We are all held in check by our oath of office as privy councillors. Therefore the only place where a full and complete explanation can be made would be in a commission inquiry, I would say headed by one supreme court judge. Two of the judges are greatly experienced and served during the days of Gouzenko.

Let us get to the bottom of this, Mr. Chairman. Let hon. members not take my word for it; let them take Mr. Wagner's word. He looks forward to the government changing its mind, to retreating and appointing a commission on crime. According to Mr. Wagner: "They will reverse their decision." So he knows them. He said that people who act pusillanimously always reverse themselves. These are the terms of the minister of justice of the province of Quebec, commenting upon the decision of his counterpart the Minister of Justice of Canada not to act on Quebec's demand to set up a royal commission to deal with organized crime.

He also said— and these words come from an outstanding Liberal who knows these ministers—"They must be afraid of something". Has he any basis for saying that? He said that they must be afraid of something, to refuse an inquiry in such a cavalier fashion, as though this was a request for a hunting licence. Can you imagine anything more deadly or condemnatory than those words which are to be found in the press yesterday, those words of condemnation? He also said "I want Ottawa to give reasons for their refusal". But he lives in hope. Anyone, he says, who gives a pusillanimous decision will always retreat.

• (12:20 p.m.)

Now, sir, let us go back to the explanation of the Prime Minister. On February 23 he went into detail regarding this case and he said this at page 1682:

Not only did I study the details of this case and discuss them again with my ministerial colleagues who were more particularly concerned, but I examined other security cases in the last ten years which might throw some light on the justifiability or otherwise of the procedure followed in this instance—certain cases which were of very direct and immediate concern to the government of the day, which was the government preceding this government.

As I have stated before, you will find problems such as this, and they do come up. I do not criticize any government for its action in preserving the security of the nation, but what I do criticize is that the Secretary of State for External Affairs rushed into print, and what was denied over and over again by the Minister of Justice became official. The identification finally became official when the minister on television marked this man as a wrongdoer, as a traitor and as a despicable individual, undermining this country.

Mr. Nielsen: That is right.

Mr. Diefenbaker: And he named him. It is all very well to try to get away with that, but there is no excuse that the minister can give; there is no excuse at all. He said, "That is not the truth." May I point out what the Prime Minister said, on page 1682:

> In the first place, Mr. Spencer himself has admitted, voluntarily admitted, improper activities which in the view of the government made his dismissal from the civil service of Canada not only desirable but necessary.

I understand that, but that is not what we are dealing with at the moment. We are dealing with the question of security and the way in which it was bungled callously, the facts concealed by this government; and only by the process of daily extraction, by one admission after another, do we finally see the picture as it is.

The Prime Minister says that in so far as section 50 of the Civil Service Act is concerned—

> Mr. Spencer was in my view treated fairly.

He goes on to say:

> —he was given a hearing by a senior official of the Civil Service Commission.

Well, I cannot understand what kind of hearing that would be, bringing a hired man before the hired man's boss. This man has already been found to be a wrongdoer. Sir, the Prime Minister goes on to say:

> The law officers of the crown had advised against instituting criminal proceedings against Mr. Spencer and proceedings were not taken. The primary purpose of the investigations in which Mr. Spencer himself was involved—and he was certainly only one of the persons involved in those investigations—was to identify, if possible, and remove a threat to the national security.

Sir, we want to know that the national security is free from the inexcusable ineptitude and worse that this case has revealed. We should not have to press away for this information. Surely in the interests of common justice a commission is the only way. Surely I am right. What else is there?

The other day the minister or the Prime Minister hid behind a smokescreen and said, "Oh, he is perfectly satisfied." You could almost see Spencer exuding his happiness at the events which have taken place, and at the way he was treated.

We find that there was a letter written, thrown up in the air, "To whom it may concern," which covered doctors, mounted policemen, consideration of his operation, and those sorts of things. That was no approval of the conduct of this government. That letter was simply a statement of appreciation of a man who was in hospital and had an operation. It was addressed "To whom it may concern". There is not a word, never a suggestion that he approved of his treatment, except through the medium of that letter.

We had to find out about this, and it came out yesterday in a very unusual way. We had to find out which letters were written. The reason a question was asked by me was that it was obvious from the appearance of the ministers that there was something not exactly in accordance with the facts as revealed by the Minister of Justice. The hon. member for Yukon said on page 2055 of Hansard:

> —may I ask the Minister of Justice whether he has received any recent communication from Victor Spencer which would constitute further evidence in support of a judicial hearing, as has been demanded by the opposition in this house?

The answer was:

> No, Mr. Speaker.

Then I asked the Prime Minister this:

> During the course of the investigation and during the last few months has the government of Canada received a letter from Spencer setting forth his side of the case and, in that letter, giving a great deal of information?

As far as that letter is concerned, when the Prime Minister says the national security demands that it be not produced, I can go along with him. I can realize that would be the result of the publication of such a letter. However, that letter should be before a judge in a commission to get the facts. We cannot have that letter. The security of the country is of first consideration. But that does not deny if injustice is done, or even where it only appears to have been done, this case ought to come before a commission and be thoroughly gone into.

The Prime Minister at page 2056 of Hansard said:

> This was many months ago—explaining the nature of his own improper conduct. The government also received a communication from Mr. Spencer some weeks ago—"To whom it may concern"—thanking the R.C.M.P. and others who have been with him during these difficult months for the courtesy and consideration he received.

That was supposed to be approval of the kind of treatment he has been subjected to.

Sir, I come back to the point where I began. The revelations made by the Minister of Justice and by the Prime Minister in the last three or four days call out for an investigation. They are hiding something. They have hidden and concealed matters, one after the other, until finally, as information comes out in the press, they gradually back up and reveal a little more.

We want the facts of this case. If there has been wrongdoing at any other times it can all be brought out in a commission. It should be held, to assure us that Canada's security shall be maintained. Because, sir, if this matter is allowed to stand in its present form it means that a government can point out, designate, condemn, and a person has no recourse. Surely we have not come to that in this country?

Mr. Nielsen: We have not.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I again impress on the government the need of action. I know the Minister of Justice is not acquainted with these things. He is seldom before the courts at any time, according to what I am told. Yet he is able to tell us that he knows everything has been well done. It is not enough, sir. There has been too much hiding, too much concealment and deception practised on this house in the last few weeks in this connection.

I would not have believed it possible. In saying that I am making due allowance for hon. members sitting on the other side of the house. I would not have believed it possible that ministers of the crown would come before parliament and give the house a self-exculpatory, ill-digested and incomplete story, as this is.

Again I say that so far as the rest of the estimates are concerned, I think in general they will be accepted. Indeed, we are not going to be put in the position of having the government say "We will get this through because we have got to get supply." Bring in a supply bill immediately covering all the departments which have been passed so far and we will put it through at once.

• (12:30 p.m.)

An hon. Member: And the ones that have not been passed?

Mr. Diefenbaker: We shall do it at once and I am sure the house will consent. But we do not intend to be placed in a position where the government can delude the house, conceal things, fail to reveal facts which the house should know and hide behind the bulwark of security. We do not want any information which will reveal the secret operations of the R.C.M.P. But what has been stated here? The alleged trump card of the other day reveals that this man must have been operating for a long time unknown to the mounted police, trying to build up espionage networks within this country and outside apparently. Is it not a strange, puzzling story? If that is so, if he was able to get away with it, then there needs to be some checking up on our security activities.

This case has left a bad impression in the minds of many Canadians. No amount of insistence by the minister that this is a routine case can erase that impression. The failure to discover the truth in this case will be a black day in Canada's security history. There the minister is on television with two million people listening to him and he gives the man's name, his activities and his wrongdoing. The minister pretended the other day that this man was so well satisfied that he had not uttered a squeak. We find that this is not quite so. Even now, after all the denials which have been made by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice, do you not think, Mr. Chairman, that in the interest, first of all, of assuring that not only shall justice be done but that it shall appear to have been done, and also in the interest of assuring that our security measures are not honeycombed by weakness, failure or bad administrative technique, some positive step should be taken to deal with this situation?

When we had the investigation which was undertaken by the government of the day in 1945-46 a great deal was revealed. Evidence was brought out which showed the creation, not in embryo but the actual creation, of an espionage group operating against the welfare of the country to which its members owed allegiance. They were cleared out. The innocent were acquitted and the guilty were convicted. Let us have another such investigation behind closed doors now in the interests of security.

Mr. Cardin: In the course of this debate, which has been a most important one covering important subjects, there have been many speeches, particularly on the Spencer case. Some of these speeches were extremely hard-hitting, using very strong language. I refer particularly to the speeches made by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam and the hon. member for York South. Although I do not and cannot agree with their conclusions I accept their right in the house to express their opinions and their feelings in as strong a language as they desire. I feel this is completely in accord with the practice of debate in the House of Commons.

But I do not consider the remarks which have just been made by the leader of the Opposition belong in that category. The speech made by the Leader of the Opposition on this occasion, as on other occasions in the past, shows one thing. right from the beginning the purpose of the right hon. gentleman is evident. He uses such phrases as "the Minister of Justice, who has not had very much practice in law, is telling us". Well, he can save his breath if he is trying to prove to the committee that I am not an expert in law. I am not an expert in law. But I do have good officials in the Department of Justice and I know just about enough law to be able to detect phony arguments.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Cardin: From the speech the right hon. gentleman made this afternoon and from statements he has made both inside and outside the house it is quite clear to me that the great executioner is now after my political neck.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You committed suicide yourself.

Mr. Cardin: The right hon. gentleman's performance would have been as good and his speech would have been as vicious if in fact I had prosecuted Spencer and if I had not had proper surveillance mounted in regard to him. The real issue is not Spencer. This is merely an excuse to put into effect the execution which the hon. member has wanted to carry out for quite some time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Cardin: In a speech not so very long ago he referred to me as a dwarf parading around in clothing I had inherited from a giant. I can tell the hon. member this: I would rather be a dwarf clothed in giant's garments—I presume the hon. member thinks he is among the giants—than be a giant clothed in dwarf's clothing, because there is much more exposed.

For the past 14 years I have sat in this house and I have watched the hon. member pummel away at a chosen political opponent, heaping abuse, ridicule, scorn, accusations and insinuations of all sorts upon him with evident delight. Of course, he could be considered by some to be a great political debater, a great fighter except for one thing. The right hon. gentleman has a glass chin. He can't take it. He cannot take the least possible criticism, nor has he done so in the past.

• (12:40 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Cardin: All right. Hon. members say that is not so. On Friday the hon. member for Yukon and again today the right hon. gentleman mentioned the speech I made four or five years ago when I dared to criticize the right hon. gentleman, when I dared to criticize the untouchable one because of his attitude as prime minister of this country.

Not only did I believe and do I now believe that every word I said at that time was right, but the right hon. gentleman, with his vicious attacks on individuals, his irresponsible accusations and insinuations in this house, is proving me to be right day by day.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Chairman, the right hon. gentleman has not learned. He is still blasting his way through paper walls and open doorways. He is blasting himself out of the leadership of his party and out of parliament and maybe, Mr. Chairman, when that is done we will be able to do some work in this chamber.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You have the Prime Minister applauding now.

Mr. Cardin: The right hon. gentleman knows that the problem of national security is an important one. Does he believe that the performance he has put on this afternoon is going to help in any way to solve that problem? Does he believe that the performance he has put on this afternoon is going to add any dignity or prestige to parliament? This is stirring up hostility in the house far beyond what is normal and necessary in debates in the house.

Mr. Ricard: What are you doing yourself?

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Chairman, it would seem to me that the right hon. gentleman has unfortunately attained a degree of political conceit that every time he decides to make loud noises he expects the government, parliament, and everyone in it to jump. Well, I refuse to jump.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Cardin: I have made my case.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Tell us about Mr. Wagner.

Mr. Cardin: Whether or not hon. members opposite agree with it, I have made my case. I am convinced of the correctness of the decision I have made and there is not one person in the house who is going to make me say I am wrong when I know I am right.

I am willing to listen to hon. members on all sides of the house who bring forward criticisms and constructive advice on the difficult problems concerning the administration of security matters. But a while ago the right hon. gentleman was accusing us of hiding the truth, of hiding evidence from the committee. Well, I can tell the right hon. gentleman that of all the members of the House of Commons he—I repeat, he—is the very last person in the house who can afford to give advice on the handling of security cases in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Cardin: And I am not kidding.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: And again applause from the Prime Minister. I want that on the record.

Mr. Cardin: I understand the right hon. gentleman said he wants that on the record. Would he want me to go on and give more?

Some hon. Members: Go on. He wants it.

Mr. Cardin: Very well.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Cardin: I want the right hon. gentleman to tell the house about his participation in the Monseignor case when he was prime minister of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am not worried. Have your commission look into it. Put it on the agenda.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Speak up or shut up.

Mr. Cardin: I have spoken. Let the right hon. gentleman speak. Mr. Chairman, I think I have said all I have to say on the Spencer case.

Mr. Diefenbaker: None of those false threats mean anything. Now, go to it.

Mr. Cardin: They are not false threats. The Spencer case was an important one. It was a most difficult one. I have done all I could to try to inform the house of matters that I could and to try and explain the reason this case was unusual. As I have mentioned on many occasions, the only difference in this case is the fact that Spencer identified himself three weeks before I did.

Other important matters have been raised during the course of the debate, about which I would like to say a few words. Speeches have been made, and very good ones, on the question of bankruptcy. I want to refer particularly to the speech made by the hon. member for Greenwood and the speech made by the hon. member for Broadview. I wish to thank the hon. members for the suggestions they made in the course of that debate.

I am also very anxious to explain to members of the committee the difficulty which the Minister of Justice has in trying to administer a very complicated, awkward and obsolete Act, in trying to deal with what has become sophisticated and, I understand, organized crime in the field of bankruptcies.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is not what Mr. Kierans says.

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Chairman, some confusion has arisen in the minds of hon. members and of people outside the house, between fraudulent bankruptcies and pre-bankruptcy frauds, and in order to explain this may I give an example, say, of arson being committed or theft or misappropriation of funds which leads to a bankruptcy. In that case it could be considered as a fraudulent bankruptcy, but there we are mistaking the cause and the effect and I think it is important that this distinction be made.

I am not trying in any way to minimize the responsibility of the federal government in the field of bankruptcy but I think it is important that that position be made clear. Contrary to what hon. members have said, it is not true to suggest that the government has done nothing about the problem of bankruptcy during the past two years. It is not true to say that the government has been unconcerned about the most disconcerting activities and crimes that have been committed in this field, and I should like to state some of the steps that have been taken in this matter.

For instance, just recently important amendments to the Bankruptcy Act were introduced in the other place, and I should like to explain the reason why this was done. It would not have been possible for me to introduce those amendments to the Bankruptcy Act in this house before another five to six weeks, which to my mind was too long a delay, and I felt that by introducing the amendments in the Senate members of this house would have an opportunity to see the bill, to study it, to be prepared and then be in a position to pass the legislation as quickly as possible so that the proper action can be taken as soon as possible.

• (12:50 p.m.)

Mr. Brewin: Would the minister permit a question at this stage? I understood him to say that there is need for speed in passing these amendments. Does he not think that this subject, because it is a tremendously important one politically and otherwise, should be discussed by a committee of this house? This whole subject involves not only the question of legislation but the question of the administration of the Act. Should this not be dealt with by a committee of this house rather than leaving the other place to look after a matter so important?

Mr. Cardin: I understand that by following the procedure I have suggested we are taking this first step in the Senate. There is no question in my mind that this matter can be considered by a committee of this house but at least the first part of this operation will have been completed.

I should like to state also that the measures which will be brought before the house will extend the powers of the superintendent to do those very things which hon. members in the house claim can be done under section 3(3)(e) of the Act. I maintain that they cannot be done now. The superintendent of bankruptcy under the present Act can investigate matters that fall within the estate, but he cannot investigate matters that are outside the estate. At the present time there is no power by which the superintendent of bankruptcy is able to follow leads with regard to the estate in bankruptcy which may lead him outside the estate or to obtain search warrants or to inquire into all sorts of activities which may not be directly in the estate in bankruptcy. That is the area in which most of the evidence is to be found in respect of what some people call fraudulent bankruptcies.

[Mr. Cardin.]

According to the present Act the superintendent has no power to investigate negotiations, contracts or events that have taken place before or after the bankruptcy, and the reason for this is quite clear. In 1949 when the act was passed Mr. Garson, in explaining the purposes of the bill, said, as reported in the proceedings of the Senate and house committee on bankruptcy:

> The bill increases "creditor control" over an estate by vesting directly in the creditors and inspectors a number of responsibilities and obligations in respect of which they were previously required to resort to the court.

As a result of this trustees, creditors, and inspectors who are named by the trustees and who are not part of the bankruptcy division have in effect more power than the superintendent to launch investigations into matters, whether criminal or otherwise, either within or outside the bankruptcies. We have but to refer to sections 120, 121 and 122 to verify that fact.

What has really happened is that on the basis of the present Act the control has broken down completely. The superintendent, because of the act, does not have sufficient power to carry out the investigations that are required in this sophisticated field of crime. The amendments will give the superintendent more power to investigate not only within a bankrupt estate but outside as well. He will then be able to follow whatever leads he discovers. He will have power to call for witnesses and obtain search warrants to get at the real core of the problem in this regard. As far back as 1964 a measure was taken—

Mr. Nielsen: May I ask the minister a question before he leaves that point? Has the minister or the government discussed this aspect of following leads, wherever the superintendent finds them, with the attorneys general of the provinces?

Mr. Cardin: Yes, indeed. If you allow me to complete my remarks I think you will find I will have covered that very point. As far back as 1964 the federal government was in touch with the Quebec authorities in an attempt to work out co-operative measures in the field of fraudulent bankruptcy, which is in fact a field falling within the jurisdictions of both governments.

The third measure we have taken is the institution of regular audits of the administration of trustees by the comptroller of the treasury. This was initiated as far back as April, 1964 and it has proven to be an effective check on the administration of trustees. This has led to the discovery of some irregularities and some prosecutions.

As the fourth measure I can inform the committee that in 1963 there were 33 bankruptcies investigated by the R.C.M.P., in 1964 the R.C.M.P. investigated 185 bankruptcies, in 1965 they investigated 123 and in 1966 so far they have investigated 32, making a total of 373 bankruptcy investigations since 1963. In addition, there have been some 200 employees of bankrupts who have in fact been investigated by the R.C.M.P. during this same period. As a result 11 trustees have lost their licences and 12 trustees have been restricted in order that they may complete the estates in hand under the very strict supervision of the superintendent of bankruptcy. No new estates are being granted to these people.

Although there may not be reason for being overly proud there is at least some indication that the measures we have taken have had some effect, because in 1964 there were 5,562 estates in bankruptcies reported and in 1965 there were 5,003. I am not saying that this is a world-shaking record but I do say that it indicates a tendency in the right direction.

We are also giving extremely careful scrutiny in regard to all applicants for licences as trustees. This includes an examination by the R.C.M.P. and, as a matter of fact, there have been no new licences for trustees given since April 20, 1965. Moreover, the superintendent and I are busily engaged in setting up a selective board to which people who are interested in becoming trustees will have to come. That board will be able to examine their qualifications as well as their integrity and look into the applications to a greater degree than has ever been possible in the past. We have also instituted unexpected spot checks by the R.C.M.P. of the administration by trustees in cases about which we have had some doubt. This also has proven to be quite useful.

As a seventh measure the superintendent of bankruptcy is now preparing a book of regulations giving rules and procedures that the trustees must follow meticulously. This will mean that the procedures followed will be uniform throughout the country.

As an eighth measure negotiations have been successfully carried out by the provincial and federal government to appoint an additional superior court judge to sit and act exclusively in respect of bankruptcy matters.

• (1:00 p.m.)

Ninth, there have been and there are extensive plans to increase the staff of the bankruptcy branch, including the locating of representatives of the superintendent in Toronto and Montreal. I think the man suggested for Toronto has pretty well been decided upon and the man for Montreal is still being considered. In the bankruptcy division four additional positions have been created for auditors. Two additional positions for investigators have also been created as well as an additional five members of the clerical staff. In addition, Mr. Chairman—and this is the main point of our program— we are going to organize a bankruptcy squad made up of specialists, including accountants and investigators, who will be able to carry out these specialized inspections far more effectively than the police. This is no reflection on the police.

Mr. Nielsen: Hear, hear.

Mr. Cardin: The investigation of these matters is most difficult because it requires a great deal of knowledge of bookkeeping, corporation and commercial law and a special type of knowledge of the transactions of business. The result is that the superintendent, with the greater powers he has been given and the additional help he will have, will be able to look into the particular area in which most of the trouble has occurred, what is called the grey area in bankruptcy. This is the area where suspicion of irregularities exists but not to the extent where provincial and local law enforcement officers think they are justified in carrying out a full scale investigation of the matter. Bankruptcy squad individuals, as I mentioned a while ago—I think this is important—would not only look into a bankruptcy where there was suspicion of irregularity but would go wherever the evidence might lead them. In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, this would get at the nub of the problem.

Further, in order to ensure the greatest possible co-ordination between the federal and provincial governments in this field of divided jurisdiction, particularly as it relates to the grey area—this answers the question posed just now by the hon. member for Yukon—it was agreed at a meeting of the Attorneys General with regard to organized crime, held last January, that a standing federal-provincial committee on bankruptcy be set up, and it was. It is composed of the deputy attorney general of Ontario, the deputy attorney general of Quebec and the superintendent of the bankruptcy here in Ottawa.

This committee has met and important steps have been taken to co-ordinate the efforts of both jurisdictions in a field which requires this co-ordination, particularly in the area in which I belive most of the loopholes exist. This committee will be able to block these loopholes and put a stop to what we call fraudulent bankruptcies. I am not saying that this is the complete answer to the problems of bankruptcy but I am saying it is not true that this government has done nothing in the field of bankruptcy.

The government has taken a tremendous step forward in order to stop these fraudulent bankruptcies. It is giving full co-operation to the provinces in order that we may stamp out these terrible crimes. I also say without batting an eyelid that this government has done more in the field of bankruptcy than has ever been done since the inception of the law in 1950.

When I was given this portfolio in July I found in the department a young, aggressive, competent lawyer in charge of bankruptcy. He has been in the department since April, 1965. He has very far reaching and I would say progressive ideas about the administration of the Bankruptcy Act, particularly in the light of present day circumstances. As a matter of fact, he has already started to put some of his ideas into effect. Included in this program is a complete revision of the Bankruptcy Act, which I would tell the committee is in my humble opinion absolutely essential if we are to deal effectively with the present day problems of bankruptcy.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the Minister of Justice but the time allotted for his speech has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

The Deputy Chairman: Do I understand there is unanimous consent that the Minister of Justice may continue his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I am sure the committee will give unanimous consent because we have been waiting for weeks for these explanations.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Prittie: Mr. Chairman, at this point may I ask the minister whether it is his intention to review at this time any of the questions raised during this session with regard to the Combines Investigation Act?

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Chairman, in answering the hon. gentleman I would say that the Combines Investigation Act falls under the jurisdiction of the President of the Privy Council who I presume will be dealing with those questions.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the Minister of Justice whether he intends to reply to the supplementary questions I asked the other day concerning the notorious R.C.M.P. card issued to a former executive assistant under the previous Conservative government?

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Chairman, I am not prepared to answer at this time but I shall see whether it may not be possible to answer during the day.

To come back to the question of bankruptcy, Mr. Chairman, I think there have been complaints in this field ever since 1950, the very year in which the Bankruptcy Act was passed, and with reason. When the Bankruptcy Act was passed in 1950 the draftsmen did not take the advice, recommendations and suggestions put forward by the Canadian Bar Association who recommended strongly at that time that more power be given to the superintendent. I think this is part of the reason for the problem we have faced in this field ever since that time.

Since 1960 the department has received 47 briefs from industry, Canadian labour associations, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and other organizations. Briefs have also been received from the Canadian Bar Association, unions and a host of people who are directly concerned with and affected by the Bankruptcy Act. These voluminous briefs have been studied by the Department of Justice since that time. Not only have they been studied but the department has also been working on plans for the revision of the Bankruptcy Act. I would point out to the committee that this is not an easy task as matters now stand because both federal and provincial jurisdictions are involved in this field.

The department has now completed its study of the briefs and plans for the revision of the Act. I announced recently that a special committee of three had been set up and was working on completing the revision of the Bankruptcy Act. I mentioned that Mr. Honsberger, who is a practicing lawyer in Toronto, is one member of this committee. I understand he is an authority on bankruptcy and we feel sure he will be able to contribute a great deal in attempting to arrive at a practicable revision of the Act. We also have Mr. Carignan who is a very distinguished lawyer in Montreal and who has a great deal to contribute to the revision of the Act. We have the young superintendent of bankruptcy who is a lawyer well versed in this subject and who is taking his job very seriously. I have the greatest esteem for him.

I met with this committee not very long ago and I can tell hon. members that the committee was surprised at the amount of work that had already been done on this question in the study of briefs as well as in preparations for the revision of the act. One member of the committee told me that because of the work that had already been done within the department it may not take a year for them to make their report.

Included in our considerations of the revision of the Act, I think hon. members will agree that a hard and long look should be taken also at the Winding-up Act which I understand has caused some difficulties in the past.

Mr. Nielsen: May I ask the minister at this stage under which minister's jurisdiction the Winding-up Act comes?

Mr. Cardin: Ours.

Mr. Nielsen: Of the three ministers?

Mr. Cardin: Mine. I should like to remind the committee that there are plans to set up a permanent registration for recording complaints made to trustees, something, strange as it may seem, that has never been done since the inception of that act. I submit respectfully to the committee that these are practicable, useful measures which may not eradicate the problem completely but which go a long way toward arriving at a solution.

When one listens to the Leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Yukon one gets the definite idea that not only has the government done absolutely nothing in the field of bankruptcy since it has been in power but that somehow we actually invented bankruptcy, that there were virtually no fraudulent bankruptcies before 1963.

Mr. Diefenbaker: They have multiplied three times in total under this government.

Mr. Cardin: Just a moment.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No more blackmail.

Mr. Cardin: The hon. member says, no more blackmail. Just listen and let us see what is true.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Kierans told us what was true, that the Department of Justice could not operate under this government.

Mr. Cardin: The other day the hon. member for Yukon, in referring to the Mercier report, intimated he had never seen a more condemnatory report. Never in his lifetime had he seen a more condemnatory report. Apparently he has not read it because the period covered by the Mercier report extends from January 1, 1959 to February 1, 1965. This means that the Mercier report is four times more condemnatory of the Conservative party than it is of us because it covers a period of four and a half years of Conservative administration compared to one and a half years of our administration.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is not what the hon. Mr. Kierans said.

Mr. Cardin: We will get to what he said. The offences in relation to bankruptcy which were recently prosecuted in Quebec were committed as far back as 1959. They included arson, fraud, perjury, theft and conspiracy. Well, Mr. Chairman, what did Sherlock Holmes do about these scandals that occurred in his time? Did he put any questions on the order paper? Did he inform the press by giving it information that his government was corrupt? Did he travel around the country with a magnifying glass looking for evidence.

Mr. Nielsen: May I ask the minister if he is saying that the previous administration was corrupt?

Mr. Cardin: I beg your pardon?

Mr. Nielsen: May I ask the minister if what he is saying is that the previous administration was corrupt?

Mr. Cardin: No, I asked why the hon. member did not say it was corrupt if the Mercier report is as condemnatory as he implied it was but according to him exclusively of the present administration—

Mr. Nielsen: Who said so?

Mr. Cardin: You did.

Mr. Nielsen: Nonsense.

Mr. Cardin: Look at your speech.

Mr. Nielsen: Nonsense.

Mr. Cardin: I say that there has been a bankruptcy problem and that problem existed long before we took power. It is wrong for either the hon. member for Yukon or the Leader of the Opposition to lead the people of the country to believe that we are solely responsible for the fraudulent bankruptcies, because the previous government did nothing in connection with bankruptcies. They did not make one amendment in the Bankruptcy Act; they did not add one messenger boy to the depleted staff of the bankruptcy division.

Last November the hon. member for Yukon and the Leader of the Opposition in the house and in the country made irresponsible and unfounded statements to the effect that the government was not concerned at all about bankruptcies.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is exactly what Mr. Kierans said. He said you would not act.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Wagner is saying it too.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Wagner is saying it now and they both know you very well.

Mr. Cardin: They said the government had not been concerned about bankruptcies, and that we were negligent in our administration. Yet they had done nothing, while I have put on the record a list of the things we have done which are infinitely more and better than the things the previous government did. What is more serious, what is more dangerous, is the fact that both of these hon. gentlemen have deliberately engaged in what are false and insidious insinuations to the effect that somehow or other the government is directly responsible for and linked with the crimes surrounding bankruptcies, whether it be perjury, fraud, theft or embezzlement, and they have even insinuated that perhaps we are connected with murder.

In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, there is nothing as detrimental to parliament and to the prestige of any member of government as this type of insidious insinuation.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the minister answer one question? What did Mr. Kierans say about it and what does Mr. Wagner say about it?

Mr. Cardin: I would suggest that the hon. gentleman follow the rules and speak only when his time comes.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You cannot answer. You like to indulge in cheap insinuations and you cannot face the facts.

[Mr. Cardin.]

Mr. Cardin: I submit, regardless of what the right hon. gentleman says—I agree he is a far better orator than I, but he is no more truthful.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, that is right; that is a high tribute.

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Chairman, I know that—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The Minister of Justice has the floor and I would ask hon. members to reserve their remarks until the minister has completed his speech.

Mr. Diefenbaker: We wanted him to make a statement but we are not going to sit silent during his extra time when a lot of untruths and scurrilous abuse are passing his lips. We do not intend to be quiet in that situation.

Mr. Cardin: I can recall several speeches when the right hon. gentleman spoke for a long period and I am not ready to say everything he said on those occasions was true. We sat and listened. Now it is my turn to speak, and I will tell the truth.

• (1:20 p.m.)

I do not think I am being oversensitive about this, but I believe it is an indisputable fact that the right hon. gentleman and the hon. member for Yukon have been making insinuations which are not only detrimental to our party but which in fact will destroy parliament if they continue. I submit to members of the committee that it is an inexcusable and outrageous abuse of the authority and prestige of the right hon. gentleman in his position of leader of his party to act in this way. To the hon. member for Yukon I say it is indicative of a juvenile propensity for playing at being a famous detective rather than being, like the rest of us, an ordinary member of parliament.

Strangely enough, both these hon. gentlemen are lawyers and as such know very well that the administration of justice and the enforcement of the Criminal Code have been, are and will be a provincial responsibility as long as the constitution remains as it is. The division of responsibility in the field of bankruptcy between the federal and provincial governments has always been recognized, and this was confirmed not so very long ago at the last meeting of the Attorneys General in January.

I repeat that I am not trying to shirk responsibility on behalf of the government in the field of bankruptcy. I am saying that I am absolutely convinced that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, the Department of Justice and the superintendent of bankruptcy are all giving full co-operation to the provinces to try to wipe out this most disconcerting crime which is affecting everybody in Canada. As a government we are most concerned and eager to help in every way we can in what is becoming a serious problem of crime, particularly in Quebec.

Reference was made a while ago by the right hon. gentleman to this point. He again insinuated that we did not want a royal commission because we were afraid of one.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is what Mr. Wagner said.

Mr. Cardin: Let Mr. Wagner say what he wants. You stand by your own statements.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: But he knows.

Mr. Churchill: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Cardin: Personally I am not afraid, nor is the government, of any kind of inquiry.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is not what Mr. Wagner says.

Mr. Cardin: We are not afraid of an inquiry of any kind in this or in any other field. But one thing is very important and that is that the government cannot and should not be pushed around by anyone who tries to do so for political reasons.

Mr. Churchill: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Are you not speaking for political reasons?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: Is the minister afraid to answer a question? I have asked him four times.

Mr. Cardin: Ask it afterwards. This is a really important subject but everyone makes a laughingstock of it. People accuse us of being afraid of doing this and doing that. When I try to make a reasonable answer, and I believe I have that right, I am scorned. The right hon. gentleman uses the same kind of scorn of which I accused him four years ago. He is using the same scorn now.

The real answer is this. We are worried about the difficult problem of crime in Canada and it is because—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then why don't you set up a commission on crime?

Mr. Cardin: Why don't you shut up?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Churchill: That statement is not very judicial.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. Will the minister please resume his seat. I intervene to ask hon. members on all sides of the house, north, south, east and west, please to co-operate with the Chair, which has a little difficulty hearing the expressions of view which are being made on both sides. I think hon. gentlemen should listen and reserve their remarks until a later time.

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Chairman, I sincerely apologize to the right hon. gentleman; this I do very sincerely. However, I think he knows, as I know, that sometimes one gets provoked beyond a certain point. I apologize for having used those last words.

Mr. Diefenbaker: We all do that.

Mr. Cardin: I think all hon. members will agree that the question of crime is an important one. The problem of crime in Canada is so serious and difficult that this is not the time for anyone to panic. It is not the time to run in two or three directions at the same time. Perhaps the appointment of a royal commission would be one method to deal with it. The government has stated it will look into this matter, but my feeling is that this is not the time for panic.

It seems to me that at the meeting of the Attorneys General held last January on organized crime important steps were taken to deal with this very problem of organized crime. Certainly more steps and measures can be taken, but I cannot help but think that the Attorneys General, individually and collectively, with the assistance of the federal government are the people who are most knowledgeable and have the most experience of organized crime and are also in the best position to deal with this great problem.

Mr. Nielsen: Wagner is asking for a commission.

Mr. Cardin: Perhaps he is, but is that the right thing to do? I have not answered that yet. Hon. gentlemen have asked for a royal commission in the Spencer case but I feel this is not the answer. I am saying that because the government does not automatically grant something it is not necessarily wrong. One has to judge first of all whether something is good before taking action. If it is not good, then you do not take action. This is what we are doing in this case.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is that what you call pusillanimity?

Mr. Cardin: What about the Mercier report? This is also an important factor. I think it will surprise many people to know that when we received the Mercier report some time ago—

Mr. Nielsen: Would the minister tell us when the government received it?

• (1:30 p.m.)

Mr. Cardin: You should know. You were here when it was tabled.

Mr. Nielsen: We cannot hear what the minister has to say.

Mr. Diefenbaker: He does not know.

Mr. Cardin: I am not going to do the hon. member's homework. When we received the Mercier report—

Mr. Fulton: All we ask is that you do your own.

Mr. Cardin: I beg your pardon?

Mr. Fulton: I said, do your own.

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Chairman, when we received the Mercier report—

Mr. Diefenbaker: When?

Mr. Cardin: Last June.

Mr. Nielsen: Last June?

Mr. Cardin: Somewhere around there. I am not sure when. However, as soon as we got the report I immediately wrote to the Quebec authorities in order to be able to get information that might substantiate in any way the allegations made against trustees as set out in the report. I may say that we do have undoubted co-operation with the authorities of the province of Quebec, as I mentioned some time ago.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Quebec has none from you.

Mr. Cardin: However, I may say categorically in this committee that I did not nor have I yet received one shred of evidence that would substantiate the charges and allegations which have been made against trustees in that report. I have written several letters in that connection. I have also, with the permission of the premier of Quebec, asked to send one of our agents to Quebec in order to be able to get the files so that we might obtain some information on which charges could be laid against trustees to help us in the work we are trying to do. So far I have not had any kind of evidence to substantiate the laying of charges against trustees in the light of the report.

Mr. Nielsen: Can the minister say that evidence does not exist?

Mr. Fulton: Was permission to pick up the files given? Was the permission given that you sought?

Mr. Cardin: Yes. I am sorry if I did not make myself clear. The premier of Quebec did give that permission and the agent was sent to Quebec.

Mr. Nielsen: The minister has given us his personal assurance. Can he say that no such evidence exists in the office of the superintendent of bankruptcy?

Mr. Cardin: Let me finish my speech and the hon. member will understand.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is it possible?

Mr. Cardin: We have not had a shred of evidence against trustees so far arising out of the Mercier report. As a matter of fact, so far as I know there have not been any prosecutions by the authorities of the province of Quebec in matters arising out of the Mercier report. I will also say this: No one will accuse the Minister of Justice of Quebec of letting the grass grow under his feet. Any disciplinary action that has been taken so far by the federal government has been initiated as a result of the activities undertaken by the superintendent of bankruptcy.

I am not saying that all the trustees are irreproachable. Some of them certainly have been investigated and have been dealt with, as I mentioned earlier. I must say, however, that it is wrong to generalize. It is wrong to lead anybody to believe that all trustees are bad. It is also wrong to make charges that cannot be substantiated or that will not be substantiated no matter who makes these charges, and what authority the person making them may have. If charges are to be made, and I believe that they can and should be made, there are right procedures to be followed. A charge can be laid but substantiation of that charge is equally important. If you make a charge but do not substantiate it, the injustice is done.

I can recall quite well that the right hon. Leader of the Opposition claimed not very long ago that the government had a confidential report.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes, the Mercier report. I spoke of the Mercier report.

Mr. Cardin: Wait a minute—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes, that is what I spoke of, and the hon. minister twisted it.

Mr. Cardin: The right hon. Leader of the Opposition claimed there was a confidential report dealing with bankruptcy.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is right.

Mr. Cardin: He claimed that we had hidden it and that it was secret. He claimed if we had made it known we might possibly have avoided the crimes committed in Canada at that time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That statement is false.

Mr. Cardin: If it is false let me repeat what the hon. member said on October 6, 1965:

> At a press conference, the Progressive Conservative Leader demanded the production of a report on bankruptcies—

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is the Mercier report.

Mr. Cardin: I continue quoting:

> —to find out what has been hidden from parliament.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is right.

Mr. Cardin: I continue:

> He said if the government had accepted his party's request in the Commons to release a special report on the administration of the Bankruptcy Act, "there would have been less possibility of such horrible crimes being committed."

Does the right hon. gentleman deny that?

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Mercier report.

Mr. Cardin: That is not the Mercier report.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is the Mercier report.

Mr. Cardin: Then why were you asking for that report in November when the Mercier report had been tabled when the hon. member was in the house?

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, no. That is not what Kierans said.

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Chairman, I deny now that there was a report. I deny that the right hon. gentleman was referring to the Mercier report. The Prime Minister denied that there was such a report. Then, however, our hero jumped into the act. The hon. member for Yukon said, "There is such a report."

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Mercier report.

Mr. Cardin: On October 7 in the Ottawa Journal this report appeared:

> Erik Nielsen, Conservative M.P. for the Yukon, jumped into the affair today by insisting that there is a hidden federal report on bankruptcies. Mr. Nielsen who touched off the Dorion inquiry—

And so on, and so on. But he suggests that there was a report. What happened? He went to see the press. He produced a series of documentary files and said, "This is the report that the right hon. Leader of the Opposition was talking about". It was said that if it had been tabled in the house we would have stopped all these murders which have been committed in Quebec.

Well, there were reports. They were the reports from the trustees to the superintendent of bankruptcy in a particular case. They were routine reports. But members of the right hon. gentleman's party would not stop. They kept hammering away at this until finally I said, "All right. If you want to have those files I will allow the right hon. gentleman to see them." I would have allowed any former minister of justice to see them also. Nobody took me up on that offer. It was claimed that that type of strategy in the house is absolutely unacceptable. Later, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Nielsen: Will the minister permit a question?

Mr. Cardin: Can you wait for a moment? I have spoken for a long time and I am tired.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister runs away from questions.

Mr. Cardin: I will answer them later. You have no right to force me to answer.

Mr. Churchill: You might say you are afraid to answer them.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The little Caesar will not answer.

Mr. Cardin: Let us go on. I continue quoting from the Globe and Mail of October 12:

> Mr. Diefenbaker made the Quebec bankruptcy frauds an election issue last week by suggesting that the government had a hidden report on which it had failed to act.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is right.

Mr. Cardin: I continue:

> When Justice Minister Lucien Cardin offered to let him inspect the documents in the Sefkind case—the only specific case he had mentioned—Mr. Diefenbaker said it was an attempt to seal his lips because his Privy Council oath would prevent him from disclosing what he found out.
> He demanded also production of what he described as a report from the Quebec government to Ottawa on the bankruptcy frauds.

Mr. Chairman, there was a complete denial on October 13 by Mr. Lesage himself that there was such a report. I continue quoting:

Mr. Cardin replied that Mr. Diefenbaker would not be bound by his oath if he wanted to see the Sefkind file; he would be able to use his discretion and make public any information he found about persons in public or political life.

● (1:40 p.m.)

Asked about this aboard his campaign train yesterday, Mr. Diefenbaker broadened the issue by saying he also wanted to see the file of correspondence between the Justice Department and Judge Bruce J. S. Macdonald when he was chairman of the Ontario Police Commission.

He said: "Mr. Cardin does not make it clear that all the files are going to be made available to me. I doubt if he can give me that right, as most of the files would be marked secret and as a Privy Councillor I could not reveal them. I don't want selective files. I want all the files on this subject—

I want this, I want that. How far has the right hon. gentleman strayed from the original so-called secret file which was so important at that time? It seems to me the only file we had was the Mercier file which was in the right hon. gentleman's possession at the time the house was sitting. Members opposite have been going around the country pretending there was this other file. They object when I say they are toying with the truth. The reason I use that expression is that if I were to really say what I think it would not be parliamentary. I agree there have to be political differences but there must be a limit somewhere.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the minister say when the Mercier report was tabled? He has been talking about it.

Mr. Cardin: On August 19, 1965.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): The house was not sitting then.

Mr. Diefenbaker: We were not sitting.

Mr. Cardin: It was tabled on August 19 in the Quebec house and it was a public document.

Mr. Pickersgill: It was a public document.

Mr. Cardin: The right hon. gentleman thinks he has a great point. I apologize for having made a mistake. The fact is that it was tabled in the Quebec house on August 19 and it is a public document, so it could not have been a secret report.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. gentleman said it was tabled in the House of Commons.

An hon. Member: They are making an awful mess of it.

[Mr. Cardin.]

Mr. Cardin: Well, perhaps.

Mr. Pickersgill: Certainly of the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Cardin: All members of the house have a responsibility when it comes to combating crime and the terrible things which have happened in connection with bankruptcy. People with the prestige of the Leader of the Opposition have a tremendous responsibility. We all have a responsibility to try to assure the Canadian public that we have this problem under control or, if not, that we are doing our best to deal with it. But it is altogether wrong that any responsible member should let it be said that the government is abrogating its responsibilities when the facts are to the contrary.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is what Mr. Kierans said.

Mr. Cardin: I have given an example of what happened in the case of the Mercier report—the accusations that the government had been lax, almost criminal, in its activities. These are serious charges. Are we now faced again with new tactics that I see arising among the Conservatives—striking hard, preferably below the belt, and then running away?

Mr. Churchill: What did you do in February, 1962?

Mr. Cardin: Only a short while ago the hon. member for Yukon stated in a press conference that he had important information on fraudulent bankruptcies. This is what appeared in the Globe and Mail on February 9:

Erik Nielsen, the man who sparked the Dorion inquiry said Monday he has enough information on fraudulent bankruptcies to justify another inquiry of equal proportions. The Progressive Conservative M.P. for the Yukon told a press conference that there is a definite connection between the frauds and political campaign funds. He said he will present his evidence to the House of Commons when he returns to Ottawa later this week.

Asked if he would include names with his evidence, he replied: "Yes, I have a list of both companies and individuals involved."

He said he has information on fradulent bankruptcies in British Columbia and Alberta but will concentrate his attack on operations in eastern Canada. Under the Bankruptcies Act the frauds could be investigated by the R.C.M.P., he said, but in the past the force has been prevented by the government from carrying out some investigations.

I submit that these are extremely important charges. Here is a categorical statement by the hon. member for Yukon that he has definite knowledge that the government has prevented the R.C.M.P. from acting in cases where the federal jurisdiction is concerned. He says he knows this. I demand that he make these charges public. He has no right not to do so.

Mr. Nielsen: I do not have to make them public, Mr. Chairman. Mr. Justice Dorion has.

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Favreau: After your lying under oath.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of personal privilege because I fear that something has gotten on the record of Hansard which I do not think the President of the Privy Council would want to keep there. I heard him quite plainly shout across the aisle: "You lied under oath there". That is the statement which he should withdraw if it appears on the Hansard record. In fact, I have put it on the record now so he must withdraw it.

[Translation]

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, if the expression "to lie" is unparliamentary, I must withdraw it, but I wish to add that twice, under oath before the Dorion commission he did not tell the truth.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Regardless of what the opinions of any of us may be, having read carefully the evidence contained in the proceedings before Mr. Justice Dorion—I have my own views as to the minister's evidence—a statement such as the one the minister has made in the house demands immediate withdrawal unless the hon. gentleman is prepared to make a charge and, as the rules require, stake his seat on the outcome.

[Translation]

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, I have here the transcript of the March 23 and 24, 1965, sittings of the Dorion commission. I will do what he never had the courage to do when asked to do it. I will state, evidence in hand, that under oath and twice before the Dorion commission, the hon. member for Yukon said in his testimony things that were not in accordance with the truth and if he wants to refer the matter to the committee on privileges and elections, I am willing to maintain the charge.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Sir, the minister has dug himself in quite deeply here. He has made a personal charge of perjury against a sitting member of this house. I am going to give him one final opportunity to withdraw the charge he has made. If he is not prepared to do so, some procedure must be taken to ensure either a withdrawal or the loss of his seat.

An hon. Member: Maybe yours.

• (1:50 p.m.)

Mr. Nielsen: I give him this one final opportunity to make that withdrawal.

Mr. Churchill: Withdraw.

[Translation]

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, the only procedure is for the hon. member for Yukon to ask that the matter be referred to the committee on privileges and elections.

I said that: "Twice, under oath, he did not tell the truth, before the Dorion commission".

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: No. I am afraid, Mr. Chairman, that is not our procedure. When a sitting member makes a charge against another he is required to substantiate that charge. The responsibility lies on the minister, not upon me. Either he withdraws or he takes—

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, hon. members do not appreciate the rules. Either the minister withdraws or he must take procedures to substantiate the charges he makes or resign his seat.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, regardless of any other circumstance there must be an unequivocal withdrawal. That type of thing is not permissible. There have been several times lately when the President of the Privy Council has used the word "lie" in this house. I am not going to recapitulate—

Mr. Favreau: I withdrew the word "lie".

Mr. Diefenbaker: The other day the minister said that and was not called to order. That statement must be withdrawn unequivocally, Mr. Chairman, and no nonsense about it.

The Deputy Chairman: Does the President of the Privy Council wish to make an observation?

Mr. Nielsen: No, no, Mr. Chairman. This cannot be allowed to proceed. This is a question of privilege. The hon. member tried to split a hair by saying he withdrew the word "lie". That is so. The minister did say he withdrew the word "lie" but he replaced it with a charge that I did not tell the truth under oath on two occasions.

Mr. Bigg: That is what he said.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Nielsen: Is the Minister of Transport making the same charge?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, no; not at all.

Mr. Bigg: No, you don't want to risk your seat.

Mr. Nielsen: The President of the Privy Council replaced the qualified withdrawal of the word "lie" with the statement that on two occasions I did not tell the truth under oath before the Dorion inquiry. Under our rules that charge, must be unequivocally, completely, absolutely withdrawn.

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): The rules are clear.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The Chair has certain difficulties just now in rendering a decision. If hon. members with their experience of procedure would enlighten the Chair in a more elaborate and thorough manner, then the Chair with the enlightenment of the house from all sides will be able to render a decision.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I will endeavour to help you if I can. We have had many instances in the house where people have accused members of being untruthful. Sometimes they have used the word "lie". Sometimes they have said, "He did not tell the truth". It is the same expression. On each occasion in all the sessions I have been in this chamber the Chairman, or the Speaker, insisted that the member who made the statement accusing another hon. member of not telling the truth or of lying, should withdraw it immediately.

That has been the practice of the house. The rules substantiate it and everyone here, unless he is a new member, is aware that this is the situation. There is no lengthy argument required. The statement of the President of the Privy Council happens to be the worst I have heard during the 15 years I have been here.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, since this is my question of privilege—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The Minister of Transport.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I have had a certain amount of experience in the house, as has the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, and I do think it is quite correct, as he has said, that anyone who is accused—

Mr. Bigg: Of perjury.

Mr. Pickersgill: In the first place the word "lie" is unparliamentary.

Mr. Favreau: I never said "perjury".

Mr. Bigg: I did.

Mr. Pickersgill: The statement that someone deliberately did not tell the truth has also been ruled unparliamentary, but I listened very carefully to what the President of the Privy Council said. I do not use one of these machines. I am relying on what knowledge I have of the other official language when I translate into English what I understood him to say. I understood him to say that on two occasions the hon. member for Yukon, when he was under oath before the Dorion commission, had made statements which were not true. I do not think, sir, there is any necessary implication in that statement if I have translated it correctly. There is no implication that the hon. member knew his statements were untrue.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Perjury requires knowledge.

Mr. Pickersgill: I submit, sir, there have been many occasions in the house where an hon. member, including the right hon. gentleman opposite, has said that something that someone else has said was not true—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Was false.

Mr. Pickersgill: —and that was not unparliamentary at all, unless there is some suggestion that there was deliberate knowledge when the statement was made that it was untrue.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, before other hon. members deal with the rules may I for one moment lay before the Chair and the members of the committee the precise question at issue here. The minister had before him, as he said, the transcript of what the translator referred to as the proceedings before Mr. Justice Dorion. He went on to say that that transcript indicated I had made statements under oath on two occasions which were not the truth. As I understand the law, sir, that is a direct charge of perjury.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Absolutely.

Mr. Nielsen: That is what must be withdrawn, the whole of the minister's statement, because inherent in it is a charge of perjury and it cannot be accepted as a parliamentary statement by any member of the house, let alone a responsible minister of the Crown who, because of his disappointment over the results of that commission, makes such emotional statements.

Mr. Brewin: Mr.Chairman, I do not profess to be an expert on the rules and I certainly do not want to get involved in a dispute of this nature between members of the committee. But I have a great deal of sympathy with you, Mr. Chairman, when you ask for advice in respect to this matter. I am wondering whether it would be acceptable to the committee that we should take this matter under advisement?

Mr. Nielsen: No.

Mr. Brewin: May I suggest that if some opportunity for thinking about this matter were given the President of the Privy Council might well review what he has said, because it seems to me his words did convey a very grave implication against the hon. member for Yukon.

If he did not intend to convey the imputation which I thought he made, then I think it would be a very useful thing if he were given a little time to ponder the matter and perhaps he would then withdraw the imputation that the hon. member for Yukon has seen in these words. I do not believe it advances the dignity and welfare of the house when accusations of that sort are bandied backward and forward and the matter is made into a great personal issue. I think we can conduct the affairs of the house without that and I am wondering, because of the difficulties of the procedural points involved, whether it would not be proper for you, Mr. Chairman, to ask that the matter be reserved while you look into it.

Mr. Nielsen: No. That is completely unacceptable, Mr. Chairman.

• (2:00 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, referring to Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, I find that the house is now in a rather difficult and complicated situation, which may have serious implications and consequences and which requires much thought.

Now, I think it would be most useful, for the guidance of hon. members, to read the first paragraph of citation 128 of Beauchesne which reads as follows:

> A personal attack, by one member upon another, is an offence against the house, in the person of one of its members, which, on account of the respect due from every member to the character and dignity of the house, as well as the importance of preserving regularity in the debates, calls for the prompt interference of the Speaker—

To make my first point, I should like to call attention on this:

> —the prompt interference of the Speaker—

And not the chairman of committees.

I wonder if, rising above the question itself, one would not help the house by pointing out that this citation provides that the Speaker must interfere; consequently, the chairman should report progress, so that the Speaker could take the chair and that the discussion could continue.

This way, a solution could be arrived at; the Speaker could resume the chair, in accordance with citation 128 of Beauchesne.

[English]

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I should like to refer Your Honour by way of assistance to several citations to be found in Beauchesne's fourth edition as to how this matter must be handled. First of all, it is surely clear that what has transpired is that the President of the Privy Council has made a personal attack upon the hon. member for Yukon. I think that cannot be disputed. I direct your attention to citation 128(1) to be found at page 115 of Beauchesne's fourth edition which reads:

> A personal attack, by one member upon another, is an offence against the House, in the person of one of its members—

The following words of the citation are not relevant, I do not believe, but they indicate that the procedure to be followed, as I appreciate it, is for the member attacked to ask for a withdrawal. This has been done but the President of the Privy Council has declined to withdraw. On the contrary, he has repeated the ill-founded charge which constituted the personal attack.

Mr. Nielsen: I did not ask for an apology; I asked him to withdraw.

Mr. Fulton: If he refuses to withdraw he should be named. But I submit to you, sir, that this is not a matter that can be dealt with in the committee; it is one which requires to be reported immediately to the house. In that regard I refer you to citation 138(1) to be found at page 120 of the same edition which states:

> The House of Commons will insist upon all offensive words being withdrawn, and upon an ample apology being made which shall satisfy both the House and the member to whom offence has been given. If the apology be refused, or if the offended member declines to express his satisfaction, the House takes immediate measures for preventing the quarrel from being pursued further—

I do not think the remaining part of that paragraph is relevant but the next paragraph states:

> If offensive words are spoken in Committee, which are taken down, the House only, and not the Committee, can take notice of them. The Committee therefore reports progress and asks leave to sit again; the Chairman reports the words used to the Speaker who says: 'It has been reported to the House that the hon. member for . . . has used the following words: . . . Has the honourable member anything to say in explanation or retraction of these words?'

I submit to you, therefore, that if the President of the Privy Council persists in his refusal to withdraw the offensive words then you have no option but to report the words to Mr. Speaker and the house shall then determine what action shall be taken to deal with the refusal to withdraw the charge made by the President of the Privy Council. If on the other hand he withdraws them here this matter is disposed of and there will be nothing to report to the house.

I trust that the President of the Privy Council will recognize that he is in serious breach of the rules, that he has made a personal attack on another member, and that in the interests of continuing the dignity and functions of this house he will withdraw.

Mr. Churchill: If he does not withdraw he should be named.

[Translation]

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Chairman, far be it from me to take it upon myself to give you advice with regard to the application of the rules, but the facts may bear clarification.

There may be a slight translation problem here. The words "liar" and "perjury" were not spoken by the hon. minister. He did say that if the word "liar" was unparliamentary, he would withdraw it. He stated very clearly that the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) had twice said something which was not true.

An hon. Member: Under oath.

[English]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Trudeau: I am just trying to get the facts straight.

An hon. Member: What a silly man. Go back to the stables.

Mr. Trudeau: The minister may well say that it is snowing outside but I would not call him a liar if I went out and saw it was not snowing. I would say that he was stating something that did not conform with the truth. That does not means he is telling a lie. The word "perjury" was heard from the other side of the house, not from this side. I am not debating this point of order; I am just stating a fact.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I want to say something on this point which goes in my respectful submission a little beyond the mere point of order, important as it is. Last night we heard the house leader appeal to members of the committee because he had to get the estimates through in order to pay the salaries of the employees of the government. In my respectful submission I submit to the President of the Privy Council that it is a provocation to this committee to do as he has done. His behaviour is entirely improper for a minister of the Crown and it is contrary to the express demands of the house leader to make an interjection while another member is speaking which constitutes an attack on a member of this house that is bound to delay the passage of these estimates indefinitely.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lewis: I therefore, if you will allow me to complete one sentence, appeal to the President of the Privy Council to do the right thing by the government, by the employees of the government and by this committee and withdraw his remarks.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, on the point of order, I call on the President of the Privy Council to withdraw his words. This house cannot operate if any member is allowed to use language that can only imply the commission of a criminal offence. His statement must be unequivocally withdrawn. If it is not, I ask you to report progress and we will then ask the Speaker to take the proper course, namely, to name the hon. gentleman.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, I think it is unfair, not only for myself, but also for the hon. member for Yukon, to impute to me words that I have not said.

As the hon. member for Mount Royal (Mr. Trudeau) said a moment ago, it is on the other side of the house that certain words were said.

I am imputed words which would imply that the member for Yukon deliberately intended not to speak the truth when he testified.

I never said that the member for Yukon committed perjury.

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is what you said: Something false under oath.

Mr. Favreau: That is what you said I said.

[Translation]

The hon. member for Yukon had just made an interjection which was not at all pertinent to the debate. He stated that everything said could be found in the Dorion report, thus prompting me to object, because I, among others, had read the transcript of the evidence.

I believe I am entitled, with regard to his allegation, to tell him that, on two occasions, he said things that were not the exact truth.

Mr. Vincent: Under oath.

Mr. Favreau: Under oath and otherwise.

Mr. Vincent: No, no.

Mr. Favreau: What constitutes perjury is the intention to mislead.

• (2:10 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: You can't get away with that. You might as well withdraw.

An hon. Member: You are getting in deeper.

Mr. Churchill: Withdraw or sit down.

[Translation]

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, I regret that that interruption should delay the discussion. It is most important and urgent in the public interest—which goes considerably beyond the personal interest of the hon. member for Yukon or mine—that the estimates be voted by the house.

In the circumstances, I clearly state that I never had the intention of implying that the hon. member for the Yukon had perjured himself and consequently I do not believe the words I may have uttered could be construed as harmful to his reputation or otherwise.

I think a solution might be that if I stated things that were not according to the facts, every one agree to refer the question to the committee on privileges and elections where it could be dealt with.

[English]

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Churchill: It is a motion, Mr. Chairman. I move that the committee rise.

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. McIlraith: The Chairman is on his feet.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The Chair has been enlightened by the observations of members of the committee. It is difficult in these situations to render a decision, but if we consult the authorities on this topic and recall certain decisions that have been rendered in similar circumstances it is definitely mentioned that the word "lie" is unparliamentary. To ease the situation may I ask the hon. President of the Privy Council if he would consider withdrawing the word "lie" which is unparliamentary?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, before this ruling was rendered I did withdraw the word "lie" as unparliamentary, and I must make it quite clear that to the extent that any of the words I may have used might be interpreted as meaning that the member for Yukon deliberately tried to deceive the court, I withdraw them.

Mr. Churchill: I move that the committee rise, Mr. Chairman. You must surely accept my motion.

Mr. Nielsen: Perhaps I might make one last appeal to the minister and give him one last opportunity.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): He isn't worth it.

Mr. Nielsen: The issue is this. The minister used these words, that the member for Yukon, myself, had on two occasions before Mr. Justice Dorion—

An hon. Member: Under oath.

Mr. Nielsen: —under oath, not told the truth. Therein lie the offensive words. All the minister has to do—I am not asking him for an apology even though the rules say I am entitled to one—is simply to withdraw those offensive words.

Mr. Churchill: He is apparently not going to withdraw them, Mr. Chairman. My motion is before you. Will you not accept my motion?

Mr. Winkler: Let us have the motion.

The Deputy Chairman: I did not hear what the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre said to the Chair.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I move, and if it requires a seconder, seconded by the hon. member for Queens, that the committee rise.

An hon. Member: But it was not seconded before.

The Deputy Chairman: Will the hon. member make a formal motion so that the Chair may put the motion before the committee?

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, having listened to speakers from both sides of the house and especially to those who are now dealing with a statement made by the President of the Privy Council, I think that the latter has made the situation quite clear. He said that he would withdraw all the offensive words he used or any of his remarks that could be harmful to the reputation of the hon. member for Yukon. Does the member for Yukon want the minister to lick his feet? The minister is willing—he said so himself—to withdraw the words which might be offensive to the hon. member. Why, then, introduce a motion and delay the business of the house?

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I would have something to add in this connection—

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

[English]

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether I might make a direct, personal appeal to the President of the Privy Council with respect to this matter.

Mr. Churchill: What about my motion? I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. There is a motion in front of you. It should be acted upon.

Mr. Knowles: I suggest—

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, on the point of order raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre—

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): You have not been recognized yet.

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, but I heard the hon. member speak and I am sure the motion he put is not in the form he intended in order to accomplish the purpose that I think he has in mind. I wonder whether the hon. member would look at the wording of his motion. I am sure he intended that there should be leave for the committee to sit again. If he will look at the words of the motion again he will agree with me. The motion does not say that the committee shall have leave to sit again.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, while the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre is thinking about that may I have the indulgence of the house to direct a personal appeal to the President of the Privy Council. I ask him, as one who has not got into this debate at all and as one who has not tried to quote the rules at him, to appreciate the fact that he may have made a mistake—

Mr. Churchill: May have? He did make a mistake.

Mr. Knowles: —a mistake which will do damage to today's session of parliament and may do continuing damage. I ask him also to realize that if he will withdraw the words unequivocally he will have the respect of all members of this house, and I ask him to do so.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, I said a few minutes ago that the public interest was more important than the interest and pride of individuals. I withdraw unequivocally.

The Deputy Chairman: Will the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre withdraw his motion?

Mr. Churchill: Do I understand that the President of the Privy Council is withdrawing unequivocally every charge that he made?

Mr. Pickersgill: That is what he did.

Mr. Churchill: He did not add those extra words. What is he withdrawing? That is what I want to know.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Churchill: I am not going to be shouted down by anybody. When he said he was going to withdraw unequivocally, what has he withdrawn? He withdrew the word "lie". Has he withdrawn the other accusation? That is what I want to know.

The Deputy Chairman: The committee and the Chair heard very distinctly the President of the Privy Council say he withdrew his remarks.

Mr. Knowles: Unequivocally.

The Deputy Chairman: Yes, unequivocally.

Mr. Nielsen: May I say, Mr. Chairman, that I accept the minister's withdrawal and also the apology which under the rules I am entitled to but which the minister did not make.

Mr. Churchill: I withdraw my motion, Mr. Chairman.

• (2:20 p.m.)

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I want to get back to the case of Victor Spencer. I want to say in beginning my remarks which will not be very long, after what has occurred in the past half hour, that during the first part of the speech by the Minister of Justice he castigated the right hon. Leader of the Opposition. He asked with a great deal of feeling—and I must say I had some considerable sympathy for his words—whether the right hon. gentleman's performance would add to the prestige and dignity of parliament. Then the Minister of Justice himself, I suggest, proceeded to give the kind of performance which added to the indignity about which he complained.

I say, Mr. Chairman, as a relatively new member of the house, because I have not been here the years the right hon. gentleman has nor the years the Minister of Justice has, that as I hear these exchanges across the floor of this house that have nothing to do with public policy, nothing to do with the issues before the house, nothing to do with the plight of the poor fellow like Spencer, but result from purely personal vindictiveness or political vindictiveness, I feel, as I said on another occasion, sad for my country. I appeal to the minister to throw away from his mind this obstinacy which has got hold of him in connection with the case of Victor Spencer, this spirit of inflexibility which he has shown today and on other occasions, this determination to be proven right no matter what, and deal with the matter coldly, logically, intelligently and with some heart.

I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, that we would not be in the spot in which we are now over this issue of Victor Spencer if it were not for the obstinacy which has been shown. I reject the suggestion, because I have no evidence of it and I do not like to make accusations without evidence, that the government is trying to hide anything. I do not know. I am not suggesting there has been any deception because I do not know. I do know, having read the record and having listened to the discussion on these estimates, that there is truth in the assertion that government spokesmen have not been forthright and frank with this committee. They may not have intended to mislead anybody. However, it is perfectly true that every day we learn something new. It was the duty of the minister to lay the entire case before this house, all the correspondence he had ever exchanged and that the Privy Council had with the lawyer for Mr. Spencer, and every other fact that was relevant to a complete understanding of the issue before the committee. He failed to do that. The minister failed to do it because of the words he used today. He said, "No one will convince me I am wrong when I think I am right".

I ask the hon. gentleman in all good humour, who ever thinks he is wrong? Certainly he does not nor the Prime Minister nor the President of the Privy Council nor do I nor anyone else. The only time we ever admit we are wrong is if we have the goodness, the richness of mind, to open our mind to a particular situation, listen to the requests and measure their reasonableness instead of saying, "No one is going to convince me I am wrong". This is what has been at fault here.

One of the points the minister mentioned in his defence, which is of extreme importance in my view, was that, he said, we have done in the Spencer case what has been done many times before. I hope I am paraphrasing him correctly. The only difference in this case, he says, is that the identity of the man is known. It is this statement, which the minister has made on several occasions, which makes my colleagues and me determined to appeal to him to change his view. The fact that he has followed what has been done before does not make the case for him any stronger. It makes it weaker. It means, if I take him literally, that other employees of the government, this government and perhaps preceding governments, have been thrown out of their jobs without a chance to be heard. It means that on other occasions governments of this country have applied section 50 of the Civil Service Act against a number of civil servants without their right to be heard.

It is that which makes this situation even more important. It does not defend the minister's action; it condemns it all the more. I thought from the start that what we were faced with here was the matter of a basic principle and it did not matter whether Mr. Spencer was interested in it or not interested in it. The basic principle is very simple if we would only get rid of these attempts at making personal attacks, personal innuendos, and look at it objectively. There is this simple difference between the minister and ourselves. He says, and I am sure he says it sincerely, that section 50 of the Civil Service Act gives the Governor in Council the right to dismiss an employee without that employee having any right of appeal. There is another section of the act which affords him another kind of procedure. He says: We found that this man in our view was doing things which were improper, which were contrary to the security of Canada. Therefore we used this section which is there, dismissed him from employment, and that is that. This is his view. He says, I have applied the law.

We on this side of the house say to him: Whatever may be the merits or demerits of section 50 of the Civil Service Act—I think it is a pernicious section—he has it within his hand, the Prime Minister and his colleagues have it within their hands, to lessen the perniciousness of section 50 and give this man an opportunity to present his case in camera to an independent tribunal. The security of Canada would not be affected at all. Everything he said would remain private. The minister says, I will not do this.

Because the hon. member for Mount Royal insisted that he wanted to know what Mr. Spencer thought and I believe the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration said the man had not filed a grievance, interjections which with great respect to them I think were entirely irrelevant to the issue in this case, I telephoned a solicitor in Vancouver on Wednesday, Mr. John Laxton. He is a well known younger solicitor of undisputable integrity. I asked him whether he would at my request get in touch with the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in order to meet with Mr. Spencer and discuss this matter with him.

I then telephoned the Minister of Justice and after some time he was good enough to call me back. He not only was good enough to listen to my request for his assistance but good enough also to make available the assistance of Commissioner Kelly of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to discuss how this could be done. As a result Mr. Spencer was in the office of John Laxton, the solicitor in Vancouver, at nine o'clock Vancouver time yesterday morning. I received a telephone call from Mr. Laxton at about twelve thirty or one o'clock our time in which he informed me of the conversation he had had with Spencer. He dictated to my secretary a telegram that Mr. Spencer and he had drawn up in case the telegram itself did not reach me in time because I expected the justice estimates were going to be considered first thing yesterday afternoon.

• (2:30 p.m.)

At two thirty in the afternoon I received the telegram, Mr. Chairman. I appeal to the minister and to the Prime Minister to listen to the words of this telegram today in the light of what we have asked him to do. I mentioned the fact that I had telephoned Mr. Laxton and he read this telegram to me over the telephone in order to make sure I had talked to Laxton and could give the committee this assurance. I have the telegram which reads as follows:

> I have had a long interview with Victor Spencer with the approval of his solicitor Harry Rankin. Spencer wants an inquiry of his case, either a judicial inquiry or by parliamentary committee because he does not feel he has been fairly dealt with. His complaint is with the nature of his dismissal and the unfair deprivation of benefits associated with his job such as pension and insurance benefits. He has no complaint—

I interject to say that Mr. Laxton emphasized to me that Mr. Spencer insisted on this kind of remark going into the telegram.

> —with the treatment he has received from the R.C.M.P. but on the contrary feels they have been most considerate with him. Mr. Harry Rankin has also authorized the sending of this telegram.

The names under the body of the telegram are "John N. Laxton" and "Victor Spencer".

I do not withdraw from the position I have always taken, and which I take now on principle, that it does not matter whether Mr. Spencer wants an inquiry or does not. It is our duty as a parliament to give him that inquiry. It is the duty of the employer to give him a chance to express his views about his case.

If there is any doubt whatever in the minds of hon. members about Mr. Spencer's own feelings, I have obtained evidence which seems to me absolutely incontrovertible as to what he feels about the situation. I ask the minister to note that it may be of some consolation to him that the wire does not say that Mr. Spencer objects to his dismissal. It is significant that it says:

> His complaint is with the nature of his dismissal and the unfair deprivation of benefits associated with his job, such as pension and insurance benefits.

It is certainly possible for a commissioner of inquiry to consider in camera the treatment of this man in respect of his insurance, pension and other benefits without affecting the security of Canada. It is certainly possible to give this man justice without affecting the security of Canada, particularly in an inquiry held in camera.

I spoke to Mr. Rankin on the telephone. This is not a court of law so that no one can stop me giving hearsay evidence, which we do all the time. Briefly this is the kind of story I received.

I deliberately did not deal with Mr. Rankin only because I have never met him before. I had heard his name. I determined I would speak with someone whose integrity I can personally vouch for and who would have this conversation with Mr. Spencer to ascertain Mr. Spencer's feelings. I do not know the other chap. I do not suggest anything about his integrity; I just do not know him.

Mr. Rankin tells me that Mr. Spencer has informed him of the sort of thing he told the police. I pause to ask the minister and the right hon. gentleman, can they stop Mr. Spencer telling Mr. Rankin what he did? They cannot. Can they stop Mr. Spencer telling a neighbour what he said? Not unless his doing so is a violation of the law. I am deliberately going to be as unprovocative as I can.

I suggest to the minister that he is inconsistent. It is surely much more harmful to provoke Mr. Spencer and to give him the opportunity to complain to all and sundry in Vancouver, with the undoubted likelihood of its being spread, as rumours spread, like wildfire. It is much more dangerous to the security of Canada to permit that sort of situation than to say to Mr. Spencer: "For the sake of everybody, keep quiet and come down to Ottawa to Mr. Justice so and so. Come with your lawyer and tell your story and see if you can persuade him that we were wrong." I suggest this is much safer as well as more just for the country, the government and the minister.

Mr. Trudeau: Would the hon. member permit a question? Would the commissioner or single person who would judge Mr. Spencer's case have, in the view of the hon. member, authority also to condemn him to some prison or to purge him if he was found guilty?

Mr. Lewis: I do not have that in mind. I have in mind some very simple terms of reference, though I am not drafting them now. The government would tell the justice that they want him to inquire into the dismissal of Spencer and the attendant consequences of that dismissal and to inform the government, and through the government parliament, whether in his opinion the decision of the government was in accordance with the facts and is supported by the facts, both as to the dismissal and as to the consequences which the government visited upon Mr. Spencer.

I am not saying that the judge thus appointed would be any wiser than the police or the Minister of Justice. What I am saying is that whereas the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice are part of the management team for whom Mr. Spencer worked and are the employers who dismissed an employee, the judge who would be appointed, or judges—there could be more than one—would be disinterested. The entire life and function of a judge has been the weighing and relating of facts. He would therefore give an opinion which (a) would more likely be objective and fair, not because anyone is being deliberately unfair, and (b), of much greater importance, would be accepted by members on this side of the house and by the people of Canada as being that of a disinterested person, and without there being any suspicion such as is inevitable when the interested party is the only one who has made the decision and has investigated the facts.

In other words, there are two matters. First of all, there is the greater likelihood of justice being done. Second, there is the greater likelihood of justice appearing to be done. Both those things are important to our system.

Mr. Trudeau: Would the hon. member permit another question? I am trying to understand what kind of board this would be. Obviously it would be a board which would not be presiding according to due process. There would be no cross-examination of witnesses, no jury and no real trial. I am wondering what authority this judge would have. Suppose he found that the government had acted rightly. Obviously he would have nothing to do but to confirm the government in its view. But take the opposite hypothesis. Suppose he found the government was wrong. Would he have permission to reinstate Mr. Spencer or would Spencer have to ask for a civil trial?

Mr. Lewis: Of course not. I do not quite understand the hon. gentleman's question. I have known him for many years and I have always had great regard for his intelligence. It seems to me his very great intelligence ought to serve to tell him that any number of royal commissions have been appointed, whether it be the Dorion commission or any other commission, to deal with various matters.

What we ask the inquiry to do is to give us the opinion of its commissioner or commissioners and if, when the opinion is tabled, it agrees with the opinion of the government then the government can say they have been proven right by the board. If the opinion is contrary to that of the government, then the government has the responsibility of doing what it likes. If it refuses to reinstate Spencer despite such a finding, then we and the country would know. But I do not think that would happen.

I have greater faith in the members of the government who are in the same party as the hon. member for Mount Royal than he has himself. Perhaps he knows better. However, if an independent commissioner investigated this matter and found the government wrong either in dismissing the man or depriving him of his insurance or pension, then I have faith that the government would set things right and that it would not be necessary for the commissioner to make any decision or order in that regard.

• (2:40 p.m.)

Mr. Rankin tells me that Mr. Spencer is exceedingly concerned about his position. The other day I gave Mr. Spencer's age to the house. The right hon. Leader of the Opposition perhaps did not hear me. I understand I was right in the information I have received. He is 57 to 58 years of age; he is very ill. I am not trying to do any tear jerking, but surely these things are relevant to the consideration of a sentence when a person is found guilty. He is very ill, as has been said. He had a lung removed because of lung cancer of which he is not yet cured. As a very ill person he may be, as I understand, very disturbed in other ways. All these things, it seems to me, make it absolutely necessary that there be no suspicion that he has been denied any of his rights as a citizen of Canada, and particularly as an employee of this government, to which he is entitled.

An hon. Member: Has he a family?

Mr. Lewis: I really cannot say. From the beginning I determined not to direct questions about him personally. I said to myself, "you are not going to be addressing a jury. You are going to be addressing a group of pretty cold and objective members of parliament. You had better not try any of this tear jerking". And I left personal questions alone.

[Mr. Lewis.]

I was very interested in the reply of the Prime Minister this morning about the answer with respect to the letter from Mr. Rankin addressed, as I understand to Mr. Milligan, an assistant secretary of the Privy Council, in which Mr. Rankin asked what the definition of misconduct was. Mr. Rankin had been informed in a letter from Mr. Milligan, so he tells me, that Mr. Spencer had been dismissed for misconduct. Mr. Rankin wrote and asked, "What do you mean by misconduct in this case"? I understand he has been told that he cannot be given an answer now. He has to find it somewhere else.

The importance of that letter, as I see it, were I to have received it from the lawyer of a person who had been dismissed, would be such that I would know perfectly well from it that the person dismissed was not satisfied. I say to the members of this house, whether members of the Liberal party or members not in the government, that if they try to suggest to the house that Mr. Spencer was satisfied they have failed to understand the obvious import of the letters addressed to Mr. Milligan. If they do understand that, then they have done something which should not have been done. It is perfectly clear from the correspondence, as Mr. Rankin also told me over the telephone, that he was conveying to the government the dissatisfaction of Mr. Spencer over his removal from his job.

I ask the minister and the Prime Minister: In heaven's name what wrong would there be in saying to the country, this case has raised a great deal of interest, as it obviously has, this case requires another look, as it obviously does; we are not going to shut the door on all this, we will appoint a commissioner to make an inquiry?

My attention was drawn a little while ago to the issue of the Winnipeg Free Press for Wednesday, March 2. I appeal to members of the government to listen to the paragraph I am about to read. After referring to Mr. Cardin's appeal to trust him it says:

> Given perfection in all men this is a fair enough appeal. But many people have less than 100 per cent faith in the absolute impartiality of any police organization and in the absolute wisdom of any body of men, even federal cabinet ministers. They have a larger degree of faith in the due processes of justice than in the private decisions of some men. While many Canadians are quite prepared to take the word of Mr. Cardin and Mr. Pearson that no injustice has been done to Mr. Spencer, others are not. In the circumstances, the wisest course of action for the government would seem to be to turn the case over to a private judicial inquiry.

If the government is in the right on this matter, as Mr. Cardin says, it has nothing to fear from such an inquiry.

I plead with the Prime Minister, that these words are obviously right. I plead with the minister that these words are obviously right. They have nothing to fear. No harm will be done. Justice will be done and will appear to be done where now it does not appear to be done. I had hoped, Mr. Chairman, that after thinking about it and discussing it with their colleagues the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice would have changed their minds. I had particularly hoped that when I had brought the attention of the minister and the Prime Minister to the fact that Mr. Spencer has asked for an inquiry they would immediately agree to give him one because he is the aggrieved person.

I got the impression from the minister's words that he was not going to budge. We believe this issue to be of basic importance to the rights of individuals, to the concept of civil liberty and particularly of importance for the protection and security of government employees to make sure they will not be turned out without a chance of having their say before an indenpendent tribunal.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I move that vote No. 1 of the estimates of the Department of Justice be reduced by $17,000. I have this motion in both French and English. I hope my French translation is accurate.

The minister's salary, of course, is statutory. I cannot do anything about that.

But I want to be frank with the minister and tell him that the choice of the amount of $17,000 is to make it clear that this is an expression of lack of confidence in the minister and in the way he has handled the Spencer case.

If the minister will rise and say, in view of the telegram which has made it known to him that Mr. Spencer wants an inquiry, that he, the minister, will make further inquiries to satisfy himself that Mr. Spencer wants it—he does not have to accept this wire—and will say to this committee, when he has made inquiries and found that Mr. Spencer wants a judicial inquiry, that he will give him one, nothing will give me greater pleasure than to withdraw this motion and pay the highest compliment and respect to the minister for that decision.

The Chairman: Order, please. It is moved by Mr. Lewis that Vote No. 1 of the estimates of the Department of Justice be reduced by $17,000.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, with the last words of the member of York South I am sure all hon. members of the committee will agree, namely, that it is to be earnestly hoped that the Minister of Justice will now realize the untenable position which he is in and in which his colleagues and the government are pinioning him in regard to ordering a judicial inquiry. If a judicial inquiry is ordered, then I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, that the members of this party too will support the member for York South in withdrawing the motion. In the absence of any such direction on the part of the government there will, of course, be no alternative but to support the motion.

It is not easy to take part in this debate and say some of the things that I intend to say. I would much rather not have to say them. I debated with myself very earnestly whether I should participate in the debate at all. I was pretty well resolved on the question in favour of participating and any lingering doubts I had were completely removed by the regrettable and reprehensible conduct of the government and of the Minister of Justice in the course of the debate so far today.

What does the minister do? He absolutely refuses to realize that there is here an extremely important issue not only involving the freedom and liberty of the individual, although that is one of its most important aspects, but also involving the conduct and reputation of the government and therefore necessarily himself as Minister of Justice in connection with the administration of justice. That is what is involved.

The attack upon the minister is not a personal one but he chooses to treat it as such. It was obvious from his reply to the Leader of the Opposition that he fails altogether to realize that and in his failure he is unfortunately supported by his colleagues. I cannot help but feel that some of the major responsibility rests upon other members of the government from the Prime Minister down who have placed him in this impossible position.

• (2:50 p.m.)

The minister does not realize the issue involved but regards the criticism instead as a personal attack on himself. He showed that he still does not appreciate the responsibilities of his office or the untenable position in which he has been placed. So he deals with the matter in his reply this morning only in personal and subjective terms. He did the same in his defence with respect to bankruptcy. He said "No matter how much you urge me, I refuse to jump". We are not asking the minister to jump, but we wish he would act. We want him to act in accordance with his responsibilities as Minister of Justice.

Instead, what do we see? In his reply to the Leader of the Opposition, in his attitude toward the whole of the opposition and toward those who would dare suggest there should be an official inquiry the minister resorts to the most vicious and public threat of intimidation, an attempt to silence criticism by a threat of intimidation bordering on blackmail.

What conduct for a Minister of Justice to say: You be quiet or I will tell about the Monseignor case. That is what he did. Let me tell him that that approach to blackmail will not work. I regret exceedingly that I have to use those words in connection with one who occupies the post of Minister of Justice, but that is what it was.

I ask the Prime Minister, who regrettably has just left the committee again, to take cognizance of the conduct which was indulged in here and which I personally know was not devised by the Minister of Justice alone.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It was applauded by the Prime Minister.

Mr. Fulton: There were others associated with him in this. I ask the Prime Minister to take cognizance of what has happened. An attempt was made publicly in the House of Commons to still criticism by the threat of intimidation. As the Leader of the Opposition has said, if hon. members opposite feel it appropriate, go ahead. Produce the details if you think there is anything which should be exposed, if there is anything you believe you are in a position to expose, and you will be answered, because there is nothing which from the point of view of any improper conduct on our part we wish to hide. That kind of intimidation simply will not work.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

An hon. Member: You hope.

Mr. Fulton: What does the minister say in this connection? He says: "I have spoken and you must be content with what I have said". He then went on to discuss bankruptcies. Again, the whole attempt was to avoid discussing the facts, to avoid telling us what steps, if any, they have in mind to deal with problems which are real and serious. No one who has occupied this position in the Department of Justice, as I have done, could for a moment deny that. But instead of endeavouring to attract the support of the committee by taking us into his confidence, the minister indulges in cheap sneers at those who preceded him and a pretence that nothing was done to deal with the difficulties which confronted us then.

While I do not pretend that we solved this problem I would remind the committee that, as is well known, we recognized it and we instituted the studies of which the present minister is now the beneficiary. We did the preparatory work and we introduced those studies. We did not complete them and we did not complete all the action which the problem requires to be taken. But his government has now been in office for three years. It is our complaint not that hon. gentlemen opposite have created this problem but that after three years they have done nothing to solve it.

Mr. Cardin: That is not true.

Mr. Fulton: The minister says "That is not true". Apparently he is trying to do something. Well, let him take us into his confidence and get on with the job instead of pretending that he has all the merit and that his predecessor should be condemned.

We must take a serious view of the attitude of the minister and of his attempt to stifle criticism both in the field of bankruptcy and with respect to the Spencer case. He says we are making a personal attack on him, that our criticism amounts to nothing more than a vicious smear. This is exactly what was said at the start of the matters which led to the Dorion inquiry. I know this to be the case, though I was not here in the house at the time. An effort was made to say it was nothing but an effort to discredit the government. So what must we think about the threat which the minister is now prepared to hold over our heads in an effort to stifle criticism?

This matter is too serious to be left on the bitter personal basis to which the Minister of Justice attempted to reduce it. What is involved here is certainly not criticism of the minister alone, though he insists on regarding it as such, either for not prosecuting Mr. Spencer or for not accepting a danger to our security measures with respect to counter-espionage activities in Canada.

Our criticism is based on the inherent stubbornness of the government in refusing to appoint a judicial inquiry to be held in camera, on the basis of whose findings the public might be assured that the minister and his colleagues are in the right in what they have done. That is all we want, a judicial inquiry in camera so that the actions of the executive may be judged, the actions of an executive, if I may say so, in which we have lost what little confidence which might have been left to us as a result of the attitude of this minister.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Fulton: May I just finish the sentence? We want a judicial inquiry so that these actions may be reviewed by an impartial and independent body and so that the administration of justice itself as well as the interests of Mr. Spencer may be protected.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Is the hon. member suggesting that as part of this judicial inquiry security officers and counter-espionage officials should be subjected to cross-examination as they would be in a trial according to law?

Mr. Fulton: I think that question is completely irrelevant to what is at issue. I will outline to the hon. member the kind of judicial inquiry I propose and the purpose which I envisage this inquiry as serving. The Minister and the government have branded this man as a spy, as a criminal. It does not matter who did it first. That is one feature which distinguishes this case from any other case of which I am aware. The man has been branded as being an enemy of the state without having been put on trial.

In addition, the minister has said one of two things—I am not sure which he means: on the one hand he says that the evidence in the possession of the department is not sufficient for there to be a reasonable likelihood of a conviction in a court of law. On the other hand he says that the evidence they would be obliged to produce in order to secure a conviction would compromise our security service. It is not clear to me on which of these two grounds the minister relies in his refusal to go to court.

Mr. Nicholson: Both.

• (3:00 p.m.)

Mr. Fulton: The Minister of Labour says "both". We have one good lawyer speaking now from the government side. This may well be so. We say: It may well be that your decision not to go to court is justified but we want a judicial inquiry to be held in camera on the basis of which this question of the adequacy of the reports and the evidence you have against this man may be assessed. Then either one of the two decisions might be confirmed, the first being that that evidence was or was not sufficient to take to court and secure a conviction. That question would be decided. And the other question would also be determined; even though the evidence may have been sufficient, was it or was it not the kind of evidence that could be produced in open court without danger to our security arrangements? This is the information we want to get from a judicial inquiry, to know whether the executive was justified in branding this man as a criminal. Did they have any evidence at all?

Second, we want to know are they justified in refusing that right which every other Canadian has, the right of an open trial in an open court.

Mr. Turner: If I might interject, what the hon. member is suggesting is that the executive, or an act of the executive through the minister, is to be reviewed by what he calls an independent inquiry. In other words, he is subjecting the executive to review by the judicial process. Would he not think the proper review of the executive under our parliamentary system should be by parliament, and that the motion of the hon. member for York South, being perfectly in order, is the proper way to challenge the discretion of the minister—not by a judicial inquiry?

Mr. Fulton: In answer I would first like to know what it is that this executive does not want to have reviewed by a judicial inquiry.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fulton: Second, I am amazed when the Minister without Portfolio suggests that somehow there is some impropriety in having executive actions reviewed by the courts.

Mr. Lewis: That the executive is also the employer is an important point.

Mr. Fulton: That is a point made by the hon. member for York South; but my point is that actions of the executive are constantly reviewed by the courts, and I hope we will not hear any more of this extraordinary doctrine, suggested by the Minister without Portfolio, that the actions of the executive should now be above review by the courts. I hope he will reconsider this, and make it clear at the first opportunity that he did not mean it, because if he means it, it means that this government believes its actions are above review by the courts.

Mr. Turner: Review by parliament.

Mr. Fulton: Of course it is subject to review by parliament. But is my hon. friend saying that parliament should be given all this evidence, the very things the government is clutching to its bosom and saying it cannot reveal? Is he now saying that this evidence should be given in parliament? I think he and the Minister of Justice should get together before making that kind of contradiction.

What we are saying is that there may have been proper grounds on which the government decided not to take this case to court, but it was an executive decision and we want that decision reviewed by a competent body, and that competent body would be a judge carrying out a judicial inquiry in camera.

I do not think it is necessary to rehearse all the features of this case which make it a special one, although I have heard it suggested, in answer to our request, that we do not normally deal with these cases this way. Of course we don't, but this is a special case. As I said, in the first place the accused has been named, without opportunity of trial, branded a criminal and branded a spy. Second, he is now under constant surveillance.

Of what other man in Canada can it be said—and I hope it will never be said of any other man—that he, like the man named Victor Spencer, shall be under constant surveillance from now until the day he dies? When this question of the propriety of their conduct is raised, my hon. friends opposite regard it as a personal attack on the minister; but the third and most important distinction between this case and all others is the fact that Spencer himself has said, "They dare not prosecute me because if they do heads will roll."

Now, sir, can anyone conscientiously argue on the government side that this is a case which should be buried and left there? If it is buried and left there, it means that the very administration of justice is under a cloud, that the Minister of Justice is under suspicion, that the Prime Minister is under suspicion of refusing to have this matter investigated by a judicial inquiry because they dare not, because heads will roll.

Why don't they do the simple, obvious and decent thing? Why don't they unbend their stubbornness? Why don't they say, "All right, we will have a judicial inquiry. We will clear up these doubts and place the administration of justice beyond question and impeachment in this country"? Until they do that, Mr. Chairman, unfortunately the administration of justice will continue to be under a cloud.

Now may I just say a word with respect to my own intervention in this debate. I was very interested to read the words of the Minister of Justice as recorded at page 1885 of Hansard for February 28, when he said:

> The hon. member for Kamloops, for whom I have great esteem, is well acquainted with the difficulties involved in the handling of security cases—

I say, yes I am, and I recognize that these decisions are not easy. The minister continued:

> —and I am sure he will agree with me that no minister of justice would have authorized a prosecution when his legal advisers had recomended that the evidence admissible in court could not and would not carry a conviction.

Again I say I quite agree. It may well be that that was the case. That may have been the advice; but since this is an executive decision, passed upon only by the servants of the executive, it is perfectly appropriate for us to ask to have that decision, in the light of the extraordinary circumstances of this case, reviewed by a competent judge.

The minister went on:

> I also feel quite sure that any minister of justice would be extremely sensitive to the possibility of divulging our counter-espionage activities.

I am. I agree with him. It is one part of his decision which, if it be well based, I respect. But what we are asking for is to have an inquiry which will make a report to us on whether this decision was well based, whether the case could not be taken to court without divulging essential security measures.

Mr. Cardin: Would the hon. member permit a question? Does he feel that this type of an inquiry into decisions that have been taken wisely should continue in all types of security cases?

Mr. Fulton: No, Mr. Chairman. I have endeavoured to make that clear. This is an extraordinary case. This is not the average case.

Mr. Cardin: Why?

Mr. Fulton: I think I gave the minister the four features, the four factors that clearly distinguish it from every other case and make it extraordinary. Perhaps I should repeat them. First, we have a man branded publicly as a criminal.

Mr. Cardin: By himself.

Mr. Fulton: I had hoped the Minister of Justice would not seek to take refuge in that kind of inconsequentiality. The identity of Spencer could not help but be revealed when he was dismissed from his job. Then the minister got on a television program and named him.

Mr. Cardin: He was named before.

Mr. Fulton: All I can say is that the minister is impervious to common sense. The minister named him. Spencer is branded as a criminal. He is placed under perpetual surveillance, and he himself has said, "They dare not prosecute me because heads will roll." I say those circumstances place the minister under an obligation to treat this differently from other cases, to have a judicial inquiry and dispose of these issues, else there is a cloud under which he will live for the rest of his presumably short tenure as Minister of Justice.

Sir, I find I am supported in this view by others on the government side, by no less an authority, rising authority, than the hon. member for St. John's West who, as recorded at page 1917 of Hansard for February 28, with reference to the Prime Minister's announcement that there should be a separate body to investigate security cases, said:

> The point I have in mind is that in the future we should have a separate body which involves at least one judge outside the administration itself.

That is what we are asking for here—a judicial inquiry outside the administration itself, so that the house and the country may know that there was in fact proper support for the actions taken by the executive, and for the decisions to brand Mr. Spencer for life as a criminal, without giving him the right of trial in court, and for depriving him of his pension and all other rights. This was an act of the executive; but now unfortunately we find the government begins to believe that it should be beyond review by the courts.

This morning the Minister of Justice said that sometimes one gets carried away in the heat of debate. I hope he will review his own actions. I trust that the Prime Minster and his colleagues will review their actions and say, "Maybe we got ourselves into an extremely stubborn position. It may now be a little difficult for us to reverse ourselves." But in view of what is at stake, in view of the interests of preserving the integrity of the whole concept of justice, I trust they will be able to make this human gesture in the interests of civil rights, fundamental freedoms, the institution of parliament, and the integrity of government, and do the right thing even at this late date.

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Chairman, since I am a member of the cabinet that took the position which led to Mr. Spencer's dismissal and because of my professional background, I am particularly concerned with this problem. I spent part of my life fighting for the right of an employee to be heard in cases of dismissal as well as in others. Therefore I am not indifferent to the arguments brought forward in support of this grievance, on the contrary.

When the Spencer case came up or at least when the case was brought to my attention, the government had not decided yet, if I remember correctly, whether he was to be dismissed under section 50, section 65 or section 60 of the Civil Service Act.

The first section did not provide the right of appeal. The second one did. I suppose there was a reason for including section 50 in the act; otherwise, it would not have been needed, since section 60 provided for the right of appeal in case of dismissal.

The house decided, by passing section 50, that there were cases of dismissal which, for the common good of the state, should not provide the right of appeal. I was not in the house then and several hon. members who took part in the debate were not there either. That section was passed so that there would not be any right of appeal, in order to protect the security of the state.

I take the facts as they are in 1966. I notice that section 50 was unanimously passed by the house. This means that the Conservative party proposed it, the New Democratic Party approved it, as well as the Liberal party, in short all the members of the house agreed that there were cases when, for reasons of security or for other reasons, it is better not to grant the right of appeal, which is quite a normal right under ordinary circumstances, a dismissal or any other decision imposed by the government. There is no doubt that if there is any discretionary power, someone must exercise it, that is to say that the cabinet, knowing certain facts, must give a judgment and know if an employee must be dismissed under the first or second section. In this case, in view of the facts given us, we deemed it necessary to dismiss him under section 50, since the house had unanimously passed it and since it was meant to protect what is called the common good and the security of the state. That is how the problem appeared to us.

Is section 50 justified? I do not have to discuss it, since the house unanimously decided that there should be such a section. If a dismissal resulting from the discretion used by the cabinet, in a particular case, under section 50, can be appealed, in spite of what the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) says, all cases can be appealed; there is not a single one that cannot be appealed. If someone endangers the state in a very serious manner, there will always be someone in this house to say: That employee did not enjoy all the democratic remedies provided by our judicial system; there should be an appeal to a judge. I am not saying that this stand is indefensible.

All I say is that, by virtue of the act enacted by the House of Commons, section 50 no longer means anything, if the decisions of the government can be disputed when a problem occurs similar to the one in Spencer's case. Let the R.C.M.P. arrest on the train tomorrow morning someone who is selling out the whole country to Russia, Communist China or another country, let him be fired, and anyone, the member for York South (Mr. Lewis) or any other member can rise and ask for an investigation. I am not saying that this would be a bad thing.

I am merely saying that I wonder why—those who were in the house at that time might know—why was section 50 included in the statutes? If the house feels that no case could occur where an employee might be deprived of his democratic rights, I would like to know it and we can settle the case.

Some time ago, the hon. member for York South seemed to understand me perfectly but we do not seem to understand each other anymore, possibly due to the division in the house. He blamed me for having connected to the facts, for having used an argument related to the formulation of a grievance by Mr. Spencer. I think that, for any other than the hon. member for York South, I would have to make a long speech to prove that he is aware of the situation, due to the fact that it is a problem of employer-employee relations and that he is aware that in industry, grievances are not formulated, that unions object to the formulation of grievances that many people sometimes fail to take the means available under law, for their own reasons, that in the field of employer-employee relations, we asked that the grievances be formulated by the party involved.

The member for York South is surprised by this; conversely, I am most surprised, because it is normal practice in the field where he spent his life. We usually ask the worker to formulate in writing the grievance he wants to submit, so that we may know exactly what he is complaining about.

I wonder why he was surprised at my remark, because it seemed so matter of fact, especially to someone who has spent all his life dealing with labour and management relations.

Now, in a case like Spencer's, the telegram produced by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) is undoubtedly a new development for me, that is to say, from the time he stated his grievance. What surprises me is that after a month-long debate in the house, Mr. Spencer should decide voluntarily to state his grievance. It is not up to me to launch an inquiry. I do not know how this grievance was stated and I shall not question the good intentions of the persons who went to examine him or the methods they used.

I do not know this but, in view of the importance given to the Spencer case, I assume that Mr. Spencer is presenting his case before us today and asking that it be reconsidered. But let us not forget, and this was emphasized by the member for York South, that he does not ask to be reinstated; he asks that his name be cleared and that he be given a pension. Of course, Mr. Spencer is seriously ill and does not expect to work on account of ill-health. His telegram is actually an admission of guilt. In my opinion, if a person is dismissed, if he thinks that he has been dismissed unfairly and if, in his appeal, he does not ask to be reinstated, this is strong presumptive evidence against him.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Marchand: I think that the only justification for the wording of the telegram would be that Mr. Spencer is ill and no longer wishes to get his old job back. In any case—

[English]

• (3:20 p.m.)

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question? I should like to ask him whether he did not hear my invitation to the Minister of Justice to make inquiries from Mr. Spencer? He does not have to act on the telegram I received. All I want him to do is act in accordance with the request of Mr. Spencer. If he has any doubt about my telegram, let him make his own inquiries.

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand: Then, I do not have to answer the question.

I conclude by saying simply that in cases of this sort, the Spencer case, the human element is important. There are also group interests, party interests, and that is quite normal. I think you will find such influences at work everywhere, but above that there remains the fundamental institutions which we must represent here.

I do not know how the house will finally deal with the Spencer case but section 50 and the whole question of the relations between the government, security agencies and those who negotiate on behalf of employees are involved here. It is not simply a case we can isolate, but I feel that this goes against what the house has already endorsed unanimously.

[English]

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Chairman, I propose to inflict myself upon the committee for but a few minutes. The issue here is the ancient one of freedom and security. There is no need for me to say that we must never use security as an instrument to impair freedom, but let us not forget that there can be no freedom without security.

The issue, as I see it, divides itself into two parts, the question of the dismissal and the decision not to prosecute. I propose to deal with the last point first. Under our constitution as I understand it the decision whether or not to prosecute is not the concern of the government but the concern of the law officers of the crown. I call as my witness Sir Hartley Shawcross, one of the most distinguished occupants of the attorney generalship in Great Britain in the years 1945 to 1951. With the leave of the committee I would quote his words as found in the Official Report of Parliamentary Debates, volume 460, where Sir Hartley Shawcross said:

> I have always understood the position of the Attorney General to be that he is solely responsible for the decision in any case which comes to him. He must inform himself of all relevant matters. Matters of policy may be relevant. If he thinks that they are, it is for him to inform himself of the views of his colleagues, and not for his colleagues to volunteer those views to him. If, when he has informed himself of those views he thinks it desirable—and it is a matter for him—he attaches such weight to them as he thinks right, but the decision is solely and exclusively for him. That was laid down in a number of cases. Lord Birkenhead made it clear in a well-remembered letter to "The Times," and I think it has been generally accepted since that time.

Under our constitution as I understand it the law officers have a double character. On the one hand they have a political capacity and on the other a quasi-judicial capacity, each of which imposes upon them a separate and a special obligation. I am here to bear testimony to the fact that the Minister of Justice at all times has kept the two roles distinct and separate throughout this case.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pennell: It is a time-honoured principle laid down in the very homestead of freedom at Westminster that there ought not to be a prosecution if the law officer of the Crown feels in his own heart that the evidence would not justify a conviction. I speak out of a deep and intimate knowledge of this case and know that the Minister of Justice revolved this matter in his mind a great deal before coming to a decision.

Let us not forget that the rules of evidence in a criminal court are extremely rigid. For instance—and I am now speaking generally—you cannot put the accused man into the witness box to testify if he does not wish to go there. The question uppermost in the mind of the law officer at all times is this: Would it be in the interest of justice, would it be in the public interest to carry out a prosecution in a given case?

In this case the Minister of Justice consulted his legal advisers who have been in the department for many years. They informed him of all the relevant matters and then, having concluded that on the grounds of evidentiary difficulties it was highly unlikely that there would be a successful prosecution, I submit there was no course open to him, by his oath of office and the spirit of the law, but to refuse to sanction a prosecution. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, when I hear hon. members talk about sending this matter to another judicial body to determine whether there should or should not be a prosecution I can only say there has been a complete misconception of the spirit of the law in this country.

I propose to say just a word about the dismissal. I purposely avoid the question about the identification of the civil servant in question. I only say to you that the Minister of Justice, if my memory does not belie me, publicly announced that there would be no prosecution before there had been identification of Spencer in this case. The Minister of Justice has put before this committee clear evidence, I respectfully submit, which shows that Spencer was the author of his own identification.

Now I come to the question of the dismissal. Once there had been a decision on the part of the law officers not to prosecute, then it became a collective responsibility of the executive to decide whether or not he should continue in employment. It is a trite observation on my part to say that when you consider a dismissal by an employer, and this now becomes a matter of employer-employee relationship, you have to consider evidence other than that which would be admissible in a court of law, and I am only talking about a criminal court. It was incumbent upon the executive then to look at all the evidence strictly in a manner that would apply in the civil courts. Many hon. members in this house have had this experience. If the committee will permit me, Mr. Chairman, I will draw upon an experience when I defended certain people charged with theft from their employers. They were acquitted of the charge. They decided to go on with this matter and brought an action in the civil court for wrongful dismissal. Evidence that could not be admitted in a criminal court was heard in the civil court. Their application for reinstatement was rejected. There was a duty resting upon the government to consider all the evidence.

I come now to section 50 of the Civil Service Act. I do not want to re-traverse all this ground. I see that the right hon. Leader of the Opposition is not in his place. I say that with the passage of the Bill of Rights he forever set his seal upon the administration of justice in this country, I acknowledge that it stands as a great landmark in the relentless and unremitting struggle between the individual and the authority of the state. That was in 1960. In 1961 we amended the Civil Service Act. Whether we did it in different words or, as has been suggested, we merely re-enacted section 52, none the less this house introduced section 50.

What is the significance of section 50? Some hon. members may smile, but I ask what is the significance of section 50? I suggest it is that this house clearly contemplated that there would be those rare and exceptional cases of misconduct on the part of a civil servant which would be of such a type that it deserved to be condemned and punished by invoking section 50, that is by dismissal without appeal. For what other reason would this house have put it on the statute books?

I draw upon other evidence which I am sure will receive the support of every hon. member of this house. I refer now to the report of the Privy Councillors of Great Britain in 1956, consisting of the Right Hon. Herbert Morrison, Lord Jowett, the Secretary of State for the Home Office and the Lord Chancellor. I shall read just one salient and very instructive sentence:

> The conference is of the opinion that in deciding these difficult and often borderline cases, it is right to continue the practice of tilting the balance in favour of offering greater protection to the security of the state rather than in the direction of safeguarding the rights of the individual.

They went on to say:

> The conference recognize that some of the measures which the state is driven to take to protect its security are in some respects alien to our traditional practices. Thus, in order not to imperil sources of information, decisions have sometimes to be taken without revealing full details of the supporting evidence.

• (3:30 p.m.)

Clearly, I submit, in matters of security the government, the executive, must be the final arbiter. This is their responsibility and they cannot divest themselves of this responsibility. They cannot abdicate the duty they owe to the people in connection with Canadian security. Clearly it was never contemplated that every case of security should go to the courts. So in this case what did we do? The government looked at all the evidence, they weighed it carefully, closely, conscientiously, and reached a decision that the misconduct in this case brought it within section 50 and they acted accordingly.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, one has to admit that we are getting from both sides of the house arguments that are certainly not without value. We cannot remain indifferent to the appeals of some members of the opposition who want Mr. Spencer to be given all the freedom he is entitled to as a Canadian citizen. On the other hand, we cannot help but be struck by the appeals made, for the sake of national security, by ministers who are surely conscious of their responsibilities.

I have been re-reading one of Pascal's thoughts that I find perfectly suited to the situation we are going through. Here it is:

> When one is reaching for all virtues to the extreme, here and there vices start creeping in imperceptibly as they slowly make their way toward the small infinite; and a multitude of vices also appear along the road to the great infinite, so that one becomes lost in emptiness and is no longer able to see the virtues. One is caught in perfection itself.

Mr. Chairman, this is what happens more or less on both sides of the house.

There is another thought of Pascal, a little shorter, this one, that I might apply to those who lend passion to this debate and I quote:

Man is neither angel nor beast, and unfortunately he who would act the angel acts the beast.

This, up to a point, is what we have here; passions are roused on both sides in an attempt to prove equally and entirely virtuous.

Yet there are questions to be raised. The Spencer case is not anything new. There have been similar cases in the past and it would be interesting to know what happened then.

I was surprised to hear the Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin) formally and openly dare in this house the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) to refer to certain action he took when he was leader of the government in order to establish whether the same thing had not happened at that time. Among other things, mention was made of the Monseignor case which took place when the Leader of the Opposition was Prime Minister. Both cases are reported to be almost similar. It is hard to learn much about this matter, because the ministers, as far as I can see, feel bound by their oath of secrecy. Even though they are cornered, they make every effort not to divulge anything. It is rather by other persons that the truth could be known.

Since the Minister of Justice made reference to the Monseignor case in today's debate, I should like to ask him whether it involved national security as the Spencer case now before the house? In the Monseignor case, did Canadian citizens suffer penalties such as Spencer is suffering, without any proceedings or other form of inquiry? Did the same thing occur in a possibly similar case while the present Leader of the Opposition was in power? Is it not true that in the Monseignor case the Prime Minister of the day intervened personally to avoid prosecution and judicial inquiry? And when I say intervene, I insist on saying "intervene personally."

Since the leader of the opposition has just resumed his seat, I might perhaps repeat the questions I asked before he entered the house. He might then give us the answers to the questions I put with regard to the Monseignor case?

Here was the first: Was that case one of national security, like the Spencer case now being studied? In that case, were sanctions imposed upon individuals without their having had the privilege of a trial or judicial inquiry similar to the one now requested? Might it not be that the former Prime Minister intervened personally so that proceedings or an inquiry might be avoided?

In the Monseignor case, did the former Prime Minister not ask that some facts be not revealed and that some actions be concealed, saying that it was necessary for the security of the country, exactly as the cabinet claims now? In the Monseignor case, were not certain individuals, at the request of the former Prime Minister, found out or kept out of the inquiry so that they would not be incriminated? Did the former Prime Minister not act like this after being influenced by certain individuals or certain people who had no connection with the cabinet, the Justice Department or the House of Commons?

The answers to these questions would likely enlighten us in the case now under consideration. If the Leader of the Opposition would tell us why some members of the opposition behaved in such a way, we might understand why the cabinet is behaving otherwise today.

Mr. Chairman, as I said earlier, as far as we are concerned, we are still puzzled. There is a motion before us, and I know that members of our group are still wondering who is right and who is wrong. We are seeking the truth, we do not want to condemn an individual unfairly but, on the other hand, we do not want the security of the state to be threatened either, in order to protect an individual who is not actually worth it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is a point which I believe was raised by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis); anyway that point is reported in today's Ottawa Journal in which it is said that there are now two lawyers working on the case. If my understanding of the newspaper item is correct, those lawyers, one of which is Mr. John Laxton, have been appointed by the New Democratic Party to defend the interests of this Mr. Spencer. Mr. Chairman, that is exactly what I suggested three or four days ago during consideration of the estimates of the Department of Justice: if someone believes initiatives should be taken and Spencer's rights defended before the courts, let him do it.

I mentioned that if the same thing had happened in the constituency of Lapointe, I would have sought personally to ensure justice to a fellow-citizen.

Well, I now see that the New Democratic Party has taken that initiative and has put Spencer's case into the hands of a Vancouver lawyer, Mr. John Laxton, and the hon. member for York South added in his press conference:

• (3:40 p.m.)

[English]

He has retained Vancouver lawyer John Laxton and Mr. Cardin agreed to instruct the R.C.M.P. to make Spencer available to Mr. Laxton.

[Translation]

Considering, Mr. Chairman, that the Minister of Justice agreed to a lawyer meeting Mr. Spencer to deal with this case, is this not the best procedure? Now that lawyers are handling the Spencer case, is it necessary for parliament to launch an inquiry?

I think it is desirable to let lawyers defend the rights and privileges of Spencer, since the Minister of Justice himself agreed to let lawyers handle it.

Further in the article, it is said that another lawyer—I think he is also a lawyer—Harry Raskin, of Vancouver, is also personally handling the Spencer case.

I think that parliament should be satisfied that lawyers are not prevented from dealing with the Spencer case.

But, Mr. Chairman, what strikes me is the vindictiveness with which some hon. members go after some French speaking ministers. I rose a little earlier but I could not speak because the committee was considering a motion. I must say that I did not like the meanness shown by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Favreau) did not rise; he did not have the right to speak. Nothing was heard. So he gets up and states for all to hear in the house that the President of the Privy Council had just said something that was not even official.

But, the microphone on that side was dead since the hon. member for Yukon had the floor. The minister was not on his feet. Now, let the hon. member for Yukon tell us if, in the case of the former Postmaster General, after Justice Dorion said: "Anyone who harmed his reputation should apologize", he apologized. He blamed the other minister but he never apologized to the former Postmaster General, the hon. member for Matapédia-Matane (Mr. Tremblay). Today, since it is urgent to pass the estimates, claiming that nothing official had been said, he tried to get another one to his knees, asking him to apologize, when he himself has never had the courage and intestinal fortitude to apologize to another one whose reputation was clear and whom he went after in this house and outside.

The hon. member for Yukon should justify his behaviour. I was the first one in the house to take him to task. Well, no, this is forgotten. On the other hand, the hon. member for Yukon has started a lot of rumours in the last seven or eight days about the Department of Justice. I could read the statements of February 8, in Victoria, in Le Droit or Le Devoir on February 9, 1966:

I have a list showing the names of the companies implicated and the names of the individuals involved in the matter.

Why did he not bring it? He says that everything is mentioned in the Dorion report. No, Mr. Chairman, there is nothing said about fraudulent bankruptcies in the Dorion inquiry.

The hon. member for Yukon was saying, and this makes him even closer. The Journal of February 8, 1966:

[English]

He said he will present this evidence in the House of Commons when he returns to Ottawa later this week.

[Translation]

That was three weeks ago, and still no evidence.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to say that we are seeing the biggest deflated balloon since confederation. Oh, he had a very high reputation and all the newspaper men said: "That is the man who brought about the Dorion inquiry".

But here, there is no sign of the names and lists which he claims to have. Where are they?

Mr. Chairman, I shall quote a beautiful thought of Pascal's—good even though it is old:

The mind of this man who sits on judgment on the world is not so independent that he cannot be disturbed by the first noise he hears. There is no need of cannon fire to prevent him from thinking: the noise of a weathercock or a pulley is enough. Do not be surprised if now he cannot reason properly; a fly is buzzing in his ear; that is enough to make him incapable of giving good advice.

In Pascal, Mr. Chairman, we find a great many wonderful thoughts. Here is one. I should like to digress in order to quote another one which fits the present Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) perfectly. It is so right and accurate that you will not fail to recognize the truth in Pascal's thought: the Leader of the Opposition is so presumptuous that he would like to be known throughout the world and even by people who will come after he is gone; and he is so vain that the esteem of five or six persons around him amuses and satisfies him.

I waited, Mr. Chairman, before reading those clippings over again; I was expecting the famous names of those famous companies, but nothing came out.

Would it not be that the hon. member for Yukon made statements too soon? Would it not be that he thought he was immunized, or at least important enough due to the results of the Dorion inquiry, so that today he is no longer justified? Did he change his mind?

It is easy to see from the way he acts now that the balloon has burst and that before long he will prove to be the greatest flop of this century.

I should like to conclude on one of Pascal's thoughts. It is above politics; there are things done on both sides without changing sides. An individual asks another:

> Why do you kill me? The other answers: Do you not live on the other side of the water?
>
> If you lived on this side, my friend, I should be a murderer, and it would be unjust to kill you. But since you live on the other side, it is just, and I am a hero.

Pascal, Mr. Chairman.

Well, Mr. Chairman, I take it upon myself to speak in this fashion precisely because in such a case as this I should have preferred to a display of political emotions and aroused passions, a reasonable and sensible discussion of the matter, so that we might be able to judge. We are sorry it was not so.

We shall try to put in practice Pascal's last thought: the side does not count, we will try to hear above the fly that buzzes in our ear, we will try to judge to the best of our ability.

• (3:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, the committee and the house have spent a good deal of time on this particular case. I think that is understandable and is right because it involves questions of national security, questions of the effectiveness in the past and the continued effectiveness in the future of our security arrangements for the protection of our state, and of our society against subversive action. This, of course, is the first duty of a government; certainly a first duty of government, and particularly of the head of a government: To make sure that these arrangements in so far as you can make sure, are effective.

Also involved, Mr. Chairman, are questions of human rights, fundamental human rights, the rights of an individual as a citizen against unjust, and even illegal action by the state. I know that members of the committee are concerned with both aspects of this very difficult case. I should like to say if I might, Mr. Chairman, that both aspects, but more particularly one aspect, were put very forcibly before the committee in a speech a short time ago by the hon. member for York South. I appreciate the strength of his feeling. I appreciate the strength of feelings of other members, feelings hostile to the government in the way it has handled or managed this case, I appreciate the strength of this feeling and I appreciate the way in which the hon. member put it forward.

I should also like this to be known, Mr. Chairman. Naturally, I as the head of the government take the responsibility, the primary responsibility, for everything that has been done in this matter by the government. Any minister who has a particular responsibility acts only as a member of the government of which I am the head. Any action taken against the minister is naturally taken against the government and must be considered as such. In what I have said in the past and in what I am to say now, I am speaking as the head of the government, but also after consultation with the Minister of Justice who is more particularly concerned with this matter, and who might in other circumstances have been anxious to make that statement himself. But I persuaded him to let me make it.

There are those two aspects, then, of this very difficult case, when I have mentioned, Mr. Chairman, I am just as concerned with the second aspect, the rights of the individual, however humble he may be, however powerless he may be, as I am with the national security aspect.

My concern with security, of course, is the concern of someone who has the responsibility of government. My concern with the human rights aspect of the case is dual. It is the concern of a man who has the responsibility of government, but it is also the concern of an individual Canadian who believes in the freedom of the individual against the state, if necessary. I am asking the members of the committee to accept the sincerity of my views in this matter.

It has been suggested, I think by the hon. member for York South, that members of the government never admit that they ever make mistakes. I do not think he can accuse me of that strength, or that weakness, whichever it is. I have in the past admitted that there have been mistakes, and I will admit that in the future, when we make mistakes.

I believe that we have handled this matter, as a government, having regard to the issues involved, in the right way. I believe, however, that in an effort last May to call attention to the dangers to our national security of certain kinds of conspiracies which were developing in this country and of which we had evidence; the relationship of these dangers to civil servants, and to newer Canadians and people who might be exposed to temptation, that in giving the kind of publicity that we did, which was absolutely unprecedented in our security history, we made a mistake; that is, in the way that it was done.

Nevertheless, apart from that, I believe that the procedures which we have followed have been correct, and I believe that they did not inflict an injustice on the man concerned.

Until today, Mr. Chairman, this member of the civil service had never given any indication, so far as I know, to anybody that he himself was dissatisfied with the treatment he had received. It has been suggested that naturally he is not going to talk to security officers and members of the police and say that he is dissatisfied. In any event it might be argued that if he did talk like that, at least we would not hear about it in the government. If you take that position, Mr. Chairman, I would call attention to the fact that Mr. Spencer in the telegram which my hon. friend read this afternoon publicly acknowledged the consideration he had received from the police, which is something I had indicated more than once in this debate, but which was certainly much more impressive in coming from the gentleman himself. So, we had no reason to believe that he was dissatisfied with his treatment.

Nor had we any indication from him that he wished an inquiry. Indeed, Mr. Chairman, we had from him a document signed by himself, which I cannot disclose—it is a long document with considerable security information in it which would be contrary to the national interest to disclose, and I hope and I am sure that hon. members will accept that —nevertheless it was a document signed by him in which he admitted conduct which was improper for a civil servant of the government of Canada, which justified his dismissal from the civil service. He was so dismissed under the Civil Service Act, under a clause in that act, clause 50, which does not provide for an appeal. When the act was revised in 1961 this clause was kept in. I am not criticizing the previous government for this.

My hon. friend from Carleton (Mr. Bell) may remember, because he took a very prominent part in the debate, that at the time the clause was considered necessary for this kind of security situation. That is the way it has been regarded since that time. I am not at all sure it should have been kept in. I am not sure now in view of what we have run into in this debate that it should still be kept in. The fact is, however, that it was included, and included by a unanimous vote of this house, including members of the New Democratic party. So, we acted under a clause in the act which had received the unanimous approval of parliament when it was being adopted in 1961.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Action has been taken in the past, Mr. Chairman, against civil servants who have prejudiced national security and who have acted improperly and been dismissed, and there has never been an appeal against this kind of decision of the Civil Service Commission. The right hon. gentleman will recall the case of a civil servant—and I am not complaining about this; I think it was the right way to proceed—who was dismissed, not under article 50, because this was before the revision of the legislation, but under article 52, which was practically the same, because he had been faithless to his duty as a civil servant. In that case there was no appeal, nor did he ask for any; and he could not have made an appeal, under the law, had he asked. We took action under this particular section of the act because we thought it was the section applicable to this particular case. The civil servant in question agreed he had done things which justified—certainly in the government's view—his dismissal. He was very ill at the time. He is still ill. In securing information from him—I think I can say this, now, because of his own remarks about the police —he was shown every possible consideration. That is one reason why the inquiry extended over so many months—so that his physical condition would not be prejudiced by the kind of inquiry which was required.

This was the situation until today when the hon. member for York South put on record a telegram which he had quoted, the pertinent parts of which I have taken down. Oh, I know it has been argued already today that we should have known he wanted an inquiry of some kind, that he was protesting because letters were received from a Mr. Rankin—I believe this was the name—though there was nothing on the letterhead to indicate that he was a counsel for Mr. Spencer. One letter was a mere request for the order in council dismissing him. This was a public document, and it was furnished. The other was a request for information as to the ground for his dismissal. The writer was referred to the Civil Service Act by the civil servant who dealt with the matter. Those are the only two documents. I do not think that we as a government should have been expected to draw the conclusion from those two documents that this man was seeking a hearing and had secured a lawyer to prepare the way for it.

However that may be, there was a message this morning—a telegram, according to the hon. member—

Mr. Lewis: It may be of assistance to the right hon. gentleman if I say I have just sent a copy over to him.

Mr. Pearson: —from a John Laxton, a reputable lawyer in Vancouver, and Mr. Victor Spencer. In this telegram Mr. Laxton quotes Mr. Spencer as saying he wants an inquiry into his case because he does not feel he has been fairly dealt with. His complaint—and this is why he feels he has not been fairly dealt with—is about the nature of his dismissal and the unfair deprivation of benefits associated with his job, such as pension and insurance benefits. Then he goes on to say he is not complaining about his treatment by the police.

As I understand it—and I am not a lawyer—he is complaining as an employee to his employer about the way in which he has been dismissed—the nature of his dismissal. He is complaining of being deprived of benefits associated with his job. I am not going into the technicalities of his right to superannuation—they have been dealt with by more than one speaker on this side of the house. Any civil servant taking a post with the government presumably knows what those rights are and he knows, also, that they can be forfeited by improper conduct. Perhaps Mr. Spencer does not know this. Perhaps he does not know he can be deprived of certain superannuation rights because of the nature of his dismissal.

I think it is my duty, now, to telephone Mr. Spencer myself. I do this, not because I throw any doubt on the authenticity of this message, but if Mr. Spencer is to be given the benefit of an inquiry into the nature of his dismissal and his superannuation rights, I think we in the government have the right to ask him the question whether he wants such an inquiry. He has not said so before. I know that in the past he has said he wanted to be left alone.

Mr. Lewis: I suggested that.

Mr. Pearson: I am grateful to the hon. member. If he feels it would add to the impressiveness of the telephone call I would be glad to have him in the office at the end of another telephone line and he could listen to what was being said. I say that because I might not get every word straight from Mr. Spencer. I would be glad to have this call monitored by anyone to make sure we do not have any kind of misunderstanding—not deliberate, but accidental misrepresentation of anything he might say. I think this is important because long distance telephone calls can at times lead to misunderstandings.

If Mr. Spencer says yes, and confirms this telegram, and says "I want an inquiry into the nature of my dismissal; I am worried about my superannuation benefits, and I want this situation cleared up", I do not see any reason in the world why we should not grant him this request. I am quite prepared to do that if this telephone call confirms he would like an inquiry of that kind.

But let it be clear—and I stand firmly on this: We do not feel we have acted in any wrong way with respect to the inquiries we have made in relation to the security aspects of this case and his relationship to them. We do not feel we have been unfair to him in any respect in his dismissal from the civil service consequent on his own admissions. And we do not think any interest would be served—indeed, the security services might be prejudiced—by an inquiry into the security aspects of this matter. Nevertheless, in the aspects which concern Spencer as a civil servant, the denial of rights he now claims, he should be allowed the benefit of an inquiry. We would be glad to make that possible. He could come here to Ottawa and the inquiry could be held here, or if he is not fit to travel to Ottawa the inquiry could be held in Vancouver. Such an inquiry would remove any doubt that he has been unfairly treated with regard to his superannuation benefits and other aspects of his dismissal as a civil servant.

Mr. Lewis: I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether I understood him correctly to say that if he finds Mr. Spencer wants the kind of inquiry he has suggested, such an inquiry would be carried out by a judge, or judges? The right hon. gentleman did not make clear whether this was to be an independent inquiry by a judge.

Mr. Pearson: It seems to me in view of everything that has been said that any inquiry, if only an inquiry into the nature of his dismissal and superannuation benefits, should be held by someone completely outside the civil service or the government. I think that would be by a judge.

• (4:10 p.m.)

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, it is not for me, and under no circumstances would I point out that had it not been for the strong stand taken in this parliament a grave wrong would not—

Mr. Teillet: You are prejudging.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —a grave wrong would not have been brought to the attention of the Canadian people. While the suggestion by the Prime Minister goes part way it still leaves great uncertainty in answer to much of the criticism that has taken place. But anyway I say this, after the intransigent position taken by the government for so long, and without going into any further detail, the announcement by the Prime Minister indicates the power of parliament to achieve justice and to preserve fundamental freedoms and human rights.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Chairman, I am sure all hon. members recognize that we in this group have not, up until the present, participated in the discussion of the estimates of the Department of Justice. That has not been because we are disinterested in the discussions which have been taking place. There were occasions when we wanted to participate but the battle lines were drawn so clearly, and the battle was raging so vociferously, we did not have an opportune time to make any comments.

I first wish to speak about the division of responsibility which has been announced. Because of the proliferation of duties that has built up, it has been decided to disperse these responsibilities among three ministers of the Crown, the Minister of Justice, the Solicitor General and the President of the Privy Council. I do not know whether this will facilitate the work, but we recognize the fact that changes have to take place and if these result in a more adequate and effective administration of the various matters coming within the justice portfolio we are prepared to support that division of responsibility.

This may seem anti-climatic to all the discussion which has ranged around the Victor Spencer case, but so far as this party is concerned, and I am speaking on behalf of our leader who intended to participate but who had to leave, we recognize that the government has the responsibility for assuring the security of the nation. Even though there are times when we may question and disagree with the government's judgment, we realize it must accept the final responsibility in matters of security. On the other hand, as has been rightly stressed by many opposition speakers, the basic rights and freedoms of the individual citizen must be assured. Therefore the difficult task is to reconcile the interests of security with the assurance and maintenance of the fundamental rights and freedoms of the individual.

I shall not mention any more about this except to say we appreciate the announcement made by the Prime Minister in that, so far as this one aspect of the problem is concerned, he is quite prepared to allow it to go before a court of inquiry, or a judicial inquiry. I believe the Prime Minister and the government are wise in doing this.

Many statements have been made on both sides, some to the effect that such a matter has never been handled before like this, and others to the effect that it is the usual practice. We only hope this will clear the air, and that from now on there will be a recognized pattern for taking care of these cases without causing all the furore and fuss which we have had during the past few days.

Another matter which has received considerable attention is organized crime. Canadians are uneasy at the possibility organized crime is establishing spheres of influence in our society. In saying this I am not casting innuendos at the government or anybody else. I am just stating a bald fact, that the people of Canada are very disturbed. They have seen this matter covered in newspaper stories, heard about it over the radio, and watch personalities discuss it on television. The public are very perturbed lest they eventually find themselves in a position where our society in general, with all its activities and tradition, may be dictated by organized crime and criminal elements which have managed to infiltrate various phases of our society.

We can refer to the findings of the Dorion commission. We can refer to the expressed concern about fraudulent bankruptcy, and the many other crimes which may be tied in with that whole problem, and Canadians are apprehensive that so little seems to be done about it. I am not going to say that nothing is done about it. Today the Minister of Justice outlined a number of steps that the government is taking to try and meet this challenge. I am not going to say nothing has been done, or even that little has been done, but I do say Canadians are disturbed that so little seems to be done. This may be due to poor public relations on the part of the government, but the fact remains Canadians have the impression that little is being done to solve what has become a critical problem in our society.

The government should not have to be pushed or prodded, but the people of Canada should be informed of what is going on and what should be done. I realize this whole problem was discussed at a dominion-provincial conference attended by the Attorneys General of the provinces, which was a good thing.

Some Liberal party supporters have raised the question of the constitutionality of the appointment of a royal commission to look into this matter, and have pointed out that basically it is a problem which falls within provincial jurisdiction. That may be so. However, there are a great many issues today which formerly were under the complete jurisdiction of the provinces, but have now become a joint federal-provincial responsibility as a result of negotiations and agreements between the federal and provincial departments and agencies.

• (4:20 p.m.)

I believe determined and concerted action is required to meet this challenge. It does not matter how we approach this; if it is felt that the best agency or group to handle this is the Minister of Justice and the attorneys general, all well and good, but I hope they get down to work, get down to business and in some way or other get rid of the carping criticism which exists between these individuals, and reach a position in which they can face the issues and work together constructively to right this serious crime situation. If that cannot be done, then I believe there should be a royal commission established.

If it is felt that a royal commission would be more effective, we would certainly go along with the establishment of such a commission. Whether this problem be solved by the attorneys general in concert or by a royal commission, I believe we all agree that there is a problem which must be tackled in the interests of this great country of ours. Therefore I would urge upon the minister and upon those associated with him the necessity for doing their utmost to see that this problem is faced and solved. If that is not done we are going to face a very difficult and serious situation in the very near future.

Mr. Chairman, there is one other matter to which I should like to refer briefly, and it is my intention to speak at greater length on this subject on a future occasion. I refer to the matter of juvenile delinquency, which is a situation of great concern to us today. All members have received the report of the committee that was set up to study this problem regarding juvenile delinquency. I have not read it completely but I have read a considerable portion of it and I can understand why there is a definte concern about this problem which faces us today.

I have figures here, which I do not intend to put on the record, in regard to the extent of the problem. I know all hon. members have received the same information, and that we recognize the extent of the problem. In this report by the committee on its study of the situation we find pointed out that no one cause is behind the problem, but rather that there are many. All of the causes working together create the situation in which we find the existence of juvenile delinquency.

It is essential that very careful analysis be made of all these issues and problems and that something positive and concrete be done to meet the challenge that is presented to us. I am sure we all recognize that youth is our greatest national asset, and that a failure to deal effectively with these problems will constitute a criminal wastage of human resources. I am sure we will all agree that a very careful, detailed and understanding attitude was taken during the study of the juvenile delinquency problem. It is not sufficient for us to get up and blast and blaze away at our young people regarding their faults, failures and shortcomings, because we have all had these, and perhaps some of us still have them. We must take a positive attitude, realizing that these young people represent our greatest asset, and that if we fail to do our best for them we are wasting that asset.

I have before me a reprint of an address made by Mr. MacLeod, commissioner of the Canadian penitentiary service, headed "Juvenile Delinquency, Just a Legal Problem". There is one short statement in this address I should like to read because I believe it sets out the motive that should prompt us in all our studies and activities in this regard. Mr. MacLeod, the commissioner, states:

> The basic concern, I believe, stems from the adult fear that the child will not achieve his full potential in life; that indiscretions, sown in youth, will yield a harvest of lost opportunity in later life; and at the worst that the juvenile delinquent will, in time, become the adult offender.

I trust that in the spirit set out in that brief paragraph all who are concerned with this problem will work together in an endeavour to solve it, in the interests of all our young people and our nation as a whole. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, I believe it is incumbent upon me to say at least a few words during our consideration of these estimates, and to make some reference to what at the present time may be known as the Spencer incident or case. I can assure you that what I have to say is entirely different from what I intended to say some 15 to 20 minutes ago. I say that because of the announcement just made by the right hon. Prime Minister regarding this situation.

That eminent journalist Mr. Lynch wrote in his column a couple of days ago that as a result of an answer given to a question I had put on the order paper I rose in this house in a howl of fury and said that the Minister of Justice had tried to lynch Winch by stating that he did not think Mr. Spencer would be very happy about his new found friends, and that he did not want an inquiry. Perhaps Mr. Lynch should get a new crystal ball because Mr. Spencer has made it clear that he does want an inquiry.

May I also point out to Mr. Lynch that I am not a new found friend of Mr. Spencer as a result of this case being taken up in the House of Commons, which is of great importance to all Canadians. I know that I am the only member of this house who can say that Mr. Spencer is his constituent, because he has lived for years in the constituency of Vancouver East. I have also known Mr. Spencer personally for many, many years. He has been in my home on a number of occasions. I have met him at numerous meetings when he was fighting on behalf of the postal workers. As a matter of fact, that is how I first met Mr. Spencer. I received a phone call from him saying that he could no longer remain quiet about the wages and working conditions of the post office employees of the federal government. He came down to my home and gave me first hand details. I think he was the first militant person to speak out on behalf of the postal employees in British Columbia.

From that first meeting we advanced to meetings which involved an official delegation from Vancouver, Burnaby, New Westminster and the Fraser Valley. These meetings eventually paid off and something was done for the postal employees of this country.

I wanted to bring those facts to the attention of the committee, Mr. Chairman, because it indicates that I am only interested in the general nature of situations such as Mr. Spencer now finds himself in, and that I speak with a knowledge of a constituent of mine.

• (4:30 p.m.)

I want to emphasize that much as I welcome the statement of the Prime Minister I am still not happy, I am still not completely satisfied about this matter. I sincerely believe that far too many questions have been left unanswered. I find it very, very difficult to understand a situation wherein an announcement was made some 18 months ago that a Canadian citizen in the federal civil service was a traitor to Canada, was guilty of espionage, that the government had the evidence to such an extent that two diplomats or employees of a foreign country's embassy were ordered home without complaint from the embassy, where there was a record of $3,000 or $4,000 being paid to a civil servant by a foreign power as a result of this espionage, where he was put under surveillance for the rest of his life, but there is not enough proof to lay a charge of espionage.

However, Mr. Chairman, there may be and there must be some peculiar, fantastic reasons for this being the case. What hits very close to home in my mind is that if the situation is such that no charge can be laid or will be laid, on what basis is the man found guilty? He must be guilty or he would not have been fired from his job as a clerk, a lowly clerk in the post office, he would not have lost his pension rights, his unemployment insurance rights and be placed under surveillance. I wish to stress that even if I do not know all the details and do not have all the reports, I still think that even though the security of Canada is concerned the details cannot be of a nature to justify this action being taken in regard to a man who is in fact found guilty without a charge being laid.

But why carry on, Mr. Chairman; there have been days and days of debate on this matter. I still feel very unhappy about the situation. There are too many questions left unanswered. This man has been placed in a position that I believe is absolutely untenable; he has been called a criminal without a charge being laid. He has been found guilty although he may be innocent. I do not understand this. But I do hope that I have the understanding of a member of parliament, and as one who has sat in provincial and federal parliaments for over 32 years in opposition, to realize that an advance is an advance, and an admission, even if it is only a partial admission, by a Prime Minister and government that perhaps they should take a second look at a given situation is something for which we should be grateful. I hope I have the understanding to accept with good grace the advance that has been made and the proposal to meet, at least in part, the request made in the fight that has been waged in this house for many days by opposition members for understanding, decency and Canadian justice.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, there are a few questions I should like to ask the minister in connection with a most unusual matter that occurred in the last 10 days. I hope he will give me his attention because I do not want him to feel that what happened this afternoon meant that the chair had been pulled out from under him. I hope he does not have that fear.

My question has to do with a case that went through the courts over a period of years. I refer to the Georges Marcotte case. In no way am I offering any views on the question of commutation. I realize the difficult decision the governor in council had in regard to that case because of the question of identification. However, a most unusual occurrence took place within the last 10 days. One of our major Canadian newspapers carried a report of a lengthy interview with a convicted murderer to which was appended an example of his literary merit and his artistic turn of mind.

I should like to ask the minister, is it the policy of the Department of Justice to permit press interviews of convicted murderers serving their term in penitentiary? Personally I think this course is not one that will contribute to the administration of justice; it has too much of the melodrama that sometimes we see in the neighbouring republic, in which convicted murderers become sentimentally greater than their crime should permit.

I want to know by whom the permission was granted to interview this man. Was that permission granted by the Department of Justice or by the minister himself? By whom was the request for the interview made and what was the reason for granting it? I will have something more to say after I have received answers to these questions.

Mr. Pennell: If I may interpose, Mr. Chairman, if any fault arises out of this incident it must be charged to me, because under the transfer of duties I must advise the right hon. Leader of the Opposition that I am now responsible to the house for the penitentiaries service. I undertake to obtain answers to the questions the right hon. gentleman has raised as quickly as possible.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is the minister not in a position to answer these questions?

Mr. Pennell: I am not, sir. I say quite frankly to the right hon. gentleman that I am not in a position to answer them. But the officials of my department are standing by and I expect to have an answer from them almost immediately.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The answer given by the minister, with the frankness that always characterizes him, lends emphasis to a view that I have expressed, namely that the trifurcation of the Department of Justice will not make for strength, certainty and effectiveness.

There is one other matter I wish to refer to, Mr. Chairman. It does not come under justice but it comes generally under the question of the estimates. We have tried to co-operate in bringing about the passage of the estimates that have come before us. They amount to a vast amount of money, billions of dollars. Today we got into a controversy which has made impossible the completion of the estimates that are before the committee. There are still five or six departments whose estimates have not been touched, two of them of major importance.

We as members of the House of Commons would be recreant to our trust if we rushed in and gave rubberstamp approval, as it were, or carte blanche approval to a mass of expenditures which has yet to be examined.

It is not our fault that there has been delay in this matter. The Prime Minister in the month of June, at the time of the adjournment of the house to the fall, stated that we would be back in September. He changed his mind. He saw a majority as a result of an election and he called the election. These estimates would have been passed in the regular manner, had it not been for the precipitate way in which an election was called.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Now, I want to offer a suggestion in a spirit of co-operation. We have covered some 15 departments, I think. In order to assure that supply will be available, we are prepared immediately to give consent to the introduction of the necessary appropriation bill, give first, second and third readings forthwith then, so far as the other departments are concerned, they can be dealt with next week. We have done everything to bring about a full examination. The house has sat long hours, over and above the added hours that we are now sitting compared with the hours of sitting in previous sessions. If the government is desirous of getting a bill through, so that royal assent can be given, then on behalf of the opposition I ask for the introduction of such a bill. We will immediately give it our support. I hope hon. members in other parties in the house will join in that, so there will be no question of supply drying up over the week end.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, I did not desire to speak further on the justice estimates this afternoon. I had determined not to rise unless I could see that justice was not going to be done. I wish to congratulate the Prime Minister upon his action and for his announcement of this afternoon. There was a remark passed here this afternoon upon which I wish to comment and I wish to do so immediately.

The hon. member for Lapointe made a statement that there were certain people in the House of Commons carrying on a vendetta against French speaking ministers. I regret that such a statement was ever made because I do not believe such a situation exists. I regret that a French speaking member has made it. I should like to emphasize this point, that when the cabinet gives a pension to Messrs. Belec and Poitras, after the Royal Canadian Mounted Police found against them, then I for one want to see that an Anglo-Saxon gets a pension when another tribunal has found against him.

Mr. Lewis: I do not know whether Mr. Spencer is an Anglo-Saxon, or a Buddhist or from Africa or from Timbuctu. I, for one, strongly object to the kind of differentiation which was made both by the hon. member for Lapointe and the hon. member for York-Humber. May I say also that I think of the Minister of Justice as English speaking. He speaks as fluently as any person named Smith or Smyth or what have you.

Mr. Herridge: A wonderful fellow.

Mr. Lewis: I join the right hon. Leader of the Opposition in expressing pleasure at the fact that the position taken by members of parliament has enabled the Prime Minister to change the position which the government had formerly taken and to do a measure of justice to Victor Spencer. The right hon. gentleman was good enough to suggest that I should be at the extension of the telephone when the Prime Minister speaks to Mr. Spencer. I appreciate the invitation, but—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Wire tapping is against the law.

Mr. Lewis: That is right, wire tapping is against the law. I do not accept the invitation, with great respect to the Prime Minister, first because Canada would be in an awful state if this parliament could not accept what the Prime Minister of the country says he heard over the telephone. I am not going to monitor him.

I do say, Mr. Chairman, very seriously that when the Prime Minister speaks to Mr. Spencer, Mr. Spencer ought to have beside him his counsel and John Laxton, whom I have asked to enter the picture. I see the Minister of Justice nodding his head. Can I assume that that is not only an agreement by him but an undertaking by him that that will be made possible?

Mr. Cardin: Well, Mr. Chairman, I am quite sure the right hon. Prime Minister would not object to that at all. As a matter of fact, Mr. Spencer has had legal counsel from Mr. Rankin for quite some time, and according to the report we had from the hon. member it appears that Mr. Spencer and Mr. Laxton get along extremely well. I am quite sure the Prime Minister will not have any objection at all if both of these gentlemen are present.

Mr. Lewis: I wanted that because I wanted Mr. Spencer to get any advice he may want to obtain when the Prime Minister speaks to him.

The second thing I want—

Miss LaMarsh: How about the Prime Minister having his lawyer there?

Mr. Lewis: There is a host of lawyers the Prime Minister could have. The other point I want to make, Mr. Chairman, and about which I am very anxious, as I am sure all hon. members are, concerns the terms of reference appointing the inquirer. I do not care if you call him a commission of inquiry or what you call him. I heard the Prime Minister say it would be a judge, in answer to my question. I think the terms of reference ought to be broad enough not merely to enable the judge sitting to say whether or not the action was legal. I do not have very grave doubts about that, anyway, and it is a very narrow thing. The terms of reference should be broad enough to enable the person making the inquiry to say whether, in his view, in all the circumstances of this case, what was done with respect to the insurance and pension was right, in terms of human and decent treatment of an employee of the government.

On the understanding that Mr. Spencer will have beside him Mr. Rankin and Mr. Laxton when he speaks to the Prime Minister or the Prime Minister speaks to Mr. Spencer, and that the terms of reference will be broad enough to meet the requirements of human treatment, I am very pleased, Mr. Chairman, to withdraw the motion which I made earlier.

The Chairman: Order, please. Does the committee give its unanimous consent to the hon. member for York South to withdraw his motion?

Mr. Fulton: Not just at the moment. I have an idea I will but I think there is a point that must be raised immediately before we finally dispose of this matter. I am sure that all members on all sides of the house in this committee will agree that it is significant that the Prime Minister has announced that an inquiry will be made into the question whether or not a public servant has been treated fairly. I express my unreserved approval for that course; I just wish that it had been taken some time ago. As the hon. member for York South has raised the question of the terms of reference of the inquiry which is to be made, I too wish to raise what I think is a serious question in that regard.

• (4:50 p.m.)

I do not think it is just enough that there should be an inquiry into whether or not a man should have his pension rights restored, but surely an inquiry must be directed into the question of whether or not there was sufficient evidence upon which to dismiss him. If there was sufficient evidence upon which to dismiss him, then he should not have his pension restored. How, therefore, can the inquiry avoid taking that question into consideration? This was the very point I sought to raise in my remarks earlier today. Under whatever disguise the government may attempt to cloak it, what is necessary to establish the rights and wrongs of the matter is a judicial inquiry held in camera to determine whether or not the government had the evidence upon which the dismissal of Mr. Spencer was justified, and whether or not that evidence could or should have been introduced in the courts.

Let me assure you, Mr. Chairman, that I have no wish to impose my views about the logicality of the situation against the will of the committee. I think I am right in assuming that the committee does wish to accept what the Prime Minister has announced. But I cannot give my consent to the withdrawal of this motion without registering my strong opinion that the procedure which is proposed to be taken is really not getting to the root of the issue at all. If it results in fairness or justice being given to Spencer, or the restoration of his pension, then it may well be that some benefit will be derived from this course.

Mr. McIlraith: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. Fulton: Certainly.

Mr. McIlraith: In the circumstances, does he regard the payment of full pension as being of greater benefit to the person involved than a return of the contributions which he has made?

Mr. Fulton: I would express no opinion on that matter. I cannot answer because I do not know. If there was not sufficient evidence upon which to dismiss Mr. Spencer, then I am saying that he should be completely restored so far as is possible to the position which he enjoyed before his dismissal. If there was sufficient evidence upon which to dismiss him, then who is to say that the matter is adjusted by giving him a pension? How can we come to the conclusion that there was or was not sufficient evidence unless all questions are taken into account in the inquiry?

Mr. McIlraith: I was putting it on a much more definitive basis. I was dealing with the language used by the hon. gentleman when he talked of restoring the pension. I should like to ask him whether he thought that restoring a pension was always of greater benefit to a person than returning his contributions. In some cases civil servants prefer one over the other.

Mr. Fulton: With respect, Mr. Chairman, in my view the question whether you restore his pension or return his contribution does not arise, if you are satisfied that there is not sufficient evidence upon which to dismiss him. What I am saying is that every step must be taken to restore him so far as is possible to the position in which he would have been had he not been dismissed. You cannot arrive at that decision until you arrive at the decision whether or not there is sufficient evidence upon which to dismiss him. That is why we are asking for an inquiry, and have done so all along.

All I am saying is that the Prime Minister, while seeking to make the best of a bad job, has underlined the fact that the whole thing is just a ghastly mess. Had the government been less stubborn and agreed that the unusual and extraordinary circumstances of this case warranted the setting up of an in camera judicial inquiry, we would not be in the illogical position in which we find ourselves now. Parliament would not be frustrated, the estimates would be almost completed, the government would not be out of money, and we would have got on with the business of the country. We have been prevented from doing this by the wrong, intransigent and stubborn attitude of the government, which has been based upon an entirely false premise.

I certainly wish to record my opinion before I agree to the withdrawal of the motion that, although it allows us to get on with the job, it does not disguise the fact that the whole thing has arisen out of an entirely improper course of conduct which has been followed by the government from the beginning.

There is also the matter of the Prime Minister making a phone call. Why does he not go on television too and let the whole public hear him?

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I will be very brief as usual. I want to compliment the hon. member for Kamloops upon his remarks; he has a sense of justice which I admire. He does not want to see partial justice done but complete justice done. I also compliment the minister on his later retreat.

I want to take this opportunity to inquire of the Solicitor General what progress is being made with the examination of documents seized by the R.C.M.P. from the headquarters of the Seafarers International Union in Montreal. Are these documents being examined by the law officers of the crown or by other counsel? Second, have the provincial authorities in Quebec been interested in the possibility of charges being laid on the basis of evidence contained in these documents? Third, when does the minister expect a decision will be made with respect to laying charges on the basis of the information contained in these documents?

I have one other matter to bring to the attention of the Minister of Justice. Strangely enough the hon. member for Kamloops was Minister of Justice on June 9, 1961, when I raised this question in the house. It concerns a person known as Mr. Heakes. I dealt with the matter at some length on the basis of the information given me.

In reply to me the then Minister of Justice said, as reported at page 6092 of Hansard for that year:

> Turning now to the Heakes case, I should say at once we have here a most difficult case in connection with an individual for whom I have a great deal of sympathy. The case has been exhaustively investigated by myself and at least one of my colleagues. It has also been exhaustively studied by senior officials in the government service. I have had a lengthy interview with Mr. Heakes. I referred him to the then assistant deputy minister of justice, who had several lengthy interviews with him. In the course of these interviews the position was fully explained to Mr. Heakes with every regard for the difficult position in which he found himself. Furthermore, I know that at least one of my colleagues has given assistance of a personal nature to Mr. Heakes during the period when he has found himself in difficulty, so it may be said that Mr. Heakes has not found an unsympathetic attitude on the part of the government and its officials.

I want to draw attention to the next part of his speech, which is as follows:

> Our investigation has established that at the time the proposal was made there was some confusion as to whether it was the original or amended proposal which was approved by the court. Our investigation also established that there was some error on the part of the trustee who applied later on to have the proposal annulled. But the action of the trustee, so far as I can determine—and at this point I am satisfied of this on the report of my advisers—was in error and not of the nature of fraud or bad intent.

At that time the minister did go extensively into this unfortunate case. Since that date this man has made numerous calls to the house, visited a number of members and has had conversations with legal counsel, and so on. He produced many documents, some of them coming to my office as well as to the offices of other members at this end of the house.

I am not going to take the time to go further into this matter. This man sought the assistance of the primate of the Anglican Church of Canada and other prominent persons in Montreal. At the time he brought the case to the attention of the members of the house the President of the Privy Council was then assistant deputy minister of justice. I for one feel very sorry about the circumstances surrounding this case. This man is very concerned that he be given an opportunity to obtain justice by presenting further evidence. He claims there has been perjury, wrongdoing and so on, on the part of various officials appointed under the superintendent of bankruptcy. In conclusion, I would ask whether the minister would give this unfortunate man an opportunity again to present his case to him or his appropriate officials.

The Chairman: Order. It being five o'clock and in order that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business, it is my duty to rise, report progress, and request leave to sit again later this day or at the next sitting of the house, as the case may be.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker I move, that the house continue sitting this day until twelve o'clock midnight.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I oppose that, Mr. Speaker. Ten members rise. It is out.

An hon. Member: Where is the co-operation?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, in view of the failure of the motion to carry, I wonder if hon. members would be willing to waive private members' hour and continue with the estimates until six o'clock?

Mr. Churchill: In answer to that, we think we should go on now with private members' hour. Three times this week private members' hour has been passed over. The situation that the government got into today was of its own making, not ours.

Mr. McIlraith: I cannot let that remark go, Mr. Speaker. I think that the house leader of the official opposition, on mature reflection, will wish that he had not made that remark because it is not in accordance with the facts. He must accept his share of the responsibility, and the official opposition must accept their share of their responsibility.

Mr. Churchill: I have reflected, and I stand by what I said.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, we agree to the request of the government house leader so that the debate on the Department of Justice estimates may go on until six o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Order. As there is not unanimous consent, the house will now proceed to consideration of private members' business.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR EMPLOYEES IN AGRICULTURE

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-59, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act (agricultural employees' coverage).

He said: Over the years, more and more employees have been covered by unemployment insurance. There is only one segment of our working population which is not presently covered, and that is agricultural and farm labour. I have presented my views on this subject on more than one occasion before standing committees and in the house itself.

This spring there is likely to be a severe shortage of farm labour. The main reason farm units are unable to get labourers to work on their crops is because agricultural workers are not covered by unemployment insurance as are other workers. In 1962 the Gill report was presented, late in the fall, to the Conservative government of that day. We were not able to debate it because early in 1963 an election was called. As a result the report was not adopted or implemented. I should like to draw attention to one of the recommendations in this report which states that farm labour should be included within the terms of the Unemployment Insurance Act, provided administrative difficulties can be overcome.

Four years have gone by and no action has been taken either by this parliament or by its predecessor. I should like to stress this point: If ever there was a time when farm labour should be covered by unemployment insurance, this is the time. There are shortages of labour in Canada at the present time. Even unskilled workers who have no knowledge how to operate farm machinery are unwilling to work on our farms, simply because they are not covered by insurance benefits.

I brought this matter to the attention of the Minister of Labour and he was good enough to tell me this question would be dealt with. I take his word that consideration will be given to it, but I think it should be dealt with immediately because there will be a severe shortage of farm labour by the spring both in the west and in the east.

I believe the minister should give serious thought to letting the present bill go through. Let it go before the Standing Committee on Agriculture so that it can be implemented to the benefit of all those who are willing to work on our farms. I should like to remind hon. members that it was in 1957, before the government of that day was voted out of office, that the then minister of fisheries with the help of some of his colleagues was in a position to bring in legislation enabling fishermen on both the east and the west coasts to enjoy the benefits of the act. I am not suggesting that the fishermen should not be covered, even though they are self-employed. There was a need for these benefits. But I am blaming the members of parliament and the minister of agriculture from the western provinces because at that time they failed to bring farm labour under the provisions of the act. That was the time when action should have been taken. It is most regrettable that the fishermen were covered while farm labour was not taken into consideration.

I brought this bill to the attention of the former minister of labour, now minister of health. He assured me on more than one occasion that the Gill recommendation would be brought before the standing committee and that this matter would be debated. Of course, there have been two elections in succession, as it were, and this can be used as an excuse for delay. Nevertheless, there was plenty of time for the Minister of Labour to have presented this report.

The Gill report went thoroughly into the merits of the case for providing coverage to farm workers and it recommended that all those who worked should be covered by unemployment insurance, provided the administrative difficulties could be overcome. I cannot see why administrative difficulties connected with the agriculture industry could not be overcome. There must be a means by which this legislation could be implemented. Today there is hardly anyone in the west who is willing to work on a farm. The industry is now highly mechanized. Scarcely anyone wishes to hire a man who works with horses. We use expensive implements—another reason why farm labour should be covered by insurance.

[Mr. Rapp.]

• (5:20 p.m.)

It is now skilful work and it would be wrong to entrust a combine costing $8,000 or $9,000, or a tractor costing $5,000 or $6,000 to someone with little skill or experience in handling such expensive machinery. I know there are many members on both sides of the house who are in favour of having unemployment insurance coverage given to farm labourers. For that reason I will yield the floor and let them express their views to show that this is a necessity. If ever there was a time when farm labour should be covered by the Unemployment Insurance Act, this is it.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I am sure any hon. members who were members of the industrial relations committee in 1955, when the Unemployment Insurance Act was given a major overhaul, will recall that some of the members of that committee, including myself, made quite an effort to have it extended to cover farm labourers. However, our best efforts were unavailing and it has been a matter of considerable regret that, as a result, ever since that time the agricultural workers of Canada by and large have been excluded from the benefits of coverage.

I know the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale (Mr. Rapp) has been a consistent advocate of extending coverage since I returned to the house in 1962. I can only say in passing that I have some regret that during the period he sat on the government side he was not able to persuade the government which he supported to implement the changes he recommends. But there is little point in dwelling on what might have happened in the past.

It should be apparent to any hon. member who has looked at the most recent brief presented by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture that the adoption of this bill is a matter of increasing urgency. One of the major points made in that brief dealt with the problem which Canadian farmers have in securing adequate farm workers, both with respect to skills and numbers. For that reason, if for no other, this bill is worthy of early passage.

The reason given in 1955, and the reason given since for the exclusion of farm workers from the benefits of the act, is that their work is largely of a seasonal nature. It is true that many Canadian farms do not require full time, year round employees, though large numbers are employed on that basis. However, I think any one who has talked to farmers, and people interested in engaging in farm work, recognizes the fact that one of the problems in securing an adequate number of workers is that people who are engaged in other forms of insurable employment, at other seasons of the year, try to avoid accepting farm employment because, during any period of employment on a farm, they will be outside the coverage of the Unemployment Insurance Act, and thus lose potential benefits under it.

We are discussing this bill at a time of high employment and when the most recent reports indicate that the amount of money in the unemployment insurance fund is on the rise. It is a time when skilled workers are in short supply, and this situation is striking quite a blow at the agricultural economy of the country. It is for this reason I feel the house should give second reading to the bill and refer it to the appropriate committee where, if minor changes are required to fit it in with the existing Unemployment Insurance Act, they can be implemented there and reported back to the house for favourable consideration.

• (5:30 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I shall make only a few comments on the motion for second reading of Bill No. 59, an Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act (Agricultural Employees' Coverage).

Here is the preamble of this bill:

Whereas, under the provisions of the Unemployment Insurance Act, employment in agriculture is an employment that is not, nor has been, an insurable employment; and

Whereas, since the coming into force in 1941 of The Unemployment Insurance Act, 1940, economic and social pressures and technological changes have reduced the number and increased the size of farm units and have swollen the migration of excess farm population to urban areas; and

In the farming areas, and to give only one example, more specifically, in my own area, we have mining centres, mining towns, and surrounding such towns are quite a large number of farming parishes where the settlers must, during the winter months, work either in the woods or in mines and come back to their farms for the few summer months to try to earn something from them.

While those people are employed in lumbering or mining, they pay unemployment insurance and when they leave their jobs they apply to the unemployment insurance office to get benefits, only to be refused benefits because they are told that their main occupation is agriculture.

Mr. Speaker, everybody knows that agriculture is centred mainly in eastern Canada. In our province of Quebec more particularly, agriculture brings in approximately $1200 to $1500 a year to our farmers and settlers, many of whom earn less than $1300. It is not with only six or seven cows that a farmer or a settler can support a family of seven, eight or ten children on the farm.

I believe the amendment proposed in Bill No. C-59 reasonably complies with the requirements and particularly with justice, for farmers and farm workers.

The bill goes on as follows:

Whereas, increasing mechanization and the consolidation of smaller farm units for more efficient operation, the low levels of farm income compared to the income of the non-agricultural labour force, the high capital cost of entering modern farming, and the attraction of urban amenities, turn farm youth from farming as a family way of life.

It is a fact. We find that young people are leaving the farm for the cities. Go into any farm riding nowadays, whether it be my riding or the riding of Lotbinière, and ask a young man of 23 or 25: Are you interested in taking over from your father on the farm? In 95 per cent of the cases, the young people will reply: We are not interested in working 15 hours a day the year round on the farm for an income of $1,200 to $1,300.

This is where the young farmers, the youth exodus toward urban centres is apparent. The young go away and leave the farm. Why? Because farms no longer supply a livelihood to the farmers. That is the reason. The young do not want to carry on. Why? Because they have seen their fathers toil for years, for 10, 15, 20, 25 years. They are not interested in taking over their father's place on the farm precisely because the farm no longer offers the security it formerly did.

The bill goes on:

Whereas, the number of workers with the new abilities and managerial skills requisite for seasonal or permanent employment on the modernized farm has decreased and such workers are reluctant to take employment in agriculture due to the occupational discrimination in the Unemployment Insurance Act against employment in agriculture; and

Whereas, by reason of the facts hereinbefore recited, the small farmer must shrink his acreage and the operator of a large farm is harassed in his operations and expansion; and

Whereas, the Commissioners appointed to inquire into the Unemployment Insurance Act in their report dated November 1962 recommend that the general principle be followed of extending coverage as broadly as possible for employees in agriculture so long as the necessary administrative procedures may be carried out to see to it that the rules of the plan are adhered to in a satisfactory fashion;

And this is where the amendment to the Unemployment Insurance Act is introduced:

An Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Section 26 of the said Act is amended by adding thereto, immediately after subsection (3) thereof, the following subsection:

"(4) Notwithstanding anything in this act, the commission shall, with the approval of the governor in council, make regulations to include employment in agriculture in insurable employment and to provide for all such matters as are necessary to provide unemployment insurance for employees in agriculture.

Even if this bill is sponsored by a member of the opposition, it should get the unanimous approval of the house because it is important that our farmers, our settlers and our farm workers be treated on the same footing as other workers in any industry or in any economic sector, in Canada.

One of the things that the government should keep in mind is that a miner during his employment, makes a contribution, but it should not be forgotten that miners earn $5,000 while farmers make only $1,200. The small earners are exactly those who cannot get unemployment insurance benefits.

Now, if other categories of workers are entitled to unemployment insurance benefits, I sincerely believe that our farmers and settlers should be treated as fairly as any other category of workers in industry.

That is why I give my unqualified support to Bill No. C-59 and I hope that instead of giving it a first class burial at six o'clock, hon. members will have an opportunity to vote on it so that farmers can be treated just as fairly as the other social classes in this country.

[English]

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak very briefly on this bill because I believe that this is a matter which concerns the farmers in my riding, the farmers in the riding of the hon. member who proposed the bill, as well as farmers all across Canada. There is no doubt about the suggestion that agricultural workers are not covered under the Unemployment Insurance Act and that this makes it difficult for farmers to obtain assistance for seeding, harvesting and other tasks. I do not want to be misunderstood, because there is no doubt in my mind that it would be desirable for the people who are engaged in the occupation of farming to be covered by unemployment insurance; but having said that I should like to state that I have some apprehension about the administration that would be necessary to make this possible.

I have had some experience in the small business field in complying with the terms of the Unemployment Insurance Act. I know, for example, that it is an offence for a small businessman to hire anyone unless he is licensed to buy unemployment insurance stamps. I know it is an offence if a small businessman does not purchase the stamps and place them in the unemployment insurance books within three days of the end of the month.

If the government does acquiesce to the requests contained in Bill C-59 I hope they will be extremely careful in setting up the regulations for the administration of this coverage; otherwise, on balance, this will be more of a millstone to the farmers across this country than it will be of assistance. It will require farmers hiring anyone to work for them to obtain a licence to purchase stamps, to keep records and supply the unemployment insurance office with those records. This could be more of a burden than anything else.

There may be a solution to the situation. I think the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale (Mr. Rapp) pointed out the difficulties when he referred to the Gill commission, which suggested that it would be desirable to have agricultural workers covered under the act, provided the administrative details could be worked out. It is those details with which I am concerned, and I have had some experience in this small business field. I can well imagine that farmers will be unhappy when they find that they will be committing an offence by hiring someone without having a licence to purchase stamps, and unless they keep books, provide records, and so on.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I think there is a possibility that in setting up the regulations this system could be made optional or used at the discretion of the particular farmer concerned. I say this because those farmers who carry on a large enough operation to warrant their needing hired help, perhaps on a year round basis, should be brought in. Some of those who require more than one employee, and are fairly consistent employers of farm labour should be brought in, because usually their operation is large enough that they have to do a great deal of bookkeeping, keeping of records, submitting of reports and so on. Adding the Unemployment Insurance Commission requirements to that kind of operation would probably not be objectionable. But to make it a blanket coverage as it is with other business today would create, I think, a great many problems that would be undesirable.

I should like the government to consider making this system optional in the regulations because I know the government has stated on a number of occasions that it is seriously considering ways and means of bringing agricultural workers within the ambit of the act. As I said, Mr. Chairman, I want to be very, very brief and in conclusion I should like to caution the government that if and when they do introduce this kind of coverage the regulations should not be so extensive and arbitrary that they will cause a great many small operators and part time employers, if I may put it that way, a great deal of difficulty in abiding by them.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question? I should like to ask whether he is not aware of the fact that unemployment insurance stamps can be secured at any post office as required.

Mr. Olson: I am very well aware of that fact, but you cannot buy unemployment insurance stamps at any post office unless you have a licence to buy them. There are very good and sufficient reasons for having to apply for such a licence and for the application book necessary to pick up these stamps at any post office. The hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) knows very well that he cannot go to a post office and buy unemployment insurance stamps unless he produces the licence with which to purchase those stamps. The reason is very simple; it is that there would be abuse of the use of these stamps unless there was very strict control on who could buy them.

[Translation]

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with great interest to the various contributions to the debate on the bill now under study.

I should like, first of all, to congratulate the hon. member who introduced the bill; his intentions are excellent and his proposal worthy of interest.

Mr. Speaker, the bill, in its present form, reflects the claims, not only of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture but also of the Catholic Farmers' Union, both of which advocated it strongly.

Personally, I came to the house in 1963 and supported and requested such legislation.

I do not wish to minimize the credit of the hon. member who moved the bill, but as I represent an essentially rural riding—there are only villages in the riding of Lotbinière, no towns or cities—I am in a position to understand the nature of our farmers' problems, and more specifically, the problems that arise because the tillers of the soil are not covered by the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Therefore, I fully agree with the principle of this bill. I also agree with the reasons adduced in the preamble of the bill, particularly the marked technological changes that have occurred since the Unemployment Insurance Act came into force; increasing mechanization of our farms and the consolidation of farm units and the fact that a worker owning a smaller farm is likely to disappear for the benefit of those who own larger units.

I believe that all these reasons enlighten us in a special way on the necessity of such a bill.

However, I have listened also to the speech made by the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson) and, there, we have food for thought. In my opinion, here is the weakness of the bill: the application provisions of this legislation are certainly not thorough enough for us to pass this bill at once.

In fact, section 3 reads as follows:

(4) No payment shall be made out of the amounts standing to the credit of the unemployment insurance fund in the consolidated revenue fund in respect of unemployment insurance benefits and refunds of contributions for employees in agriculture in excess of and except out of the amounts credited on account of contributions on behalf of insured persons, contributions made by employers of insured persons, and interest earnings of such contributions.

Then I wonder whether the sponsor of this bill made the necessary calculations to see how much this will cost? Does he have statistical data or exact figures that can prove mathematically that we are in a position, without further consideration, to give immediate passage to this bill, for I believe there is not much difficulty about the principle.

A few moments ago, the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett), noting that the intention of the hon. member who sponsors this measure is generous, regretted like us that—his government was in office at the time when the hon. member sat as a representative in this house in his first years—that his government did not take the initiative he wants our government to take.

Therefore, this means there is a problem. If the government does not act very quickly, if the government is not ready, when the principle is recognized to take immediate action, it is due to technical difficulties and problems relating to the practical application of the bill. In my opinion, we would not be in a position, even if we agreed in principle, to pass the bill as it is, because the hon. member did not indicate clearly enough how the government could defray the cost of implementing these new provisions.

Mr. Speaker, since we are dealing with the unemployment insurance problem, I must say, before resuming my seat that I am quite concerned about another insurance scheme, that of crop insurance.

Since the government, as well as the Quebec government, have made firm commitments in this connection, I am wondering—I see, Mr. Speaker, that you are about to call me to order, but I shall not stray from the subject completely—I say that I am concerned about the possible application of the Crop Insurance Act, because I think that, on the one hand, Mr. Courcy has not entirely agreed with the proposals of the federal Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene). I am wondering whether we shall be in a position to witness this year the implementation of crop insurance which is much more important than the application of the bill under study.

I am in agreement with the principle of that act. I commend the hon. member for his noble intentions, but since we are not advanced enough, both on the practical and on the technical level, I do not feel we are in a position to act readily upon the bill now before us.

• (5:50 p.m.)

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, will the hon. member allow a question?

[Mr. Choquette.]

Mr. Choquette: With pleasure, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, is the hon. member of the opinion for instance, that farmers and settlers in his riding like in mine, who work during the summer and contribute to unemployment insurance, but lose their jobs during the winter, should receive benefits which are now refused, because they are under agriculture rather than under labour, although they have paid their contributions for six or seven months of the year?

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, I am thoroughly in agreement with what the hon. member for Villeneuve says. It is very true, and I know, because I represent an agricultural riding and farmers come to me to complain about this injustice.

As this principle seems to have unanimous approval, I wonder whether this matter should not be referred to some committee of the house, so that concrete steps could be taken and this principle implemented soon.

Mr. Jean Chrétien (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member who spoke before me and others who took part in this interesting debate. I entirely agree with the principle of the bill.

However, I wish to point out that the Unemployment Insurance Act should be revised during this session, as was announced in the speech from the throne if, however, we ever resume the study of legislation, for, at this rate, I do not see when we shall begin our examination of this new legislation.

I am inclined to believe that this problem will be examined and will receive all the consideration it deserves, because it is absolutely unfair, in my opinion, that farm workers—they are not farmers or farm owners, but employees like all other employees —should not benefit from social security measures established for everyone in this country.

However, as the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson) pointed out, there are great technical difficulties involved in that problem. Why? Because often those farm workers only work a few days or a few weeks. In addition, in the case of employers who have but one employee during certain seasons, it seems that the method of checking their operations in order to prevent abuse will require a thorough study on the part of the government.

In the past, people have often taken undue advantage of unemployment insurance, people who were not entitled to its benefits, people who took advantage of the fact that some employers were not well organized. As a result, complaints were made that people who were not entitled to unemployment insurance and often were lazy, worked solely to get, under false pretences, unemployment insurance stamps in order to benefit from that insurance. The government was then forced to take steps to prevent this type of abuse.

I feel the observations of the hon. member for Medicine Hat are most appropriate in this connection.

We agree on the principle of the bill, particularly in this day and age when small farmers disappear, while newcomers undertake large farm operations and behave like small industrialists.

I think it is entirely illogical that these industrialist-farmers should not be able to give their employees the same benefits as other employers.

I agree that we should pass a bill in this regard and I am inclined to think that we shall be in a position to adopt the proper policy during this session, when the government has the opportunity to introduce its bill to revise the Unemployment Insurance Act, so that all Canadian workers, including farm workers, be put on the same footing.

[English]

Mr. Richard Cashin (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I, too, should like to express the sentiments of the previous speaker and support the principle of this bill. About a month or so ago the very distinguished and very able Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene) visited the province of Newfoundland. As all gentlemen in this house are aware, while Newfoundland has many industrious farmers it is not one of those areas of endeavour that has made Newfoundland renowned throughout the world. However, we were very glad to have the Minister of Agriculture visit our province and to meet with the dairy farmers and mixed farmers of the various regions, particularly in the Avalon peninsula and in central Newfoundland. One of the matters that came up for discussion during this meeting with the farmers, a very successful meeting at which all these men were much impressed by the minister's understandable interest and sympathy, was this very point that is in fact the principle of this bill, namely the extension of unemployment insurance to farmers.

There are certain technical and other difficulties that are recognized. I hope, as I know all hon. members particularly on this side of the house do, that in the not too distant future these technicalities will be overcome to the point where this principle can, in fact, be adopted. I would remind all hon. members, Mr. Speaker, that just as it was the Liberal party that extended these benefits to fishermen in 1956 so, too, it will be the Liberal party that will extend these benefits to farmers, hopefully, in 1966.

I may say it is unfortunate, indeed, that the hon. member who introduced this bill, and for whom I have a great deal of respect, and his like minded colleagues, were unable during the five years they were in office with such a large representation, particularly from the farming areas, to persuade the government of the day to overcome these technical and other difficulties involved.

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In my remarks, I stressed that the Gill commission was set up by our government at that time. The report was not in until December or November, 1962. Then there were the Christmas holidays and after that an election. I should like to have the record straight.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please; this is not a point of order, it is a correction. The hon. member may have an opportunity to continue the correction when this bill comes before the house a second time. The hour for the consideration of private members' business has now expired.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

END OF VOLUME II
