ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

OBJECTION RESPECTING PROPOSED DISTRICT

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty to inform the house that an objection signed by the hon. members for Compton-Frontenac, Portneuf, Lapointe, Roberval, Kamouraska, Chapleau, Cariboo, Okanagan-Revelstoke, Nicolet-Yamaska, Lac-Saint-Jean (Messrs. Latulippe, Godin, Grégoire, Gauthier, Dionne, Laprise, Leboe, Johnston, Vincent and Simard) has been filed with me pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, chapter 31, statutes of Canada, 1964-65, with regard to the report of the electoral boundaries commission for the province of Quebec relating to the proposed electoral district of Stanstead.

If the house will agree, I suggest that we follow the procedure used on former occasions in this session so that the text of the objection will be printed as an appendix to Votes and Proceedings.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

MAIN ESTIMATES, 1966-67

EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL REVENUE

A message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting estimates for the financial year ending March 31, 1967, was presented by Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue) and read by Mr. Speaker to the house.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, with the leave of the house I should like to make a short statement on these estimates to be followed by the usual motion for referral of them to the Committee of Supply.

Mr. Speaker: Does the minister have leave of the house to make the said statement?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Benson: Budgetary expenditures provided for in the estimates for the new fiscal year commencing April 1, 1966, including amounts already authorized by continuing statutes as well as moneys parliament is being requested to appropriate, amount to $7,950,459,478.

Parliament is also being asked to authorize the disbursement of moneys for loans, investments and advances which add to the government's active assets in the total amount of $332,765,400. Not included in these totals but set out in the estimates for information is the forecast amount for old age security pension payments amounting to $1,035 million. These pension payments are separated from the budget figures and are payable out of the old age security fund, to which are credited the taxes levied for this particular purpose. Not shown in the blue book are the anticipated payments during the last three months of 1966-67 from the Canada Pension Plan fund.

To compare the main estimates for 1966-67 with the total expenditures authorized by parliament to date for the current fiscal year would, of course, not be a true comparison. The new year's estimates do not take into account additional requirements which parliament will be asked to approve in the course of the next year by way of supplementary estimates or as a consequence of legislation to be presented to parliament, as set out in the Speech from the Throne, such as the Canada assistance plan and the health resources fund. For this reason, Mr. Speaker, a more precise comparison of total expenditures for the year commencing April 1, 1966 with those for the current and previous fiscal years must await the budget presentation.

It is also misleading to compare the main estimates for the coming fiscal year with the main estimates for the current year without taking into account several differences in coverage. For example, the main estimates for 1966-67 reflect the assumption by Quebec of fuller financial and administrative responsibility for certain shared cost programs. The main estimates for 1965-66 did not. Therefore any year to year comparison of the main estimates would be misleading to the extent that payments to Quebec formerly made from estimates items are now replaced by abatement in tax collection by the federal government.

On the other hand, the new year estimates under the heading of payments to the provinces for old age assistance register a decrease of $25 million from 1965-66. That amount will be paid from the old age security fund in accordance with the plan to lower progressively the eligible age for old age pensions.

Increases in statutory expenditures between years, at $119 million, are smaller than is usual. The principal increases are $127 million in payments to provinces under the British North America Act, the Fiscal Arrangements Act and the Established Programs (Interim Arrangements) Act; $84 million in interest and other charges related to the public debt; $25 million in credits to the superannuation accounts for civil servants and the armed forces. These increases, which are statutory and do not require to be voted, are offset principally by the reductions, totalling $143 million, in the programs covered by the Established Programs (Interim Arrangements) Act.

I would like to draw the attention of the house to a number of changes in the organization of the estimates for 1966-67. In general these changes reflect the transfers of functions under the Public Service Rearrangement and Transfer of Duties Act announced by the Prime Minister on December 17 and effective on January 1, 1966.

With the permission of the house, Mr. Speaker, I now propose to table for inclusion in Hansard three tables relating to the 1966-67 estimates. The first table compares the 1966-67 estimates with the total budgetary estimates for several preceding years. The second table compares the estimates of statutory expenditures for 1966-67 with those for 1965-66. The third table indicates the changes in the main estimates between 1966-67 and 1965-66 under the headings of operating, capital and other costs.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that these tables be included in Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The tables referred to above are as follows:]

[1]Revised estimates; original main estimates were greater by $228.0 million.
[2]This is the amount appropriated by governor general's warrants and included in the report on supply for 1962-63 which would have been tabled as final supplementary estimates for 1962-63 had parliament been sitting.
[3]This total is the amount appropriated for 1962-63 and is $45.0 million less than the sum of the tabled estimates and the final supplementary estimates for 1962-63.
[4]This total is the amount appropriated for 1957-58. It is $71.7 million less than the amount of the tabled estimates due to year-end financing by governor general's warrants.

Tabling of Reports

Mr. Benson: I move that the message of His Excellency, together with the estimates presented this day, be referred to the committee of supply.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): Naturally, Mr. Speaker, it is very hard to comment on these estimates at any great length today, they just having been tabled. I should like to mention that they seem to be going up, up and up all the time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Just like the cost of living.

Mr. Monteith: The minister said how these expenditures will have to be paid for will be learned when the budget comes down. We will be interested to know how the people of Canada are going to be asked to pay for this $7,950 million plus the $332 million odd for various loans and allowances. The minister failed to mention the amount estimated for the Canada assistance plan. He indicated that important items are to follow, and that there are changes in the form of the estimates which will make it very difficult at this moment to compare them with others.

We shall be interested when the Minister of Finance brings down the budget to learn how we are going to meet these huge expenditures.

Motion agreed to.

MARITIME UNION TRUSTEES

TABLING OF ANNUAL REPORT FOR 1965

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): I wish to table two copies in English and two copies in French of the annual report of the board of trustees for the maritime transportation unions for the period January 1, 1965 to December 31, 1965.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I also have a question for the Minister of Labour arising out of his tabling earlier today of the annual report of the maritime trustees. Has the minister copies of the report available in sufficient quantity for distribution to members of the house?

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, I understand additional copies are being run off today and I hope they will be available within a day or two.

[Mr. Speaker.]

BRIDGES

SAINT JOHN—TABLING OF PRESS RELEASE ON SAINT JOHN THROUGHWAY COMPLEX

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I ask permission of the house to table a joint federal-provincial press release on the subject of the Saint John harbour bridge throughway complex. This release was given to the press in Fredericton on Friday, February 11, 1966.

It will be recalled that the Prime Minister, in a press release of February 10, 1965, announced the government's intention to seek parliamentary approval for the provision of special assistance to the bridge portion of this project. The bridge has long been considered an essential link in a trunk highway system, particularly as a connection between the Atlantic region and New England. This assistance was to involve an agreement between the federal government and the other parties involved whereby funds would be advanced annually by the federal government to cover the difference between toll revenues and operating costs. These advances would be recovered in subsequent years when toll revenues become adequate for that purpose.

The expenditure on the bridge to date has been made on the basis of an approval of the project by the municipal development loan board, which is providing a loan of $3,800,000. Completion of the bridge proper is estimated to cost not less than $17,100,000.

It did not prove possible during the last session to bring the matter before the house. Moreover, during the latter part of 1965 it became apparent that the costs of the bridge and the throughway were going to be considerably greater than the original estimate and that there was some question locally as to whether the location and type of bridge and throughway originally proposed were the most satisfactory. Consequently it became necessary in December to call a halt to all new work on the project pending a comprehensive reassessment by a committee of federal and provincial experts supported by outside consultants.

The committee has now reported, and each government has accepted those recommendations pertaining to it. The main recommendation affecting the federal government is that the bridge proceed basically along the lines originally planned. The federal government has informed the Saint John Bridge Authority of this acceptance and that the federal government will guarantee to cover the annual deficits on the bridge through advances, subject to approval by parliament.

It is therefore our intention to seek from parliament at any early date the necessary authority for this guarantee.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Was there a suggestion, Mr Speaker, that the press release be directed to Hansard for inclusion in the record of today's proceedings? I do not think press releases should be so incorporated. It is a bad precedent.

Mr. Speaker: It was my understanding that the hon. gentleman asked leave to table it.

Mr. Sharp: I sought approval to table the press release; I did not mean to have it incorporated in the record.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

PRINTING BUREAU INVENTORIES

Question No. 65—Mr. Irvine:

1. Does the Canadian Government Printing bureau make any annual inventory of supplies, machinery, parts, other equipment and stocks?
2. Who conducts any such inventories and to whom are the findings reported?
3. In the past five calendar or fiscal years, what has been the result of such stock and equipment inventories?

Questions

4. What has been the nature and the dollar value of any "short falls", in (a) paper and other stocks (b) equipment (c) tools?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): 1. Yes, up to the end of 1963-64 fiscal year, the Canadian government printing bureau was making annual inventories on the following items: Paper, Printing supplies, Maintenance parts, Stationery supplies, Office machine parts, New equipment (office machine section), Plant equipment (also in 1964-65).

In 1964-65 the Canadian government supply service had the responsibility for the following inventories: Paper, Printing supplies, Maintenance parts, Stationery supplies, Office machine parts, New equipment (office machine section).

2. The CGPB inventories are conducted by officers in charge of plants and divisions and internal auditors. The findings are reported to the Comptroller, Financial Services. The procedure is reviewed by the Auditor General's representative.

The CGSS stocktaking is conducted by the stores supervisor or district supervisors and internal auditors. The findings are reported to the Comptroller, Department of Defence Production. The operation is carried out under the surveillance of the resident Auditor General's representative.

3 and 4. Variances between physical and book value on inventories are:

	1961	1962	1963	1964	1965
Paper	$ 2,285+	$ 269+	$ 4,809+	$ 5,929+	$4,488.10+
Printing supplies	2,813+	5,544+	2,255+	9,689+	495.32+
Maintenance parts	—	1,130—	1,744+	382+	616.30+
Stationery supplies	2,320—	5,528+	11,002+	811+	2,325.16—
Office machine parts	3,128+	637+	379+	3,020+	1,546.00—
New equipment (O.M.S.)	—	15—	703+	8+	nil
Plant equipment	nil	nil	nil	nil	63—
Total	5,906+	10,833+	20,892+	19,839+	1,665.56+

The above unfavourable variances are in the nature of a normal stores operation. For example, the most significant variation stationery supplies 1961, $2,320, is less than 1/10 of 1 per cent of the value of stationery issues. Audit reports covering the unfavourable variances do not record marked discrepancies on individual stores items. Such variances may arise in the counting or measuring of small parts or in the rounding of unit rates.

DR. SYLVESTER DRABIT

Question No. 80—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

1. Was Dr. Sylvester Drabit ever employed by the Department of National Health and Welfare?
2. Is Dr. Drabit now in the employ of the Department of National Health and Welfare and, if not, what was the reason for his departure?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Yes.

2. Yes.

Questions

MANPOWER MOBILITY PROGRAM LOANS AND GRANTS

Question No. 82—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

1. In each province, how many (a) loans, and (b) grants, have been made under the Manpower Mobility Program?
2. In each province, what was the date of the first such (a) loan, and (b) grant?
3. In each province, what has been the average (a) loan, and (b) grant?

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): 1. Loans and grants issued under manpower mobility program:

Province	(a) Loans	(b) Grants
Quebec	3	..
Ontario	10	9
Saskatchewan	1	..
British Columbia	1	..
Total	15	9
Other provinces	Nil	Nil

2. Dates of issue of first loan and grant:

Province	(a) Loans	(b) Grants
Quebec	Jan. 13/66	..
Ontario	Jan. 7/66	Dec. 30/65
Saskatchewan	Jan. 12/66	..
British Columbia	Jan. 13/66	..

3. Average loan and grant issued:

Province	(a) Loan	(b) Grant
Quebec	$116.67	..
Ontario	490.00	$590.81
Saskatchewan	275.00	..
British Columbia	189.40	..

MAIL TRANSPORT, TORONTO-HAMILTON

Question No. 83—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

1. At what times in each day is mail of all classes transported from Hamilton to Toronto?
2. At what times in each day is mail of all classes transported from Toronto to Hamilton?
3. Was consideration given to the institution of day-time dispatches (a) from Hamilton to Toronto, and (b) from Toronto to Hamilton and, if so, what decision was reached?
4. Since June, 1965, has there been any change in the mail schedule between (a) Hamilton and Toronto, and (b) Toronto and Hamilton?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): 1. 12:50 A.M., 6:30 A.M., 7:50 A.M., 6:40 P.M., 7:40 P.M., 9:10 P.M., 9:25 P.M., 10:50 P.M.

2. 12:30 A.M., 1:45 A.M., 5:00 A.M., 5:15 A.M., 8:30 A.M., 10:30 A.M., 5:20 P.M., 8:05 P.M., 10:45 P.M., 11:45 P.M.

3. (a) Consideration was given during the summer of 1965 to the institution of a day time dispatch from Hamilton to Toronto. It was found that it would not be practicable to schedule a service to collect, process and transfer mail to arrive in Toronto in sufficient time for afternoon delivery.

(b) As with 3 (a) it would not be practicable to schedule a service to collect, process and transfer mail from Toronto to arrive in Hamilton in sufficient time for afternoon delivery. A day-time service is presently in effect which leaves Toronto at 10:30 A.M. and arrives in Hamilton at 1:10 P.M. However, the primary purpose of this service is to convey mails from Toronto international airport to post offices between Toronto and Hamilton.

4. (a) Effective June 20th 1965, one additional service from Hamilton to Toronto was established leaving Hamilton at 7:40 P.M.

(b) Effective June 20th 1965, one additional service from Toronto to Hamilton was established leaving Toronto at 10:45 P.M.

Minor adjustments in arrival and departure times have been made from time to time to coincide with changes in railway and air line schedules.

CHARLOTTETOWN—IMPROVEMENT OF AIRPORT FACILITIES

Question No. 96—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. When is it intended to commence construction of new and larger terminal facilities at the Charlottetown airport?
2. What additions to the present runways are contemplated?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1 and 2. No decision has been made by the government.

APPOINTMENTS TO PERSONAL STAFF, PRIVY COUNCIL PRESIDENT

Question No. 111—Mr. Ormiston:

What are the names, classifications and salaries of all civil service personnel and personnel appointed by order in council which have been on the personal staff of the President of the Privy Council since July 9, 1965?

Hon. Guy Favreau (President of the Queen's Privy Council):

Name	Classification	Salary	Date of Appointment
Mr. Andre Ouellet	Executive assistant	$12,000	July 7, 1965
Mr. J. K. Spicer	Special assistant	12,000	July 7, 1965 (Terminated October 1, 1965)
Miss M. P. C. Viau	Private secretary	7,500	July 7, 1965
Mrs. J. Roy	Head clerk	6,143	January 17, 1966
Miss M. M. Ducharme	Assistant private secretary	5,600	July 7, 1965
Mrs. M. T. Roy	Secretary to executive	5,304	September 1, 1966
Mr. J. L. Bergeron	Clerk, grade 4	5,054	July 7, 1965
Mr. J. C. Belanger	Clerk, grade 3	4,524	July 7, 1965
Miss J. C. Pilgrim	Clerk, grade 2	3,526	July 7, 1965

COST OF ICE CONTROL STRUCTURE, EXPO '67

Question No. 161—Mr. Coates:

1. What is the estimated cost of the ice control structure being constructed in connection with Expo '67 in the St. Lawrence river?
2. What was the initial estimated cost of this project, and of this initial cost what was the federal government's share?
3. What is the reason for the increase in the cost of this project if such an increase is indicated?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): 1. It was necessary to build an ice control structure in the St. Lawrence river as the result of the enlargement of St. Helens and other associated islands by the city of Montreal. The estimated cost is $16,300,000 including engineering, of which $13,800,000 will be the federal government share.

2. $13,000,000 including engineering, of which the federal government share was estimated at $10,500,000.

3. General increase in construction prices since the original estimate was prepared and an underestimation of the cost of electrical and mechanical requirements.

MINERAL REVENUES FROM B.C. INDIAN RESERVES

Question No. 180—Mr. Howard:

1. Since the coming into force of the British Columbia Indian Reserves Mineral Resources Act, has the Receiver General of Canada received any revenue from the government of the province of British Columbia as provided in the said act, and if so, for each calendar year what was (a) the amount of the revenue and (b) the name of the Indian band and reserve to which each such amount, by year, applies?
2. Has the said provincial government failed or neglected to collect any revenues as provided in the said act and, if so, in which years and what amount was involved in each such year?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): 1. Yes, $6.25 was received in 1955 covering 50 per cent of fees collected with respect to a mining claim on Scamakounst Indian reserve No. 19 of the Kincolith band and $3.75 was received covering 50 per cent of the licence fees on claims on Creston Indian reserve No. 1 of the Lower Kootenay band. There are no active mines or claim developments on reserves to which the British Columbia mineral resources act applies.

2. Records do not show any failure on the part of the government of British Columbia to collect any revenue under the said act.

AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL PERSONNEL

Question No. 218—Mr. Mather:

1. Is there a fully adequate number of air traffic control personnel at all major Canadian airports commensurate with the safety of air passengers?
2. Are air traffic control personnel in any areas now working seven days weekly?
3. Do staff and facilities exist for the operation and maintenance of secondary radar equipment in the Winnipeg area?
4. What has been the increase in air traffic at Montreal international airport in the last two years (1964 to date)?
5. What has been the increase in the number of air traffic control personnel in that period?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. Yes.

2. Air traffic control personnel in Canada may work a shift each day for seven consecutive days followed by two or more days off.

3. Yes.

4. In 1964 and 1965, the total aircraft movements at Montreal international airport were 176,055 and 211,117 respectively, or a total increase of 35,062 movements.

5. None. Although the approved establishment has remained unchanged at 84, there has been a decrease in complement from 71 to 64, due largely to promotions and resignations. However, as is done elsewhere in Canada when necessary, the safety of air passengers is assured through the use of overtime.

Questions

CANADA-U.S. FOREST PRODUCTS PACT

Question No. 268—Mr. Douglas:

1. Has the government initiated or participated in any discussions that could lead to a Canadian-United States forest products pact similar to the present Canada-United States automotive agreement?

2. If so, where, when and with whom were such discussions held?

Mr. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): The Department of Industry is actively looking into all possible means of expanding production and trade in Canadian secondary products, including forest products. The question of reducing barriers to trade on these and other products is also being discussed at Geneva by the respective GATT delegations.

CONFERENCE ON SECOND TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY

Question No. 271—Mr. Lambert:

1. Has the Government of Canada during the calendar year 1965 been in touch with any of the Governments of the Provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia with regard to the construction of a second highway of Trans-Canada standard from Winnipeg to the Pacific coast via Saskatoon, Edmonton and the Yellowhead Pass?

2. If so, what has been the nature of the correspondence or conversations, and with whom?

3. Has any further consideration been given to the calling of a joint conference between the Government of Canada and the four provincial governments in question with respect to the construction of such a highway and what are the views of the Government of Canada as to the advisability of such a conference at an early date?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works):

1. No.

2. Not applicable.

3. No. The review by the tax structure committee of the various federal-provincial fiscal policies seems to make such a conference inadvisable.

PAYMENTS MADE UNDER THE WINTER WORKS INCENTIVE PROGRAM TO EVERY MUNICIPALITY IN VILLENEUVE

Question No. 280—Mr. Caouette:

1. How many projects are being undertaken under the Winter Works Program in each municipality of the county of Villeneuve during the Winter of 1966?

2. What is the cost of each project?

3. Which projects were rejected?

Mr. John C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): 1. Arntfield 1; Beaudry 4; Bellecombe 1; Bourlamaque 1; Cloutier 3; Duparquet 1; Evain 2; La Motte 1; Malartic 1; Noranda 9; Remigny 2; Rollet 2; Roulier 1; Rouyn 8; Val d'Or 7.

TOTAL COST OF WINTER WORKS IN CANADA

Question No. 283—Mr. Caouette:

1. What was the total cost of Winter Works Programs in Canada during 1965?

2. What is the value of the federal government's contribution?

3. Has the government fully discharged this obligation?

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): 1. Information on the Municipal Winter Works Incentive Program is not compiled on a calendar year or fiscal year basis but rather on the basis of program periods. The federal incentive payment under the program is based on the direct payroll costs incurred on authorized projects, and the total costs of such projects are not reported on claims submitted by the municipalities through the provinces. However, based on estimates provided by the municipalities, the total cost of projects carried out during the program period November 1, 1964 to April 30, 1965 was about $200,000,000.

2. For the program period 1964-65, claims of the municipalities received as at February 3, 1966 totaled $39,258,753.24. It is estimated that claims amounting to approximately $1,113,000 have not yet been submitted by the provinces.

3. For the program period 1964-65, of the claims received as at February 3, 1966 totalling $39,258,753.24 payments have been made to the provinces in the amount of $38,837,-364.21. Claims recently received and being processed for payment total $421,389.03.

SALES OF ORENDA JET ENGINES

Question No. 285—Mr. Hales:

1. How many Orenda jet engines has the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation sold in the calendar year 1965?

2. To whom were they sold?

3. What price was received in each case?

4. What was the complete original cost of these engines?

5. Why were they purchased originally?

6. Why were they sold?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): In so far as Crown Assets Disposal Corporation is concerned, the answer is as follows:

1. Sixty five Orenda jet engines were sold by Crown Assets Disposal Corporation in the calendar year 1965.

Questions

2 & 3 Purchasers name	Quantity	Price Received
Carleton University, Ottawa, Ontario	1-A	$ 200.00
Airwork Services Training, Perth, Scotland	1-A	175.00
Toronto Board of Education, Toronto, Ontario	1-A	150.00
Junction Salvage Company, Toronto, Ontario	10-B	1,292.87
Orenda Division of Hawker Siddeley Canada Limited, Malton, Ontario	10	15,000.00
Continental Aluminum Smelting Company, Whitby Ontario	41-B	6,864.00
National Salvage Company, Lethbridge, Alberta	1-B	41.00
	65	$23,722.87

A-Denotes instructional cut away engines.

B-Denotes Orenda engines sold as scrap and mutilated before delivery to purchasers.

The following information is supplied by Hon. Paul Hellyer, Minister of National Defence.

4 and 5. The Orenda jet engine was procured to provide the power package for the CF-100 and Sabre aircraft at a cost of $60,000 per engine.

6. The number of Orenda engines sold during 1965 represented an accumulation of failed or time expired engines surplus to overall defence requirements.

REMOVAL OF SALES TAX ON BUILDING MATERIALS

Question No. 286—Mr. Hales:

Is the government considering removing the 11% sales tax on building materials and, if not, is the government considering removing this tax from such buildings as YMCA-YWCA, church, or other civic buildings built by public subscriptions?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Representations on this matter, as well as on a wide range of other tax subjects, are being studied during the preparation of the budget.

PRINTING OF VOTERS LISTS, NEW WESTMINSTER

Question No. 316—Mr. Mather:

1. During the federal elections of 1962, 1963 and 1965, what printers by name, were given the printing of voters lists in New Westminster constituency?

2. How many voters list names did each receive in each of these elections?

3. How much payment did each receive?

Questions

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Chief Electoral Officer as follows:

PRINTING BUREAU EMPLOYEES DOING PRIVATE WORK

Question No. 329—Mr. Irvine:

1. Are any employees of the Canadian government printing bureau engaged in the private printing business and, if so, who are they and under what firm is such business being operated in each instance?

2. Was any investigation conducted to establish whether any printing bureau equipment is being used, or has been used, in connection with the conduct of such private businesses and, if so (a) what were the results of such investigation (b) in what business or businesses is or was such equipment used and under what authority?

3. Have any of the employees of the printing bureau been engaged in performing private printing services for themselves or others, using printing bureau equipment and materials on printing bureau time and, if so, what are the names of such employees and their supervisors?

4. What such services were so printed and on whose authority?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): 1. Twelve employees of the Canadian government printing bureau are members of a small investment syndicate (which has a total of 21 members), to which each member makes monthly contributions. Syndicate funds are invested in second mortgages, stocks, and real estate, and include a three fifths ($\frac{3}{5}$) interest in a commercial printing firm, Imprimerie Gasparo Ltée, Hull, Quebec. Three of the employees serve as directors of the company, but otherwise none is actively engaged in the operations of the firm. The names of the employees are Yves Bergevin, Roger Cousineau, Roger DeGagné, Fernand Groulx, Gaston Hould, Claude Marcotte, Maurice Marcotte, Marcellin Marquis, Léo Normand, Edward Phillips, Claude Bérubé, and Raymond Côté.

2. Yes. An investigation was conducted, the results of which disclosed that no CGPB equipment has been nor is being used in the private business mentioned in one.

3 and 4. Yes. In 1964, three employees of the London, Ontario, outside printing unit of the CGPB performed private printing services for others using printing bureau multilith equipment to produce two issues of News and Views of the Department of Veterans Affairs local employee welfare association. This work, valued at a total of $260 was performed by Messrs. E. M. Hyde, G. Gore and Mrs. V. Potter, without authority.

MONEY LENDERS SYNDICATE, PRINTING BUREAU

Question No. 330—Mr. Irvine:

1. Does there exist a "money lenders syndicate" operated by Canadian government printing bureau employees or others on printing bureau premises?

2. If so (a) has there been an investigation conducted by the R.C.M.P., or otherwise, into the existence of a "money lenders syndicate" operated by printing bureau employees or others on printing bureau premises and what are the results of such investigation (b) have any persons been charged under the provisions of the Criminal Code with any offence arising out of such investigation and what is or are the name or names of such person or persons (c) if no formal charges were laid, has any other disciplinary procedure been taken by the bureau against any person in this connection and, if so, by whom and against whom was such disciplinary procedure so taken (d) if such investigation has been conducted, does it disclose that such syndicate does exist for the purpose of lending money to printing bureau employees and are such loans made at excessive interest rates?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): 1. The Department of Public Printing and Stationery, on 12 July 1962, authorized the establishment of a credit union (Caisse Populaire) in the building occupied by the Canadian government printing bureau. This organization is operated, outside of working hours, by and for the employees. The employees have only forty-five minutes for lunch and the Caisse Populaire enables them to use properly controlled facilities for savings and loans.

2. No.

PRINTING BUREAU—SALE OF STOLEN GOODS

Question No. 331—Mr. Irvine:

Since January, 1962, were any stolen goods sold in any of the buildings housing the operations of the Canadian government printing bureau to any of the employees of the said bureau and, if so (a) specifically, were any stolen television sets, tape recorders or transistor radios sold to any of the employees of the printing bureau on premises occupied by the printing bureau (b) was any investigation conducted into dealings or transactions in stolen goods by printing bureau employees to printing bureau employees on printing bureau premises and who conducted such investigation and what were its findings (c) were any printing bureau employees interviewed or questioned in connection with such investigation or in connection with such dealings or transactions in stolen goods on printing bureau premises (d) were any printing bureau employees arrested, charged, suspended or dismissed either as a result of such investigation or of independent action taken by printing bureau officials in connection with dealings and transactions in such stolen goods (e) if any employees were so arrested, charged, suspended or dismissed, what were their names, for what offence or offences was such action taken, was there a trial or a hearing in each such case, are any such employees still employed with the printing bureau and, if so, who are they and in what positions are they employed?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): (a) There were allegations to this effect, but they could not be substantiated. (b) Yes. An investigation was conducted by the management in conjunction with local police authorities, but no definite proof of such actions obtained. (c) Yes. (d) No. (e) No.

BRIDGES OVER OTTAWA RIVER

Question No. 336—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

1. Has the Department of Public Works and/or the National Capital Commission developed any plan for the early commencement of highway bridges over the Ottawa river at (a) Deschenes rapids (b) Lemieux island?

2. If so, what is the anticipated date of commencement of construction for each of such bridges?

3. What is the estimate of the total cost of the erection of each of these bridges?

4. What share of the total cost of each of these bridges is it proposed that the governments of Ontario and Quebec and the Corporation of the City of Ottawa should bear?

5. What discussions or negotiations have been undertaken with the governments of Ontario and Quebec and the Corporation of the City of Ottawa, and with what result?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): 1. Plans for these highway bridges can only be developed after there is agreement by the federal and provincial governments concerned.

2 and 3. Not applicable.

4. The sharing of the cost is a matter for agreement by the governments of Canada, Ontario and Quebec.

5. Correspondence is being carried on with the provinces and discussions are being held with the city of Ottawa.

GRAZING AND HAY PERMITS, RIDING MOUNTAIN PARK

Question No. 365—Mr. Mandziuk:

1. How many grazing permits were issued in the Riding Mountain national park in 1965 and what were the fees charged?

2. How many hay permits were issued for the Riding Mountain national park in 1965 and what were the fees charged?

3. What grazing permit fees and hay cutting fees will be charged in 1966.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): 1. Fifty five grazing permits were issued. The following fees were charged: (a) For grazing permit, $1 (b) For each head of cattle, 25 cents per month; (c) For each horse not owned by a licensed livery operating in the park, 50 cents per month.

2. Forty one hay permits were issued. The following fees were charged: (a) For hay permit, $1; (b) $2.50 per ton.

3. The existing rates are currently under review and a decision will be announced well in advance of the 1966 grazing and haying season.

TENDERS FOR COAST GUARD VESSELS

Question No. 372—Mr. MacEwan:

1. When will tenders be called for the construciton of four new coast guard vessels?

2. Will the tenders be called on a nation-wide basis or regional basis?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1 and 2. Precise arrangements for the calling of tenders for this batch of ships have not yet been settled. Tank tests and other design studies are still in progress although it is planned to call tenders for the first ship in the series early in the new fiscal year.

SALE OF FRIGATES, HALIFAX

Question No. 374—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

1. With reference to six frigates located at Halifax, Nova Scotia, which were recently disposed of by Crown Assets Disposal Corporation to Lotti S.R.A. La Spezia, Italy, what was the amount actually paid for these frigates?

2. What were the names, addresses and amounts of the others who tendered?

3. With reference to the seventh frigate involved, has it been disposed of as yet and if so, to whom and for how much and what were the names, addresses and amounts tendered by other interested parties?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): In so far as Crown Assets Disposal Corporation is concerned, the answer is as follows:

1. $465,630.89.

2. Marine Salvage Limited, Port Colborne, Ontario, $429,364; Eckhardt and Company, Hamburg, West Germany, $423,000; Mitsui and Company Limited, Vancouver, B.C., $374,960; Hierros Ardes, Bilbao, Spain, $333,000; Chantiers Navals, Jos Boel and Eils, Temse, Belgium, $312,000; Cantiere Di Portovenere Spa, Genoa, Italy, $252,000; Hercules Sales, Toronto, Ontario, $233,250; American Iron and Metal, Montreal, P.Q., $216,000; Lion Steamship Company AB, Halmstad, Sweden, $187,745; Ship Supply Corporation, Brooklyn, N.Y., U.S.A., $140,778; Union Pipe and Machinery, Montreal, P.Q., $84,280; Commercial Equipment Installation, Aylmer, Ontario, $75,300; Air Cooling Corporation, Montreal, Que., $600.

3. No.

*BAIT-HERRING FISHERY, SAANICH INLET, B.C.

Question No. 375—Mr. Groos:

Has the government received representations from sports fishing clubs and representatives of sports fishermen's groups in the Lower Vancouver Island area, protesting against a representation which has been made to the government to allow relaxation of the commercial closure and permit a limited bait-herring fishery in Saanich Inlet, which has hitherto been closed to all commercial fishing and, if so, what response has been made to such representations?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Representations have been received protesting suggestions made to our area regional office in British Columbia to permit a limited bait-herring fishery in Saanich Inlet.

The B.C. regional office of the Department of Fisheries each year prepares a circular of suggested changes in regulations. The suggestions are those received from interested agencies and associations and do not necessarily in any way reflect the views of the department. The circular is sent for comment to all organizations known to have any interest, and to the department's fishery officers.

This particular representation made to the department has caused more than normal reaction. It is but one of a list of several suggested changes. The comments on all of these have been received and the data are now being analysed in the area for recommendations to departmental headquarters. The final decisions on these matters are made upon the analysis of public opinion as well as the scientific data available on each subject.

Question No. 458—Mr. McCleave:

Were there any vacant seats on the Air Canada flight of December 3, 1965, to Bermuda and the Caribbean from Halifax International Airport and if so, how many?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Air Canada advises as follows:

Due to late cancellations by invited guests there were four vacant seats.

BUTTER AND BUTTER OIL RESERVES

Question No. 472—Mr. Laprise:

1. At the present time, what are the reserves of (a) butter, and (b) butter oil, in Canada?

2. Since 1963, what have been the noticeable periods when changes were made in the volume of these reserves and what was the extent of the increases or the decreases?

3. Taking into account the variations in the volume of the reserves, was the government called upon to take any particular action, in order to re-establish the equilibrium between supply and demand and, if so, what were these measures?

4. Is the government planning to adopt a new policy in this respect, in order to stimulate production or consumption, or in order to encourage a decrease of production or consumption and, if so, what are the measures contemplated?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): 1. (a) Stocks of butter: 75 million pounds at January 1, 1966. (b) Stocks of butter oil: 0.4 million pounds at January 1, 1966.

2. Under normal production and consumption conditions, the high point in stock position is reached on October 1 and the low point on May 1.

Stocks on hand	1963	1964	1965
	(million pounds)
May 1	101	99	53
October 1	167	138	108

3. The Agricultural Stabilization Board's stocks of butter and butter oil increased significantly during the period 1959 to 1963. In 1963 the board was authorized to dispose of some of its holding into export, and in 1963 and 1964, 46.7 million pounds of butter and 70.6 million pounds of butter oil were exported. In addition, each year the dairy support program was designed, among other things, to promote a better balance between supply and demand.

4. The dairy support program is a matter of government policy and as such will be announced some time prior to the start of the new dairy support year, which is 1 April 1966.

ATOMIC ENERGY PLANT, QUEBEC

Question No. 477—Mr. Vincent:

1. Has a study been made by Atomic Energy of Canada and Quebec Hydro of the possibility of building an atomic plant in Quebec?

2. If so (a) is this study being made jointly or separately (b) what will be (i) the cost of building such a plant (ii) the site or sites which would be favourable to such a plant (c) what would be the basis of financial negotiations for such a project, should an agreement be reached between Quebec Hydro and Atomic Energy of Canada (d) have options on lots been taken to date in the Province of Quebec with a view to this project?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): 1. The study is being carried on at present.

2. (a) Jointly. (b) (i) not yet determined; (ii) not yet approved. (c) It is contemplated that Atomic Energy of Canada Limited would construct the plant at Atomic Energy of Canada Limited expense on a site to be provided by Hydro-Quebec, that Hydro-Quebec would operate the plant and purchase from Atomic Energy of Canada Limited the electricity produced and that after the plant had operated satisfactorily for a period, Hydro-Quebec would purchase the plant at a price to be agreed. (d) The acquisition of the site would be the responsibility of Hydro-Quebec.

*PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND CAUSEWAY

Question No. 479—Mr. MacDonald (Prince):

What is the expected date of completion of the Prince Edward Island causeway?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): It is impossible at this early date to forecast accurately when a project of this magnitude and complexity will be completed. However, with maximum progress this project could be completed in late 1970.

Mr. Knowles: That is after the next election.

FEDERAL ASSISTANCE TO QUEBEC FARMERS

Question No. 490—Mr. Laprise:

1. Has the federal government been called upon by the government of Quebec to contribute to payments to farmers of that Province, for losses they have suffered due to bad weather, from July 1, 1964 to May 15, 1965?

2. If so, what was the government's reply?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): 1 and 2. Yes and the government has agreed, subject to parliamentary approval, to contribute one half of the costs of programs which provide assistance to Quebec farmers affected by adverse weather.

ASSISTANCE TO GOLD MINING INDUSTRY

Question No. 501—Mr. Caouette:

1. Is it the intention of the government to grant further assistance to the gold mining industry so as to provide for persons employed therein wages in line with those paid in other industries?

2. If so, (a) when (b) what form would such assistance take (c) on what basis would it be established?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): 1. The present term of the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act, under which the federal government provides assistance to the gold mining industry in Canada, expires at the end of 1967. The needs of the industry and of the persons employed in it will be thoroughly reviewed prior to the end of the present term of the act.

2. Answered by No. 1.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

PAYMENTS TO CANADIAN FARMERS

Question No. 299—Mr. Godin:

In the years 1963, 1964, 1965, what amounts did the government pay to Canadian farmers (a) in contributions (b) allowances (c) subsidies, for (i) Canada as a whole (ii) the Province of Quebec, and (iii) Portneuf County?

Return tabled.

WINTER WORKS PROJECTS, CHAPLEAU COUNTY, QUE.

Question No. 305—Mr. Laprise:

1. Under the Winter Works Incentive Program for 1965-66, what projects have been accepted in the county of Chapleau?

2. What will each project cost?

3. What projects have been turned down and for what reasons?

Return tabled.

BREAD

GOVERNMENT ACTION FOLLOWING PRICE INCREASE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the very steep increases in the price of bread, what does the government intend to do in that connection? Has there been any investigation made by the appropriate department as to whether the concerted increases are justified, and does the government consider that the explanation given in today's press, to the effect that the pension plan and minimum wage plan are costing money and that the result of those increases in taxation is an exaction, together with the increase in the costs of fats and powdered milk, justifies this very heavy, further imposition on the people?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, without accepting the reasons given for the increase, I shall be glad to make inquiries and make a statement in due course.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Did not the government have notice in advance that these increases were going to take place, and what action did it take when it received that notice?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I asked a question of the Prime Minister, who said he would make a statement later when he looked into this. I ask him did he not have notice in advance? His silence may be the answer.

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker, normally the government does not get notice in advance of increases in the costs of particular commodities.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, in view of these price increases, and in view of the fact that the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development has recently urged Canada to adopt the price-wage guide posts which the United States government has adopted in the past two years, will the Prime Minister reconsider—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): —the government's decision not to set up machinery now—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kinsway): —to review recent increases in the cost of living?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is making representations and submitting an argument expressing an opinion. She is not asking a question.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, with due respect I was not submitting an opinion at all. I was simply stating that in view of the fact that the organization for the economic co-operation—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

REPORTED STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER RESPECTING CANADIAN CONTROL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Right Hon. the Prime Minister. In order to do so I want to direct his attention to the fact that Le Devoir of this morning attributes the following statement to the Prime Minister:

[Translation]

The Canadians could easily—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is against the rules and procedures of this house to quote from a newspaper at this time. Perhaps the hon. member will preface his question by referring in general terms to the statement. He cannot read a newspaper article as he apparently intended to do.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, the only reason I intended to do that is that during an earlier question another hon. member was requested to read the actual statement. I can easily reword my question.

In view of the fact that there is in this morning's paper an alleged statement by the Prime Minister to the effect that for Canada to control its own economy we would have to accept a reduction of from 25 per cent to 30 per cent in our standard of living, I should like to ask the Prime Minister on what he bases this statement, as a condition for Canada controlling its own economy?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to answer that question, which relates to a question asked me during a question and answer session held by the university Liberals last Friday night.

An hon. Member: We know all about that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Before they abolished the Queen.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I was trying to point out during this question and answer session that if we in this country went in for a complete policy of economic nationalism and if we tried to become economically self-contained, our standard of living would be reduced I think by at least 25 per cent. Perhaps it would be more than that.

Mr. Lewis: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Do I understand the Prime Minister now to say that his statement was to the effect that before Canada's standard of living would be reduced it would have to adopt a completely self-entrenched economy, or is he talking about the control of our economy?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker, that is a wrong deduction.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO INCREASE IN NATIONAL DEBT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Finance.

In view of the substantial increase in the interest on the national debt in 1966-67, could the Minister of Finance tell us by how much this debt of the Canadian government has increased and under what legislation the minister was authorized to increase such debt?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's question is very interesting, but I do not think it should be asked at this time, and I suggest that he put it on the order paper.

[English]

AIR TRANSPORT

ICAO—REPORTED CRITICISM OF U.S. PROPOSAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the sharp disagreement which has taken place at the current ICAO conference in Montreal, over the extent of liability to passengers killed or injured in air accidents, and in view of the rather severe criticism by the chief Canadian delegate of the United States policy or proposal, accusing them of high pressure selling tactics impinging on human dignity, has the minister been in contact with his United States counterpart regarding this issue? If he has not, is the minister considering any representations to the United States government in respect of this subject?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, our delegation has been told to take a certain position at the conference where discussions are now taking place.

[Mr. Pearson.]

If there is any amplification that I can give I shall be glad to give it during the consideration of my estimates.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CANCELLATION OF ORDER FOR CF-5 SIMULATOR

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Why has the contract for the CF-5 simulator for training purposes in the R.C.A.F. been cancelled?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it has been determined that the simulator is not required for this aircraft. Amongst its other advantages the CF-5 is such a stable aircraft and so easy to fly that any experienced jet pilot could step right into it and fly it. Therefore the simulator is not needed. There are also financial savings resulting from this fact.

Mr. Harkness: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If all these things are the case, why were they not considered before a contract was let for such a simulator; also, is this not the only fighter aircraft the R.C.A.F. has had for which there has not been a simulator? In addition, is it not a fact that all the air forces of the world have found that a simulator is necessary?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some hon. Members: Answer.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE PAYMENTS TO PROVINCES ACCEPTING FEDERAL CONDITIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare whether he has considered the implications of the statement made on Friday last by the premier of Ontario with respect to the pattern set by the unconditional payment of federal funds to one province under the opting-out formula, with particular reference to the possibility of Ontario receiving a no-strings attached payment for the purposes of its own medicare scheme. If so, what position does the federal government take with respect to this matter in connection with its suggestion that it will pay one half the costs of a medicare scheme to any province which accepts conditions to be imposed by the federal government?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the statement made by the premier of Ontario; therefore I have had no opportunity to consider its implications.

Mr. Fulton: May I ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question. I would ask the Prime Minister whether, in view of the importance of the position which seems to have been suggested by the premier of Ontario, he does not feel he owes it to this house and the provinces to clarify the position of the government on this matter in order that the provinces may proceed intelligently with their plans even though the federal government may not wish to plan intelligently?

EDUCATION

QUEBEC—ARRANGEMENTS RESPECTING FEDERAL GRANTS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister this question. Is he in agreement with the statement made by Premier Lesage to the effect that the $17,300,000 payable under the education plan to the province of Quebec will be used by that province as it chooses, and may be used for the building of roads if it so chooses?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the grant is exactly the same in so far as use is concerned as that which was made to the province of Quebec by the previous government, when it gave a grant of $2 per capita.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: The previous grant, as I indicated the other day, amounted to a percentage abatement of the corporate income tax of 1 percentage point, which was designed to produce revenue equal to the provincial share of the university grants. The agreement was made with the intent of assisting the province in its support of universities, but of course revenues derived by the province from the tax abatement lose their identity in general provincial revenues and could not be related directly to such provision as the province has made for universities. In that sense the abatement has the same effect as the grant that was made in the form of a cash grant.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I still have not received an answer, because I point out that on Friday, as reported at page 1069 of Hansard, when I asked the question the Prime Minister said:

> —there is a change, but I do not consider it as a matter involving victory or defeat. There is a change from the arrangements made when the right hon. gentleman was head of the government.

He went on to say what the change was. I ask the Prime Minister this, and it is very simple; words like those used are too general. Can the Lesage government use the $17,300,000 for any purpose it desires outside of education?

Mr. Pearson: It can deal with the cash grant exactly as it could have dealt with the abatement on corporation tax. The grant was made by this government, as it was made by the previous government, to the government of Quebec for education.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There is a change.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I seem to have difficulty getting an intelligent answer.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest to the right hon. Leader of the Opposition that the question he asked today is substantially the same as the question he asked last Friday. The right hon. Prime Minister has replied to the question and I suggest we should go on to another subject matter.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Lesage interpretation stands, then.

[Later:]

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister based on the question asked previously. Can the Prime Minister indicate whether the payment of $17 million to the province of Quebec will be subject to the scrutiny of the Auditor General, to make sure it is used for the purposes for which it was intended?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Auditor General will be very interested in every federal payment of any amount to any province.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, is it going to be done?

[Translation]

Mr. Clément Vincent (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Would the Prime Minister ascertain whether the Premier of Quebec uttered the statement we read in the press last week that:

It is the first time the Ottawa government agrees to such an unconditional payment, which I blamed the Barrette-Fleming formula for not allowing.

Mr. Speaker: Once again, I would suggest to the hon. member that this question be put on the order paper.

PENSIONS

INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION REGULATING PRIVATE PLANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the statement made in the Ontario legislature by Mr. Wishart concerning legislation respecting the regulation of private pension plans, and in view of the confusion created by that statement, will the government reconsider its legislation in this field with a view to bringing it in at an early date?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the situation in this respect remains as I explained it on January 25 and, I believe in answer to a later question; I said that we understood the question to be urgent but that there were other matters of even greater urgency that would be appearing or are now on the order paper.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he has given consideration to the fact that if Mr. Wishart's legal advice is correct and railway employees in Ontario now have greater rights than railway employees in every other province, this may affect the whole actuarial basis of the pension fund.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is now making an argument.

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Is the Prime Minister holding up the announcement of the appointment of Hazen Argue to the Senate at the insistence of Premier Thatcher until after the provincial Bengaugh by-election?

[Mr. Vincent.]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, might I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. May I ask him whether in the light of the very considerable concern in Halifax he would give this house and all maritimers his very capable assurance that certain suggestions made by the hon. member for Lapointe will not be considered by the government?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): That question is so involved, sir, that I think it should be saved for the estimates.

HOUSING

TORONTO—COMMUNITY CENTRE FACILITIES FOR DOWNTOWN DEVELOPMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Labour in his function as the minister responsible for C.M.H.C. Has C.M.H.C. recommended to the city of Toronto that the plan for the Trefann Court housing development in downtown Toronto should include community centre facilities for the Regent Park and Trefann Court developments?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question might well be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. R. A. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, Friday and again today a parliamentary secretary has addressed questions to the ministry. I respectfully submit to Your Honour that they have a status which ought not to permit them to address questions to ministers of the crown—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): —and that such questions ought to be considered as out of order, from parliamentary secretaries in their proper status as junior ministers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I would point out to the hon. member that whatever the status or additional responsibilities—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has raised a very important point, but it is also a novel suggestion. Perhaps there is some merit in it, and certainly the Chair will in due course have an opportunity to look into the matter and consider the suggestion made by the hon. member, although as I said this to my mind seems a new approach to questions.

REGINA—INQUIRY AS TO PROTEST RESPECTING REZONING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. K. H. More (Regina City): My question Mr. Speaker, is directed to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration under his responsibility for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and I think the Minister of Veterans Affairs should also be interested. Has the minister had representations from residents of Dieppe Place in Regina stating the grievance they have in connection with action which is being taken to rezone the property around this site? If he has, what action has the minister taken in this matter?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would invite the hon. member to place this question on the order paper.

TRANSPORT

REPORT OF CO-ORDINATING COMMITTEE ON MOVEMENT OF GRAIN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Finance with regard to the new co-ordinating committee set up for the movement of grain to the west coast. I should like to ask the minister whether he has received a report or has otherwise been in communication with this committee; and if so, can he now tell the house where the bottleneck in the movement of grain to the west coast was or is?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as I reported to the house in answer to a similar question a few days ago, there has been a very considerable improvement in the situation in Vancouver and the daily movement is right on target, which I think will gratify all of us.

I have not yet had a report from the chairman as to the problems that he overcame and those that remain.

Mr. Olson: May I ask a supplementary question. If there is a substantial improvement there must have been something corrected. Therefore, to remove the shadow on the railway or the terminals or whoever it was, could we know what it was that was holding up this movement?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that this question is not in order at this time.

GRAIN

INQUIRY AS TO DATE OF FINAL PAYMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): My question is directed to the Minister of Finance and is related to his responsibility as the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. Since this is Valentine's Day I wondered if he could make any announcement about the final closing of the pool on grain so we could know the final prices before Wednesday.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): I always like to get greetings on Valentine's Day from the hon. member for Qu'Appelle. May I say to him that in reply to a similar question the other day I said I thought the wheat board would be closing its accounts and making the necessary submission to council in the latter part of this month. I am not quite certain which day it will be.

INDUSTRY

AUTOMOBILES—REQUEST FOR MEETING WITH TRADESMEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. E. Gray (Essex West): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry. I want to ask him if he will be taking immediate steps to arrange, together with the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, the meetings requested by a group of skilled tradesmen at the Ford Motor Company of Windsor in their telegram of February 13, to discuss with them the impact of the auto agreement on their type of work?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): As a result of the initiative taken by my colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Drury: —and the hon. member for Essex West, I am glad to say a meeting is in the process of being arranged.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): May I ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Industry. At this meeting will the government put forward its stand on parity prices as between the United States and Canada so far as car orders are concerned?

Mr. Drury: The purpose of the meeting will be to hear representations by the tool and die makers as to conditions of employment in their particular trade.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): I should like to ask the minister if the government, at this proposed conference, will put forward any proposals for the alleviation of the hardship to those who are laid off by reason of technological change, in line with the recommendations of Mr. Justice Freedman in connection with the railway run-through cases.

Mr. Drury: The recommendations of Mr. Justice Freedman are now being studied with the care they deserve, particularly by my colleague the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. The government has a great interest in the report of Mr. Justice Freedman, but I am not sure his recommendations are at issue in this particular case. We will only learn this on the arrival of the delegation for the meeting here in Ottawa.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SEAFARERS INTERNATIONAL UNION—PROSECUTION OF MEMBERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Justice which I consider most appropriate in view of the tabling of the report of the maritime trustees. In view of the fact that I have been reliably informed that papers, documents and records seized by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police from the offices of the Seafarers International Union in Montreal have been returned by the courts to the R.C.M.P., and in view of the fact that I have been reliably informed also there is evidence of fraud on the part of Harold Chamberlain Banks and other persons, will the minister inform the house whether charges are to be laid against those persons?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Minister of Justice): The minister cannot say whether charges will be laid until all the evidence has been completely studied.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Some days ago I asked the Minister of Justice about certain charges that are pending against a number of individuals involved in the so-called march on Ottawa during the time the legislation on maritime union trustees was under consideration. At that time the minister was not sure whether it was a matter of persecution or prosecution, and he said he would look into it. I wonder if the minister could now indicate an answer?

Mr. Cardin: I do not know where the hon. member got the idea that I was not sure whether it was persecution or prosecution. I am sure it was prosecution. Offences had been committed under the Criminal Code. The charges are now before the courts and the matter is sub judice. There is nothing more I can add.

Mr. Howard: A supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has recognized another hon. member. We may return to the hon. member for Skeena.

RESALE PRICE MAINTENANCE—INQUIRY AS TO PROSECUTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Justice. In view of the recent decision of the Supreme Court of Canada upholding the legality of that section of the Combines Investigation Act forbidding resale price maintenance, can the minister advise what action he is taking or is about to take regarding the 15 or 16 similar cases that are now before his department, some of which have been there for as long as two years or more?

Mr. Speaker: Order. In view of the fact that some of the cases to which the hon. member refers have been pending for two years I wonder whether he might not wait another week and place the matter on the order paper.

BANKRUPTCY

REQUEST FOR TERMS OF REFERENCE OF COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): May I direct a question to the Minister of Justice, and ask him if he has directed written terms of reference to the three man committee set up by him to study bankruptcies? If so, will he table them?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Minister of Justice): I will look into this question, and if possible I will table them. It is my recollection that the terms of reference were arranged verbally with the superintendent.

Mr. Nielsen: May I ask a supplementary question. Will the minister inform the house whether the government is giving any consideration to suspending the operation of those legislative provisions within which certain bankruptcy proceedings must be taken while this committee is undertaking its study, which apparently is to take a year?

Mr. Cardin: No, Mr. Speaker, the committee will proceed with its study, which will take perhaps a year, with a view to revising the Bankruptcy Act. However, there are amendments which we intend to bring before parliament as soon as possible and which will deal with the areas of contention in this field.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): If the investigation is to take a year there would be some people escape because of the passage of time and the statute of limitations. Is it the intention to introduce any amendment during the period of a year to the effect that the statute of limitations shall not run so these people will not escape if they should be charged?

Mr. Cardin: It appears that there is a misunderstanding of the purpose of the committee which is being set up. The committee that is being set up is to continue the studies that there were made by the Department of Justice in connection with the revision of the Bankruptcy Act. It is not an inquiry into any irregularities. It has to do with the revision of the Bankruptcy Act, and the people who have been chosen to do this are very competent in that field.

Mr. Nielsen: I do not believe, Mr. Speaker, the minister has appreciated the importance of the point we are trying to get across. A legislative limitation is placed on the time within which certain proceedings must be commenced under the Bankruptcy Act. In view of the fact that some individuals concerned may not act because of the existence of this committee, is it the government's intention to suspend the operation of these limitation provisions?

Mr. Cardin: I will analyse the hon. member's question.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): May I ask a further supplementary question. I wonder whether the minister could explain why, after four years of complaints and suggestions from various business organizations like the institute of chartered accountants, it is now found necessary to get outside advice and form a commission that will take another year to study the matter. Why is this necessary?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REQUEST FOR IMPROVED SERVICE BETWEEN HALIFAX AND MONTREAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. The press has reported that the cabinet is studying a $15 million proposal to finance the purchase of a fleet of gas turbine super engines for the Canadian National Toronto to Montreal run, capable of speeds up to 160 miles an hour. In view of the importance of providing speedy transportation and train service between the Atlantic provinces and the Montreal-Toronto area, will the minister give similar consideration to establishing a super train between Halifax and Montreal to replace the Ocean Limited?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I think I can—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question should be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Pickersgill: Bring it up on the estimates.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT ACTION RESPECTING HONG KONG VETERANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. Chester MacRae (York-Sunbury): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Is the minister now prepared to make any statement on the report he tabled on Friday in connection with the Hong Kong veterans?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker. The report is now being studied by the Canadian Pension Commission and it will be a few days before we are in a position to reach any decision in this matter.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Can the minister inform the house when he will be able to make a report as to the government's consideration of the requests of the Legion and other veterans organizations for amendments to the Pension Act, the War Veterans Allowance Act and other veterans legislation, including the subject just mentioned?

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Speaker, I think I will read that question in Hansard and answer it subsequently.

Inquiries of the Ministry

SPORTS

BANFF—SUITABILITY AS SITE FOR WINTER OLYMPICS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Because of the current controversy with respect to the suitability of Banff national park as a site for the 1972 winter Olympics, can the minister confirm the government's continuing support for this worth-while international athletic event and ensure the accessibility of Banff for that purpose?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is not a question which should be asked at this time.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

B.C. PROTEST AGAINST CURTAILMENT OF SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to direct to the Minister of Transport. Can he say whether a protest has been received from British Columbia in relation to the curtailment of the C.P.R. passenger services this year, just when British Columbia is expecting such a large influx of tourists, this being her centennial year?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, if by British Columbia the hon. gentleman means the government of British Columbia I think the answer is no. If by British Columbia he means people living in British Columbia, then the hon. member for Kamloops made an eloquent speech on the subject on Friday.

FINANCE

INCREASE IN INTEREST RATE ON TREASURY BILLS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, on Friday I asked the Prime Minister, before the Minister of Finance had arrived in the house, a question with regard to the increase in the interest rate on Canadian treasury bills reported in the press last Friday. I asked him whether this was the deliberate policy of the Bank of Canada, and the right hon. gentleman stated that he would consult the Minister of Finance and would try to answer today. May I have the answer?

[Mr. Teillet.]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I had expected that the hon. member would remind the Prime Minister today of his promise and I am prepared to answer the question now.

The increase to which the hon. gentleman referred was 2-100ths of 1 per cent, a very small change well within the usual week to week variations in the yield of treasury bills. The rate on treasury bills is set by market forces working day by day in the open market and each week in the auction for new bills to replace those maturing, which normally takes place on Thursdays. Along with other developments which affect the market, the operations of the Bank of Canada have an influence on credit conditions generally and the yield on treasury bills as well as on other securities. These operations of the bank are shown in the figures that it publishes each week.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary question. Is it not a fact that in this case the Bank of Canada took no action to forestall this increase which while small has an effect on the general interest rate?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, may I just say by way of general comment that within the past year, at least partly as the result of the operations of the Bank of Canada, the money supply, that is, the total currency and chartered bank deposits, has risen by 9½ per cent and during the year 1965 actually increased nearly 12 per cent. So I do not think anyone can suggest that the Bank of Canada has been following a tight money policy.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): A supplementary question. I am assuming that the relationship between the Bank of Canada and the present Minister of Finance is on a similar basis to that of the former Minister of Finance. Does the fact that there have been successive increases in the bank rate over the past several weeks indicate a trend in government thinking?

Mr. Sharp: As those who are well informed on the subject know, Mr. Speaker, the increase in interest rates in the United States has exceeded that in Canada.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR EARLY CONSIDERATION OF BILL RESPECTING FAIR WAGES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. My question relates to Bill No. C-2, an act to amend the Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act. In view of the fact that this bill is really just an extension of the Canada Labour (Standards) Code and therefore might not occasion much debate, would the minister consult with his colleague the house leader to see whether this bill could be brought on for passing at an early date so that the people who require its protection can get that protection soon?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): I will be glad to discuss that with the house leader, Mr. Speaker.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

RESEARCH INTO POSSIBLE DANGER FROM PESTICIDES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, on February 7 I asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare whether or not Canada or his department was taking action concerning aldrin and dieldrin, two dangerous pesticides, as has happened in Washington recently. Can he answer that question now?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the action taken in Washington with respect to these pesticides was to limit their use for specific purposes. This action was taken by the U.S. Department of Agriculture. No similar action has been taken by this department because it is not the type of action which is normally taken. As my hon. friend realizes, the Department of National Health and Welfare ensures that the amounts of drugs present in pesticide residues are not a hazard to health, and that work is at present going on as usual.

MONTREAL—POSSIBLE STRIKE OF CONSTRUCTION WORKERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. E. Régimbal (Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Labour.

In spite of assurances to the contrary given by the Minister of Trade and Commerce and by the Expo '67 authorities during the parliamentarians' visit of that site three weeks ago, there is now a possibility of a general strike in the building industry in Montreal which would affect Expo works.

Could the minister tell us what protection we have against this?

[English]

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): For some reason, Mr. Speaker, the hearing device at this desk is not working. I will have to take the question as notice. I heard only about three words.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION RESPECTING CLAIMS COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. When may we expect the introduction in the house of a bill regarding the Indian claims commission? When the minister answers that question perhaps he might also indicate whether that bill has been delayed up to now by revision of any previous bill.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, the delay that has eventuated has had more than one cause. It has come from the quarters with which my hon. friend and myself are familiar namely, the province of British Columbia, where the Indian people seem to prefer to take a concentrated second look before proceeding. Some Indians of British Columbia indicated they would prefer to consider their particular position in negotiation prior to introduction of the bill. I have told the legal adviser of the Indians in the province of British Columbia that I am prepared to discuss with them this subject, and I have had a preliminary meeting with him, before any action is taken.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, may I have this question clarified. Did I understand the minister to say that he has had a preliminary discussion with legal counsel for the Indian people of British Columbia with respect to negotiations over the land question? Is that what he meant?

Mr. Laing: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I think I can safely say that.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

1. Departmental administration, $4,862,900.

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of supply. Estimates of the Department of Transport for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1966, vote No. 1. Shall the item carry?

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Chairman, during the last few days we have listened to speeches from various members of the house who have taken the opportunity to tell other members of the house and the Minister of Transport in particular about their problems back home. It will therefore be no great innovation in Canadian politics if to a large extent I do likewise on behalf of Renfrew North in particular and the Ottawa Valley in general.

I have stated in a previous speech that the Ottawa Valley has not prospered during the past several years to the same extent as have other areas in Canada. In fact, the upper Ottawa Valley has received so little attention that incentives for growth from either level of government have been next to non-existent. Other people who lived in an area where road accessibility leaves much to be desired, where railway freight rates show no mercy and where regular air passenger transportation is nil, would throw up their hands in hopeless disgust, particularly when they see other parts of Canada witnessing a boom, but while the Ottawa Valley people have been and are now witnessing these situations, they are not by any stretch of the imagination giving up hope. In fact, there is a new spirit abroad in the area. The people have never been afraid of work. They are not afraid of work today nor are they afraid to meet great challenges. All I ask on their behalf is that they be given a fair fighting chance to improve and to promote the growth of their communities.

Give us equalized freight rates and encourage the provincial government of Ontario to improve trans-Canada highway 17 by offering a federal grant toward such a project. Because this route is designated a trans-Canada highway this government has both a moral and a national responsibility to assist in its upkeep, and the provinces concerned not only have the power but also the direct responsibility to co-operate in maintaining those sections of the nation's trans-Canada highway that run through their individual provinces. The people of the Ottawa Valley would be grateful if the Minister of Transport would promote such action.

We have running through our geographic area a river which is one of the largest on the North American continent. Ever since the settlers moved into the upper Ottawa region during the days of the Crimean war to cut timber for the British navy, this river has been used for logging purposes. The Ottawa river and its tributaries such as the Petawawa river have become the graveyard for countless numbers of good logs. Not only has this been a waste of good timber but it has also made these waters a danger zone for boats and swimmers.

[The Chairman.]

A plan must be introduced to promote the cleaning up of these waterways because the Ottawa and its tributaries are becoming more and more important as tourist areas and the local boat traffic is increasing rapidly. Man has received the beauty of nature free of charge. Let us not destroy it at such a high cost.

As you know, Mr. Chairman, two railways run through the Ottawa Valley. Over the years since these railways were built historians have lamented about the lack of business that these lines receive from the Canadian shield. One of our eminent Canadian historians, Professor A.R.M. Lower, whom I am pleased to say I have known personally, describes the geographic area from ten miles north of Pembroke to Winnipeg as a rather barren one so far as rail business is concerned.

A few days ago a group of Liberal members of parliament from these areas met to discuss what they feel is a common problem. Business can be promoted in these areas and attracted to them if we are given equalized freight rates. I know that the other hon. members of the house are quite capable of putting forth ideas on behalf of their own constituencies in northern Ontario. However, I mention this to show that the urgency of this recommendation has considerable support. Even those people who have an elementary knowledge of Canadian history realize that the transcontinental railways were built in Canada not only to weld this nation together, not only for military purposes to maintain law and order on new frontiers, not only to entice geographic areas such as British Columbia to join confederation, but also for the purpose of improving national trade and for the purpose of providing easier access to international markets. Today we have very rapidly growing areas in Canada and we have stagnating areas in Canada. Let us not lose sight of the imagination, of the hopes and of the plans and initiative of generations of people who have contributed greatly to the building and development of our country.

The pioneers of this nation, our ancestors, have provided us with certain tools to continue the job of developing and promoting a Canadian nation that can become the pride of not only the western world but of the world at large. Among these tools of progress are our railways which run through many of our industrially stagnated areas. It seems to be a tradition in Canadian history that the railways be operated with a certain status quo attitude. The attitude seems to be that railways must be operated just like any other business with the profit motive as the first and foremost consideration. But the railways and other important transportation facilities are of crucial importance not only to the general public but to the commercial and industrial sections of our country. They are special services which can and should be used to diversify the industrial and commercial development of Canada. Surely the time is ripe for a new look at railway freight rates in this country and for an over-all review of slow growth areas through which our railways run. Today we hear many complaints about the lack of labour in southwestern Ontario and other prosperous regions. There is nothing wrong with progress so long as that progress is in the right direction.

Are we to continue to expect people to uproot themselves from longstanding family homes in areas such as Renfrew county and more northerly areas of Ontario, cause them to travel to densely populated regions in order to exist and in the process speed up the centralization of our population in a few geographical areas? Surely the pioneers of Canada who were responsible for the construction of transcontinental railways did so with the hope that these services would help to develop Canada from coast to coast and settle the country throughout by spreading people across the nation. We have lost sight of their hopes, their aims and their great imagination if we of the second half of the twentieth century are going to reverse their aims by continuing transportation policies which tend to centralize rather than decentralize the industry and population density of our nation.

The opportunity is before us to promote the widespread development of Canada. What does it matter if we must subsidize our railways to make up the differences during initial stages of a new outlook on freight rates? The development of presently stagnated areas will in time give our railways more work to do and provide them with greater economic stability.

Let us invest some money in the development of stagnated geographical areas in Canada. We can do so by reviewing our freight rates and granting concessions. By taking such a course we would be investing in the long run in the progress and growth of our Canadian nation as a whole, not just in part. Let us not demonstrate to a large segment of this country that our thinking is obsolete when it comes to economic national unity. Let us invest money in the security of our Canadian people not only by providing them with social security but also by providing job security and a good living wage for all Canadians.

Let us show a new outlook in area progress. We have the people. Our people have the desire. Give them the opportunity by taking a hard and long look at railway freight rates between the Ottawa Valley and Montreal and from points along this route to the golden horseshoe of the northwest corner and western end of lake Ontario.

The same thing applies to the north. We can talk forever about the rights and privileges of the Canadian people, we can talk forever about the diversification of industry in Canada, we can talk about incentives for development, but unless we do something concrete to correct inequalities of rights and privileges, unless we do something to promote the diversification of industrial development and growth, in short, unless we provide practical incentives which are actually going to improve these situations, then our aims become meaningless. Give us the tools and we will do the job because our hearts are in Canada and our aim is to see her grow to greater nationhood through the vehicle of economic stability which will be brought about by industrial and hence urban diversification.

There has been a suggestion in this house that possibly we need a department of urban affairs. I have great respect for the hon. member who made this suggestion and his point is well taken. However, at this time I should like to offer another solution to urban problems. Let us through the good auspices of the Department of Transport and in other ways through the Department of Industry introduce policies of a kind which will tend to prevent the growth of giant urban octopuses that in turn become almost unmanageable. If you do not have giant urban octopuses then you do not have the problem of looking after them. Two of the major tools we can use to prevent this situation while at the same time creating a strong economic base for Canada are good road facilities and lower freight rates for slow growth areas.

It is with these thoughts and sentiments in mind that I am pleading with the Minister of Transport, his colleagues in the cabinet and all members of this house to give the Ottawa valley in particular and northern Ontario in general new hope by reducing the freight rates between the Ottawa valley and Montreal and between this area and the golden horseshoe so that all these places can look forward to greater progress and a greater share in the fruits of the Canadian economy.

I am not one who believes that a rapidly growing economy is dangerous to a country but I am one who believes that it is very unfair, as well as poor economic and social planning when particular areas within a nation are permitted to outgrow their labour supply and create densely populated areas which in turn pose additional problems for government, while other sections of the country are allowed to stagnate or even decline. I want to see a Canada that is continually working toward economic unity and economic equality because these two criteria will create an attitude of mind which will make all people feel that they are indeed a part of the Canadian nation. This in turn will create a strong Canadian nationalistic spirit which will go far toward strengthening confederation.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I urge the Minister of Transport and the government to introduce a downward revision of the freight rates between the Ottawa valley and Montreal, between northern Ontario and southern Ontario including points in the golden horseshoe so that people of the northern areas will be able to take up life anew and get down to the business of bringing greater progress to their regions. I wish to thank the minister for the kind attention he has given me and to assure him that if he takes the initiative in these matters he will be loudly cheered onward by the voices of the Ottawa valley and the north.

Mr. Smallwood: Mr. Chairman, I should like to spend a little time discussing the railroad situation in western Canada. The Minister of Transport has had many requests made to him. I do not intend to make any requests but I should like to give him a little information which he seems unable to obtain from his colleagues in the government.

The slow movement of grain from the west to the Pacific coast has created a very serious situation. I say at the outset that the Minister of Finance who is responsible for the Wheat Board has not been doing his job, possibly not because he does not possess the ability but because there are too many other matters which demand his attention. He has let the farmers of western Canada down. Surely the Prime Minister can turn this responsibility over to the Minister of Agriculture. At least he goes out to the west and listens to the farmers' side of the story. We have had a great deal of confusion among the cabinet with respect to the wheat situation. It reminds me of Nero fiddling while Rome burned. The ministers on the front bench have been fiddling and fumbling and the farmers have not been getting their grain to market.

On Wednesday, February 9 the Minister of Finance was asked a question by the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale respecting final payments for grain. As recorded at page 963 of Hansard the hon. member asked this question:

> Is the minister in a position now to inform the house if the Canadian Wheat Board is ready to make payments to western farmers, for which there is great need at the present time because of the slow movement of grain on the prairies?

The minister replied:

> I do not accept the last part of the statement by the hon. member concerning the movement of grain. In fact, the movement of grain throughout Canada at this time is at a record pace.

I shall place figures on the record to show that one cannot pay any attention to the minister's answers. I have here a letter I received today. It is dated February 10 and I should like to put part of it on the record to show how serious is the situation in western Canada. It is from subdistrict 505 of the Alberta Wheat Pool and it points out that at Strome, Alberta, on the C.P.R. line, where the quota today is three bushels, there is still an estimated 150,000 bushels to be delivered at that point on that quota. They have orders for 42 cars but they cannot get these cars. At Bawlf there is practically the same situation, with orders for 43 cars, and at Daysland the situation is the same. The C.N.R. lines immediately to the north and south have 5 and 6 bushel quotas in comparison with the situation on the C.P.R. line.

The Minister of Agriculture went out to western Canada and when he came back he reported that the C.P.R. was definitely not doing the job in hauling grain. When he returned he, the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Transport had a little meeting with Mr. Emerson, President of the C.P.R., who came down out of his ivory tower in Montreal to meet these ministers. After the meeting the Minister of Finance came out and drove a knife in the back of the poor Minister of Agriculture. He said, "You are misinformed; it is not the C.P.R., it is the port facilities in Vancouver that are the bottleneck". This is very interesting. That was his statement on that occasion.

Today the Minister of Finance was asked a question regarding the movement of grain and he replied that the movement of grain was back to normal. If it is back to normal, then how did they improve the facilities of the port of Vancouver so quickly? I think he just does not know where they are going.

When all this confusion was going on the hon. member for Jasper-Edson and myself made a trip to Vancouver and spent three days at that port. As I have said, the Minister of Finance stated that the Vancouver facilities were not adequate to handle all the grain, that this was the cause of the delay and that the C.P.R. was doing fine. I get a little suspicious when I hear statements like that, especially since C.P.R. shares have risen to $63 from $23 during the last two years. Incidentally, I wonder how many of those people have shares in that private enterprise organization.

After that statement by the Minister of Finance the following telegram was sent to the minister from W. A. Sankey, Secretary Manager of the Vancouver Merchants Exchange:

> We strongly protest statements made in the press today wherein you are quoted as agreeing with statement of Mr. Ian Sinclair to the effect that "the real problem is a shortage, not of box cars, but in the shipping facilities at the port of Vancouver," and you are quoted as stating that, "Vancouver terminal facilities have not been adequate to handle the kind of shipments that we have had in the last two or three years."
> Records show that our facilities with a proper flow of cars have handled 25 million bushels per month. Furthermore at a meeting held January 20th in Vancouver, under the auspices of the Canadian Wheat Board, at which members of that board, terminal elevator operators and railway officials were present, the west coast grain problems were fully discussed and the conclusion reached that the trouble over the last several months has been caused by the failure of the railways to deliver sufficient cars to elevators to meet Canada's export grain commitments, which is an absolute contradiction to statements attributed in the press to yourself and Mr. Sinclair.

The other day the Minister of Transport got up and said it was a few snowbanks which had held up the movement of grain for a week, but it is more serious than that. The hon. member for Jasper-Edson and I spent three days at the port of Vancouver. We had a good reception every place we went. We found that the wheat pool terminal held only 1,300,000 bushels though their elevators were capable of handling 7 million bushels. We also found that the C.P.R. owns all the trackage in front of the pool terminal and elsewhere throughout the harbour. We found that instead of 150 cars a day being brought in, which the elevators were capable of handling, they were lucky if they got 120 cars.

We visited one small terminal that could handle 12 cars a day but the operator was getting only four. We visited a third terminal that could handle 120 cars a day but we found that the operator was not receiving that number of cars from the railroads. He had two tracks in front, each of which would hold 15 cars, but some mornings when he went out he found only four cars spotted on each track.

We visited officials of the harbour board. We thought we should also be polite and courteous to the C.P.R. because every place we went all over the harbour the C.P.R. was criticized. We visited the C.P.R. officials but we were flatly told that Mr. Emerson in Montreal makes all statements. If the minister wants to find out the cause of the holdup in wheat shipments I can tell him it is due to the C.P.R.'s actions in Vancouver.

It is interesting to note that after the minister had blamed the port facilities in Vancouver for not being able to handle the grain there were only 4,223,576 bushels of wheat at the Vancouver terminal as of January 31 last. This covered all grades and the total grain on hand amounted to 11 million bushels even though the port is capable of handling 20 million bushels.

On the day we visited the harbour board there were eight vessels at berth in the harbour. There were two vacant berths because there was no grain available and there were nine vessels waiting to be loaded. I ask the minister if he does not think he has some responsibility to go out there and see what is going on? I do not place all the blame on the Minister of Transport. It should be shared by the Minister of Finance who is responsible for the wheat board.

The Minister of Agriculture went out west and came back with one story. Then there was a meeting with Mr. Emerson following which the Minister of Finance came out with his story.

I understand that last week end the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Agriculture was appointed as parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance and has gone out to see whether he can ascertain what the problem is.

I have some interesting facts with me today regarding the monthly averages of grain loadings at the port of Vancouver. In 1964 the monthly average was something over 17 million bushels and in 1965 it was over 14 million bushels. The largest shipment in 1964 was 22 million bushels whereas the largest shipment in 1965 was only 18 million bushels. The smallest shipment in 1964 was 12 million bushels and the smallest shipment in 1965 was 6 million bushels. One can see from these figures that the harbour authorities can handle more grain than they have been handling but the railway companies are not delivering the grain. I suggest that the C.P.R. is the big offender in this regard.

In respect of the railway grain movement it is interesting to note that before 1965 the C.P.R. delivered a greater number of carloads of grain to the Vancouver harbour area than did the C.N.R; yet in the month of November last, the C.P.R. delivered 1,200 fewer cars than the C.N.R. The C.P.R. states that it has not got sufficient motive power but it is strange that they should run out of power so quickly. It is my opinion that they want to rid themselves of their responsibility for providing the "Dominion" passenger service and are using this as an excuse to come before the cabinet now at the expense of western farmers.

I could cite you many examples today of farm machine agencies which have closed their doors because the farmers cannot pay their bills, and all of these agencies are located along C.P.R. lines. The Canadian Pacific Railway is using a fair percentage of its box cars for hauling potash because they receive $6 per ton more than for hauling wheat. Before I complete my remarks today I want to put facts on the record which will indicate the responsibility of the C.P.R. to those people of Canada whom they seem to have forgotten.

The C.P.R. uses the excuse for its rather poor performance that it has not a sufficient number of cars. That is a rather strange excuse when one considers the number of cars we saw, some empty, some full, sitting on the sidings at Kamloops, North Bend, Ruby Creek, Spence's Bridge, Harrison Mills, Agassiz and Coquitlam.

The C.P.R. is turning over all its assests such as land buildings and so on to the Marathon Realty Company. They have reached the stage when they hope that we will take over the operations of the railroad. The C.P.R. was given the goose that laid the golden egg; they now have the golden egg and they want to give the goose back to the government. Perhaps I may be allowed to mention some of the things we gave the C.P.R. in return for an efficient trans-Canada railroad. I have the document before me and it will only take me a moment to put these considerations on the record.

Mr. Pickersgill: Those things were all given to the C.P.R. when a Tory government was in power.

Mr. Smallwood: That is exactly correct. That Tory government was more liberal than the Liberals. Had it not been for that Tory government we would not have any trans-Canada railroad in this country or any lines to our north or roads to resources. We would have had no expansion in this country had it not been for the actions of the Tory government.

The federal act which approved the contract between the government and the incorporators of the Canadian Pacific Railway provided that, in consideration of the completion and perpetual and efficient operation of the railway by the company, the company was to and in fact did receive a subsidy of $25 million, the conveyance of 25 million acres of land including all the coal, petroleum and other mineral rights therein, the transfer of certain lines of railway in eastern Canada owned by the government, duty free admission of all steel rails used in the building of the railway and perpetual exemption from taxation by Canada or any province thereafter created, of which Alberta was one. This exemption applied to all stations, station grounds, workshops, buildings, yards and other property on the main line of the railway. It also received subsequent conveyances of vast timber areas on Vancouver island. That was a pretty lush deal for the C.P.R.

Because of its rich endowment by the people of Canada the C.P.R. is now one of the biggest, wealthiest and most influential companies in North America, owning and controlling the largest privately owned railway line in the world, air lines, steamship lines, trucking lines, thousands of acres of agricultural and timber lands and petroleum, natural gas and other mineral lands as well as a host of subsidiary companies. That is what Canada gave these people who built this railroad, in spite of that Mr. Emerson said following statements by the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Agriculture. I quote from the Star-Phoenix of January 24, 1966:

The agreement in 1881 between C.P.R. and the federal government, said Mr. Emerson, emphasized that the railway would construct and operate the railway efficiently.

Mr. Emerson is a lawyer and I am just a farmer but he does not fool me by changing the position of the word "efficiently". The original agreement stated that in consideration of the completion and perpetual and efficient operation of the railway by the company the company was to receive the things to which I have made reference. Mr. Emerson has now twisted that around. The company should continue to operate this railroad in an efficient manner and it cannot do so by dropping passenger transportation and failing to haul wheat. The company can derive its profits from its subsidiary operations without creating this serious situation we face in the transportation industry today.

I should like to quote now from an article which appeared in the Western Producer of January 27, 1966 in which Mr. Arnold Platt is reported as having said:

Arnold Platt, representing the Farmers Union of Alberta Co-operatives, told the western agricultural conference here January 21 that nationalization of the Canadian Pacific Railway will eventually take place because the C.P.R. hopes it will.

I am 100 per cent convinced that that is the C.P.R.'s motive. I am a long way from being a socialist, thank heavens, but if that is the game the C.P.R. intends to play in cutting down on service to the Canadian people, then the time has come for the government to take over not only the operations of the railroad but the operations of all its enterprises. If we are going to be given back the goose we also want the golden egg.

I do not think I need to continue my remarks this afternoon, Mr. Chairman. I hope I have given the facts in respect of the slowdown of the whole movement of grain to the port of Vancouver. The facilities there are sufficient to handle a greater amount of grain but the C.P.R. is not moving the grain to that area.

In closing I should like to quote from Hansard of Wednesday, February 9, page 967, where the Minister of Finance said in answer to a question about grain movement:

—the movement of grain at Vancouver has increased very substantially and is now at an average rate of 600 cars a day.

The movement might well have been 600 cars for one day but when we were at Vancouver nine days before on January 31 the average was 450 cars per day. However, if the facilities are sufficient to handle 600 cars per day the railway should move that many. The Minister of Finance is absolutely wrong in blaming the slowdown on port facilities, because he now says the operations are up to normal and I am sure there has been no work done on those facilities since his original statement was made.

It is time the minister looked into the operations of Canadian Pacific Railway regarding the movement of grain from western Canada. He has completely failed us.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether I might be permitted to say a few words on this subject before anyone else speaks in view of the very important topic upon which the hon. gentleman has just been speaking. Perhaps I was clairvoyant but I did guess that the subject of grain movement would arise this afternoon.

An hon. Member: You must have a crystal ball.

Mr. Pickersgill: Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I thought it would be a good idea if I gave the committee an up to date report on this subject. Perhaps I should have done it before the hon. gentleman spoke but I think it would be helpful to the committee if I gave a report, which was prepared for me this morning, with regard to the export grain position at west coast ports as it stood on Saturday, February 12. Then in discussing this matter we will have the most up to date information that is available to the government.

I know that a number of hon. members would be quite interested in this information, and with your permission, sir, I shall read quite slowly.

Since the beginning of the year there has been a marked improvement in the daily average of cars of grain loaded for west coast ports, Vancouver, New Westminster, Victoria and Prince Rupert, and of the number of cars unloaded at those ports, as the following table shows. This table covers cars of grain, daily average: For the week ended January 8, cars loaded for west coast ports, 381; unloaded at west coast ports, 338. That was the week, of course, that was affected by avalanches.

Mr. Smallwood: Is the minister speaking about Vancouver or all the west coast ports?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am speaking of all the west coast ports. For the week ended January 8, as I said, the number of cars loaded on the prairies for the west coast ports was 381 and the number unloaded at west coast ports was 338. In the following week, January 15, 400 were unloaded and 442 unloaded; for the week ended January 22, 474 loaded and 524 unloaded; for the week ended January 29, 425 loaded and 554 unloaded; for the week ended February 5, 466 loaded and 630 unloaded; for the week ended February 12, 599 loaded and 642 unloaded.

I should say that the loaded figure for the week ended February 12 was based on the assumption that the whole week would be the same as the first four days, so that it might not turn out to be exactly 599. However, the unloaded figure of 642 is for the whole week.

Mr. Smallwood: Does that figure of 642 relate to all the west coast ports? It is not just for Vancouver, is it?

Mr. Pickersgill: It is not just for Vancouver but it is mainly Vancouver.

Mr. Smallwood: Vancouver is capable of unloading 600 cars alone if they can get them spotted.

Mr. Pickersgill: As hon. members know, most of these cars go to Vancouver. During this period 95 per cent of all cars loaded—this is exactly the point the hon. gentleman was making—were destined for the Vancouver area, that is to say, Vancouver, New Westminster and Victoria. That would mean about 5 per cent for Prince Rupert.

With regard to the vessel situation, Mr. Riddel, the recently appointed chairman of the Pacific Grain Transportation Committee, made this report on February 9. This has to do with ships.

"The vessel situation is still quite disturbing, with 27 in port in the Vancouver area and 1 at Prince Rupert. Of the 28 vessels, 11 are loading, 12 have passed and are waiting to load, and the remaining 5 are discharging cargo or are fitting. With two exceptions all the vessels are to load full cargoes, the largest one 43,000 tons or approximately 1,600,000 bushels of wheat equivalent. This is a particularly large vessel and is taking a mixed cargo. I expect that it will clear this week along with another 5 of the vessels presently loading. With higher unloads being maintained, I would anticipate more expeditions loading of vessels from now on and I look for an improvement in the vessel situation by the end of next week."

Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, I could add one more sentence that I think is of some importance in view of what the hon. gentleman said. It is quite true that there have been no physical improvements in Vancouver since the hon. gentleman was there, but I do think there has been one improvement made on the initiative of my hon. friend, the Minister of Finance, which has been quite important. I refer to his invitation to Mr. Riddel, who recently retired from the Wheat Board, to go to Vancouver and take over the chairmanship of a co-ordinating committee on which the wheat board, the railways, the port authorities, the terminals and all interested in the movement of wheat in the port of Vancouver are represented. They meet every day to view the situation and clear up any bottlenecks that exist. That was done at the head of the lakes from late August or early September until the close of navigation and it did help to improve the situation there.

I have no doubt that with one person really keeping his eye on this situation and on nothing else there will continue to be this improved movement. At the same time I think we all have to recognize the fact, as I said late on Friday, that neither the railways nor anyone else had foreseen the extent or the magnitude of the traffic that the railways and all other carriers have been required to carry in Canada in the last year and are still being required to carry. You just cannot create box cars overnight if they do not exist. The only immediate way of helping the situation is, of course, by making the most efficient possible use of them. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman that we must do everything we can from that point of view. But I think the railways and everybody else concerned with the movement of traffic in Canada have probably got to think a little bigger than any of us have in the past if we are to keep up with the growth of the country.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Has the minister any figures with regard to the east coast just so we will not lose sight of this part of Canada? Tomorrow will be fine if he has not the figures today.

Mr. Pickersgill: I hope to have them this afternoon so we may conclude these estimates this evening—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: —and give my colleagues a chance to enjoy this atmosphere.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Does the minister realize that during the question period he invited two more hon. members to speak this afternoon on his estimates?

Mr. Starr: Every time the minister makes a speech he brings on four more speakers.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am overcome, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Starr: You overcome yourself.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, the scope of this department and the far reaching effects which its decisions or lack of decision and lack of policy have on every citizen of Canada are so important that I think the minister is dreaming if he really believes that the unsatisfactory answers members of this house have received up till today will permit his estimates to pass today, tomorrow or even on Wednesday. If there is one thing that is obvious it is that this government has no policy with regard to transportation. Here is a department which should be administering the railways, steamships, air services and communication systems of this country in addition to the Atlantic Development Board and organizations such as the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority; yet in every field this government has procrastinated, ignored requests and refused to make decisions which are of vital importance to every part of this country. So great has been their lack of leadership in this regard that the morale of people working on the railways is so low—I think I can speak of this with some knowledge, representing as I do probably as many railway workers as any other member of parliament—that I want to warn the minister that in my opinion, on the basis of what I have been able to ascertain, there will be a strike on the railways of this country this year.

• (4:20 p.m.)

I do not know whether or not negotiations will proceed to the point where a strike will be legal. However, if the Canadian Pacific, which is being allowed to do anything and everything it wants to do by the government and the Board of Transport Commissioners, is permitted to continue in its arrogant way as it did with the "Dominion", if it is permitted to continue making unilateral decisions as it did about the pension fund, if it is permitted to continue to steal from the pension fund, then I want to warn the minister, Mr. Chairman, that there will be a strike this year, the consequences of which none of us can estimate.

Before I deal with the Canadian Pacific I want to spend just a few moments on a subject which has united the people of my city of Winnipeg and of my province of Manitoba as no issue of which I am aware has done for the last 25 years. Here is an issue on which party division no longer exists. Here is an issue on which both newspapers, one a long time 100 per cent supporter of the Liberal Party, the Winnipeg Free Press, and the other, the Winnipeg Tribune, a Conservative newspaper, are completely united.

I refer, of course Mr. Chairman, to the complete failure of this government and this minister to evolve policies with regard to air transport which are acceptable to the people of Manitoba. It is not my intention to debate this subject at length today. I want to tell the minister that when the estimates of his department go before the transport committee and the President of Air Canada comes before that committee, the President should be prepared to spend a long time in Ottawa rather than in his office in Montreal. I know other members are interested in the same subject. It is obvious that the President of Air Canada lied to the people of Winnipeg, lied to the government and the former government about his intention with regard to the air base in Winnipeg. He continued to lie and he continued to ignore the policies laid down by the Prime Minister and the former minister of transport in this government and I presume, although he has not had very much to say publicly, by the present Minister of Transport.

In February, 1949, Mr. Gordon McGregor, President of the then Trans-Canada Air Lines, announced that 155 persons in the operations and administration staff of Trans-Canada Air Lines, which at that time had its head office in Winnipeg, would be transferred to Montreal. He made this statement:

> There is no conceivable reason, nor any grounds for suspicion, that this move marks the beginning of a mass transfer of T.C.A. activities from Winnipeg to Montreal.

Since that date in 1949 not a year has gone by but another department of Air Canada, as it is now known, has been transferred from Winnipeg. I believe the present Minister of Transport knows that any number of representations have been made to the present government and were made to the former government about this matter and more recently about the transfer of the repair base.

Not only did Liberal candidates, not only did Liberal newspapers, promise that this government would take action, but the Prime Minister said on November 22, 1963, in this house:

> For at least as far ahead as planning now extends, that is at least ten years, the Winnipeg facilities will continue to be used.

My colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre asked on that day whether the facilities would not be nibbled away as had been the case during the last few years. The Prime Minister interjected to say:

> It may be increased.

The former minister of transport stated:

> I would hope it would be maintained and probably increased, but I cannot be precise on the matter at the moment.

The government appointed one man, a very competent person from Winnipeg, Mr. Thompson, to make inquiries into what should be done. I do not know why that report is not yet available. However, I want to tell the minister that if it is not available shortly and if the minister does not take some action quickly, the whole matter will be academic because the fact is that Mr. McGregor has continued to ignore the statement of policy made by the Prime Minister from the day it was made. Long service employees of Air Canada, from the day the Prime Minister made that statement of policy, have contined to be transferred from Winnipeg to Montreal. The result is that there are now many more people working at the base in Winnipeg who are temporary employees, in other words, they are new employees, while people with 10 or 15 years of service with Air Canada have been transferred to Montreal.

I want to say that I have never seen such arrogance, such complete repudiation of government policy by a civil servant as has been exhibited by Mr. McGregor. I want to say to the minister that if he does not intend to take any action, and it does not seem to me he has taken any action, Mr. McGregor will have a somewhat difficult time when he comes before the committee.

At the time of the discussion of the decimation of the base in Winnipeg the government promised it would adopt other policies to make Winnipeg a regional air centre. Recently the government of Canada concluded an agreement with the government of the United States with regard to air routes. One would have expected, in the light of the promises made by the Prime Minister and by successive ministers of transport, that consideration would have been given to helping Winnipeg make up the loss of the repair base by increasing the air routes which are used to fly into and out of Winnipeg. The exact opposite is true. The new air routes agreement between Canada and the United States makes no provision for increased flights from Winnipeg to the United States.

The Winnipeg Free Press said in an editorial of January 3, 1966, which I commend to the minister because I am sure he has been a lot friendlier to them than I have been, but I do not know how he will feel after he reads what they are saying about his policies:

> The new air route agreement between Canada and the United States is a bitter disappointment to western Canada and confirms what many people feared would happen during the two-year negotiations: The American carriers have been far more successful in putting spine into their government's negotiators than have their opposite numbers in Canada.

I should like to interject that I do not believe it is possible to put spine into this government or into this minister. One would have hoped that, as an old resident of Manitoba and coming from a have-not province as he does, he would have given some consideration to a have-not province like Manitoba. The consideration, I feel, has been virtually nil. The editorial continues:

> From the west's standpoint the agreement is a total loss. In the whole vast region between Toronto and the Pacific coast not a single Canadian air line will be permitted to offer trans-border services. Even at the west coast the only gain will be a competitive service between Vancouver and San Francisco—presumably to be awarded to Canadian Pacific—and in return for this an American air line is to have a monopoly on the Vancouver-Los Angeles run.
> Failure of the Canadian negotiators to obtain a Winnipeg-Chicago franchise means that the revolutionary criterion suggested by Professor J. K. Galbraith in his report to the two governments two years ago—that convenience of the travelling public be the principal consideration of allocating routes—has been almost completely ignored. Western travellers wishing to go to Chicago will continue to have to double-back from Toronto or else patronize the milk-run, many-stop service offered by an American carrier via Minneapolis.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sure the hon. gentleman does not want to be factually inaccurate and that last sentence, of course, is factually inaccurate. The new air agreement provides for a direct flight to Minneapolis, not for the kind of milk run route that there has been in the past. That was not recognized in the editorial.

Mr. Orlikow: I accept the minister's correction but I was quoting the editorial in the Winnipeg Free Press. In any case, the minister, having lived in Manitoba for a long time, should know there is a vast difference between flying direct from Winnipeg to Chicago and flying from Winnipeg to Chicago with a stop at Minneapolis. It may not be as bad as making three or four stops but it is not a direct flight.

I think I have indicated in these few remarks with regard to air routes and policy sufficient to show how dissatisfied are the people of Manitoba with the state of affairs. I suggest to the minister that, unless this government mends its ways, when the next election takes place the Minister of Veterans Affairs will cease to be the only Liberal member from Manitoba.

Having dealt with air routes I should like the minister to look at a matter which is of tremendous importance to the people of my city and the people of Canada as a whole, namely, the failure of this government to control the completely unmanageable and insatiable appetite for profits of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I wish the Minister of Transport had been able to make that quick trip through western Canada which the Minister of Agriculture was able to make. It is true that the views of the Minister of Agriculture which were expressed in western Canada did not stand up very long when he got into a room with the present Minister of Transport, the Minister of Finance, and their good friend, the President of the C.P.R.

I should just like to put on the record a few of the things which the Minister of Agriculture had to say, ideas which were greeted with a great deal of satisfaction by the people of western Canada regardless of their politics and will not be forgotten. The lack of action to implement the things which the Minister of Agriculture said will not be forgotten either.

I should like to quote from a report by Joyce Fairburn of something the Minister of Agriculture said, as found in the Winnipeg Free Press of January 13, 1966. What the minister said is in direct quotes.

"I have no sympathy with the (C.P.R.) attitude that we can make more dollars by abandoning rail lines and renting box cars to the United States because we are a private corporation and we can do as we like".

Later he said:

"That public duty"—

I presume he is talking about the C.P.R.

—"did not stop in 1867 and it has not stopped now"—

"The C.P.R. should give us certain of its amenities such as oil before calling 'profits first and public rights later'," said Mr. Greene.

What are these obligations, Mr. Chairman, which the C.P.R. undertook? The C.P.R. made an agreement with the government of Canada which was signed on October 21, 1880. They undertook by paragraph 7 of the agreement to do this:

—and the Company shall thereafter and forever efficiently maintain, work and run the Canadian Pacific Railway.

The attitude of the C.P.R., as expressed in its testimony before the Board of Transport Commissioners, is that "efficiently" means efficiently for the C.P.R., that it means profits for the C.P.R. I do not know whether the C.P.R. has ever made a request to the Board of Transport Commissioners which has not been agreed to by the Board of Transport Commissioners. I suggest to the minister that we ought to stop paying the salaries and expenses of the Board of Transport Commissioners. The place for that board is in Windsor Station. Let the C.P.R. pay their salaries because they are acting as office boys for the C.P.R.

When the government of the day made an agreement with the C.P.R. under which the C.P.R. undertook to supply efficient service across Canada they were given certain grants. I should like to put on the record what the C.P.R. were given. The President of the C.P.R. probably has more gall than any person in Canada. Among the speeches he made last year was one to the Canadian Manufacturers' Association in June which was reported in the Ottawa Citizen for June 7, 1965. I should like to read a couple of paragraphs from their report:

R. A. Emerson, president of the Canadian Pacific Railway, told the 1,600 delegates of the CMA that governments—federal and provincial—have overstepped their primary purpose of providing public services.

If there ever was an organization that would not provide public service, it is the C.P.R. The article continues later in this way:

Mr. Emerson said that the primary role of government in the economic life of the nation was to provide only those services which were not suited to private enterprise, such as the handling of mail, provision for roads and streets, and public education.

Well, Mr. Chairman, no company could do less to meet the needs it is supposed to meet than the C.P.R. It is interesting to note that the C.P.R. has consistently refused to tell the public of Canada about its business. As so often happens, one has to go to the United States for information. The C.P.R., in order to meet the requirements of United States law, Canadian law being so deficient in this respect, filed information about its operations with the securities and exchange commission of the United States. In addition to other information they supplied the following which I think should be of interest to the minister and members of the house. C.P.R. President R. A. Emerson, along with the chairman of the board, Mr. N. R. Crump, and the vice president, Mr. Ian Sinclair, earned by way of salary in 1964 an aggregate of $253,592 from the C.P.R. There is no poverty for the heads of the C.P.R.; they are looking after themselves very well.

What did the government of Canada give to the promoters of the C.P.R. in order to get this efficient service which the C.P.R. was to provide by way of transportation? As of December 31, 1963 the C.P.R. had been granted a total of $106 million and 44 million acres of land by federal, provincial and municipal governments. This can be broken down as follows: Monetary aid—federal cash subsidies, $53,320,028; expenditures by the federal government on lines turned over to the C.P.R., $35,117,152. This makes a total of $88,437,180. The C.P.R. also received in provincial aid $12,582,000 and in municipal aid $5,261,000, for a grand total of $106 million.

In land grants they received from the federal government almost 33 million acres and from the provincial governments 11,122,000 acres, for a total of over 44 million acres of land. Mr. Chairman, the government land grants have been and continue to be a source of tremendous capital gains to the C.P.R. The true worth of these lands is not reflected in the company balance sheet. The balance sheet of the company lists an item of unsold lands and properties at a value of $9 million. That this is ridiculously low may be seen from the fact that in 1963 and 1964 the company realized $26.3 million and $64.2 million respectively from sales of land. A conservative appraisal of the value of land grants to the C.P.R. is $440 million in total.

These figures have been taken from the Canadian Pacific's annual reports and can be expanded at a later date. The point I wish to make is that this country has been extremely good to the Canadian Pacific, but what we have had in return is a complete failure on the part of the present directors to give any consideration to the needs of the people of the country. That this has become the feeling of the people of Canada may be seen if one looks at a resolution passed on January 25, 1966, by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, which is not known as being a particular radical organization. The resolution is headed: Nationalization Of Canadian Pacific Railway. It reads:

> Resolved that we recommend that the Canadian Pacific Railway lines and necessary operating equipment be nationalized; assets to be taken over by the Dominion of Canada, at actual value less a reasonable amount for all land grants, mineral rights, and other concessions received by the Canadian Pacific Railway from the Dominion of Canada.

It is obvious why this resolution has been passed. The Canadian Pacific obviously has decided that it does not need to try to meet the needs of the people of Canada. Furthermore, it is obvious that the Board of Transport Commissioners will do nothing to make them live up to their obligations. May I point out that I have read the decision of the Board of Transport Commissioners regarding the "Dominion". Representations were made to the board on this matter by representatives of the Canadian Pacific's workers. Representations were made by the four western provinces. These representations were ignored completely by the Board of Transport Commissioners. The only thing which concerned the Board of Transport Commissioners was the fact that this one operation was losing money. It seems to me that if this is all that counts we are saying in effect that this company can do no wrong. When they lose money we will let them discontinue the run or we will give them a subsidy. When they make money it does not concern us. Therefore, heads they win; tails we lose.

Not only was the Board of Transport Commissioners not satisfied with making that disgraceful decision but they added insult to injury the other day when they issued another decision saying that the Canadian Pacific did not have to put the "Dominion" back into operation next summer. The fact that the railways are extremely busy in the summer with the tourist trade and the fact that this country is engaged in a continuing drive to attract United States tourists to come here and that those tourists may come by railway is of not consequence to the Canadian Pacific. It obviously is of even less consequence to the Board of Transport Commissioners. It would seem to me to be a good idea for the government to consider wiping out the Board of Transport Commissioners as now constituted and setting up in its place a real transportation board with personnel and staff who desire to do the job which the present board, and this government today have not even considered.

I want to talk about one other matter, Mr. Chairman, which is of tremendous importance to the people who work for the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. I refer to the unilateral decision of the C.P.R. to change the basic structure of its pension plan. I submit that the whole concept—

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to interrupt the hon. gentleman and I have not shown any inclination to take any narrow exception to anything he has said. However, it does appear to me that this question of pensions in respect of the Canadian Pacific is something which even by the widest stretch of administrative imagination would fall outside my responsibilities. If the hon. gentleman wishes to speak on this subject he should do so when the estimates of the minister responsible for this matter are before the committee.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I have only a few minutes left. It really does not matter whether I speak on this matter on the estimates of the Minister of Transport or on some other minister's estimates. I wish to warn the minister and the government, however, that there is great dissatisfaction with the arrogant, unilateral decision made by the Canadian Pacific and I want to reiterate what I said at the beginning, that unless this issue is resolved and resolved in the near future there will be a stoppage, legal or illegal, of the services of the Canadian Pacific. I think that this matter is of such importance that it should be raised now. I and other members of parliament have enough information, I think, that if the minister does not know the situation we can give him the facts so that he and his colleagues can go to work on it. It does not matter to me, Mr. Chairman, because I can wait. The minister and the government will have to take the responsibility when the stoppage which I predict will take place does take place. It will be because this company has made unilateral decisions and has ignored and flouted the desires of its employees in such a way that no self-respecting employee in a democratic society can possibly accept them.

I will bow to the suggestion of the Minister of Transport and go on to something which I think should be discussed. I spoke a few days ago—

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted for his speech has expired.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I should like to take, as is my right under the rules, exception to one statement and one statement only that I understood the hon. gentleman to make. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that Mr. McGregor had lied to me. I do not believe that Mr. McGregor has lied to me. I have not the slightest vestige of evidence for this statement and I do not think it would be fair to Mr. McGregor to leave it on the record.

Mr. Orlikow: I do not want to continue the debate, Mr. Chairman. If the minister makes the statement that Mr. McGregor has not lied to him, then of course I will accept that. I said that Mr. McGregor lied to former ministers of transport. If he is not lying to this minister I am quite happy, but I retract nothing—

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I regret to interrupt but the time allotted to the hon. member has expired.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. Scott: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, it is my understanding that after a member ceases to speak in committee and another member intervenes in the debate the member who has been interrupted may continue. If he wishes he can go on for another 30 minutes.

Mr. Pickersgill: He has to be recognized.

Mr. Nasserden: I think the hon. member should not refer to somebody else as lying or as a liar and repeat it two or three times before the committee when the person involved is in no position to protect himself, not being a member of the house.

Mr. Byrne: That is typical of the N.D.P.

The Deputy Chairman: I did not recognize the hon. member and the time allotted for his speech has elapsed. I recognize the hon. member for Coast-Capilano.

Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words about the development of the port of Vancouver. I should like to urge the government and the harbours board to press on with their imaginative plans for the development of this port. Meanwhile I would ask the minister and hon. members to ignore some of the criticisms which have been directed against the manner in which the port of Vancouver is operated. I am referring in particular to comments made by certain provincial cabinet ministers in British Columbia.

At the outset I would emphasize the importance of the port of Vancouver. If it is not yet it will soon be the busiest, most productive and most efficient port in this country. As some hon. members have said, it is the busiest port on the west coast of North America. It is busier than Los Angeles, Long Beach, San Francisco and Seattle combined. It is moving more than 20 million tons of cargo this year. The largest port in the world, the port of London, is moving cargos of the order of 60 million tons. In other words, Vancouver already looms large on the world scale. Vancouver is gaining on Montreal. By 1967 or 1968 Vancouver will probably become Canada's busiest and most important port. I have drawn this quick comparison with Montreal because I wish to make certain other comparisons using figures I have extracted from reports of the National Harbours Board. First of all, speaking as a British Columbian I want to say that we in the west do not want to miss out on anything. We are out on the end of a long limb, and we do at times feel we are left out of things—that we should speak out more often and more effectively, particularly in parliament and other places in eastern Canada, in order to get our fair share of federal assistance with respect to national development and expenditure by the harbours board. People out west, in other words, think of the port of Vancouver as being a sort of cinderella. Her governess has other daughters in eastern Canada of greater age. Though less attractive they have been able, year after year, to get more attention than Vancouver, the cinderella among our ports.

Here are a few figures to emphasize the point I am making. The capital assets of the port of Montreal are now of the order of $188 million. This figure is taken from the last published report of the National Harbours Board. The capital assets of Vancouver amount to about $58 million. In other words, there has been three times as much invested over the years in Montreal as in Vancouver although, as I have mentioned, the tonnage moved by the two ports is now comparable. From 1956 to 1964 investment in Montreal has been about six times as great as investment in Vancouver. I am speaking, of course, of investment by the National Harbours Board. In other words, despite the comparability of the tonnage moved there has been a much heavier investment by the nation in the port of Montreal and an increasingly heavy bias toward Montreal a bias which I believe is about to be corrected and will be further corrected in the years ahead.

I have looked over the estimates for the current fiscal year. I have glanced too at the estimates tabled today for the year ending March 31, 1967. As I looked over the details on page 517 under the heading "Department of Transport—National Harbours Board" I saw many ports listed as receiving capital assistance toward construction, acquisition of buildings, equipment and so on. I saw reference to such ports as Halifax, Saint John, Quebec and Churchill. These are all ports which will receive investment capital during the coming fiscal year in sums totalling more than $5 million. This money will come out of the general revenue of Canada.

I noticed specifically reference to the area of Montreal. The estimates for 1966-67 also include $544,000 for Expo '67. This year I believe this figure is in the order of $4.8 million. Another item is the Jacques Cartier bridge deficit, $328,000, also paid through the National Harbours Board. These are all items which involve the expenditure of taxpayers' money. They involve taxes which have to be collected currently in order to meet losses in these harbours of eastern Canada.

What were these losses? At Saint John the total was $1.1 millions, at Halifax, $442,000, at Quebec, $700,000, at Montreal, $1 million, at Churchill, $336,000. These figures are for 1964 as reported by the National Harbours Board. But the port of Vancouver, as is typical, made a profit, last year amounting to about $1,500,000. So we have in Vancouver a harbour which handles a volume of shipping comparable with Montreal. It does this on the basis of a federal investment one third of that invested in Montreal. It is a harbour which earns a profit whereas the port of Montreal loses money.

I would suggest that the funds amounting to nearly $20 million which have been accumulated to the credit of the port of Vancouver and put away in Canada Savings Bonds should be invested in new facilities around Vancouver at an increasing tempo. I know that the harbours board in Vancouver has a program providing for the investment of $5 million this year. But I suggest this tempo should be doubled and that an investment in the order of $10 million a year be made for the next five or six years in order to reinforce success.

Vancouver is an efficient harbour. There is no need there for continuous dredging. It does not have a pollution problem like that which the port of Montreal faces. It is thoroughly profitable and it is well run. I should like to underline this fact. The credit balance which has been developing over the years speaks well for the management in Vancouver. Personally I have only the highest praise for the chairman of the board. Mr. Howard Mann is, I think, a perceptive man; he looks a long way ahead. I should also like to congratulate the local port manager, Captain Barney Johnson, who runs a very tight ship. But we still need more imagination, a bolder approach, a more outward-going attitude. I have no doubt that the funds which have been accumulated by Vancouver could earn far more than 4 or 5 per cent. I am confident there are investments to be made in Vancouver itself which will earn 10, 15 or even 20 per cent. Evidence of this can readily be found in the activities of private enterprise in the area.

The harbours board occupies about one third of the waterfront. The remaining two thirds are occupied partly by Indian lands and partly by private corporations. Those corporations have recently been building bulk terminals. Two have already been completed. Both are being expanded and a third very large one will soon be announced for construction on the north shore in my riding. There is also another new grain elevator there. Developments are forging ahead in terms of tens of millions of dollars in investment, and these firms are raising money in competition with other parts of Canada, money on which returns of 10 per cent, 15 per cent or 20 per cent are envisaged.

I suggest that the National Harbours Board would do well to match private enterprise development in that area rather than nurse Vancouver along as has been done with some eastern ports. We should do our best through the National Harbours Board to make a complete success of a port which serves all of western Canada, which serves at least a quarter of the people of this country and which serves many industries based on our national resources, be they forest, mineral, agricultural or otherwise.

I should like now to say something briefly about the rates levied in the various harbours across Canada. It has been charged by the minister of industry and commerce of the province of British Columbia specifically that the port rates in Vancouver are three times those in Montreal. This is nonsense. He or certainly his staff, by going carefully through the annual reports of the National Harbours Board, could have found out to the contrary. The facts are essentially that the rates are comparable.

I have made a rough attempt to arrive at figures by summarizing the various charges which have to do with wharfage, docking and dry cargo handling charges, and I came to the conclusion that the average income of the National Harbours Board per ton in Vancouver is of the order of 23 cents and in the port of Montreal is of the order of 26 cents. So in an over-all and very general way the cost is somewhat lower in the port of Vancouver. In other words, the rates are somewhat less there.

I asked for an example of the berthing charges and the National Harbours Board has given me an example indicating again that the berthing charges are less in Vancouver. They tell me that a modern vessel, 550 feet long and of 13,950 net registered tons, in berth from 8 a.m. on Monday morning until 4 p.m. on Friday, would pay $726.70 in Vancouver and in Montreal it would pay $1,778.63 or more than twice as much.

Again I should like to stress that there is a good reason why costs and charges in Vancouver should be less. We have a large harbour provided by nature for the convenience of man. We do not have to spend a lot of money to create such a harbour. In Montreal they are fighting against nature. They are fighting a river. They are fighting low temperatures in wintertime and at the moment at least, they are also fighting municipalities which have not made adequate arrangements to look after their own pollution problem.

I should like to compare very briefly the charges on the United States west coast with those in Vancouver. Generally speaking they are 15 to 25 per cent higher. In other words, the port of Vancouver levies rates similar to those charged in Montreal and lower rates than those charged on the west coast of the United States. Therefore I do not think we need bow our heads or apologize in any way for the manner in which charges are levied in Vancouver harbour.

I should now like to say a word about forward planning. I have mentioned that the National Harbours Board in Vancouver occupies about a third of the waterfront, that private enterprise occupies a large area, and that increasingly Indian lands are being leased to private corporations for bulk loading plants, new grain elevators and the like. Up to about three years ago the port authority in Vancouver by and large went its own way, and while it endeavoured to answer inquiries from the neighbouring municipalities around the Vancouver area it did this on an ad hoc basis. Its relations with the railways and the various other companies were also on a piecemeal basis.

Then it was decided that we should have more information on the long-term plans, not just of the harbours board, but of the other operators around the harbour, including the much maligned C.P.R., the C.N.R. and so on. After a number of meetings we managed to set up—this was done under the former minister of transport, now Minister of Public Works—the port of Vancouver development committee.

I will briefly run over its terms of reference:

1. To ensure the preparation and periodic revision of short and long-range development plans for the port of Vancouver, with estimate of capital requirements and economic feasibility.

2. To ensure that such plans, when endorsed by it, shall be brought to the attention of the public and that appropriate action be taken by the various interests concerned.

3. To ascertain and advise on priorities for specific projects within the context of such development plans.

4. To provide a continuing means of liaison between the various economic interests of the port area and the port administration, with respect to both short and long range plans.

The membership of that committee includes the shipping interests, such as the Vancouver Chamber of Shipping, the Vancouver Merchants' Exchange, the railway companies, the trucking companies, the B.C. Wharf Operators' Association, the B.C. Terminal Elevator Operators' Association, the Vancouver Board of Trade, the North Vancouver Chamber of Commerce, the city of Vancouver, the city of North Vancouver, the city of Port Moody, the district of north Vancouver, the district of West Vancouver, the corporation and district of Burnaby and the National Harbours Board. There is also a labour delegate and the National Harbours Board has one representative on the committee of 16.

This port development committee has a budget. The budget is provided under one of the votes of the National Harbours Board. An executive secretary has been appointed together with a small staff, and a number of studies have been commissioned with consulting and other firms. The several studies now under way include a hydraulic model of the harbour to see what dredging, breakwater installations, dock installations and, even causeways might do to the harbour. Another project is a land inventory all around the harbour which will provide a comprehensive review of existing developments, developments under way and others that may be undertaken. A third project is the preparation of a long-term forecast of the traffic volume covering the nature of traffic and how it might ideally be served in terms of new facilities. The committee is also advising, although it does not have the last word, both the minister and the National Harbours Board with respect to the purchase of land for port development projects.

The port development committee is performing a very important function in that it is bringing the most knowledgeable people in the port area together and giving them a forum in which they can table their plans for the future. It gives those on the committee an opportunity to discuss individual plans, and the committee can publish reports on these plans. This it has an opportunity to do on an annual basis. It gives members of the public frequent opportunities to express their reactions to plans and revise their plans so that they are looking ahead in concert with one another.

I should now like to make a protest in this connection. The C.N.R., of course, does a great deal of business in and through the port of Vancouver. About a year ago, out of the blue so to speak, the C.N.R. chose to announce the construction of a tunnel and bridge leading across to the north shore from Vancouver. As a representative of the north shore in parliament I am all for this tunnel and bridge concept. It is long overdue. But certainly a plan of this type should have been brought before and discussed with the port of Vancouver development committee before it was announced in all its detail to the press and public at large.

I think the C.N.R. would do well to co-operate effectively in every way with a consultative agency of the federal government like this port committee, a committee which I am convinced will assist in efficient long-term planning, one which will permit the public and certainly members of parliament like myself and others to understand what developments are under way in the port of Vancouver and what corrective action can be taken in the event of difficulties.

The C.N.R. is in process of building a tunnel costing about $12 million and a bridge costing about $9 million which will reach across to North Vancouver. This will for the first time give the C.N.R. access to the port of Vancouver in its own right without having to go over the rails of the C.P.R. The C.N.R. will have secure operations on the north shore in Vancouver. The C.P.R., as many members know, dominates the south shore. Some individuals have been critical of the fact that the C.P.R. appears to be a vested interest, very difficult to move at times, dominating the south shore. The C.N.R. has a great opportunity to serve the north shore giving proper access to adequate depths of water and so on. The length of the coastline, I can assure you, is just as good in this respect. Soon we will have our two national railways reaching tidewater in the port of Vancouver with their own rail access directly to ocean shipping. These operations will be fully effective within two or three years' time.

I would not refer to highway bridges except for the fact that the federal government, in so far as the port of Vancouver is concerned, has not paid one red cent for highway bridges across Vancouver harbour. There has been some argument about the Second Narrows bridge, but the First Narrows bridge was built by private enterprise and taken over by the government of British Columbia some years ago. The government of British Columbia began to build the Second Narrows bridge in 1957 as a toll bridge. Toll bridges are precluded from being part of the trans-Canada highway by definition. The province of British Columbia, with full knowledge of the consequences of its action decided to build this six lane bridge as a toll bridge and make it self-liquidating. That was the businesslike thing to do in the eyes of that government and it did it. This prevented the federal government forever, unless the Trans-Canada Highway Act is changed, from participating in the financing of that bridge even though it is an integral, physical part of the trans-Canada highway.

I mention this fact because in looking at the reports of the National Harbours Board—I am looking more specifically at the latest one for the year 1964—after the usual accounting of assets and liabilities I find a statement in respect of the profit and loss of the Montreal harbour operation. This shows the annual loss as $1 million. I find that the following page deals with the Jacques Cartier bridge at Montreal. It was operated at one time as a toll bridge but the previous government removed the tolls just prior to the 1962 election. These tolls were removed when that bridge was still a long way from being paid for, so the Canadian taxpayers must foot the bill for that bridge with a book value of $24 million and a net loss for 1964 of $683,-239.

The next page deals with the Champlain bridge which has an asset book value of $37 million and had a net loss of $1,713,471 for the year 1964. So wrapped up in the Montreal situation so far as the federal taxpayer is concerned is not only the loss of $1 million on the harbour itself but a loss in respect of bridges totalling close to $2,500,000 per year.

We need another crossing over the harbour of Vancouver. One of these days we are going to have to come to the federal authority, if only because the National Harbours Board has a veto in respect of where such a bridge can be located. It must be located in such a way that it will not hamper ships moving in and out of the harbour. It must also be located so that waterfront development is optimum from the point of view of having the right facilities in the right places. I hope and trust that the federal government will participate in the financing of such a crossing and I hope and trust that we will be able to arrange, with the original impetus coming from the province of British Columbia, for a freeway development through the downtown area of the city of Vancouver, with federal assistance for an urban renewal program and so on. With assistance from the National Harbours Board in respect of a freeway development we will begin to solve our other surface transportation problems as well.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a word about a passenger terminal and by that I mean a terminal for ocean-going passengers. Vancouver has been used for decades by large passenger ships. Ships currently on world tours still come into the port of Vancouver. They come there to woefully inadequate facilities, ancient facilities, second rate facilities which certainly do not show Vancouver to its full advantage. These facilities are owned by the C.P.R. which loses money in their operation. It could use the same dock space for handling dry cargo and realize another $100,000 per year but it is not economical for the C.P.R. to do so when there is, at least for the current 12 month period, a continuing arrangement with the operators of the ocean liners to the effect that the C.P.R. will permit them to embark and disembark passengers at this point.

I understand that the Canadian Pacific Railway has a very large multimillion dollar real estate development in mind for the downtown area of the port of Vancouver involving downtown Vancouver right along the oldest section of the waterfront for a distance of up to a mile. This involves not just millions but perhaps hundreds of millions of dollars and will include passenger dock complex with stores and a trade centre to display the wares of western Canada thus giving passengers an impression of western Canada as it really is and not as it was 50 or 75 years ago. I understand that the National Harbours Board has been holding discussions with some of the executives of the C.P.R. in this connection, and I trust that this passenger terminal will be an integral part of the port, including a freeway along or close by the waterfront, and that working with the new port of Vancouver development committee the C.P.R. and the National Harbours Board, like the local boards of trade and other interests, will settle on a plan which will be to their mutual advantage and which will shortly begin to take form on the waterfront of Vancouver.

Finally, Mr. Minister, I have seen a reference in the press to the effect that you may be coming to Vancouver. We will welcome you there and we would like to take you around the port of Vancouver. We would like it even better if you could bring some of your colleagues. It would be very pleasant to have the cabinet come to Vancouver to hold one of its meetings there. If the cabinet considered nothing else than giving the port of Vancouver parity of treatment with the port of Montreal I think this would be in the interests of the people of Vancouver, the province of British Columbia, all of western Canada and, I suggest, the country as a whole, because in Vancouver we have what is going to be Canada's biggest port, what is, already, our most efficient port. I trust that in the forward planning of the National Harbours Board this vision will be kept in mind.

[Mr. Davis.]

Mr. Pascoe: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few comments in this general discussion of the railway transportation system in Canada. I intended to refer in some detail to the box car situation and the movement of grain in the west, but this subject has been specifically covered by a number of members and particularly this afternoon by the hon. member for Battle River-Camrose. All I shall say on this subject at this time is that I endorse what those hon. members have said.

We were all very interested this afternoon to hear the minister outline what he referred to as an improvement in the movement of grain during the last few weeks. In this regard I should like to ask why the government waited so long to take action of this kind. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle, a former minister of agriculture, advocated the establishment of a committee some months ago. I was in the house when he made such a suggestion but evidently his suggestion has only recently been acted upon. In this regard perhaps I should paraphrase what the Department of Labour has been suggesting: Why wait for spring? That is apparently what has happened in this regard because this problem has continued during the winter months.

I should now like to make a comment or two about the curtailed railway passenger service on the prairies. A few days ago the minister said in the house that the decision of the Board of Transport Commissioners to allow the cancellation of the C.P.R. transcontinental "Dominion" to carry on into the summer would not help him pass his estimates, and he now knows that it has not. However, Mr. Chairman, I think the fact that he has agreed to refer the whole question of railway passenger service to the standing committee on transport and communications will probably shorten this debate, because we intend to make more speeches at that time and go into the details of this subject a little more fully.

I should like to put the minister's statement on record. As reported in Hansard of February 4 the minister said:

—we might arrange to have the Canadian Pacific Railway appear before the Standing Committee on Transportation . . . to explain what they are doing and proposing to do in connection with their passenger service—

That was just a general statement. Then on February 8, as appears in Hansard—I put this on record because it is a definite commitment and we are sure the minister will live up to it—the minister moved:

That the subject matter of the adequacy of the present program and future plans for passenger service on the lines of the Canadian Pacific Railway to meet the effective demand of the public for such service, and the effects of such program and plans, be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications for their consideration and report.

I am very pleased this is going to happen because I represent an area that is on the main line of the C.P.R., namely, the city of Moose Jaw and a large part of the city of Regina. These two cities are very much concerned about the curtailment of railway passenger service and the effect it will have upon the economies of their communities.

In order to impress upon the minister the great concern in western Canada over the fast developing curtailment of railway passenger service I should like to quote one brief statement in a notice by the Civil Service Commission of Canada. I received this notice a few days ago. It is in regard to vacancies in the position of district inspector on railway car equipment. I was impressed by this first statement:

The operating branch of the Board of Transport Commissioners of Canada is concerned primarily with matters relating to adequacy of rail services to the public—

We intend to impress upon the government that we expect them to follow this policy in determining what is needed in regard to passenger services. I should like to repeat what was said by the Civil Service Commission of Canada, that the Board of Transport Commissioners is concerned primarily with the public interest in regard to railway passenger services.

In connection with railway policy, Mr. Chairman, I wish to refer to another statement attributed to the Minister of Transport. He is reported to have said that economic and social factors involved in railway problems should overrule the railways balance sheet. The minister said that in his view that public interest should be put first. These statements put both the Board of Transport Commissioners and the minister on record as supporting a railway policy primarily concerned with public needs.

As I say, Mr. Chairman, I represent two important cities that are situated on the main line of the C.P.R. These are only two of eight cities between Calgary and Winnipeg. On January 25 the mayors and aldermen of these eight cities met in Moose Jaw and had a very long discussion. I have here the minutes of their meeting and they fill 12 pages. I shall not inflict them upon this committee or the minister but I should like to give a short summary in this respect. I have read all of the minutes. The delegates were from Winnipeg, Portage la Prairie, Brandon, Regina, Moose Jaw, Swift Current, Medicine Hat and Calgary. They all expressed concern at the curtailment of railway passenger service in western Canada. As I say, Mr. Chairman, I am just summarizing the minutes of the meeting.

It was agreed that positive action had to be taken through a meeting with the federal government to emphasize that service to the public should be the main consideration in any railway operation. It was stated that railways were a prime factor in tying western and eastern Canada together. The delegates all agreed that there was need for greater passenger service rather than less. They said it was apparent that the C.P.R. had cut service to the point where no one used the "Dominion" and then had been able to go to the Board of Transport Commissioners and claim that the "Dominion" operation was losing money. To counter this move the delegates agreed that it was necessary to insist that the C.P.R. had undertaken an obligation to the Canadian people when it was given large cash and land grants, on the understanding that it was to efficiently maintain, work and run the railway in perpetuity. The delegates said that the railway should be held to these obligations and responsibilities.

One city official said that the time to fight it out with the C.P.R. was long past and the cities must now take their fight to the federal government. Referring to the Railway Act it was pointed out that the federal government had the power to vary or rescind regulations of the Board of Transport Commissioners. At the end of the Moose Jaw meeting a motion was passed calling for a personal presentation of the whole railway passenger problem to the Prime Minister and his cabinet in Ottawa at as early a date as possible. The motion which was passed unanimously, stated that it was apparent that the Board of Transport Commissioners had not weighed the economic and social impact on communities affected by rail passenger service abandonment and had not realistically or objectively assessed the case argued by the communities against such abandonment.

I do not believe a definite date has yet been set for the meeting with the Prime Minister and the cabinet and I should like to suggest to the minister that arrangements be made to hold this meeting at the same time as the inquiry is started by the standing committee of the house.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, perhaps the hon. gentleman would allow me to interrupt and say I am very grateful to him for saying that because I made exactly the same suggestion to the Prime Minister. I said that I thought the mayors would like to appear before the committee as well as before some of the ministers and that to save them two trips, especially when there are not too many trains to travel on, it would be desirable to hold both at the same time.

Mr. Pascoe: I thank the minister for his statement. We are interested in the Prime Minister's reply. Did he indicate that he would take such action?

Mr. Pickersgill: The Prime Minister indicated that he is quite prepared to see them and has left the date in abeyance at the moment pending arrangements for the setting up of the committee.

• (5:30 p.m.)

Mr. Pascoe: Then, Mr. Chairman, I do not have to impress this upon the minister in view of the fact that he has already suggested it to the Prime Minister. These two meetings should be held at the same time, namely, the meeting with the cabinet and their appearance before the committee. I should like to impress upon the minister the importance of having the meeting of the standing committee as soon as possible so that we can deal with rail passenger service. If adequate transportation facilities are to be provided for summer tourist travel, the question of Canadian Pacific service must be decided within the next few weeks. If the service of the "Dominion" has not been restored this summer, and it appears it is not going to be after the ruling of the Board of Transport Commissioners, at least there should be some form of dayliner operation to accommodate Calgary to Winnipeg passengers because a considerable number travel between these two points.

I have a transcript of the proceedings before the board on the hearing of the application for discontinuance of the "Dominion". It is a very long document and I certainly will not try to go through it. There are many questions that could be raised about this testimony. It is for this reason I consider it important to have the western city officials at the inquiry to hear the questions and the answers. There will be questions concerning the apparent lack of effort by the Canadian Pacific to encourage passenger traffic. We want to hear the company's answer to the charge that the company has discouraged train travel by inadequate accommodation and equipment. We want to compare the Canadian Pacific passenger policy with that of the Canadian National. It would appear that the operations of the "Dominion" over the last two years compare unfavourably with the Canadian National.

The facts in this regard were brought out in an article in a recent edition of Week End Magazine. The article is entitled, "The Great Passenger Experiment". It makes interesting reading, and I should like to quote one short paragraph to emphasize the point I am making concerning the lack of encouragement given to passenger traffic by the Canadian Pacific:

> Under the sceptical but watchful eye of its privately-owned competitor, the Canadian Pacific, the publicly-owned Canadian National is going all out to make the passenger business pay. And to do so it has chosen to apply a classic principle of private enterprise: That the way to drum up business is to improve your product and lower your price.
> The C.N. has modernized and speeded up its passenger trains—and it has cut fares. The result: More people rode C.N. trains last year than in any year since world war II. And passenger revenue, after falling ever since the war, is starting to rise again.

As I say, I just read this so that the committee can compare the record of the Canadian Pacific with regard to encouraging passenger traffic with that of the Canadian National. It would appear that Canadian Pacific deliberately curtailed service on the "Dominion" to the point, and I am speaking from experience, where it became unpleasant to travel on it. Prior to 1960 the "Dominion" operated as a conventional, transcontinental passenger train with coaches, diners, sleepers and head-end traffic. When it operated in this fashion the "Dominion" was very well patronized. The "Dominion" service was probably well maintained up until June, 1965. In the last few months before its discontinuance the "Dominion" had only two coaches and a buffer car for the greater part of the time. Under these circumstances, the railway company should not be able to base its argument on a business loss sustained in the last year or so as the result of curtailed service.

In the judgment to allow the discontinuance of the "Dominion" the Chief Commissioner, Mr. Kerr, said that in his view Section 315 of the Railway Act imposes an obligation on the railway company to furnish adequate and substantial accommodation for the benefit of the public. The Assistant Chief Commissioner, Mr. H. H. Griffin, makes this statement in his judgment allowing the discontinuance:

—in formulating my opinion I have not weighed the economic or social impact on the communities.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that this statement is not in line with the statement I read earlier from the Civil Service Commission advertisement. I will read that statement again for emphasis:

The operating branch of the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada is concerned primarily with matters relating to adequacy of rail services to the public—

This is all I need to say at this time about passenger service. I should like to refer to one other small item, namely, the slowness of mail service especially with relation to the delivery of daily newspapers from western Canada. I have asked questions in the house in this regard and I have put a question on the Order Paper but have not received an answer yet. I refer, for example, to the Moose Jaw Times-Herald which used to arrive the second day after publication. Last week Monday's edition, in which I was particularly interested, arrived the following Monday, or one week later. I wrote to the publisher of the Times-Herald and I should like to put a brief extract from his letter of reply on the record. He wrote:

In discussing the situation with the local postmaster, I was able to determine that now that the "Dominion" is out of service, truck transit is the only available means of transit.

The papers were, of course, delivered daily to the post office and do leave here on a daily basis. I understand from my discussion with the postmaster that there is a need for transfer at such places as Winnipeg, Fort William and Sudbury going east and Medicine Hat and Calgary going west.

He felt the reason for your receipt of several newspapers on the same day would be a hold-up during transit or even at Ottawa.

I just mention that, Mr. Chairman. I have a question on the order paper and I hope to have an answer. I should like to impress upon the minister the fact that there are many side effects of the cancellation of the "Dominion" and the curtailment of passenger service. I give him fair warning that more of them will be brought out at the committee hearing.

[Translation]

Mr. Blouin: Mr. Chairman, I would not want to unduly delay consideration of certain items of the estimates of the Department of Transport, for, if I am not mistaken, we are now discussing sums of money which are already, or will be spent before March 31. Therefore I shall be very brief, and I would simply draw the minister's attention to certain points in connection with the estimates of his department.

There has been much reference to ferry systems across the country to ferry services and port facilities. At this point, Mr. Chairman, I should like to quote a few remarks in this connection from the Auditor General's report for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1965. With reference to port facilities, as reported on page 77 of his report, and more particularly in paragraph 122, the Auditor General says:

Continuing federal assistance to intra-provincial ferry services. In our 1963 Report attention was drawn to the continuing federal subsidization of ferry landing facilities for provincial governments despite the general policy of the Department of Public Works and the Treasury Board over many years to regard such facilities at either end of a ferry service linking an intra-provincial highway as the exclusive responsibility of the province concerned.

Further on, he continued:

Construction of the Matane terminal and dredging at Godbout were undertaken at that time on the understanding that the ferry operator would construct the Godbout terminal and acquire and operate the ferry without further federal assistance. Notwithstanding this, executive authority was granted in 1963 for entry into a three-year subsidy agreement.

And he added:

This acquisition has now brought to six the number of locations where the federal government has provided terminals at both ends of cross-river ferry services in the lower St. Lawrence river. The total expenditure over the years for these terminals, which in some cases form part of shipping wharves, had exceeded $7 million at March 31, 1965.

Mr. Chairman, considering these figures and reading this report, I need not tell you that I do not agree with the Auditor General when he states that these ferry services should be the exclusive responsibility of the provinces.

I know that, in our case, the ferry service between the north shore and the south shore of the St. Lawrence river has been very useful to the people on both shores, and I feel that it should be considered an interprovincial service, because it is also used by people from the Maritimes, not only the passenger service, but also the freight service to ship various products, in particular potatoes from Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick as well as dairy products. I should add that this service offers to over half a million people, a means of transportation between the Maritime provinces, the south shore and the north shore.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to add, in passing, that developments on the north shore have been mentioned and that the Auditor General feels that such expenditures are not justified. On the other hand, I would like to call the attention of the house to the publication entitled "The Region with a Future" which contains statistics and says on page 88:

[English]

The federal government ought to benefit greatly from the industrial and mining developments on the north shore. On the basis of some $50 million of taxable income the government should obtain about $25 million yearly. Such a revenue would go a long way to compensate the government for whatever expenditure it will have made in the construction of wharves, terminals, icebreakers and for the subsidies it might have granted to ferry services and steamship companies.

[Translation]

I believe this is very significant, Mr. Chairman. And as I see the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) right in front of me, I hope he is listening carefully and taking note of all these figures.

On February 11, speaking of the estimates for the Department of Transport, the member for Gaspé (Mr. Keays) has this to say:

Looking back over the estimates, and knowing the riding well, I believe there are two or three major projects which were to be undertaken immediately after that declaration by the minister. Not one of these projects has been carried out. At Ste Anne des Monts the money voted was intended for the repair of the wharf. Because of the bad state of repair of this wharf the ferry service between Ste Anne des Monts and Sept Iles has been discontinued, and any connection we have with the north shore of the St. Lawrence is by means of a detour through Matane.

I should like to tell my colleague from Gaspé that this is not quite true. The service between Ste Anne des Monts and Sept Iles was dropped precisely because the company claimed it was not profitable. In spite of an annual subsidy of $50,000 granted by the federal government to Ungava Transport Ltd. this company considered the service unprofitable and it was discontinued on November 30 last.

With regard to this subsidy, I should like to point out to the minister that this amount of $50,000 granted by the maritime commission was most welcome. Of course, I should be very pleased if the commission kept on granting such a subsidy because it could be put to good use in some places of my riding, for instance, for the service between Sept Iles and Blanc Sablon, this latter locality with a population of 15,000 people scattered along 450 miles of coast and with little or no service at the present time. I ask the minister to bring pressure to bear on those responsible, so that this amount of $50,000 may be used to improve the service between Sept Iles and Blanc Sablon.

Mr. Chairman, I said at the outset of my remarks that I did not want to extend the debate on these estimates. I shall have, no doubt, the opportunity to deal again with the estimates of this department later on and, at that time, I shall have a great deal to say about air transport, shipping, icebreakers, lighthousekeepers, construction of landing strips in remote, isolated and often forgotten areas. I shall certainly have the opportunity to say more.

A while ago, the hon. member for Coast Capilano (Mr. Davis) said that the port of Vancouver was more or less neglected. He also mentioned the tonnage handled there each year. I am aware of the fact that Vancouver has advantages we do not enjoy in the east. On the other hand, I should like to remind him that we too have very active ports in the east. I will mention only one at this time, the port of Sept Iles which is rated third in importance, not only in Quebec but in all of Canada. I would like to say to my hon. friend that quite recently, from January 1 to date, winter navigation was never interrupted and without assistance from federal government ice breakers. As our hon. friends often say the icebreakers are used in the lower St. Lawrence, let me say that this year, navigation never stopped, even without the assistance of icebreakers. From Sept Iles, third most important port in Canada, and since January 1 only, more than two million tons of iron ore have been shipped. More than 16.5 million tons of iron ore were shipped through that seaport last year, and this is very important, I think.

I wanted to point out those facts because there is a lot of discussion going on here and there, and often in the house, about seaports, the importance of seaports, and the federal assistance they should get. Well, according to the publication "Region with a Future", it is crystal clear that the $25 million collected in taxes by the federal government more than compensate for the work the federal government did or could do in that most important seaport of Saguenay county.

Mr. Chairman, in closing, I would like to say that I hope the minister—I notice that he is taking notes—will not forget the huge developments which are now going on in my constituency and which will continue in the future.

[English]

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Chairman, since it is February 14, St. Valentine's Day, I would assume everything is hearts and flowers with the minister today and I thought he might feel rather disappointed if I did not have a few words to say in reference to his estimates while they are before the house. I wish to say a few words on a subject that is causing me great concern and has caused great concern to the residents of the towns of Sydney Mines, North Sydney and surrounding communities in reference to the situation that exists at the port of North Sydney brought about through the actions of the present administration in regard to the change in plans and mode of shipping goods to the province of Newfoundland.

On many occasions during the last session, right until we adjourned on June 30, I believe, I posed many questions in the house to the Minister of Transport and to the then minister of labour in regard to this matter. Those questions were evaded in every possible way. The ministers always said: Do not worry about this. It is not going to get worse. There will be more employment and everybody will be happy.

We did not have much success in extracting much information from the Minister of Transport or the then minister of labour. However, when we were safely out of here after June 30 the minister concerned issued a press release as to what would happen at the ports of North Sydney in Nova Scotia and Argentia and Port aux Basques in Newfoundland. We find, despite the fact that there was a reply to the question I posed to the minister almost two years ago, that there has been no real answer. As reported in Hansard on page 1359 of March 23, 1964, I asked the Minister of Transport the following:

> Is the minister aware that it has been suggested that employment will be reduced by 75 per cent? So it is not too early to start investigating the problem now?

I meant the problem of finding employment for those who would be involved in the releases and cut-backs announced by the government. The minister on that occasion replied:

> Experience has been that traffic has grown so much since confederation that employment is always going up, and this is likely to continue if we improve the communications between Newfoundland and the rest of the country.

I fully agree with the minister that freight shipments and so on have been going up every year. However, Mr. Chairman, it would be absolutely impossible to have shipments go up to such an extent as to take up the slack and create the employment which will be needed at the port of North Sydney when the cut-backs take place. Mr. Chairman, may I call it six o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED UNDER ADJOURNMENT MOTION

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty, in conformity with standing order 39A, to inform the house that the following questions will be discussed on the adjournment motion tonight: The hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand), Expo '67—Montreal—possible strike of construction workers; the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), Pensions—inquiry as to legislation regulating private plans; the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), equity of railway employees pension fund in provinces other thar Ontario.

The house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper namely, notices of motions.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

SUGGESTED WHITE PAPER ON RESPONSIBILITY IN CERTAIN FIELDS

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should issue a white paper outlining with clarity and in succinct terms its views on certain areas of federal-provincial responsibility and, in particular, in order to settle confusion and to enlighten the people, give its opinion on the question of federal jurisdiction in matters involved in a program of manpower development, the war on poverty including assistance, welfare and family allowances, and corporations and institutions with credit and related functions in their objects and powers.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the reasons which persuaded me to put this motion down for debate have an additional urgency imparted to them following the recent scuttling of the Fulton-Favreau formula. It is typical of the strange political world in which we live that this final blow was struck by Mr. Lesage because in its final stages the form of the proposal had been tailored, at least in part, to meet the wishes of the Quebec government after the 1961-62 meetings. I am sure that if the formula could have spoken it would have said "et tu Jean" after he administered the coup de grace.

For the purpose of this discussion we can forget the merits and demerits of the proposal, though I must say that I made no secret that I had doubts about certain aspects of the formula when the matter was first up for discussion a year ago. But this is beside the point. At least if there had been approval of all parties it would have shown that the provinces and the federal government had developed a real ability to get along together. It would then have been possible to move toward the necessary constitutional changes that the exigencies of the present day demand. But now, weighing the results of the action by Mr. Lesage and his colleagues, it is quite certain that the mistrust and indignation with which at least some of the other provinces will view his stand render it unlikely, if not impossible, that any alternative proposal can be put forward or found acceptable in the foreseeable future.

There should be no doubt that some provinces had reservations about certain terms of the formula. They yielded, however, and set aside their objections in the hope that the mere fact that the 11 governments could have a meeting of minds, a consensus ad idem, on a compromise basis on such a contentious issue would augur well for the future. Having done this and made their concessions and now having had the rug pulled out from under them for obvious, pragmatic, political reasons it is sure to be a long time before they come to another conference table and accept any alternative suggestion. So, at this pause in our national journey, when we thought to achieve a new and more modern means of constitutional motive power, we find that all of the careful plans and preparations have gone with the wind and we are back with what we started with so many years ago.

I did not really think we would get the sort of jet propulsion that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) has been yearning for in a more material way, but I did think that we might have been able to trade in our team of oxen on a model A, something which would have had marked on it a "made in Canada" label, for the purpose of amending our constitution and effecting changes in the distribution of powers and responsibilities. And I had hoped that because of this there would be a closer liaison and understanding not only between the provinces and the federal government but amongst the provinces themselves.

Thinking Canadians are so deeply concerned about the fact that there are so many areas and so many problems which increasingly will yield only to solution on the basis of co-operation and understanding as well as changes in the distribution of powers and responsibilities. I am thinking of such things as water resources, water pollution, air pollution, agriculture and agricultural rural development and improvement, a national transportation program, manpower development and so on. Thus today we are driven back to the often-used and greatly abused system of federal-provincial conferences as a rough and ready means of working out programs of executive and legislative action in the areas where there must be shifts and changes and co-operation between the governments. This is so because the courts have held that there is no right in the provincial and federal governments to delegate legislative authority each to the other.

It is, of course, possible that the Established Programs Act 1964, otherwise known as the so-called opting out legislation, can be modified and extended to cover additional areas. But this applies, of course, only to cases where the subject matter is under provincial jurisdiction, and financial and other aid is required from the federal treasury, and joint programs thereby emerge. In addition, the service to be provided under the sole administration of the province must be of a similar kind as that which was carried out jointly by the two governments.

To most of us this understanding of the opting out arrangement seems very clear and very definite, but not to the somewhat mildewed, slightly aging pseudo-revolutionaries who, from their vantage points in the seat of government in the province of Quebec, are shrilling out their demands to opt out in family allowances, unemployment insurance, for example, and in other matters where the federal government has occupied the field either under specific power or under general authority.

How can they opt out when they were never in and were never in these fields because they are matters of federal responsibility? I suggest it is not so much a matter of their opting out as their attempting to muscle in. Then there are demands in connection with the conduct of external affairs, the right to deal with banking through alleged control of near banks and so many other instances, none of which could ever be the subject of a true opting out agreement because they were never matters over which the provincial governments had jurisdiction. Surely the Liberal government at Ottawa must realize that many of the proposals which it has advocated, some of which are included in the Speech from the Throne and others which have been discussed, will all wither on the vine if Quebec initially and other provinces later are allowed to trespass on and occupy these fields.

I do not think I am exaggerating when I say that the impression created in the minds of the people of Canada from watching most federal-provincial conferences in the past two or three years has been that of weak, fumbling, federal participation, not knowing what it wants and where it is going, quite prepared to surrender in most things merely to obtain unanimous concurrence in a final communiqué which applauds the "frank and fruitful" discussions but does not add up the spoils which have been taken away. The picture which comes through of one party is that of a poor pitiful caricature of a government. This contrasts with what appear to be strong provincial delegations, very aggressive, very knowledgeable and very demanding and, of course, in some instances, very unreasonable and quite prepared to sacrifice the national welfare for regional interests.

One can quite properly suggest here, at least parenthetically, that the proposal that many of these conferences be open and be fully and adequately reported by the media of public information should be accepted. Let there be no doubt that, in my opinion, by far the worst offenders have been some of the leaders of the government of Quebec whose intransigent, provocative attitude, particularly in recent months, has indicated an arrogant disregard of the national interest. This is not an attack on Quebec or the people of Quebec. Some of the other provinces have from time to time asserted claims which cannot be conceded. But it is most unfortunate that it has been some of the Quebec leaders, making what seemed to be the most unreasonable demands, who have caught the attention of the people of Canada by their actions in doing so.

But in this are they acting in the best interests of the people of Quebec? I do not think so. Messrs. Kierans, Levesque, Wagner and others have become so enamoured with the sound of their own voices that they seem to have forgotten the purpose and the meaning and the real objective of the movement in Quebec which so many of us have watched with approval and applause. They have become so obsessed with the means that they have forgotten the end which ought to be achieved. Even if we discount much of what Mr. Levesque said on his last appearance in Ottawa and even accepting the fact that since he has been in public life he has rarely had an unuttered thought, nevertheless we can only conclude that his approach to the course he would have the province pursue can be compared to the phrase coined by railway companies about the advantage of rail passenger travel —"getting there is half the fun".

This is an opportune time to deal with the argument strongly and frequently advanced that all that is being done, all of the claims which are being made can be justified because Quebec is not a province like the other provinces. This is quite true in one sense in which the phrase is used and to that extent I accept wholeheartedly the implications.

Confederation came about and the constitution took the shape it did because in very considerable part an attempt was made to preserve certain characteristics of the inhabitants of Quebec, including a distinct people, culture, civil law, language and so on. To maintain this distinction and preserve and strengthen these characteristics is natural and proper and should receive support from all Canadians. There is, then, some justification for contending that this is one way in which Canada, the nation, differs from our neighbour to the south.

In this sense there can be no doubt at all about the uniqueness of Quebec and their right to have, within the limitations I have mentioned, the powers it requires to be unique. But when those who use this phrase attempt to stretch it to include an argument of a different kind, when they say that Quebec is not a province like the other provinces and this per se justifies substantial increases in provincial economic and other powers which are consistent only with national sovereignty, then they are attributing a meaning to the phrase which is unacceptable.

In the same way could it not be argued just as easily that the province of British Columbia, remote from the rest of Canada behind the Rocky Mountain wall, with natural lines of communication to the south with the Americans of the Pacific States, is not a province like the other provinces? The prairie provinces, which experience adverse effects from a national transportation system that has made them the victims of a series of horizontal freight rate increases, as well as being subject to the evils which arise from the people of these provinces being the low man on the tariff totem pole, could also be characterized as provinces not like the rest. The Atlantic provinces, which as a result of Confederation were cut off from their natural markets in the New England states and which also suffer from problems of high transport costs, are provinces unlike the others.

If all of these were to contend, as does Quebec, that because of their very distinct positions they too are provinces which are different, that they too are entitled to trespass on the rights which have been given to the nation of Canada, they could make out just as effective, just as sound a case. If this were done, then we would find that the sum total, the aggregate of all the powers and responsibilities given to all these provinces because they are different, would be so substantial, so all encompassing, that there would be nothing left upon which to found a nation. Thus, when this phrase is used in this way it is deceiving, it is improper, and it must be rejected. And so for these reasons it becomes our duty in this house to do what we can to strengthen the federal government in its confrontations at these conferences, to give it courage and determination.

It is because of this that I have proposed this resolution to urge the government to incorporate in a white paper its views vis-à-vis federal-provincial relations, including a clear outline of the position the government takes or should take in areas of federal jurisdiction which must not be and cannot be whittled away. These must be asserted positively although not provocatively. This white paper should be prepared and filed as a caveat so that all may take heed and govern themselves accordingly.

The federal government must reaffirm its rights under the specific established powers of the constitution and in addition might well seek a review in certain areas where Privy Council decisions in the past have deprived the federal authority of jurisdiction which it can well be argued was intended for it by the Fathers of Confederation. Some of the earlier decisions dealing with rights under the peace, order and good government clause and trade and commerce are examples. The principle of stare decisis should not apply in constitutional, legal decision-making. There is no reason why the Supreme Court of Canada could not feel free to review and alter these decisions or for the government to ask it to do so.

In such matters as family allowance payments, for example, the federal government has a very wide scope through exercise of the general taxing power and the right to distribute the resulting funds to the people of Canada. The government can also draw comfort from what is known as the growing tree principle, a phrase which appeals to me very much. One of the learned judges said that the B.N.A. Act planted in Canada a living tree capable of growth and expansion within its natural limits. This could apply to banks and banking, as a Privy Council decision in connection with Alberta's Social Credit legislation has already indicated.

Let the government of Canada take the initiative for once. Let them be strong, decisive and resolute. Who knows, they might even seize upon this as an opportunity to test the bold and excite the daring. I am sure if they do so they will secure from many members, certainly from me, such measure of support as they may require.

On an issue of this kind, they will not be a minority government and, Mr. Speaker, they were not a minority government before the last election on an issue of this kind. The Prime Minister called that election declaring that he required a majority government to help him in his confrontations with the provinces. On an issue of this kind, I am quite confident he would always have a majority to support him. In any event, I made my position clear on this matter both before and during the election and I have not changed since.

Surely on a matter so important and crucial as this there can be no politics and no partisanship in this house. On this matter we cease to be Liberals or Conservatives or N.D.P. or Social Crediters or Creditistes; we are and we must act only as Canadians.

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, this motion asks the federal government to issue a white paper putting forward policy regarding federal-provincial responsibility in certain areas, namely, (1) manpower development, (2) the war on poverty including assistance, welfare and family allowances and (3) corporations and other institutions in the credit business. The three general areas mentioned, or the six if we include the subheadings under "war on poverty", are not explicitly mentioned in the divisions of jurisdiction under our present constitution.

With respect to manpower, whatever may be its definition it is not mentioned at all in the constitution. "War on poverty" is a phrase coined in the United States and has reference there to a comprehensive program for social and economic opportunity. Its purpose has been the elimination of poverty rather than stopgap periodic assistance. Sections 92(7) and (13) of our constitution refer to charities, civil rights, etc. and these sections have been interpreted to include wider programs of welfare and social security, but no consideration to date has even been given to a program as broad as the U.S. war on poverty.

Sections 91(2), (15) (16) and (19) cover trade and commerce, banks and interest, and the trade and commerce section has been interpreted to include the incorporation of companies irrespective of objects which would include companies in the credit business.

The significant thing in all these areas is that they have aspects which could fall under both federal and provincial jurisdiction. This is a natural phenomenon. In our modern complex world, human creation and conduct are not easily categorized and certainly are not easily fitted into jurisdictional slots conceived 100 years ago. There are a few problems and needs today which can be approached and dealt with adequately under any one area of legislative jurisdiction. As a result of this situation most federal states have resorted to what is known as co-operative or creative federalism. Several areas of government, federal, provincial and even municipal, get together to attack a problem which because of its many legislative aspects could not be attacked alone.

In a federal system this approach is much more efficient and beneficial than one where the different levels battle for jurisdiction in the courts and elsewhere, although sometimes this will be the last necessary resort. It must be remembered that a constitution is meant to serve the political, economic and social needs of the people and is not to be used in political power plays for the political aggrandizement of politicians.

In the Speech from the Throne we have two references to the manpower department. It says that the manpower department is to be a conversion of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration and that the government will develop manpower policies which are essential to the sustained growth of a highly productive economy and to the elimination of pockets of poverty. There is no direct use of the phrase "war on poverty" but job retraining and mobility, education and rural reform have all been described by this term.

It is doubtful that anyone could speculate as to all the possible legislation that might be enacted under a manpower or poverty administration. Some projects may be clearly federal, others provincial and others questionable. I can see no objection to the government issuing a white paper indicating the general jurisdictional bases for these matters and I think this would be good, but I think it would be impossible to set out with any finality the strict lines of constitutional jurisdiction that this motion demands, especially under our present constitution which in my opinion is extremely inadequate.

It seems to me that we do require a broad and deep study of federal-provincial jurisdiction and the whole role and purpose of federalism in Canada, but such a study should consider all areas of jurisdiction and should be done by a committee of this house or by a royal commission rather than by a white paper. Such a committee or royal commission would be desirable before any wide-ranging constitutional amendment. It is to be noted that the province of Quebec has already established a similar commission.

While we are discussing problems of federalism and the concept of co-operative federalism, I should like to make a few observations regarding some of our recent federal difficulties. As a Quebecker whose principal language is English I consider these questions of utmost importance. My family has lived in Montreal for at least four generations and I consider it my home. I think it is a great and exciting city and I would not consider living anywhere else. However, in recent years there are some in Quebec who act and talk as if everything within the territory of Quebec, including Montreal, is for the benefit of and within the sovereignty of Quebec. In opposition to this view there are many who consider Montreal as much Canadian as it is Quebec. Most of the great economic and cultural institutions which helped build Montreal serve all Canada, not just Quebec. They were built by Canadians of all provinces to serve Canadians of all provinces. I refer to Montreal's port, its railroads, air lines, banks, universities, industries, hospitals and many other things.

These institutions and this city should belong to all Canadians both French and English. I realize this was not always the case in the past when our economic and cultural institutions were not only controlled by English Canadians but by certain established groups of English Canadians, to which my family did not belong, I may say. The solution to this situation, however, is not to transfer control from one nationalistic minority to another nationalistic minority. With this in mind many of us in Montreal are beginning to wonder whether the trend to increasing provincial jurisdiction in Quebec will not lead to injustice for its minorities and stifle the effectiveness of Canadian institutions which are situated in that province. It would seem to me that works and institutions which are interprovincial and which serve people beyond the boundaries of a province should be subject to federal jurisdiction, which does not mean English Canadian jurisdiction or a jurisdiction dominated by English Canada. There are several articles of the constitution which would support this view.

[Mr. Allmand.]

It has been rather disturbing in recent days to hear provincial governments state that they feel they have some sovereign right to share in economic and fiscal policy. These are the same governments which would become immediately disturbed if the federal government dared cross in the most minor way the boundaries of provincial jurisdiction. Sections 91(2), 91(3), 91(14), 91(15), 91(19) and 91(20) of the B.N.A Act clearly give the federal government sovereign authority in determining national economic and fiscal policy. This is not an area with several aspects which require co-operative federalism, although this is not to say that it could not be approached in that way. Until the constitution is amended it must be repected on both sides and, where the job requires, worked out co-operatively by both sides.

In an editorial appearing in Saturday's Le Devoir the editor, Claude Ryan, made the following statement in an article which was entitled:

[Translation]

The English speaking community in the Quebec of today.

[English]

At another place he said:

[Translation]

In private life, the last few years have revealed numerous situations in which the minority wields excessive power over the majority.

[English]

He says at another place:

[Translation]

The prime responsibility of the English speaking group is to open wide the doors of its institutions to the members and values of the majority, so that they might become, instead of ghettos of power, true expressions of the environment in which they exist.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, I agree fully with these statements but I would also suggest that this could be done without weakening the federal authority.

At another place when discussing the role of the English speaking Quebecker in the public life of Quebec Mr. Ryan referred to Mr. Kierans, the Quebec minister of health and welfare, and said:

[Translation]

Instead of considering himself as the "professional defender" of the rights of a small group, right from the start he asserted himself as a Quebec citizen and a Quebec politician. He espoused the over-all problem of the society in which he lives.

[English]

Once again I would agree with that statement, since Mr. Kierans was elected to the Quebec legislature. But members of parliament elected to the Canadian parliament, even from Quebec, are elected as Canadian citizens in a Canadian milieu to propose Canadian programs.

In concluding his article Mr. Ryan said:

[Translation]

In the difficult phase before us, we must avoid, on the one hand, panic action and, on the other, blackmail. Between those two extremes, men of good will are bound to find the right formula to get us all out of the vicious circle where we have been for many generations.

[English]

Again I agree fully with this high principle but I must make the comment that this must apply to Quebec and to the other provinces as well as to the federal government.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like first to commend the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) for introducing a motion of this kind. I think the time is long past for, as this motion seeks, a white paper outlining with clarity and in succinct terms, the government's view on certain areas of federal-provincial responsibility, particularly with reference to the war on poverty. I say that this afternoon because we seem to have developed in this federal administration some kind of a double standard in so far as federal-provincial responsibilities are concerned. Certain provinces, mainly Ontario and Quebec, seem to receive a different kind of response from the representations and negotiations they carry on with the federal government than can be expected by other provinces. The hon. member for Peace river performed a commendable job in discussing the many areas of vagueness in respect of these responsibilities or jurisdictions of responsibility if I may use that term.

I intend to speak more specifically about certain matters using them as examples of what I have termed a "double standard" as it applies to different provinces coming to Ottawa with programs they consider necessary in certain areas. The first I wish to refer to is the program the province of Alberta brought to the federal government in respect of some pockets of poverty in that province. So that it is clear in the minds of hon. members that there is authority under the B.N.A. Act for the federal government to engage in shared programs of this kind dealing with agriculture, I refer hon. members to section 95 which states very clearly that the federal government may, without encroaching on provincial jurisdiction, pass laws and enter into programs that deal with agriculture anywhere in Canada.

In addition, in the Speech from the Throne we have this statement. I shall not read all of it but just the pertinent parts:

The purpose of this re-organization is to provide for closer and better co-ordinated action in the following areas of public policy: manpower policies, which are essential to the sustained growth of a highly productive economy and to the elimination of pockets of poverty within that economy—

Then it goes on:

—rural development programs, which are necessary to agricultural progress and a better rural life—

It seems to me that it is very clear both from the terms of the British North America Act and what was contained in the Speech from the Throne that the federal government not only has the authority but also seems to have the desire to do what it can and participate in these kind of programs which will ameliorate some of these pockets of poverty.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, those words are used in the Speech from the Throne. Yet when the province of Alberta came forward and asked the federal government to participate on a 50-50 basis in payments to farm areas in that province which have had almost complete crop failures for the last three years, they were turned down flat. One cannot help but feel that if this kind of request had come from either Ontario or Quebec they would not have been turned down, because on the basis of what happened last summer we know that many millions of dollars out of the federal treasury went into programs in both Ontario and Quebec for exactly the same purpose.

I wish to be fair to the present Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene) because apparently the first refusal of this request was sent to the province of Alberta before he was appointed. I realize the problems of a newly appointed minister in attempting to reverse decisions. But the point I am trying to make is that this decision was completely contrary to what has been done in the past and to stated government policy in the Speech from the Throne.

Let us examine for a few moments what the province of Alberta wanted to do. They designated two areas, one in the Peace River district and one in west central Alberta, as being areas in which there had been a long period of severe crop losses. The province of Alberta went into these areas and made a survey. To make a long story short, they decided to make some payments out of the provincial treasury for the purpose of keeping these farm units from collapsing. What could possibly be a more effective program in a war on poverty than to move in and keep these farm units from collapsing so that the farmers would not be turned off their units, find their way into an unemployed area and go on relief and so on?

If the federal government had come along and co-operated with the province, the problem of these crop losses could have been dealt with. These crop losses are not going to carry on forever. This is an unusual thing in this part of the country; it is not a long, continuing situation. What is more, Mr. Speaker, the province of Alberta made this very clear to the federal government.

Therefore I think we need the kind of white paper that is called for in this motion so that the provinces, and I mean all the provinces, will know what the federal government intends to do when the provinces are faced with these kind of situations. Surely we do not have to face each one of these problems and programs individually. I know this government does not like the phrase "guidelines" because of the connotation that has been attached to these two words, but I believe that if a white paper as called for by the hon. member for Peace River were prepared we would be able to arrive at some guidelines so the provinces would at least have some idea of how far the federal government would go in participating in programs to deal with these severe areas of depression and what could almost be called disaster.

What makes this situation even worse is that on many occasions during 1965 and 1964—I do not have all the quotations before me but this happened on many occasions—when a member rose in this house and asked the federal government to do something by way of assistance in areas that had suffered a tragedy or disaster for one reason or another, the standard answer was, "If the province requests assistance and is willing to pay 50 per cent, we will co-operate". That is exactly what the government of the province of Alberta did. They set up the program and asked the federal government to pay 50 per cent of the cost. They said the province was willing to pay the other 50 per cent. As I said, Mr. Speaker, they have been turned down.

This is not good enough. We need these guidelines and we need, as the hon. member for Peace River said, some kind of paper outlining with clarity and in succinct terms what is going to be the position and the policy of the federal government in matters dealing with the war on poverty, including assistance programs. I should like to impress upon the members of the government that this kind of program will not go on and on. As a matter of fact, I do not think the government of the province of Alberta would set up such a program and ask the federal government to participate if it was not what they considered to be the best kind of program to meet the situation. This area is not known for a long series of crop failures such as have occurred during the last two or three years. It is one which has a reasonably good chance of getting a crop year after year. What is more, Mr. Speaker, if we can save these farms from complete financial breakdown they will probably be able to carry themselves for the next X number of years, whether it be 10 or 20, without further assistance.

I think this is the most effective kind of program that can be used in this so-called war on poverty. Suppose the province had not moved in and these people had gotten into so much financial difficulty that they had to leave their farms? Where would they have gone and what would be the expense to the provincial and federal governments? I suggest this expense would be far greater than the few dollars the province is now seeking in order to get these people over this difficult period.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say again that the time for a statement of policy in the form of a white paper is long overdue. We certainly hope that when the government comes along with it, it will not be substantially different for any one province than for another. The people and government of Alberta feel there has been something of a double standard up to now. All we ask is that the province of Alberta be treated in the same way as any other province of Canada when they come forward with a useful, legitimate program in which the federal government ought to participate.

[Translation]

Mr. J. P. Goyer (Dollard): I would readily agree with the suggestion of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) for a white paper outlining certain areas of federal-provincial responsibility, but the field should not be limited, as suggested in his motion, to —a program of manpower development, the war on poverty including assistance, welfare and family allowances, and corporations and institutions with credit and related functions in their objects and powers.

It can be said that the notice of motion, as such, points out that all social areas should be considered as well as a major part of the economic area but, on the other hand, forgets just the same something that is essential to the constitution, the cultural and linguistic point of view.

The hon. member says that we must consider this problem as Canadians, but as such I realize that cultural and linguistic problems are neglected, put aside and totally ignored in some provinces of the confederation. That is an important matter when it comes to publishing a white paper.

If all those matters were to be considered, it would be necessary to take a lot of time to write a new constitution, whereas, in practice, we realize that the constitution is going more and more toward important changes, asked for not only by the federal government but by the provincial governments, and not only that of Quebec.

On the social level, for instance, the health insurance scheme has raised in the provinces questions which had not been raised previously when the federal government enunciated a social policy. Today, not only Quebec but other provinces such as Ontario are raising questions and asking various things of the federal government about a health insurance plan.

As a matter of fact, when the whole field of social security is considered, we realize that it has developed thanks to the federal government. In fact, the provinces which were the first responsible in the social field, were negligent or failed to legislate within their own jurisdiction. In addition, the social security program of Canada was evolved during the war when the required taxes and capital were and still are available to the federal government.

Therefore, the provinces took no action. Actually, the constitution prevented them from doing so. Under a good constitution, the role of municipal and provincial governments is to administer and legislate in fields belonging to them, while that of the federal government is mostly to legislate.

This is a healthy policy because the government closest to the population, especially in the area of social security, is in a better position to understand the problems and meet the aspirations of the population as a whole. It is also a simple question of efficiency that the government closer to the population can better supply its livelihood.

Why, on the whole, does the federal government hesitate to transfer social security to the provinces? Are they not better able to handle it? Why do we hesitate to turn over the war on poverty to the provinces, to let them handle the entire assistance, welfare and health programs? As I said a few moments ago, the provinces are asking for that. Why not meet their wishes? Why would we, in the federal government, not seek to simply mind our own business. There are several fields in which we could be active.

I think the demands for minimum national standards in the field of social security are right and could be very easily negotiated with the provinces. The provincial governments should realize that they are not only subordinate governments; it would be necessary for them to take the time to read the constitution and realize their fields of jurisdiction and act accordingly. That is the white paper now in existence in Canada. Thus, this would make easier a revision of the social security field for, in fact, it was realized, with the question of social insurance and family allowances, that the federal government fails to adjust its policies in the field of social security. That may be due to a certain conformity or to a certain negligence on the part of a civil service, which lacks creative ideas, new ideas, but the turning-over of social security to the provinces could result in the organization of the social field in such a way that present day demands be better met.

It will be said that to achieve social security, one must have the necessary economic instruments. That is true. It is sound democratic principle that the government which provides a service must be the one which collects the taxes.

We have heard, during the last election campaign, statements to the effect that more money was to be given in the case of a certain pension, while the matter did not come under one's jurisdiction, but simply because there was a surplus of money available. We often see provincial governments creating diversion by attacking the federal government in order to excuse their shortcomings.

If the federal government said once and for all to the provinces: "Here are your jurisdictions and here are the means to get the necessary taxes", then the citizens who would vote in a federal, provincial or municipal election could say: "Well, here is a government which promises a certain legislation, here is a government which taxes me for such measure and it is normal." In fact, we, federal legislators, must not fear the loss of economic control by the central government.

Through what means can we control the economy? Through the budget, tax legislation and monetary policy. The first means to control the economy is the budget. Now, we realize that in Canada, at this time, nearly three quarters of public expenditures are incurred by school, municipal and provincial authorities.

This means that even though the federal government still plays a prominent part in the economic field in Canada and controls the economy of the country, while three quarters of the expenditures are made by other governments, the country is nevertheless not faring too badly.

In the field of taxation and direct taxes, the federal government has already agreed to hand over to the provinces a certain proportion of personal and corporate income taxes. We should strive to hand over a greater proportion of indirect taxes, because they are not as important as direct taxes in the control of the economy.

And in the monetary field, it is quite obvious that only the federal government should continue to take action. On the other hand, if we agree to let the provinces collect the revenues they need, we can tell them: Go ahead, yes. But tax and pay accordingly.

I think it is absolutely necessary that some tax equalization remain under strictly federal jurisdiction. Much is being said about foreign aid, and rightly so, but foreign aid has also its equivalent. We should help the poorer provinces of Canada and the richer provinces must agree to pay to the poorer provinces the amounts required so that all Canadian citizens can live according to certain minimum standards of well-being.

• (6:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Steven Otto (York East): Mr. Speaker, I am amazed that you recognized me here away out in Siberia. I just wanted to say to the few backbenchers who are feeling independently rebellious that such are the wages of sin.

I want to say a few words on the motion moved by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) and I should like to ask him whether he actually thinks a white paper defining the opinions of the government is really what is necessary. I think we are all agreed that by and large the British North America Act is really a pretty cold piece of fish without much substance. It was devised by the Fathers of Confederation at a time when they had absolutely no concept of this nation as one concerned with industry, export and finance. At the time the act was devised the economy was entirely agrarian.

Unfortunately we are stuck with a very static constitution. Certain powers have been delegated to the provinces; others have been delegated to the central government. But the situation has changed in all spheres and we have not the machinery to bring about a fluid constitution to meet changing conditions as time goes on.

For instance, I am quite sure that in 1865, 1866 and 1867 education was a matter of reading, writing and a little bit of arithmetic. At that time no one could have imagined that in 1965, 1966 and 1967 education would be a matter of whether or not one could make a living. Consequently it was a matter which was given entirely to the provinces. The situation now is that education is definitely of national concern.

On the other hand, other jurisdictions which have been given to the federal government could now very easily become provincial. Let me give you as an example some of our waterways and our canal systems. Apart from the St. Lawrence canal system we have the Rideau and the Trent which are used entirely for pleasure purposes and yet are under federal jurisdiction. They originally came under federal jurisdiction when water transportation was a matter of defence. So that although times have changed and the situation has changed our constitution, the British North America Act, will not permit the necessary change. What we really need and what the White Paper mentioned in the motion should demand is some machinery to keep in tune with the times.

Who is to compose the body which has been suggested? Should it be a commission? It must be a continuing thing because five years from now agriculture may have a completely new concept. Finance may have a different concept. I recall the many times the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has criticized the Senate, and I am wondering whether he would perhaps agree that an invigorated Senate with men of quality, qualification and learning could be given the power to study—I say only to study—the B.N.A. Act, to hear evidence, to consider it and then to recommend certain changes in jurisdiction. Surely the Canadian people are not aware of the fine points of difference.

I am quite sure that the people who elect the members of this house and who also elect the members of the provincial legislatures do not think for a moment that these two elected bodies, elected by the same people, would sit down at a table to fight over their jurisdictions, over who is to spend the taxpayers' money and how this is to be done. They want the job done. So far as the people are concerned they are not aware of any jealousy. It is a different story so far as the politicians are concerned. They are very jealous of their rights. But surely this should not be the concept of governments federally and provincially related.

One of the members who spoke today mentioned co-operative federalism, and I have often wondered what it is and whether co-operative federalism will work. The essence of it is government by co-operation. I daresay that in that sense many of the fields of jurisdiction could be divided. In other words, a given policy may be a federal policy and the administration of it may be provincial. It could also be regional to a certain extent.

We need constant and continuing machinery to keep our constitution in tune with the times, to keep the jurisdictions in tune with the times. I suggest that this should have been the objective of the motion. An opinion is not enough because it would be today's opinion and may not be valid tomorrow. I think not only the government but all members of the house should give serious consideration to what is the solution to the changing times and the changing jurisdictions in order to best serve this nation and the people therein.

May I call it seven o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has now expired. The house will resume the business which was interrupted at six o'clock.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

1. Departmental administration, $4,862,900.

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Chairman, before—

Mr. Knowles: Who is the new minister?

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I do not happen to see him in his seat. I trust he will be along shortly. A few minutes before six when I commenced my remarks I started to outline to the committee and to remind the minister of the body blow struck by him against the employees of the docks at North Sydney, Port Argentia and Port aux Basques as a result of his statement on July 9, at which time he finally announced in public what was going to happen at these docks, how many men would be laid off, and what a drastic effect it would have on the members of the International Longshoremen's Association. He also indicated what might be done by the government to assist these people.

• (7:00 p.m.)

As I mentioned, we could not get anything from the minister, or from the then minister of labour prior to June 30, when the house adjourned. As soon as we got away from here, however, the minister in the safe confines of his office gave the press release relating to the situation. This was before the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) had had his vision of a majority, and that sort of thing. I do believe if he had not had that vision the minister would not have made his announcement.

On July 9 the minister in an announcement stated:

> The primary purpose of these very extensive plans has been the improvement in the quality, efficiency and variety of the service that can be offered between the mainland and Newfoundland. With the completion of the trans-Canada highway in Newfoundland and the general growth in freight traffic, these major steps have become necessary to handle the anticipated volume of traffic. These improvements in the service between the mainland and Newfoundland will necessarily have an impact on employment. While some of the existing employment will decline, new jobs will be created and many economic advantages will accrue to the communities affected by reason of the increase in traffic.

I want the minister to advise the house how many new jobs will be created and what are those economic advantages that will accrue to the communities? What is going to be done for the number of men who are going to be released from their employment? The only information we got from the minister was when he addressed a meeting of the board of trade in North Sydney in 1964. He had a good time, and he made a very lovely speech. He did it very well, had a nice meal, announced what ferries were going to be introduced to North Sydney, took all the plaudits and all the applause, but did not mention that the ferry was going to be a rail car ferry to be put into operation, and thus eliminate so many jobs.

Last week he complained that some members of the official opposition and of the New Democratic Party were suggesting that he might be secretive in negotiations regarding television channels and so on. However, in this instance he has been playing that old television game "I've got a secret" for many, many months because he would not outline to the union, to myself or to the people concerned just what was going to happen. Following the minister's visit, the employees of the Canadian National Railways received a letter from E. J. Cooke, general manager of the Atlantic region. I received a copy of this letter, together with a covering letter, from Mr. H. J. Grayton, vice president of the Atlantic region. We had a meeting with the mayor of the town and other interested officials and from that meeting we were advised that there were an average of 675 persons employed at the docks of North Sydney during the past year.

I should like to place on record an excerpt from the letter sent to the C.N.R. employees by E. J. Cooke as follows:

> Indications are that when all changes have been made by late 1968 there will be approximately 100 longshoremen in the North Sydney operation. Most of you know that the introduction of the Patrick Morris and the recent settlement of the longshoremen's strike at St. John's will result in a reduction in staff. Providing present traffic levels remain the same, no further major reductions are expected until the fall of 1967. At that time it is expected the rail car ferry will commence operation. A further decrease in staff will take place in late 1968 when it is expected the Patrick Morris will operate as a rail car, truck and passenger ferry.

As a result of that meeting Mr. Grayston said that out of the 675 employees only 100 would be required when these changes were made. At Port aux Basques 226 positions would be eliminated; at Argentia 102 positions would be eliminated and the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway, Transport and General Workers employees of North Sydney would be reduced from 62 to 40. Shop crafts employ 22 at present. When these changes come about it will only require ten.

If my mathematics are close to being correct, and sometimes they are apt to be in error, approximately 937 positions are going to be eliminated. As I have already said, at any time this subject was brought up—and I am sure that the minister will agree with me—he always insisted in maintaining that there was going to be more employment. Can he tell me where this employment is going to take place? That is what I should like to know.

Suppose freight going through the port of North Sydney would double in tonnage, what then? I want to know if the jobs of these 575 persons in North Sydney are going to be brought into being as a result of this expected increase and continued increase in freight.

The minister finally got this off his chest and made an announcement, in Sydney as reported in the Cape Breton Post of Thursday, October 28, 1965, the headline of which reads "Pickersgill says bright future for northside". This report reads:

> Transport Minister Pickersgill said in Sydney, Wednesday night that North Sydney will continue to be the main gateway to Newfoundland—

We have always felt that that is correct, and should be. The article continues:

> —and predicted that within three years the town will be more prosperous than it is today. He told one of the biggest Liberal rallies ever held in Cape Breton that workers at the port of North Sydney are concerned with changes that are being made at the waterfront.
> "These changes are necessary to handle the vast amount of freight that must be moved to Newfoundland."

I do not know why he is emphasizing that so much. Surely he did not intend to take that away from North Sydney, too.

The article then continues:

> The new public wharf will have rail facilities and will continue to service vessels other than the C.N.R."

Mr. Pickersgill said that it is "my opinion that North Sydney will grow, employment will increase and within three years the town will be more prosperous than it is today."

Mr. Chairman, to my mind this is a new definition of economics. You do away with 575 jobs plus at North Sydney and the minister has not yet said how these people are to find work. He says, in effect, that everything is going to be better than it was. He says that we are in a new era; that the millennium is coming. We are going to do away with all these workers, and many of them are at an age when they cannot move. The government is going to put into practice the Gordon report which has been the theory of this administration when they are in government—and they are in government now. The prevailing philosophy is: We will provide you with one-way tickets and with transportation to get out of an area.

Let us follow this a little further. A committee was set up comprised of representatives of the Canadian National Railways, the Department of Labour and the officials of the I.L.A. They more or less told me that there is no alternative but to work with this committee. I am sure that they will do a good job to assist those who will be displaced.

During the election campaign the former minister of labour and the Liberal candidate in my area, said that no one will suffer; that everything will be lovely; that nobody will be hurt and that everybody will be looked after. I hope that the minister is going to be prepared to look after those people who are going to be unemployed. Of course, this was mentioned before; but then it was alleged we were the rumour mongers, and that sort of thing. Prominent Liberals in my area said that this could not possibly happen: "Muir is spreading wild and weird rumours." However, we find out now that the minister must be spreading rumours too, in his official statement of July 9. I hope that the minister will get to his feet and say that it is nothing but a rumour. However, I am afraid it is the truth.

Another point to be considered is why transshipment is to take place out of Port aux Basques. I hope the minister will explain why it was placed there. Possibly the same work could have been carried out on the mainland. I do not know. I hope the minister will explain why Port aux Basques was chosen. It seems to me this was not the most suitable location either geographically or economically. I suggest it was against the advice of C.N.R. officials that these facilities were located at Port aux Basques. It is likely we shall spend millions of dollars more at Port aux Basques than would have been necessary had these facilities been placed on the mainland.

Now I should like the minister to tell us just what are the official duties of Mr. Ron Kay. From what I can find out about Mr. Kay, he is an efficient and capable man. His official title is "manpower co-ordinator". I hope every assistance will be given him by the government in placing the men from these three ports about which I have spoken. Concerning this appointment the Cape Breton Post of December 8, 1965 had this to say:

Mr. Kay will interview men likely to be affected by the changes in employment and will keep closely in touch with new jobs developing as a result of improvements in the Newfoundland service.

He will also develop training programs for people who want to fill new jobs and work with local and government organizations in finding solutions to problems arising from the changes.

I think Mr. Kay has a man-sized job on his hands. I urge the minister to give serious consideration to the nature of his duties and to the facilities made available to him. It is all right to make fine speeches and statements, but this is a bread and butter issue and something more than that will be needed. As I have mentioned, some of these men are at the stage when they cannot leave their homes. All they have accumulated over the years is in the North Sydney area.

I understand that some interviews have already taken place and it has been suggested to a number of these men that they should take training. I suppose that while they are training they will receive $35 or $40 a week—quite a decrease compared with what they were earning.

May I propose to the minister that he give consideration to the adoption of the plan which was put into effect with application to automotive workers in Windsor. A transitional benefits plan to assist workers in this industry was announced by the former minister of labour on June 28, 1965. A pamphlet describing it says:

The reasoning behind the assistance program is that because the economy as a whole will benefit from the new automotive agreement, the people of Canada and the automotive companies themselves should bear an equitable part of the resulting financial burden of adjustment which will fall on some groups of workers.

The situation which will arise at North Sydney will not be the result of anything done by private enterprise; it will be the result of what is done by the government indirectly through the C.N.R., call it mechanization, technological change or whatever you wish. It will have a profound effect on those involved. Surely some method could be devised by the government to assist these workers along the lines used to help workers in the automobile industry.

Further on, this pamphlet tells us, under the heading "Who is Eligible?":

> Any worker in the automotive or parts industries with at least 30 weeks employment in the last 52 weeks in these industries prior to lay-off, and who is qualified to receive unemployment insurance benefits. The Adjustment Assistance Board, set up by the government to deal with transitional problems of workers and manufacturers, must find that a significant proportion of workers in a firm or plant will be laid off for at least 30 days; and that this lay-off was the result of the termination, or decrease of, production, or activity arising from the Canada-U.S. automotive agreement.

We might substitute for those final words the phrase "arising from the action of the government through the C.N.R. at the Port of North Sydney". Perhaps the minister could give this some thought and try to arrange something for these men along the lines of the transitional assistance benefit plan.

As I mentioned a moment ago, the minister has a new definition of economics. Some of his statements are quoted in that issue of the Cape Breton Post of Thursday, October 28, where they appear along with a picture of himself, the minister of labour at that time and the two Liberal candidates from Cape Breton Island—they are looking upon the great minister as though he were God's answer to the women of Canada, or something like that. Any way, he is being much admired. I must say, however, that at the present time the minister is not greatly admired by the workers who will be affected. Let the hon. gentleman take positive action, apart from what has been announced. We know there is a committee set up. We know that Mr. Ron Kay has been appointed as co-ordinator. There is still some time before this change will hit us badly.

The hon. gentleman has already told us that the Prinz Bertil operating between Denmark and Sweden for one of the Scandinavian countries has been bought by the Department of Transport. Would he please tell the committee whether this ship will go into service "as is" or whether she will be sent to Marine Industries, Sorel, before taking up her new duties? In the latter case, will the work cost the amount which is stated beforehand or will we find that the cost of alterations to the Prinz Bertil, if she has not been renamed—

[Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria).]

Mr. Pickersgill: This ship has been renamed the Leif Eiriksson.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I am glad to hear that. As long as we do not call it the Jack Pickersgill, I am very glad.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, we thought of calling it the Robert Muir but wisdom prevailed.

Mr. Knowles: What is it—a windjammer?

An hon. Member: A garbage scow.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I appreciate these interjections. They are most interesting.

As I said at the outset, since this is St. Valentine's Day, the minister will surely have some good information, in the spirit of hearts and flowers, for the workers who will be affected at North Sydney. As for the ship, as long as they did not call it the Jack Pickersgill, that is all right. "Leif Eiriksson" is in a different class. I would assume that, like the hon. member from heaven, those who have been behind the pulpit are more efficient at being windjammers or blowing a lot of wind than are ordinary members of parliament.

Before I was diverted by the name of the ship, I was about to ask the minister whether this vessel was to be placed in the yard of Marine Industries, as was the Patrick Morris.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, it is. It is going into the yard at Saint John, New Brunswick.

• (7:20 p.m.)

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Well, I am so glad to hear that. The minister is still playing "I've got a secret" to a certain extent, but we can squeeze a little information out of him once in a while. It is all right so long as it is not another Patrick Morris. The Auditor General did not appreciate that episode. This was a bargain ship which was going to cost $1,200,000, then with conversion $1,250,000, but when it was finally put into service the cost was $3,960,000.

I ask the minister to tell us, when he is replying, whether the Patrick Morris is now in the position where it can buck ice? Will it be able to function as an icebreaker, like the William Carson? Or, when the ice comes into harbour, will it be diverted into the Strait of Canso area, thus releasing the men at North Sydney from employment a little more quickly?

May I also ask the minister what is going to be done with the C.N.R. ships, those that are presently operating out of North Sydney under charter by the C.N.R.? Are they going to be kept in service when these other new ships come into operation, or will their numbers be reduced? Can he tell us whether under C.B.R.T. seniority rights—and this is only quite proper—the crews from these vessels will receive priority if any positions become available when these new vessels come into service?

In one of the letters we have received it is stated, with respect to members of the I.L.A., that all the employees affected, "other than stevedores," have seniority rights which will help them get similar jobs with the company. In other words, it would appear that stevedores are at the bottom of the list so far as any new positions that open up are concerned. Mr. Grayston said in his letter that solutions to complex problems do not come easily. I think the man is correct because this is certainly a complex problem brought about by the action of this government.

This is the second heavy body blow dealt by this government. A year of two ago it closed down the Point Edward naval base which had a working force of 600 or 700, but now that working force is down to little more than 100 the same situation is going to occur in North Sydney. I would ask the minister to think seriously about this problem. Now that it is out in the open I tell him not to try to evade anything any more. His job, along with the C.N.R. and all the rest of us who are concerned, is to try to see what can be done to assist the men who will be affected.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, in speaking in this debate, which relates to discussion of the estimates of the Department of Transport, there are several points I wish to bring to the attention of the minister and the committee. During the last week the C.P.R. has taken daily, and several times a day, criticism that I am sure it so rightly deserves. Not only has the government a responsibility in regard to public carriers, but the welfare of the Canadian people is definitely involved in this matter.

In my opinion it has become clearly evident that the C.P.R. is deliberately creating a situation whereby public opinion will force the government to take over this railroad company. The management of C.P.R. have first carefully stripped the company of all its real estate assets, other than the railway right-of-way itself—its natural resources, its industrial development and Canadian Pacific Airlines. On the basis of this public resentment being generated across the country, unless this whole attitude is changed, and changed quickly, there will be no alternative but for the government to take over the railroad.

If we look back at the situation that developed during the past year, it is remarkable the way in which public opinion has changed towards this once great railroad company. This change of attitude has been caused not only by the demoralizing effect the company's actions has had on its employees but, particularly in the west, by the removal of the "Dominion" train. This has been a cause of much controversy. The change in attitude has also been due to the slowness with which the railroad has moved grain to the ports. It is a change of attitude which has spread right across the country.

Certainly it is a tragedy that a private enterprise company such as the C.P.R., with all its traditions of the past as one of the greatest projects ever initiated by private enterprise, should now, through the downgrading of its standards of service, through its elimination of certain passenger trains, through its closing of important station service relating to telegrams and the shipping of express, through its intentional slowdown in the movement of grain to the west coast, and through its unfair and inequitable passenger rate structure, deliberately invite public takeover.

There are just one or two remarks I would like to make in regard to several of these points. The first relates to the lowering of standards of service in the carriage of passengers, and even with regard to the handling of freight and express. I think all members of parliament who travel on the C.P.R. will understand the truth of what I say. Certainly I hear it from my own constituents that the C.P.R. seems to be deliberately letting its standards of service, which were once so high, become shoddy, inefficient and inadequate. Its cars are not being maintained properly. Even service in its dining cars is not what it used to be.

The whole standard of efficiency that once resulted in people using the C.P.R. rather than the C.N.R. has now been lowered, with the result people are travelling more on the C.N.R. It has been lowered to the point where people do not want to use the C.P.R. if they can avoid it. It is strange that this standard of efficiency should be lowered with respect to passenger service. But when it comes to keeping up competition with respect to moving certain freight, which is more profitable, the company is able to meet competition either through the use of piggyback trucks or the consolidation of commercial and express service.

Another point that is obvious so far as the C.P.R. is concerned is its elimination of passenger trains, in particular the "Dominion". It was not just a question of whether or not the "Dominion" was needed to transport passengers across the country. It was a deliberately planned program of the company to make the "Dominion" a train that people would from a financial standpoint not use, thus letting the company justify its removal.

It has already been mentioned today that the "Dominion" was finally cut down to two coaches and a passenger car. What a standard for a transcontinental service, leaving only one transcontinental train on the C.P.R. lines. Yet the C.N.R. has two full transcontinental trains each way each day, with such a large number of passengers that one finds difficulty in obtaining reservations.

Another interesting point in this story relates to the use and privilege of rail passes, which were long looked upon as one of the fringe benefits for railroad employees. Today the situation has become such that an employee of the C.P.R. who has laboured down through the years for the privilege of using his travel pass, particularly on reaching retirement age, does not have a pass left at all because there is not a train on which he can use one. The trains on which he was entitled to travel have now been eliminated.

It is obvious that this policy of deterioration as far as passenger train service is concerned is a deliberate one that applies not only to trains such as the "Dominion" but to many local trains as well. This is a policy which means practically the total closing down of intermediate stations. One of the divisions involved is the Lethbridge division of the C.P.R. in my own area where, through their customer service program, as they call it, the C.P.R. has closed 75 of the 112 local stations. Of the remaining 37 stations, it is proposed that 34 will be without agents. It is also proposed to retain only a train operator at seven of these 34 points. Such an operator could provide little or no agency service to the general public.

This is an indication that the C.P.R. has no intention of continuing either passenger, express or communications services to these communities, many of them towns of 3,000 or 4,000 population.

One might go to the extent of saying that the closing of many of the small stations is not justifiable, but one certainly should not go to the extent that is now taking place in the particular division to which I have referred, and which is being repeated in various divisions across the country.

Another problem relates to the ridiculous fare structure implemented by the C.P.R. In my own constituency the Edmonton to Calgary run is a very important passenger service. A year ago three trains a day ran in each direction, filled to capacity. As a result of the new fare structure and poor service these trains are now running at less than one third capacity. The ridiculous situation has developed in which one can buy a ticket from Calgary to Edmonton for $9.75. However, if you are enterprising enough you can buy a ticket from Calgary to Red Deer, get off the train there and buy a ticket from Red Deer to Edmonton, thereby saving 50 cents. If you stop at every station along the line, buying tickets between stations, you can cut down the fare by another dollar or more. This situation exists in the face of the fact that one can use the same C.N.R. facilities at a cost of $4.50.

A year ago fares were competitive. Today we find a situation in which they are not only not competitive, but twice as expensive on one as on the other. This whole structure is designed to discourage people from using passenger train service, thereby giving the C.P.R. a case to bring before the Board of Transport Commissioners and the government in support of its contention that passenger service is no longer profitable.

We have already heard a number of remarks in relation to the slow movement of grain. We learned over the week end about the emergency situation developing in India. Statements have been made by the Secretary General of the United Nations and Secretary General of the Food and Agriculture Organization to the effect that the hunger situation in India has become a major world crisis. Millions of people are going to die this year of starvation unless something is done, yet we have seen evidence in the last few weeks of what seems to be a deliberate slow movement of grain to the west coast—grain that has been designated to India through commercial sales or aid contributions.

Mr. Chairman, certainly these things are tragic and I would suggest to the Minister of Transport that the government has a responsibility to see that this situation does not continue. After all, the C.P.R. is a public carrier, and as a public carrier has a responsibility for carrying traffic express and freight in this country. It has this responsibility because of the contract it originally entered into with the government and the Canadian people. In addition to freight rate subsidies this company has received through the years a tremndous amount of cash, land and natural resources given to it at the time of its incorporation.

I have before me the act respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway which brought that company into existence on February 15, 1881, just 85 years ago tomorrow. In relation to the western division of this company, section 11 of the schedule provides that from Winnipeg to Jasper House—> —the grant of land hereby agreed to be made to the company, shall be so made in alternate sections of 640 acres each, extending back 24 miles deep, on each side of the railway, from Winnipeg to Jasper House, in so far as such lands shall be vested in the government,—the company receiving the sections bearing uneven numbers.

This land amounted to 25 million acres in most cases mineral rights went along with it.

This schedule then continues to elaborate as to how this land shall be part of the subsidy to be given to the C.P.R. in return for the benefits accruing to the country as a result of the completion of the railroad.

Schedule 9 of the act states:

> In consideration of the premises, the government agree to grant to the company a subsidy in money of $25 million, and in land of 25 million acres—

In addition to that, Mr. Chairman, all the mineral rights have gone to the company down through the years. In my own province an important coal deposit is involved. Fifty per cent of all the coal lying south of the North Saskatchewan river belongs to the company. In addition to that there are important timber rights owned by the company. All these subsidies were given to the C.P.R. in return for building this railroad and for the provision of the services it was expected to render. It is on this basis that the C.P.R. has an obligation to the people of Canada and the country to maintain the essential services.

It is not good enough for the government to say that the C.P.R. is a private corporation about which it can do nothing, because the government has a responsibility to the Canadian people to see that the essential services are performed and delivered. All the services which are the responsibility of a public carrier must be fulfilled.

As I mentioned earlier, one of the most significant and evident effects of the C.P.R.'s policy is the demoralizing effect they have had on the employees of the company. Men and women have given years of service expecting to have a worth-while pass available during their retirement years, only to find that they have no pass at all because the trains on which the passes could be used are no longer operating.

The attitude of the C.P.R. in respect of pensions and the integration of those pensions with the Canada Pension Plan scheme represent another failure on the part of this company to fulfil its obligations. I have a letter dated January 18, 1966, which came to my hand just last week, written by a C.P.R. employee in my riding. He states:

> Since the introduction of the Canada Pension Plan the company's attitude has been anything but fair or democratic. They have drawn up a new schedule which downgrades the employees benefits from the Canadian Pacific Plan.

Any attempt that has been made by the unions or by the association of federated trades has met with blank silence as far as the company is concerned.

This man then states:

> We think that the Canadian Pacific's attitude can only worsen the already strained labour relationship between it and its employees. Other firms, by mutual agreement have integrated their plans along with the Canada Pension Plan to mutual satisfaction. Why is it not possible for us to do likewise?
> As you can see, the company persists in using the Old Age Security pension to substantiate its stand.
> We claim the old age security is a condition of Canadian citizenship paid out of income tax by the individual and has no bearing on the Canadian Pacific plan.

• (7:40 p.m.)

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I am raising a point of order but not in any contentious spirit. I do not know whether the hon. member for Red Deer was in the chamber when I raised the same point with respect to some remarks made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North. It does seem to me that, while observations about the Canadian Pacific pension plan may be relevant to the estimates of one of my colleagues, by no stretch of the responsibilities of the Minister of Transport does it come in any way within the purview of my rather wide administrative responsibilities. I wonder whether the hon. gentleman would be willing, as was the hon. member for Winnipeg North, to save this part of his remarks for the appropriate minister.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I was in the chamber when the minister replied to the hon. member for Winnipeg North, but I am emphasizing two aspects of this matter tonight. The first is that unless the government does something about the present policies of the C.P.R., there will be no alternative but for the government to take it over. It seems to me that the government has some immediate responsibility—and the Department of Transport is involved in this matter—in the over-all picture to make sure that the C.P.R. lives up to the obligations it has to the Canadian people and the country as a whole.

I was mentioning this point as it relates to pensions only to emphasize the fact that these policies are having an extremely demoralizing effect on the employees of the C.P.R. This is bringing us to a point of strain in labour relations which could well, as it goes along with other problems that are today facing the employees of the railways, reach a point where we could be facing before our centennial year a national rail strike. One has only to read the newspapers day by day to understand that this threat is coming closer and closer.

What I am saying is not dealing with the Canada Pension Plan as such, but is only emphasizing the fact that the Department of Transport has a very specific responsibility in this connection. The minister of this department carries a responsibility as far as transportation and public carriers in this country are concerned. I am convinced that the government is not doing what it should be doing at this time to make sure that the critical situation which is now developing is stopped.

In a matter of months we face our centennial year. The demand for passenger traffic on the trains across this country will be greater than ever before. This heavy demand will also apply to other forms of transportation. It seems to me that the C.P.R. should be following the pattern that has been set by the C.N.R. to upgrade the passenger service and prepare for the tremendous traffic load that will occur next year, and which I am convinced will continue after 1967. I say this, Mr. Chairman, because I believe we have entered that part of the cycle following a period where rail passenger traffic has not been as profitable as it should have been, will begin to come back into its own.

It is interesting that the policy which the C.N.R. has followed has been adopted by a public corporation when it should have been the private corporation that took this lead. The C.P.R. is certainly failing in its obligations to the Canadian people. Therefore I would emphasize in these remarks the need of the governments taking action as it relates to the Canadian Pacific Railway. Before leaving the question of the C.P.R. I would again emphasize this point to the minister. If the C.P.R. is deliberately asking for take-over, then it should consider its responsibility to the people of Canada as this responsibility relates to assets other than tracks, right-of-way and rolling stock. We find that the real estate of the company has been placed completely in the hands of an entirely separate corporate structure. Its mining, industrial developments and natural resources have been removed as the assets of the company, leaving only the railroad as such. This is something that was never intended in the original agreement with the C.P.R. These resources were provided to the C.P.R. in order to compensate for the tremendous costs and risks involved in constructing and operating the railway. Now these assets are being used for other purposes altogether.

These resources did not belong to the government or to the C.P.R.; they belonged to the people of Canada and are not being used for the benefit of the people of Canada as they should be.

There is one other point I should like to raise at this time, Mr. Chairman. It relates to my constituency and the need for a municipal airport in Red Deer. I dare say the city of Red Deer, a city now of some 27,000 people with a greater population in the immediate hinterland, is one of few such areas in this country that does not have a municipal airport. The reason an airport has not been established has centred around the uncertainty of the future of the R.C.A.F. air base at Penhold. The Department of National Defence have now indicated that in their plans for this base they do not intend to use its flying facilities for military purposes. They have indicated that the flying facilities at Penhold air base will be available to the Department of Transport, as a civilian airport.

I would impress upon the minister that the need for a municipal airport in the Red Deer area is such that action on the part of his department is urgent. I think it was only last week the Department of National Defence indicated that their program did not require the flying facilities at Penhold, and I would hope the Department of Transport would move rapidly in making a reasonable arrangement in respect of these facilities, which include the weather station and the radio communications system that are now available at the base through the Department of Transport. I am grateful there has been some indication that action will be taken soon in this regard. I would remind the minister, however, that the facilities at R.C.A.F. Penhold are much more elaborate than the normal aiport requirements of a community of this size.

For this reason, Mr. Chairman, in my opinion it will be necessary for the Department of Transport to make a special allowance because there are available not only the airport facilities but the weather bureau and the radio communications system that could well be part of the airport. I mention this point because the matter has come finally to a head in the last few days. It is something for which the community has waited for the last three or four years since the decision was taken by the Department of National Defence to not continue flying training at this base. I believe the city council and the community at large have been patient in this regard, because they realized the folly of spending several hundred thousand dollars for the construction of a municipal airport when those facilities were perhaps going to be available at the military base already there, which has been operation for the past number of years.

I would draw this matter to the attention of the minister. I also emphasize that all he has heard about the C.P.R., not only what I have said but what my colleagues and other members of the house have said, in this debate collectively points up the absolute necessity for the government taking some action.

• (7:50 p.m.)

Mr. Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie): Mr. Chairman, I am intervening very briefly in this debate to obtain an assurance from the minister on three points that affect my constituency. I hope the government will examine the feasibility of making the locks at Welland, Beauharnois, Cote Ste. Catherine, when they are eventually twinned, at least 1,000 feet in length. This is of immediate concern so far as the Welland locks are concerned. The United States government has already indicated it is going to build a set of locks 1,000 feet in length at Sault Ste. Marie. The indirect benefits of these locks would be as important as the direct benefits. There is no question but that the competitive position of our inland shipping industry as compared with foreign shipping on the Great Lakes, would be immeasurably strengthened.

We should consider also the fact that these new lake carriers which will be built to use the larger locks would be built in Canadian shipyards and would result in increased employment for our shipbuilding industry. I strongly urge the Minister of Transport, if he has not already done so, to restudy the twinning of the Welland Canal. The second set of locks must be built to take advantage of any shipbuilding technology which now makes 50,000 ton lake carriers feasible. There is no doubt in my mind the minister would bequeath to Canadians an inadequate legacy if, under his ministry the Welland locks were twinned at less than 1,000 feet per lock.

[Translation]

In French now, I would like to raise a second point.

I hope the minister will consider favourably setting up a Harbours Board at Côte St. Catherine. The public, even in the region of Montreal, does not know that, since the seaway was built, Côte St. Catherine, in the riding of Laprairie, has a deep water wharf 4,000 feet long belonging to the seaway.

Because of insufficient accommodations, that harbour, which represents a frozen investment of $2 million, has not been used for the last ten years. What a waste, Mr. Chairman.

I therefore suggest that a deep water wharf be built at Côte St. Catherine. With the help of the federal government, that would facilitate the building of warehouses and a grain elevator.

A grain elevator on the south shore is necessary to serve the farmers in the southwestern area of the province of Quebec, and there is no doubt that such an elevator would be an economic proposition. There is now at Ville LaSalle, a municipality located three or four miles from Côte St. Catherine, two large breweries and flour mills which could use a grain elevator.

In order to get maximum use out of the wharf which already exists at Côte St. Catherine, the full co-operation of the Minister of Transport, the seaway officials and the municipality of Côte St. Catherine is needed.

I hope that the Minister of Transport will bring all the necessary attention to that project and that he will give it his full support because it really deserves it.

[English]

The third point that is of immediate concern to my Mohawk Indian constituents of Caughnawaga is the possible future twinning of the seaway canal system in their part of the country. They are concerned that another expropriation may occur. The minister is as aware as anyone in this house of the problems which resulted from the initial expropriation, some of which unfortunately have not been settled as yet. I am confident that he and the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority will do their utmost to avoid any further expropriation of Indian reserve land in Caughnawaga.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, at the risk of being somewhat repetitive, I should like to add my protest to the many already made in connection with the withdrawal of the "Dominion" by the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the general impairment of passenger service so far as that company is concerned. I think there is no question but that the Canadian Pacific Railway has been making a deliberate effort to get out of the passenger business. In order to do that, the company has been reducing service on its trains, except the "Canadian", to a minimum, with a view to discouraging people from travelling on these trains. The company would then get into a position where it could present a good case to the Board of Transport Commissioners and, of course, what it hopes will be a good case to the cabinet during the hearing of this appeal. I trust when the cabinet does hear the appeal concerning the withdrawal of the "Dominion", they will take into consideration all the general factors which I think it is essential to consider in coming to a decision as to whether or not the company should be allowed to withdraw this train.

The chief purpose for which the railway company was given a charter was to provide freight and passenger service. I do not believe there is any question but that the various payments made to the railway company were in consideration of the fact the company would provide satisfactory service for both freight and passengers. I believe that provision is laid down in their charter. At this late date it seems to me that any attempt on their part to withdraw from that responsibility for passenger service must be resisted, and it is the responsibility of the government to see that adequate passenger service is provided.

In spite of the fact there are large numbers of people who do not use the trains any more, there are some who do use them. I feel quite a lot more would use them if the service provided were satisfactory. During the last two or three years, certainly, the service provided on the "Dominion" has not been such as to encourage anybody to take a second ride on that train. It is not at all surprising, therefore, that the figures produced as to the amount of traffic it carries do not indicate heavy travel.

On the other hand, I know from my personal experience as well as the experience of many of my friends, that there is always great difficulty in securing reservations on the Canadian Pacific Railway at any reasonable length of time before a person wants to begin a journey.

Another example of the same sort of thing is the train from Calgary to Edmonton.

The dayliners used on that run were fairly well patronized, but during the past year the C.P.R. almost doubled the fare. The fare to go from Calgary to Edmonton by either C.P.R. or C.N.R.—the C.N.R. train has a more roundabout route and takes a little longer—was the same. At the present time the C.P.R. fare is almost twice that of the C.N.R. I do not think there is any question that this increase in fare was put into effect to discourage people from taking the train. Thus in the course of a year or so probably a fair case could be built up for saying that there was not sufficient demand for the train, and therefore the C.P.R. should be allowed to discontinue it.

Continuation of tactics of this kind will, of course, come to this. If a case can be made that the amount of passenger traffic does not warrant the continuation of a train in service, so that the C.P.R. is able to get out altogether from the passenger business, the general public will be left with only two forms of travel over a good part of the country, namely either air travel or bus travel. As far as the smaller towns in particular are concerned, they have no air service and are not likely to have it in the foreseeable future.

For these reasons I hope very much that some means will be found to ensure that the "Dominion" is continued in operation and that an adequate rail service is provided along other lines, consequent upon the responsibility of the railway to provide adequate passenger service, whether or not that particular service happens to pay as a result of the way in which the line is run. In other words the railway should be made responsible for providing a sufficiently good service to attract sufficient passengers so that the line will pay for itself, or come close to paying. I think that situation would be arrived at in many cases if any real efforts were made by the C.P.R. to attract customers, to make their journey a comfortable one, and to provide them with the type of accommodation which people have a right to expect at the present time.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I have heard almost all the speeches delivered since we began considering the estimates of the Department of Transport. That was my way of going through what I might call my basic training, to use a military term. It was also perhaps my way of showing my sympathy for the minister (Mr. Pickersgill) by staying here with the man who, because of parliamentary procedure, must go through this endurance test.

I learned many things just the same and I come out of it with the personal conviction that the minister is more in need of sympathy and suggestions than criticism. I admired the composure with which he acknowledged the words of praise as well as the harsh criticism directed at him with some vigour at times.

With regard to the riding of Trois-Rivières, I must admit quite frankly that the harbour at Trois-Rivières has been well treated by the federal government in the last few years. And to hide nothing, I must say that we must be thankful also to a large extent to the previous government which, at that time, numbered among its members as Minister of Transport, my predecessor who has become a black sheep in the conservative family but who surely had a lot to say when that project was drawn up.

I do not want to repeat what I said here the other day, but I want to point out once again that Trois-Rivières is the heart of the province of Quebec. It is also, to a certain extent, at the cross-roads of all the important means of communication by sea, highway, railway and air, in that province.

Moreover, the creation in the near future of a provincial steel industry, known under the name of Sidbec, in the neighbourhood of Trois-Rivières, will require without delay several other measures to make sure that this undertaking and all related undertakings can develop within a reasonable time and to the greatest advantage of the province and the country, because everyone knows that a basic industry, particularly a steel industry, will have favorable repercussions on the Canadian economy as a whole.

Moreover—I apologize for repeating it—the thruway the provincial government has started to build between Montreal and Quebec City, the trans-Quebec highway running from Chibougamau, through the Lake St. John region, La Tuque on to Trois-Rivières and from there to Sherbrooke and the American border, cutting the province in two from north to south, all that will make of Trois-Rivières an even more important junction point than it now is.

If governing is foreseeing, then it is my duty to draw the attention of the Canadian government to its responsibilities in connection with that development.

The most urgent problem in my riding, Mr. Chairman, is one which concerns the grain elevators. Up till now, through a special arrangement they have paid a lump sum of $28,000 in municipal and school taxes every year. This year this arrangement was abruptly ended and they are now faced with an increase of about $255,000. We all know that our grain elevators have to compete with those administered by the National Harbours Board and that these elevators do not pay such taxes. Moreover, we also know that the tariffs charged by the grain elevators are fixed by the grain commission and this puts our own elevators in an awkward position, indeed in a desperate situation.

Keeping in mind that since a substantial amount of grain shipped by our country to foreign countries goes through our elevators, thus helping to solve our national economic problem, namely that of our trade balance, I submit that the minister should consider this problem a very urgent one.

In the last five years our own elevators have greeted 420 Great Lakes ships and 1,500 carloads of grain. Some 178 million bushels of grain have been shipped on 440 ocean liners.

Three Rivers Grain Elevators Company has spent in the last five years $7,310,000 in salaries and sundry expenditures in my home town. More than 7,161,180 tons of merchandise of all kinds have been handled by our elevators during those last years. Again I point out that due to the impact of such an industry on our national and on our local economy, this matter should be granted top priority by the minister in order to find a solution.

Here is, in my opinion, the remedial action that should be proposed:

1. I believe a meeting should be held between the authorized representatives of the National Harbours Board, the Quebec Minister of Municipal Affairs or his representatives, the municipal authorities of Trois-Rivières and those of the Three Rivers Grain Elevators Company.

2. I have the impression that the Trois-Rivières municipal council, with the consent of the Quebec Department of Municipal Affairs, following such a meeting, would be willing to make certain arrangements, possibly according to a progressive formula.

3. Nevertheless, this will not be enough. The Canadian Wheat Board will probably have to agree to some increases in handling rates, while keeping them competitive with those of other countries.

• (8:10 p.m.)

4. The National Harbours Board should, in addition, grant some rent reductions and even go as far as to grant subsidies to counteract this unfortunate tax increase through which our grain elevators are in danger of disappearing.

Mr. Chairman, if the fact that the Trois-Rivières harbour is one of the most profitable in Canada is taken into account, I shall be deemed justified in making such proposals. I repeat that a solution must urgently be found to this problem to benefit all interested parties.

I shall digress to emphasize another situation I find difficulty to understand.

These last few weeks a new manager from God knows where has been named to the port of Trois-Rivières. I am told that he has only served five years with the National Harbours Board, that he has passed no civil service examination, that there has been no call for applications for this position, and that although his name is Lauzon he is, practically speaking, painfully bilingual. Far be it from me to blame him for this deficiency and if his name were Webster or Pickersgill, I would, on the contrary, congratulate him for the little bit of French which he knows.

But I know that we already had, among the personnel of the Trois-Rivières office, competent employees with 10, 15, 20 and 25 years of service. There was even one who had given up his turn for the position of manager and who had then been promised this promotion.

I fail to see why a person with only five years' experience was appointed, unless it is shown that he is extremely competent.

I intend, Mr. Chairman, to make a full inquiry into the standards set for promotions within the National Harbours Board.

As I was saying, in view of the tremendous industrial and business development which can be expected in my region, it is absolutely necessary to plan development of port facilities in Trois-Rivières and Cap de la Madeleine.

I apologize if I am trespassing on the grounds of my colleague, the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte), but in a few months it will all be part of my constituency, and I am making a head start.

Planning should then be considered in terms of the next ten years, for what we now have is becoming inadequate in view of what is expected in our area. I submit that it would be wise to extend port facilities towards Cap de la Madeleine in order to better serve the industries in the Trois-Rivières area, west of St. Maurice, north of the St. Lawrence.

At one time, during the first world war, Trois-Rivières had its own dry dock. We feel, back home, that arrangements should be made to refit this dry dock, at least for ships of low tonnage, always keeping in mind what is expected to come into the area. And we would be killing two birds with one stone, because the Trois-Rivières municipality, with the co-operation of generous citizens, has invested several thousand of dollars to build a marina which is certainly one of the most modern and best located in Canada.

It already accommodates a great number of American crafts and an overload is expected for 1967. All that is needed is a little dredging and some secondary facilities.

Always with 1967 and the World Fair in mind, I agree with my colleague, the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard), that the Sherbrooke airport should be used as ancillary to that of Montreal. But I add that the Trois-Rivières airport, with its 6,000-foot runway—which should be immediately extended to 10,000 feet—where the city has erected an air terminal—one of the most original in the country, let it be said without bragging—will also be called upon to render great services next year.

One can see the importance of a secondary airport such as that of Trois-Rivières by considering the following figures:

His flying school certifies an average of 35 new pilots each year. Last year, visiting airplanes only made 3,920 landing on the Trois-Rivières landing strip, and the local pilots, including student pilots, made 7,425 landings. In the records of the flying club are entered the names of 1,080 visiting pilots. This is impressive, and I think I should thank Air Canada, on behalf of the population of Trois-Rivières, for having realized the tremendous possibilities of the central region of Quebec and for providing us with a scheduled service twice a day to Montreal or Quebec City, to connect with long distance flights. I should only suggest that Air Canada might return to the former route which provided a better connection with the Montreal-New York, Montreal-Toronto and Montreal-Ottawa runs.

Mr. Chairman, we are modest people in Trois-Rivières; nevertheless, we like to claim that our basic industry is the production of top men.

I should like to note that the president of the Canadian Trucking Association, Mr. George Gouin, is precisely a citizen of Trois-Rivières and that he is experienced in every phase of trucking in Canada.

On January 12 last, speaking to the Manitoba Division of the Canadian Industrial Traffic Association, he gave a most important address from which I should like to read two or three excerpts. I quote:

> We are affected by regulating policies of the federal government governing our industry and other parts of the transport industry.
> We are adversely affected by the federal government's policies with regard to subsidies.

A little further, Mr. George Gouin insisted on another crucial problem of the trucking industry in Canada. He said:

> At the present time, jurisdiction on trucking operations is shared by the federal and provincial governments. Under existing federal legislation, the extraprovincial regulations are administered by provincial boards without any co-ordination or even uniformity. That system leaves much to be desired as far as extraprovincial trucking operators are concerned.

Mr. Chairman, when you realize the importance of transport facilities for the development of the country, when you think of the huge sums of money that the federal government allocated for the development of railway lines and roads in this country, as well as the beneficial results of such measures for Western Canada, for instance, you cannot but come to the conclusion that the government should study in a constructive way the problems of the truckers in this country.

And I borrow my conclusion from the president of the Canadian Trucking Association, saying:

> The year 1966 will register a catastrophe in the Canadian trucking history, the results of which will damage for years to come the national transport services, or it will be a turning point towards a national new and more sensible transportation policy.

Our friends from out west have much to tell us about railway transport: I can only approach the subject with great hesitation. I thought it was a local problem but I realize that the problem of the Canadian Pacific exists right across the country. Almost too much has been said about this in the last three years. I shall not blame my western friends for talking about it.

On the contrary, allow me to pass a small remark. In my region and in the province, when the Canadian Pacific decided to remove trains on economic grounds and to reduce its personnel or cut service for a year or two, it gave so deficient a service that passengers became disgusted and stopped using the railroads as much as they could, thus giving a very strong argument to those who wanted to economize to the detriment of the travelling public.

I should like to allow myself one last remark. I refer to airfields. I would ask the Minister of Transport to tell the house whether his department has a definite and consistent policy on private flying, clubs in particular. I doubt it. It is a field I have studied and in which I am interested. That is where you find aviation fanatics, who are usually found at the origin of all progressive initiatives.

I suggest that the minister should inaugurate an annual conference with the officials of bona fide private and sports associations in order to hold discussions with them, having in mind the best interests in this area of our Canadian way of life. Private runways should be multiplied and minimum services assured.

Mr. Chairman, I shall conclude my observations by summarizing what, in my view, constitutes the main things to achieve for the progress of our region.

I say once more that the most urgent problem facing the National Harbours Board is to help us solve the grain elevator problem and, then, the other problems in the same order as I have listed them.

• (8:20 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to participate in this debate, as more atmosphere most likely should be absorbed by any new member before making a maiden speech. However, as the estimates of the Minister of Transport are under review, and as transportation, or the lack of it, is one of the vital problems in my constituency, I wanted to make a few general remarks on transportation as it affects Digby-Annapolis-Kings on land, sea and in the air. I know the amiable minister is well acquainted with some of the difficulties. In fact, in a way I feel he is a telegraphic pen pal of mine and now, in a different forum, we could perhaps complete our correspondence.

Seriously, sir, transportation is one of the most urgent problems affecting the maritimes in general, Nova Scotia in particular and Digby-Annapolis-Kings specifically.

I do not intend at this time to refer to the contradiction of transcontinental routes by train and air, which always end in Montreal —and then with transshipment and delay the journey is completed to the east. For the time being I shall stay silent on that problem in scheduling, which is as sterile as the policy which allows it. What does give us concern are services of a more local character which adversely affect regions which can ill afford it. It seems a strange paradox in this day of science and communication, when we reach for the moon, that as far as local transportation is concerned we are worse off than in the days of sail.

I wish mainly to discuss the sea—the only service in western Nova Scotia which provides a link with the rest of Canada. But before I do, rail and air deserve some comment. We in the east join in the chorus of protest over the rail line abandonment and cut back in service of the C.P.R. We look with apprehension at what that corporate body has already done. We fear what it may still do. We await with anticipation some guide lines of direction from the government to strike, not a balance in the books from red to black, but a balance of responsibility between the community on the one hand and the corporation on the other. Surely a company which helped to build this nation, and received a sizeable portion of it, cannot now cut the umbilical cord which was and is transportation, with the scissors of a profit and loss statement.

In the valley there has already been one attempt at the Dominion Atlantic Railway, the only rail route between Halifax and Digby. There is no double track here. But at the moment there is, and has been for over 50 years, a morning and evening train service between Kentville and Halifax. And regardless of the doubling of fares and cut-back in service and co-ordination with the Canadian National Railway out of Halifax, it is still, for many, the only way to travel between the valley points and the financial and business centre of the province. Regardless of tourists in our centennial year, the provincial takeover of the Digby Pines, and students at our schools and universities, there are scores of people who go to Halifax by rail for medical and hospital care because they cannot travel by road. If the "Dominion" can be cut, what about the Dominion Atlantic Railway. Here is another area where the people long for federal direction—and, if necessary, intervention.

I come now to a service which has already been eliminated. I refer to the status of R.C.A.F. Greenwood as an alternate stop for Air Canada planes when Halifax international airport is fogged in. For many years the fog in the east, which persists long after elections, closed down Halifax and the huge air base at Greenwood was a natural alternate stop. Usually when the ceiling is zero over the maritimes, Greenwood is open. This is a far cry from the present when passengers from Montreal often land in Stephenville, Newfoundland, or are returned to their place of origin when Air Canada cannot land in Halifax. It seems such a relatively simple procedure, as in the past, to have the airline limousine, with personnel, come out from Halifax to service the altered course of the aircraft. There have been many millions spent at Greenwood and many taxpayers who while away their hours in Stephenville start to wonder about life in general and the government in particular when they phone home to the valley to tell their expectant wives and children of the unfortunate change in plans. And their wives, in any kind of condition say, as they usually do, that in the valley the ceiling is high and the weather clear.

I now come, sir, to the sea—and I know the minister from the maritimes has a special fondness for it. But I challenge him, with all his nautical ability and experience before the wind, be it political or otherwise, to dock the schooner he once possessed at Digby wharf in any type of gale.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have lost her, so it would be impossible.

Mr. Nowlan: Well, it is difficult even if you have a ferry, like the one we had, which plies to Saint John. I know the minister has heard the many representations which have been made about the inadequate wharf at Digby, and the archaic ferry service to Saint John. In the days of sail and early steam Nova Scotia had, for those days, sufficient transportation service to the New England and upper Canadian markets. But while there has been progress in every other field the present and only ferry connection for all western Nova Scotia to the rest of Canada and the market of Montreal, via Saint John, has continually slipped behind.

Can members of this committee believe in this day and age of tractor-trailer transport that the C.P.R. ferry between Saint John and Digby cannot take any vehicle larger than a half-ton truck. And this is supposed to be the eastern terminus of a national company discharging its responsibility to the people of the maritimes.

Mr. Chairman, the lack of modern transportation facilities to the markets of New England, Montreal and Toronto, is crippling the growth of all western Nova Scotia. Not only does this gap in transportation prohibit any growth in industry, but it is stifling what we already have. Not only are we handicapped in getting our goods to market, but because of the complicated and lengthy transshipment process we have hurdles to overcome in getting machinery and parts to service our plants.

I believe the minister has already acknowledged that this ferry service is an essential link in our national transportation network. If it is essential, it is certainly not now effective. I appreciate a commission is now studying maritime transportation problems, but we do not know when it will report. There is some rumour that it will not be for 18 months, and we all know that can be two years or more. Why is it necessary to wait that long before any move is made to improve an essential service which even the minister himself admits is essential, and which all people in the east recognize is ineffective? Surely negotiations should be under way with the C.P.R. to define the areas of responsibility and start action on improving a service which is worse than in the horse and buggy days.

There is a precedent for action, the type of action which a dynamic government could take. For several years I lived and worked in British Columbia. I think that experience was a broadening one. While Premier Bennett and I did not see eye to eye on several subjects, he does get things done. For years in B.C. the C.P.R. was providing an ineffectual service to Vancouver Island. People complained. The economy suffered. Finally, Mr. Bennett took action: He took over the ferries and his service is now the showcase for the entire Pacific northwest.

The responsibility for the maintenance and improvement of this service rests primarily with the federal government. If the C.P.R. will not live up to its obligations, then the government has to act. The cloaking of the issue in a commission does not solve the present problem. A half-ton truck may provide transportation, Mr. Chairman, but it does not provide service. The people look for action. We hope the minister will act, and activate the present inactive situation.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, if I may be pardoned a personal reference, during the course of this debate I have found myself recalling one of the first speeches that I had occasion to make in the House of Commons shortly after I first came here nearly 24 years ago. That speech was an attack on the C.P.R. On that occasion, however, I was as popular in this house as a skunk at a garden party.

Mr. Byrne: That has not changed.

Mr. Churchill: What makes you think there has been a change?

Mr. Knowles: I was about to say that the situation has changed but I think there were one or two interjections which would spoil that follow-up on my part. However, Mr. Chairman, because the case against the C.P.R. has been made so fully and has been documented so well, it is not necessary for me to spend much time elaborating on that case. I do think, however, that at some point this discussion about the C.P.R. should result in a clear statement to the government as to what ought to be done.

We have to face the fact that transportation is one of those services that the public must have, and when you are concerned with a public service, in the long run it just is not realistic to expect that that service will be provided by an organization whose main interest is in the making of private profit. So long as there was huge profit to be made out of transporting people by rail, so long as there was huge profit to be made out of transporting heavy produce such as wheat, by rail, the C.P.R. as a private organization was pleased to engage in that kind of business. Mind you, it was given the tremendous start that has been documented several times during the course of this debate. I have in mind the huge grants of money and of land that were made to it back in 1880, together with the additional grants of land and money, and other benefits given to it at the expense of the public over the years.

My colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North, pointed out this afternoon that these grants run to the order of $100 million in money and over $400 million in land. I suppose there is no way of estimating what has been given in terms of oil and mineral rights, and all the other ways in which the C.P.R. has been allowed to make huge profits. I suppose there is no way of calculating what this company has received in terms of taxes it has not had to pay, at all levels of government.

One of my first experiences in public life was to be a member of the council of the city of Winnipeg. I remember our concern back in those days with the fact that the city fathers of the last century, in attempting to persuade the C.P.R. to come to Winnipeg, had guaranteed that its property in the city would be free of municipal taxes forever. Forever is a long while, and after a time it becomes very costly.

As I say, Mr. Chairman, all kinds of benefits were given to the C.P.R. in return for which it contracted to run a railroad, to run it efficiently, to provide rail service for Canada; and again the word "forever" was in that contract. But now that there is no longer profit to be made out of passenger rail service it has become quite clear that the C.P.R. is doing everything that it can to get out of that operation. Members in all parties on both sides of the chamber have recounted again and again the way in which trains like the "Dominion" have been discontinued, the way in which service has been made unattractive, the way in which the C.P.R. is literally saying to its customers, "We don't want your business any more."

The hon. member for Red Deer made it pretty clear earlier this evening that the C.P.R. is getting itself into a position to unload at least its passenger service, and perhaps even some of its heavy freight service, onto the government of this country.

Instead of our just repeating these charges, instead of our just recounting this indictment against the C.P.R. over and over again, we should lay down a basic principle, and I think the basic principle which the government should accept and should use is this: It should say to the C.P.R. that either it must provide the railway services that the country needs, the services that it is under contract to provide, and charge any losses on those railway services against the profits of its other operations, or it should turn the whole of its operations over to the government of this country to be run as a public enterprise.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I heard a grunt or two to my right. I am not surprised at that kind of grunting coming from some of the members who have been saying the government should tell the C.P.R. what to do. What some hon. members would be satisfied with would be for the government to get into an altercation with the C.P.R., with the result that the government would just take over its passenger rail operation. But we insist, Mr. Chairman, that this company which has been able to make such huge profits out of a public service over the years should not now be left with the profitable operations, while it turns over the uneconomic and unprofitable operations to public ownership.

In this same vein, Mr. Chairman, I want to assert very vigorously that in our view the government will be false to the people of Canada if, instead of acting firmly on this matter, of instead of saying to the C.P.R., "Either you provide this service and charge it to your other profits or we take over the whole operation," it rewards the C.P.R. for its failure in its rail service by giving it more air routes. I say that would be a case of the government failing the people of this country.

There is no secret about it. I suppose the proper way of putting it is that it is an open secret that the Canadian Pacific has its eyes on additional main line air routes across Canada. It has its eyes on some of the new routes that have been opened up under the recent bilateral agreement, such as the route between Vancouver and San Francisco and the route between Toronto and Los Angeles. But I say to you, Mr. Chairman, if as a result of all these negotiations and importunities on the part of the Canadian Pacific the government lets this company off without providing railway passenger service, and in return rewards it for that policy of neglect by giving it another transcontinental air route, and either the route to San Francisco or the route to Los Angeles, this will be a matter of disgrace as far as the government of this country is concerned. These routes must not be given to the Canadian Pacific. This would be a case of betraying the best interests of our people. I urge very strongly that the government make its position clear on this whole matter with respect to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Like my colleagues who have spoken, and like my hon. friends in other parties, I should like to take a bit of time to go into the indictment that can be made against the Canadian Pacific Railway for its failure to provide services. But that case has been made. What matters now is what this government is going to do; and I call upon the Minister of Transport in this debate to make a clear statement as to what the position of the government is with respect to the whole Canadian Pacific organization—its railway, its hotel operations, its investments, its mining and other operations and its air services, in respect of which this company is now anxious to make huge profits. I can see the same thing happening again if the Canadian Pacific is given further rights in the air, and if in the course of time some other means of transportation develops, the Canadian Pacific will then try to unload its air services as well.

Transportation is a public service which comes awfully close to being a natural monopoly. This is something that should be run, not for the benefit of making profits for a private organization but for the benefit of the people of Canada as a whole.

I was disturbed last summer when I read a press release concerning the appointment of Mr. Stephen Wheatcroft to make certain investigations for the Minister of Transport. I have asked a couple of times whether the Wheatcroft report has been received, and I gather that it has not; but what disturbed me was that part of the press release which set out the terms of reference given to Mr. Wheatcroft. Apparently he was literally asked to ascertain whether it would be possible to have more competition in air services along the main lines across Canada without hurting the position of Air Canada. To me that is like going to a lawyer before you commit a crime and asking him if he can get you off if you do commit it.

The government surely should have its own mind made up as to what is good air policy for this country. The fact of the matter is that it has not shown that it has a policy. Surely it should have its mind made up and should not have to initiate an inquiry such as that being made by Mr. Wheatcroft.

All of these things I suggest add up to there being no policy at all on the part of this government, or to its having a policy simply condoning whatever the Canadian Pacific is doing and handing over to the Canadian Pacific anything that organization wants. This is an organization which, over the years, has exploited the Canadian people. It has made millions out of the services that it has provided, without concern for the people of this country. Not only does it show a disregard for the needs of other people generally, but its attitude toward its employees is one that is a black page in Canadian history.

I said that one of the first issues I raised when I came to this house nearly 24 years ago related to the way in which the Canadian Pacific Railway had treated its employees who were involved in the 1919 strike with respect to their pension rights. I am happy to say that after a few years of raising that issue, time and time again, and after making a direct appeal to the prime minister of that day, Mr. Mackenzie King, I was able to persuade the government in 1948 to accept legislation making it illegal from then on to interfere with pension rights because of the loss of time due to a strike or lockout. But Mr. Chairman, the Canadian Pacific Railway, which found ways in which to exploit its employees in days gone by, is still up to the same sort of trick. Today, for example, we have the Canadian Pacific Railway quarreling with its employees over every little detail in the Canada Labour (Standard) Code. This is a piece of legislation put through parliament for the benefit of the workers of this country. We went through all its various details at great length. Now along comes the C.P.R. with its legal brains trying to find ways in which to deprive its employees of the benefits of that code, simply because it does not want to accept legislation that makes things better for the workers.

The story of what the Canadian Pacific Railway is doing with the Canada Pension Plan and with respect to its own C.P.R. pension plan is likewise a very serious one in the annals of the history of this country. Here we have an organization which exists by virtue of what was given to it in terms of land grants, of moneys, rights and so on. Even in this day it acts completely unilaterally with regard to its own pension plan, telling employees what changes are going to be made, and telling them just how it is going to—

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Knowles: Just a moment. I know the minister is going to raise a point of order to the effect that matters relating to C.P.R. pensions have nothing to do with his estimates.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think, sir, that the hon. gentleman anticipated that I was going to raise a point of order. I am raising a point of order, and it is precisely the same point of order I raised with the hon. member for Winnipeg North and the hon. member for Red Deer, but with a little more sharpness because this hon. member has been 24 years in this house, very much longer than I have, and he knows the rules so well. By no stretch of the rules could a relationship of the C.P.R. with its pensioners be brought within the administrative responsibilities of the Minister of Transport. I am quite sure that the hon. member knows that.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, on the point of order, may I tell the Minister of Transport something that he ought to know, and it is this. When I appealed to the government of Mr. Mackenzie King, and he was connected with that government in a certain capacity, for action regarding the pension rights of railway workers, what minister did regard this as his responsibility, and what minister did bring in an appropriate amendment to make the change? It was the then minister of transport who recognized in that day—and he was told by Mr. Mackenzie King to recognize it—that it was his responsibility and that this was a matter of concern to the minister who is responsible to parliament for the transportation industry of this country.

I submit that if any of the policies of the railways are of concern to the Minister of Transport, surely the way in which the C.P.R. or the C.N.R. treats its employees in terms of their pensions is part of his responsibility, and this is just as much in order during the consideration of his estimates as it was in the days of Mackenzie King.

However, Mr. Chairman, I was only using this as an example. I will come back to this subject at another point but at this time I just put this forward as an example of what this company is doing vis-à-vis its employees. It ignores their rights in the same way as it ignores the rights of the people of Canada to the kind of service a railway ought to be providing. There are other matters in respect of which employees have a grievance against the Canadian Pacific Railway—one of which is the way in which it is making its passes of no value at all. But we can get at that, I hope, when we have the Canadian Pacific Railway people before the standing committee, perhaps in a few days.

I want to say a word about one or two other subjects that come under the responsibility of the Minister of Transport. But I wanted to deal with the Canadian Pacific Railway first because I think it is one of the most important issues facing parliament; the number of speeches that have been made on it make that very clear. I hope the minister does not regard these just as speeches he has to endure; I hope he realizes that this is an issue about which he is going to have to take action.

I wish to say a word or two about air policy, or the lack of air policy, on the part of this government. Here, too, I am joining with my colleagues from Winnipeg—I was going to say my colleagues of all parties, but the Liberals do not have any members from Winnipeg, and I suppose there is good reason for that.

I wish to deal with what the government has done to Winnipeg as an air centre. Maybe we people in Winnipeg have an exalted opinion of the importance of our location, but we do not think so. Amongst the things that concern us is the failure of the government in the recent negotiations with the United States for a bilateral agreement to get any additional route out of Winnipeg into the United States. In fact I just cannot believe, indeed I just do not believe, that the government put into those negotiations the vim and vigour that it should have, particularly with respect to the run from Winnipeg to Chicago. Prior to the adoption of this last bilateral agreement, Air Canada on behalf of Canada had an exclusive run between Toronto and Chicago, but after these negotiations were over that run was no longer exclusive; I believe two American carriers are to be allowed to fly between Chicago and Toronto. If we lost something in that area between Toronto and Chicago, then surely there should have been a quid pro quo; we should have obtained the route between Chicago and Winnipeg.

I suggest that it would make sense for Air Canada, which has a transcontinental route that flies from Vancouver to Toronto, sometimes stopping at Winnipeg, sometimes coming through Edmonton and Saskatoon, sometimes coming through Regina and Calgary, to have a route from Vancouver to Toronto which sometimes would go via Winnipeg and Chicago. The one leg is there, Chicago to Toronto. It would have made sense not just for Winnipeg but for Canada and for Air Canada to have had the connecting leg from Winnipeg to Chicago.

As I say, Mr. Chairman, I find it impossible to believe that any real effort was put into those negotiations to get that sensible, additional leg, particularly when at the same time that we did not get the Winnipeg to Chicago route we lost the exclusive character of the route that we had between Chicago and Toronto. I know what we are up against. These are negotiations that cannot be reopened for three years. But it looks as though if this government is going to last we will have to keep arguing throughout those three years to obtain a better deal when the next negotiations come around.

I know the minister gets pretty impatient about grievances from Winnipeg regarding the way we have been treated in terms of transportation, but these grievances are very real and, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North said this afternoon, the people of Winnipeg and Manitoba are united on them. Other aspects of the problem have been spelled out by other members. I emphasize in particular the disservice the government did to Winnipeg, the disservice it did to Canada and the disservice I feel it did to Air Canada when it failed to get as part of that bilateral agreement the Winnipeg to Chicago run.

A local matter that I would like to mention with regard to Winnipeg is the promise we have had from this minister and the minister before him that something was going to be done about the situation at the Winnipeg International Airport with respect to the stairs that people have to go up and down when coming into that airport off the planes that land there. When you are leaving the airport it is not so bad, there are escalators to get up, and then you walk down; but when you are landing at Winnipeg you land on the ground level and have to go up a flight of stairs, and then down a flight of stairs, apparently for no reason whatsoever.

Apparently something went wrong with the design or the government ran out of money at the time. But two or three times the minister has assured me that investigations are under way as to putting in some kind of movable ramp to avoid this necessity. I regret very much that time seems to go by without anything being done about this problem. I urge the minister to give active consideration to this matter, which is important to the efficient functioning of the airport terminal at Winnipeg, and which is important to the large number of older people, people with children and so on, who use the facilities of that otherwise very attractive and very efficient airport terminal.

There is just one other matter I wish to mention before I sit down. It is one I have raised countless times and I hope I do not have to go on raising it countless times. I refer to the position of retired employees of Canadian National Railways. I know the minister's attitude and I am as sick of that attitude as he is of hearing me raise it. His attitude is that the government cannot do something special for retired civil servants or for retired Canadian National employees. This is an attitude that seems utterly unwilling to recognize the fact that the government has a responsibility to these groups of people akin not only to its responsibility to citizens generally, but it has a responsibility to them as an employer.

I know that the Canadian National is the employer and not the Canadian government, but I also know that when the Canadian government wants something done in this area, something gets done. I know that during the Conservative regime from 1957 to 1962 something was done; it was not enough, but something was done for retired civil servants and for Canadian National employees already retired. I also know that the Liberals who were on the opposition side of the house during those years called for something more to be done for these groups of people.

I say it is not good enough for Canadian National Railways to go on leaving on low pensions its retired employees, particularly those retired a number of years ago, whose pensions were based on wages and salaries of the depression years, or even of later years when wages were not such as they are now. This is not good enough in these days of affluence, these days of better pensions and the concept of retirement which we have at the present time.

These people are terribly in need; they are terribly concerned. They are hopeful. They keep writing letters to the minister, to the Prime Minister and to members in all parties. My files of correspondence from these people are voluminous. They become disappointed by the statements made by the present Minister of Transport. I simply say to him that he should not think this issue is going to die just by his referring it to Donald Gordon and saying the government does not have a direct responsibility. This problem is there as a moral responsibility of the government and this parliament, and I call upon the government to face up to this important issue.

So, Mr. Chairman, I leave these thoughts with the minister this evening. I suggest to him that the time has come to face up to questions affecting the C P.R. and not just to listen to speeches. He must take the necessary steps. The time has come for a clear policy with respect to air navigation in this country. The time has come to pay a little more attention to the needs and rights of the people in the city of Winnipeg. The time has come for a better deal for retired employees of the Canadian National Railways. We want action now.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, I am sure the minister has come to the conclusion that this house is far from happy with the transportation policy of the government, or the lack of transportation policy of the government, as it exists at the present time. This point has been brought home repeatedly by various spokesmen in the house and therefore, as was the case with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, it is not necessary to belabour it at this time.

Not only has there been dissatisfaction expressed from within the house, but I am sure the minister is aware that responsible leaders outside the house have also expressed some concern. The premier of Alberta, the premier of Manitoba, the mayor of the city of Winnipeg, the mayor of that important city of Brandon, have all been in communication with the government outlining in detail the problems of transportatin in western Canada as they see them. This is in respect of all phases of transportation—rail, air, the seaway and even the trucking industry in Canada.

Just before I mention the few points I have in mind, I should like particularly to congratulate the hon. member for Winnipeg South who, in his maiden speech, has spoken most eloquently for the province of Manitoba and our peculiar problems in relation to transportation.

I should like to make a few suggestions to the minister as he deals, from day to day, with the problems that have come about as a result of the present attitude of the Canadian Pacific in respect of its transportation responsibilities in this country. It seems to me that during the past few years hon. members of the house have been fighting a rearguard action. I know the difficulty arises because the government has failed to act on the MacPherson report with proper expedition. As a result, the Canadian Pacific has been taking advantage of the delay and, by a slow process of attrition, has been eliminating transportation facilities in western Canada. This is the part of the country with which I am familiar. By the time we get around to discussing the MacPherson report, there will not be anything left to discuss.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to ask the hon. gentleman one question. How does he think that the implementation of the MacPherson report would have altered the situation with regard to passenger service?

Mr. Dinsdale: I am not dealing with passenger service at the moment. I was merely pointing out the fact that we in this house are fighting a rearguard action because of the delay in bringing before the house the recommendations of the MacPherson report, which would make possible a comprehensive discussion of transportation generally in the country. We have come at it by bits and pieces. We have to make use of the opportunities provided by the consideration of the minister's estimates, for example.

Now that the question has been raised by the minister with reference to passenger service, perhaps I can be specific in this regard. I have come to the conclusion, as a result of correspondence with officials of the Canadian Pacific over the past several years during which this process of attrition has been taking place, that not only does the company want to go out of the passenger business but it wants to go out of the transportation business completely in favour of the other ancillary activities that have developed around its numerous land holdings to which reference has been made from time to time.

I reiterate the same points that have been mentioned by other members. The service has become so restricted that it discourages the use of passenger facilities. For example, the "Dominion" was whittled down last fall to the point where it resembled a comic situation, like the Toonerville Trolley, with one diesel, one baggage car and two passenger cars. If you were going to make use of that transportation facility, you had to have the pioneering qualities of the early explorers of Canada.

Then, too, the Canadian Pacific has been closely the privately owned restaurants along the main line within recent years. They have been closing stations; they have been removing agents and they have been removing caretakers. As I say to the minister, if we do not get busy with the MacPherson report and its implications to this basic industry of transportation in Canada, we will not have anything left to discuss.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if I can ask the hon. gentleman, who has been talking about the closing of these station restaurants, if he can tell me what has happened to those historic ham sandwiches that used to be in there?

Mr. Dinsdale: So far as I know, from my experience, the only thing that has happened to the famous Canadian Pacific ham sandwich is that the price has gone up so rapidly it is now prohibitive. I suppose it is part of the general inflationary trend under the present administration.

There is a point that I am sure the minister has not presented to the officials of the Canadian Pacific in his discussions with them on these matters. I should like to refer to a speech made by the president of the Canadian Pacific, Mr. Emerson, to the Canadian Club in Montreal a year ago. It is a very good speech and I hope the minister has read it. He points out that notwithstanding the attrition of Canadian Pacific transportation facilities, the largest earnings of that corporation come from their rail operation. I thought money was being lost on their transportation operation and this was the reason for the process of attrition.

Here is what Mr. Emerson himself said in his speech just a year ago:

> Curiously it is often a source of surprise—

As it was a surprise to me.

> —even amongst well informed people, to discover that the railway does not operate at a loss and, indeed, that it is the largest single source of net income to the company. In only one year in the history of Canadian Pacific was a loss on railway operations sustained.

Then, there is further information in that paragraph and he goes on, at the beginning of the next paragraph, to say:

> Indeed, for the year just ended—

That was 1964.

> —Canadian Pacific will report the highest level of railway revenues for any year in its history.

Notwithstanding that statement by the president, we are faced with this problem where at a time when the economy of western Canada is moving forward by leaps and bounds, when potash has become as important as wheat in sustaining our economy, when oil has produced a buoyant economic condition, we find we do not have the transportation facilities that were operating in the west even during the dark days of the depression. I feel perhaps that is an argument the minister could use with the officials of Canadian Pacific when he is carrying on the current negotiations. I hope that some sort of pause can be made in the process of eliminating one station after another. I know that during the past few years in my constituency periodically we have to get together with the local officials of the Chambers of Commerce and the local councils to meet with officials of the Canadian Pacific in an effort to try to stem the tide of this gradual deterioration in our transportation facilities.

I hope the minister will consider these suggestions, at this critical juncture and feel that there should be some pause. I know it is impossible for local councillors to meet the statistical onslaught of the officials of the railway who come with well prepared briefs, statisticians and economists, and present a series of selected statistics to demonstrate that the railway is operating at a loss. The only way we can arrive at a refutation of an argument of that kind is to recognize that they never include revenues from anything other than less than carload shipments derived from that particular point.

I would also point out that in the city of Brandon, as at other major points, there are tax exempt lands owned by the C.P.R. with assessments of up to $1 million which would realize an additional tax income of $67,000 per year were they not subject to special concessions among the many privileges given to the C.P.R. for the operation of an efficient transportation facility in Canada.

There is one other point, and this is where trucking comes into the operation. Where stations and trains have been removed it is pointed out that these areas, particularly in southern Manitoba, are now being served by the Canadian Pacific highway transport system. But as soon as the railway goes, as soon as the station goes and as soon as the agent goes, that service is reduced from a daily service to a twice weekly service. It is a gradual process of attrition right across the line, and this because there is no national policy enunciated by the government which deals with the basic industry of transportation.

There are two other matters to which I should like to refer briefly and draw the minister's attention. They concern the port of Churchill and the Churchill railway. I hope that as the minister wrestles from day to day with the transportation problems which are created, as he indicates, by the tremendous upsurge in the economy, with the railways being called upon to bear burdens which were never anticipated, he will remember that the Churchill railway and the port of Churchill stand ready to serve the government, the minister, and the people of Canada at any time. Its facilities are far from being taxed to the limit, as he well knows.

I hope he will send a representative to the annual meeting of the Churchill supporters and promoters which will take place at Melville on March 21, I believe. Year after year the Hudson Bay Railway Association members come together and pass resolutions which seem to fall on the deaf ears of the responsible authorities in this parliament. I would just remind the minister, for example, that with reference to the cost of wheat—I am sure he is familiar with these figures—shipping through Port Churchill means a saving of 10 cents a bushel over Lakehead direct sales, 12 cents per bushel over Montreal and, with apologies to my maritime friends, 21 cents per bushel over the maritime price.

[Mr. Dinsdale.]

Such costs are all-important in transportation. I do not believe for a moment that the role and the responsibilities of the railways in Canada have diminished one iota. People talk of highways taking over, or trucks taking over, or buses taking over, or planes taking over. But with a booming economy, with congestion on our highways and with burgeoning and booming cities we are going to have to fall back on our railway transportation system if Canada is to continue to progress in the future.

Let me just quote on example in this regard which I bring to the attention of the minister because I know he is not an enthusiastic supporter of the Pine Point railway development. He, along with his colleagues of the day, discouraged the construction of the Pine Point railway into the Northwest Territories as being an unnecessary transportation development. I refer the Minister of Transport to my very good friend the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, who is in the house at the moment, because whenever I have heard the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources discourse on the Pine Point railway he becomes ecstatic, almost as enthusiastic as were the members of the former Conservative administration when they started the construction of the Pine Point railway.

He can give the minister statistics about this development as well as I. It has opened up the Peace River country and has resulted in townsite development which will have an impact on the whole Great Slave lake area. I have figures which show that for the first six months operation of 1965 $9.5 million were realized. I was in Japan in 1963 discussing northern minerals with the government there, and it is interesting to note that already they are taking 50,000 tons of ore directly from the Pine Point mine, which ore is being shipped over the Pine Point railway. This is one concrete example of what a forward looking government has accomplished in meeting the challenge of transportation as Canada moves forward to the future. It takes a government with vision, Mr. Chairman, to achieve such accomplishments, and I hope that the minister will be inspired by this also.

There is one direct matter I should like to deal with; others have dealt with air policy but the matter I wish to raise is urgent and I bring it very briefly to his attention. It is with respect to the policy for regional air carriers.

It is an urgent matter because the arrangements that have been made with TransAir to take care of the route that was abandoned by Air Canada when it decided to go out of regional operation and move into a trans-Canada and international role are to expire in mid-April. This matter is giving grave concern to the officials of TransAir as well as the communities served.

I hope the minister will initiate negotiations with this regional air carrier and provide the company with some concrete program or arrangement to make it possible for them to carry on this important service. What they need, of course, is an arrangement similar to that operated by the government of the United States, where direct subsidies are paid to regional carriers in order for them to continue their service on an economic basis.

While Air Canada indicated at the time it withdrew from this service that it was no longer interested in competing in this traffic, it should be brought to their attention that they are playing an unnecessarily competitive role. For instance, just one year ago TransAir reorganized the route from Winnipeg to Prince Albert via Brandon, Regina and Saskatoon. As soon as they improved the efficiency of the service and reorganized it, Air Canada immediately commenced a parallel service. Of course a small regional carrier such as TransAir just cannot compete with a big government sponsored organization like Air Canada.

This is an urgent matter. It is important to general air transportation in the west, and I trust that the minister will give it his immediate attention.

• (9:20 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, since the beginning of the debate on item 1 of the Department of Transport, it has been easy to see that this item is the worst wasps' nest of the Canadian government as far as strengthening Canadian unity or destroying it are concerned. We have heard speakers who, one after the other, have talked about the branch lines in their constituencies stating that they were insufficient and also mentioning that they lived in Canada and that there should be a railway in their area, in short in all parts of the country. Each of them also spoke of his local problems and this proves that today there is much to be done in the field of transport to connect all parts of the country and satisfy every constituency.

Well, in turn, I would like to call the attention of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) to a few local problems.

First, I would like to speak about the airport at Bagotville which serves the Saguenay, Lake St John, Chicoutimi, Lapointe, Roberval areas. We have, in Bagotville, a very small airport that dates back a great many years and is far from adequate. A few days ago, perhaps five or six, perhaps three or four, a snowstorm swept down on the Quebec, Saguenay, Lake St. John area. At that time, some airplanes had to land at Bagotville, while others could not get off the ground, so that, at a certain time, in the midst of the storm, there were more than 175 people trying to get into the terminal which is not much larger than the Minister of Transport's office. If all the ministers were trying to get in the Minister of Transport's office at the same time, the minister would not have any space for himself. On this occasion, three Viscount aircrafts, with about 60 passengers each, were held up at the Bagotville airport; as a matter of fact, the terminal was so full that there was not enough room and people had to stay outside in the snowstorm.

I must say it is a disgrace for the Canadian government to have such an air terminal in an area that is developing like the Saguenay-Lake St. John area. As I said a while ago, the waiting-room is not larger than the minister's office; there is no restaurant for the people who have to stay there during long hours before boarding another aircraft, whenever the planes cannot take off on account of a snowstorm. There is no restaurant nor any of the facilities that are usually found in air terminals. Therefore, I believe the Minister of Transport should do something, all the more because such an improvement has been requested for at least four years now, in fact since I came to this house. For at least four years, we have been told that something would be done about that terminal.

This airport was promised to us by the former government, and again it is being promised to us by the present one. Six or seven months ago, we were told that an appropriation had been made, that the plans were ready; nevertheless, during the last election the hon. member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Langlois) promised this terminal to us again. I ask the Minister of Transport whether he could give us tonight a clearcut statement indicating when work on this terminal will begin and when we can hope to have it. I believe the Minister of Transport is in a position to make such a statement right now, tonight, since the matter is urgent, with all the inconvenience we have experienced lately at the Bagotville air terminal. I urge the minister to make a statement on this, in order that the whole population of Saguenay and Lake St. John may know where it stands.

A second problem of local interest relates to the railway connecting Montreal and Quebec City to the Saguenay area and serving the cities of Chicoutimi, Jonquière and Bagotville. Two or three years ago and on several occasions, I asked in the railway committee and in the house, as well as to the Chairman of the C.N.R., Mr. Donald Gordon, that this railway be improved, because it is obsolete today. It is true that at times the train makes 60 miles an hour, but at 20 miles an hour sideways, 20 miles an hour up and down and 20 miles an hour forwards; this means that passengers are thrown sideways, up and down and forward, for a total speed of 60 miles an hour. The speed is greater sideways than forward. The C.N.R. chairman promised to investigate the condition on this railway line. He had even undertaken to make the trip—and some hon. members will remember that in the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, the chairman of the C.N.R. had promised to make the trip from Montreal to Jonquière and Chicoutimi, with myself and other members of the area, in order to find out for himself about the standards of the railway between Montreal and the Saguenay-Lake St. John area.

Seven or eight months after the chairman gave this undertaking, about a year ago, I wrote Mr. Gordon again to ask when it would be convenient for him to make the trip in order that the improvements be made. I was told that improvements had been made, that the timetable had been changed to the satisfaction of all concerned. What changes? Stops along the way were eliminated so that, without stops, the train can run more slowly. The bumps are not so noticeable. That was the improvement. Since that time, those who live along the line, who operate hunting or fishing clubs where the train used to stop, every little village where the train no longer stops are complaining. And do you know what the C.N.R. tells them? Do you know what the C.N.R. employees say when people from the ridings of Chicoutimi, Lapointe, Roberval, Lake St. John write to complain about the discontinuance of the stops of the C.N.R. train along this line? They say: The member for Lapointe asked for it.

[Mr. Grégoire.]

If the President of the C.N.R., who eliminated those stops to improve traffic, tries to justify his action by saying that the member for Lapointe asked for it, I say to him that never in my life did I ask that those stops be eliminated.

• (9:30 p.m.)

I wonder whether the minister asked for that. I certainly did not.

Why are some people defending themselves by putting the responsibility on the member for Lapointe as far as the decisions taken by the officials are concerned, when he said decisions are far from adequate?

Who ever heard of improving a line by eliminating stops in order to have the train go slower, so that passengers will not feel the bumps?

Mr. Chairman, I ask the Minister of Transport whether this is progress under the present government? This means: Slow down and you will not feel the bumps in the middle of the road so much. If there are complaints, blame the opposition members. What we are asking for is the improvement of the track and not the elimination of stops.

I take this opportunity to ask the Minister of Transport to insist that the improvement to be done does not consist only in having the trains go slower. This is not an improvement. You must start perhaps by making the wheels round and repairing the tracks so as to allow the train to go at high speed. At this time, the trip between Montreal and Chicoutimi is nonsensical and I believe it should be improved.

Another point of local interest: I think it would be time in 1966 to ask the Minister of Transport to put an icebreaker on the Saguenay to allow winter navigation on that river. That would be to the greatest advantage of industry and trade in the Saguenay-Lake St. John region. There are, for instance, great industries such as the aluminum company, 85 to 90 per cent of its production is exported, mostly by sea, that is by the Saguenay river. In winter, that shipping route is blocked and it is necessary to use storage facilities or other routes. This increases costs and our aluminum industry is no longer able to meet the prices asked by industries in other countries.

Winter shipping on the Saguenay would not cost that much. It would benefit designated areas such as the Saguenay-Lake St. John area. An icebreaker would be needed in the winter to keep the channel open the year round on the Saguenay river. That would greatly help the development of industry in our region, not only that of aluminum but of newsprint also. The Saguenay-Lake St. John region can claim that it supplies a great part of the newsprint going to New York and other eastern U.S. cities. The Saguenay-Lake St. John area supplies the newsprint for the New York and the eastern U.S. newspapers. We are proud of it but if we had shipping, even during the winter, on the Saguenay, we could produce even more newsprint and supply a larger quantity to the eastern United States.

It would be beneficial not only to the area but to the whole country. Our trade balance shows a deficit. If we increased our exports of aluminum and paper, then our trade balance would be reduced, the deficit would be cut and this would benefit the whole country.

Mr. Chairman, I cannot insist too much on the necessity and the possibility of having year round shipping on the Saguenay. It is one of the most beautiful rivers in Canada. If you want to see for yourself, I urge all members of the house to take a cruise on the Saguenay—

Mr. Langlois (Chicoutimi): There are no more cruises.

Mr. Grégoire: You will see that this is one of the most beautiful waterways. The member for Chicoutimi says that this service has been discontinued. It is true and again it is nonsense that Canada Steamship Lines should discontinue it. However, the member for Chicoutimi was the first, with a delegation of citizens of his riding, and of the Charlevoix riding, to go and meet the Minister of Transport in order to exert pressures for a continuation of this service, at least until after 1967, the year of the World Fair.

Come and see the Saguenay. Arriving at Chicoutimi, you will see one of the best yacht clubs in the world, which, last year I believe, was awarded first prize in Canada.

The river should be open the year round. It is possible. All you need is an ice-breaker. The Minister of Transport could provide one extra icebreaker. It could be built at Lauzon shipyards. This would provide employment for the working class in the area of Lauzon, it would mean jobs for longshoremen of the Bagotville-Port Alfred area, jobs for forest workers in the Saguenay-Lake St. John area, cutting lumber so as to make paper to be shipped to New York over the winter. It would boost the economy of the whole region. In the economic system, every link is important: one ice-breaker would help improve the economy of our region.

I shall further ask the Minister of Transport to make a statement in the course of the present debate on item No. 1 of his estimates. I should like him to promise us that, beginning next year, the Saguenay river will be open to navigation all year round, winter and summer alike.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to draw the minister's attention to another problem, for I see that the members who represent the city of Quebec today do not seem to be particularly concerned with it. There are three in this house, including the former Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport; they sit on the government side, but not one of them has spoken. As Quebec city is so poorly represented in parliament since the last election and there is no one to take care of its interests, it is my duty to do so in the name of the city of Quebec.

On entering the city, you notice railroad tracks right through it, namely in lower town, across main streets such as Dorchester, De la Couronne, Marie de l'Incarnation, Marguerite Bourgeoys. There are no overpasses. At rush hours, whether in the morning or in the evening, the trains, whether passenger, express or freight, run slowly through Quebec City, and for five or ten minutes they delay the traffic in both directions. This means that hundreds and even thousands of automobiles can be delayed for fifteen minutes every morning and every evening.

How is it that, in 1966, in times of progress such as we know, in the heart of Quebec City, the first city founded in Canada, one can see in business areas, on business streets, at the rush hour, railroad crossings slowing down traffic beyond anything imaginable?

It would be high time, Mr. Chairman, for the board of transport commissioners, which has a special budget for the construction of overpasses, to plan the removal of level crossings in Quebec City, since this is unjustifiable in 1966.

Three years ago I quoted figures which I do not have on hand but which can easily be checked in Hansard. Scarcely 5 per cent of the amount allotted for the construction of overpasses by the board of transport commissioners had then been spent in Quebec, while Ontario received almost 70 per cent of the total budget.

The board of transport commissioners should undertake to give a share to Quebec City to provide it with overpasses where trains cross the busiest streets.

I know that the subject has been under consideration for a long time. I know that the Minister of Transport is aware of this problem. I know that some officials of his department have been investigating for many years in this field. Such an investigation has been requested for 25 or 30 years. But is it not the opinion of the Minister of Transport that the time has come to end all these investigations and to build the necessary overpass in the city of Quebec?

Then, I shall ask the Minister of Transport—I know that he is aware of this problem—to make a statement in this connection, so that the citizens of Quebec may know where they stand with regard to level crossings in the city of Quebec.

Another thing, Mr. Chairman. The St. Lawrence should be open to winter navigation up to Montreal. I know this is becoming a ticklish matter for the people of the Maritimes. Far be it from me to favour the economy of port cities along the St. Lawrence at the expense of the Maritime provinces. But progress requires that navigation be open to Montreal the year round. It is possible and easily feasible.

Should needs arise in the Maritime provinces, we will then be the first to cooperate and urge the government to take whatever steps are necessary to develop the economy of the Maritime provinces as much and as quickly as the economy of the other provinces of Canada. On condition, however, that it does not prove detrimental to the other areas, but helps the other areas while helping the Maritimes also.

There is one last point I should like to raise tonight, Mr. Chairman. It is not so much a local or a regional problem as a national problem.

The question of bilingualism within the two most important transport companies in Canada, both crown companies, namely the Canadian National and Air Canada has been very much discussed and still is.

Mr. Chairman, I have often talked about that matter in this house. I have had the opportunity to discuss it sometimes rather firmly with the president of the Canadian National Railways and the president of Air Canada.

[Mr. Grégoire.]

I must say that tremendous improvements have been made in the last three or four years, since we started to fight for bilingualism with the Crown corporations. I believe these two Crown corporations ought to be commended up to a point for such an improvement.

But, Mr. Chairman, I must say to the Minister of Transport that this improvement in only superficial yet and that it has not reached as yet any depth. It is only what appears in the open that has been favoured with bilingualism. Of course we have now bilingual picture posters, bilingual air hostesses, and on the trains, in the majority of cases, not on all trains, but in the majority of cases, the train conductors or inspectors have become bilingual. On the other hand, bilingualism has not reached any depth, yet, far from it.

People who wish to communicate with the offices of those companies have to write in English, otherwise their answers come only five or six weeks later on account of the delay resulting from the translation of such letters. The translation officers are not efficient enough to permit people communicating with them to receive answers within a normal period of time.

Whenever people are asking for forms to fill in, everything comes in English. I can give you an example, Mr. Chairman, which is quite recent and which I would like to bring to the attention of the Minister of Transport. Yesterday, or rather this morning, while arriving at the Ottawa airport, I found that I had lost my suitcase. No more luggage on arrival at Ottawa airport, no razor, no pyjamas, nothing at all, my bag having gone to Toronto; it was still travelling, it had remained on the plane while I was stepping off.

I went and asked that my bag be retrieved because I needed my luggage. I was asked to fill out a form, written in English only. In the Ottawa Airport, the clerk behind the counter did not understand a single word in French.

At one time there was a telephone call during which not a single word was said in French. I mean that the same clerk behind the counter was advised by phone that a plane had been diverted from its regular course and would land in Ottawa. The first thing he asks is: I hope that everyone understands English, because I do not speak or understand French.

He asked me to fill out the card in English. If the minister so wishes I can give him my copy now because I received my luggage this afternoon; and I thank Air Canada for its dispatch in this case. As for the form, the minister will understand that it was in English only—this could have happened to someone who might not have been as lucky.

But how often does one receive such forms written in English only, on trains on the Saguenay-Lake St. John line, up to Montreal or Quebec, in the Lower St. Lawrence region or elsewhere.

I agree, Mr. Chairman, that during the last three years, considerable effort has been made by those two large companies and I am disposed to give them the credit they deserve, but we must keep on asking so that the situation improve even more and that at least the crown corporations advocate integral and true bilingualism as it must exist in a country like Canada, which is officially bilingual.

If all civil servants within the Department of Transport and crown corporations, like Air Canada and the C.N.R., were as good in the two official languages as the Minister of Transport, then I would say, Mr. Chairman, that the Department of Transport and the Crown corporations have reached an acceptable degree of bilingualism.

I know that the Minister of Transport is one of the good bilingual members we have in this house. To prove this, I had the opportunity not very long ago to introduce to him two of my constituents. After their visit to the office of the Minister of Transport, they could not help mentioning that they had found him most pleasant and nice and that they had admired his fluent French.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Grégoire: It is precisely this quality in the Minister of Transport that we should like to find at every level of the Department of Transport and the crown corporations coming under that department. It is this bilingualism which exists in the office of the minister and which he practices himself that we should like to find in every branch of the department.

I hope that the minister who understands the problem thoroughly will see to it that everything in his department, and especially in the Crown corporations, Air Canada and the C.N.R. is bilingual, not only on the surface but in depth and particularly within these two corporations because these are two transport companies stretching from coast to coast, where English and French speaking Canadians meet. Citizens use transport companies from one end of the country to the other.

Well, Mr. Chairman, if we want Canadians to feel at home everywhere, these two companies must illustrate Aristotle's definition of "country". Aristotle said: Your country is where you feel at home.

If Canada is to be a country from coast to coast, you must feel at home from coast to coast from one ocean to another. That is why at least the transport companies which come directly under the Crown should be bilingual not only on the surface but also at all administrative levels.

Mr. Chairman, those are the few remarks which I wanted to make about the Department of Transport. I hope that the minister can assure us that the construction of the Bagotville air station will begin as soon as possible. I am making this request on behalf of the four ridings of the Saguenay-Lake St. John area.

Mr. Langlois (Chicoutimi): Thank you.

Mr. Grégoire: I think the hon. member for Chicoutimi will support the request I am now making on behalf of the four constituencies of the area I have mentioned.

I would also ask the Minister of Transport to make a statement on winter navigation on the Saguenay, on the improvements to the C.N.R. track between Montreal and the Saguenay-Lake St. John area and Chicoutimi. I know that the Minister of Transport is aware of these problems and that he will tell us shortly, or, better still, tonight what action he intends to take and when he intends to take it.

• (9:50 p.m.)

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Chairman, I trust members of the committee will extend to me the usual indulgence that they do to new members as they rise to lose their maidenhood. First of all, Mr. Chairman, through you I wish to extend my congratulations to Mr. Speaker on his appointment, and to express the deep respect I have come to have for that office and for the manner in which he has discharged his responsibilities. I also wish to extend to you similar congratulations and expressions of respect for the manner in which you have fulfilled that office during his absence from the chair.

Before going on to make one or two brief remarks on transportation matters I think I would be remiss, particularly as a young man, if I rose in this chamber as the last new member who will ever rise to speak for the dual constituency of Halifax, and did not pay some tribute to the great men who have come out of the city of Halifax and its environs to serve in the House of Commons.

I think of men such as Sir John Thompson, Sir Robert Borden, Sir Charles Tupper and a long list of others including Mr. Jones, Mr. Powers, Mr. Almon, Mr. Daly, Mr. Richey, Mr. Black and, in later years, Senator Isnor. I will not mention the more recent members who have come to this house.

Mr. Pickersgill: Don't forget Mr. Lloyd and Mr. Regan.

Mr. Knowles: You should mention Mr. Lloyd; he has gone to his reward.

Mr. Forrestall: They have all received their rewards, generally speaking.

The remarks I wish to make tonight are chiefly directed toward the generality of the position that has been adopted by the Minister of Transport, in answer to certain remarks that have been made in this house in the very brief time I have been here in respect of winter navigation on the St. Lawrence river. I am sure there is nothing I can say to impress upon the minister the urgency with which this matter is viewed in the city of Halifax and the port of Saint John and elsewhere in the maritimes. Perhaps he might remind some of the members of this house, in light of their remarks that, contrary to what they suggest the instruments of subsidy—and I think the Maritime Freight Rates Act,—were not designed to impede any industrial progress anywhere in Canada. Quite to the contrary, they were designed to implement, foster and encourage the development of eastern Canada. But like everything else there is a habit on the part of some to stop in a consideration of Canada when you get to the province of Quebec. Canada does go a little further, just as it did some 250 years ago when transportation was a real problem in Canada.

When the hon. member for Lapointe speaks of keeping the St. Lawrence river open, perhaps the minister will remind him that for over 250 years great numbers of people, industries and dollars, as well as great quantities of sweat and tears went into maintaining a year round deep water port to service this nation. Although we are generally quiet people, not looking about to pick fights with anyone, people who have made a great contribution to the development of Canada in all its fields, when there is an impairment or the possibility of an impairment of the future development and use of the ports of Halifax and Saint John we do not intend to take this lying down. I suggest very strongly that there will be vigorous opposition.

If at some point in the future it is in the best interest of Canada to have year round navigation, that will not be accomplished except by adequate incentives for the development of the Atlantic provinces, to bring about and sustain not only the present level of activity, but to help vastly to increase that level of activity We have never stood in the way of national development and we do not intend to do so now.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member will allow me to speak I should like to say that I think he has misunderstood me. What I said is exactly the same as what the hon. member has just now said. If winter navigation is opened on a year round basis there must be some incentives given to the port authorities in Halifax so that this area will not be disturbed. That is exactly what I said, and I want it clearly understood that I am not engaging in any quarrel with my hon. friend. I think both our areas can be developed to a greater extent than they are being developed today.

Mr. Forrestall: I did not misunderstand the hon. member when he spoke. He did make some reference earlier in this debate on the estimates of the Department of Transport to the effect that rail subsidies were detrimental to another industry in Canada. I can only read into that suggestion an area of danger and concern to the life and livelihood of some 17,000 people who are vitally and intimately connected with the port of Halifax. Surely my hon. friend and I will not get into a fight in this regard The fight will only begin if the government pays too much attention to what is said by too many people at the so called river ports.

Before Nova Scotia, particularly Halifax, and the rest of the maritimes can begin to approach a level of parity with the rest of Canada, we must consider the rate of development there. The port of Halifax has a good future, but in the long range picture we are not concerned with the ultimate opening of the river. Unless the government does something in the very near future, and I speak in terms of the next few years, to encourage the industrial growth and development in the Atlantic provinces there will always be people like myself to rise in opposition to anything that will impair year round traffic in and out of the port of Halifax.

Mr. Chairman, may I call it ten o'clock?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, before you leave the chair I wonder whether there is any hope of having a kind of self-denying ordinance tomorrow, just considering those matters that affect the estimates for the year to March 31, and saving the more general things for my next run, which is getting closer every day? If this is possible it could commence following the completion of the remarks of the hon. member for Halifax.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister whether he will set the example of a self-denying ordinance?

Mr. Pickersgill: I have done my best.

Progress reported.

EXPO '67—MONTREAL—POSSIBLE STRIKE OF CONSTRUCTION WORKERS

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de Grâce): It was reported last Thursday that labour negotiations between the construction trades and contractors for the district of Montreal had broken down and that a strike was possible by April 10. It was also reported that this strike could extend to the workers on the site of Expo '67. In answer to a question it is reported that Mr. Pedette, a union representative stated:

• (10:00 p.m.)

[Translation]

We shall do everything to prevent the strike from spreading at Expo, replied Mr. Pedette, but nothing stops us from believing that union workers at Expo will not decide by themselves to follow suit.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Canadian government has already invested millions of dollars in Expo, and in view of the fact that more than 70 countries have already committed themselves to participation, would the minister responsible for Expo or his parliamentary secretary kindly inform us of the following:

1. Is there in fact a special strike truce agreement for Expo?

2. If so, what are the provisions to guarantee this strike truce?

3. If the agreement is broken, are there any sanctions which could be applied to the offending parties?

Due to the fact that Expo is scheduled to open in little more than one year, I consider this situation to be extremely urgent and critical. If a strike was to delay Expo in any way, Canada would be left with a serious black mark against her in the world community.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, perusal of Le Devoir will reveal another instance of a heading inconsistent with the small print under it. The title is gainsaid by the article.

Expo is the business of every Canadian, of all classes of society. With the Expo officials, we have every reason to believe that Montreal workers will live up to the agreement entered into by the inter-union committee to ensure the success of Expo '67, because such agreements exist and we have no reason to believe it will be otherwise.

PENSIONS—INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION REGULATING PRIVATE PLANS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on the orders of the day this afternoon I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) a question with reference to the federal government's proposed legislation which would regulate private pension plans that come under federal jurisdiction. Specifically I reminded the Minister of Finance of a statement made in the Ontario legislature by Mr. Wishart, which I suggested could be the source of some confusion, and I expressed the hope that in view of this confusion the federal government would reconsider the whole matter with a view to bringing in its legislation at the earliest possible date.

May I take just a moment to indicate what I mean when I say that Mr. Wishart's statement may have created some confusion. In this house on January 25 the Minister of Finance, answering questions of earlier days, made a short statement which concluded with this sentence:

I am advised, Mr. Speaker, that provincial legislation will not apply to these companies.

The reference was to Canadian Pacific and Canadian National pension plans. The very next day, January 26, in the Ontario legislature Mr. Wishart, the Attorney General of the Province of Ontario, answering a question put to him by Mr. Donald MacDonald in that house gave a legal opinion to the effect that in part at least the provincial legislation would apply to Canadian National and Canadian Pacific employees residing in the province of Ontario. Mr. Speaker, there is confusion right there; the federal Minister of Finance saying that the provincial legislation does not apply and the provincial Attorney General saying that the provincial legislation does apply at least in part, and they were talking about the same companies.

What we are talking about in the over-all picture is the need for legislation regulating private pension plans. When we talk about regulating them we have in mind the necessity to guarantee portability and we also have in mind regulations respecting both the vesting and the investing of funds and the conditions that pension plans operated by private employers should observe.

Now, a number of provinces have such legislation governing pension plans coming under provincial jurisdiction. As yet, there is no such legislation in the federal field. In other words, companies like the Canadian Pacific Railway, Canadian National Railways, banks and others that are under federal labour jurisdiction are a law unto themselves so far as their pension plans are concerned.

There was a day when there were certain rules and regulations under the Income Tax Act which had some controlling effect. However, some of our constitutional people decided that this was ultra vires of the power of the federal parliament, and even those provisions were wiped out. At the moment, therefore, there are no regulations governing private pension plans that come under federal jurisdiction. This is obviously unfair to the persons who are members of those plans.

The most glaring example of this unfairness is, of course, what has happened in recent weeks or recent months with respect to the Canadian Pacific pension plan. Here is a plan which is operated by the Canadian Pacific Railway. True, there is a seven man board on which there are three representatives of the employees. Of course one can see that these employee representatives are outnumbered. In actual practice, when the Canadian Pacific wants to alter its pension plan, it does so unilaterally. It has done so in the last few weeks. It has put out a document called "Plain Talk" which the company has distributed to its employees, simply telling the employees that as of January 1, 1966, the plan is changed.

Now, some of the details of these changes, we think, are regressive, very reactionary. For example, the compulsory nature of the plan has been eliminated. It is no longer a condition of employment and employees from here on are given the right to opt out of their company's pension plan. They are even encouraged to opt out, no matter what it may do to their future security.

Of course, in doing so they are called upon to sign a statement which would surrender many of the rights that normally go with pension plans. It is also a condition that if an employee who is now in the Canadian Pacific plan opts out or any new employee joining the plan does not opt in, he can never get back in or get in, as the case may be. In the light of today's thinking, we believe that this sort of thing is wholly irregular. I am not going into the whole question of the conciliation that is being sought by employees with regard to the matter. The point is that this unilateral action is possible in Canada because there are no laws, no regulations governing private pension plans that come under federal jurisdiction.

My colleague the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) followed my question this afternoon with a supplementary question. I see he is also on the late show, so there will be a detail or two that he will raise later. My whole point, and I press this on the government, is that this matter is urgent. Every Canadian Pacific employee in the country knows it, the employees of other companies under federal jurisdiction also know it, and I think it is not good enough for the government to keep putting it off. I have a list of dates on a page of foolscap indicating the number of times that this legislation has been promised by the government. It was the former Minister of Finance who first offered it in December, 1964. I see you are on your feet, Mr. Speaker, so I cannot give my list. However, it has been offered and promised so often that time must not be allowed to slip by any further before action is taken on this important issue.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean Chrétien (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the member for the persistance he shows with regard to a problem I consider, as he does, very important.

However, the member should know, and I am convinced he does, that this particular problem requires special legislation from the government and that, due to circumstances since last June, Parliament has not dealt with new measures; however, it plans to do so with respect to that problem, as soon as possible, taking the usual priorities into consideration.

The member mentioned the legal problem this question involves. Of course, the government will have to act with discretion in view of the division of powers in Canada; this delicate problem will demand that the government move with great care, and legislate so as not to act illegally.

However, I can assure the hon. member that the matter is being studied and that legislation dealing with this problem will be presented to the house as soon as possible.

PENSIONS—EQUITY OF RAILWAY EMPLOYEES PENSION FUND IN PROVINCES OTHER THAN ONTARIO

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I asked a question of the Minister of Finance which was supplementary to a question asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. The point which I raised was the conflict which appeared between the legal opinion expressed by the Minister of Finance hereon an earlier occasion and the legal opinion expressed by the Attorney General of Ontario.

As members know I am sure, the province of Ontario and the province of Quebec have passed legislation establishing standards for private pension plans which are put into effect by companies operating in those provinces on behalf of their employees. The Attorney General of Ontario, Mr. Wishart, in answer to a question in the Ontario Legislature made a statement, part of which I shall quote. This is his statement, Mr. Speaker, on January 26, 1966:

> If the Parliament of Canada legislates upon the subject of pensions for employees of chartered banks, railways, and works for the general advantage of Canada, such legislation would be a valid exercise of the powers of Parliament; and if in fact the legislation covered the same area as the provincial statutes, the last mentioned statute would not apply—

A little later in the debate in the legislature he said:

> It was our opinion that the provincial legislation applied, and we are still of that opinion.

He followed that with this statement:

> Now it is quite clear that if the government of Canada moves into the pension field, that legislation would supersede and make invalid any provincial legislation bearing on the same area.

What is the provincial legislation, Mr. Speaker? The provincial legislation sets out that an employee working for an employer in Ontario—the same provisions apply in Quebec—and having worked for an employer for ten years and reached the age of, I think, 50 or 45 has his pension rights vested. The C.P.R. pension plan, to take one example, provides that an employee must have worked 25 years and must be 50 years old before he has any pension rights. What this means, therefore is that an employee working for the C.P.R. in Ontario will have rights which a worker working for the C.P.R. in other provinces will not have. Surely this is a ridiculous situation. There is another important and very disturbing aspect, Mr. Speaker, and it is this. I presume that the C.P.R. pension plan as it is now constituted has been worked out on the basis of actuarial estimates. If a person in the province of Ontario or in the Province of Quebec has his pension rights vested as a result of provincial legislation, as that vesting takes place the whole actuarial basis of the C.P.R. pension plan will be thus affected and will become completely meaningless. Workers of the C.P.R. in other provinces could find themselves at some future date not able to get their pension because the plan does not have the money to pay them.

This is an extremely important matter, Mr. Speaker. I am not at all impressed by the argument of the Parliamentary Secretary that we just have not had the time to deal with it. After all, who called the election? Who took months off to conduct an election campaign? The government. It seems to me that the government ought to proceed immediately to protect the rights of employees in banks, in insurance companies, in railways and air lines, who come under federal jurisdiction. They ought not to have their rights to pensions interfered with by the fact that this government has failed to act in this very important matter.

There is another matter, Mr. Speaker, which needs to be covered by federal legislation. Employees need legislation which will protect them from rapacious employers in the matter of their pension rights. The Canadian Pacific pension fund has been used in a disgraceful manner by officials of that company. Funds in the Canadian Pacific pension plan, or shares which the pension plan had invested in, were sold by officers of the pension plan, who are officers of the company, to Canadian Pacific investors at a rate much lower than they could have been sold to other interests. It has been established in press articles that the pension fund suffered a loss of $400,000. That is money which was taken illegally, I suggest, by the officials of the Canadian Pacific.

We need legislation, Mr. Speaker, which would establish arms length decisions. We need legislation which would establish that there should be no conflict of interest, and we call on the federal government not just to delay this matter and not, just to say that they know it is important, and that they will get around to it. Mr. Speaker, the length of things which this government at some time hopes to get around to, if put end to end, would circle the world. We want action now, and not next year or in ten years from now.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean Chrétien (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his clearcut statement on this problem. This interesting observations have been noted, of course, and will be passed on to the minister.

However, I want to point out to him that we are also interested in protecting the rights of the workers faced with this problem, but in view of the jurisdictional problems involved, we must be very careful. I can assure him, as I said earlier, that steps will be taken as soon as possible to solve this problem.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

OBJECTIONS RESPECTING PROPOSED DISTRICTS IN ONTARIO, QUEBEC AND SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty to inform the house that four objections signed by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce and 17 other hon. members in one case; by the hon. member for Saguenay and 10 other hon. members in the second case; by the hon. member for Cochrane and 10 other members in the third case, and finally by the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre and 10 other members, have been filed with me pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act for the provinces of Ontario, Quebec, Ontario and Saskatchewan respectively.

These will be printed as appendices to Votes and Proceedings for this day. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVILEGE

MR. BENSON—CORRECTION OF FRENCH TRANSLATION OF ESTIMATES BOOK

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, the French translation of the estimates blue book I tabled yesterday is not an accurate reflection of the English version.

Vote 30 on pages 430 and 439 should be deleted, the total to be voted on page 431 should be changed to $17,524,100 from $27,524,100 and the total for the summary on page 431 should be changed to $45,761,100 from $55,761,100. The increases in the summary on this page should be changed to $8,898,200 and $9,388,200 respectively.

The totals on the departmental summary on pages 4 and 5 and on the summary by standard objects in the back of the blue book are correct as tabled.

We have no intention, Mr. Speaker, of spending more money in one language than the other.

CANADIAN FLAG

TABLING OF BOOKLET RESPECTING NATIONAL FLAG

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table a booklet on the national flag of Canada, which was officially flown for the first time a year ago today after it had been approved by parliament and proclaimed by Her Majesty the Queen.

To mark the first anniversary of this historic occasion this booklet is today also being made available to the public through the Queen's Printer, and to members of parliament in the usual way. The booklet records some of the highlights of the ceremony a year ago and sets out some general rules and principles for flying and displaying with dignity and respect our national flag. These rules and principles are an adaptation of international usage and the practice which has been followed by the federal government over many years.

There has been widespread interest shown in information about the way to fly flags and many requests for advice have been received. I hope this booklet will meet these requests.

• (2:40 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, because a year ago today the Canadian flag was officially recognized, I should like to take this opportunity to say that it has, in the last year, greatly contributed to Canadian unity, that the flag has been accepted by all Canadian citizens, that to see it floating over Canadian buildings is a beautiful sight, and that this augurs well for the future of Canada.

POWER

NELSON RIVER—ANNOUNCEMENT OF FEDERAL PARTICIPATION IN DEVELOPMENT

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce that the federal government has agreed in principle to participate with the government of Manitoba in commencing the development of the vast resources of hydro power of the lower Nelson river in northern Manitoba. The initial phase will include the construction of a power site at Kettle rapids and the installation of 855,000 kilowatts of generating capacity; the diversion of part of the flow of the Churchill river into the Nelson river system near Thompson, Manitoba; works at the outlet of lake Winnipeg to control the level of that lake and the outflow from it, and long high voltage transmission lines from the Kettle rapids site southwest to the neighbourhood of Winnipeg. The total cost of this minimum initial development of the power in the lower Nelson will exceed $300 million.

The federal government will construct, finance and own the high voltage transmission lines required to move the Nelson river power to Winnipeg and, when markets are developed, to the international and interprovincial boundaries. The cost of the high voltage transmission lines presently planned from Kettle to Winnipeg and the ancillary equipment has been estimated at about $120 million. The line will be leased to the Manitoba Hydro at rates per year and per kilowatt hour of energy transmitted which will suffice over a period of approximately 50 years to repay with interest the investment made in the line.

The federal government's participation will insure that this power site of such great importance does not remain undeveloped only because it is located in a province in which the market for power is still too limited for the province alone to bear the full burden of financing its development. The potential benefits to Canada include a reasonable possibility of the export of power to the midwestern United States and the possible sale of low cost power to Saskatchewan and Ontario through interconnections between the utilities of the three provinces. Although the Nelson development can only be achieved in successive steps, the ultimate development will be of the magnitude of five million kilowatts.

The government of Manitoba and of Canada will proceed as soon as possible to negotiate the necessary formal agreement, following which the federal government will seek the approval of parliament for it. My colleague the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Pepin), minister designate of the new department of energy, mines and resources, will conduct these negotiations with the province of Manitoba.

Co-operation between the Manitoba and federal authorities has enabled this great resource to be surveyed, and the possibilities of development appraised, in such a manner as to lead to the present agreement. I should like to pay tribute to my colleague the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr Laing) for the important part played by him and his department in the earlier stages of the investigations which have led to today's announcement.

The power resources of the lower Nelson river have been surveyed at a cost of $4 million as a 50-50 joint federal-provincial undertaking over the past three years under the direction of a joint Nelson river programming board. With the consent of the house, Mr. Speaker, I would like to table the interim report of that board, which is dated December, 1965.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Prime Minister have leave of the house to table the report referred to?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, the announcement made by the Prime Minister is of major importance to national development. This represents the culmination of the progressive policies of northern development instituted by the Progressive Conservative government a few years ago.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Churchill: The vision of the north which was ridiculed so often is now beginning to show real sense to the people of Canada. This is what we have been looking for for many years, and I pay tribute to the Conservative government of Manitoba for its initiative in proceeding with its plans for the development of the Nelson river.

There is an opportunity now for the present government to proceed with the plans we had underway several years ago, namely the development of a national grid. Here we have one of the great water resources of northern Manitoba available with a surplus of power for the advantage of the other provinces of Canada, and I would point out to the Minister of Industry and to other members of the cabinet that here is a fine opportunity for the promotion of industrial development in western Canada.

Obviously there will be a readily available surplus of cheap electric power which will be of advantage to industrial development. If there is power surplus to Canadian requirements there will likely be available a ready market south of the border, and I am sure the energy board will be looking at this aspect with a great deal of interest.

We welcome this announcement, and we are glad the federal government has begun to show some interest in northern development.

Mr. E. R. Schreyer (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Prime Minister's statement will be welcomed by the people of Manitoba as well as by the provincial authorities. I did not hear some of the remarks made by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, particularly the one which caused such a flutter among those sitting on the Conservative benches. For my part I do not think this is the right time to make any sort of partisan comment. I merely say that the development of the energy potential of the Nelson river has been under constant study for the past four years. Finally we have an undertaking that substantial federal support will be forthcoming.

I think it should be borne in mind by both levels of government that in developing these sources of electric power we should try at all times to plan for the maximum utilization of this energy within Canada. I realize that in the short run most of this power will have to be exported to markets across the line. Nevertheless, I hope the government will always be mindful that in the long run the utilization of this energy should be planned with the needs of the Canadian consumer in mind.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, each time the government says it will contribute to the economic development of the country, we are very happy to hear it. To our minds, the important undertaking just announced by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) with regard to the province of Manitoba and the whole of Western Canada, will greatly help that section of the country.

However, other undertakings just as important are possible and needed in other regions of the country. Be that as it may I repeat that each time the government announces some economic development, we welcome the news.

As the previous speaker said, this is not the time to indulge in political partisanship, although the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) did so a little earlier, claiming that the Nelson river exists in Manitoba thanks to the Conservatives.

He seems to forget that it was under a Conservative government that Canada went through its worst times—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Caouette: —when we had a million unemployed in Canada. He seems to forget, Mr. Speaker, that the economic development of the country—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I take the liberty to remind the hon. member of the dispositions of standing order 15(2)(a), which provides that members may comment briefly on the subject matter of the announcement made, and should not make any statement that might provoke debate. So I invite the hon. member for Villeneuve to limit his remarks to the substance, to the essence of the statement made by the right hon. Prime Minister.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I shall be very brief, but I wish to draw your attention to the fact that the same thing could have been done to the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, when he had the floor.

In any event, I sincerely believe that the reason why these developments are now taking place in Manitoba or elsewhere in Canada is the fact that the Conservatives are no longer in office.

[English]

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I am quite sure all Canadians rejoice when announcements are made such as we heard today, which indicate further development of the tremendous resources we have in Canada. I found myself wondering, as I heard the Prime Minister's announcement, whether this is an indication of governmental policy which may help by sharing the cost of transmission lines from such hydroelectric developments as the Peace river. I am sure in that case the cost will be much more than the $120 million referred to when it comes to the construction of similar transmission lines to the lower mainland. The same could be true of Hamilton Falls as well.

We would hope the policy just announced will be reflected in the fiscal policies to be worked out with the provinces relating to similar cost sharing programs.

Nelson River Power Development

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, we have seen a situation develop in this house which allows members who purport to be leaders of parties, but which have no party basis in the house, to rise up and make statements on motions.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Coates: This is very important because it affects the privileges of every member of the house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Coates: When these members stand up and make statements on motions they are delaying the business of the house. One of them leads eight other members; the second leads four other members. We also have two independent members. If they preferred to join together in a formal party I should think one of them could stand up and also comment, and we could get into a position where another member belonging to a national party would have no opportunity to comment.

It is my belief, sir, that you should take this matter under advisement and indicate who should be permitted to reply on motions and who should not be able to reply.

Mr. Speaker: Order. When this point was raised, I believe about a week ago, I indicated that if the point of order were raised again I would give hon. members the opportunity to submit representations one way or the other, and that I would then take the matter under consideration. If other hon. members wish to submit argument on this point to enlighten the Chair on how to interpret standing order 15, I would be pleased to hear them at this time.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the wording of standing order 15(2a) under which we are operating is quite clear. It also seems to me that our practice in this matter is quite clear. The latter part of standing order 15(2a) reads:

> A spokesman for each of the parties in opposition—

It does not say "a leader"; it says "a spokesman". Those words, including the word "opposition", are all in lower case letters, and there is no reference to the official opposition. It states:

> A spokesman for each of the parties in opposition to the government may comment briefly, subject to the same limitation.

[Mr. Thompson.]

I suggest that in a number of ways this house has already recognized that there are four groups or parties in opposition to the government, and that it is perfectly proper that one spokesman for each of those parties in opposition to the government should speak on these motions if he wishes to do so.

I would point out to Your Honour and to the hon. member who has just spoken that this is a new rule, albeit provisional, which was adopted during the last parliament on the recommendation of a committee under the chairmanship of Mr. Speaker on which the same five parties now in the house were represented. When the rule was brought in it was understood that it was presented on behalf of the five parties then in the house, and throughout the last parliament at any time a spokesman for one of these parties wished to reply to one of these statements on motions Mr. Speaker allowed him to do so.

I should also point out that the wording of standing order 15(2a), at least the part that I have read, was actually taken from a ruling given by Mr. Speaker Michener. Up to that point it was just a ruling or citation listed in Beauchesne. When Mr. Michener was in the chair he sought to avoid the practice of having several people from each of the different parties speak, so he narrowed it to one spokesman for each party; and that dictum given by Mr. Speaker Michener was accordingly put into the rule when we drafted standing order 15(2a). I suggest that the practice of the last parliament is the one we should continue to follow in this parliament.

I have heard some of my friends to the right asking the question, how do we define parties? I submit, Mr. Speaker, that there is no such thing as an over-all definition of parties so far as the House of Commons is concerned. In the first place the names of the parties are not allowed on the ballot papers. We come here as individual members and our groupings are the result of our own arrangements. The only case where the word "party" appears, so far as the members of the House of Commons are concerned, is in the Senate and House of Commons Act where provision is made for an extra allowance to the leader of a party other than the government or the official opposition when that party has 12 or more members. But that, Mr. Speaker, and I assert it as strongly as I can, does not define a party. This is merely a definition for the purpose of that one piece of legislation, namely the Senate and House of Commons Act.

I submit there is no over-all definition of parties in this house, and that we have accepted the fact that we are here as five groups. Your Honour has allotted areas in this house for the seating of each of the five groups that are here. I suggest that to attempt to alter this arrangement by objecting to spokesmen for the various parties having a chance to speak on motions is certainly defying the spirit of the last parliament, defying the spirit of parliament itself and defying the wishes of the Canadian people who, of their own free will, sent members of five parties to this House of Commons.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, in support of the logical argument advanced by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, I should like to suggest to you that what you have done on a number of occasions, and what you did this afternoon in allowing one spokesman from each party to respond to the announcement made by the Prime Minister, is in keeping with the long traditions and practices of this house. Any one who now suggests that there is a new definition of a party in respect of this kind of recognition is in fact attempting to change this long established practice.

For example, during the years 1958 to 1962, when there were eight members in the C.C.F. party and later the New Democratic party, because the name changed during that period, the leader or a spokesman from among the eight was accorded the privilege of expressing the opinion of that party with respect to an announcement such as the Prime Minister made this afternoon.

I draw to your attention also, Mr. Speaker, that on many occasions prior to that time, particularly from 1935 up to 1957, there were numbers like eight, ten, twelve and even less in groups in this House of Commons, and they too were given an opportunity to state their party's policy in response to this kind of announcement. Therefore while, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has suggested, standing order 15(2a(is a new rule, there is precedent for this procedure by virtue of long practice.

Speaking specifically about this party, Mr. Speaker, while we have only five members with seats in this House of Commons, I would draw to your attention that there were well over 300,000, in fact I think nearly 400,000, Canadians who voted for our party. Surely this group of people have the right to have their opinions expressed when this kind of announcement is made. I also suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that in so far as this party is concerned we have a direct relationship with two provincial governments, or one fifth of all the provincial governments in this country. I am sure Your Honour understands that there is a direct relationship between the policies we hold and the policies of these two provincial governments.

Surely when the Prime Minister makes an announcement that directly involves negotiations between the federal government and the provincial governments—and this was the essence of what the Prime Minister announced this afternoon—spokesmen who are in the same party as these two provincial governments ought to be able to give an expression of opinion in response to that announcement.

Therefore I do not think there is any validity whatever in the argument advanced by the hon. member for Cumberland, because if you were to seriously consider what he is suggesting this afternoon you would have to go against all the tradition and practice of this house for the past 30 years; you would have to violate what I suggest was accepted by this house when it approved standing order 15(2a). You would also to some extent violate the right of some 400,000 people to have their opinions expressed, and you would remove the possibility for the two provincial governments of the same party as this to express their views in response to this kind of announcement.

Mr. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, as you no doubt are aware I am something of a hybrid in this house. I represent the Liberal-Labour Association of Kenora-Rainy River.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Reid: I want to put myself on record as in agreement with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the hon. member for Medicine Hat. I might say at this time that while I find myself in very congenial company in the Liberal party here, there may come a time with the shifting sands of politics when I would find it necessary to move away.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Churchill: Hurry up before it is too late.

Mr. Reid: I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that I speak in the most hypothetical manner. But I do want to put myself on record in this connection, because I do not want to see the representatives of any minority group, particularly the independents, abolished by a rather unscrupulous attempt by the members across the way to cut off valid sections of the Canadian population from the opportunity of expressing their opinions in this house.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member used a word that went beyond his thoughts when he referred to the "unscrupulous" attempt made by the opposition. I have no doubt that the word was used in a very general sense and that no one will insist that it be amended at this time.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I simply wish to put on record, or to recall for hon. members, a sentence that will always remain famous; in fact, it was once spoken here, in this house, and I believe it should be repeated on the occasion of this debate.

It was spoken in October 1963 by the present right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), when he said: "I do not agree with your ideas, but I will fight to death to assure you the right to express them."

Mr. Speaker, such an example of democratic spirit and freedom of speech should help you to arrive at a decision on the question at hand. Canada is under a democratic system where any idea may be expressed. A substantial part of the Canadian people have selected representatives from different parties to express their views in the house. That is why I believe third parties also should be entitled to express their opinions on motions introduced before the house, particularly in view of the fact that the Conservative party, while it may have the largest number of opposition members, does not speak in the name of all the opposition and in many cases, our ideas vary on different subjects. They speak on their own behalf, but not in the name of the third parties.

For these reasons, I believe that in the future as in the past, you should allow third parties to speak on motions.

[English]

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, it is quite clear from the discussion which has taken place that the point of order raised is a difficult one. It is also quite evident, if I may comment on some of the discussion, that this debate has gone beyond the point at issue, which is a narrow one as to the interpretation of the meaning of a rule. I suggest that now the point has been raised specifically, it be taken under advisement and a decision given later after there is an opportunity to prepare a carefully reasoned decision on the point.

Some hon. Members: Do it now.

• (3:10 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I should like to add just one word. On behalf of the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Mongrain) and myself, I endorse the remarks made by the hon. members of the New Democratic party, the Ralliement créditiste and the Social Credit party about the right of members of third parties to speak. Since the beginning of this session, in spite of the good will and good faith shown by the Speaker and his assistants, the chairman and the deputy chairman of the committees of the whole house, efforts are being made to restrain the number of members from the third parties, and we are against that. I must point out also that we, the two independent members in this parliament, represent more than a hundred thousand voters and I think that, to a certain extent, we are living proof that the people wish to see some changes in the political parties.

The Speaker's role is to protect the minorities in this house. We have the right to speak, and not only after the party whips have decided to let six Liberals, six Conservatives and six members of the New Democratic party have the floor. We have been elected to the house by the people. We represent not only a riding, a province, a party, but we have been elected members of parliament for Canada and represent the whole country. We are all equal when it comes to having the right to speak.

That is why I ask you, on behalf of the hon. member for Three Rivers and the others, to reconsider this attitude and not allow the party whips to decide who is going to speak.

[English]

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I appreciate the difficulty in which you are, Mr. Speaker, as the result of having to come to a decision on this point. Perhaps you are going to reserve judgment. I was very much interested in the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the hon. member for Medicine Hat, the great reformists of just a year ago in the committee on rules and procedure. Now they have become great traditionalists. These are the men who are holding on to the past. They do not want to move up into the twentieth century. They are antediluvian; just because something was done a few years ago they think it should be continued forever. I believe you will have to take that into account.

I was interested in the unhappiness of the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River with the Liberal party. I quite understand that unhappiness. If he wants to form a party of his own, perhaps we might give him a chance to speak on behalf of that party.

I think the crux of the matter—as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre pointed out, is that the word "party" has not been defined. Nevertheless in 1963, when an arrangement was made to pay an extra amount of money to the leaders of groups who had eleven followers, that definition was incorporated or placed into the statutes of this country.

This is a guide for the Speaker as to what should be done on the matter of motions. Unless Mr. Speaker will permit independents to speak, and others who may claim that they represent several thousand people, I do not see how any control can be exercised other than by referring to the precedent established in 1963. This precedent has determined that a party, in so far as we recognize parties in this house, must be on the basis of a minimum of twelve members. If those who sit in opposition would consider themselves as the opposition to the present government, the present government would no longer be sustained.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair does not want to stop debate—does the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona want to add a word to what has been said?

Mr. Terence Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): I did not believe I should allow the remarks of the hon. member for Medicine Hat to pass without comment. There were two matters he mentioned. One was the fact that he was a member in this house speaking for a provincial government rather than as a federal member of parliament. I feel it would be most unwise if parliament were to give any credence to any such theory. The second ridiculous theory he expounded was that because he happens to belong to the same political party as that which is in power in the province of Alberta he therefore has some special status in this house. I feel the house should recognize that if a voice from a province should be heard, it should be heard according to the manner in which the people of that province sent members to speak for them here. Certainly, in so far as the province of Alberta is concerned, that would be a Conservative voice and not the ridiculous voice of Social Credit.

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): I should like to add my support to what the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona has just said. He left out one point. The hon. member for Medicine Hat said that his group represented 300,000 or 400,000 people in Canada, and I believe he said that these Canadian people had a right to have their opinions expressed. I should like to remind the Chair that each of us represents 50,000 or more people who have as much right to have their opinions expressed as the 300,000 or 400,000. If you are going to recognize individuals, then I think every member in this house should be able to get up and suggest that his constituents have a right to be heard.

This is what we have been objecting to in the past, Mr. Speaker, when you have tried to speed up the business of this house and you have been restricting backbenchers from time to time—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wanted to hear arguments with regard to the application of standing order 15(2a) only, and the hon. member is going considerably beyond that so I will not hear further argument. The Chair will take under advisement the arguments submitted and in due course render a decision.

GRAIN

WHEAT BOARD PURCHASES—CLARIFICATION OF ANSWER TO STARRED QUESTION

Mr. Jean Chrétien (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): On Monday, February 7, Mr. Speaker, I replied in French to starred question No. 319 asked by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition. The English translation does not reflect exactly the meaning of the information received from the officials. With your permission therefore, Mr. Speaker, I should like to read the reply, as prepared in English, to clarify the record.

The answer to the first part of the question is as follows. In addition to stocks delivered to the Canadian Wheat Board by producers the only purchases of wheat by the Canadian Wheat Board since December 1, 1965 have been limited overages received from terminal elevators. These overages are purchased at the initial payment price for the grain concerned.

2. As a sales policy the Canadian Wheat Board allows members of the grain trade who are agents of the board to enter into firm sales commitments for wheat at seaboard ports for immediate shipment or for shipment within authorized contract periods in the future. At the present time the board has not entered into any such sales commitments for shipment beyond July 31, 1966. In some cases the agents of the board may purchase this wheat for any destination of their choice. In other cases such sales are confined to destinations which cannot be changed without permission of the board. Since August 3, 1965 the board has confined sales by its agents to named destinations. The wheat recently purchased by the Canadian government from agents of the board for shipment to India was made possible by the board agreeing to change to India the destinations previously agreed.

3. Currently most of the board's open sales commitments to its agents are for named destinations. Prior to export shipment, the board has no way of ascertaining to what extent its agents have finalized sales to the ultimate buyers in the declared destinations.

CANADA MEDAL

PROVISION FOR AWARD DURING CENTENNIAL YEAR

Mr. Fernand E. Leblanc (Laurier) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 122, an act concerning the Canada medal.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Leblanc: The Canada medal was created by virtue of order in council No. 7964 of October 14, 1943, as a recognition for extraordinary and meritorious services rendered by Canadians and non-Canadians. Now, it would seem that the various governments which have successively governed our country have forgotten the order and have shelved it.

Under my bill, the Canada medal would be awarded for the first time on July 1, 1967, on the occasion of the centennial celebrations. Afterwards, it would be awarded each year, on the same date, during appropriate ceremonies.

Contrary to the order in council, this bill provides for a bilingual medal. In addition, the decoration should proudly bear the symbol—

[Mr. Chrétien.]

Mr. Speaker: I wish to remind the hon. member that he is entitled to give a brief explanation but he may now be exceeding the limits set down by standing orders.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

POWER

INQUIRY AS TO FEDERAL ASSISTANCE IN MANITOBA AND NEWFOUNDLAND

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister made a statement today regarding the development of power in Manitoba following the undertaking entered into on February 18, 1963 to carry out a survey of the Nelson River area. I would ask the Prime Minister whether it is the government's intention to apply a similar policy to the development of Hamilton Falls in Labrador; and have any discussions been held with the premier of Newfoundland within recent days or weeks with regard to federal co-operation or assistance in the Brinco developments.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. The situation with regard to Hamilton Falls, as my right hon. friend knows, is different from that which I announced this afternoon in that two provinces are collaborating in the development of this power with a private corporation. They have not asked for the kind of assistance which we have worked out with the government of Manitoba.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Has there been any discussion whatever with the Premier of Newfoundland about the assumption by the federal government of any portion of the expense in connection with the development of this project?

Mr. Pearson: Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, but I should like to check back because this has been going on for two or three years and I want to make sure that no request was made in the early days of which I have no knowledge.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question which I will direct to the new minister of resources and energy in his new capacity. He has probably found out by now that I have been trying for three years to get a copy of the interim report on the national transmission grid which was promised to me—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hamilton: —in September, 1963, and which I still—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hamilton: My question is—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Chair heard the first part of the hon. member's question and it was obviously not a question. The hon. member was making a statement, which is quite out of order.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I think it was quite obvious, if I may respectfully say so, that the hon. member was trying to introduce his question, which was perfectly in order.

Mr. Speaker: I beg to disagree with the hon. member.

Mr. Hamilton: Then may I reword my question, Mr. Speaker. I would ask the minister of resources and energy when we can be given the interim report on the study of a national transmission grid.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): May I take that question as notice and answer tomorrow, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wish to address my question to the Prime Minister and it relates to the statement he has just made regarding the development of power in Manitoba. The Prime Minister mentioned that the ultimate would be to produce a potential five million kilowatts. Can that five million kilowatts be realized without agreement with the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta with respect to the use of waters flowing through those provinces?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, that is a question of detail which I shall have to take as notice.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, to the minister who will become the new minister of energy and resources. May I ask him whether the government has yet made any formal objection to the government of the United States with respect to the intention of that government to proceed with the development of the Rampart dam project on the international Yukon river?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I am not well acquainted with this question. I am getting acquainted with problems day by day, and I will try to get the necessary information.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a further supplementary question which I will direct to the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister indicate whether the federal government assistance is in the form of a direct grant or a loan to be amortized at the expense of the people of Manitoba over the years?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend will read my statement he will find the answer to that question. It is not a direct grant.

FINANCE

REPRESENTATIONS TO U.S. RESPECTING APPLICATION OF MONETARY POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Last week I asked him whether he would table the aide-memoire from his department to the United States government regarding the economic guide lines as they affect Canadian subsidiaries of United States corporations. He promised to do so at the proper time. I should like to ask the minister whether the proper time has arrived, and would he be prepared to table that aide-memoire now?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): As I said, Mr. Speaker, on February 11, the aide-memoire had to do with the securities and exchange commission regulations. As soon as I have had an opportunity to consider the matter further with some of my colleagues, we will have to decide what is the appropriate time.

[Translation]

SOURCE OF FUNDS TO AID UNDER-DEVELOPED COUNTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance?

The Canadian government has pledged to give the world bank a substantial sum of $25 million to fight poverty in the world. Could the minister tell us if that amount will come out of the consolidated revenue of the country or if the Bank of Canada will create new credit for that purpose? Can the minister tell us where he will find that money to help the underdeveloped countries of the world?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: That question is very important but its scope is such that we cannot expect the minister to answer it right now.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

I know how broad the question is but it seems to me that it is not so difficult to tell us where the $25 million to be paid to the bank will come from.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member will put his question on the order paper, I am sure that the minister will be able to answer it.

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

CONSIDERATION OF ESTIMATES BY STANDING COMMITTEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Prime Minister. With the tabling of the estimates yesterday by the Minister of National Revenue and the clarification he made today regarding the two different translations, could I ask the Prime Minister whether or not it is the intention of the government to refer these estimates to the committees so that preliminary committee work can begin immediately?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

JUVENILE DELINQUENCY—COMMITTEE CONSIDERATION OF REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Solicitor General a question regarding the report of his departmental committee on the juvenile problem in Canada. Before asking my question perhaps I might be permitted, having more than a passing interest myself in the report—and I think I express the feelings of all hon. members and the people of the country in this regard—to say that we are happy indeed that these studies have come to a conclusion and this very valuable report has been made.

The question I ask the minister is this. Will the government give favourable consideration to the early reference of this report to the standing committee on justice and legal affairs in order that the House of Commons may consider the matter and make its recommendations as to the implementation of policy in light of the considerations arising out of this report?

[Mr. Caouette.]

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, permit me first to express appreciation for the hon. member's kind remarks regarding the report. I commend him for initiating the committee which brought down the report. As the hon. member is aware, this far reaching report is under study in the Department of Justice and the office of the Solicitor General. I hope to be able to make an announcement when the studies are completed.

PUBLIC SERVICE

PRINTING BUREAU EMPLOYEES ENGAGED IN PRIVATE PRINTING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. May I ask the hon. lady if she intends to permit permanent employees of the Queen's Printer to be directors of or directly interested in a private printing syndicate outside the functions of the Queen's Printer?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member would care to place that question on the order paper.

[Later:]

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege just before the question period ends. Because of the fact that I may have directed my earlier question to the wrong minister—I should have addressed myself to the Minister of Industry—because of the fact that I was not permitted to receive a reply, and in view of the graveness of the charges against employees of the Queen's Printer, I should like to discuss the matter at ten o'clock this evening.

SPORTS

EXCLUSION OF CANADIAN CITIES IN HOCKEY LEAGUE EXPANSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Has the government looked into the anti-trust aspect of the exclusion of Vancouver from a National Hockey League franchise? Would he point out to the directors of the N.H.L. that the league was started as a Canadian league and that Canadians object strongly to it being turned into an organization which discriminates against first class Canadian teams for the benefit of owners in the United States?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's representations are very interesting and I am sure they will be noted by the minister.

FINANCE

REPRESENTATIONS TO U.S.—APPLICATION OF CANADIAN LEGISLATION TO U.S. COMPANIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a puck to direct to the Minister of Finance. May I ask the minister whether, in view of the report in the morning newspapers that the United States deficit in its balance of payments in 1965 was the lowest that country has known since 1958, he will consider making further representations to the authorities in Washington to rescind the troublesome guide lines which threaten to interfere with Canada's economic and political sovereignty?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, my colleagues and I will be visiting with the respective secretaries of the United States cabinet on March 4 and I can assure the hon. gentleman that the matter he has raised will be a subject of discussion.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance. In view of Washington's direct investment guide lines which have been extended to Canada and which are designed to improve the United States balance of payments position at the expense of Canada, will the minister take action requesting United States subsidiaries in Canada to file quarterly returns at Ottawa indicating the extent of their compliance with the United States guide lines?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, my first comment on that question is that it is really quite impossible for the United States to improve its position at the expense of Canada, and that is the reason we have suggested to the United States authorities that these guide lines on direct investment should not apply to us.

With regard to the second question, I will have to take the hon. gentleman's suggestion under consideration.

Mr. Crouse: I have a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The other day the Minister of Finance stated that in the event the United States guide lines were affecting Canada he would take action for the benefit of the Canadian economy. May I ask the minister just what action he could contemplate taking unless he ascertains the amount of compliance by United States companies in Canada as a result of these guide lines?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is now submitting an argument to the Minister of Finance.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister if we can have his assurance that when he meets with the United States authorities on March 4 he will not tell them what he told the Canadian people last December, that these guide lines are an economic windfall for Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

PENITENTIARIES

COLLINS BAY—INVESTIGATION INTO ESCAPE OF PRISONERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Prince Edward-Lennox): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Is he able to report to the house the findings resulting from the special investigation into the prison break by three prisoners from Collins Bay penitentiary last Wednesday who were later captured near St. Catharines?

Mr. Speaker: Obviously this is a matter of great general interest but I suggest to the hon. member that it should really be placed on the order paper.

MUNICIPAL DEVELOPMENT LOAN FUND

INQUIRY AS TO EXTENSION OF PERIOD

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Has he met the provincial ministers regarding the municipal development loan fund and what is his position?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am meeting the ministers of the provinces on this subject this afternoon.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. When will the house be informed of the decision of the government?

Mr. Sharp: As soon as it is made, Mr. Speaker.

Inquiries of the Ministry

FISHERIES

SEALS—REQUEST FOR DELAY IN AMENDMENT OF REGULATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Minister of Fisheries. Up to the present time has the order in council concerning proposed changes in the seal hunting regulations been passed and, if not, will he delay the passing of this order in council to enable the shore fishermen from Cape Ray to Cape North to supplement their income in this manner and to make further representations to himself and to his officials outlining their objections?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, in replying to a question addressed to me on Friday last, I think, I stated that the submission for the order in council had already been signed, and it is expected to be passed within the next 24 hours. At this late date so close to the opening of the season I do not wish to delay the passing of amendments to the seal hunting regulations.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I thank the minister for his reply, but may I ask him if he would not consult with his colleagues who are also involved in this matter and consider if this matter cannot be delayed for a few days longer to see if something cannot be done about the situation?

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, on different occasions in the house it was stated that the department was open for ideas with respect to amendments that could be made to the regulations. Public meetings were announced which were held in Moncton and the fishermen concerned had the right to make representations. As I said just now, it is too late at this time to consider delaying the passing of these amendments.

HARMFUL RESULTS OF FEEDING LAKE ERIE FISH TO MINK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries. In view of the really alarming reports that mink fed on fish caught in lake Erie have become sterile, what investigations are now being conducted by the department to find the harmful substance in the fish?

[Mr. Sharp.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question might very well be placed on the order paper.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. What was the purpose of the visit by the Prime Minister and the house leader to the offices occupied by the Leader of the Opposition and the opposition whip?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that is not a proper question.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

INQUIRY AS TO REFUNDS TO EMPLOYERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It has to do with the Canada Pension Plan, and it stems from several representations and complaints I have received from employers. Is the minister considering making provision for employers who have paid more than the maximum, similar to that in the case of employees?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, this aspect of the Canada Pension Plan is the responsibility of the Minister of National Revenue.

Mr. Hales: Mr Speaker, may I address my question to the Minister of National Revenue?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the Department of National Revenue is responsible for the collection of funds under the Canada Pension Plan. The problem just raised is one to which we have given a good deal of consideration. Indeed, it was considered by the committee of the house when it examined the Canada Pension Plan. To date my department has not come up with a method of calculating the amount of refunds that should go to each employer, or a method that would facilitate making such refunds. I might also point out that in the United States, where the social security system has been operating for some 40 years, they have not yet been able to work out a system whereby they can refund amounts to employers.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of National Revenue. I recollect that in the committee studies with respect to the Canada Pension Plan we were told that these overages paid by the employer were part of the actuarial picture.

Mr. Benson: All contributions coming in under the Canada Pension Plan were taken into consideration in developing the amount involved. The amount of employers' contributions which would be refundable, if a method to do so could be worked out, would amount to around $5 million a year.

Mr. Monteith: I have a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If this were done and, for example, a method were worked out to refund the employers' share, would this affect the calculation of the whole plan?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is becoming a debate between the minister and the hon. member who asked the question. I suggest we go on to another subject.

TRANSPORT

WELLAND CANAL—INQUIRY AS TO BYPASS CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. R. Tolmie (Welland): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Transport. It is of the utmost importance to the operations of the St. Lawrence seaway as well as to the city of Welland that we should know as soon as possible whether the proposed Welland canal bypass is going to be built. Can the minister tell us what progress has been made in this matter?

Mr. Speaker: Order This question is obviously important and perhaps it is urgent but I still feel it should go on the order paper.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

GEORGE VICTOR SPENCER—REQUEST FOR JUDICIAL INQUIRY

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Prime Minister whether the government has made any decision yet respecting the setting up of a commission to investigate the Spencer matter. The right hon. gentleman said he expected a decision would be made in a few days. That was, I think, some ten days ago.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as I said the other day, it was hoped that the estimates of the Department of Justice would be before the house early this week or during this week.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: That is what I said in the house the other day and I repeat it now. I said that when the estimates were introduced I would make a statement on this subject which could then be debated by hon. members.

Mr. Diefenbaker: My question was a simple one. Has a decision been made on this matter? A discussion of the subject can, of course, be undertaken when the estimates of the Minister of Justice are before us. But a question involving a person who is being followed day and night under continual surveillance should not be brushed aside.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the importance of setting up the commission of inquiry into the Spencer case without delay, would the Prime Minister not consider bringing on the estimates of the Department of Justice this afternoon just for a few moments, during which he would have the opportunity to make his statement?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the best way of reaching the estimates of the Department of Justice is by finishing as quickly as possible the estimates of the department now before the committee.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Later:]

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Prime Minister whether he realizes that the estimates of the Department of Justice will be the twelfth department to come before the committee of supply, which probably means that the Spencer case will not be dealt with until the end of next week? In view of that fact, will the Prime Minister consider having the estimates of the Department of Justice come up for consideration earlier, perhaps right after the estimates of the Department of Transport?

Mr. Pearson: I will be glad to look into that suggestion, Mr. Speaker.

EXPO '67

MONTREAL—POSSIBLE STRIKE OF CONSTRUCTION WORKERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes asked me a question. I was able to hear only three or four words of it and I agreed to take it as notice and reply later.

The hon. member inquired what steps were being taken with regard to threats of a widespread strike in the Montreal area and its possible effect on Expo '67. I think the hon. gentleman and the house generally will be interested to know that an agreement has been entered into with the trade unions, among them being the Building and Construction Trades Council of Montreal and vicinity Q.F.L-C.L.C., and the Council of Syndicats of the Construction Trades of Montreal, C.N.T.U., which provides that there shall be no strike or work stoppage or picketing which would be an obstacle to the organization, management or liquidation of the exhibition. In case of strike action or picketing the unions agree to proclaim such actions as illegal and in violation of the agreement and they undertake to urge their members to resume work.

As may be seen from this agreement, Expo and the unions have agreed to deal with strikes or picketing which could hinder the exhibition. I would therefore hope that the hon. member can accept the assurance given by my colleague, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and by the Expo authorities that everything possible has been, and is being done to deal with labour problems which might adversely affect the progress of the exhibition.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO ACTION RESPECTING AMENDMENT OF LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Kootenay West asked me a question which contained three parts. I am not sure whether I am clear as to the intent of the question. The first part dealt with amendments to the Pension Act. So far as pension rates are concerned, I have dealt with these in answer to a previous question. We are awaiting the outcome of talks with the veterans organizations. As to amendments to any other parts of the Pension Act we will of course await the report of the committee of inquiry under Mr. Justice Wood. There is no intention at the moment of dealing with amendments to the War Veterans Allowance Act. I believe I answered the question dealing with the report on the Hong Kong veterans yesterday as well.

[Mr. Nicholson.]

CANADIAN CONFEDERATION

INQUIRY INTO ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL FORCES AFFECTING UNITY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister concerning an important matter about which I asked him a question approximately a week ago. He then said he would look into it. Can the right hon. gentleman advise us now whether the interdepartmental inquiry into the economic and social forces affecting the unity of Canada has been completed and, if so, whether this report will be made available to members of the house?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member asked me this question the other day. On inquiry I find that the report itself was tabled in this house during May, 1965, and thereby made available to members. At that time it was stated that this study would be continued by the tax structure committee. It is now being carried on by them.

POWER

REPORT ON MEETING OF COMMITTEE ON TIDAL POWER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, may I answer a question which was put to the Prime Minister last Friday by the hon. member for Colchester-Hants. It had to do with tidal power in the Bay of Fundy. A meeting of officials on this subject took place in Ottawa last Thursday, February 10. On the federal side the meeting was attended by officials responsible to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys and the Minister of Transport. They met with officials representing the governments of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. I am advised that the meeting, which was largely exploratory in nature, was highly successful. The results of the meeting have, of course, to be reported to the responsible ministers. Following that, we hope a mutually satisfactory understanding can be reached between the parties.

FORESTRY

UNION REPRESENTATION AT FORTHCOMING NATIONAL CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Forestry in connection with the national forestry conference to be held next week and to be attended by representatives of provincial governments, industry and business. May I ask whether the labour unions will be represented?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Orlikow: I should like to ask the minister if he would give consideration to having representatives of the unions there in view of the fact that the work force in this industry will be sharply reduced in the next few years as a result of technological changes.

Mr. Sauvé: I will, Mr. Speaker.

BANKRUPTCY

REQUEST FOR TERMS OF REFERENCE OF COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Justice if his recollection has improved with respect to the terms of reference to the three-man committee on bankruptcy, and if those terms of reference are in written form is the hon. gentleman prepared to table them?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Minister of Justice): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The members of the committee were given very general terms of reference in relation to the whole question of bankruptcy reform. These terms are set out in correspondence between myself and the members of the committee and I have no objection to tabling the correspondence. I will do so as soon as possible.

While I am on my feet perhaps I might answer a question which was asked by the Leader of the Opposition as well as by the hon. member for Yukon. I was asked whether the studies now being undertaken with a view to the revision of the Bankruptcy Act might not enable persons guilty of irregularities under existing legislation to escape the consequences of their acts if some action were not taken to suspend the operation of the legislative processes within which certain bankruptcy proceedings can be taken, at least while this committee is carrying on its study.

Mr. Speaker, I do not see any relationship between the limitation periods within which proceedings under the Bankruptcy Act must be taken and the studies now in progress. Any offences under the Bankruptcy Act that are discovered would be dealt with by the appropriate authorities under the present act. Such irregularities would not be discovered as a result of the work of the committee. Also, such prosecutions as have been taking place in Quebec, and which have been described as involving fraudulent bankruptcies, are offences under the Criminal Code for such crimes as arson and fraud. These are indictable offences in respect of which there is no limitation period for the laying of charges.

Mr. Nielsen: A supplementary question. First, may I ask the minister if he will table the terms of reference contained in the correspondence to the three members of the committee before his estimates come up so as to allow an intelligent and efficient discussion of them? Second, may I point out to the minister with respect to his reply to the questions yesterday—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Nielsen: —that nowhere—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member cannot point out anything in connection with the minister's reply. He can ask a further question if he wishes to do that.

Mr. Nielsen: On a question of privilege or point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Favreau: Which one?

Mr. Nielsen: —the minister has purported to place words in my mouth and alter the record of Hansard with respect to the questions I asked him yesterday. If he will refer to them he will find I made no allegations of offences or irregular practice but rather with regard to procedures under the act.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member knows he can ask questions and if he is not satisfied with the reply he gets from the minister he can ask a supplementary question but he cannot comment on a reply he receives from the minister.

Mr. Nielsen: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, if the minister wishes to make such statements he should do so on motions.

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Villeneuve.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—REQUEST FOR CANADIAN TROOPS TO AID U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Inquiries of the Ministry

In view of the fact that the government of the Philippines has decided to send troops to Viet Nam and in view of the fact that American bombings have been resumed, has the Canadian government been asked to send Canadian troops to Viet Nam to help the United States?

Some hon. Members: A hundred thousand.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): We have received a letter from a Mr. Echlin, which has not yet been answered, but we have asked for the advice of the Department of Justice.

Mr. Caouette: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I think the Secretary of State for External Affairs did not understand my question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member might be able to ask his question again if he is not happy with the answer given by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. For the time being, the Chair recognizes the hon. member for Huron.

Mr. Martin: I think that I did understand your question but that you did not understand my answer.

[English]

IMMIGRATION

REPORTED INCREASE IN APPLICATIONS FROM RUMANIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, my question arises out of an article in last month's issue of the magazine Tablet and I should like to direct it to the minister in charge of immigration. Has there been an unusual increase so far this year in applications from Rumania of people wishing to emigrate from the province of Transylvania to Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I believe this question should be placed on the order paper.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REFUSAL OF EXPRESS SHIPMENTS BECAUSE OF TRUCKING STRIKE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Does the minister know why the C.N.R. is refusing to pick up express from the Huron county area for delivery to the Montreal area?

[Mr. Caouette.]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think perhaps that is an urgent question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If hon. members feel this is an urgent question that should be replied to by the minister at this time—the Chair has grave doubts—then I would be quite satisfied to hear the Minister of Transport. Are hon. members in agreement with this?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think, sir, it is an urgent question because an embargo on shipping at any time is something that is put on suddenly and, one hopes, is taken off just as quickly as possible. That is the situation with regard to the embargo which the railways have had to put on in some parts of Ontario because of the regrettable strike of the truckers and the fact that in the circumstances they have not sufficient capacity to carry all the goods that are offered to the railways.

Mr. McKinley: Could the minister say whether this situation will improve before the strike is over?

Mr. Pickersgill: I could not say that but I fervently hope the strike will soon be over.

LABOUR RELATIONS

ONTARIO—REQUEST FOR INTERVENTION IN TRUCKING STRIKE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Labour. In view of what the Minister of Transport has just said, that this action is spreading all over Ontario and causing economic hardship, will the minister reconsider his position, bring these parties together and try to bring about a settlement?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. My understanding is that the question of the hon. member was directed to the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Starr: To the Minister of Labour.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, the parties are together this afternoon. I have been telling hon. members off and on for two weeks that the parties have been having meetings.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, we get the same answer from the Minister of Labour each time we ask this question. In view of the fact that the parties have not been able to arrive at a settlement on their own, will the minister not use his good offices, take a personal interest in bringing these parties together, sit down with them and help them to bring about a conclusion to this strike?

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, the minister is following the matter very closely.

Mr. Starr: So are we.

Mr. Nicholson: These negotiations are going on between management and labour. I understand that they are making progress in these negotiations and I do not think the minister should intervene when the parties are working together in this atmosphere.

Mr. Starr: They are not getting anywhere. That is the job of the Minister of Labour.

PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS

WEST BLOCK—REPORTED REDUCTION IN ELEVATOR SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. It is a question of some urgent moment to the members and staff of the house. Is it true that at least one of the elevators in the west block has been officially condemned, and what steps does the minister plan to take to restore effective elevator service in that building?

Mr. Speaker: This is a particularly urgent question to members of parliament, but I suggest it might be discussed between hon. members and the Minister of Public Works.

CANADIAN FLAG

SUGGESTED PROCLAMATION OF FLAG DAY AS HOLIDAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that this is the first anniversary of the new flag and in view of the fact that there are no national holidays between New Year's and spring, would the Prime Minister consider declaring February 15 national flag day and a national holiday?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: It is an interesting suggestion and the hon. member may wish to place it on the order paper.

Inquiries of the Ministry

HEALTH AND WELFARE

PESTICIDES—RESIDUE IN TISSUES OF MARINE ANIMALS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent (Ont.)): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. It is based on the fact that there has been some very adverse publicity about the matter in the last few days. Are any research efforts directed by his department into an examination of residue properties in agricultural chemicals to determine whether or not they may be directly responsible for problems connected with the use of fresh water fish as food for humans, animals and birds, both wild and domestic?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member for Kent (Ont.) would place this question on the order paper.

[Translation]

WINTER WORKS

QUEBEC—FEDERAL INSPECTION OF MUNICIPAL ACCOUNTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration.

Would the Minister tell the house if there have been conversations recently with the Quebec Minister of Municipal Affairs, Mr. Laporte, with regard to the inspection of the books of Quebec municipalities by his departmental inspectors?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I got in touch with the Minister of Municipal Affairs on the point raised in the house, but as regards an investigation, or rather an inspection of the books of municipalities, steps have not yet been taken.

Mr. Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question? Could the minister tell the house if the Quebec Minister of Municipal Affairs has any objection to an inspection of the books of Quebec municipalities?

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Speaker, no objection has been made to that inspection. As we know, auditing is done through the provincial governments and it is done regularly. In some cases, huge amounts of money were recovered by provincial auditors. The question is whether, in some cases, more thorough examinations should be made. If this is considered necessary, I shall then get in touch with the government authorities.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. Is the minister aware that every time inspectors go to Quebec municipalities to check, officers of Mr. Laporte's department inform the municipalities concerned that some federal inspectors are going over there to collect funds?

Mr. Marchand: No, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

FISHERIES

QUEBEC—FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL DEVELOPMENT PROJECT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries based upon a press release from his department yesterday regarding a joint federal-provincial fisheries development project in the province of Quebec involving, among other things, the use of helicopters and the like. Will such facilities and services as have been available to eastern Canada and Quebec for the past few months be made available to British Columbia in the near future?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I wish to assure all members of the house that there will be no discrimination whatsoever in so far as British Columbia is concerned.

Mr. Howard: When are you going to look westward?

[Translation]

URANIUM

INQUIRY AS TO DISCUSSIONS RESPECTING SALE TO FRANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Would he advise the house about the stage of negotiations between France and Canada concerning the sale of uranium?

[English]

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): I am afraid that I cannot help the hon. member, Mr. Speaker. I have had nothing at all to do with contracts dealing with uranium.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I had a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs but he has left the house without authority.

Mr. Pickersgill: He is in the house.

[Mr. Marchand.]

DRUGS

ESTABLISHMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER COSTS

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (for the Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved:

That a special committee be appointed to continue the inquiry into and to report upon costs of drugs, begun by special committees during the twenty-sixth parliament;

That the committee consist of 24 members to be designated later by the house; and be empowered to sit while the house is sitting;

That the committee be empowered to consider and recommend, as it may deem expedient, respecting a comprehensive and effective program to reduce the price of drugs;

That the committee be empowered to send for persons, papers, and records, and to report from time to time, to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be deemed advisable, and to engage the services of counsel, accountants, and such other technical and clerical personnel as may be deemed necessary;

That the minutes of proceedings of and evidence given before the special committees at the 26th Parliament be referred to the said committee and be made part of the records thereof;

That the provisions of Standing Orders 66 and 67(1) be suspended in relation to such committee.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Rinfret in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

1. Departmental administration, $4,862,900.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, the departmental estimates have recently had some considerable attention and we in this party now wish to conclude the examination thereof provided we receive answers to one or two questions. A moment ago I mentioned to the Prime Minister that I intended to refer to some remarks he made last evening. I am not going to hold him up but I want him to know that I am going to make some reference to those remarks because they revealed a rather unusual viewpoint about the operation of parliament. Indeed, they would appear to indicate that his attitude is that the United States system is in some particulars to be preferred to ours and that a rather difficult situation has been created under our system of government whereby the Prime Minister and ministers of the Crown are subject to daily questioning in the house.

I know the Prime Minister has an appointment, as he informed me a moment ago, but I simply want to refer to the words indicative of an attitude that whatever the government says is good and that the opposition should not question the government as to what it does. I refer to the Prime Minister's appearance on a television show last evening when he said, among other things:

—I used to think before I had this responsibility that there was no comparison between the parliamentary and the congressional system; that it was so much better to have the executive right there on the floor of the legislature exposing itself to parliamentary criticism every day; so that if it didn't retain the confidence of the House of Commons, we had an election. I thought that was the good old British way of doing things and it was the right way of doing things. I used to be a little scornful of the Congressional system, where the executive were separated from the legislative side of government.

An hon. Member: He has changed his mind.

Mr. Diefenbaker: He then said:

They had four years and during that four years —I was going to say they could get away with anything. Now I think there is something to be said for a little more independence—I mean by that, the executive not being subjected every hour to parliamentary appearances.

That is a most unusual doctrine. Then he goes on to set out changes that should be made or should be considered in the cabinet system to increase the number of cabinet ministers but with a reduction in the number of ministers who would exercise an effective role in the processes of government.

What the Prime Minister said last night reveals a state of mind shown over and over again by his government in refusing to give to the house and the country full and complete answers. I would refer to the following question and the Prime Minister's answer:

You mean by that that you really haven't got time to sit back and think ahead of next week unless you really—

Mr. Pearson: We haven't got time to think, or as much time as we should have, and we haven't got time—because of the important, but time consuming, processes of parliamentary and democratic discussion—time to get before parliament, and to get parliamentary decisions on, all the matters that require action. This does not mean that we should scrap parliamentary processes, because in a democratic society there is no better way than discussion to arrive at decision.

Then he goes on to state that the United States system has advantages in that for four years or whatever the period is the executive can, to use the Prime Minister's words, "get away with anything". That is a doctrine that needs guide lines. I will suggest to the Prime Minister, that his thinking as evidenced by his remarks last night does not have that regard for parliament which those occupying the position of Prime Minister should have. I hope that is one of those loose statements made without having had time to think. It is indicative of a trend on the part of this government made up of so many civil servants who think we in the opposition ought to be seen and not heard; that we ought to listen and not question.

The interpretation of what he said is that we should fix a regular period for parliament, that ministers should not be subject to examination and that examination is a wasteful proceeding. I say to the Minister of Transport that I feel sure, with his dedication to parliamentary traditions and procedure, there will be no agreement on his part with the views expressed by the Prime Minister to this nation last night.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that the right hon. gentleman has in this discussion of the estimates of the Department of Transport put on record certain sentences that I undoubtedly said last night, perhaps he would let me put on record one sentence which he carefully omitted. That was, "It is going to be difficult to reconcile the two things"—by the "two things" I meant executive decision and parliamentary discussion —"because parliamentary discussion is still, rightly, a very important part of our political lives".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, yes, Mr. Chairman, a very important part. But the Prime Minister says it is such an important part that he feels we ought to give consideration to the adoption of the American system.

Mr. Pickersgill: He never said that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have read every line of the Prime Minister's remarks. If the Prime Minister wants to table the whole thing I would be very glad if he would do so. However, I read every word of his explanation on page 2, every word from the beginning to the end. The Prime Minister has added, "It is going to be difficult to reconcile the two things because parliamentary discussion is still, rightly, a very important part of our political lives". It is not only a very important part but it is essential to the preservation of democracy and the maintenance of the parliamentary tradition. That is how important it is.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I shall make reference to that on another occasion. I know the Prime Minister has an appointment today, and I am not going to say any more except that this doctrine is the doctrine of those who would control parliament, who would permit themselves to be considered as being set apart, and it is a denial indeed of the whole principle of parliamentary discussion.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the right hon. gentleman a question? He said a moment ago that I had indicated that we should adopt a congressional system. Where did the right hon. gentleman find that in the text of what I said.?

Mr. Diefenbaker: If it was not to be adopted, Mr. Chairman, why was it talked about?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Prime Minister can laugh. This is the way all these things have started on the part of this government. The Prime Minister has asked me what is wrong with talking about it. I know the progress that has been made on this first anniversary of the flag. First the Young Liberals said we should have a new flag without the Union Jack thereon.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There is one applauder, Mr. Chairman.

An hon. Member: It is your flag too.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then the next step was a recommendation by the Young Liberals as to what should be done. On Friday and Saturday last the discussion culminated around the step that has been spoken about often by the hon. member for Lotbinière. There was discussion whether the time has not come to abolish the Queen in her capacity as Queen of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is the way these things start.

Mr. Pearson: So we must not talk about it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, Mr. Chairman, I am sure the Prime Minister was pleased with that resolution.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the Leader of the Opposition but at this time we are discussing the estimates of the Department of Transport.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

The Deputy Chairman: We have heard different expressions of opinion on the work of parliament and I think we should return to the discussion of the estimates of the Department of Transport.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I am always one of those who want to conform.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It was only under the provocation of questioning that I raised this matter. If it had not been for the Prime Minister stepping in and saying what he did say I would not have raised this subject. Of course, I did not mean to do so; all I wanted to do was to point to the interpretation apparently to be placed on such remarks.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that the right hon. gentleman has begun discussing this subject perhaps you would give him a little leeway in order that he may say a word or two about the recognition of our national flag on this first anniversary of its acceptance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If I did, Mr. Chairman, my remarks would certainly not qualify under a discussion of the estimates of the Department of Transport, although they might carry me a long way. However, I was dealing with the interesting way in which these things are brought about, first by laying a foundation such as the Prime Minister did last night and then ultimately these things that are simply loose, idle and fragmentary words become basic principles. What was said last night reveals that the Prime Minister's attitude is that we are too prone to examine, that we should not have government required to answer but should follow the American system whereby the executive branch is removed from the legislative and is able, as the Prime Minister said, to carry on for four years regardless of what it does.

I think you will agree, Mr. Chairman, that the examination of these estimates has been very careful. The scrutiny of the estimates of the Department of Transport has been of a general nature but very helpful. Many suggestions have been made. We want now to go to another department but there is one thing I emphasize, namely, that we have not forgotten channel 3. I shall return to that matter in order to secure answers from the Minister of Transport who is usually able to give full, complete, even though unsatisfactory, answers to questions that are put.

I start with something with which I think the minister will agree. I am not certain that the matter comes entirely within his jurisdiction. As a matter of fact, it is both federal and provincial. I refer to the need of a national effort, led by federal and provincial representatives, to reduce the massive highway homicide in our country. We read from day to day of the losses of the American forces in South Viet Nam.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I might raise a point of order. The right hon. gentleman wants us to uphold parliamentary traditions and one of our parliamentary traditions is that in committee of supply observations should be related to the administrative responsibility of the minister. I have absolutely no administrative responsibilities whatsoever with regard to the subject to which the right hon. gentleman is now referring.

Mr. Starr: No wonder you have taken five days for your estimates.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am going to ask for some leadership on the part of the hon. gentleman in his capacity as Minister of Transport.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman says he is going to ask for some leadership. I am going to try to give it right away. The first bit of leadership I would give is to suggest to the right hon. gentleman that ministers of the Crown who are answerable to the house should not usurp the functions of others and should carry out the responsibilities entrusted to them. I would point out that neither in the statutes nor in the conventions of this parliament has the Minister of Transport been entrusted with any responsibility for any aspect of highway traffic except for the licensing of interprovincial trucking.

• (4:20 p.m.)

As the right hon. gentleman knows, because he was in parliament at the time and I do not believe I was, this matter was entrusted by parliament to certain provincial agencies by statute. Therefore there is no part of my administrative responsibility that touches on this subject at all. It may be that there are some aspects of it for which some other ministers have responsibility. However, after listening to the eloquent defence by the right hon. gentleman of the rights of parliament, I believe it would be a good idea to respect the rules of parliament.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I understand the susceptibilities of the hon. gentleman—

Mr. Pickersgill: I am not susceptible at all.

Mr. Diefenbaker: He is very susceptible.

Mr. Pickersgill: Just to the charms of the right hon. gentleman.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am trying to be cooperative and bring a matter before parliament that affects this nation. I am not going to be dissuaded by the petty arguments that are being advanced.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I rose on a point of order. If the right hon. gentleman, who after all was once prime minister of this country and had the main responsibility for the preservation of order in the house, thinks that order in the house and the application of the rules are a petty matter, and if the house wants to agree with him, I will desist. The right hon. gentleman has always considered that he makes the rules for himself and the rest of the house should abide by whatever rules he makes for himself.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am not going to answer in that spirit. I believe in the rules and I have always followed them.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have not tried to do that which this government has tried to do by graduated means, to shut the mouths and lips of the opposition. This has been characteristic of the hon. gentleman and all those with civil service experience sitting opposite.

In the best of good spirits, I want to advance something on behalf of this nation and ask for leadership by the Minister of Transport. It is apparent, however, that I am going to sow seeds on rocky soil. I was pointing out that I should like to see the minister give a lead so far as interprovincial transportation is concerned. This matter was declared to be within the jurisdiction of the federal parliament and by agreement it was sublet to the provinces. I want to bring out the need for action no matter where it comes from but I say it must come from here. This government convenes meetings regularly with the provinces on other matters that are primarily within provincial jurisdiction. They have not been above doing that. This government has convened conference after conference on matters primarily of provincial concern.

The point I want to bring before the committee is not one which you would expect to have the provocative effect that has been apparent. I suggest the convening of a conference by the federal Department of Transport—because there is no other department with the same facilities—to bring together the provinces to do something to meet what is taking place in this nation in ever-increasing measure. In ten years 35,031 persons have been killed and 949,000 have been injured in automobile accidents. The number of traffic deaths is increasing year by year. By 1964, the latest year for which figures are available, traffic injuries had increased from 2,586 to 4,655 persons per hundred thousand over a ten year period and traffic accidents increased to the extent that there has been an economic loss of $3,200,000.

To translate these terrible statistics into understandable form, they mean that there is one traffic accident in Canada every 90 seconds, one person injured every four minutes and one person killed every two hours. The toll is mounting. I see that this matter was discussed in the British House of Commons last year. It was pointed out that unless action was taken 1 per cent of the population would suffer death or injury every year in consequence of automobile accidents.

We have the Canadian Highway Safety Council. We have seen the commendable efforts of the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi who has conducted a one-man crusade. The Canadian Highway Safety Council has done much. There is also a contribution made by all governments. The hon. gentleman says he is not concerned. Well, there is a federal contribution about which he apparently knew nothing. The Canadian Highway Safety Council receives contributions for 62 per cent of its budget from industry and 38 per cent from governments. He says this is no concern of the federal government. The federal government provides an equal share of the 38 per cent in order to bring about in this nation the reduction or elimination of the traffic accidents.

I ask for action on a national basis to bring about a national conference on highway safety. I should like to see a high level national meeting convened by the Department of Transport with representatives of federal and provincial governments, industry and national organizations, with a view to setting up a national action council to cope with this most serious toll on our highways. The minister says the federal parliament has no responsibility.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I know the right hon. gentleman—

Mr. Diefenbaker: If the hon. gentleman will allow me—

Mr. Pickersgill: I just wanted to make a factual correction. I do not think the right hon. gentleman wants to misrepresent what I said. I said it was not part of my administrative responsibility. I think it is of the utmost concern to every Canadian.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is often said, Mr. Chairman, that a speech in parliament has no influence but the sudden conversion of the minister shows that the contrary is true.

Mr. Pickersgill: I just like to keep the record straight.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am not going to belabour the subject. I ask him to do something to meet a problem that is mounting in seriousness, a problem that merits the consideration of all Canadians. It is stated in the London Times of February 12 that in the United States in 1964 the number killed totalled 49,000 and 2,000,000 were injured. Yet in the Viet Nam war last year the total number of United States dead was 1,100. This is something that I impress on the minister. I ask him to do something and do it immediately to bring together the provinces so that a decision may be made on a course that will be helpful and beneficial.

The first thing which could be done before a conference is called is to provide for greater assistance to the Canadian Highways Safety Council, composed of men who devote themselves to public service and who are kept from doing everything they might be able to do because of the lack of finances. When we find ourselves this year spending extra billions of dollars we should be able to provide an amount to the Highway Safety Council which would give them new opportunities, through research and otherwise, to help reduce these terrible losses.

Now I come to another matter, which has to do with transportation. I am not going to repeat the arguments that have been advanced and strongly advanced against closures of railway facilities and the reduction of available facilities. A problem faced by every nation today in the western world is that of trying to maintain a transportation system while meeting the changes that research requires and demands. I suggest the setting up in the federal Department of Transport of a division of research and development. I believe this is necessary if we are to have an efficient high speed ground transportation system, which is most vitally needed for our national economy. I think provision should be made for research by private firms as well. Such a research and development division would discover in what way, by new technology, forms and concepts, ground transportation might be made economic and attractive.

The research and development authority which I suggest should have the right to enter into contracts with private firms relating to demonstration of high speed ground transportation and to contribute to the development of more efficient and economic systems. These demonstrations should be designed to measure and evaluate such factors as public response to new equipment, high speed improvement in convenience, improvement in shipments of less than carload lots, freight handling, and more frequent services for both passengers and freight. Somewhat similar legislation has been introduced in the United States. That legislation provides for $90 million to be made available for research. The legislation in the United States has the support of all railway brotherhoods in the transportation field.

I feel that something similar should be done within our own country. What course are we going to follow? When we were in office we were criticized for supporting the building of the Pine Point railroad. Indeed, it was described almost by the words that were used in 1878 regarding the C.P.R., that all you would have after construction was completed would be two rails of rust on a roadbed of uncertainty. It has turned out wonderfully well. Yet we were condemned by those who sit opposite when we provided the guarantees in this connection. I am putting this forward as a suggestion. I think I could even quote the hon. gentleman, if he insisted on my doing so—

Mr. Pickersgill: On the Pine Point railway?

Mr. Diefenbaker: —as to some of his criticism in that regard. Has the time not come when the national government should build railway lines or provide the necessary finances to build lines into inaccessible areas for development purposes and lease them back to the railways? In that way the government of Canada would eventually recover the capital outlay and the railway companies would not be immediately saddled with additional heavy capital expenditures. Such transportation so provided and the shortening of travel time between major points, particularly in the more heavily populated areas of Ontario and Quebec, would be beneficial to all Canadians. Should we nationally provide the capital for the building of high speed lines between populous areas? These are matters that will have to be considered.

However, I would ask the minister directly whether or not the government will give consideration to the setting up of a research and development branch along the lines I have indicated, the purpose of which would be the making of recommendations concerning high speed railway transportation and other transportation problems.

A committee should be set up to give to this new division or sector of the department the views of those directly or indirectly affected.

I should like to see on that committee a representative from each of the railway transportation unions as well as representatives from other interested bodies. I think we are living in a period when the transportation system which has been in existence for the last 75 or 80 years will have to be materially changed to meet the conditions of today. I therefore advance as a suggestion the forming of a committee along the lines indicated and the setting up of a research and development section in the department to this end.

I now come to the third and last matter I want to deal with today and I raise it because I think it is necessary to come back to it. It revolves around channel 3. When you review everything that the minister has said, verbose as he is, I can find no answer to the misgivings of various members in connection therewith. What is apparently contemplated by Mr. Snelgrove and his associates is of such a barefaced nature that it ought not be condoned, much less accepted, by parliament or the cabinet.

I want to find out from him what he intends to do. He says there is going to be an inquiry or investigation by the Board of Broadcast Governors and that it will be an open one. However, at the present time the B.B.G. is an emasculated caricature of the body we set up. There is a chairman but so far as the other senior appointments are concerned they have not yet been made. Why is this, Mr. Chairman? I was surprised when the minister, once having lived and indeed having had his beginning in the province of Manitoba, saw fit not to renew the term of office of Mr. Carlyle Allison. I find that difficult to understand because here was a man who devoted himself to public service. I would emphasize that when the Conservative government was in office we renewed the appointments of the Canadian National directors. We did not regard political faith as being the paramount qualification for appointment or continuance in office. I was very surprised that a man such as Carlyle Allison should have been given such cavalier treatment. He was a man who understood the business. He had been in it for quite a number of years. Now he has gone. Today there is a vacancy.

Since this government came into office the recommendations of the B.B.G. have not always been followed. We in the previous Conservative government followed their recommendations whatever they were. Therefore I say to the minister: What are his views on this application? The minister endeavoured to evade the whole matter by saying that he, in his shining armour of Canadianism, was doing his part to preserve channel 3 for Canada. Channel 3, Mr. Chairman, cannot go to the United States. The statement by the minister was simply a red herring designed to cover up—

Mr. Pickersgill: The right hon. gentleman will find nowhere in anything I said any statement that channel 3 could go to the United States.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I see.

Mr. Pickersgill: I said that it could be lost to Canada. I did not say it could be lost to the United States.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is not my exact recollection.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps the right hon. gentleman would let me finish.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I have got the floor.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes. I apologize to the right hon. gentleman.

The Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Pickersgill: I apologize to the right hon. gentleman. I know how allergic he is to facts.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I certainly am allergic to the subterfuges posing as facts that come from the hon. gentleman. I am allergic to that. I know his capacity with words and I say to him that if he did not use the actual words I attributed to him he left the impression that channel 3 might be lost to the United States. I, for one, want to see that what is Canada's remains Canada's. The United States should not get channel 3.

Mr. Pickersgill: I never said that.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr Diefenbaker: I see. That excuse goes by the board. In 1952 an international agreement was reached between Canada and the United States covering the allotment of television channels. I ask the minister this: Has the minister already secured from the Federal Communications Commission in Washington its consent to channel 3 being disposed of to Snelgrove and associates? Has the minister been in communication with the F.C.C.? I should like some information on that. I have a file on the matter but I want to find out what the minister is going to do in this regard. Has he not in the course of this debate come to the conclusion that all is not well in this field? Surely he has, if he is not allergic to facts.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that this is nothing but an endeavour on the part of Snelgrove and his associates to secure their reward for the contributions that they made from September on in particular. I ask: What is the view of the minister as to the award of this channel to Mr. Snelgrove and his associates? The minister has shown every sign of not being affected at all by it. Is he, after all, allergic to facts? Is that his position? Why does he not come before the house and make clear, after listening to all the arguments, what his views are?

Sir, it is all very well to go before the B.B.G but suppose the B.B.G. decides that it is in favour of this application. Is the government going to approve the recommendation? They did not in other cases. I ask the minister: Why is there any difference in the applications of Snelgrove and his associates?

The hon. member for Cumberland referred to a letter he had received from the Secretary of State. I make no apology for placing it on Hansard again. That letter dated January 25, 1966, from the Secretary of State to the hon. member for Cumberland reads in part:

> As you are aware, the Board of Broadcast Governors has not proceeded with such applications at the request of the government while the question of providing alternative television service was under policy study.

The reference to applications is to applications for licences. The letter continues:

> While, as you have noted, the government has now received the recommendations of the Fowler committee on this and other matters, it has not as yet had time to reach a decision.

That was on January 25, 1966. The letter then goes on:

> Until such a policy statement has been worked out and announced, the B.B.G. presumably will continue to maintain its current attitude toward applications for the creation or extension of alternate T.V. service.

Mr. Chairman, why did not the principles enunciated by the Secretary of State on January 25 apply in the Snelgrove case? I should like very much for the minister to give us some information in that connection. The minister's only explanation, which has been interpreted over and over again, was that he said he meant that channel 3 might be taken over by the United States.

Mr. Pickersgill: Not by me.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If channel 3 was not to be filled by a Canadian company, was that not a desperate attempt on his part to cover up the situation where there is no such danger? The minister said that "the United States regulates the use of adjoining channels in the same telecast area", referring to United States stations in the Lake Ontario area using channels 2 and 4.

I ask the minister, why did he place that explanation before the committee entirely without any justification in fact? May I suggest a review of what has taken place in this connection. I am not going back over the fine Italian hand that was revealed here or refer to the manner in which Mr. Snelgrove came to Ottawa, the fact that in Barrie on the day he departed he allegedly made the statement that he was going down to Ottawa to look over things down there and to see that the C.B.C. kept within proper limits in connection with political broadcasts. He came down here and he saw how things were. I want to know why such a departure from the course followed in the past was permitted in this case.

I want to know why there should be such a concentration in the hands of one group. This amounts to one of the most serious situations facing broadcasting today. I see a couple of hon. gentlemen who have just come into parliament for the first time. I have their remarks in this regard. Why should there be such a concentration in the hands of Geoff Stirling, Don Jamieson, Snelgrove and the Waters interests? So far as the Stirling and Jamieson interests are concerned, they have CJON-TV in St. John's, Newfoundland, plus five TV satellites. They have an AM radio station, CJON, in St. John's plus two radio satellites. They have CKWW in Windsor, CKPM in Ottawa and CKGM in Montreal. Where are we heading in this country? I was under the impression that the general course being followed sought to ensure that there should not be such a concentration in the hands of a few in a field so important as telecommunications.

But I continue. Mr. Stirling, Mr. Snelgrove and Mr. Waters have CKVR-TV Barrie, plus three satellites. The Snelgrove interests have CKBB in Barrie and CKCB in Collingwood, the latter today operating as a satellite but to become a full station. The Snelgrove and Waters interests have CKPT in Peterborough, and Waters owns station CHUM, Toronto, CHUM-FM Toronto, CKLC, Kingston, and CKLC-FM, Kingston. Then there are further interests in which they are joined.

Section 118 of the Radio Act states:

> Except with the permission of the Minister (of Transport) given upon the recommendation of the Board of Broadcast Governors, no person shall be licensed to operate more than one station and no license shall be issued to or held by a company owned or controlled by a company holding a license—

What is going to happen here? With this group of Liberal partisans, what chance is there of completely objective reporting and discussion of the news and the problems of Canada? Yet this list is to be added to. I say to the minister that I would expect him to take a strong stand against this sort of thing. Political friends are political friends but this situation cannot be justified by any argument. The hon. gentleman tried by an argument which was specious to pretend that the government of Canada was standing up fearlessly for Canadian rights. But the guide lines would indicate that political considerations were far more important and, indeed, that they are entirely the explanation for what is taking place. After all the arguments which have been advanced, I ask the minister, a man who never hides his views under a bushel: What will his attitude be regarding the award of this plum in the circumstances which have been set out so clearly by those who have preceded me?

During the course of this discussion we have covered many of the problems of the Department of Transport. It is a large, difficult and trying department. Indeed, I sometimes wonder whether what the Prime Minister said yesterday might not also be applied to the Minister of Transport—"I am so busy that I have not got time to think". Now that he has heard the views of members of the committee on this problem and read what has appeared in newspapers not unfavourable to the Liberal government, as he must have done, what is his attitude? Is he not beginning to wonder whether this thing should be permitted to go further? I have no hesitation in saying that in my opinion there can be no other honest conclusion but that the Snelgrove interests should not be permitted to bring about, in the manner in which they have endeavoured to do so, this agglomeration of power over the thinking of Canadians.

The day this application is granted to these people, if it is granted, the value of the franchise in Barrie for the Snelgrove station will increase, I am told, by at least $3 million. That is a very large political melon to hand to anyone, whatever his political contribution may have been.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I think it would probably suit all hon. members if I were to reply briefly to what the right hon. gentleman has said about channel 3. I propose to leave the other matters, if I may, until any other members who wish to speak have spoken. I can then reply on all the other subjects seriatim. But on each occasion when this matter has been brought up I have spoken on it and I think I ought to do so again.

I should like first of all to clear up the point about my "tremendous Canadianism". What I said was—I believe anyone who takes the trouble to look at Hansard will find that this is so; I may have said it clumsily, not having the right hon. gentleman's skill with words—that I had been advised that if one of the Buffalo stations on channel 2 or channel 4 had its transmitter tower moved about 25 miles it would then be impossible for channel 3 to serve metropolitan Toronto because it would create too much interference with that Buffalo station.

I believe this. I cannot prove it because I am not an engineer. If, before Canada had indicated that we were considering the possibility of using this channel in metropolitan Toronto, the transmitter of one of these Buffalo stations had been moved, it would then not have been possible to secure this channel and make it available to metropolitan Toronto. It was my opinion that if this was the factual situation it was advisable to do whatever reasonably could be done to see that this channel, no matter who might use it, would be available for Canada provided we could ensure this.

That is all I said. I did not get very excited about it. It seems to me this is a reasonable position to take. It does appear to me that any minister of transport who failed to try to preserve for Canada the maximum number of these channels, particularly for the second largest aggregation of population in Canada and the largest using the English language, would have been derelict in his duty.

• (5:00 p.m.)

For that reason we did take the procedure—I am afraid without prompting I cannot give it the technical name—with the Federal Communications Commission of indicating that this channel might become available for metropolitan Toronto. I believe by doing that we made it difficult at any rate for one of the Buffalo stations to move its transmitter.

Mr. Diefenbaker: When was that communication?

Mr. Pickersgill: It was some time last autumn. I could easily get the precise date. I am not making any secret of this. It was after the matter was brought to my attention by the Snelgrove interests. I do not deny that for one minute.

The second fact is that channel 3 had a licensee. He is Mr. Snelgrove and he had a licence which he got under the previous government. I am not basing anything on that. He did get it though and if he had just sat on this channel in Barrie and made no application to have it transferred nobody could have applied for it in metropolitan Toronto. If he had kept it where it was in Barrie then it could not be applied for in Toronto. That seems to me the most elementary arithmetic.

With regard to the time he did apply I gave the whole timetable or the whole chronology the other day. He submitted two technical briefs to my department, as everyone does before making an application. Then in January he and his associates, in other words, the firm, made their application and that application is still being studied from a technical standpoint in my department. I inquired a couple of days ago and I am told that the technical study will not be completed for at least a week and maybe longer. If it is not technically satisfactory that is the end of it. It will go nowhere. Further, if the applicants choose to withdraw their application then nobody can have channel 3 as long as they have the licence in Barrie. These are the facts. I am trying to make them as simple as possible because there is really nothing mysterious about this at all.

But if this application is sent forward to the B.B.G. then the B.B.G. will have to decide several questions. They will have to decide, first, whether or not another television channel should be permitted in metropolitan Toronto at the present time. They will have to decide that question before they decide who is going to get it.

The second question they will have to decide, if another channel is to be made available in Toronto, is whether they will agree to a transfer to the same licensee from Barrie. They could easily say: No, we will not; all we will do—if they agree to make the channel available in metropolitan Toronto—is to open it for applications.

We know that one of the most powerful stations and one of the earliest pioneers in broadcasting in this country, CFRB in Toronto, has indicated that it is interested. It has not made a formal application but I told the committee the other day that it had brought the matter before my department and had indicated that, if channel 3 was to be open, it would want to apply. I do not think there is the slightest doubt that if there is a hearing it will intervene.

So far as I can recall it has been invariable with the B.B.G. that once a serious intervener appears at a hearing and indicates he wants to make another application, then the date of the hearing has been postponed in order to permit that other application to be made. So it does not seem to me there is any possibility of this matter being decided except after not only a public hearing but almost certainly interventions at that hearing.

I do not know whether to take seriously the exchange of telegrams I had with Mr. Joel Aldred because I really do not know whether or not one takes him seriously. He did get a licence, the first licence in Toronto. It was in his name. Mr. Bassett was associated with him but they seem to have had a falling out and Mr. Aldred is out of the business. Whether he seriously wants to get back into it I do not know.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I should like to ask one question just for information. The minister says that channel 3 is the exclusive right of the Snelgrove interests?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, no.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Do I misunderstand? I understood the minister to say that only Mr. Snelgrove could get channel 3 and has a right to the use of channel 3. I want to be clear.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am very grateful to the right hon. gentleman for putting that question so clearly, because if I said that it certainly is not correct. They are the licensee of channel 3 at the present time and their licence has not expired. During the period that that licence runs I do not think it could be taken away from them except for cause, and only once in the whole history of broadcasting in this country, and never in the case of television, has a licence been revoked.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There was one in Alberta, I think.

Mr. Pickersgill: In British Columbia. I know, for it provided me with many headaches, but the record of the Snelgrove station in Barrie is such that I have never heard of any ground for revoking their licence.

It is quite clear that channel 3 cannot be used both at Barrie and at some other place near Toronto, because it has to be used in one place or the other. If I am not making myself clear—

Mr. Diefenbaker: I cannot follow it. It is at that point that there seems to be some divergence.

Mr. Pickersgill: If channel 3 continues to be used in Barrie it cannot be used on the edge of metropolitan Toronto because there would be the most hopeless kind of interference. I think this is where there is a great deal of misunderstanding of how this whole matter has come about. As long as the licensees of channel 3 in Barrie just sit on their licence at Barrie and as long as their licence lasts—I do not say they have a right to it indefeasibly or indefinitely, it being a piece of public property—as long as they comply with the law they will have their licence there.

Therefore the only way a process could be started by which this channel could be moved to Toronto would be for those licensees to give up their licence entirely, which I would not expect them or any other licence holder to do, and ask to have it transferred.

Mr. Diefenbaker: And no one else could get it then.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is where the right hon. gentleman keeps going wrong all the time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Why?

Mr. Pickersgill: Because they have no right to have it transferred. They have a right to exercise it in Barrie but no right to transfer it anywhere else.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If they have the right to this channel 3, how can any other body secure the right in Toronto for that portion of the area encompassed by channel 3?

Mr. Pickersgill: I will try to explain that. You cannot split up channel 3. It is either going to be in Barrie or it is not going to be in Barrie and if it stays in Barrie nobody else can have it. I think we all agree on that. Let us move on to the next step. How then are you going to get channel 3 in Toronto at all? There are two possible ways. One is for them to apply for a transfer. The other would be for them to say: We will take some other channel; we will hand this back to the Crown and let everybody compete for it. That kind of disinterestedness I would hardly expect of them or any other broadcaster, and I do not think the right hon. gentleman would either.

So channel 3 could not be open at this time for anybody unless they applied for a transfer, and the B.B.G. has to make a decision regarding that transfer. The B.B.G. cannot make such a decision unless the Snelgove interests apply for a transfer. Further, the B.B.G. can say: "If this is to be transferred we insist that other applicants should also have the right to apply." If they say that, either the applicant will have to withdraw its application or submit to competition. That is precisely the situation, and it is perfectly open to the board to say either of these things. The board might also say it does not believe the channel should be moved there at all. That is a possibility.

If I have left any doubt in any hon. member's mind I should like very much to clear it up. I am very pleased to submit to questioning on that point before I move to the next point.

Mr. Starr: I should like to ask the minister whether there have been any requests from groups of people or individuals not directly interested in a channel 3 licence at this moment to have the channel transferred to Toronto? What is the purpose of moving channel 3 to Toronto?

Mr. Pickersgill: Quite frankly I do not know the answer to that question, but no group of citizens has come to me and stated that they wanted channel 3 moved to Toronto.

Mr. Diefenbaker: They could not obtain that even if they wanted it. No wonder they have not applied.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think the hon. member was talking about an application; he was talking about disinterested citizens making a demand. I do not know of any such demand. All I know is that these applicants have done something that has been done a great many times before. They have applied for permission to move their channel. At almost every hearing of the B.B.G. there are applications heard for the transfer of channels. There is nothing unprecedented about this. When they made their application it became the duty of the Department of Transport to evaluate it and that is what we are doing

Mr. Smith: I think I can speak for the people of Simcoe county when I say that they want channel 3 left where it is. If their interests are considered that is where the channel will remain. The minister spoke a moment ago about the application respecting channel 3 which I believe is related to a counter-application for a broadcasting station on channel 5 located somewhere in Simcoe county. We think that is second best so far as Simcoe county is concerned.

The minister spoke about the distance between two channels. Is it not a fact that in respect of adjoining channels there has to be a 60 mile separation such as between channel 6 in Toronto and the transmitter for channel 5? Is that not a technical requirement? If we in Simcoe county are given channel 5 will the transmitter not have to be moved considerably north, much closer to Muskoka and Parry Sound than it now is? May we have an answer to that question? Does the present application for channel 5 call for the transmitter to be situated somewhere near the hamlet of Warminster near Orillia, which is 20 to 25 miles farther north than the present location of the transmitter.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am afraid the hon. member, as is perhaps understandable, has a more detailed geographical knowledge of Simcoe county than I have but the information I gave the other day is all the information I have in my hand. I have no doubt I can get this other information. I am quite sure that if this application does come before the Board of Broadcast Governors there will be plenty of people from Barrie and Simcoe county who will make very strong representations about the matter. I have no doubt about that whatsoever.

Mr. Smith: I am mainly interested in the technical points concerned in this application.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps before the consideration of my estimates is concluded I will obtain that technical information for the hon. gentleman. However, again this is something in respect of which I have no competence or right to make a decision. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will realize that, if we come to the conclusion that the application for channel 5 is not technically feasible in that it would not give good service or would interfere with some other channel, it could not be sent forward.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Who do you mean when you say "we"?

Mr. Pickersgill: I refer to the Department of Transport.

Mr. Churchill: That is the royal "we", is it not?

Mr. Smith: Channel 6 is not a United States station.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am only a minister of the Crown.

Mr. Smith: As you are aware, channel 6 is a C.B.C. outlet. We in Simcoe county are not anti-American but what we are interested in is preserving the C.B.C. programs.

Mr. Pickersgill: I understand the hon. gentleman perfectly. I am sure I would feel exactly the same way as he does. If there was any question whatsoever about the service to Barrie and Simcoe county not going to be as good then I would fight like a tiger to make sure the change was not allowed. I do not see why any sensible person would not do that, especially someone representing that area. I do not think for a moment that the Board of Broadcast Governors would permit this channel to be moved if it felt this was going to reduce or make worse the service at Barrie. Certainly if I was a member of the board I would not allow such a move under those circumstances.

Mr. Monteith: Do I understand the minister to say that if there was an application by the proprietors of channel 3—

Mr. Pickersgill: You mean the licensees?

Mr. Monteith: Yes. If there was an application by the licensees of channel 3 for a transfer to Toronto or any place else, would channel 3 automatically be thrown open to other interested parties?

Mr. Pickersgill: No. What I said was that the Board of Broadcast Governors could say: We will not allow you to take it anywhere; we gave you a licence for an operation in Barrie and we will not give you a licence for Toronto.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That would not give anyone else an opportunity.

Mr. Pickersgill: No.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is the joker.

Mr. Pickersgill: I beg your pardon?

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is the tiger in the tank.

Mr. Pickersgill: All the Board of Broadcast Governors has to say in that case is no if they do not feel that it is proper and in the national interest to allow the move. They might also suggest that they think it would be a good idea to have channel 3 in Toronto but that no one has a vested right to it. The Board of Broadcast Governors might say that they would allow the transfer but also allow competition for it at the same time. In that case it would be up to the applicants either to withdraw their application or submit to competition.

Mr. Churchill: Is channel 5 in use now? How does it happen to become available?

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think it can be said with certainty, as the hon. member for Simcoe North indicated, that it is available but there is an application to use it in Simcoe county.

Mr. Rynard: By whom?

Mr. Pickersgill: By the same interests. This information was all put on record the other day. This application is being evaluated at the same time as the channel 3 application. The two applications are interlocked because the applicants state that they do not want their application for the transfer of channel 3 to go forward unless the other application is considered to be technically satisfactory. That application has not been evaluated so I cannot say that the channel is available. However, when the applicants made their application they must have had some engineering advice which would indicate that the channel might be available and they would not be wasting their money in making the application.

Mr. Aiken: May I ask the minister a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: Certainly.

Mr. Aiken: Is it possible for the same interests to end up with both channels 3 and 5?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, that would be possible, but whether it would be desirable or not is another matter.

Mr. Aiken: Am I mistaken in the belief that two adjacent channels should not be owned by the same interests? I always thought that this was a factor taken into consideration by the B.B.G. in its decisions and that it would not give television licences in respect of adjoining areas to the same individual.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman has just asked a question I intended to answer without its being asked. I have always felt, and as the right hon. gentleman has said I do not hide my views, that in any kind of business it is better to have a number of businesses than just one. I have always felt that a concentration, particularly of the ownership of newspapers, radio stations and television stations, is not in itself desirable. However, the whole history of television in Canada and of radio broadcasting before it has shown that, notwithstanding the pious observations made in a number of speeches and notwithstanding the rather loosely worded regulation which the hon. gentleman quoted in the 25 or 30 years I have watched these things, there has always been multiple ownership in Canada, which has been steadily on the increase.

The Southam interests, for example, own several stations and so do other large newspaper chains. Thomson owns I do not know how many. I think it would be preferable not to have any more multiple ownership than is necessary but I am informed that this is a very difficult and technical business and there are not too many totally independent operators who have been able to go into it and be successful. The Board of Broadcast Governors has always taken the view, I think, that they would never recommend the ownership of two stations in the same place by the same person.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Chairman, I would point out that these will be two stations in the same broadcasting area with the same ownership.

Mr. Pickersgill: If that view was taken by the Board of Broadcast Governors that would be the end of it. But we are now seeking to try to anticipate a decision about an application that may never even get before the board. That is the actual, factual situation. The application is still in the Department of Transport. It is still being studied by the experts and if they say this thing will not work, it cannot be done, it is going to create problems of a technical nature, that will be the end of it.

If the Board of Broadcast Governors says, Notwithstanding the fact—this is the other point I wanted to make—that it may be technically feasible we do not think there should be a third channel in Toronto at this time, that will also be the end of it. I will now deal with the point raised by the right hon. gentleman regarding the point made by the hon. member for Cumberland the other day, which I dealt with as clearly as I could at the time. By "alternate service" I have always understood is meant the provision of a second station, either a C.B.C. station or a private station, where there is a first station. I had never understood "alternate service" to mean the extension of the area covered by the use of satellites and, in fact, it certainly has not been interpreted that way because a good many satellites have been established since the freeze was put on alternate service.

Taking the ordinary meaning of the words, I would not regard as alternate service the provision of a third service somewhere when there was already alternate service. The Board of Broadcast Governors may take an opposite view. However, Mr. Chairman, that has been my understanding of the matter. I do not know whether this covers all the points raised by the right hon. gentleman but I have tried to deal with them as coolly and as factually as I can.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Chairman, would the minister answer one question?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, certainly.

Mr. Coates: Could he give the committee some indication when the new appointments to the Board of Broadcast Governors will be made and whether these will be made prior to the consideration of this application, if it is put before the Board of Broadcast Governors, or later?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am really quite embarrassed by this question, Mr. Chairman, because that matter does not fall within my responsibility as Minister of Transport. The Board of Broadcast Governors answers to this house through the Secretary of State. I know some consideration has been given to making these appointments but I think it would be wrong of me to try to forecast what one of my colleagues is going to do in a matter that has not yet been determined.

Mr. Coates: Does the minister not consider that this is a very important matter and something that the house should be informed of as quickly as possible? Certainly the people should know whether the Board of Broadcast Governors as it is now set up under the law will be considering this application.

Mr. Pickersgill: I can say this. I feel that having regard to our parliamentary timetable there is not much prospect of having any fundamental amendments to the Broadcasting Act at a very early date. Therefore we should carry on in the best possible way under the broadcasting legislation we now have, and we certainly are not carrying on in the best possible way unless the permanent positions on the Board of Broadcast Governors are filled.

I hope there will be no undue delay in filling them because I must say I agree—I want to be careful here—with the spirit of the hon. gentleman's inquiry. I do think that in view of the great importance that is attached to this matter—and I understand why people have attached a great deal of importance to this matter—I would not be very happy to have it come before a board that had only one permanent member. I should like to make that point very clear.

Mr. Winkler: We have a list of names for you, Jack.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister whether an engineering survey accompanied the application for channel 5.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not like to answer questions to which I do not personally know the answers. I do not think these applications are accepted without such a survey but I would have to find out.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Such modesty.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the minister would answer one more short question? I am sure we appreciate the fullness of his answers and his intention to protect the people of Toronto and Barrie, but I should like to know what the minister has to say about this matter. On the assumption that the final decision is to be made by the cabinet, to which the minister will give some direction, how does the minister feel about the two recommendations in the Fowler report, first that restraint should be used with regard to issuing licences for a period of at least five years and, second that the decision with regard to issuing licences should rest in a new authority rather than in cabinet?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman, who spoke in a quite engaging way the other day in the house, has asked me a question that I think, having regard to our parliamentary traditions, it would be very wrong for me to answer. The government of Canada, of which I happen temporarily to be a member—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill:—under our system of responsible government is considering this matter and for me to express an opinion now would either be a piece of arrogance, because I would be assuming that all my colleagues were puppets and I was deciding the matter, or it would be a piece of foolishness because the decision might very well be the opposite of the one which I would now give off the top of my head. There is a provision in our rules that hypothetical questions should not be asked or answered. This is a hypothetical question so I will plead the rules.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a few brief observations and I shall try to remain in order and talk about transportation. The first thing I shall do is make a few observations with respect to the transportation of the minister's present Parliamentary Secretary from the Department of Labour to his present department. I must say I am very pleased that the Parliamentary Secretary is in the house because I have been asked to raise this question by persons who have read a very interesting article which appeared in the press and by others, and I think in fairness to him it is only right that he should be present. We look forward later to his rising and replying to this question. Mr. Gerald Waring in his "Ottawa Report" of recent date had this to say:

> The P.M. also tried to fire Jim Byrne, parliamentary secretary for labour, to make room for another British Columbia M.P., Ron Basford. But Byrne, rock-hard hardrock miner from Trail, refused to be bumped. Either he kept his job, or Pearson needn't count on Jim Byrne's vote in the house. So Byrne has become (parliamentary secretary) to Pickersgill, and Basford still waits in the wings.

This has caused a good deal of interest in the part of the country from which I come and I was asked to raise the point, you see.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if I could ask the hon. gentleman to which of the items in my estimates he relates this extraordinary piece of gossip?

Mr. Herridge: I am speaking of the Minister's Parliamentary Secretary who has a certain responsibility for the administration of the department.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the hon. gentleman is quite wrong. There is a statute providing for Parliamentary Secretaries and the Parliamentary Secretary is not paid from the estimates of the Department of Transport. The Parliamentary Secretaries are selected and recommended by the Prime Minister, so it would be impudence on my part to express any views on the Prime Minister's decision.

Mr. Herridge: I thank the minister for his explanation. I knew that already. I am raising the matter because it will give the Parliamentary Secretary an opportunity to reply. He is partly responsible for the administration of the department.

From conversations I have had with some of his colleagues on the Liberal side I judge there is a certain amount of substance in this report. I understand he informed some of them of his indignation, of his explosion in front of the Prime Minister and his later elevation. I just want to say, in fairness to the Parliamentary Secretary, that my first question is whether he was angry that he was not on the first published list of Parliamentary Secretaries? I know he will answer this. I was very surprised to hear this, Mr. Chairman, because I have always known the Parliamentary Secretary as a most meek and mild man. In fact, I have a distinct recollection of him turning the other cheek when faced with unprovoked aggression in the hallowed halls of this house last session.

My second question is, did he inform the Prime Minister that he either got the job as Parliamentary Secretary or the Prime Minister could not count on him in the house, that he would sit as an independent and vote accordingly? In fairness to the Parliamentary Secretary and to the house I think we are entitled to know the facts. There are such a lot of rumours about this matter. The members of the press are waiting eagerly to report the Parliamentary Secretary's reply. We are entitled to information about his appointment to a position which might be called near to greatness. I cannot for a moment visualize the Prime Minister surrendering so easily to such a meek and mild gentleman as the hon. member for Kootenay East. I trust he will take the opportunity to explain to the house exactly what happened.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

I should like to say that in listening to this debate I have noticed that the minister is a very different person from the person he was about this time last year. He has become very subdued, very apologetic and full of explanations.

Mr. Pickersgill: This time last year parliament had not yet met.

Mr. Herridge: I am speaking in approximate terms. Last year I addressed a question to the minister which is found at page 11632 of Hansard for February 23, 1965. The question reads as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. It is a question in which a good many Canadians are interested. My question is based on some remarks made last evening by the minister when he was referring to the criticisms made by the hon. member for Halifax with respect to the proposed reduction of passenger service on the Canadian Pacific Railway.
> In order that members of the house will not be required to rely entirely on the prognostications of that esteemed member of the press gallery, Mr. Victor Mackie—

A delightful fellow.

> —would the minister inquire of the President of the C.P.R. what its policy is at present with respect to the reduction of passenger services in Canada and report to the house?

The minister's reply was as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, since under the rules of the house ministers are only expected to answer for those bodies which are under their jurisdiction, and since the hon. member is a more eminent member of the house than I, I suggest that he make the inquiry of the C.P.R.

Mr. Pickersgill: I suggest to the hon. gentleman, Mr. Chairman, that we have now had provision made by parliament whereby the hon. gentleman can confront the President of the C.P.R. and ask the question direct.

Mr. Herridge: Quite right, and why did you make that provision. It was made because of the fight put up by members of the opposition parties. I mention this in order to compare the attitude of the minister on his estimates this session with his attitude last session when in his reply he practically indicated that the Canadian Pacific was a private concern, and what could we do about it?

Mr. Monteith: It may be the influence of the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Herridge: Yes, I willingly pay tribute to the attitude taken by the Minister of Agriculture. I wish him every success. I can tell him even now, before his estimates come before this committee, that a good many members of the opposition are going to get right behind the Minister of Agriculture with regard to his criticisms of the Canadian Pacific.

I am not going to speak at any length or repeat the excellent arguments advanced by various members of the opposition parties on this important question. I wish to support wholeheartedly the remarks of those members who have opposed the present policy of the Canadian Pacific in respect of the discontinuance of passenger service, including the "Dominion" and other services. I wish to compliment the hon. member for Kamloops—he is not present now but somebody will tell him about it—upon his effective analysis of the transportation system in Canada today and his support for the arguments which have been put forward by members of this group throughout the years.

The hon. member for Kamloops did not suggest any radical remedy except that which lay within the purview of the Canadian Pacific, a private corporation. Other members of his party suggested more drastic measures. We were very pleased to hear his analysis of the situation. I think he made an excellent speech, and I can see that so far as the member for Kamloops is concerned one could almost quote the hymn, "Almost Persuaded".

We can expect to hear something from the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke on this matter. He is not in the house now. I suppose he got bored with the previous argument. I wish to emphasize the opposition of a great many residents of British Columbia to the withdrawal of the Kettle Valley passenger service. I expect a great deal of support from the Parliamentary Secretary on this question because of his elevation to his present office. Before this service was withdrawn the Chambers of Commerce, labour organizations, farmers organizations, women's organizations and organizations representing all the people in the interior of British Columbia were opposed to the withdrawal of this service. However, it was withdrawn.

I cannot understand why the company is permitted to divide the revenues it receives from freight service from those it receives from passenger service and set up fictitious costs. We know that Kettle Valley is one of the most profitable lines in the Canadian Pacific system. I do not understand why the company is allowed, with regard to the discontinuance of passenger service, to present fictitious costs for the maintenance of track, snow removal and other matters which bear no relationship to the actual service being withdrawn. I trust that the withdrawal of the Kettle Valley passenger service will receive the attention of the committee that is going to examine the officials of the Canadian Pacific. I expect allies from all sides of the house on this question and I am looking forward to a victory in this respect.

I want to deal briefly with the application of the Canadian Pacific for an order to abandon part of its Rossland subdivision between Warfield and Rossland, which I think is about 7.5 miles. Representations were made by various groups, including the Chamber of Commerce of the City of Rossland, the Chairman of the Transportation Committee of the Rossland Chamber of Commerce, and others.

The judgment of the Board of Transport Commissioners granted the C.P.R. the right to discontinue the operation of this 7.5 miles of track and to close its station in Rossland. Here is a city with four to five thousand people situated in my constituency which is not served by the railroad and has no depot within its confines. In any event, the decision has been made.

The Rossland Chamber of Commerce made some excellent suggestions, I think, to the officials of the Board of Transport Commissioners as a result of their experience in presenting evidence to the board, and I am going to read their proposals because I think they should be seriously considered by the minister and by the board. This is a letter which the Rossland Chamber of Commerce wrote to the Mr. H. H. Griffin, Assistant Chief Commissioner of the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada, Ottawa, dated February 3, 1966

Dear Mr. Griffin:

It is with regret that we received your order No. 119677, authorizing the Canadian Pacific Railway to abandon their trackage from Warfield to Rossland.

However, this letter is written with the thought in mind of assisting future hearings, so that all parties concerned will view the results with understanding, if not with satisfaction.

(1) All exhibits filed re the application should have a glossary, so that anyone reading the documents will understand the terms of reference.

(2) It should definitely be established that the railway company offering a service to a district, should be the organization to document fully the possibilities for business within the districts concerned. The hearing should have a full background knowledge of:

(A) Why the railway line was established.

(B) What the line carried over its history.

(C) Revenue expense picture over the last 10 years.

(D) What steps were taken by the railway to overcome losses to traffic developing on a line.

(E) What studies were made of the area as to future possibilities for rail traffic.

In this case (reference page 5, Mr. Chapman) we now find that incoming chemicals will run about 3 to 1 for outbound shipments, for the treatment of Red Mountain Ore; thus showing Canadian Pacific did not do a study of future traffic for this area. If such a study were done and the results not given to the board, one would assume we did not have a true hearing.

(3) A letter be sent to the districts concerned, before a hearing, outlining terms of reference of the board and what type or types of evidence would be pertinent to the hearing.

I think that is very necessary.

(4) Warehousing being presently served by the railway, who absorbs the costs of moving or dismantling such warehousing? In the case of a business which must close, what compensations can be planned on?

We trust the above suggestions will meet with your boards approval; in regard to No. 4 we would be most interested in hearing your present plans.

I have quoted this letter, which is of some length, because this committee met and reviewed the experience gained from attending hearings before the Board of Transport Commissioners. They wondered what they could do in order to make suggestions which would assist other persons who had to attend hearings and present evidence on behalf of a community, an organization and so on.

I also want briefly to support all of the proposals advanced by various members on all sides of the house to promote labour peace in our transportation industry and to urge that the recommendations of the Freedman report receive very serious consideration by the government. I have read through the report and I think the recommendations are based on very solid ground. I am sure that the Commissioner had in mind the spirit behind the Bill of Rights when he drafted his report. What we urgently need in my opinion is a transportation policy in Canada which will meet the growing demands of the public for efficient and satisfactory service in all fields of transportation. There is no question that the government has not presented any transportation policy to this house to date.

Before concluding I must say I was very interested in the remarks of the Progressive Conservative member for Battle River-Camrose. He quoted Mr. Arnold Platt as follows, as found on page 1163 of Hansard:

"Arnold Platt, representing the Farmers Union of Alberta Co-operatives, told the western agricultural conference here January 21 that nationalization of the Canadian Pacific Railway will eventually take place because the C.P.R. hopes it will".

[Mr. Herridge.]

The hon. member went on to say:

I am 100 per cent convinced that that is the C.P.R.'s motive. I am a long way from being a socialist—

That is almost like Premier Bennett; he socializes public enterprise in the name of free enterprise.

—thank heavens, but if that is the game the C.P.R. intends to play in cutting down on service to the Canadian people, then the time has come for the government to take over not only the operations of the railroad but the operations of all its enterprises. If we are going to be given back the goose we also want the golden egg.

I was very interested in this shift in policy on the part of the Progressive Conservatives. Actually the hon. member is endorsing the remarks made later by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre urging that not only do we take over the C.P.R. but that we also take over all of the enterprises of the C.P.R. if they fail to recognize their responsibility to the Canadian people.

Mr. Knowles: We are all socialists now.

Mr. Herridge: Obviously we are all socialists of one sort or another.

As against that, Mr. Chairman, I wish to quote the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. As reported at page 1204 of Hansard he said:

Instead of our just repeating these charges, instead of our just recounting this indictment against the C.P.R. over and over again, we should lay down a basic principle, and I think the basic principle which the government should accept and should use is this: It should say to the C.P.R. that either it must provide the railway services that the country needs, the services that it is under contract to provide, and charge any losses on those railway services against the profits of its other operations, or it should turn the whole of its operations over to the government of this country to be run as a public enterprise.

Mr. Knowles: Hear, hear.

Mr. Herridge: Then I notice that there were some cries of "hear, hear" from members in various seats in the house, including some members of the Progressive Conservative party. I was very pleased to see this and to realize what an influence this small group is having on the Progressive Conservative party which sits to our right.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): We were carried away.

Mr. Herridge: Doubtless due to the changing circumstances in Canada and their realization of the mood of the public at this time, some of those members are willing to socialize all the enterprises of the C.P.R. and to join hands with the New Democratic Party in basing our transportation system on a sound policy. I congratulate them.

I do not know whether I am out of order but very briefly I wish to support the employees of the C.P.R. in their representations in connection with their pension plan and their protest against the unilateral action on the part of the C.P.R. in implementing changes in the pension plan. I have before me a letter from the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, Division 1579, Nelson, British Columbia. I am not going to speak at any length on this matter except to say that we wholeheartedly support the attitude of these railroad employees and trust that the government will listen to the appeals being made on the Opposition side of the house.

• (5:50 p.m.)

Finally, Mr. Chairman, let me say that I trust that this lengthy debate on the minister's estimates, lengthy because very important matters are involved and because there are many members who want to bring certain local problems to his attention, will move the minister to take effective action as the result of the protests and constructive proposals made by members on both sides of the house. I trust and hope he realizes that in making these protests and proposals they are speaking for the people of Canada. I resume my seat, Mr. Chairman, looking forward to the reply of the hon. member for Kootenay East to my comments on his appointment to near greatness.

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Kootenay West indulged this afternoon in tactics which he used in my riding throughout the election campaign—

Mr. Herridge: Oh, no. Not I.

Mr. Byrne: —tactics by which he attempted to smear. Those tactics were not successful.

Mr. Herridge: It was a pretty close run.

Mr. Byrne: They were very unsuccessful, I might add. The hon. member referred to an article written by what I term a fiction writer from the press gallery. He is a writer perhaps in the same category as a former member of the New Democratic Party. I classify them both as fiction writers and not as reporters. I am not aware where, Mr. Waring obtained the so-called facts—I should say fiction—that he wrote respecting my appointment as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport. This I do know, that from the outset the Prime Minister suggested any one of three important departments, including the Department of Transport. I felt I should accept the Department of Transport appointment as the one in which I could be of most help. The hon. member for Kootenay West, I think—

Mr. Herridge: Are we looking for help in the Kettle Valley?

Mr. Byrne: —wishes to see that his airport is retained.

Mr. Herridge: That has been completed.

Mr. Byrne: I am sure that he is concerned with transportation in every way.

Mr. Herridge: Quite so. That has all been done.

Mr. Byrne: I am sure that what the hon. member is concerned about is the fact that I was the subject of a very laudatory editorial in a newspaper in his riding. I refer to the Castlegar News of Wednesday, January 26, 1966.

Mr. Herridge: Is this news?

Mr. Byrne: I am sure the hon. member will bear with me for a few moments and let me reply to some of the critical remarks he has made about myself. The Castlegar News had this to say about my appointment:

> Residents of the West Kootenay federal riding will join with their neighbours in the East Kootenay federal riding this week to offer congratulations to Jim Byrne, Member of Parliament for Kootenay East who has been appointed parliamentary secretary to Transport Minister Jack Pickersgill.
> Residents in the Castlegar-Kinnaird-Nelson area of the West Kootenay riding have particular reason to be pleased with Mr. Byrne's appointment for he has proved himself a strong friend of the Castlegar airport and is known to favour retention of the present Castlegar and Cranbrook airports and to be opposed to the consolidation of these facilities at Creston.

It goes on in a rather laudatory manner throughout.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: I rise on a point of order. What purpose is being served by this self-laudatory explanation by the hon. member so far as the passing of the estimates of the Department of Transport is concerned? Earlier today the minister suggested that we should deal directly with the estimates of the department and I support the minister in this. I think we should do that right now.

The Chairman: Order, please. I might say that the Chair has been somewhat concerned not only about the answer but also about the question. Since the question came from one end of the Kootenays perhaps we will allow the hon. member from the other end to answer.

Mr. Herridge: Absolutely.

Mr. Byrne: I find it very difficult to understand the attitude of the hon. member for Winnipeg South at this moment in view of the fact that he allowed the Leader of the Opposition to be out of order in this regard for about 15 to 20 minutes this afternoon. The Leader of the Opposition was speaking on matters which had no connection with the Department of Transport. I think I have said sufficient to answer the hon. member for Kootenay West. If there are other questions which he wishes to raise on the items of the estimates, I will be pleased to be of assistance to him.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I wish to congratulate the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport for his magnificent defence of an impossible position. I can judge from his remarks that anything we have been told from the Liberal side of the house is completely untrue.

The Chairman: Order, please. This might be a good time for the committee to return to the estimates of the Department of Transport. Shall item 1 carry?

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, since it is six o'clock and we must now proceed to the consideration of private members' business, may I call it six o'clock?

[English]

The Chairman: Does the committee care to call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: In order that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business, pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15 it is my duty to leave the chair.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED UNDER ADJOURNMENT MOTION

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, in conformity with standing order 39A, to inform the house that the following questions will be discussed on the adjournment motion tonight: The hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard), the Constitution—request to set up constitutional court; the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Macdonald), Housing—Toronto—community centre facilities for downtown developments; the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Winkler), Public Service—printing bureau employees engaged in private printing.

The house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, private bills, public bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

EVANGELISTIC TABERNACLE INCORPORATED

Mr. Eric Stefanson (Selkirk) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-7, to incorporate Evangelistic Tabernacle Incorporated. He said: Mr. Speaker, this bill had received second reading when the house adjourned last summer for the recess and when parliament was dissolved it died on the order paper. This is a bill in standard form and is similar to many others which have been passed incorporating other religious bodies. The petitioners are residents of the city of Winnipeg. This religious organization has congregations in Ontario, Saskatchewan and British Columbia as well as Manitoba. It also maintains a missionary in the Philippines. It carries on certain charitable and educational work. The Evangelistic Tabernacle was established first in Canada in 1956. It has affiliations with a similar religious organization in the United States. The scope of its activities has now developed to the point where it must become incorporated if it is to continue to be effective in the spreading of the Christian gospel.

I understand that this bill will be referred to the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills. The representatives of the organization will, of course, appear before the committee if the bill is referred there and will be in a position to provide detailed information to hon. members.

• (6:00 p.m.)

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, as indicated by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Stefanson) this is one of those bills which met its demise on the calling of the election. It thus falls into a category shared by a variety of other measures which were before the house at that time. I do not intend to go into that subject at any length because it has been well dealt with on a number of occasions. But I should like to stress, first of all, a thought I have with regard to the general subject matter of private bills of this nature.

These societies or corporations are incorporated by the private bill process because of an inheritance from the British parliamentary system. In the early years almost everything which was done by way of legislation was done by means of private acts or bills. Gradually over the years public bills came to the fore until today they predominate among the items of legislation which parliament has to consider. Nevertheless we still have a few pieces of legislation which are dealt with as private bills, and we have an example before us now.

I am wondering whether we might not be able to work out a different procedure. Without intending any disrespect to the organization now seeking to be incorporated I seriously doubt whether, despite the historical background, it should properly be the business of the parliament of Canada to consume its time and energy considering bills of this kind, in the present instance the incorporation of Evangelistic Tabernacle Incorporated. I say this, as I have mentioned, with no disrespect to the organization itself but in a general way since this is one of a number of similar bills which undoubtedly we shall be considering in the future.

I note that other organizations and groups wishing to become incorporated for the purpose of advancing their philosophy, religion or ideology as well as for the purpose of dealing in real property and the like, as this body also seeks to do, can accomplish their purpose by incorporation under various provincial acts.

Some years ago the International Woodworkers of America, a union to which I belong, found that because it was not considered a legal entity as such it could not hold real property. We found we had to incorporate a holding society under the Societies Act of British Columbia in order to possess certain property, in that instance a boat which we owned. Other unions encountered the same difficulty in connection with halls, buildings and real estate generally. Perhaps we should be considering another method of incorporating groups and societies such as the one whose application is now before us. Eventually I should like to see the point reached when parliament would not have to consume its time dealing with private measures such as these. Certainly companies formed to conduct business operations of the greatest magnitude can be incorporated under the general law the Companies Act, or its counterpart in the various provinces. Parliament concerns itself in this field only with the general applicability of the law, setting certain standards and general requirements which each company must meet before it can go into business. A similar procedure is followed with regard to special types of companies, for example, trust companies, mortgage and loan companies and the like.

I advance this as a general thought. I know it is not possible to do anything along these lines at the present moment. We have this bill before us and we have to take action with respect to it. I am sure the action the house will take will be precisely the same as was taken last session. The bill will be given second reading and go to the appropriate committee for examination in circumstances where its sponsors and others may appear as witnesses. Then the bill will be presented to us again in the normal course. However, if Your Honour is reconstituting the committee on procedure I suggest that this matter might be taken into consideration and that a study of the rules might be made with respect to private bills so as to permit such measures to be dealt with in another way.

Evangelistic Tabernacle Incorporated asserts that its objects are seven in number. The first is to promote and advance the Christian faith and doctrine and to extend the Christian faith in all lawful ways. It seeks to establish and conduct missions and to operate missions, seminaries, schools, colleges, hospitals, dispensaries and orphanages, together with homes for the aged and other institutions for religious and educational purposes. In short, it seeks to interest itself in the field of social welfare—I use the phrase loosely—because this is what we are concerned about when we talk in terms of homes for the aged, orphanages and the like. We are concerned with social justice and our responsibility for society.

The Evangelistic Tabernacle seeks to advance these ideals and aims. It also wishes to promote the erection and purchase of houses of worship and, naturally, to administer the property and business of the corporation. It seeks also to engage in the publishing business for the purpose of printing and distributing literature, gospel literature it is called, designed to promote and advance the ideology and doctrines of the corporation. Finally, it seeks to promote generally the spiritual welfare of all its members.

I assume that these objectives are similar to, if not identical with, the objectives of related types of organizations whose applications for incorporation have been before parliament in the past. I think it might be well at this juncture to go back to my first point and ask ourselves whether we should not have some general statute setting out the requirements to be met by organizations such as Evangelistic Tabernacle when bringing forward applications for incorporation in the same way as we now have general laws such as the Companies Act which set out certain basic requirements in the fields which they cover. If we set out general standards for any group that seeks to be incorporated, we will establish the objects and purposes for which they may become incorporated and parliament will be dealing with one single statute establishing the criteria to be met by groups seeking to be incorporated similar to the one currently before us.

I do not know whether there is any great departure from comparable provisions in bills of like nature but it is interesting to note that there is extensive reference, ranging through six clauses of the bill before us, to the question of real property in all its aspects, dealing with holding, receiving, possessing, selling, buying, mortgaging, and the doing of all sorts of other things with respect to real property. It seems to me, therefore, that the preponderance of wording in the bill is taken up with the question of the activities of this corporation so far as real estate is concerned.

This may be standard practice. It may be necessary to set out, in all the details contained here the authority of the corporation so far as real property is concerned, but I do say there is an undue amount of consideration given to that particular question.

There is one part of the bill, clause 15, which deals with the related question of borrowing money, accepting promissory notes, issuing debentures, mortgages, pledges and so on on real and personal property of the company as well as the selling of bonds and generally giving authority to deal in the field of money so far as borrowings are concerned. That too may be a standard provision in bills of a similar nature, but I submit again that if it is standard it is something that could be set out in a general public law permitting groups of this sort simply to go through the process of incorporating as companies do under the Companies Act or as trust companies do under specific legislation. Parliament then would not thereafter have to take its time in concerning itself with matters of this sort, important as they might be.

I think it is a fact that this bill will engage the attention of just a few members of parliament. We found in the past that the only people generally interested and concerned, about such matters were the sponsor and the members of the standing committee who happened to be in attendance at the time a particular bill was considered. The hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott) says that would be the full committee. Possibly he goes to different committees than I attend for I have never yet been at a committee meeting which had a full attendance of members.

Generally speaking only a few members of parliament concern themselves with matters of this sort. I venture to say that only two or three members of the house, possibly a few more, would be interested in the subject matter of the bill before us. All other members would be sort of vaguely detached from it, having but a general understanding that something had gone on in the house today between the hours of six and seven o'clock that had something to do with the Tabernacle Society. That would be the extent of the knowledge of most members.

I think it is asking too much of parliament to take a great deal of time to deal with a subject matter relating to private individuals which of course is why this is a private bill. Second, the subject matter is one which engages the attention of so few members of parliament. I would much rather see some sort of general statute developed. Undoubtedly it would have to be done after consultation and discussion with the various religious orders in the nation to ensure that such a general law met the desires and purposes of the individual groups. Once we had developed a general law, parliament would not have to concern itself and consume its time in dealing with matters such as are before us at the moment.

Because these things can be so easily misunderstood I reiterate again that I am in no way saying anything against the organization that seeks to be incorporated, its objectives or anything else. I am simply saying that parliament should not concern itself and consume its time with matters like this when with far more efficiency and much more dispatch they could be dealt with in a different fashion.

Mr. Bert Leboe (Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I rise only for a moment to express a great deal of interest in the remarks that have been made by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard). There is a great deal of merit in what the hon. member has proposed in connection with this type of bill. The time has come when parliament needs to be relieved of some of the traditional chores in which we find ourselves involved. In fact, I would go a little further in that connection and say that I think we must again review the situation that has arisen in the House of Commons with respect to public bills. We find a tremendous number of these bills on the order paper. They are being reintroduced—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I hesitate to interfere or intervene at this moment, particularly in view of the fact that the hon. member for Skeena was allowed to make rather lengthy remarks about questions which do not relate specifically to the principle of the bill before us, but this is really what we should be considering. This is what should be the subject matter of our debate. As I say, I did allow the hon. member for Skeena to make these remarks thinking they were introductory and that he would finally come to consider the principle of the bill itself. The hon. member for Cariboo now seems to wish to continue in the same vein and convert this debate into one dealing with procedure rather than one dealing with the principle of the incorporation of this particular association. I do not want to cut off the debate entirely, but I would invite the hon. member for Cariboo and other hon. members who will take part in the debate afterwards to try to limit their contributions to the debate to what they should be, that is, to a discussion of the principle of the bill before the house.

Mr. Leboe: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate those remarks and I agree wholeheartedly that the position you have taken is quite correct. I only say at this moment that we would like to see this bill receive second reading and be referred to the standing committee.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I too should like to say a few words about this bill. I want to have regard for your ruling, but even though I agree with it I think that the house is going to have to give some consideration to the remarks made by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard). I say so because if one looks around the house it will be found from the number of members present that the discussion of this bill does not seem to be generating a great deal of interest, and I think it should. The title and format of the bill—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Rosthern on a point of order.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Speaker, my point of order is that as I look about the house I see that there are just as many people here now as there usually are during deliberations in the House of Commons.

• (6:20 p.m.)

Mr. Peters: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is no credit to the members of parliament and no credit to the house. We have been discussing estimates of a very serious nature running into millions, yes, billions of dollars. I do not really consider this bill to be in that category. If the hon. member is correct, the degree of disgrace is greater than I had intended. I could go on being out of order by mentioning that I do not like our hours of sitting, which deprive us of an opportunity to have supper. The hon. member was willing to vote for this, but I will not do that.

I feel that we are being asked today to accept a bill about which general remarks should be applicable. This bill appears to have been designed in archaic legalistic terms and does not really mean anything. Perhaps the sponsor is not aware of its legal background, but it seems to have been designed with the sole purpose of putting money into the pockets of lawyers. We do not know whether the Evangelistic Tabernacle Incorporated is a small or large organization, whether it is actually a religious body or a group of individuals associated for other than religious purposes.

On the face of it the bill appears to be the child of some lawyer's mind, particularly in view of the legal hocus-pocus in its format. I am sure that members have not had an opportunity to look at the legalistic rigmaroles contained in this and other similar bills. It is unfortunate that the sponsors did not indicate just what the Evangelistic Tabernacle Incorporated is, or is going to be. It may well be an association to make millions of dollars as a holding organization. It may well be a religious organization having churches in different communities and certain other properties deeded to them. However, in looking at the bill as a member of parliament, because of the way in which it has been drafted I am not aware whether or not it will meet the needs of the corporation. For these reasons this bill warrants a great deal of consideration by the house.

The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) and the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Leboe) are both experienced members of this house and have dealt with many bills of this kind, for the incorporation of religious bodies. I endorse the remarks of those two hon. gentlemen. It does not appear that we are incorporating a religious body by this bill but rather that we are giving authority to a group of individuals to go into the banking business. The bill would allow this group to purchase, take, have, hold, receive, possess, retain and enjoy properties real or personal. Everything is included in the bill except the interest rate to be allowed, and I suppose if somebody had thought of that it would be included also. The bill does not really say what this church group wishes to do. It seems to be filled with a lot of archaic gobbledegook designed to make lawyers rich rather than to serve the needs of these people.

I realize that the bill will go to the miscellaneous private bills committee. I have been a member of that committee on a number of occasions and I can assure you that the attendance at its meetings, including my own, has not been good. I do not believe we are interested in putting the people named in this bill through a third degree when they appear before us at that committee's meetings. I am sure they do not know what this bill means, or whether it covers their requirements.

The bill itself asks that we incorporate Mr. Bradley, a clergyman, Mr. Wiebe, an optician, Olga Bradley, a housewife, Harvey Schmidt, a clergyman and Mr. Bergen, a machinist, all of the city of Winnipeg, together with other persons and congregations under the name of Evangelistic Tabernacle Incorporated. I am sure these people are as confused about the contents of this bill as members of parliament are who are here in attendance rather than out having their dinner. I am sure I do not have the faintest idea what this bill is about. I have no knowledge of the people involved and can therefore have no opposition or support for them. I cannot help wondering, however, if they are being taken advantage of by others who might have a great interest in this corporation. There are two clergymen petitioning, and the language of this bill must have caused them a great deal of confusion. I am sure that because of its design this bill has cost these individuals four, five or even ten times as much as it should have to bring it before parliament. It has included everything but the kitchen sink.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): That is in clause 7.

Mr. Peters: I am sure that by the terms of this bill these people could set up a finance company, a railroad, or any other kind of operation. Surely the C.B.C was not set up with more safeguards than are provided by this bill for this religious group. The circumstances surrounding the bill should certainly be examined carefully by hon. members who are at all interested. Our parliamentary procedures do not allow us to send the bill back to the other place without destroying it, and I am not prepared to do that, but we could move some amendments necessitating a reconsideration.

Let me assure the sponsor of the bill that we are all in accord with the desires of persons who wish to incorporate bona fide religious organizations to carry out the many laudatory purposes set forth in this bill, such as the establishment and maintenance of missions, seminaries, schools, hospitals and so forth. I am sure we would all agree with the principles of this bill if they were in fact to allow these people to own church property and carry out certain religious activities. Surely if this were a bona fide organization it should be allowed to carry on these activities outside provincial boundaries.

There is another quaint expression contained in the bill to the effect that this corporation will support the doctrine of faith in the organization. I imagine that some of our financial institutions would like this type of clause in their letters of incorporation, and would be wholeheartedly in support of the suggestion that an organization should promote the general welfare of its members.

I am not in a position to read the sections of the bill in the debate on second reading, but I believe that if members take the time to consider it they will find that a great many things have been written in that are not necessary to the operation of such a corporation. In view of this fact we must consider the responsibilities of these individuals to this organization, and we must attempt to find some solutions to the dilemma in which they will find themselves as a result of the passage of the bill. We in this house must give consideration to this application for incorporation because it falls within the category of bills that fall into the category of private legislation, but are public in their application.

An hon. member has been asked to sponsor this bill as a private members' bill. Ironically sometimes when we say a bill is a private bill we mean it is a public bill, while at other times when we say a bill is a public bill we really mean it is designed for private purposes.

So that a member is being asked to sponsor this bill whether or not he is connected with the Evangelistic Tabernacle. Someone has to sponsor it, and we have to go through the preliminary rigamarole that is necessary, and the different procedures, without their really serving the purposes of the Evangelistic Tabernacle community or of members of parliament.

I can think of four or five recent bills which fall into this category. I should like to refer to them, not as being involved in this context but to illustrate my point. There was the bill with regard to the Boy Scouts of Canada. Another time it was the Girl Guides; then the organization which brought together all the doctors in Canada; and there was one in connection with the nursing profession. These were all private members bills and were subject to the same gobbledegook that these bills receive in the Senate because of the archaic procedure we follow.

I endorse the view expressed by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) and the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Leboe) that we should do something about our procedures in connection with these bills. If it were possible under our rules, I would be prepared to refer this bill back to where it came from, and have some of these clauses removed. When people are asked to make application, the documents sent to them to file with the application are broad enough to cover almost anything from soup to nuts. In this case it may be more broad than that because it covers the spiritual field as well.

I think that to fit into this broad category all kinds of corporations for almost every organization that wishes to be national in scope is completely unreasonable and too expensive, and leads to great difficulty in justifying many of the powers they are given, which they do not want, do not need and will probably never be able to use.

Therefore I suggest there should be some way in which the sponsor could in committee ask for the removal of some of these clauses which will not be useful and in many cases under certain circumstances will turn out to be a liability to the company. I know that my learned colleague from Danforth (Mr. Scott) will not, because he is a lawyer, agree that changes should be made. However, he must be aware of the fact that many people who operate solely in this legislative, linguistic, legalistic field find it very difficult to agree to very simple English being used that would be plainly understood in our modern society by those who come in contact with these bills, but are not of his training.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, in the legislative field when the Evangelistic Tabernacle Corporation has to come to Ottawa for national incorporation they should be able to do so in terms of their desire and their need, and when they make their presentation to members of parliament and ask for legislation allowing the incorporation of their company, they should do this only to the extent and degree that the members of their organization wish. For this reason I hope the sponsor of the bill will consider some of the suggestions made and that the house in general, those 30 members who are here at the present time, will take into consideration changing the format by which bills such as Bill No. S-7 are presented to the house.

If there was a way of opposing this bill without showing my disrespect for the intentions and aims of the Evangelistic Tabernacle Society, I should be pleased to do so. However, I hope we shall have an opportunity under other circumstances to repeat this point until the committee of the house sees fit to establish rules that allow a more reasonable interpretation of the wishes of organizations such as the Evangelistic Tabernacle Society.

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I have been moved to enter the discussion on this bill by the evangelical plea of the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) for some form of legalistic enlightenment as to the nature of the bill. The hon. member for Timiskaming is of course a highly respected member of the house, a member of long standing, a member of great tenacity and knowledge, and I am genuinely moved by his desire to have some sort of legal justification for what he calls the legal jargon contained in this bill.

I would not want the record to suggest for a moment that we were in any way opposed to the present bill which has been sent to us from the other place. We are in support of it and are quite happy to have it pass. I suspect that the hon. member for Timiskaming is actually more interested in the next bill to come before us and that any elaborate discussion of the present one will merely make that much easier the opposition he intends to mount against the next one, which deals with the Interprovincial Pipe Line Company.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should not impute motives.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, because I was in the process of sitting down I was not able to hear Your Honour's observation. I wonder whether you would repeat it.

Mr. Speaker: I was suggesting to the hon. member that he should not impute motives.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I would never impute motives to any hon. member of the house except for the fact that the particular approach of the hon. member for Timiskaming is so well known in the chamber. However, to come back to the bill, before Your Honour rules me out of order, at the risk of incurring your displeasure I wanted to endorse the views of the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard). I realize it is difficult to inject this type of consideration into a discussion of the bill itself. However, having read the bill, and approving of the clauses, I think the hon. member for Skeena has raised a very, very important principle, namely that it is rather silly for the House of Commons to be dealing with this type of bill.

The procedure should be something like that used under the Companies Act, which is of course a statute which lays down the general framework within which particular types of corporations can be set up. It seems to me a gross waste of our time, as well as a gross waste of the public's time and money for us to deal in detail with bills of this type and then send them to committee, have them back in the house and pass them at a later date. In my opinion a general statute ought to be passed empowering the executive to incorporate this kind of enterprise in much the same way as we do with companies and other corporations, rather than going through the long and involved procedure that faces us in this House of Commons in its legislative capacity herein assembled in dealing with this type of matter.

If you look at the bill, Mr. Speaker, you will see it contains no very unusual clauses, in spite of the fears of the hon. member for Timiskaming. You can go through it clause by clause, starting with clause 1 which deals with the corporate name and the incorporation—

[Mr. Scott (Danforth).]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows very well that he cannot discuss the bill clause by clause when the house is considering its principle. At the moment we are considering second reading of the bill. The hon. member should try to limit his observations to the principle of the bill. I have not interrupted him until now in his dissertation on the procedural aspects of the bill before us. However, if we were to allow this type of discussion every time a bill came before the house, we might spend the whole hour discussing its procedural implications. This is certainly contrary to the rules.

I realize that I placed myself in a difficult position in allowing the hon. member for Skeena to deal with procedural implications in the first place but, as I said, I hoped he would eventually come to the principle of the bill. The hon. member for Danforth did early in his remarks say that what he was doing was against the practice and rules of the house. I would ask him to bear this in mind as he continues with his remarks.

• (6:40 p.m.)

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Thank you, Mr. Speaker; I am only too happy to bow to your directive in this regard. I was trying to keep my discussion of the bill within the ambit of Your Honour's directions. I am sorry I was not able to do that. I will try to do so throughout the balance of my remarks.

In discussing the bill itself what I was really trying to do was not so much to deal with the clauses, which I realize would not be appropriate on second reading, but merely to observe that in looking at the principle behind the bill it did not seem to me that anything unusual was being requested. I come back to my earlier remarks. I could not really see the point of parliament having to deal with this kind of very general bill incorporating a corporation for a legitimate and laudatory purpose. It seemed a gross misuse of the time of this house.

I agree with Your Honour that if we were to continue in that vein we might use up the whole hour discussing the procedural aspects of this matter. I do believe in all seriousness that while we would not want to use this bill, because of its legitimate, laudatory purposes, as a vehicle to try to convince the house that we should not be burdened with this type of bill, there might be an occasion when we would want to use a bill to emphasize the point that there should be some general way with which matters of this kind could be dealt much more expeditiously, much more efficiently, than the rather long, cumbersome procedure of a bill coming from the other place, going through a committee, coming back for a third reading and so on. I feel that the people behind this bill have used the correct procedure. I cannot subscribe to the almost defamatory remarks against the legal profession enunciated by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters). I merely rise not to hold up the bill but to make clear that we support the principle and are glad to endorse the bill. We hope it will go to the committee for fast passage. However, we could not let it pass without emphasizing our general objection. I realize you have been most indulgent, Mr. Speaker, but we do object to the general procedure being adopted for the passage of measures of this type.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills.

INTERPROVINCIAL PIPE LINE COMPANY

Mr. Ian Grant Wahn (St. Paul's) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-10, respecting Interprovincial Pipe Line Company.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in view of the remarks made earlier about legalistic jargon and the desirability of having short bills, I am sure the bill before the house will now receive unanimous approval. I am also sure that members of the house would like me to be equally brief in view of the short period of time which remains during this hour and also in view of the fact this bill has already been debated in the house on two previous occasions.

I will confine myself, Mr. Speaker, simply to saying that the purpose of the bill is as set out in the explanatory notes, to divide each of the 40 million authorized shares of the par value of $5 each in the capital stock of the company into five shares of the par value of $1 each with a total authorized capital of $200 million, which remains unchanged. I also emphasize that the reasons for this stock split are as set out in the explanatory notes and there is no other purpose. The reasons for the stock split proposed are legitimate.

In recent years a number of studies have been made of the reasons for stock splits. If I could take a few moments I should like to refer to two studies. One is entitled, "A study of Stock Splits in the Post-War Years", published in the Analysts' Journal. The second is entitled, "Characteristics and Procedures of Common Stock Splits", published in the Harvard Business Review. I should like to quote briefly from these studies.

> The legitimate purpose of a stock split is to reduce the market price of the shares to a level more attractive to the investment public. There appears to be an optimal level of market price—perhaps in the range of $25 and $50 or thereabouts—which avoids on the one hand the stigma of a 'low-priced, ergo, speculative issue, and, on the other, the practical drawback of high-priced shares.

The second quotation is as follows:

> —the exchange (New York Stock Exchange) is officially committed to a policy of keeping individual common stocks at what it considers desirable price levels. In this case, desirable means low or medium priced. The object is to make for orderly trading and to help attract small investors . . . What the Exchange regards as 'the most favourable price level' is in the $18-$25 range.

The present market price of Interprovincial stock is approximately $86 and a five for one stock split will reduce the price to this desirable range. The purpose is not to permit the owners of the stock to unload stock which is highly priced on the unsophisticated investor. The purpose of the split is not to permit the present holders of the stock to make a very large speculative profit. The purposes of the split are as set out in the explanatory notes.

To these brief remarks, Mr. Speaker, I would simply add that this is a Canadian company, the great majority of its shares are owned in Canada and the directors and officers are all Canadian residents and Canadian citizens. I hope that the house will give the bill second reading and refer it to the appropriate committee. At that time any further questions can be answered in much greater detail.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure what I expected from the mover of this bill but I listened with great interest to him. I should like to ask a couple of questions which he may or may not answer. Is he aware, for instance, that this company has already gone through this process on two separate occasions? When the stock was very high they reduced the price but it immediately went up again. They split the stock again to reduce the price but again it went back to the $90 range. When he says the shareholders do not want to unload the stock on an unsuspecting public, this is hogwash. It is not hogwash because that is not a good reason but it is hogwash because I know it has already happened twice.

Private Bills

• (6:50 p.m.)

Let us not kid ourselves. Let us not kid ourselves also about one other simple fact. The New York Stock Exchange does not keep stock at a certain level. They like to group stocks into certain categories but they certainly do not keep them there. The public usually keeps them in these groups and if the stock is a good stock I think it will always reach its proper level.

This company, Mr. Speaker, is an exceptionally good company. I would suggest that if you have $100,000 to put into it you should buy the stock tomorrow because it is a good deal. Some 25 per cent of the capitalization of this company is covered by stock. The rest is in long term, very low interest loans made mainly by Imperial Oil, and if the transmission of oil falls below a certain level Imperial Oil will pick up the tab. These are facts. This is a company which cannot possibly lose money. The more profit it makes the more it can pay off the low cost bonds which represent three quarters of its capital. The other stock carries the remaining quarter and the money flows toward the stockholders of the company. It is a beautiful deal.

I think it was a disgrace that someone should come before us and tell us that the only reason this manipulation was taking place was to help the employees saving plan and so that the employees would be able to buy stock. It was finally admitted that this was a lawyers' gimmick and this was really not the company's intention. It really does not matter whether the employees buy stock at $90 or at a lesser price. If the company wants as many Canadians as possible to buy this stock—I am not aware of what the split is between Canadian and United States ownership of the shares though it really does not matter to the discussion we are having—and if it is true that this stock should be reduced to the $18 level, why not go the whole way and reduce it to $1.80? I think you will agree, Mr. Speaker, that more people are able to buy stock at $1.80 than at $18.

The company will say that this suggestion is unreasonable. But they have already split this stock in a similar way. It has already been split ten to one and the stock is still at $90. If it were split again I suggest that in two years it would be back once more to $90.

A check of a survey made in 1965 of liquid oil and natural gas companies will show that Interprovincial Pipe Line has done very well for itself. A year or so ago I read about some of the advantages this company offered and it would probably be easier to read my remarks in Hansard if anyone wishes to do so. The figures I gave at that time were taken from this survey of oils. I gave the amount of shares that had been bought over the years. for itself. A year or so ago I read about some This company declared dividends of $3.40 per share per annum based on the current price of $90. That was as at September 1, 1964. Eighty cents a share was paid quarterly from September 3, 1963, to June 1, 1964 inclusive, bringing the dividend up to $3.40.

This stock has already been split ten for one. That means that an original $50 share in the company would bring a return in dividend of $34 per share I suggest that is not bad. Probably many of the old women in this country who are depending on their nest eggs or blue chips would find Interprovincial Pipe Line a very good investment, and I strongly recommend it to anyone wishing to buy stock.

An hon. Member: How many shares do you have?

Mr. Peters: I have been asked how many shares I have. Although members of parliament have done very well, I have not gone into the stock market to buy and sell Interprovincial Pipe Line stock. If I had a share it would only be to enable me to keep track of shareholders meetings and to have the opportunity of attending them and asking questions first hand. However, I have no shares.

An hon. Member: Perhaps they will make a collection for you.

Mr. Peters: The hon. member suggests that maybe they will take up a collection. If they do, I would be happy to have even one share in my name.

I should like to know what the honest answer is. As the sponsor of the bill has intimated, the matter of stock splitting has been the subject of investigation. There have been two recent ones. I think it behooves some members of parliament who are interested in this field to go to some of the company meetings and find out why the company is asking for this stock split. It seems to me that if a person has enough money to buy a blue chip stock it really would not make much difference if he bought one share at $100 or ten shares at $10. If you are investing money I think the average investor can add up the dividends on ten shares almost as easily as on one. I suggest the $100 a share stock does not really have much advantage over the $10 a share stock if it is held as an investment as a blue chip stock.

On the other hand, I think it is quite obvious that if the stock split takes place and the stock very shortly climbs to its original value, is then resplit and once more climbs to its former value, then in each instance the people who are interested in the stock are not looking at the dividend declared. What they are looking at is the capital gain in the value of the stock. This has been fantastically high in relation to the Interprovincial Pipe Line Company. May I call it seven o'clock, Mr. Speaker, because I wish to pursue this matter further.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has now expired. The house will now resume the business which was interrupted at six o'clock.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

1. Departmental administration, $4,862,900.

• (7:00 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I am happy to see the Minister of Transport in his seat, which is normal since we are considering his department's estimates.

Since yesterday hon. members have been taking the minister for a ride all over Canada by Air Canada, or the C.N R., or the C.P.R., or by ship; he was even put on the C.B.C. this afternoon.

Tonight, I intend to take him to an area called northwestern Quebec, which includes the ridings of Chapleau, Villeneuve and Pontiac-Temiscamingue. I will limit my remarks mostly to the two ridings with which we are more directly concerned, those of Chapleau and Villeneuve.

Mr. Chairman, since I have known the minister, it was given to me to meet him personally and to appreciate his broadmindedness. He is a smiling and charming man, ready to welcome you at all times and to agree with you most of the time. On the other hand, I noticed that the department works more slowly than he does and that he himself is slower when it comes to doing things for certain areas.

For instance, a few years ago, I asked for the building of two air terminals, one in Val d'Or and one in Rouyn, in the riding of Villeneuve. What we have now are two miserable looking huts. The minister is well aware of the situation because he came to the area several times by plane and entered those air terminals, which is rather embarrassing for us.

The two air terminals have been allowed to remain in their present state by the present government and by the previous one, that is to say the Conservative government.

Well, Mr. Chairman, a sum of $220,000 was voted for the construction of an air terminal at Val d'Or over a year and a half ago and nothing concrete has been done in that respect as yet.

At Rouyn, apparently because the airport belongs to the city of Rouyn, we are told that the government can help. As a matter of fact, it did help but not enough since the airport at Rouyn serves not only the people of Rouyn but also the people of the neighbouring area and of the section of Chapleau which includes for instance LaSarre, Macamic and all those places. It is an airport which serves not only the city of Rouyn but all the people of that region.

On December 7 last, the minister advised me that officials of his department and representatives of the city of Rouyn had met in December, 1965 to consider the problems connected with the operation of the airport as well as to seek an agreement. The following questions were dealt with:

Extension and improvement of the runway, aids to landing, federal grants for its operation and maintenance of the airport in general.

I believe the question of general maintenance was definitely settled, for the Department of Transport is now responsible for this. On the other hand, the extension of the runway as well as the improvements to it are necessary, and, indeed urgent.

Recently, on a trip from Rouyn to Ottawa by air, the pilot announced in full flight that, unless improvements were made to that runway, aircraft could no longer land in Rouyn.

Now it is time for the minister and his officials to consider the urgency of helping Rouyn, of helping to improve the Rouyn runways.

In my opinion, it is as easy to do in Rouyn what has been done in Val d'Or by the Department of National Defence. I appreciate the fact that they have a nuclear base there. There, they built a real beauty of a runway. If, for war or armament purposes, Val d'Or, can, or is entitled to, have such a runway, why could we not have a similar runway for the needs of the population of Rouyn and of the area, which would result in a great improvement of Air Canada services in our area?

I have another point to which I would like to call the attention of the minister and of his officials. I refer to Air Canada service between Montreal, Ottawa, Val d'Or and Rouyn. We know that every morning an airplane takes off in Montreal for Val d'Or, Rouyn, Earlton, North Bay and Toronto, via Ottawa, and that at the same time another airplane takes off in Toronto and makes the same trip before ending its flight in Montreal.

Now, in many cases the opportunity to complain was given to me. There are people from Val d'Or-Rouyn who are in Montreal and wish to take a plane in the morning—I think, it leaves at 8.20 a.m. or 8.40 a.m., something like that—but the airplane is overcrowded with passengers for Ottawa. The people from Val d'Or-Rouyn who are in Montreal are refused a seat on the Air Canada plane, because they are told the aircraft is full. That is true. And so, the people from Abitibi are stuck in Montreal because people working in Ottawa have taken all available seats on the plane which, after landing in Ottawa, takes off for Val d'Or, Rouyn, Earlton and North Bay with hardly anyone aboard, or perhaps with only three, four or five passengers, while dozens of people from Abitibi are waiting in Montreal. Their names, of course, have been registered, but no account is taken of the fact that they come from those northern regions.

On this flight—No. 254, I believe, outgoing and No. 261 incoming—the needs of the regions of Abitibi, Chapleau, Villeneuve or northwestern Quebec should first be taken into account and the seats reserved for people going to the farthest places; and, if necessary, another flight should be set up for people going only to Ottawa. Another flight could be provided, but Val d'Or and Rouyn should have the service they deserve.

Mr. Chairman, I have here a resolution of the Chamber of Commerce of Val d'Or-Bourlamaque that Mr. MacGregor of Air Canada received not so very long ago. It is dated February 11, 1966:

We have read your letter of February 8 mentioning your achievements and projects for 1966.

At a regular meeting held on February 9 last, it was suggested that we should ask you for a second daily flight to serve our city and Rouyn, that is, on the Montreal-Val d'Or-Rouyn run, due to the ever-increasing number of air travellers.

We trust that you will take our request into consideration and that we will get a favourable reply.

The Senior Chamber of Commerce.

[Mr. Caouette.]

Incidentally this Chamber of Commerce, I am happy to mention, makes praiseworthy efforts and accomplishes much to help the development of our area. When we ask the Department of Transport to do its part, we are not asking for anything impossible. We only ask to do what is possible and logical to give us the service we are entitled to, a service that would give satisfaction to a population asking the Department of Transport for justice.

Mr. Chairman, I said a moment ago that we need an airport and an air terminal in Rouyn. As far as the Val d'Or airport is concerned, it is apparently only a question of months before work starts and Val d'Or will be given an air terminal costing approximately $220,000.

To my knowledge tenders were not called. We ask that tenders be called for the construction of an air terminal at Rouyn and at Val d'Or.

Another point on which I should like to draw the minister's attention also concerns the subject of aviation. Some time ago, about two years, an air carrier of Senneterre, in Abitibi East, Chapleau county, asked for a licence to serve the people who wanted to travel between Mattagami and Rupert House on James Bay.

At the time, the air transport board ruled against the Senneterre company, following the request or the representations of Austin Airways Limited.

The decision was as follows, that is—

• (7:10 p.m.)

[English]

The Board is not satisfied that it would be in the public interest to grant the application.

[Translation]

And, as one might expect, the request was refused on the grounds that:

[English]

That it has provided service in the James Bay area since 1934.

[Translation]

These are the considerations put forward by Austin Airways Limited which were opposed to the Fecteau Transport Company of Senneterre, with branches in Amos, Mattagami, Chibougamau and Gagnonville, getting a license. The reason—

[English]

That it has provided service in the James Bay area since 1934.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, this is a very weak objection and I call the attention of the Minister to it. If nowadays we heard people telling us: Listen, the Canadian National has been in operation since 1876, 1908 or 1911, and in view of the fact that it has rendered great services since its establishment, let us not grant a licence to Air Canada or other air transportation companies who could compete with the Canadian National or Canadian Pacific or any other railway in Canada. We would say: "Listen, you do not move along with progress."

In my opinion, this objection is very, very weak.

As to the second point:

[English]

That there is no community of interest between Mattagami and the James Bay area.

[Translation]

Austin Airways Limited are lying and they know it, for in 1934 Mattagami did not exist; this city has been in existence for only a few years. Mattagami is located about 120 miles north of Amos, in direct line with Rupert House, located another 132 miles north of Mattagami.

Now, Fecteau Transport already provided that service from Senneterre, Val d'Or, Amos and even Rouyn, if you want, to Mattagami and they are refused permission to go from Mattagami up to Rupert House, which really is in the province of Quebec. They are refused a licence supposedly because the service existing between Toronto, Timmins, Moosonee and Rupert House is enough. But when people from Val d'Or have business at Rupert House, they must take a plane at Timmins or Moosonee, which is not at all convenient for us.

Now, I call the attention of the minister to this point. I maintain that the application by Fecteau Transport in no way interferes with the operation of Austin Airways Limited now serving a more easterly area than that served by Fecteau Transport.

Another objection by Austin Airways is that—

[English]

That the major requirement of the Indians for air transportation is for charter flights to and from their hunting grounds and that their only need for unit toll service is in connection with the Moose Factory Indian and Eskimo hospital.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, there again, the Minister knows that Fecteau Transport is not asking to go to Moosonee; it does not ask to go from Moosonee to Rupert House, but rather from Mattagami to Rupert House in order to complete its circuit which lies completely in that area. Rupert House is located east of James Bay, while Moosonee lies west, which is not quite the same thing, and Mattagami lies directly south from Rupert House.

Mr. Chairman, I am of the opinion that it is unthinkable and inadmissible that Fecteau Transport should have been refused the authorization to operate between Mattagami and Rupert House, which operation would not have interfered in any way with the present service.

The following is an excerpt from the board's decision:

[English]

If the application of the appellant were granted this would result in competition between the appellant and the present commercial air service in the Rupert House area.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, that is the statement the minister made when officials of Fecteau Transport appeared before the department to appeal the decision of the board. He stated that this would create competition for another company. This would result in no such competition because Austin Airways do not serve either Val d'Or or Mattagami. That company has no business there, while Fecteau Transport does transact business there and in other places in our area. We want to go to Rupert House, as near James Bay as possible, and we also want to use Fecteau Transport's services as we see fit. But, in order to do that, the company must first obtain its licence.

• (7:20 p.m.)

I think the minister should reconsider what he signed on May 20, 1965, by maintaining order no. 2096 of the air transport board of Canada.

Mr. Chairman, I will not keep the house much longer. However, I would like to call to the minister's attention the train service from Ottawa to northwestern Quebec, that is from Ottawa to Rouyn-Noranda, going through Ontario and serving the ridings of Nipissing, Sudbury, North Bay, Nickel Belt, Cochrane, Timmins and Timiskaming, in Ontario, and Villeneuve, Chapleau, Témiscamingue and Pontiac on the Quebec-Ontario line.

When we want to take the train from Ottawa to get to our ridings, there are no sleeping car accommodations between Ottawa and North Bay. Then, we have to get off the train which leaves Ottawa at 7.30 p.m. and gets to North Bay at midnight. We must wait until we get to North Bay before going to bed and then get off the train at Swastika and take another train to get to Rouyn-Noranda. There are 35,000 people in those two cities and over 100,000 in the area.

We get to Swastika around 5.30 or 6 in the morning. We go to bed at 1.30 in North Bay and get off at Swastika at six o'clock. It takes at least half an hour to get ready, which means that we get only four hours' sleep or so during the night and get to Rouyn at 8.30.

When we want to come back to Ottawa, we take the train at 6.30 p.m., I think, as far as Swastika. From Swastika we cannot have a bed either because there is no sleeping car accommodation from North Bay to Ottawa.

We reach North Bay at about two in the morning and from North Bay to Ottawa it is impossible to get a berth on C.N.R. trains.

Mr. Chairman, I feel that C.N.R. authorities—and I also include the O.N.R., known as the Ontario Northern Railway—should urge this latter company to tie in with other systems, so that we might at least get one sleeping car on the run from Ottawa to Northern Ontario and northwestern Quebec, up to Rouyn-Noranda and return.

It was claimed that the line is uneconomic and that nobody wants to travel by train. This is understandable. Nobody from Ottawa, not only among members of the area but among the general public, is interested to board a train in Ottawa without being able to sleep until Rouyn-Noranda.

The minister himself would not ride on that train.

Mr. Pickersgill: Right you are.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, the minister says I am right. If he were to tell me that I am so right that he will act to let us have this sleeping car to and from Rouyn-Noranda, I would say he means it when he says I am right.

These are some of the recommendations I had for the Minister of Transport. Yesterday, my colleague from Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) mentioned the considerable improvements in the Department of Transport, Air Canada etc. as far as bilingualism is concerned. It is a fact. There are still improvements to be made, though.

I noticed when we had the opportunity—and you were one of those, Mr. Chairman—of taking the Air Canada flight from London to return home to Montreal, we had bilingual air hostesses, speaking English as well as French and French as well as English.

We were delighted to note this improvement on boarding the plane in London. I noticed the same thing travelling from Ottawa to Victoria in British Columbia.

Even pilots who know very little French had the courtesy to tell us, during the flight, at what altitude and speed we were flying. They tried to tell us in French. This is a marked improvement compared to the situation a few years ago.

On this score, we must congratulate the minister and encourage him to continue in the right direction. We do not want to take anything away from anyone, but we want everyone to be respected. It is through mutual respect, and I feel the minister has understood this, that we will have a more united Canada, a country with better understanding, greater assurance and greater development.

[English]

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Chairman, having listened to a great deal of the debate on the Department of Transport estimates, a stanza of a brief poem runs through my mind. It is a very simple one:

> My heart is warm with the friends I make,
> And better friends I would not be knowing.
> But there isn't a train I wouldn't take
> No matter where it's going.

It seems to me that the lady who penned those lines, were she in Canada these days, would find occasionally there are no trains she could take because they are being cut off.

I think too, we will find that if there is not a change in policy we will not be making friends, particularly this year and next year with the centennial celebrations that will be going on in this country, and the demands that are going to be made on all our transport services, including rail transport.

The poem had an air of nostalgia about it, but I would like to assure you, Mr. Chairman, that there are many factors in the rail situation that are not nostalgic. Transportation is necessary. There are people who depend on the railway for their transportation and for their livelihood. There are towns and communities that, to an amazing extent, still depend on the railway both for providing jobs for the working force and providing transportation. One of these is my constituency.

I think it imperative that the Board of Transport Commissioners, for a variety of reasons, do something about the removal of the "Dominion". The supplementary judgment that was handed down quite recently is an interesting document. The surprising thing about it is the way it allows argument concerning sins of omission, and then one finds that the sins of omission are the basis for the justification for the removal of the train. This seems to me to be an inverse use of argument and of the English language.

It is the sort of thing where the Board of Transport Commissioners becomes a very permissive parent, who would speak to its child in the sense of saying: All right, you have got your face so dirty you don't have to wash it any more. This is the attitude we find in dealing with the C.P.R. and their application to remove the service: It "has run down so badly that, all right, you don't have to do anything more about it."

Figures are presented to show losses. These are supposed to be very frightening figures, but I do not think they are. For one thing, we know the profits on the other operations of the C.P.R. are not set down beside them, so that we do not have the two sets of figures at the same time. I do not think the figures showing the losses are so staggering that the situation warrants the complete removal of the "Dominion". There are many small school districts with resources far less than those of the C.P.R. and who, every few years, raise sums of money equivalent to these that are supposed to terrify us.

It is time we began to realize that the arguments presented in justification for the removal of the "Dominion" are not particularly sound, and that the real question does not lie in this sort of inverted argument. To me these arguments are rather Alice-in-Wonderland-like. It is time we started to apply the answer of one of the other characters in that work, who said, "The words do not really matter at all. The important question is, who is going to be master here?" The same process of reasoning would apply in this situation.

The question of the low morale of train crews has become one of import, and though some of these matters reach over into other people's departments I think they do have a bearing on transport. I am not a railwayman, nor do I pretend to be one, but I have travelled on trains in Nasser's Egypt, and on trains in India, third class, in recent years. I have travelled on trains behind the Iron Curtain where the guards made scrupulous searches for escaping citizens. I have witnessed such attempted searches for persons, and that type of interruption; but never at any time have I seen a train crew so completely demoralized as the one manning the C.P.R. train that brought me from my constituency to Ottawa. The reason for the lack of morale is plain. They know what is happening about the withdrawal of the "Dominion" and the only question in their minds is not whether the C.P.R. will withdraw the Canadian as well, but when this will happen.

We know a number of areas in which that company has tangled with its employees. We know about the employees' concern over the pension plan and the interpretation of the Minimum Wages Act as well as the withdrawal of that train. We know that in a great variety of ways in which the company extends its services it succeeds in making train rides unpleasant and reduces the number of passengers that can be expected. I think it of extreme importance that the Board of Transport Commissioners should either order the resumption of this train service or the government should take over not only the railroad operations but the entire operations of the company.

In closing I should like to make brief reference to another item. With the announcement at the beginning of this afternoon's session that the government has seen fit to engage in subsidies in relation to a substantial power undertaking in the province of Manitoba, the government's attitude regarding the subsidy not being applied to ferry construction in the province of British Columbia seems even more inadequate. In the light of today's announcement I think a reconsideration of government policy in regard to that important industry in British Columbia is necessary.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, it may be of some small comfort to the Minister of Transport if I tell him that at this stage of the consideration of his estimates it is not my intention to pursue at length the subject of the operating philosophy and methods of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. After all, that great corporation through the kindness of its heart has left us one railway passenger car on Vancouver island. I refer to the day-liner which runs between Victoria and the city of Courtenay.

In addition, Mr. Chairman, I could possibly be considered to be somewhat prejudiced in this matter by having a personal interest, because if some of the suggestions that have been advanced in the course of this discussion were accepted, the C.P.R. might have to divest itself of that reservation it holds on mineral rights on the property on which my home is situated.

I would say, however, that when listening to the discussion on this question I did recall one of my first experiences after being elected as a member of this house. At that time the Canadian Pacific was operating what amounted to a monopoly transportation service by vessel along the west coast of Vancouver island. It was the only lifeline of communication for groceries, mail and everything else that those communities required. I had occasion to listen to some complaints about this service and, in a very conciliatory frame of mind, thinking there are always two sides to every story, I went to see the management of the Canadian Pacific steamship services in Vancouver. I wanted to hear the other side of the story before I made an assessment of this matter. I have never forgotten the abrupt manner in which the head of that particular division banged his fist on the desk and said: If she pays we will run her; if she doesn't we will pull her off. I do not recall whether I ever actually told that story before in the house, but if I had told it at an earlier date it might not have been so much in keeping with the general feeling I have observed during the course of the current discussion.

However, I should like to recall to the minister's mind some discussions that took place during a consideration of the transport minister's estimates when I was first in this house. If I recall correctly, the present minister was then Secretary of State. I have a vivid recollection of the exchanges that then took place between the late Mr. Gillis, the then hon. member for Cape Breton South, and the then minister of transport, now our High Commissioner in London, about the subject of linking Cape Breton Island with the rest of the province of Nova Scotia. Over a period of time investigations were conducted by the government and eventually a commitment was made for the construction of that causeway. Whether or not this ever happened, I do not know, but there was supposed to be some kind of procession across that causeway led, of course, by people playing the bagpipes, in which the then minister of transport and the hon. member for Cape Breton South were to participate.

If I am correct I recall that even then there were some qualms among certain people on Cape Breton Island—and living on an island myself I can appreciate their sentiments—that in some ways this causeway might not be such a good idea, that it might make it too easy for Sassenachs and other lesser breeds without the law to travel freely into the inner sanctums of Cape Breton Island. However, I must say that I have not recently heard any serious complaints from members representing that interesting part of our country about the fact that the causeway was built. Indeed, Mr. Chairman, to the contrary, apparently the building of that causeway stimulated an increasing interest in the linking of another one of Canada's islands to the larger mainland part of the continent. Apparently over the years this also has borne some fruit. As I understand it, we are now committed to the building of a causeway to Prince Edward Island.

Mr. Pickersgill: We are building it.

Mr. Barnett: I am glad to hear that we are actually building this causeway. I have not been in that part of Canada recently, but I am glad to know that we have progressed to that point. This immediately raises another question. Where do we go from here?

Mr. Pickersgill: To Prince Edward Island.

Mr. Barnett: I recognize that we cannot do all these things at once. We did build the Canso causeway, which was considered to be a mammoth engineering project. From articles of that time it is apparent that when this construction was well under way, with the kind of engineering techniques and equipment then available, it became clear that it was a somewhat more simple job than earlier forecasts had indicated.

• (7:40 p.m.)

We are now building a causeway to Prince Edward Island. If I understand correctly it will span a distance of some nine miles, and perhaps the minister can correct me if I am not completely accurate in that figure. The fact that this is under way led me recently to ask a question of the Minister of Transport in the House of Commons. Perhaps I might direct the attention of this committee to page 808 of Hansard for February 7, where I asked the Minister of Transport:

Now that the Prince Edward Island causeway is under way, will the government undertake to carry out feasibility studies concerning the linking either by causeway or tunnel of two other major islands with the rest of Canada? I refer to Newfoundland and Vancouver Island.

The Minister of Transport in reply, speaking I am sure in a rather jocular vein, said:

Mr. Speaker, I think priority should be given to Newfoundland.

Of course, representing Bonavista-Twillingate I have some appreciation that the minister's immediate reaction might be in that direction. However, Mr. Chairman, much as I admire the island of Newfoundland, I happen to represent a fairly substantial part of the geography of Canada and the people of Canada encompassed within the boundaries of Vancouver Island, and I think the minister will understand me quite well when I say that I should take the opportunity of presenting the other side of the case assuming, if he wants to for the moment, that we are not going to carry out these projects at the same time.

I should like to draw to the minister's attention that this is the year 1966, which is of particular significance to many Canadians because it is the 100th anniversary of the date on which the people of the then crown colony of Vancouver Island decided to throw in their lot with the people of a large part of the mainland of what is now Canada, and become part and parcel of the then crown colony of British Columbia. Therefore I would advance as a first point in this discussion that, while we were all very happy when Newfoundland decided to become part of Canada, it will be several years before Newfoundland will be celebrating its centenary of becoming linked in a constitutional way with the mainland of what is now Canada.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. gentleman is quite wrong about that. Newfoundland has always been linked in a constitutional way with the mainland of what is now Canada. The coast of Labrador has always been a part of Newfoundland.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Barnett: I admit that the minister is constitutionally correct in that respect; I would not quarrel with him. However, I might point out in reply that while we have not quite reached that point, mainland or not, at least British Columbia became part of Canada in 1871, which will still mean we shall be celebrating our 100th anniversary somewhat before Newfoundland. I think we have to put this matter into perspective.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman spoke about perspective and I must say that thought was going through my mind. I did make an appeal yesterday that subjects which could just as well be discussed on the 1966-67 estimates as on the 1965-66 estimates perhaps could be adjourned until we reach those estimates. I cannot help but feel that this visionary project, in which I take a great deal of interest, is one that would still be quite current when the next round of my estimates comes before the committee in a few weeks from now. I wonder whether the hon. gentleman would not consider that perhaps this matter is not urgent between now and March 31.

Mr. Barnett: I appreciate the desire of the minister to have his estimates proceeded with as rapidly as possible, but I would point out, Mr. Chairman, through you two things to the minister. One relates to my reference to the building of the Canso causeway. All these matters have to start some time, and if my recollection of the debates that took place before the decision was made to build the Canso causeway is correct, I would suggest it is not at all too soon to begin right now putting forward this proposal, which as far as I know is a comparatively new one, as far as making a serious request for a feasibility study in which the federal government would be prepared to participate is concerned.

The second point I should like to make to the minister is this. In making this proposal at this time I am in effect assisting the minister with a suggestion which will enable him, in my view, to get himself off the hook in respect of another matter which is of very current and immediate interest and has been the subject matter of considerable discussion during the process of the consideration of these estimates. I refer to the question of subsidies on shipbuilding.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, will the hon. gentleman assure me that if I agree right now that we will start a feasibility study on a causeway to Vancouver Island there will be no more ferries needed between now and the time it is built?

Mr. Barnett: Well, now, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Pickersgill: Otherwise I do not see how the hon. member is getting me off the hook.

Mr. Barnett: Of course, I am not the only one who has any say in the question of a ferry service. In fact, as the minister knows, I have very little if any say in the question of a ferry service that may or may not be operated between Vancouver Island and the mainland part of British Columbia. However, I and possibly some people who are not in this house might be less disposed to press the question of what some of us contend is a discrimination in the minister's shipbuilding subsidy proposal, if we knew this question of linking Vancouver Island was going to be put forward as a serious interest of the federal government.

I have no desire to pursue this matter at any great length at this time, but for the record I think it should be said at the outset that Vancouver Island has played quite an important role in respect of the development of Canada as we now know it. The founding by the Hudson's Bay Company of Fort Victoria in 1843 as a bastion, if you like, of the area of influence, at that time of course of Great Britain, can in many ways be argued as resulting in our now having a Canada from sea to sea.

It can also be argued, Mr. Chairman, that if this had not happened and we had allowed the encroaching influence of our American cousins to extend up the coast, as they certainly would like to have done, perhaps the problems of the Minister of Transport would be a little less difficult in some respects, but certainly Canada as we now know it would not be under discussion in this parliament.

I think it is not without some interest that back of that decision to establish Fort Victoria lay the question of whether or not our boundaries might have been along the Columbia River in the western part of the continent. In this connection our links with the eastern part of Canada go back quite a long way. Just to illustrate this point, Mr. Chairman, I should like to recount to the committee a story in respect of Fort Astoria which, as many hon. members probably know, was located at the mouth of the Columbia River by the American trading interests from the Atlantic coast.

At one point, just before the war of 1812, the Hudson's Bay Company had concluded a deal to buy Fort Astoria from the Astoria Trading Interests. They had actually hoisted the union jack atop Fort Astoria when the war of 1812 was declared. Orders were issued to capture any available enemy posts, and a ship of the Royal Navy was dispatched to Fort Astoria. The officer in charge decided he had to carry out his instructions to the letter. When he found that the union jack was flying over Fort Astoria, he insisted that the union jack be lowered and the stars and stripes raised so that he could actually capture the fort. The result was that in the settlement of the war of 1812, when it was agreed that all territories held by either power before the outbreak of hostilities would be returned, the United States got Fort Astoria back, even though it had already sold to the Hudson's Bay Company.

I mention this, Mr. Chairman, as one of the reasons in the background of our history that this proposal for linking Vancouver Island in a modern transportation sense should be of interest and concern to the people in the east, or what was then Upper and Lower Canada. I hope that the members from this part of the country will be unanimous in their support of the plea I am making for the proposal to link Vancouver Island with the mainland.

I should like to point out to the minister that this is a very practical question. There is a lot of pressure building up in Vancouver Island over the fact that the people in the rest of Canada, with the possible exception of the island from which the Minister of Transport comes, can travel by automobile from one end of the country to the other on toll free highways, except of course for the tolls the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources levies going through national parks. There have been suggestions made from time to time in British Columbia that the tolls on the ferry system should be abolished.

This is an interesting suggestion, and I am sure the minister recognizes it would create practical problems. If there were no tolls, if it did not cost me $7 for myself and my car to go from Nanaimo to Vancouver on that ferry, I would probably go a lot oftener. This would mean we would have to build an increasing number of ferries. I leave it to the minister's imagination to take into consideration the fact that the population of Vancouver Island is almost 300,000 and he can envisage just what kind of pressure that might create on the building of ferries and, incidentally, on the federal shipbuilding construction subsidy in respect of the building of the ferries that would be required.

This is a serious added cost to those who live on Vancouver Island. For example, if a man, his wife and four children want to start on a holiday, it is going to cost them $34 to get back and forward from Vancouver Island before they go anywhere else in Canada. I am not going into the question of the added cost for the transportation of goods at this time.

I realize fully, Mr. Chairman, that the remarks I am making tonight are only of an introductory nature to this subject.

I would be most happy if the minister would give a less qualified commitment with regard to the willingness of the federal government, jointly with the provincial government, to enter into a feasibility study of a tunnel or floating causeway or whatever it may be to connect Vancouver Island with the mainland. I am taking my figures from the report of the Redistribution Commission, but I understand that the population base of Prince Edward Island is 104,659 and the population base of Vancouver Island is 289,679. If the causeway to Prince Edward Island is nine miles in length, one could argue that an equivalent on a per capita basis so far as Vancouver Island is concerned could be something of the order of 27 miles. I understand that a direct link across the Strait of Georgia from Point Grey to Gabriola Island, on the outskirts of Nanaimo, would be of the order of 16 miles. I think this may be fairly close to the length of the proposed crossing of the Strait of Belle Isle, but I have never been there.

In any event, Mr. Chairman, if the minister is prepared to indicate the willingness of the federal government to proceed immediately with a feasibility study, then perhaps I, for one, might be willing to be less emphatic in pressing my argument on the subsidy for the construction of vessels to operate between Vancouver Island and the mainland of British Columbia under the aegis of a public authority.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I may just point out to the minister, in view of the discussion we have had about the Canadian Pacific Railway, and in view of the rather sorry history of their previous services by ferry to Vancouver Island, that perhaps his whole concept of shipbuilding subsidies is upside down, and that if there is to be any subsidy it should be for vessels which are to be constructed for a publicly owned and operated authority which is basically concerned with providing transportation services to people as they require them, rather than primarily with providing a profit to private shareholders.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Chairman, I was going to make these remarks as we went through the various items, but since they involve at least three subsequent votes, namely 30, 35, 40 and 75, rather than delay the passage of these items as we come to them I thought it might be more expedient if I were to make a few remarks now and confine them to the broad field of aviation.

I should like to extend on behalf of a lot of people interested in aviation in Canada our thanks to the Department of Transport and to the minister for certain very enlightened attitudes in the field of general aviation. I think particularly of aid to municipalities which are interested in the construction of small airports. Perhaps at this point I should qualify what I mean by general aviation. It is that field of aviation that excludes military aircraft and the larger commercial air carrier, such as Air Canada, C.P.A., and to a lesser extent E.P.A. and Eastern Canada. I am referring rather to the small commercial service firms in this country and to the many thousands of businessmen who utilize the aircraft and airports of our country and the flying clubs which train the pilots to fly.

Coming back to my first point, the question of aid to municipalities for the construction of airstrips, as beneficial as the fund of up to $1 million has been we still have from one end of the country to the other a lot of criticism from municipalities who would like to take advantage of this offer and provide their area with a strip capable of meeting immediate needs of local flyers. However, they are a little reluctant to proceed because part of the legislation covering this kind of assistance by the government involves the turning over of the ownership of the land to the federal authority, and quite understandably this a lot of municipalities are reluctant to do.

I would ask the minister and his departmental officials, who have done much to bring this legislation about, to improve upon the earlier legislation, which involved cost sharing and which was very limited in application. The next time this matter comes to their attention I would ask whether they could find some way of making it possible for the specific municipal units involved to retain ownership of the land which they are now required to turn over for the construction of these small airports.

The second item to which I should like to refer the minister and his department is the question of landing fees for light aircraft, both private and commercial, at Department of Transport airports across the country. It is my understanding that this matter is under study by the department. I hope that out of this study will come the elimination of landing fees.

I suspect that a close examination of the keeping of records in this regard, the collection and billing of the amounts involved, and so on, would prove that it is quite costly. I think there is a more simple expediency. I would suggest that most operators in the country would not be averse to the addition of one half, three quarters or even a full cent per gallon of gas in the form of airport fees. If the minister will consider that I am sure that his department would receive from the people involved their further very grateful thanks.

Moving now briefly into another area, which again has some sense of urgency about it, I should like to say something about the application of aircraft for agricultural purposes. In this connection I would ask that the minister consult with his appropriate colleagues in the government so as to encourage their favourable consideration of the removal of the 11 per cent sales tax on aircraft used purely for agricultural purposes. It seems to me quite unfair that farmers who have a ready use for agricultural aircraft are somewhat deterred from making an entry into this field owing to the application of this sales tax. They can buy their tractor and virtually every other piece of equipment used on their farms without paying sales tax. Yet when it comes to the utilization of a piece of equipment which in many cases would save time and money, improve planting and so on, the farmers run into the question of sales tax, a factor which can add $2,000 or $3,000 to the cost of a piece of equipment. I commend this matter to the minister for his very active consideration.

The fourth item I should like to deal with, Mr. Chairman, involves the development of broad guide lines for that area of commercial aviation fondly known to myself as the operations of regional air carriers. Without recalling this too vividly to the minister's mind —though in this respect perhaps the government in office before the present one was a little tardy as well—since early 1960 the Air Transport Association of Canada and the Canadian Pilots Association members all gathered together one by one at conventions and meetings to appeal to the federal government and the Department of Transport for the establishment of a regional air policy, a policy designed to improve service in the several regions of Canada where, to a large degree, subsidies are required to maintain, I was going to say adequate levels of service, but to maintain service. I am sure these commercial operators do not even yet feel that the level of service has reached adequate proportions in any of the regions of Canada.

[Mr. Forrestall.]

In 1963 the then Minister of Transport told the house that he believed some clarification of the future role of regional air carriers is essential to meet the rapidly changing technical and economic circumstances of aviation. Mr. Chairman, he was right. Then in November 1963, the new Minister of Transport—the old minister having returned to a new portfolio—was right when he reiterated those words. He was right again on February 26, 1964, when he suggested to the house that the whole question of future air policy is under very active consideration. However he said that no conclusions had yet been reached. As soon as one has been reached it will be made known. I hope this will be before too long. It was in late February of 1964.

He was again right in September 1964 when he suggested to the house that he was going to keep on pushing for a regional air policy, just as hard as he could. He hoped that at the end of the year he would be able to make good recommendations to the house which would receive the approval of the house. Again he was right in February, 1965, when he said, referring to the time it would take to introduce effective regional air policies, "I do not think I can say anything useful about the time it would take, beyond saying it will be done just as soon as we think we have something to communicate to the house which will really work."

I understand the problem faced by the minister, Mr. Chairman. It is an old problem and not one that can be left hanging too much longer. Our regional air carriers need some firm direction, they need direction and clarification on the question of subsidies. These subsidies remain necessary in spite of certain protests about them. The government should, and I certainly hope shall, perform that action before 1966 passes into 1967. In order that at some future time the minister will not be embarrassed, I will not take it upon myself to ask him this year, although somebody else might.

Mr. Chairman, a final matter that I wish to deal with in the few minutes left is the question of the necessity of the government of Canada to look at the entire field of light aircraft, including single and twin engine aircraft with fixed gear and retractable gear.

I refer to all aircraft in Canada of under 5,000 pounds all-up weight.

Mr. Chairman, the whole field ought to be reviewed. Knowing the competence of the members of the entire department, the review will not be a difficult one. I think that the officials of the department should survey the whole question with this in mind: How many of the aircraft reviewed were made in Canada? How many could have been made in Canada had there been some action, or some stimulus on the part of the federal government to foster and encourage in Canada the construction of a truly all-Canadian aircraft?

In Canada our aircraft industry has developed some of the finest aircraft in the world, but they are highly specialized. They have been designed to meet special needs in our northland and in our bush areas. No attention has been paid to them, except by one or two very hardy souls. No attention has been paid to the whole field of a truly Canadian light aircraft. We have one prototype, the Cheetah, whose designer and original constructor has been running around the country trying to sell it. He has a good piece of equipment. It is well built, but he will never make the grade I am afraid because he has not the support from a government that should be concerned about the high level now reached in the importation of aircraft from the United States into this country.

I think the government, Mr. Chairman, should very seriously consider the objectives of the Department of Transport or of the Department of Industry. I would ask the minister to give serious consideration to the establishment of a fund of money which would not purport to hide itself in any mist of subsidy, but which would be an outright grant to the Canadian aircraft industry of up to $5 million, for the design, development and building of a prototype of a truly light aircraft, for pleasure or for commercial purposes here in Canada. I suggest that Canada needs badly a fixed gear single engine high-wing aircraft that can be used for pleasure flying and for flight training. If we do not do it we are going to see the entire market flooded, from now until eternity I am afraid, with products from across the border. Mind you, they are excellent aircraft, but they are not better than we can build here ourselves.

The level of buying in Canada now is reflected in these figures, that as of December 31, 1965 there were 7,542 aircraft registered in Canada. Of these 5,205 were private aircraft, the average cost of which was from between $10,000 to $20,000. That, Mr. Chairman, represents a substantial industry.

I suggest to the minister as he and everybody else probably knows, that the vast majority of these light, private aircraft are made in a country other than Canada, and that they could very well be made here, if the industry could be encouraged to design, develop and get some prototypes on the market.

Other interesting figures I might point out are a 25 per cent increase in the number of licences issued by the minister's department, including private, commercial and other upgraded tickets. The vast majority of these, of course, are private licences. During the past year 9,094 people received an upgrading of their licence or a new private flying licence. If that number of pilots and that number of aircraft does not warrant considerably more active consideration directed to the industry than it now receives from the federal government, then I am afraid it will be a long time before the opportunity which exists right now again presents itself to the government.

There exists a very strong base for the government to justify the introduction of admittedly substantial sums of money, but the returns would be manyfold, and all to the good of the industry. May I commend that suggestion to the minister. If we do this, then, we have policies in Canada that are designed to protect our own manufacturers when they have achieved some 10 per cent, say, of the market. Recently the government saw fit to impose a 15 per cent duty on certain types of aircraft coming into Canada in order to protect Brown Brothers and their new aircraft. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the minister that again the new aircraft is highly specialized, and in no way suited to private use. I do not think a competent instructor would take it upon himself to teach in one of them. That is not what it was designed or built for. We are concerned about the protection of the aircraft industry in Canada and we take good measures to protect it. I think this is a good measure but I also think it has been misapplied. The impact of taxes on general aviation among the smaller operators will have a disastrous effect and this will always be the case as long as we approach this question in a piecemeal fashion.

I use the present illustration to underline the need to develop aircraft in Canada which will cover the whole range. Then, when we impose taxes, we shall not be imposing hardship on those who need to fly, or enjoy flying, the type of aircraft which is here being penalized because it falls into a broad general category. If the minister would give some consideration to these four or five items I would be grateful, as I am sure the entire aviation industry would be.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): It appears we are approaching the end of our discussion on this first item, but I should like to ask the minister a question before he replies. I should like to point out that there are some on this side who are foregoing their opportunity to speak; we know there will be a further chance for them to express their views when the main estimates for 1966-67 come up for consideration.

Before I ask this question I should like to point out that the minister has on two occasions failed to make an initial statement on the first item in the traditional way. I hope this will not become a pattern. If it did, I would regard it as a bad habit. Perhaps his failure to make a statement is one of the reasons why the debate has ranged so widely. Had he told us what had been accomplished in the department—supposing anything has been accomplished—and challenged us on one or two points we would have been obliged to reply and deal with what he had said and perhaps, as I say, we would not have ranged so wide in our comments.

I wish to inquire as to the whereabouts of three reports all of which are, I think, important. First, there is the Pilotage Commission report. I want to know what is happening to that and when we can anticipate legislation with respect to changes to be made in the Shipping Act. I want to know, too, how we are getting on with the report on the future of the air lines, and possible mergers—the Wheatcroft report. This is important because when we are examining the affairs of the C.P.R. we should know how much of the moneys of the C.P.R. are going into air services and being taken away from the rail passenger service. Last, I want to ask about an old favourite. Where is the interdepartmental study on the future of the merchant marine? This is important in days when we are moving bulk cargo all over the world and Canada is losing her position at the bargaining table.

This is what I am interested in. I hope the minister appreciates the sacrifices we are all making here. I think he has learned a good deal this week as far as answers are concerned.

[Mr. Forrestall.]

Mr. Prittie: I am not prepared to make any sacrifices. I have already made my sacrifice, as has the minister, by listening to about 50 speeches on the estimates of this department.

Over the years there have been many suggestions made that the Department of Transport is far too big, dealing as it does not only with railway questions but with canals, telecommunications, broadcasting, harbours and so on. There have been suggestions that it should be broken up, or at least, that a department of civil aviation should be created under a minister of its own. I made this suggestion in 1963, and even then it was not an original one. The Air Transport Association has advanced this idea from time to time. I am sure the minister appreciates that if his department were dealing only with railway matters, for example, the estimates might already have been passed. I recall that the hon. gentleman said a couple of years ago that he felt big and able enough to handle this particular department. I am not so sure he believes this, now. He is certainly very capable but I think the size and complexity of the job have slowed him down.

If one thinks of the problems facing this country in the field on railway operations alone it becomes apparent there is a strong argument in favour of a separate department to handle these questions. I think the size of the department requires that it be split, at any rate, into two, in such a way as to recognize the importance of civil aviation in Canada. I was looking at the 1965-66 estimates and I noticed that the estimates of the air services branch alone are more than those of 12 departments of government; there are 12 departments, each in charge of ministers, whose budgets are smaller than that of the air services branch of the Department of Transport. They are the Departments of Agriculture, Citizenship and Immigration, Defence Production, Fisheries, Forestry, Industry, Justice, Mines, National Revenue, Northern Affairs, the Secretary of State and Trade and Commerce. All these departments have budgets smaller than one branch of the Department of Transport.

If the government does not see fit to establish a separate department I suggest they do as has been done in the Department of National Defence—appoint an associate minister and make him responsible for the conduct of part of the department. I realize that a step was taken in this direction recently. It was stated that the Minister without Portfolio was to be given some responsibility in this department. Why not go further and make him associate Minister of Transport for civil aviation? I think recognition of this type is due to the air transportation industry in Canada.

I was interested in the many comments which have been made about the Canadian Pacific Railway. Members of all parties have taken a few swipes at this giant corporation. I would point out that since I came here in 1962 members have never had a chance to have a face-to-face meeting with the top management of that railway. I understand we are to have such an opportunity this year. On the other hand, we have had a chance to meet Mr. Donald Gordon and the assorted vice presidents and comptrollers of the C.N.R. each year.

I think these meetings in the transportation committee have been most useful. They provide an opportunity for the management of the C.N.R. to learn directly what members think on certain subjects and they can communicate with members directly rather than in a roundabout way through the minister. If you will look at the minutes of the transportation committee, Mr. Chairman, you will see some of the topics which have been discussed with Mr. Gordon and other senior officials of the C.N.R. Among them was the question of priority for railway facilities in ports, for hotel operations, passenger railway service, and the position of the C.N.R. in the trucking industry. These are the sort of things which members have been bringing up during the past few days in connection with the C.P.R.

Some two years ago I introduced a bill, the purpose of which was to provide that any railway company in Canada receiving any public moneys at all should be required to file a report with the Minister of Transport. It was my hope that such a report would be sent to the railway committee where members of parliament could have an opportunity to question the operators of the railway lines. Of course I had the C.P.R. particularly in mind. I recall the debate which took place on my bill at that time. The government members who spoke on this included the hon. member for Labelle, the hon. member for Stanstead, the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska and the hon. member for Jacques Cartier-Lasalle. All through their speeches there were references to snooping into private enterprise, to creeping socialism, and all that type of talk. You would think I had brought in a bill to nationalize the C.P.R. Well, people are coming to that point of view.

The National Farmers Union and the Canadian Federation of Agriculture have declared themselves on this question, and it seems to me that a Social Credit member tonight made some reference to it. However, that was not the purpose of my bill. It was simply to have the management of the C.P.R. come before a committee of the house each year so that members could question the management of that company in the same way as they can question the management of the C.N.R.

I know it has been explained to me that the reason the C.N.R. appears before a committee is that it is a crown corporation. When the government members were talking against my bill two years ago they referred to the fact that the C.P.R. was a private company and that the alternative was a public corporation. The C.P.R. may be a private company but it is a sort of public institution in Canada and it certainly has had a great deal of public support.

I have been interested to note that some of the new Liberal members in this parliament have had their say about the C.P.R. These have included the hon. member for Port Arthur and the hon. member for Renfrew North. I only hope that when my bill comes up again this year—it is Bill No. C-18 on the order paper—I can expect support from them because I think it would be a very healthy thing if the management of the C.P.R. could be questioned by members of parliament each year. Perhaps if they knew they had to come here each year they might mend their ways a little bit, although I am not too sure about that point.

I listened with a great deal of interest to the speeches made about the harbour of Vancouver by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra, the hon. member for Vancouver East and the hon. member for Coast-Capilano. I found them very interesting, and the points that all those members made are worth-while points. I understand the minister is going out soon to have a look at the harbour of Vancouver. When he is out looking at the port of Vancouver I hope he will also go and have a look at Vancouver International Airport. There are one or two points I want to bring up in connection with it.

It will be no surprise to the minister if I suggest to him that I and the people of my constituency have a continuing interest in the question of access to Vancouver International Airport. In the past two sessions of parliament I have introduced resolutions calling for the construction, with federal participation, of either a bridge or tunnel directly from the city of Vancouver to Sea Island where Vancouver airport is located. I will not go over the whole matter again, but simply remind the minister that at present one has to cross two bridges from the mainland to get to the airport, and that one of these bridges is a two-lane swingspan bridge, that it has been out of commission at times, that when it is out of commission or when it is open Vancouver International Airport, the third most important airport in the country, is cut off from the mainland altogether.

I believe there have been some discussions about this matter between the Department of Transport and the British Columbia department of highways. I imagine there has been no agreement as yet on a sharing basis, but I would like to have the minister report at some time on that point.

The new terminal at Vancouver airport is beginning to be constructed. The groundwork is done and I believe the actual construction will soon start. It is scheduled for completion in 1967, and I hope by 1967 we could make a start on a better approach to the airport, which is located in Richmond.

There is another matter concerning the airport which is of interest to a number of people in my constituency. The airport is located on Sea Island. At the present time the Department of Transport owns most of that island. However, two or three residential subdivisions still remain on the island, and the people in one of these subdivisions in particular have cause for concern. The airport is constantly expanding. The department is buying up new property all the time, but these people do not know whether the government will eventually want their property or not.

The subdivision I have in mind in particular is called the Cora Brown subdivision, a Veterans Land Act settlement. It is very difficult to sell homes in that area. It is also very difficult to borrow money to make improvements to those homes. In fact a few years ago the people there could not borrow money at all and the Department of Veterans Affairs had to make loans available to them because private borrowing was denied to them. There will be a tendency for this subdivision, this group of homes, to go downhill unless some decision is made soon concerning the Department of Transports' long-range plans for the airport.

I notice that the other day in Vancouver Dr. T. G. Howe, regional director of the department of transport for B.C. was speaking to a service club, and he talked about the need for new and longer runways. He talked about the amount of air freight to be handled in Vancouver, which will probably be multiplied several times in the next few years, and he said new terminals would be necessary for this freight and new runways would be required for this type of cargo. Therefore I would ask the minister, and the officials concerned in his department about these things, to have a look at their land requirements on Sea Island so that the people who are still resident there can have some assurance of what is to happen in the future.

If necessary perhaps they could be bought out, and if their homes are not required right away they could be rented back to them for a period of a year or so. It is necessary that some decision be made before long.

Finally, there is one matter of personnel concerning the Department of Transport to which I wish to make reference. Members of parliament from the lower mainland of B.C. have been getting quite a number of communications from the radio operators employed by the department. There seems to be a great deal of dissatisfaction about the lack of promotion in the department, and about the pay rates paid to these employees, pay rates which they feel are not commensurate with their duties and the amount of training they have had.

I would suggest it is most unsatisfactory to have a group of employees who feel this way about their working conditions. They have been making some applications to the department through the Civil Service Commission, through their employees association, which I believe is the Civil Service Association of Canada, and I would ask the minister to instruct the officials of his department to take a look at this problem and try to regulate it as soon as possible.

Otherwise I do not think they are going to get the very best work from these employees, these radio operators, who are doing work of great importance. They are concerned with the whole question of air traffic control and the lives of air travellers depend on the efficient work of these people. I would ask the minister to check into that point, in addition to the others I have mentioned. Those are the only remarks I have to make at this time.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Chairman, I would like to take just a few moments of the committee's time to urge a suggestion on the Minister of Transport. It stems from this business of curtailing passenger service, about which we have heard a lot in the last few days. I think it is a very wrong and mistaken time to be talking about curtailing passenger service just when we are entering into an age of leisure, when hours of work are being shortened and holidays lengthened, when people are needing ways and means to use their leisure well and to good purpose in their lives.

This is no time to take off the "Dominion" or curtail the services in other ways. After all, the running of passenger services on railways may not be profitable but we must have these services. Just the same in collecting garbage: This is not profitable, but it is a service which people must have and it is up to us to see that it is carried out. If the C.P.R. does not feel it can carry on with its passenger services the government should have the courage to force that railway company to stick by its bargain. If it will not run passenger services, in exchange for all the profitable enterprises it now has, there is no choice for the government but to take over the profitable as well as the unprofitable operations to ensure that we have passenger service in this country.

There are a great many people in this country who are retired on old age pension to whom travel is a very important facet of their leisure pastime. As an example of what can be done for these people, let me refer to what has happened in Norway. In that enlightened country the government pays half the fare of an elderly person travelling around the country, because it considers travel to be one of the best ways to encourage the elderly people to use their time. There is on the order paper at this time a motion which suggests that the government should go the entire way and pay all the expenses of elderly people who are travelling. I would be content to see this government adopt the practice followed by the government of Norway, going halfway to pay the travel costs of our elderly citizens.

Mr. Chairman, anyone who has studied the needs of elderly or aged people will realize that there is a need to provide a means by which elderly people can remain alert and live out their remaining lives in something other than loneliness. In the city of Vancouver the hydro company there sponsors mystery tours on buses around Vancouver and its environs at very reasonable rates during the seasons of the year when weather will permit. I know that a great part of that traffic is composed of elderly people who take advantage of these very reasonable rates to get a change of scene and some form of relaxation during this twilight period of their lives.

If the Minister of Transport wants a trite phrase, let me suggest that we institute travel subsidies for senior citizens. This could be a very important form of relaxation for those who are elderly and aged. It would give them a great deal of interest and new experience. It would enable them to visit their children and grandchildren, and many of them are not able to do this today. This would also keep our elderly people in the main stream of life during their final years. I urge the minister to give serious consideration to this suggestion. If Norway can afford this kind of policy I do not see why Canada cannot afford it. One of the troubles with us in this country is that we are too isolated and seem to think that because a great many people live here in an affluent society, everyone enjoys this position in life. That is a wrong concept, and as long as we have one quarter of our people living in poverty it is up to us to find ways and means of lessening that poverty.

I hope the minister during the course of this debate will tell me whether there is any reason why this country cannot adopt a policy such as I have suggested. Certainly from the standpoint of increasing the popularity of his government this would be a sure-fire method, and would at the same time make it possible for our aged to mix with their contemporaries across this country.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I have listened to this debate for some time and do not intend to repeat those things that have been said. Two subjects that have been touched upon have caused me some surprise. The first is the lack of government initiative to establish a national transportation policy in Canada. I understand the minister is going to remain in his present position only until new transportation legislation has been introduced, and legislation concerning two or three fields within his jurisdiction, mainly cable television and others. I am surprised he has not outlined to parliament some of those things he hopes to do in the national transportation field, particularly in view of the fact he will be leaving this department. Surely we should be given an outline of government policy so that we can consider it now, rather than having to go through the same considerations we have undertaken in the last five or six days.

During this debate we have touched upon a number of things, not the least of which is passenger travel throughout Canada. One of the most novel worth-while proposals I have heard in this regard is the one just made by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway. A great number of long-time employees of the railway companies were issued lifetime passes. The value of these passes has now been cut in half and these people must now pay half fare. I am sure the hon. lady for Vancouver-Kingsway will not oppose the suggestion that the government institute a policy which would allow these long service pass holders to travel without cost.

Surely the minister has come to the conclusion as a result of this debate that the majority of members would like to see the government adopt a national transportation policy. We in Canada should be ashamed because of those things we have allowed the Board of Transport Commissioners to do in respect of passenger travel. Let us consider for a moment the abandonment by the Canadian National Railways of sleeper service from North Bay to Ottawa. I remember when I was first elected that that train provided a reasonably decent mode of travel. All the traffic originating in northern Ontario and northern Quebec made use of this service in travelling to Ottawa and Montreal. This area represents probably one tenth of the entire area of Canada. It was serviced by the Ontario Northland Railway to North Bay, at which point these people transferred to the trans-Canada services operated by both the Canadian Pacific and the Canadian National. All the traffic originating in the northern part of northwestern Ontario, northeastern Ontario and northwestern Quebec used these facilities to travel south.

At one time the people of northern Ontario and Quebec could catch a train, take a sleeper and travel south. First of all the railways abandoned sleeper service at Swastika, because it cost $200 to rent a pullman car and move it over these rails. Eventually they cut off the service at Englehart, another division point, and eventually at North Bay itself. At that time if you were travelling north you had to get up at seven o'clock in the morning, leave the sleeper car and travel by coach the rest of the trip. Shortly after that you could not obtain sleeper service at all.

One of the reasons for abandoning this sleeper service is that the Canadian National Railways made a very bad blunder when it purchased a lot of old sleeping cars from a defunct United States railway company. These cars were not suitable for use in northern Ontario. They did not put heat on both sides of the car in the winter and these cars were not equipped for operating in our climate. They had so much trouble and found themselves without the necessary equipment. This is true, Mr. Chairman, and I believe every member who has spoken on this subject has indicated that we do not have the equipment to operate passenger service in this country. This is the reason for the abandonment of lines.

Last week I was toying with the idea, and perhaps I will be able to accomplish it, of getting the people who produce "This Hour Has Seven Days" to bring their cameras and accompany me on the train from northern Ontario and northern Quebec into the town of North Bay. I should like these people to board Canadian National train 104 and shoot pictures during the night in this one coach on a freight train which has a number of express cars. I am quite sure the Canadian public would be disgusted with the railway and the Board of Transport Commissioners in allowing this train to run at all. Either get rid of the damned thing and provide passenger service in an alternate fashion, or put on a service that is worth while. On this train there is no sleeper, there are not enough seats for most of the people travelling and quite often they have to stand. In addition, there is no diner and there are no passenger facilities of any description. This car has been crammed with passengers on the many occasions I have ridden on it. The seats in the coach are not the reclining type; the cars are much too old to have this amenity.

If the minister really wants to do something by which the Department of Transport can be well remembered he should face up to the transportation problem. Let us do something about the railways. I am not opposed to our taking over Canadian Pacific Railway, but why should we? Why should we not take Canadian National Railways and decide to make it the operating railway to supply all passenger transportation in Canada?

I think the minister will find that if many people want their freight shipments to go on the same line, Canadian Pacific will have to do some scratching, which they are not doing at the present time. I believe the minister is a very capable man. I have had the opportunity of observing many of the things he has done in the past five or six years. Some of them I have agreed with and some I have disagreed with. His capabilities are certainly about the average of those of his colleagues in the cabinet.

Some hon. Members: Oh, Oh.

Mr. Starr: That has really pulled the minister down.

Mr. Peters: It seems to me that if anybody is to make an impression on this department, it should be the minister. He asked for this department.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Peters: Perhaps this is why we have the quandary that faces us at the moment, because I think the minister has the necessary capabilities. In my opinion this is a field in which a serious contribution has to be made. I think the day has arrived when we must make a decision as to what we are going to do to keep the people of Canada united as far as travelling across the nation is concerned.

The fuss that was raised with regard to the run between Ottawa and Toronto was not really caused by the people of Canada but by Members of Parliament. They had decided that if better accommodation was not provided for them, the roof was going to blow off. Members of parliament expressed the opinion that an improvement was to be made nationally, too, and they were in the mood to have the minister stand up and ask that a committee be established to look into the question of passenger service in Canada.

Let us face this problem and do something about it. If we have to subsidize the railways, let us subsidize them. Let us bring this question out in the open and ask the Canadian public what they wish done about it. I think it is a disgrace that we give Canadian Pacific equal rights with Canadian National in terms of freight hauled; yet the Board of Transport Commissioners has allowed Canadian Pacific Railway to double their passenger fare on the run between North Bay and Ottawa. I have checked this, Mr. Chairman, and the Canadian Pacific fare is almost double that of Canadian National.

We have allowed Canadian Pacific to do this while at the same time being well aware of the end result. You do something to get rid of the passengers and then come before the board and say: "Look, we have no passengers". I can assure the committee that anybody who rides on Canadian National train 104 is not a passenger in the true sense of the word. They travel on this train because it is an emergency and they have to get from one point to another. This is the only way it can be done. It is not a comfortable way; it is not a cheap way; it is not in any way a good way of travelling but it is simply a way of getting from one point to another. As far as I am concerned, it they took the damned thing off it would suit me just as well, because I will be able to ride in the caboose on the pass of a member of parliament and would be just as comfortable sleeping in one of the workers' bunks as in one of the coaches provided on this passenger service which is producing revenue. I do not want to beat a dead horse, and it is a dead horse.

An hon. Member: Do you mean the minister?

Mr. Peters: I do not mean the minister; I mean the whole transportation problem that faces parliament. There is a general agreement in this respect and if there were a free vote on whether to set up a transportation committee to study policy, I am sure it would be set up tomorrow. However, the committee will become bogged down with these estimates and will not be able to get around to solving this problem.

The minister will have to give leadership in this regard. I believe Canada has reached the halfway mark as far as transportation is concerned and should turn over to a completely new type of passenger transportation system and scrap the old one. I believe everyone agrees that we have reached this stage.

What burns me up is that we have the Board of Transport Commissioners who do not seem to do anything. They do not even seem to ride on these trains; I have not seen one of them riding on the trains for a long time. I do not really know what they do.

Mr. Nielsen: They go by Air Canada.

Mr. Nesbitt: They dissolve the railways, mostly.

An hon. Member: There is only one member of the board.

Mr. Peters: Somebody said there is only one member of the board. I thought there was more than that. They are called commissioners, and I should like to know what has happened to the other two. Perhaps they do not travel. I have been reading their recommendations and they certainly have not said anything that has impressed me with regard to passenger service. The decision they made in relation to the "Dominion" is no credit to them. They have said that things are going to change in 1967, so these things may have to be done all over again.

I really do not care if they get rid of the railways altogether—I say this sincerely to the minister—and put on road transport. I have not really been able to find out whether the Canadian public are subsidizing Smith Transport or the hauling of freight on Canadian Pacific, and I do not think anyone in this house is really aware of the breakdown with relation to the ownership of these road transport companies which the railways have incorporated.

One last question I should like to ask the minister is this. What is the matrimonial intention of Canadian National Railways with respect to Ontario Northland Railway? I notice that we have allowed Canadian National to send several of their senior officials to operate this railway. This will not do the railway any harm because in Ontario we have not been doing a very good job recently in regard to its operation. We have a commission made up of political appointments by the provincial government. This commission does not have any say in whether the workers can deal with their employer. The workers now find they must go to Toronto and deal with a department of government.

I had an opportunity of talking to one of these pseudo-Canadian National employees not long ago. He was of the opinion that he really was not dealing with the commission set up to administer Ontario Northland and that in terms of passenger traffic, freight, express and some of the other problems it was a matter of dealing with both Canadian National and the Ontario government directly in the capacity of an agency.

I believe the people of northern Ontario would like to know what the intention is in regard to this railway. If the railway is up for sale it would probably be a very lucrative buy for Canadian National if they intend to extend their operation. We have some excellent contracts there for hauling iron, pulp, paper and some other heavy commodities.

The railway needs some maintenance. Some new money could be put into expending branch lines to the iron ore properties that are being developed. The Ontario Northland, whether it is owned by the Ontario government or comes under the Canadian National, will need a terminal in our main city of Toronto. It is going to have to have some relationship with the other railways because of the passenger problem.

I suggest that if the minister really wants to do something, he could be open and aboveboard on this matter and indicate to members of parliament whether or not he really intends to have a committee look at passenger service across Canada. If he does not, the railways themselves will get rid of rail lines. When passengers find that they are unable to get reservations a week ahead of time or that the two crack trains that are running now are booked a month in advance, they will no longer be rail passengers, but will find alternative means of transportation. The railways will be able to get rid of passengers and passenger service in this way.

If this is the end result that the minister wants, all he has to do is sit quietly and do nothing about it. If I can judge the temper of the speeches made by members in this house, then I think a decision will have to be made by the minister which will not make it necessary to repeat these arguments when the new estimates come before us. Surely the Canadian public have indicated, through their members, that they want a passenger policy, and that this policy is not going to come from the Transport Commissioners but from parliament. We are really going to have to make a decision whether we are going to buy the Canadian Pacific or let them go out of the passenger business. We will have to decide if we are going to do something about subsidizing or upgrading Canadian National passenger service or whether we want to get out of that business and go into air transport. This is a large country. There is no question but that air transport could be the answer in many cases.

I think the country is anxiously awaiting a policy decision. I hope the minister will give us an indication he is going to make a very blunt decision that will decide the future of the railway passenger business for the next 25 years in Canada.

Mr. Pickersgill: I did not believe I would ever see the miracle we have just witnessed of the hon. member for Timiskaming and the Leader of the Opposition both asking me to give leadership to this country. The shock is almost more than I can bear. I think I will probably have quite a lot of time to do this, although the hon. member for Timiskaming seems to be rather better informed about my future than I am myself.

Mr. Peters: I only know what I read in the newspapers.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman ought to know, if he has read newspapers for as long as I have, that he should take a lot of these gossipy stories with several grains of salt. For example, I have been reading a lot about my ill health. I told the Leader of the Opposition, when he asked me about my health on New Year's Day, that I thought my ill health was in part in the minds of some people who would really like to see me out of my present position.

Some hon. Members: Oh, no.

Mr. Pickersgill: I felt very much tempted to say that I have never felt better in my life, but I knew that phrase was copyright. If, in fact, I am going to stay in this portfolio until the railway legislation is passed, as well as several other pieces of legislation to which the hon. gentleman referred, and if the pace is going to be the same leisurely pace that we have witnessed for the last two weeks in parliament, I believe I am quite safe in this portfolio, provided I am spared, as Mackenzie King would have said, until at least 1971 or 1972. At the rate we are going I do not believe we will get more than one or two bills passed before Christmas.

An hon. Member: You are an optimist.

Mr. Pickersgill: Here we are on the first item of the estimates of the department after five days of discussion, all of it spent on the first item.

Mr. Starr: Would the minister permit a question at this point?

Mr. Pickersgill: Oh, sure.

Mr. Starr: Does the minister not think that if he had not made 34 or 35 speeches during consideration of the estimates we might have completed them by now?

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, I do not know, because the hon. member for Saint John-Albert said that if I had made an hour long speech at the beginning we would have completed these estimates long ago. The house leader on that side now says if I had not made so many speeches we would have been through. I do not believe it would have made any difference whatever.

Mr. Peters: Would the minister permit another question?

Mr. Pickersgill: Surely.

Mr. Peters: Does the minister not agree that if a national transportation policy, which we are told is now prepared, had been presented to the house, the discussion of transportation problems that has taken place probably would have been redundant?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, I feel quite sure that if I had made a speech on national transportation policy, no matter how reasonable or how sensible, there would have been at least twice as many speeches as there have been during this debate. I do not believe one would have to go to the other side of the house to get to that position. It just so happens that in a country like ours, we have been discussing national transportation policy since the days of the Charlottetown and Quebec conferences, over 100 years ago now. I said once, rather lightheartedly, that people talk about bilingualism and biculturalism, but if one really wanted to arouse the passions of Canadians all he had to do was mention railways. I think that long before we agree on a national transportation policy every little Canadian will be born speaking both English and French.

I am regretfully, therefore, not the least optimistic about evolving an agreed national transportation policy—it sounds much nicer to call it "national". I have listened to the speeches most hon. members have made, and there has not been much demand for a national policy. There have been one of two speeches that were not regional, but there have been any number that were just—I may say I am a terrible parish pump politician myself—

An hon. Member: Like the one now.

Mr. Pickersgill: Exactly; I am a terrible parish pump politician myself, and so are most of us. Most of the speeches have been parochial. If we are really honest, I do not believe many of us are more concerned with national transportation in the country than we are with some of the local aspects of transportation. After all, national transportation is our job. We have to have some viable way of dealing with it.

Now, I imagine there are no 20 million people belonging to the same society anywhere in the world who pay so much for their transportation, whose transportation enters to such a great degree into the cost of living, as is the case in this country. The second point I should like to make is this: There is no other country with 20 million people in it in the whole world that depends so much for its standard of living on exporting a large proportion of its products to the rest of the world and, in so many cases, to competitive markets. Now, these two facts mean that if the producers in Canada are to get reasonable returns for what they produce, and what is sold in the export market, the cost of transporting the goods must not be too great. That is a basic fact about transport in this country. It may be that there are some areas, where the production is entirely for the local market or exclusively for consumption in Canada, in which this element is not so great; but it does affect all of us.

I also agreed with another thing said today by the Leader of the Opposition. I sent him a note earlier today to the effect that I hoped he would recover from the shock when I told him I agreed more with what he said about transportation than with anybody else who had taken part in the debate. I agreed with him for this reason. He said that we had to change; that we could not leave things as they are, that we had to be up to date. I am roughly paraphrasing his words. Perhaps I can claim to do this once in a while because he also does it, but I think I can say I am being completely fair. He was indicating that we have to have modern transportation in this country. That also means that, unless we are going to pay an exaggerated cost for our transportation in this country, when services become redundant they must be discontinued —however nice they were 25 or 50 years ago. If we are going to maintain a high standard of living and an opportunity for decent leisure for the old as well, then we have to be efficient. We have to be prepared to scrap out of date services and services that have ceased to be used to any marked degree. This is a fact of life that we have to face.

I know of only two ways, Mr. Chairman, in which we Canadians can pay for our transportation; and I think we have to pay for part of it one way and for part of it another way, if we are to have a sane and viable policy. It seems to me that transportation can be paid for either by the users or by the taxpayers. I do not know of any third way. It might just be possible for a very short while to do what some hon. members seem to have suggested—make the C.P.R. provide transportation at a great deal less than cost and pour the profits of its other enterprises into transportation to meet the losses. But I question whether that would last for very long. I have very grave doubts about what its effect would be on the whole of the Canadian economy, and no serious person who has studied this question has ever suggested that it should be done in this way. In any event, no matter how it is done, the amount of our manpower, our resources, our capital, our knowhow that we devote to transportation is going to have to come out of the sum total of what we produce. If the amount we expend on transportation is too high in relation to the rest of the expenditures of the country, we are going to be, not richer, but poorer. It seems to me that that is self-evident.

The hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond suggested that there ought to be a separate department of civil aviation. I know there are a lot of strong arguments for this course, and I am not saying that one day there will not be a separate department. However, my own opinion is this—and this is no mere desire on the part of an old man to hang on to his empire. At any rate, I have rationalized it, and my rationalization is that it is so frightfully important to integrate all forms of transport in Canada and to eliminate, as far as we can, the redundant and the wasteful and the really unnecessary and that, if we did not have one department of government and one minister to do these things, or try to do them, then they would not get done at all.

When I think of what my hon. friend, the Minister of National Defence, has been doing in these last three years and how he has been trying to integrate our armed forces—and I certainly think he has done that in a most admirable way—it seems to me that it is just as important—taken from a long term standpoint it may be even more important—to integrate our transport services in this country and to make sure that we do not devote unnecessary resources to them. That is my view.

I do think that the department is too big for one man. I must say I welcome the assistance I am already receiving from my hon. friend, the Minister without Portfolio, and I am sure this assistance is going to grow more and more. If parliament would see fit to amend the law so that he could be an associate minister, no one would be more happy than I. I think this kind of division could be made. We should keep the whole spectrum together, but there could be some division between the more or less administrative functions and what I call, though I hate to use the word, the thinking.

Some hon Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: What about your parliamentary secretary?

Mr. Pickersgill: Because a tremendous amount of thinking does need to be done in this field.

Once again I agree with the right hon. gentleman, the Leader of the Opposition, this afternoon in what he said about the importance of research and development in the field of transportation. I am not entirely sure that the specific suggestion that he made about having a research and development division of the Department of Transport is necessarily the most satisfactory way to deal with the problem; but that research should be done and that it should be co-ordinated is frightfully important.

One reason the Canadian National Railways have made quite a number of advances in the last few years which have made it today one of the most efficient railways in the world is that Dr. Solandt, who had been in charge of research and development in the armed forces, went to the C.N.R. and built up a research division there which has had a very considerable effect on the railway. There is not any doubt in my mind that we need more research and development. We need more co-ordination and we need more planning to provide the best possible transport services for this country.

With regard to the other question, I said a few moments ago that I knew of only two basic ways in which we Canadians could pay for our transport services. One is by having the users pay for them; the other is by having the taxpayers pay for them. I said I did not think that transportation could all be paid for by the users because there are some services which are essential to hold this country together, services which the users simply could not pay for directly because they would not be sufficiently used, and the development of some of the outlying parts of Canada would not take place.

I would also suggest—and I say this not because I think profits are more important than service; in fact, I do not think anyone can go on making profits for long if he does not give service—that there is a simple, easy and automatic way of finding out whether a service is really needed; and that is to subject it to the test which the economists call the test of effective demand, which is the willingness of people to pay for the service.

In the main, I believe that where the volume of traffic is sufficient to make this test possible, and above all where there is some competitive mode of transport, this is far and away the more satisfactory way of doing it. But I do not deny for one moment that there are many services that are essential to this country which cannot be paid for by the users.

• (9:20 p.m.)

In the first place I do not deny that we should never have had confederation, or we should never have had British Columbia in confederation in 1871 without the $25 million and the 25 million acres of land and the other things that went into the Canadian Pacific which, if capitalized today, would—and I draw this to the attention of people in British Columbia who are constantly talking about the Prince Edward Island causeway—represent a very much more substantial subsidy from the people of Canada to bring British Columbia into confederation than any paid in eastern Canada at the present time. I think that that kind of argument which has been raised is a divisive argument which I do not want to become involved in, and is one which we should forget if we want to adopt a national outlook.

Mr. Barnett: May I ask a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: Certainly.

Mr. Barnett: I am interested in the observation about the capitalization of the 25 million acres. Is that not putting it the wrong way round? Would it not be better to ask if the people of Ontario were not glad that they were linked to British Columbia?

Mr. Pickersgill: That is just the kind of argument that I think is dull, stale, unprofitable and un-national. Either we want to have British Columbia in Canada or we do not. I think one of the greatest political miracles of our age was when the little Canadian parliament in Ottawa pulled off, four years after confederation, the feat of getting British Columbia, which was 3,000 miles away, into this country and thus making Canada possible.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: I also think that Canada would never have been the kind of country that some of us are proud to have it if we had not in 1949 been willing to do one or two quite revolutionary things that were quite upsetting to the existing federal-provincial relations, as the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam well knows, in order to make it possible for a provincial government to exist in Newfoundland and thereby to bring Newfoundland into confederation.

Now the price that we have to pay to conserve this half continent as a separate country is probably in many ways, financially and economically, higher than it would have been to take the alternative of throwing up our hands and asking the United States to take us in on some kind of terms.

Mr. Peters: Just because we cannot run our railroads?

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, the hon. member says that that is just because we cannot run our railways. Notwithstanding what one hon. member said about the superior efficiency of the railways he travelled on in Egypt, India and so on, I do not think he intended us to take that very seriously. Whatever grievances we may have against the Canadian railways, I do not think that their capacity to run railways is in question at all. There may be many questions about the manner in which they do run them, but about the capacity of Canadians to run railways—well, I think that is as great as that of any railwaymen anywhere.

What I want to say I think I can put into one sentence. It is that my conception of the foundation of a national transportation policy is ultimately to have the best possible transportation, by the best mode that we can get and that we can afford in relation to our total production, so that we do not spend all our income or too large a part of it just on transportation. There are some other benefits, I would imagine, that Canadians want out of their lives as well as transportation. My conception would be that wherever possible, that is wherever it is reasonably possible, transportation should be paid for by the users, and that the government should look very hard at every case where a subsidy is asked for to make sure that what is required is really, in national terms, worth the subsidy. I think, if it is necessary for the preservation of any part of British Columbia or of Vancouver island to provide shipbuilding subsidies for ferries, it would not break my heart to have to change my view. If I may be parenthetic about it, I do think that, for the first time, the people of British Columbia know that one third the cost of these ferries came out of the treasury at Ottawa. They would not have known that at all if this policy had not been announced the other day and if the premier had not complained about being so badly treated. If we came to the conclusion that Mr. Bennett would build the ferries in Japan unless we gave him a subsidy, then rather than have him go to Japan I think we ought to take another look at the question.

An hon. Member: He ought to go too.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, if it is just a question of Mr. Bennett's going—

Mr. More: Would the minister say that the premier of Newfoundland lets the people there know that there are some shared costs? I have never met anyone from Newfoundland yet who did not think that everything came from Joey.

Mr. Pickersgill: I will tell the hon. gentleman that the federal government, since the present government came into office, has been paying in the four Atlantic provinces $90 out of every $100 of the cost of the trans-Canada highway. In the province of Newfoundland, on every stretch of highway that was being built during the last three years—and I might add that the highway is now completed—there was a sign saying: "We will finish the drive in 1965, thanks to Mr. Pearson." I point out that there are no signs like that in Nova Scotia.

The Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. More: Were those signs put up in 1963, and moved from place to place?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, they were moved from place to place as the road was finished.

An hon. Member: Who paid for the signs?

Mr. Pickersgill: I would be willing to pay for the signs for Mr. Stanfield, if he would put them up.

An hon. Member: I am sure that Premier Stanfield would not mind paying for them.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether I am running out of time.

An hon. Member: Let us get back to the railways.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I do not think that I should attempt to give any elaboration at this time, on the first item of these estimates, of a national transportation policy. I do think that I will take the advice of the hon. member for Saint John-Albert and I will try, in presenting my estimates for 1966-67, to give an elaboration on the basis of the foundation that I referred to tonight. I know that a number of specific points have been raised in the debate. However, looking at the clock I see that I have exhausted my time.

An hon. Member: Gc ahead.

Mr. Pickersgill: Are hon. members willing to let me go ahead?

Some hon. Members: Go ahead.

Mr. Pickersgill: I will try to deal with some of these specific points which have been raised, and I think that perhaps I should begin with a self-denying ordinance. I do not think it would be appropriate for me at this stage, for two reasons, to discuss the question which I think has been discussed more than any other on my estimates.

• (9:30 p.m.)

As hon. members know, the management of the Canadian Pacific are coming here as soon as the transport committee wishes to call them, and the terms of reference of that committee are very wide. I would hope—and I share this hope with the hon. member for Timiskaming—that we will confine ourselves to the question of passenger services and not spread ourselves all over the lot. I agree that if we choose to do the latter, the committee is likely to be far less productive than if we deal entirely with the very serious problem of passenger services—and it is a very serious problem.

Nevertheless, I do not think I shall say anything about it tonight, for two reasons. First, as hon. members know, there are a number of petitions lodged with the governor in council appealing against the decision to cancel the "Dominion". I am a member of the cabinet which will have to consider these appeals and I think it would be improper for me at this stage to prejudge the case before hearings have taken place. And I do not think I could talk about passenger services in general without seeming, at any rate, to prejudge the case. I think it would be better if I simply noted this matter.

Mr. Douglas: Before the minister leaves that point, could I ask him whether there is necessarily any relationship between the two matters? I mean the passenger service generally, to be considered by the Committee on Transportation, and the question of the "Dominion" which is going before the cabinet. I take it that the latter will not be held up pending some decision on the former question.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think that is likely to arise, provided the committee proceeds with reasonable dispatch. One of the petitions, the petition from the government of Alberta, arrived only a short time ago. Indeed, I first saw it today. There has not been time to consider it yet. Then again, we have had notice that there will be one or two further petitioners and I do not think any attempt will be made to reach a decision until we have all the petitions in front of us. As to whether or not we should make a decision before the committee has completed its consideration of the passenger service, I would say there are arguments on both sides. I do not think I should give an answer on that matter tonight; I think I should consult my colleagues.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Would the minister keep in mind that some of these delegations from western cities are coming here, presumably, to make an appearance before the committee which is considering the affairs of the C.P.R., but also to interview cabinet ministers in connection with the appeal?

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think this will present a problem. The mayor of Moose Jaw, who is spokesman for eight or ten cities across the prairies has indicated clearly that they are not appealing the decision about the "Dominion" but are coming to make representations to the cabinet about passenger service generally. There would not necessarily be a conflict. Nevertheless there is an awkward problem and at the moment, I do not feel I can give an adequate answer.

Mr. Smallwood: Would the minister permit a question? The argument I advanced yesterday in this debate was that the railroads were not delivering the grain to the ports. After I had finished speaking the minister gave us certain figures covering the last six weeks—the number of cars loaded on the prairies and the number of cars unloaded at the ports. On adding up these figures I found there were 2,745 cars loaded on the prairies and 3,130 cars unloaded at the ports. So between the prairies and the ports they apparently picked up 385 loaded box cars.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have not had the benefit of the higher mathematics of the hon. member for Battle River-Camrose. I think I will have to examine them before I venture on an explanation. It occurs to me that if I wanted to write a thriller it would be called "the disappearing box car". It is perfectly clear that it is not only for wheat we are short of box cars. My hon. friend from Cochrane spoke to me yesterday about the difficulty the lumbermills were having in part of his constituency in getting box cars to move lumber to the markets. The plain fact is we are producing so much wealth in this country and are able to market so much wealth that we just do not have the transportation facilities to carry it all and we had better hurry up and get more. That, I think, is the only real solution to this problem.

I could go on to deal with a number of other questions which were raised. I know my hon. friend from York-Humber would not mind if I do not go into the question of water levels today.

Mr. Beaulieu: May I ask the minister if I can put a question to him before the debate is over? In my constituency of St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville we have an airport. For three or four years people have been asking that the landing strips there should be lengthened. The department has expropriated land there, though no payment has been made in respect of it. I know we are considering last year's estimates but I should like to know whether this money was paid or whether provision is made for it in next year's estimates.

This airport is very close to Montreal. It is closer to Expo than is Dorval airport itself—15 miles closer. If there were longer running lanes at this airfield pressure would be removed from Dorval. We have the need. We have an aircraft industry which employs a great many people. If this work could be started now it would help even more of those in my constituency.

It was formerly a training camp for the air force. The buildings are there. It is close to Expo. It is about 1 to 2 miles from St. Jean, and 12 to 15 miles from Montreal. I want to ask the minister for a clear answer. Is there an amount included in the budget for next year to start this work, so that it will be ready in time? I will speak about Expo later, but at the moment it is essential that this matter be not left up in the air.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman is a new member, but he, having experience of some considerable magnitude in another assembly is aware—I think he has indicated it himself—that there is no provision in the estimates for 1965-66, which are the ones before the committee. I would be very glad to discuss the matter and give him an answer when we come to my other estimates, and in the meantime I shall give the hon. gentleman an answer privately.

Now, sir, I will deal with these things in the order in which they were raised and I hope hon. members will not mind if, in the case of any subject that is likely to be of continuing interest, I do not deal with it tonight but deal with it on the next instalment of estimates.

In his first speech the hon. member for Lapointe mainly discussed competition between the railways and the trucking industry, a very large subject which should be part of any broad statement of national transportation policy. If it were agreeable I would prefer to deal with it in that context.

The hon. member for Medicine Hat discussed the railway question and I think I have already said all that I ought to say at this moment about that.

Mr. Grégoire: Can the minister tell us when he intends to speak, or to give us the policy of the government on this question of subsidies to the railroads for the transportation of merchandise? When will the minister give this?

Mr. Pickersgill: Actually, of course, the whole question will come up in connection with the railway legislation, and it was provided for in the bill that was introduced last year; but I do not think that the bill will be introduced in the same form this year. We are still giving consideration to this matter, and it would not be proper for me at this moment to report on things which have not finally been decided.

The hon. member for Winnipeg South discussed a matter which at some stage I want to discuss at considerable length in the house, but I do think there is one point that I ought to try to make as clear as I can. It is this, that in respect of the bilateral negotiations the basic principle that was followed, as I understand it—these negotiations began some time before I became minister and they were in midstream before I became actively involved in them—was that if a place was served by a United States air line that line would have priority, and if it was served by a Canadian line that Canadian line would have priority; but wherever there was enough traffic for both a Canadian and a United States line, in general the desire was to provide for what is usually called double tracking.

When the negotiations were almost completed a deadlock developed over the question of whether a United States line would be allowed to fly from Chicago to Montreal in competition with a route that was to have been reserved exclusively for Air Canada, and whether a Canadian line would fly direct from Winnipeg to Chicago. There was a real deadlock and it lasted for months. We indicated to the Americans that we were prepared to conclude the agreement on either one of two terms—either they would withdraw their request for an American line between Montreal and Chicago or, alternatively, they would agree to our having a flight from Winnipeg to Chicago.

Financially the Montreal-Chicago monopoly for Air Canada is considerably more valuable than any value that could reasonably have been placed on the Winnipeg-Chicago route. Therefore I thought, and I believe all the Canadian negotiators thought, that if the deadlock was broken at all it would be broken by the Americans conceding the Winnipeg-Chicago route. No one was more surprised than I when to the contrary, the Americans withdrew their request for Montreal-Chicago. We had given them the alternative and, having given it, we either had to have no agreement at all, or make the agreement.

The agreement, of course, does provide for a direct service by the American line from Winnipeg to Minneapolis, which has not existed in the past, and if the prospects of traffic in Winnipeg are anything like what most of us believe they will be, I think our case is going to be irresistible at the next run. But we had reached the conclusion that otherwise we could get no agreement at all, and, notwithstanding what some people have said, I think the balance of advantage on the bilateral is pretty even between the two countries and it is going to provide a very considerable benefit to the users in both countries.

As I say, we were faced with a very awkward position. It was particularly unpleasant for me because I had really hoped very sincerely that we were going to get this Winnipeg-Chicago flight, and I believe in time we are going to get it. After he has had more experience here I do not really think the hon. member for Winnipeg South will find that there is any deliberate attempt on the part of this government, or that there would be on the part of any other government, to ignore Winnipeg, or any other part of Canada. But this particular government, although we represent various provinces, has three or four Winnipegers in it who are all pretty sentimental about Manitoba and it certainly has no hostility to Manitoba or to Winnipeg.

In his maiden speech the hon. member for Port Arthur made a very thoughtful and enlightened presentation of the railway problem as it looks to people in Northern Ontario. I am sure that in Northern Ontario, where I understand many of the roads are still rather rudimentary, the railway bulks even larger as a form of transport than it does on the prairies. But here again we will have a chance to go into this question when the C.P.R. is before the committee.

The hon. member for Moose Mountain discussed the railway problem in a very moderate and reasonable fashion, and he again will have his chance in the committee.

• (9:50 p.m.)

The hon. member for Vancouver Quadra, the hon. member for Coast-Capilano and, more recently, the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond all discussed the problems of the port of Vancouver. My hon. friend the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources is going to carry me out to Vancouver bodily one of these days and keep me there until I have undertaken to do all the things that are necessary to improve that port, which is rapidly becoming one of the greatest ports in the whole world.

The hon. member for Kindersley spoke about the C.P.R. and about the Saskatoon television station. I will pass on what he said in that regard to my colleague, the Secretary of State.

I can assure the hon. member for Pictou that I will deal with all the points he made and will be in touch with him about them. We had a little exchange across the floor of the house. We understand one another pretty well anyway.

The hon. member for Brantford made a speech about the Grand River which touched my heart, because my ancestors came to Upper Canada at the same time as Joseph Brant, and anything I can do to help develop that part of the country, which I cherish, I will be glad to do.

The hon. member for Sherbrooke spoke about the airport there. I am taking his observations into consideration.

We had a most exciting tour around the Gaspe with the hon. member for Gaspe, munching sandwiches as we went, and I will look into the various points that he raised.

My hon. friend from Burin-Burgeo talked about one of the most difficult of all problems of national transportation—and this is a national problem—along the rugged coasts of southern Newfoundland. I do not think I need assure him or anyone else that that is something in which I am greatly interested.

I think we were all interested to hear the contribution made by the hon. member for Nickel Belt who spoke, I thought, very moderately about the C.P.R. considering he was a C.N.R. man. He certainly knows something about railways.

The hon. member for Simcoe East made an appeal about the Trent canal that touched my heart. If he can do as much with his friends in Toronto as I can do here we may make some real progress.

The hon. member for Chapleau spoke about airports in the northern region he represents. We are in discussions with the town of Amos at the present time about the airport there. We are also looking into the other problems which exist at Chibougamau. The name of the other place with which we are having discussions escapes me for the moment.

The hon. member for Melville cut his speech short, for which I am grateful. We are giving most serious attention to the theme of that speech, which was the Freedman report.

The hon. member for Skeena, apart from applying for a job in my department, made a very important and interesting speech mainly about two topics; the wharfage on the floats in his constituency, about which I want to have some discussions with him because we are reviewing this whole matter, and about safety in shipping. I have quite a long speech on this subject which I could make, but with the indulgence of the committee I would prefer to make it at another time.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

The hon. member for Cochrane, like myself, is exceedingly interested in his own constituency and spoke about the problems there about which he and I will do our best.

The hon. member for Kamloops made—I was almost going to say the standard speech about the C.P.R., but he made it in the way to which we were accustomed, we old timers here, who remember him when he was here before.

One of the most interesting speeches made during the entire debate was made by my hon. friend from Kenora-Rainy River. I believe he is the youngest member of the house and he certainly knows a lot about railways.

The hon. member for Assiniboia also spoke about railways and the movement of grain.

The hon. member for Vancouver East, and I should have mentioned him earlier with the other members for Vancouver, made a speech about the development of the port of Vancouver. I hope it will be possible for him to be in Vancouver when I am there because I know he will have something to say about this subject.

Mr. Monteith: Arthur would be glad to have him along on the tour.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Pickersgill: If hon. members would like to carry the item without going along with my catalogue, I will be pleased to concur in that action.

Mr. Nowlan: Before the debate on item 1 is concluded I should like to direct a question to the minister, in view of something he said during his cataloguing about Newfoundland. I wonder whether the minister when he was in Nova Scotia saw a sign which said: Here is the road; it is nice and wide, like the guide lines from America; so beware of the signs.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is quite evident that the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings is going to be the wit of the House of Commons. I feel sure that as time goes on he will endear himself to the members of this house, on a personal basis, as his father did and, if he does, he will have accomplished a lot.

Mr. Howard: In the minister's earlier remarks he said there were some things the other members have dealt with which he could not deal with at this time. He said he wanted to discuss them with his colleagues. I felt that if he discussed these between now and tomorrow he would be in a position to make a statement then. I did not list these items but it seemed to me they were items that should be dealt with under item 1.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether, on this specific item the hon. member has in mind, we could deal with it when we are considering the appropriate item, allowing us to carry item 1?

I do not think there is anything I expect to discuss with my colleagues between now and the time one might reasonably expect to carry these estimates.

Mr. Howard: I have no objection to allowing item 1 to carry if the minister gives us his assurance that I can raise this matter of safety at sea and on the St. Lawrence Seaway during our consideration of his estimates.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am quite prepared to make a statement about safety in shipping at any time, but it is rather lengthy.

I think this item can properly be raised on the first item connected with marine services.

Mr. Howard: Perhaps I could call it ten o'clock and follow up with respect to these shipping matters tomorrow.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, we would be quite willing to pass Item 1, but we put a few questions to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) and we would like to have an answer. Amongst others, the minister has not replied to the question about the airport at Bagotville, nor to the question on winter navigation on the Saguenay and the St. Lawrence.

I believe those are the two main questions which we would like to have answered.

[English]

Mr. Pickersgill: If the hon. gentleman is agreeable and we can carry item 1 at this time, I will be glad to answer questions raised concerning railway and air services.

• (10:00 p.m.)

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that it is now ten o'clock I am going to address my remarks in the form of a question to the Minister of Public Works in his role as government house leader. I would ask the minister whether he would hold off the estimates of the Department of Transport until the end of all the estimates, in view of the fact that it is quite obvious to me that the Minister of Transport is determined not to allow his estimates to go through.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Starr: I think we should consider the estimates of other ministers who will be more co-operative and willing to have their estimates passed. This is a suggestion that the government house leader should take under serious consideration overnight.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: We object to this. As item 1 of the Department of Transport is now before the house, we feel it would be better to complete consideration of the estimates of that department.

Now, I find that the minister has been most obliging in rising to answer every question asked, and the Conservatives generally object to this—if the ministers do not answer, they complain, if the ministers do answer, they still complain. I think the house should carry on with the consideration of the Department of Transport's estimates. Personally, I have always obtained answers to the questions put to the minister. I think the minister can supply the answers and the house should continue with this department in spite of the suggestion made by the Conservative house leader.

[English]

The Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 1 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Starr: No, Mr. Chairman; I call it ten o'clock.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I was wondering whether we could not have the assurance that the answers to any of the questions we have asked on item 1 would be given on one of the other items? With that assurance we might agree to pass item 1, but nothing more, tonight.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would certainly give the assurance in the most unqualified manner that any question I have not dealt with tonight and which any hon. member wants answered—

Mr. Knowles: The minister might even complete the indexing job he has been doing respecting the debate of the last five days.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should be very glad to do that right now, Mr. Chairman, if hon. members would give me another five minutes.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I do not think that would be good for the study of the estimates. It would mean we would start this discussion all over again on the other items. It would be better to leave the questions that have been asked and to which we just need answers.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, I was asked a question a few moments ago. I think there is an appreciation on the part of all hon. members in the committee that some method should be found for having a full examination of all the items but at the same time being able to do so within the fiscal year. We have spent two weeks and one day discussing the estimates of the year almost past and have succeeded in passing the estimates of only one department so far. There are the estimates of some 25 departments to be passed. I would hope we could find a workable system that would have the estimates for 1965-66 adopted by the committee, particularly in view of the fact that the estimates for next year have been tabled in the house—

Mr. Starr: That has nothing to do with it.

Mr. McIlraith: —that the standing committees have been appointed and we are operating under new rules which will mean that those estimates will be referred to standing committees for examination. I think that will provide a better way for getting information about departmental activities. I am wondering whether we could not come to some consensus in this committee to make more rapid progress consistent with members obtaining the information they feel they would like to have about the various departments.

Mr. Starr: Mr Chairman, with regard to the matter raised by the government house leader, we in this party stopped debating the first item of these estimates two hours ago, or perhaps two and a half hours ago, in the hope that the first item would be passed and we could then question the minister on the items following the first one. However, I see no sense in carrying on and trying to be co-operative when the minister himself takes up half of the time of the whole debate. He has just finished speaking for exactly one hour, and this was one of the 34 or 35 times he has been on his feet. I do not believe that is necessary. I appreciate the fact he made a very nice speech, but he should have made that speech at the beginning of his estimates, and probably that would have eliminated a lot of the speeches that were necessary. This is the point I want to bring out. You can get the co-operation of the opposition if you do not try to talk out your own estimates.

Mr. McIlraith: I want to point out that I had a very careful analysis made of those who have spoken on these estimates up until noon today. While I may have an opinion about some taking too much time or some taking too little time, I do not believe that opinion would be of any interest or concern to the house. I believe that we have to operate on the system where each member has a right to ask whatever questions he believes are appropriate on these estimates, and the minister must be given an opportunity to answer.

In the final analysis, there are two effective checks of any abuse of this system. The first one is the common sense of the hon. member and the second is that at election time the voters will leave at home any hon. member who does not use common sense.

An hon. Member: A lot of your people did not do that.

Mr. McIlraith: I could retaliate with certain comments about hon. members opposite, but I do not believe that would serve any useful purpose. I am not going to do it. I am quite sure each one of them could reply in kind. This would get us nowhere. I appeal again for hon. members to give some thought to the problem that is confronting this house, and ask them to try to find a way of meeting the problem. If they have any ideas to put forward certainly I, as house leader, will be glad to hear them.

Mr. Douglas: We have tried to get this first item passed for the last ten minutes. I see very little value in lecturing the committee if we are willing to pass the item. I have not heard any objection to passing it, provided we have the assurance that we will be able to discuss these questions on other items.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Starr: We are prepared to pass it now without any further word being spoken, but if there is anyone else who wishes to participate in this debate then we have four or five members whom we have asked to co-operate by withholding their speeches. If others are going to carry on, then it is only fair that we should allow our members to make those speeches they are prepared to make.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Churchill: I do not know what is going on, Mr. Chairman, but you are continuing to call members. The hour is ten o'clock and it has been called half a dozen times. However, you are still asking members to get up and speak. I think this is quite wrong. Either we decide to carry on for another half hour or something like that, or we call it ten o'clock and resume tomorrow. This is quite incorrect, to continue in this fashion when it is past the hour for adjournment.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall I rise, report progress, and request leave to sit again?

Mr. Starr: I appeal again, that if all members of this house wish to carry this item now without further speeches, we are prepared to do that. If members wish to carry on tomorrow, then we will continue with the four or five members who want to speak.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the item carry?

• (10:10 p.m.)

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Chairman, may I have clarification—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. Shall I rise, report progress, and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

THE CONSTITUTION—REQUEST TO SET UP A CONSTITUTIONAL COURT

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, at a previous sitting, I was allowed to put the following question tonight to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin):

In anticipation of a constitutional reform, or a constitutional interpretation, or an eventual formula for amending our constitution, is the minister considering convening provincial attorneys general to set up a Canadian constitutional court?

Mr. Speaker, my remarks do not reflect in any way on the integrity or personal competence of the Supreme Court justices. They are purely objective and seek to describe the organizations required for the advent of a positive and balanced federalism in Canada.

In a truly federal system, it is important that the arbitrator of constitutional disputes between the two levels of government be independent and impartial and not subject to one of the parties in the dispute, in Canada.

Before 1949, our tribunal notably on constitutional differences between Ottawa and the provinces, was the Privy Council in London. Neither of the Canadian governments had authority over the appointment of the judges. Thus, the objective character was maintained. The provinces also secured favorable decisions against the sometime centralizing efforts of the central Government.

But, in 1949 Canada abolished appeals to the Privy Council and did not establish a true impartial constitutional court when it gave the central government sole authority for appointments to the Supreme Court, and to the latter, the exclusivity of decisions.

That is why the provinces refuse to let the Supreme Court rule on the case and at this time they would rather resort to political negotiations.

If I may digress for a moment, is it necessary to bring back to mind the mining rights on the continental shelf?

In 1949, Ottawa made a mistake and did an injustice that has to be corrected as soon as possible, because 1949 saw the amendment of the constitutional interpretation given in 1867.

It is necessary to convene the representatives of the provinces with a view to creating a federal type constitutional court which would not be the exclusive organization either of the central government or of the provincial governments.

Representations made before different commissions require or suggest constitutional reforms.

The constitution too is subject to interpretations. I just referred to mining rights. There is also the matter of family allowances, where certain persons and certain provinces, question the constitutional validity of the law in view of the fact that it is an indirect meddling in the field of school attendance.

There is also reference to a formula for amending the constitution. Conflicts and interpretations that may arise between the central government and the provinces or some provinces will have to be submitted to an objective court representative of the parties involved.

That is why, Mr. Chairman, there must be established a constitutional court with judges appointed by Ottawa and the provinces. I would therefore call upon the minister to take this suggestion in serious consideration and to convene the provincial attorneys general at an early date for this purpose.

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the reasons given by the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard) for inviting the attorneys general of the provinces to examine the question of setting up a constitutional court.

There is no doubt that, in this respect, the hon. member reflects quite accurately the findings of several committees and seminars on the subject, where the setting up of a court to settle the constitutional problems of Canada was advocated.

Now, I think that the hon. member was right to point out that the judicial committee of the United Kingdom was replaced by the Supreme Court of Canada.

We have had in Canada a court which in fact was a real constitutional court and I do not admit at all the arguments of the hon. member for Sherbrooke to the effect that, considering the way appointments are made, the Supreme Court might not be independent and that its judgments were not objective. I maintain that, in its deliberations and constitutional decisions, the Supreme Court was always completely independent and very effective. As a matter of fact, it has rendered great services to Canada thanks to its decisions on constitutional matters.

I suppose that the hon. member did not want to question the objectivity of the Supreme Court. His suggestions about the constitutional court might have some value, although I do not know to what extent they are worthy of consideration, but there is no doubt that the amendment of the constitution must be studied by the government. There are also other organizations, such as the provinces, which can also make other suggestions along these lines.

The constitutional court advocated by the hon. member may be a good idea, but it should be ascertained whether it is timely to broach this matter. In fact, officials of the Department of Justice have not yet seriously considered convening attorneys general to discuss the matter. Of course, we think it will be necessary, at a given moment, to arrange a meeting of the federal and provincial authorities in order to study this problem, but this is not contemplated at the moment.

The suggestion of the hon. member for Sherbrooke may have its merits and I can assure him that it will not be disregarded.

At the moment, however, there is no question of convening the attorneys general.

Mr. Valade: When will it be appropriate to convene them?

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member can answer this question just as well as I can.

HOUSING—TORONTO—COMMUNITY CENTRE FACILITIES FOR DOWNTOWN DEVELOPMENTS

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I raised the question with the Minister responsible for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation as to what response the Corporation had made to a proposal for the construction of a housing development in downtown Toronto to be known as Trefann Court and more particularly whether any recommendation had been made to include a community centre as part of that development.

By way of setting the scene I would refer to a report in the Globe and Mail of February 10, 1965 in which it is stated:

> City Council yesterday approved the final draft of a $9,144,000 urban renewal plan for Trefann Court, a rundown 24 acre industrial, residential and commercial area bounded by Queen, Parliament, River and Shuter streets.

This is in downtown Toronto. I would point out that Trefann Court is in immediate proximity to what is probably the heaviest concentration of public housing in any constituency in Canada—Regent Park North and South.

To illustrate the high population within a few city blocks I would refer to the following information made available to me by Central Neighbourhood House, a united appeal agency which has done yeoman service in this neighbourhood. In the North Regent development there is a population of 5,153 people of whom some 2,612 are children. There are 1,400 families. In South Regent there are 3,801 people of whom 2,419 are children divided among 732 families. In other words, there are more than 5,000 children in these developments within a few blocks.

I am sure the housing authorities, city, provincial and federal would all agree that if they had an opportunity to begin again they would not have planned the Regent Park development in its present form but would have dispersed a larger number of smaller public housing developments throughout the residential downtown districts. But they cannot have second thoughts in this regard. A heavy investment has been made. Therefore the question remaining is how to provide the best possible environment for these residents.

At the time Regent Park North and South were constructed only limited facilities were provided for recreation. This was in accord with the statutes existing at the time which provided only limited authority to C.M.H.C., although in both cases C.M.H.C. had contributed to the cost. As the house knows, by the 1964 amendments substantial increases were made in the sums available for public housing, particularly toward capital cost. My proposal this evening is that the same amounts should be made available to provide better recreational facilities and more particularly a community centre to serve not only the projected Trefann Court development but the Regent Park South and North developments as well.

In parenthesis I might add that my hon. friend from Spadina (Mr. Ryan) has also been active in proposing this kind of development through the medium of St. Christopher House in Alexandra Park. I do not minimize the city's financial difficulties when it comes to providing this accommodation. Toronto has a tightly stretched budget and its income cannot be extended on the present limited tax base. It is for this reason that the senior levels of government have come forward to provide assistance in respect of public housing and, in the case of the recent amendments to the statutes, to provide the lion's share of assistance through Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. I am asking that this assistance be extended to a community centre in the new area of Trefann Court, assistance which will also be of benefit to Regent Park.

The minister in his efforts to promote public housing has earned the consideration mentioned in two lines from a poem by John Masefield—

> And he who gives a child a home
> Builds palaces in Kingdom come.

The minister and C.M.H.C. have sought to do that. I would urge them to try to earn the reward mentioned in the preceding couplet.

> And he who gives a child a treat
> Makes joy-bells ring in Heaven's street.

The treat in this case is to provide for those who have not had good luck, the opportunity for good recreation in a community centre, to provide for those at a disadvantage the advantage of better neighbourhood facilities. I hope this particular appeal can find some response from the corporation.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the question that was asked yesterday was:

> Has C.M.H.C. recommended to the city of Toronto that the plan for the Trefann Court housing development in downtown Toronto include community center facilities for the Regent Park and Trefann Court developments?

I might say that yesterday C.M.H.C. received their first communication on this subject. It was a letter from the city of Toronto enclosing what they referred to as a report, report No. 13, from the board of control, relating to the Trefann Court development. The purpose of this letter was to advise the corporation that it was the intention of the city of Toronto to apply to the federal and provincial governments for financial assistance in the implementing of an urban renewal scheme in downtown Toronto, that is, in the Trefann Court development area.

I might say that, subject to the approval of the province of Ontario, because the initiative here rests with the municipality and the province concerned, C.M.H.C. is prepared to consider and make recommendations to me, as the minister concerned, respecting the extent of financial contribution under the act to worth-while projects. According to my information this particular project involves, not the amount mentioned by the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Macdonald), but a sum slightly in excess of $5 million. But that is not the point. Nowhere in the communication received from the city of Toronto is there any reference to a community centre.

I might say that this is probably accounted for by the fact, as mentioned by the hon. member, that until the 1964 amendments to the act it was not possible to provide recreational facilities of the kind suggested by the hon. member. That probably accounts for the omission in this proposal put forward by the city.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

I think I have already announced to several members belonging to different parties in the house that the government is now seriously considering a number of recommendations that have come in from different parts of Canada as a result of the 11 or 12 urban renewal and housing symposia which we held across the country last year and the year before. We have received some very constructive and worth-while suggestions, among them one as to what more might be done to improve certain areas that could hardly be described as urban development areas, and also that work might be done on existing houses in older sections of our cities.

The government has reached no conclusions on these recommendations. I have agreed to meet with some members of the house and officials of the Corporation to discuss suggestions of this kind. I would be very glad to do so with other groups interested, but before these proposals can become law they must first be discussed with all of the different provinces. I must also say that I am personally sympathetic to the suggestion that public housing that was built 10 or 15 years ago, when there was no possibility for providing recreational facilities, should be considered in this respect since these facilities can be provided today for new public housing projects. I cannot say what the government's action will be but I can assure the hon. member, and any other members interested, that if proposals of that kind are put forward in the way they were put forward by the hon. member tonight, they will receive serious consideration.

PUBLIC SERVICE—PRINTING BUREAU EMPLOYEES ENGAGED IN PRIVATE PRINTING

• (10:30 p.m.)

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, initially I must say that I apologize to the minister for keeping him here this evening, because of the personal situation of which I am well aware. However, I did ask this question today on orders of the day. It is regrettable that an answer was not allowed because I am sure the minister had one. I believe the implications that are evident and to which I referred, appearing in the Canadian Press dispatch, would warrant a reply by the minister. The question I asked today was: Does the minister condone permanent employees of the Queen's Printer to be directors of or directly interested in a private printing syndicate outside the function of the Queen's Printer? This evening I intend to elaborate a little in that regard in presenting this question again to the minister.

In addition to the objectives of the company, as referred to in the minister's answer to a question on the order paper, what other fields of lending is this company interested or involved in? I would appreciate an answer to these questions at this time.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the best thing I can do is outline as briefly as possible the facts of the situation. I think when the facts are outlined the hon. member will accept that any suggestion or imputation that people have behaved wrongly, or that there is any criticism to be offered of the public service is quite unwarranted.

In brief, in the month of April, 1961, a small investment club was formed in Hull with a membership of 21, of whom 12 were employees of the Canadian Government Printing Bureau in Hull. The club receives periodic subscriptions from its members and makes investments as a club, as outlined in the answer to Question No. 329, at page 1142 of Hansard. Among other investments made was an investment in a commercial firm operating under the name of Imprimerie Gasparo Ltée.

As a consequence of this investment three of the directors of this firm are also employees of the Canadian Government Printing Bureau. These three are Mr. Marquis, foreman compositor linotype, Mr. Hould, a hand compositor in the bureau and Mr. Cousineau, a hand compositor.

The Canadian Government Printing Bureau has no interest in, or does it award any commercial contracts for government printing. It has no power to grant contracts. The firm of Gasparo Ltée. in mid-1964 made an application to the Department of Defence Production for qualification as a competitive tenderer for government printing. Following the usual procedure this qualification was accorded or approved. Following this qualification invitations to tender were sent to this firm Gasparo Ltée., among others. Of all competitive tenders in 1965 the Gasparo Ltée. firm was awarded four contracts amounting in total to $338.27. In addition one contract in the amount of $12.21 was negotiated, as provided for in the regulations of the Department of Defence Production. This firm does an annual business of some $21,000.

I suggest this relationship between the competitive government contracts in the amount of $338, the negotiated contract in the amount of $12 and the annual volume of $21,000 would tend to indicate that it is unlikely that these three directors, who are also employees of the Canadian Government Printing Bureau, are really using their energies on a full time basis in the prosecution of the work of this firm.

It would also indicate, I suggest, that this firm bids on government business rather for reasons of prestige than profit and the results would tend to indicate that this is so.

I may point out to the hon. member that there are regulations governing the activities of civil servants. These regulations are promulgated in the "Treasury Manual of Financial Authorities and Procedures" of 1951. Under the heading "Additional Employment Outside Public Service" are provided a number of prohibitions regarding the kinds of outside employment or occupation in which full-time civil servants may not engage.

A perusal of this list would indicate that the three employees concerned have not transgressed these regulations. So I would suggest in the circumstances that any imputation that there has been wrongdoing on the part of either the Canadian Government Printing Bureau, which does not have in itself the power to award or influence the awarding of contracts, or these three civil servants, one a linotype foreman and the other two hand-compositors in participating in an investment club, part of whose activities relate to an investment made in a commercial printing firm and the giving of advice as directors of this firm, does not, in any way that we have been able to discover, operate so as to make them unable to perform their functions within the Canadian Government Printing Bureau, nor to the detriment of the public service as a whole.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.39 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, February 16, 1966

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

OBJECTIONS RESPECTING PROPOSED DISTRICTS IN NEW BRUNSWICK AND QUEBEC

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty to inform the house that two objections, signed by the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton (Mr. Flemming) and 11 other hon. members in one case, and the hon. member for Chapleau (Mr. Laprise) and nine other hon. members in the second case, have been filed with me pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act.

If the house will agree, I propose that the procedure followed on prior occasions in this session be again followed so that the text of these objections, together with the names of the members who signed in each case, will be printed as appendices to Votes and Proceedings for this day. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

NATIONAL PARKS

TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND PREMIER OF ALBERTA

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table the exchange of correspondence between myself and the premier of Alberta on national parks policy, which was requested the other day.

BANKRUPTCY

TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE WITH SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker I should like to table correspondence between myself and members of the special committee who studied the Bankruptcy Act revision.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF NANCY GREENE, OUTSTANDING SKIER

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, on motions I should like to have the indulgence of the house and draw to the attention of members of the house the presence in the Speaker's gallery of Miss Nancy Greene, a member of Canada's national ski team and an outstanding Canadian.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, for the information of the house this young lady comes from Rossland which is in Kootenay West.

Mr. Groos: That means from British Columbia also.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT TO ABOLISH CORPORAL PUNISHMENT

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-123, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (Corporal Punishment).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, whereas preventive rather than punitive justice should be emphasized; whereas capital punishment remains the best deterrent to the increase in the number of murders in the present circumstances, punishment of criminals should nevertheless not be characterized by unpardonable barbarity.

The present bill proposes to eliminate the lash provided for in the Criminal Code.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

AMENDMENT RESPECTING ATTEMPTED SUICIDE BY MENTALLY ILL

Mr. Ian Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-124, to amend the Criminal Code (attempt to commit suicide).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie): Mr. Speaker, I am introducing this bill because section 213 of the Criminal Code now reads that a person who is mentally ill or is undergoing psychiatric treatment who attempts to commit suicide is subject to a criminal accusation and possible conviction. In most cases of attempted suicide the authorities ignore section 213. Occasionally, however, as happened recently in my own riding, a crown prosecutor becomes overzealous and applies section 213.

The amendment as proposed would have, it is hoped, two effects. It would remove the stigma of a criminal conviction attached to the attempted suicide of a mentally ill person; it would protect the public, and would protect the person who attempted the suicide from possible further suicide attempts by assuring that observation and treatment follow the attempt at suicide.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

EXPO '67—PROVINCIAL SALES TAX

Question No. 3—Mr. Coates:

Has the federal government been in contact with the government of the province of Quebec regarding the elimination of the provincial sales tax on purchases made by patrons of Expo '67 and, if so, what has been the result?

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Trade and Commerce): The ministers of the federal government and the government of the province of Quebec responsible for their respective government's interest in Expo '67 have given consideration to the remission of certain taxes.

No arrangements have been made, and none are in process, for the exemption from provincial sales tax on purchases made by patrons.

PAROLE OFFICERS, JUSTICE DEPARTMENT

Question No. 21—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How many parole officers are employed by the Department of Justice and what is their jurisdiction?
2. How many of these are trained social workers?
3. How many are university graduates in the social sciences?
4. Does the department make provisions for bursaries for the training of more parole officers and, if so, how many bursaries and for how much?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Forty five parole officers are employed by the Department of Solicitor General. The jurisdiction of those employed in the field offices is geographically limited to specified areas and the duties include the direct interview of applicants for parole; the direct or indirect supervision of persons on parole and the maintenance of liaison with crown authorities.

Generally speaking, the jurisdiction of parole officers employed at headquarters is geographically limited to a specified area and their duties include the assembly of data necessary to the study of parole cases; the preparation of summaries, based on the data assembled, for consideration by the National Parole Board and the performance of incidental duties.

2. Eighteen.
3. Fourteen.
4. No.

[Mr. Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie).]

TREATMENT OF NARCOTIC ADDICTS

Question No. 56—Mr. Howard:

1. Upon what basis are inmates selected for transfer to the Matsqui institution for narcotic addicts?
2. Have any inmates serving a sentence of preventive detention been so selected and (a) if so, how many and what are their names (b) if not, what is the reason?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): 1. Inmates selected for transfer to the Matsqui institution are addicted to narcotic drugs and may benefit from the treatment offered. Over aggressive and acutely disturbed individuals who are not suitable for a medium security institution and who may present a danger for security will not be transferred.

2. Twenty inmates serving sentences of preventive detention have been selected for transfer up to date. It is not the practice to reveal the names of these inmates, so as to safeguard their identity and that of their families.

PRINTING BUREAU—STOLEN GOODS

Question No. 64—Mr. Irvine:

1. During the past five calendar or fiscal years, has there been any investigation by RCMP or other police into the receipt of stolen goods in the Ottawa-Hull area that extended to the Canadian Government Printing Bureau?
2. If so, what were the circumstances?
3. What was the value of any such stolen goods?
4. Were any arrests made, and, if so, were any Printing Bureau employees questioned or arrested?
5. Were any charges laid and, if so, what dispositions were made by the courts of such charges?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): 1. Yes.

2. As a result of information received, investigations were conducted by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and no evidence was obtained disclosing the commission of any offence.

3. Answered by No. 2.

4. Answered by No. 2.

5. Answered by No. 2.

NATIONAL INDIAN ADVISORY BOARD

Question No. 68—Mr. Howard:

1. What is the name and address of each member of the national Indian advisory board?
2. Upon what date was each such member appointed or elected to the said board and what is his tenure of office?
3. What method was used to determine the membership of the board and, if the method involved consultation, what is the name and address of each person, group or organization that was consulted?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): 1 and 2.

Questions

3. The members of the national Indian advisory board are elected by the members of the eight regional Indian advisory councils and the name and address of each council chairman is listed below. The method followed by each of the councils in choosing members for the board is a matter for the individual councils to determine. The number of representatives from each region elected to the board is based on the Indian population of the region.

Maritime Indian Advisory Council—Mr. Wallace Labillois, R.R. 1, Box 10, Dalhousie, New Brunswick; Quebec Indian Advisory Council—Chief James Gaspé, Oka Indian Reserve, Oka, P.Q.; Ontario Indian Advisory Council—Chief Omer Peters, R.R. No. 3, Thamesville, Ontario; Manitoba Indian Advisory Council—Chief Cornelius Bignell, Box 582, The Pas, Manitoba; Saskatchewan Indian Advisory Council—Chief Wilfred Bellegarde, P.O. Box 23, Goodeve, Saskatchewan; Alberta Indian Advisory Council—Mr. Howard Beebe, c/o Blood Indian Agency, Cardston, Alberta; B.C. & Yukon Indian Advisory Council—Mr. George Manuel, P.O. Box 62, Chase, British Columbia; N.W.T. Indian Advisory Council—Mr. J. J. Pascal, No. 88 Arctic Red River Band, Aklavik, Northwest Territories.

SUPPLEMENTARY AGREEMENTS UNDER ESTABLISHED PROGRAMS ACT

Question No. 74—Mr. Lambert:

1. Did the government of Canada or anyone authorized on its behalf prior to October 31, 1965, approach any of the governments of the provinces with a view to entering any supplementary agreement under the Established Programs (Interim Arrangements) Act?

2. If so, what was the nature of the reply from any such provincial government?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): 1. Yes. On August 15, 1964, the Prime Minister wrote to the provincial prime ministers and premiers that it was the intention of the federal government to introduce legislation to implement the contracting-out arrangements outlined in the letter and asked those provinces, who might wish to conclude arrangements similar to those the federal government would be entering with Quebec, to inform him at their convenience.

On December 30, 1964, a copy of Bill C-142, entitled the "Established Programs (Interim Arrangements) Act" was forwarded to officials of each province and in May 1965, the act was discussed and the October 31, 1965, deadline for supplementary agreements under section 3 of the act was brought to their attention.

[Mr. Laing.]

2. Five provinces, Nova Scotia, Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba, and Saskatchewan, replied to the Prime Minister's letter. Nova Scotia, Ontario, and Manitoba acknowledged the Prime Minister's letter and reserved any comments to a future occasion. Quebec agreed to the proposals put forward by the federal government. Saskatchewan stated that that province would not contract out of the programs listed in part B of the Prime Minister's letter and sought some clarification on part C of the letter.

EXPENSE ALLOWANCES OF FORMER MINISTER

Question No. 101—Mr. Ormiston:

What was the total amount of all expense allowance funds drawn by the former minister without portfolio, the former member from Saint-Jean-Iberville-Napierville, from February 3, 1964 to January 22, 1965?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): $13,375.37.

ACQUISITIONS AND CONSOLIDATIONS OF COMPANIES

Question No. 102—Mr. Mather:

How many acquisitions and consolidations of companies capitalized at over $100,000 took place in Canada in 1963 and 1964?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): A statistical record of mergers is not maintained by the government of Canada at the present time.

TRANSFER OF POWERS FROM CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION TO TREASURY BOARD

Question No. 117—Mr. Ormiston:

Has there been any transfer of powers, duties, responsibilities and functions from the Civil Service Commission to Treasury Board since April 22, 1963, and, if so, what are they?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue): 1. None of the powers, duties, responsibilities and functions of the Civil Service Commission have been transferred to Treasury Board since April 22, 1963.

FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION TO EXPO '67

Question No. 121—Mr. Mather:

What, in dollars, is the federal contribution to Expo '67?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The agreement entered into on January 18, 1963, by the government of Canada, the government of the province of Quebec and the city of Montreal stipulates that the government of Canada shall pay 50 per cent of the cost of the exhibition.

This percentage amounts to $30.8 million of the net cost of $61.6 million as approved by order in council P.C. 1965-1494 dated August 13, 1965, in conformity with section 10 of the incorporating act. Under the master plan approved on the same date, the gross expenditure was estimated to be $250.7 million and the gross revenue $189.1 million.

CONTRACTUAL OBLIGATIONS BY CROWN CORPORATIONS

Question No. 136—Mr. Caouette:

Were any regulations made under section 83 of the Financial Administration Act with respect to the conditions upon which a corporation acting for the crown may undertake contractual obligations and, if so, what are they?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue): 1. The government contracts regulations, P.C. 1964-1467, issued September 23, 1964 under the authority of sections 39 and 83 of the Financial Administration Act (R.S.C. 1952, c.116), declare in section 2(1)(d)(ii) that the regulations apply to the corporations named in schedule B to the Financial Administration Act and the National Capital Commission, National Battlefields Commission and the Northern Canada Power Commission.

AIR CANADA DC-9 SERVICE

Question No. 157—Mr. Forrestall:

1. What cities in Canada are to be included in the introduction of DC-9 aircraft to Air Canada domestic service routes?
2. What dates are now anticipated for such introductions?
3. What will be the frequency of such service between Halifax and Montreal?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Air Canada advises as follows:

1. The following cities in Canada are included in Air Canada's plans for DC-9 aircraft operation in the first half of 1966: Vancouver, Edmonton, Calgary, Winnipeg, Toronto, Ottawa, Montreal. Other points of call are likely to be added in subsequent years as additional aircraft become available.

2. Vancouver, Winnipeg, Montreal—April 24; Toronto—June 1; Edmonton, Calgary, Ottawa—July 1.

3. There has been no decision yet as to flights to Halifax.

CANADIAN DELEGATES TO UN SESSION

Question No. 171—Mr. McCleave:

What were the names of the Canadian delegates and observers to the most recent session of the United Nations, and on what date was each appointed?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Canadian delegates to the twentieth session of the general assembly of the United Nations (21 September-21 December 1965) were appointed by the government on August 25. Their names are the following: Hon. Paul Martin, Mr. Paul Tremblay, Dr. Stanley Haidasz, Mrs. Margaret Konantz, Professor R. St. John MacDonald, Lieut.-Gen. E. L. M. Burns, Mr. W. H. Wershof, Mr. Paul Beaulieu, Miss Margaret Meagher, Mr. Stuart Hemsley.

Following past practice, parliamentary observers were nominated by parliamentary party leaders. During the first half of June the Secretary of State for External Affairs asked the party leaders in the Senate and in the House to provide him with names of observers for the places allocated to each party. The names of observers were submitted by the party leaders during the summer and fall. Of those names submitted the following attended as observers during the session: Observers from the Senate: Hon. Rhéal Belisle, Hon. J. J. Kinley, Hon. Hartland de M. Molson. Observers from the House of Commons: Hon. J. W. Monteith, Mr. Yves Forest, Mr. Walter F. Foy, Mr. Gilles Grégoire, Mr. Raynald Guay, Mr. Milton L. Klein, Mr. Herman Laverdière, Mr. Carl Legault, Mr. H. Pit Lessard, Mr. Marcel Lessard, Mr. Nicholas Mandziuk, Mr. Wallace B. Nesbitt, Mr. Gerald A. Regan, Mr. S. Perry Ryan, Mr. Max Saltsman, Mr. James R. Tucker, Mr. Ian Watson.

Mr. Willson Woodside, national director of the United Nations Association in Canada, was appointed by the government as non-governmental observer on September 30.

INDIAN RESIDENTIAL SCHOOLS

Question No. 177—Mr. Barnett:

1. What, listed by name, location, denominational or other equivalent designation, are the Indian residential schools in each of the provinces and territories of Canada?
2. Which of these schools are providing only residential services, and which are also providing classroom instruction?
3. Is the Canada Labour (Standards) Code applicable to any or all of these schools and, if not to all, to which is it applicable?
4. Are the salaries or wages currently being paid for any of the positions in any of these schools less than the equivalent of $1.25 per hour and, if so, what positions in which schools are paid at less than this rate, and in what amount per hour, day, week or month?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): 1. See following table.

Questions

2. The schools listed on the attached table shown as "hostel" provide residential services only.

3. The matter is being considered.

4. Members of the staffs at the residential schools apart from teachers are employees of the church denominations. Funds, however, have been provided by the federal government to pay a $1.25 minimum to each employee and the principals have been advised that this minimum must, without exception, be met.

1. On average, for how many hours per day are inmates productively employed at the following types of institutions (a) maximum security (b) medium security (c) minimum security (d) work camps?

2. What remuneration is currently paid for such work?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): 1. On average, inmates are productively employed at the following types of institutions, for the number of hours per day indicated:

(a) Maximum security	6.4 hours
(b) Medium security	7.1 hours
(c) Minimum security	7.5 hours
(d) Work camps	7.4 hours

2. The remuneration currently paid for such work is:

Pay Grade	Daily Pay
Grade 1	25¢
Grade 2	35¢
Grade 3	45¢
Grade 4	55¢

SPRINGHILL PENAL INSTITUTION PERSONNEL

Question No. 205—Mr. Coates:

What is the estimated number of individuals to be employed at the young offenders' penal institution in Springhill and what is the estimated annual payroll?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): The estimated number of individuals to be employed at the young offenders' penal institution in Springhill is 241 and the estimated annual payroll is $1,160,000.

CONTINUATION OF PRESENT SPRINGHILL PENAL INSTITUTION

Question No. 211—Mr. Coates:

Will the minimum security penal institution located at Springhill, N.S., continue in operation upon the completion of the young offenders' institution at Springhill?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Yes, the present plan is that this institution will continue to operate.

Questions

C.B.C. FEMALE EMPLOYEES

Question No. 217—Mr. Mather:

1. How many C.B.C. employees are there?
2. What percentage of these are women?
3. What percentage of C.B.C. management-scale salary groups is composed of women?
4. What percentage of C.B.C. senior management grades is composed of women?
5. What is the highest level, in C.B.C. management, occupied by a woman?
6. What percentage of the C.B.C. audience is composed of women?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State):

1. 8,160.

2. 25 per cent.

3. 7.82 per cent.

4. 4.16 per cent.

5. Second level below vice president.

6. Audiences vary from program to program. However, in general, women tend to watch television more than men do, perhaps up to one hour more per day.

INVITATIONS TO DISPLAY AT EXPO '67

Question No. 239—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. Have officials of Expo '67 extended invitations to international organizations such as the common market, NATO, etc., to have informational and educational displays at the world's fair to be held in Canada during our centennial year?
2. If so, what groups have been invited?
3. What groups have accepted the invitation?
4. Which groups have declined the invitation?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): 1. Invitations to participate in Expo '67 were extended in 1963 to the following international organizations: Food and Agricultural Organization (FAO); General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT); The European Communities; Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization (IMCO); International Atomic Energy Agency; International Bank for Reconstruction and Development (IBRD); International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO); International Development Association (IDA); International Finance Corporation (IFC); International Labour Organization (ILO); International Monetary Fund (IMF); International Red Cross; International Telecommunication Union (ITU); Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD); Organization of American States (OAS); Pan American Institute of Geography and History; Postal Union of the Americas and Spain; United Nations; United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO); Universal Postal Union (UPU); World Health Organization (WHO); World Meteorological Organization (WMO).

2. Answered by 1 above.

3. The European communities have accepted the invitation and have reserved a lot on the exhibition site, on which they are planning to build a pavilion.

4. The United Nations have declined the invitation to participate. However, the United Nations Association in Canada, with the help of private sponsors, have reserved a lot on the exhibition grounds, on which they plan to build a pavilion. The planning of this pavilion for the United Nations is being done in consultation with the liaison officer designated by the UN secretariat and with a number of UN agencies.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON PENITENTIARY INDUSTRY

Question No. 241—Mr. Brown:

1. Who at present constitute the advisory committee on penitentiary industry?
2. What institutions did they visit during 1965?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): 1. Officers of the penitentiary service have discussed penitentiary industry with representatives of management, labour and government agencies, but no advisory committee on penitentiary industry as such has been appointed to date.

2. Not applicable.

PENITENTIARY STAFF COLLEGE TRAINING

Question No. 242—Mr. Brown:

In penitentiary staff colleges, in Quebec, Ontario and western Canada, what provisions are made for training non-professional staff in the causes and treatment of criminality?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): All non-professional staff members of the penitentiary service attend a regular training course or refresher courses at either of the three staff colleges operated by the service. These courses, varying in duration from two months to three months, offer basic training in the causes and treatment of criminality by the means of lectures by specialists, film presentations and discussion groups, supervised by qualified instructors.

The institutional in-service training program also provides for additional training in these subjects by specialist personnel, that is, psychologists and classification officers, through the medium of lectures and/or film discussions.

A training program, approved by the treasury board in April 1964, providing for the reimbursement of tuition fees paid by such members of the service who have elected to undertake evening and/or correspondence courses from recognized educational agencies in the causes and treatment of criminality, has been implemented.

DORCHESTER PENITENTIARY—DANGER PAY FOR GUARDS

Question No. 278—Mr. Coates:

1. Did the government receive a request from the guards of the Dorchester penitentiary for danger pay of $1,000.00 annually?
2. Why was this request made?
3. What action is the government taking on this request?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): 1. Yes.

2. This request was made following the commutation of a death sentence to life imprisonment in the case of a penitentiary inmate by the name of Reginald Colpitts.

3. The government has at present under consideration a consultants report on the subject of penitentiary service pay classification.

GOVERNMENT ENCOURAGEMENT OF AMATEUR SPORTS

Question No. 281—Mr. Caouette:

1. During 1965, in what ways did the government encourage amateur sports?
2. What amounts were allocated to the various amateur sports teams during 1965?

[Translation]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. During 1965 as provided for under the Fitness and Amateur Sport Act, the Federal Government continued to encourage the development and promotion of amateur sport by making grants to national sports governing bodies to assist Canadian participation at national championships, international meets or world championships; by giving technical and financial aid to training programs, and by assisting programs designed to promote the development of various amateur sports. Grants were also given to national sports governing bodies to assist in meeting the cost of administrative expense.

Additionally $1 million in federal aid is made available each year to the provinces on a 60% federal 40% provincial matching basis to assist provincial and community organizations in carrying on programs at the provincial and municipal levels (the Province of Quebec does not participate in this joint program).

Some $550,000 is also made available annually for Fitness Research conducted through Canadian Universities and for scholarships and fellowships to encourage post-graduate studies in physical education and recreation.

2. The attached table indicates the extent of Federal aid given to national sports governing bodies and agencies to assist programs carried out during the 1965 calendar year. The amounts indicated are in addition to financial assistance provided under the Federal-Provincial program.

R.C.M.P. SALARIES AND PENSIONS

Question No. 313—Mr. Douglas:

1. (a) What was the salary of an R.C.M.P. Constable in 1943 (b) what is the salary of an R.C.M.P. Constable today?

2. (a) What was the salary of an Assistant-Commissioner in the R.C.M.P. in 1943 (b) what is the salary of an Assistant-Commissioner in the R.C.M.P. today?

3. (a) What was the pension of an R.C.M.P. Constable in 1943 (b) what is the pension of an R.C.M.P. Constable today?

4. (a) What was the pension of an Assistant-Commissioner in the R.C.M.P. in 1943 (b) what is the pension of an Assistant-Commissioner in the R.C.M.P. today?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): 1. (a) maximum pay and allowances, $1,553.75 per annum; (b) maximum salary, $5,943 per annum.

2. (a) maximum pay and allowances, $5,200.00 per annum; (b) $16,960 per annum.

3. (a) $1,035.83 per annum; (b) $3,962.00 per annum.

4. (a) $3,640.00 per annum; (b) $11,872.00 per annum.

Prior to December 1, 1950, the pension of a member of the force was based on his pay plus an allowance for pension purposes which was authorized by order in council. The "allowances" referred to in parts 1(a) and 2(a) above are those so authorized. From December 1, 1950, the pension of a member of the force has been based on his pay only.

The pension rates set forth in parts 3 and 4 are the maximum pensions authorized under the R.C.M. Police Pension Continuation Act. Pensions below the maximum vary with the length of service of the members concerned. Members engaged since March 1, 1949, are subject to the R.C.M. Police Superannuation Act and pensions under that act are based on the best six consecutive years' pay. The maximum pension payable to a constable who was subject to the R.C.M.P. Superannuation Act and who retired on January 27, 1966, would be $3,604.27 per annum based on maximum service of 35 years.

PRINTING BUREAU—STOLEN GOODS

Question No. 328—Mr. Irvine:

1. Since January 1, 1963, did the R.C.M.P. seize any goods in connection with any investigation of Canadian Government Printing Bureau employees in connection with alleged stolen goods?

2. Did any such investigation disclose that stolen goods were delivered to Printing Bureau premises, or to the residence or business premises occupied by any employee of the Printing Bureau and, if so, what is the address of such premises and the name of the occupant or occupants?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): 1. No.

2. No.

OTTAWA RIVER BRIDGE, QUYON-FITZROY HARBOUR

Question No. 337—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

1. Since April 23, 1963, has the Department of Public Works conducted any discussions or negotiations with the government of Ontario or the government of Quebec with respect to the erection of a highway bridge over the Ottawa river between Quyon and Fitzroy Harbour?

2. If so, what has been the nature of such discussions or negotiations, and what was the result thereof?

3. What is the estimate of the total cost of the erection of such a bridge?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): 1. No.

2. Not applicable.

3. Not applicable.

FEDERAL CIVIL SERVANTS

Question No. 351—Mr. Hales:

How many civil servants did the federal government departments, corporations and agencies have on the payroll and what were their total earnings on the following dates (a) end of April, 1961 (b) end of April, 1962 (c) end of April, 1963 (d) end of April, 1964 (e) end of April, 1965 (f) end of December, 1965?

Hon. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Trade and Commerce): The total number of federal public servants and their earnings as at April 30, for the years 1961 to 1965, and as at October 30, 1965 (the latest available) are shown in the following table.

ADDITION TO KEJIMKUJIK PARK

Question No. 357—Mr. Crouse:

1. Is the government planning to acquire part of the seaboard along the south shore of Nova Scotia and incorporate the same in the Kejimkujik national park?

2. If so, how large is the area to be selected?

3. In what county will the land be acquired?

4. How much money will be appropriated for this purpose?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): 1. In co-operation with the government of Nova Scotia the natural and historic resources branch of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources will be carrying out a further analysis of shoreline in Nova Scotia to determine if a suitable area can be located for convenient operation in conjunction with Kejimkujik national park.

2 and 3. This information will become available only after the above mentioned study has been completed.

4. Under existing practice no money would be appropriated for such acquisition.

ARDA PROJECTS, ARGENTEUIL-DEUX-MONTAGNES

Question No. 358—Mr. Régimbal:

Will the government submit the list of projects under ARDA which have been considered or are being considered for Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes?

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT AS UN OBSERVERS

Question No. 366—Mr. Code:

1. Were any members of the House of Commons appointed and did they serve as observers at the most recent session of the United Nations, and, if so, how many?

2. What were their names and the dates during which each of them served?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Following past practice, observers from the House of Commons were nominated by parliamentary party leaders. A total of 25 members of the house were nominated and 17 accepted to attend.

2. The period of appointment for observers during the twentieth session was two weeks although some did not stay for the full period. Following are the names of observers from the House of Commons who attended the session:

COTTAGE TYPE SCHOOL PROGRAM, NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Question No. 367—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. Since the cottage type school program for children in isolated communities in the Northwest Territories was launched in 1961, how many of these schools have been established?

2. Where are they located and what is the attendance at each school?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): 1. The small pupil residences have been built to accommodate children of elementary school age who live beyond commuting distance to local schools. Twenty of these family type residences have been established in the Northwest Territories.

EMIGRATION OF DOCTORS TO CANADA

Question No. 368—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Have foreign officials of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration encouraged medical doctors from Europe, Asia and Africa, to come to Canada in the last five years?

2. How many doctors have come to Canada in each of the past five years from Europe, Asia and Africa?

3. Is the Department of Citizenship and Immigration aware that many of these doctors have not been able to get permission to practise in parts of Canada?

4. Does the Department of Citizenship and Immigration have information as to how many doctors from Europe, Asia and Africa have not been able to get permission to practise since coming to Canada?

5. Has the Department of Citizenship and Immigration discussed the difficulties with the Canadian Medical Association or the appropriate provincial medical authorities?

6. Is the Department of Citizenship and Immigration giving consideration to discontinuing the practice of encouraging doctors from Europe, Asia and Africa to come to Canada in the light of these difficulties?

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): 1. Yes, provided the doctors have received some indication from a provincial medical licensing authority that they are likely to be able to qualify for practice in Canada. Before an application is approved for an immigrant to come to Canada as a medical doctor he is required to determine, through the licensing authority of the province in which he hopes to practice, whether or not he is likely to meet the requirements for the practice of medicine in that province. A person who receives a discouraging reply from the provincial authority is not admitted on the basis of his qualifications as a medical doctor. However, this in itself does not bar him from admission to Canada provided he understands that, if admitted, he must be prepared to accept employment outside of his chosen field. Such persons must now acknowledge in writing their understanding that they may never be able to practice medicine in Canada.

3. The department is aware that some medical doctors from overseas have not been able to meet the requirements of some provincial medical licensing bodies.

4. No.

5. Yes.

6. The department will continue to encourage the admission of only those medical doctors who will likely be able to practice their profession in Canada.

Questions

KILLING OF EAGLES AND FALCONS BY PESTICIDES

Question No. 382—Mr. Mather:

1. Is the government aware of the report of the Federation of Ontario Naturalists that pesticide spraying has caused the deaths of so many eagles and falcons that these species will be extinct in Ontario within 10 years?

2. Is the problem a federal or provincial responsibility?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): 1. The government is aware of the situation in Ontario with regard to the decline of populations of eagles and falcons. Although it may not be correct to state that these species will be extinct in Ontario within ten years, such an event is possible. The situation is not unique to Ontario but is of international concern in that populations of eagles and falcons in eastern North America and most of Europe have been declining rapidly in the past decade. The basic cause of this decline is not apparently in an accelerated death rate of adults but in a failure of the birds to reproduce successfully. Most of the few eggs now laid are infertile and contain several chlorinated hydrocarbon pesticide residues.

An international conference on the decline of falcons was held at Madison, Wisconsin in late 1965 and two scientists of the Canadian wildlife service of our department attended that conference. The Canadian wildlife service of the Department of Northern Affaris and National Resources has initiated or is initiating the following studies directed at elucidating the situation with regard to Canada.

(a) A survey of peregrine falcons and eagle nest sites is being conducted in eastern Canada to record nesting success; (b) An investigation of the reproductive success of falcons nesting in the Thelon game sanctuary is to be initiated in 1966; (c) A survey is proposed of falcon reproductive success in the Mackenzie river valley, also in 1966. Both studies will be supported by analysis of both falcons and their prey for pesticide residues; (d) In co-operation with the government of the United States, all eagles which are shot or found dead and which come into the possession of the Canadian wildlife service are shipped to testing facilities near Washington for analysis of pesticide residue content. That is done, not because facilities are not available in Canada, but because the American program has been going on for a number of years and it was deemed needless duplication for us to set up a parallel program.

[Mr. Munro.]

2. Peregrine falcons and eagles are not protected under the terms of the migratory birds convention between Canada and the U.S.A. They are, therefore, a provincial responsibility except in the Northwest Territories and Yukon Territory. The Canadian wildlife service is investigating the situation regarding the populations of these species in Canada as being a matter of national and international interest. Expressions of support for that position have been offered by several provinces.

CLAIMS AGAINST POLAND FOR CONFISCATED PROPERTY

Question No. 396—Mr. Ryan:

How many Canadians have claims against Poland for property nationalized or confiscated without compensation by the Polish Government in the post-war period?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The Department of External Affairs has on record over 500 nationalization claims of Canadian citizens against Poland amounting to a total asserted value of over 32 million dollars. In addition, there are a number of Canadians with claims against Poland who have not yet notified the Canadian government of their claims.

PAYMENTS BY POLAND FOR CONFISCATED PROPERTY

Question No. 397—Mr. Ryan:

Has Poland paid compensation for any Canadian property it has nationalized or taken from citizens of this country and, if so, how does this compare with compensation paid to other countries?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No.

OUTSTANDING CLAIMS AGAINST POLAND FOR CONFISCATED PROPERTY

Question No. 398—Mr. Ryan:

Are steps being taken by the Canadian government to seek settlement of outstanding claims for compensation for Canadian property which the Polish government has confiscated or nationalized and, if so, what are such steps?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Repeated efforts have been made in the past by the Canadian government through diplomatic channels to achieve some progress toward a just settlement of these claims. Further discussions took place in 1965 in Warsaw between Canadian officials and the Polish authorities with a view to reaching a preliminary agreement on a satisfactory basis for claims negotiations. As a result, an understanding was reached whereby the Polish government agreed to enter into negotiations toward a lump sum settlement of Canadian claims on the basis of principles similar to those applied in settlements Poland has concluded with other countries. The Department of External Affairs issued a public announcement on September 1, 1965, inviting Canadians to submit the details of their claims against Poland to this department preparatory to negotiations. The original deadline of January 1, 1966 which was set for the submission of claims to the department was recently extended to May 1, 1966, in response to numerous requests from interested persons. Statements of claim should be prepared in accordance with instructions and questionnaires which may be obtained on request from the claims section of the Department of External Affairs.

POLISH ASSETS IN CANADA

Question No. 399—Mr. Ryan:

Does the Canadian government hold Polish property or assets in Canada, and, if so, what disposition is being made of such Polish assets?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes. Property in Canada belonging to Polish citizens vested in the Canadian custodian of enemy property during world war II. Subsequently partial releases of these assets were made to certain Polish owners in hardship cases. The government has indicated to the Polish authorities that the question of any further release of these assets, which are valued at approximately $200,000, should be reserved for discussion in the course of the proposed negotiations toward a settlement of Canadian claims.

PROPERTY CLAIMS AGAINST EASTERN EUROPEAN COUNTRIES

Question No. 400—Mr. Ryan:

What action is the government taking to assist Canadians who have property claims outstanding against eastern European countries other than Poland?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Canadians obtained compensation for property claims against Yugoslavia under an agreement of December 23, 1948 signed by the British and Yugoslav governments.

A preliminary agreement was signed by Canada and Hungary on June 11, 1964 to negotiate a lump sum settlement of claims of Canadian citizens against Hungary. Subsequently public announcements were made inviting Canadians who have claims against Hungary to submit the details to the Department of External Affairs preparatory to negotiations. Canadian negotiators returned last week from a round of discussions with the Hungarian authorities in Budapest, and further discussions are expected to take place at an early date.

Similarly the government announced on December 1, 1964 that claims of Canadians against Bulgaria should be submitted preparatory to negotiations with that country. Negotiations between Canada and Bulgaria were commenced in Sofia in April 1965 and are expected to be resumed in the near future.

It is hoped that similar progress with respect to Canadian claims outstanding against Czechoslovakia and Roumania can be made in the near future. In all cases the Canadian government is actively pressing for early settlements of these long outstanding claims.

CHAMPLAIN WATERWAY

Question No. 403—Mr. Laniel:

1. Have the Canadian and American governments received the report of the study requested from the International Joint Commission concerning the Champlain navigable waterway?

2. If not, has the international study bureau on the Champlain navigable waterway submitted its report and recommendations to the International Joint Commission?

3. When is it expected that these documents may be made public?

4. Will new public hearings be organized by the International Joint Commission in order to allow all interested parties to make representations concerning the report and the suggestions?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. No.

2. I am informed by the International Joint Commission that the international Champlain waterway board submitted its Champlain waterway facility report in three volumes to the commission on September 16, 1965. After receiving the report the commission requested the board to provide certain additional information. This is contained in a supplementary report which the commission received from the board on January 7, 1966.

3. I am informed that the I.J.C. expects to make both reports public in the near future.

4. I am informed by the I.J.C. that public hearings will be held in both countries for this purpose on May next.

Questions

ASSISTANCE TO FISHERMEN, P.E.I.

Question No. 404— Mr. Macquarrie:

1. What measures of assistance are being provided for lobster fishermen of District Number Eight?
2. How many applications have been received from fishermen from Prince Edward Island?
3. What is the total amount available to qualified applicants from Prince Edward Island?
4. What organizations from Prince Edward Island have made representations to the Minister of Fisheries for additional assistance to lobster fisherment in District Number Eight?
5. What was the response of these representations?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): 1. The special assistance made available by the Department of Fisheries to fishermen during January, February, and March 1966, where fishermen suffered a loss of income last season as a result of catch failure applies.

2. 141 to February 4, 1966.

3. $36,650 to February 4, 1966.

4. Acadian Fishermen's Co-Operative Association, Abrams Village; Prince Edward Island Fisheries Federation, Charlottetown; East Prince Fishermen's Association, Cape Egmont.

5. The measures taken are nation-wide, and it is not the intention to develop methods of assistance that would apply to individual groups of fishermen.

DISTRIBUTION OF "HANSARD"

Question No. 406—Mr. Caouette:

How many people receive Hansard, by province (a) in English (b) in French?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Figures up to February 3, 1966.

Province	English	French

MANUFACTURED GOODS PURCHASED ABROAD

Question No. 412—Mr. Laprise:

1. During the years 1960, 1961, 1962, 1963, 1964 and 1965, what is the amount of manufactured goods from abroad that were bought by (a) Canada, and (b) Quebec?
2. For each of these years, what is the per capita breakdown for (a) Canada, and (b) Quebec?

[Translation]

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): 1 and 2. Imports of fabricated materials and end products into Canada during the years 1960-1964 and January-August 1965 (latest data available) are shown in Table 1 attached. This is the closest available equivalent to a total for "manufactured goods" (including manufactured foodstuffs). There are no statistics to indicate the amount of these imports bought by Quebec.

TABLE 1.

Imports of fabricated materials and end products into Canada, during the years 1960-1964, and January-August, 1965 (latest figures available.)

Year	Fabricated Materials	End Products	Total "Manufactured Goods"	Population of Canada	Imports "Manufactured Goods" Per Capita
	$'000	$'000	$'000	'000	$
1960	1,494,577	2,926,726	4,421,303	17,870	247
1961	1,556,742	3,102,577	4,659,319	18,238	255
1962	1,661,758	3,390,896	5,052,654	18,570	272
1963	1,820,083	3,436,265	5,256,348	18,896	278

EXPORTS TO AND IMPORTS FROM U.K.

Question No. 415—Mr. Flemming:

What was for the last fiscal year the (a) dollar value of exports to the United Kingdom (b) dollar value of imports from the United Kingdom?

416

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): (a) The dollar value of exports to the United Kingdom for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1965 was:

Domestic exports	$1,197,900,000
Re-exports	7,374,000
Total	$1,205,274,000

(b) The dollar value of imports from the United Kingdom for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1965 was $581,897,000.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

FOREST PRODUCTS EXPORTS

Question No. 416—Mr. Flemming:

What was the value of exports of all forest products, including paper and paper products, for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1965?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): There are at present no statistics of Canadian exports by industrial origin, and a complete total of exports of forest products is therefore not available. Domestic exports of the principal forest products for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1965 were as follows:

Crude wood materials	$ 54,593,000
Wood fabricated materials	593,753,000
Wood pulp	472,050,000
Paper and paperboard	909,672,000
Total	$2,030,068,000

WAR ON SMOKING

Question No. 418—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. Which minister of the crown is now in charge of the "war on smoking" launched by the former Minister of National Health and Welfare, Hon. Judy LaMarsh?

2. What further action is planned in this welfare?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Hon. Allan J. MacEachen, Minister of National Health and Welfare.

2. The five year smoking and health program inaugurated in 1963-64 will continue to inform the public about the risks to health connected with cigarette smoking; encourage smokers to discontinue the habit; dissuade non-smokers from acquiring the habit; and promote research.

HARBOUR IMPROVEMENTS, ARNES, MAN.

Question No. 424—Mr. Stefanson:

Has the government any plans for improving harbour facilities at Arnes, Manitoba, and when will these plans be carried out?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): No.

*SINKING OF "SUZANNE" ON LAKE WINNIPEG

Question No. 425—Mr. Stefanson:

Did the boat Suzanne sink on Lake Winnipeg, Manitoba, in September, 1965, when nine lives were lost and, if so (a) has the government ordered an inquiry into the sinking, and (b) what form will the inquiry take and when and where will hearings be held?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The motor vessel Suzanne E. sank during a storm on lake Winnipeg on 24 September 1965, with the loss of nine lives; and (a) the casualty was investigated by the Department of Transport under the provisions of the Canada Shipping Act; and the deaths were also the subject of a coroner's inquest at which the investigating officer of the Department of Transport was called as a witness. It does not appear that any additional information would be forthcoming if a further public inquiry were held and, accordingly, none is intended; but a report of the findings of the departmental investigator is being prepared and will be made public. (b) Not applicable.

TRANSPORT DEPARTMENT CONSTRUCTION, CHARLOTTETOWN, P.E.I.

Question No. 427—Mr. MacLean (Queens):

With regard to the construction of Department of Transport agency facilities at Charlottetown (a) what was the estimated date of completion of each prime contract and when were these contracts, in fact, completed, and what was the total cost of each (b) what contracts have been let and are yet to be completed and what are the estimated dates of completion and what is the cost of each (c) are any contracts to complete this program yet to be let and, if so, what is the estimated cost of same?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): (a) Contracts completed: Marine wharf, estimated date of completion, April 2, 1963. Actual completion, July 9, 1964. Delay due to change by Department of Public Works in foundation design after contract awarded. Soil conditions were worse than borings indicated. Total cost, estimated to date—$1,681,983 but final costs not yet adjusted.

(b) Contracts let and incomplete: Marine stores and offices, estimated date of completion, September 30, 1966. Cost $643,964.

(c) Contracts to be let: (i) Marine shops, estimated cost $350,000.; (ii) Buoy shed, estimated cost $30,000.

PURCHASES OF JAPANESE PLYWOOD

Question No. 434—Mr. Laprise:

1. What was the dollar value of plywood bought by Canada from Japan in 1963, 1964 and 1965?

2. Has the elimination of restrictions imposed upon Japanese plywood influenced the volume of imports of that product since the end of 1964?

3. Have any complaints been received from competing Canadian industries and, if so, what does the government intend to do in this respect?

4. In order of importance, what are the types of Japanese plywood that are the most popular in Canada?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): 1. According to the data published by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, the dollar value of Canadian plywood imports from Japan is as follows:

1962	5,516
1963	3,626
1964	6,043
First 10 months
1964	4,258

Source: D.B.S. Trade of Canada, Imports by Commodities.

2. The restraint applied by the government of Japan on exports of plywood to Canada was lifted at the beginning of 1964; during 1964, the volume of Canada's imports of plywood from Japan were substantially higher than in 1963. Imports in the first ten months of 1965 were slightly greater than during the same period in 1964.

It is not possible to single out any one reason for the increase in plywood imports from Japan, although the lifting of the restraint no doubt had some bearing on the increase in imports.

3. Last year the government received representations from the Canadian Hardwood Plywood Association requesting various measures of support because of increased import competition. Following a meeting between officials of several government departments and representatives of the association, a questionnaire was prepared in co-operation with the executive of the association, and directed to all known Canadian hardwood plywood producers. The purpose of the questionnaire was to provide up to date information on all factors contributing to the present situation of the industry. The questionnaire was sent out in October and a follow-up letter was mailed to each of the manufacturers early in January. At present, out of a total of twenty-four companies that are members of the association, completed replies have been received from five firms; there has been correspondence with a number of others, and their final replies are awaited. Replies have also been received from a number of hardwood plywood producers who are not members of the Canadian Hardwood Plywood Association, as well as several letters from firms that produce hardwood veneer only.

The increase in the volume of imports and the representations received from the industry have been drawn to the attention of the Japanese government; it is hoped, with the co-operation of the industry, that the survey of the effect of imports on the Canadian market and on Canadian firms will be completed in the near future.

4. According to the Japanese Ministry of Finance export statistics for 1964, the types of plywood exported to Canada according to the volume are: Luaun plywood, not less than 3.2 mm; Luaun plywood, not less than 4 mm; but less than 6.4 mm; further finished plywood.

[Mr. Sharp.]

CONTRIBUTION TO UN TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE FUND

Question No. 435—Mr. Laprise:

How much has the government contributed annually to the special technical assistance fund of the United Nations since the inception of the fund?

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Since the inception of the United Nations Expanded Programme of Technical Assistance Canada has made annual contributions to the program as follows: 1950-51, $850,000; 1952-53, $750,000; 1953-54, $800,000; 1954-55, $1,470,000; 1955-56, $1,480,000; 1956-57, $1,770,000; 1957-58, $1,930,000; 1958-59, $1,950,000; 1959-60, $1,920,000; 1960-61, $1,940,000; 1961-62, $2,220,000; 1962-63, $2,340,000; 1963-64, $2,320,000; 1964-65, $2,330,000; 1965-66, $2,330,000.

SALARIES AND WAGES, TRADE AND COMMERCE DEPARTMENT

Question No. 440—Mr. Godin:

What amounts were spent by the Department of Trade and Commerce, during the years 1960 and 1965, for the payment of (a) salaries and wages (b) professional and special services?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): 1960: (a) Salaries and Wages, $14,199,787; (b) Professional and Special Services, $647,282.

1965: (a) Salaries and Wages, $22,540,565; (b) Professional and Special Services, $1,135,135.

Note: The above figures include Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

SUGAR BEET PULP MARKETING

Question No. 443—Mr. Fairweather:

What percentage of the 1965 sugar beet pulp crop was marketed in (a) Canada (b) the United States (c) other countries?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Information on the 1965 production of sugar beet pulp is not available. In 1964 shipments of dried sugar beet pulp and sugar beet pulp with molasses added amounted to 74,800 tons. How much of the 1964 production was consumed in Canada or exported is not known.

*SUBSIDY PAYMENTS ON CREAM

Question No. 450—Mr. Rynard:

1. What is the differential in subsidy paid for sweet cream, grade one cream, and grade two cream?

2. On what basis are they classified?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): 1. The Agricultural Stabilization Board pays producers a subsidy of 10.9 cents per pound butterfat regardless of quality when the cream is manufactured into creamery butter. Price differentials between special, first and second grade are under provincial jurisdiction. These differentials vary from province to province.

2. The grades of cream used for the manufacture of butter are based primarily on flavour and acidity.

USE OF FIREFIGHTING EQUIPMENT, FORT CHIMO

Question No. 457—Mr. McCleave:

1. What firefighting equipment is used by the Department of Transport at Fort Chimo?

2. Was the use of any of such equipment requested but refused in the case of a fire which gutted the home of an Eskimo, named Jacob Gordon and, if so, on what grounds?

3. Is there now a policy by which federal firefighting equipment may be used outside federal properties in the North?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. The department maintains one 1950 Willys Jeep at Fort Chimo airport. The extinguishant medium of this vehicle consists of 300 lbs. of dry chemical powder for extinguishing flammable liquid fires.

2. A request was received from the Department of Northern Affairs for the use of a fire truck. When informed by the airport manager that the DOT vehicle was not a fire truck in the normal sense and that the DNA water truck was more suitable for the purpose it was decided to use the water truck.

3. The use of departmental vehicles for fighting fires on other than federal properties is at the discretion of the airport manager.

INVITATIONS TO EXPO '67

Question No. 459—Mr. Allard:

With regard to persons of distinction whom the government intends to invite to Expo '67 during the centennial celebrations (a) will invitations be sent to heads of state and, if so, to whom among them (b) when will the said invitations be sent and will they all be sent at the same time (c) will an invitation be sent soon to His Holiness, Pope Paul VI, head of the Vatican state?

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The question of invitations to persons of distinction of other states to visit Canada in 1967 is at present under active consideration.

WAGES OF MOTOR TRANSPORT EMPLOYEES, HALIFAX

Question No. 476—Mr. Douglas:

1. Why are the rates of pay for motor transport employees at HMC Dockyard, Halifax, N.S., determined by reference to the rates paid by seven shipyards in the maritimes and St. Lawrence areas, whereas the rates for the motor transport at HMCS Shearwater are determined by reference to prevailing rates in the transport industry?

2. What is the shift differential paid to workers employed in the motor transport section at HMC Dockyard, Halifax?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Associate Minister of National Defence): 1. All rates of pay in HMC Dockyard, Halifax, are based now upon one comparison thereby eliminating industrial disputes previously caused when more than one area of comparison was used in determining rates at the Dockyard. In so far as HMCS Shearwater is concerned, the motor transport rates are established, like all other trades at the air station, against rates prevailing in the Halifax area. The Halifax area is one of the many geographical areas selected by the Department of Labour to collect wage rate data from outside employers. Such data is used as a basis for a recommendation to Treasury Board to establish rates of pay for prevailing rate employees in the area.

2. Time and one eighth for work on a night shift has been approved.

CHIBOUGAMAU, QUE., RÉSOLUTION ON FAMILY ALLOWANCES

Question No. 485—Mr. Laprise:

1. Did the government receive a resolution from the city of Chibougamau, asking that family allowances be increased to $25 monthly for each child?

2. Does the government intend to grant this request?

[Translation]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Yes.

2. As this is a matter of government policy, any announcement will be made by the government at the appropriate time.

Questions

SOUTH SASKATCHEWAN RIVER DAM

Question No. 486—Mr. Lind:

In respect of the Saskatchewan dam (a) what has been the federal financial contribution to date (b) what has been the provincial financial contribution to date (c) what is the cost of power installation by Saskatchewan Hydro (i) what amount on site power will be installed (ii) what is the estimated cost per kilowatt (d) was there an undertaking by the province to service an area of land for irrigation and, if so, how many acres (e) how many acres of land for irrigation have been made available (f) what is now the total final cost of the project (g) has the water of this lake become alkaline?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): 1. (a) Canada's contribution to capital works to December 31, 1965, taking into account the sharing of costs as provided under the agreement, is $76,878,636.

(b) The province of Saskatchewan reports its contribution to capital works to December 31, 1965, taking into account the sharing of costs as provided under the agreement, is $22,159,836.

(c)* The cost of power installation in the initial stage is estimated at $23,000,000. (i) Initially 252,000 horsepower of a potential 400,000 horsepower at full development. (ii) The estimated cost of the power facilities is $123 per kilowatt in the initial installation.

(d) Yes, 50,000 acres within one year of the reservoir being raised to minimum irrigation level and to develop the entire irrigation system as rapidly as practicable.

(e)* The province of Saskatchewan is presently planning and constructing works for 40,000 acres.

(f)* The cost of the project, including ultimate power and irrigation development, is estimated to be $209,000,000.

(g) The lake created by the dam is only partially filled as construction is not completed. There have been no indication that this lake is, or will become alkaline.

*Part of the information given in these answers has been assembled from data published by agencies of the province of Saskatchewan.

APPLICATION OF PENSION PLAN, ATOMIC ENERGY LTD.

Question No. 494—Mr. Hopkins:

Is the government considering laying down a definite ruling on the stacking or integration of the Canada Pension Plan in so far as the employees of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, at Chalk River, are concerned, or are the employees going to be given a choice?

[Mr. MacEachen.]

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): 1. All Atomic Energy of Canada Limited salaried employees engaged on a continuing basis—whether or not they are included in a bargaining unit—come under the Public Service Superannuation Act. For them, the Canada Pension Plan will be integrated with public service superannuation in the same way as for federal civil servants.

Atomic Energy of Canada Limited employees paid on the basis of hourly rates do not come under the Public Service Superannuation Act. At Chalk River nuclear laboratories, except for guards, all these employees are included in bargaining units, and collective agreements between Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and the unions concerned have recently been signed. In these agreements, a partial integration and a partial stacking of Canada Pension Plan and the pension plan previously in effect have been agreed upon. This same arrangement has been put into effect for the guards.

MILITARY HOSPITAL, CAMP PETAWAWA

Question No. 497—Mr. Hopkins:

In view of the urgent need for hospital facilities, has the government considered the construction of a new hospital for military personnel in Camp Petawawa and, if so, at what stage are any plans in this regard?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Associate Minister of National Defence): The question is under consideration. Planning is at the preliminary stage.

COMMEMORATIVE STAMP, MIGRATORY BIRD TREATY

Question No. 502—Mr. MacLean (Queens):

Is it the intention of the Post Office Department as the United States post office is doing to issue in March of this year a special stamp to commemorate the fiftieth anniversary of the migratory bird treaty between Canada and the United States?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): No. As a result of the contribution the Post Office is making in commemorating the centennial of confederation, the philatelic program for 1966-67 is one of the heaviest in Canada's history. Numerous outstanding subjects have been suggested for portrayal on postage stamps, therefore, it is necessary to defer many worthy suggestions with national and international connotations.

1966 SEAL HUNT, GULF OF ST. LAWRENCE

Question No. 503—Mr. MacLean (Queens):

1. Will any foreign countries be allowed to hunt seals in the gulf of St. Lawrence during 1966?
2. Will there be a quota on the total number of seals which may be killed in the gulf of St. Lawrence in 1966?
3. What conservation measures, if any, will be in force with regard to the killing of hair seals on the high seas in the North Atlantic in 1966?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): 1. Norway, the only country other than Canada that has hunted seals in the gulf of St. Lawrence in modern times, consented to refrain from sealing in 1965 and has renewed this consent in 1966.

2. The quota is the same as last year; namely, 50,000 young seals.

3. Prohibition to kill harp and hood seals from May 1st to the 11th of March next following, both days inclusive, and to kill harp seals in breeding patches.

EMPLOYEES COVERED BY LABOUR CODE DEFERMENT APPLICATIONS

Question No. 523—Mr. Orlikow:

How many employees are covered by submissions for deferment under sections 51 and 52 of the Canada Labour (Standards) Code that were pending on July 1, 1965, and are, therefore, not covered by the provisions of the Canada Labour (Standards) Code, even though they come under the jurisdiction of the federal government?

Mr. B. S. Mackasey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): This information is not available. Most of the employers making submissions for deferment did not supply information as to the number of employees affected.

*RABIES PROBLEM, ONTARIO AND QUEBEC

Question No. 532—Mr. Rynard:

1. Is there an unsatisfactory chronic residue of rabies remaining in Canada, particularly in Ontario and Quebec?
2. Will the government advise what research is now being done and what additional steps will now be taken to deal with this problem?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): 1. A reservoir of infection persists in various wildlife species in Ontario and Quebec.

2. Research by the Department of Agriculture, Animal Diseases Research Institute, has been in the field of developing more rapid tests for the diagnosis of rabies in animals, as well as on studies of the various vaccines available for the immunization of dogs and other animals against rabies.

Rabies in animals is a reportable disease under the animal contagious diseases regulations and the department's control program embodies investigation of reported cases, diagnosis, referral of human exposures to medical authorities, quarantines, and free dog vaccination clinics in the infected areas. In addition, a rabies indemnity program provides assistance to owners where domestic livestock have died as a result of rabies.

GRAIN STORAGE, CHURCHILL

Question No. 585—Mr. Korchinski:

How much grain has been in storage at Churchill for each month since the closing of shipping from that port in 1965?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): The same quantity of grain has been in store each month at Churchill since the close of the 1965 shipping season, viz: 824,115 bushels wheat; 5,526 bushels mixed feed oats; 491 tons sample grain; 1,417 tons screenings.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

MINERAL PRODUCTION

Question No. 25—Mr. Tucker:

What was the total production of all minerals, in tons and dollar value, in each province of Canada from (a) January 1 to December 31, 1964, and (b) January 1 to December 31, 1965, inclusive?

Return tabled.

PROVINCIAL ARDA PROGRAMS

Question No. 42—Mr. Allard:

1. Which provinces have included Indian lands and Indians in the ARDA program?
2. What is the nature and location of each ARDA project in Quebec whether accepted or under consideration?
3. In what provinces are there joint advisory committees to advise the province and the federal government on ARDA projects?
4. How much was spent in each province, under the ARDA program prior to December 31, 1965?

Return tabled.

*PRESERVATION OF INDIAN SHRINE, SASKATCHEWAN

Question No. 172—Mr. Brand:

1. Has any consideration been given to extending aid to the Cree Indians of Elbow, Saskatchewan, in their anxiety to have the 400-ton Plains Cree shrine (Mistaseni) moved to safe ground before its possible flooding by the waters of the South Saskatchewan dam reservoir?
2. Will consideration be given to the formation of a special parliamentary committee to inquire into the need for a national antiquities act that would protect Indian historic objects and monuments such as the Plains Cree shrine (Mistaseni) from the reservoir of the South Saskatchewan dam?

Return tabled.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[Translation]

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, notice of motion No. 88 is acceptable to the government, subject to the usual reservations regarding classified documents and subject to the approval of the provincial and municipal authorities, if necessary, and to the Indian organization concerned.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservations and conditions expressed by the parliamentary secretary is it the pleasure of the house that notice of motion No. 88 be adopted?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Béchard: Would Your Honour call notices of motions No. 10, 83, 86 and 90? I would ask that the remaining notices of motions stand.

[English]

IDENTICAL BIDS FOR ELECTRICAL EQUIPMENT

Motion No. 10—Mr. Orlikow:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence between municipalities, provincial governments, hydro-electric systems, etc., and the Department of Justice, combines division, in the past three years regarding the submission of these agencies of identical tenders when bids for equipment or supplies have been called for.

Hon. Guy Favreau (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have had occasion to discuss the terms of this motion with the hon. member for Winnipeg North, and it would seem appropriate to include papers relating to a period beginning January 18, 1963 and continuing to date, and to include also within the scope of the motion such municipal agencies as school boards, public utilities and hospitals. There will, of course, have to be the usual reservations with respect to obtaining the permission of the governments concerned. Hon. members are also aware of the long standing policy respecting the principle of privacy inherent in the act not to make public, before a report has been published, any facts about an inquiry currently in progress or which may give rise to an inquiry. Subject to these reservations I will endeavour to locate and table the papers in question.

Mr. Orlikow: This is agreeable to me, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Brand.]

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservations expressed by the minister, shall this motion carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN PACIFIC INVESTMENTS LTD.

Motion No. 83—Mr. Knowles:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all the copies of documents filed by Canadian Pacific Investments Limited with the United States securities and exchange commission in Washington in the possession of the Privy Council office and the Department of Finance as noted in the reply to question No. 52 as reported on page 573 of Hansard for February 2, 1966.

Hon. Guy Favreau (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I understand from a discussion I have had with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that if the government voluntarily tables the documents referred to in the motion, he has no objection to withdrawing his motion.

Mr. Knowles: That is correct, Mr. Speaker. So long as the documents are tabled I have no objection to withdrawing the formal motion.

Mr. Speaker: Is the motion dropped?

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

CONSOLIDATION OF SCHOOLS, LIBAU, MAN.

Motion No. 86—Mr. Schreyer:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence exchanged between the Indian affairs branch of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration and the (a) department of education of Manitoba (b) chief and council of the Brokenhead Indian reserve, and (c) Libau School District, regarding consolidation of schools in the area of Libau, Manitoba, and the Brokenhead Indian reserve.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, this is entirely agreeable, subject to the usual reservations with respect to documents which are private, and subject to the approval of the government of the province of Manitoba.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservations and conditions expressed by the minister, shall the motion carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Motion agreed to.

WATER POLLUTION, WINNIPEG RIVER

Motion No. 88—Mr. Schreyer:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence with the Indian affairs branch and/or the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources, relative to the problem of water pollution in the Winnipeg river as it affects the town of Pine Falls and the Fort Alexander Indian reserve.

Motion agreed to.

C.B.C. "PREVIEW COMMENTARY" FOR FEB. 11, 1966

Motion No. 90—Mr. Coates:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of the "Preview Commentary" heard on the C.B.C. the morning of February 11, 1966.

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, as the matter referred to in the motion is not a document within the custody and control of the government, I understand from discussions which have been held with my hon. friend that he agrees to withdraw the formal motion. On that condition I am prepared to table a copy of the document in question on a voluntary basis.

Mr. Coates: I am in agreement, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the motion be withdrawn and the document tabled at this time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining motions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

FINANCE

TRANSFER OF FUNDS BY CANADIAN SUBSIDIARIES OF U.S. COMPANIES

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Prime Minister whether his attention has been directed to remarks of the Liberal leader in Ontario who, in dramatic fashion, set forth the detrimental effects of the United States economic guide lines; and in particular whether the government has looked into the question raised by him to the effect that these guide lines restrict the amount of capital available in Canada, that U.S. corporations are draining money from Canada for investment in foreign countries, and that:

Total borrowings for the past five months come to at least $300 million in U.S. funds, much of it raised in Ontario.

Does the Prime Minister agree with Mr. Thompson's contention that this borrowing is raising interest rates in Canada and taking dollars out of this country at a time when Canada desperately needs them for its own development?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have missed the report to which my right hon. friend has referred, but I shall be glad to have a look at it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Will the Prime Minister say whether there is any justification in the point of view expressed that Canada is a kind of economic beagle in the way it is being treated?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that the right hon. Leader of the Opposition is asking the right hon. Prime Minister to express an opinion about the justification for an article which appeared in a newspaper. I suggest that question is not in order.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): I should like to ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question. Will he also determine whether certain companies such as General Electric, B. F. Goodrich and General Foods, among others, have transferred funds to the United States from Canadian subsidiaries?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that question is also out of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance.

Does the minister intend to institute a new procedure which would force Canadian companies, subsidiaries of American companies, to reveal to the Department of Finance their movements of capital to foreign countries?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we do know a good deal about this situation, and perhaps it would be of interest to the house if I stated some of the facts concerning the transfer of funds to the United States. Canadians have for many years—

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. This is the shortest day in the week as far as our sitting hours are concerned, and we only have half an hour for oral questions. I am sure the minister and the house will agree to revert to motions so the minister can make a statement to which we will have the opportunity of replying. I am sure everyone will agree to a request to revert to motions for that purpose.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. McIlraith: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that if a question is proper, then it is proper for the minister to answer it. If on the other hand, as the hon. member suggests, we should revert to motions, the question would have been ruled out of order.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I recognize the question as being of a general nature, and that perhaps it should not have been allowed. However, it has been allowed, and I suggest that the minister should be allowed to reply if he so wishes at this time. His reply should be brief, of course, as that is one of the requirements in respect of questions and answers at this time.

Mr. Sharp: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. During the first nine months of 1965, the last period for which statistics are available, the net purchases by Canadians of foreign securities amounted to approximately $62 million. Preliminary indications are that during the last quarter of 1965 net purchases by Canadians of foreign securities, including those that were described by the leader of the Liberal party in Ontario, were only about $10 million.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. You ruled my question out of order and said it was improper. Now the minister is trying to surreptitiously make this statement.

An hon. Member: He is trying to smuggle it in.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the explanation given by the minister so far is sufficient to answer the question and we should proceed to another question.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance because he did not reply to my previous one.

Does the minister intend to institute a new procedure which would force Canadian companies, subsidiaries of American companies, to reveal their transfer of capital, something which is not being done at the present time?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: My view at this time is that this question is of a very general nature and might be placed on the order paper.

[Mr. Nielsen.]

BROADCASTING

APPLICATION OF REGULATION RESPECTING POLITICAL BROADCASTS BEFORE ELECTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State regarding a B B.G. regulation which forbids political broadcasts for 48 hours prior to an election or by-election. There is a by-election today in the province of Saskatchewan and "The Nation's Business" program at six o'clock tonight has been cancelled. I want to ask the minister why the C.T.V. program on Monday evening featuring the Prime Minister being interviewed by Pierre Burton was not also cancelled. Will the Secretary of State indicate whether the regulation in question applies only to the C.B.C. and not to private stations?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that is not a proper question. The hon. member is referring to something that has already happened. Perhaps he will put the question on the order paper.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please I feel that the question directed to the Secretary of State is not a proper question. Certainly it is irregular.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The program to which I referred is to be broadcast tonight at six o'clock and, unless some action is taken, that program will be cancelled. I am raising a question as to whether the regulation of the B.B.G. applies only to the C.B.C., or whether it should be applied fairly across the board. Since the C.T.V. did not observe this particular rule, I am wondering whether the minister will allow this program to proceed at six o'clock tonight.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Surely that is a proper question.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I did not understand the question correctly in the first instance. I thought the hon. member indicated that the program at six o'clock tonight had been cancelled. I apologize if I did not understand him correctly. Perhaps the minister would like to reply to the question.

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I did not know of this situation. It seems to me that this regulation should apply to both private and public broadcasting stations. I assure the hon. gentleman that I will look into the situation well prior to six o'clock and, although I will not have an opportunity to inform the house about it, I will pass on the information to the hon. gentleman.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—IS FEDERAL PLAN TO BE COMPULSORY?

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the latest Gallup poll shows that a clear majority of Canadians prefer a medicare plan on a voluntary basis, does the government intend to proceed with its plans to introduce a plan on a compulsory basis?

Mr. Starr: They don't believe in Gallup polls any more since the last election.

Mr. Speaker: This also is a question of a general nature. It is sometimes difficult for the Chair to determine whether this type of question should be asked, but I would be inclined to rule this one out of order.

THE MINISTRY

SUGGESTED EXTENSION OF RESPONSIBILITY OF PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister and has to do with the efficiency and effectiveness both of the parliamentary process and governmental departments. In view of the fact that on Monday night the Prime Minister stated there was not time to think, there was not time to make decisions, there was not time to get parliamentary action on important matters, is the Prime Minister considering giving the parliamentary secretaries some greater degree of authority and responsibility?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is not a question that can be asked at this time; it is of a general nature.

OLD AGE SECURITY

CONSIDERATION OF INCREASE IN AMOUNT OF PENSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister and ask if he is in a position to say whether he is now considering the increase requested in old age pensions, and whether he is asking the provinces to undertake any share in any such increase?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): This is a matter of very important government policy, Mr. Speaker, and my hon. friend knows of course that it would not be proper to answer it on the orders of the day.

HARBOURS

VANCOUVER—DECISION ON OWNERSHIP OF PROPERTIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, because of its importance I desire to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister, although I realize it may have to be answered by the Minister of Transport.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Winch: I have been advised by telephone this afternoon from Vancouver that it is thought a settlement has been reached relative to the ownership of harbour properties in the port of Vancouver. It is thought that a decision has been reached in this regard. I should like to ask this question. If this is correct, will the report be tabled in the house and a statement made; and if it is not correct, can we anticipate that the report of the commission appointed to arbitrate this matter between the harbour commission and the C.P.R. will be tabled as soon as possible?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport will be able to give a brief answer to this question.

An hon. Member: Make it brief.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): The briefest answer I can give is, I don't know.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: But I do know that negotiations are going on, and the last report I had was that they looked as though they were very close to conclusion. I will look into the matter just as soon as I can and reply further.

Mr. Winch: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. My information from Vancouver today is that a decision has been arrived at and there is agreement on this matter.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Inquiries of the Ministry

HIGHWAY SAFETY

REQUEST FOR REMOVAL OF RAILWAY LEVEL CROSSINGS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct this question to the Minister of Transport. Would the minister make a contribution toward highway safety by way of the removal of railway level crossings? Second, where this is not practicable, would he instal signal protection devices; and third, would he consider making this a centennial project?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. These are very important and interesting questions which might be placed on the order paper.

TRADE

SUGGESTED RECALL OF TRADE COMMISSIONERS FOR CONSULTATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Now that he has returned from his visit to Paris where he met with his trade commissioners in Europe, has he been able to make a decision to have all his trade commissioners from all over the world confer with the businessmen of Canada in order to better acquaint them with trade opportunities throughout the world?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I had a very productive and very interesting meeting with 29 trade commissioners from 25 countries. We discussed at considerable length the opportunities for further trade by Canadian business in those countries. We concluded that there are opportunities if businessmen can take advantage of them on the basis of price, quantity and good service, which I am sure they can. We discussed the best means of their taking advantage of the Canadian trade commissioner service. All these matters are under consideration and you may be sure, Mr. Speaker, that we shall use them to the best advantage of the Canadian business community.

Mr. Hees: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister, after his preliminary reply, now just answer my question yes or no?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): I have a question for the minister, Mr. Speaker. Did the minister have an equally productive meeting with the directors of Brinco at lunch today; and if so, can he report to us the decision arrived at there?

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I hope that he enjoyed his stay in France and that he appreciated the beauties of the French language.

Could he tell the house whether the proposed uranium transaction between Canada and France was discussed during his trip and whether he has anything to announce in that regard?

[English]

Mr. Winters: I did enjoy the beauties of the French language; I even tried a bit of it myself. As regards our discussion on uranium, I did indeed have very interesting discussions with the minister responsible, Mr. Peyrefitte. We exchanged views on the position of each other's government. He is a new minister in his present portfolio, as am I, and we regarded this as an opportunity to get to know each other. While I cannot inform the house of any substantial news, we did agree that it would be in our mutual interest to meet from time to time.

WATER RESOURCES

STEPS TO IMPLEMENT REPORT ON GREAT LAKES POLLUTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Have any discussions yet been initiated with the government of the United States to commence joint action on the elimination of pollution of lakes Erie and Ontario, in accordance with the recommendations of the International Joint Commission?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend is perhaps aware, the International Joint Commission which is representative of both countries and is an agency established by both governments has made an interim report on actions that might be taken with regard to pollution in the Great Lakes. I believe that my colleague the minister of energy and resources will have something to say on this subject in so far as action contemplated by the federal government is concerned.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the minister is going to answer my question, because I would be glad to hear the answer. I am interested in knowing whether as a result of this report discussions have been commenced.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, I was somewhat reluctant to answer that question, because it may take quite a bit of time.

The first recommendation of the international joint commission asks for the support of public powers. In this regard, I believe the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) said, when his estimates were up for consideration, that the federal government would keep subsidizing that survey. There are also four departments of the federal government which are now contributing to the research work of the commission. Such work will be continued at a cost of several million dollars. In that way, I feel the first recommendation is implemented. The second recommendation, however, is much broader. It suggests:

> That all industrial, urban and residual waters be adequately treated and that no combined sanitary and storm sewers be allowed, etc.

The implementation of those recommendations depends mainly, on the municipalities and the provinces, I think. However, it has become obvious that in the field of pollution someone must look after the common interests and assume the responsibility for coordinating the action of the various levels of government—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

[English]

Mr. Aiken: All I asked was a simple question. Have discussions been entered into with the United States government with a view to carrying out, along with the province of Ontario these recommendations? I know there are a lot of problems, but we have to make a beginning. Have the discussions started?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): As I have indicated, in so far as action by the two governments is concerned, they have joined together in a request resulting in the interim study which has set forth certain recommendations. Now each government will consider those recommendations. The federal government's position has been stated by my colleague. The position of the United States government will be taken by it, as will the position of the province of Ontario, the municipalities in that province and the municipalities in the state of Michigan.

Mr. Nielsen: Have they started discussions?

ONTARIO—ACQUISITION OF LAND FOR CONSERVATION PROJECTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, and this is further to my question of several weeks ago and the minister's affirmative reply. Has the minister or any member of his department as yet opened discussions with the Ontario Minister of Resources or any member of his department concerning the payment by the federal government of its share, namely, 37.5 per cent of the cost of land for conservation projects in the province of Ontario? I ask this question because several large conservation projects in Ontario are being held up because the present government is apparently reneging on its agreed payment for its share of these costs.

Mr. Speaker: The question is not submitted in the proper way, and I suggest for this reason it is out of order.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—REQUEST BY U.S. FOR INCREASED AID

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Will the Prime Minister say, in view of the statement made yesterday in Toronto by General Maxwell Taylor, special aide to the President in connection with matters such as Viet Nam, whether the United States has expressed a desire for, and I quote, "very tangible aid" from Canada so far as Viet Nam is concerned? Has there been any such request, and what kind of aid has been asked for by the United States?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): We have had no request from the United States government asking, to use my right hon. friend's words, "more tangible aid". We have had discussions with the United States regarding the increase in our economic assistance in Viet Nam.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Diefenbaker: Will the Prime Minister say what would be the nature of the additional economic assistance that is being requested?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The Prime Minister suggests that I might reply to this part of the question. The total available aid to Viet Nam under our external aid appropriations in 1965-66 is about a million and a half dollars. This represents an increase of half a million over the situation a year ago. We have been endeavouring to give further medical assistance. We have a plan already prepared with the assistance of Dr. Gingras of the Rehabilitation Institute in Montreal—he was in the city yesterday on his return from Saigon—and we are prepared to send a medical team just as soon as the facilities we have requested can be put at our disposal by the government of South Viet Nam.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What size of team?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It could be a team of three doctors and some 15 other personnel. This is a project which all the parties concerned, having discussed this matter, agreed would be a desirable Canadian contribution. In addition, there is the offer of the Canadian government, made by the Prime Minister, to assist further on the Mekong river project and the general scheme of social reconstruction and rehabilitation mentioned by the President of the United States a few months ago.

[Later]

Mr. J. A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): In view of the fact that we may find ourselves more deeply involved in Viet Nam, will the Prime Minister consider the possibility of sending a delegation from this house to study the situation thoroughly on the spot and then report to the house?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is a very interesting suggestion and perhaps the Prime Minister will take it into consideration. The hon. member should place the question on the order paper.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

CONSIDERATION OF RESTRICTIONS ON USE OF PESTICIDES AND HERBICIDES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. William Dean Howe (Hamilton South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare in respect of a statement in today's Globe and Mail attributed to an official of his department. In view of the increasingly obvious dangers to humans and livestock from the use of pesticides and herbicides, is the minister considering immediate action to restrict the use of these chemicals?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): As I pointed out in a reply to an earlier question, the research is continuing with regard to this problem. The department is taking the usual action in controlling the residue that may be found in food and other materials for human consumption. This work of the department is going along in the normal, effective way.

Mr. Howe (Hamilton South): May I ask a supplementary question. Is there any thought of abandoning the use of these obviously dangerous chemicals until such time as it can be determined what degree of danger they represent?

Mr. MacEachen: To my knowledge, there is no food on the market in which there is a dangerous level of any such chemical.

BANKRUPTCY

INQUIRY AS TO REPRESENTATIONS FROM LABOUR ORGANIZATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): I should like to ask the Minister of Labour if he has received any specific recommendations from labour leaders in the C.L.C. or the C.N.T.U. regarding labour's position in relation to the bankruptcy problem? If so, does the minister intend to report to the house on those recommendations?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister and other members of the government did receive a memorandum containing a great many suggestions and representations yesterday from the Canadian Labour Congress, all of which will be carefully considered. I can also inform the hon. member that the government will meet with leaders and members of the C.N.T.U. delegation later this afternoon.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): May I ask a supplementary question?

Mr. Speaker: Order. We have only a short time, and I suggest we should allow other members an opportunity to ask a question.

[Later]

[Translation]

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, may I direct to the Minister of Justice a question supplementary to the one I asked the Minister of Labour a little earlier?

Will the terms of reference of the committee on the Bankruptcy Act allow labour unions to express their views in the same manner as businessmen?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am of the opinion that there will not be any discrimination between labour unions and industries about representations that can be made later to the committee.

[English]

MUNICIPAL DEVELOPMENT LOANS ACT

INQUIRY AS TO EXTENSION OF PERIOD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): I have a short question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the minister's meeting with provincial ministers yesterday, and in view of the importance of this subject to many municipalities in the Atlantic area as well as other parts of the country, will the minister please advise the house whether he has now made a decision to extend the terms of the Municipal Development Loans Act beyond March 31?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): May I point out to the hon. member that that date was fixed by parliament, not by the government, and it would require an amendment to the legislation. After receiving representations from the provincial ministers yesterday, I am discussing this matter with my colleagues as to whether we should recommend such an amendment.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Will the minister keep in mind the promise he made to introduce this legislation early?

TRADE

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON TARIFF NEGOTIATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce who on St. Valentine's Day, I understand, met with the Canadian delegation to the so-called Kennedy round of tariff negotiations. I wonder whether the minister could give any indication to the house of the expectations that might arise from those discussions?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I would be glad to do so, Mr. Speaker, but not in a word. As time is short I suggest that perhaps we can leave this until my estimates are before the house for consideration.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

INQUIRY AS TO EXTENSION TO FARM LABOUR

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Hugh John Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Is the Prime Minister able to inform the house whether the government is considering action by which farm labour will be able to qualify for unemployment insurance benefits in the near future?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is something we hope to do during this session. When we will get to it I do not quite know.

[Translation]

HOUSING

MONTREAL—SHARING OF DEFICITS IN JOINT PROJECTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour? I gave him notice of my question.

Could the minister tell the house if the Central Housing and Mortgage Corporation has any intention of making up deficits incurred by other housing organizations, as it is doing already for the city of Montreal with regard to the Habitations Jeanne-Mance?

[English]

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the National Housing Act authorizes Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to join with provinces and municipalities in the development of housing projects and to pay deficits or losses in connection with the operation of such projects. If the housing corporations referred to by my hon. friend in his question are agencies of the province or of the municipality, then they probably would qualify for assistance; otherwise not. However, I must say that each project must be considered in the light of the circumstances of the project itself, since circumstances so frequently differ. I could not answer a general question of this kind without particulars.

Supply—Transport

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

STEPS TO OVERCOME LOSS ON SECOND CLASS MAIL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Postmaster General. In view of the Auditor General's request that parliament should give early consideration to ways and means of covering the loss sustained by the Post Office Department in the handling of second class mail, will the Postmaster General indicate what steps he has taken to bring this recommendation before parliament?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This also is a question which is of a general nature and should be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, this question has been hanging fire since 1963 and the Post Office Department has lost about $35 million as a result.

Mr. Speaker: I realize it is important but the hon. member knows that if he thinks it is that urgent he can always discuss it on the adjournment debate.

Mr. Nielsen: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps the question could be asked tomorrow by the hon. member for Yukon. The time allowed for questions this day has now expired.

SUPPLY

House in committee of supply, Mr. Rinfret in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

1. Departmental administration, $4,862,900.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall vote No. 1 carry?

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, in the discussions which have taken place on the first item of the estimates of the Department of Transport many members who represent western ridings have put before the minister what I think are very legitimate complaints in connection with the shortage of box cars at various points throughout the western provinces. So far no satisfaction has been given these members. No assurance has been given to alleviate the anxiety in the minds of the farmers who have not had the same opportunity to ship their grain as others owing to the lack of box cars at certain points.

[Mr. Nicholson.]

I think that before we proceed to pass the first item it would be advisable if the minister would now give the committee a clear and concise statement as to what he intends to do to alleviate the situation, not in the future but immediately.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I am having a little difficulty in hearing the hon. member. Would hon. members please refrain from holding conversations which are too loud so that we can listen to the hon. member for Ontario. Conversations carried on in an undertone will be permitted.

Mr. Starr: I ask that something be done not in the future but immediately so that the fears in the minds of hon. members as well as those they represent may be allayed. I invite the minister now to give a firm commitment that he will take some action with regard to this serious situation which will be satisfactory.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I am sure the hon. member will not object if I draw attention to the fact that he has asked me to speak on this occasion.

Mr. Crouse: Briefly.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, maybe I went too far. If that is the conclusion which he drew from my remarks, may I say it was not intended that the minister should now make his 38th speech. What we want is a clearcut and concise statement.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, "a rose by any other name". I hope the Minister of Finance will listen very carefully to what I am going to say because I am going to try to give my understanding of the position which was taken by the Wheat Board at the beginning of the crop year with respect to the movement of grain.

My understanding was that in order to make sure that we took the fullest possible advantage of the St. Lawrence Seaway and the lakes while they were open to navigation the Wheat Board itself agreed that rather than try to keep the quotas balanced among various points in western Canada, it would move wheat of the grade and dryness required from places where it could be got most readily so as to make sure that the maximum amount of wheat went down through the lakes during that period of time.

I also understand that more recently, in order to try to speed up the movement through Vancouver, the same kind of consideration has to some degree prevailed. As I understand it, now that the movement to Vancouver has over the last week or two been pretty well up to the capacity of the port to handle such movement, every effort is being made and the railways are being urged by the Wheat Board and by the government to do everything they can consistent with moving the grain. I think we will all agree that that is the most important thing of all. Consistent with that aim, every possible effort is being made to put the cars where they are needed to raise the quotas at the points where the quotas are low. As I understand it, that at any rate is what the wheat board and the government want done, as long as it does not interfere with the over-all movement of grain to meet the contracts, which I am sure all farmers would agree should be the first of all objectives. If I have not stated the position correctly perhaps the committee would allow the Minister of Finance, who really understands this better than I, do to supplement what I have said.

Because a number of hon. members suggested that one of the difficulties and one of the reasons for the shortage of box cars was the number of Canadian box cars in the United States, I think I should put on the record a table showing the actual position which could perhaps conveniently be printed in Hansard. This table is from the Railway Association of Canada and shows from January 1, 1962 until January 1, 1966 the number of Canadian box cars on U.S. lines at the beginning of each quarter. I think it would be helpful information for hon. members to have. For example, I can say that on January 1, 1962 there were 16,000 box cars and on January 1, 1966 there were 18,600 involved. It is the opinion of those I have consulted about this matter that though this is 2,500 cars more or a little better in 1966 than in 1962, it about reflects the growth in our exports and does not indicate any inordinate rise in the number of Canadian cars in the United States. I am told that because the rolling stock on our railways is perhaps a little more modern than that employed on a good many United States railways, the United States Railways, try to keep Canadian cars whenever they can. However, the Canadian railways are doing their best to get them back. They are being urged by the government to get them back as quickly as possible.

The Deputy Chairman: Do the members of the committee consent to this document being tabled by the hon. minister and being printed as part of his speech in Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

*Data refers to reports from eight major Canadian railways. Source: The Railway Association of Canada.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, the minister has told us that the government is doing its best to equalize the quotas and get the wheat moved to the terminals. The minister has not referred to the appalling shortage of box cars during the past four or five months when they were so badly needed. The question I asked the other day, which was answered in the house on February 2, gives information as to the targets set by the Wheat Board and the box cars that were available in the period from August 1 to January 20.

We find that the Canadian Wheat Board target during that period for the Canadian Pacific was 33,706 box cars. The number loaded was only 25,218. That represents a shortage of 8,488 in the period from August 1 to January 20.

For Canadian National Railways the target set by the Wheat Board was 28,987 box cars and the number of cars loaded in this period was only 22,284, which means that Canadian National Railways were short by 6,703 box cars. This makes a total target of 62,693 box cars of which only 47,502 were loaded. This means that the spread between the targets set by the Wheat Board and the number of box cars loaded was 15,191 or a very substantial gap of 30 per cent. Mr. Chairman, that is a very serious gap indeed. I think that the Minister of Transport has some responsibility to tell the members of the committee and particularly to tell the farmers of the prairie provinces why there was this most appalling shortage. The Wheat Board either set a target which was unrealistic when they set a target of 62,693 box cars or the railways were negligent and derelict in the discharge of their duties when they were able to load only 47,502 cars out of the 62,693 target that had been set by the Wheat Board. Certainly something is wrong. I could give the minister more information if he wants it as to the volume of wheat loaded, the volume of wheat shipped and the amount of wheat in transit. It all shows that we are far behind the targets which have been set.

I hope that the minister can give some explanation to the committee. It is not good enough to tell members of the committee now that the government is going to do its best and that the railways are doing everything they can do to cope with the situation. The bald fact is that the number of box cars loaded was about 30 per cent short of the target set. I think some explanation is due to the committee why there was this serious discrepancy.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, perhaps the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam would allow the Minister of Finance to speak about this matter since the arrangements were made by the Wheat Board with him in his former ministerial capacity. Perhaps my hon. friend would let the Minister of Finance deal with the question rather than my doing so. I am sure that the Minister of Finance is much better informed than I am on this matter.

Mr. Douglas: I should be very happy if the Minister of Finance would reply.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the Minister of Finance to tell the members of this committee what is being done by the government to urge the Canadian Pacific to equalize these quotas? We accept the position which was taken by the Wheat Board and by the government that the railways should move as much grain as possible into an export position before the navigation season closed on the Great Lakes. The Minister of Finance well knows that the Canadian Wheat Board does not have any authority under Canadian law to direct the railways to place cars at any particular shipping point. The Wheat Board has some authority respecting the distribution of cars to the various elevators at a shipping point but it does not have any authority to direct the railways to place X number of cars at this or that point or for that matter at any shipping point. Some areas, particularly in southern Alberta, have the lowest quotas of any part of Canada. Yet southern Alberta must be one of the closest areas to Vancouver and therefore the movement should have increased more rapidly than in any other part of Canada since navigation closed on the Great Lakes. However, we find that most of the very low delivery quotas at shipping points are still in southern Alberta.

I should like to ask the Minister of Finance if any action is being taken by the government directly through his office or through the office of the Minister of Transport or through the Board of Transport Commissioners, who have some authority in this respect, to equalize the quotas. I realize that now there is no real urgency for getting more grain into lakehead position.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, before the minister replies to the questions asked of him may I say a word about what has been raised. We are anxious about the box car question. I accept the statement of the Minister of Transport with regard to the Wheat Board and I am sure that most farmers accept it too. The farmers well know and understand the Wheat Board's difficulties in trying to meet shipping orders last fall. However, during December, 1965, and January, 1966, we have seen a continuous deterioration of shipments at prairie points.

• (3:40 p.m.)

It is all very well to say that the Wheat Board is trying to equalize quotas now and is doing everything it can. We want to know what the government is doing to urge and encourage the C.P.R. to meet its commitments to the people. As the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam has pointed out, the railroads are far behind in the job and grain movement generally has been slow. The Minister of Finance said the other day that grain has not been moving slowly in western Canada. This is not a fact. It has been moving very slowly, particularly from C.P.R. points. The Wheat Board cannot equalize quotas today without the full co-operation of the C.P.R. I ask the minister whether the government has obtained a commitment from the C.P.R. that it will make every effort from now on to help the Wheat Board to equalize these quotas and move grain more rapidly.

Mr. Watson (Assiniboia): There is one point which I should like the minister to clarify. He mentioned there were 1,600 box cars in the United States in 1962.

Mr. Pickersgill: Sixteen thousand.

Mr. Watson (Assiniboia): Pardon me, sixteen thousand. He also said there were 18,000 in 1966.

Mr. Pickersgill: It was 18,600, I think.

Mr. Watson (Assiniboia): Then the hon. gentleman said this increase was in about the same proportion as the increase in our exports to the United States. Can the minister tell us whether the railway companies have increased their rolling stock in Canada in the same proportion in the last four years?

Mr. Pickersgill: I doubt it. I think that is one of the difficulties. I think they should have been increasing their rolling stock more rapidly.

Mr. Sharp: I listened very carefully to my colleague, the Minister of Transport, explaining the situation with respect to the movement of grain in western Canada and I have no suggestions to make to him. I agree entirely with what he said. I should, however, like to supplement his observations by answering some of the specific questions which were put to me and to my colleague about the current movement of grain and its relation to the targets to which the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam referred, targets which had been mentioned by either the Minister of Transport or myself in a reply to a written question. These targets were fixed by the Wheat Board, not in agreement with the railways—

Mr. Douglas: In consultation with them?

Mr. Sharp: No. The railways were aware of them but they did not agree to them. The commitment which the railways made was a general commitment made at the time the government and the Wheat Board were negotiating with the Soviet Union for the very large contract entered into last fall. At that time we had to estimate how much grain we could undertake to deliver to the Soviet Union within this crop year. Needless to say, the main factor involved apart from the size of the crop was the transport facilities available. So we called Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Pacific Railway into consultation—

Mr. Diefenbaker: On what date was that?

Mr. Sharp: It was given in the house some time ago. It was in September of 1965. No, I am sorry, it was in August, 1965. We said to the railway companies: The Soviet Union would like to enter into a contract for the delivery of five million tons of wheat and wheat flour during this crop year. Do you think we would be safe in accepting a contract of this magnitude? Do we have the transportation facilities available?

It will be recalled that in the crop year 1963-64 the railways had moved a total quantity of 595 million bushels of wheat and wheat flour. We had concluded that if we were to fulfil the contract which the Russians were offering to enter into with us and fulfil the other contracts we had on the books or those which were in contemplation from our regular customers, we should need to move some 600 million bushels, approximately the same amount as in 1963-64. The railways replied that they thought they could move this quantity of grain provided there was a good break in the weather and that there was a rapid unloading of cars so that they could be used for further movement. The railways also pointed out to us that the problem this year would be much more difficult than it had been in the crop year 1963-64 because in 1963, when we entered into the first big contract with Russia, Canada was not as prosperous as it was in the fall of 1965. They said they had an arithmetical measurement of the change which had taken place during the interval and that loadings of commodities other than wheat had increased by ten per cent.

In the light of all these factors the railways said: We are prepared to accept this undertaking to move our respective shares of this 600 million bushel quantity. But make no mistake about it, this will be an extremely difficult job. It will mean we shall have to move grain from the prairies from the closest points grain which is ready for shipment and for which there is an immediate market. We cannot be held down by a requirement to equalize quotas throughout the area. This will be a monumental task; we advise you to accept the contract. We will do our part.

That is the extent of the undertaking given by the railway companies. I think it is fair to say, and the Minister of Transport agrees, that the railways still believe they will be able to fulfil their undertaking. Indeed, I was gratified to note that by February 2 exports of wheat alone had amounted to 302 million bushels. There may have been one occasion in 1963-64 when we exported as much wheat in a comparable period but the figure I have given can only have been exceeded once. So as far as exports are concerned, a tremendous effort has been made. Extremely large quantities of wheat have been moved out of Canada to fulfil the contracts into which we have entered.

On the prairies there has been great inequality of quotas. I warned the house that this would be the case. The Wheat Board warned the farmers that this would be so. Had it not been for this great inequality of quotas we would not be as far ahead as we are today in the movement of grain. It would have been impossible to have done as much as has been done had there been the customary adherence to equalization.

Mr. McIntosh: Explain.

Mr. Sharp: I say this particularly to the hon. member for Medicine Hat. I do not need to urge or advise the Wheat Board to try to equalize quotas before the end of the year. The board considers this as part of its general mandate. It is very much in the board's own interest that there should be as great an equality as possible. After all, the board markets wheat on behalf of the farmers. This is its sole responsibility.

• (3:50 p.m.)

The hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek accused me the other day of having directed the Wheat Board to fix the quotas to the advantage of a prospective member of the house who did not win a seat. I denied this and I deny it now. Never at any time did I ever direct the Wheat Board as to the level of quotas at any point and I never intend to. I hope the hon. gentleman will apologize for attacking the Wheat Board and casting a reflection on their integrity.

Mr. McIntosh: First of all, Mr. Chairman, I am not apologizing either to the Wheat Board or to the minister for sticking up for the farmers I represent. The minister said a few moments ago that he did not direct the Wheat Board in regard to where these quotas should be open. May I tell him that I happen to know that at one point in the constituency of Assiniboia prior to the election of November 8—he can check this instance but it is generally true all over the constituency—one elevator shipped 104 cars to June 23, 1964, and 103 cars in the new crop year up to December 18, 1965, which was only one car less in the first five months of the new crop year than in all of the previous year.

Also, from September 8, the date of the writ, to November 8 the farmers in that constituency were given an extra three bushels on their quotas, which brought them up to 4 or 5 bushels, while farmers in the rest of the province of Saskatchewan had only 1 or 2 bushel quotas. Can the minister explain that?

Mr. Sharp: I certainly cannot explain it because this is the first time I have heard these facts.

Mr. McIntosh: But you are the minister. You know them now.

Mr. Sharp: The best evidence I can provide the committee is that I did not know this was the situation. The hon. gentleman seems to know far more about it than I do, but I deny that at any time I ever directed the Wheat Board as to what the level of quotas should be at any point. Furthermore, I do not know why the hon. member does not accept the denial of the Chairman of the Wheat Board who said he has never accepted such advice from me or any of my predecessors, including the minister of agriculture in the government which the hon. member supported.

Mr. McIntosh: I will accept the minister's denial but it is very coincidental. All we want is an explanation.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is that where Argue lives?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I can ask the Wheat Board why they fixed these quotas but it had nothing to do with the election that took place on November 8. I can assure the hon. member of that. May I conclude these remarks? I am sorry I strayed into the territory of the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Would the minister permit another question? In the light of this agreement and in the light of the difficulty last fall in grain movement generally, after the 1964-65 wheat pool is closed will the minister see to it that the annual report of the Wheat Board is submitted to the agricultural committee, as it used to be in the past?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, I will be very happy to see that the report is preferred to the agricultural committee. I know that when the chairman of the board comes here he will deny the allegation of the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek.

Mr. McIntosh: He can deny it but I want an explanation.

Mr. Sharp: He will deny it. He has publicly denied it, and if he did not deny it I would demand that he would deny it—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Sharp: —because I have never at any time given any—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): What the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek wants is an explanation. This is all he said. If the Wheat Board officials appear before the agricultural committee that explanation can be given. This is all we are seeking.

Mr. Sharp: This is not what the hon. gentleman said. He accused me of having directed the Wheat Board to increase the quotas in Assiniboia to help Mr. Argue win the election. I deny that and so does the chairman of the Wheat Board.

Mr. McIntosh: I said it appeared to me. I did not accuse you. You are the one accusing yourself. You said you would demand that the Wheat Board deny this. You are going to make one demand. Surely you can make two.

Mr. Sharp: The only demand I will make on the Wheat Board is the one that parliament has laid upon them, to handle Canadian grain in the best interests of the western farmers and of farmers in all parts of this country. That is the responsibility that parliament has laid upon them, not I. I have no authority to direct them to do anything else. May I just conclude these remarks—

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Rosthern wishes to ask a question.

Mr. Sharp: I would like to finish my comments and then I would be very happy to answer any further questions.

As to the future and whether these quotas can be equalized I want to be perfectly frank and forthright with the committee. If in the judgment of the Wheat Board itself it is necessary that there should be some disparity in the level of quotas by the end of this year in order to move to market the maximum quantities of grain that can be moved, I hope that all hon. members will support the Wheat Board in their endeavours to sell as much Canadian grain as possible. I hope they will never be criticized for their endeavours to find markets for our grain. The Wheat Board must be given some opportunity to exercise their judgment in these matters and I hope their efforts will be supported by all parties.

Mr. Nasserden: The question I should like to ask the minister is, why did the government and he as the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board delay meeting the railways from August 13 until September 25 in regard to this important matter? The Canadian Wheat Board met the railways on August 13, I believe, and it was 42, 43 or 45 days later that the minister and the Minister of Transport met the railways in Winnipeg as a follow-up to that.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, we met with the railway companies before we signed the contract with the Russians, at which time the railways undertook to move the quantities of grain we felt were necessary to fulfil the contract. The Minister of Transport and I met the railway companies in Winnipeg on September 25 and as a result of that meeting I think there was a considerable improvement in the movement of grain to Fort William.

The Deputy Chairman: Does the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam want to ask a question?

Mr. Douglas: I do not want to ask a question. I want to make some comments.

Mr. Pickersgill: I believe the Minister of Finance has to go somewhere else, so if there was anyone who wanted to direct a specific question to him that I might not be able to answer perhaps there could be agreement to do that.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I have a specific question.

Mr. Douglas: The remarks I wish to make I want to direct to the Minister of Finance and if he has to leave I should like to do so at this time. I should like to deal with two matters briefly.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. We are at a period when questions are being asked of the Minister of Finance. The hon. member for Acadia wishes to ask a question and I would recognize him now.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It will just take a minute.

Mr. Douglas: I want to ask the minister a question. I should like—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I recognize the hon. member for Acadia before the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): My question, Mr. Chairman, is with regard to the statement originally made by the Minister of Transport and enlarged on by the Minister of Finance with respect to the equalizing of quotas. Has the government now got a commitment from the C.P.R. that every effort will be made by it to catch up with the C.N.R. with regard to the delivery points that are on C.P.R. lines? In other words, have they now reached an understanding with the C.P.R. and is the railway prepared to work for the general good of Canada and western Canada particularly?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, from the outset the C.N.R. and the C.P.R. gave the same undertaking to move the quantities of grain we had undertaken to deliver to our foreign customers. That was the nature of their undertaking and in pursuance of that undertaking the C.P.R. has responsibility mainly at points on their lines. On several occasions we have drawn to their attention not only that it has a responsibility to keep pace with the movement of grain from C.N.R. points but that in fact, and this is an important point, a higher proportion of the remaining deliverable grain is on C.P.R. lines rather than on C.N.R. lines. I can assure the hon. member we have made these representations very strongly to the C.P.R. and we are hopeful—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): What has been their reply?

Mr. Sharp: They have said they understand the situation and will do their utmost to meet their commitments.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. Douglas: There are two points about which I want to ask the minister. The first has to do with his statement that the targets which were set by the Canadian Wheat Board were not set in consultation with the railways and that the railways did not agree to them. It seems to me a most alarming statement to come from the minister that the two ministers concerned, the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Transport, who knew that a very large volume of wheat had to be moved, would have consultations with the railroads and the Wheat Board, which knew how the wheat could best be moved, and would set a target to which apparently the railroads did not accede. I should like to ask the minister whether any steps were taken to persuade the railways that the movement of this wheat was of vital importance to the Canadian economy or whether the railways were apparently allowed to do whatever they chose in meeting only 75 per cent of the target. That is all they met between August 1 and January 20. Of 62,000 cars they loaded 47,000 cars. That is only 75 per cent of the target, which is not very good. I am surprised that this matter should have been handled in such a lackadaisical manner. I would have thought that if the Wheat Board had set targets which it considered to be realistic and obtainable, it would have been the responsibility of the government to see that the railroads came reasonably close to those targets.

I want to point out that the effect of this on Saskatchewan loadings, irrespective of what the Wheat Board and the minister say will be moved, is that in the crop year 1963-64 from August 1 to January 26, 176 million bushels were sold at the elevator and for the present crop year from August 1 to January 26 only 153 million bushels have been sold. Comparing that with the crop year of two years ago, elevator loadings are down 23 million bushels. We are not doing as well as we did two years ago. It seems to me that there has been a complete breakdown in communications at some point and that the government has not been able to get the railways seized of the necessity of meeting the targets set by the Wheat Board. Assuming that the targets set by the Wheat Board were realistic and reasonable, and I think they were, I am at a loss to understand why the government should have been so willy-nilly in allowing the railroads to fall 15,000 box cars short of the objective.

I notice that in Saskatchewan on January 29, 1964 there were 21 million bushels of wheat in transit whereas on January 26, 1966 there were only 9 million bushels. That represents a very serious difference.

The other matter I wish to refer to is the inequity of quotas. Saskatchewan has been particularly hard hit by this inequity.

Mr. Gundlock: Alberta has been hard hit as well.

Mr. Douglas: Alberta has also been hard hit but in Saskatchewan there are 257 points which have only a one, two or three bushel quota. There are 240 more points which have a one, two or three bushel quota than last year. There are more delivery points this year with a four bushel quota but there are 100 fewer with a five bushel quota. There are 350 fewer points with a six bushel quota.

I am disturbed by the statement just made by the minister to the effect that this inequity may continue throughout the crop year. I wrote down what the minister said and it was to the effect that if necessary there may have to be some areas of disparity in respect of quotas if we are to move the maximum amount of wheat to market.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): He has just left the door open in case of mistakes.

Mr. Douglas: The minister hopes the house and the farmers will support the Wheat Board in using every possible method to get the wheat to market. I understand that both the minister and the Wheat Board desire to get the wheat to market. That is certainly necessary. But I want to ask the minister this question. If at the end of the crop year there is a great disparity between some shipping points and others, because of the Wheat Board's desire to get wheat shipped, do the Wheat Board and the minister propose to do something for the farmers at points where the quotas are low?

It will not be of much consolation to the farmers with low quotas to know that we have shipped 600 million bushels and it will not be of much consolation to them to know that their neighbours 50 miles away have shipped on an eight bushel quota when they are still on a three or four bushel quota. Is there going to be some carryover or some equalization? What does the Wheat Board propose to do if at the end of the crop year this disparity between different shipping points reaches the point where some farmers are going to suffer hardship in order that other farmers can sell a larger amount of grain? The whole principle of the Wheat Board has been equalization. Is there going to be any type of equalization in the matter of shipment? I am sure the minister readily appreciates the fact that if the quotas at the end of the crop year at some points on the prairies are extremely low the farmers there will feel aggrieved. No matter how often the Wheat Board argues that it was necessary to favour some districts over others in order to ship wheat, this is not going to put money in the pockets of the farmers who have not been able to deliver their wheat and will not be able to deliver it after the crop year closes.

In view of the minister's statement today I am afraid there will be some alarm in western Canada. I hope the minister will give some assurance to this committee that he and the Wheat Board will apply themselves to this problem in an effort to work out some method of compensating farmers who are in areas where the quota is low at the end of the crop year.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, a few moments ago the minister said that following the meeting in Winnipeg on September 25 everything improved. Did I understand him correctly in that regard?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, after the meeting, the situation improved at Fort William.

Mr. Nasserden: Why then did the Wheat Board find it necessary on November 10 to complain about deliveries from C.P.R. points?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, before the minister replies I should like to ask another question for clarification. I think he misunderstood what I asked him a few moments ago. I certainly do not wish the minister to exercise any undue influence on the operations of the Canadian Wheat Board involving the equalization of quotas. I agree completely that the Wheat Board is anxious, as it has shown in the past, to equalize the quotas in so far as that is possible, taking into account the kind of grain that is available and the immediate market for that grain. However, I should like the minister to take into consideration the fact that there have been shipping orders placed by the Canadian Wheat Board at a number of shipping points at which there are low quotas but the railways, particularly the C.P.R., have not provided box cars for 60 to 90 days. It is my information that while the Canadian Wheat Board can place shipping orders it has no authority whatever to require the C.P.R. or any other railway to place box cars at those shipping points.

I am sure that the wishes and efforts of the Canadian Wheat Board to do something about equalization have been genuine and sincere but it has not had the kind of co-operation it needs from the railroads in order to achieve this. It seems to me that if the C.P.R. is going to continue week after week and month after month leaving certain shipping points far below others in respect of box car supply when there is no apparent reason why it should, then no matter how sincere the intent and desire of the Canadian Wheat Board are to equalize these quotas it is going to be completely frustrated by the activities of the railway companies.

I should like to ask the minister this question again and I hope he completely understands its intent. Is there something that the government can do either in consultation with the C.P.R. or in some other way to encourage them and demand, if that is possible, that the railways do in fact set off cars at the shipping points where the Canadian Wheat Board has placed shipping orders? I know that several point in southern Alberta have had shipping orders from the Canadian Wheat Board for more than two months and have not been able to get the C.P.R. dispatchers or whoever directs them to place cars there so they may comply with what appears to be the desire of the Wheat Board to ship grain from these points.

The minister knows very well that the Wheat Board raises the quota in direct relation to the space that is available at any shipping point. As a matter of fact, they wait until there is space. But the only way you get space is if you have cars to move the grain and make space available. Therefore I do not think the failure in attempting to equalize these quotas rests either on the minister or the Canadian Wheat Board. I think it lies with Canadian Pacific Railway in the area I am talking about. I wonder whether the minister could give us some indication that the government is going to take an active interest in seeing that these very low shipping points will receive additional consideration from the C.P.R. and will receive it soon.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, there is just one matter I should like to bring before the committee. It is generally agreed there is a flagrant disregard of the rights of producers in being denied the opportunity to sell and market their wheat. This delay continued for several months. Apparently the situation is improving and it has improved following the widespread criticism advanced by members in this house who from personal experience are acquainted with and know exactly what has taken place in western Canada. If this debate has done nothing else, it has enabled the people of western Canada and Canadians as a whole to know something of this problem and of the injustice that has been done.

I do not often speak of my own area but the quotas there were very low, almost infinitesimal, until quite recently. In that part of Saskatchewan we are close to the Hudson Bay route which has not been used as it should have been. It should have been used to a far greater extent. That fact has been argued over and over again by various members, including particularly the hon. member for Churchill.

All of us want to see action. When the Minister of Agriculture went west he went, he saw and he returned and condemned the failure of one or the other railway company because of inaction, because of their failure to act reasonably and responsibly. I endeavoured to make a suggestion in September or early October, I think it was. It was one that I felt was constructive and will have to be followed sooner or later by this government.

The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam has placed the distressing news before this committee that, bad as things have been, the expectation for the future does not hold out very sanguine hopes for those who have wheat to market. Indeed, there has been no suggestion that when the new crop year comes along farmers who have suffered by having low quotas are going to be preferred and will receive an increase in quotas. Apparently they are just going to be left out.

I asked the question and I am repeating it now: What are the reasons for not appointing a traffic controller?

Mr. Pickersgill: I can answer that question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, if the minister would just—

Mr. Pickersgill: The right hon. gentleman asked a question and I want to answer it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: A moment ago I thought the minister did not possess the ability to answer but on this subject he is just like a jack-in-a-box. I ask a question and up he jumps with the answer.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, he is back in the box.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I had not thought of the appropriate box, Mr. Chairman, but the minister has actually applied to himself something that I did not have in mind at all. He just bounced up. The appointment of a traffic controller was something we did during our period in office and it got results.

Mr. Sharp: You never did.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Now we have agreement between at least two ministers. The Minister of Finance has said it did not get results. Well, the western farmers said it did; that is all I have to say.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Sharp: You had no authority.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I beg your pardon?

Mr. Sharp: You had no authority.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is a very strange thing, Mr. Chairman, that this suggestion should receive such an instantaneous reaction from both ministers. It must be that they have in their hearts the thought that if they had done so things would have been better, but the fact that the suggestion came from someone in the opposition may have led them to believe that its acceptance would not have been politically appropriate. I should like to hear the answer to my question.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to give it to you.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I shall wait with expectation, Mr. Chairman, and I am glad that on this subject we are going to receive a clear and definite answer. My question is: Why was the appointment not made? Why even at this stage has action not been taken? Certainly there is no liaison in this respect. Forty five days elapsed between the time the Russian contract was under way and a meeting of ministers took place. What were they doing during that time? Certainly the former minister of trade and commerce was making forays into the west. They were not too successful, as it turned out, but he made forays out there. The farmers were led to believe that all was going to be well. Over and over again in the months of September and October the answer was, "Things are going to be well". They did not. The Minister of Agriculture went out west and he had eyes that saw what his fellow ministers could not see.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): And what the Minister of Finance will never see.

Mr. Diefenbaker: His criticism exactly duplicated what we had said over and over again. I must say that the next time he comes out there he will be welcomed. I think a trip out there at this time would be beneficial, the minister could once more apply something of his new, fresh attitude to meeting this problem so that our farmers in so many areas will not find themselves discriminated against whether intentionally or not.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I should like to reply to the one specific point raised by the right hon. gentleman. Whether it would be wise to appoint a controller is a separate question. However, the government of the right hon. gentleman allowed the legislation to expire which authorizes the government to appoint such a controller and the government therefore had no power under the laws of Canada to make such an appointment. That is why the matter could not be considered unless the law was changed.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. Diefenbaker: Isn't that interesting? They rushed into an election when they should have been bringing legislation before the house to meet this problem. Here we were in the month of July or August when it first became known that there was not available the necessary motive power and instead of calling parliament to meet this serious situation they rushed into an election in order to get a majority. I thank my hon. friend.

Mr. Pickersgill: The right hon. gentleman certainly shifted gears fast.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I thank my hon. friend for again rising to the bait.

Mr. Howard: I do not want to interrupt the discussion of this vitally important matter. I wanted to get the floor on another matter entirely but I will gladly desist if there are others who want to discuss the question of box cars and grain shipment.

The Chairman: Is the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek rising to discuss the same topic?

Mr. McIntosh: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I think that as a result of the discussion this afternoon a lot of confusion has been created with regard to the responsibility of the Wheat Board and its relationship to the producers. I suggest that the minister's remarks have added to the confusion. He said he gave no orders to the Wheat Board and a few minutes later he said he would demand that the chairman of the Wheat Board do such and such. I then stated that if he could demand once he could demand a second time. I want to make sure that is on the record because it indicates to me and the people I represent how some things have happened.

I should like to say also that the dispute arose between the minister and me because of a statement I made. I said that the reason the Wheat Board is now in the hands of the Minister of Finance is political expediency by the Liberal Party. I have information to back that up and I cited some of it a few minutes ago. I referred to what happened in the constituency of Assiniboia which is adjacent to mine. I could not answer the questions of my farmers until I found out what had happened in Assiniboia.

It is clear to me what happened. Somebody gave somebody orders because the Liberals wanted to win this one constituency on the prairies. This constituency was given special consideration. I ask the minister to explain to the house why responsibility for the Wheat Board has not been left with the department which is supposed to have it?

Mr. Pickersgill: Now, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. McIntosh: Just a minute—

Mr. Pickersgill: I am rising on a point of order. I have no objection to a discussion which will throw any light on the grave problem of getting the wheat moved by the railways. I thought the Minister of Finance was able to answer some of these questions better than I was so I was happy to have him do it. I think we are going beyond that situation when the hon. member talks about which minister should be responsible for the Wheat Board. This is not a matter that can be settled by me. It is not a matter that can be settled by my hon. friend, the Minister of Finance. This is a matter for the Prime Minister. If the hon. gentleman would wait until the Prime Minister's estimates are before us and put the question to the person who can answer it in the house, I think that would be the time to do it.

Mr. McIntosh: I suggest that is not a point of order at all. The point I am trying to raise is the basis of the whole argument. We have a Minister of Agriculture who has not said a word on this issue. We should have the Minister of Trade and Commerce here but he is not here. We have the Minister of Finance who is supposed to be speaking in this house for the Wheat Board. We have the Minister of Transport who gets up and says that he has nothing to do with it. The whole question of moving our grain certainly must be a problem that concerns the minister's department. If the question our leader asked a few minutes ago were answered, I think that would help solve the problem.

I said there was confusion so far as the producers were concerned. There is certainly more confusion in the house now because of the way the government has handled this question. We do not even know which minister is to answer these questions. If one minister gets stuck the other minister gets up to answer. No one can be pinned down. If we cannot pin down anyone we cannot solve the problem. I should like the Minister of Finance to get up and say why the Wheat Board should be under his department.

Mr. Sharp: I have no intention of explaining this situation because I think the question is quite irrelevant. May I, as the minister responsible for the Wheat Board, deal with some of the points that were raised and particularly those raised by the Leader of the Opposition.

In the remarks I make in my previous intervention I said that a tremendous task lay ahead for the Wheat Board, the railway companies and all our handling facilities to move the largest quantity of wheat ever moved in Canadian history. I suggest to my right hon. friend that he never faced a situation like that. By comparison the achievements of his administration were miniscule.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Sharp: I think of the problem with which my right hon. friend was faced in moving grain. He was so pleased when he got exports up to 358 million bushels. In 1963-64 the Canadian Wheat Board and the Canadian railways moved into export position 595 million bushels. This year our target is 600 million bushels. If my right hon. friend thinks it is not difficult to move 595 million bushels or 600 million bushels, then I feel he does not understand the situation that faces this country in connection with the movement of grain He is thinking back to those years when he was handling such a small volume. He was so proud of handling 358 million bushels. This was the amount moved by my right hon. friend's administration, and that is all. He never faced a problem like this. He was never able to put the Wheat Board or the railway companies of this country to the test.

Moreover, one of the reasons we are faced with this problem today is that we have been remarkably successful in increasing the prosperity of this country. When I think of the situation that we met when we took office in 1963, when I think of the extent of unemployment, when I think of the low level of business, I am reminded that it was comparatively easy in that first year. In 1963-64, when we entered into these great contracts, we set our target for wheat exports at 550 million bushels, that was our first target. The railways had no difficulty in moving it because we had just come from a period of recession. This was the reason the government of my right hon. friend was thrown out of office, because of their failure to deal with the domestic problems of this country. This was the situation we faced.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Oh, come off it.

Mr. Sharp: When we took office we did not find it so difficult. We started with a target of 550 million bushels and we actually sold 595 million bushels. My hon. friend forgets about these things. He has a very convenient memory.

May I say he has also, as is usual on these occasions, distorted the issues in order to serve his own purposes. I have seen him do it on so many occasions. However, I thought this was a real example of the great skill of the right hon. gentleman. He stood up here and said I had suggested certain things. I can see him trying to make the headlines in western Canada by trying to create a misleading impression, with that skill which he exhibits to such an extraordinary degree in this house. He took my very simple statement, which I repeat, that if the Wheat Board in its desire to move maximum quantities of Canadian wheat into export finds at the end of the year there is still some disparity in quotas I hope it will have the understanding of the whole house. I repeat that statement.

Then, the right hon. gentleman distorts my statement and says that I predicted the situation would be worse than it is today. If that is not the greatest distortion of the very simple, and I hope sensible, statement that I made, I should like to hear a better one.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Stick around.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Sharp: Yes, I expect I will hear it from the hon. member for Acadia. We face a tremendous task, Mr. Chairman, and I only wish that I could impress upon the members of the opposition what a tremendous task it is. In the last three years Canadian farmers have grown three of the greatest crops on record. There has never been anything like this. It is a great tribute to the people of western Canada. The Wheat Board has had the task of marketing that grain and never before have they done the job as well as they have done it in these past three years.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): You are thankful they did not follow your advice at that time.

Mr. Sharp: I only wish that I had heard more words of credit from those members who sit on the other side of the house and who represent these constituencies in western Canada. They criticize the board but they never say anything about the tremendous job that has been done by the Wheat Board on behalf of western farmers. I think the Wheat Board has been doing a magnificent job this year.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Hear, hear. We agree.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, I should like to rise on a question of privilege, if the other hon. gentleman will take his seat. My question of privilege is that the distinguished minister has just stated that we have continually attacked the Canadian Wheat Board. I have never heard any attack against the Canadian Wheat Board from this side of the house.

Mr. Sharp: The hon. member heard one from the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek this afternoon.

Mr. Nasserden: What the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek was doing today was attacking the minister who has abused the power given him by the parliament of this nation.

Mr. Sharp: Well, Mr. Chairman, this is a side issue. I hope that my hon. friend from Swift Current-Maple Creek will have the decency to apologize to the chairman of the Wheat Board for suggesting that he would accept any advice from me on the question.

The Chairman: Order. I think it might be as well if the committee would listen to the minister so that we could get along with vote No. 1.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Chairman, since the minister has brought my name into the debate perhaps I might say that I said nothing against the Wheat Board.

Mr. Sharp: Well—

Mr. McIntosh: Just a moment. I objected to the minister's interfering with the Wheat Board, which I think is what has happened. Will the minister answer my question and explain why he is handling the responsibility for the Wheat Board for the government rather than the Minister of Trade and Commerce or the Minister of Agriculture? Perhaps some of this confusion will then be cleared up.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, there is a very simple answer to that question and it is this. I was asked by the Prime Minister to continue my responsibility for the Canadian Wheat Board. It may be that some other minister would handle it better but that is not for me to judge.

May I now refer to a question which was asked by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam. I do not think it is possible to answer a hypothetical question of this kind. I can assure the hon. gentleman that the Wheat

Board will do everything they can to equalize quotas by the end of this crop season. Whether they will succeed only time will tell. Certainly this will be their endeavour. I would point out to him that even in the best of circumstances, even when demand for grain was as low as it was when my right hon. friend was in office, quotas are sometimes not equalized by the end of the year. You cannot get perfect equalization of quotas. I do not think it will be possible at this time to deal with a hypothetical question as to what would happen if there were serious disparities. I hope there will not be.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I see that the Minister of Finance is smiling following his remarks. I am going to review those remarks. He spoke of distortions. No one ever spoke with the same authority as he in that regard. Let me point out that before we came into office and while the hon. gentleman had been deputy minister of trade and commerce wheat had piled up unsold. The attitude of the government was: If the people of the world want to buy Canadian wheat, let them come and get it. That was their philosophy.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Nine hundred million bushels were piled up.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is the first thing. He was then deputy minister of trade and commerce and was no doubt carrying out the policy of the government of that day which was that wheat would find its own market. That is what happened. The minister went on to talk about the amount of sales during the period when I was prime minister. We brought about a sale with Communist China.

Mr. Pascoe: They called it treason.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What did the Liberal party do at that time? They ridiculed and condemned it. The present Prime Minister said it was ridiculous. Future Senator Argue said, speaking from this side of the house—

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, the right hon. gentleman is about to say what Mr. Argue said. My recollection is that at that time Mr. Argue was leading another party. I should like the right hon. gentleman to show me where the Prime Minister said that this was ridiculous. The Liberal party supported that transaction.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I would repeat what I said. So far as Mr. Argue is concerned, he went through a period of conversion. He has now entered the promised land and hopes shortly to go to that place from whose bourn none returneth.

[Mr. Sharp.]

I know it is distressing to go back over these things but I have been asked to give some information. When we made this sale the Liberal party ridiculed it. They went across the country saying it was a one-shot sale. They criticized it, as did the administration of the United States. They said it was wrong. If it had not been for the initiative of the government of the day, and in particular that of the present hon. member for Qu'Appelle, I do not know where the Canadian farmer would have ended up as the producer of wheat in this nation.

The minister spoke today as though he had authority. It was as though he was something set apart, an oracle of Delphi. He said "I am giving you the facts". But what did he tell the western farmer a year ago last fall and in the spring? He said "Don't sow any additional wheat".

Mr. Sharp: I did not. I deny that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is what he told them.

Mr. Sharp: I never said any such thing. I deny it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, yes. No amount of distortion on the part of the hon. gentleman can possibly remove that blot from his record.

Mr. Sharp: I denied that statement publicly.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister can deny it but he said it over and over again. He said to the western farmer "Don't seed anything extra; I don't know what is going to happen". On the other side of the equation was the hon. member for Qu'Appelle. He said "Sow it and we will sell it".

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Deny that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then in June, 1965, after all the seeding was done—

Mr. Sharp: I never said that. I never made any such statement.

Mr. Diefenbaker:—this minister spoke with the authority and knowledge of the major financial streets of our nation. He advised the farmers then that they should sow additional wheat. That was in June of 1965—

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order or on a question of privilege. When I say that I deny such a statement, is it not incumbent on the Leader of the Opposition to accept my statement?

• (4:40 p.m.)

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I heard him say it. Let that be clear. The minister advised the western farmers not to sow too much because they would not be able to sell it. He said there was a danger that markets would not be available. In the month of June, 1965, after it was too late to seed along came the advice that the farmers should seed as much as possible.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I did not make that statement and I think the right hon. gentleman should accept my word. I thought that that was one of the rules of this house.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, there is no rule that one must accept a statement which one knows to be untrue when it is made. The minister cannot deny the record.

Mr. Sharp: Where is it on the record? Show us the record. Produce the record.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I will be very glad to produce that advice. There will be every opportunity to produce the advice given to western farmers. That is why the election results turned out as they did in western Canada, because of the advice given out there by the then minister of trade and commerce. The farmers saw how ridiculous was the minister's advice when first of all he said that they ought not to seed and later advised them to seed although it was too late. The advice given to them was of such a nature that they could not possibly place any reliance on the views of the minister.

Instead of trying to answer the questions raised he simply endeavours now to obscure the issue. He talks about the tremendous prosperity of Canada. What about the prosperity of the United States? Was it the government of Canada that made possible the great expansion in the United States in the last two years? When we were in office the United States was in a position identical to our own.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Following that time any changes that took place were not changes brought about by the government of Canada. Surely this government is not saying that it was responsible for the improvement in the economy of the United States.

Things have changed since then. Would the minister stress the fact that in Canada there are 359,000 unemployed? I understand that is the latest figure. I had to mention that because I want the minister, who has had something to do with statistics, to get the actual facts. He certainly would get the facts if he went out and tried to tell western farmers what they ought to do.

I think the minister should know that in the west he is regarded as a man of great energy. The people there also regard him as a man whose predictions they must ignore if they are to maintain themselves in productive agriculture. Let us go on with the rest of the argument. The minister says today that a tremendous amount of wheat is being sold. That is absolutely correct. What was condemned when we did it, namely selling to communist nations, is today accepted by the party which condemned it. All over the world there is a demand for wheat. The Minister of Finance and the Minister of Transport, who spent so much time condemning us for selling to communist nations, should realize that now they are actually making sales which otherwise they would not have made were it not for the previous Conservative government.

Mr. Pickersgill: Can I ask the right hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Certainly.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the right hon. gentleman please inform the committee which government it was that made the first sales of wheat to a communist country? Was it not the St. Laurent government?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, all I say is that that question does not divert me in any way from the fact that when we entered into the agreement to sell wheat to communist China it was ridiculed by the Liberal Party.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It was condemned. We were described as selling for cash to our friends and for credit to our enemies. That is one of the reasons that the political crop so far as the Liberal Party is concerned has turned out not as favourably as was expected or as it appeared it might in the months of June, July and August when they felt that they would be able to garner a lot of votes in western Canada. I know the farmers' hopes with respect to their crops. I have seen western farmers in the month of July look at beautiful upstanding crops which when they were threshed had nothing in the head. That is what the Liberal Party found in the field of political agriculture in westen Canada just recently.

Mr. Sharp: Also as the right hon. gentleman found in Toronto.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It just shows that the western farmers could see through the transparent attitude of the Liberal party.

We are back to the subject we spoke of earlier. I am sorry I was dragged into this digression because I do not like to be brought into fields such as this. I do suggest in view of the minister's attitude that a controller should be appointed. May I ask him now, in view of the fact that it is admitted that a controller would have done some good—otherwise the government would not have given consideration to it—will he not bring in legislation to that effect? The minister said that the government could not take such action because the legislation had been allowed to lapse. Will the government now, in order to guard against the possibility of those future events to which the minister alluded when answering, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, bring in legislation for the appointment of a controller to the end that there will be the liaison and authority necessary to meet a difficult problem? That it is a difficult problem no one will argue against.

In order to get the most effective action I ask the government to bring in legislation to assure that there will be that authority, that liaison, that communication which will place both railway companies in a position where any laggard conduct on their part will be met in a manner in keeping with the situation. That was my purpose originally in rising. I aroused the minister and I hope he is over it now. I should not have brought these things out had I not been pressed to do so. My purpose in rising was to say that the problem is great. It has been great. I admit that there has been improvement in the last few weeks and I express my appreciation for the voyage of the Minister of Agriculture through western Canada. I know he suggested that nothing would be more beneficial in giving a new impetus to the good husbandmen in western Canada and in other parts of Canada than if the government were to bring in that legislation I have referred to immediately. That it can be done immediately I am sure. I am sure also that legislation to provide for the appointment of a controller would be passed almost immediately without debate.

The Minister of Transport seems to indicate by his reaction to what I say that it might not be passed without debate. May I ask him as a passing observation not to participate 38 times in a debate because he is developing a capacity for actually talking out the passing of his own estimates, unintentionally I am sure. However, that has been the result of his intervention.

[Mr. Sharp.]

My purpose in rising is to say: Will you do what I suggest? I think that this would bring all of us together. We would have a worthwhile debate because the fact that an appointment was considered by the minister indicates how effective a controller would have been had one been in office. Let us have a controller so that we will not in the future have the fears, exemplified today by the minister, translated into events.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I think I should say right away that when I am advised by a former prime minister that a certain course of action ought to be considered it would be disrespectful if I did not say at once that I will bring this suggestion to the attention of my colleagues. The former prime minister knows that one minister alone cannot commit the government without consultation. I will bring the matter to the attention of my colleagues, and we will consider all the implications of the right hon. gentleman's suggestion.

Mr. McIntosh: May I say to the minister in respect of what he has said that if he follows that suggestion I think he will find that not all the fault is with the railway companies. I am quite sure that some of the blame falls on the elevator companies. That is particularly so in regard to non-competitive points, which seem to be on very low quotas. Adjacent points that are competitive have had higher quotas. If the minister were to follow the suggestion of the Leader of the Opposition it would eliminate some of the criticism which has been directed at him.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. Douglas: I do not wish to delay the passing of these estimates and I will make my comments very brief. I hope that when the Minister of Finance is considering the appointment of a traffic controller he will also give thought to making a statement in clarification of the comment he made today concerning what might happen in the course of the delivery of the present wheat crop. I am a little afraid his comment may cause some dismay across western Canada and I do not think this is his intention.

The minister said he could not answer my question because he could not deal with a hypothetical situation. But I would point out that the minister's own statement will lead a great many people to believe that the wide disparity which now exists will carry through to the end of the crop year. I will not go over the figures which have been mentioned earlier, but the disparity is very wide and if there is any feeling that it is likely to continue to the end of the year perhaps he should make a further statement.

Mr. Sharp: Let me say at once in reply to the hon. member that this disparity will not continue to the end of the crop year. It will grow less and less and I hope it will disappear. But it might not quite do so.

Mr. Douglas: If the minister is saying that seriously, I am satisfied, but that is not the statement he made earlier today.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, it is.

Mr. Douglas: The minister said earlier today that in order to get rid of this crop it would be necessary to ship the grain from where the maximum amount can be moved and that this may cause serious disparities.

Mr. Sharp: It might cause disparities.

Mr. Douglas: If these discrepancies are serious and extended, I hope the minister will consider making some statement before long that there will be an equalization formula applied so that farmers whose quotas are below a certain level will be allowed to carry part of their quota through to the next crop year. I suggest that the minister consider making such a statement before June 1. Otherwise there is likely to be a good deal of public agitation in areas where quotas continue to be low.

Mr. Olson: In addition to examining the possibility of appointing a traffic control officer would the minister examine the legislation which parliament has already passed to see whether something could not be done along the lines of a directive to the railway companies? I am convinced that the Wheat Board is attempting to equalize the quotas because they have sent hundreds of shipping orders to points where the quotas are low. But their efforts are frustrated unless the C.P.R. does in fact place cars there. I suggest the minister use the authority he already has in order to persuade the railways to co-operate in equalizing these quotas.

Mr. Sharp: We shall examine carefully the suggestions made by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam and by the hon. member for Medicine Hat and to the extent that it is necessary we shall take action.

Mr. Pickersgill: The Minister of Finance has been too modest to say this but on at least four or five occasions starting last September he in my presence—I do not know how many other times he may have done this—has conveyed to the railways, particularly to the Canadian Pacific Railway, in the most urgent possible tones, in the most urgent possible language, the importance of getting the wheat moved, fulfilling the contract and as far as possible moving the wheat as equitably as possible from western Canada. The minister did not tell us he had done this. But I heard him say these things to the presidents of both the railway companies on more than one occasion and to the C.P.R. more frequently than to the C.N.R.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I rise because the minister claimed he did not make certain statements. I cannot go into this matter in any detail now in the time at my disposal, but on June 11, 1965 there was a Canadian Press report from Regina in the following terms:

> Trade Minister Mitchell Sharp yesterday called on Canada's wheat farmers to produce another record crop.
> In Edmonton, provincial agriculture statistician, R. E. English, said farmers will not be able to do anything about Mr. Sharp's call because the wheat crop already is in the ground.

Then on September 24, 1963, as reported by Mr. Bob Hull, the minister said in a speech delivered at Moose Jaw to the Saskatchewan Farmer's Union.

> It will be in the interests of western producers to devote less of their land to wheat than they have in the recent past.

And on July 30 there was a report in the Globe and Mail from Edmonton under the heading "Sharp Urges Less Wheat, More Feeds". It reads in part as follows:

> Future demand for Canadian wheat can probably be supplied from a smaller acreage than the record 27,000,000 acres growing this year, Trade Minister Mitchell Sharp forecast last night.
> Mr. Sharp's remarks constituted a clear go-slow sign to prairie wheat growers, taking into account dwindling export opportunities and other factors including the decision of U.S. farmers to reject more acreage controls on wheat production.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Sharp: I only denied the statement of June, 1965. I fully accept responsibility for what the right hon. gentleman has read from my earlier speech in September, 1963. I changed my mind about that. But I did not make that statement in June, 1965. I denied it publicly. I am sorry the right hon. gentleman does not have the denial with him. That was an inaccurate report of the statement I made. I did not make any statement like that in 1965. After all, like him I am a prairie boy.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Sharp: I know that by June the crop is planted. I have spent the whole of my life connected with the grain trade and if I did not know in June, 1965, that the crop had been planted I did not deserve to have been born in Winnipeg so many years ago. I think the right hon. gentleman should have given me the benefit of the doubt and realized I would never have said such a foolish thing in June, 1965.

Item agreed to.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether the committee would be disposed not to see the clock for a while? Perhaps I could give some of the answers to questions raised by hon. members and we could carry a few more items.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Howard: Did we carry item one?

The Chairman: I understood that vote one was carried.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): I had some remarks to make on item one but I was under the impression that the hon. member for Skeena was about to speak on this item. That is why I did not rise.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sure the hon. member would have the indulgence of the committee to the extent that he would be able to make his observations on some other item.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): Provided I get that assurance from the minister.

The Chairman: Shall item 5 carry?

Mr. Howard: This is a matter of great concern to myself and other hon. members. In spite of the minister's suggestion I do not think we could pass the rest of the items in the time remaining so I suggest we call it five o'clock.

Progress reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions, public bills.

[Mr. Sharp.]

EDUCATION

ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY—PROPOSED FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

Mr. Richard Cashin (St. John's West) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the Government of Canada should consult with the provinces with a view to calling a federal-provincial conference for the purpose of devising an acceptable formula for federal aid to elementary and secondary education.

He said: Mr. Speaker, we are all well aware of the fact that under our constitution education is wholly within the jurisdiction of the provinces. Indeed, there is no other area of provincial jurisdiction that is so jealously guarded as education. It is my hope that no one in this house or outside it for that matter will interpret this resolution which I am pleased to introduce as in any way affecting that jurisdiction. I trust that hon. members on all sides will agree with me that while education is within the jurisdiction of the provinces it is nevertheless a matter of national concern.

The people of Canada as a whole are or ought to be concerned about the quality of education in Canada. The Canadian people are concerned or ought to be concerned about the disparity between opportunities for education that exist in the various regions of this country. Indeed, disparity exists between individuals within the same region.

It is an undeniable fact that while education is a provincial responsibility great differences exist between the ability of each province to provide educational opportunities for their people. The Canadian Teachers' Federation has long been concerned about the severe imbalance in educational opportunities in Canada. A little over two years ago they presented a brief to the government of Canada on this matter entitled "Educational Inequalities." The problem as outlined in that brief is basically that the quality of education available to Canadians depends on where they live. With the indulgence of the house I will quote from the brief:

The two main factors which determine the level of opportunity are not the ability and willingness of students to work diligently, but rather the general wealth of the province and the relative importance placed on education by the people in that province.

The second factor, the value placed on education by the province, the federal government cannot rightfully affect. The first, provincial wealth, is appropriate to bring to your attention since it affects the ability of a province to provide funds to discharge its constitutional responsibilities towards education, since it affects the economic well-being of a nation as a whole, and since it has roots outside the field of education.

This brief discusses the indicators of equality, the most notable of which is the per pupil expenditure on public, elementary and secondary education by provinces. In 1961 the difference was between $378 in the province of Alberta and $141 in the province of Newfoundland. The Canadian average was $286 and six provinces spent sums of money below that figure.

The effects of this inequality are widespread. One particular effect drawn attention to by the Canadian Teachers' Federation was the estimated retention rates at the junior matriculation level by provinces, that is to say, a statistic which shows the number of drop-outs. Again we find a relationship here between the amount of money spent in a province on education and the number of students in that province who did not complete secondary education. The province with the highest per capita expenditure on education is the province that looks best in this statistic.

There are many other effects of inequality in education which I hope are obvious to all members of the house. If anyone has any doubt about the relation between education and economic development, then I can only suggest that they have been unaware of the refinement in Canadian thinking that has been going on among educationalists and economists in Canada. There is, indeed, a direct relationship between standards of education, the availability of qualified people, and the economic growth in a particular area. Thus, there are large areas in Canada which will continue to be slow growth areas unless greater effort is made to increase standards of education and the opportunities for education in these areas.

As the matter now stands, funds for educating the children of a province must be derived largely from the wealth of that province. The average personal income of all Canadians in 1963 was $1,532. One province had less than half the per capita income of the two or three highest income provinces and equally had proportionately less than half the money to spend on education that the top provinces had. It is the provinces with the lowest personal incomes which spend the least on public, elementary and secondary education. These are also the provinces which have the lowest student retention rates and the lowest proportion of teachers. Therefore the conclusion of the Canadian Teachers' Federation was that those provinces which spend little on education do so mainly because they have relatively little to spend

One other matter raised in the brief to which I would like to make reference is that a province's effort is not necessarily related to its wealth. They include a table in their brief which is entitled, "The Total School Board Expenditures for Education as a Percentage of Personal Income by Province in 1961," and the five highest provinces were Saskatchewan, Alberta, New Brunswick, Newfoundland and British Columbia. Of those five highest spending provinces on a percentage of personal income basis, two were provinces which have the least personal income per capita in Canada.

Another study was made by an Eric J. Hanson for the Canadian Tax Foundation, which devised statistical information respecting the percentage of personal income needed to provide an average Canadian standard in education, that is, if educational standards were in complete uniformity and equal in all provinces. If that were done it would mean that the province of Newfoundland, which has the lowest per capita income, would have an expenditure of 9 per cent on education as opposed to 3.3 per cent in British Columbia and Ontario. So even if this province out of its own resources were to provide the standards of education that are enjoyed in Ontario and B.C. it would be spending twice to three times the proportion of its provincial expenditures on education.

In the foregoing remarks, I have made some references to the areas touched upon by the Canadian Teachers Federation. There are many other areas of statistical information available from this body which illustrate the main point of the federation's brief, namely, that the quality of education available to Canadians depends largely on where they live. The main significance of the brief, therefore, which seems to be an indisputable fact, is that the inequalities that exist are due primarily to a variation in the degree to which the provinces are financially capable of discharging their constitutional responsibilities. The main problem has its real roots in the unequal distribution of economic resources among the provinces, a field which is properly the concern of the federal government.

Perhaps since the time of the Rowell-Sirois report we have been cognizant of this great disparity in provincial resources. In the quarter of a century or so that has elapsed since that significant document, which perhaps has not been given the attention it deserves, various governments have attempted to cope with this problem. The present administration, through such devices as the Atlantic Development Board, the designated areas program and equalization payments, has perhaps recognized the dilemma more than any other administration.

We are all aware too that education has a profound effect on economic growth. I think it is safe to say that our awareness of this is of recent vintage. The Economic Council of Canada devoted a full chapter of its second annual review to education and economic growth. The report suggests that a very considerable scope would appear to exist in Canada to promote the growth of per capita personal income by improving the educational standards of the labour force. There is ample evidence that there is a direct relationship between education and personal income.

As I have said, the provinces that spend the least on education are the ones with the highest percentage of low income people and the lowest levels of education. If these provinces are to have the same opportunity for economic growth as the rest of Canada they must spend more on education. The problem of economic development, therefore, cannot be divorced from education, and since these provinces obviously do not have the required wealth themselves they must turn to the federal government.

Any meaningful program of regional economic development must face up to this dilemma. The related problems of educational opportunity and economic development are as important to the Atlantic provinces as the matter of biculturalism and all its related factors is to the province of Quebec. All of these matters are, one way or the other, bound together with the inequalities of opportunity existing among Canadians.

This then is the greatest challenge to Canadians, to remove these inequalities and to assure that all Canadians have equal opportunities to live in dignity.

In a very real sense the problems of the French Canadian, the Atlantic provinces, the new Canadians and other groups are not so different as they would appear. The causes and solutions may vary but the real problem is to make Canada the kind of country in which all of these people can feel equally at home, equally assured of their participation in the growth of their nation and equally fulfilled in the advantages of being Canadian.

[Mr. Cashin.]

How then do we approach this challenge, Mr. Speaker? I think the first and important thing to do is to have more discussion of the problem of educational opportunity and economic growth in our war on poverty. I do not mind saying that I was considerably annoyed by the attitude of some hon. members of the house who suggested that this is an improper thing to do.

I know there are legalistic and constitutional purists who worry about the impact of discussion and talk on one jurisdiction or another but this does not worry me. One of the reasons it does not worry me is that worrying about it is not going to obtain for the people of my province a better living. On the other hand, the worrying done by these purists may obtain for the people they represent a better living. What we are all interested in is really the same thing. If we are asked by some groups in this country to have more understanding of their problems, then I say there are these low income groups across this country with problems relating to education and economic development that should become the focus of national attention. Certainly it is impossible for provinces such as the Atlantic provinces, which have the highest proportion of such people, to fulfil their constitutional responsibilities within their present means. This dilemma has to be resolved and any program of economic development that does not recognize education as an integral part of the problem is doomed to failure. What are the things that the federal government can do about this? I suppose we could adopt the old procrustean bed theory in our shared cost programs. I am sure hon. members are familiar with the bed of Procrustes. It was of a determined length and one had to sleep on it fitting it properly. If your legs were too long they were cut off and if they were too short they were stretched. That is the effect of shared cost programs. They do not do very much to remove the inequalities between provinces. I do not think that shared cost programs are the answer to the lack of education. Again, this may be too blatant for those who are legalistic or constitutional purists on this point. Perhaps we should take a page from the book of the United States in its war on poverty. They have recognized the importance of education and improving educational opportunities in their battle against poverty.

At the federal level we do have agencies concerned in this regard such as the Atlantic Development Board. Perhaps this is a way to accomplish the required end. I would suggest that the most meaningful way to do this is really to discuss the problem and obtain a national consensus to the effect that it is a real challenge to eradicate the inequalities of groups in Canada and give all regions the same opportunity as the most prosperous regions. That is the basic philosophy I support, and I am concerned that we are not talking enough about this problem across Canada. Politicians of all political parties may pay lip service to the problem but I do not think we have really been seized with it. I think that in years to come we will be in greater difficulty if we do not take hold of this problem.

This is something that could excite Canada. Canadians are always wondering what our national identity is. This has never bothered me or those of us who know what our identity is. It seems to me that if we put something meaningful into being Canadian, and undoubtedly this involves being bicultural, we will help to solve the identity problem as well as the problem of inequality of opportunity between provinces. I cannot help but think that the bicultural problem is similar to the one about which I am talking. I would suggest that perhaps a change in our equalization formula would help so that the provinces with the lowest per capita incomes would then have the financial resources available in one way or another to give their people the same opportunity to live in dignity.

I have become very concerned about this situation from time to time because it seems to me that a gap exists between our efforts in this regard and our requirements. My province has made considerable improvement over the past number of years and is one of the Atlantic provinces which has enjoyed a relative increase in per capita income, but we are not narrowing the existing gap. If this relative position continues for those of us who live on the outer fringe of Canada, confederation will have failed. We are just as interested in confederation as are the rest of Canadians, but what is perhaps needed to a greater extent is a better kind of assistance.

I realize that there are people in all ten provinces of Canada who share this basic problem which is so important to Newfoundland and the other Atlantic provinces, but I would urge that the federal government talk about it and that the provinces talk about it. If there are some provincial premiers or federal politicians who do not like this idea, then the answer is to have the public of Canada become so concerned about it that those politicians who continually watch the political barometer will be forced to talk about it. I hope before too long educational and economic opportunities will be recognized as related factors so that Canada can begin to do something meaningful about this problem.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should first like to congratulate the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Cashin) for a very able presentation on the problem of education. I have presented a resolution along the same lines which I think will be discussed next week. I hope this is an example of great minds thinking alike and not the other side of that old adage.

However, as I listened to the hon. member it seemed to me that the problem he enunciated was not quite the one stated in his resolution. The resolution seems to refer to all provinces and the hon. member in his speech made particular reference to the Atlantic provinces. The idea that the federal government should be involved in assisting the financing of elementary and secondary education is not abhorrent to me. I am not against the principle but I think there are very important practical difficulties and I should like to elaborate this point at the moment.

In my view it would be better for the federal government to confine its assistance to and involvement in education to the field of higher education or, if you like, post-secondary education. This is the field in which the federal government is already engaged to a certain extent. We all know that in the immediate years ahead there will have to be a very dramatic increase in the financial involvement of the federal government in financing post-secondary education in Canada, that, is colleges, universities, technical schools and so on.

There are some people in this country who say that we cannot afford to give this aid to higher education. It is a very great amount of aid, as we know from the report of the Bladen Commission. These people say we cannot afford to do this and have medicare, increased pensions and so on. I am convinced that the country can afford this assistance if the economy of Canada continues to grow at the rate recommended by the Economic Council of Canada. I suggest that if the federal government meets the bill for education at the post-secondary level recommended by the Bladen Commission and goes beyond what the Bladen Commission recommended to the goal of tuition free education for students, it will have its hands full in the field of education because this will involve very great amounts of money.

There is one important aspect of the question of financing education that we must keep in mind. It seems to me it is a principle of government in this country that when you finance something there should be some financial accountability to the legislature or parliament providing the funds. I think we sometimes forget that. If this is the case, the federal government will have to require an accounting from the institutions of learning which are receiving its funds, namely, the institutions of higher learning in Canada.

This means some sort of federal control. It may only mean the control of veto, but it means some sort of control over spending because if we do not do this we will hear about it from the Auditor General. This can be very important. For example, the universities will have in the next few years very great capital expenditures. These will have to be watched to a certain extent.

Universities become ambitious and want to add colleges and faculties of various types. I should like to give some illustrations, Mr. Speaker. At the present time I think there are in Canada four faculties of forestry, one at the University of British Columbia, one at the University of New Brunswick, one in Toronto and I believe one at Laval. These may be enough to supply the forestry engineers that we need in this country. I do not know. This is a matter that can be determined. But suppose ten other universities suddenly decide that they should have faculties of forestry. We would have to determine whether those were required and we might have to say no.

We have a limited number of dental colleges in this country. Again, I do not know how many we need. We have in western Canada one school of veterinary medicine under construction, I believe, at the present time. This may be all we need. We have a number of medical schools in the country and more are under construction. If more universities decided that they wanted medical schools and improved research facilities, and we did not need that many, there would have to be some sort of control applied. I raise this point because control goes with spending and if the federal government has to spend a great deal of money in the field of higher education, as I think it will, it will have to exercise some sort of control along with the spending it will be doing.

If I am not mistaken, the involvement of the federal government in higher education is not a problem in nine of the ten provinces. Apparently it is in the province of Quebec. The opposition in that province have said even more forcefully than the government that they want to deal with their universities directly. At the present time there is a controversy, it seems to me, between Premier Lesage and the federal government whether they must account for the funds they receive from Ottawa. I do not think this problem occurs in the other provinces. I can see the day in the future when the federal government will be putting up the greater part on the money required for financing colleges, technical schools and universities in Canada.

When that time comes, Mr. Speaker, I suggest it will be all the federal government can do to meet that responsibility. This does offer some hope for the provinces. If they can be relieved of their heavy costs of higher education they can then apply these funds to the improvement and expansion of elementary and secondary education.

It seems to me that if you accept my argument about financing and control as logical it follows that if the federal government were providing funds for elementary and secondary education some sort of control would have to be used. I suggest that provinces other than the province of Quebec might object. For example, I do not think Ontario wants this government to have very much say in the operation of its public school system. It may not object so much in the field of universities but it would certainly object as regards the lower levels of education. Again, Mr. Speaker, if the federal government takes up the costs of higher education it will release funds in the provinces which can be spent on elementary and secondary education.

The hon. member for St. John's West has raised a very important point, namely, the relationship of the amount which can be spent in a province on education to the per capita income of the residents of that province. I would suggest to him that this is a problem more confined to the Atlantic provinces than the other provinces. I think my own province and the province of Ontario can well afford to finance the elementary and secondary schools and they could certainly do this if they were relieved of other educational costs.

I agree that the hon. member has made a good case for the Atlantic provinces and I should like to see some method worked out whereby through the Atlantic Regional Economic Council, I believe it is called, or the Atlantic Development Board some plan could be devised which would give them extra aid for their particular problems. But I doubt that the idea of the federal government financing and being involved in elementary and secondary education would be well received in the other provinces generally. Let us do a good job in the field of higher education, because a tremendous job faces us in the years ahead in this field alone.

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I admired the forcefulness of the original presentation with regard to the bill and I have always had a great deal of sympathy for the educational difficulties in the province of Newfoundland. At one time I was almost sufficiently moved to apply for a teaching position in that province, as some British Columbian teachers have been at various times, but I did not take that step. On the other hand, I do not quite see the bill presented here as being the solution to the problem, particularly not in the terms expressed by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Cashin).

The hon. member stressed that education was a provincial responsibility as defined in the British North America Act, and I think one of the things we have to do is face up to this problem with regard to our constitution. It is not a case of being a legalist or a constitutional purist; it is a case of facing a fact.

• (5:30 p.m.)

We have developed an educational system in this country as if we were ten independent countries. This makes Canada a rather unique country in today's world. If you study comparative education, you will find that probably in no other country do the individual parts of the country have the independence in the field of education that the provinces of Canada have. This independence is jealously and fiercely guarded, fiercely guarded not just by the province of Quebec but by many of the provinces in this country.

We have allowed the federal government to intervene at the university level. I think one of the reasons this intervention has been accepted has been that traditionally the university has been a sort of autonomous organization itself. There is a freedom and lack of direct government control at the university level that simply does not pertain to the rest of the educational system. Certainly in the elementary and secondary educational systems provincial control is very complete, at least it is in my province of British Columbia, and I think you will find this pattern pretty well across the country.

Whereas we do break up the national system into ten parts, once we have made that initial division we have a centralization of educational control within the provinces. This is so to a very great extent, and the province has been supreme. The individual school has not had the authority it would have in some of the other nations of the world. The problem of injecting financing from the federal level, therefore, becomes more acute.

I think we should realize that this has been partially bridged by the supplementing of vocational educational facilities through federal assistance. I think we should perhaps be ready to admit that this does involve a certain bias or pressure in regard to the educational systems of the provinces that are accepting it. On the other hand, I doubt very much that the provinces are willing to allow federal intervention in other areas.

I think the basic problem in the argument presented by the hon. member for St. John's West is that it would not result in the solution he desires. I feel we should clearly understand that throughout all the years of our development there has grown up an intense rivalry between provinces with regard to their educational facilities. Some provinces pride themselves on being first and the amounts that are paid per capita are watched very keenly across the entire country. The levels of salaries that are paid teachers are also watched very keenly across the entire country. I can assure the hon. member that unless his formula amounted to an absolute strait-jacket that would forbid provinces going above it we would still have inequalities because there are some provinces that have prided themselves for many years on being ahead in the Canadian educational picture. I do not know how you would eliminate that unless your formula became much more than a formula and became a restriction or a brake on the provinces that were determined to go ahead and stay ahead in the educational game.

It seems to me some methods could perhaps be introduced within the provinces themselves to meet the situation. Again, it seems to me that the provinces that are ahead were the first to move into the areas of consolidation and have developed ideas of consolidation to the furthest extent. This has been a factor in their being ahead. There have been devised such schemes as home owners' grants, for example, that have been very effective in persuading the local populace it can afford a higher standard of education than it previously thought it could. If you were to look at the last issue of the British Columbia teachers' magazine, you would see an article entitled, "Home Owners' Grants A Good Idea". There may be some need to examine the tax system to ensure that it is not at present discouraging the local populace from advocating advances and reforms in the educational field.

The other problem that arises is that there is no equality of educational opportunity even within one province at the present time. In the province of British Columbia, for example it is extremely difficult for some areas to attain anything close to the same level of educational opportunity afforded to others. I think that there are other anomalies and that this would be true of some of the other provinces. One of the things that might overcome some of these problems would be forming something like the Company of Young Canadians. Amongst teachers, perhaps you could get people who would devote part of their life to service in some part of the country where teachers are almost impossible to obtain. I have in mind the peace corps suggestion of the Canadian Teachers Federation. We would be doing something that would be tangible and would help overcome the problem of educational inequality. It is not just a question of how much money you can offer persons to go to these undesirable areas but whether you can find anyone at all who will go to such an area in order to teach. I am not condemning any particular province here. I am saying that all provinces will have this problem of inequality of educational opportunity within their boundaries.

There is another area that might be considered which would involve a program in the field of pre-school training, particulary for some of the groups in this country. I mentioned this earlier in the house as the sort of aid that should be given to Indian students on reservations in developing a program that would prepare them to fit into our society. It would be extremely difficult to work out an acceptable formula because it is one of my theories on education that the place where the money needs to go most desperately—I am speaking of provincial money here—is always at the grade one level. However, I doubt very much that the setting up of a grants structure through the federal government would influence that level of education particularly because there are so many other levels that are more dramatic. This is the area, however, where you can make the greatest possible improvement in an educational system with, I believe, the least expenditure of money. I think anyone concerned with education should constantly keep that in mind.

I think perhaps it would be advisable to call not for the setting up of a formula here but for the setting up of a ministry of federal-provincial affairs together with a ministry or educational bureau. At the moment I wonder just who would attend a federal-provincial conference as proposed in the bill which we are discussing sponsored by the hon. member for St. John's West.

• (5:40 p.m.)

There are areas of co-ordination which could be established between provinces in order to solve some of the problems arising in education, particularly when students transfer to one province from another. Again, it would be impossible to get a standard curriculum across the country. People often demand one but I usually tell them that they just have to face up to the constitutional fact that we do act like separate countries. I do not think that within the foreseeable future we could have one curriculum across the country. In fact, our schools tend to be moving away from this idea; they seem to be moving toward more authority to establish their own curricula. So that problem would remain.

I think that rather than rushing into a federal-provincial conference at this moment, which as I see it would have no possibility of success, we should examine the possibility of setting up a ministry of federal-provincial affairs, giving it an educational responsibility and possibly working through it toward a solution of some of the problems facing Canada in our development of education.

[Translation]

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I should not like to miss this opportunity to express an opinion, not only on behalf of my colleagues of the province of Quebec who are members of the Conservative party but also on behalf of all the members for the province of Quebec, regardless of their party affiliations.

I believe the motion made by the member for St. John's West (Mr. Cashin) should not be considered by the house. I base my claim on the B.N.A. Act which is very specific with regard to education.

I wonder if my hon. friend belongs to the legal profession. If so, I should not like to be one of his clients nor have to be judged by my peers or by a court and, even less, a constitutional court.

Before introducing his resolution, my hon. friend should perhaps have looked up the Canadian constitution, that is the British North America Act and more particularly sections 91—

Mr. Cashin: What about health?

Mr. Valade: —92 and 93 of the British North America Act.

With the indulgence of the house, I will quote a few references to enlighten my young friend. I appreciate the fact that his intentions are quite commendable and that he would like to win over the sympathy of the younger generation of his province. Unfortunately, his province is ill-administered by a government which has neglected its responsibilities in the field of education and has to resort to unconstitutional publicity means in this regard.

If my hon. friend will bear with me, I would like to quote some of the sections of the British North America Act, of which, unfortunately, I have only the English version here. I hope you will excuse me if I quote these sections in English.

[English]

Section 91 of the British North America Act, Mr. Speaker, states:

> It shall be lawful for the Queen, by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate and House of Commons, to make Laws for the Peace, Order, and good Government of Canada, in relation to all Matters not coming—

I emphasize these words.

> —within the Classes of Subjects by this Act assigned exclusively to the Legislatures of the Provinces—

Mr. Cashin: You can get around that. We have done it before.

Mr. Valade: I think that is quite clear to my hon. friend.

Mr. Vincent: They want to opt out once more.

Mr. Valade: Section 92 lists the matters coming within the exclusive jurisdiction of provincial legislatures and the second paragraph states:

> Direct Taxation within the Province in order to the Raising of a Revenue for Provincial Purposes.

If that is not clear to my hon. friend on the other side of the house, may I throw some more light on his junior mind by referring to section 93, which reposes these privileges exclusively under provincial responsibility. Section 93 reads as follows:

> In and for each Province the Legislature may exclusively make Laws in relation to Education, subject and according to the following provisions—

Mr. Cashin: I do not disagree with you.

Mr. Valade: My hon. friend says he does not disagree with me. If he does not disagree with me, then I understand he is inviting this house to contravene the spirit and the letter of the law which has founded this country—

Mr. Cashin: That is not so.

Mr. Valade: —with respect to the rights of the provinces which have participated in the elaboration of the Constitutional Act of Canada.

Mr. Cashin: You know we can get around that.

Mr. Valade: We are talking today about writing a new constitution. This one has not yet been revised and already our friends across the way want to change not only the three sections of the constitution to which I have referred but they also want to eliminate the most important and exclusive rights falling under provincial responsibility.

Mr. Cashin: That is not true.

Mr. Valade: My friend is a lawyer and he says that is not true. In that case I do not know how he came to draft a motion in which he asks the provinces to ask for federal aid for education. I do not know how many definitions my friend has of education but to me education is education.

Mr. Cashin: There is federal aid now.

Mr. Valade: I do not know why my hon. friend finds it necessary to differ in his motion from the B.N.A. Act. Perhaps this is part of co-operative federalism. But I do want to make it clear to my hon. friend—this is why I am speaking in English; I have referred to some sections of the B.N.A. Act and I want to make this clear because the translation might not reach my hon. friend in time—that education has been exclusively preserved as the right of the provinces.

If my hon. friend wants to show that he is speaking for his party, then I hope he will get up and make the statement that he is now expressing the views of his entire party. If he is not expressing the views of his party but is talking for himself, then I hope that my hon. friends from Quebec, who should be around him tonight, will invite him to repeat—

Mr. Cashin: Are you speaking for your party?

Mr. Valade: At the next election we in Quebec will invite him—

Mr. Cashin: Are you speaking for your party?

Mr. Valade: —to make the statement he has just now made in the House of Commons so that the people of Canada and the people of Quebec will know that they are facing a Liberal party in Quebec which is two-faced, one policy for the rest of the country and another for Quebec when this is necessary.

Mr. Speaker, we, in the Conservative party, succeeded several years ago in reaching an agreement with the government of the province of Quebec, not at the elementary or secondary levels of education, but rather on an adequate formula for aid to education at the university level and to research. There was perfect and cordial agreement between the former Conservative government and the then premier of the province of Quebec, Mr. Paul Sauvé.

The formula was acceptable and I would be pleased if my hon. friend, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister, and member for Mount Royal (Mr. Trudeau) would let it be known that he is present in this house. I am told that he is a great constitutional lawyer, but unfortunately we have yet to see the flashes of intelligence he made a show of during the last election campaign. I should like him to tell us whether he shares the views of his colleague. Let him tell us, as an expert on constitutional law, whether he agrees with his colleague. If not, I hope he will have the courage to rise and to—

[Mr. Cashin.]

Mr. Trudeau: Do you want me to tell you right away?

Mr Valade: You may speak later.

Mr. Trudeau: I cannot have the courage after six o'clock.

Mr. Valade: After sitting in the house for three weeks, he has not yet spoken a word. I hope he will have the courage to rise—

Mr. Trudeau: I shall not have time later, but now I could do it.

Mr. Valade: I shall give you two minutes so that you may tell us whether or not you endorse your colleague's motions.

Mr. Trudeau: My answer is no.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Mount Royal tells me he is not in agreement with his colleague. I am very happy about it because it proves that the motion before us tonight is contrary to what the Canadian people expect of our legislation.

Mr. Trudeau: Why did you do it in the case of universities?

Mr. Valade: I think the motion suggested to us is bad, because it will be like pouring oil on a fire that has been smouldering now for many years. In fact, it touches upon a sore point in the province of Quebec, the separatist idea. Why? Because there have been centralizing infringements of the confederation pact. This is why we of the province of Quebec, had demanded respect for the spirit rather than the letter thereof.

Mr. Trudeau: Why do you say that it is good at the university level?

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I hope that the hon. member for Mount Royal who likes to interrupt and who said, before being appointed to the post he now holds, that he preferred not to be made a minister, because he wanted to remain independent in order to express himself freely in the house—

An hon. Member: And he was not made a minister.

Mr. Valade: But in view of the fact that he was appointed Parliamentary Secretary—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to say that I am against the resolution introduced by the hon. member for St. John West, and I wish to put my opposition on record.

Unfortunately, time does not allow me to say more. I see how impatiently the hon. member for Mount Royal awaits his turn to take the floor and I would like him to tell us if he is for or against the resolution introduced by his colleague.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the remarks which the hon. gentleman is making are not relevant to the resolution before the house.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I thank you for calling me to order. I know that Your Honour should have heard the member for Mount Royal but he provoked me to reply and I did reply to him.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I was asked to state an opinion. I asked the hon. member for Sainte-Marie to grant me the floor and he would not. I cannot state my opinion if he will not grant me any time.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I remind the hon. gentleman that the remarks he is directing toward another hon. member of the house are not relevant to the resolution before the house.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I was replying to a question asked by the member for Mount Royal.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must remind the hon. gentleman again that he is not directing his remarks to the resolution before the house.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, because I want to give other members of the house an opportunity to express their points of view, may I express once more my disappointment at the motion which was introduced in this house today. I hope, sir, that other members on the other side of the house will take this opportunity to express themselves against the motion. We all know that this motion is in direct contradiction of the spirit and the letter of the constitution of Canada. I hope, sir, that motions of this kind will not see the light of day in this house in the future. I now yield my place to the hon. Member for Mount Royal.

Mr. Keith Hymmen (Waterloo North): Mr. Speaker, in speaking to the motion introduced by my colleague, the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Cashin), I would say at the outset that it is phrased in very diplomatic terms as it should be. It is not my intention to enter into a discourse on the constitution at this time because we all know that that fabled piece of legislation, oft-quoted in this house, which 98 years ago formed the dominion of Canada, places the responsibility for and the jurisdiction with respect to education strictly in the laps of the provincial governments. No one, however, prior to 1867 had any idea of the ramifications and the extent of the financial costs of education. The motion, Mr. Speaker, does not suggest that a federal-provincial conference on education be called but because of the serious criticism that we have had in the house this afternoon with regard to this matter I suggest that with the approval of the house the government consult with the provinces with a view to ascertaining their wishes with regard to having such a conference for the purpose of investigating the possibility of federal aid which to the best of my knowledge has never had this important consideration.

An hon. Member: Are you in favour?

Mr. Hymmen: I have mentioned the criticism of federal-provincial conferences. Some of the severest critics would appear to be those who have had the least experience with this vehicle and what can be accomplished by it. No less a person than the provincial treasurer of Ontario in his budget address mentioned the many conferences at all levels that had been held and what had been accomplished. This is one example of co-operative federalism with which the Liberal government has been closely identified and which we hope can be continued effectively.

The provinces appreciate the assistance which has been given at the university level. This is evidenced by the recent exchange of correspondence between the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and the premiers of all ten provinces. This had to be done and must be continued and increased with the growing interest in the significance of higher education, having regard to our emergence into the technological and atomic age, the population explosion and the establishment of new universities.

The provinces were not prepared to assume by themselves the financial burdens of higher education.

An hon. Member: Six o'clock.

Mr. Hymmen: If I have appeared to deviate somewhat from the subject matter I will return to it immediately.

An hon. Member: Six o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wish to advise the house that the hour for the consideration of private members' business has expired.

It being three minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, February 17, 1966

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

OBJECTIONS RESPECTING PROPOSED DISTRICTS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA, MANITOBA AND NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty to inform the house that three objections signed by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) and nine other members in one case, the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) and nine other members in the second case and the hon. members for Halifax (Mr. McCleave and Mr. Forrestall) and eight other members in the third case, have been filed with me pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, chapter 31, statutes of Canada, 1964-65 with respect to the reports of the electoral boundaries commissions for the provinces of British Columbia, Manitoba and Nova Scotia respectively.

[Translation]

If the house will agree, I suggest that we again follow the procedure already used during this session so that the text of the objections, together with the names of the members who signed them in each case, will be printed as appendices to Votes and Proceedings for this day. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

SWEEPSTAKES

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL BOARD

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-125, to provide for the establishment of a hospital sweepstakes board.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to establish, under federal jurisdiction, a national sweepstakes board to regulate, control and run sweepstakes in Canada.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ACCESS TO LOBBIES BY MEMBERS OF PRESS GALLERY

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether in his position as recognized leader of the House of Commons he would give his assurance that nothing will be done to set aside any part of the lobbies adjacent or contiguous to the House of Commons from which representatives of the press gallery would be barred. I am sure he will agree to that, because any action in this regard would be a contravention of the spirit of the bill of rights.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the Prime Minister will want to reply to this question, but it does seem to me not the type of question or type of matter that comes within the jurisdiction of the right hon. gentleman in his capacity as Prime Minister. I may be wrong, but that is the opinion I wish to express at this time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Of whom may I ask that question? Should I ask the Secretary of State?

Some hon. Members: The Speaker.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Certainly action should be taken by parliament, and the Prime Minister must be the one who will take a stand on this matter which, in my opinion, is wrong in every particular.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that this question does not come within the ambit or jurisdiction of any minister, as such.

FINANCE

CONTROL BY U.S. COMPANY OF CANADIAN INVESTMENT FUND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the Minister of Finance whether his attention has been drawn to the fact that a mutual investment fund of $128 million of the Commonwealth International Corporation is now in danger of passing into the control of the Canadian Channing Corporation, which is a wholly owned subsidiary of the Channing Financial Corporation of New York. May I ask the minister whether he intends to take any action to prevent the savings of some 50,000 Canadians from passing into the control of a United States financial institution?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have had some information about this matter. I am not familiar with all its details and I am not certain whether it would be possible, even if it were desirable, for the federal government to take action. However, I can assure my hon. friend that I mean to inquire into the situation.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister if he will ascertain two things; first, if in the event of this transfer of control taking place this mutual fund will be subject to the economic guide lines policy of the United States government and second, in the event of that being the case, would he consider legislation which would prevent other mutual funds from passing beyond the control of Canadian investors?

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I suggest to the hon. member that the question appears to be hypothetical in the present circumstances.

ALLEDGED EFFECTS OF AMERICAN RESTRICTIONS ON VALUE OF CANADIAN DOLLAR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

On February 9 last, the Bank of Montreal stated that the American policy with regard to capital had affected the Canadian dollar. On the same day, the Minister stated that the American restrictions had not yet had any effect in Canada.

Does he still maintain today, on February 17, that the American restrictions have not yet had any effect on the Canadian dollar in Canada?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This type of question is very embarrassing for the Chair. It is extremely difficult to determine whether this is the type of question which should be answered because it is so urgent that it requires a reply today. May I suggest to the hon. member that perhaps this question might be placed on the order paper.

[Mr. Douglas.]

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not think that question can be put on the order paper. This is all I want to know. Does the minister still maintain that the American restrictions have no repercussions on the country at the present time?

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that the hon. member could get an answer to that question by putting it on the order paper.

[English]

FUNDS RAISED BY U.S. IN CANADA FOR EUROPEAN EXPANSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): I have a question to direct to the Minister of Finance. Has the minister been given details of the activities of United States industrialists who are raising money in Ontario to finance expansion in Europe, as stated yesterday by the leader of the opposition in Ontario?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): I have been keeping very closely in touch with this situation, not only through the channels through which the leader of the opposition in Ontario obtained his information but otherwise.

Mr. Monteith: Has the minister come to any conclusion as to whether there is cause for worry, as expressed by—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question is not urgent in the form in which it is submitted to the minister.

NATIONAL PARKS

COMPLAINTS RESPECTING OPERATION OF NEW POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of his reply to the premier of Alberta, when he stated that he is unaware of any case where the new national parks policy will disturb or damage any business, may I ask the Prime Minister whether or not he has examined any of the numerous complaints and petitions from businessmen operating within the parks with reference to this very subject.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, I have, but the minister who is responsible has given them an even more detailed examination.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): May I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the right hon. gentleman has disagreed completely with Hon. Ernest Manning, premier of Alberta, in reference to the federal government's infringement on the property rights of people living in the parks, will the Prime Minister now consider a judicial inquiry to look into realistic and legalistic complaints by the people conducting business for and on behalf of a million and a half tourists visiting Banff national park?

Mr. Pearson: I have already given a commitment, which I am glad to confirm, that before any legislation in this matter is passed those who are concerned by it in any way will be given an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. Woolliams: I do not wish to press this point too far, but would the Prime Minister consider setting up a judicial inquiry or some other form of inquiry, as he promised when he was in Calgary during September?

Mr. Pearson: No, I did not give such a promise. I promised, and I have confirmed the promise this afternoon, that all those affected by the legislation will be given an opportunity to be heard in an appropriate way. I will discuss with the minister concerned the specific suggestion which the hon. member has made.

INDUSTRY

AUTOMOBILES—EXTENSION OF AGREEMENT TO COVER REPLACEMENT PARTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): My question is addressed to the Minister of Industry. Is the minister considering extending the free trade auto agreement to include replacement parts?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): The house will recall that under the terms of the agreement we have with the United States governing automotive products provision is made for a review in the year 1967. At that time the question of replacement parts will be looked into.

AIR CANADA

OMISSION OF SASKATCHEWAN CITIES FROM DC-9 ROUTES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. M. Brand (Saskatoon): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Transport. Has the minister any explanation to offer for the glaring omission of the major Saskatchewan cities of Saskatoon and Regina from the list of Air Canada DC-9 service routes as outlined in yesterday's Hansard?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): No, sir.

Mr. Brand: A supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I was about to consider the advisability of ruling the question out of order. However, the hon. member did receive a reply. I suggest we should now go on to another question.

LABOUR RELATIONS

RECOGNITION BY C.B.C. OF C.N.T.U.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration.

About the brief submitted to the federal cabinet by the C.N.T.U. with regard to the tradesmen of the C.B.C., can the minister tell us if he will find a solution to that problem and if the C.N.T.U. will be recognized as the bargaining agent for those C.B.C. employees?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the question of certification is governed by the Industrial Relations Act which comes under the jurisdiction of the Labour Relations board; moreover, both come under the jurisdiction of the Department of Labour and not the Department of Manpower.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, because I realize that the minister is shunning this question and doing so quite skilfully. I would like to put the same question to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson). I had put it to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration because he is the one who gave an answer to a question in this connection yesterday. But today, I want to put it to the Minister of Labour.

[English]

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to have an opportunity to reply to this inquiry. As the hon. member knows, yesterday a very strong representative delegation from the C.N.T.U met with the Prime Minister and other members of the government. They presented a very lengthy brief, and in the course of its presentation they produced a supplementary memorandum which was also quite lengthy.

I met with them following the meeting with the Prime Minister and other members of the cabinet. It was agreed it was in the interests of the unions concerned, the associated unions of the C.N.T.U., that I should be given time to discuss it with officials of my department, and later with my colleagues in the government. We are to meet again some time between now and March 1, after we have had the opportunity to study their carefully prepared memorandum.

POWER

DISCUSSIONS WITH U.S. AS TO EXPORT FROM BRINCO DEVELOPMENT

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I preface it by pointing out that the Vermont state legislature yesterday gave preliminary approval to a $400 million bill to purchase from Canada power having as its prime source the proposed Brinco development at Churchill Falls, Labrador. I ask the minister, have there been any discussions between the United States government and the government of Canada with regard to the export of such power, and what is the present stage of this matter so far as the government of Canada is concerned?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take that question as notice.

WATER RESOURCES

STEPS TO IMPLEMENT REPORT ON GREAT LAKES POLLUTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys with relation to the great lakes anti-pollution measures. Yesterday the minister was reading a fairly long statement, which I hoped he would have completed on motions today; but since he has not, could he answer one question about which we have all been left breathless? Who is going to co-ordinate the Canadian efforts on anti-pollution measures?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, I was led to believe my department would be doing that.

[Mr. Nicholson.]

Mr. Aiken: We are still breathless.

Mr. Knowles: Who led you?

Mr. Pepin: The Prime Minister.

[Later:]

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. Has the cabinet committee on water resources yet met to consider the pollution problem?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): This matter is under consideration by the government, Mr. Speaker.

PENITENTIARIES

COLLINS BAY—INVESTIGATION INTO ESCAPE OF PRISONERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Solicitor General on the understanding that the operation of penitentiaries comes under his department. I ask him whether he has any statement to make about reports that (1) officials at Collins Bay penitentiary knew of an impending break and (2), at least one of the guards' rifles was so mucked up with grease it would not fire.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would suggest the hon. member place this question on the order paper.

AGRICULTURE

ALBERTA—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE IN PEACE RIVER DISTRICT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that several thousand farmers in northern Alberta have now qualified for further assistance over and above P.F.A.A., according to guidelines laid down by the provincial government, would the minister not try to use his eloquence to soften the hard hearts of his colleagues to assure that some money in the form of assistance will be paid through the provincial government to these people?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have not had any word from the provincial government in this regard, but if I do have word I trust it will not be under the very nasty appellation of "guide lines".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

OLD AGE SECURITY

DISCUSSIONS WITH PROVINCES RESPECTING INCREASED PAYMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Terence Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister inform the house whether communication with the provinces has begun, with the object in view of increasing the old age security payments?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I realize that the matter may be urgent, but it seems to me this is the type of question that might be asked every day. I suggest that it be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Speaker, I suggest it would not be asked every day if the Prime Minister could dispose of it very quickly.

SPORTS

HOCKEY—GOOD WISHES TO NATIONAL TEAM IN WORLD CHAMPIONSHIP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. R. Sherman (Winnipeg South): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the Canadian national hockey team, based in Winnipeg, departs this week end to play for the nation's honour in the world hockey championships in Yugoslavia, would the Prime Minister be inclined to wish the team success on behalf of the Canadian people?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I shall be very glad to do that, Mr. Speaker. The Canadian national team has had success in the past. The team has been training hard for the world championships and we wish it the best of luck. It has always conducted itself well on and off the ice.

BANKRUPTCY

REQUEST FOR TERMS OF REFERENCE OF COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Justice. In addition to the two rather unrevealing letters that were tabled yesterday with respect to the committee on bankruptcy, will the minister table his instructions respecting the terms of reference to the superintendent of bankruptcy so they can be studied before his estimates come up for consideration?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, there are no other terms of reference than those contained in the correspondence I tabled.

Mr. Nielsen: May I ask as a supplementary question whether the minister will consider making a statement, during our consideration of his estimates, outlining the instructions he gave the superintendent with respect to this committee?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has made his suggestion.

[Later:]

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister or the Minister of Justice concerning the study of future legislation in respect of bankruptcy. Would the Prime Minister consider referring that study to the standing committee on justice?

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, there are two studies now being undertaken, one by the committee I mentioned the other day having to do with revision of the whole Bankruptcy Act, and the other with respect to amendments to the Bankruptcy Act which we hope to bring before parliament shortly. It is presumed that there will be opportunity to discuss these amendments in committee or in the house.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether he is now in a position to give an answer to the question I put to him last Friday. I asked him then whether he could indicate to the house the date by which legislation on medicare would have to be enacted so that payments under it could start on July 1, 1967.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure whether I allowed the question, although I believe I did. If the minister who would normally reply to this question wishes to do so he may, in view of the fact that the question was asked previously. I have some doubt as to whether the hon. gentleman is asking a question at this time, or is asking for a legal opinion or an interpretation of the statutes. I believe his question is out of order, but it was allowed before and I now invite the minister responsible to make a reply at this time if he so desires.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, may I point out that my question was put to the Prime Minister last Friday. It was allowed at that time and, as a matter of fact, a supplementary question was also asked and answered. The Prime Minister said he would discuss the matter with his colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare. That is the reason I hope he now has a reply.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The question posed to one of the ministers is related to something that might happen in 1967, and for that reason I think it is out of order. In view of the fact that when the hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona asked a question about a much more urgent situation it was ruled out of order, I do not see how this question could be in order.

Mr. Speaker: The matter of urgency is very relative in regard to questions at this time. I feel that the question should not have been allowed before because it does seem to ask for an interpretation or opinion by the responsible minister. However, I am placed in a rather difficult position inasmuch as I allowed the question last week in a moment of weakness.

Mr. Knowles: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I do not believe Your Honour had a moment of weakness. My question was based on a statement that had just been made—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I suggest that this whole matter might be resolved if the hon. member placed the question on the order paper.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I suggest that Your Honour has already invited the appropriate minister to answer the question. My question was based on a statement of the minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre very well knows, this is the kind of matter that can easily be discussed during the adjournment debate. I ask the hon. gentleman whether he wants to avail himself of that opportunity.

Mr. Knowles: Thank you for your suggestion, Mr. Speaker. I shall comply with it.

WAR ON POVERTY

CHILDREN OF IMMIGRANTS UNABLE TO BENEFIT FROM CANADIAN SCHOOLS

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the finding just published that many children of immigrants with low incomes are not able to benefit from Canadian schools because of language difficulties, will the government consider this problem as part of its war on poverty?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is a very important matter which might be placed on the order paper.

MUNICIPAL DEVELOPMENT LOAN FUND

INQUIRY AS TO AMOUNT REMAINING UNSPENT ON EXPIRY DATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that we are rapidly approaching—I do not know whether the Minister of Finance is listening; I am over here.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): In view of the fact that we are rapidly approaching the expiry date of the municipal development loan fund, I wonder whether the minister can tell us how much of the $400 million originally appropriated for this fund will not be spent by this date.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that this is not a proper question.

[Translation]

INQUIRY AS TO EXTENSION OF PERIOD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance.

I should like to ask him if he is now in a position to make a statement concerning the possible extension of time to enable municipalities to take advantage of the refund provided for under the municipal loans legislation?

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me the question has already been asked and answered.

EXPO '67

AWARDING OF DISPLAY CONTRACTS TO U.S. FIRMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question that I should like to direct to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. A few days ago Your Honour was good enough to let me ask the minister a question which had to do with allegations that large Expo contracts were being given to firms in the United States due to the difficulty of Canadian firms tendering. At that time the minister was kind enough to say that he would look into the matter and make a reply later. I wonder whether he is able to do that today.

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, at that time I said I could scarcely believe the allegations having regard to the method of awarding the contracts. They are awarded according to the advice and procedures of the Department of Defence Production to Canadian suppliers wherever possible. I have found no reason in the meantime to believe anything to the contrary.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—REQUEST FOR PERMISSION TO SEND CANADIAN VOLUNTEERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Has the minister received the advice he had requested from the Department of Justice concerning Mr. Echlin's letter requesting permission to send volunteers to Viet Nam? Has he received an answer from the Department of Justice since that time?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have not yet received an answer. I was informed this morning that I may expect an answer perhaps Monday or Tuesday morning.

POWER

NATIONAL TRANSMISSION GRID—STATEMENT AS TO FINAL REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, two days ago the hon. member for Qu'Appelle asked me when we could expect the interim report on the study of a national transmission grid. A draft final report is expected from the consultants in March, 1966. May I add that a first report was actually delivered on January 15, 1964, to the working committee. Because the report contained utility data considered confidential, this report has not been released. The report now expected might not be tabled for the same reason.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister yet been able to familiarize himself with the aspect of this matter that I asked him about?

Mr. Pepin: Yes, Mr. Speaker, and I have found that it is not under my jurisdiction.

FAMILY ALLOWANCES

INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBLE INCREASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Finance.

In view of the fact that no provision was made for that in the estimates, could he tell the house whether he is seriously considering the necessity of increasing family allowances and will he inform us of his decision in his next budget?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

[English]

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

Marine Services—

5. Administration, operation and maintenance including fees for membership in the international organizations listed in the details of the estimates, pensions grants and contributions as detailed in the estimates, the payment of expenses, including excepted expenses, incurred in respect of Canadian distressed seamen as defined in section 306 of the Canada Shipping Act and, in respect of the Canadian coast guard service, authority to make recoverable advances for transportation, stevedoring and other shipping services performed on behalf of individuals, outside agencies and other governments and authority, notwithstanding section 30 of the Financial Administration Act, to make commitments for the current fiscal year not to exceed a total amount of $24,689,500, $41,512,600.

The Chairman: House again in committee of supply on the estimates of the Department of Transport, vote No. 5. Shall vote No. 5 carry?

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I should like at the outset to apologize to the minister for something I said the other day when I spoke initially about the question of shipping and safety factors involved in shipping. I levelled the accusation that there had been a conspiracy of inaction and a conspiracy to do nothing. I want to withdraw that comment and to express my thanks to the Montreal

Star for having brought to my attention that I was in error.

Perhaps I could indicate what the Montreal Star had to say in an editorial on Tuesday, February 15:

> The government has been accused of being a party to a "conspiracy of inaction" on matters relating to the safety of navigation in the St. Lawrence system. That, we suggest, is not quite right. A conspiracy is hardly possible without study, thought and planning. And the government can hardly be accused of any of these things —and more's the pity.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I should like to withdraw the reference to a conspiracy of inaction.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the hon. gentleman would mind sending me over that editorial.

Mr. Howard: In anticipation I had two photo copies made, so I will send the minister one.

Mr. Knowles: You might as well put it on Hansard and let us all see it.

Mr. Howard: Indeed, I think it is more a question of a pretty deliberate and intense indifference that is involved. I should like to make some comments about the answer the minister gave in the house on February 11 in a short reply to my initial remarks. Before I do that I should like to thank the minister for having sent me over, along with a covering letter signed in his own hand, an application for employment in the government service of Canada. I looked quite carefully at this application for employment, because the minister and I had jocularly made some comments about what value I might be to him.

• (3:10 p.m.)

I was stumped by the first question, which is "Position applied for". I quickly came to the conclusion that the only position vacant appeared to be that of the minister, and I must say I am not applying for it. I am not going to bother filling out the application.

I should like to make one or two references to Hansard for February 11, page 1118, where the minister is reported as saying:

> He left the impression, I think, that because there were no regulations made under section 407 of the Canada Shipping Act, nothing had been done by the government or my department to insure the safety of the crews of ships.

I am glad the minister admitted that no regulations had been made under or pursuant to section 407 of the Canada Shipping Act, because that is the section which refers to ships being manned by crews sufficient and efficient from the point of view of safety of life. For the minister to have admitted that no regulations existed under that section is gratifying, at least for the admission itself.

The minister went on to point out, as he was quite able to do, that section 464 of the same act calls for a customs officer to detain a ship on the complaint of any person if he has reason to believe it is unsafe by reason of undermanning. The section provides that a steamship inspector rule on the question of no regulations existed under that section is cleared.

This is a correct interpretation of what section 464 says. What the minister failed to tell the house is that section 464 and the following section which also deals with the activities of customs officers and inspectors, as well as section 410 of the Canada Shipping Act had their origin in the merchant shipping act of Great Britain. All these sections were based on the United Kingdom practice, and when the Canada Shipping Act was initially passed we merely extracted these provisions from the British shipping act and put them into our law here. Under the British shipping act, and in every other shipping nation in the world, there are regulations which spell out the level of manning, but under section 410 of the Canada Shipping Act there is not a solitary word or regulation by the Governor in Council or even a letter from the minister that indicates what is the correct level of manning for ships.

Then the minister has the unmitigated gall to stand up in parliament and say that any sailor can complain to a customs officer if a ship is undermanned. He can do this under section 464. Of course he can. However, there is nothing in writing in any regulation or in statute form anywhere to indicate what is an undermanned ship, what is the correct level of manning. In addition to that, under section 466 of the Canada Shipping Act, if an individual does complain about the seaworthiness or the manning level of any particular ship, then the customs officer—let me read the section to you:

> —he may exact from the complainant a deposit of money to defray the expenses of inspection and to pay any loss which may be sustained by the owner on account of the detention of the ship, or he may exact such security for the payment of such expenses or loss as he deems sufficient.

This provision is to guard against trivial or vexatious complaints, and those words are contained in the section. I ask the minister, how in heaven's name are you going to find the average sailor with anywhere upwards of $1,000 in his pocket to put up as security to a customs officer if he lodges a complaint that the ship is undermanned? It is just arrant nonsense on the part of the minister, and he knows it—and he knew it when he made the statement—to make this suggestion. He made the statement, too, in the face of 40 people having been killed in shipping accidents last year and millions upon millions of dollars of damage.

Then the minister said there was a specific provision in section 164 requiring qualified mates and masters, and that these are constantly checked. In the first place the minister cited the wrong section, but that is understandable. In the second place, what is the value of placing reliance for safety measures entirely on the shoulders of masters and mates of ships when there is no requirement for efficiency levels or proficiency levels of the crew? Can the minister tell me what are the requirements for a wheelsman on the great lakes, the St. Lawrence seaway or the St. Lawrence river? Can he tell me what are the requirements for a boatswain or ordinary seaman so far as safety measures are concerned?

The minister shakes his head. He cannot because there are not any. Not more than 3 per cent of the Canadian sailors sailing on Canadian ships are certificated, and I am referring to the ordinary crews. Apart from the fact that the minister got the wrong section in his reference, he also drew the wrong conclusion, as if to leave the impression that there were some safety standard being imposed by himself or by his government.

Perhaps the minister unconsciously knew what he was talking about when he mentioned section 164, because it is an appropriate section to mention in passing. This is the section that allows shipowners to employ children on boats with wages in the range of $50 per month. Section 164 is the one that deals with the apprenticeship of any boy to sea service, and that it shall be by indenture between the apprentice and the master or owner of the ship requiring the apprentice. This provision relates to the old scheme which allowed shipowners to employ people at extremely low wages. Perhaps the minister unconsciously knew about it and was really trying to apologize for it when he referred to section 164.

Let us get back to the main point with which we should be dealing. My hon. friend from Timiskaming wants to know why the minister has not got his advisers in front of him so they can advise him. He does not need them. He would not listen to them anyway. He has not so far, and I do not see the necessity for them. The other night the minister made a fantastic speech for about 25 minutes or so on the subject of a national transportation policy, and he wound up by saying that we did not have one.

In that fantastic speech he indicated that there was going to be a sort of vivisection take place within his department at the ministerial level. He was going to have a minister who would do the thinking, and that obviously excludes the current one. He was going to have a minister who would do the doing, and that excludes him. The only other portion of the sort of troika ministerialship over the Department of Transport for the present minister is the minister who does the talking.

All we have had so far is talk. We have been given no reasons for this state of affairs or any indication of serious concern about the welfare and the lives of the people who sail the ships of this nation. We want specific answers. The people of Canada and the people who sail these ships also want specific answers. They want to know about the traffic control system.

Last November the promise was made that the question of a traffic control system would be studied. The minister told us that on the seaway we have the most advanced and finest traffic control system in the world. Incidentally, there is not the same need for a traffic control system at the locks because a ship cannot very well fall over there anyway. The minister said he had this fantastically efficient traffic control system on one part of the seaway, but while it was promised last November that a control system would be put into effect in the lower part of the seaway comprising the St. Lawrence River and gulf region not a word has been said about that.

Another question the sailors would like answered and which should be answered in this house is: What about the requirement for radiotelephone communication between ships to enable one ship to communicate with another and give an indication of the position of the one with respect to the other, what the weather is and what the situation is regarding visibility? In this regard the sailors were told last November by the minister's deputy that the department was already drafting regulations with respect to the use of radiotelephones for this purpose. What about that matter?

There is also the question of a two way channel. The minister is arranging to build a second channel at the Welland locks, presumably one for upstream and one for downstream traffic. What about the lower part of the St. Lawrence seaway? This was another of the items upon which there was agreement between the Seafarers International Union, the underwriters and the ship owners. They agreed on the necessity of providing a two way channel. There was also agreement on the question of radio telephone communication and the necessity for a traffic control system.

We must be told clearly and concisely what is happening in the department with regard to these matters and what the minister is doing about them. There is also the overriding and important question of drafting and promulgating regulations under section 410 (1) (n) concerning the level of manning of ships so that people can see what is the legal minimum requirement for numbers and classifications of crew personnel on ships.

All of these measures, are designed for one purpose, to save the lives of people who man the ships that sail in and out of the ports of Montreal, Quebec and those on the Great Lakes. Maybe my words are harsh. Perhaps the minister has felt a little uncomfortable. Perhaps I have said things in an angry tone of voice. But just think, Mr. Minister, of the feelings of the widows of men who have lost their lives on that blessed seaway partly because of your failure to act, partly because we have a Canada Shipping Act that is older almost than these halls of parliament and contains provisions that are out of date. We have provisions that give the Governor General in Council authority to do things and they have not done them. Answers are required, action is required, but we need action more than answers.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I cannot take very much more action at the moment than to give the committee the statement which I indicated I had with me the other day but which I had no time to give. In view of what the hon. gentleman has said this afternoon I think I have no choice now but to give the statement, though it is somewhat lengthy.

[Mr. Howard.]

Before I do so may I say I am grateful to the hon. gentleman for giving me this editorial from the Montreal Star, because I inadvertently left my copy in my office. I want to point out that the editorial is completely and totally inaccurate in one of its statements when it says that I blandly—I do not know that I have ever done anything blandly but I am not making a point of that—assured parliament that traffic control on most parts of the seaway is as complete as it is anywhere in the world.

Mr. Howard: That is right.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member for Skeena did not make a distinction in his speech the other day, though I tried to get him to do so, between the seaway and the St. Lawrence ship channel, which are two entirely different things. One is above Montreal and the other is below Montreal. I never said at any time that I was satisfied with the control on the St. Lawrence ship channel.

Mr. Howard: I never said you did.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, you did.

Mr. Howard: I did not.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, we will not argue about it like two small children.

Mr. Howard: Just arguing like one small child is enough.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am not satisfied and neither is anyone in my department with the conditions on the St. Lawrence ship channel, and I have never said I was. But if the hon. gentleman looks back to his speech he will see that he kept referring to the seaway, not to the ship channel. There were almost no accidents on the seaway last year because on the seaway there is a good and efficient control system. There were a regrettably large number of accidents in the ship channel and even in one or two cases in the port of Montreal itself, and a lot remains to be done before we can be satisfied with the provisions for safety.

As the hon. member pointed out, the government has received representations from a number of sources. He also referred to the meeting held in Montreal. Long before that meeting was held and ever since the department has been giving attention to every aspect of marine safety, and with the unfortunate sequence of serious collisions in the St. Lawrence River last year particluar attention has been paid to this area.

Various suggestions have been made for improvements in the law and in our procedures and facilities. All of these have received and will continue to receive not merely attention but wherever it is possible to take immediate action which seems to be justified that action will be taken.

I should like first of all to say a word about the separate ship channel system which is advocated by many of the users. One proposal that is frequently made is that in the interests of safety there should be duplicate channels in the St. Lawrence, one for upbound and another for downbound traffic.

The problem in this connection is, first, to determine by hydraulic studies whether the project is capable of achievement without materially disturbing the level of the river and, second, its cost. Both of these processes have been going on. A scale model of the whole river channel is being built so that we can make sure that these very costly works, if they are undertaken, will accomplish what we want and not make the situation worse instead of better.

Studies in this field are being pursued, and so far as we can judge the cost would probably be as much as $225 million. Until we are quite sure of the effects on the water levels and on the strength and direction of the currents, this huge program cannot be embarked upon without the risk that the situation will be made worse rather than better.

• (3:30 p.m.)

In 1967 the channel will be a minimum of 800 feet in width throughout its length except for a 20 mile stretch in Lake St. Peter where flow studies are being made prior to widening. By re-enforcing the requirement for upbound and downbound ships each to keep to their own side we have a practical achievement of dual tracks in the existing system. However, it is apparent that additional and up to the minute information is required by the ships using the channel in order that collision with other ships may be avoided. I may say, answering the question raised by the hon. gentleman, that during the past 12 months the department has given intensive study to the traffic information and control system whereby a network of experimental shore-based v.h.f.—I believe that means very high frequency—radio stations has been established along the river from Montreal to Quebec. If our feasibility studies prove successful permanent equipment will be installed and the system will be expanded to the limit of pilotage waters at Les Escoumins.

In the meantime ships which already are fitted with v.h.f. sets will be able to communicate with these existing stations during the next navigation season. Procedures are being developed to enable the latest information on traffic movements and weather conditions to be given to the ships in the system. Commencing with this traffic information service, the department expects to widen the scope of traffic surveillance and eventually to institute traffic control on a planned basis from Montreal to the open sea.

The next question has to do with the matter of radios on ships.

We have tried before and are renewing our efforts to encourage bridge to bridge communication between the large ships using the St. Lawrence system. Here we would take advantage of the fact that most of the foreign ships and all of our own lake ships using the river are fitted with v.h.f. radiotelephone sets. Until such time as the remaining ships are fitted the department has the ability to provide portable sets suitable for bridge to bridge communication, but not giving a full capability in ship to shore transmission in all parts of the river. We are working toward the introduction of a system of compulsory transmission of security calls at specified points as an additional aid to collision avoidance in the St. Lawrence.

The next question has to do with speed limits. Proposals which have been made to effect a general reduction of speed for vessels in these waters have been given careful consideration but, similar to other proposals for mandatory speed restriction to a fixed figure in conditions of limited visibility, the department feels that the extreme variety of ships and local conditions preclude formulation of such rigid rules, which, incidentally if they did exist, would be quite hard to enforce effectively. In a river such as the St. Lawrence the speed of each vessel is best governed individually through the advice of the local Canadian pilot to the ship's master. Although the relative speed of vessels in collision is a major factor in the seriousness of the resulting damage, a general reduction of speed for all ships in specified waters does not reduce the number of collision encounters requiring evasive action. The best aid to proper evasive action is preparedness for the encounter, which the department intends to provide by its traffic information service and by promoting direct bridge to bridge communication between ships.

The next question has to do with manning and the scale of manning. It has been submitted, and the department has been seriously concerned with this aspect, that recent casualities have been caused by the lack of sufficient people aboard the ships. By regular inspections the officers of the department continue to enforce the provisions of the Canada Shipping Act requiring that every ship be sufficiently and efficiently manned. On the basis of studies made by the department the manning of ships is not held to be a contributing factor in the shipping casualties which have occurred in the St. Lawrence. Studies are continuing into the most effective employment of the men aboard ships and whether more formal requirements for watchkeeping duties should be laid down.

Because of the vast changes which are now being wrought in the shipping industry through the introduction of new and sophisticated methods of ship control, it would be inappropriate for the department to confirm manning standards which are based upon obsolescent concepts. What must now be done is to ensure that our studies keep pace with predictable trends in automation so that changes in manning can be anticipated and suitable provisions made.

The next question has to do with helmsmen. In respect of proposals which have been made to put Canadian helmsmen aboard foreign ships in pilotage waters, the department is satisfied that there have been no accidents attributable to a failure of communication between the pilot, the ship's officers and foreign crewmen at the ship's helm. It is preferable in narrow waters and here I am simply passing on the advice that has been given to me, to have a seaman who is thoroughly familiar with the handling characteristics of the ship rather than a local man put aboard a strange ship. Experience in steering is gained by the crew of a ship over a period of time in the open waters of the oceans before arrival in Canada and we cannot expect that a local man would require any less experience on each particular ship.

As to training, the training of Canadian seafarers is a matter about which the department has long been concerned, in the past by sponsoring nautical schools which the provincial governments now operate under the federal-provincial vocational training schemes.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Examination and certification of ships' officers and crewmen is conducted by the department and, based on the examination syllabi, guidance is given to the nautical schools in the matter of training programs.

We are waiting and still await, most impatiently I might say, because I have made some inquiries about this recently, the report of the Royal Commission on Pilotage, which was appointed by the previous government and which, I take it, must be doing a very thorough job, before turning attention to the problems inherent in the training and examination of pilots. In the wake of the vast changes in navigation techniques and current improvements in ship equipment, attendance at courses such as that for radar observer has been encouraged. This sort of training is especially necessary for those men who gained their qualifications before the general introduction of radar as a navigation and collision avoidance aid.

The department has under consideration a compulsory certification in radar observing for masters, mates and pilots, with periodic re-examination. But this, with the attendant increase in training facilities and administration, will be only a part of a long term project to keep certification standards for seafarers abreast of the times. For seamen there already exists the qualification as an A.B., able-bodied seaman, which some salt-water seamen have obtained. Work is progressing on a revision of the syllabus for this certificate so that men on our inland waters ships will be encouraged to improve their standing.

Qualification in marine emergency duties is another subject which the department has been anxious to see included in the syllabus of the nautical schools. This qualification would be open to all members of the crew. Extension of the training syllabus for lifeboatmen is another matter now under review and a revision of this certificate of qualification may be made in company with the other innovations under study. These are the department's proposals which will certainly be brought forward by the minister as soon as it has been determined that the proposals made are sound.

We propose to put forward amendments to the Canada Shipping Act with a view to extending to foreign ships in Canadian waters the requirement for reporting wreck, collision and accident. At the present time this requirement includes only Canadian and other Commonwealth ships. The department is rapidly training a number of officers, competent in the nautical field, to investigate marine casualties and accidents aboard ship in order to provide a much wider exercise of the powers conferred by the act in respect of the enforcement of safety regulations. Legal officers of the department will be assisted by specialized teams so that where warranted the department can move swiftly to learn the immediate causes of accidents and take corrective measures.

I think it will be seen from the outline I have given that the most serious attention has been paid to this problem. Its gravity is certainly underlined by the record of accidents and the loss of life in these accidents, which I regret as much as the hon. member does, during the last navigation season. It should not be forgotten in this context that the volume of shipping is rising at a rapid rate. The situation in this respect is not very different from the situation on the highways. When the volume of shipping in narrow waters increases the prospect of accidents does not only increase arithmetically but more than arithmetically; opportunities for collision are more than arithmetically greater, as hon. members know.

One of the great problems in enforcing traffic control on these waters is that it is not as easy to have speed cops as it is on the roads. Nearly all effective controls have to be directed from the shore. It is also true that the weather has been a contributing factor in the case of most of these accidents. Here again we are constantly seeking to improve the meteorological service and to make the benefits of forecasting available to shipping on a better basis than has been possible in the past. A great deal of progress has been made in this field. Nevertheless, as the hon. member for Saint John-Albert and I well know, the fog often comes down when the weatherman has not predicted it.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I do not know what the minister is talking about when he talks of fog.

Mr. Pickersgill: I can understand that, coming from the hon. gentleman.

The one controversial question is whether the law or the regulations made under the law should lay down conditions for the over-all manning of ships or whether the conditions laid down in this field should be selective. It has been the view of the department up to now that selective regulations devoted exclusively to the safety of the ship are better than over-all regulations governing every man who is to be on the ship. I have been informed—I may be wrong about this—that in the United Kingdom there is not in fact detailed legal regulation of the manning of ships and that apart from those regulations which are required for the safety of ships manning is generally and largely a matter of collective bargaining. But we are continuing to look at this matter. I am informed by those who have studied it carefully that the investigations into the accidents which have taken place so far have produced little or no evidence that undermanning as such has been the cause. In those cases where causes could be clearly ascertained the accidents were nearly always the result of other factors.

It is true that radar has developed rapidly and has become more sophisticated. Unfortunately there are many ships' officers and even pilots who received their certificates some time ago and may not have advanced their training as rapidly as would be desirable in order to make the best possible use of these modern devices. I can assure the hon. member that we are taking every possible action in this field as fast as we can be sure that what we do is going to improve the situation.

Mr. Howard: I should like to make a passing comment, if I may. I am very happy that the department is considering all these things. Every statement which the minister made about every aspect of difficulty was to the effect that the matter was under study, was being examined, and that it had been under study for many years. Somewhere along the line it is necessary to get out of the study stage and do something.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sure the hon. gentleman does not want to be unfair. I told him we had in operation an experimental system along the shore between Montreal and Quebec using radios. We made radios available to those ships which did not already have them. I said they were required on all Canadian ships and that we were doing our best to have them installed on foreign ships using the channel where this could be done without undue interference with commerce. This is one of the points the hon. member raised. I also told him we were doing a practical study on the matter of two channels, and I do not think he would suggest we should consider letting contracts for something which might make the situation worse instead of better.

Mr. Howard: If the minister would not be so touchy and let me finish, perhaps we could deal with this question more rapidly. I say again I am happy that these matters are under study and consideration. What the minister told me was that the two items he mentioned were under study. He said that when he jumped up.

Mr. Pickersgill: They are in operation. The hon. gentleman is almost deliberately misrepresenting me.

Mr. Howard: I can understand the sensitivity of the minister in this field where he is vulnerable. But perhaps, Mr. Chairman, you would have him contain himself for a moment. Let us consider what happens in the confined space of the St. Lawrence River or in the larger space of the Gulf of St. Lawrence. Never mind the upper part which is probably correctly called the seaway. One ship travelling without radio communication facilities where there are other ships is like a car travelling without lights on a high speed highway at night. An experimental venture is not enough. If the minister is serious about the subject of radiotelephone communication between ships and a central traffic control system on shore, there must be compulsion and all ships must be required to use the radio communication system so that every ship may know where every other ship is. One ship without it is a liability.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is quite true.

Mr. Howard: The minister says that is quite true. To my mind, what he is doing in these experiments is just another form of study, another way of examining this question. Why does he not take the steps which he knows must be taken and make this a mandatory requirement, if it is considered to be a worth-while safety measure, which it is in my opinion and that of everyone else who has gone into this question?

• (3:50 p.m.)

The minister himself drew an analogy between travelling at sea and travelling on a highway. There is not any hesitation whatsoever by any provincial government or by any state of the union in the United States of America, if that is where proper jurisdiction lies, in saying that all cars travelling on highways at night must have their lights on, because they recognize it is a safety measure which is required in order to help preserve the lives of others. If the analogy is correct in the one sense I submit it is correct in the other and that one blind ship travelling on the system is a hindrance to all other ships that may be travelling there.

A radio and television aid to navigation system is operated in New York harbour which involves u.h.f., the ultra-high frequency band. The area of water through which ships travel is scanned by groups of television cameras and information is transmitted to a particular type of receiver on the ships so that each ship can see at any precise moment what is happening around it in the area through which it is travelling.

Radar can be very misleading when it is relied on alone, because there is a blind spot in its coverage. This blind spot depends on the size of the ship and the height of the radar antenna. The blind spot covers a radius of many hundreds of feet for which area nothing is shown on the radarscope and in foggy weather or when visibility is low because of rain or mist this blind spot area is most crucial and dangerous. Knowing that a ship is proceeding some distance away is all right but not knowing what is within a 500, 600 or 700 foot radius is most disconcerting. Radar cannot show that but radio communication between ships can pinpoint other vessels in the area.

Mr. Groos: I think you are getting out of your depth, Frank.

Mr. Howard: I do not have the experience at sea which the hon. member had. All I did was to travel about on a small fish boat, but perhaps my hon. friend with his great experience may be able to enlighten the committee and bring his knowledge about these matters to bear on the minister, which could be worth while.

Mr. Groos: I am satisfied with the answers he has given.

Mr. Howard: The hon. member may be satisfied with the answers the minister has given but I have been in this chamber long enough to know that the very kindly and genial Minister of Transport never says anything plainly. I have come to expect that I must always take what he says with a grain of salt because I find that he always leaves something to be desired. He sets out on a course, as he did a while ago, of using a superfluity of words to cover up a paucity of information, and I must congratulate him on the success he achieves. But what we are concerned about is not words, we are concerned about the lives of the people who sail the ships. I take the minister's word that he is concerned about them but I wish he would do something instead of just talking about the matter and explaining the studies and examinations which are being conducted in his department.

What we need is some action. Speeches are cheap. They do not cost anything to make, especially when somebody else writes them for you. In passing may I say that this is the only time in my memory I have ever seen the minister read from a prepared text, and I assume it was prepared for him. Speeches which are written by others come cheaper than ones you write yourself.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am not so sure about that.

Mr. Howard: Please, Mr. Minister, do something worth while and concrete. Get cracking with your department. Snap them out of their lethargy. You know the way the civil service operates. You were in it yourself. It consists of professional status quo seekers. So long as things are not upset and everything runs along on an even keel, the keel they want things to run on, they are satisfied. There are very few progressives within the civil service structure primarily because the structure of a department itself suppresses progressives. As a former civil servant the minister will know exactly what I am talking about, but he broke out of the confines of the civil service some years ago and is now in another sphere.

I wish the minister would take to heart what I have said. Whether I am inside my depth or outside it does not matter. What matters are the lives of the people who sail the ships, and it is the minister's responsibility under the Canada Shipping Act to do something about the problem. All we ask him to do is act.

Mr. Pickersgill: I hope the hon. member will permit me just one second to say I made a mistake, as he pointed out and ridiculed me for doing. The other day I was sent a note giving the section of the act. I thought the note read "164" but the section I was referring to and should have given is section 114. I think this is the kind of mistake even ministers can make and apologize for.

Mr. Howard: I have only one comment to make. That is also what comes from reading speeches prepared by others.

Mr. Pickersgill: It was not a speech, it was a note.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I should like to call the minister's attention to another matter and I shall try to do it with less pettiness than the previous speaker, the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard). After all, courtesy is always at home in the house.

Mr. Chairman, I should like the minister to make a statement regarding winter navigation on the St. Lawrence river. For several years, mention has been made of winter navigation on the St. Lawrence—I mean from Montreal to the Atlantic—and I feel it is time now that the Department of Transport take a stand on this matter.

Is it the intention to continue closing our eyes to this problem or does the Minister of Transport intend to make a decision some day on opening the St. Lawrence, one of the greatest waterways, to year-round navigation?

Has the Department of Transport a definite policy or will a decision be made soon? I am asking a short question and I hope the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) can answer today.

If the Department of Transport does not want to make a decision on this question, could the Quebec government use its own icebreakers to keep winter navigation open on the St. Lawrence?

I think this is a direct question and I should like a statement from the minister on this matter.

[English]

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, it is quite easy for me to make a declaration but when I have made it I do not think the hon. gentleman will agree with the policy. However, I feel quite sure that the hon. member for Saint John-Albert, who is listening to me with undivided attention, will agree with what I say.

Up to the present it has been the view of the government of Canada that icebreaking activities on the St. Lawrence River in wintertime should not extend to any attempt to keep navigation open between Quebec and Montreal. But there is a great deal of icebreaking activity, as the hon. member knows, that has to go on between Quebec and Montreal in order to prevent flooding, of which, in spite of our best efforts, we have had some regrettable examples this winter at the east end of the island of Montreal and along the shores of the St. Lawrence.

I am happy to say that situation is a great deal better than it was and we have been able to keep the ferry open between the north and south shore at Sorel. We also have to deal with the whole problem of the flow of the river itself. We regard that as a function which we must make the maximum effort to perform efficiently. I am not saying anything at all about whether it would be fair or unfair to the east coast ports, but the cost of ice-breaking to keep Montreal as a virtually ice-free harbour, or at least a useable harbour for 12 months of the year, has up to know been considered to be too heavy a charge on the taxpayers in relation to the advantage that there would be from the commerce that would result from it.

• (4:00 p.m.)

I feel quite sure that, in time and as methods improve this situation will require review. However, I do not know what the results of such a future review might be. I do hope we will reach the time very quickly when the ports of Halifax and Saint John will be so busy because of the great development in that part of Canada that they will not be concerned in the least about the traffic that comes from what they call Upper Canada and will not care if Montreal harbour is open 24 months of the year. At the present time we must realize that if the taxpayers' money is used freely to keep the St. Lawrence open to Montreal and these taxes continue to be collected in the cities of Saint John and Halifax and perhaps in some other ports that are kept open by nature, the people would feel that they had a real grievance. This involves one of the many problems we have in attempting to preserve a fair balance between various parts of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask another very definite question. Can the minister tell us if an investigation was made, if studies were made to find out how much it would cost to keep the St. Lawrence channel open, by means of icebreakers, between Montreal and Quebec City? Can the minister tell us if studies were made to find out what the eventual volume of traffic would be on the St. Lawrence if navigation were maintained the year round? Can the minister give us the findings of that investigation with regard to the cost and the increase in traffic?

[English]

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think there has been any really up to date study of this matter. There are a great many studies going on all the time and I will have to obtain advice in this regard before I can be sure of giving a correct answer to that question. I will look into the situation right away and reply to the hon. gentleman.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: What surprises me is that the minister should tell us that the cost would be prohibitive, when he does not even know how much it would be exactly. In my opinion, that is characteristic of the mentality that prevails in this regard. It is not the cost which seems to bother or displease him. I feel it is not a matter of comparing the work done in the eastern ports of Halifax and Saint John but of finding out why the channel on the St. Lawrence is not kept open the year round, since we are having difficulty with the shipping of wheat.

Three weeks ago, a Russian ship had to help a Canadian ship ice-bound on the St. Lawrence near Montreal. The Russians are doing the work of the Canadian icebreakers in the Montreal harbour. That does not make sense.

The Russians get through, and many other European ships built for navigation through ice are already at work. One or two extra icebreakers would be needed to keep the river open.

The minister said it would cost too much, but he does not know how much.

I wonder if the minister is not doing anything about it because he is afraid of offending some people. It is not a question of taking anything away from the Maritimes but of helping the port of Montreal and other ports between Quebec and Montreal, including the ports of Sorel and Three Rivers, by opening the St. Lawrence to winter navigation. Would the federal Department of Transport object to the provincial government using its own icebreakers? Has the minister anything to say about that?

[English]

Mr. Pickersgill: So long as the government of the province of Quebec complied with the general laws of Canada in respect of navigation, which I am sure they would do if they had any ships, I know of nothing in the law which would prevent them from engaging in that kind of activity. I know of nothing in the law that would prevent any private company from doing so and, indeed, there are many private companies, as I am sure the hon. gentleman knows, which do own icebreakers or ships that are also icebreakers and are used in that way in their ordinary commerce. As a matter of fact, the department welcomes that kind of activity because we have never been able to persuade the Minister of Finance and the Treasury Board to put up enough money to provide us with all the icebreakers we would like to have.

I am sure the hon. member for Saint John-Albert would agree with me that if there is not a study already in existence we should make a study of the costs and the benefits which would accrue. After all, the Atlantic Development Board did initiate a study of the disabilities that would be suffered by Halifax and Saint John if winter navigation took place on the St. Lawrence, and the taxpayers' money was used for that study. I am sure the hon. member for Saint John-Albert, like myself and the hon. member for Lapointe, likes the truth and we would all be very glad to have such a study made so that we would know what the cost would be and have the best possible estimate of the benefits. I will ascertain whether we have good information in that regard in our possession. If we do not have that information I will see whether we can get something under way to obtain it.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Could the minister tell us when this inquiry will begin, this study of winter navigation?

[English]

Mr. Pickersgill: That information may already exist but if it does not we will undertake to make such a study just as soon as we can find someone competent and obtain the necessary funds.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Chairman, on the same subject—

The Chairman: Order, please. The Chair recognizes the hon. member for Trois-Rivières.

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I am very interested in this study, as well as in the comments of my colleague from Lapointe, because now there is in fact winter navigation up to Trois-Rivières. I repeat that there has been winter navigation in my region for several years and I have even had the opportunity to look into the matter in the last few years.

I also appeared in the city of Halifax on a televised forum with those in charge of the port of Halifax, at which time I tried to prove to them that winter navigation up to Trois-Rivières does in no way harm the Maritime ports but help to develop transportation by cargo-boat in all eastern Canada.

There are two points I want to make in connection with the remarks of my colleague, the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire), who advocates winter navigation as far as Montreal. Since I have been looking into this matter myself for seven or eight years, I am led to believe that winter navigation as far as Montreal is not yet economically feasible. He mentioned earlier that a Russian icebreaker went to the help of a Canadian ship, but if he reads the press reports, he will find that the Russian icebreaker was ice-bound itself.

Therefore, it seems impossible, from a practical point of view, that this problem could be overcome within a few years, which would justify a further study.

I should like to remind the hon. minister that there are ferry services at Quebec and Trois-Rivières that require the federal government icebreakers to keep the channel open the year round. No additional cost to the Department of Transport is involved in keeping the channel open since it must be done to maintain the service in operation.

Having said this, I claim that if navigation is open as far as Trois-Rivières, the Maritimes will not be deprived in any way, and at the proper time, I shall make public the results of the enquiry I am making. With the industrial development shaping up in the Trois-Rivières area due to the construction of Sidbec and related industries to follow, I say the Department of Transport should keep the channel freer still to allow navigation as far as Trois-Rivières. This will not cost more to the Canadian taxpayer and it will be a factor in the development of commercial and industrial shipping from Maritime ports up to Trois-Rivières. I repeat that I see no objection to opening the channel the year round as far as Montreal, but I feel this may be slightly premature, and I doubt that it can be done the year round.

• (4:10 p.m.)

[English]

The Chairman: The hon. member for Saint John-Albert.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the minister whether he has been able to resolve a problem in which we are both interested. When an icebreaker, which is paid for by the Canadian taxpayers goes to break ice in the St. Lawrence in order to avoid flooding, why is it that the greatest coincidence in the world suddenly occurs, namely, that there is a merchant ship right behind waiting to get into the port of Montreal. While the minister is thinking about that question and his answer I would simply say that I have resisted the opportunity to get into a wide-open debate on icebreaking because my thoughts on this subject are well known and have been expressed over many years.

The hon. member for Lapointe has spoken many times in the house on Quebec matters. I suppose that we can tolerate this but he had better be careful when he moves into this field and suggests things that will work to the detriment of the Maritimes. If he does so he will really get into trouble. The hon. member for Lapointe suggests that it might be all right to spend a little more money on the port of Montreal. When you consider the situation in Halifax and Saint John you realize that Montreal is not doing too badly now judging by the size of the Expo bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: In this connection, I want to say that the threats of the hon. member for Saint John-Albert (Mr. Bell) do not scare me.

I am not pressing for winter navigation on the St. Lawrence to hurt the Maritimes or the port of Halifax. There is nothing wrong with the federal government spending as much as it sees fit to help the port of Halifax, but this should not prevent it from helping other ports.

The hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain) said earlier that he was in favour of winter navigation up to Trois-Rivières, but not any farther.

Why, Mr. Chairman—I ask my friend the member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain)—why such parochial spirit, such regionalism, when Quebec as a whole is concerned in this matter, and winter navigation to Montreal will help the port of Trois-Rivières as well as that of Quebec City?

I come from Quebec, Mr. Chairman, and I do not ask that winter navigation stop at Quebec City; no, I am asking that the river be kept open to Montreal and, later on, to the lakehead if possible. I would be delighted, because that is progress: Improving the means of communication and transportation, especially the most economical, that is, waterways.

I am not asking that it should stop at Quebec City or at Trois-Rivières, but that it should go as far as Montreal, and, if possible, use the seaway to Toronto. That would contribute even more to the development of the whole country.

But, in the meantime, one thing can be done, that is to keep the St. Lawrence ice free as far as Montreal.

The minister tells us that he will have an investigation made. I hope it will not take too long, so that next year, when the centennial of confederation comes around, the study will at least be completed and it will be possible to take action, that is keep the channel ice free to allow year round navigation on the St. Lawrence.

Mr. Chairman, if the Minister of Transport will give me his attention for another minute, I would ask him to do the same kind of study and analysis about winter navigation on the Saguenay as far as Port Alfred.

I asked the same question when item No. 1 was being considered. I wonder if the Minister has any comments to make about winter navigation on the Saguenay. I see him nodding his head. He might have some remarks to make immediately, if not, I would ask him to tell us at least that the possibility of opening the harbour at Port Alfred the year round, will be studied.

[English]

Mr. Pickersgill: I intend to look into that question, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to detain the committee very long. There are just three matters that I wish to bring to the attention of the minister and his department. A few minutes ago the minister said that he did not think he ever did anything gladly. I wish to refute that statement now, Mr. Chairman, and thank him for his co-operation in helping us in Prince Edward county to preserve the ancient remains of a venerated aid to navigation, namely, the False Ducks lighthouse. I think the minister must surely have done this gladly and I want to thank him.

Mr. Pickersgill: When did I say that I did not do anything gladly?

Mr. Alkenbrack: I wish to thank the minister for responding to the representations I made on behalf of the Prince Edward Historical Society because the president of that society, Mr. David Taylor, and his committee were determined to save the superstructure of that old lighthouse. It was the first lighthouse built on Lake Ontario and dates back to somewhere between 1825 and 1830. The South Marysburg Historical Society is going to mount this portion of the building on the shore of the bay as a memorial to the mariners of Prince Edward county who have served in sailing ships and steamboats since 1785.

Under vote No. 5, Mr. Chairman, I would draw to the minister's attention the need for an aid to navigation in my area. Another old and venerable port is concerned here. We have heard quite a bit about the ports of the Maritimes and of the St. Lawrence estuary this afternoon. I now refer to the port of Bath, which dates back to 1785, situated on the Bay of Quinte. I have a communication here which emphasizes the need for an aid to navigation in this port. It is a letter from one of the councillors of Bath and I am sure the minister will heed this request. The letter reads:

> Would you please ask the Department of Transport officials to instal a water navigational marker buoy which has a light on it to mark the shoal out from the Village of Bath. This would replace the wooden spar buoy which is there now.
> Last evening there was a near tragedy here involving two local youths who struck the unlighted spar buoy with their new, expensive boat. The boat was badly damaged. I know of two other people who have collided with this buoy at night.
>
> The boat traffic has increased greatly in this area—

In this area of the Bay of Quinte:

> —in the past few years and I feel, in the interest of boating safety, this dangerous shoal should be marked with a lighted buoy. Please give this matter your earliest attention.

This letter is signed by Mr. Don Turner of Bath and I would assure the minister that I can vouch for the good opinion held of Mr. Turner. He is a member of the village council whose opinion is highly respected. I am sure the department will take action to remove this hazard to life and limb before the opening of navigation this spring.

• (4:20 p.m.)

The next matter with which I wish to deal under vote No. 5 concerns the item for canals administration, operation and maintenance. This question concerns the bridge over the Murray Canal which carries highway No. 33 from the mainland into Prince Edward County. The bridge is in Northumberland County and it is not within my constituency. However, it serves principally my constituency of Prince Edward-Lennox. This bridge over the Murray Canal which carries No. 33 highway does not have the capacity to carry heavy machinery and heavily loaded trucks such as are in use today. It is limited to light loads. I ask that the government instal a bridge of sufficient carrying capacity at that point. The present bridge is hampering the flow of commerce to and from Prince Edward County because it is at the western entrance to that county. I trust my request will be given careful consideration as soon as possible. I could be of assistance to the department in that connection in that I have some correspondence in my office pertaining to and supporting this request which I would gladly turn over to the department for their attention.

This is the full complement of items to which I wish to refer under this particular vote. Before I resume my seat, Mr. Chairman, I should like to take this opportunity to congratulate you on your elevation to your new position. I have not had that opportunity previously so I take it now.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to tell the hon. gentleman that I will look into all these points gladly.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): I should like to ask the minister a question arising out of a statement he made a few minutes ago to the member for Lapointe. The hon. member inquired if it would be possible to have icebreakers on the St. Lawrence throughout the winter and the minister answered that it would be quite expensive, that he did not have the necessary money and he wished that the Minister of Finance would consider giving his department more money. Since the minister seemed to indicate that he had already asked for money for that purpose, would he tell the house how much it would cost? The hon. member for Lapointe asked that question but the minister did not answer. He probably forgot, and if he did I should like to give him the opportunity to answer now. How much would it take to maintain these icebreaking operations on the St. Lawrence throughout the winter?

Mr. Pickersgill: It would take a great deal more than just icebreakers to maintain continuous navigation on the St. Lawrence. The plain answer is that I was not able to tell the hon. member for Lapointe. If we do not have an adequate study of the matter now, I will have one as soon as I can get a competent person to do it and a little money to pay for it. Such a study should not cost a large amount of money.

Mr. Peters: I do not intend to say much about this item since it does not really affect my riding, as the hon. member for Kootenay West has just informed me. I am concerned, Mr. Chairman, about the answers the minister has given to two or three questions. He indicated in reply to a question about safety on the St. Lawrence seaway and through to the head of the lakes that a survey has been under way and there has been considerable discussion about the aids to navigation that should be installed and how they can be applied. Another question related to a survey conducted into keeping the St. Lawrence open for navigation during the winter and the relationship to the economy of the Maritimes ports.

I am sure the minister has people in the galleries who know about these surveys. He has not had them on the floor with him even though he is permitted to do so to obtain the necessary advice. It seems to me that if the minister agrees that a survey should be conducted he is also going to have to agree that the results be published. If these results were available I am sure many hon. members would be interested in them and many of these questions could be eliminated. When these estimates are under discussion I feel it is extremely unsatisfactory to find that the results of such surveys as the one into the economic effects on the Maritimes of keeping the lower St. Lawrence open throughout the winter are not available. There are people in the galleries who can tell us about these things.

A number of very good questions have been asked and they probably could have been answered easily if the results of some of these surveys had been available. I am well aware of the fact that the minister has an extremely large department. I am well aware also that the department has many branches which are not really related. However, it may be possible for the minister to consider having these various branches publish reports on their various programs and these surveys. I am thinking particularly of the survey with regard to safety on the Great Lakes. I am sure every member in this house has received requests for information from people who have had various aspects of the matter brought to their attention by reason of knowing someone who works on the seaway and having heard about accidents taking place. Many of these hon. members are not so concerned that they want to know all the details of the programs but I suggest that the publishing of the survey results would be of help. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the discussion which has taken place thus far has been completely unsatisfactory.

[Mr. Peters.]

It has been unsatisfactory because we have not been able to get any answers. We undertake a survey at one time and when the estimates come up again we still have no results from the survey. I suggest to the minister that there should be reports published by the various branches of the Department of Transport and that they be tabled at the first of the year as many departmental reports are. This would give members an opportunity of being informed and perhaps avoid the necessity for questions.

Mr. Pickersgill: The studies with regard to the disabilities of the ports of Halifax and Saint John were made by the Atlantic Development Board. They have been published and to the best of my recollection they have been tabled in the house. I will get copies of them and send them to the hon. gentleman.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, item 5 now under discussion refers to canals coming under the Department of Transport.

I believe that this includes the Rideau canal, its locks and the Rideau river.

Mr. Chairman, you might point out that this matter is of no interest to my riding or to my province. True, it is in Ontario, but all the same, there is a beautiful river here in Ottawa, the Rideau river, a tourist attraction. A great number of tourists come from Montreal and the United States to the Rideau canal.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill). He must he aware that at present, the locks—there are approximately 39 between the Chateau Laurier and Kingston—are open until 8.30 p.m. during July and August, and only until 5.30 p.m. during the other months of navigation, that is in May, June and September.

This means that if one wants to go for a cruise on the Rideau river, which is a strong tourist attraction it is virtually impossible to do so because one comes upon locks every five or six miles from Ottawa to Kingston; in fact, there are 40 of them on the 123-mile stretch.

I wonder whether the minister would be ready to consider opening the locks on the Rideau canal, from May 1 to the end of September, from 7.00 a.m. to 11.00 p.m.

Besides, I believe that the maintenance men on the Rideau canal are year-round employees and therefore the cost to the Department of Transport would not necessarily be much higher and it would favour an entire area in Ontario. As I am equally interested in the development of Ontario as in that of my province, I think the minister could easily agree with that request. Could the minister comment on this?

• (4:30 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Pickersgill: I will be glad to look into the possibility of doing that.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): May I say to the minister that if there is any possibility that the hon. member for Lapointe might take one of these trips and not come back I am sure we would support his contention 100 per cent.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I want to interrupt only briefly because I see the deputy minister is now on the floor. A number of us have been wondering why the minister has not had the officials of each branch with him on the floor of the house. We can speed up the business if they are there to give answers to the minister to the questions raised.

Mr. Pickersgill: I appreciate this vote of confidence in the minister and I will see if I can get as many officials down here as I am allowed to have. I have been merely trying to speed up my estimates.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, with reference to the same matter, the minister tells us that he will look into the possibility of opening the locks until later hours. But the possibility is there; since they are opened during the day, it is possible.

Could the minister, after consulting with his officials, give us an answer on this before consideration of his estimates is concluded?

[English]

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not know whether I can make a decision about that, Mr. Chairman, before these estimates are passed. In fact, I hope I cannot. But I will certainly give the hon. gentleman a response on the estimates for next year. In any case it will be under those estimates that we will have to bear the expense.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Lapointe made a few statements which I think left a wrong impression. He said that I am against opening the St. Lawrence River as far as Montreal. I am very sympathetic to that but what I actually said was that opening the river to Montreal is now prohibited. In any event I think it is too soon to do so.

I do want to repeat for the benefit of my hon. friend from Saint John-Albert that opening the St. Lawrence River as far as Trois-Rivières has been done for years and years. It has to be opened up on account of the ferry systems operating at Quebec and Trois-Rivières. There is no additional cost involved in keeping it open all year. It also enables us to benefit from winter navigation and it does not take anything away from the Maritimes.

Mr. Howard: I wonder whether the minister would mind telling me something I understood him to say a while ago that the department has always required ships to be manned with crews which are sufficient and efficient from the point of view of safety of life. They are the words which, as I recall, are in section 407 of the Act. Can the minister tell me how you determine what is a crew sufficient and efficient?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I am informed that the steamship inspector, who of course is qualified for the position or he would not be holding it, makes the determination on the basis of the kind of ship and the kind of operation in which it is engaged. It would be quite difficult, having regard to the great variety of ships that ply our waters, to set these categories down precisely in advance. However, the steamship inspectors are very experienced people and the responsibility under the statute is clearly upon them.

Mr. Howard: I gather the minister does not know then how to clarify what is meant by the words "efficient and sufficient" except by taking the interpretation of the individual steamship inspector and what is in his mind at the time he looks at a particular ship. Is that correct?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am informed, Mr. Chairman, that that is the way it is done.

Mr. Howard: Well, it seems to me a terribly sloppy way to do things.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is much the same, of course, as the way medical doctors treat us.

Mr. Howard: I think from that statement, Mr. Chairman, that the minister needs a medical doctor, preferably one in the field of psychiatry. To leave it up to some individual, depending on the way he feels and his knowledge of the circumstances, to decide on the interpretation to be given to the words "a crew sufficient and efficient" from the point of view of safety of life is an asinine and sloppy way to approach things.

I am given to understand that this is a situation peculiar to Canada. Now that the minister has all these advisers in front of him and having consulted with the knowledgeable member for Victoria (B.C.) a while ago, can he tell me what is his intention with respect to developing regulations to determine manning levels on ships under section 410 (1) (n) of the Act?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I know it is very unwise of unlearned ministers to give legal advice to the house but as I read that section it does not make any provision for regulations to be made under it. The question whether there should be some general regulations with respect to manning is, as I indicated in the statement I gave a little while ago, under very active study. There are very experienced and competent people who have opposite views about this matter.

I may say that the only point of view from which this matter is regarded by the Department of Transport is from the point of view of safety of the ship and its crew. We do not think that the question of manning from the point of view of handling the cargo is a proper function of the Department of Transport. That is a proper matter for the owner of the ship and for collective bargaining with his employees.

So far as safety is concerned, if we are satisfied that precise prescriptions for the manning of ships will contribute substantially to safety we will ask parliament to provide the necessary authority to have those prescriptions made. But I suggest that even when that is done it will not be possible to put, either in the Act or in the regulations, a precise prescription for every conceivable type of vessel.

I may say that the hon. member for Victoria (B.C.) really knows something about this question. Unlike the hon gentleman and myself, who are just amateur sailors, he is a real professional, and I would be surprised if he would not agree with me that the House of Commons, or even the bureaucrats for whom the hon. gentleman has such contempt, would not be able to prescribe for every conceivable type of vessel precisely what complement each should have.

[Mr. Howard.]

Mr. Howard: It is too bad that the minister has to resort to calling the officials in front of him such nasty names. I did not. Could the minister tell me who it is who is making this particular study and who the two equally competent people are who hold divergent points of view about what should be done?

Mr. Pickersgill: The study is being made by the Department of Transport.

Mr. Howard: But by whom?

Mr. Pickersgill: I have to take the responsibility, and the abuse, for what is done. I have no intention of naming names of public servants. I am responsible for what they may produce and I will take the responsibility and the blame for it. Obviously I am going to take plenty from the hon. member for Skeena. I do not think that under our British system, defended so eloquently yesterday by the Leader of the Opposition, any other proper course can be taken by a minister.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, at the risk of opening up the rich field of debate having to do with icebreaking operations I should like to direct a few comments to the Minister of Transport.

A few years ago I suggested in this committee that if the St. Lawrence ports had to bear the weight of the direct cost of the icebreaking operations in the St. Lawrence River during the whole winter this would tend to equalize the competitive factors between the St. Lawrence ports and the more distant ports of Halifax, and Saint John vis-à-vis carrying traffic into the competitive markets of central Canada.

Apparently that formula would not really work today because the conditions of operation in the St. Lawrence are such, if the minister is correct, that ships find it fairly easy to get in the wake of an icebreaker and so make their way up the St. Lawrence River to Montreal, Trois-Rivières or other points on that river. I suggest that we are tackling this problem in a rather negative fashion.

It is being made to appear that the ports on the St. Lawrence River are of greater interest than the ports of Halifax and Saint John. Undoubtedly this is true over all in the sense of competition but not true over all in the sense that we may be able to work out a formula whereby both may benefit. May I put two things to the minister. First, let us get the officials of this department working on the cost of supplying a proper icebreaking service in the St. Lawrence River so that if year-round traffic is to be attained under any system of control, flood or otherwise, we will know what that cost is. Second, I hope that the minister and his officials will shortly look again at the reports coming out of the Maritimes as to the adverse factors that we face with regard to railway transportation in trying to be competitive with areas that are closer to the central and main markets of Canada. If we tackle this problem as one that has to be faced rather than one where you do not allow one area to have too much because this would seem to take away from another area, I think that this approach would be much better and healthier for Canadian development as a whole. It would also not leave us in the Maritimes in the rather invidious and unenviable position of seeming to be anti-Quebec and the people of Quebec seeming to be anti-Maritimes.

I would also refer to railway costs. I realize that strictly this is not germane but it is the other side of the equation. In this regard I would direct the minister's attention to what has been said recently by a professor of Dalhousie University.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I wanted to follow up some points with the minister. I appreciate his concern about keeping secret some things that go on in his department because this allows him to keep secret some things that do not go on too well. With reference to the studies and examinations that are being undertaken can he, with respect to any one of them, tell me when he expects the study will be completed?

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman was quite correct a few moments ago when he said that the answer I read to his first query had been prepared for me. It is our intention to consult with the various groups that we met at the Montreal meeting and with any other people who are interested with a view to seeking to reach an understanding about the priority in which these things should be proceeded with.

Mr. Howard: Can the minister say when this meeting will be?

Mr. Pickersgill: I hope to have it as soon as possible after the committee releases me. I am very grateful to the hon. gentleman for having the information put on Hansard so that in the meantime interested people will have a chance to read it.

Mr. Howard: If the minister is talking about the document from which he read, why is he thanking me? Is that the document he is talking about?

Mr. Pickersgill: That is right.

Mr. Howard: The minister thanks me for making it possible for him to put it on Hansard. I thought he would jump at the opportunity to take the initiative himself because of the importance of the matter.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman did not give me a chance.

Mr. Howard: I did not give him a chance? Surely, Mr. Chairman, the minister was champing at the bit the other night to get these estimates passed without discussion. Can the minister tell me what is being done with respect to lookouts on ships? As I understand from the letter that the deputy minister wrote, there is no requirement now to post a lookout. I think those were the words used. In other words, there is no person in the position of keeping a weather eye open for other ships. What is going to be done about that?

Mr. Pickersgill: I cannot give a final decision about that because it is one of the things on which we are going to consult those with whom we are to meet. This is one of the points on which there is a very sharp difference of opinion.

Mr. Howard: Yes, I can understand that. At the meeting that the minister has referred to which is going to take place, will there be a set agenda with particular points that the minister would like to have discussed or will it be a composite type of meeting embracing things which are already under consideration plus anything else that any other person may want to raise which may not have been dealt with before?

Mr. Pickersgill: I would say anything having regard to safety that any person directly concerned with this matter wants to raise will be raised.

Mr. Howard: May I mention another point to the minister. I understand that large numbers of sailors of French speaking origin are on some ships. I understand that under the Canada Shipping Act the regulations and documents which the ships are required to carry are in the English language only which makes it awkward for these sailors. That is the story as related to me. While on that subject may I also ask how many customs officers and steamship inspectors are bilingual in the area extending from west of Montreal down the river?

Mr. Pickersgill: May I point out that customs officers do not come under my jurisdiction. I should be very surprised if there were customs officers along the St. Lawrence who were not at least competent in French. They might not be so competent in English.

Mr. Howard: Could the minister answer the first part of my question?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am informed that the great majority of steamship inspectors are bilingual.

Mr. Howard: Can the minister answer the first part of the question dealing with Canada Shipping Act regulations being posted on ships in English only?

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think, in spite of the fact that I have advice in front of me, that I can answer as to how the regulations are posted. Copies of the Canada Shipping Act and the regulations made thereunder are available in both languages. There is no question about that.

Item agreed to.

Railways and Steamships—

15. Payments to the Canadian National Railway Company (hereinafter called the company) upon applications approved by the Minister of Transport made by the company to the Minister of Finance, to be applied by the company in payment of the deficits, certified by the auditors of the company, arising in the operations in the calendar year 1965 in respect of the following services: Newfoundland ferry and terminals; Prince Edward Island car ferry and terminals; Yarmouth, N.S.-Bar Harbor, Maine, U.S.A., ferry service, $14,778,400.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Chairman, may I make a few representations on Vote 15 to the minister concerning railway service between the cities of Sherbrooke and Quebec. It is a service owned by the Quebec Central and the Canadian Pacific. I am looking at item 15 and I have some doubts whether this will be in order.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think there was an understanding that the hon. member, having been good enough to allow the first item to go through last evening, could make his observations on one of the other votes. While it is true that this item does not directly relate to the particular railway I believe he has in mind, it does relate to railways and I hope the committee will give the hon. member its indulgence and allow him to make his observations on this vote.

[Mr. Howard.]

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): There seems to be a fuss about the railway service between Sherbrooke and Quebec City. In fact there is only one train a day in either direction. The intention now, it appears, is to close down this service completely. Trains Nos. 1, 4 and 2 will be affected. So there is to be no passenger service at all between Quebec and Sherbrooke.

This affects close to three quarters of a million people living in the cities I have mentioned and in the various towns along the route, a distance of some 150 miles. Closing down this service, when one takes into consideration the other facilities existing in the region, is possibly the stupidest thing anyone could do. This is the only rail passenger service we have in the district between Sherbrooke and Quebec City.

The railway company claims it does not have sufficient passengers. Well, there is a damn good reason for that. Up to July 1, 1965, a one way ticket from Thetford Mines to Quebec City—Thetford is about half way between Sherbrooke and Quebec—cost $2.95. A return ticket cost $5.35. Now the fare is $3.85 one way and $7.70 return. This amounts to an increase of 90 cents on the one way journey and $2.35 on the return journey.

I do not have the cost of travelling directly from Quebec to Sherbrooke but I have the rate from Sherbrooke, to Thetford, the midway point. Up to July 1, 1965 it cost $2.75 one way and $4.95 return. The rates are now $3.60 one way and $7.20 return or $2.25 more on the return ticket. The railways say they cannot get enough passengers. That is not surprising. They used to offer a week end fare for students enabling them to travel between Quebec and Sherbrooke for $4.40 return. This rate has been abolished and the fare is $7.20 return. This is one good reason there are fewer passengers on that train.

Let me compare the rates charged by the C.N.R. on one train and by the C.P.R. on another. The C.N.R. rate from Sherbrooke to Montreal is $2.60. The other company charges $3.35 for the same journey. Furthermore there is only one connection, except on Sunday, which one can make to go to Montreal when travelling from Quebec via Sherbrooke to Montreal. It is necessary to stay over night in Sherbrooke and take the morning train to Montreal. That is the case except on Sunday night. I know this service. I have to use it to get here. I leave Thetford Mines and get to Quebec City in the morning. It is only 300 miles but I arrive here at 9.30 at night because I have to cover more than 130 miles to catch a train in Quebec and then travel that mileage again along the north shore.

People do not take kindly to a policy of this kind. They do not take the train unless they are obliged to do so. I think this company does everything in its power not to get passengers. In the first place they cannot provide a decent sandwich. The sandwiches are not edible. I wonder how anyone can chew them and still digest them. I think they pick them up somewhere after they have gone stale. There is no coffee service. Sometimes travellers can get a Pepsi but the supply often runs out during the trip. Remember, people have to sit on this train for four hours.

Yet this is what the pamphlet calls a fast dayliner. That is ironic. It is 150 miles between Quebec and Sherbrooke but it takes this train four hours. The speed works out to 37½ miles an hour, slower than the first C.P.R. trains which steamed across Canada in 1885. Nevertheless there are representations from Sherbrooke, Quebec, Thetford and all the other towns along this line in favour of maintaining this service. It is the only one. It is still a necessity in this region. The company wants to close it down. It is doing everything in the book to prevent people using this service either by raising prices to a point at which people decide to take a bus or by other means. Compared with fares charged for comparable distances by the C.N.R. the C.P.R. rates are fantastic. People do not want to take the train when they are obliged to pay out such sums.

Yet on week ends the train is packed. Sometimes when I have taken it it has not been possible to find a place to sit down. I have seen people sitting on their suitcases. On week days passengers are few. If I did not have to take this train I certainly would not take it at such rates.

I believe the whole matter is now before the board. I should like the Minister of Transport to look into this matter and see whether there is not a possibility of lowering the fares charged and getting a better service on this train. At least let us have a decent sandwich or have the train stop at one station so that passengers can get a sandwich if they wish to do so. The journey takes four hours when the train is on time. I have known it to be an hour and a half late. What is the average speed then? I leave the minister to figure that out. It is not much better than it was in the horse and buggy days. This is the Quebec Central Line. In French we call it "Québec Centrale" and sometimes "Québec Sans Coeur". There is good reason to call it that in view of the service given on this train.

I believe the company is presenting arguments to the board in favour of abandoning the service because they have no passengers using the trains. They want to maintain the trains carrying merchandise and abolish the passenger train service. They are making money on the carriage of merchandise. In my opinion they should introduce policies which would attract the public to use these trains. This could be done by fixing reasonable fares and offering a decent service. If they were to do this maybe they would get more passengers. If the Quebec Central declines to do this, I should like the minister to take the necessary action to ensure that there is a train service such as the people of Sherbrooke and Quebec have a right to expect.

I would remind the minister that there are over three quarters of a million people in the area served by this train but all the company has provided is a dayliner, one car. The minister should make strong representations to the company to have this train service maintained and improved. The company should not be permitted to invoke the argument that it cannot attract passengers. The reason it does not get passengers is that it has raised the fares. If the fares are reduced there will be plenty of passengers. The company should also provide better sandwiches. At present a traveler is better off in a box car which carries cattle because at least the cattle are given water.

I believe this is the place to make representations in this matter. The minister should consider it seriously and request the company to maintain the service. It should also be speeded up. A speed of 37 miles an hour is not realistic in this day and age. It makes the journey too long. If the minister has any statement to make on this matter I should like to hear him now.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: My position is about the same as that of the member for Megantic (Mr. Langlois). I had observations to make to the Minister of Transport on Item No. 1 and I thank him for giving me the opportunity of making them now.

My case is almost identical to that of the member for Megantic with regard to Canadian National trains. I do not mean the Quebec Central, or "Quebec-sans-coeur", although I have known it for a long time, having travelled for nine years on the C.N. which runs in Roberval county.

I wish to draw the attention of the Minister to three points: the matter of security, the new plan for integration and the employees' protection.

With regard to security, the minister is undoubtedly aware of the situation, since I wrote him and since it is only a matter of changing locomotives during the two or three winter months. The letter I wrote the then minister of transport was returned to the board and, after that, I had to deal with fifteen offices before reaching the parties concerned. I was driven from pillar to post and ended up with the assistant superintendent and the superintendent. I was referred to Mr. Brunet about that matter and here is what I told him: I do not know if you are aware of this but I noticed a serious danger for the engineer and all the passengers.

Locomotive No. 3883 now being used is not suitable at all in the winter because of weather conditions. As a matter of fact, because of the snow, the engineer cannot see a thing for two or three miles. If there was an accident, the engineer would not even know about it, precisely because the snow covers the windows completely and the engineer is going ahead blindly.

Just think if an accident should happen in these circumstances? The engineer might be held responsible, but I assure you that I would be there, evidence in hand, because I always get the evidence—and the best way is to find out on the spot what is going on—and I would blame the C.N.R.

I am sure that the minister was not aware of the danger to which the passengers themselves were exposed when taking such a train. I made the trip myself with the engineers and the visibility was nil for four or five miles, and the train was going through level crossings. If an accident had happened, do you sincerely believe that you could have sworn in court that they had done all they could to avoid the accident?

We only asked to replace the first model with locomotive models 9300 or 9400 which take freight to Chibougamau.

[Mr. Gauthier.]

I think that the passengers deserve much more attention than the freight trains. Those trains are used to get the logs down to Chibougamau, and all we asked was that they be used for the protection of the public.

Here is Mr. Brunet's answer on January 21, 1966:

> Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of January 18 concerning the locomotives in use on our trains between Chambord and Dolbeau.
> In order to use the type of locomotive you suggest, we would have to make changes in the schedule of these trains and also change our operation in Dolbeau on certain days.

This may be one or two days. There are two locomotives of this type making the trip to Chibougamau. I quote:

> For the above reasons, I had to refer your request to our transportation superintendent, Mr. J. A. Boutin of Quebec.

Here is the answer of the superintendent. Apparently, it is the superintendent who rules on everything.

> I have your letter dated January 18, together with the enclosed copy of your letter to our representative Mr. Brunet, in Jonquière.
> I can assure you, Mr. Gauthier, that all the locomotives used on our system were approved by the Board of Transport Commissioners and meet all safety requirements.

Imagine such a statement by an office employee who does not go to check for himself. I saw for myself, accompanied by engineers.

> Locomotives of the type mentioned in your letter are used indifferently on our passenger or freight trains, from coast to coast—

It is obvious, if you go east, the weather is not the same as in Lake St. John. We have four feet of snow, while in Ottawa there are only seven or eight inches. It is quite another picture; they would not send those locomotives to Chibougamau. And Mr. Poitevin continued:

> —and in weather conditions which are sometimes very unfavourable, and every effort is made to guarantee the safety of those we have the pleasure to serve.
> I do want to assure you once again that safety is in no way endangered when our passenger trains are operated by the locomotives now in service between Chambord and Dolbeau.

• (5:10 p.m.)

I tell you sir, not on the basis of my figures but after making the run more than once with engineers, that Mr. Poitevin of Quebec City is wrong, that he said something he cannot prove, because he did not go and see for himself. In fact, we travelled more than five or six miles and we encountered two grade crossings; we realized that there was a car stuck in a snow bank and we nearly hit it.

This is to tell you that those people often make statements without checking first. That is really bad not only for the engineer but for all the passsengers who are not aware of the situation.

That is why, Mr. Chairman, I draw the minister's attention to this state of affairs. I am not going to ask you to inquire from Mr. Poitevin or Mr. Brunet, who both sit in their offices in Quebec and Jonquière, but check with the engineers who operate those locomotives. I cannot give their names because they would be fired. That is what is annoying at the C.N.R.; as soon as you try to identify the person who is responsible he is thrown out. That is why I shall give no names but I repeat that if ever an accident happens in winter on our track, I shall appear in court myself—and Parliament is now advised of this—to accuse the C.N.R. in a criminal action because what is taking place in our region is irresponsible.

The Transport Act is very clear on this: whenever an engineer cannot see, whenever visibility is nil or obstructed, he must stop. Well, there would be no traffic during three winter months, Mr. Chairman. That is why it was requested that, 9300 and 9400 locomotives, which offer perfect visibility, be provided for at least two or three months this winter.

Now—

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, may I make a suggestion to the hon. member? Here it is: when the committee on transport and communications is convened, members will have the management of the C.N.R. before them and, as far as questions of internal administration of the company are concerned, I believe it would be preferable to have a confrontation with Mr. Gordon and other officials of the company instead of sending me lots of letters. In that case, if I promise—and I do—to speak to Mr. Gordon about it, can the other items be allowed to stand so that consideration of my estimates can be completed today?

Mr. Gauthier: Very well, Mr. Chairman. That is exactly what I wanted to know, because after writing to you, I was referred to the Board of Transport Commissioners. Later I wrote to the Board and to Mr. Donald Gordon, who referred me to the assistant superintendent, as I just told you. And the decision is made by a junior official. I maintain that the decision is wrong. That is why I come to Parliament. I would even go to the Board but it is the Board which ordered Mr. Poitevin to make the final decision, and settled the matter inadequately.

That is why I must take the matter up again and I do it with the encouragement of all the organizations in my riding; chambers of commerce, municipal councils and other public bodies. That is why I call your attention to the fact that Parliament will have to take the matter in its own hands because strange things are going on in our riding with regard to the C.N.R.

The second point with which I want to deal—and I will try to be as brief as possible—is the new integration plan. The minister must be aware of that because I told him also about their new integration plan. The railway in the riding of Roberval is slowly disappearing. It took us 35 years to get a railway line to serve us, and now that the population is five times what it was then, they are trying to take it away. They are trying to remove everything to such an extent that we now have the integration plan.

I have it written down in detail. For instance, where there was a station master and three clerks, freight is no longer handled. There are only three clerks left at the station at Dolbeau; under the new plan, there will be a station master and a telegraph operator, that is all there will be at Dolbeau.

At Albanel there is a station master. They managed to get the staff down to one station master. And now, the station at Albanel, a farming center, will be closed.

At Normandin, the station has been closed although two large lumber companies are shipping lumber the year round.

At St. Félicien, the connection between Chibougamau and St. Félicien, there was a stationmaster, two telegraph operators and two clerks. Now, there are one stationmaster and two telegraph operators. Imagine what this will lead to. The express will be transferred, then removed. The express will stay at Chambord, to be distributed throughout the county by truck.

I wrote to Mr. Gordon in this connection on January 19. All he said in reply was this: "I have asked for information on this matter."

This proves that he does not know much about it either. That is what you get when you look for the responsible party.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let me say that I wrote to the minister in this connection and then, finally, to Mr. Poitevin. I do not want to read the whole letter, but I quoted an article entitled "C.N.R. to centralize Lake services". They are not doing it only in Roberval county, because Lake St. John and Lapointe counties are next in line.

After reading about the new integration in the press and seeing it was the talk of the town, what did Mr. Poitevin have to say? This:

I thank you. Although I am the manager of this particular sector, it seems, on the face of it, that you know more about alleged changes to be made in our service . . . than I do".

Imagine, he starts by trying to make us look silly, because we know everything that is going to happen; he also wants to convince us that we know nothing and refuses to disclose anything.

At that time, I wrote to him about the express for Chambord. Tenders had already been called for from trucking companies for the transport of express, to pick it up in Chambord and deliver it in the whole Roberval county.

What will result from this, while we strive here to create employment? Eleven station employees will be laid off, more particularly the C.N.R. deliverymen who have been providing us with excellent service for 30 years at no cost to the railway. All those employees will no longer be serving the population. Mr. Chairman, after the express car is removed, the passenger service will simply be discontinued.

That is what they are aiming at they want to get a bus to transport us throughout the riding, by bus, by car, by anything.

After that, Mr. Poitevin came up to me and said that that was not the reason. He replied:

Those improvements were appreciated by the public as evidenced by our revenues.

Before that he said:

Let me however, bring a slight correction concerning the unfavourable remarks you formulated on the "service" item at the C.N.

I will have a word to say about the "service" item in a minute. He thought the service was perfect and to prove it he said:

For instance, our passenger revenues from the Saguenay-Lake St. John area have increased by 28 per cent—

There is talk of a 28 per cent increase and taking off the express car and cancelling the passenger service next summer or perhaps next autumn. They say there has been a 28 per cent increase in spite of the poor service and I repeat, in spite of the poor service provided. A service very much like that of the Quebec Central mentioned earlier by the member for Mégantic; we cannot go above 35 or 40 miles per hour on our line.

I remember one time when a somewhat too eager mechanic decided to arrive on time, because on our line we used to say: C.N.R. means let's be late. Because we are always late. But that mechanic wanted to be on time and he went over 40 miles an hour. Mr. Chairman, we almost left the track. That goes to show the improvements in our region.

And they complain that people do not travel. People travel, trains are full of them, but when you want a coach or a sleeping-car, there are none. And due to the fact that there are no cars, people are packed like sardines; when the passengers get off the train on the platform at the Dolbeau station many of them, and ladies in particular, say: "They caught me this time but they will never catch me again".

Mr. Chairman, I simply wanted to call your attention to that matter of service. There was a service at the Chambord station, a few years ago. You remember, Mr. Chairman, that a beautiful new station was built, with a spacious waiting room, and a restaurant-lunch counter separated from the waiting room.

Do you know what has been done? During winter, they closed the lunch counter. And there you have the whole waiting room, but the two large beautiful glazed doors are locked and the seats are still at the counter; everything is there, but the place is empty, it is locked.

Three small Quebec inspectors came because down our way they do not come one by one, they come three at once, not just one inspector, a man alone but three inspectors from Quebec or Montreal to close the lunch counter.

• (5:20 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Cantelon: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. We are now supposed to be discussing item 15b and I confess that this discussion of meals and difficulties in running a railway passenger service seem to me to be a long way from the topic at hand. I think we are all agreed that we would like to see these estimates finally passed and I confess that I find it difficult to understand how we are ever going to get them through if such small matters as these are brought to the attention of the committee.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I might say that the hon. member who just raised a point of order should admit that the members of his group are the ones responsible for the lengthening of this debate on the Department of Transport estimates.

It had been understood yesterday, when we agreed to pass item No. 1, that some of our people would have an opportunity to make some remarks on certain items, and that is exactly what the hon. member for Roberval did just now. Since this hon. member has only a few more seconds to go, I believe we should recognize the agreement that was reached yesterday after the minister himself had suggested it, that is to allow the member for Mégantic and the member for Roberval to make their comments.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, I will not be long now. Besides, there is no basis to the point of order, because I was given permission by the chair.

Therefore, I simply come back for a second on the subject of that famous lunch counter. Everything was locked. And because passengers must often wait two to three hours in the station, the attendant has to come and sell coffee, sandwiches, cigarettes, and everything is spread in the waiting room; instead of eating at the counter, people eat on benches and on window sills. Believe me, it looks bright indeed.

I ask the minister to order that a telephone call be made to Mr. Poitevin so that at least that room is opened and people can eat. It is simply ridiculous because nothing is served on the train. Passengers must eat there before leaving because sometimes they spend two and a half, three and even four hours aboard the train and they would at least have a chance of having their breakfast. But there is nothing at this time, not even a counter. Passengers must manage as they can. What we want is that the doors be opened. The doors are there, let them be opened and let everybody have a chance to eat.

Now a word about the safety of employees. Everything is done to discourage the staff; there seems to be an agreement in that connection. Where two men would be needed, they place only one. In Ontario the contrary is true. I was talking with people from Ontirao and they told me: "As far as we are concerned, the C.N.R. place two men where one is needed in Ontario". While in our case, where two men are needed they place only one. But instead of sending only one inspector, they send three. There are many inspectors in my constituency: three for each man.

Everything was done to discourage the employees. There was the famous manager's commission on the express, which encouraged him to open the station, even on Sunday. That commission made it up to him somewhat, but now he does not get anything; everything was taken from him and he is paid a very low salary.

What happens now? The stations are closed on Sunday morning. Can you imagine stepping down onto the platform at Dolbeau, for instance, in a snow-storm, when everything is closed. You stay on the platform. The nearest taxi stand is three quarters of a mile away and the train is an hour and a half late. That is not interesting. It is not because we live in a remote area that we should be given that kind of service; the C.N.R. gets enough revenue from our region. If only they lost money.

For instance, about the shipping of freight, there is all the shipping from Chibougamau, which comes down from Chibougamau; there is the Domtar company, at Dolbeau, which supplies five or six cars full of newsprint each worth $400.

There are all those secondary industries at Dolbeau, Normandin and St. Félicien de Roberval which ship lumber. Go around our region and you will see that the C.N.R. gets more than a million dollars a year out of it. And, in spite of all that, we cannot even get a little train to travel comfortably at least.

Mr. Chairman, I do not want to delay the house any longer. I hope that those remarks will enable the minister to meet the parties concerned and to discuss everything frankly with them, because he will soon be knee-deep in requests; they are coming from all the chambers of commerce, municipal councils, city councils, companies and I hope he will consider their representations and give us justice.

[English]

The Chairman: Shall vote No. 15 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I merely wish to ask a question of the hon. minister. I am not going to make a speech at this time, as it would not be very appropriate

We would like the estimates to be passed as soon as possible. I would like to know whether it would be possible for the minister to make representations with the authorities concerned so that we may get a sleeper and a diner as soon as possible on the Montreal, Ottawa, North Bay, Rouyn, Noranda line?

[English]

Mr. Pickersgill: I will make inquiries.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister whether he is going to take into consideration the matter concerning the Quebec Central Railway that I mentioned a while ago. Is the minister going to look into the matter and discuss with the company whether it is possible to maintain the train service to which I referred?

Mr. Pickersgill: I will be glad to make representations, Mr. Chairman, although if the matter is now before the board I probably could not intervene while it is before them. But the hon. member will have an opportunity as a member of the house, whether or not he is a member of the committee, when the C.P.R. management are before the committee, because I believe the Quebec Central is owned by the C.P.R., to ask questions directly of the management. I think that would be a wise thing for him to do.

• (5:30 p.m.)

The Chairman: The hon. member for Compton-Frontenac.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, I should like to direct a question to the Minister and make some remarks concerning my constituency. My constituency is just about in the same position as that of Megantic with respect to fares and level crossings.

In connection with fares, for instance, the return trip from Megantic to Montreal cost $9.80 in 1963, whereas it amounts to $17.60 today. Now, the company intends to curtail the train service, alleging that it is not profitable, that deficits are incurred. The one-way railway fare to Montreal is terribly expensive, that is $8.80 as compared to $5.75 for bus fare.

This difference is considerable and my constituents have made many representations to me in that connection. They want to know from the minister if it would not be possible to adjust those rates, so that the people can use railways, because trains are very useful in my county.

In my riding, the C.P.R. branch line crosses the national highway six times within two miles. This occasions many delays for the citizens of Mégantic and there are many accidents at those railway crossings.

The city of Mégantic has several projects to submit to the Board of Transport Commissioners. I ask the minister whether it would not be possible for him, since Mégantic has a population of 8,000 inhabitants, to come to an understanding with the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McIlraith), so that the city might remove those level crossings under the winter works program.

I think that carrying out winter works involves unnecessary expenditures. There is a waste of money. From 75 to 95 per cent of the expenditures are made on useless projects, when there are so many worthwhile things to be done. A study should be made of those level crossings. Overpasses should be built above the railways. If the minister would make arrangements with the Minister of Public Works, such works could be carried out in my riding and throughout Canada under the winter works program.

That is what I had to say to the hon. minister on this question.

Now, Mr. Chairman, these level crossings are a source of inconvenience for our area. We need the trains. We need the C.P.R. We need transportation. On the other hand, serious inconveniences to our municipality and surrounding municipalities result from the C.P.R. and C.N.R. level crossings.

I ask the hon. minister if there is not some way to vote an appropriation to eliminate level crossings.

I wish to point out to the minister that, according to statistics published in the newspaper Le Devoir, from 1909 to 1962 the province of Quebec only received $8,777,326, or 14 per cent of the budget, while Ontario received $31,959,068, or 50.8 per cent of the national budget for level crossings. The province of Quebec did not receive its share of the subsidies allocated for level crossings.

I ask the minister to examine these statistics and to show more fairness towards the province of Quebec. That is what I wanted to say on this subject.

[English]

Mr. Pickersgill: I shall be glad to talk this matter over with the hon. gentleman and see what we can do if he will come to see me after we completed these estimates.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I wish to put only one question about a subject I raised during the study of item 1. The minister should give me an answer.

Is it the intention of the Minister of Transport to look into the possibility of improving the railroad between Montreal, Jonquière and Chicoutimi as soon as possible?

[English]

Mr. Pickersgill: I will do my very best to make the most favourable representations I can.

Item agreed to.

20. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works and land, dock and terminal facilities, and of vessels and related equipment as listed in the details of the estimates provided that Treasury Board may increase or decrease the amounts within the vote to be expended on individually listed projects, $20,065,600.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I should like to put one question only concerning item 20 with regard to construction of buildings, terminal facilities, etc.

The minister is aware that we have in Rouyn-Noranda three railway stations: an O.N.R. station in Rouyn-Noranda, an O.N.R. station in Noranda, and a Canadian National station in Noranda. Is the department considering a project to set up a union station which might be called "Rouyn-Noranda"? There would be one station only to serve the people over there. This station would eliminate grade crossings in Rouyn and in Noranda.

[English]

Mr. Pickersgill: I shall be glad to look into that question right away.

Item agreed to.

25b. Payments in respect of Maritime Freight Rates Act and for supplemental pension allowances to railway employees—To extend the purposes of Transport Vote 25 of the Main Estimates for 1965-66 to include payments to provinces as contributions, as detailed in the estimates, to assist highway construction related to the abandonment of railway branch lines, $1,250,000.

Mr. Cantelon: This vote relates to the construction or rebuilding of the Moncton-Buctouche highway which is related to the abandonment of the Canadian National Buctouche branch line. I should like to know, first of all, if special circumstances obtained which enabled the government to make this particular grant toward the building of a highway to take the place of the railway. Second, is it general policy and will this policy be applied to other abandonments? These are rather general questions but I hope the minister has some answers.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if I could give a very brief answer now and then undertake to discuss the matter at greater length on my estimates for the coming year or at any other time? The brief answer is that this particular branch line was losing a lot of money annually but it was serving a community. It seemed to the government that rather than throw away a lot of money in annual losses, if we could capitalize the losses and allow part of the saving for the building of the road and take part of the saving for the treasury, everybody would be better off. I should like to elaborate a bit on that on another occasion because I think the principle can be applied elsewhere and I am happy to say my colleagues agree with me.

Item agreed to.

Air Services—

30. Administration, operation and maintenance including the administration of the Aeronautics Act and regulations issued thereunder, the administration of the Radio Act and regulations issued thereunder, Canada's share of the costs of the international radio, telegraph and telephone organizations listed in the details of the estimates, Canada's assessment for membership in the World Meteorological Organization, $110,000 for grants in aid of meteorological research in Canadian universities and Canada's share of the cost of the World meteorological Organization symposium on design of hydrometeorological networks, $97,637,700.

Mr. MacRae: I should like to draw the attention of the minister to a matter pertaining to a class of employees in his department known as radio operators. Perhaps the minister, or his deputy who is advising him, is familiar with this category so I will not need to go into too much detail. Briefly, the situation is that in 1962-63 the Civil Service Association of Canada submitted to the Department of Transport and the Civil Service Commission reasons for a better and more realistic career program for radio operators.

The minister will be glad to know that the fault from this point on does not lie with his department. Following the normal procedure the Department of Transport submitted their recommendation to the Civil Service Commission, but unfortunately the Commission did not agree. Nothing has been done for this particular class of employee since that time, as I understand it. The end result, Mr. Chairman, has been that the department has experienced an acute shortage of this type of employee.

• (5:40 p.m.)

Because of inadequate wages and lack of opportunity for promotion and advancement too many radio operators, I understand, are leaving the department and it is difficult to recruit and train people in this particular category. Promotions have been held back because of the shortage, and even the vacation schedules have been cancelled. As I understand it, the morale of this group is very low.

The total salary paid this class of employee reaches a peak of $408 a month, which seems to me to be too low at this particular time. The recommendation that these people have made to me as their representative, and I am sure it has been made to others, is that the minister should look at the matter and see whether something can be done for this particular type of employee. I have every confidence that the minister will do so at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. Pickersgill: This is one speech I am really grateful for, Mr. Chairman, and I think it is going to help the minister.

Mr. Walker: Mr. Chairman, the minister may be relieved to know I am not going to talk about sandwiches, ham or bologna, although my subject may be a little indigestible. I want to thank him now for the efforts he made last year in connection with this problem but I want to bring it to his attention again. I refer to the problem of public transportation by way of limousine service to and from Malton airport in Toronto. This same problem may hold true, of course, at other airports with regard to the service which is given the public.

I use this airport a great deal, as do other Toronto members. I bring the matter to the attention of the minister particularly at this time because I know he used his good offices last year to try to bring some solution forward from the negotiations between the people who now hold the contract for transporting customers to and from the airport and the metro Toronto taxicab association.

The problem is simply this, and I think it is more severe now than it was when the matter was brought up a year ago. Taxicabs are not allowed to pick up passengers at the airport. This means they have to return empty to the city. This may seem like a small matter but with increasing air traffic the limousine service, particularly at Toronto airport, has proved incapable of moving air passengers at the speed at which I think they should be moved. I think it is rather a demeaning chore for our Royal Canadian Mounted Police to wave off taxicabs which, having discharged a passenger, have to pass empty by the crowds of people waiting for limousines.

[Mr. MacRae.]

I know that the limousine company has performed a service, but a point which should be raised at this time is that it operates on the basis of area fares. In my own particular area the area rate from the airport to Yonge and Eglinton, as I recall it, is $5.50. When I grab a cab to go from my residence to the airport I always have the cab meter put on and the rate is $4.50. I think this should be some consideration and it may be that these figures may be helpful to the minister when he is talking to the limousine people.

I bring the matter up again at this time because this situation still exists. Actually it has worsened since the minister attempted to do something about it last year. I think at that time a compromise suggestion was made that perhaps a stand for six or even eight cabs at the airport would provide a very good public service and possibly lead to a reduction in rates.

I would ask the minister to use his good offices in an effort once more to see whether he or the airport can provide, through the use of a limited number of taxicabs, better service for passengers who are now having to wait for some time before they can get transportation from the airport.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): I should like to draw the attention of the minister to a situation at Winnipeg airport. I think the minister arrives at Winnipeg often enough to know that when you deplane from an arriving aircraft you have to proceed to the second floor by staircase. This makes things particularly difficult for older people. If you are arriving at the airport to catch a plane you can take an escalator up but when you arrive at Winnipeg you have to walk up the stairs carrying bags and so forth.

I hope the minister will take a look at this and see whether it is possible to instal escalators for the use of people arriving at the airport. Naturally this is one of the airports I use quite often and I have noticed on several occasions elderly people particularly, who perhaps have heart conditions or other ailments, having to climb these steep stairs to get to the second floor so that they can get down to the ground level on the other side. This seems a ridiculous sort of situation. I hope the minister will give careful consideration to the installation of at least one escalator which can be used by people who are not supposed to climb stairs.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I might say that this would repair in part the damage the minister has done to Winnipeg by his faulty commitment with regard to the Winnipeg-Chicago route and he might even make one or two friends.

[Translation]

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Chairman, I should like to know if it is section 30 which deals with broadcasting. This concerns necessarily section 30, and if the minister is agreeable, I am going to discuss it at once.

[English]

I want to speak on the subject of radio broadcasting, Mr. Chairman, and I was just asking the minister whether that subject would come under item 30.

Mr. Pickersgill: Not unless the hon. gentleman wants to speak only about the technical side of licensing. If it is any other aspect of broadcasting he should speak on the estimates of the Secretary of State, not on mine.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): Licensing is under the minister's jurisdiction.

Mr. Pickersgill: It depends on the particular aspect of licensing. On licensing in general the B.B.G. reports to the Secretary of State, so I would think that what the hon. member wants to bring up would be more appropriate to that department.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): It will not take me very long to deal with this matter. If the minister judges that it is a matter for the Secretary of State to answer I will leave it at that and bring up the problem again before the Secretary of State. What I have in mind is this peculiar situation which exists in regard to small, local radio broadcasting stations. They have a permit to operate during the daytime on, say, 1,000 watts but at sundown they reduce their power to a lower wattage.

Mr. Pickersgill: If the hon. gentleman will permit me, I think that is definitely a matter which would be within the purview of the Board of Broadcast Governors. If the hon. gentleman would agree, I think it would be preferable to bring that matter up when the hon. lady's estimates are before the committee.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): I will do that.

• (5:50 p.m.)

Mr. Hales: I have a few observations to make to the minister. May I first ask him if the department has made any progress toward setting up an examination board under the Aeronautics Act, similar to that set up in the United States whereby a pilot who has suffered some physical ailment and has recovered has to undergo a doctor's examination and be O.K.'d by him. That has to be done before he receives his pilot's licence again. Second, may I ask a question having to do with community antenna television. I do not know whether to address it to the minister at this time but I should like to know what steps he proposes to take and whether this will be placed under the control of the Board of Broadcast Governors.

Mr. Pickersgill: The answer to the first question is yes. Steps have been taken and I understand that the appropriate body should meet tomorrow. The answer to the second question, if the hon. gentleman would grant us his indulgence, is that I do not think that the situation is going to be changed, but he will have an opportunity to inquire into it under my next set of estimates.

Mr. Danforth: I should like to seek from the minister some suggestions or advice. I am not sure whether he can be of direct assistance in this matter. If he cannot assist us, then I hope that he or the members of his department can direct me to the appropriate channels. My inquiry has to do with weather reports and weather broadcasting. In our area we receive weather reports from the airports at London and Windsor. Under the direction of the local Federation of Agriculture and of Mr. Harold Smith of the radio station, who is also farm editor, a drive has been inaugurated because of the intensive farming in that area to have much more complete and comprehensive weather coverage. Because of that farming we need comprehensive weather coverage. My purpose in interceding on this particular vote is to request from the minister information as to what approaches may be made to have weather broadcasts with respect to the particular areas involved and as to what facilities may be sought along this line. The minister need not answer me now. If he wishes to take note of what I have said and let me know at an appropriate time it will be appreciated.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to write to the hon. gentleman, if I may, after I have made inquiries.

Mr. Schreyer: May I put to the minister a question relating to the construction and hard surfacing of airport runways at the Winnipeg satellite airport of St. Andrew's. I should like to ask the minister if that question would arise under this item or would he prefer that I put the question under another item?

Mr. Pickersgill: It should be, I believe, under the next item.

Mr. Groos: Mr. Chairman, I want to ask one short question of the minister. I am not sure whether this is the appropriate vote on which to ask the minister this question but I am concerned with the problem of the definition of an air-cushion vehicle. It is my understanding that in recent weeks a decision has been given by, I am told, the Department of Justice with regard to air-cushion vehicles which are known to the general public as hovercraft.

The Department of Justice has designated it as an aircraft. The definition poses some difficulties because this vessel, if one may call it a vessel, is completely new in conception. It is a completely new form of transportation. It is neither ship nor aircraft but something in between which requires a solid surface two or three feet beneath it in order to operate. I am given to understand that by categorizing this craft as an aircraft considerable difficulties will be caused in the development of this particular type of machinery, if I may call it that, or this particular method of transportation which could have very great benefits for our country.

I am wondering if the minister is planning to take up this matter with the Department of Justice? I think that this type of vessel could be better designated by the Deparment of Transport marine services if it were classified as a hover craft or an air-cushion vehicle with characteristics more akin to those of a ship than those of an aircraft.

Mr. Pickersgill: We are discussing this matter with the Department of Justice but I am afraid that we have not reached any conclusion yet.

Mr. Brand: Mr. Chairman, I notice under an item in vote 30 mention of the operation and maintenance of airports and other ground services. We have an airport in the constituency I have the honour to represent, the constituency of Saskatoon, and it is a large airport with a jet runway. For several years now we have been assured that, since we have the runway and the facilities, and certainly we have the passengers, jet aircraft would be stopping at our city. However, I was disappointed to notice in Hansard yesterday, as I mentioned in my question today, that the short range DC-9 jet aircraft are not going to be stopping in the province of Saskatchewan. I should like from the minister some assurance—

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sure that the hon. member will have noticed that that only applies to the period up to July 1.

Mr. Brand: I believe, sir, that if I read the announcement correctly it was to the effect that this would be so for this year but that it might be changed in subsequent years when further aircraft become available. It did not say up to July 1 as I read it in Hansard of yesterday.

I should like some assurance, sir, that efforts will be made very soon indeed to see that DC-9 service is provided to our province and to our city because we are becoming more industrialized. Mineral developments are certainly beginning to expand, and in that regard I refer to potash. We have tremendous numbers of people coming into the province. We do not have the facilities there that we think we should have. I think it is essential, since we have been promised a short range jet service for three years, to have that service. Frankly, sir, I should like your assurance that as soon as possible you will see that we in Saskatchewan will no longer be a have-not province. I assure you, sir, that we are not the poor country cousins we were a few years ago.

May I call it six o'clock?

Mr. Pickersgill: I will give that representation the most "liberal" consideration that I can, sir.

Mr. Brand: Thank you, sir.

Item agreed to.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: I should like to say a few words with regard to airports. Is it the minister's intention to set up a regional policy—

Mr. Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but it is now six o'clock.

[English]

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED UNDER ADJOURNMENT MOTION

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty in conformity with standing order 39A, to inform the house that the following questions will be discussed on the adjournment motion tonight: The hon. member for Okanagan-

Revelstoke (Mr. Johnston), Immigration —reported increase in applications from Rumania; the hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Saltsman), Post Office Department—steps to overcome loss on second class mail; the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette), municipal development loan fund—inquiry as to extension of period.

• (6:00 p.m.)

It being six o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motion for papers, private bills and public bills.

MOTION FOR PAPERS

MR. JUSTICE LANDREVILLE

The house resumed from Thursday, February 3 consideration of the motion of Mr. Bell (Carleton):

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all reports, briefs or other documents of communications received by the Minister of Justice, the Solicitor-General or the Department of Justice from the Law Society of Upper Canada relating to Mr. Justice Leo Landreville; all replies made to any such reports, briefs or other documents or communications; all letters or other communications addressed by the Minister of Justice, the Solicitor-General or any officer of the Department of Justice, since the 1st day of January 1964 to Mr. Justice Leo Landreville; all replies made by Mr. Justice Leo Landreville or by any solicitor or agent on his behalf to any such letters or other communications.

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, in rising to support the motion of the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) I should like to preface my remarks by stating that I am a little anxious as to how to proceed. I notice that those who have opposed the motion of the hon. member for Carleton have used a ploy commonly adopted by those who have a weak case. They have referred to matters outside the scope of the question.

I have in my hand the debates of the House of Commons for February 3. I notice that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin) referred to the fact that the hon. member for Carleton speaks loudly and fast. I hope I am not speaking too loudly or too fast for members of the house. Then the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Laflamme), supporting the Minister of Justice, said he did not like the tone of voice used by the hon. member for Carleton. Again, on page 675, we find the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey) objecting to the belligerency of the hon. member for Carleton. Mr. Speaker, if I go too fast or speak too loudly or appear too belligerent, or if members do not like the tone of my voice, please let me know and I will try to accommodate myself so as to meet the wishes of those who would otherwise raise objections so as to try to deny to other members of the House of Commons the privileges which are their right.

I have strong feelings on this question of the cabinet laying this message from the benchers of the Law Society of Upper Canada on the table. I have been elected to this house on three occasions. On the first and second occasions of entering parliament I was not sworn in until the day parliament opened. But on the third occasion, after the election of November, 1965, I made a special trip to Ottawa early in December because I felt then, as I feel now, that the cabinet is making a mistake in refusing to table for the benefit of members of the House of Commons a letter they have received from the benchers of the Upper Canada Law Society. I was sworn in by the Clerk of the House on December 6 and the moment I had signed the roll I asked him how I could make a motion for the production of this paper from the benchers of the law society. He directed me to another official. I went to his office and prepared the necessary papers. That was in December.

I should like to advise hon. members that when I came to the house on January 18 I found that my motion for the production of the benchers' missive had not been placed in Routine Proceedings and Orders of the Day. I immediately went to an official of this house and asked him what had happened with regard to my action of December 6. It was explained to me that there was some thought of withholding my request because if a foreign government writes to this government and expresses some opinions such missives are not tabled in the house without the consent of the foreign government concerned being received in advance.

Comparing the benchers of the Upper Canada Law Society with a foreign government may well be flattering to the benchers, but I stated that in my view they were nothing but a private group of lawyers who had no public authority, and I did not see any reason why my request was being delayed. If hon. members will look in Votes and Proceedings they will find it listed under the date January 19, though I filed it on December 6.

On February 3 the hon. member for Carleton speaking to his motion, one to which I give wholehearted support, went out of his way to make a remark with which I cannot agree. I wish to correct the impression he may have created. The hon. member made this comment:

> I want to point out that even in respect of this motion the Minister of Justice could not refrain from playing politics. The hon. member for York-Humber (Mr. Cowan) had a notice of motion on the order paper dealing with this subject and covering the first part of my motion. It was listed as No. 21 and therefore was on the order paper preceding mine, which is No. 39. But yesterday there was arranged the standing of the motion of the hon. member for York-Humber who is a supporter . . . of the minister's party, in order to deal with this later motion by an opposition member. Is there anybody anywhere in this chamber who has any doubt of the reasons for this?

I was amazed to hear the hon. member make that statement because he must be the only member of the House of Commons who did not realize that on February 2 there were 1,600 Liberals in metropolitan Toronto attending a dinner given for the Prime Minister of Canada and Mrs. Pearson. I had made arrangements weeks in advance to have dinner with the Prime Minister's brother who sat at my table. I rode to Toronto on February 2 on the same train with the Prime Minister. Yet the hon. member for Carleton asks: "Is there anybody anywhere in this chamber who has any doubt of the reasons for this?" He is referring to the standing of my motion. He must be the only member of the house who did not know that every Toronto Liberal member was out of the house on that day attending this dinner at the Royal York.

In rising to support the present motion I would add this statement: If the motion should be voted down, and I hope it will not be, in order to save a further black mark against the record of this cabinet, I will press ahead with my own motion because the members of this parliament are being denied the right of examining a document which has been forwarded to the cabinet as the executive arm of the government and we are getting into a position where members of the cabinet are telling each and every one of us: It is not good for you to see these things; you are not smart enough to comprehend the meaning of such a missive; leave it to those of us who are in the cabinet; we are the smart boys and we can give you the answers.

There has been a lot of fluff during this discussion about the independance of the judiciary being called into question. Speakers have said we were criticizing the actions of Mr. Justice Landreville. They have said we are blackening the record of a man who has no means of defending himself.

On February 3 the Deputy Speaker—he is now in the Chair—had to make a ruling during the course of the discussion. He said: "The issue before the house is whether or not certain documents should be tabled." He repeated that statement. "The only issue before the house in this debate is whether or not the papers mentioned in the motion should be tabled."

I am in favour of the tabling of these papers. An interesting angle in connection with this discussion has been the assertion developed on the side that we have no right to discuss this matter because it has been referred to a commission—a commission consisting of Mr. Justice Rand, a retired judge from Moncton, New Brunswick. Now this problem arises: Cannot the highest court in the land discuss a matter which has been referred to a commission, a body which in the last resort is obviously junior to parliament as the highest court?

On October 15, 1957, the government of the day by order in council appointed a committee to inquire into the natural energy resources of this country. That was on October 15. On the 17th of October Mr. M. J. Coldwell, the then hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, rose in his place and, during the course of his remarks with regard to the affairs of the day, stated:

> Naturally, I welcome the appointment of the royal commission to study the question of the use of Canadian energy resources and to ensure the most effective use of such resources in the public interest, but I am not unmindful of this, that the present party in power is faced with a problem in this regard because of its attitude in the house during the pipe line debate. I could not put my finger on it today but I know it is in Hansard where a former prime minister said that the establishment of a royal commission was often an excellent way of shelving a difficult problem. I hope that the setting up of this royal commission to deal with energy, oil, gas, pipe lines, and so on, is not being undertaken in order to shelve a very important problem. I think such a study is entirely desirable and, indeed, overdue.
> However, there are a number of matters on which it is necessary that action should be taken before the report of any royal commission is available. Indeed, they are questions of policy that should not be shelved. I am thinking particularly of the reference of the matter of Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited to the royal commission. I note that the question is referred in this way and I am quoting it:
> "Whether in view of this special relationship to the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation and the nature of its financing and control any special measures need to be undertaken in relation to Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited in order to safeguard the interests of Canadian producers or consumers of gas."

Upon which Hon. Howard Green, who I presume was acting government house leader, rose up and objected to Mr. Coldwell making any comments on a matter that had been referred to a royal commission. Mr. Coldwell then stated that in his opinion he had every right to refer to a royal commission appointed two days previously because, after all, this was the highest court in the land.

It is quite interesting to note that the hon. Lionel Chevrier was sitting in oppposition in October, 1957, and he took part in the debate. He supported Mr. Coldwell and in answer to Mr. Green he said:

There is nothing sub judice. In the circumstances I submit to you, sir, with deference, that the hon. member has every right to do what he is doing.

That is, that the hon. member had every right to discuss the matter referred to a royal commission appointed two days previously.

The Speaker gave a ruling on the matter and the Speaker was Hon. Roland Michener. He was a roommate of the right hon. Prime Minister of Canada at Oxford and I presume some of the brilliance of our leader rubbed off on him, because on October 17, 1957, as recorded at page 119 of Hansard, he stated:

I think I have heard enough to determine the matter. There is nothing on the order paper which would preclude a discussion of this matter. The royal commission is not a court of record and matters before it are not sub judice. Therefore I see no reason why the hon. member should not discuss it.

Then the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill), who is supposed to know everything about the rules of this house, and who was leader for the official opposition, when I was in opposition, shouted across toward Mr. Green:

Closure by order in council.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that when we are told we cannot look at this missive from the Law Society of Upper Canada because the matter has been referred to a royal commission we are having closure by order in council in this day and age, in 1966.

I have here a copy of the order in council, dated January 19, 1966, appointing Mr. Justice Rand. My submission is that this letter could have been produced on January 18 if members of parliament had asked for it in the ordinary way. But on January 19, just as Mr. Coldwell stated in 1957, a royal commission was appointed and now we are given closure by order in council. I am simply quoting the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate who knows a great deal more about parliamentary practice than I do, and I am willing to accept his leadership on the matter of the rules covering the conduct of the house.

This matter of whether or not we can ask for these papers before the decision of the royal commission comes down is enlightened by a report in the Toronto Daily Star of Tuesday, February 8. Mr. Jack Biddell, president of the Clarkson Company, had spoken at a meeting of the Empire Club in Toronto and made some uncomplementary remarks with regard to officials of the Atlantic Acceptance Corporation which collapsed in the biggest financial scandal in Ontario in many years.

The Ontario government has appointed a royal commission consisting of Mr. Justice Hughes to inquire into the Atlantic Acceptance debacle. The day after Mr. Biddell made his speech before the Empire Club in Toronto, in which he referred to "arrogant scoundrels"—incidentally, Mr. Speaker, did you ever hear that word "arrogant" used in any other place than before the Empire Club in Toronto—Mr. J. E. Eberle, lawyer for C. Powell Morgan, former president of Atlantic Acceptance, argued before Mr. Justice Hughes that Mr. Biddell should be cited and censured for his action since the matter was before the royal commission.

But Mr. Justice Hughes, a member of the Supreme Court of the Province of Ontario, a gentleman appointed to the bench by the government in Ottawa, said the royal commission was not conducting a trial but an inquiry. I point out that this commission of Mr. Rand is not conducting a trial. It is conducting an inquiry. The order in council specifies:

The committee of the Privy Council, on the recommendation of the Minister of Justice, advise that the Honourable Ivan Cleveland Rand, of Moncton, in the province of New Brunswick, be appointed a commissioner under Part 1 of the Inquiries Act to inquire into the dealings of the Honourable Mr. Justice Leo A. Landreville with Northern Ontario Natural Gas Limited or any of its officers, employees or representatives, or in the shares of the said company, and to advise whether, in the opinion of the commissioner, anything done by Mr. Justice Landreville in the course of such dealings constituted misbehaviour in his official capacity as a judge of the Supreme Court of Ontario, or whether the honourable Mr. Justice Landreville has by such dealings proved himself unfit for the proper exercise of his judicial duties.

That is the foreword to the appointment of that commission of inquiry. It is not a court of trial. We are not trying Mr. Landreville here. We are not making any accusations. We are not making any innuendoes. As members of parliament we are asking the cabinet to lay on the table the communication received from the benchers of the Law Society of Upper Canada.

In the discussions that have taken place already the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has asked, "What have you got to say about the action of the law society keeping it a secret document?" The law society is a private body. They can do what they like with their own property, but when the law society writes to a public body like the House of Commons then the members of the house are entitled to see what the contents of that communication are.

One of the speakers in this debate, the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey), in a direct reference to Mr. Justice Landreville used this phrase, "whom we must presume innocent." Nobody who has spoken in support of the motion moved by the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) has made any statement about the innocence or guilt of Mr. Justice Landreville. All we want is for the cabinet to table the letter received from the benchers of the Law Society of Upper Canada.

The hon. member for Verdun made several references in the course of his remarks to the doubt in his mind as to the action of the cabinet in withholding communications from members of the house. It is interesting when you find a man defending the actions of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin), but still expressing doubt as to what he is doing. I simply ask the members of this house to make certain that the cabinet produces this letter.

I admire the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Fairweather) who the other day, quoted Professor Chapman's book, "British Government observed", in particular the following passage:

> This passion for secrecy has . . . psychological and sociological origins. Secrecy in public life panders to a craving for a sentiment of self-importance, of belonging to an inner circle.

I say that is the attitude that members of the cabinet are adopting on many questions. For instance, I asked how much money was paid to Mrs. Baskin, an employee of the civil service, wife of a former member of this house, and how much was paid to Mrs. Sauvé. The government told me the amount of money they paid Mrs. Baskin but what Mrs. Sauvé gets is entirely a secret matter.

How self-important and arrogant can members of the cabinet get? I say we are the highest court in the land and I ask for the production of these papers as requested by the hon. member for Carleton.

• (6:20 p.m.)

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, having just heard the eloquent (Mr. Cowan), I am almost nervous about words of the hon. member for York-Humber becoming involved with those who are accused of having a passion for secrecy; yet I do believe that this motion ought to be turned down by this house. I must say that I do so with some trepidation for the reason that my colleague, the deputy leader of this party, has spoken in favour of the motion. I have always found him persuasive and frequently sound but I regret to say that on this motion I found him to be neither.

I am particularly interested in this matter because, like the deputy leader of this party, I am a member of the bar. I should say that my courage is bolstered by the fact that another learned colleague of mine, the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott), also spoke against the motion. I am particularly interested in this matter as a member of the bar in the province of Ontario. I think I can claim a special interest because I was the first member of this house to urge upon the previous minister of justice the necessity, in the interests both of the administration of justice and of fairness to Mr. Justice Landreville, whose conduct has been widely criticized in the press, that action be taken.

I am not claiming that it was because of my suggestion that the course of action taken was taken, but I did suggest to the minister that one of the proper preliminaries in dealing with this matter was an investigation by a person of high standing such as the present commissioner, Mr. Justice Rand. I should like to point out to members of this house that this matter is rather serious because, according to the information supplied to me by Dr. Eugene Forsey, whose studies of matters of this sort are well known to most of us—

Mr. Cowan: That is a matter of opinion, as you suggested to me a moment ago.

Mr. Brewin: I am not quoting Dr. Forsey as an expert on every conceivable subject.

Mr. Lewis: Only in respect of those with which you agree.

Mr. Brewin: That is right. On this particular occasion Dr. Forsey supplied me and perhaps other members of the house with a memorandum on the subject of the removal of Superior Court judges. He pointed out that this was unique and that there has been no occasion in Canadian history when this matter has been dealt with, but there have been one or two abortive attempts to deal with this matter: On no occasion before has it reached the point the present case has reached. Let me remind members of this house that the only authority with power to remove a Supreme Court judge is the Governor General on an address of the Senate and House of Commons. Before the Senate and House of Commons deal with such a matter it is entirely appropriate that there be a preliminary inquiry.

By whom should a preliminary inquiry be carried out, Mr. Speaker? I suggest that the course chosen by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin) is perfectly sound. He selected as a preliminary course an inquiry by an eminent retired justice of the Supreme Court of Canada who could not be accused in any sense of being biased or prejudiced in this matter in any shape or form. This inquiry is now to take place. What possible justification is there, in view of that fact, for this house to demand that some opinion expressed by, as the hon. member for York-Humber has said, a private body of lawyers be made a public document at this time? Why should their opinion, simply because it has been sent to the Minister of Justice in the nature of a complaint, as has been rumoured, by the majority of the benchers of the Law Society, and correspondence between the Minister of Justice, Mr. Justice Landreville and the Law Society, be made public?

Of course publicity is an important thing at certain times, but I suggest if we have a genuine respect for the independence of the judiciary we should not want to set a precedent as a result of which a complaint, at any time one is received by the minister of justice regarding the conduct of a judge, would as the property of this house be made a public document. I suggest this would not only interfere with the independence of the judiciary but would restrict the freedom of an individual to criticize the judiciary at the right times and in the right places. I believe that if I have a complaint about the conduct of a judge, and those of us who lose cases do sometimes feel disturbed about a judge's conduct, I should be permitted to voice that complaint in confidence. Sometimes there are serious complaints about judges. I am not suggesting for one moment that they occupy a sacrosanct position but, if every time some disappointed or dissatisfied litigant writes to the minister of justice that correspondence may be made public, a dangerous situation would be created.

I agree with what the hon. member for York-Humber said about how arrogant cabinets formed from parties on both sides of this house and throughout the world are in using the excuse of secrecy to conceal documents. No doubt that will be improved when this party finds itself in that position over there but until that time we will always have the spectacle of arrogant cabinets. I agree with those arguments but they have no application to this case.

There are situations in which there is no public benefit served by the production of documents. We know, because Mr. Justice Rand has made this statement, that there is to be a public inquiry into this matter. That is why I found the argument of the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) so completely non-persuasive. He said he was concerned about the independence of the judiciary and no doubt he is, but then he proceeded to say that in this case if we did not make the documents public immediately in this house, even though there is to be a public inquiry, the public would become suspicious and we must not feed their suspicions. It may be that we must not feed the suspicions of the public, but I think we would do so far more by making public the results of inconclusive and ex parte inquiries than by waiting for the results of the public inquiry that is to be made.

A proper inquiry has been instituted in accordance with perfectly proper and legitimate practice. Why do we need further documents and correspondence put before this house? We may have to deal at a later date with this matter in the form of a joint address but we do not know that at this stage. We may never have to deal with it. The commissioner may report that there is nothing to be dealt with and neither the government nor any other member needs bring it to the attention of this house. Until then what need have we for this correspondence and these documents? I do not care what the Law Society of Upper Canada says. The hon. member for York South suggested that this information should be made available because the Law Society has complained but he knows, as I do, that the Law Society is a completely oligarchic institution.

If the hon. member complains about the actions of the Law Society of Upper Canada, why does he not go to that Law Society and ask for the documents instead of supporting this motion in the house as a means of producing these documents? If the production of these documents would serve the administration of justice or would serve the cause of fairness in dealing with the serious problem that has been raised in regard to this particular judge, if I could see any use for it at all then I would support the motion. I can see no useful purpose but I can see a very dangerous precedent being set which would undermine, whether we like it or not, the independence of the judiciary. Whether the originator of the motion saw that danger or not I do not know, but I am sure he would disclaim that intent.

We are not just dealing with one case and one individual judge; we are dealing with a precedent that would affect the whole administration of justice. If no action had been taken by the Minister of Justice perhaps what the motion suggests would be good, but why should we now in this house, when action has been in fact taken to provide a full public inquiry, insist upon seeing these documents and this correspondence?

I submit to hon. members that the production of these documents would serve no useful purpose and would in fact establish a dangerous precedent. I support the arguments put forward by my colleague, the hon. member for Danforth. Despite my great sympathy for some of the things said by the hon. member for York-Humber I hope we will defeat this motion.

Mr. Steven Otto (York East): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of some serious consequence. Following the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) and the hon. member for York-Humber (Mr. Cowan), I am not going to refer to the issue of the independence of the judiciary and whether or not the alleged misbehaviour of Mr. Justice Landrevillle took place before or after he was appointed because I do not think it is a matter of serious consequence. But it is a matter of some consequence that we are really arguing about the qualification of judges, or at least the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) is in putting forward the motion.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): No, not at all.

Mr. Otto: I want the hon. member for Carleton to hear me out so that I may impress upon him the seriousness of this type of motion. There is one point that is very important and it is this. There has been a report from the benchers of the Upper Canada Law Society. Who are these benchers? They are not sanctified in any way whatsoever. They do not come down to us from Mount Olympus with any sort of aura. They are the elected executive of a very tight trade union. They are elected by the members of the legal profession of Ontario to protect the legal profession to a great extent.

These benchers rule on whether or not members of the legal profession from other provinces may practise in Ontario. They have a heavy hand in deciding, for the good of the profession, how many graduates are going to leave Osgoode Hall. They have something to say about minimum fees and tariffs. In other words, they are no more or no less than the executive of the plumbers' association. The service station association has an executive, as has the medical profession and the legal profession. These benchers are the people who sent this letter. It is not a report from the Law Society because the Law Society is composed of all the lawyers in the province. I do not recall at any time authority being given to the benchers to take this type of action, so it it really a report which the minister should not have accepted.

Now we are asked to put the stamp of approval of the house on this report.

Mr. Lewis: Nobody is asking that.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Otto: Well, Mr. Speaker, the motion asks this house to examine a copy of this statement, which is the same thing.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): All we want is to see it; we do not want to approve it.

Mr. Otto: Perhaps the hon. member for Carleton will listen to me for a moment. We have now sanctified these benchers. The benchers are practising solicitors and lawyers and on occasion they appear before the bench. As the hon. gentleman for Greenwood pointed out, the bench is also composed of human beings with certain feelings. If one of the benchers appears before the judge, pleads a case and loses or is about to lose, will there not be some pressure on the judge to say to himself, "What is going to happen? This man is a bencher. He will go back to the benchers and they will find out that when I was 15, 16 or 14 I stole some apples". Who knows what the alleged crime might be? Will the judge not take into consideration this motion and say, "The benchers may send another report to the minister and I will be"—

Mr. Bell (Carleton): That is an insult to the whole judiciary of Canada.

Mr. Lewis: Hear, hear.

Mr. Otto: It is not an insult. In dealing with this matter we should be not only pragmatic but truthful to ourselves and realize that we are providing the benchers with an aura they do not have. They are no different, as the hon. member for Greenwood pointed out, from any other individual. Surely a report or letter from any other organization, any common or average citizen or businessman would not be demanded by the house for tabling. That is the real issue, Mr. Speaker. Are we going to provide these benchers of the Upper Canada Law Society with some great sanctity and say they deserve it? That is what the motion calls for. I say we must consider this question very carefully. We might set a precedent and that would not be right; it would not help anyone. For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I think the motion should be defeated.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I wish to participate in this debate not for the purpose of adding any arithmetical weight to the opinions of the lawyers of the New Democratic party but rather to study with you the problems that are attendant on the tabling of these documents. I firmly believe that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin) took the proper course in setting up a judicial inquiry and I commend him for that action. It was a very difficult problem to deal with and his actions were right in the circumstances. I feel that this problem is a judicial rather than a political one and it is very difficult to separate the two. If this document were tabled you would create a political climate which would greatly prejudice the fair trial of Mr. Justice Landreville.

Mr. Cowan: It is not a trial; it is an inquiry.

Mr. Gilbert: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker; I mean that it would greatly prejudice the inquiry with regard to Mr. Justice Landreville. May I point out that the report prepared by the law society was one in which the justice played no part in the giving of any evidence, and I imagine that the rules of evidence applied to judicial cases were not closely followed. The report prepared by the benchers was merely an opinion of the benchers with regard to the conduct of the particular judge. Therefore, to lay the report open at this time by tabling it would give particular members an opportunity to express opinions on a report which was obtained in a very limited way.

• (6:40 p.m.)

My hon. friend from York-Humber (Mr. Cowan) is very disturbed that the highest court of the land is not going to deal with this problem. I would remind him that we will eventually deal with the problem after the report of the commissioner has been made. The hon. member also referred to the inquiry with regard to Atlantic Acceptance Corporation. I point out, Mr. Speaker, that was an inquiry with regard to a limited company whereas the inquiry that has been set up here is with regard to a particular person. I do not believe it has any particular application.

I respectfully submit to you, sir, that after listening to the speech of the hon. member for Carleton who moved this motion and the speeches of other members it is clear that the purpose of the motion seems to be political rather than judicial. I feel that no purpose would be served by creating a political climate prior to the inquiry.

The hon. member for York-Humber (Mr. Cowan) thinks there is an aura of secrecy attached to this report. I respectfully submit there is no secrecy. At the moment there is a temporary delay and that delay is caused by the desire for a fair hearing. For these reasons I do not support the notice of motion but support the Minister of Justice.

Mr. H. E. Gray (Essex West): Mr. Speaker, when I was listening to the presentation of this notice of motion by the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) I found aspects which frankly troubled me when I attempted to follow his argument why this particular report should be produced. While waiting for my turn in this debate, I took the liberty of looking up Hansard for February 3 and reading again the words of the hon. member for Carleton when he presented his motion with his usual fire and eloquence. Let me draw the attention of the house to a few excerpts from his remarks. On page 669 of Hansard in the second column, he is reported as saying:

> It is not the conduct of Mr. Justice Landreville with which this motion deals. Let me make that abundantly clear.

A few lines lower down on the page, I find this:

> What I am interested in is the conduct of the Minister of Justice and of his predecessor, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Favreau)—

On page 670, the third paragraph, he is reported as saying:

> No, Mr. Speaker, I repeat that this motion is not designed in any way to relate to the hearing now abdicated by this parliament to a retired judge. It is designed—

I draw the attention of this house to these words:

> —to get to immediate grips with the incompetence and inconsistency with which the Minister of Justice and his predecessor, the President of the Privy Council, have handled a vital matter affecting so delicately the whole principle of the independence of the judiciary—

At the conclusion of his remarks on page 670 I find this:

> But I am determined to hold the hon. member for Richelieu-Verchères, who is now Minister of Justice, accountable for his conduct of the whole affair. For that reason I am asking hon. members in all parts of the house to support this motion, to strike a blow against the arrogance—I use that word deliberately—of the Minister of Justice—

In other words, he is not asking this house to approve the notice of motion to have this report put on the table of this house to permit parliament to decide on some action to protect against possible injury to the integrity of our judiciary; he is not asking this house to approve his notice of motion so that the house can be informed of some situation of which hon. members have had no knowledge at all. He is using this report to strike a political blow against the reputation of the Minister of Justice. In other words, in order to strike at the Minister of Justice he is willing to trample underfoot the rights of a Canadian citizen who happens to be a judge of one of our higher courts.

I suggest to hon. members that this is a very serious thing. Surely a judge as an individual has a right to be treated fairly. One of the great problems of our modern society is to what extent the rights of an individual have to be made subservient to the over-all rights of the state. We see this when we have debates on the rights of the press and the right of the individual to privacy, when we have discussions about the rights of the press to inform the public concerning judicial proceedings, even though this may be at the cost of a fair and impartial trial of the individual accused. I feel that this notice of motion by the hon. member for Carleton is an illustration of this problem of public policy which we are facing in many avenues of our national life today.

Another aspect of this problem has been referred to in this house which I am not going to deal with here, namely, the very difficult problem involving a former civil servant and his rights which have come into conflict with a basic question of the over-all security of the state. This question has been referred to in the house during the question period and I would not be surprised if it is discussed again at some other time.

Returning to the subject matter of this motion, we have a situation in which the chief aim is a political attack leading to the embarrassment of the Minister of Justice. To do this, the hon. member for Carleton is willing to disregard completely, or so it appears to me, the ordinary civil rights of a Canadian citizen who in this case happens to be a judge of one of our superior courts.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): This is simply ridiculous.

Mr. Gray: The hon. member says this is simply ridiculous. If that is the only criticism the hon. member can bring to bear on my argument, then my argument must have a lot more strength than he is willing to admit.

What are some of the basic things which someone who stands accused of a course of conduct, which if proven could lead to serious consequences, could expect as a matter of right as a Canadian citizen in our society today? Surely if the accusation is of the seriousness of that which is being brought by some at least in the public print against Mr. Justice Landreville, he has a right to expect that any report passing judgment on his conduct should be made after he has had a public hearing, after he has had a right to have counsel present arguments, after he has had the right to call witnesses and to have his counsel cross-examine witnesses. In short, there should be what might be called an adversary proceeding.

• (6:50 p.m.)

If I may put it another way, he has the right to have the basic principles of British and Canadian justice followed. I recall Dean Smalley-Baker saying some years ago, when he was Dean of the Law School at Osgoode Hall, audi alterem partem, which I would gather means, "hear the other side." Surely this is a basic principle of British and Canadian justice which does not appear, so far as I am aware, to have been followed by those representatives of the Law Society who prepared and submitted the report in question. I think that because this was not done this report in the form it has been presented to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin) should not be presented to the house at this time.

If, Mr. Speaker, the question "How could this report be described or categorized" were put, the answer would be that it would be analogous to reports that are the result of preliminary investigations which are used for the purpose of deciding whether charges should be laid. I think those of my hon. friends who are perhaps more experienced and learned in the law than I happen to be at this time will agree that generally speaking such reports cannot be produced in courts where charges arising out of these preliminary investigations are brought.

One obvious reason for this is the one-sided nature of the preliminary report on which the decision to lay a charge has been based in the particular case. Often these reports contain what might be referred to as raw data, data which have not been completely checked out by the most detailed form of investigation, indeed, data which may not have been properly checked at all.

As I say, Mr. Speaker, I think that those members of the house who have had more years experience at the bar than I have had will agree that it would be a very unfair and harmful thing if these confidential preliminary reports, on which investigations which lead to a decision to lay charges are often based, should be made available as documents of serious probitive consequence in the trial of the charges in question.

The question may be raised whether or not the person who has been charged with carrying out an inquiry into this judge's conduct will be deprived of some useful or valuable information because this report is not produced before this house at this time. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that the Law Society will be able to be represented by counsel at the public hearing or at the private hearing, for that matter. It will be able through its counsel to make any sort of inquiry or argument it wishes. At the inquiry I am sure the Law Society will be able to request that witnesses be called to be heard by the person who will be conducting the inquiry if it appears that counsel for the inquiry will not be taking this step of his own accord. In fact, I would suspect that the Law Society will be able to present its report to the inquiry so that the judge can take such cognizance of it as would be relevant at the time.

If the report is presented to Mr. Justice Rand when he conducts his inquiry, it will be presented in a way which will open it to scrutiny by the representatives of Mr. Justice Landrevile. Inconsistencies or omissions in this report can be questioned and can be put on the public record.

If the motion that this report be now tabled is received and accepted by the house and if this report should be critical of the judge and his conduct, then I would suggest that this judgment in the report will become fixed in the public mind—it often appears that the public mind works this way—in a way which cannot be removed no matter what the decision of the inquiry held by Mr. Justice Rand. I suggest that members of the public will not be in a position to draw distinctions or raise criticisms of the type made so eloquently in this chamber today and on previous occasions by members from both sides of the house, pointing out the way this report has been prepared and presented.

For example, I am sure the public will not know that Mr. Justice Landreville was not heard before the report was produced; at least, that is the case as far as we are aware. They will not know that he did not have counsel appear for him before those who prepared the report and that there was not, even in the more limited sense of a public inquiry, a form of adversary proceeding in which his side was fully, fairly and effectively put before any decision was taken.

No, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that if this report is critical of the judge, and there seems to be some suspicion on the part of many that that may be the case, then there will be left in the public mind a form of taint on the reputation of the judge in question which no decision of Mr. Justice Rand's inquiry or even of this house may ever completely remove.

The result of this, I suggest, will be harmful not only to the reputation and general integrity of our judiciary itself; it will have done a form of irreparable harm to the reputation of Mr. Justice Landreville as an individual. It would be serious enough, Mr. Speaker, if the result of producing this report would be to harm unjustly in the public mind the reputation or integrity and high standards of our judiciary. It would be even worse if, to achieve a narrow, partisan, political purpose, the hon. member for Carleton were put in the position of harming a Canadian citizen who in this case may happen to be a judge of our Supreme Court.

May I call it seven o'clock?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hour for the consideration of private members' business has expired. The house will now resume the business interrupted at six o'clock.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Rinfret in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

Air Services—

30. Administration, operation and maintenance including the administration of the Aeronautics Act and regulations issued thereunder, the administration of the Radio Act and regulations issued thereunder, Canada's share of the cost of the international radio, telegraph and telephone organizations listed in the details of the estimates, Canada's assessment for membership in the World Meteorological Organization, $110,000 for grants in aid of meteorological research in Canadian universities and Canada's share of the cost of the World Meteorological Organization symposium on design of hydrometeorological networks, $97,637,700.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall vote 30 carry?

• (7:00 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, even if the minister is absent I should like to make some remarks which he might look up when he reads Hansard.

It is about the airport in Mégantic. This airport was built by the Federal Government but it is not maintained. Owners of private planes who would like to use that airport, cannot do it in the fall or during the spring thaw. Even during winter the airport cannot be used.

I ask the minister whether he intends to set up a regional policy based on the needs of small airports?

The Mégantic airport is modern enough, but the landing strips have not yet been paved.

I repeat this because the minister has just come into the house, privately owned planes cannot use it all year round.

In addition, when the summer is as wet as it was last year, even the provincial planes whose job is to protect the forests from fires often cannot land at this airport.

I know there is an agreement between the city and the federal government with regard to this airport; the city of Mégantic rented the airport, but it cannot maintain it. I am quite convinced that at this particular time of the year planes cannot land there. The other day, private plane owners told us they could neither take off nor land there because the runways were too deep in snow. In spring and in autumn, those landing strips are too soft, the ground is too soft to enable aircraft to take off or to land.

I would therefore ask the minister what he intends to do is such circumstances. Should the town of Mégantic surrender the airport to the federal government, because it is unable to look after its maintenance. The citizens would like to be in a position to use it. The provincial government which also uses it for forest protection, would be interested in using it the year round.

I would ask the minister whether it would be possible to have in Mégantic a profitable airport maintained by the federal government which would make sure that it is usable at all times.

Now I know of the representations the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard) made regarding the Sherbrooke airport.

That airport is 45 miles from lake Megantic. It was built 4, 5 or 6 years ago, I think, and cost over $3 million, but it has never been used. The people of Megantic like those of the Sherbrooke area and of all the eastern townships would be anxious to use it.

I strongly support the hon. member for Sherbrooke in his request to have Air Canada establish an air route to serve Sherbrooke and the vicinity. That would be most helpful to us. The people of Lake Megantic and the eastern townships are in great need of this airport.

I would ask the minister to consider the situation. As this airport is already built, the only thing to do would be to authorize Air Canada to reinstate the services which this airport used to give. In my opinion, there would be enough passengers to make the line useful and profitable.

Those are the remarks I wanted to express to the minister; I ask him to take into consideration the matter of Megantic and Sherbrooke airports.

Item agreed to.

Air Services—

35. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment including national airports (as determined by the Minister of Transport) and related facilities, contributions towards construction done by local or private authorities with respect to such airports, amounts to be paid in settlement of claims for compensation by persons whose property is injuriously affected by the operation of a zoning regulation made under authority of paragraph (j) of subsection (1) of section 4 of the Aeronautics Act, and authority, notwithstanding section 30 of the Financial Administration Act, to make commitments for the current fiscal year not to exceed, for airports and other ground services a total amount of $30,878,100, for radio aids to air and marine navigation a total amount of $14,854,000, and for meteorological services a total amount of $2,745,300, $41,906,000.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I have only one question for the minister concerning the construction of an air terminal.

Mr. Pickersgill: In Val d'Or?

Mr. Caouette: And in Rouyn. As far as Val d'Or is concerned, the matter seems to have been settled temporarily since it has been decided that the construction will start before fall.

Rouyn needs an air terminal, because Rouyn-Noranda, to put things simply, is the hub of northwestern Quebec. I would like to have the assurance from the minister that his department is considering the possibility of building in Rouyn-Noranda an air terminal as substantial as the one which will be built in Val d'Or.

[English]

Mr. Pickersgill: I can give the hon. gentleman the assurance that the matter will be looked into at once.

Item agreed to.

40. Contributions to assist in the establishment or improvement of local airports and related facilities, payments to the other governments or international agencies that are detailed in the estimates for the operation and maintenance of airports, air navigation and airways facilities, including authority to pay assessments in the amounts and in the currencies in which they are levied, notwithstanding that the total of such payments may exceed the estimated equivalent in Canadian dollars, grants as detailed in the estimates for the development of civil aviation and payments to the Canadian National Railway Company of the difference between revenues and expenses in the operation and maintenance of telecommunication facilities as detailed in the estimates in accordance with agreements entered into with the company with the approval of the governor in council, $1,370,300.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Chairman, may I express my appreciation to the Minister of Transport for the contributions the department made to the Wellington-Waterloo airport situated in my community. These contributions made it possible to enlarge the runways and add aprons to this very popular airport which serves Kitchener, Guelph, Hespeler, and areas adjacent. The airport is used to a large extent by incoming and outgoing aircraft, serving what we call the golden triangle of Ontario. I know that the people of that community would want me to express their appreciation to the minister for the allotment of funds that has made these improvements possible.

Mr. Brand: Mr. Chairman, may I ask another question of the Minister of Transport and an assurance from him in connection with the matter I am about to raise. A few months ago I had a meeting with many of those who hold private pilot licences in my constituency. At that time those people were expressing a great deal of concern about their ability to use the facilities at our airport, and at other airports across Canada. The facilities they referred to had to do with instrument approaches, and with the practising of instrument approaches in some airports which were not busy at the time. Those pilots were not allowed to do this by the towers on this side of the border, whereas if they flew to an airport in the United States they were more than welcome to use the instrument facilities, whether the airport was busy or not. The pilots concerned felt that it would be preferable if they had greater opportunity to make use of facilities, particularly of those in airports that are not busy and therefore not being used, and they felt it would be to the advantage of those in control towers thus to improve their own skills. May I ask the minister if he would be good enough to look into this matter for the sake of those who hold private pilot licences, perhaps with a view to doing something eventually to improve this situation.

Mr. Pickersgill: I will be very glad to review the situation, and if the hon. gentleman would let me know about the particular case he has in mind, I will look into that as well.

Item agreed to.

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I should like to add just a word to the remarks of the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. Brand), and ask the minister not to consider only the case of the flying enthusiasts of the Saskatoon area. I should like to make the following suggestion. At least once a year the minister or his officials should find it possible to meet with the people in charge of the private flying clubs throughout Canada, because it is those flying clubs that are the source of future pilots.

I fully understand the problem mentioned by the hon. member for Saskatoon, because I was once a member of a private flying club. There are other problems upon which the minister could, at very little cost, exert a rather significant influence in order to promote private aviation and to be of assistance to those flying clubs.

Then, I suggest that at least once a year the officials of his department should manage to call a conference with the bona fide officials of the private flying clubs, in order to talk over their problems.

Before resuming my seat, I also should like on behalf of the whole area of Trois-Rivières, to thank the minister for what we have received in the field of private aviation, and I think we can say we were gratified to the full.

[English]

Mr. Pickersgill: That seems a very good idea and I will look into the matter.

Mr. Cantelon: I should like to express my interest in the announcement, made by the minister last March 29, that there was to be a vote of funds to assist local airports. That, I think, is a very worth-while plan, particularly because it is my feeling that since the public supports the roads for automobile travel, the federal government ought to support the local airports for those who want to travel by air.

• (7:10 p.m.)

I wish to pose some questions to the minister in regard to that, because it is my understanding that there was to be $1 million voted for this purpose. According to the information that we have here only some $591,300 was used, although I notice in the new estimates that it is expected that $850,000 will be used by the end of the year. I should like to know, what reason if any there is for only a proportion of the $1 million being used? Can the minister give me an idea as to how many applications were received? I am very interested in knowing how many of these came from Saskatchewan and, of course, I should like to know how many came from my own constituency.

Mr. Pickersgill: As to the first question, I think the answer is very simple. The policy has not yet been in operation for a whole year. I have no doubt that after it has been in operation for a full year the situation will be very different. As for the list of places, I am not sure I have it here. If I do not, and if I give the hon. member an assurance that I will provide him with it, I wonder if he would be satisfied.

[Mr. Mongrain.]

Mr. Cantelon: That would be agreeable, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Nasserden: I believe that at the present time the department does not assume any responsibility for the purchase of land for local airports. This has become a problem today in many areas where the price of land is increasing. Would the minister give consideration to paying part of the cost of acquiring land intended for local airstrips?

Mr. Pickersgill: I will be glad to look into that matter again but there are some difficulties as I am sure the hon. gentleman well understands.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, only one more question. From the information I gave to the minister the other night during the debate on Item No. 1, is he prepared to consider again the case of Fecteau Transport Company of Senneterre who wish to operate as far as Rupert House and Mattagami, not Moosonee, not in Ontario, but Mattagami, so that this company may be fairly dealt with?

[English]

Mr. Pickersgill: I am looking into that matter and I intend to write to the hon. gentleman just as soon as I get a little information.

Mr. Schreyer: I wanted to put a question to the Minister of Transport having to do with the construction program for the satellite airport at St. Ambroise on the outskirts of Winnipeg. It is my understanding that the Department of Transport intends to proceed this summer—

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps the hon. gentleman, who is an experienced parliamentarian though he is a new member here, would look at the estimates for 1966-67. Provision is made for these developments in those estimates, and perhaps in the circumstances it could be discussed on them.

Mr. Schreyer: I understand. But by the time we get to the estimates for the next fiscal year it will be too late. So I should like to draw the minister's attention to this matter now.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is already in the estimates which were distributed on Monday.

Mr. Schreyer: I understand that, but I wonder whether the minister would hear me out, because this has to do with work which is contemplated. It is my understanding that the department intends to proceed with the hard-surfacing of the runways of this satellite airport and I am told by people who I believe are in a position to know that it would be most unfortunate if the department were to proceed to surface these 2,500 foot runways because in a few years the economic development of northeast Manitoba will demand longer runways. I hope the minister will look into this question with a view to providing longer runways at this airport. There are many entrepreneurs and businessmen in this area who would regret it very much if the department were to proceed with the hard-surfacing of runways which are much too short.

Mr. Pickersgill: I will look into that matter before any action is taken.

Air Transport Board—

75. Air Transport Board salaries and other expenses, $777,200.

Mr. Walker: This vote has to do with the Air Transport Board. I should like to bring to the attention of the minister and of the board a situation which has developed in connection with international charter licences. I am innocent enough to believe that the motives and the aims of those who hold air carrier licences should be to take people where they want to go at times when they want to go. But in this field—and I am referring to international charter licences in the class 9-4A—a situation has come into being which could have unfortunate results. At the moment a number of operators are in possession of licences which are not being used. I am speaking particularly of Ontario. I should like to bring it to the attention of the minister and, through him, to the transport board that in May, June and July of 1965, 124 foreign carrier flights departed from Ontario alone.

No less than 45 per cent of Ontario charters was carried out by foreign carriers. This is typical. It has been pointed out that Ontario does not have an active air carrier in the 9-4A category and the province is losing some $13 million a year to other Canadian companies and to foreign-owned companies. Though Ontario provides more than half the Canadian market, at present worth about $35 million, it does not have an active licensed carrier and therefore it does not share in this market.

I presume the licensees have equipment But the problem which may develop is this: These licences may shortly have a greater dollar asset value than the businesses themselves, and I think this would make for a poor situation if it did develop.

Should not the transport board make an annual review of the use to which these licences are being put and consider revoking the licence of any international charter carrier operating in Canada who has not carried anybody in the previous year? I know that Air Canada is in the air charter flight business and they are booked up until way into next year. I understand, too, that there are thousands of Canadians who would very much like to go on charter flights this summer but are unable to do so because the necessary equipment is not available.

This could arise from the fact that there are eight or nine unused inactive licences in being at the present time. And I think the board should take steps to deal with this situation.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to assure the hon. gentleman that this matter is already under very active consideration.

Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada—

80. Administration, operation and maintenance, $1,477,000.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, I intended to give a rather lengthy dissertation on this subject, but owing to the fact that we are anxious to get the estimates through, I shall only refer to two brief matters which for obvious reasons I should bring to the minister's attention at this time. The first one directly concerns the Board of Transport Commissioners.

So far as I am concerned I have always had most excellent relations with that board. From what I have seen of their hearings they are held very fairly, and any reasonable person could rely on the judgment they produce from the facts presented to them. However, having said that I would like to say that justice must not only be done but it must appear to be done as well.

Last year I attended a board hearing concerned with a C.N.R. request to abandon a small railway line in my riding. I do not quarrel with the judgment given by the board, but having watched things carefully at the hearing I can say an impression was given to lay personnel that the officials of the board present and the officials of the C.N.R.

were, as they say, playing footsie, and constant references were made to the valuable information provided to the board by the C.N.R. I realize this is probably a normal procedure, but to an outsider it gave the impression that the board, to say the least, was being very sympathetic to the C.N.R. application, thus creating an unfortunate impression. It may not have occurred to the board that this kind of thing can happen, but again I repeat justice must not only be done but it must appear to be done.

I agree with the minister in what he said yesterday, that railway services must be paid for either by the general public or by the users of the railways. But I point out that the accounting methods used by the railways are quite different from the usual accounting methods used in other forms of business. This may or may not be a good thing, but since a committee of this house will shortly be hearing representations concerning C.P.R. passenger service, and since further hearings will be heard by the Board of Transport Commissioners on railway line abandonment, I ask that the government appoint a one-man royal commission, an expert chartered accountant, to review quickly the methods of accounting used by the railways so that they may be understood by members of the committee and the public at large.

In this connection I refer briefly to a judgment handed down by Mr. Griffin, with reference to the hearing I attended. I quote from page 15 as follows:

> It became apparent, during further cross-examination of Mr. White, and when Mr. Winlaw later gave evidence for the respondents, that there was some misapprehension about railway accounting for track elements because of differences between the more usual accounting practices and those employed by railways.

I have had experience in accounting by training and some brief work, and I can say railway accounting, because of the nature of the business, is indeed different. When members of this house or of the other place attend board hearings, or committees dealing with passenger service, it should be made very clear to them what are the differences in the accounting methods used by railways and those used in ordinary business practice. Therefore I suggest someone be appointed to translate railway accounting methods into ordinary accounting parlance so that people may know what is happening.

Under the accounting methods used by railways they can certainly give the appearance that operations are costing more than if they were accounted for by ordinary methods. This provides the railways with a good excuse for seeking to abandon passenger service, railway lines and other things. If ordinary accounting methods were used I am quite sure the railways would not have so many arguments to make in favour of getting rid of passenger service, and abandoning lines. This is a point that has been overlooked so far in debates in this chamber and should be considered before the next estimates are discussed.

I now wish to speak about a grade crossing in the town of Ingersoll, Ontario, in my riding. It crosses the main lines of the C.N.R. running between Montreal and Chicago. It is a subject which has been before the house on various occasions, and also before the Board of Transport Commissioners. Just recently a second fatality occurred there. A small child was killed at the crossing. This line crosses No. 2 highway, a main traffic artery in Ontario, in the middle of the town of Ingersoll. There is a children's swimming pool on one side, and a large Roman Catholic school on the other. Hundreds of children are constantly in the vicinity of the railway crossing.

Some types of gates provide protection but, as hon. members know, railways constitute an allurement to children. The gates may protect adults, but that does not apply to children. During the recent election I suggested at my nomination meeting that I would be glad to look into the matter and bring it before parliament. Later, when the Liberal party had its convention, the Liberal candidate said he would do so too. But for some reason during the course of the election campaign it became a political issue.

Mr. Pickersgill: How surprising.

Mr. Nesbitt: I am surprised the minister says he is surprised at this. I am not suggesting the minister had anything to do with it; I have no evidence that he did. I know he would not do things like this, but during the campaign the Liberal candidate came to Ottawa to get something done quickly about it. That is fair game at election time. Those of us who have been here quite a while are not thin skinned about these things, but I want to remind the minister, and his colleague the Minister of Public Works, of what was held out to the people of the town of Ingersoll.

• (7:30 p.m.)

At that time the Liberal candidate had his picture taken for the press showing him seated by the then acting prime minister, the present Minister of Public Works, who had a smile like the great white father and his arm around that gentleman. The caption stated that this matter would be looked into and attended to at once. Apparently the people of Ingersoll did not take the promise too seriously—at least the election results would indicate that. In any event, I wanted to give the background.

This is what I am really complaining about and it is a very serious complaint. On December 14 last the Board of Transport Commissioners held a meeting in the town of Ingersoll regarding this railway crossing. I was delighted to note, when I read the account of that meeting, that the minister and the board were able to provide such a prompt hearing.

Despite the fact that I have been the member for Oxford for six parliaments covering approximately 13 years I received no notice of this hearing whatsoever. That is the first time to my knowledge since I have been a member I have not received a notice of a hearing of the Board of Transport Commissioners held in my area, whether or not I expressed any interest in this particular proceeding. I thought that rather peculiar in view of the fact I had some correspondence with the board regarding this matter.

I wrote the Board of Transport Commissioners about this matter and received a reply dated December 28, 1965 from a Mr. Rump, secretary of the board, which stated in part:

> It is not usual to send notices to members of parliament unless they have indicated an interest to the Board. In this case, no letter from you appears on our file.

I am sure the minister does not know anything about this situation, but I should like to point out that in volume IV of Hansard for 1955 there is recorded at pages 3988 and 3989 two pages of my remarks about this crossing. Even though the board might lose its files or destroy them after a few years we have this record in Hansard of my remarks about this crossing.

In addition to those remarks I had correspondence with the board about it. I do not have that correspondence in front of me but it is in my file. Early last September I telephoned the board concerning this correspondence and the latest fatality which had occurred there. Mr. Rump was away because of illness but I spoke to the acting secretary who noted the matter and said he would refer it to the board.

Again in reference to the letter I received from the board dated Deceber 28 I was informed that the board had no record of correspondence from me concerning tihs crossing and that if they did it must have been lost during a move from one office to another. I am prepared to accept that statement, but I find it difficult to understand why the board would not know that this crossing matter had been the subject of considerable political controversy during the last election campaign.

I should like to read further from the letter and draw this statement to the attention of the minister, because I feel he perhaps does not know what some of his personnel are doing. On the second page we find this statement:

> In so far as the notification of the defeated candidate in your constituency is concerned I would advise that, because of representations which were transmitted to the Board through the office of the Minister of Transport, a copy of the Board's formal notice of hearing was forwared to Mr. H. Arbique, Special Assistant to the Minister. It is understood that Mr. Arbique in turn, because of the representations made to the Minister, advised the local Liberal Association in Ingersoll. Therefore, I presume in this matter their representative became informed of the hearing.

In that regard it seems that almost the whole Liberal Party in Oxford turned out for the hearing. I think perhaps I should read the next paragraph which states:

> I can assure you that a copy of the notice of the hearing was not sent by this Board to either your political opponent or his association in Ingersoll. However, I might say that a few days prior to the hearing I received a telephone call on behalf of the local Liberal Association asking whether or not the Board would receive representations from that organization if it wished to submit same. They were, of course, verbally advised that this was their privilege if they so desired.

The secretary then set down a number of officials' names in the town of Ingersoll to whom notice had been sent. The bottom name is Mr. Kenneth F. Riehl, 913 Warwick Street, Woodstock. I understand that he is a high school teacher at Woodstock and a very active member of the Liberal party.

This kind of action is all good fun and horseplay during election campaigns, but I do think this lack of notification is the responsibility of the officials of the minister's department, and I draw this to his attention. The Board of Transport Commissioners is a quasi-judicial body and it should not be made, through pressure from the minister's office, the target of political partisanship. This whole thing must be very embarrassing to the members of that board and it is with regret that I refer to it at all. This type of thing is something that should be stopped. We have not heard of it before and I hope it will not occur again.

In this same regard, in view of the promises that were made—perhaps I should not use the word "promises" because the Minister of Public Works who was in the house a moment ago, and I am sorry he has left, has had enough experience in public life to know not to make direct promises, at least gave the impression that this dangerous railway crossing was going to be attended to at once, I hope the Minister of Public Works will refer the matter to his colleague the Minister of Transport so that something can be done.

When the board did hold its hearing on December 14, to which I was not invited, the London Free Press reported that the commissioner had said a very prompt decision would be made. That was last December and no decision has been made yet. The town of Ingersoll is very anxious to know when something will be done and whether it will have to pay a share of the cost because it is drawing up its budget for this year at the present time.

I ask the Minister of Transport to take this matter up with the Board of Transport Commissioners and impress upon that board that it must bear in mind the "promises" that were outlined and held out to the people of Ingersoll by the Minister of Public Works. Incidentally, the former minister of mines and technical surveys was in Ingersoll for a couple of days at that time. Perhaps it would have been better had he spent more time in his own riding in Prince Edward Island. I just mention that in passing.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question. Did I understand him correctly to say that he made representations about this matter in 1955?

Mr. Nesbitt: Yes, and on various occasions since then.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether the hon. gentleman could tell us what happened in respect of this crossing during the six years he was an influential member on this side of the house?

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, that is a very interesting observation. During those six years there were no requests from the town of Ingersoll to make the changes that were suggested at the recent hearing. Changes of another kind relating to this crossing were requested in 1955 and on other occasions. The request at the recent hearing for changes related to the increased number of small children using the crossing, a swimming pool nearby and greatly increased traffic. In addition, there were no fatal accidents in 1955. If the minister cares to review the matter I am sure he will obtain these facts.

Mr. Pickersgill: I will be very happy to review it.

• (7:40 p.m.)

Mr. Hales: Mr. Chairman, I wish to make one brief observation concerning the Board of Transport Commissioners. I would preface my remarks by saying that I, too, have always received from the board the finest co-operation. However, I believe it should be brought to the attention of the minister that the Board of Transport Commissioners was guilty of a lack of judgment in the way they went about removing the night train from Ottawa to Toronto. I realize that this train has since been reinstated, but taking off a night train service from the capital of Canada to the capital of Ontario was certainly, in my estimation, exhibiting a lack of good judgment. The board knew the pool service arrangement would expire last October. They had known this for years and knew it would expire on this particular date, but nothing was done except to drop the train as of October, 1965. Then there was a public outcry all across Canada, particularly in the areas of Toronto and Ottawa, public opinion was aroused and objections were put before the Board of Transport Commissioners. The Board then said, "Well, Canadian National and Canadian Pacific must get together and see what they can do".

Then the two railways got together and finally decided that C.P.R. would drop out of this passenger service and the C.N.R. would take over, with the result that we now have an overnight train service on Canadian National from the capital of Canada to the capital of Ontario.

I think it behooves the minister and the Board of Transport Commissioners to operate in a more efficient manner in a country such as Canada. They should not act in this backward, left-handed way. The removal of the overnight train made the railways the laughingstock of the country because the capital of Canada did not have this service. I thought this was the time to bring this matter to the attention of the minister and I hope he and the board will in the future use better judgment.

Mr. Pickersgill: I hope the train will be well patronized.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, on this vote which provides funds to the Board of Transport Commissioners I wish to say a few words, for two reasons. First I should like to support the argument advanced by the hon. member for Oxford who suggested that the Board of Transport Commissioners or at least someone in the Department of Transport require a cost accounting or a cost analysis system far better than the one used at the present time. I say this because we know, or at least some of us suspect, that the costs advanced by the C.P.R. when they filed their application to abandon the Dominion were not satisfactory in comparison with usual accounting methods.

The hon. member for Oxford is a distinguished member of the accounting profession and he advanced the opinion that the accounting methods used by the railway company are substantially different than those used in any other business in Canada. I am not a member of the accounting profession, but I should like to add that the accounting methods used in the railway's affairs are not even comprehensible to most other accountants in Canada.

The part that is disturbing about all this is that no serious attempt was made to challenge these costs when the C.P.R. filed figures of variable costs before before the Board of Transport Commissioners. I notice from the judgment handed down that apparently no attempt was made by the Board of Transport Commissioners to really seriously and in detail study these costs in order to ascertain whether they were justifiable, particularly from the point of view of the public interest.

Some amounts covering the cost of money were disallowed by the Board of Transport Commissioners and I give them full credit for this. They disallowed costs in other cases also. But there is the matter of depreciation charged to the Dominion amounting to $303,000 for locomotives and $1,033,000 for passenger cars which was not disallowed. I believe we are justified in suggesting that all this depreciation, particularly for passenger cars, will continue whether or not that train runs; therefore it is certainly not a cost that can be saved with the abandoning of the train.

One other thing that disturbs me greatly about these so-called variable costs advanced by the C.P.R. in support of their argument for the abandonment of the Dominion is that the amount of $628,000 is charged to this train under the heading "other general expenses"; yet when Mr. Nepveu, the C.P.R. witness called at the hearings of the Board of Transport Commissioners to explain these costs, was asked about this particular item he could not even answer a question on how they arrived at that figure. He was unable to give the details of the various components which added up to $628,000. I have read the judgment of the Board of Transport Commissioners very carefully and there is no questioning of this figure.

I do not want to be too critical of the board in this respect if they did not have the facilities and the personnel to carry out the kind of detailed analysis of these variable costs that was necessary. They say this is the case. I should like to quote from page 83 of file No. 27563.479 which is the judgment of the Board of Transport Commissioners in respect of the Dominion:

> The detailed expense items for the year 1964, when the train had head-end traffic, and for the projected year 1965-66, for the train with its present consist, were shown in Exhibits 4 and 5.

Those exhibits were filed by Canadian Pacific Railway. Then it says:

> All categories of expense are lower for the projected year, the total variable cost being reduced from $20.8 million to $7.7 million.

Of course, the difference here is in the consist of the train. Then on page 84 of the judgment the Board of Transport Commissioners go on to say in the second paragraph:

> As to the revenues and costs, as shown in Exhibit 5, for a 12-month operation of the train with its present consist, I would not include as a saveable expense the $628,100 claimed by the company as cost of money. I would also, for the purposes of this judgment, make disallowances in other items, including road maintenance, traffic and general expenses.

I do not need to read the rest of this paragraph, but then it is said:

> I am in agreement with their estimate that the saveable expenses on that basis would be in the neighbourhood of $6 million and the deficit about $3 million.

I presume this is for the consist of the train with one locomotive, a buffet car and two day coaches. Then further down it says:

> —I have not considered it necessary to require the board's staff or myself to make the further detailed study that would be necessary in order to determine more precisely the items and total of allowable expenses, revenues and deficit.

I would suggest to the Minister of Transport that perhaps one reason the Board of Transport Commissioners did not go into these matters in more detail was that they did not have a sufficiently modern or efficient accounting branch to do a good job. It is a tremendous task, a formidable undertaking to go over all these things and arrive at these figures from the records of the C.P.R.

It appears that the Board of Transport Commissioners in handing down their decision respecting the Dominion were willing to accept the variable costs advanced by Canadian Pacific Railway. There have been some changes, as is pointed out, but there is no explanation in the judgment as to the extent and allocation of the disallowances in respect of other items.

• (7:50 p.m.)

It seems to me that if the public interest is to be served, then surely when the railway company advances costs of this kind, there should be someone or a group of men in the offices of the Board of Transport Commissioners or the Department of Transport, who could undertake a thorough, detailed examination of these figures in order to insure that we do not simply accept this kind of thing from the Canadian Pacific. When the Canadian Pacific was examined at the public hearing, they could not even give details as to how they arrived at these costs. There were other items, such as the $1,932,000 claimed as road maintenance. However, when Mr. Nepveu, a Canadian Pacific witness, was asked to give an explanation of how he arrived at this cost, he admitted this was something the railway could not do. There had been a proportion of the total cost allocated to this train. When asked how long it may be before the Canadian Pacific could actually save this amount claimed in 1964, he said it might take 15 or 18 years.

I should like the minister to realize that this simply is not good enough if the public interest is to be served. I feel that we have to prove these items. In 1958, the Canadian Pacific came before the Board of Transport Commissioners and claimed an annual loss of $17 million on hauling grain out of western Canada into export position at Vancouver or the head of the lakes. Well, to the credit of the provinces of Alberta and Manitoba, they went to the trouble and expense of engaging the services of a cost accounting firm which went into the details of the variable costs of hauling grain. They came back to the Board of Transport Commisssioners, so I am told, and showed that there was a $500,000 net profit instead of a $17 million deficit. All this information was taken from the Canadian Pacific records.

Now, in fairness to the board and to the Canadian Pacific, the board did not accept this $500,000 net profit. I understand, however, that they did accept a figure of something like $2 million loss instead of the $17 million. If that same proportion of difference could be applied to these variable costs that are charged against the Dominion, probably there would not be a deficit at all. By having a different group of accountants go over these figures, they were able to show that there were $15 million that were not lost, so the $17 million was cut down to $2 million. I understand these figures were accepted by the Board of Transport Commissioners. I could go into a lot of detail about the obligation of the Canadian Pacific to the public because of public investment, but I am not going to do that at this time. Before we allow the company to withdraw services on the basis of figures of this kind that are supplied by the company and are not challenged, we should at least have the services of competent accountants who will do a creditable job of examining these figures.

Before I leave the subject of the Board of Transport Commissioners, I should like to suggest this to the minister: Now that this matter of railway passenger service in Canada has been referred to a parliamentary committee, I hope the minister is going to give approval to this committee's hiring the services of a competent cost accounting firm so that the committee can study these variable costs and do a respectable job in the interests of the public. One more thing, Mr. Chairman, is that there was absolutely no attempt made by the Canadian Pacific, at least I see no reference to it in the judgment, to find out what percentage of these variable costs attributable to the Dominion are, in fact, costs that can be saved by abandoning this train. What percentage of them would be continuing costs whether or not the company runs this train? Certainly a number of them, such as road maintenance, will continue even though this train is no longer running.

The question that immediately arises of course is, who is going to pay? Is it going to be the captive freight shipper who will be caught again in this squeeze if the company is able to show an increase in costs in relation to revenues? There is one thing that is certain and that is that when the train is abandoned, the revenue is gone, the $10 million or $11 million in revenue which was claimed for 1964 operation, that is all gone. We do not know what proportion of these costs is going to be a continuing cost and charged to the captive freight shipper. I hope that the committee will be asking for assistance from experts. There will be some expenditure involved no doubt, but I hope the minister is going to respond favourably to this request so that the members of the committee will have these services available to them which will enable them to do a good job.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is one other point I want to mention in which I believe the Board of Transport Commissioners have an obligation. I feel they have tried to meet this obligation by attempting to determine what the public interest requires in the way of service. I am speaking now particularly of passenger services. However, prior to August, 1965, I do not believe the Board of Transport Commissioners had any statistics or other information available to them from either the Canadian National or the Canadian Pacific as to the demand for railway passenger services. My reason for referring to this matter is that every member in this house, particularly those from western Canada, has received complaints, not by the dozens but by the hundreds, from people who were turned down week after week when they made requests for railway passenger service.

However, there is no information on this aspect of the matter in the statements filed by the railway company. They claim they do not keep such records. Unfortunately the Canadian Pacific continued to destroy what little evidence they had on this point, namely the waiting lists. Even after the Board of Transport Commissioners asked them to provide evidence as to the number of requests for services that were not filled, as outlined in the order issued September 8, the information was not supplied. If the Board is to do justice to the public interest, they must know how many people were turned down when they made requests for service. If the railways are going to equate the demand for service with what is available, then it is not good enough for them to come before the Board of Transport Commissioners and say that on a certain day the train was only 50 per cent or 60 per cent full because people have been making requests for this space and have been turned down. This situation has not changed since the Board issued its order for the railways to provide this information. There has been no great improvement in the reservation system to insure that trains are reasonably full.

• (8:00 p.m.)

I hope that the minister and the Board of Transport Commissioners will make an even greater attempt to find out reasonably accurately how many requests are being made for railway passenger service, quite apart from the number of passengers who are actually carried. It is not good enough to say that because a particular train was only 50 per cent full, that was all the demand for service there was; there may have been several dozen people telephone, write or otherwise contact the railway, only to be informed there was no space available. Each one of us here who has found it necessary to ride in one of these trains recently knows very well that your request for space can be turned down days before you want to go, yet when you do get on the train you find all kinds of space.

As a matter of fact, I have had a number of experiences where I applied for space, and right up till the last hour before the train left the station my application had been turned down. Because I happened to have a pass I boarded the train anyway, and on walking through the train found all kinds of space, both in the day coaches and in the sleepers. So I think there needs to be a far more detailed study of this question to make an accurate survey of what is the public demand for railway service.

I am sure the minister knows that a great deal more time could be spent on the subject of railway passenger service, but since the matter has been referred to the committee and the estimates for the ensuing year will be coming up very soon, I will leave it at that. However, I repeat that I hope the minister matter has been referred to the committee on Transport and Communications to ask for sufficient expense money, and so on, so that they can use the services of competent people in examining these statements of variable costs which are advanced by the C.P.R.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether I could just say a word with respect to the demand made first by the hon. member for Oxford and repeated by the hon. member for Medicine Hat. I think a review should be made without any delay of the facilities we have, both in the Board of Transport Commissioners and in other branches of the government, for the checking of railway accounting in an independent way. I intend to have that matter looked into without any delay whatever.

If I could just say a word with respect to the other point raised by the hon. member—though I am not a member of the committee and he is—it is not customary for ministers to try to prejudge these questions. I feel quite sure that once the committee has embarked upon its study—I hope it will be done in this way—of the passenger service, if they then find that they need extra assistance—and I think it would be easier for Treasury Board, in providing this kind of service, if there had been a clearly demonstrated need—I cannot conceive that the government would be at all hesitant about seeing that it is provided. But I hope there will be a few meetings first just to see precisely what kind of assistance would be most appropriate.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, I should like to reinforce the arguments which have been put forward by the hon. member for Oxford and also for Medicine Hat regarding a secretariat of some kind for the Board of Transport Commissioners and their rail line rationalization program to look after the applications which may be put forward. I think this would be a very important part of such a program if it is to meet the objective that this parliament and the people of this country feel is most wanted in view of the recommendations made regarding rail line rationalization.

There is one other matter I should like to bring up, and I will be brief. It concerns the growing need for more overpasses along our railway system than we have at the present time. With these large diesel units we have trains consisting of 150 to 220 freight cars. At points like Warman, north of Saskatoon, a junction where one line goes west, one line goes east and another goes north, the track is blocked by trains crossing for sometimes as long as 80 minutes, often for 50 minutes. This is quite an inconvenience for people who want to cross the track and have to find another crossing some two or three miles away.

I should like the minister to try to bring forward a program which will provide more money for this purpose than is provided at the present time. As a matter of fact, almost every station along the way from Saskatoon to Humboldt and also up to the Battlefords has a real problem in this regard, and it should be looked into.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I rise to add my support to the suggestion made by the hon. member for Oxford and the hon. member for Medicine Hat that the minister not only take whatever steps are necessary to see that the Committee on Transport and Communications have the staff to do the job, but also that he give serious study to the urgent problem of supplying the Board of Transport Commissioners with the type of staff, both in numbers and in training, which, by statute will do the job they are required to do. Because if they do not do the job which has been given them, no one can do it.

I want to associate myself with the hon. member for Medicine Hat, who spoke of the fact that members of parliament, among others, have had the experience of being told, when they have tried to get accommodations on a train, that there are none, yet when they get on the train find it half empty.

Some two years ago I remember talking to the chairman of the Board of Transport Commissioners. I suggested to him that the C.P.R.'s removal of the dining car and sleeping accommodations from the Dominion could mean only one thing, and that was that the train would carry so little traffic that in a very short period of time the C.P.R. would go to the board and argue that they should have permission to discontinue the train for lack of passengers. Of course the train had no passengers. The C.P.R. set out deliberately to kill the Dominion. The Board of Transport Commissioners were warned but did nothing about it. The C.P.R. then asked for permission to discontinue the Dominion, and they were given that permission.

I spoke last week to one of the commissioners about the Canadian, because I have been told of people in Winnipeg who have already had some experiences apropos this train. People have phoned to make a reservation for sleeping accommodations and have been told there are no accommodations for that particular day. Nevertheless they have boarded the train and have found it half empty.

What did the commissioner tell me in this respect, Mr. Chairman? He said: "You supply us with the evidence and we will take action". Members of parliament are not a regulatory society or private detectives. Surely this matter is the responsibility of the Board of Transport Commissioners. I suggest to the minister that the Board of Transport Commissioners be given the job of making sure that the C.P.R. does not do with the Canadian what it did with the Dominion.

• (8:10 p.m.)

Mr. Chairman, I think I should express the views of many people across Canada who have already said with apprehension that it is the intention of the C.P.R., one way or another to get out of the passenger business. Many people do not think that that is proper. I have said before, and I will not go into great detail about it now, that it is my opinion that the Canadian Pacific made a contract with the people of Canada, and with the Government of Canada, when that company was established, which it ought not be allowed to break. It ought not to be permitted to discard that part of the business which is unprofitable and to keep that part of the business which is profitable.

Mr. Chairman, I do not want to spend much time on the Canadian Pacific and its railway operations as governed by the Board of Transport Commissioners. That has already been admirably done. I wish to speak of another matter under the jurisdiction of the Board of Transport Commissioners. Many speak about telephone rates. In the month of September, 1964, the Board of Transport Commissioners decided that it would be in the public interest to review, through public hearings, the whole question of telephone rates and costs of operating telephone systems in Ontario and Quebec. Public hearings were held.

Mr. Chairman, the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities together with the Association of Ontario Mayors and Reeves, the Ontario Municipal Association, and the Union of Quebec Municipalities acting for a long list of local cities and municipal governments, made a submission to the Board of Transport Commissioners. I believe it was on February 5, that the board heard from them, and from various other interested parties. The findings of the board were to be made in December, 1965. We are now approaching the latter part of February, 1966, and there is little indication when the board will actually bring down its findings. It may be, Mr. Chairman, that the board has not been able to do the job because it was busy with hearings in connection with the Dominion which was operated by the Canadian Pacific. This, however, only proves the point raised by the hon. member for Medicine Hat, to the effect that the board has not the kind and quality of staff to do the job it is required by law to do. Millions of dollars are involved in these hearings.

In 1958, after hearing submissions from the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities, in the judgment which it handed down the board said:

> By its judgment of 1958 the board allowed as reasonable a permissible level of earnings per share of $2.43, sufficient to maintain the historic $2 per share dividend and an additional 43 cents per share surplus.

This was confirmed in 1958, despite Bell's request for $2.65 per share.

Despite this judgment, however, in every year since 1958 Bell Telephone earnings have been substantially higher than the $2.53 permitted by the Board. In 1959 they had earnings of $2.48 a share, in 1960, $2.52 a share, in 1961, $2.50 a share, in 1962, $2.66 per share, and in 1963, $2.58 a share. It has been estimated in 1964 that earnings have been at $2.69 a share.

Despite the fact that the Board of Transport Commissioners in its 1958 hearings had ruled that the earnings should be 5.9 per cent on the share capital, Bell Telephone's earnings have been anywhere from one half of 1 per cent to 1 per cent over that, every year since then. Mr. Chairman, this has meant that the telephone users in Ontario and Quebec have been paying somewhere between $10 million and $20 million a year more than the board ruled in 1958 should have been paid to the telephone company. The Board of Transport Commissioners to my knowledge has done nothing about this overpayment. As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, the Bell Telephone Company has had the gall, despite the fact that it has earned more than the board authorized in 1958, to ask that their earnings be permitted to be calculated on the basis of 7 per cent of their share capital.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the Board of Transport Commissioners has a responsibilty not only to find what the proper rate for a public utility such as Bell Telephone should be, but it has a responsibility to see that having issued an order, the order will be complied with. Otherwise, there is little purpose in the board's issuing an order, and there is little purpose in the government of Canada giving to the board the responsibility to do the job.

May I suggest to the minister and to the members of this house that when the committee on transportation meets, that we not only hear from the Canadian Pacific, but also from the members of the Board of Transport Commissioners. I think it is important, Mr. Chairman, that we know why the things that the law requires the Board of Transport Commissioners to do are not being done. If laws as they are drafted do not give the authority to the Board of Transport Commissioners to issue orders, which are supposed to regulate companies such as Bell Telephone, then I think that parliament should give to the board powers to do that. If the reason for the dilatory actions of the board is that it does not have sufficient staff, then I think that the committee of the house and the government should see that sufficient members of staff are appointed to do the job. Let us give to the board the tools to do the job, because the complaints which I express are very legitimate.

May I suggest to the house and to the minister that if the board needs another dozen economists, in order to do its job, or another 15 statisticians, that the cost to the people of Canada would be a very small one compared with the benefits that would be derived if the board could do the job which the law and the government of this country has given to it. So far that job, in my opinion, is one that the Board of Transport Commissioners has not done. I think that the members of this house ought to find out from the Board what it thinks it has been doing, and what it thinks it needs to get on with the job which it has been instructed to do, so that the Board can look into questions of railway costs, railway profits, railway services, telephone costs, and telecommunication and other industrial services which come under its jurisdiction.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the minister will not only give to the committee authority to carry out what I have suggested, but will himself take the responsibility which I think is his to take a new and very severe look at the Board of Transport Commissioners and its operations, with a view to ascertaining that it do the regulatory job it ought to be doing.

I would commend to the minister the case of the California Public Utilities Commission which, in order to hold the line when it came to telephone costs, ordered a refund of $60 million to the consumers of California, because it had come to the conclusion after conducting studies that the telephone company of California had overcharged its consumers by that amount. I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the minister look at this, so that we may really come to grips with the Board of Transport Commissioners, and allow it to do the job which it is required to do.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

Mr. Pascoe: Under the items connected with the Board of Transport Commissioners I think I should make a brief explanation, or clarification. In Hansard on February 15, on page 1287 the Minister of Transport stated, and I quote:

> The mayor of Moose Jaw, who is spokesman for eight or ten cities across the prairies has indicated clearly that they are not appealing the decision about the Dominion but are coming to make representations to the cabinet about passenger service generally.

• (8:20 p.m.)

This is a correct statement, but it may carry the implication that the eight cities from Calgary to Winnipeg which were mentioned are not concerned about the sudden cancellation of the Dominion.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sure the hon. member does not think I intended to convey such an impression.

Mr. Pascoe: In any case there is little desire to have the Dominion reinstated along the lines of the service operated in the past year without diners or sleeping car accommodation. I just wish to emphasize that there will be a strong demand from this delegation for adequate rail passenger services on the prairies.

I think it is my duty to bring this matter up because I have had calls already from Moose Jaw arising from the statement made by the minister. I know he did not mean to imply that we were not concerned about the Dominion, but I thought I would mention it anyway.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am grateful to the hon. member for doing that.

Mr. Orlikow: I do not wish to hold up the passage of these estimates: The discussion has certainly gone on long enough. But would the minister find out and tell the house, possibly during the question period in the next couple of days, when it is likely the Board of Transport Commissioners will be issuing a finding on this question involving the Bell Telephone Company. The municipalities affected are very concerned about the delay.

Mr. Pickersgill: I will try to get more precise information in the course of the next little while. The chief commissioner tells me the period is not expected to be very long but he does not wish to be precise without consulting his colleagues.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I shall not take very much time. I see that the minister is quite rested. I should only like to say how edifying it was for me to hear the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt) mention a few minutes ago a letter he has received from the board of transport commissioners in connection with a level crossing in the town of Ingersoll, Ontario.

I believe the only reason for the existence of the board is not to serve a political party in preference to another, an individual instead of another, but rather to act in the general interest of the country, instead of the personal interests of an individual or a politician, regardless of who he is.

However, in many counties, some people tried to influence and fool the board of transport commissioners. Some even sought to have the commissioners render judgments which were not in the best interests of the public in general.

Mr. Chairman, a request concerning improvements in Rouyn-Noranda is now before the board. As the hon. member for Oxford said a while ago, whenever a project is before the board, the member representing the county concerned is usually the last one to hear about it. Why? I believe it is because intrigants and election organizers are taking every possible means, normal or otherwise, to leave the member of parliament in the dark as to what is going on in his own riding, especially if he sits in the opposition.

Now, in my constituency, it is easy to find out what happens. Nevertheless, some people try to disregard it. When the commissioner or his secretary or the Commission writes, they should not assume that the member of Parliament is only remotely interested in these developments or in any change which might affect his constituency. It seems to me that the Commission, or the secretary or the organization should know that the member of Parliament is primarily interested in what goes on in his constituency, as he represents the people of the constituency.

Let the Commission forget about politics and let it get on with its job. I believe the minister should insist that in connection with applications made in a constituency the Commission should inform first of all the member for that constituency who is not the representative of a party, but the representative of the electorate generally.

Canadian Maritime Commission—

95. Capital subsidies for the construction of commercial and fishing vessels in accordance with regulations of the governor in council, $25,000,000.

Mr. Barnett: This item concerns capital subsidies for the construction of commercial and fishing vessels. I shall not ask the Minister of Transport to define or redefine what he has in mind when he talks about commercial vessels; we had considerable discussion on that point at an earlier stage during the consideration of these estimates. However, I should like to inquire of the minister at this point, bearing in mind some remarks he made on February 15 as reported at page 1286 of Hansard, concerning a visit by the Premier of British Columbia to Japan—

Mr. Pickersgill: Could I draw the attention of the hon. member to the fact that those remarks related to proposals for new subsidies which are not before the committee at all? This item refers only to transactions under the subsidies which were previously in effect and I think that in view of the tremendous latitude allowed under clause 1 it is not unreasonable to suggest that on the other items we remain within the scope of the estimates.

Mr. Barnett: The minister may be technically correct on that point but I hasten to assure him it is not my intention either to make a speech or to ask him to make a speech at this stage. I referred to his earlier remarks merely to recall the previous discussion to his mind.

• (8:30 p.m.)

I wish to ask him merely whether since that discussion took place in the house he has had another communication directly or indirectly from the Premier of British Columbia with regard to the question we had under discussion which involved a reference concerning the Premier of British Columbia going to Japan, and a reference to the fact that the minister's heart would not be broken under certain conditions, or if he were forced to change his mind in certain respects. Since that time has the minister had any communication with B.C. on subsidies for the construction of commercial vessels?

Mr. Pickersgill: If I can answer that question without provoking further discussion I would say the minister himself has not had any communication, but I understand the Prime Minister has received a communication from the Premier of B.C. and it is now under consideration.

Mr. Crouse: I know the minister will agree with me that the policy of subsidies for the construction of commercial fishing vessels has been most helpful in re-establishing the fishing industry in the maritime provinces. At present the subsidy payment is 50 per cent on steel construction and 35 per cent on wooden construction.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am not absolutely sure about wooden construction, which is administered by the Minister of Fisheries.

Mr. Crouse: When the various authorities are so divided it adds to our confusion. Has any consideration been given to increasing the wooden subsidy from 35 per cent to the 50 per cent rate?

Mr. Pickersgill: Since the Minister of Fisheries is present and has heard the question I suggest he be allowed to answer it on his estimates.

Mr. Crouse: I note the minister's request and I will acquiesce.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am very grateful to the hon. member. Item agreed to.

St. Lawrence seaway authority—

105. Operating deficit and capital requirements of canals and works entrusted to the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority with the approval of the Governor in Council, and to authorize, notwithstanding the Financial Administration Act or any other act, the disbursement by the authority of revenues derived from the operation and management of such canals and works, $2,698,000.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, while we are on vote No. 105, I wonder if the minister has tried to get the government out of the blind alley in which it is now so far as the St. Lawrence Seaway is concerned.

Looking over the report of the St. Lawrence seaway authority for 1964—I am sorry I do not have the 1965 report because it has not been tabled yet—I see that the authority had a net operation revenue of $4,582,385 but that, due to loan interest payments amounting to $18,064,000, the net loss for the year amounted to $13,481,842. So, in spite of a revenue of $4.5 million, it showed a deficit of $13 million because of the interest on the debt.

When I consider what happened since the beginning of the St. Lawrence Seaway, I note that the Authority has incurred a deficit of $78 million, due to the interest on the debt. The development of the seaway, which should have been an asset for Canada, has become a financial burden for Canadians, because of the way the project has been financed.

I ask the minister what he intends to do to solve this problem. My curiosity was aroused when under item No. 105, I saw an operating deficit of $2,446,000, and when under item L90 concerning loans and advances, I noticed a loan of $19 million to the Authority.

I ask the minister to tell us how he intends to find a way to finance the seaway without it being a burden on the Canadian people.

[English]

Mr. Pickersgill: Since to answer the hon. member's question would require quite a long time, would he be agreeable if I undertook to deal fully with this subject on my 1966-67 estimates, at which time I hope the negotiations with the United States would be advanced to a stage where I could say something more illuminating about them than now?

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, we quite agree, as the minister asked, to wait for the 1966-67 estimates to raise all these points again and receive an answer from the minister.

We are ready to co-operate because he is tired. For seven days now he has been asked questions which he must answer for hours on end, day after day. However, I wish to warn him that the 1966-67 estimates will perhaps be voted less easily if we do not have by then the answers we are waiting for.

[English]

Mr. Pickersgill: I will do my very best to give them, and give them completely and accurately.

Mr. Cowan: I would like to ask the minister, since the run-off into the Great Lakes and down the St. Lawrence is now starting to swing into the spring of 1966, who sets the water level in the St. Lawrence Seaway? Does the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority have to do it, or is it subject to the St. Lawrence River Board of Control? Is it not possible to set the minimum level in lake Ontario at 244.78 feet? It is now nine inches lower than the 94-year average.

Mr. Pickersgill: The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority has no control over the levels. It is the other body to which the hon. gentleman refers.

Mr. Cowan: Then may I ask what does that come under—the St. Lawrence River Board of Control?

Mr. Pickersgill: I understand, the commission—the I.J.C.

Item agreed to.

Atlantic Development Board—

112. To authorize expenditures, in the current and subsequent fiscal years, not exceeding in the aggregate $30,000,000 as the federal share of costs of a trunk highway program for the provinces of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick in accordance with agreements entered into by the Atlantic Development Board and the respective provinces; estimated expenditures in 1965-66, $10,000,000.

Mr. Howard: This provides for an amount of $30 million over an unknown number of years, as a contribution by the federal government to a highway system for the provinces of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick. This is being done under the aegis of the Atlantic Development Board, but nevertheless is still a federal contribution to a highways system in the four Atlantic provinces, in addition to the trans-Canada highway system. I assume these two highway systems would not be overlapping, although they may interconnect at some point. Can the minister tell us what percentage this $30 million represents of the total cost?

• (8:40 p.m.)

Mr. Pickersgill: It is 50-50.

Mr. Howard: It could be 50-50.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is 50 per cent.

Mr. Howard: Fifty per cent is the figure which applied to the orginal agreements undet the Trans-Canada Highway Act which was subsequently amended, as we know, to provide that on certain mileages the contribution could be 90 per cent. However, in the long run it is the same principle that was established when that act initially came into force.

The point I want to make is this. Ever since it was known that portions of the Trans-Canada highway in the western provinces were going to be completed before portions in other provinces, there developed pressure for the building of what we might loosely call a second trans-Canada highway in the western provinces. There was some dispute as to the route this proposed highway should take, but that is a mere technical aspect that could easily have been ironed out had there been authorization at the federal level for federal contribution to this second highway.

At one stage when a former member of this house, Hon. Jean Paul Deschatelets was the minister of public works, there was a plan in existence to call a national highways building conference. Those of us from the western provinces had hopes that there might have been an agreement worked out at that conference under which we could build a second trans-Canada highway system in the western provinces with federal money being contributed on a basis similar to that used for the present trans-Canada highway. We did not have that hope with the idea that the needs and desires of the Atlantic provinces and the two central provinces should not be met, but merely because we were interested in the west and our thoughts were directed toward highway building programs in those provinces.

That proposed national highway building conference was cancelled almost on the eve of its first meeting after a federal-provincial fiscal conference in Quebec City because of pressure by Premier Jean Lesage to increase the amount of federal payments in the corporate and personal income tax field. The announcement made by Mr. Deschatelets was to the effect that the federal government could not provide any further money for additional highway building programs beyond what it had committed itself to, namely the trans-Canada highway and the roads to resources program because it was giving additional amounts of money under the federal-provincial tax sharing arrangements. Everyone accepted that statement, with some disgruntlement, as being logical. This is the first opportunity we have had to deal with the estimates relating to this matter, but more than a year ago an announcement was made to the effect that under the Atlantic Development Board structure the federal government intended to contribute $30 million to a highway building program in the four Atlantic provinces.

It seems strange, Mr. Chairman, that the government could not find a single solitary cent for any highway building program with national implications other than the trans-Canada highway, yet nine months later it found $30 million for the Atlantic provinces. Surely we are now being asked to vote for something being done on a discriminatory basis even though it is being done through the Atlantic Development Board. I submit that is a minor technicality. If the federal government can dig up $30 million over the next few years to contribute to an additional highway building system embracing the four Atlantic provinces, it could dig up a certain amount of money for a similar program for the four western provinces.

That is only fair and equitable. I do not intend my remarks to exclude Ontario and Quebec but I do not know what their highway building requirements are. I am only referring to the western provinces, British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba because various oragnizations promoting a second trans-Canada highway have existed there for some time.

Again I suggest that by authorizing the expenditure of this additional $30 million the government is authorizing discrimination. I know this statement will be received unhappily by the Atlantic provinces, and I am sure the statement will be made that I am against highway building programs. I certainly am not against this type of program, but I am not in favour of the kind of discrimination on the part of the federal government that existed in the cancellation of the national highways building conference, on the basis that the government could not find any money for this purpose because it acceded to the demands of Premier Jean Lesage. This action is outright geographic discrimination and not worthy of a government that supposedly thinks in terms of national unity.

I hope the minister can inform the house at this time that there are plans in existence to give some sort of fair treatment to the western provinces in so far as national highway building contributions are concerned. If the minister can indicate that this is in the hopper, perhaps I will change my view, but at the moment I am not favourably disposed to voting for this item now before us.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I do not expect to change the hon. gentleman's opinion but I think I ought to point out two facts. In the program which the party now forming the government of Canada placed before the electorate in 1958, 1962 and 1963 we specifically and publicly undertook, in addition to paying 90 per cent of the cost of completing the trans-Canada highway in the Atlantic provinces, to make a contribution to a trunk road program in those provinces. We advocated this from coast to coast in all our literature. I think we could have been accused of bad faith had we not carried out that undertaking.

While it is true that the $30 million to which the hon. gentleman referred was not in itself referred to in the announcement by the former minister of public works, the first instalment of $10 million which came directly out of the Atlantic development fund had already been allotted before that time. In other words, this policy was under way before that highway conference was postponed. It was postponed, as I think the hon. gentleman rightly stated, because the government increased very substantially the unconditional payments and abatements allowed the provinces. The government at that time did not feel it could pay these very large additional sums of money to these provinces, or allow them to collect them without double taxation, and at the same time embark upon another trans-Canada highway program. That was the situation. The situation also is that the trunk road program was part of the program on which the present government was elected, and part of the reason we are now sitting here. I think it would have been a shocking thing for us to have put this program before the people—and it was put before the people all over Canada—and then not carry it out.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I want to commend the minister for carrying out the promises of his party. This is a new look, really, which we do not usually notice. It is a commendable course. I only wish he had put it fully into effect, because in 1958 his party, and his leader also, campaigned—maybe he does not know this—on the basis of building a second trans-Canada highway in western Canada. As far as British Columbia was concerned, he even had a map and he had the road drawn on the map and what he was going to do. I have not the map here, but if the minister wants to hold up this item I will run up to my office, take it out of the file—I still have it—and bring it back to him. The minister's name is attached to that particular piece of Liberal propaganda. The same situation existed in 1962 and 1963.

Mr. Pickersgill: No.

Mr. Howard: Now the minister says he changed his policy; in 1958 he spoke about a trans-Canada highway in the four western provinces, but he now says he did not have that policy in 1962.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman is quite right; it was in the program of 1958, but if the hon. gentleman remembers, the program of the Liberal party in 1958 did not commend itself very much to the people of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: It was not in the program of 1962, 1963 or 1965, and it was not there, I think in the main, because it was concluded that a better way of dealing with this problem on a nation-wide basis was to increase the amount of revenue available to the provinces and increase the amount of equalization so they could do this job by themselves.

Mr. McIntosh: Just like $2 wheat.

Mr. Pickersgill: We were supported in this house very strongly by the predecessor of the party to which the hon. gentleman now belongs—and the hon. gentleman was in the house then—when we were in opposition between 1958 and 1963, by the then C.C.F. party, who said we should do something special for the Atlantic provinces. We said we would do it; we said it from one coast to the other, and we are doing it. We have no apology to make for carrying out our undertaking.

Mr. Howard: There are two or three, not facts but truths which have to be mentioned here, Mr. Chairman. I should like to deal with this matter. The minister rose and announced that this was a Liberal election promise they were carrying out. He was the one who mentioned that it was part of the election program in 1958; I merely followed suit and said this was so. This second trans-Canada highway was promised to western Canada and, as I say, I have the map, documents and literature to show the minister if he wants them.

The other thing that was most revealing was that in 1958, when his party had no expectation or hope of forming the government, they put this in the program for western Canada. The minister now admits that in 1962, when they did have a hope of forming the government, they took it out. This is absolutely shameful. Again let me point out to the minister, and I say this regardless of what he contends was the situation in 1962 and 1963, that in the election campaigns of 1962 and 1963 the Liberal party went out to western Canada and promised to build a second trans-Canada highway. The minister and the parliamentary secretary can shake their heads until the marbles roll around in them.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Howard: That is the fact. It is not only a fact, it is a truth and no shaking of your head will erase it. I think it is a shameful disgrace for the minister to stand up here and beat his chest about living up to election campaign promises in one part of the country, and then try to shuffle out of his responsibility in another part of the nation. And he talks about national unity.

The minister reminds me of one of the ancient Roman gods, Janus, after whom January was named. He was called Janus because he had two faces; he could look both fore and aft. This is the situation here exactly. If the minister wants to hold up this item I will go up to my office and get the campaign literature for 1962 and 1963, bring it down and show it to him so he can repudiate again in public that which is the truth.

I say to the minister quite bluntly, you either do not know what you are talking about or you know what you are talking about and you are covering up. It is discrimination against the western provinces. You know it, I know it and the people out in western Canada know it, too.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Chairman, on the item concerning the Atlantic Development Board I am sure quite a few members would like to ask questions. However, I think we would be satisfied if the minister would make it his business to make certain that the new estimates were in a particular way referred to a committee where the members from the Atlantic provinces could question the officials of the board. The expenditures used to be of a technical nature but now they are becoming quite direct. Although information has been tabled in the house in this regard, I am sure we all want to get closer to our pet projects and have the information that is available.

Mr. Pickersgill: As a matter of fact I will be very glad to propose that and I hope the committee will agree to my proposal.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I second that.

The Chairman: Is the proposal carried?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Howard: It doesn't carry with my vote, Mr. Chairman; I just want to indicate that again.

Mr. Fairweather: You are a great national fellow, a great nation builder.

The Chairman: Shall vote 112 carry?

Supply—National Defence

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Just before the vote carries, Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word which I would have preferred to say after the vote had carried. Although the minister may find this hard to believe, there are a great many members who have practised great restraint over the last few days and have not asked any questions or made any speeches on his estimates because they recognize that these estimates are eleven twelfths voted already by virtue of interim supply, and are pretty well redundant.

However, there is a whole Pandora's box of questions which relate to his department and to which we shall require answers when the current estimates are before the committee. I hope by that time the minister will have found some way of packing a lot of facts into a few words, instead of packing so many words into so few facts as he has been doing for the last few days.

I think we can assume that the minister's estimates are now completed—I hope they are—and I want to congratulate him on having achieved the passage of his estimates. I do not think there is a single member of the committee who, were he in the minister's place, could have achieved this in much less than about a quarter of the time.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): To put it succinctly, Mr. Chairman, the minister really talked out his own estimates.

The Chairman: Shall vote 112 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Chairman: This completes the estimates of the Department of Transport. The committee—

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, if you would allow me I should like to thank all hon. members for their restraint. I realize that if only the minister had not spoken on these estimates the amount of time taken by all the other members would have been so short that they would have passed on a Wednesday afternoon.

An hon. Member: That's right.

Item agreed to.

The Chairman: The committee will now proceed to the consideration of the estimates of the Department of National Defence, item No. 1, which is to be found on page 252.

• (9:00 p.m.)

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

1. Departmental administration, including grants to military associations, institutes and other organizations as detailed in the estimates and authority, notwithstanding section 30 of the Financial Administration Act, and subject to allotment by the Treasury Board, for total commitments of $2,560,546,715 for the purposes of votes 1, 5, 15, 20, 25, 30, 35, 40 and 45 of this department regardless of the year in which such commitments will come in course of payment (of which it is estimated that $1,044,262,000 will come due for payment in future years) and authority to make recoverable advances under any of the said votes and, notwithstanding the Financial Administration Act, to spend revenue received during the year in respect of assistance rendered to the United Nations, any party of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization or any provincial or municipal government, $5,204,855.

[The Chairman.]

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Chairman, it is almost two years since the White Paper on Defence was tabled in this house. During those two years, the Department of National Defence has been busily engaged in implementing the policies set out in the White Paper, including sweeping changes in its organization forecast at that time.

In introducing the 1964-65 estimates, I summarized my remarks by stating:

—that notwithstanding the reduction in expenditures, we will have achieved, within two years, a significant qualitative improvement and operational capability of our armed forces.

That improvement is being achieved as I shall outline for you in the course of my remarks today.

First, I should like to take this opportunity, on behalf of my associate and myself, to pay tribute to all those in the department whose diligent work has contributed so much to the success of this immense project. As hon. members are aware, each new step has to be carefully studied and evaluated in relation to the whole and in relation to the final objective. The fact that our progress towards a completely unified functional force is well in advance of what we might reasonably have hoped for reflects the spirit and enthusiasm with which the task has been undertaken.

I should like also to publicly thank my Associate Minister for his wonderful co-operation. He carries the bulk of the administrative load in the department and performs his tasks in a most efficient manner. Without his help it would be impossible to cope with the extraordinarily heavy work load in the department, particularly during this period of intense activity.

As hon. members are well aware, the probability of a major war arising directly between the NATO powers on the one hand and the Soviet Union and the Warsaw pact powers on the other is remote and would be disastrous for east and west alike. Nevertheless we must recognize that the political problems of central Europe are not yet resolved and the Soviet military capability is not only being maintained but steadily enhanced. We continue to regard our membership in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and our military support to it as being important to our security.

It is clear that instability in other parts of the world has, and will continue to result in conflicts which can endanger our security. Canada has been able to contribute military forces in some of these potentially dangerous situations to provide the stability for the political actions necessary for a peaceful solution to proceed unfettered by the bitterness and passions of active hostilities. No one, I believe, can be certain that circumstances will not arise in the future where active participation of Canadian forces would be in the interests of our national security. The military forces of today must have the capability of responding quickly, and the flexibility to meet a wide variety of demands that may be placed upon them to protect the security of this country. This, among other things, means first class personnel, appropriate equipment to provide the required flexibility, means of rapid transport and an organizational structure from the headquarters down which can provide clear and decisive direction. There is still much to be done to achieve the military posture that we have set out to achieve, but I am satisfied that we are well along the road and I propose to give you some of the facts that substantiate this conclusion.

In order that Canada's armed forces might make the maximum contribution in terms of effectiveness to the deterrents of war and the maintenance of peace, it was announced in the White Paper in March, 1964, that the headquarters of the Royal Canadian Navy, the Canadian Army and the Royal Canadian Air Force would be integrated on a functional basis as a first step toward a single unified defence force for Canada. This functional integration began on August 1, 1964 and has been going forward continuously since that date. Integration of the staffs at Canadian forces headquarters is now largely complete. Already the total number of persons employed at headquarters has been reduced by more that 1,000 and the work is continuing as efficiently and, in the opinion of the most senior departmental officers, more effectively than ever before. When the one time work load due to the changes related to the integration process itself have been performed, a total reduction in staff of approximately 30 per cent will have been achieved.

The second step in the integration process was the development of a new command structure for the Canadian armed forces. This structure had to be efficient in design, consistent in pattern, require a minimum of overhead, and responsive and effective from a military point of view. On June 7, 1965, fully three months ahead of schedule, a new functional command structure, in which the former eleven commands were reduced to six, was announced. These were, mobile command, maritime command, air defence command, air transport command, materiel command and training command. The No. 1 air division in Europe and the No. 4 Canadian Infantry Brigade group in Europe were left to continue to report directly to the Chief of the Defence Staff in order to maintain maximum operational effectiveness during the transitional period. Now, six months later, all the command headquarters have been created and either have assumed or are in the process of assuming their new responsibilities.

The formation of mobile command is basic to the philosophy of Canada's new defence policy. The largest of the new functional commands, its task is to operationally train and maintain the land elements of the Canadian force and its tactical air support, and to keep this force in a state of combat readiness which will enable it to be deployed in units of the required size to meet Canadian commitments and undertakings anywhere in the world. These commitments range from reinforcing the European sector as a contribution to the deterrence of general war, to United Nations peace keeping operations. The prime ingredients in the force are quick reaction-time, the ability to go where required with dispatch, and to perform its tasks with maximum effectiveness. The decision to introduce into this command, which was formed officially October 19, 1965, tactical air squadrons equipped with the new CF-5 will increase to a marked extent both the capability and flexibility of the mobile force. Tactics and doctrines will be developed as the squadrons are formed and are able to exercise with the land elements they are required to support.

The acquisition of the Voyageur helicopter and the de Havilland Buffalo, short take-off and landing military transport will give the mobile command a greatly enhanced tactical capability. Strategic transport for mobile command will be provided by air transport command, and the sea element by maritime command.

The special service force concept, announced in the White Paper to apply to one brigade, has now been expanded and current plans call for two brigades to be converted, on a planned basis, to this concept of air transportability, with an additional airborne battalion group for added flexibility and quick response to domestic needs and overseas commitments as they arise.

The primary mission of maritime command continues to be the anti-submarine role. Its secondary role, as stated in the White Paper, is the provision of sealift and other related naval capability to mobile command. Maritime command was officially formed on January 19, 1966, and the integration of the naval and air elements under one commander will provide an even closer relationship between the various units engaged in the same basic mission. Headquarters, maritime command, is at Halifax, while the deputy commander, maritime commander Pacific, will have his headquarters at Esquimalt, British Columbia.

The fleet modernization program announced last year is continuing. The post second world war destroyer escorts, refitted with modern equipment, have an antisubmarine surveillance and operational capability far greater than ever before. The introduction of helicopters as part of the weapons system has contributed markedly to this increased capability from the standpoint of range, speed, area of coverage, and general effectiveness. The introduction of ASROC, a long-range, rocket-assisted torpedo delivery system, will provide an additional substantial increase in target-destruction capability.

The most recent addition to maritime command has been H.M.C.S. Ojibwa, the first of three "O" class submarines. These submarines have the dual capability of providing the rest of the antisubmarine forces with antisubmarine warfare training and at the same time being additional operational units. In April, the First Canadian Submarine Squadron will be formed to operate out of Halifax. The Argus, Neptune and Tracker aircraft assigned to maritime command are also receiving mid-life re-equipment which will provide them with an improved capability.

Materiel Command, with headquarters at Rockcliffe, is being organized to provide logistic support of the Canadian armed forces. It will be charged with the responsibility of providing faster, more efficient service and at the same time of eliminating the duplication and triplication which exists with three separate supply systems. By making full use of electronic data processing equipment, it will eventually be possible to provide better service, maintain smaller inventories and at the same time to operate with substantially fewer personnel, thus freeing more of the armed forces establishment for operational requirements.

Training command, with headquarters in Winnipeg, will provide the individual training, including flying training and trades training, for all service personnel required by the Canadian armed forces. On January 1 this command assumed command and control of the R.C.A.F. units which formerly composed Air Force Training Command and functional control of the Royal Canadian Navy and army individual training schools. In April of this year it will assume full responsibility for the R.C.N. and army training schools.

The Canadian Services Colleges, army and air force staff colleges and the National Defence College will continue under the control of Canadian forces headquarters for the time being, but plans to operate an integrated staff college course are well advanced.

The introduction of the M.113 armoured personnel carrier to our NATO brigade group in Europe is now nearly complete. This has given the brigade group a greatly enhanced operational capability and, for the first time, the armoured protection it would need in the face of a fully mechanized opponent. The delivery of the ENTAC and SS.11 anti-tank guided missiles will be augmented by the introduction of the Carl Gustav medium anti-tank weapon now coming into service. The fire power of the brigade will be further improved by the introduction of the new British 81 millimetre mortar to replace current holdings. This mortar has an appreciably greater range than the one it replaces. In further support of the brigade and field forces, a variety of major and minor equipment is being purchased. For example, bridge-layer tanks, which permit the rapid crossing of small water or dry gaps, will be delivered to the 4th Canadian Infantry Brigade Group this summer.

The introduction of the dual capability for our strike attack squadrons in Europe is continuing and will be complete later this year. At that time our six squadrons in Germany will be fully operational in the non-nuclear attack role as well as in the nuclear strike role. This will greatly increase the flexibility of these squadrons in support of NATO requirements.

Mr. Churchill: You once said that could not be done.

Mr. Hellyer: Frankly, I do not remember but it is possible.

Mr. Churchill: I will give you the reference.

Mr. Hellyer: Even my hon. friend might have said that at some time.

The two reconnaissance squadrons stationed at Marville in France are now fully operational. Each wing of the air division has its full complement of aircraft and is holding an alert status.

I would like to say a word here about the expertise of our airmen who are serving with the air division in Europe. This professionalism has been evident from the very first days of our air division in Europe; first flying Sabre jets and then the CF-100's, our fliers consistently won the Guynmeyer trophy which is emblematic of air combat supremacy.

This excellent airmanship is still evident today when each year the Allied Forces Central Europe gather together to compete in an air tactical weapons meet. The Canadian component at a recent meet in France won, virtually single-handed, the biggest weapons meet of the year.

When the final results were tabulated our Canadian airmen had won several impressive victories, including the top national team of the meet and the top strike pilot. Out of the seven top scoring pilots, R.C.A.F. fliers placed first, second, third, fifth, sixth and seventh; and to top this off, the Canadian team set a new record by flying an ideal day of four perfect missions.

Canada continues to contribute to continental air defence in accordance with its partnership with the United States in NORAD. Our main contribution continues to be three interceptor squadrons, two Bomarc squadrons and the operation of extensive ground environment radars and communication facilities. As indicated in the White Paper in March 1964, a number of questions depend upon a decision by the United States as to whether it will or will not deploy an anti-missile missile system. This decision has not yet been taken by the United States, although considerable funds are being spent on continued development.

The capability of the ground environment for air defence against the manned bomber is being enhanced despite the fact that a decreasing amount of our resources are going into this area. This is being done by the introduction of a back-up system which will provide the continuous air surveillance and control of air defence weapons. This system, called B.U.I.C. for "Back-Up Interceptor Control", will be introduced into SAGE, the computerized semi-automatic ground environment system of the North American Air Defence Command. Like SAGE, the B.U.I.C. system can receive, store, retrieve, calculate and supply in thousandths of a second information vital for the effective control of defensive weapons. When a SAGE centre stops functioning for any reason, a B.U.I.C. centre will assume its function.

The cost of the two B.U.I.C. sites to be located in Canada will be shared by Canada and the United States. The estimated costs for Canada are $600,000 for the initial capital outlay and $250,000 annually for maintenance. Installation of the B.U.I.C. systems, including the Canadian sites, is expected to be completed by early 1969.

The functions of Air Transport Command remain largely as they were prior to integration. The capability of this command, however, has been increased dramatically by the purchase of 20 additional C.130 Hercules aircraft to provide strategic airlift for the Canadian armed forces. The capability of this command must be further augmented in the years ahead in order to meet adequately the philosophy of mobility as set out in the White Paper. Studies on the best cost-effective equipment for this expansion are under way.

• (9:20 p.m.)

As I mentioned earlier, we have continued to perform a wide spectrum of defence and peace keeping operations. Two additional requests for United Nations support were received in September and December of last year. On September 22, the Secretary General asked us to supply a number of officers to participate in the United Nations India Pakistan Observer Mission. Highly qualified officers were soon on their way to take up their new duties. At the same time, our contribution to the United Nations Military Observer Group in India and Pakistan was increased from nine to 19 by the despatch of ten officers. This group now consists of two naval, 13 army and 4 air force officers. In addition, we increased our contribution of aircraft by two Caribou and three Otter aeroplanes, manned and maintained by approximately 100 air force personnel located at Lahore, Pakistan. This unit provides air transport service both for the United Nations Military Observer Group, India and Pakistan, and the United Nations India Pakistan Observer Mission.

Mr. Churchill: May I ask a question. What purpose do navy officers serve there? It is a land locked mission.

Mr. Hellyer: They serve in exactly the same way as the other officers. This is another manifestation of the advantages of having an integrated service.

Mr. Churchill: They serve as naval personnel, surely?

Mr. Hellyer: On the contrary, it gives to those officers the chance to broaden their experience and to participate in a wider area of activity.

In December, Canada was asked to provide air units for the Zambian oil airlift. On December 22, an advanced party left Canada, and on the 30th the first oil airlift was effectively carried out. The response to this request and the quick reaction capability clearly demonstrated the effectiveness of the Canadian armed forces to meet contingencies.

The ground forces too are continually exercising their quick-reaction capability. The 1st Battalion Black Watch battalion group, currently designated as Canada's contribution to the Allied Command Europe mobile force, has recently undergone a strenuous training program, designated Exercise White Caribou, in Newfoundland. On February 27 this battalion group will participate in Exercise Winter Express, scheduled for northern Norway. This will provide an opportunity to practise its role along with the five other NATO nations participating. It will be the first time that the Canadian armed forces have attempted to airlift a battalion group over a considerable distance in a realistic time frame. This exercise, therefore, plays a most important part in the continued development of the strategic mobile force concept.

It may interest hon. members to know that 18 or 19 Air Transport Command heavy aircraft will be employed in this airlift, and that in addition HMCS Provider, our operational support ship on the east coast, will participate in the deployment and re-deployment phases of the exercise.

[Mr. Hellyer.]

One of the most important developments in respect to the reserve forces has been the appointment to Canadian Forces Headquarters of Major-General W. A. B. Anderson as Deputy Chief, Reserves. General Anderson will, in fact, be the commander of the reserve forces in Canada and have the responsibility for their organization and training in support of the regular forces as well as in aid of the civil power, and their supplementary role in national survival. The Deputy Chief, Reserves, heads a sub-branch at headquarters which is being organized on an integrated basis and which will have full responsibility for the reserve components and cadets of the navy, army and air force.

The first task to be undertaken by this section is the re-organization of its field command structure for reserve units following the termination of the existing army regional and district commands. The appointment of an officer of the rank of major-general underlines the continued importance of the reserve forces in support of the regular forces.

With the re-organization of the Canadian Army Militia last year and the re-introduction of corps training, a new vigour and effectiveness is developing. It is intended to increase the momentum by improved training opportunities in the coming year. Where possible, militia units will be given an opportunity to visit regular units at home stations for the purpose of obtaining instruction and practice in using the latest items of operational equipment. Recently militiamen of several eastern Canadian armoured regiments were flown into Camp Gagetown where the Royal Canadian Dragoons conducted a program of week end training for them. The experiment was extremely successful and will be used as a pattern for similar exercises of this nature in the future.

The reserves in their new posture are being counted upon to make an important contribution to Canada's security. The volunteers to whom this task has been entrusted are worthy of our highest respect and admiration.

I would like now to discuss briefly some of the changes in management techniques which have been introduced into the department since 1963 in conjunction with the re-organization.

Two of the most important problems in defence management were the reconciliation of the programs of the three services, that is, the setting of the real priorities between the programs of each and gauging the effects of each program not just in terms of capital cost, but also in terms of support requirements, personnel and annual recurring costs.

The integration of navy, army and air force headquarters aided materially in the solution of the first of these problems. An integrated defence program has been established. This displays all approved National Defence activities and forecasts spending over the current year and the following five-year period. The program data relates the various military functions and missions to resource requirements of manpower, money and materiel. With this information available, it is possible to determine at once the implications both on a particular mission and on the integrated defence program as a whole, of any new requirement.

The defence programming system includes a program change procedure which keeps the IDP current as it reflects changing national and international conditions and the adoption of advantageous technological advances.

The development of this comprehensive system has been taking place for some months. To assist in its implementation, we have retained a consultant group familiar with the process, to advise us. Our present integrated defence plan should be programmed and the system in full operation in 1966. This will enormously simplify the preparation of the estimates for 1967-68. The operation of this system insists on the solution of the two management problems raised: First, as it includes all missions and the elements of all missions, it displays each of these in a way which facilitates the consideration of priorities and demands their solution. Second, the data required for the system includes capital costs, personnel and support requirements, and operating costs, and therefore the total effect of each new program change is known at the outset and available for review at any time. Thus all of the information necessary for management to make decisions is readily available and the system itself ensures that the data is presented in a manner that leads to realistic decisions.

Another improvement in management techniques has been the granting of authority to use the proceeds of the sale of surplus equipment by the department for the purchase of new equipment. This year, on an experimental basis, this system has also been applied to real properties up to the limit of $5 million. This policy was suggested by the Royal Commission on Government Organization. The reasoning behind it is obvious. It provides an incentive to management to make decisions. If there is no advantage in selling surplus materials and properties, there is a natural tendency to postpone serious consideration. When the proceeds are available for new high priority projects, however, there is a strong motivation to take a hard look at inventories and to make realistic decisions. In the fiscal year 1964-65 approximately $7 million revenue was obtained from the sale of surplus materials, supplies and equipment, and $4,744,000 has been realized from this source for 1965-66 to the end of December. During the current fiscal year as of December 31, real estate sales have totalled $1,589,000. These sales reduce the cost of maintenance of the inventories.

Another important area which has been subject to re-organization is that of development. Each service had its own development vote, and in each case the administration and screening was carried out by the Defence Research Board, following receipt of submissions from the services. The system tended to be inflexible and slow. Program changes had to go through the whole system and the amount of time consumed was so great that the project momentum was often lost and the initial Canadian advantage overtaken by development projects in other countries.

The classic case is the armoured personnel carrier, the Bobcat-V.C. This project was out front at the outset but, due to the rigidities of the system and the decision-making process, all the initial advantage was lost and the project overtaken by developments elsewhere.

Mr. Churchill: The simulator is another recent example.

Mr. Hellyer: In order to develop a more flexible system, a number of important changes have been put into effect. The service development votes have been built into a single development vote in consonance with integration. Administration of development projects has been given to the services themselves. The Defence Research Board input and screening now takes place during the initial stage of the project definition in order to determine at that stage if the proposal is scientifically feasible.

A management group has been formed called the development and associated research policy group under the chairmanship of the chief of technical services. This group has the responsibility for initiating new projects, reviewing projects periodicaly to determine if they should be continued, and recommending the termination of projects that have been overtaken by time, technological advance or parallel development elsewhere.

This group has been formed and has been operating for some months. It has initiated a number of new projects which will be included in next year's estimates; it has consolidated a number of existing projects and recommended the immediate termination of a number of others. The time period for decision making in the field of development has been dramatically reduced, and it appears that the new system will go a long way toward reducing to a minimum the problems inherent in the development field.

An example on the improved flexibility is in respect to the interesting development of a full-scale prototype of an ocean-going hydrofoil vessel.

A great deal of preliminary research has been carried out in respect to the development of hydrofoils and a number of reduced scale models have been built and tested. The considerable effort to date is of little practical value, however, in the absence of complete sea trials of a full-scale ship. We have one under construction now—the hull at Marine Industries in Sorel, Quebec, the foils at de Havilland Aircraft Company, Toronto, and the weapons system at Canadian Westinghouse Company Limited, Hamilton.

The Deputy Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt the minister but—

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Deputy Chairman: I gather that the minister has unanimous consent to continue his speech.

Mr. Hellyer: Like most development projects, the cost has increased substantially over original estimates.

An hon. Member: You said that before.

Mr. Hellyer: Not since I sat down, I hope.

Mr. Churchill: Page seventeen.

Mr. Hellyer: The new estimate is $36.2 million—a figure that covers the basic ship support services and weapons system. Under the former system of single service management, the increased funds would not have been readily available. The result, almost inevitably, would have been a stretch-out in the program which historically would have resulted in even further increases in costs.

[Mr. Hellyer.]

Even worse, stretched-out development programs often mean the loss of any lead we might have in concepts, thereby reducing foreign sales prospects.

A delayed program would also have made trials so late that we would not have had the information needed when considering options available for a construction program in the first half of the 1970's.

With an integrated headquarters it was possible to divert to the hydrofoil project savings we have made in other areas. As a result, both the ship and the weapons system development are proceeding and we expect that sea trials will begin late this year. It is impossible to say with certainty whether the trials will be successful or not, but all of the data on which the development is based leads us to believe that they will be.

It is, in our opinion, well worth proceeding with the development in any case, for this is an important area of knowledge in which additional data is essential. Equally, it is an important Canadian contribution to the total range of new developments being pursued by ourselves and our allies on a mutually cooperative basis.

The increased emphasis on research and development is in fulfilment of the policy laid down in the White Paper that there would be a modest but consistent increase in these activities. The Defence Research Board has the responsibility not only of providing scientific advice to the minister and to the chief of defence staff, but also of undertaking pure and applied research on behalf of the defence forces. Canada continues to enjoy a well-deserved reputation for extraordinary results in research, particularly in relation to the resources made available for that purpose.

One of the Defence Research Board's most dramatic achievements in 1965 was in the space research field. The successful launch of Alouette II in November in an elliptical orbit was the climax of months and years of painstaking research and development. As of late January it had completed 720 orbits about the earth, travelling 22,800,000 miles, and had executed 8,175 commands while operating six hours a day to produce 54,000 ionagrams.

Isis "A", the board's third satellite, is scheduled for launch next year. It will carry ten experiments and is scheduled to move in an elliptical orbit some 300 to 2,600 statute miles above the earth. As the sun's period of activity increases with more frequent and violent solar storms, this space craft should provide most useful data.

Practical application from the data provided by Alouette I, which has been analysed in combination with data obtained from sister satellites, may involve improved techniques for long-distance communications resulting from mitigation of interruptions caused to northern radio by solar storms and other phenomena.

• (9:40 p.m.)

The Defence Research Board's industrial research assistance program introduced late in 1961, to encourage industry in Canada to establish additional research facilities, has proven to be a most successful activity. Costs of projects under this program are shared by the Defence Research Board and industry. The joint commitment at present amounts to about $41,700,000 of which D.R.B. has committed more than $21 million, with $10,500,000 spent to date.

Of 145 projects covered by this program, 113 are active at the present time and are being conducted by 56 Canadian industries in a variety of fields— electronics, aviation, mechanical engineering, physics, metallurgy studies and others. A number of companies attribute a considerable increase in their business volume to the direct and indirect results of this industrial research assistance program.

As I stated at the outset, the strength of the Canadian armed forces is in the dedication, training and professionalism of its officers and men. Just as no force, no matter how well trained, can operate effectively without good equipment, similarly no amount of modern equipment, by itself, can be effective without persons skilled and trained in its use.

We have in the past enjoyed, and still enjoy, a tremendously proud and effective force, unsurpassed anywhere in the world. We fully recognize that if we are to maintain this effectiveness in the future, we must continue to provide the training, remuneration and career opportunities to attract the high calibre of person required for our demanding tasks.

Whereas it is true that re-organization of any kind raises questions in respect to the effects that it may have on individuals, the important problems relating to individuals in the armed forces today are not those resulting from integration, they are the same real problems affecting men and women in all walks of life, that is, pay, allowances, housing, career opportunities, etc. I might add that perhaps there are many Canadians who do not fully appreciate just how good the Canadian armed forces really are, and what a tremendous job they do as ambassadors for Canada as they pursue their task of contributing to the deterrence of war and helping to preserve world order.

Hon. members who have visited our armed forces units and establishments overseas, in Canada, and at sea, and who have been impressed by the superb quality and proficiency of the men and women of the forces, would be performing a most useful service if, at every opportunity, they informed their constituents and Canadians generally of the accomplishments of those who wear our country's uniform.

In respect to pay and allowances, a number of questions have been raised and these are all under active study at the present time. As I indicated in the House of Commons the other day, we fully realize that we have to compete for manpower in a booming economy, and measures will be taken—measures designed to do justice to the men and women of the armed forces and to attract new recruits to the organization.

The number of recruits required in the next four or five years will be considerably greater than has been the case for some time, simply due to the great numbers of servicemen who saw experience in world war II and who are now reaching retirement age. This problem, combined with the increased competition in the labour market, will make our task difficult. We will appreciate the co-operation of all hon. gentlemen in helping us to meet our goals.

Finally, I would like to say a word of appreciation to those hon. gentlemen who served on the special committee on defence. This committee was an experiment. It was the first time in Canada that members of the house have had the opportunity of discussing in committee, in an orderly fashion, the current expenditures and future plans of the Department of National Defence. I felt from the outset that the committee could fill a very important function and that it would be a good vehicle for making available to hon. members of this house and to the Canadian public, much more information on defence matters than had previously been available from Canadian sources.

I believe the committee was a most useful forum for discussion and that it proved the advisability of this kind of organization as a recognized part of our parliamentary system.

With the establishment of a permanent standing committee on national defence, this principle has been formalized and I am sure it will continue to do the same kind of good work performed by the members of the special committee.

In my statement today I have not included statistical information in respect of manpower, or details in respect of individual items of hardware. The estimates for 1966-67 will be referred for early consideration by the standing committee, and it would seem appropriate to defer consideration of detail to that occasion when witnesses can be called and when full statistical information can be made available.

I hope that this suggestion will meet general approval, and once again I would like to express my appreciation of the co-operation I have received from hon. gentlemen on both sides of the chamber.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, the first impression most members will have received from the minister's speech is that he has slowed down considerably. I think it took him twice as much time to read the same amount of material on this occasion as he did when he last presented his estimates nearly two years ago. I do not know whether that was the effect of having listened so long to the debate on the Department of Transport estimates, or perhaps it was just due to the particular hour on the clock.

The outline which the minister gave of the jobs that our servicemen are carrying out overseas, of the command structure, of the development work being carried on, and of the work of the Defence Research Board was all very interesting, but it did not get down to the crux of the situation in the Department of National Defence. I would say the minister's speech was designed to give the committee and the country the impression that all is well in that department, whereas everyone who has any knowledge of the defence situation in Canada today knows that the reverse is the case.

I would first like to point out that we are considering these estimates at a time when all of the evidence indicates that the morale of our defence forces is the lowest it has been since before world war II, and probably the lowest it has ever been in our history. All the evidence I have had from conversations with and letters from a large number of ex-service personnel, conversations with and letters from presently serving personnel and members of their families, is to that effect. The actual evidence in regard to recruiting, loss of men from the services, the situation in regard to the effectiveness of units, and the ability to keep units operating, all points in this direction. I shall be outlining a considerable number of these things in the course of my remarks.

I would like to put more emphasis on this matter of morale. Everyone with any military experience, particularly with experience in war, knows that the most important single requirement for efficient and effective individual fighting men, units and formations, is high morale. Without it you cannot have efficiency and effectiveness in any military organization.

An article which bears on this, and which appeared in the Victoria Colonist of January 26, is something I would like to put on the record at this time. It is headed "Confidence" and reads:

> In a recent address to the directors of Victoria's Armed Service Centre one of Canada's outstanding seamen, Rear Admiral J. C. Hibbard, discussed the meaning of morale in a military organization.
>
> To the individual serviceman—regardless of his ranks—morale is the result of a combination of many factors, the admiral said.
>
> • (9:50 p.m.)
>
> But, he added, these factors could all be summed up in one word: Confidence—confidence in his leadership, confidence in his training, confidence in himself, confidence in his unit and his weapons, confidence in his support from his home, and confidence in the belief that he is necessary and that his sacrifices are of benefit to his country.
>
> By outlining this simple definition at a time when our national defence policies present such a confused picture both at home and to the outside world, Admiral Hibbard might have done a great service to Canada.
> Perhaps his carefully spelled out words might cause Defence Minister Paul Hellyer to pause for a moment in his politically-oriented direction of Canada's defence program to give at least some small thought to the men behind the guns.

I think one of the difficulties as far as the minister is concerned results from his thinking and talking constantly about cost effectiveness, about computerizing systems and things of that sort. He has missed the most important single factor of any effective defence organization, which is the attitude of the men, their morale and their confidence in their leadership and themselves. The actual fact is that the confidence of most servicemen in their leadership and the policies of the Minister of National Defence has been destroyed during the past two years.

During the past two years more and more servicemen have lost the essential belief that they are doing a necessary and worth-while job. As a result they have lost their motivation to remain in the forces: thus the very large departure of servicemen that has taken place.

This decline in morale is forcefully illustrated by the large number of personnel who have left the armed services of their own volition. I do not refer to those who were dismissed or put out for disciplinary reasons, I refer to only those who have left of their own volition. These people could not see any future in the armed forces because they have no motivation to remain. This is illustrated by a return to a question by the hon. member for Edmonton West to be found at page 781 of Hansard for February 7. The return was made in answer to question No. 4 which asked for the number of persons who were retired from the defence forces at their own request prior to normal retirement age. The answer was 13,142. Nothing like this has ever taken place in the history of the Canadian armed forces and it indicates exactly what I have just said, that a very large proportion of those people in the armed forces have lost their morale and want to get out because they feel they have no future and are not doing a necessary job.

This same return indicates that a high proportion of these 13,000 odd individuals who left at their own request were highly trained officers, N.C.O.'s and specialists who are essential to the efficient operation of any modern military force.

In answer to a question I asked, to be found in Hansard for February 9 another return was made which shows what the reduction in the strength of the armed forces has been. We find that it dropped from approximately 124,000 in 1961-62 to approximately 109,000 at the end of December, 1965. At the present time, according to press reports, the strength is now below 107,000. During that same period this report indicates that enlistments had dropped from 16,526 in 1961 to 10,415 in 1965. Last year the losses of the armed forces personnel totalled 17,696, all ranks, which is a total loss or wastage of 7,281, or a rate of wastage of some 600 men per month.

These figures show two things. First of all, they show that it has become increasingly difficult to get people to enlist in the services and second, a very large proportion of highly trained personnel are getting out. In addition to the ones who have got out there are quite a number who are trying to get out but who have not been released. I have referred several of these cases to the minister and the associate minister, but I do not know how many there are. The number must be considerable today. These people would get out if they could but the department, because of the shortage of trained personnel at this time, will not allow them to do so.

The loss of so many highly trained personnel is very serious and has caused a decline in the quality and effectiveness of our defence forces. This is manifested by the situation which exists now in all three of the defence forces. Let us take the navy as a first example to see what has happened there.

When the minister was sworn in the navy had 43 anti-submarine vessels in commission and in operation including, of course, the Bonaventure, destroyer escorts and frigates. In addition we had two flotillas of mine sweepers. What ships does the navy now have? As close as I can determine we now have 34 antisubmarine vessels and no mine sweepers. Of the 34 antisubmarine vessels we have left there are five or six laid up at Halifax and two at Esquimalt because of a lack of sufficiently trained personnel to man them. This means there are seven or eight vessels which cannot go to sea. We now have some 27 operational fighting ships left in our navy. That is far below the number that we are committed to provide as part of our contribution to the NATO alliance, and far below the number required for the many other responsibilities the navy would have in the event of war. In spite of this, the minister keeps on saying and has been saying for the last two years, that the effectiveness of the armed forces has improved.

Mr. Hellyer: That is true.

Mr. Harkness: The minister suggests that is true, but I ask any reasonable person in this chamber how it could be true when the number of fighting ships has decreased seriously, with a large percentage of the ones left not able to go to sea because of the lack of trained personnel to man them.

Mr. Hellyer: Because they are old ships, now obsolete.

Mr. Harkness: The minister suggests that the ships we now have are much more efficient and up to date than the ones we had, but that is not the case. With one or two exceptions we have the same ships. I believe one or two have been put into service in the last two or three years with slightly improved radar systems. The use of helicopters is now associated with some of the ships and that is a program which was initiated before the minister became the Minister of National Defence.

In view of all these facts it is nonsense to say that the effectiveness of the navy is anything like it was before the minister was sworn in. I do not think there is a naval man in this country or anywhere in the world who would not agree with that statement.

Mr. Chairman, I see that it is ten o'clock.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

IMMIGRATION—REPORTED INCREASE IN APPLICATIONS FROM RUMANIA

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I raised a question on Tuesday afternoon that I felt was of some concern. I have received representations on this matter since the election and I know that the question of the situation in eastern Europe has been eloquently dealt with in this house by a previous speaker. This matter was brought to my mind by an article which appeared in a magazine called The Tablet entitled "Hungarians in Transylvania." This article was written by Judith Listowel and appeared in the January 8 edition of this magazine. It was the second of two articles. Dealing with the situation of this minority group in Rumania the article contains the following passage:

"Now there are rumours of a mass emigration to Canada. Thousands of Hungarian peasants have put their names down, for they do not see any future for their children here. I do not know whether they will actually receive their emigration passports, or whether this is just a hoax, but I rather think that they might, for if they go their places can be taken by more and more settlers from Old Rumania, and gradually the Hungarian character of Transylvania will be wiped out."

It was this article that prompted my question to the minister in charge of immigration and I asked whether there had been an unusual number of applications received this year from potential emigrants from that country. I should like to ask a further question, whether the ministry has been at all aware of the situation suggested in this article, namely that people in a foreign country may be the victims of a very elaborate hoax with regard to the possibility of their emigrating to Canada.

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the minister I have noted the remarks of the hon. member. I sympathize with his interest in this question of the Hungarian situation in Transylvania and I know how concerned are many Canadians of Hungarian descent about the fact that their populace in Transylvania seem to be somewhat victimized by the regime there, and because many of their relatives are most unhappy in that country.

I think the situation does call for an investigation by the immigration department. I am not in a position to give the hon. member any particulars as to what has been done with reference to this matter or the situation at this time. All I can give him is the assurance that the minister will look into this question and try to have a report for him in the very near future.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT—STEPS TO OVERCOME LOSS ON SECOND CLASS MAIL

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo South): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I directed a question to the Postmaster General. The question resulted from a recommendation made in the report of the Auditor General to the House of Commons, in which he said that early consideration should be given to ways and means of covering the loss sustained by the Post Office Department in the handling of second class mail. I think this is a matter of considerable urgency, since this is not the first time the Auditor General has made this request to the Postmaster General.

In his report of last year, page 704, he pointed out that a loss had been sustained of $35 million as a result of the handling of second class mail by the Post Office Department. This sad history of losses in connection with second class mail goes back a long time. Of course I recognize that since the minister is new in his job he should not be held accountable for the serious errors and omissions of his predecessors. I suggest to the minister however, he now has an opportunity to become a hero by doing the kind of thing that should have been done a long time ago. I think it is time to plug this leak of the taxpayer's dollar. I think it is time to raise second class postage rates in this country to overcome that deficit of the Post Office Department.

I can go back to Hansard for 1957—I go back only to 1957 because as a relatively new member those are all the Hansards they would give me—and on March 8, 1957, I find Mr. Regier, the then member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, raised this question. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) raised the same question, and asked who benefited from this particular subsidy on second class mail. Of course, the chief beneficiary, the one who is being subsidized by the Canadian taxpayer, is the giant newspaper chain in Canada, as well as magazines like Reader's Digest and Time. I do not believe, by any stretch of the imagination, that we could consider these people really need the taxpayer's help. I feel that the fellow who is working in the shop might have just cause to feel somewhat upset when he knows that some of his hard earned money is going in this particular direction.

I am always rather surprised to see that these champions of free enterprise do not come annually to the minister with a cheque in their hands and say, here, we wish to reimburse you for the subsidy you have provided us because we do believe in this free enterprise system. It is particularly galling when these newspapers add insult to injury by talking about the perils of the welfare state and the perils of subsidies in some of their editorials. This is particularly true when they refer to old age pensions. In the light of the government's concern about its inability to find money to increase old age pensions in Canada, I think this might be an excellent place for it to start. They should take a look at this particular leakage of government money and perhaps do something to correct it. I suggest the thing to do is increase the rate. As I pointed out, the minister has a great opportunity to be a hero. I would be delighted to see him become a hero. Perhaps he should close this gap, take the amount of money over to his colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp), and give him a down payment on increases in the old age pension.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, as so ably put by the member, this is the first recommendation of its kind the Auditor General has made since I have been appointed Postmaster General.

I might say to the hon. member that I could make in my Department many changes which might win me the title of hero in some quarters, and that of zero in others.

I must say that upon reading the recommendations in the Auditor General's report, I asked my officials report, as soon as possible, on the surveys they had already carried out or those they expected to undertake, in order that we might know what decisions should be taken and what policies should be implemented.

I understand a committee has been sitting for several months now and that officials are considering suggestions made by the committee.

As we all know, postal rates have to be approved by parliament and can be changed only by parliament.

When preferential rates were approved for newspapers over 20 years ago, one of the reasons for it was, I think, that newspapers were perhaps the only public medium of information at that time. That is why a preferential rate was established. But I do not think that reason stands today. However, there may be others.

Since the matter of increasing the second class rate was raised a few years ago, a lot of opinions were expressed and, most likely, they were contradictory opinions.

However, I believe that what we must try to set up is a policy which will ensure a sound balance. I think we should wait for suggestions before taking action.

The hon. member knows very well that this question is one of government policy and that such policy is usually announced only when the government is ready to bring the legislation before parliament for action.

MUNICIPAL LOAN DEVELOPMENT FUND—INQUIRY AS TO EXTENSION OF PERIOD

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I put a question to the Minister of Finance. I believe he is not in the house tonight but he will have a worthy representative in the person of his parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for Saint-Maurice-Laflèche (Mr. Chrétien), from whom I would like to get details, or better, a statement concerning a problem which proves to be of major importance for municipalities.

One knows that in 1963, as shown in the Statutes of Canada for 1963, chapter 13, a very beneficial piece of legislation was adopted to enable the municipalities to borrow money for municipal works.

Section 11 of the said act stipulates:

(1) Where the municipal project in respect of which a loan is made under this Act is completed to the satisfaction of the Board on or before the 31st day of March, 1966, the Board shall forgive payment by the municipality of twenty-five per cent of the principal amount of the loan.

That provision means that the municipalities which have completed their projects—undertaken with a loan contracted by the said municipalities under the said act or statute—before March 31, will get 25 per cent of the principal amount of the loan, which is quite a considerable portion of the loan which they will not have to reimburse.

The problem, since the expiry date is near —March 31, 1966, is not far off—is that several municipalities will not be able to complete their projects before that date.

That problem is of great concern to me for the very good reason that several municipalities in the riding of Lotbinière took advantage of the provisions of that act, Mr. Speaker.

I am speaking in particular of the municipalities of St. Sophie de Lévrard, St. Antoine de Tilly, St. Apollinaire and St. Pierre les Becquets.

All these municipalities located in Lotbinière riding took advantage of this beneficial legislation, the Municipal Development Loans Act.

So, Mr. Speaker, if the expiry date for the termination of the works is March 31, 1966, should some municipalities not have time to terminate their works, I would beg and implore the indulgence and the goodwill of the minister to see whether there is a possibility of an extension.

I see the minister is not here, but I am confident his parliamentary assistant will favorably receive the request I respectfully submit. I will go further. I am morally sure the minister will favour this request for the benefit not only of Lotbinière and Quebec municipalities but of all municipalities throughout Canada which have used the provisions of this act.

Without further comment, I will yield the floor to the minister's parliamentary secretary. If he is more taciturn than he should be, I will accept his discreet comments, but I shall keep the hopes, if not the conviction, that this extension will be granted.

Mr. Jean Chrétien (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Lotbinière for his interest in the important question raised this week, that of the expiry of the act passed in 1963 providing for $400 million in loans from the federal government to the municipalities to help them relieve acute unemployment which is less of a problem today.

As stipulated in section 11 of the act to which the hon. member referred earlier, if the works are not completed by March 31, 1966, the municipalities will not receive the extra payments which he mentioned.

However, during the week the Minister of Finance received in his office various ministers of Municipal Affairs of Canada who outlined the problems involved. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) explained to them the difficult position of the central government which must, of course, abide by the statutes as they stand.

On the other hand, I must say to the hon. member that I am not in a position to make a decision myself, but that within a few days, perhaps tomorrow, the Minister of Finance will probably be in a position to give a final answer to all members of the house interested in this problem, as well as to all mayors of municipalities in various provinces who are expecting a reply one way or the other. I assure you that a decision will be made shortly.

C—Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada—

80. Administration, operation and maintenance, $1,447,000.

82. Amount to be credited to the railway grade crossing fund, in addition to the amount to be credited to the fund under the Railway Act in the current fiscal year, for the general purposes of the fund and, notwithstanding section 30 of the Financial Administration Act, to authorize an increase to $34,967,000 in the commitments (in addition to any commitments in respect of which amounts are appropriated under this or any other act) that may be made in the current and subsequent fiscal years, $9,000,000.

83b. Notwithstanding any limitation that may be contained in section 265 of the Railway Act, to authorize the payment of an amount not exceeding $2,000,000 from the railway grade crossing fund to be applied towards the cost of any relocation of the Canadian Pacific Railway line in Sault Ste. Marie pursuant to an order of the board, $1.

84b. To provide for balance of payments to companies subject to order number 96300, dated November 17, 1958, of the board of transport commissioners for Canada in respect of the period April 1, 1964, to March 31, 1965, payable to said companies for such diminution in their aggregate gross revenues during the said period as in the opinion of the said board is attributable to such companies maintaining the rate level for freight traffic at an 8% increase instead of 17% as authorized by the said order, $600,000.

84d. To provide payments to companies subject to order number 96300, dated November 17, 1958, of the board of transport commissioners for Canada of an aggregate amount of $20,000,000 in respect of the period April 1, 1965 to March 31, 1966, to be paid in instalments at such times as may be determined by the said board for the purpose of reimbursing the said companies for such diminution in their aggregate gross revenues during the said period as in the opinion of the said board is attributable to such companies maintaining the rate level for freight traffic at an 8% increase instead of 17% as authorized by the said order; and to provide payments to the said companies of an aggregate amount in respect of the calendar year 1965 of $50,000,000 to be paid in instalments at such times and in accordance with such methods of allocation as may be determined by the said board for the maintenance by such companies of the rates of freight traffic at the said reduced level, $70,000,000.

D—Canadian maritime commission—

85. Administration of the commission and the degaussing of Canadian government ships and Canadian-owned merchant ships, of 3,000 gross tons to 20,000 gross tons, of Canadian registry or of United Kingdom registry if subject to re-transfer to Canadian registry under special inter-governmental arrangement, $395,800.

90. Steamship subventions for coastal services, as detailed in the estimates, $8,549,006.

90b. Steamship subventions for coastal services, as detailed in the estimates, $299,000.

90d. Steamship subventions for coastal services, detailed in the estimates, $36,875.

95. Capital subsidies for the construction of commercial and fishing vessels in accordance with regulations of the governor in council, $25,000,000.

95b. Capital subsidies for the construction of commercial and fishing vessels in accordance with regulations of the governor in council, $14,000,000.

95d. Capital subsidies for the construction of commercial and fishing vessels in accordance with regulations of the governor in council, $1,541,000.

E—National harbours board—

100. Advances to national harbours board, subject to the provisions of section 29 of the National Harbours Board Act, to meet reconstruction and capital expenditures during the calendar year 1965 as detailed in the estimates, $1,487,900.

100b. Advances to national harbours board, subject to the provisions of section 29 of the National Harbours Board Act, to meet reconstruction and capital expenditures during the calendar year 1965 as detailed in the estimates, $615,000.

103. To authorize expenditures by the national harbours board, either by itself or on behalf of or in cooperation with others, for certain purposes relating to the Canadian universal and international exhibition, Montreal, 1967 and to provide, notwithstanding sections 28 and 29 of the National Harbours Board Act, for an absolute grant to the board for such purposes to be credited to the national harbours board special account, $3,823,000.

103b. To authorize expenditures by the national harbours board, either by itself or on behalf of or in cooperation with others, for certain purposes relating to the Canadian universal and international exhibition, Montreal, 1967, and to provide, notwithstanding sections 28 and 29 of the National Harbours Board Act, for an absolute grant to the board for such purposes to be credited to the national harbours board special account, $960,000.

104b. HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, February 18, 1966

The house met at 11 a.m.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

OBJECTIONS RESPECTING PROPOSED DISTRICTS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA, ONTARIO AND QUEBEC

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty to inform the house that five objections, signed by the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) and the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Basford) and eight other hon. members in one case; by the hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto) and ten other hon. members in another case; by the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Vincent) and ten other hon. members in the third case; by the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Côté) and nine other hon. members in the fourth case, and finally by the hon. member for Lafontaine (Mr. Lachance) and ten other hon. members, have been filed with me pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, with respect to the reports of the electoral boundaries commissions for the provinces of British Columbia, Ontario and Quebec respectively.

[Translation]

If the house will agree, I propose that the procedure followed on prior occasions in this session be again followed, so that the text of these five objections, together with the names of the members who signed in each case, will be printed as appendices to Votes and Proceedings for this day. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: May I add a word at this time concerning the notice of objection filed by the hon. member for Kamloops, the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard and others. When the notice of objection was initially deposited with me the first paragraph thereof included the words "and that this house do endorse the said objections". After consultation with the hon. member for Kamloops he agreed to delete these words from the notice.

MUNICIPAL DEVELOPMENT AND LOAN ACT

ANNOUNCEMENT OF EXTENSION OF PERIOD FOR FORGIVENESS PAYMENTS

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a statement on the Municipal Development and Loan Act.

Hon. members will recall that the purpose of this statute, which became law on September 5, 1963, was to provide an inducement to municipalities to accelerate the construction of municipal projects as rapidly as possible and thus to increase employment. The inducement took the form of an offer of $400 million of loan funds at a modest rate of interest and an undertaking that 25 per cent of the principal amount of each loan would be forgiven in respect of project costs incurred up to March 31, 1966, whether or not the project had been completed by that date.

Municipalities in all provinces have taken advantage of the borrowing facilities provided by this legislation. The municipal development and loan board expects that it will have committed about $390 million out of the $400 million made available in loans to municipalities by March 31, 1966. In short, virtually every province will have fully used up its quota; indeed most provincial quotas are already fully committed. Some 2,300 loans will have been made to about 1,300 municipalities.

The bulk of the municipal projects being constructed under this program have already been completed, or are well on the way to being completed. However, some 200 to 300 municipalities are unlikely to be able to complete their projects by March 31, and will not therefore be entitled to receive the maximum forgiveness payment.

In some cases the delay in completing their projects is explained by the fact that some municipalities took a longer time than they had anticipated in taking all the steps necessary to bring their projects to the point of commencing construction. In other cases, after the necessary borrowing had been authorized by the province, bad weather, strikes, shortages of materials and manpower delayed the actual construction schedules. Some municipalities applied too late to expect to be able to earn much if any forgiveness. As a result, construction work corresponding to perhaps $50 million and covering some 200 to 300 separate loans will not be completed until after March 31.

• (11:10 a.m.)

The act has fulfilled its main purpose, and it is not intended to propose any addition to the $400 million of funds made available or any extension beyond March 31, 1966 in the date by which projects must be approved.

As hon. members are aware, strong representations have been made to the government to extend the date for the calculation of forgiveness, most recently by a delegation of provincial ministers and their representatives. The suggestions ranged from extension for a few months to indefinite extension. The government has been giving careful study to these representations and has been impressed by the evidence of the difficult financial situation which some of these municipalities will encounter if, because of circumstances beyond their control, they are unable to earn the forgiveness they had expected to earn before March 31, 1966.

On the other hand, the government has also had to take into account that some municipalities decided not to apply or were prevented by their provincial boards from applying because they would not be able to earn full forgiveness before March 31, 1966. The government has also been aware, and I have no hesitation in saying this, that some municipalities have no expectation of earning forgiveness and are taking advantage of the act for its favourable financing facilities only.

Taking all these conflicting factors into account, the government has decided that it will ask parliament for authority, by means of a vote in the supplementary estimates for 1966-67, to pay to municipal borrowers under this legislation such additional amounts of forgiveness payments as may be necessary as a result of extending the relevant termination date by six months. That is, I am proposing that the 25 per cent forgiveness payment should be made with respect to all project costs incurred up to and including September 30, 1966. This extension will probably require additional payments amounting to about $12 million beyond those already contemplated.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps this might be a good moment for the Chair to unburden itself of a very weighty opinion prepared following the discussion in the house on Tuesday, February 15, when hon. members were invited to argue the point of order raised by the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Coates). The Chair undertook to give a decision after considering the arguments submitted. I can assure hon. members that I have studied most carefully the several views expressed by those who participated in the discussion on the point of order.

[Mr. Sharp.]

As hon. members know, it has been the practice for some years that when a minister of the crown makes an announcement or a statement of government policy on motions, a spokesman for each of the parties in opposition to the government may comment briefly.

Beauchesne refers to this practice in citation 91 of his fourth edition. On February 1, 1954 Mr. Speaker Beaudoin stated that it was the practice of the house, when a minister makes a statement, to allow one spokesman for each opposition party to make observations, and he referred to a ruling in that regard made by his predecessor, Mr. Speaker Macdonald, on June 4, 1951.

Last year this practice was embodied in our rules and is now provisional standing order 15(2a), which reads as follows:

> On motions, as listed in section (2) of this standing order, a minister of the crown may make an announcement or a statement of government policy. Any such announcement or statement should be limited to facts which it is deemed necessary to make known to the house and should not be designed to provoke debate at this stage. A spokesman for each of the parties in opposition to the government may comment briefly, subject to the same limitation.

In 1963 an amendment was brought to the Senate and House of Commons Act, which reads as follows:

> There shall be paid to each member of the House of Commons, other than the Prime Minister or the member occupying the recognized position of Leader of the Opposition in the House of Commons, who is the leader of a party that has recognized membership of twelve or more persons in the House of Commons, an allowance at the rate of four thousand dollars per annum in addition to the sessional allowance payable to such member.

It has been suggested that provisional standing order 15(2a) should be interpreted in the light of the amendment to the Senate and House of Commons Act in 1963 and that this amendment should be a guide to the Speaker as to the procedure to be followed in the matter of comments on ministerial statements.

There is obviously some merit to this proposition. However, one should bear in mind the following principle of parliamentary procedure laid down in subsection 3 of citation 8 of Beauchesne's fourth edition:

> In the interpretation of the rules, or standing orders, the house is generally guided not so much by the literal construction of the orders themselves as by the consideration of what has been the practice of the house with respect to them.

We must take into consideration that after the 1963 amendment to the Senate and House of Commons Act was enacted, standing order 15(2a) was adopted by the house, and that in the same year such standing order was adopted the house accepted that the hon. member for Red Deer be permitted to make comments on ministerial statements, although at that time he had in his party fewer members than the number provided in the amendment to the Senate and House of Commons Act.

Following such precedents, I do not see how I could come to the conclusion that standing order 15(2a) is to be interpreted in the light of the amendment to the above mentioned act. At the same time I do not think it would be reasonable to conclude that independent members fall under standing order 15(2a). I do not think, also, that the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River who contributed to the discussion, comes under this category. But until such time as the house amends the standing order dealing with ministerial statements so as to define more precisely the right to comment thereon, I am of the opinion that I should follow the practice which prevailed during the last session and interpret the standing order as permitting comments on ministerial statements by the Leader of the Official Opposition and by spokesmen for the New Democratic Party, the Ralliement Créditistes and the Social Credit party.

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, we listened with interest to the statement by the Minister of Finance with regard to this matter of the municipal development loan fund. Let me say, first of all, that this six months extension is not, in our opinion, long enough. I would remind the minister that when his predecessor introduced this legislation in 1963 he promised that should the municipalities have used the $400 million before the March 1, 1966 deadline there would be no hesitation in asking parliament to make further funds available. Apparently hon. gentlemen opposite have now changed their minds, and after having kept the municipalities waiting for a long time to see what would happen the minister comes forward today, February 18, to make this disappointing statement. This is not good enough.

I would point out that in areas such as the Atlantic area this fund has been of great assistance. Its continuation for a further six months only will be a keen disappointment. During the last reported period of 1965, unemployment in the Atlantic area amounted to 6 per cent according to figures from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. The development loan fund was doing good work in areas such as mine where four schools within a radius of five miles were undertaken under this scheme. I do not know whether they can be completed within the six months period now allowed.

I am glad the minister and the government have listened to the representations of the official opposition and allowed at least some extension of the terms of this act but, as I say, the intention was surely to assist in providing employment, especially in areas like my own.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the announcement made by the Minister of Finance will cause considerable disappointment among the municipalities of Canada. The concession to extend the period for another six months will be of some help, but the minister has not made it clear whether this extension will enable all the municipalities which now have projects under way to qualify for the 25 per cent forgiveness.

• (11:20 a.m.)

It seems to me, in view of the very small sum of money involved, the very least the government might have done would be to agree that any projects commenced prior to this date would be allowed to qualify for the 25 per cent forgiveness because, as the minister has pointed out, there have been a great many delays due to causes beyond the control of the municipalities, which have accounted for the fact that they have not been able to complete their work. Some will certainly be unable to complete their programs by September, and it will be a very serious loss to them if they are denied the 25 per cent forgiveness provision.

The second announcement by the minister, that the government has no intention of extending the Municipal Development and Loan Act beyond March 31, is even more disappointing. I think the conference of mayors and municipalities felt fairly confident, when the former minister of finance introduced this measure, that we were taking the first step toward setting up in Canada a permanent municipal loan fund. The house has to remember that there are a great many municipalities, particularly smaller municipalities, which cannot borrow money at the same interest rates as can the larger urban centres. Many of these small municipalities must pay exorbitant rates of interest, if they can borrow money at all, and the absence of any federal municipal loan fund means that many of the more needy communities will be prevented from undertaking much needed municipal works.

We in this party had always hoped the government would establish a permanent municipal bank or municipal loan fund to allow the municipalities to borrow money at reasonable rates of interest. The federal government can borrow more cheaply than the municipalities, and without great cost it could save the municipalities a great deal of money. But even more important it could enable the poorer municipalities to undertake projects which otherwise would be impossible. This is one way in which the government could equalize opportunity as between the different municipalities and they will be disappointed, as are we, that the government has decided not to extend the Municipal Development and Loan Act so as to make this a permanent feature of our Canadian way of life.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, the measures taken by the government to assist municipalities through the granting of loans seem to me completely inadequate.

As a matter of fact, if we consider the situation in which most of our municipalities find themselves, we readily realize that they need government assistance all year round and not only during a given period.

The minister has just said that 1,300 municipalities have benefited from such loans and advantages provided under the federal act. He told us also that some municipalities have not undertaken any municipal works because they were unable to complete them by March 31, 1966.

The minister does not say if these municipalities can undertake works now, tomorrow or next week, and benefit from the provisions of the act until September. The hon. minister's statement is not very clear.

In any event, I endorse what the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) has just said about this municipal development and loan act. I feel this should be a permanent and not merely a temporary measure, because Canadian municipalities do not exist only until March 31, 1966 or September 30, 1966, but problems will still be facing them after that. Therefore, let us help the municipalities by making this act permanent, so that the municipalities may be treated equitably throughout the year.

[English]

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I am sure there are many municipalities across the country which will be grateful for the announcement the Minister of Finance has just made. I believe that in so far as the previous act is concerned this new policy will cover the majority of needs where municipalities have not been able to complete projects and claim benefits in accordance with the previous deadline.

However, the need for assistance in financing capital development across this country, particularly as it relates to municipal governments, is urgent. The minister has said that the purpose of this change is to assist in relieving the unemployment situation, but the real need in this country as far as local governments are concerned is not direct relief for unemployment, but money for capital development which cannot be obtained except at exorbitant interest rates. In this regard the tax rate imposed on local taxpayers by many municipalities is made up more in interest charges than for capital for the necessary projects for those communities.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I urge upon the Minister of Finance that what we need is a permanent set-up to provide this capital. It would seem much wiser for the government to bring in permanent extension, rather than a temporary provision, which would give the type of assistance the government has given under the municipal loans fund in the past years. The need goes beyond that, and that is why we in the Social Credit party down through the years have asked for a definite and complete municipal financing set-up which we believe could best be done through a municipal development bank as part of the Bank of Canada, where such money could be obtained at a reasonable cost which would give hope of meeting the development needs of the country with some relief to the taxpayers.

POWER

MANITOBA—TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING NELSON RIVER

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table copies of correspondence between Mr. Roblin, Premier of Manitoba, and myself, concerning power development of the Nelson river. Mr. Roblin is doing likewise today in Winnipeg.

EDUCATION

QUEBEC—TELEGRAM FROM FEDERAL MINISTERS RESPECTING GRANT ALLOCATION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry asking whether the most unusual action taken by him and the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Turner) yesterday in connection with the government of Quebec, as to what that government ought to do in the field of education, however justifiable the objectives were, was taken as members of the government or on their own?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, if I may speak on behalf of myself and my colleague, a telegram was sent jointly by myself and the member of parliament for St. Lawrence-St. George as members of parliament for two ridings on the island of Montreal, to two members of the provincial legislature from the island of Montreal, to seek to obtain their assistance in finding out whether something can be done for the university of which I am a graduate.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Was that done with the approval of the cabinet or did the minister do it on his own? No matter how justifiable the objective, does the minister think this is constitutionally proper?

Mr. Drury: Perhaps this is slightly argumentative—

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, it is not argumentative; it is factual.

Mr. Drury: —but I do think it is constitutionally proper. As I explained to the right hon. gentleman, this telegram was sent and signed by me in my capacity as a member of parliament and a graduate of McGill university.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Starr: You are a member of the cabinet. Have you got a dual role?

[Translation]

[Later:]

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the Minister of Industry's telegram—incidentally, I commend him for defending the cause of minorities—would he and his colleague, in the same spirit, consider sending telegrams to the nine other premiers to point out discrimination against French Canadians?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

[English]

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Industry. Did not the telegram contain information about grants from the National Research Council, was not the minister speaking partly in his capacity as the minister responsible for the National Research Council grants, and will the minister table the telegram?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister has answered two questions along the same line. I have some doubts as to whether they are proper questions for orders of the day because to some extent I suggest the minister was not asked to answer a question in his capacity as Minister of Industry.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No.

Mr. Speaker: In view of this it seems the question was not entirely in order. In any event, I suggest that the minister has replied to the question as posed and perhaps we might go on to another matter.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Speaker, I give notice of my intention to debate this matter at ten o'clock on Monday evening.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, one more supplementary question, because I think this has a bearing on the matter. The minister has replied that he sent the telegram in his capacity as a member of parliament from Montreal island. What significance, then, do we attach to the fact that no other Liberal member from Montreal island was concerned with this telegram but only two cabinet members?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is not a proper question.

[Later:]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, in connection with an earlier question, I ask the Minister of Industry whether he will table that communication which he and the Minister without Portfolio sent? Second, I ask the Prime Minister whether he has been in touch with Premier Lesage, and is in agreement that the allocation by the province of Quebec to McGill University is "a calamitous shortfall"?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): This is a matter for discussion between the province of Quebec and the university in question. I understand those discussions are taking place.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I ask, did the Prime Minister have communication yesterday with the premier of Quebec in this connection, and does he agree that the allocation of that $17 million is, to use the words of the Minister of Industry, "a calamitous shortfall"?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the first question might be answered.

Mr. Pearson: I had no discussion with the premier of Quebec on this matter.

[Later:]

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Industry. Would he be good enough to table the telegram that he and the Minister without Portfolio sent to certain ministers of the province of Quebec in respect of university grants?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, as I pointed out earlier this telegram was sent in my quality or capacity as a member of parliament. I wonder whether it would be appropriate both to demand the production of this kind of correspondence and the tabling of it in this house. I will be only too glad to show any member who is interested a copy of this telegram.

Mr. Churchill: How did you sign it?

Mr. Drury: In reply to the aside which came across the aisle, I signed it "C. M. Drury, M.P., Saint Antoine-Westmount".

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the question whether ministers can bifurcate themselves and start directing what a provincial government ought to do is a very important one. I have a copy of that telegram here.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes, because the minister issued it to the press. But parliament cannot get that which was issued to the press. It says that the following telegram was sent by—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the right hon. Leader of the Opposition rising on a point of order or a question of privilege, or to ask a question?

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: I rise on a question of privilege, sir. No minister can adopt the attitude of pretending that he is doing something in his private capacity when he sends a telegram to Hon. Eric Kierans and Hon. R. Hyde, one Minister of Health and the other Minister of Revenue, and signs it "Hon. C. M. Drury, M.P., Saint Antoine-Westmount" and "Hon. J. N. Turner, M.P., St. Lawrence-St. George". I say they have not ceased to be ministers because they are members.

It is most improper on the part of any minister to communicate with and direct or suggest to a province that moneys coming from the federal parliament shall be used for a certain purpose, however laudable and however much I agree that McGill University is being ill treated.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, this is, of course, a very complicated and difficult matter. Perhaps some light would be thrown on the propriety or otherwise of my hon. friends' conduct when we recall, as I remember it, that when the right hon. gentleman was Prime Minister he attended a provincial Conservative convention in Saskatchewan. As I recall, he emphasized at that time that he was attending as a member of parliament from Saskatchewan.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister's recollection as usual has no basis in fact.

Mr. Fairweather: A supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am just wondering whether the Chair is expected to rule whether or not there is a question of privilege. Perhaps it would be the better part of wisdom not to rule on the question at all and to go on to something else.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put to the Minister of Industry a supplementary question concerning his telegram to McGill University.

Does the Minister think that McGill University at this moment is being discriminated against in the province of Quebec as compared to the University of Montreal or Laval University?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question is out of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: I rise on a question of privilege.

You allowed the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) to state in the house that McGill University was being ill treated by the Quebec government.

Now, I happen to have a question for the Minister of Industry who saw fit to deal with this matter.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is making an interesting point, but the question, in its present form, is certainly not in order, since the hon. member is not seeking to obtain urgent information in the circumstances.

Mr. Grégoire: It is rather urgent.

[English]

[Later:]

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. member for Saint-Antoine-Westmount.

An hon. Member: In his capacity as minister?

Mr. Fairweather: I will deal with that question. Did the hon. member release to the press a copy of his telegram to the Quebec ministers, and if so would he be kind enough to extend the same courtesy to members of parliament?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to suggest that questions addressed to individual members of parliament are not in order. I assume, however, that the hon. member is addressing me in my capacity as Minister of Industry. I shall be very glad, as I offered earlier, to provide copies of this telegram to any member who desires it.

An hon. Member: Table it, then.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ROYAL COMMISSION ON APPOINTMENT OF OMBUDSMAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, in view of the widespread interest in the visit to Canada of Sir Guy Powles, the New Zealand ombudsman, I should like to ask the Prime Minister about the commitment contained in last year's Speech from the Throne to the effect that the government intended to appoint a royal commission to investigate the desirability of appointing a parliamentary commissioner or ombudsman for Canada. Does the government intend to initiate such an investigation, or has this been dropped from the program?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): We are looking into this matter, Mr. Speaker. It is more complicated here than in the case of a country like New Zealand because it has federal-provincial implications. Therefore it may take a little time before a decision is reached.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the government promised to set up a royal commission to investigate this matter, has the government changed its mind about initiating such an investigation?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker; and the commission in question when it is set up will investigate not only the question of an ombudsman but an administrative tribunal.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

QUEBEC—EXTENSION OF TELEVISION SERVICE IN CHIBOUGAMAU REGION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

Has the minister received a brief submitted by the Chamber of Commerce of Chibougamau with a view to obtaining free C.B.C. television service for this area which is not served at present by government-owned radio or television network?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Unless this question is of a very urgent nature, which I fail to see at the moment, I suggest that the hon. member put it on the order paper.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, the matter has been urgent for at least three years, and it would be about time the minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

[English]

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

ALLOCATION OF FUNDS UNDER ADVERTISING PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. In view of the fact that the MacLaren advertising agency has just received $151,000 from the federal government for advertising the benefits of the Canada Pension Plan, and in view of the minister's announcement yesterday that this advertising agency will be one of three participating in a $5 million advertising program for the centennial, would it not have been better if this advertising program had been shared among some other advertising agencies?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question also might be placed on the order paper.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY AS TO NEGOTIATIONS RESPECTING CANADA'S NUCLEAR ROLE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In order to assist the house in its consideration of the subject of national defence, will the Prime Minister inform us of his success during the last three years in fulfilling his promise to negotiate Canada out of its nuclear role?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is a very interesting question but it seems to me it is the type of question that would require a long answer and is not the type that should be asked or answered at this time.

[Later:]

Mr. Churchill: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I did not have the opportunity to do so right after you indicated that the answer to my question might be lengthy. My point of order is this. How is it possible to determine in advance whether an answer will be lnog or short? I do not think that is possible.

Mr. Speaker: I admit with the hon. member that it is very difficult, but it is one of the responsibilities of the Chair.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Later:]

Mr. Churchill: I have a question for the Prime Minister which will require a very short answer. Is the Prime Minister going to fulfil his promise to negotiate Canada out of its nuclear role?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): As my friend the Minister of National Defence indicated last night—it was too bad my hon. friend was not listening carefully—we are at present doing just that.

[Later:]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Burnaby-Cowichan-The Islands.

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I will straighten out my credentials later. My question is for the Prime Minister. It arises out of an answer he gave a few minutes ago to the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre in which he indicated that the government was now in the process of negotiating itself out of its nuclear role. My question is, how does the Prime Minister reconcile that statement with the statement made last night by the Minister of National Defence that appears at the bottom of page 1418 and at the top of page 1419 of Hansard of yesterday's date, where the Minister of National Defence is reported to have said:

> At that time our six squadrons in Germany will be fully operational in the non-nuclear attack role as well as in the nuclear strike role.

Mr. Churchill: "As well as in the nuclear strike role".

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that the hon. member is entering into argument when he asks one minister to try to reconcile one statement with a statement made by another minister. That is argument.

An hon. Member: It is a possibility, surely.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is an argument so far as the Chair is concerned.

VAL D'OR, QUE.—MAINTENANCE COST OF NUCLEAR BASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence?

Are the operating costs of the nuclear base at Val d'Or paid in full by the Canadian government or does the latter get help from the United States?

Mr. Speaker: That question is very important and very interesting, but it is not so urgent that it cannot be put on the order paper.

OLD AGE SECURITY

DISCUSSIONS WITH PROVINCES RESPECTING INCREASED PAYMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, could I ask the Prime Minister whether, as reported, the government is giving consideration to an increase in old age pensions, and whether it is communicating with several provinces to secure consent on the part of the provinces to the acceptance by them of part of the cost load?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the government is at the moment attempting to put into effect as quickly as possible the Canada assistance program and is, in addition, considering what more can rightly be done to improve the position of pensioners in this country.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Was the Minister of National Defence speaking for the government when, as reported in the Toronto Telegram of yesterday, he said:

> Defence Minister Paul Hellyer was asked if the pension would be increased.
> "It's inevitable", he replied. But he declined to say when he thought it would happen.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Does the Prime Minister agree with that?

Mr. Pearson: The Minister of National Defence was quite correct in that statement. It is inevitable because we have linked the pension to the cost of living; therefore it goes up as the cost of living goes up over the years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Starr: An increase of a dollar and a half in 1968.

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, on a point of order about the question put by the Leader of the Opposition to which you allowed the right hon. Prime Minister to reply. I should like to know what difference there is between the question I raised yesterday in this house concerning family allowances and the question of the Leader of the Opposition. It was a similar question and you said it was out of order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member knows these decisions are taken on the spur of the moment. If he wants to appeal from the decision of the Chair, he may refer the subject matter of his question for debate on the adjournment motion.

Mr. Allard: I wish to discuss this question at ten o'clock at the next sitting of the house.

[English]

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, so many points of order have been raised that I have almost forgotten the question to which mine is a supplementary, but it relates to the question of old age pensions. I wanted to ask the Prime Minister whether the government is giving consideration to the recommendation of the Senate committee on aging for a guaranteed minimum income for all over 65.

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I answered this question the other day and said at that time the government was giving very careful and immediate consideration to the important recommendations of the Senate committee, and that a committee had been set up for that purpose.

[Later]

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question arising out of an earlier question. I should like to ask the Prime Minister, in view of his reply in regard to old age security increases and the question asked by the hon. member for Bow River with regard to the rapidly rising cost of living, if he will tell us approximately what the date of that inevitability might be, as referred to by the Minister of National Defence?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Prime Minister. In view of his statement earlier this morning that the government is anxious to proceed with the Canada Assistance Plan, can he say when this legislation will be on the order paper so that we all may have a look at it?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, from the way we are now progressing, I am quite sure that it will be on the order paper before we are able to take it up, so that hon. members will have an opportunity of looking at it before it reaches the chamber.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

STEPS TO MEET INCREASE IN COST OF LIVING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister, and I think it is of great national importance. Would the Prime Minister take the house into his confidence at an early date and outline the steps the government is prepared to take immediately to curb the ever escalating cost of living, particularly since he dealt with it in answer to the Leader of the Opposition?

Mr. Speaker: Again, this is the type of question that is very general in nature. The hon. member is asking for a general statement of policy. The question requires a detailed reply, and if the minister makes a long statement there will be objections on the part of other members in the house.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I did not ask for a statement today. I asked if the Prime Minister would be prepared to make a statement in the future outlining what the government intends to do. I did not ask for a reply today, but I should like to know if he is prepared to outline his policy in the near future, because we would like to hear it.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): The hon. member will have ample opportunity to hear it in connection with the budget presentation and in other ways.

PENITENTIARIES

COLLINS BAY—INVESTIGATION INTO ESCAPE OF PRISONERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I should like to direct a question to the Solicitor General having to do with the appointment last Wednesday by the government of a judicial inquiry into the escape of four inmates from Collins Bay penitentiary. Can the Solicitor General inform the house whether such a judicial inquiry has been appointed, and if so why it was not announced last Wednesday when it was appointed?

Mr. Speaker: A question of a similar nature was asked yesterday or the day before. It is difficult to remember whether it was in exactly the same terms as the one which is now being asked by the hon. member. However, it appears the Solicitor General is prepared to reply now. He may refer at the same time to the question which was asked before.

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): In reply to the hon. member may I say that the appointment of Judge Deyman was made under the Penitentiaries Act by the commissioner, and not by the minister. I do not know if all the details have been cleared and whether the judge has secured approval from the senior county court judge to act in this capacity. However, I believe this permission will be forthcoming.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I wish to pose the question which I posed yesterday and which you invited the minister to answer but he did not. Yesterday I asked whether he had any statement to make about reports that (1) officials at Collins Bay penitentiary knew of an impending break and, (2) at least one of the guards' rifles was so mucked up with grease it would not fire.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate the hon. gentleman's assistance in reminding me of the question and confirming the fact that the question was out of order.

Mr. Nielsen: May I ask a supplementary question of the Solicitor General. Do I take it that such an inquiry has in fact just been appointed?

Mr. Pennell: The answer is in the affirmative, Mr. Speaker. I understand that if clearances are given the inquiry will commence next Monday.

SHIPBUILDING

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REQUEST FOR CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING SUBSIDIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): I have a question to ask of the Prime Minister arising out of a statement made last night by the Minister of Transport in committee of supply to the effect that the Prime Minister had received a letter from the premier of British Columbia in connection with the shipbuilding subsidy program. I ask the Prime Minister if he will table a copy of the letter from the premier of British Columbia and his reply to it. If so, when can he do this?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it was not a letter, it was a telegram. I have been working this morning on a reply to the telegram in the form of a letter. If the premier of British Columbia has no objection, I would certainly be glad to table the communications.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF ROADS TO RESOURCES PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): I have a question for the Prime Minister. Has the government given any further consideration to the possibility of extending or re-establishing the roads to resources program?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Perhaps I could take that question as notice.

LABOUR RELATIONS

WHITESHELL, MAN.—STRIKE AT NUCLEAR RESEARCH STATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. R. Schreyer (Springfield): My question is addressed to the Minister of Industry, although it may come within the purview of the Minister of Labour as well; I am not sure.

In view of the strike which began Wednesday at the nuclear research establishment at Whiteshell, Manitoba, has the minister involved himself in any steps or action leading to an eventual settlement?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): No, Mr. Speaker. The nuclear establishment at Whiteshell comes under the jurisdiction of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, which now reports to parliament through the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys.

Mr. Schreyer: Then may I ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. Has that minister involved himself in any steps or taken any action to help settle the strike at this research establishment?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): May I take this question as notice.

[Later:]

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Mines and Technical whether certain directives have been issued operators at the Atomic Energy plant at Whiteshell, Manitoba. My question is, has the minister or the government issued any directive to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited relative to wage levels and wage differentials to be paid as between the Chalk River plant and the Whiteshell plant? Perhaps the minister may not want to answer at this time but would like to take this as notice.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is asking whether certain directives have been issued to employees of the government. I suggest that in that form the question cannot be accepted at this time.

QUEBEC—WAGES PAID TO WORKERS IN GOLD MINES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys.

Is the Minister currently considering the situation in the gold mines of northwestern Quebec where employees must work for starvation wages because of the price of gold.

Mr. Speaker: This is a question of a general nature. I presume the minister has noted the representations of the hon. member.

[English]

CANADA PENSION PLAN

INTEGRATION WITH CIVIL SERVICE AND ARMED FORCES PLANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the general concern of civil servants over the proposed integration of their pension plan with the Canada Pension Plan, will the minister give assurance that amendments to the Public Service Superannuation Act will be referred to a standing committee or special committee which may be established?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): I would not undertake to give that assurance, but I will certainly take this suggestion into consideration.

Mr. Chatterton: Can the minister advise if a decision has been taken as to whether members of the armed forces will be brought into the Canada Pension Plan and their own pension act amended accordingly?

Mr. Sharp: My recollection is that the matter is being studied. It is very complicated, as are all these matters.

WATER RESOURCES

ONTARIO—ACQUISITION OF LAND FOR CONSERVATION PROJECTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I should like to ask the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys if he has yet been in negotiation with his opposite number in the province of Ontario concerning federal contributions to conservation projects.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): I am to meet soon the Ontario minister to discuss with him all kinds of problems presently pending between the federal government and the provincial government.

STEPS TO IMPLEMENT REPORT ON GREAT LAKES POLLUTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. On Wednesday the minister, in reply to a question which I put, commenced to read a fairly long statement on water pollution, and Your Honour decided that that statement should not be completed.

Inquiries of the Ministry

May I ask the minister whether he intends to complete this statement on motions.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, I could do so in a few seconds by enumerating some of the things that have been done recently in the field of pollution.

A federal-Ontario committee has been formed by the International Joint Commission, and is very active. An interdepartmental committee is being set up by the federal government. I am meeting next week with the Canadian representative on the International Joint Commission. I am meeting with the Ontario minister in a few weeks on this same subject and others. I intend to be as active as possible in these matters, because I give them as much importance as does the hon. member.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): A supplementary question to the minister. Will all these meetings that the minister has mentioned be carried on sub rosa?

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO ACTION RESPECTING AMENDMENT OF LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): I have a question for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Does the minister intend to introduce legislation to change the pension act, as he promised last session and as recommended by the committee on veterans affairs in 1963?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): I do not know whether it is proper to answer that question. I did promise, and carried out the undertaking last year on the question of amending the act.

I am certainly not going to commit myself to anything at this moment until I receive the report from the inquiry committee.

Mr. McIntosh: A supplementary question. Would the minister inform the house when he expects this report from the committee which he has set up?

Mr. Teillet: I will make inquiries and report.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR EARLY CONSIDERATION OF BILL RESPECTING FAIR WAGES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Labour whether he is yet in a position to answer my question of last Monday concerning the possibility of bringing on Bill No. C-2, an act to amend the Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act, for possible early passing.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, if my recollection is correct, what the hon. member asked me last week was whether I would discuss this matter with the government house leader; really draw it to his attention. That I have done, and I have his assurance that it will be placed on the list of work for this session when developments in the house warrant so doing.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

INQUIRY AS TO HEALTH WARNING ON CIGARETTE PACKAGES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Antonio Yanakis (Berthier-Maskinongé-Delanaudière): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare?

In view of the urgency of the situation and in the interest of national health, does the government intend to compel the tobacco companies to print on the outside of cigarette packages a warning about the harmful effect of smoking?

Mr. Speaker: I would suggest to the hon. member to put his question on the order paper.

GRAIN

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO DATE OF FINAL PAYMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Finance. I wonder whether the minister is now in a position to tell the country the exact date when the cheques for the final wheat payments will be issued.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I am not yet in a position to announce this date. I have received the first recommendation from the wheat board for the transfer of the unsold balance, and I expect that within the next day or two I will be receiving their recommendation for the level of final payments.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Enns (Portage-Neepawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Veterans Affairs, the Manitoba representative in the cabinet. I should like to ask him whether he has received any representations from the mayor and city councillors of Portage la Prairie with respect to inclusion of that city as a designated area for—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I submit to the hon. member that he cannot ask questions to a member of the cabinet in his capacity as representing a province, but only in his capacity as minister.

AGRICULTURE

QUEBEC—EXTENSION OF CROP INSURANCE TO INCLUDE FEED GRAIN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of Agriculture?

Mr. Caouette: Order paper.

Mr. Choquette: Could the minister tell us whether the federal-provincial discussions which took place yesterday were favourable to Quebec's proposals to include fodder under the insurability projects in connection with the application of the crop insurance act across the country?

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

Mr. Choquette: The federal provincial conference took place yesterday and we would like to know the results.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps the hon. member could put his question on the order paper and thus get the answer he wants.

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

SPORTS

ROYAL COMMISSION INQUIRY INTO AMATEUR ATHLETICS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the minister in charge of health and physical fitness. In light of the very strong statements made in the legislature of British Columbia and related questions in the legislature of Alberta in the last two days, is the government prepared to set up a federal royal commission to examine the status of amateur athletics?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No consideration has been given to this proposal, Mr. Speaker.

INDUSTRY

HEAVY WATER—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON SECOND PLANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to direct to the Minister of Industry. In view of the fact that the time limit invitation to Canadian General Electric to review the possibility of developing a second heavy water plant in Canada is now drawing to a close, could the minister state when he will be in a position to report to the house on this important matter?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned earlier, responsibility for Atomic Energy of Canada Limited now rests with the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys.

Mr. Douglas: Repeat the question.

Mr. Southam: My question is this, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the time limit invitation to Canadian General Electric to review the possibility of developing a second heavy water plant in Canada is now drawing to a close, could the minister state when he will be in a position to report to this house on this very important matter?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I should anticipate a decision still pending. We are still within the time limit allocated to Canadian General Electric, and I think I should delay answering that question.

BROADCASTING

ANNOUNCEMENT OF APPOINTMENTS TO BOARD OF GOVERNORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): I have a question for the Secretary of State. In view of the very important hearings which the Board of Broadcast Governors will be conducting next Wednesday concerning the subject of the C.T.V. network, can the minister inform the house if the board will be up to full strength for that meeting?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I have to advise that Mr. Pierre Juneau, formerly of the National Film Board, has been appointed as vice chairman of the Board of Broadcast Governors, and Mr. David Sim of Ottawa as the third member.

Inquiries of the Ministry

EDUCATION

REPORTED CANCELLATION OF TOUR BY GLASGOW STUDENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): I have a question to address to the Secretary of State. Would the hon. lady inform the house whether it is true that plans by the Glasgow educational authorities to send 1,000 children here on a special tour next year have been cancelled because of a lack of accommodation available for those young tourists?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder if this question is so urgent that it should be answered at this time. Perhaps the hon. member might care to place it on the order paper.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

RAISING OF QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE WITHOUT NOTICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege affecting the privileges of all members of the house. I do so with reluctance because the hon. member concerned is not in his seat. The hon. member who is concerned in the question of privilege is the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet (Mr. Berger).

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before the hon. member raises any question of privilege he must take into consideration that according to standing orders he is required to give prior notice to the Chair one hour before the opening of the house. Unless I am wrong the hon. member has not given such notice; therefore I suggest that he cannot raise a question of privilege of the type he appears to have in mind at the present time.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I would be very happy to put it off until Monday, when the hon. member I have referred to will very likely be in his seat.

Mr. McIlraith: It is when you have complied with the rules.

Mr. Speaker: It is not because the hon. member referred to is not in his seat but because the hon. member raising the question of privilege has not complied with the requirement of the standing order to the effect that the notice must be given one hour before the opening of the house, that the question of privilege may not now be raised.

[Miss LaMarsh.]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DISCUSSIONS BETWEEN CANADIAN AND U.S. MINISTERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): May I direct a question to the Prime Minister and ask him if he could inform the house as to the main purpose of the discussions being carried on today, I believe, between the Secretary of State for External Affairs and some ministers in Washington.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs was in New York last evening and, as I think he indicated to the house, he was there to discuss matters of interest and importance with the Secretary General of the United Nations and with the United States representative to the United Nations. The main subject of discussion was the situation in Viet Nam. Other matters may have been discussed as well.

Today in Washington he is to meet with the Secretary of State and other officials of the United States government to discuss with them Viet Nam and other questions. He will make a report of his discussions to this house after he returns over the week end.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

1. Departmental administration, including grants to military associations, institutes and other organizations as detailed in the estimates and authority, notwithstanding section 30 of the Financial Administration Act, and subject to allotment by the Treasury Board, for total commitments of $2,560,546,715 for the purposes of votes 1, 5, 15, 20, 25, 30, 35, 40 and 45 of this department regardless of the year in which such commitments will come in course of payment (of which it is estimated that $1,044,262,000 will come due for payment in future years) and authority to make recoverable advances under any of the said votes and, notwithstanding the Financial Administration Act, to spend revenue received during the year in respect of assistance rendered to the United Nations, any party of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization or any provincial or municipal government, $5,204,855.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, in the few minutes at my disposal last night I drew attention to the low state of morale in our armed forces and referred to some of the evidence which shows how serious the situation is. In particular I drew attention to the heavy loss of highly trained personnel which has left the armed forces unable to carry on effectively so far as some of its units are concerned.

In this regard I mentioned the situation in the navy where some 20 per cent or 25 per cent of our remaining fighting ships are tied up at Halifax and Esquimalt for lack of sufficient trained personnel to man them. Looking at the army, we find that every unit posted overseas for duty, whether in Germany, Cyprus or the Middle East, must have its numbers brought up to strength by postings from the units remaining in Canada, leaving the latter at greatly reduced strength. Apparently, sufficient numbers for the infantry required in Cyprus could not be obtained by posting men from units of the same kind. When the Royal Canadian Regiment was posted there artillery personnel had to be sent to the island to make up the numbers.

This is all too reminiscent of the conditions which existed in late 1944 and 1945 during the last war in Europe when the manpower policies of the government of that day resulted in units engaged in northwestern Europe, particularly infantry units, being seriously under strength. The result was that men from other units of all kinds, untrained in infantry work, had to take on infantry jobs for which they were not prepared.

I myself was in command of an artillery unit which had to hold some 12 miles of the river Maas line and during that time we lost a considerable number of men, killed and wounded, primarily because they did not know what they were doing. They were required to do an infantry job, first driving the Germans across the river and then patrolling across it. They had not been trained for this work and this resulted in unnecessary loss of life. The situation existing today, where we find artillery men being sent to do an infantry job, is all too reminiscent, as I say, of what happened in those days, days which all who experienced them hoped we would never see again.

Turning to the R.C.A.F., let me say first of all that it is well known this branch of the service is now seriously short of pilots, a situation which may not be surprising in view of the fact that only a year ago the minister compulsorily retired 500 pilots, a monumental mistake as has now become apparent and as should have been clear at the time. Possibly hon. members do not realize that the cost of training these pilots runs from $175,000 to $200,000 per man or even more. But 500 pilots were summarily dismissed from the air force. Now a year later, we find ourselves seriously short of pilots.

Of course, in addition to the 500 who were dismissed a large number of air crew on short service commissions decided not to reengage on the completion of their terms. Many others also requested discharge from the service because of factors I mentioned earlier, the low state of morale and the feeling that there was no future for them in the air force. A large number of these applications for discharge were accepted. The measure of the shortage of pilots in the air force at the present time is such that pilots in Europe are now reported to be putting in some 70 hours a week on duty. My information is that R.C.A.F. officers with engineering degrees filling supposedly vital jobs in the technical services have been taken from this work and returned to flying duty in order to keep the R.C.A.F. squadrons in the air. The question immediately arises: What is the state of efficiency of these technical services and how will they continue to operate effectively if men are to be drained away in this manner?

The minister has put out a great deal of propaganda to the effect that the changes he has instituted in the department will save a great deal of money. Most of the newspapers have accepted this propaganda and supported his programs on that basis. In actual fact, however, the amounts spent by the Department of National Defence have not declined. If we look through the estimates for the past five or six years we will see that the money estimated to be spent—in each case, of course, the estimate has been exceeded—was between $1,525 million and $1,590 million. In the current year which we are now considering the figure is $1,550 million. According to the estimates tabled this week, for next year it is $1,572 million. In other words, the minister has not saved any money.

He has continually tried to make the point that he would save a great deal of money on personnel and administrative expenses with the result that there would be more money available to provide new equipment. But so far as this year's estimates and expenditures are concerned the actual situation is that only about 12 per cent of the defence budget is to be put into new equipment, the smallest percentage in many years. In other words, the minister's claim that he would make savings in administration and personnel which could be devoted to the purchase of new equipment has not turned out to be justified.

Most important of all from a cost point of view is the fact that cost in relation to effectiveness has gone up substantially instead of decreasing. We are spending the same amount of money as we were in past years but we are not getting anything like the return in effective military units. I have called attention to the situation in the navy where the number of fighting vessels has declined to little more than half what it was when the minister took over. I have referred to the situation in the army and the air force.

• (12:20 p.m.)

The minister has attributed the severe losses of trained personnel and the difficulty in securing recruits to good economic conditions. He blithely says, "The reason we are having trouble keeping people in the forces or recruiting them is that conditions are so good under this beneficent Liberal government." That is complete nonsense. We have had good economic conditions in Canada previously but we never had the losses from the armed forces that we have experienced during the past two to three years.

So far as recruiting was concerned, in the past a high proportion of the people who enlisted in the armed forces did so because their parents or friends were members of the armed forces and encouraged them to join, but because of the state of morale in the forces at present no such urging is taking place. There are very few members or ex-members who will advise their sons and other young relatives to join the forces. That is one of the main reasons that recruiting is difficult and losses of trained personnel have been so heavy. It is not due to good economic conditions, although no one will argue that good economic conditions do not have some effect. Recruiting has always been slow when economic conditions have been good but it is not a major factor or anything like a major factor.

In order to try to correct the situation the minister is talking about pay increases and bonuses for men who re-engage. We also hear that requirements for entrance to the forces have been lowered. In addition, sea-going pay of $15 a month extra has been put into effect, this for people who in the past joined the navy because they wanted to go to sea. Of course navy personnel are glad to get it but they actually laugh at the minister for thinking he has to provide special sea-going pay in order to encourage people to join the navy. The question immediately comes to mind, what will be the effect of this on costs?

The minister is constantly talking about saving money and cutting down on costs but these increases in pay, bonuses and special sea-going pay will increase personnel and administrative costs.

The lack of morale in the armed forces is, of course, much greater in operational units and commands than may appear to be the case to the minister at national defence headquarters. He would get a much better idea of the dissatisfaction that exists if he would go to an operational command, secure the views of the men there and answer the questions of a cross-section of officers and other ranks in that command.

In his speech last night he indicated that a further integration of maritime command and R.C.A.F. maritime command took place in January, and I understand that at Halifax considerable unrest exists as a result. That would be a logical place for the minister to visit in order to find out the actual situation. However, he must be aware of the serious morale situation because he found it necessary to send an air vice-marshal to Trenton to try to sell his integration program to the personnel there and to try to stop the flood of withdrawals taking place. I am told this senior officer tried to field questions for over an hour after his speech extolling integration but the officers and other ranks did not buy what he was trying to sell.

I now turn to some questions with regard to integration and re-organization of staff at national defence headquarters. In 1964 the minister gave the defence committee an outline of the planned organization or reorganization, which is to be found in a chart at pages 140 and 141 of committee report No. 5, for June 4, 1964. This chart shows, in addition to the chief of defence staff, an assistant chief of defence staff. Then the staff is broken down into four main components or branches: First, the chief of operational readiness, with a deputy; next, the chief of personnel, with a deputy; next, the chief of logistics and engineering, with two deputies; and then a comptroller general, with one deputy.

I put a question on the order paper asking for the names and present appointments of all the officers of the rank of major general or equivalent rank and above and on February 7 I received a reply which appears in Hansard. This reply does not show anyone holding the appointment of chief of operational readiness or the appointment of deputy chief of operational readiness, nor does it show anyone as assistant chief of defence staff. However, it does show a deputy chief of operations and a deputy chief of plans, neither of which is provided for in the chart which the minister gave us in 1964. The only conclusion one can come to is that the proposed organization has been found unworkable and has been drastically changed. No information with regard to this matter has been given to parliament or to the country. I should like to know what the situation is. This is one of the things the minister should explain before these estimates are passed.

On several occasions in the past I have pointed out that one of the great weaknesses in the proposed changes was the multiplicity of chains of command or lines of communication which this reorganization would produce, with a resulting great waste of time, inability to act quickly and general loss of efficiency. Instead of an operational command having one clear line of communication, as it had in the past and through which it received its orders and instructions, so far as I can make out it now will have ten lines of communication. An example is maritime command. It must have a line of communication to the assistant chief of defence staff and to the chief of plans, if these positions are what now exist, a line of communication to the chief of personnel, one to the chief of logistics, one to the comptroller general and one to each of the other commands, training command, air transport command and so forth. So far as maritime command is concerned, the situation will be even worse in that the R.C.A.F. is a component of it and it will have to have another line of communication dealing solely with R.C.A.F. questions.

It is quite clear that the result of this will be an extremely unwieldy and time-consuming type of organization tailor-made to create confusion, and one which will require more people to make it work than had been the case under the previous organization. In fact my information is that such a state of confusion, uncertainty and disorganization does exist and is one of the things which is contributing powerfully to the lack of morale in the armed forces.

• (12:30 p.m.)

Basic to all of this and the real cause of the existing difficulties is the minister's determination to institute a new system and new programs contrary in many cases to the advice of senior officers. He is attempting really, to act as the commander in chief of the defence forces and is putting in programs, deciding on equipment, forcing resignations of officers and making promotions, not on the best advice of responsible officers but rather on the basis of his own amateurish theories and prejudices.

I should now like to say something about a few equipment matters. In this regard the minister's lack of knowledge of what was required when he first became minister at least, has been shown quite clearly, I think, by what has happened. I have here a couple of press clippings parts of which I should like to put on record.

The first clipping is from the Toronto Globe and Mail of April 14, 1962 and it is an account of a speech the minister made. This is what the minister stated at that time:

> The federal government's proposal to purchase three submarines and eight frigates is a "complete and utter waste of $27,000,000—

Where that $27 million figure came from I do not know but I assume it is the cost of one frigate. The article continues:

> —that won't be able to supply one dollar's worth of protection from Russian atomic submarines," Paul Hellyer said last night.

The second clipping I have is from the Toronto Globe and Mail of May 10, 1962, and is an account of a speech made by the minister in Vancouver. He is reported as having said:

> What good are destroyer escorts and frigates against a nuclear sub they can't find five miles deep in the ocean.

The minister apparently knew so little about these things that he thought submarines were capable of penetrating five miles deep in the ocean whereas their limit is a few hundred feet. These are statements made by the minister not too long before he became the Minister of National Defence and they indicate his state of knowledge at that time.

In spite of that lack of knowledge the minister plunged ahead into all these new programs. He cancelled the general purpose frigate program which was well under way. Then in the course of time he found that if the navy was to be supplied with ships at all and keep up its strength some program along the same lines was required, so he revived the program. The same ships are being built with exactly the same hulls based on the plans that were produced at the time I was minister. Of course he now gives them a different name, helicopter destroyers or something along that line. He is only going to have four built instead of eight as originally planned.

So far as the Oberon submarines are concerned, the minister in his statement last night boasted about having obtained the first of these submarines and talked about how important this acquisition would be to the Canadian navy. I think that is an indication of how the minister has worked and the inadequacy of the knowledge he had before in this regard. He must have learned a great deal in the past few years because he has now gone ahead with the Oberon program and has reinstituted the general purpose frigate program, although on a reduced scale. His education in this regard has been expensive for the country. He has probably had the most expensive education of anybody in Canada.

In relation to the new ships which are being built, the general purpose frigate or helicopter destroyer, if the minister wishes to call it that—

The Chairman: Order, please. I apologize for interrupting the hon. member but his allotted time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

The Chairman: Does the committee give unanimous consent to the hon. member to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Harkness: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I will take only a very few more minutes. These new ships were to be powered by steam but I understand now that they are to be powered by gas turbine engines. Such an engine has not yet been designed for a ship of this size. I think the inevitable result will be all kinds of bugs and difficulties and no doubt a greatly increased cost. No one actually knows what the final result will be. I should like to know upon whose advice the decision was made to power these ships with gas turbine engines because I think this is a very doubtful proposition.

I should like to say something about R.C.A.F. equipment. The minister has been very boastful about the F-5 for which orders have now been placed. Following the evaluation of this aircraft in Viet Nam the United States Air Force has decided not to purchase any of them so it looks as though Canada will be the only country using the F-5.

I have before me some excerpts from a letter written by an R.C.A.F. officer who was fairly intimately concerned with the evaluation of aircraft, including the F-5. I should like to put these statements on record to give some idea of the opinion of the R.C.A.F. regarding this aircraft. This letter states:

A second comment is on the statement of the F-5. It is not only considerably inferior to the other aircraft of its comparative size and performance, but also was the only one of the three aircraft evaluated by the integrated services, i.e., A-7, A-4, F-5, which was rejected as being unsuitable. The other two were considered to be acceptable, and were considerably more effective.

The other point which has been overlooked is that the F-5 is the only aircraft of the three which is not carrier compatible. The result of course being that there is no way now for the mobile command to achieve mobility in its fighter deployment since the F-5 cannot provide any protection to the command when it moves overseas, since the aircraft has not the range or navigation facilities to protect the force while underway. In addition of course the statement that the F-5 has an outstanding record in Viet Nam is nonsense. To date, unless there has been a recent change in policy, the F-5 has only been used in South Viet Nam in local short range sorties against rifle and small arms fire from ground forces. It not only does not have the range to operate in North Viet Nam but also has such a poor weapon load that it is uneconomical to operate. The minister's remark about Canadian modifications is partly true. Mainly so because without the improvements proposed by Canada, the aircraft is virtually useless. The F-5 was designed and built as a cheap high altitude interceptor, and to modify it for a low altitude strike aircraft, virtually destroys its worth. It is interesting to note that the small A-4 is flying over 80 per cent of the missions in Viet Nam and the U.S.N. is so pleased with its performance that it will be in service until 1973. Also of course the A-7 is its replacement and is being purchased by the U.S.N. and U.S.A.F.

Both the A-7 and A-4 as stated were selected by the Canadian forces over the F-5. Costs were of little significance when performance and cost effectiveness was applied. To modify the F-5 now of course to make it effective has escalated the costs considerably.

That is the opinion of a member of the R.C.A.F. In addition to that statement we have a considerable amount of evidence from Aviation Week and various other United States journals regarding the performance or lack of performance and the disabilities of this aircraft. The experience in Viet Nam showed, as indicated in Aviation Week, that the take-off roll, in other words, the amount of runway required for this aircraft to take off, was excessive. It is therefore unsuitable for the role the minister envisages for it.

• (12:40 p.m.)

This is his statement in that regard:

Take-off roll of the MAP F-5 is felt to be too long to permit operation from short fields with a large combat load for close air support. A typical 6,000-feet or greater take-off roll is longer than a great many short fields. To clear an obstacle at the end of the runway, additional field length would be required.

In addition it was found that a well improved runway was required because the bomb load and the spare centre tank necessary to provide enough gasoline to give it any range at all were so close to the ground that if there was not a completely smooth runway there was the danger of the bomb load and the spare tank being knocked off the aircraft in its attempt to take off.

In addition, Mr. Chairman, the range of the aircraft is very short, only 120 nautical miles. This does not give it sufficient range to carry out effectively the close support and strike role which the minister has been saying it is ideally adapted to perform. With regard to the simulator which had been ordered for this aircraft there is a rather peculiar situation. I believe one of my colleagues will deal with this matter in more detail However, just last Tuesday an article appeared in the Ottawa Citizen headed "Hellyer Denies He Ordered $50,000 Study Of Jet Plane". In this article Mr. John Walker dealt with an interview he had with the minister in which the minister said, "We never ordered the simulator". This reporter then interviewed the Minister of Industry who said, "Well, of course we would never have entered into a contract if it had not been ordered". So the minister is apparently in the position of not even knowing what was decided in this regard and then attempts to brush the matter aside by saying this plane is so good that you do not need a simulator for it.

Mr. Hellyer: That is right.

Mr. Harkness: Anyone with any experience in these matters knows that a simulator is absolutely essential to save money and time in training pilots, to save lives and to make any training program really effective and economic. This, of course, will be the only combat plane the R.C.A.F. has now or has had in the past for which there has not been a training simulator. The statement the minister now makes that it is not needed just does not stand up on the basis of all the experience in this regard. I think that undoubtedly the real reason the simulator is not being bought is that stated in an article which appeared in the Globe and Mail:

> But other sources said the cancellation was ordered soon after the U.S. Defence Department decided to purchase the U.S. . . . A-7 attack plane for the U.S. Air Force and not the American Northrop F-5 Freedom Fighter.

In other words, Mr. Chairman, with the Americans deciding not to order this plane there was not going to be sufficient sale and use for a simulator to justify what the cost would be for Canada alone, in the minister's opinion at least. One other aircraft on which I think we should receive more information is the Buffalo. It is a very good aircraft for its purpose but I think the costs given by the minister so far cover only the airframe. I should like to know the cost of the aircraft completely equipped because I think it is considerably more than we have been led to believe.

There has also been talk of the proposal, about which I have asked one or two questions in the house, to secure small, eight passenger French jets. I should like to know what R.C.A.F. requirements there are for these jets. There might be a requirement for two or at the most three, I believe, but the story given out that these are going to replace the present Cosmopolitans just does not stand up and does not make sense. The Cosmopolitan has a considerable carrying capacity with a side-door loading facility. It can carry 40 men. It therefore provides a considerable amount of transport capability to the R.C.A.F. These small planes which carry eight men would not meet that need in any way whatever.

As I say, Mr. Chairman, there might be a case for two or at the most three of these aircraft but in my opinion it would be very much better if we had at least two jet planes somewhat comparable to the Comets we had in the R.C.A.F. and which proved to be extremely useful indeed. I think this is one of the present deficiencies so far as the R.C.A.F. transport component is concerned, namely, the lack of jet aircraft with transport capability. The same amount of money spent on jet planes with a reasonable carrying capacity would be very much more justifiable and the money would be better spent than on any proposal for these small, French jets. I have a considerable number of other matters to raise, Mr. Chairman, but in view of the fact that I am already over my time I shall conclude at this point.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, I listened with a great deal of anticipation and interest to the statement made by the minister last night when he outlined matters and policies affecting the Department of National Defence. It is my own personal opinion that the minister in the preparation and delivery of his statement must have followed the advice of his political strategists and public relations officers to continue his policy of camouflaging the true state of affairs in the Department of National Defence with a cloak of generalities.

Listening to the Minister of National Defence I could not help but be reminded of gifts under the tree at Christmas time. They are very beautifully wrapped, with nice colourful ribbons and bows, and on the package are the words" Do not open until Christmas". The only difference between those beautifully wrapped gifts marked in this way under a Christmas tree and the statement of the minister last night is that his beautifully wrapped package on national defence policy and affairs bears the label "Do not open at any time". We are expected to accept this beautiful package, this picture, this wrapping and are not to be given the real facts, the real circumstances, the real answers and the real explanations.

• (12:50 p.m.)

The minister and his staff must have worked very closely on his statement. There is a strange but in my opinion understandable relationship between the speech the minister made last night and a recent talk delivered by one of his assistants, perhaps his chief assistant, in Montreal. I do not know how many members of the House of Commons read the Montreal Gazette. I read it every morning. I hope that once those who do read it have read the editorial page they turn to the comic page. If they do they will occasionally find most interesting information. I did yesterday. On that page, three columns away from the comic strips about Mrs. Fitzs, Mary Worth, Little Lulu, Li'l Abner and Steve Roper, there was a report of a speech made in Montreal to the Westmount Rotary Club by one whom I presume speaks with authority, Mr. William Lee, special assistant to the Minister of National Defence. According to this report on the comic page, Mr. Lee outlined the work of a committee which studied all types of conflict Canada might face. The recommendations of this committee led to far reaching changes in the defence structure. Mr. Lee, the special assistant, is a man of knowledge and has a marvellous personality, I know. In the article I find these comments:

> It was unanimously agreed that the unlikeliest type of war Canada would face would be an all-out thermonuclear conflict. The possibility of such a holocaust seems remote since it would be useless to all nations. Also in the event it should come about, Canada would play a very minor role in the conflict.
> This led defence experts to think of Canada's role in small insurrection wars, with possible escalation to Korean war proportions.
>
> We realized that we needed a very mobile and diversified armed force. Integrating our forces seemed like a good answer.

[Mr. Winch.]

You know, that is quite a statement. Mr. Lee having made that statement in Montreal to the Rotary Club, we then heard the statement by the Minister of National Defence last evening. After comparing the statement by the special assistant with the statement of the Minister of National Defence, I can only come to the conclusion that the minister is trying to go in opposite directions at the same time. That is quite a feat if he can get away with it. In religious circles it is called hell-dodging. You go to a different church every week or every month in the hope you can enter heaven.

This is exactly what the Minister of National Defence is trying to put over in the House of Commons right now. As a matter of fact, he has been doing it very successfully in the past. The Minister of National Defence has been getting away with what I call an attitude of ebullient extrovertism and doing it very successfully. However, he cannot do that in this new parliament of Canada. We want the facts; we want explanations, not generalities. It is most interesting to read what Mr. Lee had to say and then read what the minister said last night in view of a question asked of the Prime Minister on orders of the day today about negotiating our way out of a nuclear role. I take it when that happens, as was promised in the house some three sessions ago, we will renegotiate our position in NATO.

What was the answer just an hour or so ago from the Prime Minister? Our position as a nuclear power, equipped with nuclear weapons, was being renegotiated, and he said that was referred to last night in the statement by the Minister of National Defence. The minister was kind enough when he started speaking to send over to our group a copy of his speech, which he read word for word. I should like to quote from his statement, page 1418 of Hansard, as follows:

> The introduction of the dual capability for our strike attack squadrons in Europe is continuing and will be complete later this year. At that time our six squadrons in Germany will be fully operational in the non-nuclear attack role as well as in the nuclear strike role.

What happened to that promise some three sessions ago to negotiate ourselves out of the nuclear role? What was the meaning of the Prime Minister's statement in the house today that negotiations were under way, according to the minister's statement? What the minister told us last night was that he was continuing to completion the nuclear operational strike role for our squadrons in Europe and it would be completed this year. Talk about a two-faced Janus, talk about going in both directions at once. This is not only ebullient extrovertism but political effervescence. We, sir, have a right to know more than generalities. We have a right to know because it costs us at least a billion and a half dollars a year for national defence. What is the defence policy of Canada? We are entitled to know what has never yet been explained, why it is that Canada must spend hundreds of millions of dollars to make Canada a junkyard for obsolete United States equipment.

If we check back over the years, what do we find? We find that we buy that which has been declared obsolete by the United States, what is no longer used as equipment by United States forces. Spokesmen from the office of the minister and the minister himself have much to say; yet they never explain these facts. It is never explained why official spokesmen from the minister's staff and the minister himself righteously and piously say, "No nuclear war". He is calling on the taxpayers of Canada to put up hundreds of millions of dollars to acquire and maintain equipment in a war which, if he is honest in telling us what he is doing, will never come. I have said before both in this house and in the defence committee that in any outright war there is not going to be an attack by manned bombers.

We may be stupid, Mr. Chairman, in our defence policy, but anyone who is going to start a world war is not going to be stupid in his plans for such a war. The question of manned bombers coming across Canada is eyewash. The minister knows it is pure unadulterated eyewash. The next war, if it comes, will be fought with missiles. So what do we do? The United States, during the term of office not only of this minister but of the previous minister, declares that Bomarcs are obsolete, so we buy them. The United States Air Force declares Voodoos obsolete, so we throw out our chests and say we are going to give the R.C.A.F. modern equipment and we buy Voodoos.

Even if manned bombers came across Canada I imagine the pilots would know where our two Bomarc stations were. All they would have to do would be to fly 425 miles away from them in which event we could not touch them. I understand from an answer given by the minister the other day that it costs $3.5 million just to provide for personnel and the employment of dogs to protect our nuclear warhead installations for a type of war that will never take place. Surely, Mr. Chairman, the members of this House of Commons and the people of Canada are entitled to a more efficient and practical defence policy than that outlined by the minister. Surely the members of this House of Commons are entitled to something more than generalities. We are entitled to facts and to explanations.

When I speak of Canada being a high-priced junkyard for United States obsolescence I think not only of Voodoos and Bomarcs. I suggest that some questions must also be raised, as was done by the speaker before me, about the new Northrop F-5. It is not good enough for the minister to tell us what a wonderful aircraft it is and what a wonderful buy he is making. He is billing the Canadian taxpayers for $215 million. It is a new piece of equipment. Yet on January 24 of this year the President of the United States in his message to Congress said that the Northrop F-5 would not be on their schedule. He stated the U.S. air force would procure more McDonnell F-4's and the Ling-Tempco-Vought A-7's, the two aircraft which were rejected by the Minister of National Defence when he was considering the purchase of planes for Canada.

I am not going to take time by repeating much of what was said by the previous speaker but, Mr. Chairman, I always insist on being completely honest. Let it be noted that in a report concerning the testing of the Northrop plane in Viet Nam, written by C. M. Plattner who was in Viet Nam, he opened his statement by saying that the over-all performance of the Northrop F-5 light jet fighter met or surpassed certain expectations. However, as a result of the test he pointed out certain failures. One of these failures was the tendency of the guns to jam and difficulties with the bomb release mechanism were revealed early in the testing. The range is limited with even a moderate-sized bomb load. He goes on to say:

> The F-5A in standard configuration—ordnance plus a 150-gallon centreline tank and two 50-gallon wing tip tanks—has a range that is considerably less than that of other tactical jet aircraft in the theatre . . .
> Take-off roll is excessive—

The aircraft requires a 6,000 foot runway and I understand that this type of fighter should not require more than 4,000 feet. We are entitled to know, at a time when orders are being placed, what kind of plane we are getting. It is an aircraft which is not now being bought by the United States and is one in which defects have occurred.

This reminds me, Mr. Chairman, very much of the time I had the privilege of being on an exercise with the Canadian Navy off Bermuda. Three destroyers were in line. There was a simulated attack by one aircraft and half of the guns of the three destroyers would not or could not fire.

Mr. Churchill: When was that, a year ago?

Mr. Winch: Just over a year ago. We are entitled to know whether this state of affairs has been corrected. If there had been more than one aircraft in that simulated attack all of our Canadian destroyers would have gone to the bottom because half of the guns could not or would not fire.

These are the sort of matters that the minister should be dealing with instead of generalities. We should like to help. But we cannot help when all we get from the minister and the government is camouflage, not facts, figures or explanations.

I notice that my time is running short but I do want to deal with one other matter which I know is of concern. I refer to morale. Morale is of the utmost importance. If there has been a lowering of morale among the Canadian armed forces in the last 18 months or two years, then I say, having spoken to personnel in the forces, that it is not because of the plan for integration. It is my belief that, although there may have been some questions arise from the original statement, today there is not only an acceptance but an endorsation of the policy of integration. If morale has fallen it is because the minister and his department do not back up their statements. Last night the minister said that our Canadian armed forces are a professional group, and that is why they are of such high quality and have such high standards. I agree 100 per cent with that.

• (1:10 p.m.)

I remember, sir, that when our defence committee was visiting armed forces bases in Europe we were guests at a U.S. base. At the official luncheon I sat between two top-brass United States officers and they told me how much they admired the Canadian men and how much better Canadian men were than their own. I asked them why they said that and they replied, "Because your men are professionals. They are not conscripted. They are not drafted. They are not waiting to get out in two or three years. It is their life and their profession. Therefore they have a different attitude and a different morale." I agree with that.

Does the minister follow through with the suggestion that these men are professionals, that service is a career and that they should be treated on that basis? The answer is no, Mr. Chairman. Last fall, when I as one of half a dozen attended a naval exercise off Bermuda, I drew as my lot the captain's suite on the Bonaventure as my place to stay. That was quite a week. However, I did not just stay in the captain's suite. I went through the entire ship. I can tell you that there is one hell of a difference between the captain's suite and the quarters of the other 1,000 men, many of whom work and sleep in a temperature of over 100 degrees. I understand that the Bonaventure is going in for a refit this year. I hope that we are doing something about the accommodation of the O.R.'s, the other ranks, because they are the backbone of every service.

I hope the minister is noting that they are professionals. We spend two, three or four years training technicians. Why do you not give them the remuneration they deserve as they progress and achieve experience? Any apprentice in the construction industry starts at 60 per cent of the journeyman's wage and gets an increase every year or every six months. Why not do that with the men of the armed forces?

On that trip some officers said to me, "We are not too badly treated but give some consideration to the men in the navy. Many are married. They have to leave home and, whether you like it or not, when the male member of the family is away other work and other expenses fall on the wife." They said to me, "Why not give these men an away from the shore allowance, because we travel the world? We are the ambassadors of Canada." The officers I spoke to said, "Are we to be allowed anything for being ambassadors of Canada? Unless we are cheapskates we have to return receptions and so on."

The answer is, "No, you are not allowed anything". Why do you not do something—

Mr. Hellyer: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. Winch: It takes years to train our technicians, but they only have to sign on for a period of service of three, four or five years. The minister will remember that I raised with him in the defence committee 18 months ago the subject of having to pay thousands and thousands of dollars to train men. Why does he not give a bonus on re-enlistment? I spoke to him about that. However, what do we find in the minister's statement? That these matters are under advisement and consideration. That includes salaries and everything else. They are all under advisement and under consideration.

Mr. Churchill: They have a regular study group.

Mr. Winch: We need something better than having everything under advisement and consideration. It takes too much time. Last night was the time for the minister, when making his announcement as to what he was going to do to maintain morale and so on, to recognize that our armed forces personnel are professionals. It should be his policy to treat them as professionals and to keep them in the service. But no, we did not get that. Instead we got the usual platitudinous statement—"It is all under consideration and under advisement". We got double barreled statements going in two directions at the same time such as nuclear and non-nuclear and negotiating out and not negotiating out because we are proud to announce that we shall have completed our nuclear dual role at the end of this year in Europe. There was no answer at all as to the cost of obsolete weapons. There was no explanation why we spend $3,500,000 a year to maintain the warhead dumps for our Bomarcs, our Voodoos, and our rockets for the Honest John with the brigade in Europe.

I appreciate very much that no one has called me to order. I appreciate that others wish to speak, but I did want to outline defence policy broadly and make a few general remarks. May I say this that I regretted very much the way the minister concluded his remarks last night. His conclusion dealt with the defence committee. We appreciate his kind words but I am afraid I have a suspicious mind and I think my suspicions are correct.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted for his speech has expired unless hon. member has unanimous consent to continue.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it unanimously agreed that the hon. member may continue his speech?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Winch: I will not take more than a minute, and I appreciate the courtesy extended to me. I think I said I have a suspicious mind and I think my suspicions are correct. The defence committee of the House of Commons is now to meet as a standing committee. I think that the minister was giving us a great deal of soft soap in the anticipatory statement he made that when we meet as a committee for the third time we will be satisfied with generalities and the odd explanation and so on. I have had the opportunity of being a member of that committee since it was appointed and prior to that I was a member of the special committee appointed a few years ago to examine the accounts of the department. Mr. Chairman, through you to the minister I say that the defence committee is an all party committee. Having sat on it I know that it is prepared to be a non-political committee. I take pride in the fact that it has been a non-political committee. If the minister really means what he says about this committee, then he is going to have to change his strategy, philosophy and approach.

I do not think I have missed more than two or three meetings of that committee in two years. The minister does not ask the advice of the members of that committee. He does not take us into his confidence, explain his problems and seek advice. Nine times out of ten on that committee we are faced with a fait accompli from the minister and we are told what is being done. We are not asked for our advice as to what we think should be done.

Admittedly in the final analysis the responsibility must be that of the minister and the government. But let him show a little more decency toward the committee. Use a little more honesty when dealing with this committee. Do not present it with faits accomplis. Take the committee into your confidence and get the viewpoint of the members of the house who are members of the committee and who are interested in national defence, interested in defence policy, interested in seeing that we make our best contribution to world peace and that we get the best return for every cent of the Canadian dollars acquired by the department. I ask the minister sincerely and conscientiously to think this over. I am certain I am speaking for all members of the committee. Treat the members right and they will respond by treating you right.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Chairman, I have had an opportunity to look over the speech the minister made last night and I must say that in the two years since he laid the White Paper on defence before this house a lot has been done in the department and a great many changes have been made. I know that at the time these proposals were announced there was a good deal of anxiety. Many people wondered how these measures would turn out. All in all, the minister seems to have handled the situation well. With regard to the integration of the armed forces in particular, I believe the hon. gentleman and his advisers should be congratulated. This was a touchy and difficult subject because the action to be taken required changes in the status quo and in the mentality in various sectors of the armed forces which had been built up over many years. I believe the minister handled this well bearing in mind the over-all state of morale in the armed forces. We must remember that these moves cut out a great deal of unnecessary expenditure of the texpayers' money.

A year ago I spoke on this subject when the minister's estimates were before us and I am glad to see that since then the minister has taken account of the importance of providing the Canadian armed forces with equipment which is reasonably convenient for their use. At that time we asked that our armed forces should be mobile, highly versatile and efficient so as to be able to cope with any local situation in which they might be called upon to act. I do not agree that we should always run all over the world to take part in operations of a military type whenever we are asked to do so and to send forces abroad with our eyes closed. Some criticism has been directed against the minister and the government because of the initiative shown in the past in this field. I am thinking, now, of Cyprus in particular. Sometimes, of course, these interventions are needed. But I hope the government will always act in such cases in the interests of Canada and not on the orders or say so of our neighbour to the south. I recognize that in this field they are an extremely powerful nation. We are just little dots beside them but we have a job to do and I think we can do it.

It is not my belief that we should try to compete with the other nations of the world in a nuclear race. We would be stupid if we were to try to win the race to the moon. We would be just as stupid if we tried to win the race for nuclear arms. When the hon. member for Vancouver East spoke of the Voodoos we had purchased I was inclined to agree with him. Practically 100 per cent of such purchases consisted of leftovers for which the United States could find no further use. What do we suppose we can do with obsolete equipment? If we do not possess the means to get the best equipment, then I think we have to follow another corridor, to pursue another goal.

We belong to NATO and to NORAD. I have been on NATO trips and have discussed these questions with members of the parliaments of other countries. I think the minister was with us one year. There was one Canadian parliamentarian who got up and told the members of one of the committees to stop looking back and arguing as they had been doing. They had been arguing for eight years about the same point. They were still doing it and nothing had been accomplished. They always kept saying: we do not have all the money we need; contributions are not enough to realize our plans.

• (1:30 p.m.)

I know this. But let us be careful not to follow in the footsteps of Turkey, for example. In Turkey one can walk through the ménages militaires—armories, we call them—and see the history of Turkey written on the walls. Account is taken of all the wars they have had for a thousand years. They are proud of that. A visitor can go through these armouries and find the history of Turkey there. I believe that ever since that country has been a nation they have been fighting. But today they are poor as church mice. If that country had spent 10 per cent of its national defence budget on fighting poverty in their country they would today have a country which would attract tourists from all over the world. That is one side of the story. When they have nobody to fight they fight among themselves. It is all right to be able to defend oneself. That is a moral obligation of the government, but it is also its moral obligation not to go beyond its means and the means of the Canadian people. We have other ways in which we can help maintain peace in the world. The greatest example of this was when Pope Paul VI went to the United Nations not so long ago. We have a defence minister by the name of Paul. If he would just follow the other Paul's footsteps sometimes at least, I think I would agree with him.

The thing is that we do not have in this country the means and the money to build up our forces' equipment as is done by our neighbour to the south, by England, by the Soviet Union, or by France for that matter. But we have other means France has not got, that England has not got and that the U.S.A. possibly has not got. We can produce in this country goods for any nation in the world.

Today we are trying to fight communist ideas with nuclear arms. We are taking nuclear positions and adopting every kind of defence we can imagine to prevent the Soviet Union from invading democratic countries. Let me tell you, Mr. Chairman, and through you the minister, that you will not defeat communism with arms, with bombs or with any kind of nuclear warfare. You will not and you know it, sir.

Today Latin America is in a very shaky situation. Give it another ten years and the fighting will not be in Viet Nam; it will be in Latin America. Thousands of people are dying from starvation there every day, but what do we do about it? We buy Voodoos and we buy Bomarcs. If the Canadian government and the Canadian people would help these underdeveloped nations, there would be much less chance of communist infiltration in these countries and we would not have to be so afraid and be on the defence so much. Possibly if we had helped Viet Nam when there was yet time to help it we would not be facing the situation we are facing today. We can help other countries by first giving their people something to eat. By that means we will help their morale.

The two great ideas that prevail in the world today are the democratic way of life and what we call the eastern block or communist way of life. It is up to us to prove that the democratic way is better but not by means of warfare or nuclear arms. We should not try to defend it after it is too late, but rather by proving beforehand that we can do something with it. One of the things we can do is not to let other nations starve.

We sit at home in the midst of our own wealth and say that everything is all right, but we forget that our neighbours do not enjoy the same kind of comforts that we do. Now is the time to help them. There is an old saying that an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure, which applies in this situation as much as anywhere else.

It is O.K. for Canada to have a defence role. We need national defence. We need forces with conventional arms, the best that can be got because we do not have the means to acquire other kinds. With these we can face local situations and on occasion help outside our own boundaries, but we should not try to compete in the world race for nuclear arms.

In 1962 and 1963 members of the government made certain statements concerning nuclear arms, but if you compare those statements with their stand today you will see that what they said more than three years ago was not quite the truth. At that time it was done to win an election. Today it is done to satisfy Washington. That is the difference. They change their story according to whom they are addressing. When you want votes you work for votes. When you want protection you have to work for protection.

The hon. member who spoke before me was right in saying that the government should give more information and should listen to recommendations. We do not just criticize the minister. He is not alone in this regard. He is responsible for the department but he is not responsible for all the government's policies.

I know the stand which members of the Liberal party took in 1962 when they were on this side of the house. I know the criticisms they made. Oh boy, sometimes it was not pretty, but what surprised me was that when they went across to the other side of the chamber they did exactly the opposite. That surprised the Canadian people also. That, Mr. Chairman, is done. There is nothing much we can do about it but we can try to prevent similar situations and further dealings of that sort.

I will be a proud man in this chamber the day we stop taking direct orders from Washington. I do not mind our receiving advice from Washington but I would appreciate the house being told about it. We say this house is the supreme institution in Canada. That may be true in theory but in practice I wonder whether it is so. So long as we have the government across the way with the attitude it has, especially with respect to national defence, you will not make me believe that we make the decisions in this house.

I would not be surprised if there were a direct telephone line between the two defence departments in Ottawa and Washington. It would be cheaper that way because they are always communicating. Regardless of what the United States may do they want us to defend their actions. Right now they have put their foot in the soup and have burned it. Let them take it out themselves. We have something else to do. I have suggested to the minister that we have a job to do in other underdeveloped countries. The only way we can maintain peace is to try to work for peace. The only way you will ever keep a man out of a boxing ring is by not training him to box. If you keep on training him to be a boxer he will end up getting into the ring.

• (1:40 p.m.)

Let us have conventional arms and armed forces with great mobility and efficiency to be used to help in case of floods, conflagrations and other kinds of emergencies. In addition, let us do what we can to help underdeveloped countries instead of waiting for two or three years until a crisis occurs and then helping to defend them. Who will help to defend them in that event? It will be the Canadian youngsters of today. The minister said in his statement last night that the officers of world war II are now leaving the armed forces because they have put in their service and completed their jobs. We have to replace them and who is going to replace them? I say again that these people will be replaced by the young men of Canada. At this time many youngsters join the armed forces of their own choice. Let them be trained as professionals because that is their wish.

I think it is also our job at this time to help the underdeveloped countries that need food, clothing, medicine and doctors. Surely we are able to give them these things and surely we should give them these things to the best of our means. Countries like France are not able to contribute nearly as much because they have to buy a great deal of their foodstuffs elsewhere. By following this course I think we would be taking a great step toward maintaining peace in the world. This would certainly be a more beneficial policy than the policy we are now following of buying Voodoos, Bomarcs and the like in an effort to compete with other nations of the world in the arms race now taking place. We cannot compete with other countries so far as nuclear arms are concerned. We have not got the means. We do have the means, perhaps more than any other nation, to help the underdeveloped countries which are sliding toward the communist bloc. That is how communism gains ground in these countries. The people are hungry, they have empty stomachs and they suffer great misery. The communists move in and feed them and then we have to go in to defend them. Let us get out of our lethargic state, our dormant state.

[Mr. Langlois (Mégantic).]

Let us shake the sand out of our eyes and assist these countries in a proper manner.

I am glad that the government has finally decided after 25 years to declare war on poverty in Canada. Let us now take the same attitude and declare war on poverty in other countries which need such a program even more than we do. I think we would make better friends and better alliances if we would assist these countries which do not know where to turn for assistance. Surely we could make better friends in this way than by trying to defend them with our peashooters when a conflict occurs. That is about all we can do when the situation has reached that stage.

I am sure that if the government and the minister took the kind of stand I suggest they would have the support of every citizen in Canada. If they continue the policies started two or three years ago they will not obtain the support of a great many people of this nation, and they can be sure of that.

I want to refer to the policies followed by the government regarding changes in equipment. They come here and ask for large sums of money for, as they say, minor changes in existing equipment. I have found out that many of these so-called changes costing millions of dollars have in effect been replacements by new kinds of equipment rather than modifications of existing equipment. As an example, they will purchase a completely new type of aircraft use the same letters for it as were used on the old type with the addition of perhaps one extra letter. They have done this to camouflage the use of these large sums of money. I do not like that type of policy because it is dishonest. If they intend to purchase new equipment, why do they not say so rather than say they are making modifications? I think the minister and the government should take this suggestion into consideration. I hope in future he will come into the house and say that they have purchased new equipment instead of saying they need money for changes.

In concluding, Mr. Chairman, I should like to urge the minister and his colleagues again to move quickly to help the underdeveloped countries in the world to the greatest extent our means will allow before we are called upon to defend them, as has been the case in the past. I think that by the policy I have suggested we can maintain to a greater extent the peace of the world.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, in speaking during this debate on the estimates for the current year in relation to defence I realize that we are speaking about money that for the most part is already spent. We are looking forward to next year's estimates which we hope will be before the house before too long. At that time we will be dealing with the expenditures for the 1966-67 fiscal year. In view of that I will attempt to keep my remarks as short and to the point as possible.

I do not speak in this debate with any claim of being an authority on defence but I do speak as a citizen who is interested in the value we are getting for $1½ billion in expenditures of tax money and whether or not we in Canada are fulfilling our role in relation to defence responsibilities. After all, $1½ billion is a lot of money. If that amount were used in other areas for the development of our own economy or for our war on poverty, it could make a tremendous impact on the nation. I trust that the Minister of National Defence and his department are careful in their consideration and determination of Canada's role in relation to defence and military expenditures.

What are we attempting to do as a nation in this particular area and what is it that we are actually hoping to do? Is our defence policy completely integrated with our external affairs policy? Are these two policies working together in co-ordination toward the same objective and are they in line with our trade policy? Unless they are I believe we stand in constant danger of not fulfilling the objectives of our role and actually wasting money that could be better used in other ways.

I should like to impress upon the minister and his department that attention must be paid to our own responsibilities when determining our objectives. We must accomplish something practical in relation not only to our own responsibilities but the responsibilities of our neighbours in the area of defence.

• (1:50 p.m.)

Canada stands in a very peculiar position in this regard. No other country stands in quite the same position. This is because we occupy the northern part of a continent, and by reason of our tremendous barren areas in the north and our vast coast line it is impossible for us to institute a defence program that would adequately protect the country in the event of attack from outside. Because of our geographical position it is inevitable and reasonable that we integrate our defence pattern with that of the United States as it relates to this continent. I am speaking strictly in terms of defence.

This does not mean, nor should it mean, that we just have to follow along and dot the "i's" and cross the "t's" of the handwriting that American defence policy may lay out before us. But certainly we should not be so foolish as to think we can on our own maintain any responsible and effective national defence program without it being thoroughly integrated with that of the United States.

In this regard, Mr. Chairman, I think it is reasonable to assume that we could completely discard our whole defence program knowing that the United States would defend our shores more quickly perhaps than they would their own simply because of our geographical position. All this must therefore be part of the outworking of any defence policy that we have.

I think the minister and his department must be commended for what they have done toward the integration of our forces. I travel outside this country occasionally and meet people who are involved in the defence programs of other countries. I think these people look to Canada with a certain amount of envy and respect for carrying into effect what they have fought and talked about for years now. I believe there is no doubt at all that the progress achieved toward the integrating of our forces, particularly as this policy applies to smaller nations, is a pattern that will be copied by many of these countries. Therefore I believe a great deal of credit is due to the minister and those who work with him for bringing about this integration.

I think the minister and his officials have won phase one in the program of the integration of our forces. They have now taken the lead that makes completion of integration inevitable; it is part of an accepted pattern. On the other hand, I am concerned that they do not lose out on phase two, the actual implementation of those policies which have now been accepted and laid out as being the pattern for integration. Phase two of this program should make integration an actual and practical reality.

In my opinion the command organization that has been laid out on paper and the fact that we are now into the period where this is actually being carried out are important to he defence program. I have heard reports from service personnel and have also observed what is happening to their morale. When you see the confusion that exists at the present time with regard to the allocation of certain defence programs and bases within the various command structures of the new defence organization, one realizes the minister could well lose that which he has gained unless the department is efficient and effective in implementing these policies within the new organization and do it quickly.

I am particularly concerned with this program as it relates to the new designation of various military bases in the country and the various aspects of the command structure into which they will fit. I can cite no better example than the heretofore air force base adjacent to my own home city. Here we have one of the better equipped and developed post-war air bases in the country and for a full two years now, because of the lack of a specific policy in the use of this base, nothing very much has been done about determining its role.

A waste of tax dollars is involved here because it is an accepted fact that this base is going to be part of the new training command and civilian and basic maintenance personnel are being retained. But unless the base is being used for a definite role it is a waste of money. I agree that time is a prerequisite in determining just how this or other bases will fit into the program. Nevertheless I believe there is need for urgent action in this respect. We understand that training command, for example, assumed authority only at the first of this year, which is only a few weeks ago, but I believe the Canadian people and the personnel of the armed forces are expecting action in this regard and quickly.

Action is expected not only in respect of the specific commands within the new organization but the correlation and integration of these commands as they make use of the various bases necessary for any defence organization in the country. I noted the remarks of the minister with regard to the Canadian Services College and correlating the various aspects of training into one program. This is necessary and it is good that it is taking place. But it is just one small area of many with regard to which similar quick action will have to be taken.

Another point about which I am concerned in the over-all picture relates to the strength of our armed forces and the recruiting programs being carried out. It has to do with the need for urgency in the development of phase two of the program of integration, because as the morale of our forces has suffered under the integration program and its prospective application to them there has been a falling off of personnel and recruiting. So much in fact is this so that just one year ago when we were debating the estimates we were talking about pilots in the air force who were being laid off prior to their normal retirement time because they were not necessary.

The position today is that we do not have enough pilots in the air force. We are short of pilots as we are short of technical people and personnel for many other areas within the armed forces. This all points up the need for quick action in the implementation of what I have called, for want of a better name, phase two of the program of integration.

There are one or two points I should like to raise with regard to peace keeping. This question also refers back to policy. Where are we going, what are we trying to do, how long are we going to be carrying on our peace keeping responsibilities in Cyprus and is this expense really justified? It is a heavy expense because Canada is paying her own way in setting a good example to the world. But are we effective in what we are doing or just drifting into a passive situation in which the United Nations and others responsible for the political side are letting the matter drift because Canada and a few other nations are willing to come along and do more than their share in maintaining a peace keeping operation?

Here again, I think, is an area where external affairs and defence must have the very closest correlation so far as policy is concerned. I have mentioned Cyprus. What about the 1,000 personnel we have for years contributed to the United Nations emergency force in the Middle East? We hear reports that our troops over there lack a sense of purpose, that things are stagnating, that they really feel they are not making any worthwhile contribution. Is this just because on the political side matters are being allowed to drift without there being any real effort to reach a solution and bring an end to this particular situation?

We are spending a great deal of money in this area and Canada is willing to spend money if it helps to maintain world peace. Most of us in this house are willing to support such programs, but I think we should be very careful not to be caught in a trap whereby we are doing something that really is not necessary and which we never intended to do in the first place. We need direction in this regard and we need it urgently.

• (2:00 p.m.)

I should like to refer also to the Zambian oil lift. We were good fellows and immediately sent some of our Hercules aircraft to help transport oil to Zambia. How long is this airlift going to continue? Is it effective? Are the reports that Zambia is allowing oil supplies to go into Rhodesia true? Are we just wasting the taxpayers' money without really accomplishing anything? This is the political side of questions which relate to defence policy and the defence budget. We are concerned that there should be some useful purpose for these programs.

I think mention should be made at this point of our training program for some nations in Africa, specifically Ghana and Tanzania, with relation to the current year's budget. Here is an area where our defence policy again combines with external affairs policy and we can make a tremendous contribution. I have seen personally what some of our men are doing out there and it causes one to be proud of the way Canadians fit into such a picture, create good will and make a fine contribution. I feel that this boosts morale. I think we should have a similar pattern of purpose and definition of objectives with regard to other areas of our defence program. Then we could give up just flailing our arms in the wind and accomplishing nothing worth while.

What about the whole NATO program? Has Europe today reached the point where the military objectives of NATO are antiquated? Is it not reasonable to assume that with the European countries having progressed politically and economically as they have and with the new pattern of defence programs as well as the increasing mobility of defence forces it is no longer necessary to spend millions of dollars in order to keep forces in Europe? I am not suggesting for one moment that we should shirk our responsibility to NATO. Here again, there is the possibility we are just drifting along and spending money without really accomplishing anything and at the same time wasting tax dollars.

I think we all agree that the new role of NATO relates more to the economic side than it does to defence. Could not some of our forces be brought home? Could they not fulfil any obligation in the event of a crisis in Europe from this side of the Atlantic as well as they could from that side? I should like to hear more about this. The minister really has not said anything about it. This is one of the major parts of our over-all defence expenditure and I think we should hear more about it.

I believe that one of the weak spots of the defence department is its lack of public relations. They never inform members of this house or the public about what is happening. For example, there is the case of the F-5 fighter which is apparently being adopted by the defence department. According to news stories across the country this fighter has been rejected by the United States. The general public opinion, as near as I can determine, is that the purchase of this plane is a waste of money. If the department were more concerned about issuing constructive information concerning this plane, perhaps there would be a different opinion.

When I was going through some newspaper clippings I was amazed to find that nine allied air forces have purchased the same airplane. If they have done this there may be some advantage to it about which the public and the defence committee are not aware. According to one of these reports which appeared in December of last year, nine allied air forces have ordered some 700 F-5's. This is the same plane that we know as the CF-5. These countries are Canada, China, Greece, Iran, Korea, Norway, the Philippines, Spain and Turkey. This is the kind of information I think we should have and it is the responsibility of the defence department to see that we get it. Certainly the public have to have such information if the defence department expects the taxpayer to make his contribution to defence expenditures willingly.

These criticisms do not apply only to aircraft. We have heard criticisms in the house about the Bomarc missile. We cannot blame the present government for the fact that Bomarcs are in Canada. This was part of the defence policy crisis three years ago. Is it true that United States defence forces have discarded the Bomarc? Are they phasing it out and using it temporarily until something else takes its place? I should like an answer from the minister. If the Bomarc has no worth then it should be discarded. If it has we should be given this kind of information because it is the kind of information the country needs. I suggest the minister make sure this is done. After all, the original purpose of the defence committee was to secure such information. I am sure many of us here recall vividly the situation three years ago so far as defence policy was concerned. We did not know what defence policy was. We had no idea and neither did the public, any more than the government did at that time, actually what our purposes and objectives were. After the election the Minister of National Defence wisely picked up the challenge, and I do not think I am amiss in saying that the recommendation for a Defence Committee first came from the members of this party.

As I say, after the election the suggestion was implemented and a Defence Committee established. This committee gave members a background of reliable, authentic information for their guidance as well as the advice of specialists who devote their time and energy to this field. It is not enough for the members of such a committee to go on occasional trips and then think about what would be a good defence policy. We want to carry on with a non-partisan attitude toward defence. That is what I think we in Canada should have. We are not a big enough country to waste our energies and our dollars pursuing some objective about which we may not know anything and which may not have any useful purpose.

There are many aspects of the defence picture which we should discuss at this time. However, we want to get on with the estimates as quickly as possible. I leave these suggestions with the minister and hope that before we reach a discussion of his next year's estimates he will endeavour to clear up some of these points which I believe are not just being raised by the members of this house but by the people of Canada. We would like to have some information.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, I do not suppose there is any riding in the whole of Canada to which the military program is of more signifiance than it is to the riding I share with my colleague and particularly to the cities of Halifax and Dartmouth. This is so for two reasons. One is entirely economic since a large proportion of our citizens are members of the armed forces and the second is a military consideration. The area still bears the scars of its contributions to two world wars. We of the Halifax area, I may say frankly, are concerned about the policies of the present government and the policies of the Department of National Defence.

We listened to the minister last night exuding a great deal of self-satisfaction. One could almost hear him say, this is the best of all possible worlds and that he, as Minister of National Defence, had provided the best of all possible policies to look after this best of all possible worlds.

[Mr. Thompson.]

This recalls, Mr. Chairman, the famous remarks of the philosopher Pangloss in Voltaire's "Candide", who always looked upon everything with a very sunny disposition. This philosopher went forth in the world and at one point he had an ear hacked off in an encounter and in another place he had an eye poked out. Though saying that this was the best of all possible worlds these lamentable things happened to him. His teeth were lost in yet another encounter and an arm hewed off as well. Still he insisted that this was the best of all possible worlds. Finally I believe half of his rump was hacked off in yet another war and at that point he felt inclined to change his tune and retreat to his garden. I can only say, in comparing the Minister of National Defence with this philosopher, that the Minister of National Defence has more physical staying power than that philosopher and will still insist that this is the best of all possible worlds.

Yet, sir, the former minister of national defence, in a remarkably fine contribution last night, shot down this contention very quickly. He pointed out that there was a total loss of manpower of some 7,200 per year and an attrition rate of 600 personnel per month in the armed forces. He also pointed out that part of the antisubmarine might of the Canadian navy was made ineffective because ships were tied up at Halifax, Dartmouth and Esquimalt. This I can certainly vouch for.

The minister says that the effectiveness of the navy has been increased. If this is so, then under his policies he should put more ships in a mothball state. I presume that if the number able to fight effectively were cut in half, then by some curious mathematical process which the minister uses this would thereby double the effectiveness of the Royal Canadian Navy.

This obviously cannot be so and it is a matter of concern to the officers and men of the Royal Canadian Navy. It is also, I imagine, a matter of concern to the minister himself because he is faced with the herculean task of bringing manpower up to the proper level.

I am critical of the minister for what he has allowed to take place. I think I and every other hon. member in the house would want to do what we can to help him overcome the results of his own follies. We should like to see the navy brought up to proper manpower strength and those mothballed ships back in action.

How can we improve conditions? I suggest several approaches to the minister. I know that a pay increase is one of the methods of making service life more palatable and I think this is important. From talking to naval personnel I know they contrast their pay envelopes with those on "civvy" street and I think this accounts, especially in this inflationary age, for the reason that many people are leaving the navy. I believe 13,412 have retired at early stages from the services at their own request. This is not only a remarkable figure but a very frightening one as well. Jobs with more attractive pay are one method to tackle the problem of bringing personnel back to strength.

There are other methods as well. As the hon. member for Calgary North pointed out very ably last night, the minister talked of computers and of cost effectiveness. He has brought all the techniques of modern and efficient office management to his department or so he says. But he is leaving out the human factor, the attitude of men and women, the matter of morale and confidence in the leadership given.

I think the minister would go a long way toward solving his problem if somehow he could convince the officers and men in the services that he, his government and the department had an idea of just what they were going to do in the field of national defence. I think a war of ideas would be a much more profitable war for the minister to win than simply a war using more money.

Another suggestion I would make is that the minister and his department give some incentive to service people in the field of housing. We have in the Halifax-Dartmouth area several large housing schemes for the navy. Apartments have also been built by private entrepreneurs and are filled almost entirely with naval personnel. I suggest this gives service personnel no particular advantage except whatever advantage they may derive from living among their own kind. At the end of their stay in these places they have collected a massive pile of landlord's receipts but they have gained nothing more than shelter and accommodation.

What I think would be a useful idea for the department to explore, and I hope the minister and his associate will explore it, is to give some incentive to service people to own their own homes by giving them a certain sum as a down payment either initially or at the end of a definite period of living in these houses. In this event the net result would be that after 15, 20 or 25 years of service the serviceman or woman would own the home and if he or she intended to move to some other place to retire that home could be sold at a profit.

I suggest that this would provide a method of savings for service people which would amount to say $15,000 to $25,000, thus providing a substantial sum indeed when these people retire. I have mentioned this idea before and I hope the minister and his department will study it, perhaps in consultation with Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. I think it has advantages. It would give service people more of a stake in the communities in which they serve.

Two years ago I had the advantage of going to Camp Gagetown in New Brunswick where for the first time the special services battalion was engaged in an exercise. I should like to deal with this point in making some remarks on integration because I think the minister is half right and also half wrong in his approach to this matter.

As I say, I had the advantage with other newsmen of going into the field with the special services battalion made up of elements of ordnance, engineering, R.E.M.E. and the like when they were engaged upon a special operation. I thought they were very pleased to have this form of integration of the supporting services.

Therefore I think I can agree with the minister's concept of integration up to that point in that the supporting services can indeed be usefully integrated into one. It did not seem to me that the dental corps or the engineers—as we know, the engineers are a very proud race, almost a race apart—felt that they had suffered a loss of tradition by being so combined.

• (2:20 p.m.)

When it comes to what might be called the fighting arm of the services I think different considerations have to apply. I know opinion on this is somewhat one-sided one way or the other. The older people in the services, I think, rely very much on the traditions of the ships to which they have been posted or their squadrons or regiments. For younger men this may not necessarily be so. A very senior officer has told me that he would hate to be around on the day that the men of the Black Watch were told to give up their kilts because he knew that whoever gave such an order would be murdered. I suggest to the minister that in his consideration of integration and the provision of common ranks, common units and the like, that he concentrate on the supporting services first until he can be sure that they have reached the efficiency he desires before moving into the field of the fighting services.

In dealing with the problem of proper working conditions and the morale of the armed forces I should not like to omit the civilian prevailing rate and civil service employees. In the Halifax area we have a large number of prevailing rate employees who for some years have been restive about the methods under which they have been paid. I would suggest to the Associate Minister of National Defence, since I believe this is largely his field, that he give considerable thought to the form of collective bargaining which I understand will be introduced some time later this session. I see that the Associate Minister assents so I take it that we shall tackle this later.

May I suggest to the Associate Minister that it be a bona fide, collective bargaining procedure in which considerable authority is given to those who bargain for the government, the people who sit across the table, to deal honestly and effectively with the demands presented to them. This should be done instead of having them appear at collective bargaining procedures in which they are simply messengers sent in this case by the Department of National Defence or in other cases by other government departments. If this assurance can be given when collective bargaining arrangements are brought in, I think that the Minister of National Defence and the Associate Minister of National Defence will have done a real service to the prevailing rate employees not only in the Halifax area but in other areas as well. The ministers are undoubtedly aware that from time to time protests have arisen about this matter and that it has been hard to satisfy employees that they are getting their just desserts.

Finally, sir, I should like to make the point that the people of my area, and I imagine people in other areas of Canada, are very concerned about the removal of the mine sweeping squadron. To us that is an almost incomprehensible act. We do know that the Russian navy has submarines capable of laying mines. One need only to look at the globe to see that off the western coast of Norway lie sea lanes forming a gigantic arrow pointed at the east coast of Canada down which submarines can come. Yet the mine sweeping squadron has been consigned to oblivion. I do hope that the minister will make an explanation to the house later in the debate. As I understand it, this measure has been brought about strictly with a view to economy.

I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that if the worst should happen, and I presume the minister must prepare his policies assuming that the worst will happen, Halifax harbour, ports on the St. Lawrence River and all other major ports on the east and west coast will be out of action in the next world war in the first couple of hours. Our naval strength will also be out of action because if the navy cannot venture out of harbours on account of mines ships will be bottled up inside the harbours. My understanding has always been that our role in NATO is an antisubmarine role. I would think that the minister could perform a useful service if he could assure us that the mine problem is going to be met in some way. I do not think that he can give that assurance because naval officers I have talked to are completely baffled why this particular policy was adopted.

I suggest to the minister that he read Samuel Eliot Morison's history of the United States. He was an old sea dog, philosopher and historian, and he did say certain things which are true. Admiral Morison makes a very strong point, that to be a good maritime nation you have to act as a maritime nation. I suggest that by adopting a policy directed away from having a strong and effective Canadian navy Canada is forfeiting much of its right to be considered one of the world's leading maritime nations. I am afraid, sir, that the minister has adopted policies which one could consider to be of a landlubber variety.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Chairman, I have only a few remarks in extension of those by the senior member for Halifax. As the junior member I defer in most cases to his wisdom. The question of the housing of service personnel raised a moment ago by my colleague is indeed a very important one. Very pressing sociological patterns are developing not only in our area where we have a large number of service people and their families living in housing supplied by various departments of government but also right across Canada. Many of these problems have apparent and obvious reasons. Families are growing up and the question of compatibility with other service families around them must be considered. It is true that naval wives whose husbands are at sea are provided with certain comforts but they have common problems. I think, however, that far graver problems arise with the younger generation at the school level as they progress toward maturity.

We have evidence that it takes a full academic year for the children of service families to adjust properly when they reach the secondary level if they should ever leave the service community and service schools. I hasten to suggest that this is not because of the level of teaching or the qualities of the teachers or the services provided by the government. I think it is simply the effect of the social upbringing of the children which makes it very difficult for them to adjust properly because they have not had the advantage of growing up next door to a doctor's son or daughter or going to school with a mechanic's child.

Instead the pattern of the family unit is constant. The child has the same companions, the same day to day friends.

In this context I would urge the minister to consider not only a method of providing equity ownership in homes which fall in the category of service housing but to carry the thought further and give consideration to the possibility of spreading such housing at random throughout urban centres. What has been done in Halifax is a prime example of what I think might be avoided. Remember we have well over 100 suburban developments which could easily accommodate ten or fifteen units, either single or multiple dwellings. This would at once achieve two basic needs. First, it would remove service men and their families from what has been described as ghetto-type living and enable their children to grow up in a community where they can go to school and enjoy the benefits of living in the free run of society as most of us understand it and enjoy it.

The second purpose is to achieve the aim put forward by the hon. member of providing an easy and practical method of permitting the building up of equity ownership in these properties. Service people would pay a portion of their rent to help the government pass along to successive tenants the continued responsibility for a portion of the upkeep and maintenance of these properties. This is not impossible, I suggest. Indeed, it is a matter of current discussion among naval, air force and army people in the Halifax area.

My hon. friend spoke also of the removal of the minesweeping squadron from the concept of defence as we know it today. This is a matter of grave concern to those who are aware of the capabilities of other countries to lay minefields under water. These advances have left major questions in the minds of some of our senior people in the Halifax area. They are thinking aloud about this matter. Perhaps they do not have the opportunities of putting forward their thinking which are available to us in the House of Commons so I would re-emphasize what my hon. friend said on this question.

There is a third matter on which I wish to speak. I have raised it in another context and I do so again. It involves the utilization of certain military air bases by private aircraft operators and regional air carriers. The suggestion has been made in the house that the removal of Greenwood as an alternative landing site for Air Canada planes has created many difficulties. I know this to be the case. I have experienced them more than once myself. I have made the grand trip around the circuit and wound up back here in Ottawa. On another occasion I wound up in Newfoundland. I am not suggesting that private operators be allowed to use the facilities at military bases such as Chatham which are vital centres for our air defence and our support role in any defence of this continent. But I would suggest that airports such as Greenwood, Shearwater and others outside the maritime area are completely capable of accepting arrivals and departures of non-military aircraft without upsetting the routine or the readiness of the station, as I think the term is.

The efficiency of these stations would not be impaired by the occasional use of these bases without the formality of prior notification and permission. When a private flier lands at Greenwood because of a snowstorm or some other difficulty he is put in an embarrassing position by having to explain his presence though in all likelihood it has been caused by circumstances which prevented his going anywhere else to find a suitable and safe landing. I also think private fliers should be allowed to use certain landing and navigational aids which are the sole property of the Department of National Defence. On many occasions the possibility of using these navigational aids would be of advantage to operators of private aircraft and to small commercial regional operators. These privileges have been denied up to now except in special cases where prior permission has been sought and obtained.

There is one further matter which is of immediate concern because of disturbing rumours which have come to my attention. I have discounted these rumours on the basis of their not having been confirmed and I will not refer to them in this context. Instead, I would urge the minister to give consideration in the preparation of specifications for new naval vessels, as well as when repairs are being carried out, to the inclusion in those specifications of plans for an adequate air conditioning system. I have spent some time in southern waters in South American countries and I know a little of the discomfort of being in the engine room of a ship without adequate ventilation. The anxieties which manifest themselves among men forced to work constantly in conditions of extreme heat are real only to those who have experienced them. They have been the subject of medical inquiry as an oddity or phenomenon encountered among people exposed to living conditions of this type.

The urgency of this need is borne out by the complaints of many lower deck personnel on their return from southern cruises. As much as they enjoy an opportunity to go south at this time of the year, as I am sure we all would, it is not a holiday and for those who must live and work below deck most of the day it is more of a nightmare. I would again urge the associate minister and those in his department to give serious consideration to the problem of ventilation if they have not done so already.

It would be very easy to go on and get into the question of morale in the armed services which has been touched upon by other hon. members. There is little need to pursue it further except to comment generally that sometimes we complain too loudly about low morale in the services. Stemming from that, I would simply note that it is not low morale that is causing the problem in recruitment. The lack of equipment and the lack of trained personnel to man the ships we have in Halifax harbour, not taking into account the one or two out on the west coast, have already been made clear. To that plea I would simply lend the voice of the junior member for Halifax.

Morale in the navy and the other services, is not low nor is it high. Morale is somewhat confused. In spite of continuing explanations the men remain somewhat in the dark as to their own personal positions in what we used to understand were the navy and the army. They are not certain of their tenure of service. They are not certain whether a career in the armed forces is a worth-while venture. They are doubtful about promotions. The question of seniority has disappeared almost completely in the lower ranks.

[Mr. Forrestall.]

These are the things that lend support to the argument that morale in the services is low. I do not believe it is low. I believe it is just confused. Many of these people went into the service with the hope of making it their career but now they are confused and uncertain whether they have chosen well. They would like to stay on and take advantage of the training they have. They would like to continue to make the contributions they are capable of making as skilled craftsmen. But they need direction at their immediate command level. They need clarification of promotions, of continuity of service and the possibilities of promotion.

Finally, many of our problems with regard to morale stem from the fact that most people in Canada—I am sure the department is equally as guilty—think of trained servicemen as no more than a fighting arm extension of the political process. I suggest to the minister that this is 1966. A pilot flying an aircraft off the Bonaventure is not a trained fighting man and God forbid that he ever becomes one. Quite to the contrary, he is a highly skilled, well trained individual. He merits respect and the treatment that is accorded those outside the military who have achieved equal skills.

When we talk about increasing such a man's level of income we tend to think that perhaps he should get another $1,000 a year or another $1,500 a year and that this would compensate him. There are a certain number of ex-military people employed in the company with which I was once closely associated and I know they can earn in the public field of endeavour not $1,000 a year more, not $1,500 a year or $2,000 a year more but in many cases $8,000 to $15,000 a year more. We must stop thinking of these people as soldiers. They are not. They are skilled, well trained people. In most cases on the upper decks they are college graduates who when they go home in the afternoon or evening take trade journals and trade publications with them. They do not take home war manuals. They take with them those sources of information that are going to enhance and increase their understanding, knowledge and skill in their respective jobs, whether they be in electronics, aviation or captains of these ships. No matter what it is they do as most businessmen do. They spend their time keeping themselves abreast and acquainted with what is going on in their business.

With these remarks I think Halifax has now said what it can until such time as we reach the 1966-67 estimates. In most cases the money has pretty well been spent under the estimates we are discussing. I leave the minister with these three or four thoughts respecting service housing, pay, and the utilization of militairy airports by private and small commercial operators.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, I should first like to congratulate the Minister of National Defence for what I would describe as his tactical success on the narrow front on which he has no doubt concentrated considerable effort and attention. I refer to the field of public relations. Behind the smokescreen of integration he has succeeded in concealing a conservative—I use that word as a descriptive, not a condemnatory term—sterile, and unimaginative defence policy. The vital question of the role to be played by Canadian defence forces has been virtually concealed, ignored and bypassed. The Canadian defence effort today consists of doing virtually the same old things, in the same old way, at the same old level of expenditures, namely, $1½ billion a year.

It is interesting that in this age in which strategies as well as weapons become rapidly obsolete the minister's statement to the committee almost completely avoided any discussion of changing strategic concepts or any critical analysis whatsoever of Canada's plans for the future. No doubt the minister would reply that the strategic plans of Canada were contained in the White Paper on defence that was issued in March, 1964. But the White Paper itself was cryptic in regard to most of the major issues.

It does not appear that the government is even contemplating withdrawal from obsolete and even dangerous and provocative strategies. If it is, it is silent on the subject.

I think the public has been lulled by the minister and, indeed, I must say by the press, by the magic word "integration". In press releases which extol the bold new initiatives of the minister the public are induced to accept, with a sort of fatalistic resignation and complacency, the vast expenditures which we are making in defence.

• (2:50 p.m.)

These expenditures are more burdensome to the taxpayer than any other form of expenditure that we have to consider in this parliament. The Canadian public is asked to forget the vital question, namely, how much of the money spent might just as well be poured down the drain?

We have no objection to the limited integration which has been carried our so far. We do not believe, as the hon. member for Vancouver East said earlier in the debate, that this limited integration is responsible for the low morale of which the hon. member for Calgary North has spoken. But there will not be and there cannot be any effective integration of the Canadian forces until there is a much more realistic acceptance of the limited role which Canadian forces can be expected to play. This role in our view would be the maintenance of integrated mobile conventional forces in support of the peace keeping activities under the UN, upon which we should mainly concentrate, and a useful role within the alliance of which we are a part. This and this alone would enable real integration to take place. Without it integration is more of an incantation than it is, to borrow a phrase the Minister of Transport used in the debate the other day, the actual factual situation.

I do not propose to discuss the details of weapon systems or the acquisition of particular hardware, as we have learned to call it. I propose to review the role or tasks that Canadian forces are now fulfilling to indicate why I have suggested to the committee that some of these are obsolete and why some we are not yet adequately equipped to fulfil.

I assert that if we could penetrate the smokescreen of favourable publicity the defences of Canada under the present administration would be seen to be misdirected, expensive and inadequate. I hasten to say, Mr. Chairman, that this is in no way the fault of the men in the services. They have justly earned a high reputation for efficiency and effectiveness wherever they have served. We echo the tributes paid to them by the minister. The fault is the fault of political direction. The political direction of our armed services under the present administration is timid and traditional, fearful of a searching examination of Canada's place in over-all strategy and fearful above all of any radical change.

What are the main roles played by our armed services? They include, first, the maintenance of a brigade in the forward lines in West Germany armed with tactical nuclear weapons; second, the maintenance of eight squadrons of the R.C.A.F., six in West Germany assigned to a strike role and two in France in a reconnaissance role. These are now or, I think the minister told us, shortly will be equipped with both nuclear and conventional loads. The third is the role of active air defence of North America under NORAD. The fourth is a share in the antisubmarine role under the Atlantic command of NATO. The fifth is the so-called mobile command designed to provide a mobile conventional force available both as a mobile reserve in NATO and for United Nations peace keeping operations anywhere in the world.

The first role, Mr. Chairman, namely, the maintenance of a brigade of tactical nuclear weapons in Europe, is part of the outdated tactical nuclear strategy that was adopted in 1958. It has been criticized by a host of qualified military authorities. They say it is based upon a mistaken reliance on early or immediate response with tactical nuclear weapons to a full scale conventional invasion of west Europe. This role overlooks the fact that such an invasion is today unthinkable as it would almost certainly escalate into a devastating strategic nuclear holocaust. It overlooks the fact that a tactical nuclear response to some lesser eruption of violence in Europe would also create the dangers of escalation.

From the point of view of a useful Canadian contribution, it further overlooks the fact attested to by Mr. McNamara that the western allies have overwhelming superiority in such tactical nuclear weapons. It completely overlooks the fact that, as General Foulkes informed the defence committee, it was agreed by General Norstad and military authorities of NATO as long ago as 1960 that our brigade group should go into mobile reserve. General Foulkes said that such action would cause the brigade group to be reorganized as an air portable formation with an airborne element which would suit Canadian aptitude and training.

The only excuse advanced for the failure to carry out this military recommendation in 1960 is not in the realm of good military thought but is due to some alleged political reason. On the contrary, it seems to us that political reasons would dictate a thinning out and withdrawal of the massive confrontation of tactical nuclear forces in Europe and that Canada might well initiate this process.

[Mr. Brewin.]

The White Paper, despite the bold words used by the government when it promised a review of Canada's role, opts for the indefinite continuance of this role in Europe. The North Atlantic council met in Paris in December, 1965 and issued a communiqué. This is what they said:

> Force goals for the period 1966 through 1970 are being worked out, as the first of a series of steps designed to secure a closer alignment between NATO military requirements and national force plans within the agreed strategic concept of a forward defence posture. They—

I take it that means the delegates of the NATO countries.

> —accepted in principle the introduction of new procedures designed to improve the annual process of reviewing the defence efforts of member countries and agreeing upon their force contributions. These procedures, by projecting alliance force goals and country plans five years ahead each year, are designed to enhance the capacity of the alliance to adapt its defence plans to changes both in military technology and in the international situation.

What country plans are as distinct from the alliance force goals I am not sure, but I presume it means the plans of each country.

So far as I know the minister has failed to reveal whether or not Canada at this NATO council meeting accepted this five year plan, what force goals it committed itself to, whether any suggestion was made that was critical of the continued reliance on tactical nuclear response, whether the military proposal approved in 1960 for the withdrawal of the Canadian brigade to a mobile reserve was discussed or brought forward by the representative of Canada and what, if any, the current proposals are to adapt the defence plans of NATO to changes in military technology and the international situation. We in this house have a right to know what our representatives in NATO have committed themselves to or propose to commit themselves to for the next five years or if they did propose to commit themselves to anything for the next five years. We have the right to know whether or not the promise to negotiate out of this role has in fact been forgotten, or whether any steps have been taken to do so. We are told there are political reasons for maintaining the brigade group in the forward role, but the future military necessity for it, as agreed by all military authorities, is finished. We want to know what these political reasons are and have them explained to the house. The same questions are even more insistent with regard to the eight air squadrons that we maintain in Europe. These air squadrons, as the house knows, or at least those members of it who follow this subject, have the role of interdiction or striking with nuclear or conventional capacity well behind the lines of any conflict that might develop in Europe.

• (3:00 p.m.)

These tactical nuclear weapons are in theory under the control of the United States political administration but it has been revealed recently—I do not know whether I have the clipping from the New York Times here—that the warheads, that are in what is supposed to be American custody and in theory cannot be used without the specific approval of the United States, are in fact mounted on allied weapons systems and are inadequately controlled. This is the view of the people in the American administration.

The danger constituted by the existence of these air squadrons is that they are highly vulnerable. We were told in the defence committee that Russian rockets are trained on them. I ask the house to consider seriously the danger that in a moment of tension the military incentive, the almost overwhelming military incentive on either side to take action before their own air squadrons on the one side or their rockets on the other were destroyed. The need to anticipate even in a matter of seconds the action that may be taken on the other side would be intense.

A little while ago the Right Hon. Fred Mulley, who is the British Minister of Defence for the Army, wrote an article for the Institute of Strategic Studies. This article was published in "Survival". I invite the attention of the committee to these words of a man who is daily concerned with these problems. He said that the greatest danger of nuclear war comes from the risks of nuclear escalation and it is unfortunate that our preoccupation with the less relevant issue of strategic nuclear policy has prevented discussion of what seems to Mr. Mulley the real question facing NATO, the role and command of tactical nuclear forces.

We do not get a word from the minister here about what Mr. Mulley tells us is the chief issue. We are not even distracted by discussions of strategic nuclear control; we are left with discussions of integration at headquarters. Mr. Mulley goes on to point out that the allied air forces in Europe may fit into the concept of a generalized nuclear war, but he says they do not match the political requirements of avoiding nuclear escalation and the attempt to compel a pause in a limited war situation. This constitutes in fact, whether we choose to realize it or not, as Mr. Mulley says, the major danger of a nuclear war; yet we maintain our role in this connection and the minister does not choose to even discuss it with the house.

The minister, so far as his statements and the White Paper reveal, is totally unconcerned by this vital problem. So far as we can tell, he commits Canada to a continuation of this role. I must say that in the White Paper it is indicated that the CF-104 aircraft would not be required in the future and that the numbers of operational squadrons will decline as the result of normal wasting away over the next 10 years.

The minister tells us nothing as to whether Canada proposes to accept in NATO some alternative role or replacement of these aircraft or whether, as the CF-104 has become non-operational, the Canadian air contribution will just fade away. The whole concept of our contribution to the tactical nuclear air force in Europe was described by John Gellner to the committee—and I think I have his words right—as a $500 million blunder. It is typical of this government and this minister—

Mr. Herridge: I have been saying that for five years.

Mr. Brewin: —that we are to continue the operation of this blunder until, in the language of the minister, it is phased out. It is typical of the minister that he can make a statement on defence without comment on these vital issues.

There remain the antisubmarine role and the active defences under NATO. That the first constituted a massive contribution to fighting the last two world wars and will probably have no relevance to any imaginable war in the missile age does not seem to have attracted the interest of the minister at all; nor does, obviously, the obsolete nature of our active air defence under NORAD provoke any reaction in the minister except vague hints that the Bomarc squadrons will be gradually phased out as the relative threat of the manned bomber diminishes.

The plain fact of the matter is that the threat caused by the manned bomber no longer exists and defence against it is useless. This brings me to the last role to be mentioned, Mr. Chairman, the so-called Mobile Command. I say it is good news to hear from the minister that this special service force concept is to be expanded. It is to be hoped that not only the concept will be expanded but the actual ability to perform this function. It is reassuring to hear the minister say that current plans call for two brigades to be converted to the concept of air transportability. I should like to hear more from the minister about how and when these current plans are to be carried out.

The minister told us in his statement about the purchase of 20 additional C-130 Hercules aircraft to provide strategic airlift for the Canadian armed forces. This is welcome news to us. I note the statement of the minister that the capability of this command must be further examined in the years ahead in order to meet adequately the philosophy of mobility set out in the White Paper. Studies, he tells us, of the best cost-effective equipment for this expansion are under way. With these proposals for greater transportability we agree; we believe this to be vital, but we are anxious to obtain the details of these plans. After all, it is nearly two years since the White Paper was published which contained this promise. How long are the cost-effective studies going to take? What are the plans for the further expansion of the capability of Air Transport Command? What is the size of the forces that it could transport by air at the present time, and to what parts of the world could it transport these forces?

The philosophy of mobility as set out in the White Paper is all very well; in fact in my view it is the best part of the White Paper. But philosophy must be translated into action. While we continue to try to maintain obsolete roles within the financial ceiling of roughly $1½ billion, is there a danger that the steps necessary to transform the philosophy of mobility into actuality may be starved? We fear this may be the case.

This party believes that these are questions which require answers. It is our conviction—this has often enough been said but not so often practised—that defence policy must fit into political objectives. The political objectives that Canada, as a result of her membership in the alliance, is best able to fulfil through her defence services is the provision of peace keeping forces, highly mobile conventional forces. In our view we should concentrate on this role and move with far greater speed and determination than the minister has shown away from the obsolete roles of the past.

[Mr. Brewin.]

[Translation]

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): Mr. Chairman, I would be remiss if I failed to take this opportunity of telling the house about the gratifying experience I have had in the year since I have been appointed to the Department of National Defence. More specifically, in this last year I have had the opportunity of visiting many units of the Canadian Army. I feel duty bound to bear witness not only to the good will the forces have shown in accepting the integration program put forward by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer), but also to their understanding of the essential part they are currently playing in the future, the security and the stability of our country.

The debate on National Defence estimates has just begun, yet a number of opinions have already been heard, some contradictory, some favourable and others hostile to the integration of our armed forces. In certain circles, the opinion seems to be that the Minister of National Defence, myself and the personnel concerned with national defence do not realize the problems connected with implementing the integration program.

This is quite wrong, Mr. Chairman. We know the problems involved, and we also know that sometimes they are very hard to solve. On the other hand, that is no reason to stop and fail to carry out a project which seems likely, even at this early stage, to bring about so many advantages, and which also allows us to look forward to armed forces designed for the future rather than for 50 years ago. Through this experiment, we had the satisfaction of finding also that many foreign countries envy us for the very reason that we are of the stature needed to try such an experiment.

During the past year I met several representatives from foreign countries, from friendly and commonwealth countries, who came here to inquire about the progress made in the development of the integration of our forces and every one of them told us that, in their own country, the implementation of such a program had already been considered, sometimes quite often.

In certain countries, it was found that the armed forces were perhaps too numerous to arrive at such a clear integration, and they wanted to know how it had been achieved.

Obviously, the problem here is to know if we have in fact achieved, since the publication of the white paper in 1964, the progress we had expected. I think, Mr. Chairman, that this progress has been not only achieved but that the ambition shown at the start was even surpassed and now we are in a position to conceive the logical sequence of this preliminary stage which is called integration and which will be completed by unification of the forces.

This morning the member for Vancouver South (Mr. Winch) asked us to define the policy of the department. We did that in 1964. This policy is, I believe, stated quite clearly in the white paper and shows both the short-term and the long term policy of the Department and of the government.

If the members would read once again the white paper, I believe they would find a definition of the principle behind all the subsequent steps taken to bring about first the integration then the unification already discussed in 1964.

Although he seems sympathetic, the member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) says to us: we want faster action.

Is this possible? Those services, while having to redefine themselves, have been able to integrate in a single command and reform in depth. This was done swiftly and could not proceed any faster.

We overcame difficulties and confusion, and we can now conceive a coherent general staff where people of the various services can work toward the same goal, because they have understood the interests, needs and advantages, and they can now fully co-operate to the building of a single force which will make Canada a forerunner in this field.

Our foreign responsibilities have not been ignored either. We explained in the white paper that until further notice, so far as the defence department was concerned, we must respect our commitments taken within the alliances to which we belong. We understood our role and we go along with the policy of this government and I believe that overseas, precisely in the carrying out of these various tasks, the Canadian forces are our country's best ambassadors whether in Cyprus, in Germany or in that operation to which we are involved in Zambia. They are the uniformed emissaries of Canada, ideal ambassadors for our cause.

Thus we exert the influence the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) wishes we had, that is the influence of a peaceable country which knows how to implement war operations while practising international charity and which knows how to act as a peacemaker, such as in the case of Zambia where it is acting as a go-between in order to prevent the development of a more serious situation.

I do not intend to deal with all the problems that have been raised. I know that the Minister of National Defence is far more competent than I am to answer these objections, and he will do so at the proper time. However, it seems to me that there have been many contradictions among opposition members since the beginning of this debate. For instance, we are blamed on the one hand—by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Harkness), I believe—for the purchase of this aircraft called the CF-5. We are told that this plane has been rejected by the American forces after their experiments in Viet Nam, that no country in the world will buy it and that, as a result, Canada will find itself in the position of having in its possession a specimen or unique samples, that it will complicate in a fantastic manner the costs involved for unkeep, maintenance, and operation of these planes.

Well, Mr. Chairman, that is not borne out by the facts. Tests were made in Viet Nam, but they have not been completed yet. Tests are being conducted now and the findings have not been announced yet. I cannot see how the hon. member for Calgary North can, on his own, come to the conclusion that the CF-5 is not a valuable aircraft, that it does not fall within our specifications and the role we had in mind for it.

On the other hand, I cannot understand either his saying that we will be the only ones to have that aircraft when we know that several hundred planes have been sold already to at least nine other countries, allies of Canada.

Something has been said also—and both hon. members for Halifax mentioned it—about the problem of housing for the armed forces. We know about that problem, we understand its importance, and we agree with both hon. members in saying that a way should be found to improve the general situation with regard to housing for the armed forces.

Mr. Crouse: Would the minister permit a question at this time?

It is with regard to his statement which he just made about the CF-5. Would the minister not agree that this aircraft requires a longer runway than an Air Canada DC-8 jet? With its underslung bomb load it requires an even longer runway, and a perfect runway, which would not be available at certain airfields at the present time.

[Translation]

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): I note that the hon. member puts his question conditionally.

The information I have, and which I give without committing myself, is certainly not complete, because for instance, in the preliminary experiments in Viet Nam, this aircraft took off on a normal strip ranging between 4,700 feet and 6,000 or 7,000 feet but on a 4,700 feet strip, the aircraft took off perfectly.

Now, I say again that I do not have any final information no more, I am sure, than the hon. member who asked that question. Personally, I will be satisfied with extended trials which are now taking place in Viet Nam and with a report which will be forwarded to us, following the conclusion of such trials. But I think that, theoretically, this aircraft does not require a longer take-off strip, certainly not longer and even not as long as the aircraft used by Air Canada.

Mr. Ricard: Your answer is, therefore, conditional.

[English]

Mr. Crouse: Would the minister permit another question. I believe the minister's statement that it would not require a longer runway is incorrect. But with its underslung bomb load it is my understanding that it would require a perfectly flat runway in order for it to take off and land. This type of runway is not generally available in some of the areas in which this aircraft will be used. This is why I question the advisability of purchasing this type of aircraft.

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): In answer to that particular question, Mr. Chairman, I can say this much, that the basic plane which has been purchased is going to be modified to a certain extent. I think this was one of the things which were considered in the recommendations of the R.C.A.F. specialists. Until the complete aircraft we have purchased in a modified way is in service, I do not think you can assess it and say it is unable to use a rough landing field.

Mr. Hellyer: It can land on the grass.

[Mr. Crouse.]

[Translation]

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): Mr. Chairman, I will now deal with military housing for servicemen and their families.

I appreciate the interest shown by members of the Halifax region in this regard. I can tell them that officials of the department are most concerned about this matter and that they are constantly endeavouring to make military housing more pleasant and more comfortable. But, for the information of the senior member for Halifax who suggested that the minister should do something to encourage members of the armed forces to eventually own their home in the general area of their postings, I wonder how he can reconcile the nature of military life with this permanent residence requirement which means that a soldier would have to live 15 or 20 years in the same place in order to acquire a reasonable equity in the house in which he lives?

In my opinion, these two proposals are mutually exclusive. When a man enlists in the armed forces and accepts postings which may last from three to five years, he accepts at the outset a relatively unstable life and also certain conditions which will prevent him from owning a house after having lived in it for a number of years.

Mr. Chairman, I was extremely flattered last night by the minister's remarks about me and, with deep humility, I should like to pay him the same compliment. I think he deserves it and I would also like to say that it is easy to co-operate with a man who knows what he wants, who is not afraid to take his responsibilities, who is familiar with every last detail of the problems of his department and who knows how to proceed, like a determined and patient man, towards an objective which is difficult to attain.

[English]

Mr. Chairman, a great deal has been mentioned already in the course of this debate about morale in the armed forces, and the opinion has been expressed that morale is lower at the present time than it has been for many years—perhaps in the history of the forces. This judgment has been based principally on the increased numbers of members of the force who have been retiring at their own request.

I have in the course of the last several months visited a number of the Canadian forces bases, and from my personal observation morale continues to be of a very high standard.

Mr. Lambert: It is not what it should be.

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): If I recall the testimony given a few minutes ago by the junior member for Halifax, he said that morale was not low.

Mr. MacEwan: You are confused.

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): I am wondering who is confused, whether it is the armed forces or hon. members on the other side.

I recently visited the Valcartier camp, the home base of the Royal 22nd. I found that morale there was exceedingly good as members of these regiments look forward to the long-needed expansion of their training facilities and the improvement of the base facilities that is planned over the next few years. The fact that it has been possible, as a result of integration, to incorporate in the plans of the armed forces better equipment and better facilities in undoubtedly resulting in improvement in the morale of the members of the forces. As you know, Mobile Command recently took over the Valcartier base as part of its command, and the new role of that command with its emphasis on quick reaction time and mobility has been accepted by the forces in that command with the greatest enthusiasm.

• (3:30 p.m.)

An examination of the voluntary and non-re-engagements among N.C.O.'s and men of the services leads to the conclusion that the increased numbers leaving at their own request has very little to do with the policy of integration. The figures of voluntary releases and non-re-engagements over the last five years show that 4,142 were released in 1961, 4,325 in 1962, 6,119 in 1963, 7,893 in 1964 and 8,097 in 1965. There has clearly been an increase in the number of voluntary releases from the forces in this five year period, and I suggest that this is a reflection of the steadily improving employment conditions in this country and the sharply increased competitive situation that now exists. My own observations in this field support the conclusions that are evident from these statistics, that is, that the problem of recruitment and retention in the forces today is associated with matters of pay and other conditions of service related to the opportunities in the civilian employment market.

The department is in the course of completing a number of studies designed to deal with these particular problems, both for officers and men, that cover the conditions of service of the forces, the system of remuneration in the forces, the fringe benefits that are available and other conditions of service that affect the individual. We expect that these studies will all have been completed in time for the conclusions to be applied in respect of the next cyclical pay review for the armed forces which takes place effective October 1, 1966. In the meantime we are taking steps and will continue to do so to meet these areas in which obvious adjustments are necessary. I am happy to be able to announce today the approval of a re-engagement bonus system for N.C.O.'s and other ranks in the armed forces.

Mr. Churchill: You were forced into it.

Mr. Hellyer: Not at all. It was good business management.

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): This will provide for a re-engagement bonus at each re-engagement which will be calculated at the rate of $200 for each year of the period of the re-engagement. On a five year engagement the bonus will be $1,000 and this will be payable at the time of re-engagement. At the same time, on the introduction of this bonus, all those who have re-engaged and are presently serving in a re-engagement will be paid a pro rata bonus based on the period remaining to be served in their engagement. A man, for example, who re-engaged in 1964 and still has four years to serve in his engagement will receive a bonus of $800.

I believe that these bonuses will be welcomed by the men of the forces and that they will have a significant effect in influencing men in their decision to stay in the forces. I think hon. members are aware that the cost of training members of the forces is considerable and I have every confidence that much of the cost of the bonus to which I have referred will be met by improved retention rates and consequentially reduced training costs.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): May I ask the associate minister a question?

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): Yes.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): I would like to ask the associate minister about this $200 bonus. For example, on a five year re-engagement it would be $1,000. Is that $200 for the first year, and $200 for the second year, or is that total of $1,000 considered as an amount, over all, to be paid in the first year.

[Translation]

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): I think I said clearly that, in the case of a five-year re-enlistment, a sum of $1,000 was paid at time of re-enlistment.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): $1,000?

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): Yes, Mr. Chairman.

I wish to conclude these remarks—I really did not intend to speak so long and I apologize—by saying that I am personally convinced that the way in which the minister is now doing the job he has undertaken is, in my view, extremely comforting and is such that we can hope to have, at least, perfectly integrated armed forces, and efficient military service, because the prime objective of integration was not necessarily saving money but ensuring a higher degree of efficiency—

Mr. Ricard: That is not what you said a few moments ago.

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): —and that is what we are accomplishing daily—

Mr. Ricard: That is not what you said a while ago.

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): —and that is what we are accomplishing daily.

Mr. Ricard: There are contradictions.

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): There is no contradiction. I said that efficiency came first and then economy.

Mr. Ricard: That is not what you said a while ago.

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): And we have accomplished both, namely greater efficiency and, at the same time, savings of more than $100 million already.

In my opinion, we also have a much more flexible administrative formula by which we can study an over-all budget for a five-year period. This permits us to project the administration and this, I think, is the modern way to administer because an important service is involved. I remember it was one of my first reactions, 25 years ago, when I came in contact with the Department of National Defence for the first time. I met an old brigadier of my acquaintance who told me: "This is big business". When we are handling a budget of $1½ billion and when we administer a service involving nearly 135,000 people, I think that it is logical to hope for modern administration, management and control methods, and with the integration we are now trying to implement, we are getting good results. I think the whole house should rejoice that the efforts made up to now have met with such great success.

[English]

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, two years have elapsed since we had a debate on defence. It is high time that we examined this department and examined it thoroughly with regard to policy, and with regard to the statements and promises which have been made, to see if there has been any fulfilment of those. It is rather interesting to look back at May 8, 1964, to page 3086, when I said this:

> Then, the minister did as he did in December, he praised his associate minister. The associate minister will get up and praise the Minister of National Defence. This is what was done last December. They pat each other on the back and say, "My, how hard my colleague is working." They are the gold dust twins working together.

We have that again. We have the associate minister, and he gets pulled into this Hellyer complex and pats the minister on the back and gets a return pat on his back.

An hon. Member: That is part of his job.

Mr. Churchill: I was disappointed in the associate minister. I thought he would stand up on his own feet and establish himself, as the former associate minister suggested, on an equal basis with the Minister of National Defence, and not just tag along behind this great, self-appointed commander in chief of the Canadian forces. The associate minister in his opening remarks said that he was going to tell us—and this is what I heard through the translation system—about the experience he had lived through during the last year. It has been pretty terrible living through experience with the Minister of National Defence. I have some sympathy for the associate minister—but not very much, because he has disappointed me today. He said that the armed forces are not conceived with 50 years of the past in mind, but with the future in mind. Two years ago the Minister of National Defence introducing a bill into this house did not go back 50 years. He went back 60 years to introduce a system which was discarded by the British 60 years ago.

• (3:40 p.m.)

I think the word to describe the situation today as we enter upon a discussion on national defence after a two years lapse is "disillusionment". That is the impression I received while listening to some very able people speaking this afternoon—people who are not necessarily more able than some others who spoke, but they have been around here for a long time and they are or have been members of the committee on defence. I am thinking of the hon. member for Calgary North, the hon. member for Vancouver East, the hon. member for Mégantic and the hon. member for Greenwood. They are all familiar with the Minister of National Defence and they all expressed disillusionment. This is what has happened after almost three years of this minister being in office. I was disillusioned with him before he ever took office, because I listened to him when he was sitting on the opposition benches and I heard his extravagant and irresponsible statements with regard to national defence. I will read out some of them to the committee this afternoon if I have time. When I was on the standing committee on defence in 1963 I was profoundly disappointed because one could get no information from the minister at all. The other members I have mentioned have reached the stage of complete disillusionment with this minister and the policy of his department.

Yet I do not know of any minister in the present government who has carried on a more extended campaign of grandiloquent praise. Everything, according to him, is better. Everything is more efficient. Everything is saving money. Whoever is working for him in public relations must be getting an annual bonus, because the minister is paraded across this country on radio, on television and in the press as being the wonder boy of the Liberal party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Churchill: Wait till the Minister of Finance and some of those other people who are interested in the leadership hear that. There was quite a bit of applause this afternoon from those benches for this man.

It has been a great build-up. There has been a lot of talk about all the wonderful things which have been done in the department of defence. But today we have had an analysis of the failure of this minister. The balloon has been pricked. I will deal with that in a few moments.

There has been far too much propaganda across this country with regard to our national defence. People have been bemused. I doubt whether there is one person in a thousand who understands what is meant by integration and unification. We have had no explanation today from the associate minister. He said this was all in the White Paper. I have the White Paper in front of me. We shall see whether it is explained in that document. We were told about the great saving of money which would be realized. Well, the minister will have an opportunity to put the facts in front of this committee before we finish examining these estimates. Let us have the facts and the figures, not a general statement.

The hon. member for Calgary North said the saving of money which had been effected for diversion to the acquisition of military equipment or, to use a colloquialism in which the minister indulges, hardware, is lower than it was seven years ago. It is down to 12 per cent. Yet a few years ago the minister was complaining, in opposition, that insufficient money was available for the purchase of military equipment.

Look at the White Paper. This is what hon. members will find on page 19: "Sufficient savings should accrue from unification to permit a goal of 25 per cent of the budget to be devoted to capital equipment." Let the minister put the facts and the figures in front of us, instead of propaganda which is going out in this country, building him up. I say it is not true. If it is true, the minister can disclose to this committee by giving us actual figures whether he has reached this figure of 25 per cent or not.

The minister's speech yesterday was a soporific speech. As the member for Calgary North said, the hon. gentleman seems to have lost all his vitality. He was worn out. Perhaps he should be shifted to some other portfolio. There was no drive or vitality in his speech yesterday—or perhaps he was trying to drag it out so that the hon. member for Calgary North could not take the floor to reply to him.

What was contained in that speech of the minister's last night? It was just a rehash of administrative action, to use an expression which the hon. gentleman himself has used. And there were some mistakes in it. I will point out two mistakes right now. I presume the minister wrote his own speech. In any case he has to take responsibility for it. On page 1419 of Hansard he is reported as saying "—from the very first days of our air division in Europe; first flying Sabre jets and then CF-100's—". He has put them in that order. But the CF-100's were retired to make way for the Sabre jets. It is not a serious mistake, but it is an obvious one.

Then, as reported at page 1418, he speaks about the personnel carrier. I will read the hon. gentleman's words:

> The introduction of the M.113 armoured personnel carrier to our NATO brigade group in Europe is now nearly complete. This has given the brigade group a greatly enhanced operational capability and, for the first time the armoured protection it would need in the face of a fully mechanized opponent.

I agree it gives them greater operational capability. But it is simply ignorance on the part of the minister, or whoever wrote this for him, to say that it would for the first time provide the armoured protection needed "in the face of a fully mechanized opponent". Incidentally, the word "mechanized" as applied to these units dropped out about 25 years ago. Today we speak of "armoured formations" and "armour". It is completely wrong. An armoured personnel carrier gives the infantry inside it protection against small arms fire, mortar fire and small fragments of shells but it does not give them any protection at all against tanks and the missiles which come from tanks. These will go through an armoured personnel carrier like a knife through butter. For the minister to indicate that this carrier gives troops protection in the face of a fully mechanized opponent is completely wrong and misleading. It shows gross ignorance and I am surprised he should have introduced such a sentence in a description of an armoured personnel carrier. The armoured personnel carrier used in the second world war was a much heavier machine and a German 88 millimeter shell would pierce it as easily as one would tear a piece of paper.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Why the minister should be responsible for that I do not know, except that most of the time he does not know what he is talking about.

This morning at the question period I asked the Prime Minister what progress was being made about negotiating out of the nuclear role, something which he promised three years ago. In his reply, and I quote his words, he said:

> As my hon. friend, the Minister of National Defence indicated last night . . . . we are at present doing just that.

But there was nothing in the minister's speech last night to indicate there is any attempt whatsoever to negotiate out of the nuclear role. That was the promise made by the Prime Minister prior to the 1963 election, but nothing has been done in the three years that have followed. If something had been done we would have heard from the Prime Minister, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, or the Minister of National Defence. I have been asking that question in one form or another for the last three years, and I have been brushed off. That promise is just another one of the unfulfilled promises of the Prime Minister.

Let me draw attention to the Minister of National Defence and his position in 1961. He was then sitting in opposition and was very critical of the then minister, the hon. member of Calgary North. He was critical about the equipment that should be bought for the Canadian forces, and you will find these words of his recorded at page 8230 of Hansard of September 12, 1961:

> It is interesting to note that in the long list of priority items presented by President Kennedy to Congress on March 28 last there did not appear one of the major items on which the Canadian government is relying. Not one American penny for the Voodoo, the F-104, the Bomarc or the Honest John. The Canadian defence department has become a pawnshop for second hand American hardware.

That was the minister in 1961. He has retained all this second hand American hardware ever since, and he has been acquiring more.

Quite a bit has been said about this plane, the Super F-5, or whatever it is called. Let us see what is said about that by James Eayrs, professor of political economy at the University of Toronto, author of a book "In Defence of Canada," who wrote in an article in The Globe Magazine on October 23, 1965:

> The Canadian government has recently contracted to purchase for the R.C.A.F. more than 100 Northrop Freedom Fighters, the Super F-5. A recruiting advertisement of the Department of National Defence describes it thusly:
>
> "The Super F-5 is just one of the many new exciting things that's happening in the air, on the ground and at sea in the Canadian forces. Fast, versatile, and rugged, the Super F-5 is an ideal partner for our ground forces. Operating from sod fields, it's deployed right up front where the action is, ready to step in and back up Canadian troops—with authority."
> It is obvious that this description of a strategic role for an extensive new weapons system is a complete fantasy. I don't doubt for a moment that the aircraft can take off from sod fields and the rest of it; but there is nothing in Canada's military position to suggest that it will ever be called upon to do so.
> A few weeks ago, I chanced to meet a senior official of the Northrop Corporation, who told me that there was joy and amazement in Beverly Hills in about equal proportions—joy that the Canadians had bought the F-5 in such large quantities, amazement that we would have any useful purpose for it.

We will let the minister and the associate minister think that one over. Other evidence has been produced this afternoon with regard to that machine. I wonder will the minister tell us on Monday, using his words, that, "the Canadian defence department has become a pawnshop for second hand American hardware."

Mr. Winch: I said a junkyard, not a pawnshop.

Mr. Churchill: I was using a more polished phrase.

This morning the hon. member for Calgary North exposed the weakness of the minister's position when he talked about low morale, loss of manpower, shortage of equipment, disruptions in the lines of communication under the new organization system, the ineffectiveness of the naval program, the great mistake with regard to the F-5, and the corresponding error with regard to the simulator which apparently the Department of National Defence ordered through the Department of Defence Production, and they are having their own internal war to decide who did what, and when, and why.

Mr. Winch: Is it not correct that it was never ordered?

Mr. Churchill: Perhaps the minister will clear this up for us when he has a chance to speak. But with all the study groups that are operating in the department, with all the slide rules and computers available, you would think no mistake would be made. Whenever anything crops up the minister or the associate minister says, "Let's set up a study group." I would like to have a return showing the number of study groups set up in the department over the last three years. I wonder whether the officers, non-commissioned officers and men have been doing anything else except working on study groups and in seminars. I wonder do they ever do any training. They must be terribly unfit physically if they are sitting around studying all the time. Apparently there was no study group to deal with the simulator, and so they messed it up.

Two years ago, when the minister was changing the set-up and arranging to have a commander in chief, a supremo as we called him, who would operate with an advisory council, I drew attention to the trouble that would be encountered. Now I understand the minister has set himself up as commander in chief of the Canadian forces. If the information I have is accurate, and I think it is because it comes from a very responsible source, the minister is taking upon himself to retire very senior officers against the advice of other senior officers, to make promotions against the advice or without the advice of his advisers, and generally to act as a commander in chief.

Where does this put the chief of staff? On July 6, 1964, I drew attention to the trouble that might arise under such circumstances. I said:

If the supreme commander is adamant, what does the minister do? On the one hand, the minister becomes just a satellite of the supreme commander and has to take his word for everything. On the other hand, if the minister enforces his will on the supreme commander and tries to get him to do something contrary to his military experience, the supreme commander either becomes a tool or puppet of the minister or he resigns and you have an upset in the system.

Are we reaching that stage where there is a conflict of interest between the chief of staff and the Minister of National Defence? What is going to happen? This is a weakness of the present system that the minister has set up, and these weaknesses are beginning to show. Who is the satellite and who is the puppet as between these two men?

I mention in passing that the minister has given no report whatsoever with regard to the NATO conferences that have been held during the two years when we have not had an opportunity to receive a report in this house. As the hon. member for Greenwood has asked, what commitments were made at the last NATO conference, and what are we committed to for the next several years? The minister should report in that regard.

I shall conclude my remarks on this occasion, if I have some time left, by dealing with the brigade in Europe and the question of its mobility. When the minister was here on the opposition side he talked about the mobility of that brigade in Europe. I talked about it years before that when we were formerly in opposition. I wonder what he has done about it. The only mobility that he appears to have applied to that brigade in the three years he has been in office relates to the addition of the armoured personnel carriers. I raised the question about armoured personnel carriers back in 1951 when I first came to this house. It has taken a long time to get that type of proven assistance for the fighting infantry soldiers incorporated into our army. However, we have reached that stage finally.

There were a few helicopters being used by the brigade in Europe when I was there three years ago for the purpose of reconnaissance. What further work has been done in this regard to improve the mobility of that brigade? Is its supply column still a wheeled column tied to the roads of Belgium and France? We have gone through two world wars with our supply columns tied to those roads. Where is the plan that the minister should have to make this brigade completely mobile by the use of tracked supply vehicles or an air lift? We have not heard from the minister in that regard, yet he would give the impression that because armoured personnel carriers have been provided for that brigade it is now completely mobile. It is not and will not be completely mobile, from the point of view of a supply column, until it is furnished with either tracked vehicles or an air lift for that purpose.

Some years ago the minister talked about the fact that we were not purchasing Otters, Beavers or Caribou from de Havilland but we were getting planes from the United States. Would any of those or other types made by that company be available for an air lift? What about the helicopter; is it being used as it is being used in Viet Nam, or is it being used for just reconnaissance purposes as it was when I was over there three years ago? Why do we not make the brigade in Europe completely mobile and extend that mobility to other formations we are training here in Canada? Are we just going to go on fighting the last war over again with wheeled vehicles tied to roads providing supplies of ammunition, food and other materials?

The minister should get active on this and live up to some of the things he suggested when he was sitting here on the opposition side. He does not even need a study group in this regard because there is plenty of experience available. If he thinks he needs more experience and advice why does he not send military observers to South Viet Nam to see how the United States airborne cavalry division operates in action?

The minister should find out the type of helicopter used in Viet Nam and how the chain of command is operated. When I suggested that he do this the other day he shielded himself behind the fact that we have membership in the international joint commission in South Viet Nam. That is not a good enough excuse.

[Mr. Churchill.]

It has been pointed out, and the minister mentioned this in his speech last night, that the experienced officers and men who are survivors of the second world war are reaching retirement age and will be leaving the armed services soon. That is all the more reason for training younger men who have had no experience in warfare, other than those who were in Korea. They should be given the chance to see what warfare is like in South Viet Nam. Let them hear the sound of bursting shells and the whine of machine gun bullets. They could be kept safely out of the way in fox-holes or behind some kind of protection, but they should see what happens in battle and the effect of fire under battle conditions. Let them see how an army is supported under battle conditions.

In a very few years there will be virtually no one in our armed services who has had experience in actual warfare; yet it is essential, if lives are to be saved, that we have men with this experience. If our forces are committed to other than peace keeping duties, which perhaps involves little risk, it is essential that our officers and senior N.C.O.'s at least have some knowledge of how to look after troops under war conditions. That is why we should have observers to see what is being done in South Viet Nam. I do not suggest they risk their lives, but they should find out what is being done in South Viet Nam and bring that advice and experience back to our forces in training. Our forces must be kept to peak efficiency in the event of war.

There is no point in talking about national defence with the idea that there will not be a war. We all hope there will be no war, but I know of no period in the world's history when there has not been some kind of struggle taking place in which lives have been lost. Canada has had a long and difficult time in the 100 years of its history, with men of each generation engaged somewhere or other in warfare. I see no possibility of that situation being changed in the immediate future. This is unfortunate, but let us make sure that our forces are efficient. There is no point in telling us here that they are efficient, because they cannot be efficient unless there are senior officers and N.C.O.'s in our forces experienced in warfare. Under present-day circumstances we must have not only good and effective field training with good, effective modern equipment, but we must keep abreast of developments in warfare taking place elsewhere in the world.

Mr. Groos: Mr. Chairman, I am certainly not going to take up more than two or three minutes of the time of this committee because I want to see the estimates passed. I will have plenty of opportunity to speak on matters of defence when this year's estimates come before the committee. I do wish to make a few remarks because of the very interesting words that have been said in the house today. We are speaking of matters of broad policy concerning defence when we speak on this section of the estimates. We have heard a lot of talk today about the morale of the armed forces, but we have heard a lot which is in my opinion nothing but hot air.

• (4:10 p.m.)

As far as morale in the armed forces is concerned, I like to think I am still able to keep in touch with some of the services and their activities. In my own riding there is a large naval base and I have many naval friends. We also have a fairly significant army base in Victoria. From the discussions I have had with servicemen in recent years I realize they are unquestionably going through a very difficult time. But I do not believe this is by any means all due to the minister or the policies he has introduced since becoming minister. Of course, some of the policies the minister has introduced have contributed to these difficulties, because change always does, particularly change within the armed forces.

However, Mr. Chairman, I believe most servicemen agree that the time had come when change was necessary. I also believe most servicemen agree that these changes are in the best interests of our nation. To begin with, what the minister has done in recent years by these changes is that he has given a sense of purpose to the personnel of the three services, and they appreciate this. When we are talking about morale we must remember that it is not made up of just one thing, and I believe it is wrong to claim that all the troubles besetting the services today are due to integration. This is part of the difficulty but only a small part.

I wanted to recommend to the government that they pay re-engagement bonuses because I think the lack of re-engagement bonus was contributing to the difficulties of re-engagement. I was very pleased to hear what the associate minister had to say just now about re-engagement bonuses. I think this step will be received very well by the armed forces. I might say I would have preferred the re-engagement bonuses to have been larger because I believe the savings will be out of all proportion to the cost involved. The saving is not just in dollars, but in the effort that has been spent in training persons who would have stayed in the forces had they been given a little more financial encouragement to do so.

This financial encouragement is now being offered to them to remain in the services. The financial outlay and expenditure of effort in training a serviceman is far higher than the average member of this house visualizes. In my humble opinion the cost of training any serviceman in his first three-year engagement would be well in excess of $15,000. Therefore to offer him $1,000 to re-engage for another five years will constitute a great saving and I think this step will be very much welcomed by the men in the armed forces.

I said I would only speak for two or three minutes, Mr. Chairman, and I intend to keep my word. In conclusion I should like to urge the minister and this government to press on with their plans for integration. For reasons of adventure and patriotism, young men today are just as keen to serve as they ever were. I want the minister to press on to conclusion with his plans for integration and then to stabilize the situation so we will no longer be faced with continuous change and the unsettling effect this has upon service personnel. I should like to assure the minister that the service personnel in my part of the country are behind him in what he is doing.

[Translation]

Mr. Allard: Mr. Chairman, last night I listened carefully to the statement made by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer). He made a point of describing the policies of his department and the efforts made to complete the integration of our armed forces.

On the latter score, according to the minister, integration has produced satisfactory results up to now. We will wait until this unification program is completed before passing a definite judgment on its value and effectiveness.

But I will deal today with the military role of Canada and what would be a more realistic Canadian policy in this regard.

Indeed, what must be Canada's military role? Last night, at the beginning of his speech, the minister laid down two principles according to which this country aimed first at defending Canada and second, at helping to maintain peace throughout the world.

I think those are two very commendable objectives, but they are expressed in terms that are too general. I expected the minister to set forth, in this important speech at the beginning of consideration of the estimates of that very important department of our country—

[English]

Mr. Brand: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. The simultaneous translation system is not working. I am sure many members who cannot understand the very fluent French of the hon. member for Sherbrooke have difficulty without the simultaneous translation, and I am sure they do not want to miss the hon. member's very excellent words.

The Chairman: Order. The Chair has already noticed that there is no simultaneous translation and steps are being taken to have it restored. Perhaps the hon. member would proceed for a moment or two without the simultaneous translation.

[Translation]

Mr. Allard: Mr. Chairman, I was saying that yesterday I expected the Minister of National Defence to take the opportunity, at the very start of consideration of the estimates of his department, to set forth in this house and for all Canadians, a well-defined policy.

We find that in the physical organization, the minister and the officials of his department have shown great concern in the past few years, they have obtained some success, up to now, in the physical organization as concerns integration of the armed forces. Very well, I grant that.

But what Canadians want to know is the short term and long term policies of the government and of the Department of National Defence.

It seems that they are acting blindly. "Marlbrough is going to war", but where is he going, when will he be coming back, and how far does he want to go?

You often get the impression, when considering the estimates of national defence, that you are somewhat like a Don Quixote swinging his blade in the wind. One does not know, one does not feel and one is not told in this house what is involved, on an efficient basis, in most of those expenses or at least in the more substantial amounts.

Obviously, the principles laid down by the minister were too general. They do not take fully into account the Canadian reality, the wishes of this country, and that is why the Canadian people, who have a lot of common sense, made their position known by returning three minority governments in the last three elections. The Canadian people do not know where the administration of National Defence is going.

National defence is a very important matter in this country. One feels that the ordinary citizen, the worker, the farmer, the white-collar worker as well as the ordinary member like me is treading on dangerous ground when it comes to national defence policy.

Well, Mr. Chairman, this afternoon I want to point out very humbly to the minister and his colleagues a few facts, a few principles on which a Canadian military policy should be based.

The first principle is that Canada must organize its own defence and co-operate with its allies according to its means and a reasonable proportion of its national budget.

No useful purpose is served—because too often we feel tempted to forget our limitations—by wanting, in the concert of nations, not only in the peaceful field of external affairs but also in international military circles, to take and participate in initiatives which are beyond our capacity from the standpoint of defence or even financial means.

At the present time, there is no immediate crisis or impending world conflict which is inciting our country to spend too much for military purposes. Far from it, because the minister said in his speech last night that, on the international horizon, the situation did not look alarming and that relations between the communist block and the allies seemed much improved.

We should, therefore, take advantage of this period of relaxation, this period of conciliation to reduce our military expenditures and devise a true long-term military policy for Canada. A greater part of our resources and revenues should be used to fight poverty first in Canada and then abroad. We should reduce our military expenditures and increase family allowances, old age pensions and our help to famine-ridden countries.

That is what Canada should do, Mr. Chairman, but it does the opposite.

The present government—and that is nothing new, previous governments did it too —increases military expenditures year after year, reduces help to foreign countries, as can be seen from the estimates tabled recently, and postpones increases in family allowances and old age pensions.

Compared to other countries, the share of our national budget earmarked for defence is much too large. I should like to call the minister's attention briefly to a few statistics. Even though I have previously referred to this matter, in order to define a national policy, one must necessarily proceed by comparison and study other countries whose aims, whether national or international, are similar to Canada's, to find how much of their budget they earmark for defence purposes compared to their total budget.

Allow me to quote a few statistics I obtained in the library of parliament, and in case the minister should want further details, I could give them to him.

For the fiscal year 1964-65, Canada spent 24.7 of the national budget potential on National Defence. New Zealand spent 8 per cent; Australia, 18 percent; Belgium, 12 per cent; Norway, 17 per cent; Sweden, 17 per cent; Italy, 15 per cent; Japan, 8 per cent; Czechoslovakia, 8 per cent and France, which is a large country and a major power with the United States, Great Britain and a few others, earmarks only 23 per cent for the fiscal year 1964-65.

And we, in Canada, are pipe-dreaming. We go off to war and get involved in all types of military adventures to spend 24.7 per cent of our national budget solely on National Defense.

Well, Mr. Chairman, I say we are not being realistic in our policies when we spend beyond our means in this area of national administration.

The second principle which a Canadian national defence policy should follow deals with the question of effectiveness.

Everything produced for our national defence should be for effective use and not as a symbolic or empty gesture.

The hon. members for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch), Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) and Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) have very aptly pointed out the problem of the Bomarc missiles, obsolete according to many experts, and which the United States has discarded.

Well, this was accepted and there was, at the time, talk of an agreement of which we Canadians know nothing. We would like the hon. minister to give us some specific information on the subject: when will this agreement expire; what is the precise nature of our participation with the United States?

Also, are there conditions in case we withdraw? What efforts are made at present and, it seems, for the last two years, to repatriate our point of view on this question and to get rid of something which perhaps had to be accepted under the terms of an agreement about which we Canadians know nothing?

Mr. Chairman, I am saying simply that this Bomarc characteristic is precisely a criterion which proves there is a lack of efficiency, in many respects, with regard to the Department of National Defence expenditures.

If the Department of National Defence endeavoured to spend every cent of the taxpayers' money with maximum efficiency, keeping in mind the practical Canadian realities, we would not have this kind of budget. I feel that our policy would then be more profitable for Canada itself as well as for our relations with foreign countries.

At any rate, that agreement or participation with regard to the Bomarc is greatly detrimental to Canada's role as a peace maker, and to our sincerity with regard to nuclear disarmament.

Mr. Chairman, how can our representatives on disarmament commissions in Geneva, at the United Nations or elsewhere succeed, by means of high-sounding statements, in preventing the extension of the nuclear club if, at the same time, they advocate with an impressive eagerness the dissemination of nuclear weapons throughout the world?

If our own country accepts such weapons and if we are unable to define to the Canadian people or other countries our policy on this matter, then do we have a nuclear or anti-nuclear policy?

I am sure Canada is highly esteemed by all. One only has to travel throughout the world to feel that Canadians are welcome everywhere. Our role is one of pacifier and mediator, and we shall only succeed in playing that part fully if we give other countries, through our actions and our stand, the assurance that we are a peace making country, that we are not part of the nuclear club, and that we do not promote the dissemination of nuclear weapons throughout the world.

The hon. minister is to give us details on this point and also indicate clearly when our troops will put aside the nuclear warheads within NATO framework.

To a question I raised during the session I was told—the replies are always vague—we do not know where we are going—in brief: The warheads will be recalled as the planes are taken out of service. Truisms, Mr. Chairman. What is the Canadian policy, the national defence department policy on this difficult, important and national issue of nuclear weapons? I do not know. Other members of different parties do not know. Canadian taxpayers, who pay for them do not know. This is why I often repeat it and say to the minister—the people, undecided about many areas of federal affairs, have elected three minority governments in the last three elections.

There seems to be a lack of firmness in the administration of the Department of National Defence. This point must be stressed because a lot is expected from the minister in whom we have confidence, for he seems to be a most sympathetic fellow.

The third principle which should guide our Canadian policy is that, as far as our military expenditures are concerned, extravagance and costly ventures should be avoided. In both cases, the minister could show much more firmness and caution.

• (4:30 p.m.)

The recent report of the Auditor General contained some unpleasant and disquieting surprises for all Canadian taxpayers.

For the fiscal year 1964-65, this report showed unauthorized expenses totalling about $23 million in the Department of National Defence. There is particular emphasis on unproductive expenses on a bombing computer and the Bobcat armoured carrier. But now someone with an objective and searching mind—I refer to the public accounts auditor—shows to the Canadian population that $23 million has been wasted.

Mr. Chairman, do you know what that means for the taxpayer, for the father who has an annual income of $2,500, $3,000, $3,500, for the unemployed, for the Quebec farmer whose income does not even reach $3,000 per year and who has a large family when they find that their country's government has wasted $23 million? That is why I suggest that the minister should establish in his department an organization for the control of expenditures and experiments.

[Mr. Allard.]

I know too well that the minister, with his heavy responsibilities, cannot see to everything, from coast to coast, 365 days a year. But it seems that there has been a lack of control for a very long time.

I remember that about 20 years ago, horses were put on the military pay list at Petawawa. There is nothing new in this way of wasting the taxpayers' money. Therefore, because of this waste, the minister should personally set up a control agency within his own department.

And the fourth principle is that the Departments of National Defence and External Affairs should work to build a sovereign, more independent Canada. They should try to give Canada a definite identity, avoid putting our country at the service of foreign countries, thus furthering their military purposes and economic ambitions.

What are the enemies of Canada, Mr. Chairman? Tell me. Personally, I do not know any. If we minded our own business more often, would we have enemies?

There we are with the United States, with England, in other countries.

Economic interests are often a source of conflict. Will Canada get involved in such things? If we minded our own business more, it would help Canada's identity and sovereignty. Moreover, it would enable us to keep more money for our people.

The fifth and last principle I want to mention is that the activities and extension of our national defence should not hinder the great role of mediator and peace maker that Canada is called upon to play in the world.

Thus a budget of $1,559,300,193 is excessive considering Canada's means and role. In the future, the government should consider a 40 per cent reduction of military expenditure and use these savings to fight poverty. That is the battle we should really be fighting, for indignation and rebellion will vanish along with poverty.

I wish to draw the attention of the Minister of National Defence to a certain matter in the county of Sherbrooke. In 1964, the minister closed the Sherbrooke university division of naval instruction which I had managed to establish in 1960. I must tell the minister that this was a great disappointment for the people of the county of Sherbrooke, the eastern townships and the province of Quebec.

The minister should consider re-establishing this training unit at the university for a number of reasons; for one, it had a useful purpose.

When the minister reduced the strength of that reserve unit at the University of Sherbrooke, he should also have considered the strength of reserve units in the other provinces. Money had been expended on this unit and it should have been maintained in Quebec. It had the effect of encouraging Quebecers, particularly French Canadian students, to participate in the defence of their country. There were complaints in the past to the effect that French Canadians were losing interest in the defence of their country and were not doing their share. A great deal of efforts went into obtaining a naval reserve unit at the University of Sherbrooke, and now we are dealt this back-handed blow. Re-establishment of this reserve unit at the University of Sherbrooke would mean that French Canadian students would get their fair share.

[English]

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, earlier this afternoon the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre made an appeal to history, always a very rash and dangerous thing to do. The hon. member's appeal to history was to prove what I suppose all of us know, that the history of mankind has been painfully bloody ever since it was first recorded.

But history can be appealed to in another way also, and I would suggest to the hon. member and to those who think like him that you cannot pick up the thread of history at this point and say that this is the end, that it is at this point that you will make your appeal. Because history will now tell us that never before in human existence have great powers had at their disposal such tremendous powers of destruction by which they may eliminate not merely civilization but mankind itself. This, I submit, Mr. Chairman, is the supreme fact of today, and it is a fact which is entirely overlooked by those who propose plans for military expenditures and those who criticize them on specific points.

It appears to me that this great fact of history renders virtually all this debate quite senseless, without value. It is sometimes imagined that science has placed tremendous power in the hands of the war makers, whereas I think we have already had historic evidence that, so far from doing this, the juggernaut of science and technology has overwhelmed war and military planners and renders and rendered them, helpless and impotent. Consequently we must get the idea through our heads, and the sooner we do so the better, that we must devise a reasonable and practicable method of dealing with our neighbours in this troubled world.

Let us examine for a moment, Mr. Chairman, the arguments that are advanced for Canada's so-called defence expenditures. I think they have to be divided quite sharply into two categories. One with which I propose to deal more extensively later is the category which concerns our commitments under the United Nations for peace keeping services throughout the world, and the other is as a contribution to the power of the great neighbour to the south, the United States of America, to aid it to contain communism and to protect the west from the evils of communism. Let us boil it down to real facts, because we talk about alliances, and so on. I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, that this breaks down into a contribution to the power of the United States to protect the free world, and to another part where we should actually contribute forces which will be actually deployed in combat against communist areas of the world. I suggest that this is a very feeble argument, because any contribution that we can make on that score would be so minuscule as to be derisory.

We have passed the era in history where nations such as Canada can make a measurable contribution to the waging of war. Let us get that straight through our heads. Let us not look at the first or the second world wars, when things were different, because that is not the situation today. The argument is produced that the growth of armaments in the present world is due to their deterrent power. This may be true. Again, I suggest that Canada is in no position whatever to add to the deterrent power of the United States. In fact, it is ridiculous to suggest that we are in that position. The only occasion upon which that deterrent power has actually been deployed was during the Cuban crisis some two years ago when Canada was not even informed, let alone consulted. Our neighbour to the south realized that we could contribute nothing. Their deterrent power was the only power they had, and the only power with which they could accomplish what they sought to accomplish. Any contribution of ours would have been completely pointless and meaningless. I suggest it is in this context that we ought to be considering these defence expenditures.

I now want to return to the category I mentioned when I began speaking, the category of our contributions under our commitments to the United Nations. These, I think, are extremely important. I have had the opportunity of observing some of the forces we have deployed throughout the world in this work and have been impressed, as I am sure most members of parliament who have had that opportunity must have been impressed, by the manner in which the Canadian armed forces are carrying out their extremely difficult task. Nor would I suggest for a moment, sir, that we should consider reducing our role in this field. Rather I would suggest that these contributions should be made much more effective than they are at the present time. It distressed me when I was on the Gaza strip last year, or the year before last, to see that after eight years we were in precisely the same position we had been in at the beginning. There had been no advance. We had been acting as policemen to keep two possible combatants apart.

We have the same situation in Cyprus. I hear from reports which have come from Cyprus that the Canadian forces have played an outstanding role in keeping the potential combatants apart. However, in neither instance have any steps been taken to try to solve the political problem which has lain at the back of the military problem we have been trying to cope with.

I feel that this is the era in which Canada can play an important and decisive role in the world of today. I think it is a role that the men in our armed forces would welcome. We have heard a lot of talk about the low morale of the men in the Canadian armed forces. I do not know whether it is low, but I know this: I know that those with whom I have talked are very concerned as to what their role is going to be in the years to come, not merely from the point of view of whether they are going to have a job, or whether their careers are going to come to a satisfactory conclusion, but as to whether the work they will be engaged in is going to be of value.

I have taken the occasion whenever I have been overseas and have come in contact with men in our armed forces to try, if I can, to get some fairly high ranking air force officers to one side. I have succeeded in doing that on a number of occasions, and I have always put one question in which I have asked: "What do you think is the future for the Canadian armed forces?" Always, Mr. Chairman, I have had the same reaction. Always there is first of all a rather perfunctory genuflection toward our military commitments in NATO and NORAD, but always they have eventually come out of the bushes and said something like this: "We should be doing something that we do superbly well, and better than anybody else in the world. We should be concentrating entirely on supplying transportation, communications, and delivery of goods and materials to the forces of the United Nations throughout the world." Our armed forces are doing that today, and are extremely proud of the role they are playing.

Not long ago I was speaking to a number of students of the University of Victoria. I must say I was somewhat dumbfounded when I got to where I was to speak to have the young man who had asked me there tell me, in a rather embarrassed way, that 50 sailors from HMCS Naden, the Royal Canadian Naval Base outside Victoria, had come to hear my talk on Canada's foreign policy. They marched in shortly afterwards, took their seats, and I proceeded to outline what I thought should be Canada's role in the world of today. During the course of my speech I outlined particularly the role that the men in our armed forces should play in that regard, and I said to them that there was a very great part that they should play, if they were equipped to do so. I pointed out to them that one of the most important aspects of our foreign policy, and one which must be given more and more importance as the years go on, is the provision of technical and material assistance to the areas of the world that are now beginning to emerge into the twentieth century, and I could see no reason why the men in our armed forces should not be getting the extra technical and administrative training that would permit them to play an important role in the development of skills, financed and aided by our external aid program.

• (4:50 p.m.)

It seemed at that time that the sailors accepted this as something worth while. It was a relief to know that there might be some positive, worth-while role in the world, not merely a role of standing by out of fear that a catastrophe might overcome us, in which they might be the first victims. This would strike me, Mr. Chairman, as being a much more realistic defence program than one which is based on the outmoded idea that war is today a feasible or practical means by which to promote national policy. I think this is one of the things we must get through our heads: War is no longer feasible; science and technology have overcome the war planners and rendered them impotent.

But science and technology have placed other weapons in our hands and there are innumerable places in the world where these weapons should be employed today. Sometimes we forget that there are more than two nations in North America. A month or two ago ago I visited the third, the nation of Mexico, a country upon which some of us have been inclined to look patronizingly perhaps, as one which has not been well developed and where there are vast differences between wealth and poverty. However, when I was there the Mexican budget for the current year was presented—and 80 per cent of that budget is being devoted to education.

I would suggest that on any scale of civilized values a nation which devotes 80 per cent of its budget to education is vastly superior intellectually and morally to a nation which devotes 25 per cent of its budget to a war which will never take place, or if it does, to a war which the contribution of that country would be pointless.

I would recommend to the Minister of National Defence—and I know he has done something along these lines—to set up a program of training the men in our armed forces to undertake such tasks as this. And I would suggest that he return to the treasury of Canada the vast bulk of the sums which have been provided in respect of what are useless expenditures, expenditures which can provide us with no real defence. Further, I suggest the establishment, for one thing, of a comprehensive program of administrative training for people in those areas of the world which are now emerging into the twentieth century. This could be merged with the role the men in our armed forces might well play in the world of tomorrow. If we could achieve this, we would have less antedeluvian talk about whether this weapon is better than that weapon. In the world of today no weapon is of any value at all in the face of the enormous, the devastating advances in science and technology.

Mr. Dinsdale: It has been some considerable time since I had an opportunity to take part in a discussion of defence. Unfortunately, in the limited time at my disposal this afternoon I shall be able to make only a few introductory remarks before we reach the hour of five o'clock.

It is not that my interest in defence matters has diminished over the years. I think my interest in the operations of the Department of National Defence has increased rather than diminished. The reason I have been less active in recent years is because of other responsibilities and because I personally got out of touch with the activities of the armed forces, having myself become obsolete in 1957. Up to that point I was active in the excellent MATP program as a reservist. But the year 1957 was the beginning of the streamlining process, which had become necessary within the armed forces of Canada by reason of the crash program launched in the early fifties consequent upon Canada's participation in the Korean conflict.

Immediately after the war we scaled down our armed forces to an irreducible minimum, as seems to be typical of the approach Canada has taken over the years in defence matters. As a result, by the mid-fifties we had built up a defence force of a comparatively large size upon the basis of what the minister of that day, Hon. Brooke Claxton, referred to as a crash program. Then it became necessary in 1957 to carry out some streamlining.

Since there have been bouquets handed around the chamber this afternoon, and the name of the present Minister of National Defence has been mentioned, together with that of the associate minister, I think I should pass a bouquet to a former minister of national defence, Hon. George Pearkes, who is really the man who began the streamlining process designed to increase efficiency in the armed forces. We are all aware of some of the strange anomalies which occurred during the early fifties as a result of the crash program. The situation produced errors of huge proportions, as well as humourous aspects. I refer of course to the Avro fiasco which was debated furiously in the house at one time, and also to the lighter incident, the famous "horses on the payroll" episode which the minister will remember so well.

The first point I wish to make is that Canada has had this "on again, off again" attitude toward defence matters for most of its history; we can look back over the history of the past 20 or 30 years and find this to be the case. While integration is important, and while it was initiated by the former administration, particularly by the minister to whom I have referred, I wish to point out that under the present minister there has been frantic haste and frantic public relations in the spirit of the 60 days of decision—an approach which has created difficulties to which I will refer when this discussion resumes.

May I call it five o'clock?

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that after discussion with the house leaders of the other parties I have undertaken to ask that the private members' hour today be forgone and that we continue during the private members' hour with a discussion of the Department of National Defence estimates. Further, in order to overcome a difficulty that may arise in the next few days, I have undertaken to ask leave for unanimous consent of the house to proceed through all stages of a bill to amend the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, which merely changes the period "within 15 days" as it appears in section 20 of that act to "45 sitting days", and which makes the amendment effective only on the current redistribution. The effect of this will be to allow us to proceed with the business of the house in an orderly fashion over the next few weeks.

If we have unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, I suggest we could proceed with that bill now. I might add that copies of the bill in English and French are available for hon. members.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the house give unanimous consent to suspend the private members' hour at this time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the house give unanimous consent to revert to the introduction of bills?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

REDISTRIBUTION

AMENDMENT TO EXTEND TIME FOR CONSIDERATION OF OBJECTIONS

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-126, to extend the time for consideration of objections pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act with respect to the reports of commissions established for the decennial census taken in the year 1961.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read a second time?

[Mr. Dinsdale.]

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: By consent, now.

Mr. McIlraith moved the second reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Batten in the chair.

On clause 1.

Mr. Aiken: May I ask the house leader, just for clarification, whether the amendment that is being proposed will be a permanent amendment to the act?

Mr. McIlraith: No, Mr. Chairman, its effect is limited to the current redistribution.

Mr. Aiken: Thank you.

Mr. Herridge: May I ask the house leader whether, when the proposals for amendments to the electoral boundary districts come before the house, hon. members will have an opportunity to speak to a motion recommending changes in this respect?

Mr. McIlraith: If I understood the question correctly it was whether hon. members would have a right to speak to the motions presented by way of objection to the reports of the redistribution commissions. If I understood the question correctly, the answer is yes.

Clause agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported and read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

1. Departmental administration, including grants to military associations, institutes and other organizations as detailed in the estimates and authority, notwithstanding section 30 of the Financial Administration Act, and subject to allotment by the Treasury Board, for total commitments of $2,560,546,715 for the purposes of Votes 1, 5, 15, 20, 25, 30, 35, 40 and 45 of this Department regardless of the year in which such commitments will come in course of payment (of which it is estimated that $1,044,262,000 will come due for payment in future years) and authority to make recoverable advances under any of the said votes and, notwithstanding the Financial Administration Act, to spend revenue received during the year in respect of assistance rendered to the United Nations, any party of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization or any provincial or municipal government, $5,204,855.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, I would like to take this opportunity to thank hon. members of the committee for their co-operation when we were sitting in the whole house.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, I am sure the same spirit of co-operation will continue as we resume discussion of the defence estimates. At five o'clock I was indicating that because of the frantic haste generated by the slogan "60 days of decision", the changes that were taking place in the armed forces over the past seven or eight years reached such a speed that the difficulties already referred to by previous speakers were inevitable. I refer, of course, to problems of morale and problems of confusion.

It is difficult, both for hon. members and the press, to receive concrete information on the changes taking place in the department as a result of the stepped up program of integration and the secrecy that must prevail. As a consequence it is necessary for ordinary members to get the information, as it were, through the back door. One of the sources of information I find most useful and helpful with respect to this problem of morale, and the uncertainty and confusion in the armed forces, is to attend receptions. When the conversation becomes animated, when the inhibitions are lowered, then in talking to people who are closely associated with our defence forces we discover all is not as rosy as the picture painted by the minister in his speeches both here and across the country.

As I have pointed out, we in the Conservative party believe in orderly change. Certainly as a result of the confusion in the early 1950's a change was long overdue. However, if you are going to have orderly change it cannot take place overnight but should be done on the basis of long term planning. For instance, you might map out a five or ten year plan, particularly when there is going to be a comprehensive program of reorganization. From talking to people closely identified with Canada's forces I have the impression that there has been a slamming together—even a knocking of heads together—which has left some of the persons involved somewhat stunned.

I think the minister has given us a clue to this situation in that every statement he makes is full of optimism. There seem never to be any problems to be confronted or solved; everybody is moving smoothly toward the ultimate purposes the minister has in mind. In other words all is for the best in the best of possible worlds. When things move as smoothly as that we are reminded of the words of Shakespeare when he said: Methinks he doth protest too much. In no field of human endeavour, particularly in public, political and military life is it possible to conceive of a situation where everything is ideal and no problems exist. The minister is like a salesman who talks beyond the sale. In attempting to make a sale he keeps on extolling the virtues of the product. I think because he is so importunate in this matter there is reason to be suspicious of what goes on behind the façade that has been erected.

Perhaps I may use another simile, Mr. Chairman, and go back in Greek mythology to Procrustes, who tried to make every traveller fit his magic bed, with the loss of course of a few limbs, heads and lives. The minister in attempting to make everybody fit into the pattern he has devised in reorganizing the armed forces has not lost any limbs, heads or lives, but obviously he has lost a considerable number of personnel. I suggest, as others have suggested, that this is indicative of problems of morale, confusion and frustration resulting from the 60 days of blazing decision atmosphere that has prevailed in the Department of National Defence.

Psychologists carry on tests with animals and have found that one sure way of creating disorientation is to subject these animals in experiments to constant and rapid change. I think that is the difficulty which prevails in the armed forces at the present time.

We are not sure even after the White Paper and the deliberations of the committee, on which I have not been privileged to serve in recent years, how far the minister intends to go in his reorganization; whether he is going beyond integration to unification. This is still a matter of debate, although I noticed in his statement yesterday that he did use this phrase, as it appears on page 1417 of Hansard, that the various services—> —would be integrated on a functional basis as a first step toward a single unified defence force for Canada.

We will be able to consider these matters later in the committee, but I question whether complete unification is in the best interests of Canada's armed forces. What is needed is unity of purpose and motivation. That must be a requisite to the maintenance of morale in the armed forces. If you try to press, by force, every branch of the armed forces into one common mould you are going to get monotony and frustration rather than strong morale and motivation.

We do not need similarity of colour and structure to meet Canada's defence requirements, we need flexibility. Flexibility is not usually achieved by reconstructing ourselves into one organization as one unit with one system of operations, logistics and all the rest of the paraphernalia. We must have sufficient diversity of background and approach to provide the greatest number of solutions to meet our problems lest, to use a famous quotation, one good custom corrupts the whole world. This sort of regimentation toward solidarity and uniformity is bound to destroy the high morale and spirit of the armed forces. I think this is the major difficulty which is of concern to Canada's forces at the present time. I am not going to pursue that matter further, but I should like to mention one other point very briefly.

By the program that is under way are we not tending to reduce the Canadian defence forces to the role of a glorified police force? I know the minister is aware of this danger because I recall reading an article which appeared in the armed forces magazine in 1964 regarding the minister's approach to greater efficiency and reorganization in the armed forces. At page 54 of that publication the minister is quoted as stating:

> The surest way to lose our sovereignty is to have someone else do our fighting for us.

I understand from that statement that the minister is fully aware of Canada's unique position which established Canada historically and geographically as a nation. It is almost trite to say that we are a nation because of a freak of history, because of an accident of history and circumstance. As we look at the pattern that has unfolded in the past three years during the administration of the department by the present minister and the Liberal government we get the impression that even though he uttered that warning not to have someone else do our fighting for us, he is unwittingly falling into that very error.

• (5:20 p.m.)

It is obvious to everyone that there are strong American overtones within Canadian defence policy not only in terms of equipment, to which reference has been made by at least two previous speakers, but also on major policy matters. For example, Mr. Chairman, there has been kite flying recently about the possibility of organizing a marine corps along American lines in the Canadian forces. I think it would not be boasting on my part to indicate that the Canadian armed forces in world war I and world war II achieved fame and established a reputation that would be equal to if not beyond that established by the famous United States marine corps. I could refer to many incidents in this regard from world war II, such as Dieppe and the various campaigns of that most recent conflict.

[Mr. Dinsdale.]

The minister when in opposition was aware of this problem because, as the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre pointed out in his remarks he criticized the Conservative government for its tendency to accept the obsolete hardware—that is the word the minister likes to use—of the American armed forces.

This is not the time to resurrect the famous nuclear arms question, but I have always regarded the essence of the nuclear arms controversy of 1963 as being whether Canada should maintain its important posture of sovereignty or knuckle under to the dictates of another nation, in this instance the United States government.

I believe that the stand the Conservative government took at that time was in the best interests of preserving Canada's sovereignty and national identity in the face of the pressures that are constantly pushing in on us from the south.

So, as we move toward armed forces solidarity, as we move forward to create this highly trained, mobile, air-portable striking force, I believe serious second thought should be given to whether Canada is not abandoning completely its role of defence forces and substituting rather a role of a glorified police force. It seems to me that while we must have a bit of both, the fact that morale in the armed forces has declined in recent years would suggest that the defence and fighting role is diminishing at the expense of the glorified police force role.

I should like to make just one more observation, Mr. Chairman, in reference to the air force. As a former member of that service I should like to point out to the minister that integration in the R.C.A.F. can only be achieved to a limited degree. Certainly you can have integration at the training level. This of course was demonstrated in the early reorganization which took place back in 1957, 1958 and 1959, I believe it was, when all military flying training was taken over by the R.C.A.F., even to the extent of removing the training of air observer pilots from the various Royal Canadian Flying Clubs which had done an excellent job up to that point. But beyond this level the problem becomes rather complicated.

With reference to the CF-5 discussion that is under way in the house and the country at the present time, the surest indication that this plane has deficiencies, which have been pointed out in press comments, is the fact that there is to be no simulator provided for training. The minister likes to use the phrase that weapons systems have become sophisticated and complex. One of the reasons for phasing out air force auxiliary training, for example, was that the planes, weapons systems and techniques had become so sophisticated and complex that it was no longer possible for we reserve types to maintain a level of operational efficiency.

Whatever might be the qualities of the CF-5 aircraft—and the minister, again, has gone into rhapsodies concerning the qualities of this airplane and has been so extravagant in his claim for its merits that I am persuaded to be somewhat suspicious—I have no doubt that some problems do exist in this regard. From my experience any new aircraft, even the old, unsophisticated aircraft of world war II, the introduction of any new aircraft—even a modification or a new mark of an existing aircraft—has always produced a whole new generation of gremlins.

I do not know whether the minister has heard of gremlins, but it would seem to me that the CF-5—and we will no doubt get some further information in the committee on this matter—must be an aircraft that is particularly infested with this mysterious creature.

Coming to the question of the simulator, Mr. Chairman, it is well established in flying training procedures, particularly with the complexities of modern aircraft, that you cannot carry on an adequate training program without some sort of ground simulated training. The very fact that Canada has decided to withdraw from the contract for this simulator would suggest that the Americans have decided that this aircraft is not suitable for operational purposes.

Just a short time ago the Associate Minister of National Defence suggested that many CF-5's had been sold to other countries. If there is such a demand for this aircraft it might still be possible, to proceed with a simulator. You will not achieve an adequate training program if you depend entirely on airborne training procedures. Not only is it expensive but it is highly inefficient, because only on the ground, in a ground trainer or a simulator can you get the controlled situation that is necessary to train aircrew in the first instance and is then necessary to maintain operational efficiency.

Even in world war II, with relatively slow aircraft and relatively unsophisticated techniques, aircrew were not allowed to fly operationally until they had a minimum of one hour in the Link trainer before going on ops. I am referring to night fighter pilots, who had a particularly difficult problem to cope with in terms of instrument flying. But again, we have made such tremendous advances since world war II that I would suggest to the minister that if he persists in going through with the purchase of the CF-5 he should re-examine this question of the availability of a simulator.

To sum up—and I think my time has expired, Mr. Chairman—I should just like to repeat what I said in the opening part of my remarks. I would suggest to the minister that if he wants to overcome the obvious difficulties that prevail in the Department of National Defence at the present time he should give the command structures a chance to gel and work out the kinks before going any further.

• (5:30 p.m.)

Let us lay down some five year plans; let us lay down guide lines. It is not good enough to reorganize armed force headquarters and then give the command to integrate. It is all fine and good to go through the motions of integrating, but you have to provide guide lines, otherwise you get a glorified situation of confusion. You are dealing with human beings who can only adjust at a certain rate of speed. We all know that perhaps the armed forces are a little more rigid in this respect than any other type of human being. You have to take into consideration the psychological factors in the field of human adjustment. I know, as a member of the opposition, that this is a difficulty that has bothered them, that is gnawing away at the members of the armed forces. This is what is destroying the morale of the armed forces at the present time.

The minister made reference yesterday to economy in the armed forces. Perhaps he might find greater success in achieving real economies if consideration were given to managerial systems in connection with budgeting, tendering and the other aspects of defence planning, which obviously have not been under control in years gone by. I need refer only to the Avro fiasco to point out the situation which has prevailed and which no doubt has prevailed up to the present time to a substantial extent. If we are going to have efficient and effective armed forces, we must retain unit spirit; we must retain opportunity for promotion; we must retain opportunity for competition. Otherwise I am afraid the Canadian armed forces are going to decline in efficiency, to degenerate in effectiveness, rather than move forward along the lines that were first contemplated when Hon. George Pearkes set this machinery in operation.

Mr. Brand: I have just a few remarks to make, Mr. Chairman, particularly with regard to the morale problem in the armed services. My comments are not made as a result of information I have received from various assistants. I am speaking now at the request of many members of the armed forces who have approached me personally and expressed their concern about the way things were going in the armed forces today. They themselves offered to me what I thought might be solutions to these problems. If I may be presumptuous, perhaps I could suggest to the minister what the solutions might be.

Primarily, I should like to refer to jet pilots in the Royal Canadian Air Force. I placed question No. 419 on the order paper, which read as follows:

What are the numbers of R.C.A.F. jet pilots under the age of 28, who have retired voluntarily from the R.C.A.F. in each of the following years—

The years mentioned were 1957 to 1965. I think the figures are most interesting. You will notice that in the year 1957, only 4 retired. In the following years there were 3, 1, 8, 7, 6 and 8. In the year 1964, there were 26 who retired. These are highly trained specialized members of the Royal Canadian Air Force who retired voluntarily. They are young men, still under the age of 28. In the year 1965 there were 27 who retired voluntarily. There must be a reason for this. The reason they retire under the age of 28 is that in order to get a job in civilian aviation in the United States, where most of them have gone, they have to be under the age of 28.

I spoke to many of these pilots and asked them why they were leaving the Royal Canadian Air Force. The first thing they said was they liked the Royal Canadian Air Force; they enjoyed the life. However, they were concerned about the security of their tenure. Many pilots had been retired by the minister, at the minister's orders, as I understand. These pilots wondered whether they could get a permanent commission in the force. They never received a positive answer. They did not know whether they were still going to be pilots when they were in their thirties.

If they were let out of the air force when they were in their thirties, what would happen? They would be out in civilian life with no job, and there would be no job for which they were qualified. They would be too old to go into the field of flying passengers for large air lines, unless they were exceptional. The average man is just too old for this work. He has had tremendous training which I understand costs, if I heard the minister correctly, between $200,000 and $250,000. If we lose to the United States 26 pilots, each of whom was trained at this cost, then we have lost $7½ million or more to the United States.

When I heard that they did not have training which they could use in civilian life, I asked these pilots what they felt should be done. They had what I thought was a very good solution. They suggested that perhaps their training could be tied to a university, which it most certainly is in the type of work they do in the aeronautical engineering field, and while they were training with the air force they could receive a degree from some affiliated university.

Then, if these men were retired at an early age from the R.C.A.F. they would have a degree with which they could approach prospective employers and obtain a job in this manner. There is a precedence for this in the armed forces colleges which grant degrees in engineering and so on. I feel the idea has some merit, Mr. Minister, and I should like the ministry to look into this matter, and particularly to discuss it with the men who are thinking of leaving. Perhaps these discussions would be most revealing.

When I heard the associate minister refer to the increased number of voluntary releases over the past few years from all the forces, and attribute this to increasing opportunities for employment in the country, I began to wonder if that was not more the type of statement a person would make on the hustings before an election campaign. It seems to me that directly tied with that statement is the opposite one that by virtue of their training they are unable to get employment in civilian life.

Today we heard the associate minister say there are increased re-employment opportunities. I have talked to members of the Royal Canadian Navy and the Army and I have asked them why they left the forces. Their reason was dissatisfaction with what is going on; they did not know what the future held for them. Believe you me, Mr. Minister, if this is not a morale problem I do not know what else you could call it. There is something very wrong indeed when there is this sort of increase in voluntary releases, as the associate minister pointed out.

• (5:40 p.m.)

There is one other point I should like to make. Both ministers have commented on the tremendous economies effected as a result of this integration of the armed forces. I am sure there are many areas in the armed forces which for many years have required integration. I certainly agree with this and the general tenor of what has been done.

However, when I look at the estimates at page 252, it seems to me, though I am not a chartered accountant and perhaps cannot understand this, that instead of a decrease in 1965-66 over 1964-65 there are increases all the way down. I see one decrease, and that is with respect to mutual aid.

I would ask, what about this efficiency we keep hearing about? I also see a decrease in pensions, due to efficiency I presume. But in every other item there is an increase, with perhaps one exception. The amount of money paid for the permanent personnel of the army has increased, and the navy is about the same. If I remember correctly, the amount to the air force has gone down, which is directly related, I presume, to the number who have left the air force as a result of voluntary release and other releases practised by the minister in his wisdom.

I would ask the minister whether he would consider looking very carefully once again at the loss of these highly trained personnel. I do not think the Canadian tax dollar should be used to provide men to fly aeroplanes in any other country than our own. This is something that I am sorry to say extends to other fields in our country as well as national defence; but surely it is something to which we should not turn a blind eye. I suggest we examine this problem as closely as possible to see what we can do to retain these highly trained people. Although the re-engagement bonus is a wonderful idea—and I agree with the hon. member for Victoria (B.C.) that it is not enough—this is surely closing the stable door after the horse is stolen.

I should like the minister to look into the reasons for this and perhaps come up with some conclusion which would be to the benefit of all armed forces in Canada today.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to speak at any length but I do want to express our point of view on one or two matters.

First of all, the minister's defence policy reflects our Canadian foreign policy, and he has to adjust his defence policy to our foreign policy. To that extent his hands are tied, and we know it. We give the minister full credit for any savings accomplished as the result of integration, changing circumstances in the world today, improvements in technology and customs, and so on.

However, from our point of view the formulation of defence policy for Canada is more difficult than it is for many countries. Our defence policy, as we see it, in some respects does not add to our national security.

I want to bring to the attention of the minister an article I read recently in the Globe Magazine written by Professor Eayrs, an economist at Toronto University. I suggest the minister would be well advised to read it, because there are some good suggestions in this article, some of them critical of the defence department's policies. I think there is a great deal of thought behind it.

I might say that in conversations I have had with people I have met who are interested in our foreign policy, our defence policy and so on, there has been growing criticism of the amount of our expenditures on defence at this time—the expenditure in our budget which has been going directly for military purposes and which is not being used in other directions.

This article is entitled "Canada's military establishment: a waste of money?" Then there is the subheading:

> Politics, rather than strategy, has guided the nation's defence policies, says a political economist who suggests military spending could be cut by two thirds.

I should just like to quote two or three paragraphs from this article; I hope the minister will read the rest of it.

> I began by stating that the formulation of national security policy is made more difficult for Canada than for most other countries by the fact that what we do in the name of our own security demonstrably does not contribute to our security. Our contribution to North American defence has been undertaken largely for political reasons, and has had less to do with Canadian-Soviet relations than with Canadian-American relations: moreover, our contribution has been marginal throughout most of the past and, citing McNamara's testimony, is likely to become less significant in future, as the threat of bomber attack recedes and as anti-ballistic missile defences are perfected. Our contribution to Western European defence is largely symbolic—

I have heard similar statements made by persons well acquainted with military affairs in Europe.

—and its rationale must be provided by a series of arguments which can hardly be tested and never be proven. The use to which we might put our military establishment in maintaining order along the peripheries is severely restricted both by our own internal inhibitions and by developments in the environment of interposition over which we have no control.

Then he goes on to say:

My own feeling is that we have been paying too much for it—much too much. I would think that a really ruthless Minister of National Defence could justify a military establishment for Canada costing no more than about one third of its present annual upkeep—about $500 million—without worrying that his countrymen would fall prey to aggressors as a result.

Then he goes on to develop his argument.

So that there is no misunderstanding as to what is our policy in this respect, I wish to quote what it is. The minister will understand that I am quoting the New Democratic party policy with respect to defence. I am going to refer to the program which was adopted at our August 4, 1961 convention, at the Regina convention in August 1963, and of course carried on to our last convention. This is what our program says:

NATO has played its part in the maintenance of west European security. However, it has concentrated on a military role and has failed to adapt its policies to the growing importance of the economic and social front in the present world struggle. The New Democratic party believes that we should seek a reappraisal and change of NATO's policies and objectives.

The New Democratic party believes that the extension of nuclear weapons to any further states and alliances threatens disaster to the world. It therefore opposes Canada's troops being supplied with such weapons at home or abroad. At present, except for those nations which have independently developed atomic capacity, neither NATO itself nor its members individually possess or control nuclear warheads. Should they do so, Canada, must make it clear that it cannot remain in the alliance. To relieve tensions, Canada should press for a demilitarized zone in central Europe and for the simultaneous disbandment of the Warsaw and NATO pacts.

That is the position of this party with respect to our continued support of NATO. I presume the minister will agree that NATO is a nuclear power or component part. I see the minister nods his head.

[Mr. Herridge.]

Mr. Hellyer: It is a nuclear-armed alliance.

• (5:50 p.m.)

Mr. Herridge: Yes, I think that is a better description. I understand his position in view of these changing developments.

Then we go on with the other questions relating to our policy. We are told that the New Democratic government will make a general and searching reappraisal of Canada's defence role. Much of the money which Canada now allocates to defence could better be spent on providing such conventional troops and civilian personnel as the United Nations may require, and on aiding underdeveloped countries.

We believe in maintaining efficient defence forces in Canada, to provide for the defence of this country. We also think that we can provide troops that should be utilized by the United Nations anywhere in the world, with the transport that should be necessary, and other materiel and equipment that might be required. We also would agree to our naval forces being used in patrol of the seas, off both our coasts.

Then we go on with the question of NORAD. I am quoting from the New Democratic party program, page 51 which reads as follows:

It is questionable whether NORAD ever made any significant contribution to the defence of Canada and in any case it has outlived its usefulness. Furthermore, there is every danger that the Bomarcs will be equipped with nuclear warheads. The NORAD agreements should therefore be terminated.

That is the attitude of the New Democratic party with respect to NORAD. I continue to quote:

The New Democratic party demands an immediate ban on nuclear tests, both to avoid the dangerous effects of fall-out and as a first step toward nuclear disarmament.

Then we go on to deal with it.

We believe that that should be our defence policy. I fully admit that the minister has to give effect to a defence policy which reflects foreign policy, because he knows that we stand for an independent foreign policy for Canada which is western oriented. We believe that we can make a worth-while contribution to the development of peace in the world by providing what we would term the police force necessary to police the world. I think my hon. friend from Brandon-Souris rather objected to the words "police force". We will be very happy if we can refer to the forces of the United Nations being used as police forces anywhere in the world, rather than as armies, navies, and air forces.

In addition, I understand that we ought to be able to save our present costs of maintaining our forces in NATO, which I understand amounts to $500 million a year. Is that correct, sir?

Mr. Hellyer: I should not want to comment on the figure.

Mr. Herridge: The minister does not want to comment.

Mr. Hellyer: It depends how you apportion it.

Mr. Herridge: I used the figures that I read. However, here we are denying to our old age pensioners an increase of $25 a month.

We are very concerned about the education of our young people. We, in the New Democratic party, suggest that we could use this approximate sum of $500 million a year for those purposes. In addition to that, other savings could be effected. These could be achieved by a change in the requirements for foreign forces and defence policy, to provide greater economic aid to those areas that require it throughout the world.

Mr. Churchill: Would the hon. member permit a question? He used the phrase, that there would be a savings of $500 million a year. I suggest that no actual saving is to be effected anywhere. Did the hon. member not mean that the defence estimates might be reduced by that amount and be available for these other purposes?

Mr. Herridge: Yes, possibly I did not use the correct words. The reduction of $500 million could be applied to the uses I have suggested. Of course there would be other savings brought about by reduced need for expensive equipment, such as landing ships, and so on, for which at present we have to pay. That would be reduced by a certain proportion.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak briefly on the minister's estimates presently before the house. In his opening remarks he used, in effect, these words: The fact that our progress toward a completely unified force is well in advance of what might be hoped for reflects the spirit of enthusiasm in our task which has been undertaken. It is evident, Mr. Chairman, that this spirit of enthusiasm is not shared by the enlisted personnel of our armed forces as evidenced by the manner in which they are presently forsaking the services. I would say to the minister that his program has not been one of integration, but one of interruption or, as my colleague suggests, one of disintegration. We have had interruption of the planned program in the navy. We have had interruption of personnel enlistment. We have had interruption of the role of the Royal Canadian Air Force, as the supporter of Canada's mobile defence force. I believe that Canadians generally are beginning to wonder just what is happening in our defence department.

For example, no keel has been laid for a service vessel since the minister introduced what is commonly called in Nova Scotia the "Hellyer plan". He has yet to produce one practical alternative for defence in mine warfare. He started a program to cut back personnel, which snowballed to the extent that our services are now suffering from manning problems. As a result we see him introducing a re-enlistment bonus program. I am pleased to note this, because I would point out to the minister that this was proposed by the Progressive Conservative party when we met at Moncton, prior to the election of 1965. We are happy to endorse this. I think it will be helpful. I am glad to see that the minister has adopted in one of his policies something previously advocated by Progressive Conservatives.

Under the economical guidance of the minister the department made a decision to buy 125 improved versions of the Northrop CF-5. This, I understand, will be the R.C.A.F.'s new multipurpose aircraft which will be acquired at a cost of $215 million to the Canadian taxpayers.

Just how good is this aircraft? In a recent exchange with the Associate Minister of National Defence in regard to this subject I learned that this aircraft is to be modified. Apparently there is need for a great many improvements. We are told that the United States defence department rejected this aircraft after carrying out extensive proving trials with a number of them. The faults listed were not all in keeping with Canada's international or intended role, for which purpose this aircraft is being bought.

The CF-5 is intended for deployment anywhere in the world in support of Canada's mobile defence forces. However, according to all reports it is difficult to refuel this aircraft in flight. Four of these aircraft made the trip from the United States to Iran, taking eight days in transit, with ten refuelling stops.

The minister and the Associate Minister of National Defence have stated that this aircraft can take off from short clearings in fields. However, I am informed that because of its underslung bomb load, necessitating a perfect runway, it requires greater length of runway than an Air Canada DC-8 jet. Even operating from perfect airfields, which might be few and far between in brush-fire wars, the aircraft is limited, with a moderate bomb load, to a range of 180 miles.

The Minister of National Defence has been careful to deny that at the present time there is a problem respecting morale in his department. However, the numbers of men receiving discharge in the last 18 months, being some 13,142 who have retired from the defence forces prior to normal retirement age, would indicate that he has been singularly successful in producing rivalries long forgotten in the Canadian services. His policies have caused discontent among the troops. He has disrupted planned programs in the navy, setting construction back by at least five years, with no clear objective. He has generally made so many serious errors in judgment, such as the retirement of 500 pilots who now are required by the Royal Canadian Air Force, that there seems little reason, except the old school tie, for him to hold his post.

It is readily understandable that the navy, in the Atlantic provinces, and especially in Nova Scotia is our prime concern. However, what did the minister do? He cancelled the general purpose frigate program and then, many months later, he produced another, smaller construction program. But to date no action has been taken.

In his so-called wisdom he decided a minesweeping capability was not required by the R.C.N., so he mothballed every minesweeper in the fleet. I ask him this: What alternative is he going to introduce in place of these minesweepers? It is true that if he keeps on at this present pace it may well be that Canada will not have any navy to protect against mines. But we do have a large and growing wooden and steel fishing fleet, and in time of war these ships would be entitled to some protection, if they are to be expected to continue producing food for the nation.

The minister stated today that our six squadrons in Germany will be fully operational in the non-nuclear attack role as well as in the nuclear strike role. However, I think he should give us a clear explanation of what is being done in support of our NATO requirements. Does this mean we have now gone full cycle and become a non-nuclear power? Will the Bomarcs in Canada be scrapped, or will this arrangement be expanded, with Canada becoming part of an anti-missile missile system?

There are many other questions I could put to the minister but I see it is six o'clock. I hope he will answer some of those I have been able to pose during the short period of time at my disposal.

Mr. Nowlan: May I call it six o'clock?

Mr. Hellyer: I understood there was some general feeling that we might finish tonight —that it had been discussed earlier.

Mr. Churchill: Misinformed.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence about the business for Monday. I understand there will be a continuation of discussion of the estimates of the Department of National Defence followed then or later by the estimates of the Department of Justice. Is that correct?

Mr. Hellyer: Yes, that is the intention, if that is agreeable to the committee.

It being six minutes past six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, February 21, 1966

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

OBJECTIONS RESPECTING PROPOSED DISTRICTS IN ONTARIO AND QUEBEC

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty to inform the house that seven objections have been filed with me pursuant to section 20 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, chapter 31, Statutes of Canada, 1964-65 with respect to the reports of the electoral boundaries commissions about the following ridings:

(a) Saint-Henri—signed by the hon. member for Sainte-Anne and other hon. members;

(b) Maisonneuve—signed by the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont and other hon. members;

(c) Ottawa-Carleton—signed by the hon. member for Russell and other hon. members;

(d) Wentworth—signed by the hon. member for Wentworth and other hon. members.

(e) Rimouski—signed by the hon. member for Pontiac-Témiscamingue and other hon. members;

(f) Beauharnois, Chambly, Laprairie, Longueuil and Saint-Jean—signed by the hon. member for Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie and other hon. members;

(g) All ridings in the province of Quebec—signed by the hon. member for Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie and other hon. members.

If the house will agree, I suggest that we again follow the procedure already used during this session so that the text of the objections, together with the names of the members who signed them in each case will be printed as appendices to Votes and Proceedings for this day. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

THE LATE HON. PAUL COMTOIS

EXPRESSIONS OF SYMPATHY ON DEATH OF LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR OF QUEBEC

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sure all hon. members of the house were deeply grieved this morning to learn of the tragic death of the Queen's representative in the province of Quebec, Hon. Paul Comtois, made all the more tragic because of the shocking circumstances of his passing. I am sure all hon. members would wish their sympathy to be extended through you, Mr. Speaker, to Madame Comtois and the members of her family.

Many of us here knew Mr. Comtois, particularly during the years when he was a member of this house and Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys in the government of my right hon. friend the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker). He was a man of kindliness, courtesy and quiet effectiveness in his work, and he was liked and admired by all who knew him.

His public service to his community, to his province and to his country, particularly to the rural population of the province of Quebec, was long and varied; as an agronomist, as mayor for many years of his parish, general manager of the Quebec Farm Credit Union, member of parliament, cabinet minister, and since October 1961 lieutenant governor of his province.

It is always sad, Mr. Speaker, when a distinguished and fruitful career is suddenly ended. It is doubly sad when it ends in such tragic circumstances. So we lament the passing of a good man and an unselfish and devoted public servant.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, Hon. Paul Comtois was, as the Prime Minister said, a man of unusual courtesy and kindness. He was a man of great dedication, a worthy representative not only as a minister of the crown but also as lieutenant-governor of his province.

I recall very well the first mention to him that his name might be considered. The ministers of the crown and members of the then opposition were on the way back from Quebec following the funeral of Hon. Onésime Gagnon, who had just passed away. When a lieutenant-governor dies the appointment of a successor cannot be delayed. The appointment must be immediate, otherwise the business of government within a province ends, there being no means whereby an administrator or enacting official can be appointed.

The Late Hon. Paul Comtois

I was naturally wondering who could fill this position in a manner that would bring honour to it. His name came to mind and I spoke with him. He immediately said he could not believe that he would be considered capable, or as possessing those qualities necessary in a lieutenant-governor. I indicated, as the Prime Minister just has, that no one had greater interest in the field of agriculture than did Hon. Paul Comtois combining also qualities of deep humanity, personal sympathy, understanding, loyalty and courage.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, Hon. Paul Comtois was my friend. I have always had great admiration for him and held him in high regard.

His sudden and tragic death plunges us all in grief, and for his family, his province and his country, this is an irretrievable loss.

[English]

We mourn his passing. We who knew him in the House of Commons knew something of the depth of his humanity. The Prime Minister's tribute is not merely a formal one but represents the feelings of all who were honoured to know him in life.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the members of the New Democratic Party join with members of all parties in this house in expressing their deep regret at the unfortunate tragedy which has caused the death of the Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec, Hon. Paul Comtois. He had the distinction of serving in this house as a minister of the crown and more recently as the Queen's representative in Quebec. It is unfortunate that his career should have been cut off in so tragic a manner.

During almost every week in Canada there are fires which take the lives of men, women and children. It is only when some exalted personage has lost his life in such a tragedy that it is brought home to us just how many of these fires there are, and how many lives are lost. I hope this tragedy will have some effect on the public. I hope there will be greater demand for more stringent application of fire regulations throughout Canada, because of these tragic losses that happen so frequently and so unnecessarily.

Mr. Speaker, the members of this party would like to convey through you, sir, their deepest sympathy to Madame Comtois, her family, and to his former colleagues in this house on the loss of a good friend and a distinguished Canadian.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, Hon. Paul Comtois was favourably known in the province of Quebec and throughout Canada because of his numerous activities in the interest of his fellow-citizens. He had everyone's esteem and all were his friends. In the province of Quebec, he discharged the duties of lieutenant-governor admirably well and to everyone's satisfaction.

We, in this corner of the house, offer our condolences to the members of the family of the former lieutenant-governor of Quebec. The tragedy which occurred in Quebec last night will remain present in our memories for a long time.

[English]

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, both personally and on behalf of the members of the Social Credit party, may I say that we join with the other members of this house in expressing our sorrow and regret at the passing of the Lieutenant Governor of Quebec.

We regret that a public official of his stature and calibre should be removed from the scene of duty in such unfortunate circumstances. To Madame Comtois, his widow, to the members of his family, to the government and people of Quebec, we extend our sincere sympathy and join with all hon. members in expressing our sorrow at the loss of a lieutenant governor who has served the Canadian people so well.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING GROUNDS FOR DISSOLUTION

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-127, to amend the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1965 (grounds for dissolution).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Aiken: The main purpose of this bill is to provide that following a general election parliament shall continue for a period of four years except where the government has been defeated on a general vote of non-confidence.

I gave a fuller explanation in my remarks during the debate on the address on January 31, as reported at page 448 and subsequent pages of Hansard.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

AMENDMENT EXTENDING BENEFITS TO PRESENT PENSIONERS

Mr. Steven Otto (York East) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-128, to amend the Canada Pension Plan (provision for retired persons).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Otto: I need not explain to you, Mr. Speaker, or to anyone in this house the extreme hardship which is faced by old people who are living on their present pensions.

Mr. Knowles: How did you vote?

Mr. Otto: The purpose of this bill is to entitle all pensioners to take advantage of the Canada Pension Plan and to get the benefit of the plan immediately.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING PEACEFUL PICKETING

Mr. David Lewis (York South) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-129, to amend the Criminal Code (modernization of law of picketing).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, this a proposed amendment to section 366 of the Criminal Code which is intended to make peaceful picketing by any numbers lawful, and to make clear that picketers may also seek to persuade others to assist them in their cause in the case of a strike, rather than merely conveying information.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Guy Williams, 194 Hastings, Vancouver, 4, B.C. Mr. Gus Gottfriedson, Box 27, Kamloops, B.C. Mrs. Laura Williams, Box 61, Harrison Mills, B.C.

3. Elections for the representatives were completed on May 31, 1965, and the term of office is for three years.

4. For the purpose of forming the council, five zones were designated in the province of British Columbia with one representative to be elected by the band councils in each zone. The Yukon Territory was also designated as a zone with one representative elected by the Band councils in the Territory. In addition, each of the two major Indian associations in British Columbia was asked to appoint a representative to the council. The ninth member of the council is chosen by the Indian homemakers' clubs in the province.

WILLOW COVE, N.S.—EXPENDITURE ON DEVELOPMENT

Question No. 86—Mr. Crouse:

1. What is the total cost of federal participation in the development of Willow Cove, Queens county, Nova Scotia?
2. How much of the above amount was spent on wharves or breakwater construction?
3. How much of the above amount was spent on dredging Willow Cove?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Departments of Public Works and Transport as follows: In so far as the Department of Public Works is concerned:

1. The total cost to date is $554,000.
2. $46,000.

3. $508,000.

In so far as the Department of Transport is concerned: The Atlantic Development Board has been authorized to provide financial assistance from the Atlantic development fund in the amount of $150,000 for site preparation including cribwork and retaining wall at Willow Cove, Queens county, Nova Scotia. No contracts have been awarded and no money spent.

AIR TRANSPORT OCCUPANCY RATES

Question No. 138—Mr. Mather:

1. What was the occupancy rate of Air Canada and Canadian Pacific Air Lines seats on domestic flights during 1963, 1964 and 1965?

2. Is consideration being given by Air Canada to reduce fares for persons 12 to 21 years of age?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. (a) The management of Air Canada advises as follows: The occupancy rate, i.e., passenger load factor for Air Canada on domestic flights: 1963, 60.9 per cent; 1964, 63.2 per cent; 1965, 65.8 per cent. (b) The Air Transport Board advises as follows: The over-all occupancy rates (i.e., passenger load factors) for Canadian Pacific Air Lines' domestic services, calculated from data filed with the board by C.P.A., i.e., passenger miles divided by available seat miles, were as follows: 1963, 61.7 per cent; 1964, 61.9 per cent; 1965 (Jan.-Oct.), 60.9 per cent.

2. Air Canada is not considering, at this time, reduced fares for persons 12 to 21 years of age.

BONDED STORAGE, HALIFAX AIRPORT

Question No. 155—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Has Air Canada or any agency of government or the government itself, given any consideration to the provision of suitable "bonded" storage space at the Halifax international airport?

2. If so, what has been the result of such considerations?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Departments of National Revenue and Transport as follows. In so far as the customs and excise division is concerned:

1. No.

2. N. A.

In so far as the Department of Transport is concerned:

1 and 2. Air freight and express arriving at Halifax "In Bond" is either transferred to "bonded" storage in the city or delivered to the customer on a "standing order" issued by the city customs. The customer is thus permitted to take immediate delivery of his goods at the airport and file his entry at a later time with the city customs office.

The volume of "bonded" cargo at present being received at Halifax airport does not require immediate expansion of facilities available but the matter is being kept under review.

For passengers and their baggage, of course, the complete "international arrivals" section of the terminal is in effect a "bonded" area where goods or persons arriving are cleared through customs control.

COMMISSION ON BILINGUALISM AND BICULTURALISM

Question No. 160—Mr. Coates:

1. What has been the cost to date of the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism?

2. What was the cost of the last series of meetings held by this commission?

3. What is the final estimated cost of this commission?

Mr. John R. Matheson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): I am informed by the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism as follows: 1. Expenditures to date (as of December 31, 1965) $3,538,523.70.

2. The cost of the last series of meetings of the commission (Ottawa, January 12, 13 and 14, 1966) was $3,183.70.

3. No final estimates are possible at this time.

MARITIME MARSHLANDS OFFICE, AMHERST, N.S.

Question No. 208—Mr. Coates:

1. What is the total staff of the M.M.R.A. office at Amherst, N.S.?

2. How many additional individuals will join the staff as a regional office under ARDA?

3. Will there be any significant change in the type of program developed through this office and, if so, what?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry): 1. 33.

2. 8.

3. The establishment of an Atlantic regional office of rural development and the joining of the programs and agreements under the Maritime Marshland and Rehabilitation Act and under the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act will result in: (1) The integration of the present M.M.R.A. organization and staff within the regional rural development office. (2) Provide for a closer working relationship with the provincial authorities which will result in expediting the planning, approval and implementation of programs and projects.

The programs under the two acts will be joined together to effectively complement one another in the regional rural development program.

FOREIGN INVESTMENTS IN CANADA

Question No. 230—Mr. Allard:

1. What was the value of foreign investments in Canada in 1963, 1964 and 1965 and what were their sources?

2. For 1963, 1964 and 1965, what was the value of loans obtained on foreign financial markets by municipal and provincial governments and the federal government and commercial enterprises, and on what foreign markets were such loans made?

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): 1. Foreign long-term investments in Canada at the end of 1962 had a book value of $24,729 million of which 77 per cent was owned by residents of the United States, 14 per cent by residents of the United Kingdom and 9 per cent by residents of other countries.

Later comprehensive estimates have not been completed. During the two-year period 1963-1964—$415 million, $69 million and $51 million flowed into Canada from the United States, the United Kingdom and other countries respectively for direct investment in foreign controlled concerns, and $1,327 million for the net acquisition of portfolio Canadian stocks and bonds by residents of the United States against which there were outflows of $128 million and $5 million for the net repurchases of such securities from the United Kingdom and other overseas countries respectively. The increase in the value of foreign-owned investments in Canada would be larger because of retained earnings.

In the first nine months of 1965 the net inflows from all countries for direct investment and for the acquisition of Canadian securities amounted to $290 million and $428 million respectively.

2. See statement attached.

Value of loans obtained on foreign financial markets[1] [2]

	Country	Market	1963	1964	1965
			—($'000 Canadian)—

Notes:

(1) Source of information: Bank of Canada Statistical Summary—January 1966.

(2) The amounts shown represent gross new issues denominated in foreign currencies, which closely approximate loans obtained on foreign financial markets.

(3) 1965 data covers period ending November 30, 1965.

(4) 1965 data covers period ending September 30, 1965.

ASSISTANCE TO WORKSHOPS FOR MENTALLY RETARDED

Question No. 245—Mr. Brand:

1. Does the government plan to introduce legislation this session to provide capital and operational assistance to sheltered workshops for the mentally handicapped throughout Canada?

2. If so, will provision be made for all levels of mental retardation, or will the legislation be limited to those who with training may achieve normal or near normal levels of production?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Department of Citizenship and Immigration as follows: 1. Operational assistance is already being provided to a number of sheltered workshops for the mentally handicapped under the federal-provincial vocational rehabilitation and vocational training programs. Various ways by which additional assistance may be provided to sheltered workshops have been suggested and are being considered. Any decisions of government policy will be announced, when appropriate, in the normal way.

2. Not applicable.

Questions

REPLY RESPECTING WHALE RIVER INDIANS

Question No. 287—Mr. Howard:

Did the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources receive a letter dated January 21, 1966, from one V. Skerl relating to one Josie Tokalook, one Kenny White, and two Indian people from Whale River and, if so, what reply, by direct quotation therefrom, was given?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Yes; Mrs. V. Skerl was informed that: Josie Tookalook is an Eskimo living at Great Whale River in the province of Quebec. He was charged with an offence under the Criminal Code. As you know the responsibility for the enforcement of the Criminal Code rests with the province. In accordance with the practice throughout Canada Mr. Tookalook's case was heard in the provincial court. This procedure is also followed throughout Canada with regard to any case involving infraction of the Criminal Code by an Indian person. There is no change of jurisdiction involved. This has always been the practice. Kenny White is not of Indian status and I am unable, therefore, to pass any comment. Rednose and Lucassi—Two cases from Great Whale area "These two cases involve mental illness and the arrangements made for their protection are the responsibility of the Department of National Health and Welfare. I have referred your letter to my colleague the Honourable Allan J. MacEachen for attention."

* SAFETY FEATURES IN AUTOMOBILES

Question No. 288—Mr. Grafftey:

1. For the protection of the Canadian public has any governmental authority in Canada drafted a code of minimum safety standards relating to safety features which must be included in cars at the production level and for the use of the public in general?

2. What governmental authority in Canada, if any, exercises active control over the automobile industry relating to the safer production of cars and relative to the inclusion of scientifically proven safety features as standard equipment in all cars produced in or imported into Canada?

3. If such a governmental authority exists, in what manner has it exercised its authority in the past ten years?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, the answer to this question is in three parts.

1. In so far as the government of Canada is concerned there is an automotive vehicle safety code being developed which will be made up of sections dealing with the human factor, the vehicle and the environment. Preparation of the code has been assigned to the Canadian government specifications board, which will undertake this work in co-operation with officials of provincial governments and interested industrial, professional, technical, safety and research organizations. It is proposed to give a high priority to the vehicle section, but the sections dealing with the human and environmental factors will be proceeded with simultaneously.

The code will contain information on characteristics of drivers and roads which are related to accident frequency. The vehicle section will contain information, including standards to govern safety features, which is intended to reduce the number of accidents and to reduce the severity of injuries when accidents do occur. It is anticipated that the code will influence the development of safer automobiles. It could also serve as the basis for achieving uniformity of vehicle legislation and regulations.

2. None.

3. Not applicable.

* SAFETY FEATURES IN MOTOR CARS

Question No. 290—Mr. Grafftey:

1. Has the government any statistics indicating the number of deaths and injuries caused by rear-end collisions and the propulsion of tools, jacks, etc., from the trunk into the back seat of the car and, if so, have any steps been taken to eliminate the use of cardboard or similar material to separate the trunk from the back seat in any 1966 model cars produced or imported into Canada?

2. Has the government determined whether all currently popular 1966 hardtop model cars produced in or imported into Canada have been so engineered that three-point shoulder harnesses can be properly installed and moored to the frame of the car and, if not, what government agency is responsible for the safety inspection of such cars?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): 1. The Dominion Bureau of Statistics report that statistics of this nature are not available.

2. The government has not determined whether all currently popular 1966 hardtop model cars produced in or imported into Canada have been so engineered that three-point shoulder harnesses can be properly installed and moored to the frame of the car. However, one Canadian manufacturer does provide anchorage points and the system used by this manufacturer could be adapted to any "hardtop." There is no federal government agency charged specifically with the responsibility of inspection of cars for safety.

APPLICATION OF SALES TAX ON BUILDING MATERIALS

Question No. 292—Mr. Godin:

What products, manufactured in Canada, are affected by the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue): All building materials manufactured or produced in Canada are subject to the 11 per cent sales tax with the exception of those listed in schedule III of the Excise Tax Act, i.e., crushed stone, crushed gravel, sand, gravel, rubble and field stone. The goods listed in section 29(2b) of the act are not subject to sales tax on the manufacturer's sale price but sales tax applies only with respect to the materials used in their manufacture or production. In addition, bona fide public hospitals and provincial government departments may purchase taxable building materials for their own use and not for resale without payment of sales tax. Under sections 47 and 47A of the act, certain institutions, such as homes for the aged, educational institutions and organizations operating public libraries, may obtain refund of the sales tax paid on materials used in the construction of their buildings.

ROYAL COMMISSION ON CRIME

Question No. 296—Mr. Allard:

Does the government intend to create a royal commission on organized crime and on its causes?

[Translation]

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Minister of Justice): No.

[English]

ASSISTANCE FOR SHELTERED WORKSHOPS

Question No. 325—Mr. Rapp:

Is it the intention of the government to propose legislation during this session of parliament which would provide assistance for capital and operational costs for sheltered workshops for the mentally handicapped?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Department of Citizenship and Immigration as follows: Operational assistance is already being provided to a number of sheltered workshops for the mentally handicapped under the federal-provincial vocational rehabilitation and vocational training programs. The government is giving consideration to various ways by which additional assistance may be provided to rehabilitation for the mentally and physically disabled. Any decisions of government policy will be announced, when appropriate, in the normal way.

Questions

* GUISEPPE COTRONI, KINGSTON PENITENTIARY

Question No. 341—Mr. Coates:

1. Is Guiseppe Cotroni an inmate of the federal penitentiary at Kingston, Ontario, and, if so, what was he convicted of and what is the length of his sentence?

2. If Guiseppe Cotroni is an inmate of the penitentiary, has he ever been permitted to leave Kingston penitentiary since entering that institution to attend any personal functions on compassionate or other grounds and, if so, on what dates and for what reasons?

3. If Guiseppe Cotroni was allowed to attend any personal functions on parole, was he allowed to leave unattended or under escort?

4. Has any request been made for his parole and, if so, under whose authority was parole granted?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the answer to this question is as follows: Yes, Guiseppe Cotroni was convicted of trafficking in narcotics and sentenced to ten years imprisonment and to an additional seven years consecutive for receiving stolen goods.

The answer to part 2 is yes, on Friday and Saturday, September 18 and 19, 1964, pursuant to section 26 of the Penitentiary Act, to attend the wake of his mother.

The answer to part 3 is, Guiseppe Cotroni was not allowed to attend any personal function whilst on parole, but was at all times under escort.

The answer to part 4 is yes, a request for parole was made on behalf of Guiseppe Cotroni but it was refused by the national parole board.

FAMILY ALLOWANCES

Question No. 343—Mr. Godin:

1. What was the amount spent by the government in 1945 for the payment of family allowances?

2. How many children were eligible in 1945 to receive family allowances?

3. What was the amount spent by the government in 1965 for the payment of family allowances?

4. How many children were eligible in 1965 to receive family allowances?

5. What is the percentage increase in the cost of living from 1945 to date?

6. What is the percentage increase of family allowances, from 1945 to date?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Departments of National Health and Welfare and Trade and Commerce as follows:

1. $113,934,820.

2. As at December 31, 1945—3,261,732.

3. $550,571,248.

4. As at December 31, 1965—6,849,095.

5. The consumer price index (1949=100) increased from 75.0 in 1945 to 140.8 at the beginning of December 1965, an increase of 87.7 per cent.

6. The percentage increase in the average allowance per family as between December 1945 and December 1965 is 11.5 per cent. The percentage increase in the average allowance per child as between December 1945 and December 1965 is 9.4 per cent.

OFFICE STAFF, MINES MINISTER

Question 353—Mr. Coates:

1. When the present Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys took office, who were the members of the staff of the minister's office?

2. Were any of such staff removed and for what reasons in each case?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): 1. When the present Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys took office, the following were the members of the staff of Hon. J. Watson MacNaught: Mr. J. P. MacInnis, Executive assistant; Mr. O. J. Troy, Special assistant; Mrs. Regan Copp, Private secretary; Mrs. Marcelle Mihm, Assistant private secretary; Miss M. A. Giroux, Assistant private secretary; Mr. A. Sonier, Principal clerk; Mrs. Madeleine Logan, Clerk 4; Mrs. E. T. Larmour, Typist 3.

2. Section 71 of the Civil Service Act reads as follows:

"71 (2)—A person who is employed in the office of the minister ceases to be employed when the person holding the position of such minister ceases to hold that position." In effect, therefore, none of the staff referred to above were removed by the minister—their employment had terminated with the departure of the previous minister.

Here is the present position of individuals previously on the staff of Hon. J. Watson MacNaught:

Mr. J. P. MacInnis, No information. Mr. O. J. Troy, Temporarily employed as special assistant to the minister. Mrs. Regan Copp, With the office of Hon. R. Winters. Mrs. Marcelle Mihm, Retained as associate private secretary to the minister. Miss M. A. Giroux, Working elsewhere in the minister's department. Mrs. M. Logan, Retained as clerk in minister's office. Mrs. E. T. Larmour, Working elsewhere in minister's department. Mr. E. Sonier, No information.

POST OFFICE BUILDING, IONA, N.S.

Question No. 369—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

1. What are the plans of the government for the construction of a new post office building at Iona, Nova Scotia?

[Miss LaMarsh.]

2. Will it be constructed during the present winter works program and, if so, how soon will the construction commence?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): 1 and 2. The post office at Iona, N.S., is in the category of offices where the postmaster is normally responsible for the provision of suitable accommodation as a condition of employment. There are no plans for the construction of a post office building as this location is not in an area designated by the Department of Labour as one of high winter unemployment.

USE OF STILBESTROL

Question No. 371—Mr. Rynard:

1. What are the regulations on the feeding of stilbestrol to animals that are for human consumption?

2. Is there any licensing arrangement to firms who feed it?

3. Are the carcasses so marked?

4. Are there any suspected ill-effects from the consumption of meat from animals that were fed stilbestrol?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Departments of Agriculture and National Health and Welfare as follows: In so far as Department of Agriculture is concerned:

1. Feeds containing diethylstilbestrol are regulated under the Feeds Act. Such feeds, in order to be registered for sale, may contain only an amount of diethylstilbestrol that when fed according to label directions, will result a daily intake of 10 milligrams per head in the case of beef animals and 2 milligrams per head in the case of lambs. Labels must carry warnings that the feed must not be given within 48 hours of slaughter and that swine should not be allowed to follow medicated animals because of diethylstilbestrol in the droppings. Warnings not to feed to breeding stock or milking cows are also required on the labels. Before registration is granted the manufacturer must establish his proficiency to manufacture the feed with the prescribed diethylstilbestrol concentration. No other feed may contain diethylstilbestrol.

2. No.

3. No.

4. No. Meat from animals fed diethylstilbestrol in the prescribed manner will not contain the drug at detectable levels.

In so far as the Department of National Health and Welfare is concerned:

1. The premises containing stilbestrol used in preparing cattle feeds are classified as

"drugs" under the Food and Drugs Act. The labels of the premises must carry adequate directions for use which include directions for mixing, maximum amount of the drug to be fed per head per day and a withdrawal period of the medicated feed prior to slaughter of the animals.

2. The feed manufacturer is required to register the stilbestrol-containing feed under The Feeding Stuffs Act before its sale.

3. There is no requirement to mark the carcasses which have been fed stilbestrol-containing feeds.

4. No ill effects from the consumption of meat from animals that were fed stilbestrol have been reported. Market surveys have been made using very sensitive methods and no detectable residues of stilbestrol have been found in the edible tissues of cattle that had been fed stilbestrol-containing feeds.

POINT EDWARD NAVAL BASE—TENDER NO. 251-2-201644

Question No. 409—Mr. Forrestall:

With reference to Crown Assets tender No. 251-2-201644, dated January 10, 1966, on material being held at Point Edward naval base (a) how many tenders were received (b) from whom were they received (c) what were the prices paid and by whom were they paid on each successful bid?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): In so far as Crown Assets Disposal Corporation is concerned, the answer is as follows: 1. (1) Twenty-four tenders were received.

(b) Tenders were received from the following: Tanny Merchandising, Dulac Etchemin, Hal-Dart Fire Safety Equipment, Hercules Sales Limited, Slater's, Universal Ship Supply Limited, Westmount Fire Department, Joseph Rehberg, Palmer Levit, Dominion Metal and Refining Works, Lipton's Auto Parts, Latzie Dudinsky, A. M. Shaw, Yazer Bros. Limited, Consumers Metal, Salter's, Oscars, M. M. Salvage, Pictou Lodge, Smith's Sales, Harvey Webber, Maritime Dredging, K. Phillips Fire and Safety, Cameron Contracting.

(c) Material was sold as follows: Items 1 to 10 inclusive: Westmount Volunteer Fire Department, Sydney, Nova Scotia, $4,000. Items 11 to 15 and 31: Universal Ship Supply, Montreal, P.Q., $2,100. New tenders called for items 15 to 24, 26 to 30 and item 32.

(a) Ten (10) tenders were received.

(b) Tenders were received from the following: Universal Ship Supply, Maritime Fire and Safety Supply Co., Hal-Dart Fire and Safety Equipment, Slater's, Dulac Etchemin, Maritime Asphalt Products, Curran and Briggs, A. M. Shaw, Pictou Lodge, Munroes Limited.

INDUSTRY DESIGNATED AREA PROGRAM, MANITOBA

Question No. 422—Mr. Stefanson:

1. Is the southern portion of the interlake area of Manitoba, including Teulon, Stonewall and Selkirk, excluded from the industry designated area program and, if so, on what basis?

2. Are areas such as Grand Rapids, Norway House and other such points in northern Manitoba excluded and, if so, on what basis?

3. Is the government now giving consideration to including the areas mentioned in (1) and (2) above, in the industry designated program?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): 1. Census division 12 in Manitoba represents that part of the interlake region of Manitoba which is designated under the area development program. It does not include Teulon and Stonewall, which are in census division 9, or Selkirk which is in census division 5. Census divisions are designated where the average annual non-farm family income was reported as being below the qualifying level of $4,250, provided they are contiguous to NES areas which also qualify for designation, and which together with these areas form economic regions. Census division 12 met this criteria, having an income level of $3,423, and being contiguous to the designated NES area of Dauphin.

Census divisions 9 and 5 are considered to be within the broader labour market area of greater Winnipeg, where unemployment is relatively low, incomes generally higher than the Canadian average of $5,449 and there has been a greater rate of employment growth than that experienced by the nation as a whole. They did not, therefore, meet the criteria for qualification.

2. Grand Rapids, Norway House and other adjacent points around the northern end of Lake Winnipeg are located in census division 16, which, although contiguous to the designated NES area of The Pas, has not been designated because the reported average annual non-farm family income of $4,518 is above the qualifying level of $4,250.

3. The area development program is being reviewed on a continuing basis by the government. Pending the availability of new data on family income late this year or early 1967, it is not planned to alter present designations.

FEED GRAIN STORAGE, MARITIME PROVINCES

Question No. 444—Mr. Fairweather:

1. During 1965, how much feed grain was stored in the port of Halifax to be used by famers of the martime provinces during the winter of 1965-1966?

2. Is it considered that there is an adequate reserve of feed grain now available in Halifax for distribution to farmers in the martimes?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry):

1. 2,150,000 bushels.

2. These supplies are considered to be short of meeting the full needs of the maritimes for this winter. However, rail rates are now available for direct hauling from the lakehead to maritime destinations, which are competitive with the normal water haul.

ADJUSTMENT ASSISTANCE BOARD LOANS

Question No. 463—Mr. Hales:

1. How many loans have been approved by the adjustment assistance board, Department of Industry, to automotive parts manufacturers since the loan was established?

2. To whom were these loans made?

3. How many were for capital to purchase land and buildings?

4. How many were for machinery, equipment and working capital?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry):

1. Seven loans have been approved.

2. The activities of the adjustment assistance board with respect to borrowers are of a confidential nature and the names of the applicants, together with the terms and conditions of the loans, are considered to be commercially confidential. Accordingly, it would not be in the public interest to release this information.

3 and 4. All seven loans involved providing funds for machinery, equipment and working capital. In addition, three of these involved the purchase of land and buildings.

RECIPIENTS OF VETERANS PENSIONS

Question No. 474—Mr. Laprise:

1. How many war veterans are receiving pensions from the government at the present time?

2. Out of this number, how many are receiving (a) less than 10 per cent of the maximum pension (b) from 10 to 20 per cent (c) from 20 to 30 per cent (d) from 30 to 40 per cent (e) from 40 to 50 per cent (f) from 50 to 60 per cent (g) from 60 to 70 per cent (h) from 70 to 80 per cent (i) from 80 to 90 per cent (j) from 90 to 100 per cent (k) the maximum pension?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1. As at September 30, 1965 there were 141,612 world war I and world war II veterans of the Canadian forces receiving disability pensions under the Pension Act.

2. Percentage of disability for which pension is in payment:

Percentage	Number
Less than 10%	20,891	(5%- 7%)
10% to 20%	48,084	(8%-17%)
20% to 30%	24,731	(18%-27%)

40% to 50%	6,613	(38%-47%)
50% to 60%	9,855	(48%-57%)
60% to 70%	4,326	(58%-67%)
70% to 80%	2,957	(68%-77%)
80% to 90%	5,308	(78%-87%)
90% to 100%	1,041	(88%-97%)
100% (maximum)	5,758	(98%-100%)
Total	141,612

ASSISTANCE FOR CARPET FACTORY CONSTRUCTION, KELOWNA, B.C.

Question No. 498—Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway):

1. Has the government or any agency thereof received representations from any firm or individual concerning the construction of a building in the area of Kelowna, British Columbia, to be used in the manufacturing of carpets?

2. If so, what was the nature of the representations and what was the government's response, if any, to them?

3. Is the government considering a grant in connection with the above representations which would contribute to the cost of erecting such a building and if a decision has been made, what is the size of the grant in relation to the total cost?

4. Is the government considering tax incentives in connection with the above-mentioned enterprise and, if so, what is the nature of such considerations and what is the government's decision, if any?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): 1. Yes.

2 and 3. The area development agency of the Department of Industry has received an application for a development grant under the Area Development Incentives Act. The company has been advised that if the new facility is established in accordance with the plans outlined in the application, the project would appear to qualify for the benefits under the act and supporting regulations. A final decision on the part of the government will be made at the time the company commences commercial production. The level of the development grant will be based on the approved costs of new machinery, equipment and buildings, in accordance with formula No. 1 of the schedule of the act.

4. It is understood that the company desires the development grant, although it has a choice of the grant or a three year income tax abatement under section 71A of the Income Tax Act. The decision must be taken by the company prior to commercial production.

STUDY OF POPULATION DECREASE, CAPE BRETON

Question No. 513—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

1. Was a study made to determine the implications of decreasing population in Cape Breton, if so, who was engaged to carry out such a study?

2. Is a report of the study available to members and, if not, when will such a report be available?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): 1. The area development agency of the Department of Industry has commissioned a study by the Institute of Public Affairs of Dalhousie University to evaluate the effects of population decline in two coal mining communities in Cape Breton island.

2. A report should be available for distribution to those interested in about three months time.

STUDENTS EMPLOYED, CAPE BRETON HIGHLANDS PARK

Question No. 514—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

1. How many students were employed during the past summer at the Cape Breton Highlands national park?

2. Of those, how many were from Victoria county, N.S., and how many were from other areas in Cape Breton?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): 1. Twenty-six.

2. (i) Thirteen were from Victoria county, Nova Scotia, (ii) Eight were from Inverness county, Nova Scotia, (iii) Four were from Cape Breton South, Nova Scotia, (iv) One was from Colchester, Hants county, Nova Scotia.

(i) Advances for the month of December for New Brunswick and Northwest Territories have not yet been made.
(ii) Quebec received amounts for 1965 under Established Programs (Interim Arrangements) Act.

PESTICIDE RESIDUES IN FOODS

Question No. 528—Mr. Jorgenson:

1. Has the Department of National Health and Welfare adopted a standard of maximum tolerances of pesticide residues for foods consumed in Canada?

2. If so, do these standards apply to imported foods as well?

3. What are the levels permitted in Canada?

4. What method of checking is used to determine levels of residues contained in food imports?

5. Have there been any instances of imports exceeding the maximum tolerances permitted in Canada?

6. If so, what action has been taken?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Yes.

2. Yes.

3. The details of the tolerances for pesticides, together with a listing of foods in which they are permitted, are to be found in the food and drug regulations.

4. Imported foods are sampled at the port of entry and examined for pesticide residues in one of five regional laboratories of the food and drug directorate.

5. Yes.

6. The imported foods which were found to contain pesticide residues in excess of the established tolerances were refused entry into Canada.

RURAL MAIL ROUTE CONTRACTS

Question No. 531—Mr. Fawcett:

Does the Post Office Department have policies with respect to rural mail deliveries and, if so (a) are routes publicly tendered periodically (b) is a route automatically re-tendered in the case of the demise of a mail carrier (c) can a route be transferred to another carrier without re-tendering (d) how many rural route deliveries operate out of Chelmsford, Ontario and on what dates were each last open for tender?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): The policies of the Post Office Department with respect to rural mail deliveries are governed by sections 23 to 33 of the Post Office Act (a) Expiring mail contracts can either be renewed (section 31 (1), Post Office Act) or put up for tenders. (b) Mail contracts are entered into with the contractor, his heirs, executors and administrators. In the case of the demise of a mail carrier, the contract is automatically put in the hands of the sureties, who may (i) continue to operate the service until the expiration of the contract, (ii) Submit an application for transfer, (iii) Give 90 days' notice of termination of contract. In this instance public tenders are invited or, if the contract is for one thousand dollars or less, the Postmaster General may enter into a contract without tenders. (c) Yes (section 31 (1) of the Post Office Act.) (d)

Questions

Four rural mail delivery routes operate out of Chelmsford, Ontario: Chelmsford R.R. 1—Tenders due October 18th, 1957, Chelmsford R.R. 2—Tenders due September 4th, 1959, Chelmsford R.R. 3—Tenders due August 1938, Chelmsford R.R. 4—Tenders due October 6th, 1961.

PENSION FOR REV. PETER COWLAND

Question No. 539—Mr. Fairweather:

1. What decision has been reached relative to compensation for the Reverend Peter Cowland, pension No. 502171, who was seriously injured in 1941 by a bomb blast and whose eyesight is now deteriorating?

2. On what date was Mr. Cowland examined by two eye specialists?

3. How long does it normally take the Department of Veterans Affairs to reach a decision in similar cases?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1. On February 9, 1966, the Canadian Pension Commission granted entitlement for corneal and lens opacities, effective twelve months prior to date of decision.

2. An eye specialist's report was prepared on October 27, 1965.

3. It is not possible to answer this question definitely but the length of time required by the Canadian Pension Commission to reach a decision depends on a number of factors including the nature of the claim, etc.

MOVE FROM CALGARY OF FORESTRY HEADQUARTERS

Question No. 540—Mr. Harkness:

1. Is there any intention to move the Calgary branch divisional headquarters of the federal Department of Forestry from Calgary to Edmonton?

2. If so, what are the reasons for this projected move?

3. Have the mayor and council of the city of Calgary been consulted on this matter and given an opportunity to set forward the reasons why this office should be retained in Calgary?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry): 1. Yes.

2. Improved efficiency of operations of the department's regional establishment serving Alberta, the Northwest Territories, and the Yukon Territory, through the development of closer professional contacts with senior staff of the Alberta Department of Lands and Forests and officials of forest industrial firms, and closer proximity to the major commercial forests of the region.

3. No. However, the mayor of Calgary has been advised of the decision and the reasons for it.

[Mr. Côté (Longueuil).]

SAFETY STANDARDS FOR CARS

Question No. 558—Mr. Simard:

In order to reduce the number of road injuries and fatalities, is it the intention of the federal government to implement some control by establishing standards for the import and manufacturing of cars?

[Translation]

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): The Government of Canada intends to establish safety standards for all cars purchased by it whether imported or manufactured in Canada.

PLANT RESEARCH SPECIALISTS, PRAIRIE PROVINCES

Question No. 567—Mr. Schreyer:

1. How many research specialists are employed full time in basic plant research in the three prairie provinces in any program in which the federal government is involved?

2. How many research specialists are employed full time in costs of production research in the three prairie provinces in any program in which the federal government is involved?

3. At how many illustration stations and/or other kinds of research station are costs of production studies being carried out?

4. What are the salary ranges for persons employed at the above, either in universities or with the federal Department of Agriculture?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): 1. Research specialists employed full time in basic plant research in the three prairie provinces are listed as follows: Plant breeding, genetics, ecology, management, 55; Plant physiology of crop plants, 8; Plant pathology, 24; Weed research, including physiology of weeds, 8. The above does not include soil and fertility research related to plant production. It does include pasture and range research.

2. Three full time research specialists are employed in costs of production research.

3. Some cost of production data are being obtained on seven project farms in southern Saskatchewan.

4. Salary ranges for the people employed in the federal Department of Agriculture are from a current minimum of $6,302 to a maximum of $13,038, depending on training and productivity.

AUTO IMPORTS FROM U.S. NOT DUTY FREE

Question No. 589—Mr. Hales:

How many cars or what dollar value of cars imported from the U.S.A. in 1965 did not qualify for the duty-free entry because the firm or firms did not maintain the same ratio between cars produced and sold in Canada in the base year of August 1, 1963 to July 31, 1964?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue): The number of cars or the dollar value of cars imported from the U.S.A. in 1965 which did not qualify for duty free entry because the firm or firms did not maintain the same ratio between cars produced and sold in Canada in the base year of August 1, 1963 to July 31, 1964, is not known at the present time, for the reason that company returns are not as yet available for audit.

FARM GUIDANCE AGENCY

Question No. 603—Mr. Neveu:

Is the government planning to set up, in co-operation with the provinces, an agency for the profitable operation of farms, for the purpose of providing guidance and information to farmers on the possibilities of a rational production of diversified crops, compatible with the soil resources and the commercial outlets?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): The various activities of federal and provincial departments of agriculture are related to the objective of profitable operation of farms. To provide co-ordination in guidance and information to farmers there are now various committees and conferences at the local and national levels. Continuing consideration is given to more effective means of advancing this objective.

*C.B.C. APPLICATION FOR LABOUR CODE DEFERMENT

Question No. 604—Mr. Lewis:

1. Has the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation applied to the Minister of Labour for deferment of any of the provisions of the Canada Labour (Standards) Code and, if so, what are the provisions sought to be deferred?

2. What, if any, disposition has been made by the minister of such application or applications?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the question and the answer to this question are in two parts. As to the first part the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has made a submission under section 51 for deferment of part I, hours of work set out in the Canada Labour (Standards) Code.

The answer to part 2 is, no decision has yet been reached.

PRIVILEGE

MR. NIELSEN—RIGHT OF MEMBER FOR MONTMAGNY-L'ISLET TO VOTE IN HOUSE

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, you were kind enough to speak with me last Friday in your chambers in respect of the matter of privilege which I raised that afternoon. I have provided Your Honour with notice of my intention to raise it this afternoon, and I wish to inform Your Honour and the members of the house that I have sent a copy of that notice through the chief government whip to the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet (Mr. Berger).

I do not intend to go into detail this afternoon, since an application is before the courts by the hon. member, I assume under section 63 of the Canada Elections Act. It would appear, however, that there is some question as to the right of the hon. member to have voted on three occasions during this session, because while the official count in the particular riding was held on November 15 and the writ returned on November 22, it would appear that the 60 day time limit within which a return of election expenses must be filed expired on January 21 last.

Mr. Speaker, there were three votes taken in the house; two on January 27, one respecting a motion to hear a member in priority to others and the other respecting the 11 per cent sales tax, and the third on January 25 concerning an amendment to increase old age pensions. The hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet is on record as having voted on all three occasions, the dates of which are subsequent to the date on which the return of election expenses should have been filed.

I raise the matter now simply to draw the attention of Your Honour and the members of this house to the probable breach of privilege that exists. I believe this is important, particularly in a house composed as this one is where such a vote might assume quite important proportions.

The hon. member concerned has brought an application which has been adjourned to February 24 because of the imperfection of the application. In the meantime it was my intention on Friday, as it is this afternoon, to leave this matter with Your Honour. If it should be your direction, and I seek Your Honour's guidance in this connection, I should be prepared to move a motion that the matter of privilege raised by me this day be referred to Your Honour for such disposition as Your Honour may see fit.

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that the matter might be held in abeyance for the time being until such time as the Chair has had an opportunity to study the matter raised by the hon. member for Yukon. In the light of the views later expressed by the Chair he will decide whether a motion should be actually moved. I do not want to cut off discussion in this regard. I gather that the hon. Minister of Public Works has comments to make, and I would certainly be pleased to hear them.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, just before you consider this matter I want to say that I support the view that it should be studied by Your Honour before a decision is given as to whether or not it involves a question of privilege. I say this because section 63 of the act quoted by the hon. member for Yukon provides that all election agents, official agents as they are commonly called, must file returns. Then it adds a separate provision affecting members of parliament, or candidates who are elected. The case now under discussion is one in which a candidate has been elected.

It is regrettable maybe, but none the less a fact, as has been revealed by an order for return tabled in each parliament, I think, or in all the parliaments I can remember, that great numbers of candidates have not filed these returns. For instance, there was a return made in the last parliament. I have the reference here to that return and it shows, for example, that some 51 of the candidates of the party to which the hon. member for Yukon belongs failed to file a return in that election.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. McIlraith: Some 22 of those were from the province of Quebec. There is nothing unusual in that; it is a circumstance—

Mr. Starr: Were they elected members?

Mr. McIlraith: The returns will speak for themselves.

Mr. Starr: You are camouflaging your argument.

Mr. McIlraith: The point I wish to make is that in dealing with elected candidates the subsection of section 63 provides that if they fail to carry out the provisions of the act there is a remedy provided in the courts and it is a matter for the courts. If the hon. member feels that this case warrants such action, he has his remedy set out in that section of the act, by virtue of which parliament dealt with this subject matter.

If the hon. member wants to avail himself of that remedy then, of couse, he is quite entitled to do so. My point is that it is not a matter of privilege affecting the usages in the house, but rather it is a case where the remedy has been provided by statute, by parliament, for dealing with this subject, and it is set out in that section of the act which governs this matter.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I quite appreciate the position of the hon. member for Yukon. I appreciate the fact that he has allowed the matter to rest in the hands of the Speaker. I also appreciate the views expressed by the Minister of Public Works. All these views will be taken into account. I understand the position of the hon. member for Yukon, as I have said, and the fact that no motion has been made. I think perhaps the hon. member would wish to guide himself in the light of whatever decision or comments are made by the Chair as a result of the question raised by the hon. member for Yukon.

Mr. Nielsen: I shall certainly do that, Mr. Speaker, but I do not believe the matter can be allowed to rest on the record with the perhaps unintentional distortions made by the house leader.

Mr. McIlraith: Distortions?

Mr. Nielsen: There is no remedy as the house leader suggests. The prohibition contained in section—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I suggest to the hon. member that this is the task of the Chair, namely to find out what remedies there are, if there are remedies. This is why I assume the hon. member is placing the matter in the hands of the Chair to study the matter and study the statute. I have already had an opportunity to give some thought to the question since the hon. member left the notice in my hands, and I really do not think there will be any great difficulty in studying the matter and giving a decision to the satisfaction of the house.

Mr. Nielsen: That really is not the point, with deference to Your Honour. The government house leader has been allowed to place on the record one side of the story—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will have an opportunity later to place before the house any other considerations. It seems to me that the hon. member has submitted representations, has raised a question of privilege, and it will be for the Chair to rule in due course whether there is a question of privilege, and if there is to allow the hon. member to make a motion if he wants to do so.

The hon. member disagrees with the facts, or the allegations if he prefers, advanced by the minister, and he can rely on the Chair to take everything into account in considering the matter.

Mr. Nielsen: The point remains, Mr. Speaker, that the house leader has got these matters on the record—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Orders of the day.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I still wish to place on the record the other side of the story, which in all fairness I believe the house should hear because it affects the privileges of all hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think what the hon. member wants to do now is begin a debate on the matter. The question has been put before the Chair. The hon. member will realize that if he is allowed to speak a second time on the question of privilege this will definitely open a debate and other members will want to speak once, twice or even more. To my mind the matter is not complicated; it is a very easy matter for the Chair to study. I therefore ask the co-operation of the hon. member for Yukon to allow the Chair an opportunity to study the matter, consider it objectively and in due course render an opinion which I hope will be satisfactory.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—POSSIBLE MEETING OF INTERNATIONAL TRUCE COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs to ask whether the press report is correct to the effect that India informed Canada that it had no interest in having a meeting of the Geneva truce committee convened unless Poland would signify interest in it in advance; furthermore, that in so far as Poland is concerned, the attitude has been negative.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have not had any intimation to this effect from anyone speaking on behalf of the government of India. I am sure the commission can only act, in accordance with the Canadian proposition, on the basis of an agreement among all three member states.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Has there been that agreement?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I have had discussions with representatives of both governments and we are now waiting for their replies.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Does the minister say there is no foundation for the press report to the effect that India stated that without the acceptance of such a meeting to Poland on Poland's terms, India would not join with Canada?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I have not seen the press report, Mr. Speaker. I have had no information to this effect, as I have said, from the government of India. I did add that it is clear that the commission would have to be unanimous before the commission itself could undertake the responsibility which Canada has proposed. I was told only this morning, upon making inquiries, that the high commissioner for India and the Polish ambassador here are not yet in a position to give us the official reaction of their governments.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then perhaps I might ask one more supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the Canadian government directed the Canadian representative on the commission to communicate with the government at Hanoi with a view to bringing about a reconvening of the Geneva truce committee? What authority has been given to the Canadian representative, and what report has he brought to the attention of the government?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, it is a fact that the Canadian member of the commission, Mr. V. C. Moore, who has succeeded in that assignment Mr. Blair Seaborn, paid his first official visit to Hanoi a few days ago. As my right hon. friend knows, the members of the commission and the commission itself make frequent visits to the capital of North Viet Nam.

Mr. Diefenbaker: When was the last time a Canadian visited Hanoi?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The last time was late last summer, after that visit to which my right hon. friend directed our attention on June 3 last. However, the visit of Mr. Moore had nothing whatever to do with the proposal that Canada has made to the other two members of the commission. Mr. Moore went there pursuant to his obligations as a member of the commission, in accordance with the well established practice of the commission.

But I may say that the Canadian government would not find itself in any way restricted from giving instructions, in connection with an opportunity that might exist, if it thought that this might lead to the opening of negotiations; because the government shares, with my right hon. friend and other members, the conviction that anything we can do to bring an end to the conflict is the clear duty of the government of Canada.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I ask a supplementary question. May I ask the minister why, if Mr. Moore was in Hanoi within the last ten days and communicated with the government of North Viet Nam, this opportunity was not made use of to sound out the government of that country with a view to seeing if there were some common ground upon which negotiations might be based?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I do not know where my hon. friend got the basis for his question. Mr. Moore had a very fruitful discussion with the Prime Minister, with the foreign minister, and a vice minister in charge of defence in North Viet Nam. However, his conversations had nothing to do with the proposal that we have been discussing within India and Poland, but it was a useful discussion covering the kind of matters that would be of interest and concern to anyone in this house who wanted to see a cease fire effected, and who wanted to see an end to the conflict in Viet Nam.

Mr. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I ask the minister if any hopeful avenues of discussion were opened up as a result of Mr. Moore's meeting with the government in Hanoi? May I also ask if, as a result of his visit within the last few days to Washington, there seems to be any hope that the government of the United States would be prepared to include in any peace negotiations a delegation from the national liberation front of South Viet Nam?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the fact that members of the commission are able to have access to the government at Hanoi is in itself a helpful fact. The fact that discussions did take place is also a helpful fact.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There has been five months delay since the Canadian representative was last there.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My right hon. friend refers to a five months' delay. I am sure in a matter of such great delicacy, one which caused him to make an important pronouncement the other day about the desirability of a conference, he would want to be very helpful.

Mr. Douglas: The minister overlooked the second part of my question. I asked the minister if, as a result of his visit to Washington, he found any inclination on the part of the government of the United States to agree to a meeting with representatives of the national liberation front in any peace negotiations.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): This was not the particular reason for which I went either to the United Nations or to Washington. The main purpose of my visit to the Secretary General and to the Secretary of State of the United States was to exchange views on the present course of developments and to explore ways of bringing the Viet Nam conflict closer to a conference situation.

As the house knows, it is the objective of the government to see the Viet Nam conflict brought to an end through negotiation. All promising proposals which are designed to carry us closer to that objective will have Canada's support. Earlier this month, as my hon. friend knows, the Viet Nam question was inscribed on the agenda of the Security Council. We welcomed this because we believed that the United Nations could not remain indifferent to a conflict which has grave implications for international peace and security.

But there are practical difficulties in the way of effective United Nations involvement. I must tell the house frankly that I am not hopeful that much headway can be made on Viet Nam in the United Nations at this stage. I do believe, however, there is a very real possibility that members of the international commission will be able to play a useful role. The commission powers have had a long and close association with the Viet Nam problem, and they are the only group of nations with ready access to both sides. I think it is important, therefore—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the Secretary of State for External Affairs on such an important matter. If the house wants to hear the minister further, it is at the discretion of hon. members, of course. However, it does appear the minister is now making a statement rather than answering a question submitted to him by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I just say, Mr. Speaker, I had assumed that, because of the importance—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In view of the importance of this matter, the house waits with bated breath for an answer. So far we have just had the prelude.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I make no apology, Mr. Speaker, for making a careful—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I make no apology for making a carefully considered and extended statement on a matter which the right hon. gentleman properly said the other day in this capital city was one of the most important problems facing the world at the present time. I went to the Secretary General of the United Nations and to the Secretary of State for the United States, to discuss from a Canadian point of view a matter that has all the implications which the right hon. gentleman noted, and which we all recognize. I think it is important that there should be no misunderstanding about what the Canadian government is trying to do, and about what I was trying to do on behalf of that government when I was at the United Nations and in Washington the other day.

What we want to find out, first of all, is whether there is a general consensus in favour of some action by the commission powers. If there is, we shall want to give careful thought to the next stage. We do not think it would be realistic to expect an immediate call for resuming the Geneva Conference to produce results in the present circumstances. There are obstacles which should be removed before such a conference can be usefully called. At the present time the road to a conference may be long. We all hope it will not be. However, whether it is long or not, a beginning will have to be made, and we think the commission powers may be able to help the parties make such a beginning. It is on these lines that I spoke to the Secretary General and to Secretary Rusk last week.

I am happy to tell the house that their response was encouraging. We shall now be pursuing our discussions with the commission powers and with other interested parties to see what this country and the commission members can do to help bring an end to the war in Viet Nam.

Mr. Douglas: Would the minister now answer my question, as to whether he found any inclination on the part of the United States government to meet with the national liberation front in order to begin negotiations?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the position the government of the United States wishes to take on these matters must be announced by it. I clearly indicated what we thought were the measures that must be taken to enable a conference to take place.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. We have already had a number of questions on this matter and quite a few supplementaries. I suggest to hon. members that we should turn to another subject now, and if there is time before the expiry of the question period hon. members with supplementaries might ask related questions.

[Later:]

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and ask him whether, in his discussions with the Secretary of State in Washington, he sought an assurance from the United States administration that they would cease bombing North Viet Nam as soon as arrangements for a conference such as he seeks are under way? If he did, would he say what the reply was?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend knows perfectly well that in matters of this sort it is not possible for me to give the kind of reply which I should like to be able to give.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friends say "oh, oh", and that is their privilege. I must say I cannot believe there will be general approval in the country of the stand that some hon. gentlemen are taking with regard to a matter of this vital importance. I am sorry I cannot give an answer to the question put by my hon. friend in the particular form in which he puts it, but I did have with Secretary of State Rusk a very full discussion of this matter, particularly with regard to the role which Canada feels the commission might be able to play in this very difficult situation.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary question. If the minister is unable to say what Mr. Rusk's reply was, can he at least inform the house whether he, on behalf of the government of Canada, sought an assurance that this bombing would stop?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is repeating the question he has already asked.

FAMILY ALLOWANCES

QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR TRANSFER OF ADMINISTRATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to revert to a most interesting subject and put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Could he say whether he or a member of the government has received from Mr. René Lévesque, minister of Social Welfare of the province of Quebec, a request for transfer to Quebec of family allowances administration and jurisdiction in return for an equivalent tax compensation?

[English]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is a question for me and for all my colleagues and naturally I cannot answer it without consulting them. Perhaps my hon. friend will put the question on the order paper.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

VISIT TO OTTAWA OF NEW ZEALAND OMBUDSMAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and it has to do with the visit to Ottawa today of Sir Guy Powles, the New Zealand ombudsman. It also relates to the announcement made on several occasions that the government intends to consider establishing such an office. Has the Prime Minister made arrangements for himself or members of his government to meet with Sir Guy Powles to discuss this very interesting and urgent problem?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether arrangements have been made by any of my colleagues. We would, of course, be very glad indeed to meet with the gentleman in question and discuss his experiences in this role in New Zealand.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF PENSION ENTITLEMENT OF WIDOWS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. M. Brand (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In view of the revelations on the television program "This Hour Has 7 days" last evening, will the minister consider reviewing the case of the widow of airman Edward E. Chambers and other cases like it with regard to pension entitlement?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is an important question which should be placed on the order paper.

METHOD OF DEALING WITH INQUIRIES BY MEMBERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Veterans Affairs and has to do with the change of policy on the part of the Department of Veterans Affairs which apparently has not been announced by the minister. When, and for what reason did the minister instruct the district pension advocates to refer all inquiries from members of parliament to the deputy minister or the departmental secretary?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If this question is in order it should be placed on the order paper.

THE AUDITOR GENERAL

SUGGESTED PROVISION OF GREATER INDEPENDENCE AND AUTHORITY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister which he might like to take as notice. In view of the very important allegations made by the Auditor General in his last report and in view of the very important role that this official plays, would the Prime Minister give early consideration to amending the Financial Administration Act to provide for greater independence and authority for that office?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to look into the matter.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

SASKATOON—APPLICATION FOR TELEVISION STATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reg Cantelon (Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Now that the Prime Minister has received the letter with the petition from 325 professors at the University of Saskatchewan asking that the federal government permit the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to establish and operate a television station in Saskatoon, will he urge the Board of Broadcast Governors to issue a permit for a C.B.C. station in that area?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is another question which I suggest to the hon. member he might want to place on the order paper.

Inquiries of the Ministry

FINANCE

U.S. TAX ON RAPESEED OIL AND MEAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to bring a matter of urgency to the attention of the Minister of Finance before he drafts his budget. It has to do with duties and tariffs on edible oils. Is the minister aware of the fact that edible oils such as rapeseed oil and others coming from the United States, Sweden and Germany enter Canada duty free while Canadian edible oils, in particular rapeseed oil, sold to the United States are subject to a one cent per pound extra import tax? Rapeseed meal going to the United States bears a tariff of $6 per ton. Would the minister take this into consideration when he drafts his budget?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the minister will do that. If the hon. member wants to pursue the matter further he might place his question on the order paper.

Mr. Rapp: Ten o'clock.

COAL

NOVA SCOTIA—INQUIRY AS TO ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare in his capacity as the minister from Nova Scotia. Would the minister indicate whether $25 million in aid to the Cape Breton coal industry will be made available and would he specifically make reference to the $10 million promised to open a new mine at Lingan?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member poses a very important question but it cannot be asked of the minister as a minister representing a specific district or province. The question can be asked of the minister only in his official capacity as minister of a certain department.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I put the question to the minister because of his participation in the announcement of government policy in this respect, and I feel he is capable of answering.

[Later:]

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I wish to direct my question at this time to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys and ask him when the promised $25 million will be made available to Cape Breton mines and in particular the $10 million required to open the new mine in Lingan.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, I have already said that we were waiting for the Donald report.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): That is not what the former minister said.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, we are reviewing the situation of the coal industry in the maritimes, and at the appropriate time this question can be brought up in debate.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I would ask the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys to review the policy statements made—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): —by the former minister of labour and ask him what the Donald report has to do with an announced policy of aid.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe the hon. member's question is supplementary to a certain extent. The original question was in order, but the supplementary question seems to be of a general nature not requiring an urgent reply at this time.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I would remind the house that there was nothing wrong with the supplementary question, it was only the answer which was out of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): A supplementary question to the Prime Minister. I would ask the Prime Minister, in that a policy announcement by a minister is no longer an accepted responsibility of that particular minister, does this mean that in future no minister will be allowed to make policy statements announcing matters concerning other than his own department?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SEAFARERS INTERNATIONAL UNION—PROSECUTION OF MEMBERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Solicitor General. Can the Solicitor General inform the house what progress is being made by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in their inspection of the records seized from the headquarters of the Seafarers International Union with a view to the possible laying of charges against Mr. Banks and some of his close associates?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I instructed the R.C.M.P. to continue the investigations that they were conducting at the time they were halted by the court proceedings. I am unable to add anything further.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

USE BY PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENTS OF CONDITIONAL GRANTS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister say, having regard to the difficulties that have been experienced in the province of Quebec, particularly by McGill University during the last few days, and which led to the intervention of two ministers, the Minister of Industry and the Minister without Portfolio, whether any provincial government may now use funds designated for a general objective for a purpose other than that for which the payment is made? In other words, is Premier Lesage justified in his view that the $17.5 million paid to the province of Quebec can be used not for education in any particular but for the building of roads? Is that the Prime Minister's understanding of the unconditional nature of conditional grants?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my understanding, I repeat, is that the money was made available to the province of Quebec by the federal government for aid to education.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister.

Could he assure the house that his government will not interfere in any way in the field of education which, according to the constitution, comes under provincial jurisdiction?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question is out of order at this time. The hon. member's question is of a very general nature and consequently has nothing urgent at this time.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REQUEST FOR ESCALATOR CLAUSE IN SUPERANNUATION ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister seen the letter sent to him by the president of the Federal Superannuates National Association asking for an escalator clause to be put into the Public Service Superannuation Act? If so, can the Prime Minister say what reply he has made or will make to that letter?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member asks if the Prime Minister has received or seen a letter. That is not a subject which is considered as urgent at the present time. I would ask the hon. member to put that question on the order paper, or debate it on another occasion.

DIVORCE

ROYAL COMMISSION CONSIDERATION OF DIVORCE AND ABORTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to direct to the Prime Minister. I wonder if he can say whether the government will give early consideration to the request made, I believe today, by the Business and Professional Women's Clubs of Canada that royal commissions be established in the matters of divorce and abortion.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is true that for those who were there this morning it was a very satisfactory meeting with the organization in question. We did receive that recommendation, among others, and I informed the representatives of the organization that the government would give consideration to all their recommendations.

FISHERIES

INQUIRY AS TO DISCUSSIONS RESPECTING GEOGRAPHICAL CO-ORDINATES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and ask him if he was able, as he hoped he would be, to discuss with United States representatives the implications of the Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones Act; and whether as a result of this discussion the minister is now in a position to state that the government is able to establish geographical co-ordinates to protect the contiguous areas along our coast for the exclusive use of Canadian fishermen?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I did discuss this matter of territorial waters and fishing zones with Mr. Rusk and his colleagues. We resumed our negotiations and I think we made some progress on Friday and Saturday last. We are now awaiting a response to proposals that the Canadian government has made, designed to establish exclusive fishing zone rights for Canadian fishermen.

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the Secretary of State for External Affairs say whether the negotiations with other countries involved have been concluded?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs to seek some clarification of the reply given earlier to the hon. member for Queens in respect of the negotiations in Washington concerning the 12-mile limit and the base line co-ordinates. If I heard the minister correctly, the minister said we had now resumed negotiations. In view of the many occasions upon which we have been told in the house by the hon. gentleman himself and more particularly by the Minister of Fisheries that we have been pressing forward vigorously with negotiations concerning this matter—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member knows that questions should not be prefaced by lengthy preambles. I would invite him to put his question at this time if he has one in mind.

Mr. Barnett: My question is simply this. In view of the minister's statement that he has resumed negotiations, would he inform the house when it was that the earlier negotiations with the United States ceased?

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. I wonder if the Prime Minister will use his good offices to arrange the business of the house so that we might bring forward the bill in the name of the hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto) to bring about the relief in regard to old age security that I believe the house now desires.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

STEPS TO MEET INCREASE IN COST OF LIVING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. R. Ballard (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister a question. In view of the concern across Canada relative to the increase of the price of food, would the Prime Minister assure the house that the government is taking steps to stop the spiralling cost of living?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This also is a question of a very general nature which cannot be accepted at this time.

INCOME TAX

REQUEST FOR INCREASED EXEMPTION FOR MUNICIPAL COUNCILLORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Revenue. Can the minister inform the house whether he has received representations from the Ontario Municipal Association requesting an increase in the exemption respecting remuneration paid to municipal councillors, and if so, what action does the minister intend to take regarding this request?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest the hon. member place this question on the order paper.

INDUSTRY

AUTOMOBILE PARTS—RECOGNITION OF CANADIAN COMPANIES AS ESTABLISHED SUPPLIERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): May I direct a question to the Minister of Industry. What steps does the minister propose to take to stop the practice which apparently exists whereby Canadian car part manufacturers have been told that they will not receive any orders unless their companies have first been recognized as established suppliers, and that this certification must come from the United States head offices of Canadian car manufacturers?

[Mr. Winkler.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe this is a very important question, but it seems to me that it could easily be placed on the order paper with the hope that an answer will be received at an early date.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege at this time. I have listened today during the question period, to you advising members to place their questions on the order paper, and I agree with you that this should be the case. On the other hand, when you look over the orders of the day and find that over 450 questions remain unanswered you begin to wonder whether there is any use in putting questions on the order paper. Today, for example, there were some 40 of this group of 400 or 500 questions answered. If we are not going to get answers within a reasonable time to questions that are being placed on the order paper, there is no use putting them there, especially when we cannot get answers on orders of the day even from the ministers.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF LABOUR SAFETY CODE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My question is directed to the Minister of Labour. Can he say when the proposed legislation to be known as the Canada labour safety code will be on the order paper?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): At an early date, Mr. Speaker. I cannot suggest any definite date at this time.

Mr. Knowles: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister say whether this legislation will include the health and sanitation provisions which were discussed last week with the Canadian Railway Labour Executives Association?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

LABOUR RELATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO STRIKE AT ATOMIC ENERGY REACTOR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): May I direct a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys and ask him if he has had an opportunity since Friday to make inquiries in connection with the strike at the atomic energy reactor at Pinawa. If so, can he tell the house if there is likely to be a settlement shortly?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): I would ask the hon. member to be present at ten o'clock tonight. An hon. member has already raised this question. It will be dealt with tonight at ten o'clock.

ONTARIO—PROGRESS OF NEGOTIATIONS IN TRUCKING STRIKE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Labour whether he is prepared to give us a short report on what is happening in connection with the Ontario truckers strike and whether there is any glimmer of hope for a solution?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to do so in view of the seriousness of the matter. The parties are meeting today. They are in continuous session under the joint chairmanship of the deputy minister of labour of Ontario and a senior official of my department. I can only report progress at this time.

URANIUM

REPORTED DELEGATION TO DISCUSS SALE TO FRANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the honourable Minister of Commerce.

Could the hon. minister tell us whether it is true that a delegation of the French government is coming to Canada very soon in order to discuss Canada's sale of uranium to France?

[English]

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I have not heard of any such delegation, Mr. Speaker.

FINANCE

SUGGESTED PROVISION OF INSURANCE FOR BANK DEPOSITS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Finance. Will he inform the house whether he is considering favourably the introduction of federal legislation to provide insurance for deposits in banks and near banks such as trust companies?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the only answer I can give to a question like that is that government policy will be announced in due course.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I remind the Prime Minister of my question of last Thursday relating to a medicare timetable? At the suggestion of Mr. Speaker I filed it for the "late show". I hope some responsible minister will be here tonight to answer it, preferably the Prime Minister himself.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Nothing will give me greater pleasure, Mr. Speaker, than to be here tonight at ten o'clock.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

1. Departmental administration, including grants to military associations, institutes and other organizations as detailed in the estimates and authority, notwithstanding section 30 of the Financial Administration Act, and subject to allotment by the Treasury Board, for total commitments of $2,560,546,715 for the purposes of votes 1, 5, 15, 20, 25, 30, 35, 40 and 45 of this department regardless of the year in which such commitments will come in course of payment (of which it is estimated that $1,044,262,000 will come due for payment in future years) and authority to make recoverable advances under any of the said votes and, notwithstanding the Financial Administration Act, to spend revenue received during the year in respect of assistance rendered to the United Nations, any party of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization or any provincial or municipal government, $5,204,855.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Kootenay West.

Mr. Lambert: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings called it six o'clock on Friday evening and I think by courtesy he would have the floor on this occasion.

The Chairman: I apologize. The hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings.

Mr. Nowlan: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I had not necessarily intended to take part in this debate but in view of what the minister said in his technical countdown of the mechanics and new weaponry and the methods of management which the Department of National Defence is now following I felt it incumbent upon me, as one who has the honour to represent a constituency which has therein one of the largest air force bases in Canada, namely, Greenwood, to draw attention to what, I submit, is a major point of weakness in the hon. gentleman's review of his estimates before this committee.

Greenwood, which is in the heart of the constituency I represent, always causes a quiver at election time but we never quarrel with the legitimate hopes and aspirations of those airmen who wish to make their service in the air force a full time career. On Thursday last, as reported at page 1423 of Hansard, the minister tried to slough off one of the basic problems confronting service personnel in Canada. I do not intend to talk about the policy toward Viet Nam or the policy of integration other than as it affects our servicemen. I take exception to this statement by the minister, as found on page 1423 of Hansard:

> —the important problems relating to individuals in the armed forces today are not those resulting from integration; they are the same real problems affecting men and women in all walks of life, that is, pay, allowance, housing, career opportunties, etc.

The hon. gentleman continued in that vein. I submit that the minister blandly restricted the problems of servicemen to those encountered by men and women engaged in industry and business. He gave a detailed countdown of management methods and new mechanical equipment, some of which, we hope, will achieve more lasting fame than the bomb toss computer. Nowhere did he mention the subject of morale. Other speakers in this discussion have mentioned morale. But the minister maintained complete silence on the matter although his other observations were protracted enough. Frankly, that does not amaze me.

I have to be honest and admit that so far as the principles and philosophy of integration are concerned I am one who is really sympathetic toward the minister. My difference of opinion concerns the way in which the policy of integration is implemented. When a minister, in reviewing the details of the work of his department after such a radical policy has been attempted, makes the claim that there are no problems so far as personnel are concerned other than those which would normally face men and women in industry and business he is, I suggest, being irresponsible. Unless he admits that there is a manpower problem and, specifically, a manpower problem relating to morale, he is being very irresponsible.

It is necessary to recognize a problem before action can be taken to resolve it. Yet despite all the astuteness and aplomb of the minister he remains completely neuter on one of the basic qualities of the entire armed services, their morale and esprit de corps. It is his blind spot, and compared with him the one-eyed Cyclops monster of old had 20-20 vision.

I have quoted what the minister said about service problems. Of course service personnel are concerned about the things he mentioned, career opportunities, allowances, housing and so on. But does the minister think seriously for a moment, if indeed he thinks at all, that the economy, the rising cost of living and family matters account for the insecurity and frustration felt by the great majority in the services today? Does he not acknowledge even remotely that the purchase of so-called permanent commissions has created confusion and uncertainty for those left in the services who had hoped to make it a permanent career?

While the re-engagement policy announced during the course of this debate is helpful, I submit it is somewhat of a sop too and perhaps an acknowledgement of the morale problem. But I am afraid it is too late and too little. Does not the minister honestly think that an officer or an enlisted man would be wary of re-enlistment when he or his friends, even though permanently commissioned, had received the pathetic and prophetic "Dear John" letters? Certainly for those in short service an extension from year to year or every three years does not allow a mature man to plan his future with any confidence. It is too bad the minister never pruned trees for if he had he would know you cannot cut off the top without injuring the base.

Again, Mr. Chairman, there is the problem of the permanent commission and the way in which many, the hundreds we have heard about, were bought out. But in another area does the minister think that the problem between the permanent commissioned officer and the short service man with regard to their respective pensions is similar to any situation on "civvy" street? I wonder how many unions would allow two men both trained for the same job and doing the same work, albeit hard and dangerous work, one on short term and one on permanent commission, to have such dissimilar benefits payable to their survivors in the event of an unfortunate and fatal accident? These benefits are so dissimilar that it is a wonder we have any short service personnel in the services today.

I hope that during the course of this debate the minister will announce that the government is at least taking steps to remove the penalty for short service so that the problem with regard to the short term and permanent commissioned men will be resolved. It does seem unjust that two men flying together, both contributing to pension plans, should leave such dissimilar benefits for their survivors just because one is on permanent commission and the other is on short term service.

Along with the cutback and freeze at the top there is a further area which gnaws at the serviceman in marked contrast to the man in industry or business. Here I would suggest that the minister is hoist with his own petard, for in an expanding, busy economy there is room for advancement and promotion for those who wish to work and who are trained for it. Contrast this with the situation in the services where you have the freeze at the top, the freeze in the middle, the freeze at the bottom and the cutbacks which have occurred during the past two years. Where can a qualified, energetic man who wants to make the services his career find room for advancement when there are these freezes and cutbacks? I submit that the lack of advancement due to the minister's integration policy is the dry rot which eats away at morale, and this the minister has failed to acknowledge, let alone resolve.

There are some who say that the serviceman is already a political eunuch in that he can vote but not participate in political affairs. There may be sound reasons for some of the restrictions on political activity although personally I think some of those reasons are outdated. But I submit there is no justification for a moratorium on morale which, if allowed to continue, may let the forces integrate in a form which will be a faceless one without the spirit, colour and strength developed through the sadnesses and sacrifices of the past.

When he gave his detailed review and statement the minister showed a lack of concern by not mentioning the word "morale". Morale, I submit, is one of the foundations of any effective force regardless of the methods used to train and manage it. His review was impersonal. It was cool. It was like an I.B.M. computer. We need those machines but I submit that a man in the responsible position of the minister has to bring some personality to the services instead of treating them in an impersonal way.

You can only build up the strength of the future by relying on some of the traditions and colour of the past, but when the minister comes before us with his revolutionary policy of integration and does not once mention the word morale in his review I submit this is cause for grave concern.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, I make no pretence to being well informed on matters relating to national defence or to being an expert on the subject but because I feel in good company in this respect I should like to make some remarks. I believe there are many hon. members who are in the same position as I and other new members who are confused, bewildered and perplexed as to just what is the state of Canada's defence capability in the year 1966.

There is confusion in the minds of the public across the country because on the one hand we have heard statements emanating from the minister's office to the effect that integration has been a success and that the savings to be derived from the new integration policy can be devoted to the acquisition of more, as the minister likes to put it, military hardware. On the other hand, having listened to members of the opposition such as the hon. member for Calgary North and my colleague from Vancouver East, it becomes clear that the government has not in fact succeeded in diverting any of these rumored savings into the acquisition of additional quantities of better and more modern weaponry.

If there has been such a drastic reduction in personnel, then why was there not extra money available for the acquisition of more up to date weaponry? Expenditures by the department can only be made in three directions or for three purposes. The first is to pay for the personnel who serve in the armed forces. The second is to pay for the costs of administration and the third is to pay for the acquisition of more modern weaponry.

The reduction in personnel, which apparently has taken on all the characteristics of being dangerous to the morale of the forces, must have resulted in savings. Where has this money gone? If it is true, as stated by the hon. member for Calgary North the other day, that only 12 per cent of the defence budget has been allocated for new equipment, then what has happened?

• (4:00 p.m.)

I think it is incumbent upon the minister to explain clearly to the members of the committee and to the Canadian public as a whole just where all this money is going. It seems very confusing that the department's policy in one year should be to retire people from the armed services and pay them rather lavish retirement bonuses but in subsequent months, when faced with a shortage of trained military personnel, to transfer men from one unit in order to bring another up to full strength. It also seems strange that the department now finds itself in the position of having to pay re-enlistment bonuses in order to entice people to remain in the services. This seems to be a complete contradiction of policy in the course of a very few months. It may be that the policy of this department in this regard has been given a good public image but it seems to me that the results indicate something quite different.

I am of the opinion that the public relations efforts that went into this change have been very expensive and I am not sure that this has not succeeded in giving the people of this country and the members of this committee an entirely misleading and false impression of the reality of the situation. It seems that we are looking at a hoax of epic proportions because it does not appear possible that Canada's defence capability has been improved during the course of the past year or 18 months. Certainly this cannot be the case when we have been able to allocate only 12 per cent of the defence budget to weaponry acquisition, unless that figure is wrong. If the figure is wrong I should like to hear the minister refute it.

I have no intention of speaking further on matters of broad policy concerning this department but I do wish to make some remarks concerning the administrative practices followed by the department in the acquisition of land for departmental purposes. I refer specifically to the decision of the Department of National Defence to expropriate several thousands of acres of land, including an entire village, in order to enlarge the area of Camp Valcartier.

This decision taken by itself may seem to be concerned with only a small isolated incident in the department's activities but it does raise several questions that deserve consideration. First of all, what specific military purposes demanded or necessitated that this particular army camp be enlarged? According to my information, the army now has large blocks of land for training purposes in close proximity to that camp, although perhaps not adjacent. Even though it were agreed that the military did require extra land for its purposes, could not the department have acquired that land in more unsettled areas where the land is not being used? Canada is not a densely populated land. There are hundreds of thousands of acres of open space which could be utilized for such purposes. Why is it so necessary to expropriate farm land and an entire village?

The procedure that was followed by the department in an attempt to acquire this property near Valcartier makes me curious. From all accounts I have heard and articles I have read I have gained the impression that the officials of the government expropriated first and then negotiated as to the price to be paid to the property holders. It seems to me that the statutory power to expropriate should not have been invoked unless free negotiation ended in a stalemate. To expropriate first and then approach the owners as to the price to be paid seems to me to be an abuse of this power.

I must admit that in the past six or so years there has been a tendency on the part of governments, federal and provincial, to take a more administratively convenient approach in acquiring property for the Crown. Governments today are rather more inclined to file plans of expropriation first in land titles offices and then go about the process of negotiating with the property owners the price to be paid. I think we have degenerated into a rather sorry state when we give preference to administrative convenience over the rights of individual small property holders.

It may well be that in respect of the land acquisition being attempted at this time near Camp Valcartier the government has in fact attempted to acquire the land through free negotiation. But that certainly is not the impression I have of the matter and I hope that the responsible minister or the minister who is informed in this regard will be able to give us some clarification.

It is also my impression that no high ranking official of the department has bothered to go to the area to meet with the people who are affected and that no attempt has been made to discuss the necessity of the undertaking, relocation plans and so on. It would seem that emissaries from the department have gone there and given what amounts to an ultimatum to the residents. Surely this is unfortunate and highhanded. When the rights of individual citizens are concerned no effort should be spared to deal with them in a proper manner.

One other aspect of this whole program of land acquisition which rather intrigued me relates to the fact that it was a military person, I believe the commanding officer of the brigade, who got in touch with the people to inform them of the need for this land by the Department of National Defence. It strikes me as being very strange that military personnel should involve themselves in the process or procedure of land acquisition. Surely this is something that should be handled by civilian authorities. What possible justification can there be for having military personnel involve themselves in what is essentially a transaction between the government and the property owners?

At some appropriate time during the course of our consideration of these estimates I should like all these points to be explained. I hope someone will elaborate on the circumstances and offer some defence for the administrative procedures followed by the department in this particular case.

Finally, I think it is incumbent upon the minister to explain how it is that after months of a campaign to explain to the Canadian people that our defence policy is geared toward higher mobility of our armed forces through integration with a reduction of personnel and with the savings acquired therefrom to be reallocated to greater and more effective weaponry, we now find after all this talk that there is really no substance to it and that we have not apparently improved our defence capability one iota.

• (4:10 p.m.)

Mr. MacRae: Mr. Chairman, I should like to speak briefly on the estimates of the Department of National Defence. My interest in the subject is prompted by the fact that in the constituency I represent is found the finest military establishment in the British Commonwealth, namely, Camp Gagetown with its model city beside the camp, its new buildings and 427 square miles of what is the finest training terrain in this nation and perhaps in the world. As a matter of fact, Camp Gagetown is considered to be such a fine camp that military observers from all the nations of the free world come there during the summer concentration to watch the exercises and this winter the American marines finished a tour of duty there. They tell me that even this battle-hardened group found it a tough enough experience.

There are several units there at the moment, the Royal Canadian Horse Artillery, the Royal Canadian Dragoons, which have been mentioned in the debate, the Royal Highlanders of Canada, two battalions of the Black Watch, the new service battalion and the other units which I think can be considered to be Canada's finest military units.

Just as we in this House of Commons cannot be experts on everything, so in those subjects in which we do become interested we pick out certain factors we like to discuss and think about. My interest in defence is concerned more with the human factor, the person, the personnel. I should like to thank the minister for the unfailing courtesy he has afforded me in the defence problems I have taken to him, and especially the Associate Minister whom I see there beside him. I have on many occasions written to the Associate Minister of National Defence and his answers have always been helpful. I have not always received the satisfactory solution which I have sought but he has always been helpful indeed and I wish to express my thanks to him at this time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacRae: On Friday last, February 18, the Associate Minister announced that a re-engagement bonus would be paid. I was very pleased to hear this because on the order paper at this moment under the date of February 17, the day before, is a question in my name asking for the government to consider this matter. I also raised it when speaking in the debate on the Speech from the Throne and it was very much a subject of discussion of course, in the last election campaign in my riding.

For the record, Mr. Chairman, I advocated that there should be a re-engagement bonus paid because it seems to me that far too many men are being lost to the service at the end of their third, fifth or tenth year of service, as the case may be. I commend the minister and the government for this particular action in making available to the members of the armed services the re-engagement bonus. It is quite true, as somebody said last Friday, that the payment of a re-engagement bonus may not bring any new people into the services but if it helps to retain the good men already in the forces it will have achieved a most worth-while purpose.

Another point I should like to make deals again with the human factor and morale. I refer to the matter of the accommodation provided for our men and women in the services. A few years ago when the hon. member for Calgary North was minister of national defence I asked him on a number of occasions to come to Camp Gagetown and to Oromocto, the city adjacent to the camp, and persuaded him not to have constructed any more of the so-called row housing. However, within the last year or two a great many units of this particular type have been built in Oromocto. I realize that many people in this nation live in apartments, that many people are living in accommodation that is not as good as the so-called row housing. But I would suggest to the Minister of National Defence and the Associate Minister that in spite of the extra $1,000 or $2,000 cost for each unit that is constructed we would be much further ahead if we constructed single family dwellings for the people in our armed services.

I realize that those units already started will have to be finished but I do urge that the minister should not continue the building of this row housing elsewhere. When you crowd families together with small children involved and having in mind also the exigencies of the service, I think one family under one roof is a very good idea or, just as the Chinese used to say, one woman to one home. I would ask the government and the minister specifically to consider this point in the future. I am sure the minister will.

Another point I should like to make is in connection with the soldiers' vote. The soldiers' vote is not a very happy subject for most Conservative members of Parliament to discuss. We seem to get a rather bad trimming at every election. It is rather difficult to understand this because we have their interests at heart too. Many of us have worn the uniform of the armed services of this nation. But there is an aspect of the soldiers' vote that I suggest should be looked into. It is the fact that some soldiers are enumerated twice. Here is the situation that developed in my constituency in the last election. Those soldiers living in homes in Fredericton and elsewhere in the various towns along the Saint John River were enumerated and, of course, shown as being in the services.

These men can vote at their home polls on election day and can also, I understand, vote in the service poll. All soldiers can vote in the service poll. I do not think I am incorrect in that. The net result is that it gives the opportunity for soldiers to vote twice. I do not say they do so; I would never make that assertion. But this is what actually happened in my constituency in the last election. We arranged with those who were supporting the Liberal cause in York-Sunbury that all soldiers who were enumerated should be deleted from the so-called civilian enumeration list and should vote in Camp Gagetown.

This was the situation. I do not like to put it on the record but I shall. We made the agreement that we would ask for half the soldiers in the city to be struck from the record and this was done on the understanding that the Liberal organizer would have the same thing done in the other half of the city. They did not fulfil their part of the agreement. We were neatly mousetrapped in this respect and a great deal of ill will was created.

I do not say you can legislate for matters such as this. You cannot legislate honesty and integrity. But I should like to make a suggestion to the minister which I am sure he will take into account. I suggest that the regulations in relation to the soldiers' vote be so amended that all soldiers vote in the service poll. There could then never be any doubt whatsoever about this matter.

There is another point I should like to make, Mr. Chairman, and it is a logistical one. I mention that I am more interested in the human factor. However, this question refers to the movement of our troops to any part of the world. I come back to our own Camp Gagetown. Beside Camp Gagetown we have an excellent airport which happens to be under the jurisdiction of the Department of Transport. The runways are not quite long enough to take the very large aircraft that are shortly to come into service. The DC-9's are an example. Within the next week or so a full battalion, I understand, of the Black Watch are to be moved to northern Norway well within the Arctic Circle. As the minister knows, this will be perhaps one of the most ambitious exercises of its kind ever attempted by the armed forces of this country.

• (4:20 p.m.)

They can be transported by Hercules aircraft which can use the Fredericton airport.

Some two years ago surveys were started with a view to the lengthening of the runways of that airport but nothing has been done. I believe that from a civilian point of view we are all right with the present aircraft that come in there. From a service point of view, and this is my only justification for raising the problem now, I think it would be to the advantage of the Department of National Defence to press for the extension of the runways of that airport so that troops which may be brought into or taken out of Camp Gagetown can be moved in the largest aircraft flying today. I am thinking especially of an emergency situation.

The minister in his remarks mentioned the Defence Committee. I would take the liberty of concurring fully in what he said. I have served on that committee since 1963. I think that of all the committees of the house this one fulfils its purpose to best advantage. It has been an excellent committee and has been well staffed. The member who chaired it last time, unfortunately from the Liberal point of view, went down to defeat. He was an excellent chairman and a good friend. I suggest to the minister that the Defence Committee should begin its work as quickly as possible. I hope that as soon as the estimates of the department are through the committee can proceed.

I was interested also in the minister's discussion of the reserve force. I do not know whether the minister is aware but two or three years ago when there was a drastic reorganization of the reserve force its morale dropped severely. I speak with some knowledge since I have long been interested in the reserve force and served in it for some 25 years. I have always maintained my interest in our defence establishment. He mentioned that General W. A. B. Anderson was to head the reserve force and this will be welcome news. General Anderson is an excellent officer and the reserve force deserves to have the leadership of such a man.

I have only one more point to mention and it has to do with education. It may seem as though I am digressing slightly but I assure you I am not. My own profession is teaching and I have taught many children of members of the armed forces. One of these youngsters told me that in 12 years of schooling she had gone to 15 different schools. This is no fault of the Department of National Defence. The exigencies of service demand that a man be moved on very short notice. The unfortunate part is that we have ten different systems of education in this nation today. I have seen teachers in Oromocto who have taken 10 or 15 minutes for lunch and have spent the remainder of their lunch hour attempting to help children who through no fault of their own had fallen behind as a result of their parents moving from province to province. While we must admit that education is a provincial matter, and you, Mr. Chairman, as a member of that time honoured profession realize this, I think that the sooner we achieve some uniformity in the field of education in this nation, the better. We know that the province of Quebec is very jealous of its rights in this field but if we can achieve uniformity in education we will be achieving something of great benefit to this nation.

I concur in the statements of the hon. member for Calgary North and others who have referred to the problem of morale in our forces and the fact that it is at a low ebb today. I hope that for the benefit of our nation and the benefit of our services this will change. I know that what the minister is trying to do he is doing in all sincerity. I have the highest regard for the minister personally and I know he believes in what he is doing. I submit that if he can bring up the morale of our forces more quickly it will help to achieve the objective he is seeking, that is, to have one of the finest military forces in the whole world.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, speaking on the first item of the minister's estimates on this second day of the debate I do not believe one has to apologize in any way for the time that is being taken. After all, the minister must realize that his estimates have not been considered since 1964 and a great deal has transpired in the meantime. Certainly the minister and his staff have been very active in getting across to the people the fact that a great deal has been done in the department, that they were moving and that there was a certain spirit of dynamism in the department. The only point is that no explanation has been offered to the house.

I may say that I was disappointed in the minister's statement on Thursday evening. As a matter of fact, the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre compared it with statements made by the minister in previous years. There was a great similarity, and there was a sort of Tweedledum and Tweedledee attitude between the minister and associate minister. I say to the minister that before we complete this discussion he will have to have some serious answers to questions that have been put by my colleagues, the hon. member for Calgary North and the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre. Other members have raised questions but they particularly have raised some very difficult questions which go to the whole root of the administration and policies of the Department of National Defence.

I must confess I was disappointed in the minister's statement. We were given a very brief general outline of the purposes of mobile command. Much more has to be said about this. There has not been an opportunity to discuss it in the committee because the decision to form mobile command, if I am correct, was announced on June 7 of last year. The minister indicated that the command was only formed on October 19 last. This is the first opportunity we have had to examine it. If we look at Hansard, page 1417, second column, second paragraph, we find the following:

> The formation of mobile command is basic to the philosophy of Canada's new defence policy.

• (4:30 p.m.)

If we fail to discuss the philosophy of that formation and the principles behind it, if there is no explanation given to the country, then the whole set-up of national defence is kept within the breast of the minister. We know he loves to approach us from some great Olympian height. All we have to do is read his speeches in the past. I would commend them to him today, and he would certainly change his attitude.

We also get a great number of laudatory articles about this subject. I picked up one this week end in the magazine "Air Force and Space Digest", the most recent issue. It contains an article entitled "Canadian Air Space, a Tightened Belt and a Clear Eye", and alongside is a picture of the minister. This is a well prepared piece by a Canadian newspaper man. I am not going to put his name on the record. This is a "flack" piece, if I may use the term.

There have also been other articles. I have a great deal of respect for Mr. John Gellner and some of his ideas. I do not agree with him all the time, and I would hope he would not fall into this category of "flack" writers. I have before me an article in the February number of the "Executive" which frankly is again in a similar vein.

[Mr. Lambert.]

It produces the same result. This is the sort of reputation that is being spread around, an invincible minister with invincible policies.

Quite frankly, in many instances the only people who do not agree with him are the people under him. If he thinks his policies have been sold to the people in the Department of National Defence, then I think he has a second think or even a third think coming to him. Far from it. Certain sectors of the armed services have not had explained to them and fail to see the principles behind a lot of the policies which are being put before them.

I should like to come back to the reference I made to the statement of the minister. As recorded on page 1417 of Hansard he said:

> The largest of the new functional commands, its task is to operationally train and maintain the land elements of the Canadian force and its tactical air support, and to keep this force in a state of combat readiness which will enable it to be deployed in units of the required size to meet Canadian commitments and undertakings anywhere in the world.

How innocuous can one get, Mr. Chairman? There is nothing new in that; this has always prevailed. The only thing that is new is the reference to tactical air support, but there is really nothing further in the minister's statement requiring elaboration.

In connection with the return to tactical air support by the Canadian armed forces, if the minister is serious about this and intends to go through with it then some explanation must be provided. This is a radical departure from what has been the case now for some time and it is certainly a significant departure so far as I can see from the whole concept of an integrated force.

We next come to this fine phrase:

> The prime ingredients in the force are quick reaction-time, the ability to go where required with dispatch, and to perform its tasks kith maximum effectiveness.

This has been a requirement of our defence forces from time immemorial. There is nothing peculiar about it. So far as "quick reaction-time" is concerned, any force commander, any army, any navy, any air force must have a quick reaction time. All that "the ability to go where required with dispatch" means is that the forces are to get to a certain place in the quickest way possible. That has always been a prime requisite. The reference to "to perform its tasks with maximum effectiveness" is again an underlying principle which has existed since time immemorial. These conditions are supposed to be the keystones of the mobile command.

We want to know a number of things about mobile command and we are raising these questions now. I hope that the minister can give us some clarification. We are certainly giving him warning that when he and his officials are before the Defence Committee these matters will be studied in very great detail.

Mr. Hellyer: That is fair enough.

Mr. Lambert: However, we want something more at this time. We want to know why the government has decided on this concept of a baby expeditionary force, because that is all it is. It will be composed of segments of our armed forces which will be deployed in units of the required size to meet Canadian commitments and undertakings anywhere in the world.

For example, we want to know how the sea lift will be performed. We want to know who is going to provide the lift for the tactical air support. Does the minister anticipate that this mobile force and any segments which may be attached shall be required only within a narrow radius of Canada? What are we going to do if we have to go to the far end of South America? How does the minister expect to get this tactical air support down there? Will it have to travel to the Far East or the Middle East, across wide expanses of sea? How are these aircraft to be transported. Are they to be taken on the Bonaventure, or has the minister plans for some other type of ship to take these aircraft? Has he plans to purchase ultimately huge transport aircraft which as of now are just a gleam in some designer's eye? Or does he plan on flying these CF-5's in formation and then have them line up at some sort of aerial service station for refueling? These are all fundamental matters.

Let us suppose that the aircraft reach their destination. Who is going to furnish the supply train? Who will supply spares, ammunition, fuel and carry out repairs? Are we going back to the concept that Canada will supply everything, that the force will be entirely self-contained? Are we to be responsible for the supply train for what I call this baby expeditionary force? This, I am sure, has long been rejected, yet we must see what the minister is thinking in this regard.

I do not see how we are going to be able to maintain this type of aircraft with the limited resources we have at the present time. How is the refuelling to be done? I have heard rumours that the department wants to convert four of the CF-130B's into tankers. Our fleet of Hercules aircraft is already committed to other transport tasks. They are going to provide long range transportation for our troops. If one takes four of these from that task it means that one will have to have a commitment of six aircraft. I say this because there is always the regular maintenance of these aircraft and their periodic removal from service. Breakdowns occur. For example, the Zambian airlift required six aircraft, not four. We all know that one of the aircraft which flew out to Zambia had to be rotated back to Canada in less than a week for its periodic check and overhaul. Therefore we are going to require six aircraft, not four, and at the present time we do not have this particular type of aircraft in sufficient numbers, certainly not if the minister means to carry troops and equipment in sufficiently large numbers to be effective.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Again, this is a mobile force. Just how mobile is it? The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre made reference to the M-113 which is an armoured personnel carrier. This is all very well for those people out in the forward battle positions. What about their supply? I venture to say that our ground forces today, in so far as supply is concerned, are very little more mobile than they were at the end of world war II. They are roadbound on wheels. We have few if any tracked vehicles to assist them. We have few if any aircraft at the very front. I know that there are now a few helicopters. I do not agree that we should have continued as we have. This is a point that we have raised, that the Defence Committee raised in 1963, and to which I have referred to many times in the past, namely, that in so far as our ground forces are concerned they are not mobile and have not been, any more than they were in world war II.

We are supposed to be operating in Europe so that the use of tactical nuclear arms is such that the underlying principle is mobility and dispersement. How can our forces disperse and how can they be mobile when they do not have the equipment?

What about their reconnaissance elements? Has the minister increased the establishment for helicopters? Has the brigade in Europe any more helicopters for reconnaissance? The minister has referred to Voyageur helicopters that he has acquired. How many has he acquired? We also know that he is going to get 15 Buffalo aircraft. Let me put it this way. Magazine articles tell us that the department is supposed to get 15 Buffalo aircraft.

Mr. Churchill: He did not give us any figures at all.

Mr. Lambert: No. If I can rely upon this aviation editor, the Canadian forces are supposed to get 15 de Havilland CC-115 Buffalos. Do we have to get our information from magazines or must we wait for the minister to give it to us in his own good time? This is not good enough. Rather than this general version it would be far better if the minister came out and told us precisely what he means by his mobile command, what he intends to do with it, how it is going to operate and how it is going to be equipped. We are being asked to vote money for the reorganization of our forces in a certain way but the descriptions, the roles and their equipment are all secrets locked in the minister's breast. The question arises of the mobility of this mobile group, the conversion of a further brigade to a sort of airborne brigade. I know that is a poor term but I refer to a brigade which will have an air capability or an air transportability.

Mr. Hellyer: They are air transportable.

Mr. Lambert: That is a very interesting point, particularly in the light of the announcement today in Paris by President de Gaulle who says that after April 4, 1969, any foreign troops on French soil shall be under French command. In other words, he is saying to NATO, get out, unless, of course there is a wholesale revision of the NATO structure. The question that bothers me at the present time is: Is this something new that the President fo France has sprung on the NATO allies or is this something that has been discussed? Did the minister become aware of it at the time of the NATO ministerial conference last December? This would be interesting to know. Was there any prior indication of this? What planning is taking place to provide for such an eventuality?

We know it will wipe out Marville. It will wipe out Metz so far as we are concerned.

[Mr. Lambert.]

Does this mean that all our NATO forces overseas will be on West German soil or will they be relocated elsewhere? What is the effect of removing France from, shall we say, the area of manoeuvrability, because anybody looking at the map can see that West Germany is a very narrow country east and west? Look at its lines of communications. The laterals running north and south are primarily along the Rhine and anything reaching toward the frontier of East Germany is at right angles to the Rhineland communications so that there is no room to move. There is the greatest difficulty to manoeuvre. Again I ask, what plans have been made to deal with this? How are we equipping our forces?

Coming now to the CF-5, I do not intend to go into the great detail that the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre went into on Friday. Are any of these aircraft to be used in Europe? There is no indication yet. Are they simply tactical appendages to our mobile command? We know that our troops in Europe form part of our mobile command in so far as their composition is concerned and in so far as their organization and equipment are concerned. Are they going to have the CF-5 or are these units going to be kept in Canada to be sent out, with only the minister knowing about it, to the various areas where they may be needed?

May I refer the minister to the recommendation made in the 1963-1964 report of the Special Committee of the House of Commons on Matters Relating to Defence. On page 19, dealing with the NATO forces, there is the following:

> Your Committee recommends—
>
> Among other things.
>
> —a long range force role study be immediately initiated to determine a most suitable future role for the air division when its present equipment becomes obsolete.
>
> Then, further:
> In view of the need for mobility, special consideration should be given to the allocation of a military air transport role for the air division.

Today these recommendations are as valid as they were then and make eminently greater sense. I think the minister recognizes some of the things that we must strive to get across, including the best possible mobility for our ground forces in combination with the air and sea forces. We want to know how the minister proposes to do this. He owes it to the country to tell us.

• (4:50 p.m.)

It is not as though national defence policy and its implementation were a deep, dark secret reserved only for experts. He could share his information with members of the house.

There is one other matter to which I should like to advert at this stage. It is the subject of personnel. I regret that this problem has arisen. I feel it is a crying shame that we should have a problem of morale, as we do, in certain sectors of the armed forces of this country. I do not like to see it and I do not want to gloat over it. I refer to it because time and time again I have asked the minister questions as to the maintenance of the strength of the forces and the effectiveness of recruiting. Of course, based on private knowledge acquired from various sources, I knew there were many deficiencies of highly skilled personnel in a number of areas. Yet, when I asked the minister about the situation, as did others, we heard bland reassurances from the hon. gentleman, with a beatific smile, that all was best in the best possible of worlds so far as Canada's defence forces were concerned. There were no problems. Morale was high.

Either the minister was emulating a certain bird and hiding his head in the sand or he was trying to cover up. He can take his choice. That is the impression he gave. It was revealing to get, in answer to a question put on the order paper at the beginning of this session, an indication of the number of people who had voluntarily retired or who had not re-engaged prior to their normal retirement date or upon reaching that date. If we look at those figures we will see that at least 25 per cent of the naval strength retired in these circumstances during the last 18 months, 20 per cent or a little more in the army and roughly the same percentage in the air force. This is extraordinarily high. We know that ships are tied up in Halifax. There are difficulties in maintaining service forces overseas. Certain units have to be plugged with personnel drafted from other units. We know that in the air force there are many difficulties at the N.C.O. level and at the technical level.

There is a confession of failure in the fact that on Friday the Associate Minister of National Defence had to announce a program of re-enlistment bonuses. Regardless of economic conditions, and we have had good economic conditions in this country before, never has there been this problem of trying to retain men in our forces. Let the minister ask members of this house and he will find out how many of them have had letters from servicemen either in their own constituencies or from nearby bases asking how they can get out. Why has the minister been obliged to impose the six months written notice rule in order to try to maintain strength? I would say this is part of the penalty of the action taken in 1964 when the minister brought out his white paper amid that great fanfare of trumpets and said there was to be a sweeping reduction, that 10,000 or more men would be cut from the forces and that $100 million would be saved every year.

The point is that a high proportion of the servicemen asked themselves: Am I one of those 10,000? Is my job disappearing? What is my future? With this uncertainty confronting them they would be illogical and, indeed, somewhat foolish if they did not begin looking for a berth in civvy street and if, having found one, they did not take it, albeit in many instances with a heavy heart. Let there be no doubt that many a serviceman has retired much against his inclinations. However, these people have responsibilities to their families and to themselves. It should not be thought that this situation applies only to the lower ranks. It involves many senior officers in whose careers Canada has a tremendous investment. And they will not be replaced.

With regard to the air force and the 500 pilots and navigators who were released following June, 1964, it is my impression that one of the greatest dangers we face with regard to the air segment of our defence forces is that we shall soon lack men of middle experience, particularly at commissioned level. Having got rid of or driven out so many of our younger people, we shall find in five or ten years that we do not have suitable men to occupy the positions which will then be vacant. There will be a great many vacancies.

As to re-enlistment bonuses, the associate minister has told us this policy will apply to N.C.O's. and men. What about commissioned officers? There is no entitlement for commissioned officers on re-enlistment. How about these short service commissions and measures which would attract people formerly in the air force who could be brought back? What limitations will be applied concerning dependents? What will be the length of the period from the time the original retirement took place to the time of re-enlistment? These are details we want to know and I think that before we pass this item we should be given this information.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether we might have the attention of the minister while this debate is going on? It involves a great deal of money, about one-fifth of Canada's budget. Surely the minister could pay attention to what is being said.

An hon. Member: The hon. member is paying his monthly visit to the house, is he?

Mr. Lambert: These are the observations I wish to place on record at this time. We want answers to these questions. I have adverted to only a few. In other parts of the house, even on the minister's side of this chamber, further questions have been raised and I think we are entitled to answers. It is not good enough to say we should wait until these matters are discussed by the standing committee. That committee will be discussing the estimates for 1966-67. We are dealing now with a monumental reorganization of the forces based on the estimates before us and we should like answers to the questions which have been raised.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Chairman, in rising to take part in this discussion I may say that I do not intend to take the time of the committee for very long. First, I wish to thank the Associate Minister for the prompt action he took with regard to a request I made to him. It has always seemed to me since the days when I spent some time in the army that the inflexibility of military regulations petrified the minds of the officers to such an extent that they were unable to give a common-sense interpretation of rules which affect service personnel, so sacrosanct were the regulations.

It was most encouraging to find that the Associate Minister's approach to the problem put common sense first and I can only wish that this will permeate the senior ranks of the army. I am quite aware that regulations must be strict and fairly strictly adhered to. But it is too often the case that regulations which are made to bring about certainty, to assist in bringing about regularity in handling affairs so that people will know where they stand, which are of assistance in accomplishing the task that the military have before them, are used by the military not in the sense of an approach to the task but from the point of view of the sacredness of the regulations.

I always found when I was in the army, and I have discovered few instances since to change my attitude, that the military mind considers the book to be the most important thing. The regulation is all that counts and there is a mental block against trying to interpret a regulation in a human way and in a common-sense manner. I hope the example of the minister will have some effect on senior army personnel so that the minister himself will not have to be bothered with these questions which I understand come to him quite frequently.

I understand the Associate Minister always takes the same common-sense attitude when these questions come to him but it is discouraging to find that he is approached so frequently. When it comes to a question of when or how soon a man may be released, bending the regulations or interpreting them in a liberal manner so that they make common sense would make it unnecessary for the associate minister to be bothered with such matters. I hope the senior personnel in the armed forces, having observed that it is the wish of the government to put more heart or at least more comon sense into the interpretation of regulations, will follow that course.

Hon. members and the public in general are perturbed about morale in the armed forces. Since the questions of recruitment and re-enlistment are providing us with a little problem I cannot help but feel that a common-sense and humane approach to personnel in the armed forces would be a most crucial factor in relieving the forces of some of their difficulty in getting recruits and keeping personnel who have been trained at such expense over such a long period of time.

In another area I have been bothered by one consideration for a long time. I refer to nuclear arms. It seems to me that the entire purpose of defence is to ensure the safety of this country and its citizens and that anything which will help us prevent war and keep us from getting into a conflict becomes our first line of defence so that none may perish in defence of our freedom. Therefore

I think that the efforts of the government should first be concentrated on making sure that the United Nations is strong.

No one in this chamber will deny that the United Nations is the best hope for continued world peace. All of us are aware, however, that in the charter and in the present operations of the United Nations, particularly of the Security Council, there are many cracks in the administrative machinery so that the organization does not function as well as we would like to see it function. Therefore, since the continued useful operation of that body is our most successful line of defence the government should bend its efforts to reforming, changing, modifying, and amending the United Nations Charter to make it more useful both for this country and for our friends and allies, indeed, for every country in the world.

I suppose this suggestion should be made to the Department of External Affairs since the matter probably lies within its orbit but it seems to me that questions of defence and external affairs are so bound together that I should mention it in this discussion, particularly since we are concerned with the further question of relations between states and the way in which they can be affected by the operations of our own defence policy. Every time we consider our defence policy we should consider what effect it is going to have on international affairs.

One question which has bothered me is the further proliferation of nuclear weapons. From time to time it has been debated in this chamber. For years and years it has been made a political football. When Canada accepted nuclear warheads for the Bomarc I submitted that to some extent we became a nuclear power. The Prime Minister and some members of his cabinet have denied this. I am quite aware of the arguments put forward that these are defensive weapons, that they could not by any stretch of the imagination be deemed to be offensive weapons, and therefore that in the ordinary meaning of the word we have not become a nuclear power.

Perhaps it does not have too much bearing on the case but in the proposal made the other day for a non-aggression treaty respecting the use of nuclear weapons the suggestion was made that at least there be an agreement that nuclear arms not be used against countries which possess no nuclear arms. However, I did not notice any suggestion that such a treaty would include a provision that nuclear arms should not be used against those countries that possess no offensive nuclear weapons.

I have never been able to draw the simple distinction between offensive and defensive weapons that seems to satisfy some people when they consider these matters. Certainly I and many other people have never been satisfied that as we have a nuclear weapon that can be used in connection with the Bomarc it cannot reasonably be said that that same weapon cannot be used in a modified missile for an offensive purpose some place at some time in the future because of our limited technical knowledge.

If I have some misgivings about this matter, it can well be understood why other countries which are concerned about the proliferation of nuclear weapons should have the feeling that we are not being quite honest when we say that the Bomarcs are only defensive weapons and we have not widened the circle of countries having offensive nuclear arms. I think the only logical conclusion we can expect other countries to come to is that Canada does have nuclear weapons, that we have aided and abetted their proliferation, and that Canada's efforts at the external affairs level in assisting to stop the further spread of nuclear weapons are to say the least completely hypocritical. The question of hypocrisy with regard to nuclear weapons in Canada is, of course, not confined just to the Bomarc and to external affairs.

• (5:10 p.m.)

The hypocrisy has become more apparent every time the Bomarc has been discussed. I am quite sure that all of us will remember the discussions which took place in the house when the present government insisted there were commitments in this regard. I well recall the Prime Minister stating in answer to a question I asked on June 7, 1963, that the decision to take nuclear warheads for the Bomarc was a mistake. At that time he said that the decision which had been made even earlier was also a mistake. I am sure if it was a mistake earlier than June of 1963 it was more obviously a mistake in 1963. The Prime Minister admitted at that time that before we in this country could even get nuclear weapons it was necessary to agree to acquire Bomarcs. If anything could be more ridiculous as a facet of our defence policy than pursuing a policy admittedly a mistake even earlier than 1963, I do not know what it could be.

When a Prime Minister who has the responsibility for implementing policy says that a policy not yet implemented is wrong and is a mistake and that a further agreement is required in order to pursue this mistaken policy but still insists on pursuing it, then I submit this is the most ridiculous defence policy the country has ever seen. I would ask the house to consider that situation in the light of the fact that this decision, thought to be a mistake, to accept such weapons made Canada another nuclear country, contributed to the further proliferation of nuclear weapons and branded Canada as a hypocrite in the councils of the world at a time when we hoped that Canada might have had some status in bringing conflicting powers to the negotiating table. I am sure that in the ideological struggle between communism and democracy as we know it one of the greatest weapons we can have is our reputation for integrity. Instead of protecting that reputation we are pursuing a policy of hypocrisy.

The Prime Minister has been most enlightening in answering questions as to when we are going to negotiate out of nuclear arms. However, to complete the picture on the nuclear weapons policy the government decided to implement the mistaken policy of June, 1963, and made another agreement in order to implement it even though it was aware that it was not only mistaken but that the nuclear weapons were useless. The Prime Minister promised to negotiate us out of this agreement. This is now February, 1966. Yet in a most offhand manner the Prime Minister has indicated that we are going to get around to negotiating out of nuclear arms. I want to ask the Minister of National Defence whether he feels that nuclear weapons are useful in Bomarcs and whether or not he is chided from time to time by his colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, for cutting the feet from under the Department of External Affairs in its attempts to use Canada's influence in negotiating treaties or agreements limiting the proliferation of nuclear weapons. I wonder also whether the Minister of National Defence can justify any amount of money now being spent in connection with the purchase, maintenance, use or storage of nuclear warheads for Bomarcs.

Does the minister have the ear of the Prime Minister a little more closely than the rest of us and can he tell us that there is to be an early decision by the government of Canada to get rid of these useless weapons and adopt a defence policy based on common sense so that Canada will be restored to the position where it can talk honestly about nuclear weapons and the desirability of not having them spread further? It would be a common-sense step to get rid of these useless weapons, the acquisition of which rendered our voice futile and hypocritical.

I wanted to say a word about the integration of our armed forces, particularly with reference to morale, but other members have covered this subject adequately. I am curious, however, about the vast sums of money that this policy was supposed to save. The minister has stated that it has saved money without impairing efficiency. Perhaps my bookkeeping is not up to the minister's standards but I cannot see that there has been in fact any lessening of defence spending.

Since morale is a very important factor in relation to efficiency and in view of the fact that morale has declined in our forces, it is apparent that in fact there has been a considerable lessening of efficiency. Perhaps the minister at some time when he is replying to questions in this regard will spell out how he reconciles the total amount of money spent now compared with the amount spent before this campaign was commenced with his statement that we are spending less on the armed forces. In this regard he should be reminded that the navy is only about half as operational now as it was and that the latest decision to buy the F-5 aircraft is just as controversial as the ill-fated decision to buy the Arrow. The more we hear about the F-5 the less common sense there seems to be in purchasing it. I can only conclude that no matter how much it is improved the decision to buy it will be a mistake. I expect the Prime Minister to get up in the house and say, as he did in respect of the Bomarc, that the government has made a mistake in its decision to buy this plane. I hope the Prime Minister will be able to defend the decision to purchase this aircraft, a decision which has alarmed everyone in this house and in this country.

Perhaps the minister in his reply might also explain the Prime Minister's statement at the time we accepted nuclear warheads on the excuse that there was a billion dollars tied up in equipment. At the time I thought the Prime Minister was going to point out that while the government was pursuing a stupid defence policy the stupidity was justified by the saving of some of that billion dollars. Since we are apparently following a policy that was admittedly wrong the Minister of National Defence should point out to the country how much money we are to save so that we can at least console ourselves with the thought that while we have been foolish in our policies we have been penny-wise.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, I do not rise to take part in this debate on defence estimates as a defence expert, though I have served on the defence committee and have taken more than a passing interest in defence expenditures and defence policy in the past few years. I should like to address my remarks to the value the taxpayer is receiving for these defence expenditures. Now as never before in the history of the world we must bear in mind and always remember that the civilians must keep a very close watch over military might and military expenditures and the final authority must forever rest in the hands of the civilians. I believe this is very true today because of world situations that exist.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Looking back over our defence policy and our defence expenditures and thinking back to the time when the minister assumed this portfolio, we are reminded of what a clear-cut policy he seemed to have but did not have for defence. He outlined clearly where he was going and where he thought our defence policy should be going. He outlined how the unification of the three services would save the taxpayers of this country a great deal of money.

I was on the defence committee some years ago and I know that a number of questions were asked in this regard. I did not ask any; I was prepared to wait and see. We have waited a number of years and I have looked for the savings in defence but have seen none. The amazing thing about this is that John Q. Public is convinced that there is a saving of public money here. There should be a saving in this area but there is not. John Q. Public is convinced that the minister has done an amazing job and has not made any errors.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): John Q. Public is convinced that the minister is spending this money wisely. I say this is partly the fault of this house because we have not examined the minister's estimates thoroughly enough. It is partly because the press and the minister's public relations officers have been together on many aspects of defence. It is partly because we are in the middle of a peacetime period in Canada and John Q. Public is just not interested in the whole question of defence and how our defence dollars are being spent.

I think these estimates should be filibustered until the minister can stand up and show that he is saving money, until he says he will take a second look at this wasteful expenditure of $215 million on an aircraft which the United States government is not going to purchase. This aircraft has been tried in Viet Nam and it has been proven that it is not a good combat plane; yet we blindly go ahead with it because the Canadian public are not interested in defence and allow their defence minister to spend $215 million on a plane which is not a good combat plane, has not proven itself and is not going to be purchased by the American forces who originated and planned it. The United States government have scrapped this plane. Yet we blindly go ahead and spend this very great amount of money on it. This is just one aspect of the mistakes made in our whole defence picture.

Let us look at our defence picture. We force 500 pilots into immediate retirement. They are told, "We don't really need you fellows. You have been really faithful. We admire the spirit in which you enlisted so we will give you a bonus if you now retire. Canada no longer needs you". Then what happened? After the taxpayers of this country had spent something like $175,000 training each one of these pilots and had footed the bill and having been told we did not need them, the minister turns around and says, "We do need you fellows. We will give you $200 for each year for which you re-enlist". What kind of management is this? This is the question that should be uppermost in the mind of every taxpayer. Is he getting value for his dollars?

Mr. Hellyer: Yes.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): We should examine this question very closely. The minister says yes, the taxpayer is getting value for his dollar. Who beside the minister and his executive assistant have anything to say about defence matters? I sat on the defence committee and I have read all kinds of articles saying what a great committee it is. It is an educational committee. At no time is the committee allowed to determine or even look at the forward policy of the government or what the forward policy of this country should be in regard to defence.

We examined the Bomarc sites but at no time did we have the chance to say that the whole thing is obsolete, that we are spending $3.5 million a year maintaining these sites which are no longer useful to Canada. The minister said when he was in the opposition that a war involving manned bombers over this country was very unlikely. That was said some three or four years ago. It is certainly much more unlikely today. Yet we continue to maintain an obsolete fleet of missiles which at best have a range of 425 miles. Any manned bomber could fly around them without losing too many miles or wasting too much gas.

Thirteen thousand men have voluntarily retired from the forces and we are not supposed to ask why. We spent a great deal of money training these men, the amount of money spent on training them depending upon how long they were in the services, but we allowed them slowly to slip away. We the taxpayers are supposed to allow this to go on forever just because no one is apparently interested in what the Minister of National Defence is doing. This is a shameful waste of the Canadian taxpayers' money, forcing men into retirement and then paying something like $65 million in bonuses to keep them in the services.

Some time ago we were told that the Minister of National Defence under his plan of integration of the services would make a great saving in our defence expenditures. As the hon. member for Calgary North pointed out the other day, where is this saving? For the past number of years our defence expenditures have been around $1,500 million. In the present year they are estimated to be $1,580 million. Where is the saving?

The minister's speech on the opening of the debate on these estimates was one of generalities. He dealt at length with the question of how he had made tremendous savings in housekeeping. He said that at national headquarters he had got rid of 1,000 men. He moved them to another building, for all we know. Now he is paying those same men to re-enlist. What kind of a hodgepodge of policy and government spending is this? Never before has the Defence Committee had such a tremendous task ahead of it to re-examine the situation and point out the follies of the Minister of National Defence.

I hope the members of that committee will thoroughly examine defence matters not from the point of view of military experts but to see that the taxpayer has value for the dollars spent in defence. We travel across this country and see the growing alarm on the part of John Q. Citizen because of what we are doing with our money. Canadian citizens are saying: You are going to tax us in order to provide a pension; You are going to bring in medicare. Can the country afford it?

We are told that something like 40 per cent of the gross national product is paid to one government or another in taxes. Members of parliament were hoodwinked by the present Minister of National Defence when he said he would make great savings in the amalgamation of the three services. I could not see it at the time. The minister may amalgamate some services and smooth out some headquarter's expense but basically the man trained to fly a plane will still be in a separate unit from a man trained to sail a ship or serve in the army.

What has this amalgamation done to morale? A number of hon. members who have spoken previously have discussed this question. Thirteen thousand people have retired voluntarily from the forces in the past few years. This alone provides the answer to the question, what has amalgamation done to morale. They would not get out of the service if they had confidence in the minister and in the service.

This is the greatest problem the minister must face. It is all well and good for Charles Lynch to say in the Ottawa Citizen not long ago that the minister's self-assurance is undinted. But the minister must lie awake some night and examine the question of why so many men have left the services if they have confidence in the minister. Do they know or respect the direction in which he is taking the services? This is the ultimate question that the minister must come back to and answer. Is the minister providing the leadership necessary for these men to stay with him? I think the answer must be that he has failed in this regard and failed miserably.

There is no question about it. I am not debating the question of pay for the armed services. I appreciate the fact that they need pay increases. I was pleased to hear the minister announce the other day that a pay increase would be forthcoming, retroactive to October of last year. He forces retirements and then he pays men to stay in the service. This very fact must convince the people of Canada that the defence policy of this government is the worst we have ever had. These are the questions that are uppermost in the minds of the people of this country. You force men to retire after spending $175,000 on their training and then you introduce an item of $65 million in the estimates in order to pay men to stay in the service.

The minister has announced that he will give men $200 a year for each year for which they re-enlist. I talked the other day to a person in the air force who said he was going to re-enlist for five more years. It meant $1,000 to him and he had intended to get out. I asked him why. He gave me a whole host of reasons which I found very interesting but when you summed up all his reasons they amounted to the fact he did not know where he was going and he was more or less fed up with the leadership shown by the department. We in the opposition have a duty to point out to the government that the Canadian citizen is not getting value for his money in this department. The minister has failed and failed miserably in trying to make savings and cut out wasteful expenditures.

The minister could make an immediate saving of $215 million by cancelling the contract for the F-5. Charles Lynch put it very well in an article in the Ottawa Citizen from which I should like to quote:

> There is more than a suspicion that the CF-5 was ordered more to keep Canadian workmen busy than for any qualities it may possess as a fighting machine.

I ask you, is that the duty of the defence department? If the government wants to keep Canadian workmen busy the government should spend money on the development of our resources because there you have a multiplying force. As the resources are developed many more people are employed. If the sole purpose of the government is to spend money to employ people, then it should spend money not in making an aircraft which is obsolete before it is off the drawing board but in developing our resources. I think the minister must wrestle with that question and decide just what he is doing, employing men or purchasing equipment that will enable us to defend this country better and keep peace throughout the world.

Further along in this same article Mr. Lynch says:

> The result has been that there has been no informed critical appraisal of the Hellyer revolution except by the men who are conducting it under his guidance and inspiration. Not surprisingly, they find it good.

This is what I said a while ago. The only people who have really examined the minister's record have been his own advisers, press agents and public relations people. They have all agreed it has been tremendous. We look for results, we look for savings, and we have seen none.

In addition to all these mistakes, the morale of the forces has been eroded. Mr. Lynch has a word to say about morale too:

> Mr. Hellyer admits that he is having trouble keeping the armed forces up to strength.

I like this:

> Having cut away the fat, he now finds he's losing some of the meat.

This is exactly the case in the armed forces today. Having cut away the fat he is losing some of the meat. Morale has gone and the forces are completely dejected.

What did the minister say in his remarks in this regard? He first gave us some idea of what he thinks the Canadian forces should do and what has been done. I should like to quote from the minister's opening remarks as found on page 1416 of Hansard:

> —that notwithstanding the reduction in expenditures we will have achieved, within two years, a significant qualitative improvement and operational capability of our armed forces.

Let us examine that statement. First he says, "notwithstanding the reduction in expenditures". We have not seen any reduction in expenditures. The minister may say that this tri-service business has saved us a lot of money. The estimate book shows that there has been $15,800 million budgeted for the armed services. We do not see these savings. The minister goes on to say that within two years we will have achieved a significant qualitative improvement. How can you have a significant qualitative improvement when you force 500 of your top officers to retire? You cannot. The minister also said there would be an improvement in operational capability of our armed forces. How can you have that improvement when you order an airplane for them that is obsolete before you start production of it?

The news last night really prompted me to make this speech on defence. It was stated then that 107 CF-5 planes had been ordered by West Germany and 21 of them had crashed because of faulty mechanism, faulty construction or faulty design. About one-fifth of the planes with which they were supplied less than a year ago are completely ruined. The minister says he is going to bring about a significant qualitative improvement and operational capability in our armed forces. He is going to completely ground our air force.

Mr. Hellyer: Are you talking about that plane you bought when you were in the government?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): The minister makes some snide remark about the Avro Arrow. Certainly he made a great fuss when he was on this side of the house but he did not tell us the whole story. The Defence Committee ascertained that the decision to cancel that plane had been made in 1956 but because an election was imminent the government failed to declare itself. It failed to say the air force had rejected it in 1956. The government failed to take any action on the air force's decision because an election was imminent.

Mr. Hellyer: Nonsense.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): This all came out in evidence and it is in the committee's report. I believe it was General Foulkes who appeared before the Defence Committee and put this information on the record. The minister can make some smart remark and then go back into seclusion in his department but he has led the Canadian public down the garden path with regard to defence expenditures.

What else did the minister say? He said that war between the NATO powers and Russia was remote. Did he tell us what is happening to NATO and the whole question of our NATO alliance? This matter was quite prominent in the 1963 election campaign, at which time the minister had great ideas and great vision. Did he tell us in his speech that France has said that the NATO powers will be out of there? Did he tell us the Canadian force in France is the only one permitted to take photographs over France today and that the United States is not? Did he tell us what is going to happen in NATO in the years ahead? Did he tell us how Canada can better serve the NATO alliance? No, Mr. Chairman, he dealt in generalities. Two years ago when the minister took over the department I am sure he would have had all the answers. He has found that answers do not come so easily today.

The minister went on to say that there are political difficulties in Europe not yet resolved. That is the way he summed up the trouble in NATO. He went on to say that NATO is still of continuing importance to Canada's security. No one denies that, but how best can Canada play its role in this regard? Did he say that we must maintain a nuclear force in NATO, which was a prominent question a few years ago? No, Mr. Chairman, he did not. In fact, he said that the concept of Canada's defence force must be one of mobility, which seems to be a key word of our present minister. He is going to ground the air force with the CF-5's, the Freedom Fighters, so that our defence force will not be very mobile. This question is one of the most important that the opposition can point out to the government in the coming session.

Let us examine our defence estimates. Let the minister produce the savings which he predicted he would make two years ago. Let us examine this tri-service defence force which we are building to see whether or not it is feasible, whether or not any real savings are produced and whether or not something can be done to bolster the morale of our Canadian forces. There is certainly no question that it is at its lowest today.

Quite apart from the air force, what has the minister done with the navy? As the hon. member for Calgary North pointed out, 20 to 25 per cent of our naval ships are tied up in dock with no men to man them. Is the minister building a completely new fleet? He has ordered a few new ships but he has no real program in mind for the navy. Some one in this debate has already said that the navy has gone, that the minister has completely grounded it. Perhaps that is closer to the truth than most naval men would like or be able to admit.

We must continue to examine these estimates with thoroughness. After all, we are living in a democratic country and members of parliament and the government move with the wishes and desires of the people. One role an opposition can play is to continue to investigate conditions and government thinking in the hope that the public will arise and say to the government that we should have some action. That is what we must do in this debate. We must continue to point out that the government has led the Canadian public down the garden path regarding defence expenditures and the mobility of our defence force.

We all remember the great things the government said we were going to do. I remember that I was a member of the Defence Committee when it visited Europe. One of the Liberal members talked to the then Minister of Defence in the British government. He asked him whether Canada would not best serve world peace by having a mobile force and the Minister of Defence in the British government immediately said "Yes, we would love to have you join in a mobile force and help bring about peace in Indonesia". Well, we did not go there. Neither did we go to Viet Nam. The only real effort we made was in Cyprus, and in the statement of the minister when he introduced his estimates he did not even mention Cyprus. One of the speakers in this debate has mentioned that the only real effort we are making today is against the white Rhodesians in Africa, and this is not taking too much of a military effort.

I should like to see more participation in this debate by Social Credit members who are forever showing their interest in expenditures of government, especially wasteful expenditures. I think now is the time for every member of parliament who has the interests of the taxpayer at heart to speak. There are many projects in my constituency, as I am sure there are in the constituency of the hon. member for Red Deer who interjected in this debate, on which I should like to see the government move. But time and again the house has been told by the government: "We are sorry but money is not available".

We were told that money was not available when we asked the government to increase the old age pension to $100 a month. The big hue and cry raised by the government was that money was not available. Yet in this department we see wasteful expenditures, $215 million to buy an aeroplane that is not airworthy, $3.5 million per annum to maintain Bomarc missiles which were practically obsolete when they were built, $175,000 each to train 500 pilots who were forced into retirement—you can do a little multiplication there, Mr. Chairman—13,000 men voluntarily retired, and now $65 million to be spent by the government to urge members of the forces to re-enlist. I would ask members on both sides of the house to look at these figures and to ask themselves whether this is value for money spent.

Are we doing what the Canadian taxpayer wants us to do? I am sure that if these expenditures were fully examined and knowledge of them made available to every taxpayer—taxpaying time will be rolling around pretty shortly—every taxpayer who sends in his form at the end of April will say to himself: One fifth of this tax money will be going to the Department of National Defence which is protecting me from becoming wealthy. That is about the size of it, Mr. Chairman, because any army which moved into Canada today would find no resistance. Our armed forces strength is down to an all-time low. Their morale has completely gone. Its aeroplanes are no longer airworthy. Ships are not manned and the infantry has no manpower either. So where are we? Why are we giving this department one-fifth of the taxpayers' money? I would ask that this information be made available to every Canadian citizen.

If any minister of the present government has failed, has hoodwinked the public and led the public down the garden path, it is this Minister of National Defence. I remember when he stood up in the house and lambasted the then government about the cancellation of the Avro Arrow. He said it was a terrible thing, knowing all the while that it was not and that the decision was made back in 1956. He lambasted the government about nuclear weapons. Now this government is dropping them. He told the public he would save them a fortune with the amalgamation of the three services. Is he saving them a fortune, Mr. Chairman? The last five years' estimates have already been put on record by the hon. member for Calgary North. Some $1,500 million a year has been spent, only 12 per cent of which going to the procurement of new weapons. So where is the housekeeping saving? It is just not there.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted for his speech has expired.

• (5:50 p.m.)

Mr. Pugh: Mr. Chairman, may I introduce a slight change of pace. I want to deal very shortly with a problem that I think is extraordinarily important and which has been going on for a long time and should be cured. I refer to the soldiers' votes in federal elections. I wish to comment first about the ballot itself and, second, about the publication of service votes.

My understanding is that the ballot is secret but because the man's name appears on the sealed envelope containing his ballot men in the armed services feel that their vote is known when they vote. I have talked with a good many of them and they feel that their vote is known. I think we should assure them that we have honest people looking after this matter, and I think they are honest, and that there is no way of knowing the exact vote of a serviceman. However, Mr. Chairman, there is that feeling among servicemen because their names appear on the outside of the envelope. They feel that their vote is known. This is wrong and should be corrected.

It can be cured quite simply. I think that the Minister of National Defence or people connected with the administration of the Canada Elections Act could cure it. There is no reason at all that any person in Canada entitled to vote should not have the feeling that when he puts his X opposite a candidate's name that vote is secret and cannot possibly be known by any one else. That feeling does not now exist in the armed services and I think it is wrong that it should go on. So much for the ballot itself.

Second, may I refer to the publication of the service vote. In each and every federal election we have this hangover from election night. We wait for what is known as the service vote. It is wrong that this vote should be make known later and published after the actual main vote. No class of people in Canada entitled to vote in federal elections should have the result of its vote made known. The votes of doctors, lawyers or any other group are not made known and there is no reason whatsoever why the soldiers' vote should be treated differently.

An hon. Member: Include the sailors' vote in that, not just the soldiers.

Mr. Pugh: That is quite true. The hon. member for Victoria says that I should not call it the soldiers' vote. In common parlance in Canada it is known as the soldiers' vote and it is referred to in that way in the press.

An hon. Member: It is the service vote.

Mr. Pugh: Call it the service vote. The last few remarks I have made in connection with the secret ballot should refer to the service vote rather than to the soldiers' vote alone. The service vote is made known and this is wrong. It is wrong that in any election one class of people should be delineated as being against another.

For the life of me I cannot see why today, with modern transportation, ballots should not be cast in advance in exactly the same manner as they are in an advance poll. In an advance poll the results are made known but there is no indication of the class or kind of people involved. The results published are merely added to the total as an item in the final summation. However, in the services members of the armed forces voting outside their own constituencies are tabbed. This is wrong and in view of the feeling of members of the armed services that the ballot is not secret the situation ought to be corrected. I say that it should be corrected and it could easily be by the minister making representations to the proper authorities before the next election.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Chairman, I was called out of the house and I returned to speak on item 1.

An hon. Member: It has been carried.

Mr. Winkler: Oh, no.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Chairman, I have been waiting for a considerable period of time.

Mr. Hellyer: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. To clarify this situation, have we given unanimous consent to revert to item No. 1 in order that the hon. gentleman may speak?

An hon. Member: It has been passed.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The Chair has the impression that we have the unanimous consent of the house to return to item No. 1. The hon. member has explained that he had to leave for a few seconds and I am under the impression that we are still on item No. 1.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Winkler: Thank you. I have spoken on previous occasions to the minister with regard to a question that I want to raise because of my personal knowledge and experience in respect of army retail stores on bases outside the country. I refer specifically to the service known as Maple Leaf Stores so far as the army is concerned and I wish to compare it with the service available to members of the Royal Canadian Air Force on air force bases which is known as PX and is similar to the United States system of retailing on air force bases. Anyone who has travelled throughout the continent in the course of the last two or three years will have had this matter brought to his attention by the people concerned.

Throughout this debate we have heard considerable discussion in regard to morale in the forces. Members of the Canadian armed services were present in a gallery of the house to hear the opening of the debate. I had the pleasure of asking a few of them if what was being said about poor morale was a fact. They went on to explain that first of all they thought the situation was due to the uncertainty of their positions plus the fact that certain statements had been made to them recently in regard to increases they were due to receive. I mention this point at this juncture because so far as the picture on the continent is concerned I understand that a change in store services on army bases to the type on R.C.A.F. bases would in fact give the members of army camps the equivalent of an increase in their present pay.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. It being six o'clock I do now leave the Chair.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED UNDER ADJOURNMENT MOTION

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the following questions will be discussed on the adjournment motion tonight: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), Health and welfare—medicare—inquiry as to legislation; the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinongé-Delanaudière (Mr. Yanakis), Health and welfare—inquiry as to health warning on packages of cigarettes; the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek, (Mr. McIntosh), Veterans affairs—method of dealing with inquiries by members.

• (6:00 p.m.)

It being six oc'lock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REFERENCE OF SUBJECT MATTER OF BILLS NOS. C-16, C-19, C-41, C-44, C-55, C-58, AND C-79 TO STANDING COMMITTEE ON JUSTICE AND LEGAL AFFAIRS

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, before the house proceeds to consider notices of motions I should like to ask for unanimous consent to send a number of private members bills on the subject of divorce and on the subject of birth control to standing committees of the house. Perhaps I could ask for the consent of the house to make this motion now.

I should like to move:

That bills Nos. C-16, C-19, C-41, C-44, C-55, C-58 and C-79 be given second reading and sent to the Standing Committee of the House on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I should like to move an amendment to the motion which has just been put forward. I move:

That the subject matter of bills Nos. C-16, C-19, C-41, C-44, C-55, C-58 and C-79 be referred to the standing committee on justice and legal affairs and that the bills be not read the second time.

Mr. Speaker: Is the minister moving an amendment or a separate motion? I understand this is a separate motion. Is that agreed?

Mr. Lewis: Would Your Honour inform us whether the motion moved by the hon. member for Rosedale was passed? I understand that a vote was taken and that it was passed.

Mr. Speaker: Let us say that the question was not put on the first motion. I must take it that the second motion was the one which would be deemed to have been presented to the house at this time. I would suggest to the parliamentary secretary that he withdraw the first motion. Is that agreeable?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I agree.

Motion (Mr. Macdonald, Rosedale) withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker: So the motion before the house is the one moved by the Solicitor General for the reference of the subject matter of these private bills to the committee on justice and legal affairs.

Motion (Mr. Pennell) agreed to.

An hon. Member: A fumble in the backfield.

Mr. Prittie: I wonder whether the Solicitor General moved the reference of the subject matter of all the bills he had in mind. I believe the ones he moved were those dealing with divorce only.

Mr. Pennell: The hon. gentleman is quite right. I understand there has to be a motion by the sponsor moving the bill and it was my intention to move a second motion that the subject matter of certain bills be referred to the appropriate standing committees. I understand there are other bills Nos. C-64, C-40, C-22 and C-71, which should be dealt with at this time.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Perhaps on that basis I should attempt to do what I did previously, to move them, with the consent of the house, on behalf of the movers of the particular bills. Then we could proceed as the Solicitor General has suggested.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that a motion be made for the reference of the subject matter of Bills Nos. C-64, C-40, C-22 and C-71 to the Committee on Health and Welfare?

Mr. Pennell: To clarify this matter, is it my understanding you are now putting the motion for second reading or for reference to the committee?

Mr. Speaker: There is no motion before the Chair. If the hon. member would make a motion I would put it to the house.

REFERENCE OF SUBJECT MATTER OF BILLS NOS. C-64, C-40, C-22 AND C-71 TO STANDING COMMITTEE ON HEALTH AND WELFARE

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I move:

That the subject matters of bills Nos. C-64, C-40, C-22 and C-71 be sent to the standing committee on health and welfare.

He said: I do this, Mr. Speaker, with some hesitation because I still have some doubt, and I say this with deference, whether the procedure is entirely correct.

Mr. Speaker: The subject matter of the bills can be referred to a committee before second reading. I assume this is why we followed the procedure we did in connection with the bills referred to the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. So I suppose, we can put the motion to the house.

Mr. Pennell: I bow to your better judgment, Mr. Speaker.

Motion (Mr. Pennell) agreed to.

NATURAL RESOURCES

OFFSHORE MINERAL RIGHTS—SUGGESTED REFERENCE OF QUESTION TO DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

Mr. J. O. Bower (Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare): moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of withdrawing the reference to the Supreme Court of Canada on the question of off-shore mineral rights, and in the spirit of Confederation, place the question before a dominion-provincial conference to the end that the decision as to ownership of such mineral rights be determined in a manner fair, just and equitable to the provinces concerned.

[Mr. Pennell.]

He said: Mr. Speaker, as a signatory to the convention on the continental shelf at the Geneva conference on the law of the sea in 1958, Canada's sovereign rights to the natural resources of the continental shelf adjacent to our shores were clearly established. The convention came into force on June 30, 1964, and it only remains for parliament to ratify it, a move which the government has not pushed through to conclusion.

The government's first move has been to submit to the Supreme Court of Canada the question whether jurisdiction over offshore minerals resides with Ottawa or the provinces individually involved. This was done over protestations by the various provinces that the question be decided through a dominion-provincial conference.

I am not a lawyer Mr. Speaker, and therefore I am unable to assess the strictly legal aspects of the claims of the various provinces to offshore mineral rights vis-à-vis the federal position. However, as a member of parliament from the Maritimes I have introduced my motion convinced that the settlement of the issue can best be achieved through a dominion-provincial conference. To that end I propose the withdrawal of the reference to the Supreme Court of Canada on the question.

• (6:10 p.m.)

The nub of my motion is found in the operative words "and in the spirit of Confederation". It seems to me that Canadian history, tradition and precedent dictate as basically equitable that the provinces should first be assured of a favourable position in respect of the direct benefits accruing from natural resources found below the surface of the continental shelf. It is true, to repeat an old and well known story, to say that the Maritime provinces entered Confederation only after much soul searching and trepidation. But enter it we did. Now, just under 100 years later, we are still the low men on the national totem pole and constitute the single big area of unfavourable disparate economic development. This is starkly brought out in the second annual review of the Economic Council of Canada when it discusses its fifth point that is, regionally balanced growth and the reduction of disparities among the regions of Canada.

Over this night on to 100 years we have seen carved out of what once were territories to the original confederation the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta in 1905. We have seen also the extension northwards of Manitoba and Ontario in 1912 along with the acquisition of the Ungava by Quebec in that same year. We have seen the great surge of our minerals industry that has transformed the economies of the provinces I have mentioned. This transformation was in great part due to the minerals developed in lands that were territorial to the founding provinces.

As Canadians we Maritimers take pride and pleasure in the vast wealth uncovered and being produced. We are delighted that it has contributed so much to the economy of the provinces I have mentioned. We appreciate that indirectly, as Canadians we have benefited, but we still ruefully contemplate our relatively melancholy economic position. I maintain that the Maritime provinces today stand in a position relative to the continental shelf much as the founding provinces stood vis-à-vis the territories of the Confederation period.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that by approaching the question of the mineral resources of the continental shelf in the context of what I have just said and along the lines of my motion the government has probably the last bright chance of rectifying the imbalances and inequities, albeit unintentional, suffered by the Maritimes through entering Confederation. We have heard much lately in and out of parliament about the basic necessity of unification in Canada. I firmly believe that the implementation of my motion would do much to counter the centrifugal forces so disturbing to us and would indeed constitute strong centripetal effects.

It might well be that the Supreme Court test would result in establishing provincial ownership of offshore mineral rights. However, there is the possibility of denial of those rights to the provinces, the possibility of decisions favouring one province over another on strictly legal technicalities, the possibility of decisions restricting provincial rights to a narrow band on the in-shore side of the continental shelf. Any one of these would only exacerbate the feeling in the Maritimes that here we would have again the perpetuation of the disadvantages of Confederation.

The procedure of handouts at some future date is no substitute for a predetermined and agreed allocation of benefits accruing, should our continental shelves prove a source of natural resources. A press statement attributed to a number of the government to the effect that "with a bonanza like this in the treasury we could afford a tax cut" does little to allay fears in the Maritimes. On the contrary, it suggests a continuation of the old cap in hand treck to Ottawa and the probable continuation of our disparate economic growth even though substantial resources were developed off our shores.

We in Nova Scotia are not unappreciative of the assistance given us by Ottawa and we have an administration in the province which within the financial resources of the area is doing wonders to improve the economy and the standard of living. But under inexorable economic circumstances we have to run very hard just to keep from falling back in position relative to central and western Canada.

Mr. Rasminsky, the distinguished Governor of the Bank of Canada, was in Halifax recently where he addressed the board of trade of that city. He pointed out that Canada stood very high in the international growth league tables. In fact, according to the Organization for Economic Co-operation Japan was the only large country whose growth had been greater than Canada's over the period 1961-1965. He then went on to note that in the Atlantic provinces many indices showed about the same rate of growth as the corresponding national averages over this period.

This is all very well and as far as it goes it is encouraging. However, the sobering fact remains that the per capita personal income in the Atlantic provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland, averaged for the years 1962, 1963, and 1964, was $1,148 versus $1,622 in the other six provinces or almost 29 per cent less. This, I submit, suggests that a massive economic injection is necessary to boost the Maritimes up to parity.

In concluding this particular phase of my remarks I would note that the Governor of the Bank of Canada was addressing the 215th annual meeting of the Halifax board of trade. It would appear we have not been unduly impatient in the Maritimes, Mr. Speaker, and are not to be criticized if we cry out, "How long, oh Lord, how long"?

To those in this house who may worry about the problems of conservation, export and Canadian participation in the development of any resources found off shore, I say all those and any others I have not catalogued here could be worked out in the national interest through the dominion-provincial conference that I contemplate in my motion. The federal government would always participate in any continental shelf development to the extent of corporation taxes arising from exploitations off shore.

• (6:20 p.m.)

I maintain that the government by reversing its stated position and adopting the procedure proposed by this motion has the opportunity of solving, if substantial mineral resources exist offshore, the hundred year old economic disadvantages of the Maritime provinces. They can do this through carrying on nothing more than an historical process in practice since confederation. When, in the course of time, there now seems to be a chance for doing for the Maritimes something that may redound to the benefit of that area through a procedure employed earlier in the century in respect of the provinces of central and western Canada, why do we forget equity and invoke the strict legalistic concept?

In concluding my remarks in support of my motion I want to make one thing abundantly clear. While I have stressed the Maritimes' position I by no means imply that the Atlantic provinces only should be given the consideration I propose. It is my confident expectation that in the course of debate members from all parts of the country affected by this issue will see fit to support my general thesis and formulate their specialized points of view.

Mr. Jack Davis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I should like to compliment the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare (Mr. Bower) who has just spoken for the way in which he has introduced this private member's notice of motion. He has certainly chosen a very important subject and dealt with it in a statesmanlike manner. I cannot say that I agree with the substance of that motion as he has introduced it in that I do not believe the government of Canada should withdraw its reference to the Supreme Court of Canada. I do not believe that a political solution as opposed to a judicial solution is the answer in this case. Offshore mineral rights are very important. They have become increasingly important in recent years and they will be vastly more important in the years and decades to come.

I looked up a recent issue of Oil Week, one of the authorative publications of the oil and gas industry in this country, and it indicates that in this area alone in Canada some $20 million will be spent on offshore exploratory and development activities and that no less than $9 million will be spent on one drilling rig alone which, I am proud to say, is under construction now on the west coast of Canada. This still is a drop in the bucket. The immense resources, the increasing activity and the large scale production of oil and natural gas off the U.S. gulf coast area, in the Persian gulf and more recently in the North sea between England and Norway has been very impressive indeed. These are becoming the world's principal sources of oil and in years to come may become the principal sources of gas for the advanced industrial nations of the world. So Canada cannot disregard the development of her own offshore resources.

The jurisdiction under which these resources come is very important. We must not have overlapping of jurisdictions; we must have a clear-cut statement and I trust that this will be a statement rendered as a result of careful review and a decision by the Supreme Court of Canada. I should like to think that in this country the powers of the two different levels of government, federal on the one hand and provincial on the other, will become in the process of time much more clearly defined. A fair amount of overlapping exists and perhaps a fair degree of overlapping is inevitable in a federal state, but we must keep this to a minimum. I suggest that in this vital area of development, an area which could be of tremendous importance to the province of Nova Scotia and, indeed, to all the Atlantic region, Quebec and British Columbia, a clear-cut definition must be drawn and the position made abundantly clear so that new capital can be found and development activity proceed with a minimum of interference, a minimum of red tape and a minimum of bureaucracy in this country.

I should like to refer quite briefly to what Canada's rights are. In this I am not begging the question whether these rights belong to Canada as a single nation state or Canada as an assemblage of provinces. Canada's rights on the seabed are established under international law. Under this international law Canada has the exclusive right to explore and exploit the resources of the submerged seabed off its coasts, not only in bays and inlets but also far beyond the limits of our territorial waters.

This right is formally recognized by the convention on the continental shelf adopted by 17 countries at Geneva in 1958. It actually came into force on June 10, 1964, 30 days after Britain became the 22nd nation to ratify it.

While the title of this convention refers only to the continental shelf, the right it acknowledges extends much farther. According to this convention, a coastal nation has the right to the submerged seabed resources at any distance off its shores, wherever it can manage to exploit them, limited only by similar claims from other countries. In other words, we are talking about seabeds that exist not merely three miles, not merely twelve miles and not merely to the limit of our straight base lines but outside and beyond our continental shelves or as far as new technology will permit mankind to exploit and develop the resources which lie under the sea. This immense territory reaches far into the Atlantic ocean and far out into the Pacific, and it is of major importance to this country as well as many other countries.

Canada as a nation, Ottawa, that is, has passed legislation bearing on the exploration for oil and gas off our shores. Regulations were issued in 1960 under the Public Lands Grants Act and the Territorial Lands Act. The first major permit was granted by the previous government on June 29, 1960 to the Richfield Oil Corporation for 1.1 million acres. This was off the coast of British Columbia. One might say that this act set in train the arguments which have followed and precipitated what one might loosely refer to as the offshore mineral dispute between the government of British Columbia and the government of Canada.

In December 1962, the then mines and petroleum resources minister of British Columbia, Mr. Kiernan, made a statement which was widely quoted to the effect that it was the intent of his government to make a reference to the provincial court of appeal of British Columbia to decide the issue as between provincial and federal jurisdiction. On June 12, 1964 there was a meeting here in Ottawa between the subsequent minister of mines of British Columbia, the Hon. Donald Brothers, and the federal minister then responsible for natural resources, the present Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing). They had a lengthy discussion on this subject and on the same day they agreed to release to the press a statement which reads in part as follows:

> The two ministers emphasized that both governments wished to avoid any delay in exploration. After a review of the possibility of administrative arrangements and a review also of their respective legal positions, both ministers were of the view that the only way the matter could be reconciled was by a reference to the Supreme Court of Canada.

So as at June 12, 1964, at least one minister of the Crown in the right of the province of British Columbia was in agreement with the steps which have subsequently been taken by the federal government and in fact in agreement with the reference which is presently placed with the Supreme Court of Canada.

There was a federal-provincial conference held later in that year on October 14, 1964. The then Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources presented the federal point of view regarding our offshore mineral rights. He pointed out that it was necessary to refer the offshore problem to the Supreme Court of Canada in order that the legal positions of the parties concerned could be established.

• (6:30 p.m.)

Later on December 11, 1964, the Prime Minister sent a letter to all the provincial premiers indicating that Ottawa wished to refer the various aspects of the problem to the Supreme Court. All the premiers replied and on December 31, 1964, the Prime Minister issued a press release setting out the position of the federal government.

On March 17, 1965, the Prime Minister sent a letter to each of the provincial premiers stating the main considerations that led the federal government to decide to refer the offshore problem to the Supreme Court and saying that this decision had not been altered by the replies received from the premiers. On April 26, 1965, the question of the jurisdiction and ownership of the submerged resources off the west coast of Canada was finally referred to the Supreme Court of Canada by Order in Council 1965-750. This was tabled in the House of Commons on April 29, 1965, and is a public document.

Since then there has been some correspondence emanating from the government of Canada and directed to the province of British Columbia. Little if anything has been heard from the province. For a government which was on previous occasions extremely vocal on this subject, this is indeed surprising. The question now is how the reference will proceed, and of course it will proceed, without a submission from the province of British Columbia outlining the facts and the argument upon which its position is based. It would be a shame if the province of British Columbia was not to have its policy and its historic claims represented in this way.

Critics of the position taken by the federal government generally assume that Ottawa is challenging the constitutional rights of the provinces with respect to their jurisdiction over those natural resources which lie within their boundaries. This is not true. The federal government gives full and frank recognition to the rights of the provinces in respect of natural resources. They have complete jurisdiction over all resources that lie within their boundaries. But it is a matter of boundaries and not resources that is in dispute. In effect Ottawa is asking the Supreme Court to determine where the provincial boundaries begin and end.

Certain facts are at hand. We know, for instance, that under international law Canada has the ownership of the soil under what might be referred to as internal waters, those inside the base lines and those out and beyond the limit from which our territorial waters are measured. The question with which the constitutional lawyer is faced is whether that ownership vests in Canada as a national state or in the separate and individual provinces that border on these submerged areas.

There are, admittedly, sharp differences of view on this matter. The governments of British Columbia, Quebec and Nova Scotia have each taken the stand that these resources belong to the provinces. Ottawa, having itself negotiated these rights with other nations, has some reason to believe that they belong to the nation as a whole. In other words, we face an impasse but it is an impasse that should not be allowed to hold up the development of these valuable resources.

It could happen, but I doubt it, that the Supreme Court will find that the federal government has no jurisdiction in this field. The Prime Minister stated quite categorically at the federal-provincial conference in July, 1965, that if this were to be the case, Ottawa would "accept the decision and implement it as rapidly and as effectively as possible". He went even further and said that "all revenues collected from federal permit holders, for any area which the Supreme Court found not to be within the federal jurisdiction, will be remitted to those entitled to them", namely, to the provinces.

Equity demands that the provincial governments, on the other hand, adopt a similar attitude with regard to federal rights and property. I understand it has been the advice of the law officers of the crown that offshore minerals are not within the boundaries of the provinces and that they belong to Canada as a whole.

This opinion is not one of recent date; it has been given to successive federal governments and, indeed, whenever Ottawa has had occasion to inquire into this matter. Given this consistency of opinion, the federal government can scarcely turn over rights and benefits to the provinces which are legally thought to be those belonging to Canada as a whole. These opinions at the very least should be put to the test in a court, in this case the Supreme Court, which will take into account arguments advanced by the provinces themselves.

Should the Supreme Court find that these offshore rights do indeed belong to the federal government, and I am again quoting from the introductory remarks made by the Prime Minister to last year's federal-provincial conference—"equitable arrangements may then be negotiated between the federal government and the provinces".

There is another aspect of this problem which I think bears discussion and it is this. Because federal regulations for the disposal of mineral rights by lease or permit differ —they differ as to charges and in other ways—from provincial regulations there is a possibility, and I suggest a distinct possibility, that private individuals, private corporations and companies engaged in exploration for oil and gas may take either level of government or both to the courts. Thus an administrative impasse occurring before the legal position has been determined in accordance with constitutional requirements could lead to legal proceedings before a local court.

Although the case would probably reach the Supreme Court, the dangers inherent in such a reference reaching the Supreme Court should rule out a political agreement between the two levels of government prior to a determination of the constitutional position. In other words, I am saying that were the federal government to withdraw its reference, were this matter to be subject to a series of federal-provincial negotiations, there could well be a dispute arising as a result of these overlapping jurisdictions and different regulations. Private actions could be taken, they could proceed in the courts, and we would be in an unholy mess.

Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, I will be permitted to deal with yet another aspect of this problem. It has been suggested that while this reference is before the Supreme Court there should be a freeze on the issuance of permits to private corporations wishing to undertake exploratory and developmental activities off our coasts. Surely this is not in the interest either of the provinces or of the nation. In order to deal with this possibility the Prime Minister last July suggested that a modus operandi be established with the provinces for the interim period when the reference was under consideration by the Supreme Court. More specifically he suggested, and I am using the words of the Prime Minister, "that governments should agree to concert their action in this field so that companies could obtain licences from both governments involved, without prejudice to each other's claims. In this way we could avoid the embarrassment of having permits issued to different companies for the same area".

As I understand it, Mr. Speaker, there has not been an accommodation of this kind; in other words, this invitation has not yet been taken up. It is not altogether surprising. I wish to refer very briefly to the public submission made on May 31, 1965, comprising part of the submission of the province of British Columbia to last summer's federal-provincial conference. This submission deals with, and I am first referring to the heading, "Provincial Foreshore Mineral Rights". I underline the word "foreshore". The submission says:

> The government of British Columbia views with great alarm the recent decision of the government of Canada to refer certain questions respecting the ownership of provincial foreshore—

I again emphasize the word "foreshore":

> —mineral rights to the Supreme Court of Canada. No step by a national administration in the 94 years since British Columbia entered confederation has caused more shock and concern.

Then later:

> May I warn politely, but in the strongest terms, that this federal step will not contribute to national unity. It is the recommendation of British Columbia that federal questions submitted to the Supreme Court of Canada on foreshore mineral rights be withdrawn promptly.

I looked up the definition of "foreshore" in order to quantify and understand what perhaps the province of British Columbia means by foreshore mineral rights. One authority at least conceives the foreshore as being the shore between the high and low water marks. Clearly what we are discussing here today, and I trust this is thoroughly understood to be the matter before the Supreme Court of Canada, are the rights to the subsurface, the soil and subsoil extending not just yards or even miles but literally hundreds of miles out to sea.

• (6:40 p.m.)

I have wondered, on rereading the submissions of the province of British Columbia, whether the province was perhaps backing down a little bit, whether it was going to take a position which was in effect a partial retraction of the position which it appeared to take in public on this matter.

I have spoken at some length but I do think this is a very important issue. In economic terms our offshore mineral rights are of major importance to the nation. I trust that as a result of this reference to the Supreme Court, a reference which will proceed this year, we will have a ruling within the next 12 or 18 months which will reduce the uncertainties and I hope and expect, designate the federal government as the only authority in this case. This does not preclude a subsequent accommodation as occurred in the United States where the States of the Union obtained rights out to the three mile limit and the nation of the United States retained all the rights extending beyond that.

Surely, some such accommodation is possible in Canada. However, in the interim we need to know what the law says. I trust that this question and other similar questions are never resolved in the political arena where the outcome is never clear-cut, where considerable uncertainty continues throughout all time. I want to see this reference pursued. I want to see it dealt with by the Supreme Court of Canada and I want to see a reasonable accommodation between the nation and the provinces subsequent to the rendering of a decision on the reference to do with offshore mineral rights.

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I speak in support of the motion of the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare (Mr. Bower), and I congratulate him for initiating this debate, which is of interest not only to the Maritime provinces and the provinces of Quebec, and British Columbia, but also to other Canadian provinces. As a matter of fact, eight Canadian provinces are interested in mineral rights off the coasts and on the continental shelf.

As recalled a few moments ago by the hon. member for Coast-Capilano (Mr. Davis), on October 14, 1964, at a dominion-provincial conference, there were wide differences of opinion between the representatives of the central government and those of the provincial governments. On December 11, 1964, the present government took the decision on its own, without the unanimous consent of the provinces, to refer the issue to the supreme court.

I object to this attitude on the part of the government and I support the motion of the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare for the withdrawal of this unilateral initiative of the central government and the settling of the issue at a dominion-provincial conference.

It can be said, Mr. Speaker, that the debate on offshore mining rights directly affects federal-provincial relations, the role of the supreme court and the capacity, even on the international level, of the provincial states.

Mining rights and rights to natural resources on the continental shelf are something that has not been defined in 1867 and that seems today to come under the responsibility, in a way, of the provinces and of the central government.

Obviously in 1867, the Fathers of Confederation could not foresee all those modern techniques, inventions and discoveries. We could not expect them to foresee the invention of the airplane or the discovery of fantastic and vast resources on the continental shelf. Consequently, if at that time such resources had been apparent, if this problem had arisen, it would not have been a court, or the privy council that would have settled it; it would have been the Fathers of the Canadian confederation because it was a political matter and not a legal one. They would have agreed on the nature of the power and on the extension or sharing of the power between the central and provincial governments.

The question here is not one of interpreting a section of the British North America Act, since it does not contain any provision on this matter, although the letter and spirit of the Canadian constitution clearly show that the area of natural resources, property and development of the fruits of property belong exclusively to the provinces.

I consider, Mr. Speaker, that our constitution is a pact and that any new power must be negotiated between the parties and not created by a court, whatever it is.

Our Canadian constitution is a pact. It is not necessary to deal with that matter at length because the leaders of the greatest political parties have acknowledged it throughout our history: Cartier and Macdonald called it the federative pact; Laurier and Borden did the same thing; Meighen called it a federation of majorities and minorities; Ferguson became indignant in a very well-documented report at the idea that a different opinion could be expressed. Ernest Lapointe, in turn, said that confederation was a compromise. In addition, the judicial authority, that is the privy council in London, in several decisions, in particular on aeronautics, in 1932, through the voice of Lord Samkey, stated that the Canadian confederation was a pact. Therefore, since the Canadian confederation is a pact, any new power must be defined, established and agreed to by the parties concerned and not created by a court.

A court, Mr. Speaker, must only interpret a section already established, already part of our federal system. On the other hand, the Supreme Court is not, in my humble opinion, an appropriate constitutional court to settle the matter.

Before 1949, our constitutional disagreements were solved by the privy council in London. Under a federative system, such was an adequate court. The court which is to decide the constitutional conflicts must be objective. Its members must not be appointed by one side only. Before 1949, constitutional conflicts were solved by the privy council in London and that is why, until 1949, the provinces secured many decisions extending their powers.

Since 1949, since Canada abolished appeals to the privy council, as proof of Canadian sovereignty, we found ourselves in Canada without an adequate constitutional court in a federative system.

And that is why, so long as the central government and the provinces do not jointly set up a constitutional court where both would appoint representatives, we cannot accept in a spirit of genuine federalism Supreme Court decisions on our constitutional conflicts.

When I brought up the matter with the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin) on February 15 last, he said the time had not yet come to institute a constitutional court. He even said, Mr. Speaker, that the officials of his department did not feel it was necessary at this time, to set up a constitutional court. Just imagine. The minister does not decide, nor does the cabinet; the civil servants of his department are the ones who decide.

In my opinion, the political and constitutional nightmare we are going through is due to the fact that we are trying to solve our political and constitutional problems by means of political pressure and administrative decisions. I think the government was wrong in not setting up a constitutional court to proceed with the revision of the Canadian constitution in order to deal not only with mining rights but several other matters.

The new power referred to in the hon. member's motion will interest, in a sense, both levels of government. The question is relatively simple and far from complex: the provinces have exclusive jurisdiction over natural resources and property.

Paragraph 13 of section 92 is clear on that point:

Property and civil rights in the province.

And what is an exclusive right, Mr. Speaker? It cannot be taken away from us by somebody else, because it belongs to us, it is an absolute right and no part of it can be taken away from us unless we agree.

Now, several Canadian provinces are jealous of their property and the benefits derived therefrom.

In another connection, the federal government, as a state, is concerned with international relations, in international agreements; it enters into negotiations, into international agreements, whether it be the law of the sea, freedom of navigation, fishing rights and scientific research under the ocean.

Well, it would be necessary to give definitions and this is a political, not a legal question.

The agreement mentioned a while ago by the hon. member for Coast Capilano, the 1958 agreement of which Canada is a signatory was concerned with the law of the sea. But the 1937 decision on the Labour Convention Case before the privy council should be kept in mind. It was stated that the federal government could not sign international agreements and commit the provinces in an area of exclusive provincial jurisdiction, since international law cannot alter the constitutional law of a country. International law, international agreements are related to the constitutional provisions and standards of a country.

If this motion were adopted, it would perhaps mark the beginning of many negotiations and agreements between the provincial governments and the federal government.

Unilateral administrative decisions should cease because they cause political strains which are harmful to understanding and national unity. Very soon, representatives of governments at every level will have to examine our Canadian constitution and adapt it to the problems of today and those which have arisen since 1867, and find the right solutions. Let us stop putting this problem off indefinitely. This is why since the beginning of the session some members of the house have been suggesting a constitutional conference or a joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons which would enable us, the representatives elected by the people, to face up to our responsibilities in this respect. It is not the responsibility of the supreme court of Canada whose members are not elected by the people, nor that of the Department of Justice officers, to decide if a constitutional court should be created, but this responsibility lies with us, the people's representatives and it is for us to take a decision on all political aspects of the matter.

I hope the government will take these suggestions into consideration. The fact that this matter has been raised by the hon. member shows how important it is to establish a constitutional court as soon as possible.

If such a court existed today, the provinces would agree, with the federal government, to submit to that court this matter of off-shore mineral rights. But we do not have such a court, and the provinces object, and quite rightly.

At the time the Prime Minister tabled the famous Fulton-Favreau formula in the House of Commons, he said that it was conceived by virtue of a genuine federalism. Now, since they are making this a matter of genuine federalism, Mr. Speaker, let them begin by giving us the organization required for the exercise of such a federalism, that is a constitutional court to which the provinces and the central government would appoint representatives, so as to settle the question put in this motion as well as the ones that will arise, as a result of this new mentality peculiar to each section of Canada. For instance, in some fields such as education, nine provinces have agreed to let the Ottawa government look after it; on the other hand, the province of Quebec has refused. There are many questions that could be solved with the help of a constitutional court. I am, therefore, happy to support the motion of the hon. member.

• (6:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Bert Leboe (Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, all I have time for this evening is merely to state that I am in full agreement with the motion before the house. There are quite a few things I should like to say but if I do so I will talk the motion out. At the appropriate time on estimates I shall deal very extensively with the remarks of the hon. member for Coast-Capilano (Mr. Davis).

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I should like to compliment the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare (Mr. Bower) for bringing forward this motion in the house, though I cannot agree with what he wants to do. Nevertheless I welcome this opportunity for discussion.

I am in far more agreement with the hon. member for Coast-Capilano (Mr. Davis) when he puts forward the argument that this is a boundary problem, not a problem of natural resources. Traditionally the three mile limit has been observed off our coasts both internationally and domestically. The federal government has guarded and patrolled our shores for many years now.

The Supreme Court of Canada is the proper authority to give a decision in this matter. When that decision has been rendered any settlements found necessary or desirable as a consequence of such decision can be made. In this regard we have the precedent of the United States. There states fought bitterly over offshore rights and finally the court came down in favour of federal ownership. Subsequently settlements were made.

In Canada the Supreme Court is the proper court to decide this issue. It will protect the rights of all parties. I would submit that not only is the federal government involved here as well as the ten provinces and territories but that Indians and Eskimos may have claims that should be heard.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has now expired.

The house will now resume the business interrupted at six o'clock.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

1. Departmental administration, including grants to military associations, institutes and other organizations as detailed in the estimates and authority, notwithstanding section 30 of the Financial Administration Act, and subject to allotment by the Treasury Board, for total commitments of $2,560,546,715 for the purposes of votes 1, 5, 15, 20, 25, 30, 35, 40 and 45 of this department regardless of the year in which such commitments will come in course of payment (of which it is estimated that $1,044,262,000 will come due for payment in future years) and authority to make recoverable advances under any of the said votes and, notwithstanding the Financial Administration Act, to spend revenue received during the year in respect of assistance rendered to the United Nations, any party of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization or any provincial or municipal government, $5,204,855.

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Chairman, at six o'clock I was making some comments with reference to the method of supplying stores and facilities to Canadian troops, particularly on the continent. I was making reference to the system now used in camps of the Canadian army as opposed to that being used on air force bases. The army camp method is called Maple Leaf Services, and on the air force bases it is called PX, similar to the U.S. system. I was saying that a revision of the systems in effect would amount to an increase in income for members of the Canadian army concerned. I say this, Mr. Chairman, because of my personal experience in this regard, and I am putting this forth as coming directly from the enlisted men and other ranks on Canadian bases, and also from my own knowledge gained on air force bases.

• (7:00 p.m.)

It is worthy of note, Mr. Chairman, that the Maple Leaf Services organization is directed by a board of directors right here in the nation's capital, and is composed, I believe, of ex officers of the Canadian army. I do not know whether they are paid out of the profits of M.L.S., or whether they have expense accounts, but I do know that there is a great difference, when you compare the method of direction, from the method used on the air force bases where the commanding officer of the station controls not only the policy, but the price system and the price structure in stores under his jurisdiction. I know that he has, with the assistance of and in consultation with other people on the base, the power of disposition of the profits from the stores which, as I understand, are substantial. The services at R.C.A.F. stations, which most army camps do not have, are not a charge against the Canadian taxpayer. That is, I think, a very worth-while method of operation for those services. In the case of the army bases this is not so.

I understand that decisions of M.L.S. are made by the board of directors in the nation's capital, and that the profits made at a camp in Germany, for instance, can be spent anywhere in Canada, or anywhere else for that matter. One finds as a result that the services on army bases are, by no stretch of the imagination, equal to the services that are made available to personnel in air force bases. This seems a small item possibly to bring forward at this time, but it was important to people in the camps that I had the privilege of visiting.

Another important matter I wish to raise in regard to army camps is that personnel used as employees in these stores are largely from the local area. In other words, they are nationals of the locale in which the camps are situated. In the case of the R.C.A.F. PX stores, usually a member of the serviceman's family was employed. Therefore there is a double benefit to be had from this change that, I suggest, might go to the benefit of people living on Canadian army bases on the continent.

I also learned that very few in the ranks of the officers had available certain services. This was of equal importance to wives of servicemen. For instance, I know that it was not possible for them to enjoy the convenience of, shall we say, automatic washing machines or dryers. A few machines in isolated cases are available, largely as I understand, only to senior officers. This was a complaint from the junior officer branches in both the army and the air force. I think it would be very easy, unless it has already been done, to make available the services I have suggested to people on these camps, if the proper organization steps from headquarter in Ottawa were taken.

I bring that particular phase of my intervention to a conclusion, and I simply say to the minister that in regard to stores facilities if he could see fit to bring about the changes I have suggested it would increase the pay particularly of army personnel in camps on the continent. It would result in lower prices and in a greater degree of station services than under the present high priced structure. The services operated under the Maple Leaf name are not necessary. I think the minister might have his officials look into this aspect of things on the continent.

There is one other thing that I learned in the course of the debate that I have not heard the minister thus far refer to. Because the points in regard to weaponry have been dealt with I will not waste the time of the committee. However, I say this to the minister in regard to our position in national defence, and in regard to our purchases of weaponry from the United States: I do not want the minister or anyone else to misconstrue my words in this regard, but we must understand where we stand in international affairs. We are beside the largest and most powerful nation in the world; we cannot deny that. Certainly if difficulties arose we would hope that our communication would be as close and as warm as ever. At the same time I must say to the minister and to the members of the committee that there is no reason that we have to be dictated to by any particular individual in the Pentagon with regard to Canadian policy.

• (7:10 p.m.)

I think back to those times when defence policy became such an important issue that the minister debated it more than he has debated it at this time. I should like to inquire from him whether he is aware of the change, because of the fact that the military is so closely related with external affairs. I would ask him if at any time he was aware of direction being given from Washington in regard to weaponry they wanted Canada to acquire. Is the minister aware that at any time any officer felt it was necessary for Canada to participate in international defence matters? Was any pressure being brought on the Canadian government at that time in regard to its foreign policy and its association with the Organization of American States? That is important to know in the light of what has occurred in the last few weeks, and in the light of an apparent acceptance of the fact not too many years back that the American authorities did bring pressure to bear on the press of this country in regard to the way a certain election campaign would be conducted.

I wonder whether any of this information was available to the minister at that time? Was it the policy of his party to use this in connection with the political position they were taking then? This seems to be an important matter in the consideration of our defence policy at the present time.

We are not here to play politics, as one of my colleagues said earlier in the evening. We are here to determine in the interests of the Canadian taxpayer whether this money is being spent wisely. At the same time, I say my previous remarks are closely relevant in this regard. Is there even one United States authority which has been dictating any policy for the Canadian government to follow? If so, surely we are big enough and have enough blood left in our veins to choose the course of events which we ourselves want to follow. I hope no such considerations are inherent in the purchases which have been made in areas which were the subject of much criticism by the minister when he was seeking office during that period.

That is all I have to say. I hope that in due course the hon. gentleman will make some comment with regard to these important questions.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Chairman, a certain amount of repetition is unavoidable when taking part in the debate at this point. However, I think I can say a few things which need to be said about government policy in the field of national defence, and about the attitude of the minister.

As to the latter, I may say at once that I am sure we would all appreciate it if, while his estimates are being discussed, the hon. gentleman could get here on time. He is so taken up which his public relations and the effort which is put forward to get him a favourable press that he sits here day after day enjoying himself, trying to live up to the "know-all" image which his staff is endeavouring to foist upon the Canadian people. The minister would be well advised to take a good look at the chaos he has created and the devastating effect of the policies he has introduced upon the morale of our armed forces.

During the war years, the hon. gentleman's chief claim to fame was that long motorcycle ride from California to his home town. I would say that a trip back there would be in order. Reference has been made to his record in opposition as defence critic. This has been examined. So have the contradictions in that record—contradictions produced by the minister himself since his role changed. The minister seems to try to slough off these remarks in the same way as he has endeavoured to slough off other representations made from this side of the house. I would ask him to consider carefully the attitude he himself adopted as—supposedly—the chief opposition critic on defence matters, and to review what he had to say in respect of the policies he was denouncing at that time.

It is difficult to understand how a few senior officers can go about defence establishments making speeches prior to elections with no other purpose in mind than to impress on the rank and file as well as on others serving in the armed forces their idea of the value of the present Minister of National Defence. Yet this is the practice which has been followed by certain officers, and should the minister object or feel he is able to deny this statement, let him review the questions on the order paper and indicate why the question put forward by my hon. friend from Digby-Annapolis-Kings has not been answered. That question has direct reference to senior officers making speeches in defiance of the rules and regulations with no other purpose, as I have indicated, than to campaign on behalf of the minister. If the hon. gentleman questions this I would ask him to consider the fact that the Liberal party sent representatives to Europe with the sole purpose of visiting military bases there in order to carry out electioneering on behalf of that party—to a point where one representative of the Liberal party was obliged to take a plane back to Canada, having encountered one senior officer who correctly understood the regulations.

If the minister wishes to look into these charges he can do so. Should he fail to find answers, I will provide them. As late as yesterday I watched a television commercial advocating enlistment in the armed forces. It told Canadians how our armed forces are prepared to look after any situation which might arise on land or sea, or in the air when the defence of our country is required. It told them how the services are prepared to play an important part in keeping the peace of the world. I understand that both ethics and legislation require that advertisements should be truthful. The minister of defence should bear in mind, for example, the situation in Halifax and on the west coast where the navy cannot provide sufficient manpower for its ships. I know the minister tells us that this is because they are old. He ignores the fact that it is the shortage of trained personnel which has brought this situation about. This shortage in personnel is attributable in large measure to low morale, as has been indicated by responsible senior officers.

Morale and the whole question of confidence are much involved in an incident which took place late in December at Rankin Inlet. The date is not so far away that the minister will be unable to recall what he said on an occasion when he indicated his willingness to assist in the recovering of a downed aircraft—only to say, the next day, that this was not possible because a Hercules aircraft could not land because of field conditions. At the same time, the hon. gentleman was interested in preserving his image. In this instance he foisted the blame upon his colleague the Minister of Transport. I note the Minister of Transport is not in his place and I hope somebody on the other side is responsible enough to call his attention to what the Minister of National Defence was trying to do. He immediately placed the blame on the Department of Transport, and indicated that difficulty was being experienced in obtaining proper information from that department. Did the hon. gentleman contact his colleague, the Minister of Transport, in order to obtain priority with regard to the information required?

I would very much like to hear what the Minister of Transport might have to say about this matter. Should a national emergency arise in this part of the country in similar circumstances, where would we find ourselves? The indications are that the Canadian forces could not even find their way into that part of the country. No, we are not prepared, despite the claims the minister has made. On his own admission there are situations which we cannot handle as indicated by our failure to do anything at Rankin Inlet last December.

The question which arises is this: What does the minister propose to do to rectify these omissions? The minister made a statement about the capabilities of our air force in Europe. Here I am dealing primarily with the question of morale. We are all very proud of what our air force has accomplished. However I would like the minister to tell us, if he knows, what he intends to do about the most recent report from General de Gaulle to the effect that from April 4 foreign troops in France will come under the jurisdiction and command of the French government.

• (7:20 p.m.)

Mr. Hellyer: That is April 1, 1969, is it not?

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Are we prepared for this, and are plans being formulated with respect to our service personnel? The minister has been questioned in respect to our nuclear role. He has been asked whether the departmental people are travelling in different directions, as indicated very recently in Montreal by someone close to the minister. What is the true course of our intentions here? Are Canadian troops involved in the laying of nuclear ground mines around the perimeter of NATO defences in Europe? If so, what part are Canadian troops playing in this field? Does the minister feel the phasing out policies announced by his government are making any headway? I would be very interested to hear him with respect to the nuclear ground fields.

I suggest to the minister that, rather than follow the course of looking down his nose, he sit up and examine what actually is going on—rather than use the department to further his own image in the hope that he may some day lead his party.

He should stop the stupid and silly approach which is being used to publicize himself. There is absolutely no need for anyone in his department to suggest to opposition members that they ask more questions of him, with the prime purpose of giving him publicity. I notice the minister is finally sitting up and taking notice, I say it is a stupid and silly approach to have somebody from his department come to opposition members and suggest that we ask him questions.

Mr. Hellyer: I agree with that.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I am not surprised the minister agrees with it. The minister himself initiated this type of activity. He will recall, although the Speaker of the day did not agree with it, that I attempted to put questions to him. I was ruled out of order by the Speaker; but it was the minister who took it upon himself to suggest that I should ask a question in the house so that he would have an opportunity to give a favourable reply. When I asked the question it was ruled out of order, despite the fact that the minister had suggested this course. In spite of all his preparations he did not come up with a favourable reply to my question, and when he did get an opportunity to deal with it his suggestions were most ridiculous.

Are he and his colleague still trying to get the Canadian people to pay for something which was formerly the property of the Department of National Defence but of which the crown assets disposal people have no inventory? Is he still trying to sell these abandoned war materials? This was the type of question I had and which he had every opportunity to answer in correspondence; but, adopting the policy still being advocated by people in his department, he insists that members of the opposition publicize him by getting up and following this stupid course.

Mr. Herridge: Would the hon. member permit a question? Is he aware of the fact he is just three years out in respect of President de Gaulle's statement about getting rid of NATO troops in France?

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I am aware of the statement previously made by President de Gaulle, but there seems to be a little more determination in the one he made recently. A date line has been set of April 4 with respect to the NATO forces.

Mr. Knowles: What year?

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): This year.

Mr. Knowles: The hon. member did not read the paper.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Probably I read a different paper. In any case General de Gaulle has indicated his intention of taking over service personnel of foreign countries that remain in France after April 4.

Mr. Walker: But what year?

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): 1969 is the answer, and I thank the hon. member very much. With respect to the question asked by the hon. member for Kootenay West, when that same problem came up on a previous occasion the Department of National Defence had no answer for it. In many respects the policies followed by the government are most ridiculous.

On the question of morale I realize that the matter I am going to mention comes under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Veterans Affairs. It concerns our enlisted men and women and their pensions, and in the case of pensions I feel the Minister of National Defence should take it upon himself to make representations on behalf of service personnel and their families.

The Auditor General's report has indicated that in some cases pensions for service personnel were dated back to the age of nine years. I contrast that with the case of Sergeant Hamood, a man from my own town, who was serving in Europe. I bring it to the minister's attention because I think it is his responsibility to intercede with the Minister of Veterans Affairs. This sergeant was a married man, serving in Europe and living off the base. Each and every day he took part in a car pool in order to arrive for duty at nine o'clock in the morning. On the particular morning I am referring to he was travelling with his own commanding officer. There was an accident and this young Sergeant Hamood was taken to hospital. There they had to cut his uniform off, and there he died. But the Minister of Veterans Affairs can see no reason why his survivors should get a pension, despite the fact that the man was killed on his way to work, was in uniform, and was travelling with his own commanding officer.

It is the minister's responsibility to look after the troops. This man's wife and children are denied a pension because, according to the department's interpretation, he was not on duty at the time he was killed. It is something which has a direct effect on the morale of our troops and I believe the minister should take the matter up with his colleague, the Minister of Veterans Affairs, and have something done about it.

As the various items of the estimates come up I have every intention of saying more with respect to these matters. Once again I plead with the minister to intervene on behalf of the sergeant's family I have mentioned.

Mr. Grills: Mr. Chairman, the reason I am taking part in this debate at this time is due to the fact that one of the largest and finest air stations in Canada is in my riding. I refer of course to Trenton air station, the home base of Transport Command, as well as No. 6 repair depot.

I have more than a casual interest in this debate because I represent many of the personnel at this air station and am associated with them in the business and social life of our community. I have met some of the finest calibre of citizens who have intended fulfilling their carreers in the air force.

So far as the minister is concerned, as an individual outside his office I have found him a likeable person. At one time it was said that he somewhat resembled the Leader of the Opposition, but I am afraid that so far as ability is concerned there is no resemblance. During my acquaintance and experience with armed service personnel I have never witnessed morale so low within the services. In my opinion nothing in the history of the Canadian armed forces has shaken the individual serviceman's morale more than the mismanagement of integration.

Why is morale so low within all services and throughout all ranks? The answer lies in the methods used to release personnel ahead of their normal retiring dates. The total disregard of the individual and the callous and ruthless method of chopping away careers has alarmed everyone.

• (7:30 p.m.)

Airmen and officers with long and honourable service were suddenly released. For many months all ranks knew that releases would be made because the minister made frequent press reports and announcements of the sweeping reductions to be made. No official word was given to the individuals; they had to sit and wait until the fateful letter arrived giving them three months to clear out, and in some cases less. Some received their letters while serving overseas. The individuals chosen had no chance to plan ahead or to begin the organization necessary to obtain employment. Servicemen who wear the uniform often live for years in isolated bases, often in public housing. They are divorced from the normal way of life and have a real problem in readjusting.

One of the basic reasons for the low morale today is the insecurity caused by an uncertain future. The serviceman never knows when he may receive a "you are through" letter. Servicemen knew that many of the early retirements were unnecessary and that normal retirements within three years would have reduced the forces by the amount claimed necessary by the Minister of National Defence. They also knew that the savings claimed by the department were just for press releases. They believe that the personnel selections were made by the officers of the minister and not by the personnel staff of the services. It is my opinion that the average military person, whom I have come into contact with, feels no real pride in belonging to the military forces of Canada. The average serviceman feels he has lost the respect of his fellow Canadians, and believes they have no interest in his well-being.

The huge amount of propaganda put out by the Department of National Defence prior to integration has convinced the serviceman that he is nothing but a football to be kicked about by Liberal politicians. Today servicemen badly need a new minister to trumpet their worth and to give them pride in serving their country.

I have noticed that in recent years the servicemen's votes have been predominantly Liberal. After the treatment they have received from this minister they now wonder why they voted this way. I agree that they are privileged to vote as they wish, but I noted some difference in the last election and look forward to seeing a further change in the next, whenever that may be.

In my opinion, in the minister's remarks at the outset of this debate he overlooked the most important factor in any institution: the personnel, the human factor.

To prove some of my statements, Mr. Chairman, let me say that during the recent election campaign, when the minister was good enough to come to speak in Trenton on behalf of my friend the Liberal candidate, the attitude of the servicemen to the minister was clearly shown by the heckling he received from the members of the armed forces. I am sure that night will linger in his memory for some time. Some of the servicemen had to be removed by service police.

Mr. Hellyer: That is not true.

Mr. Churchill: He says that is not true.

Mr. Hellyer: It is not true.

Mr. Grills: Will the minister come down to Trenton and tell me that it is not true? I could say a little more about this if he likes. I have knowledge from reliable sources that the minister did not intend to come to Trenton. About ten days prior to his coming to Trenton I had the privilege of speaking in the same hall in which he spoke and I am sure that he was drafted to come down in an attempt to save the situation which was deteriorating fast for the Liberal candidate. He came on short notice and made the best he could of the situation.

Servicemen are now so discouraged that they are writing letters to members of parliament—I have some on my desk today—asking how to get out of the services. They are completely discouraged. On November 26th—or it may be the 28th; I would have to check the date—a new policy was brought in whereby servicemen must wait six months before they can be released. If these men are happy in the service and are not getting out in great numbers, will the minister tell us why that policy was brought in? Many servicemen are asking to get out at this time, so many that it has become alarming.

Mr. Chairman, I could say a great deal more about this situation but I do not think I should take up any more time of the committee or embarrass the minister further. However, it is high time he came down from his ivory tower and changed his arrogant attitude towards service personnel in this country, or resign in favour of someone who does appreciate their worth in the service of Canada.

The Chairman: Shall vote No. 1 carry?

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Chairman, I want to take a little time of the committee to discuss some aspects of the very important questions of national defence covered by the estimates now before us. May I preface my remarks by saying I think it is unfortunate for Canada that there has been such a long time during which parliament has not had an opportunity of examining defence matters in parliament as a whole. You will recall that there were no discussions or opportunities for discussions on the defence estimates during the last session of the last parliament and that the estimates for the year before that were passed very quickly under the guillotine. The government should recognize that in a democratic society it is responsible to the people and is a servant of the people, and that parliament as a whole is the representative of the people. The government should hold itself accountable to parliament and to the people for all its actions.

The time honoured way of doing that is to present the estimates of each department of government to parliament every year for examination. As a matter of fact, it is necessary for parliament to meet at least once a year. Theoretically we could have a session of parliament during which no legislation was passed, with only the estimates being considered. I think that is only right because a consideration of the estimates and the voting of supply in my judgment should always be at the top of the list of priorities.

• (7:40 p.m.)

During the last session of parliament the government seemed to be preoccupied with decorating its political window with tinsel, rather than seeing to what was in the shop. During all the months of last winter and spring until the end of June, the estimates were not discussed. I do not believe that is the right way of conducting the affairs of parliament in a democratic country. For the reasons I have stated the defence estimates, in common with many others, have not been examined by parliament for a long time. The last major debate we had on defence was in 1964, almost two years ago. That was the debate on the bill which was passed to amend the National Defence Act to allow the reorganization of the Department of National Defence. But since parliament transferred this additional power to the government, the government has not held itself accountable to parliament for its actions, nor has it reported on the results of those actions until now, when we are considering estimates which are already eleven-twelfths spent.

Mr. Chairman, there are many, many questions in the minds of the Canadian people as far as defence matters are concerned. Perhaps chief among them is the question of integration. The Canadian people want to know what will be the result of the program of integration being carried on. The services themselves want to know exactly what the program contemplated is going to be, how far this business of integration is going and what it means. The question of integration has been put forward as a convenient vehicle for propaganda and it has been said it will be a great means of saving money and preventing waste.

I am all for efficiency, the prevention of waste and the elimination of duplication or triplication wherever it exists. But I feel there are disadvantages in the program of integration, depending on its extent. These disadvantages have never been admitted. The benefits claimed for it have never been documented or substantiated, except that it has been said time and again that integration will save Canadian taxpayers roughly $100 million. But the expense of defence remains about the same. It should be noted that if $100 million is being saved by integration there is another $50 million or so saved in defence expenditure, by reason of the fact that defence construction has been greatly reduced over the last three years.

As I understand it, for the last three years the expenditure in connection with defence construction has been roughly a third of the figure for a good many years before that. This is for the construction of buildings having to do with defence plant. For the last couple of years for which I have figures, the expenditure was just over $25 million for this item; for a number of years prior to that it was on the average at least $75 million a year and one year it went up to over $150 million. So there is this element that is no longer a charge on the public. I should like the minister to report as to the actual progress being made toward spending a larger percentage of our total expenditure on equipment and a lesser amount, relatively, on the housekeeping side of national defence.

Up till now, Mr. Chairman, we have been lacking factual information on the effects of integration and on what we are getting for the defence dollar as of 1965 or 1966. Then, too, there has been no significance given to the intangible things which have to do with integration. The White Paper which was produced a couple of years ago mentioned integration, and I shall quote briefly from it:

> Following the most careful and thoughful consideration, the government has decided that there is only one adequate solution. It is the integration of the armed forces of Canada under a single chief of defence staff and a single defence staff. This will be the first step toward a single unified defence force for Canada.

The query in the minds of Canadian people, and I think in the minds of the men serving in the forces is, what are the additional steps? How far are these steps going? What is meant by a "unified defence force for Canada"? If it means co-ordination of all three services at every possible level into a well balanced fighting force, with the elimination of duplication in our administrative commands, that is fine with me and I think it is fine with most Canadians.

However, Mr. Chairman, if it means doing away with tradition, with the three separate services and the many other things that create morale and esprit de corps, I have very grave doubts about it. The White Paper no doubt was aware of these intangible elements with regard to integration but they were given short shrift in the White Paper. It says:

Two objections are given as reasons why integration should not be undertaken. First, that morale or "esprit de corps" is weakened, and second, that competition is diminished. Neither of these objections will stand against careful scrutiny.

But I believe the proof of the pudding is in the eating and we can gain by experience in this matter. As has been said by various other members of the committee, morale in our defence forces is low. There is a great wastage of skilled personnel from all three services and the explanation that this is due only to competition from civilian occupations is not the full answer, because Canada has been equally prosperous on previous occasions and the existence of this type of competition has not previously, to this extent at least, caused the low morale that exists in the services.

In addition, Mr. Chairman, all Canada is not prosperous. The Atlantic provinces are not prosperous; they still have a high unemployment rate. This is a part of the country with a long and honourable tradition of service in the armed forces. I am sure there are enough unemployed people in the Atlantic provinces alone to fill the gap in the armed forces, if this career was still attractive to them.

We have the situation where only a short while ago pilots, highly skilled and highly trained men, were prematurely discharged from the R.C.A.F. because it was said that we had a surplus of aircrew. It should be remembered that training aircrew to operational level is an extremely expensive procedure. It costs many, many thousands of dollars to train one pilot. Now we are understaffed as far as aircrew and technicians in all three services are concerned. Many of our armed units are under strength. We have the situation where some of the ships in the navy are not operational because of the lack of crew. I believe the minister said that the remaining destroyer escorts carrying helicopters are more effective than were all the destroyer escorts which we had in operation without helicopters.

This would be true, Mr. Chairman, if you gauged the situation against conditions of a quarter of a century ago. No doubt one of our destroyer escorts of today with a helicopter is infinitely more effective than were our destroyers a quarter of a century ago. But the world is not standing still. As capability in defence matters increases, so does the problem increase and the responsibilities in respect thereof. The problem of anti-submarine warfare is greatly increased.

• (7:50 p.m.)

In the past, submarines were short range attack weapons. They could not attack shipping, which was their only target, without exposing themselves to counterattack. They had to approach very close to a ship in order to attack it, and thus made themselves vulnerable targets.

In this day and age we are not talking about the submarines of world war II; we are talking about a highly sophisticated, nuclear powered, nuclear armed strategic weapon, the role of which is not to attack shipping necessarily but to stand offshore, hidden in the sea somewhere and, while submerged, launch missiles at centres of production or population. This tremendously increases the problem of anti-submarine warfare. I feel it is certainly very unsafe to assume that any potential enemy that we may have will be as unfortunate in its minister of national defence as we are. We can assume therefore that any potential enemy is making advances in the techniques of waging war.

What we need, Mr. Chairman, are some clear statements, simple statements, that are not in any way ambiguous with regard to our defence situation, not only with regard to integration but other important matters. For example there is the question of nuclear arms. Where do we stand on this issue? The White Paper has this to say:

The question of nuclear weapons for the Canadian armed forces is subordinate to that of Canada's political responsibility as a member of a nuclear-armed alliance. NATO is a nuclear-armed defensive alliance, which dare not be otherwise as long as it is confronted by a nuclear-armed potential opponent. NATO may become less dependent upon nuclear weapons, but the alliance must continue to possess nuclear weapons in the absence of controlled disarmament and as long as hostile forces have them. Its policies must envisage that in certain circumstances such weapons would be used against aggression. A share in the responsibility for these policies is a necessary concomitant of Canada's membership in NATO. One cannot be a member of a military alliance and at the same time avoid some share of responsibility for its strategic policies.

Having accepted the responsibility for membership in a nuclear-armed alliance, the question of nuclear weapons for the Canadian armed forces is a subordinate issue. It depends on how we can most effectively contribute to collective strength.

I agree with that statement, but our contribution to NATO defence has the capability of being nuclear armed, still is nuclear armed and will remain nuclear armed so far as we can see into the future. However, on February 18, the Prime Minister in reply to a question had this to say, as reported on page 1440 of Hansard:

Mr. Churchill: I have a question for the Prime Minister which will require a very short answer. Is the Prime Minister going to fulfil his promise to negotiate Canada out of its nuclear role?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): As my friend the Minister of National Defence indicated last night—it was too bad my hon. friend was not listening carefully—we are at present doing just that.

On the one hand, we are negotiating ourselves out of our commitment so far as nuclear arms are concerned, and on the other hand we are retaining equipment to carry nuclear arms, which equipment is armed with nuclear arms. The whole situation is very confusing. These statements, which appear on the face of them anyway to be completely contradictory, do not do anything to remove the confusion in the minds of Canadians. If this whole collection of statements can be rationalized a rationalization should be made so that we, as Canadians, know where we are in this matter.

The White Paper, to which I should like to refer once more, has this to say on page 22 with regard to the air force:

During the decade, we propose to give increasing emphasis to the provision of aircraft for direct support of our ground forces. We anticipate that a high performance aircraft will be available to provide sufficient flexibility for any task we might undertake from ground attack to air surveillance. These versatile tactical aircraft will possess adequate radius of action to allow rapid deployment from Canada to bases overseas. This will permit squadrons to be stationed in Canada or Europe as required.

[Mr. MacLean (Queens).]

Now, what is this long range tactical aircraft? Is this the one to which we have already committed ourselves? Is this the CF-5 they are talking about? We have already learned that this aircraft, although it was purchased as a close support aircraft, is very limited in its radius of action. I do not know what the radius of action is, but various figures have been quoted, all of them under 200 nautical miles. I do not believe by any stretch of the imagination that that aircraft lives up to the picture that was painted for this future aircraft in the White Paper, if this is the one they are talking about. If it is not the one that is meant, the minister should tell us when it is planned to acquire the aircraft spoken of in the White Paper.

I now turn, Mr. Chairman, briefly to one more aspect of defence. This is an aspect which is not of direct concern to the professional soldier, but it should be of great concern to the Department of National Defence, to the minister and all members of the government, in common with the members of any government. It has to do with the effect of defence expenditures on the economy of various areas of the country. The Atlantic Provinces Economic Council has recently made a study with regard to the effect of defence expenditures in the Atlantic provinces. Those provinces are especially vulnerable from an economic point of view to any changes contemplated so far as defence policy is concerned. The introduction to this study quotes from a study recently prepared for the Parliamentary Committee on Defence. It quotes this statement:

• (8:00 p.m.)

Defence spending can, to cite a few of its possibilities, provide an important stimulus to the level of business generally, or in a particular geographic region; reduce unemployment; maintain or advance technical competence; lead to important new inventions and improvements in the non-defence area; stimulate foreign trade; and increase capital investment.

This has been a vital side effect of defence expenditures in recent years. A great deal of the research done in the United States for defence purposes and space projects has had a very important technological fall-out, as it is expressed, as far as civilian production and invention is concerned. In this day and age where only a wealthy country can undertake the design, development and production of highly sophisticated and costly armaments there is a widening gap between such a country and its smaller, less developed neighbours. Canada has an important problem to face in this very field.

No doubt the development of a wide range of very sophisticated military aircraft in the United States, to cite one example, puts the aircraft industry in that country into a position of great advantage over its competitors in other countries, whose aircraft industry does not have large defence contracts to feed on, which enable it to develop new processes techniques and advances.

Between 1951 and 1956 expenditures on national defence in Canada rose from $1,100 million to a high of $1,800 million. Since then defence spending has declined somewhat, to an average of about $1,600 million for the first five years of the current decade. A great deal of this expenditure has been for equipment, and in some industries these contracts do have a tremendously important impact.

In 1960 defence expenditure in certain industries was as follows: Defence contracts accounted for 89 per cent of the production of the aircraft industry; in the electronics industry 41 per cent of the production depended on defence contracts; twenty-five per cent of the ammunition and explosives produced went to defence contracts, which also accounted for 21 per cent of the shipbuilding industry and 19 per cent of the instruments industry.

So that you have a situation in which industries are very vulnerable to fluctuations in defence policy and defence spending. In the Atlantic provinces you have a situation where the economy is even more sensitive to and dependent upon defence expenditures than is generally true for the rest of the country.

I should like to quote one further extract from this study, which is to be found at page 9:

> The importance of defence to the regional economy is far greater than has been traditionally supposed. More people are employed in the defence industry than in any of Atlantic Canada's primary industries or the construction industry. Employing 41,164 civilian and military personnel, defence activities ranked fifth in total employment behind services, trade, manufacturing and transportation and utilities. In 1961 Atlantic defence employment almost exceeded the employment figure for forestry and fishing combined.

You will realize, Mr. Chairman, that we in the Atlantic provinces are extremely conscious of the impact of defence expenditures and defence policy. We hope that the minister will achieve his objective of applying a larger percentage of the expenditures on national defence to the re-equipping of our forces, and we in the Atlantic provinces hope that further steps will be taken to stimulate the supplying of defence requirements from our area of the country, so that unemployment can be reduced at the same time as the defensive posture of our country is improved.

[Translation]

Mr. Régimbal: Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to intervene in this debate because I was satisfied that most of the points one could bring to the attention of the committee at this time had been raised quite adequately by various members of the opposition. I am a newcomer here but it seems to me that the rules of politeness have their place in the house just like anywhere else. Usually, politeness requires one to listen when another speaks.

Unfortunately, my experience over the past three days has been quite to the contrary.

If it is the duty of members of the opposition to express their doubts and fears as representatives of their respective constituents, it seems to me that consideration of the estimates should be just as important a debate as any other and should be taken just as seriously.

I feel that the last three days have proved the contrary beyond any doubt. The members on the other side of the house may wonder why the debate lasts so long. They need not worry, we are only starting.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Régimbal: Mr. Chairman, we will prove, once and for all, that the opposition has an essential role to play. We represent the majority of Canadian voters. Consequently, the opposition's point of view must be taken into consideration by the government, and in particular by this minister. We had a good example when the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) listened, spoke and took notes.

What has happened since this debate started? We are getting absolutely nowhere. I feel this is quite irregular and I ask the minister to take part in the debate. As long as he does not, he has a good chance of staying where he is now.

Let us see what happened. Speeches have been made in the last few days: he does not listen. Questions are asked: he makes no attempt to answer. Definite charges are laid: no reaction. Concrete suggestions are made: no interest is shown. Doubts are expressed: no action is taken. He is attacked: he smiles. He shows no intention of replying in an intelligent manner; if he intends to reply, let him do so without delay. The efficiency of weapons is being questioned: he shrugs his shoulders. Armed forces morale is discussed: He is seen yawning. He gives the impression of downright arrogance, of total disinterest in any opinion not his own.

Simulators are discussed: no answer. The CF-5 was questionned: still no answer. Inadequacies in the Navy are discussed: still no concern.

These are the only remarks I had in mind. For the benefit of the house and the effectiveness of our work, I ask the minister who is the perfect gentleman to live according to his standards and to take part in the discussion. Otherwise, it can go on for a long time.

• (8:10 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, I have a few remarks and suggestions to make to the Minister of National Defence, which might also be helpful to the Associate Minister. In the last day or so we have heard a great many comments in the house concerning morale in the armed forces. I think most members of the house who have looked into the matter, whether they agree to admit it or not, find that morale in the armed forces is indeed very bad. We have heard the reasons for this a number of times. They include uncertainty in the minds of those who would consider the forces as a career. A combination of events has helped to bedevil the minister and his department at this time. While on the one hand the economy of the country is booming and there is a shortage of labour, on the other new defence policies are being brought in, regardless of their merit, which have caused great apprehension and uncertainty in the minds of the personnel of the armed forces.

I have talked to many people of the armed services whom I have met in the last year or so, and who have said to me, "Well, our rates of pay are not that good. We don't know whether we are going to be kept on. We are getting older. We might be perhaps 30, or 32 years of age. It may be difficult to get a job. It might be better to leave now, when we know we can get a job, and have some kind of future, than wait in the armed forces and find ourselves suddenly retired, or sacked, with no particular future." They feel that it is better to leave of their own choosing when they can get a better position and better salary in industry than to wait until they are compulsorily retired, or are just let out.

The minister and his department are in an unfortunate position. There is a combination of high demand in industry generally for skilled and semi-skilled labour, while at the same time the armed forces have not caught up with pay scales. I know the minister told us the other night that bonuses are to be paid and that the government is going to raise pay scales. Whether these measures prove sufficient incentive under the circumstances remains to be seen.

As another little item may I mention that you always find lags in all government departments, of all varieties and at all levels. Regulations made for previous occasions hang on and on, while circumstances in the country change and complicate matters. As a matter of fact I have had correspondence with the Associated Minister of National Defence with regard to a particular case which illustrates the point I refer to.

The case at issue which illustrates one of these troublesome regulations has to do with a man who has been in the air force for two full terms of five years, and who served two years of his third five year term. In all he has had a total of 12 years service. In common with others, he had a wife and children to maintain, and decided to retire. He knew when he retired, and accepted the fact, that he would give up his rehabilitation pay, and he hoped that after 12 years good service to his country—perhaps the department might consider moving his wife and family back to his home city. But, oh no, they would not do that, they would not consider doing that.

This sort of thing gets around. If the minister and his department hope to get new recruits, regulations of this type will have to be rejected. I have heard this sort of story before. In smaller cities it is the subject of discussion. People will say that when Mr. so and so left, after 12 years, the services would not even move his wife and children home.

No other branch of the civil service, to my knowledge, functions like this. At one time there may have been a good reason for the regulation, but surely there cannot be a good reason now. There are many regulations like that. If the minister hopes to get new recruits into the armed services, then he had better look at these regulations to try to get rid of them. They do not help morale in the armed services, nor do they encourage recruiting when there is such a need for it.

I do not wish to take any longer on this subject, or to repeat what others have said. But I do think it is important that we get people back into the armed services. If they are given a greater sense of security for the future and some hope for advancement, apart from raising pay scales and giving bonuses, this would be well worth while. A great deal can be done in this regard by an assurance from and somewhat more concrete acts, by this minister.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall that item carry?

Mr. Clancy: Mr. Chairman, my form of address tonight is more in the way of questions than expounding policy for our services.

I have always been curious why the R.C.A.F. took on a tactical role. I think if you read your service journals and your staff college journals you will find that that is murder, unless you have the manpower and machines to follow it up—unless we are going to start the war, and I do not think we are.

Let no one tell me that if any enemy is going to start a war he will not know how many machines there are, where all the men are on leave, and so on. If we are going to spend money, then let us spend our money on things we can do best.

As far as aircraft are concerned, I could not express an honest opinion, because first of all it was decided that they were to have weapons with nuclear warheads. Then that policy was modified, and modified, and we have not been apprised.

I want to bring up another point. Day after day on radio and television we are hearing about trained skilled men, and that we need these skilled men. That is right. I have been to some apprenticeship classes. I see no reason why we do not take these boys into the forces, give them training, and let them go out to industry. They are always in the reserve if we need them. We can always call them back, and they will be better technicians. Here we are running expensive and beautifully equipped establishments, and we are not making use of them. To me that is rather silly.

If you take a boy with a grade 10 education, keep him in the forces for two or three years, and on his release allow him to go to industry, he is still of value to the armed forces because he will be in the armed forces reserve. Moreover, that boy will become a better man for his training, because nothing is worse than making work. A skilled man hates to sit around to make a job for himself.

I suggest that we look into this, and perhaps this department and other departments can get together. That way we shall train skilled men. The country has the training facilities, and could build up a reserve.

That is all I have to say, Mr. Chairman.

• (8:20 p.m.)

Mr. Webb: Mr. Chairman, the remarks I have tonight will be very brief. Many of the subjects, including procurement of defence vehicles, have been mentioned by many members this evening. I wish to enter this debate because I have had some personal contact with members of the armed forces. My first remarks must be directed to the minister who, outside the House of Commons, is a very amiable person—but inside the House of Commons and in his department he has become almost a dictator. I would say to him that he reminds one of a young boy who is trying to impress the Canadian people, with the help of the press, that he has grown up.

In this debate the minister is trying to convince the Canadian people that everything he is doing is for their welfare. I say, Mr. Chairman, that this is not true. It is a camouflage, it is a myth. The minister has only one thing in his mind, and that is to become leader of the Liberal party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Webb: I am very happy to know that he has three people backing him up on the other side. This is the minister's program. He has no thought for the armed services. He has no thought for the standard of our defence policy.

In the past I am sure all Canadians have been very proud of our defence policy, a policy designed by such people as Mr. Pearkes and my hon. friend from Winnipeg South Centre. This was the policy which, I am sure, all Canadians wanted to see—one which they thought of as being a true Canadian policy.

I should like to say a word or two, now, about the mood of the services today. In the past perhaps many governments have shown a lack of enthusiasm about defence problems. This reflects the feelings of a nation which has a natural distaste for war. However, the fact that we have been living on the edge of war must be faced. We have obligations to our allies. To allocate vast sums of money to defence is not enough; the money must be well spent.

The most important thing is that there should be a high state of morale in our armed services. The services must have confidence in the ultimate authority, that is, the government. If loyalty is to be expected from the services, this essential attribute must be reciprocated by their supreme authority. This, so the serviceman feels, is not the case today. The government is handicapped by a lack of advice from those with recent military qualifications. As evidence of this, it is enough to read through the minutes of the parliamentary committee on defence. The present Minister of National Defence has never heard a gun fired in anger, shrewd and ruthless though he may be.

Total integration or unification of the armed forces, long a Liberal policy, after being dabbled with half-heartedly for years was implemented precipitously in 1963. The confusion and muddle behind the scenes has been and remains devastating. Very little has become public. Morale in the navy was poor at the time. Morale in all three services is the worst in years. New weapons may have been acquired to advantage but the loss of skilled personnel at all levels, not so much by forced attrition as by voluntary resignations and refusals to re-engage, is to be deplored. It must be remarked that forced attrition was carried out with such unnecessary abruptness as to cause many individual injustices, this in turn reacting on the morale of those remaining.

It should not be forgotten that the present minister has brought about many real reforms in the selection of weapons and the reduction of wasted time in redundant and unproductive staffs and excessive ceremonial. He has also ensured a measure of support to the Liberal regime by a generous pay increase last spring for all ranks. After some criticism in Halifax he bought a proportion of the naval vote by granting all sea-going personnel an allowance of $15 a month. The entitlement may be deserved but the hon. gentleman's opportunism is highly questionable. Political comment should follow such action.

One example of the glaring weakness of the unification plan is that it involves three separate professions operating in three separate elements, land, sea and air. True, they overlap in places but common sense finds those answers. As a comparison, it would be more practical to integrate doctors, veterinary surgeons, dentists and pharmacists. However, the result would benefit neither the public nor the standards of those professions. On the other hand, integration of the unarmed services where they are, in common purpose, a profession in themselves does offer certain advantages. Again, common sense provides the key. The dental corps has always looked after the three services.

[Mr. Webb.]

In the beginning there was much publicity to the effect that the present Minister of National Defence had made Canada the first nation to overcome the entrenched interests of the services in bringing about unification. This was, of course, nonsense. Several countries had looked into this proposition carefully and rejected it as being impracticable. For the last few months there has been a steady backtracking from this policy in the press without comment from any of the political parties. The minister is in a weak position but the public is not yet aware of this.

In our party's platform, we have advocated close co-ordination of the armed forces, together with a rationalisation of administration, our defence policy and our commitments under it. In order to do this we might set up a royal commission composed of the best brains in the country—including for example, Mr. Donald Gordon, General Guy Simonds, Senator McCutcheon and my hon. friend from Winnipeg South Centre. Leaving policy and administration as well as the re-organization of so large a commitment to one insufficiently experienced man, the present Minister of National Defence, has proved a profound and costly mistake.

A modernization of the whole system of personnel administration is similarly desirable. Let us take a new look at careers and individual opportunity—a strong requirement in this technical and electronic age. Better chances must be provided for the enlisted man with the energy, ambition and ability to achieve greater responsibilities. The wider selection would be bound to ensure for the future higher standards of leadership and administration as well as to extend further the democratic principles that the enlisted man is there to defend.

• (8:30 p.m.)

We must have painstaking studies to find the means to lessen the cynical mood among those serving the nation. Defence must be a profession of dedication inspired by a love of this country where now, more than ever, selfish opportunism grows. Any loyalty that is primarily to the individual service or branch rather than the nation weakens the purpose. Only good federal government can build these qualities.

There should be a greater national identity for the Canadian armed forces. The commission already suggested should, in the course of such a study, question members of the forces, active and retired, as to the means and their wants. This should mean as much to the nation as to the serviceman.

An important area of neglect covers fringe benefits, not to soften the hardiness essential in a fighting man, but those such as other nations provide in housing conditions, medical benefits for dependents, and re-employment on termination of service.

Steps should be taken to ensure the lessening of the major and minor anxieties of those overseas, concerning their dependents. Any serviceman deserves this. Neither should separation cause financial penalties. Such items, and others, point to a need for improved machinery so that the lower ranks can voice their dissatisfactions, outside those of military efficiency, without being penalized as troublemakers. It must be remembered they are the only large group of individuals who lack all means of collective representation in our modern society.

Canadian servicemen have always welcomed their Minister of National Defence overseas or in Canada. We were always proud whenever our minister would visit us. As Canadians we hoped and trusted that all would be well. But today, when visiting in the Trenton area and many other parts of Canada, our minister is not hailed as the Minister of National Defence; he is named "Mr. Termite" of National Defence.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Chairman, on assuming the portfolio of Minister of National Defence it was tempting indeed, to follow the easy route; to be a rubber stamp minister, going along unquestioningly with the tired old pattern of defence in this country.

This would have meant pouring more of the taxpayers' money into purchasing additional follow-on nuclear bombers; to continue to play the numbers game by pouring countless dollars into creaking 20 year old world war II ships that contributed no real operational capability to western defence and, worse still, could contribute little or nothing if any sort of war broke out; to permit the overwhelming proportion of the Canadian army to be equipped only to training scales; to continue with inadequate sea and air transport; and to continue with inadequate modern equipment particularly for tactical mobility.

The opposition says that we have a lot of second hand questionable equipment in our forces. I would remind hon. members I did not buy the nuclear bombing Starfighters; I inherited them. I did not buy the atomic Honest John rockets; I inherited them. I did not buy the famous Bomarc missiles; I inherited them. I did not buy the Voodoo anti-bomber interceptors; I inherited them. In fact, I inherited the whole conglomerative mess that had built up through years of apathy through years of ministerial "rubber stamping"; through years of lip service to civilian control; through years of failure to analyse what a country like Canada really needs in the field of defence—needs based on the realities of today and the probabilities of tomorrow, and not just the traditions of the past.

What was the policy of three years ago? The strike role had been adopted for the air division in Europe. Hundreds of millions of dollars had been spent on equipment and training, but there were no atomic weapons available and there were no plans to rectify the situation.

The navy was sailing a fleet which included a large number of obsolete second world war frigates. Commodore Plomer described them pretty well in his magazine article. They were costly to operate and to refit, but there were no plans to take them out of service. The capability of the air transport fleet to lift fighting units was hopelessly inadequate. The C-119's, the logistic workhorse of the time, were virtually worn out and maintenance costs were skyrocketing. There were no plans to do anything about it.

The brigade group in Europe had no armoured personnel carriers to give protection to the infantry. It was one of the best brigade groups in Europe—probably the best. Yet it was one of the only ones in the front line without armoured personnel protection. The brigade had to go on exercises in open trucks and, worse still, would have had to go into battle in that manner in the event an emergency developed.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Hellyer: Because of delays and procrastination the Bobcat could not have been brought into service in time to be a realistic solution. The balance of the Canadian Army in Canada, three quarters of the whole army, was not equipped for war. It had training scales only.

Hon. gentlemen might be interested to know that for years mortar batteries in Canada were limited in their regular training because of ammunition restrictions. The committee might also be interested to know that winter clothing was scaled for issue only to one company group per battalion, so that to send a battalion on winter training it had to borrow from other units.

The government of that time had no plans to change this shortsighted policy. And in the face of all this, hon. gentlemen opposite have the temerity to suggest that all that was needed in 1963 was another rubber stamp minister. I should hope not. The associate minister and I made decisions. We sought and obtained government approval for a sensible "new guard" defence policy for Canada, one which reflects the real world of today and tomorrow. And then we set out to implement the policy.

The new philosophy, put simply, is that Canada can make its greatest contribution to collective defence and world order by developing well equipped flexible, conventional forces, and providing the strategic mobility to move them quickly to meet emergencies anywhere in the world.

Mr. Nielsen: That Bill Lee is quite a writer.

Mr. Hellyer: That Bill Lee is quite a writer, and I can tell hon. gentlemen opposite they would do better to get some of their advice from him than some of the people they take it from. This new philosophy is one of emphasis and changing role. It does not preclude the fulfilment of those obligations previously undertaken and the utilization of the equipment purchased at staggering costs by the former government for those tasks. It does mean a shifting emphasis and a greatly increased capacity in an area where a Canadian contribution is a real addition.

I would like now to deal with some of the specific points included in the buckshot attack from the opposition benches.

Mr. Churchill: It got home, didn't it?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Pea shooter.

Mr. Hellyer: I guess pea shooter would be more appropriate, and popgun would be even better.

• (8:40 p.m.)

My statement that the R.C.N. anti-submarine capability is now the greatest in peacetime history was challenged. The challenge was based on the suggestion that because the fleet is smaller it is less effective and that the substitution of four destroyer escort helicopters—DDH's—and two support ships for eight general purpose frigates in the building program would be a further loss.

It is simply not in accordance with the facts to suggest that it seriously degrades our operational ASW capability to pay off or lay up a number of over age world war II ships. The new DDH's and converted destroyer escorts have an ASW capability several times greater than the world war II ships. New techniques recently developed have greatly enhanced the anti-submarine surveillance capability. I am not able to give details to this committee but I will be happy to brief the Standing Committee on Defence. Information will be made available which will convince anyone who can be convinced by facts that my claim in respect to the navy's anti-submarine capability is incontrovertible.

The fact that the four DDH's in the shipbuilding program will carry heavy helicopters which the general purpose frigates were not designed to carry, will increase their anti-submarine capability greatly. The four DDH's, together with the two support ships will provide the fleet with several times the on-station ASW capability that the eight general purpose frigates would have provided, and at considerably less cost. Both in absolute terms, then, and on the basis of cost-effectiveness the paying off of world war II frigates and the substitution of the four DDH's and two support ships for eight frigates were good decisions.

The question of minesweepers was raised by the senior member for Halifax. This subject was dealt with by the former associate minister on January 8, 1964 when he said that studies of our stragegic plans indicate that minesweeping is not considered to be a high priority task in relation to antisubmarine warfare. This same assessment still prevails. The probability of a conflict in which a potential enemy would mine Canadian coastal waters is extremely remote. Certainly a potential enemy would have to weigh the consequences of any such overt action and it seems very unlikely that he would risk all-out war through such an act.

Studies are continuing however in respect of the relative priority of minesweeping and also keeping abreast of technological developments in this area. New and more modern mines have been developed which would require extensive modifications of our existing minesweepers if they were to be successful at all in carrying out these tasks. In addition, new methods of sweeping are being developed.

At this time, minesweeping continues to be a very low priority operation. Consequently we have decided to declare four of our oldest minesweepers surplus, and the six remaining ships have been put in a state of preservation until disposition studies have been completed.

The hon. member for Calgary North inferred that we were wild-eyed innovators to substitute gas turbine engines for steam engines in the four DDH's in the shipbuilding program. He must have been talking to an ancient mariner. Gas turbines have built up a reputation for reliability in aircraft application which is not surpassed by any other form of propulsion in the world. Canadians trust their lives to these engines every day.

Reliability is not an accident. It is the result of extensive testing and development. This work can only be financed on the logical expectation of an engine builder that large numbers of engines will be sold. This expectation leads to production line techniques and extremely high levels of quality control. The quantities of engines manufactured leads to lower costs for a higher quality of end product.

The navies of the world are now starting to capitalize on all the work that has gone into the testing and development of these engines. The Royal Navy started in this field in 1947. Since that time they have been followed by the West German, the Danish, the Italian and the Russian navies. In the United States, the coast guard has been the pioneering service. So far a total of 57 warships are built, or in the course of construction, and in addition a 48-ship building program is in progress for the U.S. coast guard.

All of the earlier propulsion plants combined gas turbines with some other form of prime mover, for example, steam or diesel. However, studies of the operations of these ships have shown that the operators prefer to use the gas turbine plant rather than another prime mover in the ship.

As a result, the tendency is toward the use of all gas turbine power plants. The U.S. Navy is in the preliminary stages of discussing with industry the design and construction of some 18 to 24 fast deployment logistics ships. The Royal Navy announced earlier this month that a Blackwood class frigate, HMS Exmouth, would be fitted with all gas turbine machinery to complete by the summer of 1968.

Gas turbine marine propulsion offers a number of operational and economic advantages. A brief list of the more important of these include lower over-all weight, greater endurance, markedly higher power in a given space and hence greater speed, reduction in the number of operators and maintainers and lower maintenance costs. A detailed study of all facets of gas turbine engines has demonstrated that for the Royal Canadian Navy the gas turbine propulsion plant is best for installation in its helicoper carrying destroyer program.

In this context, it might be noted that by comparison with a steam plant, an increase of over 60 per cent in horsepower will be possible from the gas turbine engines without a corresponding increase in cost or size of the vessel.

To this end, the Department of Defence Production, on behalf of the Department of National Defence, has instructed two leading aircraft firms to proceed with the design of the DDH propulsion plant on a competitive basis. The results of this competition will be used to select the propulsion equipment to be purchased for the DDH at a firm fixed price, with guarantees of performance, and a fixed delivery schedule. This has never been accomplished before in Canada for this type of naval vessel.

The hon. member for Calgary North raised one or two points in respect of organization. He made reference to the change in organization at Canadian forces headquarters. It is true that since the special committee on defence was briefed on May 26, 1964, that the positions of vice chief of defence staff and chief of operational readiness have been combined, and the name assistant chief of defence staff has been changed to deputy chief, plans, with no change in function. This combination was contemplated from the outset and its implementation ends an interim situation which was required for the transition.

The second point was that the lines of communication from commands are more complicated than previously. This is not so. The integrated command structure, providing for command of the defence forces to be centralized under a single chief of the defence staff who exercises control through functional commanders, meets the aim of integration of reducing overhead and increasing efficiency. It reduces the over-all number of commands and places each functional responsibility under a single commander.

Commanders are responsible to the chief of the defence staff for the operational and support service functions. Provision is made for commanders to communicate directly with each other on all matters of mutual interest and concern.

Lines of communication to Canadian forces headquarters are the same as before, that is, through the defence secretariat to the appropriate branch. Because commanders are able to concentrate on their prime responsibility the performance of objectives should be enhanced.

A number of questions have been raised about the level of defence expenditures. The hon. member for Calgary North said that defence expenditures had not in fact been reduced. In the fiscal year 1963-64, the first year in which I took over the defence program and when defence expenditures were based on the program which had been worked out when the hon. Member for Calgary North was in office, the expenditures amounted to $1,607,971,000, excluding special payments into the pension account.

In the following year 1964-65 I was able to reduce expenditures to $1,522 million and the estimate which you have before you for 1965-66 is $1,550 million. The reduction from the 1963-64 level of actual expenditures in 1964-65 was therefore $85 million and the reduction in 1965-66 from the 1963-64 figure, based on the estimates before you, is $57,900,000.

This is a total saving in two years from 1963-64 level of $143,700,000. This has been achieved notwithstanding civil and military salary increases costing at least $80 million during these two years, and increased cost of equipment due to rising prices. For a fair comparison, the increased costs will have been absorbed in present expenditure levels. The real saving therefore actually exceeds $100 million a year.

• (8:50 p.m.)

The hon. member for Sherbrooke suggested that defence expenditures should be further reduced. He may not be aware that the defence expenditure as a percentage of the total federal budget has declined from 24 per cent in 1954 to a forecast 18 per cent for 1966-67. Few if any other countries have reduced defence expenditures proportionately to this extent. Canada as a sovereign nation makes a contribution to world order through a number of alliances; the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, our partnership with the United States in continental defence and through our adherence to the United Nations charter. Canadians are a proud people with proud traditions and want to do their share to assist in preserving some semblance of order in a troubled world. If we are to continue to perform the tasks we have undertaken we must have trained men and women and good equipment. It would not be possible to reduce defence expenditures further at this time without substantially reducing our commitments to the alliances I have mentioned.

The hon. gentleman also suggested that the university naval training division at Sherbrooke should be reinstated. I am sure he will appreciate that an increase in commitments is not compatible with a reduction in expenditures. I took notice of his suggestion with regard to providing additional opportunities for French speaking recruits. I should like to reassure him that a number of steps have been taken and a number more are contemplated to provide greater opportunities throughout the whole service for men and women whose mother tongue is French.

In so far as the balance of our expenditures between cost and maintenance on the one hand and capital on the other hand is concerned, I must admit that I had expected to arrest the downward trend on capital account during the current fiscal year. No member of the committee deplores more than I do that this has not been done. The money was available but it did not get spent. I will not go into the reasons for this but I must assume full responsibility. I can assure hon. members, however, that we will stop the downward trend that began in 1954 and next year the percentage on capital account will be substantially up, notwithstanding rising personnel costs. This can be seen if we consult the blue book for the next year.

Now that the long term trend has been reversed every effort will be made to increase the proportion of the defence budget spent on equipment during the next few years to the point where it reaches an acceptable level. The men and women of the Canadian armed forces need the right equipment for their assigned roles, and I mean to see that they get it.

Mr. Groos: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hellyer: Thank you. The hon. member for Calgary North raised a question about a shortage of pilots and alleged that the shortage was related to early retirement of aircrew in 1964. Some facts concerning the 500 might be helpful in clearing up the confusion to which the hon. member referred. A surplus of aircrew had been built up at the time of the Berlin crisis in 1961, even though there was no demonstrated requirement at the time, at a total cost to the Canadian taxpayers of several hundreds of millions of dollars.

The absence of a real requirement was soon recognized by the air force but the matter was not taken in hand until 1964, when a recommendation was made for the release of 500 aircrew subject to special benefits being available. Of the 500 aircrew released 284 were pilots, 89 of whom were short service and coming to the end of their contracts in any case. Of the remaining 195, 31 were already over age and the remainder, 164, were all within two years of retirement, due to age. In the normal course almost all would now be out of the service or on retirement leave.

It should be appreciated that forecasting pilot requirements in the civilian economy was difficult if not impossible at the time. Nobody foresaw the extent of the world shortage that now exists. The U.S. Federal Aviation Authority was 100 per cent wrong on the short side last year when it forecast the need for civilian pilots.

At the same time I want to deny that there is a serious shortage of pilots in the R.C.A.F. at this moment. As of December 31 our pilot strength was 2,325. The current R.C.A.F. establishment calls for 1,720 positions for which it is mandatory to have qualified pilots. In addition there are a number of staff positions in which it is considered desirable to have pilot experience. Nevertheless it must be recognized that the number of pilots leaving the service is increasing and if allowed to continue unchecked could create a serious shortage.

I might advise the hon. member for Saskatoon that discussions have been held with the pilots and measures are being recommended which we hope will be sufficiently attractive to keep an adequate number of highly qualified pilots in the service. One other point he raised is in respect of the requirement of pilots to work 70 hours a week in the air division in Europe. Their estimated work week including standing alert is estimated at 68 hours a week. This is very demanding indeed. While standing alert, however, they have a considerable amount of time which can be used in personal pursuits within the limitations of the alert, and many young airmen are taking advantage of the opportunity to further their studies and increase their academic standing in order to be better qualified, in the broad sense, for executive and other positions which might be opened up to them in future years.

It has also been alleged that there has been a serious decline in recruiting. Actually, the number of recruits taken into the service in 1965 was only about 5 per cent lower than the previous year. If one takes into consideration the booming economy, virtually no unemployment, the high salaries in civilian life for people able to absorb technical training, as do our recruits, plus the fact that our young men and women stay in school much longer, this small change should not be considered inordinate. Indeed many businesses requiring large numbers of personnel experienced even greater difficulty in 1965.

Reference was made to the shortage of naval personnel. It is true that more men are required, particularly in some technical trades. One of the basic problems is very directly related to former practices, however. It used to be the custom to take skilled personnel from one ship's company immediately or soon after returning to port and send them back to sea as part of another ship's company in order to have sufficient trained personnel to keep the ships in operation. The effect of this overwork and high sea-to-shore ratio for skilled and technical trades was a serious decline in morale.

To overcome this problem a new cyclic system of manning the ships was put into effect. It provides amongst other things for a better shore-to-sea time ratio for personnel. This improvement in working conditions has been well reecived and naval re-engagement rates, which were already higher in Canada than in the navies of our major NATO allies, are improving. The other side of the coin, however, is that more skilled tradesmen are required to man the same number of ships. Improved working conditions and the relaxation by the navy of many of its ancient and restrictive rules governing other ranks should assist in overcoming this problem in time. It is not a problem that can be quickly overcome due to the long training cycle and the extraordinary competition for manpower at all levels.

A large part of the discussion during consideration of these estimates has been in respect of our choice of aeroplane for the tactical ground support role. Most of the criticism has been irrelevant or inaccurate. We feel it is important for the R.C.A.F. to get into the ground support role, one which they performed admirably in the second world war but which they have not been directly involved in for some time.

The CF-5 has many advantages which particularly suit the Canadian requirement. It is light, relatively unsophisticated, relatively inexpensive, easy to maintain, dual-engined and therefore very safe, and has a supersonic dash capability which gives it a self-protection within its own flight environment. A reasonable production-sharing arrangement is also available in respect of this aeroplane because of the large numbers of the basic aeroplane being produced for use in a number of countries around the world. The payload of the CF-5 is not a matter of concern; it can carry 3,000 pounds of bombs, and experience in Viet Nam has proved that with the high number of sorties a tremendous weight of stores can be delivered on target.

• (9:00 p.m.)

The range of the CF-5 is adequate for the kind of task we have in mind for it. In so far as ferry range is concerned, trans-oceanic ferrying is quite practical with aerial refuelling. The allegation that the C-130 is not capable of refuelling the CF-5 is, I am informed, entirely false. A version of the C-130B was developed by the United States forces as an aerial refuelling aircraft and is in service with the United States marine corps today. The refuelling equipment carried in this aircraft can readily be installed or removed as required so that when the aircraft is not being used as a tanker it may revert to its primary role of transport aircraft. Preliminary flight evaluation of the CF-5 against the C-130 aircraft has demonstrated the feasibility of employing this aircraft for the Canadian forces as an aerial filling station. The R.C.A.F. is procuring in-flight refuelling equipment for the CF-5 similar to that installed on the United States aircraft that were flown trans-Pacific to Viet Nam.

Incidentally, the United States Air Force has offered to make a reciprocal arrangement with us similar to that which we have for the air transport fleet, whereby they would refuel our planes being deployed in various parts of the world and we would make our capability available to them in our area.

Another criticism that has been made of the CF-5 is the ground roll, that is the length of runway required for take-off with a full load. Unfortunately, and this seems often to be the case, the figures which have been used publicly are those for the basic F-5A's. The Canadian CF-5, with its more powerful engine, will require 20 per cent less runway for take-off. The length of runway required for the Canadian CF-5 with a full load is less than is required for the CF-104 in use by our air division in Europe, and also less than the DC-8 under similar loading conditions. This is not really a very good comparison, however.

[Mr. Hellyer.]

Mr. Churchill: Well, give us the figures now on the runways that would be required.

Mr. Hellyer: I will be pleased to do that before a committee where you can get all the details of the standards, etc. It has often been suggested that one should not try to compare apples and oranges, but in this case comparing the CF-5 with the DC-8 is like comparing an apple with a pumpkin.

Another allegation has been the suggestion that the CF-5 requires a particularly level runway when carrying a bomb load. I am advised that this, too, is patently false. Although the CF-5 would normally be employed on conventional runways, flight trials have demonstrated that this aircraft is capable of being operated off sod fields and that the armament selected for the Canadian forces provided ample clearance between the lowest bomb and the field surface when operating under these conditions. As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, experience with the F-5 in Viet Nam indicated that the Canadian CF-5 will be absolutely first class in the ground support role.

An interim report of the so-called Skoshi Tiger tests of the F-5A in Viet Nam has been received. While no final conclusions have been drawn as to its over-all combat effectiveness a considerable number of sorties have now been flown, beginning with the first day of delivery in Viet Nam. The experience so far enables the following observations to be made:

1. A high sortie rate per aircraft per day has been achieved.

2. An extremely low maintenance rate expressed in terms of man hours per flight hour has also been achieved.

3. Despite an initial problem of ingestion of foreign objects in the air inlet duct they have not had a complete engine failure in flight. I might say parenthetically that the cause of this damage was primarily the ammunition provided, and other aircraft using the same ammunition had similar problems.

4. The F-5A has performed to all model specifications.

5. It is proven to have outstanding accuracy in stability as an ordnance delivery vehicle.

6. Pilots report that they like its simplicity of operation and control responsiveness in all conditions of flight and that it is exceptionally easy to fly during a refuelling hook-up.

7. It is an uncomplicated, easy to maintain aircraft.

As might be expected, there have also been some deficiencies in the F-5A that will need correction. Members of the committee will be pleased to know that in every case the necessary corrections had been anticipated by the R.C.A.F. staffs and that these modifications have all been included in the CF-5 program from the outset. A final report on the Skoshi Tiger test program is due in April or May and I will be pleased to see that full information is made available to the members of the Standing Committee on Defence.

There has been a request for a review, Mr. Chairman, of the progress toward defining NATO force goals for the years ahead. You may recall that a decision was taken in the council of ministers held in Ottawa in May, 1963, to commence a study of strategy, force goals, and the use of economic resources. A study has been undertaken by the council in permanent session, constituted as a defence planning committee and working in co-operation with the major NATO military commanders.

In considering the question of strategy a theoretical discussion arose which indicated a rather sharp divergence of views. When these views were presented to the council of ministers in December, 1964, it seemed apparent to me that the divergence of opinion related more to the theoretical discussion than the real contingencies with which the alliance might be faced. With this thought in mind, I suggested holding a defence ministers meeting, with the object of examining the real situation in the hope that the wide areas of divergence would come into focus and the difference, if they existed, would prove to be largely irrelevant.

The meeting of defence ministers in May, 1965 proved more productive than had been hoped for. The informality of the restricted session assisted ministers in reaching a consensus and taking the necessary action to provide the political direction for the planning committee to continue its studies. It was the opinion of the ministers that force goals should not be unrealistic in calling for increases in manpower and expenditures obviously and demonstrably well beyond any possible implementation by member nations.

The council of ministers reviewed the progress of defence planning at the December, 1965 meeting. At this time I again urged that our goals should be realistic and attainable. I furthermore proposed that NATO long range planning be realistically based on what each member country intends and can afford to spend, bearing in mind political, financial and economic factors.

You will recall on Thursday last, when introducing the Department of National Defence estimates, I spoke of the newly introduced integrated defence program and the many benefits that are accruing from this procedure of handling our defence program. You will therefore appreciate that I fully supported the United States proposal for a NATO five year rolling plan which would be adjusted annually to equate country defence plans with NATO military requirements in order to maintain a viable force which would operate under the direction of the major NATO military commanders.

The new NATO five year plan would contain an extension of these aspects of our five year program which are of direct concern to NATO. This NATO plan will consist of an acknowledged commitment by countries for a period of one year followed by a projection without commitment for a further four years. This plan would be subject to review and amendment every year, thereby containing more realistic data upon which the NATO military authorities can base the composition of their allocated forces.

I reiterate my earlier statement in this debate that our current studies concerning the reorganization of our forces will go a long way toward assisting the NATO military commanders with their tasks. In making future commitments we will keep in mind the realities of the present and also our desire to accept those future roles which will enable us to make the greatest real contribution to the peace and security of the world. Obviously, the reservations expressed by General de Gaulle will have to be carefully studied.

Probably the most serious allegation made in the debate was raised by the hon. member for Calgary North, and subsequently by a number of other hon. members, and it was the suggestion that service morale is at its lowest point in history. I disagree with that and I am certain that the vast majority of the armed forces feel the same way.

They remember only too well what they refer to as "the darkest days in Canadian defence", in 1961 and 1962 when that hon. member was Minister of National Defence and when his government's defence policy was known only for its procrastination, indecision, ineptness and downright stupidity. The nuclear issue alone, and the wrangling and wheeler-dealing in that dying cabinet because of it, made Canada the laughingstock of NATO and brought shame instead of honour to the Canadian serviceman. These were truly the days of low morale in the Canadian armed forces, as the hon. member well knows. There was no rationale to defence policy, and the administrative and upkeep expenses of the force had been allowed to increase with complete disregard for the vital need of budgeting for new vehicles, aircraft and ships. The whole defence department was crying out for a new policy and a new lease on life for our service-men—the unwitting pawns of the indecision and mismanagement of my hon. friend's defence policy—to their rightful place of honour in our society.

Morale is not bad in the forces. The associate minister and myself have visited all of our major bases and I can make that statement with force and truth before this house. It is not one based on wild rumours and haphazard chats in a handful of ridings, but on the opinion of professional men who know what they are talking about.

Naturally there is concern, and some worry among our highly skilled tradesmen in particular, because wages in industry in Canada have never been higher and the shortage of skilled labour has never been greater in our history. Also our personnel are the best, the cream of the crop. They must pass tough recruiting and aptitude tests before they can enlist. Their basic training is excellent and they receive valuable experience on the most modern equipment in their respective fields during their service. They also, by selection, are the healthiest people in the nation, so it is no wonder industry is beckoning and welcoming them. Therefore it is only natural that they are concerned, as all other red-blooded men with superior qualifications would be, whether they should not take advantage of the present high demand for their skills. This, as I have always said, is the prime cause of their worry.

By the same token, we are doing what we can, as any sensible employer with a large investment in his employees would, to counteract this situation and to keep our people convinced of the long-term advantages of staying in the service. This is simply good business as well as being in the best interests both of the men and women in the armed forces and of Canada as a whole. We are not sitting around lamenting about the situation; we are trying to do something tangible about it.

Several senior officers from Canadian forces headquarters and the area commands have had appropriate programs under way for months, along with my own staff and that of the associate minister.

The re-engagement bonus which my colleague announced last Friday in this house is one step in the process, and of course there are others under review to constantly improve and enhance the terms and conditions of service. With a voluntary force the conditions of service must not only be competitive; they must be a little better than average to help compensate for the extra expenses generated by the servicemen's necessarily nomadic life.

But it is nonsense to blame this honest soul searching by our service personnel on integration, and for purely political advantage to deduce that low morale is the result. Our military personnel had an opportunity to express themselves last November respecting the management of their affairs, and I would hardly call the result of the service vote one of no confidence in our defence policy. I must say at this point that I agree with my hon. friends opposite that the method of reporting should be changed so that the service vote is not reported separately. I will personally do everything within my power to see that that is brought about.

I look upon it, too, as undeniable evidence that our armed forces have good, long memories. They expressed quite clearly that they will not forget in a hurry the real days of low morale—the "dark days" of defence in the early sixties.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I would like to say that in my opinion the philosophy of mobile forces as set out in the White Paper is sound for Canada at this time and for the years immediately ahead. The implementation of the policy in the White Paper is proceeding with dispatch. The integration of the armed forces will assist in the implementation of those policies. It will give Canada the most effective and responsive force of its size in the world and a clear margin of superiority for the money being spent. Our integration plans are the most exciting military reorganization going on anywhere in the free world at the present time, one which is being watched by all and admired by many. I have no doubt that it will become a pattern for the reorganization of military forces in other countries in the years ahead, and that we in Canada will be justifiably proud that we have been first in recognizing the significance of the technological age in which we live and its impact on military organization.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, we have just heard the most bombastic speech by a Minister of National Defence ever uttered in this chamber, I think, since the days of Sir Sam Hughes.

Mr. Hellyer: You will remember that.

Mr. Churchill: I did not hear that interruption from the other side; I am willing to listen if you wish to repeat it.

When the minister opened his 45-minute speech tonight he said that he had been subjected to buckshot attacks on him during the course of this debate. Well, it certainly found its mark. He has been irritated by those pellets, as he showed tonight when he was stirred into activity. All day Friday when we were discussing defence policy he sat in his place smug, complacent, without any worry at all. Then over the week end the radio, television and press reports began to come in and he started to get worried.

When the attack continued today and the ineffectiveness of this minister was shown up by everyone who spoke on this side of the house, he decided to get his speech writers busy. Instead of giving us a speech earlier today he waited until 8.30 tonight to make his defence, and a very poor defence it was indeed.

It seems to me—and I hope the minister learns a lesson from this—that had he on Thursday night of last week given us some of the particulars that he has been forced to give tonight, it would have been very helpful to the debate. Tonight he attempted to answer some questions. He left most of the questions unanswered, and when he did not have a satisfactory answer he declaimed with a very loud voice to the claque of admirers behind him and made attacks on the member for Calgary North, who for unavoidable reasons is not here tonight. I hope the hon. member for Calgary North will have an opportunity to reply to these unwarranted attacks upon him.

Then this bombastic minister told us in the early part of his speech that he was not a rubber stamp minister. I do not know what he thought of his colleague of former days, Mr. Claxton. I do not know what he thought of Mr. Campney.

Mr. Hellyer: They were good ministers.

Mr. Churchill: I do not think anyone would accuse General Pearkes of being a rubber stamp minister, and certainly not the hon. member for Calgary North. But this minister is not a rubber stamp minister: He is the boss. I suggest that now he has a chief of staff who is a rubber stamp and does everything that this minister says.

What I objected to in 1963 and 1964 was that he did not continue the council that would advise the minister, the heads of the navy, the army and the air force, plus the chief of staff, about military matters. He abolished that council and made it just advisory. He appointed a supremo, a chief of staff to run things. Now he is running everything himself. He is not a rubber stamp minister, but somebody in the department is now a rubber stamp, and it must be the chief of staff.

• (9:20 p.m.)

This is the conflict between two men that I said would happen, from experiences that they had in England many years ago. This wonder boy of national defence—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: —has gone back.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: This wonder boy in the opinion of the Liberal party has gone back to a system thrown out 60 years ago in Great Britain. Talk about being up to date, nobody is further out of date than this particular minister.

Mr. Nielsen: And out of step.

Mr. Churchill: He is a bombastic individual and he will go on spreading messages that have little foundation to the Canadian people.

Mr. Nielsen: He talks a lot.

Mr. Churchill: He talks about other countries, and how they are admiring what he is doing. This is right from the horse's mouth. He is the one who has heard these other people on the subject. None of the rest of us has heard this from other countries. Where does this information come from? Why do they not tell us that we have the most marvelous minister that ever happened.

Our opinion is, on this side of the house, that we have the poorest Minister of National Defence that this country has ever seen. I think he is all bombast and no action. Tonight he did not answer the questions posed to him from this side of the house. What about the boast that he was going to save a great deal of money and funnel it into buying what he calls hardware. He did not answer the question, when the member for Calgary North said that the percentage going into the supplies of military hardware was down to 12 per cent, the lowest figure yet. He did not have an answer for that. That was the boast he made three years ago, and he has not accomplished that objective.

Yet he has spread the propaganda across this country that that was what he was going to do. It is false propaganda. He did not touch on the question of atomic weapons, put to him by members on this side of the house, and particularly by members of the New Democratic party. He did not answer that. He has atomic weapons now, with hardware that he said the United States had thrown away or discarded years ago. He is keeping the CF-104, the aircraft with the air division in Europe. He is keeping the Honest John missile discharger, or rocket. He has retained the Voodoos, and he has kept the Bomarcs. Yet in 1960, as I recollect his statement, he said these were useless, discarded weapons. However, he has retained them.

There was a long period before he had any atomic weapons for the CF-104. He has not told us yet whether they are available now. He did not have any atomic weapons for the Voodoos in this country for two years. He has not told us whether the atomic missile is available for the Honest John.

Mr. Nielsen: They are negotiating.

Mr. Churchill: He has not said whether the Bomarcs are to be kept in their useless post or not, but he placed atomic weapons on Canadian soil. He and the Prime Minister for three solid years have misled the Canadian people, because the Prime Minister said that he would negotiate out of the atomic weapons—

Mr. Herridge: That is right.

Mr. Churchill: And he was supported by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and the Minister of National Defence. These three ministers have misled the people of this country for three years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Churchill: On Thursday or Friday when I asked the Prime Minister that question he said that it had been answered by the Minister of National Defence. I asked the Prime Minister if he had had success in fulfilling his promise of three years ago, and he said that question had been answered by the Minister of National Defence. In other words, the Prime Minister was saying to us and to the Canadian people that his promise to negotiate out of atomic weapons had been fulfilled.

It was a false statement. The Minister of National Defence in his speech had said that he had made atomic weapons available to those various weapon systems—

Mr. Nielsen: For political reasons.

Mr. Churchill: —and this is the type of false propaganda that has been spread across the country, for political reasons, as my friend suggests.

On the subject of morale the minister declaimed at great length. You know, we must put our complete faith in what this minister says, or he is offended.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nielsen: The trained seals again, the old beavers.

Mr. Churchill: He is offended if we do not believe him. His feelings are hurt. He said, "You are shooting buckshot at me and it irritates my skin." And he gets up to declaim and says that the morale of the forces is very high. He made a false statement here, in the absence of the member for Calgary North, saying that the morale of the forces was at its lowest ebb in 1960 and 1961. It is at its lowest ebb today. That has been brought out by the facts and figures from this side of the house.

An hon. Member: Whom did they vote for?

Mr. Nielsen: Whom were they told to vote for?

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Nielsen: That is no shame, that is true.

Mr. Churchill: I would not mind having an investigation made with regard to the service vote in this country. It is rather strange that in 1958, when there was a landslide in favour of the Conservative party, 80 per cent of the service vote was still tagging along with the Grits. Talk about people being out of touch with what is going on with Canada—

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Churchill: I withdraw nothing. Our servicemen do not get the full information as to what is going on in this country. This is one of their complaints. They say they do not get the Canadian newspapers.

An hon. Member: They get them.

Mr. Churchill: That is a clear indication that they are not kept informed, generally, as to what is going on in this country. They say so themselves. I have met them overseas.

An hon. Member: What do you say about morale now? What are you talking about?

Mr. Churchill: On the subject of morale. The morale of the services is at its lowest ebb. This is what I got everywhere, across the country. This minister is responsible for it. He tries to explain away his failure in recruiting, and he said it was only 5 per cent below—I wonder, Mr. Chairman, if we could have a little order, or do I have to contend against remarks of hon. gentlemen sitting opposite.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. May I ask the hon. members who are making interruptions to reserve their opinions and interruptions. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre has the floor.

Mr. Churchill: Thank you. The minister says that recruiting is only 5 per cent below last year's figure, and he was explaining to us on Thursday, and through the press, that the competition from the economy was preventing recruitment.

• (9:30 p.m.)

The hon. member for Queens, speaking today on behalf of the Atlantic provinces, said the unemployment in that area would be sufficient to fill the gap in the armed services. So who is right? Are we to believe the minister—

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Churchill: —or the hon. member for Queens? I will take the word of the hon. member for Queens any day as against that of the minister.

Then again, the fact that the associate minister had to announce on Friday that bonuses would be paid to buy people back and attract them to re-enlist indicates in itself the complete failure of the policy of the minister of defence. This is attributable to low morale and his actions with regard to those in the armed services. He threw them out. What officer is there in the services today who is assured of continuity of service? He has no idea what this minister, this great Poobah intends to do, this minister who is in control of everything, who sets himself up to be a commander in chief. He says he is not a rubber stamp, but he has everyone else cowed into submission.

The men who are leaving the service cannot understand the indecision, the mix-up that prevails in national defence. They do not know where they are, and this is the substance of the complaints I have heard for the last two years.

An hon. Member: Remember June 1st.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Woolliams: On a point of order. Surely the hon. gentleman who now has the floor has the right to be heard tonight as against these people who are sitting in places where they do not normally sit and who feel they should yell and shout.

The Deputy Chairman: We are on the topic of national defence and there have been shouted remarks from both sides. I think this should cease. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre has the floor.

Mr. Churchill: A little noise now and again is all right, Mr. Chairman. But I see that the minister, fearful of his position, has assembled a claque around him tonight. They do not have the courage to get up and ask questions and present their case. They are doing it by noise and comment; but I do not mind that at all.

Now let us see what this bombastic minister has been talking about. In the course of his remarks he made a statement, and he keeps repeating it that the philosophy of the White Paper is the establishment of mobile forces. He speaks about the philosophy of mobilty as set out in the White Paper. He is creating in the mind of the public a feeling that there is a mobile force already in existence. Let us have a demonstration. Let him show us where this mobility is. For three years this minister has been in power. He has been talking about mobility for our armed forces as if this was something new. Well, 12 years ago hon. members will find these words:

> My hope is that the Canadian army will become the most effective fighting force available within the NATO countries, and that it will have the full equipment for modern conditions; that it will have the mobility that is required for modern warfare, and that it will have the trained staff that is required in order to utilize to its fullest effect artillery and armour, infantry and engineers and so on. Equipped with the best of weapons, equipped with track vehicles for cross-country purposes, equipped with protective troop carrying vehicles for the infantry, and equipped with transport aeroplanes and helicopters, if those are found to be satisfactory for use in the field, equipped in this way, brought up to date, modernized, the Canadian army would be something of which we would be prouder than we are at the present time, although we are very proud of it.

That was my statement on May 20, 1954 as reported in Hansard at page 4931. I happened to be the person who used those words in the House of Commons—mobility, tracked vehicles, air supported, supply columns with track vehicles; and so on. Yet the minister now thinks he has conceived a new idea. He talks about the philosophy of mobility. I do not know of any idea which has a longer history than this question of mobility. And the minister has not yet achieved it. This is the philosophy, but what has he done? Our brigade in Europe just recently acquired the armoured personnel carriers which I have advocated for 15 years in this chamber. It is still not equipped with tracked supply vehicles; it is still not equipped with air support or air supply facilities. So it is not mobile. The minister pretends he suddenly came up with a brand new idea. His lack of experience shows, of course, in so much of what he says to us here.

As I have said, the minister has left unanswered more questions than he answered. I suggested to him in a question the other day that in order to have an effective fighting force now and in the future he should make sure that our senior officers and, if possible, our senior N.C.O's, should get some experience of what is going on elsewhere in the world. I suggested he should have observers from our forces in Viet Nam to study what is going on there. Had he taken this course we might have had a first hand report about the F-5 as used in South Viet Nam, and not a second, third or fifth hand report from the minister with regard to that plane. Why did we not have senior air force officers there to examine the effectiveness of this plane? Why did we not have senior army officers there to examine the effectiveness of the air cavalry division and the methods now being employed in that war which has been going on for a year with increasing intensity?

I am not suggesting that young Canadian soldiers be sent to South Viet Nam. I never used that expression. I was talking about younger officers and N.C.O's who within a few years are going to succeed the veterans of the second world war. As the minister said himself, second world war veterans are now getting on toward their late forties and fifties and will soon be retiring. The men who were 15, 16 and 17 in 1945 are now approaching the age of 38 and will soon be in their forties. They are inexperienced with regard to warfare and the way to get experience is by attaching observers to formations in areas where the struggle is going on.

[Mr. Churchill.]

I will use the minister's own expression. One has to be realistic about national defence. Much as we are doing in peace keeping and observer corps work, developing a kind of police force, this is not the primary purpose of our national defence forces, as the hon. member for Brandon-Souris pointed out the other night.

• (9:40 p.m.)

The primary purpose is to be effective in case of war, and you must have a high command that is effective in case of war. I pointed this out 12 years ago, dealing with the same subject:

If we do not train the senior officers, we face a serious situation in time of war. I stood in awe of senior officers for a large portion of my life; but with the passing of the years that awe has diminished very considerably . . . . It is essential for the high command, for divisional and corps commanders, to understand the use of all arms within the army. We had many experiences in the second world war of that, where people unfamiliar with armoured formations were not able to use them effectively. Repeatedly I told men under my command when we were engaged in exercises in England at which they grumbled: "Put up with it; do anything that you are told to do under these conditions because we are training the high command, and you may live a bit longer if the high command gets trained."

I take this very seriously indeed because I have seen enough of warfare to know that the high command can make mistakes. Of course, they are not the only ones who can make mistakes. Junior officers can also make mistakes, but the troops are in the hands of the high command. Let me just indicate what Lloyd George said about this during the first world war. I quote:

No amount of circumspection can prevent war leading to the death of multitudes of brave men, but now that generals are not partaking in the personal hazards of a fight, they ought to take greater personal risks in satisfying themselves as to the feasibility of their plans and as to whether the objectives they wish to attain are worth the sacrifice entailed, and whether there is no better way of achieving the same result at less cost of gallant lives.

That was based on experience. The quotation is from page 123 of a book called, "To Seize the Victory" by John Swettenham, covering the Canadian Corps in world war I. I commend it to every hon. member and I pay my compliments to the author who has produced a very valuable work, one of great importance to anyone studying the art of warfare or concerned with the subject of national defence. That is what I was talking about the other night. It was on that subject I was questioning the minister.

With all his paper work, the minister's function is to provide an effective fighting force for this country, and that effective fighting force must be commanded by people who have knowledge of the conditions under which men have to fight.

Mr. Hellyer: Hear, hear.

Mr. Churchill: Otherwise thousands of lives may be endangered. I am not going to recount and stir up the embers of past discontent by mentioning things which happened in the second world war, which in my opinion should not have happened, and similarly things which happened in the first world war. But I do know that if the high command is not ignorant of conditions under which troops fight, then the lives of those troops are in less danger. But if they are ignorant of the conditions, then lives are wasted. That is why I am so concerned that this minister, who so boastfully talks about what he is doing, fails to see this particular aspect of the problem.

Where are we going to be in just a few years time? Of course we will have good men in the services. Canadians make good servicemen, but what about the high command, the senior officers and senior N.C.O.'s? Will they know how to lead their troops in time of difficulty? We have to guard against times of difficulty. We do not know what will happen in this world, whether we will remain at peace or be plunged into war. Let us not sacrifice the young men of this country.

As I say, Mr. Chairman, the minister left unanswered a great many questions, and some of my colleagues will deal with them. He has given us another one of his bombastic accounts, pretending that everything is wonderful, but I think that things in national defence are at a lower ebb than they have ever been during my time here, and it is due to the attitude of the minister.

His policies do not stand up under examination. If his policies are good, he is not getting the results that he pretends he is getting across the country. There has been too much propaganda and not enough action. What the minister should do now is act as a subdued individual for a little while, and let him produce results rather than just talk about what is going to happen in the future.

On the subject of integration I am not going to say that some of the things that were done were not all right. I think they have been. I think in some of the services you can integrate, especially the supply factors, and you can change the commands around. This is not new. But to talk about a mobile command is a little ridiculous—a command which is charged with responsibility that any command in the past has been charged with—having the troops fighting fit and ready to move.

The minister has not dealt with the subject of unification. Is there anyone in the country who knows what he means by unification? He has never answered that question. Is he going to put everybody into the same uniform? Is he going to cut out the traditions behind the fighting men of this country? He may say, "This is all right; this can be done", but I tell him it is a dangerous course he is following. If he is being advised to do this, then I do not know who his advisers are or what their experience was in the second world war. Quite a bit depends on experience.

If the minister is going to wipe out regiments, if he is going to wipe out the navy and put the navy in the same uniform as the army, and do the same with the air force, then he is headed for trouble. This fear in the minds of many people now in the services has been affecting their morale. I don't mind giving the minister advice. I wish he would take some of the advice that is given him.

Mr. Hellyer: I do.

Mr. Churchill: Once you interfere with these historic traditions behind fighting troops you are causing damage. I know what some people on that side of the chamber say about tradition. They want to wipe it all out, but I am telling you that from the standpoint of fighting troops the tradition of a regiment means a great deal to them. It inspires new men joining a regiment to know the history of the past. Then they say, "We can do the same thing. We will uphold the honour of the regiment. We won't let it down. If this regiment can look back to three of its former members winning the V.C., then we are going to see what we can do to maintain the honour of the regiment." Is the minister going to wipe out all this and, if so, for what purpose?

An effective fighting force is what is required.

Mr. Hellyer: Hear, hear.

Mr. Churchill: Why not build on the foundation that you have, rather than try to change everything? If it is change for the better, fine; but if it is just change for the sake of change then that is stupid and silly, and I am afraid the minister is going along that path.

He uses these big words—integration and unification. We had unification in the second world war. Combined operations—what was it other than unification—the navy, army and air force working together under one commander? How many examples do you require of combined operations, which is unification of fighting forces? You don't have to put everybody in the same uniform. They will work together without that, as they have shown in the past.

• (9:50 p.m.)

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I had no intention of speaking during this debate until I heard the minister's speech tonight. I think something should be said about some of the remarks he made, and that the Canadian public should be told the truth, which has not been done very often in the matter of defence. They have a right to know whether or not their sons, and daughters in some cases, who go into the services will get a fair break, and whether or not they have been getting a fair break.

The minister said a number of things tonight that I think are not accurate. First, we have not really reduced expenditures for defence. For this year the amount is up approximately $24 million, and for the 1966-67 year, the estimates for which I hope will come before us shortly, the amount is up $11 million. Surely these represent increases.

It is also a fact that we do not have enough soldiers at this time to make up a fighting force. We heard some talk of supplying a group of soldiers—whatever you call 10,000 soldiers, and I was in the air force so I am not familiar with these army designations —but I understand it is impossible to accumulate 14,000 to make up a division, with its reserve forces. If that is true, why in hell are we spending one and a half billion dollars? I am not sure that we should not make a greater reduction in this regard—after all we are enjoying a peacetime period.
