New Rugby Football Rules Much Criticized.

FOOTBALL.

NEW RULES CRITICIZED.

Writes "Keeper," in London Mail: In Rugby Union circles, as well as in the Northern Union, the new rules left the latter body, which requires the ball when out of touch to be punted into play again, has been very much criticized. It was alleged that it promoted heavy charging, the backs waiting to receive the ball and one famous player, F. W. Cooper, of Bradford, declined to play under the new system. Referees, however, have been very strict in penalizing players for unnecessary charging, and it is contended that the punt-in is no longer a source of danger. Cooper turned out for the first time for Bradford and made a full back to start with, but becoming convinced that his fears were groundless, he resumed the three-quarter position in the second half, and has now consented to play there regularly.

LIVELY SCENE.

A strange story is narrated by "Scottish Sport," concerning a scene at Kirkcaldy Park, Kirkcaldy, a week ago Saturday. Rob Roy was contesting a tie in the first round of the Dundee and Perthshire cup with Heilsburgh Athletic. A great deal of excitement prevailed from the beginning, but matters came to a climax in the second half. Heilsburgh, with the score two to one against them, put Rob Roy into the net, but the goal was disallowed. Immediately after, Rob Roy put on a third goal, and from this point the game became very rough. Two of the visitors made a show of attacking one of the home players, but this was the signal for the by-then time-frantic spectators to break into the field of play, which speedily became the scene of a free-for-all fight. Several of the Ardencaple men, who were the visiting team, were somewhat badly mauled, and the game unfinished with the score standing at three to one against them. The Scottish Association will have something to say regarding this fracas.

GAME FOR SATURDAY.

A game of Association football will be played on the asylum grounds on Saturday next between the asylum and Pottersburg teams. The asylum team will be assisted by several of the Collegiate boys, noted for their brilliant individual and combination plays and clever goal shooting, while the Pottersburg team will have for their defense the invincibles, Bryant and Fitzgerald, of the Collegiate.

Manager Irwin, of the Toronto baseball club, is satisfied that he will have a good team next year. He has signed Gattings, third baseman, of Lack Haven, of the Pennsylvania State League. Lush, Smith and Norton have been released. Lush will likely sign with Providence.

O. P. Cayle, the Toronto writer of the New York Herald for many years, died at Arizona, Minn., on Tuesday, of consumption, aged 47 years. He was born in Dayton, O., in 1850, studied law in Cincinnati, and went to New York about 1887, when he first took up baseball work. As a writer on this topic he probably had no equal.

Our "Dark" Continent

A Great Unexplored Region in South America.

No Need for Intrepid Adventurers to Go to Africa for Excitement.

Africa is no longer the dark continent. Explorers have gradually opened their routes. Probably no geographical question of the first importance remains to be settled there. In its most important aspects, Africa is now revealed, and its study in detail will be the work of the next century. It is in South America and Antarctica that the largest explorations of the future will be made. Of the great land masses, South America is the least known, and offers the greatest prizes to exploration.

All that part of Colombia lying east of the Cordilleras, a region as large as Texas, is almost wholly unknown except along the courses of four or five of the larger rivers which were mapped by Creviera and other explorers. With only one or two exceptions, nearly all the tributaries of these large streams, if they are indicated on the maps, are marked by broken lines to show that they have not been surveyed. The names of a few of the Indian tribes and towns, and some inkling of minor mountain ranges seen from the explored rivers, are all we know of the vast white spaces on the maps of South America.

Not a third of Brazil, as large a country as our own, is even fairly well known. The Amazon, the largest of the Amazon; and even the best known and most populous part of the country, East Brazil, was shown on the maps with glaring inaccuracies not more than ten years ago. A number of long mountain ranges were depicted on all maps for many years, though there are no such ranges. Some of the large rivers have cut little valleys deeply, and the high bluffs were mapped by many years will elapse before a complete map of these great mountain chains will be possible. The indefatigable labors of a German explorer within the past few years have revealed about fifty passes through the mountains which had never been mapped. The sources of many rivers flowing into the Pacific were unknown, though they are undoubtedly among the mountains not more than 150 to 200 miles from the coast. The recent boundary dispute between Chile and Argentina was due largely to the fact that the great of the mountain range in that latitude is further west than was supposed, and Chile thought herself entitled to a wider territory than she could have if she accepted that line as a boundary.

A few years ago the late Capt. Page, an American, settled an interesting question in South American geography, and there are not a few others of equal importance that remain to be solved. His work blasted the hopes of Bolivia that she might find a water outlet to the Atlantic by way of the Pichimayo River, which rises among the mountains and flows southeast to the broad Parana. Capt. Page was employed to ascend the Pichimayo on a small steamer, through the hostile Indian country, and endeavor to reach Bolivia. He steamed far up the river, until at last his keel stuck fast on the bottom of the channel. Then he built a dam across the river behind his vessel, and the accumulated waters enabled him to go on a few miles. He repeated this process six times, and his seven dams added thirty-five miles to the distance his vessel made. By that time Capt. Page was convinced that the Pichimayo was not available as an outlet for Bolivia's produce.

Let European explorers discover a continent at the south pole if they can. America will do well to complete the exploration of the Americas.—New York Sun.

If the wild animals of the Lincoln Park Zoo should attend the grand opera they would not talk in the boxes. They love music, and they sing every one day recently they love it sincerely, by listening with rapt attention to the soft strains of a violin played by Prof. Frank C. Baker, curator of the Academy of Sciences, and by applauding vigorously when he rendered the lively and more catchy airs.

Prof. Baker drew his bow gently across the strings. As the first note struck the ears of the animals crouched at the further end of the cage they drew their little heads up and turned their heads slightly, half startled and half pleased. The player backed slowly and gracefully. The notes became low and alluring. The pumas turned about and came as near as they could to the cage. The lions would admit. Then they sank to their haunches, mute and motionless—absolutely absorbed.

"Try them with something lively," suggested Mr. Sweeney. The player nodded, and the low, sweet notes that he had been playing merged into the rollicking measure of a jig, played so rapidly that it would have taken a man with four feet to have kept its time. In an instant there was an uproar in the next cage, occupied by the jaguar, much excited for his beauty and strength than for his equal temper. He was jumping from the floor of his cage to a shelf fitted into the wall near its top, thence to the floor, and back again, and all the while tossing his head and snorting at the thrasher and giving utterance to noises half way between a hiss and a growl.

Let us up a little, the animal keeper to the fiddling scientist. The tone went back again to the rollicking strains of the jig, and the jaguar was in mid-air as the change of music was made. He struck the shelf and started there. He was as quiet as a mouse, as a sleeping kitten. His great yellow and black head went between his paws, and he blinked slowly and dreamily at the violinist. There was no mistaking his action. He had been as quiet as a mouse, the suggested presence of a cat when the low and soft strains had been played. The lively notes had moved him to action and now a soothing lullaby had again caused him to be contented and quiet.

The lioness, in her roomy cage with her three vigorous offspring, Pompey, Brutus and Liana. The work of the watchful mother passed her by and she stretched her head and ears. She was a great deal for them, and mother and children showed an approval of it which was a compliment to the player in its undoubted though unspoken sincerity. The cub given, as fitting their tender age, the lullaby "Sleep, my pretty one, sleep." The great watchful mother passed her by and she stretched her head and ears. She was a great deal for them, and mother and children showed an approval of it which was a compliment to the player in its undoubted though unspoken sincerity.

"Keep it up," whispered Keeper Sweeney; "I never saw anything finer than that in my life." The bow passed and repassed over the strings. For full three minutes the crooning notes of the cradle song were heard, and during that time not one of that lion family moved so much as a muscle. When the player stopped for a moment, but began the tune again as he walked backward, moving further and further away from the caged cubs. As he stepped back they crept forward by degrees, loath to think apparently that the pleasing tones were to be lost. "Give them the tune of 'The Washerwoman,'" said Mr. Sweeney.

The bow which had been passing backward and forward for some time took up a gait that would have distanced one of the deer in the pen by the buffalo's yard. monkeys could not get enough of the music. As the last experiment in the animal house itself, Prof. Baker played the "Sailors' Hornpipe." All in a moment he had an accompaniment which was certainly as loud, if not as musical, as that which had ever before honored a soloist. The elephant which the park commissioners are harboring for the winter lifted his trunk and began to trumpet. All the other animals took their cue from the elephant as she had taken it from the violinist and began to serenade in the animal house was concluded amid a roaring, snarling, growling and chattering which was undoubtedly intended as an animal tribute of applause.

Today's session was a little quiet; the demand for all kinds of grain and produce was good. Some sales of the same in grain and dairy produce. In fruits there were few changes. Grapes had a wider range of values, and sold all the way from 12c to 25c per lb. The ordinary kinds, such as Concord, etc., sold at 12c to 25c in basket lots. A good many lots of extra nice grades offered, and for these the receipts were much higher, 3c and 5c being realized.

The receipts of pears improved, and prices held steady. There were more receipts than yesterday for pears, but more sales at 25c to 30c per basket. Peaches were 25c to 30c, and quinces 25c to 30c. Apples ranged from 22c to 25c per bushel, the latter price for fancy. Ordinary sold at 20c to 25c a bag. The beef and lamb trade was steady and unchanged.

Dressed and live hogs were unsettled, receipts light. Some sales of the offerings sold at 50c, but most of the offerings sold at 45c; there was a good demand. Hay sales were slow and unchanged. Young pigs were quoted at 45c to 48c. Live hens sold at 40c to 45c; ducks at 50c to 60c a pair.
