FOREIGNER MURDERED AT GUELPH THIRTY THOUSAND GERMAN COAL MINERS ON STRIKE HUNGARIANS MAKE PRISONERS OF FRENCH IN NEUTRAL ZONE

GERMANY WILL BE COMPELLED TO DESTROY FORTS ON RIGHT RHINE BANK WHILE ALLIES OCCUPY LEFT

Allied Financial Experts Admit Impossibility of Germany Being Able To Pay Enormous Indemnities During Next Two Years—Payments Imposed Will Be Made On Rising Scale Yearly.

Paris, March 31.—The probability that important final decisions will be taken this week by the peace conference conferees is pointed out by the French press today. Dwellings on the French claims the newspapers reiterate their arguments that these are just and legitimate and absolutely necessary for the safety of France, and likewise of the world.

The Echo de Paris claims to know that in order to assure the security of the French frontier it will be made obligatory upon Germany to destroy her forts on the right bank of the Rhine, with the Allies occupying the left bank until the war indemnity is paid.

The Echo de Paris also claims to know that the possibility of Germany's paying enormous amounts during the next two years. The newspaper says it understands that the payments required will be on a rising scale yearly, each of the Allies to receive its share either cash or various products.

FRENCH ARE URGING CANADA TO REMOVE BAN ON LIGHT WINES MORE TO FOLLOW

France Depends Much Upon Exportation of These Products.

TO IMPORT SHOES

Canada Likely To Receive Good Trade in This Line.

[Cable from Leon Trepanier.] Paris, March 31.—The French Government still maintains the restrictions upon importations which have been strongly criticised.

Le Matin, discussing the matter, expressed itself as follows: "The minister of reconstruction has also devoted much attention to the boot and shoe industry in Canada, and thinks that in order to bring the price of boots and shoes down to a decent figure, large quantities of boots and shoes from the United States and Canada must be imported without restriction, as was done before the war, and French output having always failed to meet the demand."

Various French organizations, including the Federation of Canadian Exporters and the Canadian section of the France-American Committee, are presenting memoranda to the French Government, earnestly requesting reconsideration of the enactments which prohibit the importation of light wines into Canada.

The department of France upon the exportation of her wine products is strongly urged to consider the fact that in Canada, which has proved to be an antidote to alcoholism in European countries, light wines in France are used very much as tea and coffee are used in Canada, and are regarded as ordinary and necessary beverages.

It is understood that the authorities of the medical faculty of the Sorbonne University are considering arrangements by which degrees granted in Canada will be equivalent to those of the Sorbonne. This will give assistance to Canadian students who desire to complete their studies at this great university.

GUELPH FOREIGNER MURDERED WHILE ASSISTING COMPANION WHO HAD BEEN ROBBED AFTER DISPLAYING ROLL OF MONEY

Alex. Dudka Dies in Guelph Hospital at an Early Hour This Morning as Result of Three Bullets Being Fired Into His Body—Man That He Tried To Help Is Not Fatally Injured—Inquest Will Be Held.

Guelph, March 31.—Another murder amongst the foreigners of this city took place late last night, this time all concerned being apparently Austrians or Ukrainians. As a result a middle-aged man named Alex. Dudka died this morning at 4 o'clock at the general hospital, having been shot three times in the lower part of the body. He died on the operating table.

The motive appears to be robbery, following gambling. It is conjectured the victim went to the rescue of an old man named Mike Houdybur, who was hit on the head as he left a house on Alice street, where a game of men had congregated Sunday afternoon and evening. Houdybur had a roll of bills with him, which had apparently excited the cupidity of someone, and they laid for him. He was badly hurt and over $100 stolen. Shot Three Times. While he was being attended to the shooting took place, three shots from a pistol being fired into Dudka's body. A policeman was attracted by the shooting, but when he reached the body he found the assailants had fled. Whether or not Dudka was also relieved of money is not known. He was rushed to the hospital as well as Houdybur. The latter is not fatally hurt. Two foreigners have been arrested, charged with complicity in the crime, and one of them carries the marks of a fracas of some sort. A jury was empaneled this morning and an inquest will be held.

England's Social Problem Rapidly Being Solved

Excellent results appear to have been secured by Lloyd George's industrial conference, a special committee of labor men and representatives of capital appointed to thresh out the differences that have hampered the industrial and social world of the United Kingdom.

The main recommendations of the report are for a forty-eight hour week, fixation of legal time-rate wages, the dropping of overtime labor as much as possible, increase in old age pensions and sick benefits, advancing of the minimum age for child labor and the establishment of new state industries. Furthermore the representatives of both sides are willing to make concessions in the event of the conditions asked for embarrassing the Government during the present critical hours of reconstruction. This is the spirit that will insure justice and fair play to all, the only sure basis of a better world as the British premier told the delegates when opening the conference.

Within the last few days a British labor leader publicly stated that Bolshevism and kindred doctrines had not the slightest chance of getting a footing in the United Kingdom. It is easy to believe that this statement accurately reflects English social and industrial feeling when we consider the above report. The findings and recommendations indicate a sincere desire on the part of employer and employee to work out a system fair to both sides. "Compromise and co-operation have marked this effort to establish a new relationship between capital and labor. It furnishes an excellent guide for similar efforts in this country or for that matter the world over."

Labor Meetings Show Fairness of Union Men

The Advertiser listened with a great deal of interest and appreciation to the speeches made in the Auditorium Friday night at the second of a series of meetings held by the Trades and Labor Council. Hundreds of labor men attended, and showed the keenest understanding of the high ideals and democratic principles that were enunciated. It is a pity that a good many of the city's employers of labor were not present, those who stand for capital as trade unions represent labor. They would have received an impression, if they were fair-minded men, that it was this strong organization of workmen that today stands as a solid bulwark between the red claws of Bolshevism and the community. They would have heard that while labor believes that the strike is a lawful weapon, that it is the only method of protest the worker possesses, the union men are slow to use this weapon, and loth to use it before an effort has been made to meet "the boss" at a common table.

In effect, that was what labor asked, as voiced by the organizer of the mighty American Federation, a man, by the way, who does labor credit and who shows breadth of vision that would win him respect from the masters of industry who gather about directors' meetings. Labor was not talking fight. It wore no chip on its shoulder. It asserted its right to think and to claim its rightful place in the community. It desired to be free, and declared it could not be free when the boss stated that it had no right to have a voice when wages are being fixed. And it asked capital to meet it at the crossroads of conciliation. It merely asked the chance to discuss with capital why labor claimed a certain amount of money for its output and certain conditions under which to work. It spoke of the benefits of collective bargaining by means of which the workers had a voice in establishing a scale of wages. In fact, it expressed the whole code of "give and take" rather than any doctrine of destructive grasping. Many capitalists have never been able to distinguish between the trade unionists and those who counsel sabotage and direct action. As a consequence, they refuse to approach that common ground of mutual understanding, and regard the whole labor movement as anarchistic.

An American writer lands the Victorian epoch, but the Victorian epoch seems pretty good to us.

Out of the daylight savings muddle the farmer gets a "lemon" and the entire country a "pretty pickle."

American ranchers are displacing the cowboy with airmen for patrolling the ranges. Up you go, Bill Hart!

The postoffice situation having been disposed of, the city should not be less active to clear up the city hall situation.

The premier will not come home until the peace conference is over. Evidently still hopeful of meeting Lenin and Trotsky.

In daylight saving the Government managed to satisfy everyone that it could throw another monkey wrench or two.

If the board of education should resign and a vote on school debentures become necessary, the site of the city hall could be decided at the same time.

The newspapers must work on daylight saving whether they like it or not. Newspapers and wires and railways are a trinity of interest that must operate in harmony.

The importance of the Western University is reflected in the decision of the department to recognize honor degrees. Thus the last barrier to rank with any other Canadian college is removed.

serves the right to strike when it cannot secure by other means that which it seeks. Without the right to strike the worker would be, his leaders declare, an automaton, without the right to think, to all intents and purposes a slave.

Capital is realizing that it cannot treat labor as a commodity. Most capitalists have realized this always, but there are those extremists who, in their attitude to labor, represent as ghastly a conception of humane conduct as the Bolsheviki represent in the masses of the people. Labor is ready to debate its troubles. It is in a hopeful mood that things are changing for the better, that the evolution toward amicable relations is speeding up, and that the prospect for attaining education and something more than bare existence may be the reward of every honest toiler.

These labor meetings are a good thing for the community. They are wide open to the whole population, and it is to be hoped that more men who employ labor will attend when the program is continued. The meetings may develop into an open forum for the expression of opinion from many quarters. The fact that the addresses are not confined to labor men is one of the best indications of the broad calibre of the men who organized the gatherings.

Little Nations Acting As Rescuers of Big Powers

All the medals for rescuing and liberating are not going to be pinned on the great powers. Belgium, by superb gallantry and selflessness, plugged the breach long enough to wreck the schedule of the initial German drive. To that temporary demoralization of the Hun attack the Allies, to a large extent, owe the turning back of Von Klueck and the subsequent prolonged stalling of the enemy's main offensive. Now at the other end of the war comes Poland, another of the little fellows, stepping into the breach to block a Bolsheviki invasion of western Europe, a greater and more hideous peril than Belgium stemmed.

When the Paris conference opened it was repeatedly stated by the Allied leaders that a permanent peace for the old world would be based on what disposition would be made of Poland. President Wilson declared that self-determination would fall to the ground and vitiate the whole league of nations idea if the Polish problem were not justly settled once for all. Today the case of Poland has expanded to the point where its fate involves the safety of the Entente alliance, if not the entire civilized world, for if the Bolsheviki armies can subdue this intensely patriotic and fine fighting race they will have an ideal jumping off place for further conquests by propaganda and military force. Fighting for her own life and honor Poland has been a buffer that has kept the Red hordes out of Germany and Austria. Had Lenin and Trotsky succeeded in linking up their armies with those of the Teuton extremists the Allied nations would have been forced into another terrible campaign or a humiliating compromise that would have stripped them of the material and ethical fruits of victory.

Now it is apparent that the great powers realize that this danger is still at hand. The swift and complete conversion of Hungary to Bolshevism has driven home the fact that the further spreading westward of Bolshevism must be stopped and that Poland is the medium through which this is to be accomplished. That is the explanation of the hurried dispatch of troops, munitions and foodstuffs to Poland. For months Poland, beset on three sides, has been battling fiercely to retain the freedom returned her by the Russian collapse and the Teuton downfall.

Now with Allied aid it seems as if this little fellow, weak in numbers and resources, was to play the role of rescuer of the big fellows. Poland's stout defence has halted the bandit armies of the Bolsheviki. Perhaps with Allied assistance she will be able to cripple the Red invasion beyond hope of repair. That first weak blow of Belgium opened the way for the crushing of Prussian despotism, and Poland appears to be leading the way for the smashing of a more infamous and terrible attack on liberty than was launched at Potsdam. In history some of the little fellows are destined to measure up as giants.

CHILDHOOD'S JOYS

STUDIO DAYS.
By Dorothy Douglas.

West put a few lingering touches on his canvas before the setting sun told him that he must wait until another day before finishing that masterpiece, "Portrait of a Soldier." A riotous little air fell from time to time from his lips, but its measure became gradually subdued while the soft veil of twilight captured his joy in a more quiet manner. A sunny smile lurked in West's eyes; the gold of his hair was ruffled and his face shone with a glow that little did he care since the studio rent was paid for the following month. Also the canvas on his easel would easily insure another six months' living.

And outside his room stood a girl whose eyes held all the wildness in the world, and whose heart was absorbing every detail of the man who lit that fell from West's lips. Finally she crossed the threshold for a moment.

West was not prepared for a visitor, and such a one as he found on the landing was a challenge to the most sturdy of heartbeats.

"May I come in?"

"Absurd waste of words," West said, and with the little country boy that was a part of the man he watched his visitor cross the threshold for a moment.

The wildness vanished swiftly and a form of glistering tears and a girl's eyes. She fled to the small window that held the glow of the setting sun and stood silently for a moment. Then West saw her brush a hand across her eyes before she turned again to him.

"You are not to think me mad," she said tremulously. "For three long years I have lingered to be in this studio. I have and now—now my heart's because I am here." She laughed softly with so much of glad emotion that West found the set almost a wonderful place to dwell in.

He started to prepare tea on the improvised tea cart beside his easel, but the girl slipped quickly over.

"I want to talk to you," she insisted. "See I have brought some of the same old-fashioned, but I somehow felt I would like to stay for tea—if I came in."

West found the set almost a wonderful place to dwell in.

The girl threw her great moleskin cape on the dusty armchair just as carelessly as in the old days she had tossed off her threadbare one. Her gown was a dream and her small about something wonderful. She was as chic as any wonderful poster. She pulled off the tongs and with a swift gesture crumpled the conventional smooth of the conventional head of a bewildered copper.

"You have utterly no regard for a poor hunchback?" West inquired. There was warm, boyish admiration in his glance. "But I will try to remember that you are just a little wraith that has blown into my Bohemian for a cup of tea."

"The little wraith would very much like a snack—if you have a second one," she laughed back at him.

"It would take four of you to fill it up," he said after a successful rummage.

They both laughed like children at the result, and for the first time in three years a happy lit of song fell from Gretchen's lips.

"Oh, yes—my name is Gretchen Meyer," she told him by way of tardy introduction. "I saw yours on the door as I came up the creaky stairs. I always to think those stairs would cave in. They are just as firm as ever, but I loved every creak they gave out for me."

She was exploring all the while she talked, and it was not long before a dainty tea was ready, and they sank on opposite sides of the window. West had fashioned. They were both Bohemian enough to convey the rare unconventionality of the moment without any strain.

"How long have you been in this studio?" Gretchen asked between sips of cinnamon cake.

"I've managed to pay the rent here for three years," he told her.

"Oh! You came in just as I left then. I was here for the two happiest years I have ever had," Gretchen said, and the wildness clouded her eyes. "I used to sing just as you were singing when you came up. Of course, I never expected to set the world on fire through my art, but somehow I made a scant living—scant in money, but overflowing with joy. I did not always have enough money to buy cinnamon cakes," she laughed, but her lips were tremulous.

"And then," urged West.

"Then I married. After that it didn't seem as if life held a thing for me. There were no quaint Bohemians strolling in and out of my studio, no much-needed checks coming to me from inopportunity, and worst of all, there was no freedom of thought or action. My husband gave me a gorgeous limousine for my last birthday, but it didn't bring even one atom of the joy that my first hard-earned check gave me. I have everything on earth that money can buy."

"But why didn't you keep up your art?" West was kindly sympathetic, but there was a great surge within him to try to keep this rare girl within his circle. It seemed sheer excitement to meet a girl who had kept her, since she was married to a wealthy man and her fancy for Bohemian life and the days were perhaps but passing desires, but she was answering his question.

"It was worth while to my working at art when I didn't have to. If I had possessed genius or even a great degree of talent I would have kept it. But I only have talent enough to keep the wolf from the door. As for my Bohemian friends—well, I tried keeping them in my life, but my husband called me a mad woman and made me so unhappy about them that I gave them all up. Oh—I just can't tell you what it means to me to be back here with a snack on sitting in my very own studio."

"I don't want quarrel either about the studio or the snack," said West. "I am only glad that I happen to be the tenant here who you have chosen to sit at studio days again."

"So am I," agreed Gretchen, and gazed contentedly at the slim boyish man the while she realized that he possessed a tremendous charm. "I might have found a crusty old maid who wouldn't let me in at all." She was thoughtful for so long a while that West looked apprehensively at her and wondered if he had done anything to displease her. But before he could form words to inquire, Gretchen asked coaxingly, "Are you going to let me to come again?"

West was just a bit puzzled. He also knew that he wanted her very, very much indeed. It was difficult to know how best to express his thoughts. He decided that his habitual frankness was the best course, and after that she must take the situation in her own hands.

"You have asked me a straight question and a great softness crept into his eyes. "I can't tell you that if I had my own way I would not let you go out of the studio again. You have asked something, but my studio and into my soul that I desire greatly that something stay."

So brilliant a color flamed into Gretchen's cheeks and so tremendous a light into her eyes that West stopped speaking. He had annoyed her beyond forgiveness.

The sun trailed down and away from the window, leaving but the steady warm glow of twilight.

"I should not have told you this," he continued finally. "You are the wife of another manly."

"But I'm not—now," Gretchen put in quickly. "I would not have come back to studio days had he been still living. And now I'm all alone with so much money that it weighs me down, and I just want to come back to Bohemia and paint dreadful pictures and get snippy little checks for them and—" It was she now who stopped blushing and said, "I have West's eyes reflected."

"Then you are free-free to sit at my card every day—free to let me keep that which has come into my heart and free to be happy in the dear old studio?"

Gretchen nodded silently and her eyes West wanted to take her in his arms, but didn't think it quite the thing, he walked over to the window and stood looking out at the twilight. Gretchen arose swiftly and stood beside him, her slim hand touching his sleeve.

"Love makes the world a very wonderful place to live in," she said softly.

"That snack is so absurdly big it is difficult to find you in it," observed West.

"Well, I feel that you found me," laughed Gretchen, as together they gazed happily out over the housetops from the studio window.

SARCASTIC.

There are good and sufficient reasons for the French Government's decision not to allow the six German delegates to the peace conference to get near to Paris than Versailles. But might not the authorities be prevailed upon to reject a little bit? It would be well if a brief, personally-conducted and well-guarded tour could be made to the Paris restaurant where that Hohenzollern Christmas dinner is still waiting for the German consumer. Why not make the six eat it?

THE ALBANIAN.
[New Republic.]
Albania is the stepchild of Europe. This lonely race has no affinity with any other stock on our continent. And yet the fact is that from Byron's day downward it would be hard to find a west European who has learned to know the Albanians without admiring them. He has known them myself in all stages of culture. It was a servant who first excited my curiosity. He was a handsome, spirited lad, and in a time of insurrection I used to employ him to carry large sums of money over a dangerous road. One day when I asked him if he knew a certain short cut he answered with the simplest of smiles, "Yes, we always used that path at night when I was with Shakin. Shakin (the Falcon) was the most noted brigand of that region. My man then, who had just brought me a big bag of gold was an ex-brigand. Tried to know if I dared to trust him. I told the story to the Bulgarian bishop. His comment was short and decisive: "The man is an Albanian, is he not?" That was the verdict of an hereditary enemy on this singular race. It has a name of honor.

THE SITUATION.
[Edmonton Bulletin.]
If no one works, none can eat. That is a condition of human life. The less work is done, the less there will be to eat.
Canada owes more money as a nation than ever did before.
She has to carry obligations of honor arising out of the war of a kind and to an amount never before dreamed of.
Production must be relieved of the burden of carrying the load of after-the-war burdens.
Production must be increased or the country cannot pay interest and wages and provide for necessary expenditures.
Production must be relieved of all possible burdens, and must be expanded by the more efficient application of industry or Canada will cease to be a country.
Canada can only be saved by the increased industry and better directed efficiency of her citizens.

DISCOVERING AMERICA.
[London Globe.]
A gambling scene of a unique character for London was witnessed today, by a Globe representative.
It took place in an open space near the Eagle Hut, and was witnessed by a large crowd.
The players were Canadian, New Zealand, Australian and American soldiers and American sailors. All were excited, and the betting on the game, played with a couple of dice, was fast and furious.
The game is called "Scrap" and one "shoots the scrap," or "shoots" the dice. A Canadian soldier standing by described it as the best and sweetest gambling game in the world.
"Scrap" is somewhat akin to banker, but the main idea is to throw seven or eleven with the dice the first time, eventually. One gambler had fifteen or sixteen treasury notes in his hand at one time.

"Anyone want to join?" cried one successful banker. At this point the men were betting against one another, and against third parties and

The pale boy with the great, puffed-up nose, looking out in the clear autumn sunshine, in a warm coat of the quiet porch.

"He's a man—all through—and you can't look at him without seeing that."

"What's changing you now, Jim?" I said to the man just back from France. Jim smiled a little, sighed a little, then he made up his mind to laugh, and laugh he did.

"Well," he said, "I am changed, that's true, but I don't know what you could tell me soon. How do I seem different?"

"I tried to tell him—but somehow I couldn't."

It was intangible, not to be put into words, but just as real as the sunshine, and as much to be felt as the tang of approaching winter in the air.

"They 'find' themselves."

"Well," said Jim—and had given it up as a bad job—"I guess I know what you mean. All the boys are finding themselves. They laugh just as easy, but there's something under the laugh that never was there before."

"You see, when a fellow's twenty or twenty-one he's always dreaming about the wonderful things he's going to do in the world, and he wonders what's the matter with all the old fellows that they never seem to amount to much."

"Oh, yes, they support their families, and pay their bills, and they're busy in a humdrum, unromantic sort of way, and they wait till they get started, and he'll show 'em."

"He has to get left and go broke and make a fool of himself, and fall down and get up again, and twenty years be-fore he learns what's the matter with him—and by the time he's learned his habit is set and he can't change it if he wants to."

"Or there we learn all these things to just a few little moments."

SUGGESTIVE QUESTIONS ON THE UNIFORM LESSON FOR SUNDAY.

ONE GOLDEN TEXT SUGGESTION.

By Rev. T. S. Lincoff, D.D., God, Our Heavenly Father—Genesis 1:1-7; Psalm 102:1-14; Matthew 6:2-24.

QUESTIONS FOR TODAY.

1. Gen. 1:1-7. There is evidence in abundance that man has not always existed on the earth. What part of it can you give?

2. What evidence is there that the earth has not always existed?

3. If the earth and all that is in it began to be, what cause would be adequate to bringing it into being?

Golden Text—Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed by thy name—Matt. 6:9.

GOD IS OUR FATHER.

You have seen in the reading of the Scripture lesson for today that God, the creator of all things, is called our Father, and is so called because he is our creator. We also learn that we are made in God's image. There is abundance of evidence that man did not always exist on this planet, and, therefore, began to be, and inasmuch as like only begets like, man's creation demands an intellectual and moral being, and this natural deduction harmonizes with the Genesis account of the creation of man. Both these sources of evidence make God, the creator of heaven and earth, our Father, and therefore, a privilege and a blessing impossible to exaggerate for us to have such a distinguished origin.

Would Adopt One. Dear Miss Grey—I have not come asking for any patterns, nor do I discuss whether Belgium won the war, but I would like to adopt one of those unfortunate Belgian children who were reported to have been mutilated by the Germans in the early part of the war. RAILWAYS MUST SUBMIT REASONS FOR ADOPTION OF "SUMMER" TIME

Sir Henry Drayton Will Hear Arguments of All Parties On Tuesday.

A MUDDLED SITUATION Parliament May Be Forced To Reopen the Question.

[Special to The Advertiser.] OTTAWA, March 30.—Great confusion and vexatious complications would appear to be in prospect as a result of the present uncertain situation regarding daylight saving.

Hesitates to Take Plunge. The Government, however, decided not to take the responsibility for re-opening the measure, but turned the whole matter over to Parliament.

Sir Henry Drayton has set next Tuesday as a day on which interested parties, particularly the railways, should be heard.

The railway board has set next Tuesday as a day on which interested parties, particularly the railways, should be heard.

Complications at Capital. The situation at Ottawa will be further complicated by the fact that the city council at a meeting on Saturday afternoon decided to adopt daylight saving, commencing on Tuesday.

The opinion is somewhat generally expressed, however, that Parliament would find this so inconvenient in many ways that despite the views held by the majority of its members, the legislators would eventually decide not to lag behind the city and the railways.

RAILWAY WAR BOARD TO FIGHT ATTEMPT TO ALTER ITS ORDER. MONTREAL, March 30.—The Canadian Railway Board will apparently make strenuous opposition to the coming attempt on Tuesday next to have the Dominion Railway War Board's daylight saving order to the railway commission.

BEFORE SARNIA COUNCIL. SARNIA, March 30.—While there is nothing definite, it is possible that the city council at its meeting on Monday night may order the city clocks ahead one hour for the summer season.

TORONTO AND OTHER PLACES NOW HAVE DAYLIGHT-SAVING TIME. TORONTO, March 30.—This city went on daylight-saving time at 11 o'clock to-night, Mayor Church having issued a proclamation so ordering on Saturday morning.

Natural Gas and the Weather

THE WEATHER. Lower Lakes and Georgian Bay: Strong northerly winds, most fair and cold; a few local snow flurries.

In January the average natural gas user burns eight times as much gas as he does in July or August. On a really cold day he burns about twelve times as much as on the average summer day.

Much of the equipment—wells and pipe lines—is unused during the greater part of the year.

Despite this, we do our best to provide it against emergency to take care of the demand when it is at its greatest.

"Choosing Life's Work" Subject of Interesting Address.

"Choosing Life's Work" was the subject of a lecture delivered to boys and their fathers in the Auditorium yesterday afternoon at 4:15 o'clock by Charles W. Bishop of Toronto, national secretary of the Y.M.C.A. in Canada. This lecture was one of the "Find Yourself" campaign meetings, which has been conducted in this city since March 13 and is to continue until April 6. The purpose of the campaign is to help boys choose a vocation and to encourage them to train for it and to emphasize the importance of a Christian motive in their life work.

The campaign is being conducted by the London advisory committee for co-operation in boys' work and organization, consisting of representatives from the Protestant churches, Y. M. C. A. and Sunday school associations.
Mr. Bishop, in his speech, emphasized the desirability of a boy getting into the vocation he likes and not drift along in any job because it offers a salary to live on. "Find a position you want to follow at an early enough date so as not to be too late to make the most out of life. Your parents, most likely, will decide which vocation they wish you to follow; do not altogether disregard this advice, but try it. Their experience will undoubtedly help you, but if you are not suited try one which you think you will like. Try till you find a position that you like and you are sure to make a success out of life."

Many Possibilities.
The speaker pointed out the possibilities there were in the teaching of the Christian religion. There are many different branches in working for Christianity. If one thinks he is not adapted for pulpit work, there is Christianity from an educational standpoint. There is Christianity from an organization standpoint, and also that of a social engineer. He instanced the people who went to see the falls at Niagara. Some got from it substance for lectures, but one man saw the chance for a great engineering feat which machinery could be built to grapple with, and today we have power to run our street cars and to light our homes. We have the product of this genius in our own city. The world of religion and the kingdom of God are awaiting for just such an engineer, but instead of being an engineer to build machinery he must be an engineer for social work. Every life workers' job or calling should be from a motive of Christianity. Mr. Bishop said that when he was in France about a year ago he did some deep thinking regarding the vocations the soldiers followed in the Canadian corps. There were artillery men, cavalry, airmen, shoemakers, tailors, and nearly every vocation was represented in the army and all were working for one end, and that was the winning of the war. In civil life every occupation should be to one end also, and that the making of the kingdom of God.

Mayor C. R. Somerville presided at the meeting and spoke a few words on the success of the rising generation which would follow is they pursued the vocation that they liked in life. He backed this up by giving some of his own experiences when he was a young man, and the different positions he held before he found the right one, which he kept up to the time of his retirement. The Auditorium was packed with interested listeners.

The play entitled "A Russian Honeymoon" was presented recently in the town hall, Lobo Township, by the Coldstream Dramatic Club. In spite of the unfavorable weather and other deterring factors a remarkably large audience turned out and enjoyed the performance. It will be repeated tonight, when a full house is expected. The proceeds are for reconstruction work in France.
