Forgotten Birthday.

(Lulu Linton, in The Youth's [Companion.)

Some insistent sound had roused Ruth Vincent from refreshing slumber. Still only half awake, she thought impatiently that the family next door had begun their Friday cleaning at an unearthly hour. Opening her eyes, she stared at the rough board ceiling overhead, and then at the sunbeam creeping through a knot-hole in the opposite wall-and remem bered with a happy chuckle that she was far from next door neighbors. She rose hastily and began to dress, for the days in camp were so precious that she did not wish to lose one moment of them

Mrs. Graydon, her hostess, heard her stir and slipped a letter "Here's a letter for you, dear!" she called. "Jackson rowed across the lake early this morning to get "Thank you!" Ruth answered

But when she stooped to pick up the letter, she frowned in disappointment. The letter had been forwarded from the home post-

"Aunt Ann! Why-she never writes except to thank me for my Christmas and birthday gifts-Glancing at the calendar beside the washstand, she gasped, and and she had forgotten it.

As her mind ran back over the past month, she felt that it was quite natural that she should have forgotten the birthday of an aunt — especially a great-aunt whom she did not remember discitement of getting ready for the After that had come the invitation to spend two wooks at the Graydons' summer camp. The last ten days had been brimming over with the pure joy of living. But why had Aunt Ann writen? Surely not to upbraid her ecause she had failed to rememer. Ruth had grown up with the impression that Aunt Ann was-well, different. Opening the envelope she drew out the note. written in a clear, precise hand;

"My three packages! What Then suddenly Ruth rolled on the bed in a paroxysm of hysterical laughter. The thin walls of the summer cottage could not shut in such a tumult of merriment, try as she would to muffle it, and immediately three girls in kimonas came rushing in and demanded to know at once what home together and to keep boisterous, romping Ruth in clothes shoes and books while she climbed steadily from the baby room through the grades and through the high school, Occasional gifts from Aunt Ann, and one living relative on the Vincent side, had helped; but since the funeral of Ruth's father, whom Aunt Ann had reared, educated and loved in her own undemonstrative way that lady had never visited her

Early in June Ruth's mother had written to Aunt Ann and asked her to visit them during ommencement; she hoped that when Aunt Ann should hear about Ruth's wonderful achievement in the high school, and her longing to go on with her education, she would offer to lend the money for the college course. Aunt Ann had replied very briefly that she could not accept the invitation, because it was the busiest time 'I hope it's from the folks at on the farm. She had added that she hoped Ruth would go to work now, and waste no more time in school, as she, for he part, did not believe in sending > girls to college. Mrs. Graydon knew Aunt Ann's views on the education of women ery well, but nevertheless had noped that this well-to-do relative would change her views and give Ruth the opportunity that she deserved. This episode, she feared, might make matters worse.

When they had all left the room, Ruth sat down in front of the mirror to rearrange her tum bled hair. She glanced squarely into the face reflected there, and suddenly all her laughter van-

"I-I'm ashamed of you, Ruth Vincent," she said, soberly, " Seeing only the funny side of what ust have seemed almost a tragedy to three of the dearest women n the world."

Their faces came to her very learly. She could see the little worried wrinkle that had come between mother's eyebrows when he had realized that Ruth was oo far away to be reminded in ime of Aunt Ann's birthday Then mother had taken down the baking-powder can from the op of the kitchen cabinet, counted carefully the week's allowance and slipped out enough to buy ome little gift, which she had mailed without telling her sisters that thoughtless Ruth had left nother burden on her mother's tired shoulders. Then, as Aunt Helen had hurried down to the office, she had remembered, too. She had decided loyally to keep Ruth's forgetfulness from the others, and had also mailed a package to Aunt Ann.

Gentle Aunt Grace, working ceaselessly over her embroidery or crochet work, had remembered.

Mrs. A. Russell, Niagara Falls, Out., writes: "At nights I could not sleep, and had to sit up in bed my heart would beat so fast.

When I went to walk very far I would get all out of breath, and would have to sit down and rest before I could go any further. I was advised to get Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills, and before I had used two boxes I could sleep and walk as far as I liked without any trouble."

TO MAKE GOOD BREAD

You must have Good Yeast

GOOD BREAD is, without question, the most important article of food in the catalog of man's diet; surely, it is the "staff of life." Good bread is obtainable only by using the Best Yeast, the best flour, and adopting the best method of combining the two. Compressed Yeast is in all respects the best commercial Yeast yet discovered, and Fleischmann's Yeast is indisputably the most successful and best leaven known to the world. It is uniform in quality and strength. It saves time and labor, and relieves the housewife of the vexation and worriment she secessarily suffers from the use of an inferior or unreliable leaven. It is, moreover, a fact that with the use of Fleischmann's Yeast, more loaves of bread of the same weight can be produced from a gren quantity of flour than can be produced with the use of

This si explained by the more thorough fermentation and expansion which the minute particles of flour undergo, thereby increasing the size of the mass and at the same time adding to the nutritive properties of the bread. This fact may be clearly and easily demonstrated by any who doubt that there is economy in using Fleischmann's Yeast.

If you have never used this Yeast give it a trial. Ask your Grocer for a "Fleischmann" Recipe.
