DOMINION OF CANADA

OFFICIAL REPORT

OF

DEBATES
HOUSE OF COMMONS

THIRD SESSION—SEVENTEENTH PARLIAMENT

22-23 GEORGE V, 1932

VOLUME II, 1932

COMPRISING THE PERIOD FROM THE FIFTEENTH DAY OF MARCH, 1932, TO THE TWENTY-FIFTH DAY OF APRIL, 1932, INCLUSIVE

BEING

VOLUME CXCII FOR THE PERIOD 1875-1932

INDEX ISSUED IN A SEPARATE VOLUME

OTTAWA
F. A. ACLAND
PRINTER TO THE KING'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY
1932

CANADA

House of Commons Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT

Tuesday, March 15, 1932

The house met at three o'clock.

GARNET WHEAT

REFERENCE OF REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON GRAIN STANDARDS TO COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I have a motion which I should like to present to the house, but before doing so, I think a brief statement in regard to the question of garnet wheat might be advisable. My motion, I may say, is to refer the matter to the committee on agriculture. The statement is as follows:

Under section 25 of the Grain Act, 1930, a committee on grain standards is set up each year. For the crop year 1931-32 the committee on western grain consisted of:

E. B. Ramsay, Chief Commissioner, Board of Grain Commissioners; D. A. MacGibbon, Commissioner, Board of Grain Commissioners; C. M. Hamilton, Commissioner, Board of Grain Commissioners; J. D. Fraser, Chief Inspector, Board of Grain Commissioners; George Serls, Chairman, Grain Appeal Tribunal, Winnipeg; George Hill, Chairman, Grain Appeal Tribunal, Calgary; C. R. Manahan, Chairman, Grain Appeal Tribunal, Edmonton; Doctor F. J. Birchard, Chemist in charge, Grain Research Laboratory; L. H. Newman, Dominion Cerealist; H. Sellers, representing the millers; George Bennett, W. H. Fairfield, C. C. Gillis, W. McLeod, representing Grain Growers in Alberta; J. D. Read, Dean A. M. Shaw, J. Wellbelove, A. E. Wilson, W. Wright, representing Grain Growers in Saskatchewan; Doctor G. P. McRostie, P. V. Wright, D. A. Kane, representing Grain Growers in Manitoba; K. Campbell, representing Grain Growers in British Columbia; C. J. Drake, Secretary. In accordance with their usual practice, the committee selected and settled standard samples of the statutory grades. During the period of the discharge of their regular duties they were confronted with the problem of garnet wheat, and after full consideration passed the following resolution, which was included in their report to the Board of Grain Commissioners and by the latter included in their annual report as required by section 23 of the Canada Grain Act:

That this western committee of grain standards recommend that after the 31st of July, 1932, garnet wheat shall not be graded in the first four grades of red spring wheat as specified in schedule 1 of the Canada Grain Act, 1930, and further recommend that the following grades be established:—

No. 1 C.W. Garnet wheat;
No. 2 C.W. Garnet wheat;
No. 3 C.W. Garnet wheat;

and that any garnet wheat that cannot be assigned to these grades on account of special characteristics shall be graded No. 4 northern, or in the commercial grades of red spring wheat according to the standards established for such grades.

This resolution has no effect in law, but is an indication of the composite view of this important committee on grain standards, and carries the judgment of the Board of Grain Commissioners and, therefore, cannot be ignored.

To give effect to the resolution, my opinion is that it will be necessary to amend the Grain Act, section 24, which fixes the standards for western grain and to provide by statute for a separate grade for garnet wheat. I therefore suggest that this resolution should be submitted to the agriculture committee, where full consideration can be given to the whole question and a decision arrived at as to whether or not the Canada Grain Act should be amended. I am not passing any opinion on the suggestion of the committee on grain standards, but I wish to move:

That the report of the committee on grain standards for the crop year 1931-32, in so far as it relates to garnet wheat, be referred to the select standing committee on agriculture and colonization with instructions that the whole subject be inquired into carefully and that the said committee shall have power to call for witnesses, papers and documents and to report to the house its findings.

Motion agreed to.

CIVIL SERVICE

SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER APPOINTMENTS AND THE ADMINISTRATION AND OPERATION OF THE ACT

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved:

That the name of Mr. MacInnis be substituted for that of Mr. Woodsworth on the special committee on Civil Service and Civil Service Act.

Motion agreed to.

TRADE AGREEMENT WITH GERMANY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. BRADETTE (North Timiskaming): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. A few days ago the minister told the house there were negotiations with Germany in regard to a trade agreement. This morning there is a despatch to the effect that on the first of April Germany will place restrictions on Canadian goods unless Canada makes an agreement with Germany before the Imperial conference.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I did not catch all that my hon. friend said, but the answer, I think, is this: the government at the present moment have no statement to make on the subject.

NORTH AMERICAN LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Yesterday evening the hon. member for West Edmonton (Mr. Stewart) indicated that he thought my statement as to the common stock held by the North American Life Assurance Company was inaccurate. I find this morning from the Superintendent of Insurance that the actual percentage is 5·63, of which bank stocks, loan companies' stocks, and consumers' gas companies stock amounts to 5·16, and other utility and industrial stocks, 17/100 per cent. I fancy it is the latter figure to which the hon. gentleman referred.

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (West Edmonton): I do not think I said the statement was inaccurate. I merely pointed out that common stocks were less than one-half of one per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: They are 5·63 per cent.

[Mr. Stevens.]

UNEMPLOYMENT AND FARM RELIEF

CONTINUANCE ACT, 1932—CONSIDERATION OF RESOLUTION

The house resumed from Friday, March 11, consideration of the motion of the Prime Minister that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee of the whole on the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to introduce a bill to amend chapter 58 of the statutes of Canada, 1931, striking out the word "March" in section 8, and substituting the word "May" therefor.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, for the past two weeks the house has been listening to a very lengthy debate on this resolution.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Two weeks?

Mr. STEVENS: Nearly two weeks. During this time many rather impassioned speeches have been delivered, directed largely to an attack upon the government on constitutional grounds. Perhaps it is advisable, once in a while during the course of a debate of this kind, to bring the attention of the house back to precisely what is proposed in the resolution. Last year an act was passed which was very fully considered by the house. This measure, which was presented in a constitutional manner, asked the house to clothe the government with certain authority and powers. There was very sound reason for the request. This country, in common with other countries throughout the world, was suffering under a very serious economic depression, and there was prevalent throughout the country a considerable degree of unemployment. While the house was in session it became evident to all that a condition was likely to arise in western Canada of the nature of a national calamity. The Prime Minister brought to the attention of the house the conditions due to the crop failure particularly in Saskatchewan and parts of the other provinces. In one large section there had been three successive crop failures, and the Prime Minister described it at the time as a great national calamity. I think the house generally most regretfully concurred in that view and it was felt that the situation was so grave that it warranted extreme measures. It was unknown at the time and unknown for some months thereafter just what the extent of the calamity was, and furthermore it was difficult for the government, and certainly most difficult for the house, to judge of what measures might be necessary to deal with the situation. I shall not go into any laboured argument in regard to that point other than to attempt to focus the attention of the house for a moment upon the extreme difficulties with which the government was confronted.

It is true that at that time an appropriation might have been voted, and it was very largely the burden of the complaint of some hon. members that that was not done, but I invite hon. gentlemen to consider this, that when an appropriation is passed the purpose for which it is to be used must be specified, and the Auditor General and other officers of the crown in scrutinizing expenditures under such an appropriation always keep the government very closely to the purpose specified in such a vote. Now under the conditions obtaining a year ago it was quite impossible to determine what the requirements might be. Some question arose as to the amount, and I recall particularly that the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) and other hon. members opposite intimated that if it was the desire of the government to secure $100,000,000 the house was willing to grant it. At the same time, had it gone forth to the country that $100,000,000 or $150,000,000 had been voted for the purpose of unemployment and farm relief it is easy to visualize the effect which that might have had upon the public. There is always a tendency when it is indicated that there is available a large sum of money to feel that such a sum must be expended. The object which the government had in view was to do justice to the situation and at the same time to keep the expenditure to the lowest possible amount, and the government in its wisdom thought that the proposal which was submitted to the house a year ago was the most wise one to suggest. It is true that there were difficulties and objections, but after all the representatives of the people in parliament assembled passed the bill and clothed the government with those powers. I quite agree that in giving the government, as the house did on that occasion, a blank cheque, as it has been described, it at the same time laid upon the shoulders of the ministry very grave responsibilities in the discharge of their duties under that act.

The government carried on under that act until March 1 last. Now we come before parliament and say this: We carried on under that act until March 1 last, and we lay before parliament the result of our administration of the act. We have certain commitments which have been made under the act; that is, agreements have been entered into with each of the provinces and various works of a different character are being carried on by the provinces with the aid of the dominion, and we ask for an extension of the act for two months, because the difficulties which then confronted the country have not been surmounted and further relief is required. So we are asking in this resolution for an extension of the powers conferred in that act.

Our hon. friends opposite and those who are critical of this course at the present time attack the government, very largely, if not solely, on the ground of the constitutionality of the government's course. But I draw this in particular to the attention of the house, that no serious challenge has been made of the manner in which the government has discharged its duty in the administration of this act.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh.

Mr. STEVENS: I submit that with confidence, and a perusal of the utterances of even the most bitter critics of the government will not disclose, I repeat, any serious challenge of the manner in which the government has discharged its duty under the act.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friend from Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) the other day made—shall I say?—a very powerful speech weighted with keen legal argument about the constitutionality of the resolution, and he brought to bear upon the subject all of that ability and keenness of intellect for which he is noted. His speech was somewhat cynical, I will admit, but during the whole course of it he cited only two or three instances such as that in one case a man with a bank account had obtained relief. He cited a few other instances of that kind. Under the conditions that obtain to-day there is no doubt whatever that many individuals, as was stated very clearly the other evening by the hon. member for Melville (Mr. Motherwell) who were not actually in dire need did secure relief under the act, but this government in conjunction with the various provincial governments and municipal authorities has sought, so far as it is humanly possible to do so, to weed out any such individuals, eliminate any unjust claims and overcome any abuses of that character. That there have been such instances is I think beyond question. I myself have heard of just such instances, and have drawn them to the attention of the authorities administering the act, with the result that very definite steps were taken to correct such abuses, but I repeat, my hon. friend from Shelburne-Yarmouth did not during the whole of his speech point to any serious fault on the part of the government in the administration of this act, other than to make the constitutional argument which he brought forward and which I think has been characterized by hon. gentlemen opposite as a very cherished doctrine of the Liberal party.

Mr. RALSTON: If my hon. friend will permit me—I am not going over my speech—but I did point out two things which perhaps escaped his attention. One was that only three days' work out of every month had been provided for those whom it was supposed the act was to benefit; and the other was that $146,000,000 had been spent and at the most only $44,000,000 worth of employment provided.

Mr. STEVENS: I did not intend, and I do not wish to be drawn into an analysis of that part of my hon. friend's speech.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. STEVENS: I will dispose of it, however, in two or three sentences. In the first place, my hon. friend has placed upon Hansard and upon the front pages of the newspapers that there was $146,000,000 spent, in which was included the amount spent by this government and the amounts spent by the provincial and municipal authorities, plus a very large sum of money spent in the normal way by the railways at the instigation of the provinces and the dominion to help the situation. He lumped all of those sums into one composite sum of $146,000,000.

Mr. RALSTON: No, I divided it.

Mr. STEVENS: Then he divided it by a rather astute method of mathematics into the number of work days supplied, and indicated that the results were not very satisfactory. But in all fairness he and others must recognize this, that we do not say that we gave three hundred thousand odd individuals work during the whole of last year. That was not the object of the legislation at all. The object of the legislation was to give relief where it was needed. Undoubtedly some individuals secured relief for a few days or weeks at odd times, and at other times were able to look after themselves. For instance, in the city of Toronto, as well as in other cities—I am using Toronto as an illustration—during this current winter and the winter of a year ago what is known as the man-a-block scheme was inaugurated whereby residents, local citizens, would undertake to care for the needs of a family in a particular block. Thereby many individuals who received temporary relief under this act were taken out from under the requirements of the act and given relief in other ways.

The hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) charged in a very unctuous manner that the Prime Minister was a despot and a dictator, and those observations have been echoed by others who have spoken on this subject. I pause to say only a word or two in that connection. There is no man in this country more jealous of the constitutional rights of its citizens, or of parliament, than is the Prime Minister of Canada. However, any and all government leaders must secure from parliament powers which perhaps at times may have the nature of dictatorship, if one chooses to use that term. I call the house to witness this, that the Prime Minister came to parliament, made his proposals and was clothed by it with certain powers. The only question which remains for parliament is not whether the action of a year ago was right or wrong but rather: What has the government done with the powers with which it was clothed? In so far as there has been any challenge of the action of the government, such criticism is perfectly legitimate. We are prepared to meet it, and prepared to listen to such criticism.

The situation which confronted the government was this: Undoubtedly there was a national emergency, the nature of which a year ago it was impossible to define in precise terms. Indeed, in any such emergency there are bound to be conditions which cannot possibly be foreseen, and yet it is of prime importance that such conditions should be met when they arise. Therefore, I say a year ago the government was faced with a national emergency due largely to two causes, namely unemployment and crop failure. So far as unemployment is concerned, we simply came to the support of the provinces. It has been reiterated time and time again that the duty of looking after civic welfare of the citizens of this country rests primarily upon the municipalities and provinces. Recognizing however that conditions were most unusual the federal government came to parliament and said, "We believe it is necessary for us to supplement the actions of the provinces and municipalities, and we are asking parliament to clothe us with power so to do." We received that power, and have carried out our obligations as made under agreements with the provinces. The result of our actions was laid upon the table a few days ago as contained in the report by the Minister of Labour.

The second difficulty with which we had to deal was the crop failure in the west. After giving careful thought to conditions in the west the government undertook the whole cost of relief. We considered that particular aid was in the nature of a national undertaking, and as a result we have spent millions of dollars giving relief to western districts. I listened very carefully to that characteristically entertaining speech with which the hon. member for Melville (Mr. Motherwell) regaled the house. We are always pleased to listen to the hon. member, because his remarks come as a relief from the more studious and serious matters of parliament. I call the attention of the house to the fact that the hon. member, who is not usually inclined to give any credit to hon. members on this side of the house, said in his remarks that on the whole the relief work in the province of Saskatchewan, about which he was then speaking, was well done. Of course, he did have criticism of some of the individuals who were directing the relief, and in that connection he drew attention of hon. members to the fact that certain Liberals were among the personnel. He explained that fact by saying that the government put those Liberals there as goats, to use his own characteristic language. I assure the hon. member and all other hon. members of the house that we had no desire, no wish or intention to place those gentlemen in any such undignified position. The fact remains that the commission in Saskatchewan, a body of citizens with a sense of public duty, have discharged with credit to themselves and to the country, one of the most difficult tasks with which any group of men were ever confronted.

We now come to certain criticisms of the government in connection with orders in council passed under the act. The allegation has been made by hon. members opposite that this legislation is autocratic, that it is unconstitutional, and deprives parliament of its inherent rights to control the administration of affairs. Listening to such arguments one would think that the government had committed some heinous offence under the guise, shall I say, of the administration of this act. Let us see what happened. Four orders in council were cited, to which very briefly I shall refer. In his remarks the other day the hon. member for Quebec East dealt with those orders in council. One was passed whereby the federal government guaranteed certain advances made to the pools. Were we right or wrong? Was that an action for which we should be condemned, or was it one calculated to assist the general welfare of the community affected? Was it a proper act? Was it a wrong act? We have not been challenged in regard to the advisability of giving that help. No one has said that the government did wrong, but some have said that the order in council should not have been passed. How else could we have acted? Under what other statute could the guarantee have been made? Hon. members have not shown how the emergency could have been met in any way other than the way it was met. The question I ask hon. members opposite, the house and country is this: Was the government of Canada justified in passing that order in council to assist the pools of Canada? What was the effect of it? Let me put it another way: Had we not taken action, what would have been the effect? Hon. members from western Canada whom I now see sitting opposite know perfectly well that had the Dominion government not given some support to the pools at that time, our lack of action would have had a very serious effect upon the marketing of last year's crop. Up to the present time has the country lost a dollar through its relief to the pools? Is it likely to lose any money? The answer is no; the answer is that Canada, through the action of its government, is not likely to lose a single dollar. On the other hand it is fair to assert that the action of the government steadied the situation and saved to western Canada the integrity of the pools, preventing them being thrown into chaotic liquidation at a time when there was civic grief throughout the country. Again I say there is no challenge as to the wisdom of the action of the government; the only quibble is whether it should be done under this act, and they offer us no suggestion as to any other way in which it could have been done. I ask you to tell me what hon. gentlemen opposite would have done under similar circumstances.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Pass an act of parliament.

Mr. STEVENS: Parliament was not sitting.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes. It was done to redeem a pledge given by the government to the banks prior to the session of parliament.

Mr. STEVENS: When the order in council was passed parliament was not sitting.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Surely it had been sitting before.

Mr. STEVENS: No, it was not. Now I turn to another order in council prohibiting the export of gold. Was there an hon. member in this house who foresaw the possibility of Great Britain going off the gold standard late in September? No one had it in mind, no one suggested it, not even the leading economists and students of world affairs suggested the possibility. Canada was faced with an emergency, with a condition which called for immediate action. What action did we take? Under the powers of this act we passed an order in council prohibiting the free export of gold. In other words, we simply said this: Anyone desiring to export gold shall first obtain a licence from the Minister of Finance. The government in the best interests of the country took power to control the export of gold, and its export by the banks was allowed on licence from the Minister of Finance. Now I ask: Did we do wrong or did we do right? Was it in the best interests of the country to take that position, or was is not? Has the country suffered any injury as a result of the action then taken by the government? Can any hon. member say that a single constituent of his suffered any real injury as compared with the welfare of the country at large by the action of the government in that respect? I think the answer must be no, that there was no injury suffered, that it was an action which ought to have been taken and which was properly taken. And again I say it could not have been taken except under the powers given the government by this act.

Now, I turn to the insurance companies. The country was confronted with the possibility of the serious impairment of the interests of insurance companies generally—by the way, a very similar problem arose in the United States—and under the powers given to the government by this act an order in council was passed fixing June 30 as the date at which securities held by insurance companies should be valued. Again I ask: Was that an action in the interests of the general stabilization of the conditions of the country, or was it not? Was it wise and advisable, or was it unwise and inadvisable? I think in this case as in the other cases the answer is that it was a wise act on the part of the government and well taken in the general interests of the country. The same thing applies to the action taken by the government with respect to bank securities. The action was taken in order to steady financial conditions and to prevent an unreasoned attack upon these great financial institutions. Such an attack, I believe, would have resulted in financial chaos in this country had the government not taken the action it did.

So, Mr. Speaker, we have these actions on the part of the government which I am certain were all taken in the national interest. There is one other order in council, and it has been cited as evidence of the autocracy of the government. It is said there was an increase in the numbers of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. What are the facts? Two hundred men were added to the force. Under legislation previously passed by this parliament and by two of the provinces the federal government was asked to take over the policing of those provinces, Alberta and Manitoba, and I think a third province has made a similar request. Was the action taken by the government in this instance necessary or was it unnecessary? Was it wise or was it unwise? Should the government be condemned for doing it? If so, why? Not a word has been said to elucidate that problem, only the general sweeping condemnation that the government has done something autocratic under this act.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think I have reviewed the various actions of the government which might be termed as abnormal actions under the terms of this act.

Mr. GARDINER: What is the date of the order in council increasing the number of the mounted police?

Mr. STEVENS: I think it was in December.

Mr. GARDINER: That is before negotiations were opened with Alberta.

Mr. STEVENS: I do not think so, although I have not the precise dates. Just at present we must prepare to take over the policing of the provinces; we cannot wait until the thing is all over. And the same remarks apply to two other provinces whose governments have suggested that we should take over the policing. But the point I am seeking to impress upon the house is that the government is challenged at the present time on the constitutionality of this act, and it is urged that by giving the government these unusual powers there is danger of their being abused. What hon. members opposite ought to be searchingly inquiring into is this: Having clothed the government with these powers some nine months ago, has this government improperly used those powers, has it abused them, has it taken any undue advantage of its authority, have any citizens suffered because of any action by the government under this act? The answer in every case is no. On the contrary, in every instance the action taken by the government under these special powers resulted in some marked benefit to large sections of the country.

I do not intend, Mr. Speaker, to labour the point. We are asking the house to extend this legislation until the first of May. There are commitments—when I say commitments, I mean there are works and so forth under way at the present time in conjunction with the provinces that ought to be carried forward: there is the question of seed grain; there is the question of continued relief until the spring months at least to the stricken area in the west; there is the question of unemployment relief in the great urban centres where in some instances certain works are now going on. I have in mind those municipalities where they have been unable to complete the work they have had under way for relief purposes because of climatic conditions, where only part of the money which was allocated has been spent, and only part of the work which was started has been carried out. They are entitled to complete those works, because unfortunately the condition of unemployment is still present. We are asking the house, therefore, to continue the powers granted to us last year until the first of May in order to give reasonable opportunity to complete those undertakings.

With due deference to my hon, friends opposite I think during the past week or ten days there has been altogether too much time spent on the constitutional side of this matter. That question was decided a year ago.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. STEVENS: Decidedly. Let me put this to my hon. friends opposite: They were not satisfied, that is true, but after all, this house consists of that side and this side.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No, no. Parliament consists of that side now.

Mr. STEVENS: Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, I am learning something new about parliament. I always thought that this house consisted of all sides.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friends opposite say no. I do my hon. friend from West Edmonton (Mr. Stewart) this courtesy at least—I recognize him as an integral part of this parliament. True, he did not consent to the passing of this act last session; but the validity of a statute is not based upon the unanimous consent of the house. It is true my hon. friend spoke against the bill a year ago, but parliament as such,—this house and the other house—passed the bill and it became law.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I ask my hon. friend this question: Was not the bill that parliament passed last session for the express purpose of giving the government power to act while parliament was not in session; and is not the present bill intended to give the government power to act while parliament is in session?

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friend is quite entitled to that view, but we are here now before parliament; I am giving the reasons why we are here, and justifying the course of the government under this act during the past year. I say to parliament that because of the course pursued by the government and because of the absence of anything in the nature of abuses such as are indicated as being feared by hon. gentlemen opposite, the house is justified in extending this power until May 1, and that is all there is to it.

Let me remind the house that there was not an hon. member opposite, and for that matter there was no one in this country, who could have stated exactly what would be the requirements during the past year; it was a physical impossibility to do so. No one could have done it, and if the government had not possessed some power of this kind it could not have met the emergencies which arose. The government does not propose that any unreasonable advantage shall be taken in connection with this bill; it does not intend that it shall be improperly used. The government simply desires that the general powers of the act may be used to meet the emergent conditions which arise from time to time.

It is not my intention, Mr. Speaker, to speak at greater length on this subject, but I do feel that the house should not weigh this matter with the view of raising once again an obscure constitutional question such as was successfully raised by my right hon. friend in 1926. I do not wish to be unkind to the right hon. gentleman, but as I listen to his unctuous declamations every day, I sometimes wonder if it is not his desire to stir up in the minds of the people a suspicion that some terrible inroads are being made on the constitutional rights of the ordinary people.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: But my hon. friend does not distinguish between obscure issues and fundamental issues. These are fundamental issues.

Mr. STEVENS: I am reminded that at the moment the fundamental issue here is the relief of the people and the bettering of conditions with which we are confronted to-day.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: And I might add the immediate relief, which can be given at once if the government will bring in a supply bill this afternoon.

Mr. STEVENS: No one knows better than the right hon. gentleman, and a certain number of those sitting around him who have had experience in administration, the difficulty of administering the affairs of a government, with conditions as they are to-day, under a specific appropriation of parliament.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friends may pooh-pooh the idea, but the fact remains. I have already cited a number of cases that could not have been dealt with under any appropriation which might have been made last year. So I say, Mr. Speaker, that in this resolution there is no invasion of the public interest or the public right; on the other hand power is given to safeguard those rights, and I contend that last year, under this bill, the government was not guilty of any departure from regular constitutional procedure.

Mr. VALLANCE: Did I understand the minister to say that it was due to the fact that this bill was being held up that the farmers were not now receiving seed grain? I ask that because a press despatch was drawn to my attention yesterday stating that on and after to-day the farmers will receive that seed grain.

Mr. STEVENS: I think the answer to that question is very simple. Seed grain relief is being directed by the provinces. Should this bill not pass and should the government not be clothed with the powers sought, the provinces will have to bear the burden alone, without the assistance of this government.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No; the government can bring in a proper supply bill.

Mr. DONNELLY: Does the minister say the seed has not been bought?

Mr. STEVENS: The seed is being purchased by the provincial authorities.

Mr. G. W. McPHEE (Yorkton): Mr. Speaker, the more I consider the resolution which is the subject matter of this debate the more I am impressed with the great travesty on responsible government which it contemplates. My hon. friend (Mr. Stevens) to whom I have listened with a great deal of pleasure for the last half hour, has not helped me very much; he has simply stated that the government is carrying into effect, as he said, the autocratic powers which it has been able to exercise because last year we passed the unemployment relief act. That bill is now dead; the resolution now before the house seeks to breathe life into that dead body, and so the whole question is opened up again.

A hundred years ago, Mr. Speaker, those who laid the foundations of this great country had to fight against the old Tory Family Compact of that day, and after eventual bloodshed they secured for themselves and those who were to follow responsible government for Canada. No matter how distasteful it may be to hon. gentlemen opposite, it is a source of pride to us of the Liberal faith that on this side of the house we have two grandsons of the old rebels, Mackenzie and Papineau, in the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) and the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa).

The rights so dearly bought for us should not be lightly given up. In those days the Family Compact, in their efforts to keep for themselves the power they then possessed, used methods somewhat akin to those adopted by the present government. For instance, every student of history knows that in Halifax they took the printing press belonging to one of the Reformers and dumped it into Halifax harbour, and they took the printing press of another Reformer in central Canada and threw it into lake Ontario. If that were done in these days I presume it would be said it was done for the peace, order and good government of Canada. But, Mr. Speaker, the actions of the old Tory Family Compact pale into insignificance when we consider the actions of the present government, autocratically demanding the rights that should be exercised only by the elected representatives of the people. This is the fundamental issue as far as I am concerned, and I submit that every hon. member of this house stands upon an equal footing. Each one of us has the right to say whether or not money shall be voted for this or for that and how it shall be spent. Let the right hon. gentleman follow the advice given to him by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) and bring in a money bill for whatever amount is necessary. If that is done we on this side will guarantee that in half an hour the money will be voted in the way in which it should be voted by a representative parliament.

The whole question of unemployment and farm relief now is opened up. Let us consider what it all means. At the best this measure cannot be even a palliative because it leaves the victim in a worse condition than he was before. Hon. gentlemen opposite say that they have not received any constructive criticism from this side of the house, but I offer one bit of constructive criticism—let this government get off the backs of the agriculturists of Canada. That would do more to relieve unemployment than anything else.

The prosperity of this country depends upon the prosperity of the primary producers, and the agriculturists are the greatest body of primary producers in this country. What is the true condition in which we find agriculture to-day as a result of eighteen months of the sort of government we have had in this country? The following figures giving the prices received by the producer are rather startling:

	Cents
Wheat (per bushel)	46
Oats (per bushel)	18
Rye (per bushel)	25
Barley (per bushel)	26
Butter (per pound)	20
Eggs (per dozen)	15
Pork (per pound)	3
Beef (per pound)	3½

Mr. COWAN (Long Lake): Oh, oh.

Mr. McPHEE: Do I hear the hon. member for Long Lake (Mr. Cowan) cackling?

The price received by the producers for beef is only 3½ cents per pound. How can the farmers of Canada exist with prices such as these? The other day the Prime Minister referred to seventy-six municipalities which had been drouth stricken in Saskatchewan but even had there been no drouth the condition of the farmer in western Canada would have been very bad. The fact is that he cannot sell at a price which will return anything like the costs of production. As I said before, the best form of relief, as far as western Canada is concerned, would be for the government to get off the backs of the farmers.

There are no markets in which the farmer can sell his products. Belgium was a country with which we had a great deal of trade before this government came into office, and in order to emphasize the statement I have just made I shall read an extract from a newspaper in Brussels which is close to the government of that country. This article was published in January, 1931, shortly after the Imperial conference, and reads:

Just previous to his departure for the Imperial conference in London, Mr. Bennett brought down in the Canadian house a bill dealing with the tariff. The tariff changes which were immediately put into force were adopted by the Canadian parliament. It is of some interest to Belgium whose exchanges with Canada have favourably developed in the course of these last years, to examine the situation and to bring out somewhat the point.

The first truth which appears in consulting statistics with reference to commerce, is that the balance of trade is greatly in favour of Canada.

We learn, moreover, that Belgium is, with the exception of Great Britain, its best European customer in the purchasing of wheat, oats and barley, and ranks second or third of all Canada's clients in the purchasing of these products; that it absorbs almost the total Canadian output of zinc ore and the greater portion of that of asbestos.

The balance of trade between the two countries, already greatly against Belgium, will certainly again be accentuated by this last measure.

Belgium can therefore not remain indifferent to Mr. Bennett's projected legislation of a distinctly protective character, and making for a complete revision of the Canadian customs tariff. It surely would be hardly conceivable that she should continue to be one of the best customers of a country which deliberately closes its doors to her products.

To counteract the Russian dumping, the government took the necessary protective measures which the situation demanded. Without there being any need of having recourse to such methods in the case of Canada, Belgium could very well abstain, in the future, from making her purchases in that country. Canada is not the only country which produces wheat, oats, barley, asbestos and zinc ore. There is no reason why Belgium should not supply herself with these articles on markets which are more friendly to her productions.

Not only did Belgium act in that manner but thirty countries did likewise. As a result of the tariff manipulations and tariff juggling of this government, thirty countries retaliated against Canada with disastrous results as far as the farmers of Canada are concerned.

Mr. BENNETT: Does the hon. gentleman realize that these so-called retaliations were against all other countries including Canada? Before this government came into power every country in the world but one had increased its tariffs against all countries.

Mr. McPHEE: The information which I am about to give the house was gleaned from The Commercial Intelligence Journal, a publication of the present government. Here is what it said a few months ago with regard to this action:

The countries which adopted unfriendly attitudes were Esthonia, Siam, Poland, South Africa, Germany, New Zealand, Mexico, Czechoslovakia, Bahamas, Italy, France, Argentine, Cuba, St. Vincent, St. Lucia, Colombia, India, Norway, China, Bolivia, Denmark, Uruguay, Greece, Switzerland, Belgium, United States, Netherlands, Jugoslavia, Sweden, Irish Free State.

These countries retaliated against Canada with disastrous results to our producers.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman states he obtained his information from the official record, but that record shows that these countries enacted tariff legislation against Canada as well as all other countries. It was tariff legislation affecting imports; it affected Canada as well as other countries, it was not a case of retaliating against Canada alone.

Mr. McPHEE: That does not lessen the effect of my statement that they retaliated against Canada. These countries having retaliated against Canada, I presume it is the duty of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) to find other places with which we can trade. In common with other hon. members I found a pamphlet in my letter box this morning. This is an official publication of the Department of Trade and Commerce, presided over by the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) and deals with the Falkland islands. It gives a short history of the islands, stating that they were first settled by the French, then by the Spanish and afterwards taken over by the British. The nationality of the occupants is now given as Scotch, and they total 3,378. The article states that the vocation of these people is sheep farming and whaling. I do not know what trade there could be between Canada and the Falkland islands. My hon. friend would not permit sheep to be brought into this country and I do not know about whales and their products. While the Canadian people will no doubt thank my hon. friend for the information regarding the geography and history of the islands, the striking point is the last sentence in the pamphlet where he says:

Canada has no direct trade with the Falkland islands.

And Canada has not very much trade with other countries of the world, and if the present government is permitted to occupy the treasury benches much longer, that trade will dwindle down to practically nothing.

What is the result of this tariff manipulation and juggling? The figures for the total trade of Canada, according to the return, are as follows:

Fiscal year	Total trade of Canada
1929-30	$2,392,000,000
1930-31	1,723,000,000

That shows a decrease between the two years of $670,000,000. These figures tell the story. What do they prove? The following are the prices of various commodities in the west:

Commodity—	March, 1928 cents per lb.	March, 1932 cents per lb.
Butter fat	41	16

Mr. GOBEIL: That is not true.

Mr. McPHEE: It is true in western Canada.

	March, 1928 cents per lb	March, 1932 cents per lb.
Butter	42	15
	March, 1930 cents per lb.	March, 1932 cents per lb.
Pork	13	3
	cents per doz.	cents per doz.
Eggs	25	15

[Mr. McPhee.]

Some hon. MEMBERS: Where?

Mr. McPHEE: I am giving the figures for western Canada:

Beef: 13 cents per pound; 3½ cents per pound.

These figures tell the story of agricultural depression and the remedy is not the dole, but trade. Let us open up the channels of trade and prosperity will come back to the primary producers in the first place, the agriculturists. A week or ten days ago I had the pleasure, with other members of the House of Commons as guests of the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett), to meet the Right Hon. Winston Churchill. It has been my good fortune to read most of the writings of Winston Churchill and most of his speeches. As a matter of practice I have memorized the striking passages in Mr. Churchill's writings as well as in those of others. There are in Winston Churchill's writings many such passages that would help my hon. friends across the floor. This one comes to my mind. It is contained in an address delivered by him to the people of Manchester not many years ago. True, it was before he became a political apostate. This is an extract from the address and I commend the words to the leader of the government because he referred to Mr. Churchill as one of the leading statesmen of the day. These words were addressed to the people of Manchester:

Why did you build your ship canal? Why did you spend fifteen millions in bringing the sea to touch the inland docks of your great city? Was it to block its mouth with the sand banks of obstructive tariffs or to choke its fairway with the stake nets of protection?

I will commend these words to the right hon. leader of the government.

Mr. COWAN (Long Lake): What does he say now?

Mr. McPHEE: My hon. friend asks: What does he say now? It sometimes happens men who are brought up properly in a political faith, later on in life for some reason best known to themselves, forsake the political god of their early days and go over to the Tory camp. Sometimes I am sure our Tory friends are glad of the acquisition to their ranks.

These figures which I have just given relative to the prices of farm products in Canada, bring my mind back to the election campaign of 1930. For the purposes of the record let me put on Hansard the promises of the leader of the government in connection with that campaign.

An hon. MEMBER: Give us something new.

Mr. McPHEE: An hon. member opposite says: Give us something new. These gems of the Prime Minister were ambrosia to my hon. friends' nostrils in 1930, and it is no fault of mine if they are effluvia to-day.

In Winnipeg, on June 8, 1930, the leader of the government (Mr. Bennett) used these words:

> Listen you agriculturists from the west and all the other parts of Canada—you who have been taught to mock at tariffs and applaud free trade—tell me, when did free trade fight for you? Tell me, when did free trade fight for you. You say tariffs are only for the manufacturers. I will make them fight for you as well. I will use them to blast a way into the markets that have been closed to you.

Speaking at Vancouver on June 18, 1930, he said:

> If Mr. Mackenzie King thinks I will not so build up our agricultural and industrial life that its strength will drive our products into the markets of the world, then he is wrong, for that I will do. If he thinks I will not establish new markets for these products, strive with all my heart to retain them, drive our products with all my power into new markets, into old markets, into reluctant markets, he is wrong. For that I will do.

In order to complete the picture all he needed to have said further was: "Come, unto me all ye that labour and are heavy laden and I will give you rest." In effect that is what he said and yet in the month of September, following the election, we had a special session of parliament at which the sum of $20,000,000 was voted for unemployment relief. Last year at the regular session of parliament the government received a blank cheque to spend whatever money they wished, and yet, after all this, unemployment in Canada has doubled in the last eighteen months. And then a few days ago we had the spectacle of a few hundred people who took the Prime Minister at his word in 1930 parading to these parliament buildings, the deliberative assembly of the people, and these same poor people who took the Prime Minister at his word in 1930 were met at the gates by men armed to the teeth. It was that kind of political enchantment that won the election for my right hon. friend in 1930. Never did fabled enchantress lure her unsuspecting victims with such effect as did my right hon. friend at that time. It was that kind of political effervescence which placed the primary producers of Canada, the agriculturists, the lumbermen, the fishermen, and the miners, in the hopeless position in which they find themselves to-day. I remember one cartoon which was put out by the Conservative party during the campaign. It showed a Canadian wheat field with Jack Canuck standing in the centre and with the then Prime Minister, now the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) standing to one side. Jack Canuck was saying to him: "What are you going to do with my wheat?"

Mr. ROWE: What did he do with it?

Mr. McPHEE: I will tell my hon. friend. At that time wheat was selling at $1.10 per bushel. One year later it was selling at 69 cents, and to-day it is selling at 46 cents per bushel. How about the new markets? How about the old markets and the reluctant markets?

I come to the matter of dairy products. Oh, the protective tariff so far as the dairymen of this country were concerned was going to be as a well of water to the thirsty soil. It was going to make the prairie provinces and the eastern townships of Quebec blossom as the vale of Sharon. I remember well that during the election campaign my opponent happened to be the manager of a creamery company, and he was supposed to know all about butter. If he had got into power with the right hon. gentleman he was going to smite the New Zealand treaty hip and thigh. So assiduously did the Conservative party carry on their propaganda against New Zealand butter and spread the doctrine of protection as a cure-all for the troubles of the dairymen, there were some even in my district who thought that the poor old female of the bovine species became influenced by it. I remember very well, Mr. Speaker, on the evening of the 28th of July, 1930, wending my way through the pleasing and pleasant countryside of the Yorkton district back to the city of Yorkton, there to learn the result of the battle of the ballots. I remember seeing many an old cow coming home a little earlier in the evening than usual to be milked, going by herself to the milking stool, lowing almost with tears in her eyes as she anticipated the increased reward for her labour when on the morning of the 29th of July, the buttermilk crew would be in charge of the ship of state of the Canadian nation. But oh, the great disillusionment, not only for the poor female of the bovine species but for the dairymen of Canada and for the business interests of this country. New Zealand retaliated with disastrous results so far as the industrialists of this country are concerned. No wonder that the farmers of Canada are now in dire need and require relief. It is because of the tariff juggling and manipulation of this government, and again I plead with my right hon. friend in all sincerity to get off the backs of the farmers of this country, and then prosperity will come to them.

I must hurry on as my time is almost up. I have here a voucher sent to me by a farmer in my district who lives fifteen miles from the city of Yorkton. He killed four steers and brought their hides to market, one hundred and sixty-eight pounds of hides. The best price he could get for these hides was one and a half cents per pound, and he could not even get cash for that. Here is the voucher, and I place these facts in all sincerity before my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir). The credit side of the voucher shows 168 pounds of hides at 1½ cents per pound, $2.52; the debit side shows one pair of rubbers, $1.00; overalls $1.25; tobacco, 25 cents; credit, 2 cents. And yet the Minister of Agriculutre states that mixed farming is the hope of the west.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Would my hon. friend mind giving any authority at all for that statement?

Mr. McPHEE: Does my hon. friend deny that he made the statement?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I never made the statement.

Mr. McPHEE: I wish to be fair. I find this in the Winnipeg Tribune and also in the Ottawa Journal:

Toronto, February 1.—Mixed farming west's hope, claims Weir.

My hon. friend has a very efficient secretary, and if he has not brought this to the attention of the minister, I will pass the clipping over to him as I have not time to read it now, and then to-morrow he can deny it if he wishes.

Hon. gentlemen opposite now as ever claim that the present hard times have been brought about by influences other than those arising from the actions of this government. A few days ago I was going through Hansard to read the budget speeches of the various Ministers of Finance during the past fifteen or twenty years. Here is one striking passage from the benediction pronounced by Sir Henry Drayton, Minister of Finance in the government of the Right Hon. Arthur Meighen, and delivered after ten years of Conservative government in Canada under Sir Robert Borden and the Right Hon. Mr. Meighen. In the last budget speech delivered by a Conservative Minister of Finance previous to 1921, Sir Henry Drayton paints this picture in his peroration of May 9, 1921.

The world is sadly out of tune. May we help in restoring harmony. Trust and confidence are sadly lacking. Class interests are advanced with selfish insistence. Unemployment is with us. Faith in our fellowmen is weakened. Doubt of the future is often voiced.

[Mr. McPhee.]

Those words, Mr. Speaker, are applicable to the present day. But listen. The next two lines are gems:

The sun still shines, the rivers still sparkle, our lands are as great and fruitful as ever—our resources just as vast.

Thank Heaven, Mr. Speaker, that the sun still shines and that the rivers still sparkle on their way to the sea. Thank Heaven that this government, and especially the right hon. gentleman who leads it, has nothing to do with the shining of the sun, because if he had, and he used the same mad-bull-in-a-china-shop methods with regard to things celestial as he does with respect to trade terrestrial there would be chaos in the firmament and darkness would be over the land.

My parting word, Mr. Speaker, as an elected representative in this house would be this: Let the government get off the backs of the farmers of Canada; let them get away from the stifling of trade, and then this great country will take its place among the nations of the earth that God Almighty intended it should take, by virtue of the almost illimitable natural resources that have been placed at our disposal.

Mr. ONESIME GAGNON (Dorchester): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the speech made by the hon. member for Yorkton (Mr. McPhee), but I fail to see any connecting link between the legislation now before the house and butter or wheat. The hon. member has intimated that butter had something to do with our coming into power. That may be. I say however that the bread we are now giving to the poor through the legislation before the house will keep us in power.

I have listened with care to the speeches made by my hon. friends opposite, and I regret to say I have not been struck by their extreme moderation. This debate has lasted more than a week, and I am sorry to note that many hon. members have indulged in personal attacks against the leader of the government. May I, Mr. Speaker, pass in review some of the very pleasant compliments paid by hon. members opposite to the right hon. Prime Minister and his colleagues. The hon. member for Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) has referred to monkeys, and the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) and ten or eleven of his followers have referred to the regime of the French revolution and have called our leader a despot and an autocrat. Last but not least the hon. member for Melville (Mr. Motherwell) called us collie dogs. After listening to such convincing arguments I am sure you sir, will be struck by the soundness of the constitutional doctrines propounded by hon. members opposite. I would certainly be surprised if you, sir, were not moved by their logic and consistency expressed in such glowing terms of admiration.

Having listened to them I cannot but remember that the depression we are passing through has shaken the whole world. In all countries political parties are confronted with a similar situation but they take different views as to the different questions at issue. In Great Britain I understand a by-election is being held in the county of Dumbartonshire, and on Saturday morning last the papers reported that Premier MacDonald had sent a letter to his standard bearer in which he said:

> Return to-day to partisan politics would shatter the foundations of confidence at home and abroad on which all the national services must rest.

These are the views of a real statesman. Everywhere in the overseas dominions, in Australia, in New Zealand political parties are trying to cooperate in order to achieve a return to prosperity and the end of unemployment. In the Free State of Ireland the elections are over and we hear with pleasure that Mr. Cosgrave is extending a friendly hand to Mr. De Valera. Should a foreigner visit Canada certainly he would be led to believe after reading the speeches of hon. members opposite, that an entirely different situation prevails here. He would be led to believe that here in Canada constitutional liberties are being crushed by the Conservative party; he would be led to believe that the people are oppressed, that the leaders of the opposition have been muzzled and representatives of the press imprisoned.

Why such violence of language, why such a display of literary indignation? Have the banks closed their doors? Has the Liberal party in Quebec repealed the famous Dillon bill and let the sixty election contestations be argued on their merits before the courts? Has the government refused to relieve the unemployed? Has the constitution been suspended? No, Mr. Speaker; no such unprecedented or unforeseen events have taken place. The government of the day, to comply with the numerous petitions they have received from all over Canada, has decided to give two months' further time to the municipalities and provinces to carry to completion their works of relief. That is the purport of the legislation this party is desirous to put through parliament; nothing else.

May I read the resolution?

> Resolved that it is expedient to introduce a bill to amend chapter 58 of the statutes of Canada 1931, striking out the word "March" in section 8, and substituting the word "May" therefor.

That is all. That resolution is being moved to give bread to the needy and comfort them during the last days of winter. The other day the hon. members for Lake St. John (Mr. Duguay) and Champlain (Mr. Baribeau) told of petitions they had received from their constituents. I received a similar petition from the city of Levis, one from the city of Riviere du Loup in the constituency of my hon. friend from Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot), and a telegram from Colonel Lavigueur, the mayor of Quebec, who was a distinguished member of this house, asking for an interview with the Prime Minister tomorrow morning to submit a similar petition with regard to the unemployed.

May I pass in review some events of the past with respect to unemployment? During the session of 1930 this parliament voted $20,000,000 for the relief of the unemployed. The critics on the opposition benches, in no mild terms, stated that that amount was not sufficient. During the session of 1931 hon. members opposite, especially the hon. members for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Heenan) and Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) censured the government for doing nothing at all. Finally, realizing the situation was becoming worse and worse in Canada on account of the disastrous crop failures in Saskatchewan, and that conditions were tantamount to a national calamity, the government presented the bill from which came the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act of 1931 authorizing parliament to meet the emergency, and providing adequate measures to meet the lamentable situation the equal of which no parliament in the history of Canada had before to meet. Many hon. members to the extreme left of Mr. Speaker expressed their willingness to vote for the bill. It appears however that followers of the leader of the opposition had not yet emerged from the valley of humiliation and unfortunately for themselves expressed their willingness to vote against the measure.

But, Mr. Speaker, a by-election was to be held in the constituency of Three Rivers-St. Maurice, and general provincial elections were imminent in the province of Quebec. It was decided therefore by hon. gentlemen opposite to strike a great blow. Their legal advisers were hastily summoned, and after many hours of desperate juggling with constitutional precedents, they decided to resort to the old cry, "Let us save the constitution." The cry of conscription was stale, so they had to resort to the cry, "Let us save the constitution."

For days, Mr. Speaker, this government has been assaulted and, by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) the Conservative leader has been compared with Lenin, while another eminent hon. member has compared him with Mussolini. Finally, however, at the last session of parliament, the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act of 1931 became law because it was necessary in the public interest as the only means to face the emergency. When it was adopted the election was in full swing in Three Rivers-St. Maurice, and the Liberal party decided to lead the attack on the government on that very question. The hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) and the hon. member for St. James (Mr. Rinfret) went there and denounced the so-called "blank cheque" legislation and the so-called "despotism" of our leader. A great battle was waged. In the course of his attack the hon. member for Quebec East referred to the French revolution, and gave to the electors of that constituency the first edition of the interesting speech he made in the house a few days ago. On a beautiful Sunday night at Shawinigan Falls he said:

> Parliament committed suicide for six months. It does not count for anything. Bennett has established in this country a real dictatorship. He leads by force. He is a true dictator. If Nero at the time of the Roman empire kept the people in misery and gave them bread and circuses to amuse them, Bennett gives them bread but gives it through force.

I quote those words from page 7 of La Presse, the great Liberal daily paper of Montreal, of Monday, August 3. A few minutes afterwards the hon. member added, speaking of the government and of Conservatives:

> They capitalize the sufferings of the people. The Tories are only the members of depression, the offspring of the crisis which is passing over the country.

These are samples of some of the mild expressions that were used by the hon. members opposite when attacking the government during the by-election at Three Rivers-St. Maurice. A very interesting speech was also made by the former Secretary of State, the hon. member for St. James. Explaining what was meant by the words "peace, order and good government" in the bill, he stated to the crowd that those words meant that Mr. Bennett wanted to impose that bill on parliament in order to revive conscription. He also stated that every attempt would be made by the government to curb the liberties of the people. But the humble Conservative members of this house, guided by their ministers from Quebec, went into the constituency and ventured to explain to the people the real purpose of the legislation, that it was presented to the house in order to give bread to the poor and the needy during the depression. They also stated in their humble way that the government was doing its very best to redeem its pledges, and that the Prime Minister had resorted to the legislation reluctantly because he deemed it was the only way to face the emergency.

The hon. members of the opposition, Mr. Speaker, were much more violent in Three Rivers than they have been in this house, but nevertheless the constituency of Three Rivers-St. Maurice, which for more than thirty years had never elected a Conservative, chose for its worthy representative an eminent lawyer who at one time had been the batonnier of the bar of this province, a true Conservative—my friend Mr. Charles Bourgeois. In that instance the province of Quebec gave parliament and this country unmistakable evidence of its good judgment and its political sagacity. It expressed its willingness to cooperate with the English-speaking people of the other provinces in order to solve the pressing problems which confront the government. The province also gave the Prime Minister testimony of its admiration and gratitude for the strenuous work he has been carrying on to save Canada from bankruptcy. The county of Three Rivers-St. Maurice expressed the real mind of Quebec, which hon. members—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. GAGNON: —which hon. members opposite do not seem able to understand. The province of Quebec has always been ready to respond to any expressions of good will, and bonne entente. The province of Quebec has been deaf to the cry of conscription and despotism. The people of Quebec do not believe in appeals to passion and prejudice. The county of Three Rivers-St. Maurice gave a vote of confidence to the Prime Minister which did certainly console him for the base accusations that were heaped upon him by many members of the opposite party, and especially by the former Secretary of State (Mr. Rinfret) when he stated that the Prime Minister in his capacity of Minister of Finance proposed to amend the income tax in order to de-tax himself and his multi-millionaire friends thereby increasing the burdens on the shoulders of the poor.

Since the Three Rivers-St. Maurice by-election the Conservative party has done its best to redeem its pledges to relieve unemployment by cooperating with the municipalities and with the various provincial governments all over Canada. In this respect millions have been spent and the credit of Canada has not been shaken. Owing to the devotion of the Solicitor General (Mr. Dupré) more than $5,000,000 have been put at the disposal of the district of Quebec for the relief of unemployment. I may not be endowed with the great vision with which hon. members opposite have been favoured, but I fail to see in the legislation voted last July all the evils which characterize a usurpation of power. This legislation is of a remedial character. Its object is to carry out a scheme of unemployment relief in cooperation with the municipalities and the provinces. Relief moneys have not been spent in the fanciful way depicted by hon. members of the opposition; many people had to be consulted. According to the regulations adopted by the Department of Labour, all requests for public works had first to be submitted to the municipal authorities, who discussed the measures and adopted the resolutions which afterwards were sent to the provincial authorities. The provincial authorities on the other hand made an investigation through their inspectors and sent a list of questions to the municipal councils with respect to the number of unemployed and the nature of the public works necessary to relieve unemployment. In short, Mr. Speaker, all relief measures have been thoroughly discussed and submitted to the people—first to the municipal council, secondly to the provincial authorities, and when the provincial authorities had come to an agreement with the municipal authorities, the proposals were submitted to the federal government. In no case has the federal government ever refused to comply with the requests of the provincial governments.

Now that I have stated how the relief scheme is operated, can it be said that the government is acting arbitrarily, despotically and extravagantly in the measures which it has taken to relieve unemployment? As I said a moment ago, Mr. Speaker, the federal government has never refused to comply with the requests of the provincial authorities, which requests sometimes, especially in Quebec, were submitted with a view to prejudice the Conservative party. The other day the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) denounced in the most emphatic way the partisanship which was displayed by the Liberal party in the spending of relief money in his county. I may say that in the county of Dorchester, which I have the honour to represent, the same situation existed. For instance, though a large number of municipalities and the county council of my county recommended to the provincial government the expenditure of $75,000 for the construction of a road, that recommendation was not approved because the provincial authorities did not want the credit to go to a certain extent to the Conservative member for Dorchester. But, while the provincial government thought it extravagant to build a good road for the use of the farmers, which would have provided work for about one thousand unemployed, that same government authorized the expenditure of $75,000 for the construction of a zoological garden near the city of Quebec. I am not opposed to the construction of this garden, which will prove an asset to the province and to the county of Quebec-Montmorency in which it is situated, but why should the provincial government refuse to spend $75,000 for a road which would give bread to the poor farmers while they consent to the diversion of $75,000 of relief money to provide a shelter for animals? I give that example, Mr. Speaker, not in a spirit of criticism but only to show that the federal authorities have never put obstacles in the way of provincial authorities. They have accepted even such schemes as the one to which I have referred, which may be considered rather a doubtful way to relieve unemployment.

Coming back to the constitutional issue raised by the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe), I agree that legislation by order in council in ordinary circumstances ought to be resorted to only in cases of necessity, but the Prime Minister stated in this house that he assumed this power reluctantly and only because we were facing a national calamity, and he and his colleagues knew of no other way to deal with the situation. In the past the great Liberal party has resorted to that method. We all remember the election of December, 1921, when the issue of conscription was raised in Quebec. The ministers were sworn in some time in January, 1922, and early in February the hon. member for Quebec East, who was Minister of Marine, by order in council transferred the entire administration of fisheries in the province of Quebec to the government of the province without receiving the authority of parliament. Does my hon. friend think that, when one morning the Canadian government learned with great surprise that England was off the gold standard, the government should have waited fifteen days to call a special session of parliament to pass the necessary legislation? That would not have been a wise thing to do. The Prime Minister could deal with the situation instantly, because he was given the necessary powers during the last session of parliament. The hon. member might agree that in this instance we could cite the old axiom "Gouverner, c'est prévoir." The Prime Minister would not have been the statesman he is if he had not foreseen, when the bill was before the house last year, that the time might come when such power would be needed, and I am not surprised that our Liberal friends are dissatisfied because the government is doing so well in keeping Canada in safety.

Perhaps it would be refreshing for all of us to find in the speeches of hon. members opposite good reasons for holding to the stand we have taken. Speaking in Quebec, when the election in Three Rivers-St. Maurice was proceeding, the hon. member for Quebec East condemned the remedial legislation passed last year with regard to unemployment. He eloquently appealed to the passions of the masses, and among other things he said:

"What can be said about those who have just voted $15,000,000 to give a premium on wheat to the western farmers, when they do not give a cent to the Quebec farmers whose butter does not sell?"

The hon. member does not deny having made that statement; he repeated it in Three Rivers, and it went all over the province during the campaign. I have great admiration for the hon. member for Quebec East, and I must say that he is faithful to the doctrines he has often enunciated in the province of Quebec during elections, and he has been faithful to the tactics of his party and orators who are accustomed during election times to arouse province against province and race against race. The hon. member is too wise to repeat those words in this house or in western Canada.

There is no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that the farmers of Quebec are suffering, but they are not unmindful of the sad plight of the farmers of the west. We members from Quebec, however, are handicapped in our efforts to aid the farmers by such statements as those made by Mr. Taschereau at St. Raymond on June 15 last, when he said:

> It is agreeable for me to be able to say to the people that we are able to help the province without compelling it to fall in debt. When Ottawa is found with a deficit of $75,000,000, and facing a deficit of $105,000,000 for the current year; when Ontario and the other provinces of the west are bankrupt, the province of Quebec has a surplus of $5,000,000.

In 1930 Mr. Taschereau stated there was no unemployment in Quebec; in 1931, by the words I have just quoted, he implied that his province did not need any help from Ottawa. A few days ago, when the governments of all provinces were asking civil servants to accept reduced wages, the premier of Quebec said that the credit of the province of Quebec was still good, suggesting thereby that it was not necessary to practise economy. I say to the hon. member for Quebec East and his friends sitting opposite that we do not receive any cooperation whatever from the Quebec government. How can we tell the leaders of this government that the farmers of Quebec are ruined while the premier of that province boasts of a surplus of $5,000,000? When the hon. member for Quebec East spoke in Quebec on August 7, Mr. Taschereau was present, and he cheered the remarks of my hon. friend. What logic! what consistency! The hon. member for Quebec East, during the course of his eloquent speech, said "Bennett does nothing for Quebec," while Mr. Taschereau says "We do not want any help from Ottawa." I ask you, Mr. Speaker, which of the two leaders voices the sentiments of the province of Quebec?

I have a great liking for the hon. member for Quebec East; but I would like to refer to another part of his famous speech delivered in the city of Quebec on August 7 last. Speaking of the remedial legislation of 1931, he denounced the so-called autocracy of our chief and the wickedness of our policy. In referring to the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act he said that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) referred to it as being sovietism, the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) referred to it as being fascism, and he added "I call it Bennettism, which is a mixture of fascism and sovietism."

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. GAGNON: I am not surprised at hearing hon. members opposite cheer the words of their leader. Unfortunately some of them cheer too often when the word "sovietism" is mentioned in this house. I ask myself if the great Liberal party of Canada will not, as has the Liberal party in England, some day fall into sovietism and communism. Now, with all due respect to the hon. member for Quebec East, I contend that he was wrong when he tried to associate two contradictory terms such as sovietism and fascism. A study of what is going on in Germany, Japan, China and Russia will convince one that some day we may have to choose between sovietism and fascism. Speaking for myself and for my friends on this side of the house, I prefer Bennettism, because in these days of struggle and strenuous efforts our chief symbolizes the aspirations of the younger generation of Canada.

The young men and women of Canada are fed up with party politics as they have been played during the past eight days. More than fifty speeches have been delivered from the other side in order to prevent this government granting an additional sixty days to the municipalities and provinces to complete the works started to assist the unemployed. The young men and women of Canada are disgusted to hear hon. gentlemen opposite say, when we happen to laugh in this house for one reason or another, that we on this side are laughing at the sufferings of the people. They are amazed at seeing the leader of what was once a great party take thirty-one minutes of the time of this house to define the word "humbug" and eighteen minutes to define the word "demagogue". The young men and women are disgusted with such practices; they want men, they want leaders, they want action, they want order, discipline and security and this party is the only instrument whereby they can get what they hope for. The name of the Prime Minister Bennett forever will be associated in history with order, discipline and security. It will always be associated with the slogan "Canada First". "Canada First" has been proclaimed in Westminster as well as in Quebec city, Toronto, Montreal and Winnipeg, and that will be the rallying cry of our party. The words "Canada First" embody all our social, economic and political aspirations. Because young men and women in Canada, love order, peace, discipline and security, they love Bennett, they follow him. And they follow Bennett because they love Canada.

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to follow the last speaker in the amiable attempt he made to bring harmony into party strife. In his condemnation of party politics I am afraid he overlooked the fact that in the delivery of his speech in which he sought to castigate the party system he himself was possibly one of the most guilty. I wholly agree with him that there is nothing so futile or stupid as an attempt to carry on the public business under a party system which has shown that it is more interested in inter-party strife than in the affairs of the country. The last orator—I think I am entitled to call him that, for I have seldom heard such a flow of words from the lips of any hon. gentleman; showed his talent in excellently-studied language—was describing Bennettism. If I were one of his race and a member of his party I think I should attempt to describe the present proposed legislation as an attempt to induce this House of Commons to give its "Bennettiction" to the laying of the corpse of constitutional liberty and of custom long established and approved. However, I do not think that language of that kind can be fittingly applied to this question.

There are several reasons why both sides of this house should not support the proposed introduction of the measure suggested. First, this resolution asks for greater powers than have ever been asked for in this House of Commons since the day it first exercised its functions as such. It asks for greater powers than were granted under the War Measures Act; it asks for greater powers than were granted under the war appropriations acts, in fact it asks for greater powers than were granted by all these acts combined. The second reason I have for objecting is that the procedure followed is utterly unnecessary. Parliament is sitting, as has been said time and time again; I simply repeat that in passing.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) defended the introduction and passage of this measure last year on the ground that we were about to prorogue and that an emergency faced both agriculture and labour. He stated that these matters could be dealt with in the intervening period only by the passage of legislation such as this. I disliked it and I disapproved of it last year; when I spoke on the question I pointed out that the introduction of the measure had been made necessary by neglect on the part of the administration to make the necessary plans and preparations to meet a crisis of which it had been forewarned during the earlier part of the session. We knew it was coming; it was inevitable and nothing could stop it. Yet the present government delayed taking action until the closing days of the session, when it placed this proposal before us and demanded that it be given the most amazing and extraordinary powers with regard to the voting of moneys and any other legislative action it might desire to take.

The third reason why I oppose this measure is that unquestionably it is an attempt on the part of the administration, supported by a supine majority, to take away from parliament the rights and duties which we have sworn to undertake. I am quite willing to admit at the outset that the unemployed man who is hungry and cold is not interested in constitutional questions. Heaven knows, there are many of these men. We have heard the protestations of hon. gentlemen opposite, we have heard of the statements of Mr. Taschereau, but nevertheless it is a fact that the misery which exists from coast to coast is heartrending. The farmer in the west who is facing the crisis of supplying himself with seed when he has no money, of financing repairs to machinery and the preparation of the land, is not interested in the constitutional aspect of this matter. But that does not relieve us as members, their representatives in the House of Commons, of the obligation of observing our sworn duty and it is not our part, whilst parliament is sitting, to relinquish into the hands of an executive the power that parliament alone should exercise.

The struggle for this very liberty that we have to-day is not of contemporary history. It stretches away back for hundreds of years. If a student looks the matter up he will find that it is 635 years ago when the right of parliament to grant moneys to the crown was first determined under statute 25 of the reign of Edward I in 1297. The language used in that Confirmatio chartarum is:

> No aids, tasks and prizes are to be taken except by the common consent of the realm and for the common profit.

Thenceforth the crown asked parliament for the assent of the nation to its financial proposals. There were of course, one or two attempts on the part of the crown, as there is on the part of the present administration, to usurp that right and it was not really until 1407, or 525 years ago, that the definite principle that all money bills must originate in the commons, was first established. Then the powers of the commons slowly expanded under parliamentary practice and procedure, generation by generation, parliament by parliament, in spite of the stubborn, almost rigid opposition by Conservatives in those days, just as to-day. It was not until several centuries had elapsed that the practice of setting up committees of supply and committees of ways and means was established. The reason for the setting up of those committees was that they might determine first the amounts of money that parliament was to be called upon by the administration to vote, and, second, the destination of the amounts. Only by those two methods has parliament a certain control over the amounts and their destination. It is true that under Public Accounts, established about the same time, we can ascertain afterwards the character of the expenditure of the money. Let me put the matter in this way: Anson, in his Law and Custom of the Constitution, has clearly indicated that in recent generations the power of parliament is steadily being encroached upon by the cabinet, age by age and parliament by parliament. At pages 133 to 135 of volume 2 he uses this language:

> "The modern rules of procedure and the closure place both business and discussion in the hands of the cabinet." . . . Hence the Commons have become dependent on the cabinet, rather than the other way round, and a threat by the cabinet to dissolve parliament may command the continued support of a working majority long after the Commons has ceased to really represent the political opinions of the country.

Now we come to this particular case. If you turn back the pages you will find that in volume one of this book he indicates the last five remaining measures of control that parliament has over the executive. The third of these, which is relevant to this discussion, is as follows:

> The Commons exercises control over the executive as to spending departments, by committee of supply to vote money, by committee of ways and means to raise money.

Now the effect of this legislation will be to remove from us the power to consider in committee of supply the amounts to be voted, nor shall we be able to determine the destination of the vote. Last session it was indicated to the house—and many of us gullibly believed it—that this money was to be voted for farm relief and for unemployment relief. I was astonished when the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) spoke, that he did not, in discussing the orders in council, appear to be seized of the fact that the government did not live up to that understanding, but diverted sums of money to other purposes than either farm or unemployment relief. There is no question they had power to do that, but we had no understanding that that was their purpose, and if in the absence of understanding they were guilty of so much in one year, of what may they not be guilty if we renew that vast power to them? The Minister of Trade and Commerce mentioned the orders in council; he disposed of them with an airy, discursive statement in respect thereto, and asked the general question: Was it not all in the best interests of the country? Did anybody suffer by it? That is not the question. It is as to the powers to be exercised under legislation of this character. While parliament is sitting, parliament has no right—and I say this advisedly—in the face of its sworn obligation to do its duty in respect to certain matters, to delegate to an executive the power to legislate. The power to legislate as well as the power to vote money is inherent in parliament itself, and while it is sitting, it cannot, constitutionally, without doing violence to the oath of office taken individually by its members, delegate such powers to the executive.

In respect to one of these orders in council, the last one mentioned by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, I wish to make some comments. I find that on the 16th December, 1931, the executive, the governor in council, passed an order in council diverting moneys to the establishing of an additional number of Royal Canadian Mounted Police. The Minister of Trade and Commerce said 200, but I think that must have been a slip on his part. He does not often make slips like that, but as a matter of fact the number was 300, or an increase of one-third. Then he argued that this order in council was made necessary by an agreement entered into by Alberta and another province in respect of policing. I challenge the hon. gentleman in that regard. This order in council was passed on the 16th December, 1931, and no agreement, even with Alberta, was entered into until the end of January, 1932.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: And no agreement with Manitoba was contemplated at that time.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am now informed that no agreement with Manitoba was even contemplated at that time. I say to the Minister of Trade and Commerce and to the house, that this order in council does not indicate in any way anything that would justify his allegation that it was for the policing of Alberta or any other province. The fact is, as he must know, that it was for the purpose of increasing the personnel of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police under the jurisdiction of this administration. The money diverted amounts to quite a sum, more than a quarter of a million dollars diverted to the addition of 300 men to the force and, amongst other things, to the purchase of bombs, riot equipment. Imagine money alleged to be voted for the purpose of unemployment and farm relief being diverted, as we now find, to the purchase of riot equipment, bombs, artillery, ammunition, additional horses, including $1,750 to pay twenty special agents! Another item is $20,000 of unemployment relief funds used for the general expenses of secret investigations by the police force. That may all be justified, but it certainly was not what parliament was led to believe last year. This type of legislation by order in council is unjustifiable, and it should always be submitted to parliament. Above all others, a type of legislation involving the peace, order and good government of Canada should be submitted to parliament itself.

I said a moment ago that this statute would give to the executive greater powers than had ever been given to any executive in the country before. I say it advisedly. I challenge hon. gentlemen to study the War Appropriation Act where some $50,000,000 was voted, and the amount was stated definitely, for past appropriations made by governor generals' warrants for requirements prior to the sitting of parliament.

The next is the War Measures Act. It did not give the government of the day any right whatever to appropriate sums of money for war purposes, not one cent. Not even during the war crisis, the greatest with which this country was ever faced—not excepting the present one, although this closely parallels it so far as suffering is concerned—was the House of Commons asked to divest itself of constitutional customs. All the appropriations for the carrying on of the war were voted in the estimates annually and discussed by this house annually.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Under the name of war appropriations.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Exactly, and the fullest discussion was afforded before the money was voted except in regard to the war appropriations bill, which was for commitments entered upon prior to the sitting of parliament.

When the Prime Minister spoke the other day he made a very good case. He spoke eloquently, as he always does, and signified that we ought to be proud of the fact that under the act of last session work had been provided to something over three hundred thousand men. They had been provided with six million hours of work. It sounded splendid. The Prime Minister said six million hours. I am sure he must have been mistaken. He possibly meant six million days, but I take the statement as recorded in Hansard and as I heard him say it. Six million hours' work for three hundred thousand men gives them exactly twenty hours' work during the six months period of operation of the act that we were being asked to consider. At the rate of thirty cents per hour, which is the rate paid in part of my province, twenty hours' work gives them six dollars for six months' work. That is something that we ought to be very proud of! May I say right now that if I have any complaint in regard to the unemployment relief scheme it is certainly not on the ground of extravagance on the part of the government, but on the ground that the government has not taken the necessary measures adequately to deal with unemployment throughout the various municipalities of this country.

The Prime Minister then went on to discuss the Saskatchewan farm relief emergency, and again pointed with pride to the fact that three hundred thousand persons had been fed plain but ample food—that is his own language; had been provided with fuel, and in addition to both those, with medical care. All three had been, he stated, adequately provided. I am prepared to accept his word as I would that of any hon. member of this house, but let us analyze that statement. It means, with a total cost of $5,250,000, which was the amount stated, the sum of $17 per person for a period of six months, or 72 cents per week per person. That is, adequate food, adequate fuel, and adequate medical care was provided at a cost of 72 cents per person per week. My benediction, Mr. Speaker, on efficiency of that kind, and if that can be done throughout the country there certainly will be no criticism from me in regard thereto. The point I wish to make in that regard is that I would like to have the matter further discussed. I would like to find out the exact measure of relief that was extended to those districts, and whether it really was adequate as the Prime Minister would persuade us to believe. I will say this, however, that whether it was adequate or inadequate, we in the province of Alberta feel that we have a distinct grievance in regard to this matter. There are districts in Alberta suffering as acutely as any of the acute drought-stricken districts in Saskatchewan. Reading the Prime Minister's statement and listening to him the other day I would gather that the province of Alberta, having made a careful survey of the situation, was satisfied that $140,000 was sufficient to take care of immediate requirements; that that is what they asked for. Is that correct? If the Prime Minister intended to say that that is all the province asked for and that it is satisfied with that amount, the statement is grossly misleading. The province is not satisfied with that. I have a telegram here from the Minister of Agriculture of the province of Alberta dated March 8, 1932, similar to telegrams which have been quoted by hon. members from other provinces:

> Following wire to Minister Agriculture sets out our position relative seed grain.
>
> Have been obliged make arrangements to assemble required amount seed grain for distribution dry area.
>
> Having regard burden now thrown upon municipalities and provincial government respectfully urge dominion should assume one-third freight rates and one-third loss to municipalities resulting from such distribution.

[Mr. E. J. Garland.]

I understand that so far no satisfactory action has been taken by this government to meet the requests of the province in that regard. This is dire necessity in the province of Alberta. This need must be met. The government of the province of Alberta has asked this government to grant to certain areas in the province affected in exactly the same way as certain areas in the province of Saskatchewan just the same treatment as is being meted out to Saskatchewan, and we have been refused. This government has not indicated its willingness to treat certain areas in the province of Alberta, involving an area twelve or fourteen municipalities in extent—I am speaking from memory—in the same way that it has been treating like districts in the province of Saskatchewan. We do ask the government—I petition the Minister of Agriculture myself—that at the first opportunity he take this matter up.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I do not wish to interrupt, but Alberta has been given exactly the same opportunity.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): My information is to the contrary. I had a meeting with the cabinet in Alberta in January last, and both the Premier and the Minister of Agriculture of the province asked me to see that the matter was brought to the attention of the minister. I spoke to him the other day about it, urging that exactly the same measure of relief, that is one hundred per cent federal liability, should be assumed by the federal government in respect of certain areas in Alberta which were in precisely the same position as certain drought-stricken areas in Saskatchewan. I ask the Minister of Agriculture, is his government prepared to take upon its shoulders the burdens of paying one hundred per cent relief in the areas I have mentioned in Alberta on the same basis on which it is giving relief now in Saskatchewan? I pause for a reply.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): My understanding is that the Prime Minister met the government of Alberta in Edmonton and asked them the very definite question, had they any area with similar conditions to those prevailing in the seventy-six municipalities area in Saskatchewan, and that their answer was no. When I met them later on in the year they gave me the same word.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What time was this?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): September or October.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): At my interview with them in January I was informed to the contrary. Will the minister say that he has received no communication from the Minister of Agriculture or the Premier of Alberta during this winter asking for the application of one hundred per cent federal relief to certain areas in the province of Alberta?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): There have been no requests such as that so far as I am aware.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I have been informed that such requests have been sent in to the minister, but I unhesitatingly accept his word. I shall ascertain from the provincial government at the first opportunity their position in respect thereto. But on my own behalf I urge now on the administration, from my knowledge of the conditions that exist in the southern half of my own riding, in a large portion of the riding of my hon. friend from Acadia (Mr. Gardiner), and in the riding of my hon. friend from Medicine Hat (Mr. Gershaw), that exactly the same terms of relief be extended to us, because certain municipalities are utterly unable to finance their share of the crop requirements.

I will give to the minister one or two statements in that regard. Perhaps one will be ample. I received this statement from the municipality of Blackfoot, No. 218, in a letter dated February 25:

> The finances of this municipal district are in poor condition on account of uncollected taxes, and whereas the conditions are such that it has become impossible for the taxpayer to pay higher taxes, therefore be it resolved that this municipality can give no financial assistance to the financing of seed grain and feed this coming spring.
>
> Certified copy of resolution passed by the council of the municipal district of Blackfoot, No. 218.

I have received a very great number of statements describing conditions not exactly in the same language but very similar, from almost every part of my riding. They have suffered three successive years from crop failures. In each of those years the prices were so low that the receipts were not equal to the costs of production. A letter from one of the districts in question might be in order:

> The conditions in the Hussar and Chancellor districts are very bad. At a recent meeting of the Hussar U.F.A. local attended by 40 farmers, only seven—
>
> Remember, only seven.
>
> —had their seed for this year.
>
> The farmers of this district who have had no crop for three years fully expected the federal government to grant us a measure of relief, even if it was only enough to get our seed and feed or fuel for the tractors, as no one has any credit; in fact the bank has been closed up.
>
> There is some talk of just letting the land ready for crop go unseeded.

My hon. friend from Yorkton (Mr. McPhee) quoted prices. I think in our district we could surpass the horrible state of price levels he described. Eggs are selling at 12 to 16 cents per dozen, butter at 15 cents per pound, the best cattle at 4 cents per pound and poultry at 6 or 7 cents per pound. Letter after letter brings stories of that kind to my desk. The government is well conversant with the recent crash in the live stock market which has rendered very pitiful the state of many of our people in the west. One of them states that since July 31, nearly 100 rural telephones have been withdrawn from operation in the Vulcan district. That is merely an indication of conditions. The letter from Vulcan states:

> I believe there are not many who have paid their taxes in the past two years.

Another letter states:

> Most everyone is on relief or trying to get there. Several farmers had to move their stock out of the district last fall.

Through lack of feed. Another letter states:

> From what I can gather, practically no one has paid taxes.

Another:

> Practically everything else has been sacrificed to make possible clothing ourselves and eating. Even then a great deal of Red Cross aid has been necessary. Many are without seed, and for those who have to buy it Mr. Bennett's bonus has worked an additional hardship.

From Wayne I received the following:

> I personally have farmed for forty years and have not seen anything like compared to that we are going through now. The banks refuse to assist. I only see one way out of it, and that is the farmers will have to quit.
>
> Just as an example: I met a man yesterday and talked over the matter and he told me that he would not be able to treat his grain with formaldehyde because he did not have any cash to buy it.

From Rosebud comes the following:

> I know of two cases, one a neighbor with five children who are trying to live on the proceeds of a three-gallon can of cream a week probably worth $1.30. The other has nothing; I do not know how he exists. Everyone is up against it; I do not see how they can get their crop in. You hear on every side, "If I had my debts paid I would get out of here." In this district we were able to dig coal or else there would have been terrible suffering. The people are desperate in their feelings. They seem to see no hope ahead.

From Swalwell district, a district which until recent years has been fairly prosperous and in which there are many excellent farms, such as those described by the Prime Minister, comes the following:

No words of mine can describe the hopeless conditions which the people of this western country are facing. They are not living, but leading an existence; everything has to be sold at a loss.

I have no desire, Mr. Speaker, to prolong the discussion. I do submit to the government, however, that its duties extend to the districts I have mentioned just as urgently and as definitely as to the areas in the province of Saskatchewan to which reference has been made.

I know the Minister of Agriculture is not unsympathetic, and I say to him that in the southern half of my constituency, due to the inability to supply proper food and clothing, there has been a considerable increase in minor ailments, many of which may lead to serious complaints such as tuberculosis, pneumonia and so on. For years the doctors in those areas have not been properly paid. I have before me some very harrowing letters from doctors in that connection. I ask that adequate provision be made for the medical care of these people who are suffering under present conditions not only tremendous losses but dire destitution. A doctor in one of these districts writes me as follows:

Next door to me a child was prostrated with double lobar pneumonia. The widowed mother who was receiving government aid applied to the village authorities for medical treatment for her child. The village council refused. She was already owing me over $100 for past services, and did not call me. However as soon as I heard of the case I went without being called. Now 99 per cent of all our patients, not mine particularly, are cases of destitution. How is a local doctor to stand the financial strain of treating all these cases?

In one of his communications this doctor gave me facts relating to amounts of remuneration he had been able to receive during the last year, and I believe the figures would astonish the house. In May 1930 his earnings were $126 and his receipts only $12.50; in May 1931 his earnings were $400, and his receipts only $77.50. Hon. members will notice the increase in calls for his services. In June 1930 his earnings were $187, and his actual receipts $27.50. In June 1931 his earnings were $298.50 and his receipts $8.50. Nothing could indicate more definitely the very serious condition of affairs in so far as the physical health of the people in those districts is concerned.

I do not need to stress that point further, but I am satisfied the matter deserves the particular attention of the minister. The doctor to which I have referred writes further:

My practice, which means greater expense on my pocket book, has increased perceptibly, while my receipts have decreased more rapidly.

Further on he states:

The question is cannot something be done for the struggling, self-denying, starving, philanthropic rural physicians whose services cannot be dispensed with by the poor impoverished settlers of those drought areas of western Canada. We have appealed to the municipal and provincial authorities, but they claim they are financially unable to help us, while they recognize that widespread indigency is the rule now and not the exception as it was a few years ago.

That, Mr. Speaker, is the position. I could amplify the statements made by the hon. member for Yorkton; if I were permitted to do so I could talk from now until six o'clock concerning those conditions. I wonder if hon. members realize that between the years 1929 and 1931 there has been a decline in the price received by the wheat growers for their product of $360,000,000. Between the years 1930 and 1931, one year only, there was a decline of $202,000,000. So the story goes. I pick up another extract which is as follows:

With 2,000,000 pounds of creamery butter awaiting export in western Canada, probability is that the present record low price for butter fat, 12 cents a pound, will fall still further, according to H. S. Brockner, sales manager of the Alberta Dairy Pool Limited.

I have a clipping before me taken from the Calgary Herald, a daily newspaper very friendly to this ministry. It is as follows:

Three Hills, Feb. 23.—Further examples of the topsy turvy condition of the markets have been given by local farmers. Recently a farmer shipped a case containing 21 fine pullets to Calgary. Eight of these weighed 30 pounds and graded No. 2. They brought him the munificent sum of $1.50, being five cents per pound. The remainder of the shipment, weighing 33 pounds, was marked "no value."

The freight charge on the whole shipment was $1.50, and the other charges were 25 cents, so the adventurous shipper was out 25 cents. He lost his 21 pullets and suffered 25 cents loss.

Another story is told of a farmer who shipped 160 pounds of wool for sale and received a three-cent postage stamp in return. He was lucky compared to another who shipped wool and did not get enough returns to pay shipping charges. It would be interesting to know who got the pullets—and at what price. Also who got the wool—and at what price.

Three years of crop failures have brought about these pitiful conditions. A correspondent from Standard writes:

The five cent bonus on wheat gives to the man who doesn't need it, and the man who needs it the most gets nothing. For example a man with a 40 bushel per acre crop gets $2 per acre bonus, a man with no crop at all gets nothing. That kind of legislation is more suggestive of the deliberations of the inmates from an insane asylum than from a legislative assembly.

This writer states that 156 parcels of land in the Blackfoot municipal district will be up for sale for arrears of taxes on March 29, 1932. Frankly I do not think it will be any use offering that land for sale, for it will be merely a formality—you cannot sell land out there. The Bureau of Statistics shows the price of land over all Canada has dropped $10 an acre in four years.

No words of mine, Mr. Speaker, could exaggerate the gravity of agricultural conditions, and indeed of unemployment conditions, in this country. I heard that eloquent orator from Dorchester (Mr. Gagnon) discussing the absence of any real emergency or crisis of unemployment in the province of Quebec. On another occasion I will give him some facts in that connection which may disabuse his optimistic mind of the opinions he now holds.

I will take such measures as will provide for the giving of work to every man and women in this country prepared to work.

We know the source from which that statement comes, and we also know that at the present time the expense apparently of providing work is so great that there is a likelihood that the actual relief programs will be stopped, and that from now on a measure of dole—if you like to call it that; it is no disgrace—will be administered. Hon. gentlemen opposite are inclined at times to discredit the dole. Personally I prefer work, it is far, far, better for the character of our people, but if it is found to be impossible for this government to finance any further relief works, the dole is the only alternative. Of course it would not be impossible if they would adopt some of the proposals suggested by members in this corner of the house, but unfortunately the government will not sweep aside the orthodox rules of finance. If they would do so, it would take them more quickly out of the bog than anything they have in their minds at the present time. In the absence of any disposition on their part to discard orthodoxy, there is no other course open to them than to cut down expenditure on the relief works that were provided, as they declare, to preserve the morale of the people of this country and supply needed relief.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that in addition to the points I have already mentioned, I regard the introduction of this measure as utterly inexcusable unless in the event of war or famine. We have no war in this country, unless it be, as someone suggested to me the other day, a class war. If the government recognizes that it is now, or may be, confronted with a class war, then possibly on that ground it can justify this astonishing legislation. The government will not assert that. But it admits that condition by increasing the police force, by keeping up the morale of the naval and military forces by not cutting their salaries, and by maintaining the judiciary in good spirits by not reducing their salaries. The police, naval, army and judicial forces are favoured—the story is plain for those who would read.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that a condition of war does not exist. Nor can it be argued by anybody that a condition of famine exists in this country. A condition of shortage does exist in certain territories, which condition can be met with our adequate transportation facilities and our vast supplies of goods. Therefore I am definitely opposed to this measure. I will vote against the resolution, and I will vote against the bill when it is introduced.

Hon. J. C. ELLIOTT (West Middlesex): I desire, Mr. Speaker, to make a few observations on the resolution which is now under consideration. First of all may I express my regret that the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) and the members of his cabinet did not see their way clear to accept the proposition which was made by my right hon. leader (Mr. Mackenzie King), that to meet the purposes of unemployment and farm relief a supply bill should be brought down. Had that been done, members on this side of the house would have cooperated to the fullest extent to facilitate the passage of the bill at the earliest possible moment. That, to a large extent, is the issue, and it is the reason for the discussion which has taken place during the past week. We all regret the very serious economic condition throughout the country, and it is a pity that the government has not taken such a course as would have enabled every member to discharge what I submit is his first duty to his constituents—the consideration in committee of supply of estimates to meet the urgent necessities of the country.

The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) eloquently and ably defended the system of relief in operation in Saskatchewan during the past year, and dilated upon the excellent manner in which the Saskatchewan Relief Commission had discharged its duties. While he was pronouncing those eulogies I could not help thinking what an excellent thing it would have been for the country as a whole if a commission had functioned for the whole dominion.

I am glad to see some of our Ontario ministers in their seats. I must add my protest to that so forcibly expressed by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland). It has been my privilege for a good many years to be very actively identified with the farmers of the province of Ontario, and I deeply regret to say that I have seen more real financial distress among the very best farmers of this province in the last six months than during all the years that I have had the privilege of doing business for a great many of them. The situation has become much more serious since this government has been in power. About the only effect the actions of this government have had on the farmers in Ontario has been to increase the spread between what they have to pay for the things they buy and what they receive for the things they sell. About the only way they have been affected by the present government has been by the increases in tariff, which have been made as a part of this relief, and I want to say very seriously to the members of the government that it has brought anything but relief to the farmers of Ontario. The spread between the price they pay for what they buy, and the price they get for what they sell has greatly increased.

Mr. ROSS: No, no.

Mr. ELLIOTT: My hon. friend will have an opportunity to speak later on; I am only going to take a few minutes of the time of the house. I think if he were more familiar with what is going on in the farming districts of Ontario he would not even interrupt when I say how serious these conditions have become.

What is the primary duty of a man sent to parliament to represent a constituency? May, who is one of the great authorities on parliamentary procedure and practice, in his rules of procedure, thirteenth edition, at page 64, says:

> The most important power vested in any branch of the legislature is the right of imposing taxes upon the people and of voting money for the exigencies of the public service. The exercise of this right by the commons is practically a law for the annual meeting of parliament for the redress of grievances; and it may also be said to give to the commons the chief authority in the state.

Then there is the old standard authority, with which your honour is very familiar and on which most of your decisions are based; I refer to Bourinot, who says at page 415 of the fourth edition:

[Mr. Elliott.]

> One of the principal purposes of the House of Commons is the consideration and criticism of the estimates and the taxes required to meet the public expenditures.

At page 404 he states:

> The most important of the committees of the whole house, in the commons, are those of supply and ways and means. . . .
>
> The rules of the house with respect to the expenditure of public money and the impositions of burthens upon the people are in conformity with the practice of its English prototype. All the checks and guards which the wisdom of English parliamentarians has imposed in the course of centuries upon public expenditures now exist in their full force in the parliament of the dominion. The cardinal principle, which underlies all parliamentary rules and constitutional provisions with respect to money grants and public taxes is this—when burthens are to be imposed on the people, every opportunity must be given for free and frequent discussion, so that parliament may not, by sudden and hasty votes, incur any expenses, or be induced to approve of measures, which may entail heavy and lasting burthens upon the country. Hence it is ordered that the crown must first come down with a recommendation whenever the government finds it necessary to incur a public expenditure, and that there should be full consideration of the matter in committee and in the house, so that no member may be forced to come to a hasty decision, but that every one may have abundant opportunities afforded him of stating his reasons for supporting or opposing the proposed grant.

The main purpose for which we are assembled at the present time, Mr. Speaker, is ourselves to do the very things which we are asked to delegate to the government by the measure now before the house. What difference does it make to the people of the country, during a crisis such as this, whether we pass a little amendment to the criminal code, or what takes place with regard to some of the acts relating to noxious weeds, insect pests, cutworms and all that sort of thing? The real duty of parliament, if this resolution carries, is being handed over by the representatives of the people to the executive while the house is in session. If the act of last year had worked out in even a reasonably satisfactory manner there might be less objection to the course now proposed, but I venture to say that in not one province of the dominion has there been even fairly general satisfaction with the act and the way it has worked in affording unemployment relief.

I want to make this further submission: If we look at the report of the director of unemployment relief, tabled in the house the other day, at page 66 we will find the item having to do with harbours and rivers. This constitutes a set of estimates, and the work done cost $204,440. If we look at page 3 of the report we find that the regulations provide:

All agreements with provincial and municipal authorities shall contain a provision to the effect that all persons employed on the works or undertakings referred to herein shall be residents of Canada, and so far as practicable of the locality in which the work is being performed, and in no case shall discrimination be made or permitted in the employment of, or in the granting of direct relief to any British subjects by reason of their political affiliations, race or religious views.

Would you believe, Mr. Speaker, that of the $216,442 expended under that order in council on harbours and rivers, if I have the figures correctly only $12,000 was spent in ridings not represented by supporters of this government?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): You are wrong in that.

Mr. ELLIOTT: My hon. friend says I am wrong; I know he must think so, but of course I think not. It is a bit difficult to tell where some of these places are, but I have done my very best, and I know where most of them are located. One of my hon. friends suggests that I know where Haileybury is, and that is so. It is not my purpose at this time to say anything as to whether or not these expenditures were necessary in the places where they were made; hon. members of this house have never had an opportunity of ascertaining from the minister in charge of these expenditures what was the need at the particular place, who were asking for it or what amount of relief was likely to be afforded by that particular vote.

My hon. friend has referred to the grant for Haileybury. The sum of $17,809 appears to have been spent in Haileybury. I have no information which justifies my saying that that was not properly expended and that it was not needed, and I do not propose to make any such statement until I know. However, I do say that that is something which should never have appeared under the heading of unemployment relief. The house sat last year until August 3, and this order in council was passed on October 15. Would it have been too much to ask the government to bring down an item in the estimates for public works and to give every hon. member an opportunity of discussing this matter before a decision was arrived at?

My objection to the substitution of "May" for "March" is that it is, in principle, the wrong kind of legislation. No hon. member can go home and face his constituents and justify the fact that while the house was still in session he sat in his seat, with his hands folded, and said: "I will leave this to the executive; it can do this in the way in which it has been done in the past, although I am bound to say that that way has not proven satisfactory to many portions of the country."

The experience gained in the last year or two should have enabled some changes and some improvements to be made. Such experience should be of value in formulating a policy for the coming year. If the government would say what amount was needed and this house had an opportunity of discussing the proposed policy in the regular way, surely some good would come from the discussion. This matter should be discussed in committee of supply.

I do not propose to take up the time of the house at any length, but I do desire to point out that this is the most objectionable legislation which any parliament could enact. I realize that we are living in a strenuous period, but that is all the greater reason why the safeguards which the experiences of various free governments have thrown around the rights of the people should be preserved. I submit that this resolution should not pass but that a supply bill containing the necessary items and providing a means of discussion as to whether or not such items are necessary, is the proper method of procedure. I see the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Stewart) across the floor, and I contend that all work in the way of public works should be done by his department. I have great faith in what can be accomplished by the Department of Public Works, and whatever money is to be expended on public works by the Dominion of Canada should be expended under the supervision of that department.

A cursory glance at the item will show that $12,000 out of $216,000 was spent in ridings which apparently needed no relief and which unfortunately are represented by opponents of the government. Perhaps these ridings do not need as much relief as do the ridings represented by supporters of the government.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): London got some.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I do not think the minister claims paternity for these estimates; I take it they were put into his hands. I hope that is the fact because I should not like to think they had been prepared by him. It seems a bit remarkable that when a Conservative government is in power, not only is there more relief needed for the country as a whole but the ridings represented by supporters of the government require six times as much relief as the ridings represented by those opposed to the government.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

SECOND READING

Bill No. 31, respecting certain patents of Autographic Register System, Limited.—Mr. Anderson (Toronto-High Park).

OTTAWA AND NEW YORK RAILWAY COMPANY

Mr. F. T. SHAVER (Stormont) moved the second reading of Bill No. 32, respecting the Ottawa and New York Railway Company.

Mr. NEILL: Explain.

Mr. SHAVER: About thirty-five years ago the Ottawa and New York Railway Company constructed their railroad between Ottawa and Tupper Lake, New York. This railroad crosses the St. Lawrence river at Cornwall, and about three-quarters of the bridge over which the railroad crosses the river is located in Canada. About fifteen years ago the Ottawa and New York Railway Company leased this bridge to the New York Central Railway Company, which has been operating it ever since.

The purpose of this bill is briefly, to authorize the Ottawa and New York Railway Company and its lessee the New York Central Railway Company to enter into an agreement with the toll bridge company to plank this bridge and operate it for vehicular traffic. I might quote very briefly the original act of incorporation by which this company came into being.

In the year 1882, an act known as 45 Victoria, chapter 78, and entitled "an act to incorporate the Ontario Pacific Railway Company," was passed by the parliament of Canada, authorizing the construction of the bridge and the construction of the railroad. In 1884 an act known as 47 Victoria, chapter 57, and entitled "an act further to amend the act to incorporate the Ontario Pacific Railway Company," was passed by the parliament of Canada. Clause one of this act provides that the said company may construct with their railway bridge over the St. Lawrence river a passage floor or way for horses, carriages and foot passengers; and that they may make the same during the construction of the said railway bridge, or at any time after the completion thereof; and in the event of their electing to construct such passageway or foot-bridge they may make, amend, repeal, reenact and enforce all such by-laws, rules and regulations as seem to them proper and necessary, as to the management, control and use thereof, and as to the toll and fares to be received and charged for passing the same—such by-laws, rules and regulations and tariff of tolls and fares and every amendment or reenactment thereof, to be subject to the approval of the governor in council.

In 1915 an act known as 5 George V, chapter 50, entitled "an act respecting the Ottawa and New York Railway Company" was passed by the parliament of Canada, authorizing such company to lease its undertaking to the New York Central Railway Company, and authorizing the latter company during the currency of such lease, to exercise the powers and rights and be subject to the applications and be entitled to the immunities provided by the act respecting the Ottawa and New York Railway Company, and in the Railway Act and in every act for the time being in force.

From this it follows that since the Ontario Pacific Railway Company had the right to plank the New York Central bridge for vehicular purposes, by the act above referred to, its lessee the New York Central Railway Company by the act of 1915 referred to herein, should have the like powers. It also follows that if the New York Central Company did not desire to plank the bridge itself, it could lease the bridge to some company and allow this company to do the planking. Some difficulty arose, however, because it was found that on the American side there was no similar act to the act of 1915 and to the act of 1884 authorizing the companies in which the railroad and bridge were vested to plank the same for vehicular purposes. So a bill was prepared by the New York Central solicitors and brought before congress. This bill has already passed the lower house and I have been advised that before long it will have passed the senate.

The people of eastern Ontario, and particularly those of my constituency and especially the town of Cornwall, are very much interested in the success of this bridge. For a number of years the Cornwall board of trade, as well as the chambers of commerce of two or three large towns on the United States side of the river, have been promoting this project. If this bridge is planked for vehicular traffic, it will provide the only highway bridge across the St. Lawrence between the Victoria bridge at Montreal and lake Ontario, a distance of 190 miles. For 116 miles of this distance the St. Lawrence river forms the international boundary between Canada and the United States, and in 1929, 150,000 vehicles crossed the river by ferry. This project will, I think, commend itself because it will not be an expensive bridge as compared with the cost of constructing a new one. The bridge is already there and the planking of it and the building of the approaches will be comparatively inexpensive. In the Canadian section this will furnish work for 75 to 100 men for a period of four or five months.

Without going any further into the details, if the house will allow the bill to pass its second reading, I shall move that it be referred to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines so that gentlemen who are interested in the bridge may come before that committee and explain every detail.

Mr. SANDERSON: Was this bill, or a similar one, before the house a year or two ago?

Mr. SHAVER: This bill has not previously been before the house.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the select standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

BANK ACT AMENDMENT

Mr. H. E. SPENCER (Battle River) moved that the house go into committee on Bill No. 16, to amend the Bank Act.

Mr. G. G. COOTE (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, before the motion is put, I should just like to point out that in the votes and proceedings there is a recommendation of the select standing committee on banking and commerce that this bill be not proceeded with. I have just heard in an unofficial way that the action of that committee was based on a feeling on the part of certain members that they should not proceed to inquire at any length into this matter this session because the Bank Act was to be amended next year and that this matter might very well be left over until then. I think conditions throughout Canada at the present time are such that action in connection with this particular matter should not be left over until next year. One of the great difficulties with which people are faced to-day is paying any rate of interest. I believe there never was more need in Canada than at the present time for limiting the rate of interest which can be charged. I think it was the wish of the house when this bill received its second reading that it should be carefully considered in all its phases and the merits of the question carefully gone into by the committee, and as I am not sure that that has been done by the committee I beg to move in amendment:

That the house do not now go into committee of the whole on Bill No. 16, but that the said bill be referred back to the select standing committee on banking and commerce for further consideration with respect to limiting the interest charges to seven per cent on bank loans.

Mr. H. E. SPENCER (Battle River): The amendment which has just been moved by the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote) should, for various reasons, meet the wishes of a great many members of this house. First of all, when this bill appeared before the banking and commerce committee the other day the committee was not at all well represented. It is true that three or four members of the committee had to leave to attend other committees on which they were sitting, but when the vote took place in the banking and commerce committee only fourteen out of a total membership of fifty voted, which shows how very few members of the committee were present.

The usual quorum of the committee is fifteen, but a week ago it was cut down to ten. Personally I think that that was a great mistake. I believe that many of the members thought it was necessary to reduce the quorum because otherwise we might not be able to get a quorum on Mondays and Fridays. But the meeting which was held the other day when this bill was considered was not held on a Monday or a Friday, and therefore the members of the committee had ample opportunity to be present except those few who happened to be working on other committees at the time. I say therefore, first of all, that the bill was not properly considered by a sufficient number of members of the committee, only fourteen taking part in the actual vote.

Secondly, the only argument that I have heard advanced as to why we should not go on with the bill is that the Bank Act will be coming up for revision in 1933, and it would therefore be advisable to leave the matter over for another year. I contend that that was not a wise suggestion at all. I support the hon. member for Macleod in his statement that there is altogether too much unrest in this country over the excessive interest rates that are charged by the banks, and the bill should have been proceeded with. In that connection an excellent precedent was set by the government of the day only last year, when by order in council they did interfere with the Bank Act even though it is coming up for revision in 1933. I have before me order in council P.C. 2693 which was passed on October 27, 1931, and which says in part:

Whereas the chartered banks are required, under the provisions of the Bank Act, to show investment securities in their monthly and annual financial statements at not in excess of market values;

That provision was altered by order in council and the following provision is being acted upon to-day, or at all events was acted upon until the first of March of this year:

1. That for the purpose of the return provided under section 112 of the Bank Act and schedule "G" thereto, and the annual report as directed by section fifty-three of the same act, the chartered banks of Canada shall, until this order is amended or rescinded, value the securities owned prior to the 31st day of August, 1931, at not more than the book value, or the current market prices thereof on the exchanges at the close of business on the 31st day of August, 1931, whichever may be the less, and the securities acquired since the 31st day of August, 1931, at not more than the cost price thereof.

2. This order shall come into force and effect on the 26th day of October, 1931, shall apply to the returns of the chartered banks as from September 30, 1931, and shall continue in full force and effect until the 1st day of March, 1932, unless sooner amended or rescinded by competent authority.

That order, it will be observed, came into operation on the 26th day of October, 1931, and no suggestion was then made, or if it was made it was not acted upon, that because the Bank Act would be revised in 1933 nothing in the meantime should be done. I say therefore, Mr. Speaker, that if this very important change can be made in the Bank Act by order in council in spite of the fact that the Bank Act is to be revised next year, it would be perfectly in order at this time to insert in the act a clause providing a penalty if the banks of this country charge more than the legal rate called for.

It is well to remember also that we are working under a federal act, not under a series of provincial acts, and when the act says that seven per cent is the maximum that shall be charged it means that that shall apply in every province, not simply in two or three provinces. But we know full well that different rates of interest are being charged in different provinces on exactly the same sort of business. The people of western Canada are particularly indignant about that; we consider it a very unfair way of getting around the Bank Act, and discriminatory against one particular part of Canada.

The banks may say that they cannot carry on if they are not allowed to charge these rates. I would point out that of all the businesses in Canada that I can read about the only one that seems to be able to pay regular dividends on its shares is the banking business. I have before me a statement showing the rate of dividends declared by the chartered banks of Canada as shown in their returns for the month of December, 1931, as follows:

	Per cent
Bank of Montreal	12
Bank of Nova Scotia	16
Bank of Toronto	12
Banque Provinciale du Canada	9
Canadian Bank of Commerce	12
Royal Bank of Canada	12
Dominion Bank	12
Banque Canadienne Nationale	10
Imperial Bank of Canada	12

There is not another business in Canada which in these difficult times can make as good a showing as the banks, as indicated by the figures I have just quoted. The banks must be making considerable profits, and therefore the excuse that these high interest rates have to be charged if the banks are to carry on is not supported by the facts.

To show that what I am advocating is supported not only in the province of Alberta but in the province of Manitoba also, I wish to quote from a resolution passed at the last convention of the United Farmers of Manitoba:

Resolved that we, the United Farmers of Manitoba, favour the inclusion in the Canada Bank Act of the penalty of $5,000 for any infringement of the clause whereby the legal rate of interest is seven per cent.

From time to time we have heard in this house a good deal concerning the advisability of those interested in agriculture carrying on mixed farming. I understand certain bank presidents have made this suggestion. May I put on record two short letters respecting the treatment some of those people who have gone into mixed farming are receiving. One letter from Wilhelm Brothers, dated at Swift Current, Saskatchewan, July 8, 1931, which they are perfectly willing should be read, is as follows:

It might be interesting to know how some of the banks are assisting the farmers out of diversified farming. We own and operate a fair size farm consisting of 25 quarters of very good land and complete equipment, a 60 cow dairy and hog ranch.

Our dairy has paid most of the running expenses so far this year and we expect the dairy and hogs to pay all expenses and any money due this year leaving 1,800 acres of very good crop to the good.

On February 7 last we gave a note to the Royal Bank of Canada due April 15. On due date we found it impossible to get $500, consequently asked the bank if they would renew this note until fall or until August 15 when we expected to market a car of hogs.

The Bank manager, Mr. Lancaster, refused flatly and demanded immediate payment.

On June 17 the Royal bank issued a writ against us. In order to raise money to ward off judgment we were compelled to sacrifice our herd of 40 brood sows. We spent several years developing this herd and they were as good as can be found in Saskatchewan, but being our only source of immediate revenue they had to go. This will put us out of the hog business for at least a year.

Use this as you see fit. We would appreciate seeing these facts in the Western Producer, or any other farm papers.

Although I have a great many more such letters before me, I shall refer to only one more. This comes from the secretary of the Saskatchewan section of the United Farmers of Canada:

I have obtained the enclosed statement from one of our members. I think if you will study this statement and affidavit you will find that we have at least one concrete case of the unreasonableness of the bankers. I believe the documents are self-explanatory. This man was fortunate in that he was able to borrow his financial statement from the banker. He brought it to my office and we made copies of it. It is very plain and can easily be understood.

We here have a farmer who shows a surplus of $30,348, and whose chattels are absolutely clear. He owed the bank $475. He went to the bank to pay up some of his indebtedness but was wise enough to ask the question, before he handed over the money, as to whether or not the bank would advance him $200 wherewith to carry on the balance of the year. You will note that his request was refused and that he kept the money and has now been threatened with suit. I am in hopes that this information will be of some use to you.

I put these two letters on record because they are similar to a great many we are receiving. Instead of the banks fighting a bill such as mine, they should be perfectly willing to keep within the letter of the law so far as seven per cent interest is concerned, but they charge a higher rate, if they can get away with it. I think the recommendation of the banking and commerce committee that this matter should not be considered for another year, was not in the best interests of this country. Therefore I am in entire agreement with the amendment moved by the hon. member for Macleod, to the effect that this bill be referred back to the committee on banking and commerce for further consideration.

Mr. R. C. MATTHEWS (Toronto East Centre): Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the banking and commerce committee I feel I should say a few words concerning the bill brought before it. It was discussed in committee a few days ago for a period of more than an hour and a half. The hon. member who has just taken his seat spoke in committee at least a half a dozen times; there was no limit whatever to the discussion. Representatives of Canadian banks were prepared to give evidence, but when the suggestion was made that they should take the stand, objection was taken to hearing them.

Mr. SPENCER: Would the hon. member tell why objection was taken?

Mr. MATTHEWS: Objection seemed to be taken because there were not men from the west to give such evidence as—

Mr. CAMPBELL: I should like to point out to the hon. member that objection was not taken to the bankers giving evidence at all. It was pointed out by other members of the committee that if the bankers were permitted to come there and testify, they reserved the right to call debtors of the banks as well.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. MATTHEWS: Objection seemed to be raised because customers of banks in western Canada were not present to lay their side of the case before the committee. Such evidence as has been given to-night was not presented to the committee. I am here to state however that every hon. member of the committee had an opportunity to speak. Full opportunity was given for discussion. Then the question was asked as to whether or not the bankers should be heard, and among other gentlemen the hon. member who has just spoken was one who requested that the banks be not heard. A vote was taken—

Mr. SPENCER: Only on condition.

Mr. MATTHEWS: The vote stood ten to five. The hon. member for Battle River requested that the vote be recorded and accordingly the names were called, each member answering his name. There was no suggestion in the committee by anyone that the discussion was in any way curtailed, that it was unfair or incomplete. Therefore I am surprised that the hon. member for Battle River has seen fit to speak in such terms to this question to-night. At least I do not think his attitude is very sportsmanlike.

Mr. JOHN T. HACKETT (Stanstead): Mr. Speaker, it may be that the votes recorded in the banking and commerce committee were but a scant fifteen. Hon. gentlemen will recall, however, that shortly before the vote was taken a system which prevails in the house was followed in that at least to some extent pairing took place. For instance, the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine) and I who unfortunately were not on the same side of the argument, left the committee room together. The argument put forward in committee by the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Spencer) was not the one he has made this evening. At that time he said the banks were in breach of the law, when taking more than seven per cent on loaned money and that it behooved institutions to respect the law, even though they happened to be possessed of a large quantity of this world's goods. That argument was developed. Hon. members attempted to show it was very improper that banks should be allowed to disrespect the law, when individuals were held to strict accountability for their actions.

It was pointed out that the clause of the Bank Act relating to interest is in the following terms:

> The bank may stipulate for, take, reserve or exact any rate of interest or discount not exceeding seven per cent per annum, and may receive and take in advance any such rate, but no higher rate of interest shall be recoverable by the bank.

That is, a bank may legally charge any rate of interest it sees fit to charge which is not usurious within the meaning of our statutes; but it may not recover before the courts any rate of interest which is in excess of seven per cent. Transactions of this character are not restricted to those coming within the Bank Act; there is a whole category of transactions in which men engage from day to day, in which large sums of money change hands, but which are not enforceable before the courts. If a bank lends money for ten per cent it may not go before the courts and enforce collection, because in so far as enforcing collection is concerned the banks are restricted to seven per cent; and if a gentleman having engaged to pay ten per cent, refuses to pay more than seven per cent, he cannot be coerced into paying the higher rate. As I said in the committee, that may be one reason why interest is collected in advance.

Coming to the merits of the bill, Mr. Speaker, most commodities have a price, a price which fluctuates, and money is one of them. I can assure the hon. gentleman from Battle River (Mr. Spencer) that there are very few members who do not wish that money did not cost as much as it does to-day, just as there are many members who wish that wheat and butter cost more than they do to-day; but prices fluctuate from causes over which men cannot at all times exercise control, and unless the hon. gentleman is willing to go to the length of enacting legislation to coerce and conscript capital, I doubt if this bill will bring to his constituents the measure of relief which he is seeking for them. It will merely mean that people will not get money if money is worth more than seven per cent—unless they are dealing with a philanthropic society; money will go where it can get its price and it will not be loaned or sold for less than the market price. That is a truism.

I mentioned the other day in the committee that the provisions of this bill, while possibly new to this house, did not contain an idea that is entirely novel. It has been incorporated into the banking laws of several New England states, where I know that it is just about as effective as is the eighteenth amendment to the American Constitution. There are ways around it. When money is worth more than six per cent, which is the legal rate in Vermont, for instance, where it is not competent to a national bank to lend money at a higher rate of interest, methods are devised to defeat the law—commissions, gratuities, arrangements for insurance, and so on, all of which result inevitably in the borrower paying the current rate of interest. Some years ago—and this is entirely by the way—I attended a prosecution of a bank manager in Vermont, who it was proven had loaned money at a rate of interest in excess of that fixed by the statute; he was liable to a penalty similar, although not identical in amount, to that suggested by the member for Battle River. The ways of juries are strange, I will admit: the facts were clearly proven, but the jury refused to find the accused guilty, simply because the borrower had, of his own free will, stipulated to pay seven per cent when money was worth seven per cent.

The hon. gentleman from Battle River has told us that banks are the only institutions which have not reduced their dividends. That is true, but only technically so. They have not in most instances reduced their dividends, but they have reduced their payments to their shareholders. I am sure that the hon. gentleman knows that our chartered banks have for many years paid to their shareholders, two, three and four per cent in excess of dividends by way of bonuses, these amounts have been paid regularly and have been relied upon by the recipients as part of their revenue. I assume he knows, as I do, that in almost all instances these bonuses have ceased to accrue. So in fact banks, like other institutions in the country, have been confronted with reduced earnings.

We saw the other day that the province of Alberta negotiated a loan. We know that it is a rich province, we know that its credit is good, yet its six per cent bonds were sold on a basis of six and a half per cent, and probably they cost the province, taking into consideration the incidental cost of financing, between six and a half and seven per cent.

It may be said that that circumstance can be turned against the banks, and it may be a reason to conscript wealth. But it is an incontrovertible argument, I think, against the proposed legislation contained in this bill, because it shows that, regardless of credit, money has its fixed price, and that that price must be paid by those who would enjoy its use at this time. The important point, I think, is to make it clear that whatever may be said for or against the banks, they have carried on their business and are carrying it on legally. I submit that as a matter of business my hon. friend from Battle River has given the very best reason for money being high in the part of the world to which he refers. Interest rates depend to some extent upon the solvency and the liquid state of the assets of the debtor. When the debtor is in difficult circumstances; when he has no security and cannot pay, the hazard is greater and of necessity the rate is higher. My hon. friend told us of an unfortunate farmer who could not pay, whose stock was seized and who was sold out. That is unfortunate, but is that not the law in its common application to everyone, whether he be big or small, who cannot pay an obligation to which he has committed himself?

I am opposed to the amendment because I do not think it will yield the hon. member for Battle River and his constituents the assistance which he is seeking for them.

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Coote) which was negatived on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Ahearn, Baribeau, Beaubien, Bertrand, Beynon, Boucher, Boulanger, Brasset, Brown, Butcher, Campbell, Carmichael, Casgrain, Chevrier, Coote, Desrochers, Dorion, Dubois, Dumaine, Dupuis, Euler, Factor, Fontaine, Gardiner, Garland (Bow River), Gershaw, Goulet, Hall, Heaps, Ilsley, Irvine, Laflèche, Larue, Loucks, Lucas, Luchkovich, MacInnis, Mackenzie (Vancouver Centre), MacLean, Macphail (Miss), McIntosh, McKenzie (Assiniboia), McMillan (Huron South), McPhee, Mercier (Laurier-Outremont), Mitchell, Motherwell, Neill, Parent, Perley (Qu'Appelle), Perras, Power, Reid, Rhéaume, St-Père, Sanderson, Séguin, Speakman, Stewart (Edmonton West), Thauvette, Turnbull, Urquhart, Vallance, Woodsworth.—64.

NAYS

Messrs:

Anderson (Toronto-High Park), Anderson (Halton), Arsenault, Arthurs, Baker, Barrette, Belec, Bell (St. John-Albert), Black (Halifax), Bothwell, Bourgeois, Bowen, Boyes, Burns, Casselman, Cormier, Cowan (Long Lake), Dickie, Donnelly, Duff, Duguay, Duranleau, Embury, Ernst, Esling, Fortin, Fraser (Cariboo), Garland (Carleton), Geary, Gobeil, Gordon, Hackett, Hanson (York-Sunbury), Hay, Johnstone, Jones, Kennedy (Winnipeg South Centre), Laurin, Lawson, MacDonald (Cape Breton South), Macdougall, MacMillan (Saskatoon), McDade, McGibbon, McGillis, McLure, Matthews, Moore (Chateauguay-Huntingdon), Morand, Murphy, Myers, Pettit, Pickel, Plunkett, Porteous, Price, Robinson, Rogers, Ross, Ryckman, Sauvé, Senn, Shaver, Simpson (Simcoe North), Simpson (Algoma West), Smith (Victoria-Carleton), Smith (Cumberland), Spankie, Spence, Sproule, Stanley, Stevens, Stewart (Leeds), Stewart (Lethbridge), Stinson, Stirling, Stitt (Nelson), Sullivan, Sutherland, Tétrault, Thompson (Simcoe East), Thompson (Lanark), Tummon, Weir (Melfort), White (Mount Royal), Willis, Wilson, Wright.—88.

Motion (Mr. Spencer) negatived on the same division, above recorded.

Mr. MacLAREN: I was paired with the hon. member for Rimouski (Sir Eugène Fiset). Had I voted, I would have voted against the amendment.

UNEMPLOYMENT AND FARM RELIEF

CONTINUANCE ACT, 1932—CONSIDERATION OF RESOLUTION

The house resumed consideration of the motion of the Prime Minister that Mr.

Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee of the whole on the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to introduce a bill to amend chapter 58 of the statutes of Canada, 1931, striking out the word "March" in section 8, and substituting the word "May" therefor.

Mr. THOMAS McMILLAN (South Huron): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that I am a layman the house will be surprised at my venturing into the realm of legalities. I wonder at the attitude adopted by the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett). I always looked upon him as being a wizard among the great lights of the legal world. However, since taking my seat in this house I have often thought we have had to listen to more trash in the way of legal technicalities than I have heard during all my previous life. The resolution reads:

Resolved, that it is expedient to introduce a bill to amend chapter 58 of the statutes of Canada, 1931, striking out the word "March" in section 8, and substituting the word "May" therefor.

Section 8 of the act reads:

This act shall expire on the 1st day of March, 1932.

The first point I wish to make is, I am not dealing with legal technicalities, but sojourning in the field of common sense. Here we are discussing on March 15, the question of amending this act. One grain of common sense should tell us that this act is just as dead and defunct as is Mother Shipton, with whom my right hon. friend is so pleased to converse, and who, I am sure, must have expired one hundred years ago. Why should we discuss an act of this kind? Is it not reasonable to request the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) to withdraw this legislation in order that we may discuss something into which we can instil life? The resolution upon which this act was based reads:

That it is expedient to bring in a measure to confer certain powers upon the governor in council in respect to unemployment and farm relief; and for the maintenance of peace, order and good government in all parts of Canada; and to authorize the governor in council to expend for the said purposes out of the consolidated revenue fund such sums as may from time to time be necessary.

What is the meaning of that resolution upon which the act was based? Does it not mean that the government asked for authority to be allowed to ride roughshod over the constitutional rights of parliament and to do anything which the most abandoned citizen of this country might feel inclined to do? I do not say that the government will do that, but the power is there. I will discuss this phase of the matter later on, but I ask the house to realize that this is March 15, fifteen days after the act expired. I ask the right hon. gentleman to bear in mind the warning given by Julius Caesar—Beware the ides of March.

This legislation is but the logical sequence of the record of this government since it obtained office on August 8, 1930. During the election campaign the Prime Minister promised that he would end unemployment by federal means. He referred to the members of the King cabinet as "this group of mercenaries holding office by sham and subterfuge. Look upon them as treacherous to you; self-confessed, deserving of your passionate condemnation;" hurl them from place and power and select the great I Am who will lead you into the promised land and do that which ought to be done for the welfare of this country. That was the promise he made during the elections. That promise was implemented when in September, 1930, he called the special session of parliament presumably for the purpose of ending unemployment by federal means. In about as little time as it takes to tell, he scrapped the whole theory of ending unemployment by federal means, sought a vote of $20,000,000 for the purpose and saddled over three-quarters of the cost upon the provinces and municipalities of this dominion. What else did he do? His first expression on the floor of parliament as Prime Minister of Canada was "that in so far as possible the requirements of the ten millions of Canadian people must be produced at home," thereby showing at once that he and his government did not wish to encourage the importation of any line of goods which could be produced in this country, thus drying up the stream of trade and paralyzing our greatest industry, that of agriculture.

His next act in amplification of this course was to jack up the Canadian tariff against the importation of British goods almost to the prohibitive point, practically wiping out the British preference before he and his colleagues ever went to the Imperial conference, thereby ejecting British goods at the toe of the boot from Canadian markets which they had enjoyed for a lifetime.

His third act was to pass some of the most unreasonable customs and tariff legislation ever forced through the parliament of any country, and he did this under the threat that until all this legislation to which I have referred, was passed, he would refuse to leave Ottawa to go to the Imperial conference. It is well known that every member of the house wished the Prime Minister to perform his duty at the Imperial conference in London, and we allowed these acts to pass without sufficient analysis or discussion. The Prime Minister with his colleagues went to the Imperial conference, leaving us with a lavish promise that there would be free and open discussion at the next session of parliament.

The next session commenced on the 12th day of March, 1931. Every representative came to Ottawa with the idea of hearing something of what should be done to cure unemployment in Canada, because we know at that time it was worse than it had been since he assumed the reins of power. As I say, the house assembled on the 12th day of March. On March 20 the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) rose in his place and asked the ministry if any special measures were contemplated to cope with the unemployment situation. There was no answer from any member of the cabinet. On March 23 the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Heenan) rose in his place and asked what the government intended to do with regard to unemployment in his constituency. There was still no answer. The Prime Minister said that the question could stand. On March 31 the hon. member for North Winnipeg rose and moved the adjournment of the house, but his motion was ruled out of order. On April 17 the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River again brought the question before the house, and failing to get a satisfactory answer from the government, he moved the adjournment of the house, but the motion was defeated. This was the manner in which we were allowed a full discussion of the problem of unemployment.

On April 24, the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) asked whether the government intended to call a dominion unemployment conference. The Prime Minister replied:

> The hon. member will be advised when the event happens, if it does happen.

On May 25 the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) directed the attention of the government, and particularly the acting Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon) to the desperate condition existing in the city of Nanaimo over the matter of unemployment, and urged the government to deal with the situation immediately. The minister said that the matter was purely a provincial one, and this in face of the fact that during the election campaign, as I have said, the Prime Minister had stated here and there throughout Canada that this had become a national problem and we should deal with it in a national way.

On May 26, on the motion to go into committee of supply, the hon. member for Comox-Alberni discussed the urgent necessity of holding a conference. A lengthy debate followed, but not a word was uttered by any member of the government. On June 8 the hon. member for Comox-Alberni brought the matter once more to the attention of the government, but the Deputy Speaker ruled him out of order. On June 29 the hon. member for Kenora Rainy River again brought up the matter and the Prime Minister replied;

> At an appropriate time a statement will be made. . . . The primary duty with respect to unemployment does not rest with the federal government.

That shows the way in which he scrapped the theory which he had announced to the electorate of Canada during the whole period of his election campaign, of ending unemployment by federal means.

On June 30, the hon. member for Willow Bunch (Mr. Donnelly) directed attention to the appalling situation in Saskatchewan, and the Prime Minister replied:

> The primary responsibility . . . rests with the municipal authorities and the province.

This is the manner in which the government continued until July 29 when legislation was introduced. The Prime Minister then said:

> What alone concerns us is that many of our people are now in want, and unless extraordinary measures are taken many more will know hardship and privation in the coming months of winter. Knowing this it becomes our solemn duty to aid them. In the short session of parliament last September and in the one now drawing to a close this government did all within its power to strengthen our economic structure and to repulse the wave of world-wide economic depression which was then upon us.

I would say that the effect of all his work has rather been to plunge this country into the most desperate economic and unemployment condition which exists to-day. I can tell the Prime Minister that in my section of Ontario there is a decided feeling of scarcely concealable unrest and dissatisfaction over the way in which the government has been administering the affairs of this country, more particularly along economic and unemployment lines.

On a recent occasion when I visited my own home I met one of the most prominent citizens, a lifelong Conservative, but a man of sterling integrity. He had represented his township at the county council for many years. His first expression was: "What are you fellows doing down there at Ottawa?" Of course, I explained to him that we were tied hand and foot, that we of the Liberal party could do nothing, that we had a Prime Minister who was acting in an autocratic manner, and that although he had surrounding him a cabinet of ministers who ought to be good men, yet they seemed to act as though they were minions at his feet. My friend would not allow me to say another word. "Mac," he said, "you know what I have always been in politics, and I can tell you that if we only had an opportunity to cast our ballots the government would wonder where their support had gone in my section of the country."

I speak the mind, I believe, of every member of this chamber when I say that we assembled here on the 4th of February with the intention of helping to discharge the business of this house with all reasonable despatch. That was proved to be the intention at least on this side of the house by the fact that we passed the address in reply in less than two days, first because there was nothing in the speech from the throne, and secondly because we did not want in any way to hold up the business of the house. From that time to this unemployment has repeatedly struck the House of Commons.

As I say, the resolution which I have read and which forms the basis of the bill to be enacted, gives the government power to ride roughshod over the constitutional rights of parliament and to do anything which they may be disposed to do without asking the members of the House of Commons anything about it whatever. It is simply trampling under foot the very first principle of constitutional government, namely government of the people, by the people and for the people. The only reason why the people themselves do not all come down here—for we are living in a free democracy—to help carry out the work of legislation is that it is not practical for them to do so; therefore they have chosen the members of this house as their representatives to act for them in this parliament. But by enacting this legislation the government practically says to the members of this house: You had better go home, because you are of no use here.

I hold in my hand the estimates for the present fiscal year. The action which this government is inclined to take in passing this legislation is such that they might just as well present the estimates in a bulk sum and say to us: Here is a total of some $356,000,000 of estimates. Pass them at one gulp. If you do not do it, it does not make any difference, because we will pass them anyway. Under this legislation, Mr. Speaker, the government if they were so inclined could change these estimates at any time. That is the sum and substance of the legislation which this government is asking the house to pass. What are we here for? Is it not to use our best judgment in helping to legislate for the good of this country? Or are we here simply as puppets to bow and scrape at the nod and beck of the grasping, self-willed, autocratic, dictatorial power which now exercises sway over this House of Commons? I would ask the government to realize that all despotism is bad, but the worst kind of despotism is that which is exercised with the machinery of freedom. I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, and through you the members of this house, to realize that we have recently emerged from the greatest conflict of the ages, and this world is groaning with the financial burden as a result thereof. I am reminded of the words of Lord Byron, who in his ode to Napoleon Bonaparte at the close of the Napoleonic wars, said:

> Then haste thee to thy sullen isle,
> And gaze upon the sea;
> That element may meet thy smile—
> It ne'er was ruled by thee!
> Or trace with thine all idle hand
> In loitering mood upon the sand
> That earth is now so free!

But, Mr. Speaker, subsequent events have proved that after all this world was not so free as some of the historians of that day evidently thought it was, because after the lapse of another hundred years we have recently emerged from the greatest conflict of the ages. What was the cause of that conflict? It was caused by the prosecution of the doctrine that the freedom and liberty and humanity of the subject is a matter of no concern, that the people are simply the serfs and chattels of the state, and that the state and high command should be all supreme. That is the doctrine against which we fought for four long years, and we know well that we should now be under the yoke of autocracy and despotism had the allied powers not gained the victory. Yet in imitation of the kaiser himself, in the guise of a dictator, we have the government through the medium of this bill laying down the law of autocracy when it in effect says that the representatives of the people here assembled are of no more account, that they are no more needed, than a herd of dumb, driven cattle; that in effect they should be silenced and told to go home because their services are no longer needed here.

This is the most vicious legislation, Mr. Speaker, of which I can conceive. I am surprised at the attitude of my hon. friends opposite, and more particularly of my good friend the Minister of National Revenue (Mr.

Ryckman) who sits in his place smiling, and who has an absolute disregard for the rights and privileges of a free people. I am led to that conclusion after the manner in which he has discharged his duties since the short session of parliament in September, 1930. He knows that because of legislation for which he is responsible the stability of business has been destroyed to such a degree that every prospective trader is afraid to launch out and do business because he may never know the valuation upon which he will have to pay duty. Common sense should tell us that the valuation which should be put on goods imported into this country is the reasonable price paid for them. Yet under the legislation to which I have referred power can be given to the Minister of National Revenue to set whatever valuation he may wish, without any reference whatever to the purchase price, and whenever he feels inclined to do it.

That is the sort of legislation to which we are opposed, and which we will not suffer. That is the type of legislation which is placing the people of Canada in a restive condition, and is making them wonder how long such a condition will continue. Legislation such as that is something against which every fibre of my nature rebels. What does it mean? It means that under the measure which the government now seeks to pass, and which has been in existence since August 3 last, any man may be deprived of his home, separated from his family, thrown into prison, his property confiscated—all those things without a fair trial at the hands of his peers. For my part, Mr. Speaker, I have no desire whatever to impede the business of the house, but concerning an autocratic measure such as this I would be disposed to stay here as long as possible to uphold the rights of the people and perform the duties allocated to me by my constituents.

The Prime Minister talks about preserving untarnished the dignity of the high position he has been permitted to fill. By his attitude he has grovelled in the dust and exposed to public view, those who are near and dear to him, whereas if he had only considered the source whence such scurrilous attacks had come, and let that fact be sufficient for its own condemnation, I am certain he would have had the approval of every right thinking person in Canada. Where do we find him to-day? By his prosecution of this vicious legislation he is doing more than words can express to dishonour the high position he is now allowed to adorn. Does he not know it is just such legislation as the government is now trying to put through the house that in days gone by caused the heads of kings to be toppled into waste baskets?

O wad some power the giftie gie us
To see oursels as ithers see us!
It wad frae mony a blunder free us,
An' foolish notion:
What airs in dress an' gait wad lea'e us,
An' ev'n devotion!

I feel like making a further quotation from the works of the same national poet:

But mousie, thou art no thy lane
In proving foresight may be vain;
The best laid schemes o' mice an' men
Gang aft agley,
An' lea'e us nought but grief an' pain,
For promis'd joy!

I appeal to the Prime Minister and the members of his cabinet, I appeal to the Minister of Justice to withdraw this legislation. If they will present a reasonable supply bill in a constitutional way we will pass it at once. If they will proceed in a proper constitutional manner we are willing to help them. I have reviewed the discussions of last session on the legislation then put into force which took from parliament matters which should be under the exclusive control of that body. That legislation established a virtual dictatorship, violated the basic principle of the control of parliament over national expenditures, and was more sweeping and far-reaching than the war measures introduced by Sir Robert Borden. As has been so often said by hon. members on this side, during the whole period of the war Sir Robert Borden never ventured to do anything in the autocratic and despotic manner now being followed by this government.

I need not review all the measures they have been enacting; we have heard about them time and again. However I ask the government to realize that they are pursuing a doctrine which, if persisted in will destroy the liberty of Canadians, and one which is taking the power from the hands of parliament to do those things parliament should be allowed to do. Certainly parliament in session should not be deprived of such powers. Any time within the next two months this government would be at liberty to call upon parliament to pass a supply bill, and there is no doubt that any reasonable legislation presented in a constitutional manner would be passed without delay. The more I think of it the more I think hon. members on this side of the house should uphold our principles to the bitter end. If there is a possibility of preventing the passage of the proposed legislation now before us, certainly we should at the present time take steps to that end.

I often wonder what kind of common clay members of the government think Liberals are made. Do they not know that we possess the same spirit by virtue of which in days gone by we fought autocracy and despotism and which made possible the enjoyment of our present freedom? The freedom enjoyed in Canada and throughout the world is due to the sacrifices of those who have gone before. As they have sacrificed for us, it is our duty to sacrifice for those who will follow us. It is the same spirit which courses through our veins that led that Scottish national poet to say:

> If I'm design'd yon lordling's slave—
> By Nature's law design'd—
> Why was an independent wish
> E'er planted in my mind?
> If not, why am I subject to
> His cruelty, or scorn?
> Or why has man the will and pow'r
> To make his fellow mourn?

It is the same spirit which moved Robert Burns when in speaking of his native country, he said:

> O Scotia! my dear, my native soil!
> For whom my warmest wish to Heaven is sent,
> Long may thy hardy sons of rustic toil
> Be blest with health, and peace, and sweet content!
> And O! may Heaven their simple lives prevent
> From luxury's contagion, weak and vile!
> Then, how'er crowns and coronets be rent,
> A virtuous populace may rise the while,
> And stand a wall of fire around their much-lov'd isle.

It is the same spirit which coursed through his veins when he said:

> O Thou! who pour'd the patriotic tide,
> That streame'd thro' Wallace's undaunted heart,
> Who dar'd to, nobly, stem tyrannic pride,
> Or nobly die, the second glorious part.

That is the spirit which actuates the members of the Liberal party in opposing the legislation now before the house.

The ACTING SPEAKER (Mr. Smith, Cumberland): Order. The hon. member has spoken forty minutes.

Mr. W. A. BEYNON (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, it is with some diffidence that I rise to address the house after the poetic eloquence of the member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan). I do not intend to devote any considerable time to a discussion of the constitutional question involved in this resolution, but rather to deal with the practical question of unemployment relief.

Last Friday evening the ex-Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) treated us to one of his characteristic speeches and dealt at some length with the administration of relief in Saskatchewan. One of the first questions he propounded to this side of the house was: Why were the municipal organizations of the province not used for the purpose of the administration of relief? That question can be very easily answered. The municipal organization had been used before the relief commission was set up, but the results were so unsatisfactory that it was deemed advisable to make a change. The hon. gentleman stated that the municipal councils were wholly non-political. Regardless of his statement, I say without fear of contradiction from the people of Saskatchewan that to a large extent that was not true. There were municipal councils that were wholly non-political, but they were few in number, and while the municipal organizations were administering relief, the dissatisfaction was very, very pronounced, as the relief was administered inequitably. That was one of the reasons for discontinuing their services. Another reason was that even where the municipal councils were non-political and did their utmost to administer relief—

Mr. TOTZKE: Did the hon. member say the municipal councils were political?

Mr. BEYNON: Oh, yes.

Mr. TOTZKE: What does he mean by that?

Mr. BEYNON: The hon. gentleman heard me the first time.

Mr. TOTZKE: Yes, but what does the hon. member mean by that?

An hon. MEMBER: They were Grits.

Mr. BEYNON: I do not think anyone coming from Saskatchewan seriously disputes it. In fact, I might just tell the house that for the last twenty-five years there was very little, if anything, in the province that had not had politics in it.

Mr. COWAN (Long Lake): On the wrong side.

Mr. BEYNON: That is common knowledge in Saskatchewan and I can get confirmation of it from members not on this side of the house. Even when the municipal councils that were not political tried their utmost to administer the unemployment relief fairly, their efforts caused dissatisfaction for the reason that naturally the various municipal councils would not have the same basis on which to administer relief. Consequently one council would adminster relief more generously than another; a man living on this side of the road in one municipality would get more than his neighbour on the other side of the road in another municipality. Therefore there was very great dissatisfaction. In those cases it was not the fault of the councils administering the relief, it was the fault of the system. Added to that was the fact that each councillor wanted to get the utmost for his division, which was quite natural, quite human; but that also led to great dissatisfaction, because the more energetic, the more forceful character got a greater share of the relief for his division than others who were not so aggressive, and this of course caused great dissatisfaction. For all these reasons it was deemed advisable to set up an absolutely independent organization to administer this relief uniformly and equitably over the whole province. It is significant that the testimony from both sides of the house shows that the course taken was more than justified by the results.

Then the member for Weyburn (Mr. Young) and the ex-Minister of Agriculture devoted some attention to the personnel of the commission and the general manager and officers thereof. The member for Weyburn stated that all the relief officers were appointed by a political organizer. Naturally he does not know that of his own knowledge, but he draws that conclusion from certain facts that did come to his attention, and largely on one fact in particular, that he went into the office of the relief commission and one of the commissioners told him that they had the list and were going to appoint the relief officers at the next meeting. Being politically minded the hon. member naturally assumed that this was a list prepared by a Conservative organizer and handed in to the commission. That the commission had the list is true. At least I assume they did have such a list, because I do not think the commission should have attempted to appoint relief officers from the voters' list. Certainly some preliminary work would have to be done and was done. What is more, those men could not be compelled to accept the office; they had to be consulted and give their consent. This was done; in fact they signed an undertaking to carry on the work. After they were appointed they were given their instructions and advised how to carry on. So when the member for Weyburn says all these men were appointed by a Tory organizer he is merely drawing a conclusion and not stating a fact of his own knowledge.

Mr. YOUNG: Mr. Speaker, the fact I stated was that they were selected by a Conservative organizer. That is a fact.

Mr. BEYNON: It is equally untrue.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. BEYNON: I may also inform the hon. member for Weyburn that one of those relief officers was recommended to the commission by the Hon. James G. Gardiner, ex-premier of Saskatchewan, and by a peculiar coincidence—perhaps it was only an accident—he named a Liberal. Another officer, the relief officer of the municipality of Baildon, is the reeve of that municipality, which is down near my hon. friend's constituency of Weyburn. If my hon. friend goes to that municipality and tells that relief officer he is a Conservative, he had better take someone along to call an undertaker, because he will need one. There never was a man in the province of Saskatchewan more anti-Conservative than the relief officer of that municipality, and if any Tory organizer chose him for political purposes that organizer was simply crazy.

I have referred to two of these officers. I will tell my hon. friend further that I do not think one of the relief officers in Last Mountain is a Conservative, and I do not think there is even a Conservative on the committees in that municipality. Yet the hon. member comes here and says all these people were chosen by Conservative organizers.

Now I will say just a word as to the commission itself. Hon. members opposite were very careful not to criticize the personnel of the commission or adversely to criticize its functioning. I did not know the chairman of that commission, Mr. Henry Black of Regina, until he was appointed. He is a man of means; he is a busy man, but he has given a great deal of his time to the service of his country without remuneration, and naturally hon. gentlemen opposite hesitate to criticize very severely one who has rendered such wonderful service, and without playing politics at all. Mr. Yuill, another member of the commission, has been a lifelong Liberal. The ex-Minister of Agriculture described him as a sort of indifferent Liberal, but I say he has been a very consistent Liberal, and for some time his brother has been president of the Liberal association of Saskatchewan. I will say this for Mr. Yuill, however, that in his capacity as commissioner he has forgotten politics, and he is the first Liberal I have ever found who could do that. Hon. gentlemen opposite dare not criticize that commission because the Liberal member of it would come out in the press and tell them, as he has told many people already, that he has never found a better, more non-political, more self-sacrificing or more devoted body of men.

Now I come to the general manager, and this was where the ex-Minister of Agriculture took a little slap at myself. He said this gentleman organized the Conservative campaign in the constituency of Moose Jaw. That is very true; he did, and that is why I am here.

Mr. VALLANCE: Is that much of a recommendation?

Mr. BEYNON: Just as much as it is for the man who is responsible for my hon. friend being here. I will tell you this, that the people of Moose Jaw, regardless of their political affiliations, agree that that was the cleanest campaign ever staged in that constituency.

What has this man done? He was called upon, as general manager of this organization, to build an organization from the ground up, and to undertake one of the most momentous tasks ever undertaken in Canada. He could not choose men and women trained in that particular work; he had to go out among the unemployed and the needy and choose his staff and form his organization. He did that. An organization was built up, with inexperienced people, men and women taken off the streets, and in a very short time the organization was functioning. Indeed, people all over the country marvelled at the expedition with which that organization was built up and put in operation, and now it is functioning in as nearly a perfect manner as it is possible for a human organization to function. What was the result? The hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young) could tell you the result; he has already told the house At page 1041 of Hansard, speaking of the Prime Minister, my hon. friend said:

> He boasted the other night of the achievements of the Saskatchewan Relief Commission; he told us how efficient they were, how honourable and trustworthy, how impartially they had done their work. I agree with him. There is credit coming to that commission. From what I have seen they have functioned efficiently and impartially from the time they first began to function. No doubt if my hon. friend had so desired he could have set up a commission that would have played politics and would have tried to make political capital for himself and for his party out of the situation: but he did not do so, and we give him credit for it.

Does the ex-Minister of Agriculture expect me to apologize, after a man of that character has been appointed to be general manager of the commission, simply because he organized my campaign? My only regret is that I cannot take all the credit for having had that man appointed as head of the commission. Not only has the commission functioned efficiently and impartially, but there has not been even a suggestion of graft made in connection with it, though it has handled millions of dollars. I think this is one of the few times in the history of Canada that such an undertaking has been accomplished without some suggestion of graft or mismanagement.

Then there is another feature. There never has been such an undertaking carried on at such small expense. I happened to be in Regina a few weeks before I came down here, and there I met a lady who is a very good supporter of the Liberal party. I was talking to her, and she referred to the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King). She said to me, in a very confidential tone of voice, "You know, he is our greatest expert on the cost of relief administration, and he tells us that you cannot administer relief at a cost of less than 18 per cent." Of course he was talking of relief carried on under Liberal administration. The cost of administering this relief in Saskatchewan will be less than 4 per cent; as a matter of fact I think it will be less than 3½ per cent. No such record has ever been made before, but the ex-Minister of Agriculture comes along and says, "I have not much to say about Mr. Daniel; he is a good man, but a Tory organizer."

Going a little further, Mr. Speaker, I wish to make just one more reference. The fame of this Saskatchewan Relief Commission has spread far and wide; letters come to its offices almost daily from all over the United States and other countries of the world, asking how the commission is operated and how it was set up, and inquiring as to the secret of its unprecedented efficiency. Such is the fame of the commission with which my hon. friends tried to find fault.

I want to refer further to the speech of the former Minister of Agriculture. At one point in this speech I began to get rather apprehensive; I thought that something had really happened of which I had not heard. He is reported on page 1060 of Hansard as having said:

> Mr. Kendall, therefore, holds the key to the entire position. How has he used it?

A question like that naturally makes one a little apprehensive. He continued:

> I will speak only of my own municipality and allow the house to come to its own conclusions.

It is a little hard for anyone living in Saskatchewan to know just how to find the municipality of the hon. gentleman. It might be in the electoral district of Assiniboia, it might be in Qu'Appelle, Melville or Kindersley; one is in danger of getting lost when trying to find this itinerant parliamentarian and gypsy politician. However, if one follows his trail he will find where the covered wagon is parked, and most likely that will prove to be the former minister's political home for the time being. That may be where his municipality is, but I do not know.

After the ex-minister told us of what had been done in his own municipality, we on this side began to feel a little nervous. I will read on and see what this dastardly thing was in connection with which he asked the house to come to its own conclusion. He said:

There were ten relief officers there, one being paid and nine non-paid. The paid officer is Mr. J. R. Dinnin. If the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Perley) is here,—

I began to get frightened right there.

—he knows that you cannot get a more respectable citizen than Mr. Dinnin. As it happens, he was my Conservative opponent in 1925.

The former minister continued:

I will guarantee that he will discharge his duties as squarely as he knows how.

I began to feel a little relieved, and then I began to think that he could not be giving all this commendation unless there was something desperate to follow. He continued:

Then you have three of them. Of the other seven, six are Conservative.

I began to wonder what was coming next. He said:

I have not a word to say against them,—

That struck me as being rather peculiar. I thought perhaps if he had not a word to say against any one individual he would have something to say against them collectively, but here is what he said:

—but they are no good to me in election time,—

That is the thing which he left to this house to be judged. The minister of elections is running true to form.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Finish that sentence.

Mr. BEYNON: He said:

—although they are a lot of good to the other fellow.

Mr. VALLANCE: That is the reason why they are there.

Mr. BEYNON: Then he went on to try to make out that a deal had been put over on the Liberals. He said that a Liberal had been appointed here and there to act as a scapegoat, so that if any blame was to be put upon the commission it could be saddled on the poor Liberals. I think his own fellow members have answered this. The hon. member for Last Mountain (Mr. Butcher), and the hon. member for Weyburn have said that no scapegoat is necessary, that no fault can be placed on anyone. The former minister continues:

They have appointed a body that is actually worse than if it were one hundred per cent Tory,—

If there were Liberals on it, of course that would be true. It is sometimes necessary to sacrifice efficiency in order to be fair. Wherever a Liberal was appointed, an extra good Tory was placed alongside him and the thing worked out very nicely.

That is the whole sum and substance of the criticism by the former Minister of Agriculture of this commission. His whole cry is that Mr. Daniel was a Conservative organizer, If there is a job to do and there is a qualified man available—the former minister says himself he was an efficient organizer—one does not stop to question the man as to his politics, his race or his creed. That is exactly what we did in the formation of this relief commission in Saskatchewan, and the fact that hon. members on the other side have stood up and given it a clear bill of health is the best evidence of what we have accomplished.

The former minister then devoted a little time to another gentleman, Mr. P. H. Gordon, K.C., of Regina. I happen to know Mr. Gordon, he has practised law in Regina for a great many years, having commenced as a young man. He has worked up to the top of his profession and there is no citizen in Regina more highly respected than Mr. Gordon. He is a gentleman who stands high in his profession and in the community, and has devoted himself to the public service in all branches of community work. He was asked to assist in the supervising of this commission. There was no remuneration attached to the position and he was a very busy man, in fact, no lawyer in Regina has more cases in the courts of appeal or in the trial courts than Mr. Gordon. He told me that this work takes up about nine-tenths of his time, and all the thanks he gets is to have the former Minister of Agriculture come here and throw out insidious insinuations, veiled inferences and subtle innuendos. How can we expect the people of this country to come out and render public service if this is the treatment they are to get from an ex-minister of the crown, a man who should stand up for all that is best in this country and have some regard for those who are trying to render service in a time of crisis?

He then said that the present Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) should have resigned rather than to allow his estimates to be cut. The former minister has made a great contribution to agriculture. The following report appeared in The Leader-Post of Regina, on October 19:

> That a fresh foundation had to be laid for agriculture in Canada both east and west if the country and towns are to be saved, was the statement made Saturday morning by Hon. W. R. Motherwell, of Abernethy, Minister of Agricullture in the King administration.
>
> The task ahead is beyond the lone effort of any individual or any government, according to Mr. Motherwell. He believes a royal commission can get at the facts, can find out how other countries have met the physical problems confronting Canadian agriculture to-day, and will have prestige enough to cause the country to take note of what has to be done.

He acted for thirteen years as provincial Minister of Agriculture and for nine years as federal minister, and yet he says that a new foundation has to be laid for agriculture and a royal commission should be appointed to find out the facts. I do not know anything about the facts, and if I did I have not the prestige to get the people to listen. The hon. member comes along and says to the Minister of Agriculture that he should have resigned rather than submit to a cut in his estimates. He looked over at the minister and said: I resigned once from the government and I stayed resigned until I got what I wanted. That is true. He did resign. As I watched his face the other evening, I just wondered whether he had seen the joke or whether he thought we had not. The fact is that he stayed resigned and when he handed in his resignation to the government, the government got what it wanted. Consequently, it withdrew the obnoxious measure, but held it in readiness lest the cat should come back. Ever since then the hon. member has been a little slow about resigning, and that perhaps accounts for the fact that he did not listen to the pleadings of his present leader when he wanted to use him as an instrument to redeem his long-forgotten pledge to reform the Senate.

There was one other matter to which the ex-minister referred, and I should like to mention it. He said that we on the back benches, along with the ministry, must share the responsibility of standing behind the Prime Minister, and he threatens us with political extinction, political death if we do not rise up and by our resignations compel the Prime Minister to take some other course than the one he has taken. Well, you know there are some leaders who need to be bullied in that way. Then there are others who are in a position where they do not need bullying. If there is some question as to whether the leadership should remain in Prince Albert, or be taken to Nova Scotia, or perhaps out to Vancouver, then a leader is very sensitive and responds very quickly to any threat of resignation. But if a leader has a good, substantial and loyal following; if he has personality and force of character, and if he outlines a policy that will appeal to his followers, he has not very much to fear in going ahead and carrying it out; and even the admonitions from the other side are not likely to do him very much harm.

The hon. member wanted to know why we took promissory notes; and further, what authority we had for taking them. He said that the people of Canada had not urged this. I hold in my hand a clipping from the Leader-Post of February 18, 1932, and one would almost think it had been prepared by the hon. gentleman himself, because the body of it is so very far from the headline that it sounds quite Liberal:

> Farmers deny Bennett statement they asked to sign relief notes.

That is the headline. Then it goes on:

> There are scores of farmers receiving relief in the drought areas of Saskatchewan, who do not agree with the statement from Ottawa, quoting Right Hon. R. B. Bennett, Premier of Canada, as saying Wednesday that "the system under which drought sufferers in southern Saskatchewan who obtained government relief were required to sign promissory notes was adopted at the request of the beneficiaries themselves."

Just listen to this:

> Two of many such are F. C. Parchman and J. H. Hicks, Laflèche,—

An hon. MEMBER: They found two.

Mr. BEYNON: Yes, and they are down in the constituency of the hon. member for Willow Bunch (Mr. Donnelly).

> —who told the Leader-Post Thursday morning that they had not made any such suggestion, even to the municipal officials, when these officials started to organize for relief in June, 1931.

So there are two men in Saskatchewan who had not suggested that.

Both Mr. Hicks and Mr. Parchman said—

It is qualified here.

> —they had no recollection of suggesting promissory notes in payment of relief—

Listen to what follows.

> —but—

This sounds like the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa).

—but they agreed with the principle of repayment of an advance by promissory note. Both said they did not want to get anything for nothing, that they wanted to pay for what was advanced to them. They added that all the farmers they knew in their district were of the same opinion.

Yet this is quoted as purporting to deny what the Prime Minister said about this taking of notes being at the instance of the people themselves. That is the best story they could make out.

As to the right to take such notes, the ex-Minister of Agriculture the other night held the act up and said: Where in this act is there any authority to take a lien note? Where in this act are there provisions for seed grain liens? He referred to the fact that he had consulted the ex-Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) and that the latter had assured him there was no such provision in the act. Need it be stated to the house again that property and civil rights are entirely within the jurisdiction of the provinces; that this relief is being given to the provinces; that the money is being sent out there and paid to those people through the provinces; that they have passed the legislation respecting seed grain liens, and that any man who pays money has, under the law of Canada, the right to get a promissory note if he wants one? Frankly, I think he was putting a little more than was right on the shoulders of the ex-Minister of Justice, and from the aspersions of his colleague I would rescue the reputation of the ex-Minister of Justice.

There is only one other point with which I want to deal. A good deal has been said by the other side about the matter of cooperation. Whenever we mention that, they say: You do it in this way and we will cooperate. That is rather characteristic of the Liberal party; they believe they govern this country by divine right, and that they have a right to govern it whether they are in opposition or on this side of the house. Consequently, when they go over there they say: We will cooperate with you if you will govern the country in the way we tell you to, and on no other basis will we cooperate. In other words, they say: Whether we are on the government benches or in opposition we are going to be the government or there is going to be no cooperation and there is to be no passing of the business of the house in a reasonable time and in a reasonable way.

That is the attitude of hon. gentlemen opposite. The people of Canada, and particularly of western Canada, are not going to forget the attitude of the opposition when they say: You have to put through this relief measure in the way we tell you or it is not going through the house without a great deal of delay.

Mr. J. K. BLAIR (North Wellington): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member who has just taken his seat says that this side of the house believes in divine right. I am inclined to think that is true, but we believe in the divine right of vox populi, vox Dei—the voice of the people is the voice of God. We do believe in divine right, but we do not believe in the divine right of any individual.

The issue before us is an old one. It has arisen in every age and in every country. It is simply a matter of who shall control the treasury of Canada. We do not believe the representatives of the people should hand over control of the treasury to one individual. It is bad enough when the Conservative party as a whole has control of it, but it will be very bad if one individual has control. On this side of the house we are prepared immediately to vote to the government any reasonable sum they will suggest, but to give absolute control of the treasury so that he, the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) can use that money when, where, how and as much as he wishes, is not Liberalism and is not in harmony with the British constitution. I cannot understand how any individual could ask for such power. Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, a school section, a township, or any organized body of men saying to one individual: Here, you take charge of all these moneys that we vote, and spend them how, when, where and as much as you please. While the government has no doubt power to vote this legislation through the house, under the pretence of an emergency measure, we would not be true to ourselves or to the British constitution, to Canadian traditions or to the spirit of our fathers, we would indeed be traitors to the constituencies that sent us here and would write down our names in disgrace in Canadian history, if we allowed a measure of this kind to go through without lodging a strong protest. Often there has been observed in this country a tendency to remove control of expenditure from the people who pay the taxes. We find that same tendency in the school sections and in the townships and counties. We have noticed it in our home districts for years. I have always earmarked it as a Conservative tendency, and now I am sure that it is, because right at the summit, here in the federal capital, we find the Prime Minister asking that this domineering role of having complete control of the treasury be assigned over to him. He in effect simply says to us: You are only the representatives of the people; hand over the treasury to my care.

It is a peculiar coincidence, Mr. Speaker, that we should just be passing the Ides of March. Caesar was a man of exceptional brain power, perhaps the brainiest man in Europe. So large was his brain that natural birth was impossible. He became dictator of Rome, and the politicians, suspecting that he would acquire complete control of the government, had him put to death on the 15th of March. The Roman governors were afraid that Caesar would get absolute control of the treasury, but Caesar perhaps had qualities to recommend him for such a high position. The temples were filled with his statues; everywhere laurels were heaped upon him. He had won victory after victory. All nations were at his feet. He was put to death by his best political friends, not that they loved Caesar less, but they loved Rome more. But I do not think the present Prime Minister has won so many laurels. He was handed the gift of an election by the people, but that was something passive, not active. There is a vast contrast between Caesar and the present Prime Minister. This attempt to take control of the expenditure away from the people has been made time and again in British history. The Stuart sovereigns wished to have control of the British treasury, and in consequence of the struggle that ensued one of the Stuart kings lost his life. We find the same thing coming up in connection with the family compact. We all remember the misery which it caused to the poorer classes of the people in this country, but after a long struggle the people in Canada, with the aid of the British government, got control of the treasury. We say, Mr. Speaker, that having gone through that struggle, history should not be repeated here to-day, but we are being asked now to hand control of the treasury over to one individual. No; we firmly believe in the principle that the people who pay the taxes should have absolute control. People should vote for their own pockets.

Speaking of the money that was appropriated for unemployment relief last session, I wonder if hon. gentlemen observed that out of every $100 spent, only $30 went to the labouring men. That just shows how leaks can occur in public expenditures. It would be interesting to know where the other seventy per cent went. The hon. gentleman who has just sat down (Mr. Beynon) spoke as if some of it went to some of the Liberals who had charge of administrating these funds in different parts of the country. Certainly it did not look good to some of us that seventy per cent of the money should go to the white collars and only thirty per cent to the labouring men.

Mr. TURNBULL: Is it not a fact that seventy per cent was spent largely for materials which in turn were the products of the labouring man?

Mr. BLAIR: I am not sure that seventy per cent went into materials, but no doubt a considerable part of it did. I understand that in British Columbia many of the materials and supplies are lying around and have never been used. I have it on good authority that a great many of the tools, for instance, were never used, but were given over to individuals. But no doubt some of the seventy per cent went into the purchase of supplies.

Speaking about wages, I would refer to the cut that was under discussion here in this house the other day. The general principle was not altogether right. The first suggestion was that there should be a horizontal cut of ten per cent in all civil service salaries. Then at the request of some hon. members that proposal was changed so that the smaller salaries were cut only five per cent. That principle should have been carried still further, so that those receiving salaries of fifteen or twenty thousand dollars should be subjected to a greater percentage of reduction than those drawing salaries or indemnities of four thousand dollars. I also believe that the mounted police and the naval and militia staffs should have received the same cut as the rest of the service, and that judges should have had their salaries cut just as much as members of parliament.

The Prime Minister in his attitude towards labour shows plainly that he does not understand the poorer classes. It may not be his fault. Perhaps he has not had any experience with them. To understand people you have to sit where they sat; you have to have had similar experiences. The Prime Minister and this government have a tendency to hand to the poor a bowl of soup or some food. There is too much of the attitude of "take that and go." What the government is doing to-day makes no provision for the future. It is an improvident way of looking after the unemployment situation. We do not think Canada can keep up this incessant giving. Of course we must necessarily feed those who are in need, but we should look to the future and take steps to obviate as much as we can a repetition of present conditions. In this country we are blessed with vast resources, and surely the government is not so barren of constructive ideas that no provision can be made for giving the people continuous work. We have vast forests, mines and fisheries, and we should devote some attention to their development, rather than be content with handing out a dole, a policy which we all dislike.

The farmers in this country are being taxed almost to bankruptcy. The debts of the farmer could easily be reduced by lowering the price of the things he has to buy. Reducing the tariff would do that. His debts could also be reduced by increasing the prices of the things he has to sell. That could also be done by lowering the tariff. Another great help would be to reduce the interest rate on money. I think when the rate of interest was raised a fatal mistake was made. The high rate of interest was due to a wrong idea on the part of the Conservative governments, both federal and provincial. The fact that government loans were oversubscribed showed that the money could have been secured at a lower rate of interest. I am told that the last provincial loan carried a rate of six and one-half per cent. How can the farmer expect to get a mortgage if a man with money to invest can secure a government loan carrying a rate of six and one-half per cent? Where is the town man to get money to place a mortgage on his house? It will be practically impossible for the farmer, the labourer or the tradesman to pay that rate of interest for mortgages.

I believe rural Ontario should not be asked to care for the unemployed in the cities. Factory owners in large centres, such as the city of Toronto, are subsidized in times of prosperity by tariffs, and supported in times of adversity by direct taxation. The wealthy people in the city of Toronto should make provision for their own poor; that responsibility should not be left with the federal government. One measure which showed the disposition of this government, and which to my mind was a great mistake, was the heavy tax on overalls, children's clothing and baby carriages. I think the government in placing a tax on baby carriages showed a most contemptible spirit. It is unfortunate that the wealthy men in Canada should want to extract a tax from children. Even school supplies are subjected to taxation.

Before the election the Prime Minister was very happy to state on many occasions what he was going to do. He was going to do this and he was going to do that. In Toronto some time ago, speaking about conditions in Canada, he said that nothing but the grace of God could save the country. Before the election he was going to save it, but it would seem that after the election he is content to sublet his contract to the Deity. I do not know if the Deity will take up the contract; I should think the Prime Minister would have to carry on his own business. I am afraid he cannot expect the Deity to study the laws of economics so that his plans may be fulfilled. He has undertaken his task, and I think he will have to continue.

One remarkable feature about the present government is that although we are in the third session they have never acquired the use of the past tense. In the utterances of government members one may notice its absence. As hon. members opposite have been speaking I have sat in my place and jotted down the tenses they have used, and the remarkable fact is that they almost always use the future tense. A few days ago one of the ministers, it is true, during the course of his remarks used the past tense, but he qualified it by employing the subjunctive mood. Broadly speaking, however, the government have not been using the past indicative tense; they do not tell us of what has been done. When one measure fails they hold out great promises for the next; when the next one fails, we have promises of another, and so on. That is the way the people are led.

I have to admit that they are making an effort to feed the people, but I do not think hon. members opposite will congratulate themselves on the fact that they are handing out doles. To my mind that constitutes an open declaration of weakness of the government. That doles should be handed out is an indication of the inefficiency of the government of our country. One thing after another undertaken by the government seems to be full of disappointment. The public expects help, and when they reach for it they find nothing but the apple of Sodom, which resolves itself to ashes in their hands. That has happened so repeatedly that in the minds of our people there has developed an element of distress and disappointment.

Hon. members will recall that the special session of 1930 was called with great dramatic effect. I have no doubt an attempt was made to impress upon the past government the fact that they had neglected their duty. The fact that a special session was necessary was advertised in all the papers and trumpeted far and wide. Now, however, at a time when unemployment is far worse, when people are starving, when thousands are unemployed, practically no legislation to relieve the situation is brought forward for the consideration of parliament. What are the great questions before us? First we were informed by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) that somebody had paid somebody else's railway fare, and some distant Liberal had made a remark about it. We were not interested nor did we care who paid the railway fare. Next we had to consider the boundary line between Alberta and British Columbia. We did not care much about that boundary line. Next we had to consider juvenile delinquents, and then legislation concerning fish inspection, and then a change in the Patent Act.

In times of distress I cannot understand why we have been called here to blather about all this nonsense which has been lined up for us by the Minister of Justice. The matters I have mentioned are at this time of no interest to the people of Canada. What did we care about a trip to New York, or who paid the fare? What did we care about the juvenile delinquents or the boundary line between Alberta and British Columbia? Not one of those questions is of importance to the country as a whole. The great problems have been left unsolved, and have not been brought before us for discussion.

The government make so many mistakes that I sometimes feel they should hold post mortems on the enterprises in which they have failed. I am sure the government would derive some benefit if they adopted my suggestion, because when a patient dies and is examined by the doctor he is sure to find where the mistake was made. Whether or not the government were able to find their mistakes, I feel they would get the benefit of suggestions which might help them in the future. Members of the government must be very expert bridge players; they never hold post mortems. When they make failures, one after another, they go right ahead and try something new.

The government would have done well to give further consideration to its tariff changes. In that connection I should like to read an article which appeared in the Toronto Daily Star:

> Thirty nations in 1931 hit back at Canada for soaring tariffs. France and South Africa copied the anti-dumping measures passed by Canada against Great Britain when the mother country went off the gold standard, imposing them against Canadian produce on the ground that the Canadian dollar was depreciated in the currencies of France and South Africa.

The question of trade has been discussed many times in this house. I remember on one occasion we were told by an hon. gentleman that trade is war, while the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) told us that trade is exchange. Last year at Buenos Aires the Prince of Wales gave this definition of trade:

> Failure to recognize trade as interchange, and obstacles placed in the way of reciprocal trade are perhaps the main causes for the world's present troubles. The British people have the idea of commerce running strong in their blood.

That speech was not made inadvisedly or thoughtlessly; no doubt it was the summary of the views of the leading British statesmen. When it comes to placing obstacles in the way of reciprocal trade, this government affords us a striking example in its policy towards Russia. I think we lost heavily by the government declining to have any further trade relations with the Russians. The glory of Britain and her sons is that they will trade with any country in the world, regardless of its religion; whether it be Turkey, China, the Fiji islands, it makes no difference to Britain whether her customers are Mohammedans, Confucians or cannibals, she never attempts to interfere with their domestic concerns.

I believe the time is not far distant when in our churches instead of praying "Help us to be subservient to those that rule over us," we shall pray for judgment to elect sensible rulers. Our prayer will be the prayer of a citizen, not the prayer of a slave. The present prayer has come down to us from a thousand years, and I think it might well be dispensed with. If we prayed for judgment to elect sensible rulers it would give an element of individuality and sturdy citizenship to our people. I do not think our churches that pray so fervently for the British empire can slap the Imperial conference in the face. Neither can I understand how the church with one hand lifted in prayer can with the other slap the Imperial conference in the face at a time when Britain is in dire distress. Neither can I understand how our lodges that wave the flag of patriotism with one hand can slap the Imperial conference in the face with the other. We made a great mistake when we loosened our connection with British trade and commerce. In my view the Imperial conference was the economic Vimy ridge of Canada and it was up to us to have held that position. We lost it simply because our Prime Minister wanted to be the generalissimo of the conference.

The members of the government have tried to maintain prices at a high level, even though they knew wages were cut on every side and many men were filling the ranks of the unemployed. The great masses in the lower ranks are rapidly deteriorating. We are in an age of poverty and disease. Our tubercular hospitals are full and hundreds of patients are on the waiting list. The people are not getting the care and comforts they got under the preceding government. They are not properly fed, they are not properly clothed, the school children are suffering from lack of food and clothing, and while they are being helped to a certain extent there is not sufficient provision made for their physical safety.

We have heard reference made to a sales tax. In my opinion this is a very injurious tax to the poor classes. Congressman Cannon said:

> A sales tax is the most iniquitous, most reprehensible, most unconscionable device for plundering the people ever devised since the days of Captain Kidd. Secretaries of the Treasury possessing vast fortunes all urge a sales tax, wealthy profiteers urge a sales tax. The requests of these men we understand. They want to lift the burden of the government from the great incomes to the backs of the farmers, the wage earners, the small tradesmen, to the mass of the people. They want to shift the burden of taxation from the rich to the poor and they know the sales tax is perhaps the most convenient way of doing so.

I should like to enumerate a few things which to my mind show that in many particulars the government favours the rich. Its preelection promises to the poor were absolutely broken. I grant that you give them the dole all right; but that is not what you promised them,—you promised employment. You promised the farmers a reasonable market for their wheat; that promise has been broken. You ruined our butter industry by allowing butter to come in from New Zealand and then releasing it all in one day. You increased unemployment. You spoiled our trade relationship at the Imperial conference. You raised the interest rates on money, trying to carry the rich people in an economic sedan chair. You reduced wages. In this connection I may say that one of the great difficulties at the present time is that there is too much money at the top and too much poverty at the bottom. How can we improve the condition of the people by reducing wages? It seems to me that to reduce wages simply aggravates an already bad condition. Since this government has been in power we have seen trade and commerce stagnate, our railways ruined and our farmers driven into bankruptcy. There was a time when a Roman took pride in his citizenship. As Rome became wealthier, tolls were levied on the highways and the tax collector was always at the gate. As a result the money came pouring in to the wealthy people while the poor classes became poorer, and this continued until the wealthy people became indolent and lethargic. The poorer classes were largely composed of people who had become slaves either through failure to pay their debts or through being taken prisoners of war. So it went on until there were a great many poor people and a large number of very wealthy people, while the intervening middle class, upon whom they depended for the defence of the empire, kept getting smaller. As a consequence, when they were called upon to fight they could not rely upon their slaves; the wealthy people were not capable of going into the army, and the middle classes were few in number, so eventually the Roman empire fell.

In our own country we have some people moving into the upper classes, but we have also a great increase in the poorer classes, and I believe that the tariffs and tolls that we are collecting have a tendency to make the rich richer and poor poorer. I believe that in this country, as in Rome, if we keep on levying taxes on everything that is bought and sold by the poorer classes, eventually the upper classes will become very wealthy. You know, in every country we have two kinds of parasites; we have those of the poorer class who cannot maintain themselves properly, and we have the parasites of the upper class as well. In other words, we have parasites patrician and parasites plebeian, and of the two the parasites patrician are the most dangerous. You can see the parasites plebeian; you know where they are and what they are doing, but the parasites patrician are hidden in the background, and it is impossible to watch them. So I say the parasites patrician are much more injurious than the parasites plebeian; they will bleed you economically.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, to call it eleven o'clock.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Wednesday, March 16, 1932

The house met at three o'clock.

PRIVATE BILL

FIRST READING

Bill No. 33, respecting The Montreal Terminal Company.—Mr. Bell (St. Antoine).

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROVISION OF MONEYS TO MEET EXPENDITURES AND INDEBTEDNESS IN 1932

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 34 respecting the Canadian National Railways and to authorize the provision of moneys to meet expenditures made and indebtedness incurred during the calendar year 1932.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. MANION: The purpose of this bill is to permit the Canadian National Railways to issue securities to the extent of $61,500,000 for their budget requirements in the coming year. I shall give a fuller explanation on the second reading.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

BAY STE. CATHERINE-TADOUSSAC FERRY SERVICE

Mr. CASGRAIN:

1. What is the name of the person who was awarded and now holds the contract for the ferry service between Bay Ste. Catherine and Tadoussac, in the county of Saguenay?
2. What amount does he receive?
3. What is the name of the ferry boat used on the service?
4. Does the engineer on said boat possess a certificate?
5. Is said boat provided with life-saving belts in case of accidents?
6. Have complaints been made to the government in connection with the unsatisfactory service given by said boat during the months of November, 1931, and January and February, 1932?
7. Is the government aware that said boat does not carry on a regular service between Tadoussac and the parish of Sacré-Coeur, on the Saguenay river?
8. What is the name of the person who at present has the contract?
9. Were tenders asked before awarding said contract?
10. If so, what were the names and addresses of tenderers, and the amount of their tenders, respectively?

Mr. CAHAN:

1. Captain Arthur Deschenes, Tadoussac, P.Q.

2. Subsidy is at the rate of $4,000 per annum.

3. N.B.T.

4. When the vessel was inspected on the 15th of August, 1931, the engineer had no certificate but he was examined then by the steamship inspector who reported that he had the required knowledge to permit him to take charge of the machinery of the vessel. No objection was taken to the engineer continuing to act pending the submission of testimonials of service.

[Mr. Manion.]

5. When the vessel was inspected on the 15th of August, 1931, she was provided with life-saving belts.

6. No.

7. No. Trips to Sacre-Coeur are not required by the contract after the end of November. Four trips were omitted to Sacre-Coeur in the last two weeks of November, and a corresponding deduction was made from the subsidy paid.

8. Answered by No. 1.

9. No.

10. Answered by No. 9.

POINTE-AU-PIC WHARF KEEPER

Mr. CASGRAIN:

1. Has Captain Henry Gagnon, keeper of the wharf at Pointe-au-Pic, in the county of Charlevoix, been dismissed?
2. If so, were complaints lodged against him, and by whom?
3. What was the nature of the complaint?
4. Was an inquiry held before the dismissal of Mr. Gagnon?
5. If so, what is the name of the commissioner who held the inquiry?
6. What is the name of the person who replaced Mr. Gagnon?
7. By whom was said person recommended?
8. Did said person pass the required civil service examinations?

Mr. DURANLEAU:

1. Yes.

2 and 3. Charges of political partisanship were preferred against Captain Gagnon by Charles Lajoie, Jr.

4. Yes.

5. Major E. Theodore Paquet.

6. Joseph Forgues, who resigned October 30, 1931, and was succeeded by Charles Lajoie on the 23rd of November, 1931.

7. Mr. Forgues was recommended by the Honourable Maurice Dupré, and Mr. Thomas Maher. Mr. Lajoie was recommended by the Honourable Maurice Dupré.

8. The position is exempt from the operation of the Civil Service Act.

NATURALIZATION OF ALIENS

Mr. RINFRET:

1. How many aliens have been naturalized during the course of the fiscal year 1930-31, and the fiscal year 1931-32, to date?
2. Of that number, and in those respective years, how many have been naturalized after the recommendation of a court, according to section 22 of the act?
3. How many have been granted their certificates under other sections of the act?

Mr. CAHAN:

1. 1930-31, 21,392; 1931-32 (to January 31), 27,817.

2. 1930-31, 20,329; 1931-32 (to January 31), 26,838.

3. 1930-31

Section 4 (5)	20
(Repatriation, married women and Canadian born naturalized in U.S.A.)
Section 6	3
(Doubt as to nationality)
Section 7 (2)	1
(Minors)
Section 8	1,039
(Exchange local naturalization for imperial)
Total	1,063

1931-32 (to January 31)

Section 4 (5)	6
(Repatriation, married women and Canadian born naturalized in U.S.A.)
Section 6	2
(Doubt as to nationality)
Section 7 (2)	2
(Minors)
Section 8	1,066
(Exchange local naturalization for imperial)
Total	1,076

REVENUE FROM PRINCIPAL SOURCES

Mr. RINFRET:

1. What revenue has Canada derived, during the fiscal years 1930-31, and 1931-32 to date, from the following sources: (a) customs; (b) income tax; (c) sales tax; (d) other excise taxes?

Mr. RYCKMAN:

	1930-31	1930-31 11 months	1931-32 11 months
(a) Customs duties	$131,208,774 00	$118,746,338 00	$92,873,649 00
(b) Income tax	71,048,022 05	70,248,751 29	60,042,860 59
(c) Sales tax	23,438,847 00	24,035,088 00	36,379,148 00
(d) Other excise taxes	14,587,962 00	10,562,225 00	15,978,676 00

WAR REPARATIONS

Mr. RINFRET:

1. How many cases of war reparations are still outstanding?

2. When may we expect the final report of Commissioner McDougall?

Mr. CAHAN:

1. 368 cases.

2. When the hearing of the claims is completed and assessments made.

NATIONAL SERVICE LOAN, 1931

Mr. GARDINER:

1. What was the total amount of money borrowed under the National Service loan of 1931?

2. How much commission was paid to the banks?

Mr. RHODES:

1. $221,198,200.

2. $989,638.21.

CONVERSION LOAN, 1931

Mr. GARDINER:

1. What was the total amount of bonds converted last May when the Dominion government floated the conversion loan?

2. What was the total amount of commissions paid to the banks: (a) on bonds converted by them direct with their clients; (b) on bonds handled by them for dealers?

Mr. RHODES:

1. $638,609,300.

2. (a) $911,281; (b) no payment by government.

ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAY—CORNWALL SECTION

Mr. RALSTON:

What is the estimated cost for right of way of lands which will be flooded in connection with the development of the Cornwall section of the St. Lawrence waterway project?

Mr. BENNETT: I think the hon. gentleman will perhaps drop this question. It is not a proper question to answer at this time in view of the negotiations that are being carried on between the United States and Canada.

BANKRUPTCY ACT

Mr. SEGUIN:

1. Have representations been made to the government on the ground that the operation of the Bankruptcy Act, in so far as it applies to the farmers of Quebec, is harmful to their credit?

2. If so, will the government take steps for the betterment of such a condition?

Mr. GUTHRIE: No representations have been made to the government that the operation of the Bankruptcy Act is harmful to the credit of the farmers of Quebec. Representations have been made on behalf of the farmers of Quebec, but not in respect to their credit. When the resolution now before the house in respect to an amendment to the Bankruptcy Act comes up for discussion, those representations will be laid before the house.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

MONTREAL HARBOUR COMMISSION—COAL

Mr. TAYLOR:

1. How much coal was purchased by the Montreal harbour commission from the Canadian Industrial Coal Co., Ltd., and the International Fuel Co., Ltd., from January, 1922, to June 1926, and from October, 1926, to August, 1930?
2. What price was paid for this coal and was the price as low as the lowest tender?
3. What documents have the Montreal harbour commission on file showing the accuracy of weights?
4. Who was the chairman of the Montreal harbour commission during these periods?

CANADIAN NATIONAL PIER, VANCOUVER

Mr. REID:

1. What was the total monetary loss due to the burning, in 1930, of Canadian National pier, Vancouver harbour?
2. How much did this pier cost?
3. Had curtain walls, bulkheads or other cut-off for fire protection been provided and built in the substructure of the burnt pier?
4. Who designed this pier and who supervised construction?
5. What was total amount paid and to whom on account of engineering services re burnt pier?
6. What was the total cost of replacement (present pier), also cost of removing wreckage?
7. Were contracts on both cases awarded on competitive public tenders and on what basis, unit prices, etc?
8. Who were the contractors?
9. What was total amount paid and to whom on account of engineering services re replacement work (present pier)?

LAPOINTE PIER, VANCOUVER

Mr. REID:

1. What is the necessity for the extension of Lapointe pier by the Vancouver harbour commissioners at this time?
2. Has the demand for existing berthage under the administration of the Vancouver harbour commissioners been taken into consideration in granting approval of this proposed expenditure?
3. What is the length, width, total estimated cost and estimated time of completion of this extension?
4. What is the type of substructure design with total height of same and what is the maximum height of the proposed gravel fill?
5. What is total estimated yardage, contract price and name of contractor in respect to the gravel fill?
6. How many men, approximately, are employed per day by the contractor in making the gravel fill?

[Mr. Guthrie.]

UNOPPOSED MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF—QUEBEC

Mr. POWER:

For a copy of all correspondence exchanged between the director of unemployment relief of the province of Quebec and the director of unemployment relief of the Dominion of Canada, concerning the authority and jurisdiction of the inspectors appointed by the federal government to supervise unemployment relief in the province of Quebec.

GABAROUSE, CAPE BRETON, CUSTOMS OFFICER

Mr. CASGRAIN (for Mr. Ralston):

For a return of all evidence and reports relating to the dismissal of Mr. J. A. Spray, in July, 1931, from the office of customs excise enforcement officer, stationed at Gabarouse, Cape Breton.

LITTLE SANDS, KING'S COUNTY, P.E.I.—BREAKWATER

Mr. MacLEAN:

For a copy of all engineer's reports, petitions, correspondence, and paysheets, giving in detail the name of each person employed, and the amounts paid in each case for labour, also the amounts paid for lumber and all other materials, and from whom bought, including truckage, in connection with the building of a breakwater at Little Sands, King's county, Prince Edward Island.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PURCHASE OF RAILWAY TIES UNDER UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF ACT

Mr. REID moved:

For a copy of all letters, telegrams, contracts and other documents in connection with the purchase of railway ties under the Unemployment Relief Act of 1931, showing the names of the contractors or persons who were given orders for the making of railway ties or of supplying the Canadian National Railway Company with ties, with the prices paid, also showing the points throughout Canada where such railway ties were to be delivered.

Mr. MANION: I am sorry that I cannot agree to the passing of this notice of motion. The attitude has always been taken both by the late government as well as by this that it is not for the good of the country or for the good of the Canadian National Railways to give out this type of information. The railway takes that attitude, and for these reasons I must oppose the passing of this motion.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I point out that this is a request for information as to expenditures under the Unemployment Relief Act of 1931, and the Canadian National Railway has no right or authority in the matter, nor can it object to the giving of information in this regard.

Mr. MANION: These expenditures under the Unemployment Relief Act were made by the Canadian National Railway. The Canadian National Railway makes the contracts and looks after all the details. So far as giving the amount paid by the government to help unemployment is concerned, there would be no objection; but the government has no information at all as to the details of expenditures by the Canadian National Railways. The Canadian National Railway takes the attitude in regard to contracts of all kinds, contracts of this kind and others, that it is not in the interests of the company to give out such information.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: This order is for a copy of all letters, telegrams, contracts and other documents in connection with the purchase of railway ties under the Unemployment Relief Act of 1931. It relates entirely to the Unemployment Relief Act of 1931. The order goes on:

—showing the names of the contractors or persons who were given orders for the making of railways ties or of supplying the Canadian National Railway Company with ties, with the prices paid, also showing the points throughout Canada where such railway ties were to be delivered.

The motion is exclusively with respect to payments made for ties under the Unemployment Relief Act of 1931. They may have been distributed to the Canadian National Railway, but they were, or are to be, paid for out of moneys provided by this parliament under the provisions of an act which this parliament passed for unemployment relief, and the Canadian National Railway has no right to raise any objection nor has my hon. friend the right to refuse to give the information.

Mr. MANION: I cannot agree with my right hon. friend. So far as the relations of this government are concerned there was an order in council which I presume was tabled the other day. I did not look through the documents, but I presume an order in council was among them dealing with this matter and giving the amount of money involved. So far as contracting for ties is concerned, I may tell my right hon. friend that such contracting has been done by the management of the Canadian National Railways as in other years. The Canadian National Railways take the attitude, quite rightly, that that is not information for which they should be asked. They contend that the Canadian Pacific Railway, if asked, would not give similar information.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: So that we may understand the government's attitude correctly, is the minister taking the position that this parliament is not entitled to the fullest information concerning all expenditures made under the Unemployment Relief Act of 1931? That is the principle involved.

Mr. MANION: No.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Well, unless my hon. friend takes that position he ought to consent to this motion and give parliament the information requested.

Mr. MANION: This motion asks for a great deal more information than the government has. The government has no information on many of the points mentioned in the motion. I have no objection to bringing down any information the government may have, but the Canadian National Railways take the attitude they have always taken, and the attitude they took when my right hon. friend was leader of the government regarding contracts of all kinds.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: When we were asked to agree to the measure for unemployment relief we were told we would be given the fullest information concerning all expenditures made for relief. That is the reason we are now asking for the information as set out in the motion. My hon. friend must either agree to give us the information we seek, or we will be obliged to ask the house to vote upon the resolution, and thereby decide whether or not we may have it.

Mr. MANION: Very well, vote upon it.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Reid) which was negatived on the following division.

YEAS

Messrs:

Ahearn,	Deslauriers,
Beaubien,	Desrochers,
Blair,	Donnelly,
Bothwell,	Dubois,
Bouchard,	Duff,
Boucher,	Dumaine,
Boulanger,	Dupuis,
Bradette,	Euler,
Brasset,	Factor,
Brown,	Fafard.
Butcher,	Fiset, Sir Eugène,
Cardin,	Fontaine,
Casgrain,	Fournier,
Chevrier,	Gardiner,
Coote,	Garland (Bow River),
Denis,	Goulet,

Gray,
Hall,
Hanbury,
Hanson (Skeena),
Heaps,
Howard,
Howden,
Hurtubise,
Ilsley,
King, Mackenzie,
Lapointe,
Lucas,
MacInnis,
Mackenzie (Vancouver Centre),
MacLean,
Macphail (Miss),
McIntosh,
McKenzie (Assiniboia),
McMillan (Huron South),
McPhee,
Mercier (Laurier-Outremont),
Mitchell,
Motherwell,
Munn,
Neill,
Parent,
Perras,
Power.
Reid.
Rhéaume,
Roberge,
St-Père,
Sanderson,
Speakman,
Spencer,
Stewart (Edmonton West),
Thauvette,
Totzke,
Urquhart,
Vallance,
Veniot,
Verville,
Weir (Macdonald),
Woodsworth,
Young.—77.

NAYS

Messrs:

Anderson (Toronto-High Park),
Anderson (Halton),
Arsenault,
Arthurs,
Barber,
Baribeau,
Barrette,
Beaubien,
Bell (St. John-Albert),
Bennett,
Beynon,
Bourgeois,
Bowen,
Bowman,
Boyes,
Burns,
Bury,
Cantley,
Carmichael,
Casselman,
Charters,
Cormier,
Cotnam,
Cowan (Port Arthur-Thunder Bay),
Cowan (Long Lake),
Dickie,
Dorion,
Duguay,
Duranleau,
Embury,
Ernst,
Esling,
Fortin,
Fraser (Cariboo),
Gagnon,
Ganong,
Garland (Carleton),
Geary,
Gobeil,
Gordon,
Guthrie,
Hackett,
Hanson (York-Sunbury),
Hay,
Johnstone,
Jones,
Kennedy (Peace River),
Kennedy (Winnipeg South Centre),
Laurin,
Lawson,
Loucks,
MacDonald (Cape Breton South),
Macdonald (Kings),
Macdougall,
MacLaren,
MacMillan (Saskatoon),
McDade,
McGibbon,
McGillis,
McGregor,
McLure,
Maloney,
Manion,
Moore (Chateauguay-Huntingdon),
Morand,
Mullins,
Murphy,
Nicholson,
Peck,
Perley (Qu'Appelle),
Pettit,
Pickel,
Plunkett,
Porteous,
Price,
Quinn,
Robinson,
Rogers,
Ross,
Ryckman,
Senn,
Shaver,
Simpson (Simcoe North),
Simpson (Algoma West),
Smith (Victoria-Carleton),
Smith (Cumberland),
Spankie,
Spence,
Sproule,
Stanley,
Stewart (Leeds),
Stewart (Lethbridge),
Stinson,
Stirling,
Stitt (Nelson),
Stitt (Selkirk),
Sullivan,
Sutherland,
Swanston,
Tétrault,
Thompson (Simcoe East),
Thompson (Lanark),
Tummon,
Turnbull,
Weese,
Weir (Melfort),
White (Mount Royal),
Willis,
Wilson,
Wright.—110.

PAIRS

(The list of pairs as furnished by the chief whips.)

Messrs:

Baker,
Bell (Hamilton),
Bell (St. Antoine),
Black (Halifax),
Cahan,
Chaplin,
Dupré,
Edwards,
Gott,
Harris,
Laflèche,
Lennox,
Matthews,
Perley, Sir George,
Rhodes,
Rowe,
Ryerson,
Sauvé,
Short,
Smoke,
Spotton,
Stevens,
White (London),
Bertrand,
Mercier (St. Henri),
Raymond,
Dubuc,
Rinfret,
Malcolm,
Ferland,
Elliott,
Rutherford,
Jacobs,
Girouard,
Pouliot,
Moore (Ontario),
Marcil,
Ralston,
Lacroix,
Taylor,
Séguin,
Heenan,
Cayley,
Hepburn,
Fraser (Northumberland),
Gershaw.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): I was paired with the hon. member for East Edmonton (Mr. Bury). Had I voted I would have voted in favour of the motion.

Mr. SMOKE: I was paired with the hon. member for South Oxford (Mr. Cayley). Had I voted I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. EDWARDS: I was paired with the hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Elliott). Had I voted I would voted against the motion.

Mr. BERTRAND: I was paired with the hon. member for Toronto Northeast (Mr. Baker). Had I voted I would have voted in favour of the motion.

Mr. GERSHAW: I was paired with the hon. member from London (Mr. White). Had I voted I would have voted for the motion.

EASTER ADJOURNMENT

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in conformity with the suggestion which I made to the house a few days ago I now beg to move, seconded by Mr. Guthrie:

That when this house adjourns on Wednesday, the 23rd of March, it stand adjourned until Tuesday, the 29th of March, 1932.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Louder.

Mr. BENNETT: I am merely moving the notice standing on the order paper.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

GUARANTEE OF SECURITIES OUTSTANDING TO THE AMOUNT OF $11,372,498.86

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee to-morrow to consider the following proposed resolution:

That the governor in council may authorize the guarantee of securities of the Canadian National Railway Company to an aggregate principal amount at any one time outstanding of $11,372,498.86, to meet expenditures made and indebtedness incurred during the calendar year 1931 (where amounts available from net operating income or investments may be insufficient), by or on behalf of the Canadian National Railways or any company controlled by or any company comprised in the Canadian National Railways, or in respect of Canadian government railways entrusted to the Canadian National Railway Company.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the favourable consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

CORRECTION—MR. SPENCER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. E. SPENCER (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw the attention of the house to an omission in yesterday's Hansard. When Bill No. 16 to amend the Bank Act was before the house the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote) moved an amendment that the bill be referred back to the committee on banking and commerce. I was the first to vote for the amendment but there is no mention of my name in the division list. I ask that the necessary correction be made.

VETERANS' PENSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. ALFRED SPEAKMAN (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the hon. Minister of Pensions and National Health (Mr. MacLaren). Is it the intention of the government to introduce during the present session any amendments to the pensions legislation?

Mr. McINTOSH: This is a quesion that has been put three times this session.

Hon. MURRAY MacLAREN (Minister of Pensions and National Health): Mr. Speaker, the matter is under consideration.

IMMIGRATION OF BRITISH BOYS

On the orders of the day

Mr. J. P. HOWDEN (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, last week I put a question to the Acting Minister of Immigration and Colonization (Mr. Gordon) with regard to the immigration of five hundred English boys, but unfortunately I neglected to give him notice of the question. The Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) said he was not able offhand to give an answer, but undertook to do so shortly. I have not been able to get any information in connection with the matter, and I should like to ask either the acting Minister of Immigration and Colonization or the Prime Minister if any information is now forthcoming.

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Acting Minister of Immigration and Colonization): Mr. Speaker, I think the house is very well acquainted with the fact that so far as encouraging migrants to Canada is concerned, the government has laid down a very definite policy—a policy, which, I think, is very acceptable to the people of this country. On the other hand I do not think the time has come, and I hope it never will come, when the door will be closed to the admission into Canada of a British boy who comes here paying his own way and seeking to make a home for himself.

Some hon. MEMBERS Hear, hear.

Mr. GORDON: With respect to the boys referred to by the hon. member, for several years various organizations within the dominion, all of them, I trust, inspired with the idea that they were doing what was best for the country, have encouraged the movement of Britishers to Canada. I think at times they have been in error as to the methods they have employed, although I believe they have been acting with the very best motives.

With respect to the movement of British boys to Canada since this government took office, I have been careful to consult with all the societies concerned, who have gone to a great deal of expense down through the years to organize their efforts. I have consulted with these societies and with the provinces with the idea of trying to determine what might be best at a time such as this. Some of the provinces said they would welcome a reduced number of boys from Great Britain, who would come out here not under assisted passages, as in the past, but who would pay their own way and would be cared for during their first two or three years in Canada, until they could get places for themselves, by the various societies, mainly religious societies covering all religions, and in accordance with the express desire of these various organizations and of the provinces I agreed that a reduced number of boys might be admitted. If the hon. member has any fear that immigrants of this sort are likely to imperil the future of this country, I may tell him that I do not think there will be five hundred coming out this year.

I can only repeat that whatever action has been taken by the government has not been by way of extravagant encouragement; it has been taken only after careful investigation of the situation with respect to the societies concerned and the provinces which have agreed to accept these boys if they come forward.

Mr. HOWDEN: I may not be entitled to the information, but I did ask what guarantee if any had been given the government that these boys would not become public charges and perhaps require deportation.

Mr. GORDON: The very best guarantee that could be given the government that these boys will not become public charges is that they have enough courage to come out here, paying their own way, in order to hew out homes for themselves in this dominion, and it must be remembered that they are British boys.

SOCKEYE SALMON TREATY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. IAN MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I should like to ask the Acting-Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Duranleau) whether he has seen press reports indicating that the attitude of a committee of the United States senate is to refuse to ratify the sockeye salmon treaty. If so, what is going to be the attitude of the government with regard to this matter, by way of further amendment or otherwise?

Mr. BENNETT: Notice is required for a question of that kind.

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Acting-Minister of Fisheries): The report has not been brought to my attention as yet.

FEDERAL LOANS TO PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance): Yesterday the hon. member for North Battleford (Mr. McIntosh) made inquiry with respect to a return in which he is interested. I have looked into the matter and I find that so far as the information required from the Department of Finance is concerned, it has been forwarded to the Secretary of State. The delay has been due entirely to the fact that the question, as it touches the Department of Labour, involves a very great deal of detail work, but I am told that the return is almost completed and may be expected in a day or two.

POSTMASTER OF LAPRAIRIE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. VINCENT DUPUIS (Laprairie-Napierville) (Translation): Before the orders of the day are called, would the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Sauvé) be so kind as to inform the house when we may expect the information required in connection with the postmaster of Laprairie? This question has been on the order paper for over two weeks, and I am still waiting, together with a number of my constituents, for an answer from the hon. Postmaster General.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): It is not a question of good will but one of time; I shall supply this information as soon as possible.

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): I trust that it will be soon.

ALLEGED RUM RUNNING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. F. CASGRAIN (Charlevoix-Saguenay): Last week I directed the attention of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Ryckman) to a report concerning alleged rum running on the north shore of the St. Lawrence river, and I also wrote the minister with reference to this matter. I should like to know if he has any information to give the house in this regard at this time.

Hon. E. B. RYCKMAN (Minister of National Revenue): If the hon. member has written me on the subject I may tell him the letter has not been received. I made some inquiry with regard to the report that good French Canadians in the constituency of Charlevoix-Saguenay, on the north shore of the river St. Lawrence, were bartering their cattle for whisky, but I could find no confirmation of that report. I can only tell my hon. friend that in the winter time, of course, the boats of the preventive service are not in operation, and I have no doubt that prohibited traffic is carried on during that time. There are some officers of the preventive service in that district, whom I have no doubt are well known to my hon. friend. He may have assisted in having them appointed to their positions, but I have no doubt they are worthy men, and the law is being enforced on the north shore of the St. Lawrence as far as it is possible to do so. It must be remembered that this territory extends along the north shore of the St. Lawrence right to Labrador, but of the facts as stated by the hon. gentleman—and of course I must accept them—the department has no knowledge.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I did not state that French Canadians especially were doing that bartering of goods for rum or other articles; I simply directed attention to the fact that people were coming from Newfoundland, or other places, and attempting to induce these people to go into that business. Someone suggests that they might be coming from other provinces as well.

UNEMPLOYMENT AND FARM RELIEF

CONTINUANCE ACT, 1932—CONSIDERATION OF RESOLUTION

The house resumed from Tuesday, March 15, consideration of the motion of the Prime Minister that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee of the whole on the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to introduce a bill to amend chapter 58 of the statutes of Canada, 1931, striking out the word "March" in section 8, and substituting the word "May" therefor.

Mr. G. B. NICHOLSON (East Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the debate that has taken place since this resolution was introduced about three weeks ago has covered a very wide range. Almost every subject that might possibly be introduced in the House of Commons has been discussed and debated; budget speeches of last session have been rehashed; recitations have been given on a variety of subjects, and all this has been done, if we are to take the word of the Toronto Globe of March 9, in order to fulfil one purpose, that is, to carry out what the Globe refers to as the Liberal blockade.

Mr. DUPUIS: Read it.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I have read it; if my hon. friend wants to read it for himself he can get it from the reading room. The question one is led to ask himself is, why this blockade? What is the purpose of it? To my mind it indicates the attitude of hon. members opposite towards the whole question of unemployment and farm relief. That attitude has been covered by a variety of smoke screens, nevertheless the debate has shown the attitude of hon. members opposite towards the vital questions facing the people of this country at the present moment, unemployment and farm relief.

When the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) gave notice of this resolution on February 22—I believe that was the date—almost immediately the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) announced that if the leader of the government and his cabinet would abdicate their functions, if they would cease to lead this house, if they would stop trying to define and introduce policies to meet the situation, then the opposition would cooperate. Their attitude was this: If you will do it our way we will cooperate; but if you come forward in your own way, after giving the matter such consideration as you have been able to devote to it, why then we will just hold the question up as long as we can. That is virtually what the leader of the opposition announced; and what has taken place in the meantime has adequately carried out that threat. The first effort they made was to throw up the smoke screen of the constitutional question in relation to this matter. At the last session of parliament we passed an act clothing the government with power to meet every situation that might arise in relation to unemployment and farm relief; or any other emergency that might occur in the difficult period through which this country, in common with the whole world, is now passing. That act automatically came to an end on March 1. On February 22 the Prime Minister announced that this resolution would be brought in, the purpose being to extend the time of the act for two months, or until May 1; and then it was that this announcement was made of cooperation or no cooperation according as the government were or were not prepared to abdicate. Not finding the going very easy in the way they had first indicated that they would take, they brought up the constitutional question; and after a variety of constitutional authorities, starting with the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston), had given their judgment, the hon. member for Quebec East, the ex-Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe), and my hon. friend the member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) were brought in to bolster up the position with regard to the constitution.

Now there is one thing that the house can be always sure of. When the hon. member for Quebec East rises, one of two things will happen: Either he is going to tear the British North America Act to pieces and build a new constitution, as he professes to have done at a recent imperial conference, or he is going to throw himself in the way of someone who is anxious to destroy the constitution we have and the institutions of this country. The hon. member for Labelle takes the same position, as a rule—some constitutional question or other, something that is going to arouse passion and prejudice from one end of the country to the other. Following that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) gave us his views on the institutional—not constitutional—question. And so on and so on all through the piece. Let me assure these hon. gentlemen that the constitution and the institutions of this country are just as safe in the hands of the present Prime Minister and the present government as they have ever been or ever will be in the hands of the hon. member for Quebec East, or the hon. member for Labelle, or the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

But to come back to the question as to the way that was proposed. The leader of the opposition, in elaborating his plans, said in effect: We will call a conference and we will talk about the question. It is true there is unemployment; it is true the farmers of the west require seed wheat. Well, we will talk about it; we will call in people from every part of the dominion and talk to them about the question. We will not act; we will talk. Now, every member of this house knows that if there is anything to be done, if there is anything which it is necessary that the government or the parliament of Canada should do to meet any situation, no matter what it may be, you may always depend upon it that the leader of the opposition and those who surround him, particularly the ex-Minister of Labour (Mr. Heenan), who seems especially anxious, are prepared to do the talking. We all recall that last session of parliament the leader of the opposition entertained us here for a whole day and night, talking, talking all the time, after he had thrown first one and then another senatorial friend to the wolves; and after pleading with tears in his voice for consideration of his dearly beloved son who had been sent to get the money and had not covered up his tracks, he finished his speech at the end of five and three-quarter hours. I can give you another illustration of talking, particularly the talking of the ex-Minister of Labour and the ex-Prime Minister.

In April, 1930, my predecessor, Mr. Bowman, pleaded with the Department of Labour, through its then minister, for the people, some 412 families, living in a town in northern Ontario, who had not had an hour's work for six months. What did the then Minister of Labour do? He went to that town and talked to these people. He talked and talked and talked, just as he talks here, not being familiar with the situation. That not being sufficient, he was followed to the same town by the leader of the opposition in a special train; and as is his wont the right hon. gentleman on that occasion talked again. He tried to persuade those people, as he tried to persuade the people throughout Canada, that there was no unemployment situation, that unemployment was merely a dream. He said to them, "Why, haven't we given you the Dunning budget? Can you not now import your hay and oats, your silk hats and walking sticks from England free of duty"? But, Mr. Speaker, it was not hay and oats nor silk hats and walking sticks that these people wanted; they wanted work.

An hon. MEMBER: And cut flowers.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Yes, cut flowers too; but the people did not want cut flowers either. The situation with which this country is faced, Mr. Speaker, is one that calls not for talk but for action; and the government, through the resolution they have submitted to this house for consideration, are preparing to take action to relieve unemployment and to provide seed wheat for the farmers in western Canada who have been burned out for the past three years, and also to assist those who require assistance. But what do we get from hon. members opposite? Talk, talk, talk.

Mr. FAFARD: Why don't you bring in a bill to-day and have done with the discussion?

Mr. NICHOLSON: I anticipated that question from some hon. gentleman. In reply, I would ask another question. Is there any hon. member on the other side, either the ex-Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) or perhaps my hon. friend from Weyburn (Mr. Young), who is smiling so nicely, who can tell the house what kind of estimate—not a bill—would be necessary? How many acres of land in western Canada will be seeded, and how much wheat will be required to seed the land?

Mr. DUPUIS: How much do you want?

An hon. MEMBER: Sit down.

Mr. DUPUIS: How much do you want? We will give it to you.

Mr. NICHOLSON: How much do I want? That shows the intelligence of the whole discussion. The hon. member knows as well as any man in this house or in the country knows that it is impossible to prepare an exact estimate to meet the situation that faces us to-day.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member for East Algoma has the floor, and unless he consents to questions he must not be interrupted.

Mr. NICHOLSON: If any hon. member wishes to ask a question, and if he will put his question in the manner in which an hon. member should, I shall endeavour to answer as well as I can. But I will not pay any attention to catcalls and interruptions that mean nothing.

I come now to the statements that were made by the hon. member for Vancouver South—I think I am right as regards that constituency—while debating this subject. After declaiming against all Canadian institutions, after painting a glowing picture of conditions in Russia as compared with conditions in Canada, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre discussed the financial institutions of Canada, the banks and the insurance companies. Will the hon. member at some time say just what he would propose to do with the banks and the insurance companies? When he was referring to the dividends paid by the insurance companies, I asked him what about the dividends paid to the policyholders. I have in my hand the annual reports of two insurance companies. I will not mention the names of the companies or differentiate between the two, but I will point out that at the end of 1931 these two companies had $3,150,000,000 of insurance written in Canada and throughout the world, and had collected during that year $155,000,000 in insurance premiums. When the occasion presents itself, and I am sure it will not be long delayed, I should like my hon. friend to state to the house what he would do with these insurance companies. Would he confiscate the premiums? Would he wipe out the insurance policies? Would he suggest to the government that it should take either of these two courses?

I have before me a brief statement showing that the banks of Canada have on deposit approximately $1,400,000,000 of the people's savings. The working man, the small business man, the man who has worked all his life in order to build up a reserve upon which to depend when he can no longer work, has deposited this money in the bank. What would my hon. friend do? Would he confiscate these deposits? If he would go so far as to state exactly what his intentions are, then the house would be able to understand him.

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. I submit that the hon.. member is not debating the resolution under consideration.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

The ACTING SPEAKER (Translation): The objection is not well taken.

Mr. NICHOLSON: After declaiming against all of these institutions, after comparing conditions in Russia with the conditions in Canada, my hon. friend said:

> What are we going to do? It would seem as if the government now in power, sensing somewhat the issue at stake, is determined at all costs to maintain the present system.

What institutions have we in Canada that my hon. friend would destroy? If he would be specific, then we would know exactly how to deal with the situation, but after the portrayal of the ideal conditions which prevail at present in Russia he accuses the government of the determination to maintain Canadian institutions.

I come now for just a moment to the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. MacInnis), who made the following statement to be found on page 982 of Hansard:

> When the Minister of Railways is discussing Russia he should not forget that Russia at the present time is at war:
>
> I agree fully with my hon. friend; Russia to-day is at war—she is at war with civilization.

Mr. MITCHELL: Read the rest of the sentence.

Mr. HEAPS: I think the hon. member is most unfair in not reading the whole statement.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I am repeating just exactly what the hon. member said.

Mr. HEAPS: No you are not.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend made his speech and I will make mine in my own way. Hon. members of the house can decide whether this is fair or unfair.

I say that the hon. member is right. Russia is at war—she is at war with Canada. Russian agents are in every hamlet in this country from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and I am not so sure that she has not agents around these parliament buildings. Whether she has or has not, every man in this country knows that Russia is at war with Canada and she is at war in her own country.

Mr. SPENCER: Would the hon. member give some proof of what seems to be an absurd statement?

Mr. NICHOLSON: The hon. member for Vancouver South, who professes to know a lot about Russia, says that Russia is at war. I say that Russia is at war with Canada. It has been proven in the courts that the soviet government sent money into Canada to pay communistic organizers to disrupt this country. For what other purpose was it sent? The hon. member confesses that Russia is at war in Russia; she is at war with her own people, she is at war with every ideal which has been held sacred by men and women ever since the dawn of civilization.

The hon. member said that the kulaks, the peasant farmers, refused to cooperate in that war and consequently had to suffer as they have suffered. It will be to the eternal glory of the kulaks that they refused to cooperate. Let us try to get a picture of the cooperation for which they were asked. The communistic, red army officers came to the peasant farmer and said: These lands upon which you have lived, this soil you have tilled and the home you have built are no longer your own, they are ours. The things around you are no longer your own; these children are no longer your own—they are the property of the state. If you are willing to cooperate, if you are prepared to have us destroy this home and take your children away from you, if you are prepared to stand by and see your women violated, all right, you may live and we will send you to Siberia, to Archangel or to the lumber camps on the White sea where you can eke out an existence on raw fish and cabbage soup. If you refuse to cooperate, we will stand you up against the wall of this home you call your own and riddle your body with bullets. That is the kind of cooperation the kulak was asked to give.

My hon. friend and his mentor, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, are constantly speaking of these ideal conditions which prevail in Russia and comparing them with what they call the demoralizing conditions which prevail in Canada. Canada is the freest country under the sun. There is not a country in the wide world where the man who wants to make his way in the world has so great an opportunity as he has in Canada. I say in all sincerity and fairness to my hon. friends: If you feel that Russia is a much better country in which to live than Canada, why don't you go to Russia? I believe I can say without hesitation that the Department of State would present no difficulties to their securing passports, and I do not believe they would have any difficulty in entering Russia. Why don't they go there if the conditions are so ideal? Is it because comrades Stalin and Kamenoff would rather they remained in Canada to take the place of Tim Buck and his associates who are now behind the walls of Kingston penitentiary. I do not know; I am simply putting that question.

Mr. FAFARD: If I might ask my hon. friend a question, would he kindly tell me how far he is from the resolution?

Mr. NICHOLSON: It is quite possible that if agitators are allowed to run loose in this country, those who would set class against class and play on the feelings of men and women who are harassed by the conditions through which we are passing, things may be done that none of us would like to see happen. But I say right now that any man or woman in these times, I care not who or where they are, who attempts to stir up strife and set class against class and play on the passions of people is not a true and good Canadian.

Every man in this country knows that we are passing through times which are difficult for humanity all over the world. Canada is in no worse a position than other countries. As a matter of fact I believe we are in a better position than any other country, and I have confidence that Canada will pull through. I have confidence in the resourcefulness and courage and faith of the Canadian people, and I believe that with sound leadership Canada will pull through better than any other country in the world. But it is sound leadership and level heads, not agitators, that the country requires to enable us to pull through. To the Prime Minister and his government I would say that every man in this house and every man in this country has some conception of the problems which the government is called upon to meet from day to day, and every one of us knows that the Prime Minister and his government are working long and tiresome days and many, many weary nights in meeting the problems and accepting the challenge that has been thrown to them as the government which the Canadian people chose in 1930 to carry on the affairs of this country. I say without any hesitation whatsoever that the best people in this country, those who have given thought to the conditions through which we are passing and the situation that confronts us, are behind the Prime Minister and his government, and the government's followers in this house are one hundred per cent behind them. Go forward, I say to the Prime Minister and his government, and meet the tasks you have to meet from day to day, and let the agitators and babblers continue to agitate and babble and the talkers continue to talk.

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): I should like to say a few words on the resolution now before the house. At the outset I wish to say that we on this side are just as much concerned with the great problem of unemployment confronting Canada to-day as are the members on the government side, and personally let me add that I am more concerned with the affairs of Canada than with what is happening in Russia. I think we should pay more attention to the affairs of our own country, because Russia will work out her own destiny. The problem confronting the Canadian people is what is going to happen to us in this dominion of ours.

The Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion), in his speech the other day, said that Canada was to-day facing conditions worse than any she had faced before in her history, not even excepting the war. I agree entirely with that sentiment. But I would go further and say that I for one sincerely believe that even if industry and conditions in this country do come back to what we knew as normal, industry will not be able to absorb the number of men and women who are anxious and willing to work, and that fact will have to be faced more squarely in the future if we wish to put our country on a better basis.

Hon. gentlemen opposite have blamed us on this side of the house for an alleged lack of cooperation. I suggest that the government should first show some sign that they want cooperation from this side of the house, but I have yet to see the first gesture of anything of that kind. I have sat here and listened to the discussions that have taken place, and every time suggestions were made from this side I have heard the "ha-ha" given to them by hon. gentlemen opposite. It has been reiterated both in this house and outside that we on this side consistently blocked the legislation of last year although many of our members appealed time and time again to the government to introduce legislation to deal with the unemployment situation or at least to give the house an apportunity to discuss it, but it was not until the latter end of the session that the legislation was brought down. It has been said by hon. gentlemen opposite and by the Prime Minister himself that we consistently opposed that legislation and that if there was any delay in dealing with the unemployment situation, the delay was due to the opposition in this house. I take exception to that statement, Mr. Speaker. Even the then Minister of Labour wrote to a municipality in my riding and said that the talk on this side of the house had delayed the passing of that legislation. If I have any idea of the sort of cooperation that this government expects from us it is simply a quiet acquiescence in everything they do, a desire on their part that we say nothing and do nothing at all in this house. If the positions were reversed and hon. gentlemen opposite were sitting on this side, I am wondering if the Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion) and the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) and the right hon. Prime Minister would not object if we had the temerity to bring down such a proposal as is now before the house, and simply say to us: Yes, go ahead; we have no opposition to offer. It takes a great stretch of the imagination, however, to imagine that.

If there has been any delay, Mr. Speaker, I claim that the delay has come from the government side of the house. The Prime Minister knows the conditions in this country far better than any other man in Canada, and he must have been aware that this act expired on the 29th of February last, and I would ask the next hon. member on the other side who speaks to explain to me just why an item could not have been placed in the supplementary estimates to carry on the work or to pay for unemployment relief for the next two months. As a new member I should think that would have been easy to do. I claim that the Prime Minister is in a position to-day to know approximately what amount will be required to take care of the situation for the next two months.

I wish to take exception, Mr. Speaker, to some of the remarks that were made yesterday by the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce. He said that as we in this parliament had passed the act of last year we had endorsed the principle of this legislation. I submit that that is not in accordance with the facts. Turning to Hansard of last year I find that at page 4279 the Prime Minister said:

> We should not place a limitation upon the amount that may be expended, either with respect to direct relief or otherwise, because in the one instance you create the idea "Here is a fund upon which anyone may draw without work—

There the Prime Minister was stating the reasons why we shauld give him a blank cheque. He went on:

That is the question. If you fix it at any sum you may suggest, I repeat, you but invite the very thing that we desire to prevent.

Further, in reply to the right hon. leader of the opposition, the Prime Minister said:

If I were less unmindful of the soundness of the criticisms that are made by the right hon. gentleman opposite as to the interference with the general principle, I would not make the observations I do. But when we make charges against the consolidated revenue fund, as we have done continuously with respect to matters mentioned last evening by the Minister of Justice, and when since confederation we have had a frank recognition by parliament that a situation might arise in which the application of the ordinary rules would no longer be possible as witness the Finance Act of the country,

And so on. Then the last paragraph is as follows:

I am compelled to do this in the public interest. But there is no reason why the date should not be limited to the first day of March which will ensure that the house must meet at least a sufficient time before that date to enable parliament to grant such further supply as may be regarded necessary in the premises.

I claim, Mr. Speaker, that if hon. members on this side did acquiesce in or help pass that act last year it was done under the assurance that legislation would be introduced on March 1, and that hon. members would be given an opportunity to discuss this matter. In my opinion the most important functions of parliament are taxation and expenditure. If these are taken away we are deprived of practically all our important rights. Municipal councils, provincial and dominion governments are seized of the fact that the imposition of taxes and expenditures of money are very important functions. The proposal now before us virtually asks us to hand over to the executive the full powers of parliament so far as the expenditure is concerned. Personally I am in favour of voting a certain sum, and I have heard no valid reason why such a sum could not have been placed in the supplementary estimates, or a bill brought in for a specific amount. There must be some reason why the Prime Minister has not yet stated his grounds for proceeding along these lines.

At the special session of 1930 we were told, when we were asked to vote for an expenditure of $20,000,000, that if we did not pass that amount speedily we would be holding up the Imperial conference. Last year legislation was introduced at the end of the session, and we were told that as parliament was about to prorogue the legislation must be passed. It is for these reasons I cannot support the proposal now before the house. Then, again, an extension of the blank cheque will not in my opinion take care of the situation in the provinces and municipalities which have planned schedules of work and which for a period of two months or six weeks have been standing for approval. In my opinion a blank cheque does not take care of that situation.

I feel that the whole question is going to be shelved. If, as the hon. the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion) has said —and I quite agree with him—conditions are worse, and to-day we are in a more unfortunate position than we were during the late war, parliament should be considering some definite plans capable of adoption. Even at the risk of sneers from hon. members opposite, I am about to make some suggestions, believing as I do that we are really face to face with conditions such as never before have been experienced. No one can tell where the end may be. The forces of the country should be coordinated, and the government should consider the conscription of wealth. That matter was under consideration during the last war, and I am sorry no such action was taken. In my humble opinion if wealth had been conscripted at that time our burden of debt would not be as severe as it is to-day. While I know that unemployment insurance will not relieve us of our difficulties, I believe it should be fully considered, in view of the fact that all the energies of our government seem to be concentrated upon the building up of manufacturing industries.

Rates of interest should at least to some extent be controlled. From one of the municipalities in the constituency I have the honour to represent I received information that only last week the rate of interest had been raised from six per cent to six and one-half per cent. The bank said the change was due to the action of the government of British Columbia in floating a loan at six per cent. For that reason bank interest was being raised to six and one-half per cent. Something should be done in that connection, Mr. Speaker, because while wages are continually going down, interest seems to be going up, and some definite action should be taken to control it. If it were at all possible I should like to see legislation whereby the municipalities and provinces could come to the federal government and obtain loans at three per cent, the rate that is now extended to banks, they in turn lending to municipalities or provinces at twice that rate.

I should like to venture an opinion regarding agriculture. One of the reasons agriculture is not progressing as it should is that the man on the land has been entirely divorced from it. Under our old system a man could exchange his produce and live, but to-day he must have money. Without money he is absolutely tied up. In the province of British Columbia I know of barns filled with produce, but the owners cannot obtain a five cent piece for any of it, or even exchange it for other produce. Under our present capitalistic system the agriculturist is divorced from the land, and the practice under that system of putting men out on the land will in my opinion only produce more distress. Some drastic change will have to be brought about if we are successfully to further our land schemes.

At this point I should like to refer briefly to conditions in British Columbia, and to offer some suggestions concerning that province. I may be met with the remark that British Columbia is the place to discuss those matters. When we realize, however, that fifty per cent of the commitments are to be paid for by the dominion, I think I have a right to discuss provincial matters. Business men, unions of municipalities and municipal governments irrespective of party are genuinely alarmed at conditions in British Columbia. To begin with, I claim the blank cheque of last session did not work out as the Prime Minister suggested, or would have liked to see it work out. I should like to have seen him adopt the suggestion of the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) last session and appoint a commission. I believe the Prime Minister held the idea that if any definite amount had been set there would have been a rush by the provinces to avail themselves of a large share of that fund. To obviate such a rush a bill authorizing a blank cheque was put through parliament. So far as the province of British Columbia was concerned however the opposite was the result. That province set out on a spending program the like of which had never been witnessed there before. After the passing of legislation for the blank cheque the province had every reason to believe that unlimited funds would be obtainable at Ottawa. I have before me the words of the Premier of British Columbia, as follows:

> The provincial government launched its program, employed 16,000 men, built 170 camps and contracted a cost of over $50,000 a day on the definite assurance of the federal government that it would pay half the cost.
>
> If the federal government has decided to scale down this program drastically, as reported in Ottawa, the provincial government will insist that the responsibility rests with it, not with the province.

I say if the province of British Columbia embarked on such an extensive program of relief works they probably did so after receiving some assurance that there were unlimited funds here in Ottawa, and that all they had to do was to go ahead with the work. They probably believed that for every dollar they expended they would receive fifty cents from the federal government. I bring these matters before the house in an endeavour to show that a commission should have been appointed. Before I take my seat I shall make some suggestions as to how future relief should be handled. This is a matter which has gone beyond a mere question of parties; no one government can solve it. If conditions are as described by the Minister of Railways and Canals, if they are worse than they were during the war period, it is time we decided to appoint a commission to handle relief, so that this serious matter may be entirely free from party control or influence. In the province of British Columbia supplies were furnished through a process of patronage. I do not think any person in that province ever saw such a quantity of needless supplies purchased. Supplies of all kinds were purchased, including wheelbarrows, blankets and even Delco electric light plants. The driver who was taking out the Delco plants told me at the time I met him that that was the hundredth Delco plant he was delivering.

I have no comment to make regarding the construction camps, except to criticize the loose way in which they were conducted. For instance, men got jobs as surveyors, men whose fathers hold high government positions, and I saw four men running around the country with a car and instruments to lay out bunkhouses, although there were plenty of foremen carpenters available and on the job. To show on what a lavish scale the money was handled, in my riding not far from my home they built two camps a mile apart. In one camp there were thirteen or so large bunkhouses. To supply water to this camp they erected twenty feet in the air a tank of two or three thousand gallon capacity, and then they laid down the necessary piping and plumbing for hot and cold water. When the plumbing had been completed, someone asked: "Where is the water"? Although all this money had been spent they could find no water. Someone suggested that they could get water three-quarters of a mile down the road, but after the trenches were dug a doctor came along and said: "You cannot use that water; it is unfit to drink." He was not a Liberal; he is, I believe, a strong supporter of the government. Then they set men to dig a well, but although they went down eighty-five feet they found no water. Ultimately they had to hire a truck and bring water to the camp in barrels. Someone may say that this scandal should be threshed out in British Columbia. Well, before Mr. Jones, the provincial Minister of Finance, came down to Ottawa three and a half million dollars had been spent. If the unemployed had received the bigger portion of the money I would have little criticism to offer, but the bulk of it went in the purchase of supplies and that from favoured wholesale houses. One manufacturer told me that he sold 50,000 blankets, and it took him out of the red.

Mr. COOTE: That was one good deed, then.

Mr. REID: If the unemployed, the needy and destitute, had received the major portion of the money I do not think there would be very much criticism. I counted in one camp some 450 steel wheelbarrows. They had so many that a man was to be appointed to regulate their use. Ultimately orders were received from the dominion authorities that such extravagance must cease. A serious charge was laid against even a cabinet minister. The men at a camp for the unemployed were cutting wood beside the road and burning it. It seems incredible but actually coal was brought to that camp all the way from Vancouver island. But that was not the worst of this scandal. The coal car was stopped within ten or twelve miles of the camp, and the manager, who was looking after the affairs of the cabinet minister, took the job of hauling the coal the remaining twelve miles to the camp, although that coal could have been taken up the Canadian Pacific tracks right into the camp. That charge was laid against the cabinet minister right in Victoria. And it was not laid entirely by Liberals, even some Conservatives do have a conscience—yes, there are men who have a conscience even although they are Tories.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. REID: Yes. Those Tories were so sore about these scandalous conditions that they made that charge in Victoria against a cabinet minister. Let me give another instance to show the astounding scale on which expenditures were made. The men in one camp were doing nothing, simply marking time, yet tenders were called for cutting wood. When it was brought to the attention of the government that those unemployed men were idle, immediately the government had the notices pulled down and quietly ordered one or two carloads of coal. Yet those men had been working cutting logs and burning them by the roadside. The only explanation given by the minister was that a coal-burning stove had been installed in the camp.

These conditions are so serious that British Columbia has reached the point where it now cannot meet its bills. The provincial government has been advised that the banks will not advance another dollar for unemployment relief. I think it is the duty of every member aware of such scandalous abuses to bring them to the attention of the federal government, so that in future there will be no chance of a repetition of such wasteful expenditure. In fact, as the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) suggested last session, a commission should be appointed to handle unemployment relief. I omitted to mention that machinery was bought on a scale never before known in connection with relief work; close to a million dollars worth, I believe, was purchased.

At this point I should like to commend the good work of two officials of the Dominion government. I have not yet heard anything said on their behalf, and I take this opportunity to give them a word of praise. Mr. McGeough of Vancouver and Mr. Hereford of Ottawa have so far done their duty faithfully. I think if men of like calibre had been appointed so as to take the expenditure of unemployment relief out of the hands of the provincial government there would have been no such extravagant and reckless expenditure. But with the provincial authorities it was just a case of: "Here's the pork barrel; come and get it." And believe me, everyone who could helped himself. This reckless extravagance would be serious enough in ordinary times, but it is criminal during this depression. One man worth, I believe, $50,000 was given a job as foreman. Many other well-off men were asked if they wanted similar jobs. I know that as a fact, for I took a great interest in what was going on in my riding and saw those men at work. Mr. McGeough and Mr. Hereford should be commended for the way in which they carried out their duties. There can be no doubt about the thoroughgoing qualities of Mr. McGeough. I have been told on very good authority that the provincial government have been trying their very hardest to get rid of him. The trouble must be that Mr. McGeough and Mr. Hereford were not given sufficient authority. True, they could check up expenditures after the commitments were made, but had such men been given authority to act before the commitments were made this deplorable condition of affairs would not have been brought about in British Columbia.

It has been said that direct relief is now to be the order of the day, and many of us are being told that such is to be the policy of the government. Personally I am against direct relief, for I think it undermines our men, and I am confident that the proper type of men do not want it. I notice that in my own municipality the unemployed have offered their services to go out and clear land rather than accept direct relief. I repeat I am against direct relief; I would rather see unemployment relief work carried on. So far as British Columbia is concerned we have the camps and I believe we still have the supplies. We have wonderful resources in this country; they must be developed and I think it is far better to carry on useful work than to provide direct relief. If the municipalities are to be required to assist in these relief works this question should be gone into more fully, and I think it should be handled by a commission such as that advocated by the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King), so that the spectacle witnessed in British Columbia last autumn in connection with relief camps and the purchasing of many thousands of dollars worth of needless supplies for the benefit of favoured wholesale houses, will not be seen again, or the further spectacle of men well off and in good circumstances enjoying the advantage of the money which should have been given the needy and destitute. I would go further at this time; I would make it a criminal offence for a man in good circumstances to accept relief moneys of any kind.

In my opinion it is high time that the right hon. Prime Minister took a direct hand in regulating the present chaotic state of affairs in British Columbia. First let him appoint an auditor so that the true financial circumstances will be known. Then let him appoint a committee of business men of integrity who will handle all relief matters, not only in the interests of the country but also in the interests of those citizens who now find themselves, through no fault of their own, destitute and in dire need.

I know, Mr. Speaker, that the problem of unemployment is perhaps greater than governments or parties; no one can solve it at once, no matter what government may be in power. But that is no reason why we should not get down to business and appoint a commission to handle this matter in the future. As the Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion) said, we are faced with a situation such as we have never known before.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I must say that I cannot support this measure. It is just another step in handing over to the executive those rights which should be exercised by parliament. If the country is to be ruled by orders in council we might as well pack up and go home, since the most important functions of parliament have to do with the questions of taxation and the expediture of money. The Prime Minister may have many reasons for asking for this special power, but up to the present time I have not heard them. After I sit down I would be glad to have some member of the government tell the house just why a sum of money could not have been placed in the estimates to provide for the relief of the unemployed and destitute in Canada.

Mr. SAMUEL GOBEIL (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to take part in this discussion, but after listening to the speeches of hon. members opposite I thought I might very well take a few moments to voice the strongest protest of which I am capable against the delay which has been occasioned in the payment of accounts received by the Department of Labour during the past three weeks. That delay has been caused by the obstruction of hon. members opposite. About a month ago I asked Mr. Hereford, director of unemployment relief, if he would be kind enough to let me have, at the beginning of every month, the different accounts rendered by the municipalities in the county of Compton in connection with the relief act. On March 8 I received a letter from Mr. Hereford, from which I desire to quote a few lines:

> The Dominion government has recently received two accounts from municipalities in the county of Compton, one for the municipality of East Angus for expenditures incurred on public works, on which the dominion payment amounts to $2,074.72, and also an account for direct relief disbursed in the municipality of Hampden. These accounts have been audited, but owing to the expiration of the act on March 1, 1932, there will be a delay in our remittance as we are obliged to wait until the above act is extended by parliament before payment can be made.

I am sure hon. members of the house, as well as citizens of Canada generally, well know that because of the spectacle we have seen in this house since March 1, many municipalities will not receive the payments they have been expecting. I think people throughout the country are well aware that those in need of the money they have well earned will not receive it for some time because hon. members opposite already have spent a couple of weeks—and may spend another week, I do not know—in discussing a motion which should have been disposed of in a couple of hours.

As I have already said, we have listened to many speeches by hon. members opposite, some eloquent, some less eloquent, and some that were nothing less than appeals to passion and to the lowest instincts of human nature. I do not propose to quote from many of those speeches, but I do wish to refer to one or two of them because they represent very well the ideas held by hon. members opposite.

The hon. member for Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot), speaking in this house on March 10, is reported as follows:

> The trouble about unemployment in this country is this, that there is no contact between the millionaires who sit on the treasury benches and the common people. They do not know the sufferings of the common people in this country. They are well fed, satisfied and happy, and they cannot imagine that in the cities and in the rural districts there are people who are suffering poverty and hunger.

I ask every sensible member of this house if these are words that any hon. member should utter. They are nothing but appeals to one class as against another. I do not imagine that the hon. member would suggest that the millionaires are all on this side of the house or that they are all Conservatives. I think everyone will agree that the millionaires on this side are no worse than those on the other side, so at a time like this why should we try to stir up one class against another? If the hon. member were sincere and really wanted to help this country; if he desired to ask the millionaires, as other members have suggested, to give part of their wealth back to the treasury of Canada, he could very well use his influence on his own side of the house. For instance, he could interview those who have made a few millions on the Beauharnois deal and ask them to hand back some of that money to the treasury. He said that some of the ministers in this government are well fed and satisfied. Well, Mr. Speaker, as many hon. members in this house know, the hon. member for Témiscouata would not have to go very far from his own constituency to find hon. members who are pretty well fed at the expense of the country, and there are many thousands of the citizens in the province of Quebec who would like to have more details in regard to the services rendered by these hon. gentlemen for the cheque they receive every year. As I have said, however, these words should not come from the lips of any hon. member of this house, and I would never have mentioned what I have, had there not been provocation. Such words, I repeat, should not be found on the lips of any hon. member; but I think we must use the same weapon that is used against us.

[Mr. Gobeil.]

I wish to refer for a few minutes to the remarks made by the hon. member for St. Denis (Mr. Denis). Speaking on this resolution, he made statements which are not very relevant to the question under consideration, but it seems that on this question it is possible to discuss almost anything. I am going to quote the hon. gentleman's words from Hansard, so that it will not be said that I am misrepresenting him:

> Mr. Denis (Translation): I shall say to the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency that this legislation was enacted to redeem the honour of the province of Quebec, attacked and outraged by a mountebank using the election funds, the source of which is as well known by the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency as that of Beauharnois. The hon. member has no right to insinuate that the Liberals of Quebec stole the election in the last provincial campaign. His charge is absolutely false and untrue. He has neither the right to insult the people of Quebec by insinuating that they were bought.

(Translation) I shall point out to the hon. member for St. Denis (Mr. Denis) that the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency never used the words which that hon. member has attributed to him. The following are the words the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency used:

> If the hon. member for Quebec East wishes to discuss autocracy or tyranny, let him tell us about the Dillon bill which the hon. Mr. Taschereau forced through the legislature in order to legalize in Quebec the elections which were stolen last summer!

The hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency, or any other member on the government side never contended that the people, as a whole, in Quebec, had sold themselves last summer. Out of approximately 450,000 citizens who registered their vote in the election of July last, 216,000 were not bribed, notwithstanding all the means resorted to by government agents.

Mr. RHEAUME (Translation): What has this to do with the resolution under discussion.

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): No more than it had when the hon. member for St. Denis made that statement.

Mr. RHEAUME (Translation): Drop the subject then.

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): I wish to answer the hon. member for St. Denis, and I trust, sir, that I shall be allowed the same privilege which was given to that hon. member. Although this may not please hon. members of the opposition, surely we are entitled to refute their arguments, especially when we are attacked.

Apart from the 200,000 electors who could not be bribed, notwithstanding the means resorted to, there were also many thousands of good, sincere and honest Liberals who were not bought. There are still others: the dead who were made to vote, and who certainly were not bribed, the latter were not bought, they were dragged from their coffins. We have been listening, within these last few days, to the hon. members of the opposition referring to this famous act, this corpse which one wishes to bring to life. The provincial Liberal organization brought to life, in the last provincial election, thousands of people who had been dead for a great number of years. The hon. members on the government side simply stated that the election, last year, had been stolen by the provincial government.

Mr. RHEAUME (Translation): They took their cue from the 1930 election.

Mr. LAFLECHE (Translation): That cost less.

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): Indeed, it is such an averred fact that the election was stolen that the Quebec government had to enact the famous Dillon bill which everybody knows, and, to which reference was often made in this house. It is the most infamous and unrighteous act that any government in any province of Canada has ever had adopted, it is an act by which thieves, or at least those so charged, appoint themselves judges in their own case and are declared innocent.

Mr. RHEAUME (Translation): That was a matter of grief to you.

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): That did not grieve us, except as it affects the honour of the people of Quebec; in this respect it has somewhat saddened us.

I do not intend to insist any further on this question. I would not even have alluded to it, if the hon. member for St. Denis had not referred to it the other day.

I return now to the remarks I intended to make on this motion. Hon. gentlemen opposite have a hobby—in fact, they have more than one; they have two or three.

An hon. MEMBER: That is their privilege.

Mr. GOBEIL: Yes, everyone is entitled to have a hobby, and one of their hobbies ever since 1926 has been constitutional issues. I am not going to attempt to discuss the question from the legal or the technical point of view. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) the other day made an excellent statement in regard to the situation. As I say, however, the discussion of constitutional questions seems to be their chief hobby, and I quite admit that from that point of view they had a good deal of success in 1926. But may I remind the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King), and the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) as well as the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), who are the three principal champions of constitutional issues in the province of Quebec—and especially the leader of the opposition—that the situation is not quite the same this year as it was in 1926. Many people know that in 1926 the then Prime Minister, now the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) toured this country and made fiery speeches in which he asked the people of Canada if they were satisfied to be ruled from Downing Street. While the right hon. gentleman was touring the country and making these speeches, he was simply bluffing the citizens of Canada.

Mr. RHEAUME (Translation): The people's verdict was rendered in 1926.

Mr. GOBEIL: Yes, Mr. Speaker, the verdict of the people was rendered but it was rendered on false representations. However, conditions are different to-day, the people know more about these things and they know what reliance to place upon the words of the leader of the opposition.

These diplomats are wonderful men but if I had been the Governor General of Canada I do not think I could have listened to the speeches made by the Prime Minister of the day, and knowing what he knew, I do not think I could have kept that knowledge to myself.

Mr. RHEAUME: Go ahead.

Mr. GOBEIL: I have no doubt that the Governor General will remember as long as he lives the stand taken by the Prime Minister of the day and that he will always regard the right hon. gentleman as the personification of public honesty and integrity.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): Mr. Speaker, I submit that the hon. gentleman should not be allowed to put into the mouth of the former Governor General the phrases he has just used.

Mr. GOBEIL: Is that all?

If I am permitted to offer advice to the right hon. gentleman, it will be that this action will carry no weight with the Canadian people. I advise him to go to the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) and arrange to have his speech printed and distributed. This could be done for very little money.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): Ten cents a copy.

Mr. GOBEIL: Hon. members opposite realize, and we realize that as there is no Beauharnois deal in sight and the Liberal party being in opposition, the means of raising political funds are very limited.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): Does the hon. member think he can get a speech like that for nothing?

Mr. GOBEIL: Certainly.

I have mentioned that the Liberal party has many hobbies. Another one is the use of the words "autocracy" and "dictator" and other similar words.

An hon. MEMBER: Mussolini.

Mr. GOBEIL: I am a new member and have had little experience in the relationship between members of a party and its leader, but hon. members opposite seem to know more about the autocracy of our leader than we do. As far as I am concerned, I know that every time I went to the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) for anything, I was received very courteously.

Mr. RHEAUME: Certainly, because he is a gentleman.

Mr. GOBEIL: If my request was reasonable, it was considered favourably. I say to all hon. members, other than those from Quebec, that they know nothing at all about dictators. Those who come from Quebec know all about what a dictatorship can be. No man in that province can earn a single dollar on any work being carried on by the government unless he first declares that he is a Liberal. If a notary or anyone else who is a friend of the government gets into trouble, the government will pass a private bill to legalize everything. That is dictatorship and autocracy.

At its last session the provincial legislature passed a law taking away the autonomy of the municipalities and putting them under the joug of the provincial government. Any municipality which makes the mistake of electing a Conservative mayor or Conservative councillors finds that it will be treated unfairly by the provincial government.

Mr. RHEAUME: Will the hon. gentleman name some?

Mr. GOBEIL: I do not think any province of Canada or even any civilized country in the world has seen a worse piece of autocracy than the Dillon bill introduced by the government of Quebec.

Mr. RHEAUME: Everyone likes to live there.

Mr. GOBEIL: Is it in the interests of civilization and justice, is it fair to minorities that a provincial legislature should pass a law which gives them control over the courts of the country? I feel certain that in his own conscience every hon. member from Quebec admits that this is not the kind of law which should be passed in a civilized country such as Canada.

May I be allowed to say a few words about Russia? The hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) has claimed in the past to be the champion of the rights of his fellow-Canadians. He may be in the minds of some hon. members, but not in the minds of very many of the citizens of the province of Quebec just now. At the outset of his remarks on this question the other day the hon. member for Quebec East said: Russia is attempting a great experiment.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): What experiment?

Mr. GOBEIL: I do not know just which experiment the hon. member had in mind, but I do know some of the experiments that are being carried on in Russia at the present time. We have heard several members on the other side of the house speak of Russia. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) referred to it at length, and my colleague who spoke this afternoon said that it was really a puzzle why the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre did not leave Canada to live in Russia after all he had said about it. When the embargo on Russian goods was imposed by this government the action was so popular in the province of Quebec that Mr. David, the provincial secretary in the Quebec legislature, introduced a motion in that house with a view to claiming the credit for the order in council passed by this government. In his motion he mentioned the steps that should be taken and warned this government to stop entirely the importation of Russian goods. Why did he do that? The province had nothing whatever to do with the question. It was done solely and simply for the purpose of getting credit with the citizens of the province of Quebec for the action that had been taken by this government.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: May I ask my hon. friend why the embargo was taken off raw furs?

Mr. GOBEIL: In reply I would say that the Prime Minister can very well answer for himself.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member for Compton (Mr. Gobeil) has been subjected to a great many interruptions, all of which are out of order. I would ask hon. members to allow him to continue his speech uninterrupted.

Mr. GOBEIL: As I was saying, the hon. member for Quebec East spoke of Russia attempting a great experiment. I have in my hand a book entitled Moscou sans Voiles, written by Joseph Douillet, Ancien Consul de Belgique en Russie. Fondé de pouvoirs pour le Sud-Est de l'U.R.S.S., du Haut-Commissaire de la S.D.N., le Prof. Nansen. Délégué de l'European Student Relief à Rostov-sur-le-Don. I wish the hon member for Quebec East were in his seat because I would have asked him if he had read this book.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): What is the name of it?

Mr. GOBEIL: The name is Moscou sans Voiles. Has the hon. member read it?

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): Yes.

Mr. GOBEIL: I have no doubt that the hon. member for Quebec East has also read it, so when he was speaking of Russia he was speaking with full knowledge of the facts. I wonder if he was referring, when he mentioned that Russia was attempting a great experiment, to some of the things that are mentioned in this book. The writer of this book has lived nine years in Belgium. He knows Russia probably better than any other European; by reason of his official position, he could go anywhere, to places where other men could not go. At one time he fell under suspicion and was interned. For two years he was imprisoned. In this book he says that one day he went to a school where there were young children, and he heard the schoolmaster questioning one of the boys. I will quote the exact dialogue in French:

(Translation)

The schoolmaster: Tell me, Jeannot, do you pray to God?

The child: Yes, comrade, I pray to God.

The schoolmaster: Does your God give you what you ask him? No answer from the child.

The schoolmaster: Will you ask God immediately to give you bread? You must be hungry?

The child: O yes, comrade, I am very hungry.

The schoolmaster: Very well. Now, pray to God. Who knows, perhaps your Christ will give you bread.

The child hesitatingly kneels down, crosses himself with his little hand and begins to bow to the ground, as he had seen it done in his home. It was a very touching sight to see the ardent and simple faith of this child. But the black crows who watched at his side, after a few minutes, interrupted the child's prayer and asked him.

The schoolmaster: Well, Jeannot, has your God given you bread?

The child with tears in his eyes, without understanding what was expected from him, however, anticipating something.—No, comrade, God is not granting me anything.

The schoolmaster: You see what your God amounts to. Instead of asking him bread, ask some to the communist comrade. Say to him, "Please give me bread, comrade." You will see that the comrade will give you some. And the child half starved, obeyed and submissively repeated:

Comrade, I pray thee, give me some bread.

The communist: You should have begun that way. If you had applied directly to me, I would have immediately given you some bread. You address yourself to God, but have you ever seen him? No, since he does not exist.

Those are some of the experiments, Mr. Speaker, that have been carried on in Russia. Elsewhere in this same book the writer refers to schools attended by young boys and girls of twelve to fifteen and sixteen years of age, and tells of the almost unbelievable immorality that is taking place in those schools. He also refers to marriage and divorce in Russia, and states that in Russia a man and woman may be legally married one day and divorced the next. I wonder if the hon. member for Quebec East was referring to any of these wonderful experiments when he spoke of Russia the other day. While it may be a privilege to be legally married one day and divorced the next, that is not what we want in this country. It does explain to a certain extent why the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) was so cautious about it.

In conclusion I should like again to refer to the payment of moneys under the Unemployment Relief Act being delayed by the action of hon. members opposite. Let me tell the unemployed in Canada that if their relief is delayed it is due to the fact that hon. members opposite are doing all in their power to delay the measure now before the house. I am asking hon. members opposite from the province of Quebec if that is not their only purpose in delaying the bill. Are they not obstructing so that they may return to the province of Quebec and say that the federal government, so far as paying for government works is concerned, is no better than the provincial legislature. I wonder if all hon. members know that the premier of the province of Quebec declared not so very long ago that there was a deficit of over $12,000,000 in that province, and do they know that hundreds of municipalities in the province of Quebec have not yet been paid for work done during the election of last summer to bribe the electors?

I am not in a position to speak accurately concerning present conditions in my home county, because I left there in the early part of February, but I can say that in the month of January over $50,000 was owing by the Quebec government to the constituency of Compton for work done during the elections held last year. In the municipality of Hampden work was done during the months of July, August and September valued at $2,000. Just before I left my home I met one of the executive body in that municipality, a councillor, who told me that he did not know what they were going to do. Hampden is one of the poorest municipalities in Compton. The village of Scotstown is in the township of Hampden. That village constitutes the best part of the township, the remainder of it being very poor. He told me that they could not borrow even $500 from the bank, that they still owed more than $1,000 to the citizens of that municipality who were in need of food for their families. I am quite sure that the money has not yet been paid. Through the action of hon. members opposite the small amount due to the municipality of Hampden will be delayed, and the poor people will not receive their relief. I do not know how long or for how many weeks payment will be blocked, but it is a fair assumption that it will be three, four or five weeks.

I say Mr. Speaker, that such action is a disgrace to the Quebec authorities. If last summer the Taschereau government wanted to bribe the electors by giving them work on the roads, they should have had the decency to have the money for the workers. They should have had the decency to pay for work done. The provincial legislature owes money to many municipalities in my constituencey. I could name at least ten or twelve municipalities in the constituency of Compton that have not been paid by the Quebec government for work performed last summer. I say therefore to the people of Canada that although the Liberal opposition in this house seems to be willing to do all in its power to prevent payment, those people are going to be paid because this government will see to it that the resolution now before us and the bill to follow pass.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member has spoken forty minutes.

Mr. A. A. HEAPS (North Winnipeg): Mr. Speaker, as I have sat in my place in a somewhat detached attitude I have felt more than an ordinary interest in the state of mind displayed by the two major parties in the house. Hon. members on the government side of the house have complained bitterly about the time taken by hon. members on this side. I might point out however that until this afternoon two out of three speakers have been on the government side. They have attempted to defend the attitude of the government, so far as this resolution is concerned, and have taken to themselves a certain amount of praise for what has been done during the last eight or nine months in connection with unemployment.

On the Liberal side of the house we find hon. members performing what after all is a legitimate function, namely that of criticizing the attitude of the government. Certainly we are approaching a completely new condition of affairs in the development of parliamentary practice and procedure when we hear a government party complaining about the opposition using the time of the house for legitimate criticisms of government measures. To-day when the hon. member who has just preceded me (Mr. Gobeil) began to speak he told the house his remarks would take only a few minutes, but hon. members must have noticed that Mr. Speaker had to tell him that he had used his full time.

When he complained about blocking the business of the house my mind went back to the year 1930. I think many hon. members opposite will have a very distinct recollection of the debate on unemployment which took place in that year when practically every Conservative member at that time sitting on this side of the house participated in the discussion. What is occurring in 1932 is exactly what took place in this house in 1930. I am surprised to hear hon. members opposite complain about the discussion of a matter which after all is the most important with which this parliament will have to deal. No question to-day is of greater importance to Canadians than that of unemployment and general economic conditions in Canada.

Mr. PORTEOUS: Were the Conservatives in opposition at that time striving to obstruct unemployment relief?

Mr. HEAPS: In 1930 they exercised the legitimate functions of an opposition by criticizing the attitude of the then government in regard to the unemployment situation.

Mr. PORTEOUS: They were criticizing the government for doing nothing.

Mr. McINTOSH: And in 1929 they blocked unemployment insurance.

Mr. HEAPS: I do not agree with that statement, and in the remarks I have to offer I do not wish to have my argument deflected.

It would seem to me that a personal element has entered into the discussion which has taken place. It is most unfortunate if in the discussion of such a vital question the personal element becomes of greater importance than the real question at issue. During the last couple of days I have heard my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) criticize both parties. I do not mind their being criticized for their opinions, but when I hear bandied across the floor: "What did the Minister of Labour say on March 17"? or "What did the former Minister of Justice say when he went down last July to a by-election in the province of Quebec"? I feel that debate is not being maintained on a very high plane. Yesterday we were told that the youth of this country are solidly behind the Conservative party because Three Rivers-St. Maurice had gone over to the Conservative party. That was an extraordinary statement, and I envy the blissful ignorance of the hon. member who made it, because at about the same time there was a by-election in the city of Hamilton—of which probably he never heard. In the city the ideas expressed by my colleagues from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) and Vancouver South (Mr. MacInnis) and by myself were made the issue. What happened? A Conservative majority of 4,600 was converted into a Labour majority of 3,600. I think most people who know anything about what is taking place in our high schools and our colleges realize that the young people are evincing a greater interest in economic conditions than ever before in the history of the dominion, and if I know anything of the ideas those young people entertain to-day they are anything but favourable to the party now in power.

When we went to Hamilton last year—and I am referring to this only because the question was brought up by the hon. member who spoke of the great Conservative victory in the Three Rivers-St. Maurice by-election—we had nothing to offer the electors.

An hon. MEMBER: And you have nothing yet.

Mr. HEAPS: No, we had no bridges, no wharfs, no $700,000 appropriations in the estimates to offer the electors of East Hamilton, although such inducements were held out to electors during another by-election. We offered the electors of East Hamilton ideas, and they accepted those ideas in preference to the ideas expressed by hon. gentlemen opposite.

So much has been said on the constitutional aspect of the motion that I desire to preface my remarks by a few observations on our constitutional rights and privileges. I admit quite freely, Mr. Speaker, that I do not know a great deal about constitutional questions, I have not given that study to them that perhaps certain other members have, but I should like to express my views on one or two aspects. Our present parliamentary institutions, as has been stated more than once during the course of this debate, date back many hundreds of years, from the time of Simon de Montfort in the thirteenth century. During the whole of that period Great Britain has enjoyed some form of parliamentary institution, and our government to-day is after all only a development of centuries of progress and experience in the old country. Once during the course of those seven hundred years parliamentary government was cast to one side and Britain reverted to a form of dictatorship; I am referring to the brief interregnum when Oliver Cromwell exercised all the powers of a dictator. Hon. gentlemen opposite sometimes tell us how much they dislike the use of the word "dictator." I am very much opposed to any form of dictatorship, and I say quite frankly to hon. gentlemen opposite who so often taunt us of the Labour party about anything we say pertaining to Russia, that we are most bitterly opposed to any form of dictatorship. We stand for the free and full expression of the will of the people of this country. But, as I say, the Lord Protector was a dictator for a few years. Yet I believe there is no British statesman who occupies a higher and more respected place in British history than does Oliver Cromwell. That is an apparent self-contradiction, but I have not the time to deal with it now. Those who have visited Westminster will have noticed in a very conspicuous place in the parliamentary grounds a life-size monument to Cromwell. A few years ago certain Jacobites sought to have the monument moved to a less conspicuous position, but there were loud protests from the radical element in Great Britain and the monument was not disturbed.

I do not attach a great deal of importance to some of the cries in this house of "dictatorship" and "Mussolini." I realize that the constitution should be jealously guarded, but after all it is more or less of a guide by which we may govern ourselves, and changes in the constitution are being made continually. Only last session the government brought down legislation to make some very important constitutional changes. I claim that parliament at all times must adjust itself through its constitution to changing conditions; but I do not want anyone for a moment to infer that I believe any cabinet should clothe itself with greater powers.

The government are now seeking greater authority. They are asking parliament to clothe them with the most extraordinary powers. I claim that behind all these constitutional changes there lies an economic base, and because there is that economic base the government have come to-day demanding from parliament certain powers which probably they may receive as a result of the votes of their supporters. I claim further that up to a certain extent the more extensive powers that the government are now asking are largely a natural sequence to the modern development and trend of capitalism. We have reached a stage to-day in the development of the dominion for which I claim no one party in this house is responsible. I think the two major parties must assume responsibility for the existing conditions. It is due only to the fortunes of political warfare that the Conservative party is in power and the Liberal party in opposition. If my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) were to-day sitting on the treasury benches as the leader of the government, I should be very much interested to observe what particular action he would be taking on this occasion, not from the constitutional point of view, but from the point of view of dealing with economic conditions.

During the course of the debate we have heard a great deal about the supremacy of parliament. I do not for a moment believe that even if this bill is passed the supremacy of parliament will be abrogated and ultimately will lie in the hands of any government, because after all, while parliament may be supreme within its own borders, the ultimate sovereignty lies with our people, and I have the utmost faith in their ability to judge between that which is right and that which is wrong. I am satisfied that if the electorate to-day were given an opportunity to pass a verdict upon the government in regard to this particular piece of legislation it would meet with wholesale condemnation. But if the government in their wisdom choose to ask parliament to adopt a measure of this character, then they must assume full responsibility for their action.

Something was said the other day by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) with regard to "invisible government." I think it is because of that invisible government that to-day legislation such as this becomes necessary in the eyes of the government. I have tried to find out the difference between the attitude of the government now in power and the attitude of the banks. When the general managers of the banks made their annual statements to the shareholders at the beginning of this year, practically without exception they said that this was the time to practise strict economy; that was their panacea for the ills of the nation. When those in control of our parliamentary machine brought before this house what we commonly call the speech from the throne, they spoke of rigid economy, so apparently the difference between the attitude of the banks and that of the government is the difference between strict economy and rigid economy.

I want to refer to one or two actions of the government in regard to the unemployment situation. I am reminded of the speech made by the Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion) a few days ago, when he mentioned the two hundred thousand men and women in Canada who had bought government securities up to the value of $2,000. He asked the house what we in this corner would suggest in that regard, whether we wanted the government to confiscate the money these people had managed to save during their lifetime. I want to say this, Mr. Speaker, and I think I am voicing the sentiments of those hon. members who belong to the group to which I belong: We have no desire to confiscate one cent belonging to any individual who belongs to the poorer classes in Canada; that is the last thing we have in mind, but I want to point out to the house one very important fact which apparently has been overlooked by those who seek to act as apologists for the existing economic order. Who was it that took away from the widows and orphans of this country two-thirds of the value of Canadian Pacific Railway stock? When the value of stocks of that kind was diminished by two-thirds, who was responsible for it? Was it the Labour party? When the value of government bonds dropped from $100 to $89, were we of the Labour party responsible for that depreciation? No, Mr. Speaker; those who were responsible for the depreciation in the value of government bonds were the gentlemen who to-day occupy the treasury benches.

Mr. MANION: Would the hon. gentleman explain what he means by that?

Mr. HEAPS: Surely; I am coming to that. When the government wanted funds and, in collaboration with the banks, offered 5½ per cent interest, they immediately depreciated the value of bonds bearing a lesser rate of interest. By that action the government took away from the capital value of those stocks to the extent of 11 per cent, which was about equivalent to the amount of interest which would have been received if the people had invested their money in bonds bearing the higher rate of interest. So I say that by that action the government confiscated 11 per cent of the value of those bonds, and that was not done as a result of the bolshevistic tendencies of my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth).

Mr. MANION: Is that not rather a strange type of confiscation?

Mr. HEAPS: It is; I admit that it is a strange kind of confiscation. Before leaving that question I want to say that in my humble opinion we have reached the end of an epoch; we are now entering upon a new era in the history of this country, and probably in the history of the world. Governments of to-day, as well as those interested in politics, must make up their minds as to which way they are going to travel. I believe we have reached the parting of the ways; we must either work towards a greater, a freer and a nobler democracy or we must continue in the other direction, in which the financial institutions are leading us, which ultimately will mean some form of fascism or dictatorship. If I have to choose between the two, Mr. Speaker, I will choose the free and full democracy, but that democracy cannot be brought about unless we realize certain fundamental principles. For many long years the masses of the people of Great Britain have been fighting for a political democracy, and to-day they have practically achieved that objective. To-day they have the right to elect their representatives to parliament to legislate in their own interests, but in this country so long as parliament is dominated by the hand of finance, and so long as parliament must bow down to the will of those who control our financial institutions, we are not here as free individuals. That is the reason why I made my previous statement; I do not think we have any alternative. In the past we have achieved a political democracy, but now the great masses of the people must achieve economic freedom; we must bring about what might be called an economic democracy. In other words, we must control those institutions which, to a very large extent, control parliament at this time.

What does economic freedom mean? In the first place it means that the individual must have that economic security in life to which every citizen is entitled but which every citizen does not possess at the present time. It means that the individual to-day cannot have that sense of economic freedom while economic power is vested in the hands of a few, who use that economic power for selfish purposes. To put the matter in another way, the economic forces of the nation must be so harnessed and controlled by parliament that they will be utilized for the common good; the present practice in industry must give way to the higher conception that the forces of production and distribution are a means of satisfying human needs and human requirements. Competitive individualism must give way to the new ideal of cooperative effort, when the individual will realize that he has an interest in the state and that the state has an interest in his well being. Under private control and ownership of the means of production this is not possible; hence we must look to something else as a way out of our difficulties.

One of the main reasons for our present financial difficulties, Mr. Speaker, is that we are passing through an era of contracting capitalism. Until 1929 we were going through a period of expanding capitalism, and now the government is engaged in the thankless task—in which they have my whole-hearted sympathy—of trying to make the contracted dollar of 1932 equal the expanded dollar of 1929. I say that cannot be done. When the government can make two and two equal six they will be able to make our present contracted dollar equal the expanded dollar of 1929. Our debt is now greater because of that fact; our interest charges have increased; our fixed annual charges to-day are greater than ever before in the history of this dominion. Our income has shrunk, not because quantity production has shrunk, although that has been the case to a certain extent. Our dollars have shrunk because values have shrunk. To-day, in spite of the hardships that we have in our midst, in spite of poverty and all that poverty entails, there is more wealth in this country, more potential wealth, than there ever has been in Canada. Now I claim it ought to be the task of governments to get down and try to deal with this fundamental question. If there were a shortage of commodities in Canada, if there were any shortage of real wealth, then there might be some excuse for the suffering which there is in this country. But, as I have said, there is no shortage of either real or potential wealth and therefore there is no excuse for any poverty in our midst.

The government have been taking a good deal of credit for the fact that 334,000 people were provided with an average of twenty-three days' work during the past six months. From my seat in parliament I want to give the government full credit for all that has been accomplished in the way of providing work during the past winter. It was quite a stupendous task to provide employment for 334,000 people in Canada. I think, however, that a moment's sober reflection will show that there is nothing that we in Canada have to be proud about when we find, in the midst of so much wealth, that 334,000 men were compelled to appeal to the government to help them to eke out some miserable form of existence. I say, I do not think there is anything for us to be proud about. But allowing the government all the credit in the world for what they have done in this respect, I want to show something of the other side of the ledger. Let us try to get a true picture of the unemployment situation in Canada.

I figure that if the amount of time worked by these men who were employed on government relief works were put upon the basis of one year's employment, it would represent employment for approximately 25,000 people. That is another way of putting it; that is to say, the government found work for 25,000 people for twelve months. Now in this year's estimates we find, out of controllable government expenditures, there is $55,000,000 less provided than was provided the year before, and I venture to say that, with the reduction in the estimates of civil government for the past fiscal year, they put as many people out of work as they actually employed by giving an average of twenty-two days' work to 334,000 people.

Let us take the latest figures for the railways—because after all this is a fair barometer of conditions in Canada. I find that at the peak of 1929 there were 201,060 men employed on the railways. On December 31, 1931, a little over two months ago, there were 130,802 persons employed on the railways, a reduction of 70,258, or, in other words, a reduction of approximately thirty-five per cent in the number of men employed on the railways in Canada. And if that is the situation with regard to the railways, then I believe it is only a fair indication of what is taking place also in other industrial enterprises in Canada.

I claim that within the confines of the existing structure the government will not be in a position to find any remedies for the unemployment situation. The government have asked us for suggestions. Well, we have made many suggestions to them from this corner of the house, but they take our suggestions and throw them into the waste basket, and therefore we do not feel inclined to offer many more. We do not want to have our suggestions handled in such an unceremonious manner. But we have put forward suggestions.

[Mr. Heaps.]

For example, seven years ago the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and I offered a suggestion with regard to old age pensions, and we were likened to Robin Hood because we dared to ask for some provision for the aged. Then we made a request for unemployment insurance, and although we were told five or six years ago that we were rather premature in putting forward that suggestion, we find that to-day all hon. members are in favour of granting some form of unemployment insurance. I sincerely trust that during the lifetime of this parliament the government will introduce a measure of unemployment insurance and that it will be of such a nature that we of the Labour group can support it. Again, a few weeks ago we suggested shorter hours and increased purchasing power. But all these have gone into the discard as not acceptable.

Now I am going to offer one other suggestion, a novel one perhaps, but one that has been discussed for many years; and in view of the fact that the unemployed portion of our population seems to be something more or less permanent in the social structure of the country, and although the present government or any government in the immediate future may not be able or willing to handle it fundamentally, I should like to see the government seriously consider the proposal of trying to make the unemployed in Canada a self-contained element in the community. I know that a proposal of that sort could be discussed pro and con and a good deal could be said against it as for it. But after giving this question a little study I believe that, while all that could be said against it would have considerable weight with those who might form an opinion, the idea of making the unemployed in this country self-sustained, so that they might be able to retain all that is best in them, is something that is worthy of serious consideration both by the government and by members of this house.

Before I conclude I wish to refer to some remarks made this afternoon by the hon. member for East Algoma (Mr. Nicholson), remarks which I do not think ought to go unchallenged in this house. I have a good deal of respect for any hon. gentleman elected as a member of this house. A good deal of honour attaches to any man who has the confidence of the people who elect him to represent them in this chamber, and there is always in this house a certain standard of conduct which I believe most hon. members try honestly to observe. When the hon. member for East Algoma spoke this afternoon he discussed certain observations made by my hon. friend from Vancouver South (Mr. MacInnis) in reference to Russia, and it seemed to me that when the hon. member for East Algoma was discussing my hon. friend's remarks he was unfair to himself, to the hon. member for Vancouver South, and to the house as well. I said to him, "Will you kindly read the statement in full?" And his reply was, "I will make my speech in my own way." Well, he is perfectly entitled to do so, and I am entitled to reply to him in my own way. He quoted certain remarks of the hon. member for Vancouver South as reported at page 982 of Hansard. I asked him to continue the quotation but he would not.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Did the hon. member expect me to read the whole of the hon. gentleman's speech?

Mr. HEAPS: I wanted the hon. member to be fair to the house and to finish the sentence which he was quoting; that was all. Seeing, however, that he did not finish the sentence, I am going to finish it for him. I will quote the whole sentence, of which the hon. member for East Algoma read but a brief extract. My hon. friend from Vancouver South was replying to a statement made by the Minister of Railways, and he said:

When the Minister of Railways is discussing Russia he should not forget that Russia at the present time is at war;—

I asked the hon. member for East Algoma to continue with the statement, but he refused. He quoted only one-half of the sentence, the remainder reading:

—it is making war on poverty, on ignorance and on the superstition that has grown and fattened under the czarist rulers.

I think the hon. member did himself a great injustice when he refused to read to the house the complete statement.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie (Vancouver) the debate was adjourned.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Thursday, March 17, 1932

The house met at three o'clock.

CHARGES BY HON. G. N. GORDON

Mr. J. L. BOWMAN (Dauphin): I have been asked by the chairman of the committee investigating the charges made by Hon. G. N. Gordon to present the second report of the special committee appointed to inquire into certain charges and allegations made by Hon. G. N. Gordon, K.C., together with the exhibits filed, and a copy of the proceedings and evidence taken:

The special committee appointed to inquire into certain charges and allegations made by the Hon. George N. Gordon, K.C., beg leave to present the following as a second report:

After hearing the evidence, your committee is agreed that the charges and allegations contained in the extracts from The Globe newspaper, as set out in the order of reference, were, in fact, made upon public occasions in Hamilton, Ont., on January 6, 1932, and in Lindsay, Ont., on January 8, 1932, by the Hon. George N. Gordon, K.C., as reported in The Globe newspaper of Toronto, Ont., with the exception that the words "Mrs. Herridge" appear in The Globe of January 6, whereas the words "Mr. Herridge" were those used.

As to the statement that a new private car was constructed for the use of the Prime Minister at a cost to the people of Canada of $125,000, your committee feels that this charge is of a relatively minor character, it being a charge of extravagant expenditure, and not one of misappropriation. It finds, however, that the statements made in this respect gave an entirely erroneous impression of the transaction, and were not warranted by the facts as brought out in evidence. Your committee points out that there has been no increase in the number of government private cars since the present government assumed office.

As to the charges and allegations so made, other than that above dealt with, your committee is of the opinion that they were of a most serious nature, calculated to do injury to the reputation of the Right Hon. R. B. Bennett, Prime Minister of Canada, a member of the House of Commons; and your committee finds that the charges and allegations so made were untrue.

Your committee finds further that these charges and allegations were made with the intention of injuring the Right Hon. R. B. Bennett, Prime Minister of Canada, a member of the House of Commons, in his office as Prime Minister, and were made recklessly and without any adequate attempt to ascertain, before making them, whether they were true or untrue.

In the opinion of your committee, the conduct of Mr. Gordon in making the statements he did was reprehensible and deserving of the censure of the House of Commons, the more so as Mr. Gordon is a member of the King's Privy Council for the Dominion of Canada.

A copy of the proceedings and evidence taken, together with the exhibits filed, is attached.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

G. R. Geary,
Chairman.

Mr. HOWARD: Messrs. Howard and Duff dissenting.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

IMPORTATIONS OF BUTTER FROM NEW ZEALAND

Mr. GOTT:

How many pounds of butter were imported from New Zealand into Canada for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1931?

Mr. STEVENS:

Canada's imports of butter from New Zealand by months for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1931, were:—

Months—1930	Pounds
April	2,455,061
May	2,838,575
June	2,852,529
July	434,034
August	1,805,233
September	876,752
October	2,167,254
November	64
December	84,242
1931
January	1,796
February	132,338
March	147,002
Total, fiscal year 1931	13,794,880

PROTECTION OF CANADIAN SHIPBUILDING INDUSTRY

Mr. FORTIN:

1. Since August 7, 1930, were requests made to the government and were measures taken to place a duty of 25 to 50 per cent in order to protect the Canadian maritime construction and repair of ships in Canada?

2. If so, what measures were taken?

Mr. RHODES:

1 and 2. Requests have been received on several occasions since August 7, 1930, looking toward increased protection for the shipbuilding industry. No tariff changes relative to this industry, in so far as Items 440 and 440 (a) are concerned, were effected since the date above named.

CANADIAN MISSION TO SOUTH AMERICA

Mr. POULIOT:

1. What was the total cost of the travelling expenditure of the Canadian mission headed by hon. member for Argenteuil (Sir George Perley) to South America early last year?

2. What was the total cost of communications exchanged between the Canadian delegate or delegates on such mission and any member or official of the government: (a) by cable; (b) by wireless; (c) by wireless telephone?

3. What was the total amount of our imports from and our exports to South America: (a) last year (1931); (b) the year previous (1930)?

Mr. CAHAN:

1. Expenses incurred by the Right Hon. Sir George Perley and secretary in connection with trade mission to South America—$5,569.67.

[Mr. Howard.]

2. Cost of communication forwarded to Sir George Perley:—

(a) By cable
(b) By wireless } $153.48

(c) Wireless telephone services were rendered without charge by the telephone companies in connection with the establishment of new long distance circuits during the British Empire trade exhibition at Buenos Aires.

Cost of messages sent by Sir George Perley to any member or official of the government included in total expenses indicated in No. 1 above and is not available separately.

3. Canada's total imports from and domestic exports to South America for the calendar years 1931 and 1930, were:—

(a) Calendar Year 1931

Countries	Imports from	Domestic Exports to
	$	$
Argentina	3,205,430	4,575,497
Bolivia	..	81,271
Brazil	1,038,860	1,139,118
British Guiana	4,247,774	892,279
Chile	108,733	580,493
Colombia	5,051,350	648,911
Dutch Guiana	..	71,052
Ecuador	399	32,236
Falkland Islands	10
French Guiana	..	40,450
Paraguay	22,228	35,699
Peru	2,976,418	698,265
Uruguay	111,025	529,102
Venezuela	634,662	600,762
Total 1931	17,396,889	9,925,135

(b) Calendar Year 1930

Countries	Imports from	Domestic Exports to
	$	$
Argentina	7,641,000	12,417,486
Bolivia	..	40,265
Brazil	1,391,111	3,311,070
British Guiana	4,419,969	1,325,954
Chile	546,994	1,106,758
Colombia	5,691,726	1,264,611
Dutch Guiana	..	82,130
Ecuador	..	65,622
Falkland Islands	..
French Guiana	..	67,456
Paraguay	12,424	52,160
Peru	4,527,217	1,866,066
Uruguay	187,039	908,998
Venezuela	2,947,881	1,081,437
Total 1930	27,365,361	23,590,013

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF, PICTOU COUNTY, NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. ILSLEY:

1. What federal public works in Pictou county, Nova Scotia, have been constructed or undertaken by the government under the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act, 1931?
2. What amounts were authorized in respect of each work?
3. What are the names of the foremen employed in respect of each work and on whose recommendation were they appointed?
4. On whose recommendation was the selection made of men to be given employment in connection with each of these respective works?
5. What was the expenditure actually incurred in respect of each of such works?
6. Are any such works as yet unfinished, if so, which of such works?
7. On whose recommendation did the government decide on the authorization of each of the works referred to?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds):

(1)	(2)	(3)		(4)	(5)	(6)	(7)
	$	(a)	(b)		$ cts.
Abercrombie—Wharf repairs	4,000	N. F. Henderson..	District Engineer	District Engineer and Foreman	3,864 40	Completed.....	District Engineer.
Bailey's Brook—Extension to pier.	4,500	H. Scott Patton..	"	"	2,701 63	Work suspended for season.	"
New Glasgow—Wharf extension.	11,000	J. H. McDonald..	"	"	10,705 83	Completed.....	"
Pictou—Repairs to commissioners wharf.	3,000	M. Langill.....	"	"	2,980 46	"	"
River John—Wharf repairs..	1,000	J. E. MacDonald.	"	"	998 94	"	"
Trenton—Completion of new wharf.	500	J. W. Powell.....	"	"	496 10	"	"

CIRCULATION OF BANK NOTES

Mr. SPENCER:

What was the total of chartered bank notes, dominion notes and subsidiary coin in circulation on July 31, 1929, and January 31, 1932, respectively?

Mr. RHODES:

	As at July 31, 1929	As at January 31, 1932
Total bank notes in circulation..	$170,113,031 00	$133,673,369 00
Total dominion notes issued and outstanding...	196,441,166 54	170,382,805 69
Canadian gold and subsidiary coin issued and outstanding ..	32,684,147 75	34,474,608 00

POST OFFICES—COUNTY OF TÉMISCOUATA

Mr. POULIOT:

1. How many post offices were there in the county of Témiscouata, in August, 1930?
2. To how many postmasters did the Postmaster General send a circular letter requesting resignation for political partisanship?
3. How many postmasters, in the county of Témiscouata, sent in their resignations since August, 1930?
4. What are their names?
5. By whom were they replaced?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. 74.

2. No postmasters were asked to send in their resignations but 14 were communicated with in connection with charges of political partisanship made against them.

3. 2.

4 and 5. Jos. Michaud, postmaster at Lamy, replaced by C. J. W. Levesque; Chas. Bossé, postmaster at St. Eusebe, replaced by Paul Langlois.

Mr. POULIOT:

1. How many post offices were closed, in the county of Témiscouata, since August, 1930?
2. What are the names of the postmasters who were in charge of each of these respective post offices?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. 3.

2. Detour du Lac, Isaie Beaulieu; Dartigny, Emile Beaulieu; Isle Verte Sud, Jos. Dumont.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF—RICHMOND-WOLFE COUNTY

Mr. LAFLECHE:

What is the total amount agreed upon between the provincial and federal governments, for the county of Richmond-Wolfe, in connection with the Unemployment Relief Act?

Mr. GORDON:

Under the Unemployment Relief Act, 1930, the Dominion government agreed to contribute $19,150 to public works and undertakings in the county of Richmond, and $13,955 in the county of Wolfe.

Under the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act, 1931, the Dominion government agreed to contribute $25,600 to public works and undertakings in the county of Richmond, and $7,000 in the county of Wolfe.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

CIVIL SERVICE EMPLOYEES

Mr. CHEVRIER:

1. How many civil servants (inside service) who have reached the age of 70, are still employed in the various departments at Ottawa?
2. What positions do they occupy; what salaries are they paid annually; what retirement allowance would they receive, annually, in each case, if retired?
3. How many come under the Civil Service Superannuation Act?
4. How many come under the Civil Service Retirement Act?
5. What amount of retirement allowance (lump sum) would each one receive upon retirement?

Mr. CAHAN: I am asking that this question stand as an order for return because I am having some difficulty in obtaining all the facts.

CIVIL SERVICE EMPLOYEES

Mr. TETREAULT:

1. How many persons were in the government's service, at Ottawa, on July 1, 1929?
2. How many were employed as temporaries?
3. How many were permanently employed?
4. What was the total amount paid yearly in salaries to these employees?
5. How many were French Canadians?
6. How many belonged to other nationalities?
7. What was the total amount paid yearly in salaries to French Canadian employees on July 1, 1929?
8. How many persons were in the service of the government, at Ottawa, on July 1, 1930?
9. How many were employed as temporaries?
10. How many were permanently employed?
11. What was the total amount paid yearly in salaries to these employees?
12. How many were French Canadians?
13. How many belonged to other nationalities?
14. What was the total amount paid yearly in salaries to French Canadian employees on July 1, 1930?

Mr. CAHAN: The same applies to this question. I am asking that it stand as an order for return. We are working on it, but it will be some time before we can supply all the data required.

[Mr. Gordon.]

VANCOUVER HARBOUR COMMISSION, MOODYVILLE PROPERTY

Mr. MacINNIS:

1. What were the estimated quantities and the prices for the different classifications on which the Vancouver harbour commissioners entered into a contract with ss. Magoffin Company, Limited, for excavation and fill in respect to the Moodyville property, and the reclamation area on the north shore of Burrard inlet?
2. What was the date of the contract and the date of completion of the work?
3. What are the names of the committee of engineers appointed to make classification of material as the work proceeded, how much was paid to each, and why was appointment of such a committee resorted to?
4. What was the last estimate in quantities of different material submitted by this committee of engineers?
5. Was the classification made by these engineers enforced?
6. Under what authority was a single arbitrator appointed?
7. What was the quantity classification and price award made by the arbitrator, with his name, occupation, time employed and amount paid for his services?
8. How much was paid to Magoffin Company for extras, and what was the total amount paid for all work done?
9. In what amounts have the commissioners distributed the total cost of this work between the Moodyville property and the reclaimed area?
10. Who was the owner of the Moodyville property at the time this work was done?
11. Is it a fact that the original draft of the cross sections disappeared permanently during the progress of the work?
12. Who were chief engineer or acting engineer and consulting engineer to the commission during the job?
13. Who comprised the commission when the job was completed and paid for?

Mr. MacINNIS:

1. What is the amount paid by Vancouver harbour commission for purchase of Moodyville property, with name of vendor and date of purchase?
2. Who comprised the commission when purchase was made?
3. What is the name, address, occupation and amount paid respecting each person who made a valuation of this property for the commission?
4. Had any part of the area purchased been previously improved under the Magoffin contract, and if so, at what cost?
5. What is the total area purchased and how much of it is above high water line, and how much below high water line?
6. What is the distribution of the purchase price between the portions of the property above and below high water respectively?
7. Was the right-of-way for the Vancouver harbour commission terminal railway through the Moodyville property, in the possession of the commission before this purchase was put through, if so, what was the cost of this right-of-way?
8. Has the property been put to any use since, if so, what use?

9. What are the annual carrying charges on account of this purchase?

10. Is the government obtaining a return from this property?

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

REQUEST BY CITY OF PRINCE RUPERT FOR FEDERAL AID

On the orders of the day:

Mr. OLOF HANSON (Skeena): I should like to direct a question to the government based on a telegram which I received this morning from the city of Prince Rupert. It is as follows:

At a meeting of the council held on the fourteenth instant the following resolution was passed and I was instructed to telegraph the same to you:

"Whereas the city of Prince Rupert has carried the burden of feeding the destitute at a cost beyond the capacity of the city to carry, and whereas the number of these destitute will probably be doubled on account of the halibut fishing being already deemed a failure in this port, the halibut prices down to three and a half cents and two cents making it impossible for fishermen to carry on, and whereas the fishing industry is the only payroll at present possible in this city, and whereas the destitute are badly in need of clothing as well as of food, and whereas the mining and lumbering industries are completely paralyzed with all mills closed down, and whereas this city is unable to finance the unemployed any further, being also unable to meet their own obligations on account of the reluctance of the bank to help, be it resolved that a wire be sent to both the members of the Dominion and provincial parliaments asking that the Dominion government take over the full charge of the direct relief and that ample provision be made to relieve the acute situation at present existing."

Will the government give this matter serious consideration and speedy action?

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I confess I have had a good deal of difficulty hearing the remarks of the hon. member. I understand however from what he was reading that he is interrogating the government with respect to an important matter concerning the city of Prince Rupert in the province of British Columbia. If he will let his question stand as a notice I will look into the matter and at the earliest possible moment give him all the information we have.

UNEMPLOYMENT AND FARM RELIEF

CONTINUANCE ACT, 1932—CONSIDERATION OF RESOLUTION

The house resumed from Wednesday, March 16, consideration of the motion of the Prime Minister that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee of the whole on the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to introduce a bill to amend chapter 58 of the statutes of Canada, 1931, striking out the word "March" in section 8, and substituting the word "May" therefor.

Hon. IAN MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, impressed as I am with the significance of this particular occasion and realizing this is the only opportunity I shall have during my forty minutes to say something with which every hon. member in this house will agree, may I as a Scottish born Canadian be permitted to say how much we appreciate the marvellous contribution that has been made to the development and upbuilding of our Canadian nation, both in settlement and in government, by those of Irish birth and lineage.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

An hon. MEMBER: Say it over again.

An hon. MEMBER: St. Patrick's Day in the morning.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Fifteen hundred years ago that marvellous patron saint of Old Erin landed upon the Irish shores. The spirit and genius of the Irish race, to my mind, has been exemplified in those wonderful lines of the Irish poet O'Shaughnessy:

> We are the music makers,
> And we are the dreamers of dreams
> Sitting by lone sea-breakers
> And sighing by desolate streams.
>
> World losers and world forsakers,
> And when the pale moon gleams
> We are the movers and shakers
> Of the world forever, it seems.

I trust, Mr. Speaker, with the unanimous consent of the house, you will not take this time off my forty minutes.

An hon. MEMBER: Carry on like that, and we will not.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): The real sentiment I desire to express in all sincerity is that we, representing the various portions of the Canadian nation in this house of parliament, express a sincere hope for the prosperity of Erin and that those people of Irish descent, may in years to come be privileged to make an ever increasing contribution to the literature, the music, the arts, the trade, the commerce and the general upbuilding of our Canadian nation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the buttons are off the foils. The resolution before the house has been debated for about ten days.

An hon. MEMBER: Too long.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Yes, too long, but due to a deliberate lack of preparation by the government which you support. The resolution to my mind invites consideration under three main heads. In the first place, it is the only announcement we have had during the present session of any government policy to deal with the grave question of unemployment; in the second place, it is indicative of the superlative ineptitude of the administration in its failure to produce at this session a real constructive and comprehensive policy in regard to unemployment; in the third place, it is a blunt and blatant evasion of the ordinary rules of parliamentary procedure, and a ruthless, arrogant and autocratic disregard of the functions and responsibilities of parliament and of the rights of the Canadian people. This resolution entails first, consideration of the record of the administration in dealing with unemployment. I am sorry the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) is not in his seat, because he is the arch-author of our present miseries in regard to unemployment.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Is there any hon. gentleman opposite, Mr. Speaker, who will deny the scope, the extent and the character of the promises made by the Prime Minister during the election of 1930?

An hon. MEMBER: The same old story.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): The same old story! I suppose my hon. friend wants something new. Well, I am reminded of the song: "Every Little Girl Can Teach You Something New."

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I trust, Mr. Speaker, that I have a meticulous timekeeper who will take off from my precious forty minutes all these senseless, useless interruptions. I know my hon. friends opposite are restless and apprehensive lest I place again on the pages of Hansard the character and extent of the reckless promises that were made by their leader in 1930.

An hon. MEMBER: Turn on the gas.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Let me tell hon. gentlemen opposite, we shall place those reckless promises on Hansard as frequently as we wish, and we shall go on every platform throughout the dominion and place those extravagant promises before the Canadian nation. I want hon. gentlemen opposite to explain what their leader meant when he promised the Canadian people: I will cure unemployment. "There is no excuse for unemployment if the government does its duty" in British Columbia; "there is no excuse for hard times if the federal government does its duty!" These promises were either true or false. If they were true during the summer of 1930, when in the classic language of Sir Henry Drayton, "The sun is still shining and the rivers are still sparkling down to the sea," then they were equally true in 1932. If we are to accept as true the words of the Prime Minister, that there was no excuse for unemployment in Canada during 1930, then those words are a ringing challenge to him in regard to his confessed failure to cure unemployment in 1932. We say these promises were definite, we say they were sweeping, we say they regarded the unemployment problem as a national problem. Let me quote very briefly from the statement made by the right hon. gentleman at Montreal:

> Unemployment has become a national problem in Canada. It is the direct result of nine years of unsound economic policies applied by the Liberals.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Surely, Mr. Speaker, "The Lord hath delivered them into my hands." In 1930 unemployment in Canada, according to Tory speakers, was caused by what? They said it was caused by the policies of the administration of that day. In 1932 we have witnessed the sorry spectacle during this session of member after member of a servile and subservient majority rising in their places and saying: "Oh, world conditions alone are responsible for unemployment in the dominion." Well, Mr. Speaker, they cannot have it both ways. We say that world conditions were responsible for unemployment in 1930 and that world conditions are largely responsible for the deplorable situation in 1932. But we say further that the effect of world conditions upon unemployment in Canada in 1932 has been aggravated and accentuated by the hopeless and futile policies pursued by hon. gentlemen opposite. We say categorically that the promises made have not been kept, and that the Prime Minister has broken faith with the Canadian nation.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I say he has most deliberately broken faith with the Canadian nation.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Did he, or did he not, tell the Canadian people, "I will end unemployment or perish in the attempt?"

An hon. MEMBER: Didn't he try?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I submit, Mr. Speaker, that he has not ended unemployment.

An hon. MEMBER: He has not perished yet.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): He is perishing very, very rapidly, he is disintegrating most perceptibly. According to his own figures produced before this house, on September 19, 1930, there were unemployed in the dominion 117,000. According to the figures given last week by the president of the Trades and Labour Congress to-day there are 550,000 Canadian citizens out of work. So that the concrete result of the policies and the plans of this administration is that we have expended $150,000,000 in eighteen months and have multiplied our unemployed almost fivefold. That is, at the present rate the government are pursuing their policy in regard to unemployment they are expending $100,000,000 a year. With what result? To-day we have hunger marchers parading through the streets of Vancouver, Calgary, Edmonton, Winnipeg and Montreal. What conditions have we to-day on the spacious plains of our great prairie provinces? What conditions have we on the farms in old Ontario? Yet do we not remember, Mr. Speaker, another voice calling in the far west: "When did free trade fight for you? I will make tariffs fight for you?" But what have their precious, priceless tariffs done for our primary producers and our manufacturers? They have ruined Canadian trade.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I maintain they have ruined Canadian trade. Our trade is down by nearly $1,000,000,000. The government have stifled Canadian trade with their pernicious prohibitions. They have shaken the foundations of imperial trade. What have hon. gentlemen opposite done in regard to agriculture? We have heard our friends from the west, men who have toiled upon the farms and know whereof they speak, state that never since confederation have the prices received by the primary producers been so low as they are to-day under this great fabric of tariffs. "I will make tariffs fight for you."

An hon. MEMBER: Why don't you go outside?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Let my hon. friends opposite go out into the constituencies, let them face the people of Canada and ascertain what they think with regard to what the tariff policy of this administration has done for Canadian trade. What has it done? It ruined the New Zealand trade. We have not yet had the New Zealand treaty produced for the consideration of this house, but we have had the spectacle of my very good friend and esteemed opponent, the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens), sailing to the sunny strands of Waikiki and there endeavouring to repair the ravages that he and his party made in our trade with New Zealand. Then, Mr. Speaker, we had the special session of 1930.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancuover): You should be patient and listen to the truth for once. We had the special session of 1930, ostensibly called to redeem the pledge to end unemployment, and what happened during that session? We had increases in two hundred items of the Canadian tariff, and towards the end of that two weeks' session we had thrown in our faces an unemployment policy giving $20,000,000 for purposes only specified in a general and not in a particular way. Any time we dared raise our wicked voices on this side of the house hon. gentlemen opposite said, "Hush, hush; be careful lest ye keep from the councils of the Imperial conference that great Canadian statesman, the Prime Minister."

Foolishly, sir, we permitted him to go to the conference, and what happened? May I draw a contrast for the benefit of the house, and particularly for my hon. friends from the old province of Quebec. You will remember that Sir Louis Davies moved the resolution in 1893 in this commons with regard to preferences; you will remember that after the election of 1896, when Laurier and Fielding were returned to power, a special session was called in April, 1897, on the eve of an imperial conference. They brought down preferences to Great Britain and, after a special session lasting two or three weeks, Laurier sailed for the old land. He laid upon the knees of Queen Victoria the Good, in the year of her diamond jubilee, a magnificent gesture by Canada looking to real imperial unity, not a unity achieved by blustering bargaining such as we see to-day. Laurier returned to Canada after receiving the acclaim of England and France, and for many months after his return Canada knew not the meaning of political parties.

What happened in 1930? The Prime Minister of Canada, after raising the tariffs against our kith and kin in the motherland, crossed the seas to that lovely old island and strutted most magnificently into the council room of empire, bearing pompously upon his shoulders the newly acquired mandate of public approval. He most imperiously issued to the almost affrighted delegates from the other portions of the empire his ultimatum in regard to a ten per cent increase in tariffs all round and returned to Canada without acclaim or approval. That is the contrast between 1930 and 1897.

Now let us come to the special session. At page 140 of Hansard for that session the Prime Minister said:

> . . . we are asking this parliament by the measure now before it first of all to recognize the situation as one of a national character and secondly to agree to the appropriation of the sum of $20,000,000 . . .

Then he stated the various ways in which that money was to be applied. At that time the Prime Minister gave the number of unemployed as 117,000. May I recall the prophetic utterances of my hon. friend from Weyburn (Mr. Young) on that occasion, as found at page 115 of Hansard for that session:

> This proposal to take $20,000,000 of the taxpayers' money and spend it on public works and other things to relieve unemployment is fundamentally unsound. It will not relieve unemployment. It will not relieve the smallest fraction of unemployment. After you have done all this work, you will find more unemployment in the country than you had in the beginning.

Surely that statement has been borne out by the facts. Now I would recall our attitude on that occasion, as indicated by the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) at page 163 of Hansard for the second session of 1930:

> . . . I think that would have been entirely the best plan for the government to have adopted—to have appointed a special body for the purpose of administering this fund, to have made that body responsible for every dollar of the expenditure, and to have had the accounts audited in detail by the Auditor General of this country. If that course is not to be followed—and I assume it is not—then I think it is doubly important that great care should be taken to see that the money goes to the destination for which it is intended.

Now I should like to quote, with particular emphasis, the words of the Prime Minister as they appear at page 175 of Hansard for that year:

> . . . I have said further that this government accepts the responsibility that is involved in this expenditure.

What have we to-day in British Columbia? Sitting in the capital city of that province we have a committee investigating the maladministration of unemployment moneys throughout the province, though on the declaration of the Prime Minister himself, as found at page 175 of Hansard, this government has accepted full responsibility for the administration of every cent voted by this parliament in regard to relief in the province of British Columbia. Now may I recall with diffidence my own words on that occasion, as found at page 179 of Hansard. They were almost prophetic also in regard to what was to transpire:

> . . . the people of British Columbia to-day do not want the hon. Minister of Finance of British Columbia to be responsible for any expenditure in that province of any part of the money which this parliament is about to vote. . . the people of British Columbia to-day would much prefer to have the expenditure of any portion of this $20,000,000 in the province under the direct supervision of this government . . .

I want to tell hon. gentlemen opposite that if that plan had been followed they would have avoided a great deal of grief in British Columbia. On that occasion we asked four things. We asked the government to bring in a supply bill; we asked that this House of Commons retain control over expenditure; we asked a thorough and complete audit by the Auditor General of this dominion—and this afternoon I am asking this government, through the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie), to have a complete audit made of the funds in British Columbia under the auspices of the Auditor General of Canada—and we asked also for the appointment of a national unemployment relief commission.

Now, sir, we come to the session of 1931, and what happened? We had this nefarious bill introduced. My hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) said the other day that the bill was absolutely in order because it was approved by the Canadian parliament. I want to inform my hon. friend that such approval was only obtained by coercion as far as the minority in this parliament was concerned; that bill never did and never will receive the approval of those who believe in the fundamental and essential principles of liberty and the freedom of parliament under the constitution. That bill was divided into three parts. In the first place it dealt with the relief of unemployment in a general way; in the second place it dealt with farm relief in the west, and in the third place it contained this pernicious phraseology having to do with peace, order and good government in the Dominion of Canada. I should like to recall to hon. members two very short declarations made on that occasion, one by my right hon. leader and the other by the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe). The right hon. leader of the opposition, at page 4415 of Hansard for 1931, is reported as follows:

If this measure were dealt with as it deserves to be it would be the duty of the House of Commons to remain in session until the measure was withdrawn. That is the only way in which I believe a free parliament could in the circumstances be expected to maintain the rights of a free people.

The hon. member for Quebec East, at page 4418, said:

I say it is a piece of despotism which has not had any parallel in the history of Canada or so far as I am aware of any other democratic country enjoying responsible government. It is the establishment of a virtual dictatorship. There is no doubt about it.

Let us characterize under three headings what was done by the bill of last year. The first thing was this: It was the last order of the session, appearing on the order paper towards the end of July or in the first days of August, after about fifty invitations and requests had been addressed to the government by hon. members on this side of the house to have the unemployment policy brought down. In the second place it substituted the authority of the executive for the authority of parliament. It went further; it not only divested parliament of control with regard to questions of expenditure and taxation, but it gave to the executive council of the Dominion of Canada the unprecedented right to alter by order in council the laws on the statute books of this country. It deprived parliament of the control of public moneys that were to be spent between the termination of last session and the commencement of this session.

Now I should like to recall to my hon. friend the Minister of Justice the words of a gentleman whom I am sure he will acknowledge to be an expert upon constitutional law. I refer to the president of the Canadian Bar Association who, in October of 1931, in referring to the act passed last year, used these words:

A delegation by parliament of its powers in the widest possible terms to the executive authority for the period during which the act is to remain in force.

And again:

In these trying times great indeed, are the responsibilities of statesmanship but great also is, at all times, the responsibility of the legal profession to guard with the utmost care, giving of course due and unprejudiced consideration to all pertinent circumstances against any measure which might tend to unduly abridge the actual participation of the citizens at large in the making of the laws under which they shall live and their actual and timely control over the expenditures of their common funds.

This was a much more vicious, much more iniquitous and much more pernicious form of legislation than was ever contained in any war measure passed in the Dominion of Canada. I could quote figures if I chose, Mr. Speaker, with regard to what have been the results of this unemployment policy even as it has affected their pet, protected manufacturing industries. What has happened? Between the day of the election in 1930 and the month of February 1932 we find a decrease of 203,000 in the number of employees in the manufacturing industries of Canada. That is the effect of the Canada First policy, the self-centred, selfish and outworn creed of economic nationalism. That is all it is. They have reduced the number of employees by 203,000 in the manufacturing industries of this country. And what has happened so far as trade is concerned? In 1929 the figure was $2,600,000,000; in 1930, $2,300,000,000, and in 1931, $1,710,000,000. That is what tariffs have done for Canadian trade: they have stifled, restricted and prohibited trade, and they have ruined agriculture from shore to shore.

The second branch with which I was going to deal is the ineptitude of the administration to produce a real, comprehensive policy. Let me read the language of the resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to introduce a bill to amend chapter 58 of the statutes of Canada, 1931, striking out the word "March" in section 8, and substituting the word "May" therefor.

We remember the comedy that was perpetrated on this house the other day. The act expired on the first day of March of this year, 1932, and I understand that on the second day of March the government passed an order in council sending $500,000 to one of the provinces for unemployment relief, notwithstanding that the authority given under the act had lapsed, and that no moral or legal authority existed for the sending of that money.

Mr. GORDON: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): When I have finished.

Mr. GORDON: I want to ask the hon. gentleman whether that $500,000—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I wish to say, Mr. Speaker—

An hon. MEMBER: Poor sport.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

An hon. MEMBER: You aren't an Irishman.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Mr. Speaker, you might remove that turbulent political accident from South Essex.

Mr. GOTT: You haven't said anything worth while yet.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member for Vancouver Centre has the floor regularly and he should not be interrupted in this manner. No member, when speaking, is obliged to permit another member to ask him questions; they may be asked only with his consent. The hon. member is quite in order in continuing his speech.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I wish to refer—

An hon. MEMBER: Give him enough rope.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): —to a request made in this house yesterday for information in regard to one of these orders in council passed under the legislation of 1931. We asked a question of my genial Irish friend, the Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion), in regard to ties of the Canadian National Railways. That request was refused by the minister. I have here copy of order in council No. 2719, which gives authority to the Canadian National Railways, on recommendation of the minister, to purchase 2,000,000 railway ties at a price not exceeding 65 cents per tie, such purchase to be completed on or before March 1, 1932. This is under the authority of the Unemployment Relief Act of 1931, and it involves an expenditure of the money of the Canadian people to the extent of $1,300,000. Yet my hon. friend said yesterday, "It is not the custom of the Canadian National Railways to divulge these precious secrets." That statement might be valid if tenders had been called for, if there were competitive bids; but here the amount is fixed by the minister himself. The price is fixed by the minister himself.

Mr. MANION: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): It is here in the terms of the order in council.

Mr. MANION: The price is not fixed.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): It is fixed in the order in council.

Mr. MANION: A maximum price—

[Mr. Gordon.]

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. MANION: A maximum price was fixed—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. MANION: No, I won't sit down. A maximum price is fixed. The hon. gentleman is making a statement which is not correct and I do not intend to permit him to do so; that is all. I wish, Mr. Speaker, on a point of order to correct the hon. gentleman.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. MANION: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is the Minister of Railways rising to a point of order?

Mr. MANION: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I say that the hon. gentleman is making a statement which is not correct. We did not fix the price at all. He says that we did, but we did not. I wish to raise this point of order anyway. The hon. member is discussing a matter which was disposed of yesterday by the parliament of Canada.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): The Minister of Railways may, in his own mind, have disposed of the incident but we on this side have not done so by any means, and we shall not have done so for many a long day.

Mr. MANION: I hope my hon. friend and his friends will come through with the goods.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): This act, Mr. Speaker, was passed last year against our protest, and under its authority an order in council was passed on the recommendation of the Minister of Railways. Under that order in council there was an expenditure of $1,300,000 which was not authorized by parliament. We knew nothing about it; it was a leap in the dark; it was done without our knowledge and consent. And when an hon. member of this house asks for information in regard to these ties he is told that the matter is a secret, it is mysterious, it appertains to the Canadian National Railways! In my judgment, the refusal to give the members of this house complete and final information with respect to that order in council is the greatest insult ever offered the Canadian parliament. We have been accused, sir, on this side of the house of not putting forward any constructive suggestions with respect to unemployment relief.

An hon. MEMBER: Hear, hear.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I hear some hon. gentlemen saying "hear, hear"; probably they have not said a single word, constructive or otherwise, since this debate began. Let me recall to hon. gentleman opposite some of the proposals that we have advanced. I cannot analyze them now for I have not the time, but I will mention them. In the first place, we advocated a national unemployment relief commission. Secondly, we advocated proper procedure by supply bill. Thirdly, we advocated a proper system of auditing. In the fourth place, we have advocated a comprehensive system of unemployment insurance, and, fifthly, we have asked that the coal industry of Nova Scotia be dealt with by parliament.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I see the hon. gentleman over there in his customary pain. We have asked for the construction of a Peace River outlet and we have asked also for a shortening of the hours of labour in Canada. Again, we have asked for the instituting of a national research council for social and economic purposes, and we have asked for a writing-down of interest on bonds. We have asked for an adjustment of the wages of money in keeping with commodity prices and the wages of work. We have asked for a comprehensive housing scheme and, finally, we have asked for a Canadian National MacMillan committee to investigate banking, currency and credit in this country. Yet, in the face of all this, hon. gentlemen opposite say that we have not advanced a single constructive suggestion from this side of the house.

Let me mention something else. This year the present administration has taken from the public service of Canada the sum of $8,300,000. I wish to inform the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) that there will mature in 1933, 1935 and 1937 a total of $497,000,000 of bonds which are tax-free in Canada to-day. At the ordinary rate of interest of five per cent you could secure therefrom a contribution to the Canadian treasury of $25,000,000 or, at five and a half per cent, $27,500,000. But, it is said, it is a question of contract. Well, when it comes to the civil service, no contracts stand in the way, and I suggest to the administration that they might well consider these people who have wealth and who are not paying a cent of taxation thereon to the treasury by way of direct obligation. Confiscate it, if you like, but gather into the treasury this $27,500,000 and you will go far towards relieving the public service and meeting the present unemployment problem in Canada.

I have no time to deal with the orders in council in detail. I wish to read to the house a short quotation from that famous book Dictatorship on Trial:

> Thus it is only the countries in which the parliamentary system has taken root for centuries and which are also the home of the middle classes that the freedom of the individual and of state life—the most precious treasure of any community—maintains its unbroken strength. Nevertheless even in these countries there reign distress and want which know no law and are at the same time the root of the harshest laws. And it is in the atmosphere of distress and want that the trial of dictatorship comes into being, runs its course and hastens on towards its fateful consummation.

I also wish to quote from the London Times of February 16, 1929, the following passage:

> The true precedents—

It is speaking with reference to a clause enabling a minister by order to modify the provisions of a statute.

> —it has been pointed out, must be sought further back than 1888. They are the pretensions to the dispensing powers under the Stuarts and the statute which declared that anything enacted by King Henry VIII or by order in council should have the force of law.

And now a quotation from the Prime Minister's favourite book, the New Despotism:

> The new despotism which is not yet defeated gives parliament an anaesthetic. It is to subordinate parliament, to evade the courts, and to render the will or the caprice of the executive unfettered and supreme.

I wish to remind this house, Mr. Speaker, of the accepted and revered political philosophy of Locke under four main headings.

First, "The source of all political power is the right of the people themselves."

The second is this—and it will stir the blood of any real reformer, of any Liberal.

An hon. MEMBER: Oh, oh!

Mr. MACKENZIE: It only stirs my hon. friend to ignorant and raucous laughter. The second is this, "The only divine right in government is the right of the people."

Third, "All governments derive their power from the people."

And fourth, and this is the most comprehensive and most significant of all, "Parliament is the people."

May I quote especially for the benefit of my hon. friend from Hants-Kings (Mr. Ilsley), who made a brilliant speech in this debate the other day, the words of Joseph Howe, which have a ringing message for us to-day:

> This house of parliament has a due reverence for British institutions and a desire to preserve to themselves and their children the advantages of the constitution under which their brethren on the other side of the Atlantic have enjoyed so much prosperity and happiness. But to-day they cannot but feel that those they represent participate but slightly in these blessings. They know the spirit of that constitution, the genius of these institutions, is complete responsibility to the people by whose resources and for whose benefit they are maintained.

And now the words of Sir James Mackintosh:

It is a fatal error in the rulers of a country to despise the people: its safety, honour and strength are best preserved by consulting their wishes and feelings.

Peering down the corridors of history I see the meeting in 1100, where the Charter of Liberties, a forerunner of Magna Charta, was wrested from the ruler. It was a promise to put an end to abuses of the preceding reign, and to restore the rights of the people. In the second place, I see that historic meeting at Runnymede, that island in the Thames, on the 15th day of June, 1215, where respect for the rights of the people and for the parliament of the people may be said to have been born, and where the barons wrung from a tyrannic ruler pledges for the people. There the rights of the people were once again asserted. In the third place, I see the assembling of the model parliament in 1295, where for the first time all three estates, clergy, nobles and commons, gathered together and formulated many constitutional privileges. They limited the power of the king. They extended the power of the people by laws which gave them control of taxation and expenditure in a specific way.

Then we come to the first of the Tudors, in the closing years of the fifteenth century, when the affairs of the nation were becoming monopolized by the king's own council. We had the star chamber instituted, and it is rather sinister and significant to explain and underline the principles involved in that star chamber. Listen to these words. The star chamber was formed "as a swift effective means of quelling expected disorder." How significant! How sinister! Peace, order and good government! Peace when there is no peace, order when disorder is prevalent, and good government when we have the worst government in our history.

Still peering down the corridors of history, I see the civil war in the early seventeenth century. Then an attempt was made by the king to rule without parliament. Parliament was not allowed to assemble for seven years, and later for eleven years. This resulted in a civil war. I see the struggle around the Petition of Right. I see the emergence of men like Pym, Hampden and Cromwell—Cromwell, not a dictator, but the great Protector. The trouble with the Prime Minister of this country is that he has all the rapacity of Oliver and only the capacity of Richard.

At the end of the seventeenth century I listen to Lord Sunderland, who established the principle which is supposed to be followed to-day in all free countries, that the ministers of the cabinet are responsible, not to the ruler, but to parliament, and also the principle that national funds can be spent by parliament only for specific designated purposes.

I see the elder Pitt in the eighteenth century being dismissed by his king in 1757, and recalled by popular demand. I see a picture of John Wilkes expelled from the House of Commons because he had the temerity, for the first time in history, to criticize the speech from the throne. He was restored by popular demand after the house had expelled him. No wonder Burke called this:

A comedy at the expense of the constitution. It was the alarm bell of liberty.

In the nineteenth century unemployment caused Sir Robert Peel to surround the House of Commons with special constables called "bobbies," and, Mr. Speaker, the Catiline guards who surrounded these buildings only a few days ago when the unemployed paraded to parliament hill will be known in history as "Dickies."

And now my tale is told. I will summarize it all in the ringing words of that great Briton, Rudyard Kipling, who said:

All we have of freedom,
All we use or know,
This our fathers bought for us,
Long and long ago.

I turn to my friends on this side of the house who are imbued with ideas of freedom and give them three quotations from that great English poet, Shakespeare:

Beware of entrance to a quarrel, but being in,
Bearn't that the opposed may beware of thee.

And in words that will stir the blood of all lovers of freedom I present this quotation to the Canadian House of Commons:

To thine own self be true
And it must follow as the night the day,
Thou cans't not then be false to any man.

Even the ranks of Toryism, Mr. Speaker, can scarce forbear to cheer. And finally I sum it all up in the words from that great play Macbeth, in urging my friends on these benches to resist with might and main this encroachment by the government on those imperishable principles of liberty and freedom for which our forefathers fought. My final counsel is this:

> Lay on, Macduff
> And damn'd be him that first cries 'Hold enough!'

Mr. FINLAY MacDONALD (Cape Breton South): Before beginning what I have to say, Mr. Speaker, perhaps it is well that on behalf of many hon. members on this side of the house I should offer my thanks to the last speaker (Mr Mackenzie) for the very many kind references he has made to the Irish race.

I think that a stranger entering this chamber for the first time and hearing the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, must have come to two conclusions: First, that Canada was the only country in the world that was suffering from the depression; and secondly, that this government was responsible for it. I venture to say, Mr. Speaker, that in the whole annals of our political history there has never been heard in this chamber more extravagant statements than were made by the hon. gentleman who has just spoken in this debate (Mr. Mackenzie). Not only were his statements extravagant, but every statement that he made might be characterized as falling in one of two classes: Either the statement had no reference at all to the question under discussion, or if it was a legitimate criticism it was directed to the wrong quarter.

In the first place the hon. gentleman referred to the visit of Sir Wilfrid Laurier in 1896 to England, when he extended to Great Britain this much boasted British preference. Surely there is not very much to be said in favour of that. Anyone who wants the inside story of the matter has simply to read the speech which the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) delivered this session, and he will find how much credit is due to Sir Wilfrid Laurier or the Liberal party for that English preference.

In the next place the hon. member compared that visit with that of our leader (Mr. Bennett) about two years ago. Not very long since we had a visit from a very distinguished English statesman, the Right Hon. Winston Churchill, and we all had the pleasure of listening to his admirable address to members of the house. Those who heard him must have taken away one very significant fact, that is, his reference, first, to the Imperial conference to be held here in July, and, second, to the great change that has taken place in public opinion in England during the last two years. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, what man in all the empire is more responsible for that than the present leader of the Conservative party in Canada?

Before I proceed to a general discussion of the subject before the house, there are just one or two more references in the hon. member's speech to which I want to direct attention. The first is his reference to unemployment insurance. Surely it is flying in the face of common sense when any member of the Liberal party dares to challenge this government for its attitude in regard to that. Why was unemployment insurance not enacted by the late government? Why was the ex-Minister of Labour (Mr. Heenan) repudiated in the house by his leader (Mr. Mackenzie King) on that very question? Such extravagant statements as have been made on the subject carry their own refutation.

The hon. member referred also to the question of coal, and to what the Liberal party had done for the coal industry, particularly that of Nova Scotia. The coal duties were originally sixty cents a ton. They were reduced by a Liberal government to fifty cents a ton, and during all the years that the Liberals were in power, although delegations repeatedly appeared before them, there was never an increase in the duty on bituminous coal, until this government came in and the present Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) as Minister of Finance introduced in his tariff resolutions an increased duty of seventy-five cents a ton. No later than last Saturday, a delegation from the coal miners of Nova Scotia met the government and carried back with them the most cheering news that has ever come to the miners of that province. It is simply playing with common sense, with historic facts, for an hon. member to make the statements he did in the house and expect to get away with them. The hon. gentleman's speech was very interesting in many respects, particularly in regard to the quotations from other speakers which he gave. I can only express my regret that he did not confine his attention more to quotations and less to imagination.

Let me make one final reference to a statement made by the hon. member—and it is one which has been made by most of the speakers on the Liberal side—in regard to the attitude of our leader as a dictator. I do not think the Canadian people are suffering from any dictatorship on the part of our present leader. With all deference and in all kindness I would suggest to the leaders of the Liberal party that they are taking the wrong course in this matter, and that the way out of the valley does not lie along that path. The people of Canada, with their usual good sense, are perfectly satisfied with the present attitude of the government. That is oftentimes reflected in editorial utterances of many Liberal newspapers. In the Ottawa Citizen of Wednesday, March 16, there is a column and a half directed to this matter, and as it reflects pretty accurately the intelligence and well informed opinion of the country, unprejudiced by bias, I am going to read just one or two paragraphs. The editorial states:

> Before subscribing to the opposition's criticism of Mr. Bennett as dictator, even though it is based on traditional parliamentary Liberalism, there is another side to be considered. Canada has been plunged into a grave condition of economic stress. It is due to artificial causes, but it is accepted by both sides in parliament as though it were unavoidable, like an earthquake or some other calamity of nature.
>
> Mr. Bennett has shouldered the responsibility of leading the Canadian people through this period of financial collapse. He is more intent upon salvaging the ship of state than upon observing the fine points of parliamentary method. It is safe to say that the majority of Canadian people are more concerned with Mr. Bennett's efforts to find a way out for Canada, than with the Liberal party's protests about the rights of parliament as the controlling authority of government.
>
> The majority of people may be woefully lacking in appreciation of parliament upon which political democracy is founded. A decline in popular respect may tend to continue, however, unless one side or the other in the House of Commons can demonstrate that the existing machinery of political democracy is capable of meeting the present economic situation, where industrious people are forced to suffer privation in this land of plenty.

One more quotation from it and I have done:

> In 1930 the Canadian people gave Mr. Bennett the mandate to try to lift the load of depression from this country. It has been disclosed that the tariff alone is insufficient. It will doubtless be made equally clear that drastic economy is no remedy for lack of purchasing power in a land of unlimited capacity to produce.
>
> There is still sufficient confidence, however, in the prime minister to back him in further steps, even though he may appear to be in conflict with parliamentary tradition. Unemployed breadwinners, harassed business men, observers of the general relationship of parliament to international money power, are looking for leadership. Without worrying too much about the opposition's constitutional criticism, they may well look to Premier Bennett to go on trying to carry out the mandate given to him to abolish the evil condition of unemployment in Canada.

So much for the remarks of the hon. gentleman who has preceded me. Up until now I had no intention of taking part in the debate. I looked upon it as a sort of academic discussion, with no practical value, and an effort on the part of the opposition to delay the proceedings of this house. Hon. members opposite may think that is an unjust statement, but I do not think it is. I am at a loss to understand their attitude or purpose in prolonging this debate over a period of ten days. Until yesterday I looked upon their action as more or less harmless, but I received two telegrams which showed the situation in a very different light. As these telegrams are my only excuse for taking part in the debate at all I intend to read them.

The first is from the treasurer of the city of Sydney, and is addressed to me. It is as follows:

> Interview Auditor General and ascertain when he intends releasing our direct relief; overdue payment eight thousand dollars and working relief also overdue aggregating nineteen thousand dollars. Moneys advanced for these accounts are now required for other purposes and immediate action is necessary.
>
> D. J. O'Connell,
> City Treasurer.

On receipt of that telegram I made inquiries to find out why this money had not been released and was informed by the Department of Finance that the money was there, but could not be released until the bill was passed. What is the position? The city of Sydney is in the same position as many other municipalities, towns and cities throughout Canada, and particularly in the province of Nova Scotia. They have borrowed moneys from the banks to carry on their public works and relief contributions. The time has come when money is needed for other purposes, and those municipalities approach the government for help. The government however is opposed by this Liberal opposition which is holding up payment of the money, and causing the suffering of our people.

I received another telegram from the chairman of the Relief Association in Sydney, which is as follows:

> Your message O'Connell moneys due from federal government are for relief disbursements December and January, and mayor states unless forwarded at once cannot carry on further. Provincial authorities have paid their proportion.

That brings the matter to a definite issue, and shows exactly the meaning of the opposition to this measure. It means that all these protestations of sympathy for the poor and unemployed are simply so much wasted breath. By their action they are delaying the expenditure of money that should be going to those unemployed. That is the exact result of their opposition to this legislation.

The issue before us is very simple. It is this: Shall we for a period of two months extend the powers given to the government last year? Why should we not do that? Have the government misused those powers? Has any money been expended by them for purposes other than those contemplated when they were given the power? I have heard no charge of that kind.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What about the railway ties?

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): I have heard no suggestion that there were wrongful disbursements with regard to railway ties.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I make it now. Surely my hon. friend must have heard what was said with respect to that expenditure. Parliament never intended, when it passed the Unemployment Relief Act, to give the government the right to buy ties for the Canadian National Railways without calling for tenders. Why was the vote taken?—in an effort to get the information.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): My right hon. friend must realize he is directing his criticism in the wrong direction altogether.

Mr. QUINN: Let him make a charge.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): Surely this government was not supposed to oversee the expenditure of every dollar by the Canadian National Railways. All those expenditures are attended to by the management of the railways, and we have been told time and time again that they will not put up with interference from politicians in this house. If there has been any misappropriation of funds in regard to railway ties, surely the proper time for such a discussion is when a regular charge has been made by some hon. member in this house, and an investigation called. My right hon. friend could get the information he desired by an examination of railway accounts, because every dollar spent by this government for the operation of the Canadian National railways will have due consideration by hon. members. The railways will have to justify their expenditures.

I should like to make a few remarks concerning expenditures for civic works in municipalities and towns. In that connection the towns subscribed 50 per cent, this government subscribed 25 per cent and the local government another 25 per cent. Before any work was undertaken the town outlined a program which was first submitted to the local government, and then to this government for approval. From the very first the intention was that the city or town should have the work done, pay for it and submit vouchers duly certified and audited by the provincial government. In turn the provincial government certified the audit and forwarded it to this government for investigation. The federal government could not possibly oversee all the expenditures made throughout the country; there was no intention and no promise to do so. It did say to the various towns and municipalities, "We will pay 25 per cent of the cost of any civic public works you may undertake, on condition that the provincial government will pay a like amount, and that your program may be found satisfactory to us."

From a fairly extensive knowledge of the operation of that arrangement, may I say that it was followed religiously. The city of Sydney, to which I referred a few moments ago, borrowed the money and spent it on public works. Those works have been passed upon and approved by the local legislature and this government. To-day however that city cannot carry on its work because this government is not in a position to pay its share of 25 per cent, and cannot because this bill is opposed by the Liberal party.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend refers to opposition to this "bill." May I remind him that no bill has been introduced; we are discussing a resolution.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, this is a resolution to amend something which at the present time does not exist. No bill has been or is now before the house.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): That objection, Mr. Speaker, is hardly worthy of the right hon. leader of the opposition. Everybody knows exactly what this discussion is about; it is a resolution preceding the introduction of a bill—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There is no bill.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): —and we are discussing it just as if we were discussing the second reading of a bill.

An hon. MEMBER: Just a quibble.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. gentleman, if conditions in Sydney are so serious, why could not the government in half an hour pass a supply bill to alleviate those conditions.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): The government simply prefer to take this course, and having taken it they are going to see it through. There is no difference in effect between this resolution and a supply bill.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Yes; but the government brought down supplementary estimates two or three days ago. Why could not they have included the necessary appropriation for that purpose?

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): Those supplementary estimates have nothing to do with this resolution. The government is simply asking parliament for an extension of two months in order to carry out the commitments they have already made.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: The government know the extent of those commitments now, don't they?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): They may or may not. But what difference does it make? That is the point that all the opposition speakers make, as if there was a great difference between—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Let me put this question to my hon. friend: Does he say that the bill to be introduced goes only to the length of asking that the government shall have authority to complete the commitments already made?

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): Not necessarily.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is just what the hon. gentleman has said.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): That is the intention and justification for this resolution.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The hon. gentleman will find that under the act passed last session the government have power to make and carry out commitments made during the period for which it was in force. This measure is to give the government authority to do something entirely new; it is not confined to the purpose my hon. friend speaks of.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): With great deference to my right hon. friend, as I view the resolution it is nothing more nor less than for the purpose of enabling the government to exercise for another two months the power given them one year ago, which power expired on the first day of this month.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is another thing.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): Under that power commitments were made, and the government cannot meet those commitments simply because the opposition led by the right hon. gentleman is opposing the passing of this resolution. There is no avoiding that conclusion. Hon. gentlemen opposite may squirm under the imputation—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say this to my hon. friend: If the Prime Minister will agree—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The hon. gentleman who has the floor may permit a question and indicate his permission by taking his seat, but he has not indicated any such permission.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Quite right, Mr. Speaker. But I understood my hon. friend had a certain conception of the measure to be introduced and I should not like to disagree with him unless I thought he was under a misapprehension. May I tell him that if the Prime Minister is prepared to introduce a bill based on the hon. member's interpretation given a moment ago, that is, a bill containing power only to meet the commitments that have already been made, we on this side will stop our opposition at once.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): I am afraid, Mr. Speaker, that we do not see eye to eye.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am afraid not.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Let us be frank about it then.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): I have a very great admiration for my right hon. friend's talents, and particularly for his ability to get around a question such as this. This resolution may go a little further than the exact commitments now made by the government, because there may be a dozen different claims before the provincial governments and before this government that in good faith should be met, but which cannot properly be called commitments. I come back again to the point I want to make, and it is my only excuse for taking up the time of the house. I submit that the responsibility is on the Liberal party in this house if the relief committee of the city of Sydney are deprived of any opportunity to carry on relief services in this sense. We all listen with a great deal of pleasure to the high-sounding phrases used by hon. gentlemen of the Liberal party when they tell us how sympathetic they are towards the workers, but when it comes to the practical question of providing unemployment relief, and they think there is any political advantage to be gained by factious opposition, then their sympathy for the workers is subordinated to their desire to make political capital out of the present depression.

With great deference to, and with the highest regard for, hon. gentlemen opposite, I would in all sincerity point out to them that in my opinion, at least, they are pursuing not only a wrong course but a very dangerous course in opposing this resolution. Does anybody in the exercise of his common sense fear that the constitution is being subverted or that the liberties of the people will be taken away simply because the government is to be given two months extra time to carry out the provisions of the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act? Nobody really entertains such fears. Every person of common intelligence in this house and out of it knows that the government has to come back and justify to parliament everything it may do under this legislation. May I assure my hon. friends opposite that the electorate can be trusted properly to weigh the actions both of the government and of the opposition. Surely the great Liberal party is not so politically bankrupt that it bases its hopes for success at the next election on the depression that the country is now going through? Hon. members opposite know exactly what has been done and what methods have been followed by the government in dealing with unemployment relief, but so far not one member of His Majesty's loyal opposition or of the two groups in the far corner has come forward with a concrete suggestion to remedy the present situation.

Mr. CASGRAIN: What about the suggestions made by the member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie)?

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): We have received from the other side only vague theories, not one concrete suggestion. Yet in the face of this poverty of constructive ideas we are told that the present government have no policy! Surely the government's course so far with respect to the relief of unemployment may properly be called a policy. What is offered as an alternative? So far we have had only one suggestion from the right hon. leader of the opposition and some of his followers—the appointment of a commission. Any person who has any practical knowledge of the administration of unemployment relief knows that it would be absolutely impossible for such a commission properly to carry out the purposes of the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act, for its proper administration necessitates the cooperation of three independent bodies—this government, the provincial governments and the municipalities. Could any commission appointed by this government function for all three authorities? True, we have heard about the reckless expenditures of relief money in British Columbia, and there may be something wrong there, but I do not know anything about it. I do know this, that there have been no wrongful expenditures of money in Nova Scotia, and I know further that this money has not been administered in a partisan way in that province. Instructions were given the foreman that only one test was to be applied with regard to applicants for work; that test was the need of the applicant. He was not to be asked what was his religion or his politics; the only question was his need for relief, and when that was established he received that relief. Throughout that province I have not heard one word of criticism as to the administration being unfair or partisan, and any criticism that may come will have to be directed against those immediately concerned with the payment of the money.

I have just a further word to say in conclusion. The only ground for attack, so far as I can see, is the possible ground that we are departing from strict parliamentary custom. Let us admit that for a moment. We all admit that parliament has full control over the expenditures of money and that the government may not expend any money other than that voted by parliament, but even that has its limitations. The government can and does spend thousands and millions of dollars without the authority of parliament when the necessities of the case call for it, and we must remember this: The constitution is made for the people, and not the people for constitution. Occasions may arise when, in the interests of the people and in the interests of peace, order and good government it is absolutely necessary to set aside some provisions of the constitution. That may have been done in this instance, but every act committed will be amply justified when the proper time comes.

Mr. E. C. ST-PERE (Hochelaga) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, in a period of crisis the government gathers all the resources and active forces which the nation has at its disposal. Realizing that its part is not purely one of dissenting, the opposition unites with the government in its endeavours to relieve the social and economic depression, and all admit that the Liberal party did not shrink in fulfilling this duty.

This administration comes back with the request that we should renew the blank signature which a majority of the house granted to them at the last session. The phraseology of the resolution is very obscure, we however, realize that its adoption would be unsafe to our parliamentary system. To approve of it under the plea of an emergency would be to establish a dangerous precedent, for our constituents would have cause to consider us unworthy of their confidence. It goes without saying that this resolution, for the least, makes free with our constitutional rights. Some of the speakers who preceded me in this debate have shown this very clearly and have pointed out all the dangers with which it is fraught.

Canadians take a pride in their history and have a high respect for the constitution which governs them. Its political evolution was slow but those who sacrificed all their talents and even their life to conquer our constitutional liberties, have inculcated in all an unshakable love for these rights so eagerly claimed and honourably obtained from England.

In the Quebec Act, in 1774, it was deemed useless to establish an assembly notwithstanding the earnest pleadings which Fox made in England in favour of a representative assembly.

The Constitutional Act of 1791 divided the country in Upper and Lower Canada. Pitt, the eminent British statesman, though he had reestablished peace, and John Graves Simcoe contended that he had given this country a constitution similar to that of England. Then came the period under which Canada really attained its aim, that is, the union of the two Canadas. Previous to this period, the worthy members who were the true representatives of the Canadian nation, such as William Lyon Mackenzie, Robert Fleming Gourley, Doctor Rolph, Peter Perry, Ketchum, Bidwell, Robert Baldwin and others, in Ontario, as well as Papineau, Nelson, Cuthbert, Lafontaine, Morin, Aylwin and Viger in Quebec, had struggled hard and united their efforts to attain this end. The situation which existed previous to this period, recurs to-day, and if the Liberal party, faced with the resolution which it is asked to adopt, takes an attitude which displeases our friends opposite, it is that the Liberal party to-day, in keeping faith with the high ideals of the Liberal party of those days, wishes to assert that it will always remain the ardent champion of the people's constitutional liberties.

To ignore the past under the plea of an extraordinary emergency would be to take a step backwards and proclaim ourselves partisans of an anti-national modernism. I consider that unemployment could be somewhat relieved without exacting that parliament should sacrifice its rights, the surrender of which would be judged by the people severely when the great day of atonement came.

Let us not forget, sir, that we have to face a world-wide crisis and let us endeavour to establish some reforms. The hon. member who preceded me stated that he had not yet heard on the Liberal side any criticism which might bear results; I wish to make one suggestion of a constructive order, by pointing out what the state and industries, at large, might do to improve this chronic unemployment problem from which we suffer.

Anxious to find an antidote against unemployment, the governments were finally affected themselves by this hysterical fit of unemployment relief. We must acknowledge it was to obey a generous impulse that direct assistance, etc., to the unemployed was given, however, by that means only temporary relief was afforded and to a very small number of them. Let us admit, moreover, that these repeated assaults on the treasury would result in further disturbing the equilibrium which should exist between production and distribution, and would in the near future contribute to increase the cost of production and the prices which the public have to pay. Hoarding up, failures, unemployment or deficits are not, properly speaking, the causes of the present crisis, but rather the symptoms of an economic disease resulting from a wrong policy followed by all governments and especially by Conservatives. To solely treat the symptoms would be like effecting a transfusion of blood in a seat of chronic infection. The way to attain a state of relative prosperity is to restore the purchasing power of the people destroyed by unsound methods applied to public administration.

The famous standard of living of the people is not the primary cause of this depression; it is rather to the wrong standard of living of those who have to do with high finance, and also to the enforcement of a poor financial policy that must be attributed, for the greater part, the present crisis. Justice demands that the people be protected against these parasites of the state, who have placed fictitious values on their stocks, dividends or new issue of preferred shares. The tools of the state, such as the large corporations possessing no other rights but those granted by the authorities. Their powers should be restricted from the very start, their activities should be watched and constantly controlled. The fact is admitted that they are, to-day, all powerful, and should their influence somewhat increase the governments which brought them into existence would be at their mercy.

I believe in the stabilization of our currency as the foundation of our economic security Let us admit that no measure of this kind has ever been resorted to for our workers who contribute, no less than money does to the moral and material welfare of society.

Mr. Gladstone, the great Liberal leader of England, once told the workmen of a certain locality in the county of Chester, that the labour problem could not be solved like a mathematical problem, but that we must appeal to Christian feelings. Our workmen, let us thank Providence, share the views of the great English statesman and it is always to the great social law of love for one's neighbour that they first appeal in their just claims.

There are, moreover, human economic means; if not of solving at least of improving the situation. Millions of unemployed workers are dependent not on theories or unworkable measures, but practical solutions. They have listened too long to these tiresome repetitions of theories, to these doleful distributors and will only be satisfied with regular work and equitable remuneration. All those who had work or are working to-day claim, rightly and justly, that they should be given continuous employment through a steadier functioning of industry. Large industrial and financial interests, during prosperous times, see that prices are maintained and that sufficient reserves are set aside to meet dividends and salaries in connection with the administration during periods of crises; but where is to be found in their reports, one item providing for the wages or part of the wages of the workman who necessarily must join the ranks of the unemployed?

All this points to a real paradox: preventive measures are adopted against diseases, fire, hail, etc., but nothing of the kind exists againsts the ills of which millions of people suffer, as at present, owing to unemployment. When the crisis becomes critical all endeavour to follow the line of least resistance by resorting to unemployment relief. If this system be established—I appeal to the members of this house, the great majority of whom are endowed with practical sense—as a permanent institution, the poor of to-day, will, tomorrow, know the horrors of pauperism. The workmen, although forced to allow themselves to be doped by government assistance, protest and appeal to the authorities to apply the only solution possible: The necessary means to destroy unemployment at its outset.

We may provide for millions of days of work, but we shall not have found the antidote which is regularity of work in industries. This system, we must acknowledge, would perhaps not be, for the present, a complete cure, but it would provide a remedy which would relieve a great number of unemployed. But the idealists, together with certain people whose confidence reposes simply on these alibis, will perhaps reply by pointing out, as an excuse, the cycle of affairs, the feelings of the masses aroused, the lack of economy on the part of workers, etc., all such blinkers destined to cut off the light which would procure more genuine happiness in numerous homes which are today in want. It is regretful to note that this government has not, since the famous session of 1930, taken any steps to encourage industries to adopt such an attitude towards the unemployed.

The regularity of work, resulting from diversified and well managed production has already given convincing results to directors of companies who have taken the interest of their employees by putting into practice this motto, so truly human, of a manufacturer in France: work to earn and earn to give. Let me but mention in the United States the names of the following companies who have succeeded in giving 35 to 42 weeks of regular salary to their employees: the Packard Motor Co., the Proctor and Gamble Co., the Dennison Manufacturing Co., the Beech Nut Packing Co., the General Electric Co., and Hills Brothers and Co. These are companies whose directors are far from being classified among idealists, and whose aim is not only to accumulate dividends but to be socially and economically useful to their country.

The bare fact, is that there are many unemployed, and industry, as a whole, has not taken the necessary measures to prevent this crisis. Must we, therefore, conclude that the government should take no part in assisting the unemployed in the future. Certainly not. It is their duty to devise the best means possible to help those that are in distress. However a distinction must be made as to the procedure to follow to obtain the sanction of parliament. Let the government, as it was so lucidly stated by my hon. leader (Mr. Mackenzie King) and the former Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe), introduce a bill that the house may discuss before enacting, and the opposition will again resume to its constructive efforts in the house.

Reasons of state are put forward—Oh! those famous reasons of state to which the somewhat autocratic king of France had recourse. These reasons invoked to enact legislation, which introduces at the same time selfishness and autocracy, cannot possibly find supporters among us who respect the rights and powers granted by the mother of parliaments.

There is something which I wish to point out to the house: the ever ready plea of governments, too little regardful of the humble people and that of the large selfish industrial interests always ready to apologize to workmen by saying: if you suffer, to-day from depression, you are alone to blame for this economic evil, you were too lavish in prosperous times.

I represent, sir, a large labour section which, previous to this crisis, included a great number of workers drawing salaries, I shall not say always fair, however, sufficient to permit them to earn a living and allow them a margin to give thmselves some little comfort. Would one dare, to-day, tell these workmen: if you suffer, you are alone to blame. Oh! if you had not bought radios, electric washing machines and electric wringing and drying machines, your budget would not, to-day, be so low. To those who make such reproaches to workmen, I shall say that the latter are not responsible for the situation they are in, that certain deceitful economists—these economists who have never known one word of this science and still less of the psychology, of the people, are to be found everywhere—who advocated mass production, under the plea that this production and extensive distribution would contribute to the increase of salaries. Industrial interests sought the press, at large, and through repeated advertisements, and active canvassing from door to door the workmen, to whom continuous prosperity was promised, surrendered and thought it quite proper to purchase the articles that modern progress offered them.

The workmen are the cause of the present situation? The cause of all the taxes by which they are, to-day, burdened? No! Have our workmen any influence whatsoever in the directorship of our banks, industries and large corporations? Have our workmen a voice when matters of high diplomatic order or of international finances are involved? I say no. Since the right hon. Prime Minister stated the other day that one must always bear in mind the human factor, I say that on the occasions referred to the workers surrendered to pressure, believed in the economic untruths spread everywhere, and it is while reposing their trust in these economic statements that they may have made a supposed slip for which the government blames them, to-day, to cover up its unsound policy and bad administration.

There are still other economists, those attached to large industries, who have convinced the workmen that the machinery which displaces them would never reduce them to the rank of the unemployed. "This machinery they stated, which to-day deprives you of work, will help you to-morrow to find occupation in other industries." I am not against progress, I know that machinery will continue to improve; however, it behooves the government to relieve the situation. It is the manufacturers who, at present, contend that the government, in cooperation with them should find the means of creating new business to give work to those whom the machinery has temporarily displaced.

There is one thing which I want to point out: our governments cannot take to themselves the whole merit of having helped the unemployed since the crisis started. In the large city of which I am one of the representatives, to what would have amounted the help given without the numerous contributions of private charity? What would have become of these numerous unemployed in Montreal East, with which I am better acquainted than the other parts, if the property owners of that section—many of the latter being workmen themselves, who, thanks to their savings, were able to possess themselves with a modest estate—what would have become of these numerous unemployed, notwithstanding this supposed help of governments, if these property owners, simple workmen like the unemployed, and who themselves are without work, had not gratuitously given and were not still giving to-day to the unemployed who live as their tenants, the privilege of staying in these tenements until prosperous times returned? It is well to point out the part contributed by each in the relief given up to date.

I have listened to speeches delivered by members on the government side; I have read some of them and I note that, almost all, confined themselves to criticizing the leader of the opposition for not clearly understanding the situation, throwing bouquets to the leader of the government and conferring on him all the attributes of omniscience and prescience that one can imagine. They referred to Stalin and the Soviets, they made us travel thousands of miles and landed us in Russia to inform us that the government over there would not suit us.

All these things are known, and, in my opinion, we are magnifying the situation in leading the country to believe that communism exists within the four corners of Canada. I am especially referring to Quebec; there communism has no hold and our people do not even think of asking us the definition of this new social order which Slavonic Russia at present delights in. What the workmen to-day request of the government, and what they together with the unemployed ask us, we of the opposition, is a system for a practical solution of the problem; what the out of work at present want are not unworkable measures, as those which have been enforced up to date, but it is the cooperation of industry and government to solve the problem with which we are faced.

Sir, the situation is critical. The world is wondering, like, in the past, Lord Shaftesbury, in England, whether there exists a scarcity of statesmen able to meet the situation. Work, that is what they crave for.

Will the Conservative patricians opposite, the followers of the government manage to understand that the people are tired of the miserable official pittance and the repetition of oratorical display to which they were invited at the election of 1930, by promising that three days after the advent to power of the Conservative party there would be no more unemployed in Canada?

I was listening, quite recently, to a radio broadcast of a sermon delivered in the great St. James Anglican Cathedral, in Montreal, by Dean Carlyle. Commenting on a passage of Genesis, he stated: "Pharaoh asked Joseph, one day, where he could find a wise man, imbued with the spirit of God, capable of restoring prosperity over the land of Egypt." I ask both on behalf of the unemployed and myself, that a man or men be found in the Canadian parliament capable of helping to restore prosperity over the land of Canada. "Canada First" must not be simply a motto for a political rally but a policy which the government must follow in seeking a possible solution to the present problem of unemployment. We must not display too much optimism; I do not ask the government to restore full prosperity all over Canada, but to alleviate somewhat the burden which, at present, weighs on the shoulders of our people. Work, always work!

Mr. J. ACHILLE VERVILLE (Lotbinière) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, allow me to reply to certain assertions to be found in what an hon. member of this house called, yesterday afternoon, the churning of the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Gobeil). The hon. member contended, among other things, that by our attitude in the house, we took upon our shoulders a great responsibility towards the public. First, this assertion coming from this hon. member is not of a nature to frighten us, and, moreover, we fully realize that we are championing here the rights of the people against the autocracy of the government and, owing to that fact, our responsibility is light and easily borne.

Following in the footsteps of some of our hon. friends opposite, the hon. member directed an attack against the Quebec legislature and alluded to, as some of his hon. friends did, an act adopted at the last session of the Quebec legislature: the Dillon Act. If these gentlemen are sincere in their indignation, they have the means at their disposal to prove their sincerity: if this act is so unjust, now that their friends are in power at Ottawa, why do they not ask for its repeal? This would, undoubtedly, allow them to discover that they committed a great injustice, here in the house, in disparaging the people of Quebec, and would afford them, once more, an opportunity to learn that the electorate of Quebec, at the last provincial election, were not bribed.

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): Not all 200,000 of them.

Mr. VERVILLE (Translation): We, on this side of the house, prove our sincerity. You heard the other day, sir, the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) state that we were ready to vote the necessary grants which the government requires, but that we did not wish to adopt blindfolded, an act necessitating a large outlay of public money. It is perhaps, you may retort, a lack of confidence in the present government. So far as I am concerned, I have no fear in stating that I have no confidence in the present administration.

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): I knew it.

Mr. VERVILLE (Translation): I was pleased to listen to the speech, last Tuesday, of my friend, the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Gagnon), and I wish to congratulate him on the fervour he displayed in defending his friends the members of the government. We often heard it said, that he is in line for a portfolio. I readily admit it, he has the necessary stuff in him to well cover this portfolio. One of his remarks is as follows: After reading the resolution which is before the house he tells us that the substitution of the word "May" for the word "March" is the only change to be made. We also did read the language of that resolution and it is precisely because it is too short that we are opposed to it for fear of its results. As to his conclusion about the favourable outcome of the Three Rivers-St. Maurice by-election to the credit of the government, because it reflects the feeling of the electors of that constituency towards his party, I do not share the same opinion. As he did not exhibit any power of attorney from the different constituents of the province of Quebec authorizing him to act as their spokesman in this house, I think it is much better to wait and let them speak for themselves. That is why I cannot accept his conclusions.

Some hon. MEMBERS (Translation): Hear, hear.

Mr. VERVILLE (Translation): Last Thursday, I heard the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Dorion) endeavouring to justify his friends for having proposed that measure to parliament. What I might term his plea was rather in the nature of an onslaught on the legislative assembly of Quebec which is in no way concerned in this debate. Nevertheless he found something very unusual; he contends that we, on this side of the house, spend our time asking for information from the ministers and heads of the various departments just to be ready for the next election. Even if it were true, I should be inclined to think that it is not a bad thing. But I might add for my hon. friend's information that we want to get at something else and it is to show plainly all the inconsistencies of the present government.

Take, for example, the answers and documents tabled by the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Sauvé) showing innumerable cases of postmasters who have been discharged, honest and upright men thrown on the street without any reason whatsoever and against the wish of hundreds of citizens who signed petitions in their favour. When we think of the way they have been treated just to please some political friends of the government who have been in politics longer than those whom they replace, we cannot but feel to what extent such a measure falls short of the pledges made by the minister himself. No doubt this might be said with equal force for every other department. Then, Mr. Speaker, I think it is our duty to get all the information so as to be able to put them before the people at large. We do not wish the citizens of this country to be fooled once more by our friends opposite, but we want to be ready to redress all the wrongs that have been done, when better days come, and that will not be long particularly with a new government.

Such strong reasons have been set forth in support of the resolution before the house and in such numbers, that the government should have listened to them and, admitting their error, should have accepted their logical conclusions. But no; be it for good or for worse the government has decided that the measure should carry; that might be the reason why our friends opposite do not even open their mouths and attempt to utter one single justifying word. Accordingly, I do not feel that I can change their mind, because it is beyond my power and, secondly, because their leader does not permit that. That is what we have learned and observed since they sit on the other side, that is since 1930.

When I rise to-day, Mr. Speaker, I feel that I perform my duty. We are here the people's representatives; we are responsible to the people and it is our duty to find out and know the way this government is going to spend our common funds. I am sure this country would be better off if the government were willing to state to the house the expenditures they intend to make in order to be able to solve once more the problem that their leader had pledged himself to settle within a few days following his advent to power.

The constitutional aspect of this question has been discussed very ably by several of our friends. They have proven that, even if the government feel that they can take and enjoy every power, they cannot bring back to life those who are dead. Well, it is exactly what they are labouring at in this case. Moreover, they want to deprive the members of this house from one of the finest prerogatives, which they hold as a constitutional right, that is the voting of all the expenditures of public moneys needed by the government to administer the business of this country and particularly to relieve the unemployment situation. One would think, Mr. Speaker, that the constitution was, in days bygone, something to be reckoned with. But now, our friends opposite seem ready to stand up and say: "The constitution, to the dogs! We are in power; this country is ours and we shall administer it as we please, even in defiance of all the statutes heretofore well observed."

I give credit, Mr. Speaker, to the right hon. the leader of the government for many fine qualities and I sympathize heartily with him in his efforts to cope with the embarrassments which are of his own making. But there is one thing I will never admit and it is that he cannot enact laws when and how he wishes to, in defiance of existing statutes and of the parliament now in session.

I quite appreciate that our hon. friends from the other side, following the example of their leader, are ill at ease when they think of the promises they made in the past, and that, at the present time, they deem it wiser to refrain from making further promises. But, to-day, we do not ask for new promises; we simply ask, as we are entitled to, to be informed as to the character of the legislation before the house; we want to know just what further amount of money the government intend to spend during the next two months in order to settle, once for all, the unemployment problem, and how the money is to be spent. After all, this money belongs to the people, and as such, the latter are entitled to know from the members of the government what use they intend to make of it. This legislation is either sound or unsound; if it be justifiable, then why should one be afraid to give the members of this house detailed information in reference to it.

Why then this legislation by way of an order in council, outside of parliament? Why extend for another two months an act that is dead? Why this hide-and-seek game? Are we to infer that the legislation is not sound and lends itself to warranted criticism? I fear, Mr. Speaker, that we may be led to think so, the position of the government being such as to justify that impression.

The principle of the act itself is not involved in this debate. As far as I know, no one in this house has stated that he was against granting any relief to the unemployed. To the contrary, we are all of one opinion on this point; we have needy people in our midst and it is our duty to give them a reasonable sum of relief, to the extent our resources and means enable us to do so.

This government has created a new profession: that of the unemployed; it has organized that profession, and we are now called upon to feed and support its members. However, Mr. Speaker, may I state that, in my opinion, the government can hardly feel proud of their invention when, in order to feed the members of that new profession, they have decided to spend millions upon millions, at the risk of leading the country in to bankruptcy, of impairing the financial situation of our provincial governments, as well as at the risk of courting insolvency in the case of our municipalities.

Mr. LAFLECHE (Translation): What about that overdraft of $16,000,000 in Quebec?

Mr. HACKETT (Translation): You may find out from the Bank of Montreal.

Mr. VERVILLE (Translation): That is a provincial matter. Everybody knows that this reckless spending of public funds has caused distress everywhere and has reduced all our governing bodies to financial disaster. After all, these millions must come from the pockets of the taxpayers. And where will such doings lead us to? We are called upon by the government not to look into their expenditures, to contribute a share of our sessional indemnity, to economize in their stead, but what shall they do when the two months are gone? We are entitled to know? A time shall come when Jack Canuck will no longer be in a position to pay and that day is very near at hand.

We help the brokers, the unemployed in the cities, the farmers in the west; all that is very fine, but, may I ask, what benefit has so far accrued to the farmers in the east from the enforçement of the Unemployment Relief Act? They, too, freely and liberally contribute to the relief fund and yet their needs are equally urgent. They also endure their share of distress and if they complain less than the others, it is probably owing to the fact that they are less reckless and more provident. At any rate, they should no longer be called upon to contribute and submit to such exactions.

Be that as it may, Mr. Chairman, there is a fact no one can deny: at all times we have had needy people in this country just as in the case in others lands. And, while admitting that hard times have added to their number, we would have a great many more had our friends from the government side not organized those we have into a profession, along with a promise to support them.

Mr. DORION (Translation): The Holy Scriptures say: "For the poor always ye shall have with you".

Mr. VERVILLE (Translation): That is evidenced by the fact that we are spending millions of dollars for their relief, as they increase in number. Should that be the best solution that offers for the settlement of the problem, then I am afraid the process of settlement will be everlasting, because the more the government does to settle it, the farther it gets from being settled.

We have always had poor with us but they were allowed to come to us and humbly beg for charity; they very seldom went empty-handed. In their wisdom the government deemed such a system out of date; apparently they found that Christian charity is not sufficiently in keeping with protection, and so, have determined to disregard it entirely. What are the results? This is what happens: It is no longer necessary for those in need to ask for charity; with the system newly created by our friends from the other side, and under our statutes, they are authorized to ask for money, and in many cases, entitled to support. On the other hand, those who are in better circumstances are being denied the merit of dispensing charity of their own free will, the government of the country having compelled them to help the poor, and that to a specified extent as to the contribution.

For the above reasons, as well as for others indicated by the hon. members to my left, I am opposed to the extension of the act as asked for by the government, before we are told on what grounds such demand is being made.

As a last word, Mr. Speaker, I urge the government, notwithstanding their poor disposition and their great love of extravagance, to tell us where they are leading us to. I say that, in attempting to remedy the situation, they should set the example, and refrain from endeavouring to sever the bonds uniting the various classes of the Canadian community, leading one group to believe that it enjoys protection through their extravagance, while they "pilfer" the pockets of the taxpayers belonging to the other classes, without saying openly that such methods are intended to conceal the government's squandering of funds and to meet with the exigencies of political patronage.

Mr. MARTIAL RHEAUME (St. John's-Iberville) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I take part in this debate in order to state to the house the reasons why I cannot support the resolution. I shall not discuss the constitutional aspect of the issue since it has been dealt with in a masterly way by my hon. leader (Mr. Mackenzie King), by the former Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe), by the members for Ottawa (Mr. Chevrier), for Hants-Kings (Mr. Ilsley), and for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie), as well as by a galaxy of speakers on this side of the house.

In my opinion, the manner in which this legislation has been carried out is in fact an abuse of authority. The act was used for the purpose of amending, by way of orders in council, the Bank Act, the Insurance Act, in order to please friends, and that constantly under the cover of good government, of unemployment and farm relief and for the maintenance of peace and order in Canada.

We are taken to task, Mr. Speaker, for not having offered any constructive suggestions. Many suggestions have been made, but they are worthless in the opinion of the members of the government because they originate from this side of the house. In the first place, I wish to mention one, that of the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King), which may be found at page 695 of Hansard and reads as follows:

Before parliament dissolved, before we went to the country, we had placed in the supplementary estimates a vote for $10,000 to provide for the holding a conference which would bring together representatives of different interests in this country to consider what steps should be taken to deal with the problem. I explained in this house before, and I will explain again what we had in view in that connection.

It was intended to bring together, as had been brought together on a previous occasion, representatives of employers' associations such as the manufacturers' association and other employers' associations; of the labour organizations, such as the Dominion Trades and Labour Congress and of other labour organizations; representatives of the municipalities, such as the Union of Canadian Municipalities, representatives of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, which could speak for the great trading interests of the country; representatives of the provinces; representatives of the Red Cross, of the great transportation companies and other organizations who would be in position to consider methods of cooperation in furthering emyployment and make helpful suggestions as to what might be advisable in the way of further steps to deal with this question.

Another is to be found at page 914 of the Hansard and reads:

If my right hon. friend will drop the resolution which is now before us and ask his Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) to come to the house this evening with a supply bill indicating the amount of money which the administration feels it will be necessary to have in order to meet the situation between now and the first of May, or the period during which parliament may be in session, if he will take that course, and move that the rules be suspended so that such a supply bill can be speedily passed through the house and sent over to the Senate, we of the opposition will cordially join with the government in agreeing to the suspension of the rules, and will seek to expedite the passage of such a measure through the house to-day. I make an urgent appeal to my right hon. friend—who as Prime Minister surely has an appreciation of the responsibility involved in the setting of a precedent, who surely venerates British parliamentary institutions and would like to have them upheld—

Mr. Speaker, the position taken by the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) before the election in 1930, as well as the offer made by him the other day to the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) were worthy of consideration. We are asked to cooperate with the government, we are invited to offer suggestions, and these two suggestions are being ignored.

We are quite willing and ready to cooperate with the government. In a speech delivered on the 9th of March, the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion) solicited the opposition's cooperation, invited them to join and help the government to remedy the depression now facing the country. We are ready to do so, but the government refuse to accept any suggestion from members of this side of the house. If, after having thus tried to enlist the cooperation of the opposition, the government were sincere, they would have accepted some of the suggestions made by members of the liberal party, and this would have induced us to offer further suggestions.

When a person is asked to cooperate, one must be fair towards him and follow sometimes his advice. In my eighteen years of experience with the municipal council of my town, I have learned what cooperation means. However, there cannot be cooperation if one refuses to follow any of the suggestions made. The idea of which our hon. friends opposite have of such cooperation, is to do what they have decided without consulting us on the matter; should we refuse, we are looked upon as unworthy Canadians and charged with impeding the government in their efforts to relieve unemployment and agriculture.

We are willing to vote 20, 30, 40, 50, 100 or 200 million dollars to relieve unemployment, but we are not ready to give a free hand to the government to administer the affairs of this country. We are here as representatives of the people and have a right to be heard and defend the constitution.

The hon. member for Inverness (Mr. MacDougall) in his speech on March 10, at page 981 of Hansard, stated:

> The control of parliament over taxation is a fundamental principle of British government. So fundamental is it that we did not require the comments of such a great champion of constitutional government as my hon friend who just preceded me to put us right in the matter. I say that the elected representatives of this or any other parliament have the right, if they desire to exercise it, to delegate to the government the power to control taxation and the expenditure of money. There is not an authority on the constitution of this country or on constitutional practice prevailing in any British country saying that parliament's control over taxation and expenditure must have unanimity of opinion from all elected members. It is quite—

We do not dispute this statement, however, we contend that we have a right, as members, to express our views and it is what we are doing. Further on he states:

> What was their policy when in power? The right hon. gentleman (Mr. Maskenzie King) had a policy then; he was prepared, with his charitable disposition and from the goodness of his heart, . . .

When the leader of the opposition was at the helm of the affairs of this country, he certainly showed himself better disposed than the autocrat leader of the government. The leader of the Liberal party had foreseen, in the 1930 budget, what would happen. The leader of the government was then leader of the opposition and knew that these amounts had been voted.

The minority in the house, sir, is entitled to be heard and has the undeniable right to oppose, if it so desires, measures so autocratic, notwithstanding the contentions of the hon. member for Lake St. John (Mr. Duguay) who states that he is in receipt of a telegram from the town council of St. Joseph-d'Alma, which reads as follows:

> That this council deem it their duty to earnestly request, on behalf of the public interest, that a new agreement or arrangement be made between the government at Ottawa and the Quebec government in order that an additional sum be allotted to continue the work begun and carried on this winter on the Quebec-Lake-St.-John road, in the Laurentian Park, from now on to July 1, 1932, with a gang of 500 men.

I have received no telegram from the town of St. John's, yet I am willing, together with the opposition, to vote the amount which the government requires. Further on the hon. member states:

> Yet, the opposition, to-day, impugn the constitution and smile benevolently to all that flavours of communism in our province and throughout Canada.

I dispute, sir, the right of the hon. member for Lake St. John to state that the Liberal party makes common cause with the communists. The Liberal party boasts of a splendid past and gave during numerous years an honest administration to the country. I think that the hon. member for Lake St. John has no right to state that the Liberal party has made common cause with the communists, because that party is composed of upright and honourable citizens.

Further on in his speech he asserts that the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) endeavours to represent himself as the champion of his country's cause. I charge, sir, the hon. member for Lake St. John with endeavouring to discredit the former Minister of Justice, who has acquired, in Quebec, the reputation of being a statesman and a faithful servant of his country. No sincere Canadian will deny, him this title. When the Liberal party was in power and Messrs. Lapointe, Cardin, Rinfret and Cannon sat in the council of the nation, I think the province of Quebec was highly represented. Thank Heaven!

I shall take this opportunity, sir, to congratulate the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Baribeau) on his maiden speech in parliament on March 11, at page 1035 of Hansard, in which he states:

> I think that those opposing the bill would not feel so much at ease in discussing this measure in their respective constituencies, because the voting of this resolution introduced by the right hon. Prime Minister is anxiously sought by all citizens of Canada.
>
> I am speaking on behalf of the great majority of my constituents, which I have the honour to represent, when I request the government to extend the period in which relief will be given to the unemployed. I received within the last days, a telephone message from the mayor of Grand'Mère, asking me to take the necessary steps to get the act extended. The mayor of Grand'Mère who is highly thought of by his fellow citizens, does not share my political view. I am certain that he does not approve of the numerous speeches delivered by the representatives of his party, on this question.

I am willing to discuss this resolution in the county of Champlain and I invite the hon. member to a debate on this question in my constituency. A number of members on the government side made an attack against the former Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe); however, I feel certain that not one Conservative member of Quebec, whether he hails from Quebec-Montmorency or any other county, will invite the former Minister of Justice to discuss this resolution in his county.

I do not share the views of the hon. member for Champlain, when he states we are preventing the adoption of this motion. We are defending our constitutional rights, which are dear to all Canadians, except to the Tory party; we are, however, willing to cooperate with the government in all that is just and reasonable.

The hon. minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) in his speech on March 15 last, contended that the question involved in this measure was settled last year. But it was then contended that the government could not stipulate an amount, that parliament would not be sitting, that owing to the lack of previous experience in the matter, it was impossible to state what outlay would be made to meet the situation and especially as regards the western provinces. Further on in his speech, the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce admitted that the opposition had offered to approve a vote of $100,000,000, but that the government had not considered this amount sufficient, and that is why the government had introduced the present resolution. And the hon. minister added:

> When an amount is stipulated in advance the opinion which prevails is that it must entirely be expended.

Let the government follow the suggestion made by the hon. leader of the opposition that a commissioner be appointed to investigate conditions throughout the country. In my home town we have a commission chosen, without regard to politics, by the municipal council, in order to give direct assistance, and we are very pleased with its work. Such a commission exists in Saskatchewan and great praise was given to it, within these last days. It is the appointment of such a commission that the leader of the opposition suggested at the outset of this debate.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce, moreover, asked the house to extend the provisions of this act for two months so as to fulfill the agreement made with the western provinces in connection with supplies of seed grain and cattle feed. I think it should be an easy matter for the government to stipulate an amount because according to them they are fully aware of the western situation. They must know what outlay they had to make each month, since they contend that they have a perfect control over the country's expenditure. The minister asserts that parliament consist of both the government and the opposition. It is true, he states, that the opposition did not support this measure, but parliament, as a whole, has sanctioned it. This act might perhaps have been justified when parliament was not sitting, but no valid reason exists to revive this act when the house is in session. We are here to discuss the administration of the affairs of this country, and I do not intend to yield my right to the government. I deem it my duty to protect the rights of my constituents, and I think I express the wishes of the great majority of them.

The western farmers are not neglected, but those of Quebec and Ontario are. Their markets were taken away from them, the cost of machinery and farm implements was increased by raising the taxes; the members of Quebec and Ontario on the government side, even our own cabinet ministers, did not think of protecting the rights of our farmers. Let them awake from their slumber! The Quebec and Ontario farmers also need help. I know some, in my constituency and in many counties of our province that are almost bankrupt; and if the government does not come to their rescue, as well as to that of the western farmers, it will be doing them a grave injustice. We have farmers who cannot do their sowing because of their lack of money; they also need seed grain, and I ask that justice be done to them. Whether they hail from Quebec, Ontario or the east, it matters little. I state that the farmers, workmen and unemployed of this country must be placed on an equal footing. The funds expended, at present, by the government are not the property of the Conservative party, but the money of this country.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. RHEAUME (Translation): Liberals as well as Conservatives are entitled to justice, whether they be farmers, labourers or unemployed. I say that in time of distress we should not be concerned with political parties, or creeds, or races, but we ought to give justice to all the citizens of this country.

Mr. Speaker, hon. members have spoken of orders in council that were passed by the Liberals. They have mentioned one concerning the Beauharnois; but I would like to have copies of those which were passed by this government, since it is in power. I know that hon. gentlemen opposite are possessed of a great power; they endeavoured by orders in council to convert potatoes into radishes, but they failed. They have shown their skill in converting surpluses into deficits and the future will show that one of the peculiarities of Tory governments is to drive the country to bankruptcy. In 1896, the great leader of the Liberal party at that time, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, saved the country from bankruptcy and turned deficits into surpluses. In 1911, the Tory party came back to power and the following year deficits had replaced the surpluses of the Liberal administration. The present hon. leader of the opposition assumed power in 1921, and two years later he had changed the deficit into a surplus; in 1930, the party of autocracy came back, and six months after, the surpluses had given place to deficits.

Hon. members on this side of the house who spoke on this resolution are not all Liberals, but they are all anxious to safeguard our constitutional rights. Every political party, with the exception of the Tory party, have opposed this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I considered it was my duty to voice my opinion in this debate. I represent one of the most beautiful, if not the finest constituency of this Dominion, which has always been true to the Liberal party since confederation. It has placed its confidence in a party which always did credit to Canada and it was always opposed to conservative governments that never brought anything but deficits.

Mr. MAURICE BRASSET (Gaspe) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, before the house decides as to the opportunity of extending the Relief Act for two months, such as requested by the government, I think it is our duty first to study whether the blank cheque given to the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) and his colleagues, during the last session, has brought about the results which the people expected from it. The Prime Minister submitted that emergency measure, not at the opening of parliament, but later on in the session when the representatives of the people tired and harassed by their long labour are getting ready to go back home. It is then that the government, probably to avoid a long discussion and to reach more easily their goal, proposed that famous measure, which after all meant the handing over of dictatorial powers to the Prime Minister and his government, namely the power of spending the people's money as he saw fit and as much of it as he wanted, without the people's representatives being consulted.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) stated, a few days ago, that it was necessary sometimes for the Prime Minister to ask for the powers of a dictator. I would point out to the hon. minister that our country is ruled by a constitution, that the Prime Minister and his government have only the power of carrying out the legislation enacted by this house, and there is no urgent need to-day of granting a blank cheque to the executive, when the people's representatives assembled are ready to place into the hands of the government all the funds which they may require to face the situation. Consequently the powers of a dictator that the Prime Minister wishes to assume, according to the words used by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, are not justified.

The Prime Minister stated recently that the wheat of the west was sold, but not paid for; then he must know how much money he requires. Let him ask for the amount through a supply bill, and the opposition declares itself ready to vote the necessary funds.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce also stated that the extension of the powers granted under Bill 58 was requested because credits had been granted to some provinces and municipalities which had not had time to make the expenditure. Once more, the government knows the amount they require; let them ask the house for it, and the house is ready immediately to vote the necessary funds. The government cannot say that we systematically oppose this resolution. We are willing, and I say again that we have always been willing to grant the government the necessary funds, provided that the government specify the amounts and tell us for what purpose they want them. The government have no reason to take such a stand, save their obstinacy and their desire to pass over the constitutional rights of the house. The prime minister wants to govern the country all by himself, without anyone's advice. Up to now that policy has utterly failed, and I for one do not see why we should willingly let the prime minister continue such a policy at the expense of the whole country.

In the course of his speech, the other day, the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Gagnon) stated that Hon. Mr. Taschereau, the prime minister of the province of Quebec, had said that there were no unemployed in that province. My hon. friend will surely allow me to correct that statement. Hon. Mr. Taschereau said that there were people without work, and a large number too, in the province of Quebec, but the province was able to care for them; however, if the federal parliament adopted any measures to relieve unemployment, the province of Quebec would want its share, just like the other provinces. That was the statement made by Premier Taschereau. By the way, I must say that this government have not dealt fairly with the province of Quebec. As its share of relief funds the province of Quebec received $4,000,000, while the province of Ontario got $7,000,000, and British Columbia over $6,000,000 for a population of 700,000. Why such a discrimination? The province of Quebec is just as much affected as the other provinces and it should have got its proper share of unemployment relief funds. I noticed that nearly all conservative members from the province of Quebec who took part in this debate assailed that province and its prime minister, Mr. Taschereau. Why? Is it because they cannot find anything to say in behalf of the conservative administration here at Ottawa that they try to create a diversion by attacking the Taschereau government? I wish to point out to hon. gentlemen that we are not here to discuss the acts of the Taschereau administration, but that we are members of the federal parliament. Moreover the great majority of the people of the province of Quebec showed not very long ago that they were satisfied with the present provincial administration. I shall quote the statement made recently by the Lieutenant-Governor of the province of Alberta with regard to the province of Quebec. This is what he said:

> I think it is fair to say that the province of Quebec commends itself to the attention of the other provinces, on account of its sound legislation and almost complete lack of social disturbances that are so often witnessed in other parts of the Dominion. Therefore I have no hesitation to declare that that province, by the worth of its leaders, sets in many regards a splendid example for us to follow.

[Mr. Brasset.]

These words do not sound like those of hon. members opposite. They were uttered by a man thoroughly unprejudiced and that is why I have more faith in them than in those of hon. members opposite who assail the government of Mr. Taschereau.

Coming back to this resolution, I must say that notwithstanding the unconstitutionality of the measure presented by the government and the fact that the executive, through this legislation, is assuming powers that belong to the people's representatives, so far as I am concerned, I would not hesitate to vote for the extension requested by the Prime Minister, if that same legislation had previously served the purposes for which it was adopted. But I claim that in many cases the money has been wrongfully spent and wasted, and consequently the bill which it is proposed to revive has not served its purpose.

Upon coming into power in August, 1930, this government endeavoured to redeem one of the promises they had made during the campaign, namely; to put an end to unemployment. For that purpose a sum of $20,000,000 was voted during the special session of 1930, extraordinary powers were given to the government during the session of 1931, so much so that at the present time the expenditures not only of the Dominion government, but also of the provincial legislatures and municipalities, have reached an approximate total of $150,000,000. This is an enormous amount of money, and if it had been properly spent it would not have cured unemployment but it certainly would have largely helped in restoring prosperity in this country. Instead of that, conditions steadily became worse. In the spring of 1930, the unemployment index was 9 per cent of the working population; it was 20 per cent in the United States and 14 per cent in Great Britain. It shows that Canada was in a favoured condition due to the sound policies of the former government, the wise administration of the Right Honourable Mr. Mackenzie King and specially the salutary effects of the Dunning tariff, which, though depression had set in, stimulated the trade between Canada, the other parts of the empire and the rest of the world.

But the cry raised by the Conservatives during the election had a fatal result. In fact during two or three months through the campaign, the dealers, the manufacturers and the business men heard nothing but speeches on depression, ruin, and distress. Confidence gradually gave place to fear; undertakings were stopped; the industries, instead of going ahead, waited for better days; and so, in a very little time, what was but a feeling of uneasiness became a serious crisis, the direct and immediate cause of which may be found in the thoughtless statements of the leader of the Conservative party and of his supporters. At the end of 1930 there were 200,000 unemployed, and at the end of 1931, or rather at the beginning of 1932, their number had more than doubled and had reached 500,000, according to official statistics. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, all the fine pledges of the Conservative party have vanished; all the efforts of this government have been useless. The government spent enormous sums, they wasted the money of the country and of the ratepayers, not only in vain, but each attempt on his part made things worse. If the government wanted to spend money for the unemployed, why did they not do it in a practical way, why did they not foster the trade, which would have been a real asset for this country. And why did they not confine the expenditures to the Dominion government, instead of compelling the provinces and the municipalities to go into debt and to ruin themselves trying to follow the Dominion government in the fatal path in which it had engaged.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. BRASSET (Translation): Mr. Speaker, when the house took recess, I was discussing the resolution for the extension from March until May of Bill No. 58. I said that the duty of the members of the government and of the opposition was to study whether this resolution was actually in the interest of the country, before assenting to it. I also said that last year the Prime Minister had presented his bill quite late when the members of this house were on the eve of returning home, and I pointed out that he is also late this year. I stated that he should have presented his resolution at the very beginning of the session, instead of waiting until March, that is after the expiration of this measure, to try and have it revived. The government had no reason to wait so long. I said also that the Liberals did not wish to obstruct and that they were willing to adopt a supply bill, but that they could not gladly grant to the Prime Minister and his government the powers of a dictator and the powers conferred exclusively by the constitution upon the people's representatives. I went further and stated that if this measure were absolutely necessary, I for one, would be ready to vote for the resolution; but, as I have just said, it is not only unnecessary, but useless, because we are ready to support the government provided that they mention the amounts that are required and the purposes for which they are intended. I stated also that the policies of this government had made conditions worse instead of improving them, and that in any case they should not have dragged the provinces and the municipalities after them in the fatal path they were following.

Mr. Speaker, what was the result of this policy of the government? The result is that several provinces are virtually in bankruptcy to-day, that the municipalities are so deeply in debt that they will require years and years to emerge from the abyss they are in. Somebody stated to me only recently that six municipal councils of Ontario had made an assignment of their property on account of the debts incurred for the relief of unemployment. And the Dominion government is not in a much better position. It is rumoured that the Finance Department is at present in a pretty hard predicament. Failures everywhere: failure of municipalities, failure of provinces, failure of the Dominion government, failure of the government's pledges, and soon, at the next election, failure of the Conservative party.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. DORION (Translation): That is the best thing you said so far.

Mr. BRASSET (Translation): Exactly.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): It is true.

Mr. DORION (Translation): Lucky hit; have it patented.

Mr. BRASSET (Translation): We shall wait for the next election to have it patented. And all that because the funds were improperly spent and in many cases wasted.

The government spends millions of dollars trying to give work to the unemployed, but at the same time they decrease other expenses, particularly in the Department of Public Works. From September 1930 to April 1931, the government has spent about 17 millions of dollars to relieve unemployment and during the course of the 1931 session, they reduced the Public Works estimates by over 17 millions. They spend on the one hand, but they cut down expenditures elsewhere. If the present government had followed the policy adopted by the Mackenzie King administration, so far as public works are concerned, wharves, breakwaters, lighthouses, public buildings and railways would have been built all over the country; works which would have increased the assets of Canada without endangering her credit, or that of the provinces or of the municipalities.

In my county, the conditions are as bad as in the other parts of the dominion. It is inhabited mainly by fishermen and farmers. Last year, fishing operations were a complete failure,—the government is not to blame for this, neither do I blame them for this state of affairs,—and farm produce could not be sold because there were no markets for them. In many instances, the unemployed have had only a few days work and, unfortunately, those who least needed work were often those who did most of it. I know of many cases where people with bank deposits were given work on jobs to relieve unemployment, whilst others in poorer circumstances, fathers with large families, could not get work or got only a few days work. Men who needed this money most did not get it, but, as I stated a few moments ago, it was largely wasted. I could mention one instance where, through delay in getting the job under way, the ground froze and dynamite had to be used, with the result that instead of spending $500 or $600 on it they had to spend from $1,200 to $1,500. In another case, a bridge was to be built, and the workmen had to clear the ground of snow before they could start on the bridge, but when they were about through clearing the snow another storm came up and they had to start all over again; and thus about one third of the money voted for the bridge was spent before they could start the building operations. If the government had been a little more expeditious, if the work had been started in October and November, and not in December or January, there would have been no money wasted; the unemployed would have benefited to a greater extent, and a better job would have been done at a lesser cost. Gaspé county, which I have the honour to represent, is a maritime constituency; all its parishes are scattered along the shore of the St. Lawrence. Every year, while the Liberals were in power, the Department of Public Works built wharves, lighthouses and breakwaters, and repaired damages caused by the sea; this was done all along the cost not only in the interest of the constituency but in the interest of shipping in general and of the country as a whole. Prosperity thus reigned in that county, and by following the Liberal policy, the present government would obtain better results than they have had so far with the money spent on unemployment. Instead of that, all public works in the constituency of Gaspé have been practically stopped.

[Mr. Brasset.]

Whatever was accomplished last year had been planned by the Liberals, during the last session of their administration. Public works provided for in this year's estimates are still less numerous. Nothing, or practically nothing will be undertaken in Gaspé, or in the lower St. Lawrence, and it will be the same all over the country. The government has taken this stand because we have a deficit and because they want to put an end to unemployment. But, Mr. Speaker, is the government following a sensible course in doing this. Why does it not follow the Liberal program, why does it not provide large amounts in the estimates for public works which would be advantageous to the country? Optimism would return again, business would recover slowly but surely, and depression would vanish to make room for prosperity.

There is only one thing that keeps going in my constituency, as it does elsewhere, I believe. Recently I asked to be furnished with the list of all employees dismissed in Gaspé, since September 1930, by the Department of Fisheries, the Department of Marine and the Post Office Department, and I have a long list of victims who have fallen under the Tory axe. This list refers only to Liberals or so called Liberals; there is no mention on it of civil servants who, having been appointed by a Conservative administration, were kept on by the Liberal government. No investigations were made in their case; they were not disturbed, whilst fathers of large families were thrown on the street because they were appointed by Liberals.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Shame, shame.

Mr. BEAUBIEN (Translation): It is awful.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): It is dreadful.

Mr. BRASSET (Translation): Is this the method to be followed by the government to relieve unemployment?

Mr. DORION (Translation): What a calamity.

Mr. BRASSET (Translation): Yes, what a calamity. We find calamities everywhere under the Conservative administration.

Mr. DORION (Translation): It is wonderful.

Mr. BRASSET (Translation): Would you allow me, Mr. Speaker, even now that you have heard so many suggestions, to state what would be a good way, it seems to me if not to stop unemployment completely, at least to reduce it. I would suggest a general decrease in tariff duties, or that we go back to the tariff schedules in force under the Liberal administration. The tariff legislation passed by the present Conservative government has been a gigantic failure; it has ruined our trade abroad, without increasing our trade at home. The government said that higher duties would increase the number of factories in the country; what happened? In 1930, there were 4,400 manufactures and two years later, there are 4,670, an increase of 270; which is only a normal increase and it probably would have been larger under another administration. Furthermore, Canadian factories employed 525,000 men in 1930, and to-day they are only employing 400,000. What a success? It has been thus with the Conservatives ever since they have attained power; its the only kind of success they are capable of.

I wish to quote a striking example of the disastrous effects of the present tariff on my constituency. For many years back, practically all the fish caught by the fishermen of Gaspe was exported to Italy; and a small quantity went to Germany. This was a good and convenient market. But the Bennett government having raised the tariff duties on foreign commodities, Italian goods imported into our country were affected by this raise, and the Italian government retaliated,—as naturally did other countries,—by increasing its tariff duties on Canadian fish by 15 per cent. Yesterday about thirty countries were quoted as having retaliated against our tariff legislation. The Gaspe fishermen could not meet the Norwegian competition, on account of this 15 per cent duty, and have thus lost their most profitable market. This is another example of the results obtained through the destructive policy of the present administration. We have turned Italy and thirty other countries against us, and now Germany is raising her tariff duties on Canadian goods. The Ottawa Journal, under date of March the 15th, prints the following editorial:

Germany Doubles Its Duties Against Canadian Goods

Wheat not Included in List on Which Tariffs Will be Increased 100 Per Cent

Canadian Press Cable

Berlin, March 15.—The official gazette of the German government, to-day published a decree authorizing the finance minister to impose the so-called super-tariff against goods from Canada, increasing existing duties 100 per cent, as from April 1.

Goods specifically mentioned in the decree were: fresh, dried and tinned fruits, fish, lobsters, oysters, turtles, flour, butter, paper, cardboard, aluminum, shoes, certain kinds of machinery.

The decree provided that the duties can be suspended for six months, providing Canada at once enters into negotiations with Germany for the conclusion of a commercial treaty.

It is a suggestion asking Canada to lower her tariff duties on German goods, if we want Germany to reciprocate with us. With her present trade policy, Canada will soon be hard put to find countries to trade with, she will have to deal with the inhabitants of other planets, possibly with the man in the moon.

Mr. Speaker, the government wants to relieve unemployment, but let us see how they went about it a few days ago. A newspaper, which as a rule is a true supporter of the government, said in an editorial—

Mr. DORION (Translation): Le Soleil?

Mr. BRASSET (Translation): No, the Ottawa Journal. If my hon. friend has not read that editorial of the Ottawa Journal, I shall read it to him. It was published on Friday, March the 4th, and reads as follows:

(Text): An Un-British Spectacle

The scene on Parliament Hill yesterday was one that no British citizen could view with pride. With its spectacle of gun-toting and its parade of armaments, it was too reminiscent of Chicago.

The task of a government is to govern. But while under certain circumstances performance of that duty may compel the use of force, there is little but revelation of timidity and panic in the sort of thing that was flaunted in the face of Ottawa yesterday. Consider this, from the press reports:

"On Parliament Hill about 100 uniformed and armed men of the R.C.M.P. guarded the gates under the direction of Inspector J. W. Carroll, while 26 mounted men from "N" Division R.C.M.P., were drawn up behind the Parliament Buildings in anticipation of trouble."

"A special squad of 50 Ottawa police under Deputy Chief J. P. Downey patrolled Wellington street, while another squad of 35 was held in readiness at the police station. Plainclothesmen mingled with the crowd.

"An armoured car made the rounds of the Hill several times during the morning."

(Translation): I pass over several paragraphs and I come to this a little further:

(Text): The Journal has no sympathy with lawlessness or with Reds. It doesn't believe in "demands" nor in "threats". But neither does The Journal believe in the almost craven and un-British things that went on on Parliament Hill yesterday; in this Chicago-like flaunting of firearms; in a scene that smacked more of Fascism than of Canadian constitutional authority.

Such a spectacle doesn't destroy communism; it builds it up. Breeds it. Creates contempt for authority distrust and hate of it.

Two dozen of those able-bodied policemen without even batons could have handled the men who gathered here yesterday. A hundred unarmed officers could have overpowered them. Instead we had a war-like display and a clatter of armaments that was all but suggestive of Moscow.

The Journal protests. Protests against what was uncalled for, unnecessary, and un-British. Against a thing that couldn't take place in London; that would be laughed to scorn.

Strong government is required—sometimes. But there is a difference between strength and hysteria. And it was the latter that Ottawa saw yesterday. Unnecesary fear.

(Translation): It is under the present dictatorial administration that such a condition is allowed. The hon. Minister of Trade (Mr. Stevens) said the other day that the Prime Minister was seeking to get a dictatorship. That is the result he gets for seeking to obtain such wide powers: he has to call out the police force just as if he needed the protection of an army.

During the last electoral campaign I had several opportunities to say to the electors of my constituency: "If the Conservative party ever gets to power, the result will be a general increase of the tariffs and of the cost of living; the prosperity you enjoy just now will not last long; foreign nations will put a duty on the products of your fishing industry as well as on all your other products."

Unfortunately for my constituency and the rest of this country I was right in my prediction. Prosperity will only come back when a new administration, respecting the wishes of our population, will have put aside the oligarchy which takes the form of the present government.

This government did not keep their promises, they have failed to cure us of that ill we call the unemployment situation, and the unusual measures that they have enacted did nothing but increase the general distress. If the government are willing to relieve the unemployment conditions, let them abide by constitutional measures; let them introduce a supply bill and we are ready to adopt the same immediately.

We are not going, just to suit the Prime Minister's whims, to let them destroy the franchises of the people we represent in this chamber.

For all these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I shall vote against the resolution.

Mr. M. F. HEPBURN (West Elgin): Mr. Speaker, my first remarks this evening will be by way of congratulation to those hon. members on this side of the house who have contributed to the debate, and in this connection I would mention particularly the very excellent presentation this afternoon of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie). As I listened to that brilliant oration I was struck with the fact that he must have been inspired with the spirit of St. Patrick, which seems to be so much in evidence on this day, not only in the House of Commons but throughout the city of Ottawa.

[Mr. Brasset.]

Hon. members on this side who have taken part or purpose taking part in this debate do not feel we should be charged with obstructing. Actually we are fighting to maintain the rights of parliament. In his speech on Tuesday the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) said that the constitutionality of the measure now before us was settled by the vote last year. With that statement I totally disagree. True, parliament by that legislation did give certain rights and privileges to the executive, but may I add that the measure was opposed by practically every hon. member on this side of the house. The effect of the power given to the executive is that it may disregard any statute in Canada, and make any new regulation it sees fit. I do not believe the spirit which permeates Conservative minds is in sympathy with either the farmers or the unemployed. The government has another reason for maintaining this principle. If hon. members on this side concur in the resolution now before the house the principle will be maintained.

In my view the title of the bill was a misnomer, and a complete misrepresentation. It should have been entitled, "An act to delegate to the executive the power to grant additional privileges to financial interests, notwithstanding anything appearing in the statutes of Canada." That is the real purpose of the measure before the house, and to bear out my contention I shall trace the history of the government's action since the legislation of last year was passed.

One of the first orders in council had to do with the guarantee of $20,000,000 to the chartered banks of Canada to save them against any possible losses in connection with loans to the western wheat pool. That was a move to make sure that the big interests would not suffer.

The second order in council had to do with the prohibition of the export of gold, extending a special privilege to the banks whereby on application special export credits or privileges would be given. The effect of that order in council I should like to explain. Canadian bank notes had depreciated in value on the New York exchange: If a man went into a chartered bank in Canada and withdrew $500 in bank notes, took them to the United States and changed them into American money at the depreciated rate as it obtained early in the month of January, he would receive only $400 in American cash, thereby losing $100. If however the Canadian chartered banks could get a special privilege from the Minister of Finance to export some of their own gold reserve, they could, by exporting $400 in gold, redeem in the United States clearing house, their own bank notes to the extent of $500. In that respect a special privilege was given to the banks.

The next order in council gave the banks the right to file with the Dominion government statements which were not according to the facts. In other words the banks could totally disregard the Bank Act of Canada and value their assets in any way that would be acceptable to the Minister of Finance. There, again, a special privilege was given to the big interests, with no regard whatever for farm or unemployment relief. Then, the other order in council, about which we heard so much a few evenings ago in the debate on the motion of the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Luchkovich), gave to the insurance companies of Canada the right to make a retroactive valuation of their stocks when on December 31, of this year, they filed their statements with the superintendent of insurance.

No one has condemned more than the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) wild speculation in Canada, and yet when one of the greatest financial houses in Canada—probably the greatest—finds itself in difficulty as a result of a wild orgy of speculation with trust funds which probably belonged to widows and orphans, all it had to do was to come to this Tory government and have an order in council passed allowing them to inflate the value of their stock holdings. Prominent newspapers have taken issue with the motion sponsored by the hon. member for Vegreville and with his statement that one of the insurance companies in Canada was, in effect, bankrupt. If the powers granted under the act of last year had not been exercised, and had the government not allowed this insurance company the right to make a retroactive valuation with respect to speculative stocks held, the statement of the hon. member would have been absolutely true. So much for the big interests.

Another very interesting order in council, a copy of which I hold in my hand, was passed. It authorized the government to expend $287,000 to increase the Royal Canadian Mounted Police by three hundred. Speaking in the house the other day the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) said the reason for this increase was that an arrangement had been consummated with Alberta and the other western provinces whereby the Dominion government was taking over the policing of those provinces. It was not long before the inaccuracy of that statement was shown, because at the time of the increase in the mounted police force there had been no negotiations with Alberta or with Manitoba. There was another reason for the increase of the mounted police entirely separate from the reason given by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I can understand why the government is very much perturbed at the present time. The people of this country have been thoroughly fooled, and there are rumblings now in the back concessions—the people are getting dissatisfied. This government holds office by virtue of promises made. If members on the other side of the house had been honest during the campaign and had said to the industrialists, "If you vote for us we will put into effect policies which in two years will create conditions whereby the number of employees in your factories will be reduced by 200,000, and conditions will become so bad for you that you will be taking the greatest strain on your shoulders ever known in the history of this country," would they have received any votes in that quarter? They certainly would not. If the same gentlemen had said to the farmers, "Instead of blasting a way into the markets of the world and selling your produce for you, after we have been in office two years and thoroughly put our policies into effect, the prices for your farm commodities will be the lowest known in your generation," would they have received the votes of the farmers? They certainly would not. If our friends on the other side had said to the taxpayers, "After we get in office and have had a chance to demonstrate our policies, we will at the end of two years have a deficit of something over $225,000,000 and we will have put into effect every known method of taxation possible," would they have received any support from the taxpayers? They certainly would not. If instead of saying to the unemployed, "You vote for us and we will end unemployment or perish in the attempt; we will give work to every man who is willing to work," they had said honestly, "After being in office two years and thoroughly applying our policies, instead of 120,000 men out of work we will have 550,000 men on the streets," would they have received any votes from the unemployed? They certainly would not.

So these chickens are coming home to roost, and our hon. friends opposite are trying to avoid any further demonstration such as we had on parliament hill last week. And let me say a word with respect to that demonstration. I arrived at parliament hill at about two o'clock and was amazed to see guards at the gates armed to the teeth. I dodged out of the way of the armoured car and kept clear of the cavalry. When I got to the main door I could see troops concealed in both directions. Why? Because some of these men who had been fooled by the wild promises of hon. gentlemen opposite were here as citizens of Canada to lay their just claims before the government of Canada. I went into the railway committee room and listened to the interview between the Prime Minister and the delegates representing these unfortunate unemployed men from practically every city in Canada. The Prime Minister had only twenty-five minutes of his valuable time to give them. He had plenty of time to satisfy his wounded vanity when that same day he attended before the committee that investigated the Gordon charges, but he had very little time, and very little patience either, for the unemployed. I listened to the presentation of their claims and I thought the delegates were very reasonable. These men were victims of a situation beyond their control, they were helpless, and they were looking to the Prime Minister to implement some of the promises he made to them when he was appealing for their votes in the campaign of 1930. But they got no satisfaction. I noticed among the delegates many members of the Canadian Legion. Being myself a member of the Legion, I took occasion to speak to these men. They said to me, "We fought for our country. We came down here to-day looking for bread, and we have received a stone from the Prime Minister. That is the gratitude we are getting from the man who appealed to us for our votes not quite two years ago."

Now, Mr. Speaker, when one sees what transpired the other day, and when one reads in this order in council that provision has been made for $5,000 to purchase riot bombs and for $21,750 for new secret service men, one is forced to the conclusion that the effect of this power is to enable the executive to give the glad hand to the big interests and the mailed fist to the unemployed who are smarting under present conditions.

This afternoon I listened to our hon. friends across the way while they heckled and ridiculed the statements made by my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie), and I recalled that when those hon. gentlemen came down here after the election of 1930 they supported their leader enthusiastically; after the policies of the government had been in effect about a year and the results were beginning to show, and rumblings were being heard in the back concessions, the enthusiasm of our hon. friends opposite turned into dignified acquiescence; now when they are beginning to feel the full weight of the effects of their policies they are giving the Prime Minister what you might call spineless subservience, because any man who at this time votes to delegate to the government all the rights of parliament must feel that from now on he is more or less of a rubber stamp. I do not know how otherwise he can justify his barren political existence. Our friends opposite are quite prepared at any time when the Prime Minister indicates how they should vote, to get up row by row and quiescently do his bidding.

An hon. MEMBER: Hear, hear.

Mr. HEPBURN: "Hear, hear!" There is a typical disciple of the Prime Minister. He reminds me of the reference made the other day to the Prime Minister being like one of the sultans of old, that when he clapped his hands his janizaries jumped up to do his bidding. If hon. members across the way delegate all their power to the Prime Minister instead of parliament being a debating society, it just becomes the land of nod, and I would suggest that before the orders of the day are called they get their leader to tell them a bedtime story so that they may sleep all the afternoon. If their conscience is like their appendix, an inactive organ, they will have no trouble in sleeping soundly.

This motion, Mr. Speaker, is a challenge to responsible government. Never before have we had such a request made in any parliament that I know of. I only wish we had the hon. Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion) on this side of the house. What a powerful oration he could deliver under these circumstances. I well remember when a few years ago I was sitting on the government side and the hon. gentleman—he was then in opposition—coined a new expression, and enunciated a new policy: he said that what we needed here was "red-blooded Canadianism." I recall vividly how he waxed eloquent on that theme; in fact he floated on the full tide of his own verbosity, so to speak. But fate plays strange pranks with the lives of men; the hon. gentleman now sits on the treasury benches and the responsibility of office has had a mellowing effect upon him. After he had been Minister of Railways for some few months he declared that what the Canadian people needed most of all was a tomato juice cocktail. His red-blooded Canadianism has turned into tomato juice at the present time. I think that change applies pretty generally throughout the ranks of our friends opposite.

Another hon. gentleman who has taken part in several debates is the member for South

Wellington (Mr. Guthrie), the present Minister of Justice. He turned a political somersault from the Liberal party and landed on the Tory benches—what might be termed an instance of economic determinism. That is what makes a man turn in the direction from which he hears the jingle of a cabinet minister's salary. But I do not think his efforts, or those of the Minister of Railways, who is also a former Liberal, have been appreciated, because in Guelph their own leader said that you can always depend upon a convert to make a mess of things. I think he spoke the truth, because the railway situation is worse than it ever has been before, while the Department of Justice is practically the only department this year requiring an additional vote in order to carry on.

The other day during the course of this debate the Minister of Railways had a very excellent opportunity to tell the people of Canada something about the complicated railway problems which confront the country at the present time, but he did not do that; instead he indulged in a wild discourse on Russia. I have something to say about Russia, because we have had a lot of speeches with regard to what is transpiring over there, and we have heard the Russian people condemned because a few of them happened to massacre the czar and his family. I hold no brief for the Russian people, but I do not choose to condemn 165,000,000 people because a few of them massacred their own crowned heads. As a direct result of this sort of talk we have practically prohibited all trade with Russia, and that has had a bad effect on the industrial life of Canada, particularly with regard to the agricultural implement plants in Brantford and Hamilton. Many men now out of work would have had employment if we had not indulged in such silly talk as we heard from the lips of the Minister of Railways the other day.

I know by the genial smile and twinkling eye of the Minister of Railways that he is a son of old Erin, and like all Irishmen he loves a fight. When the Irish cannot fight anyone else they fight among themselves. I know whereof I speak, because my maternal grandfather came from Ireland, and when he landed here he still wore a bullet-proof vest, yet I think the Irish are among the most likeable and lovable people in the world. My grandfather, who came from Scotland, used to tell us that Mary Queen of Scots was taken to England from near where he lived, and executed; but he did not hold that against the English people at all; as a matter of fact on his farm in West Elgin he always had several Englishmen working. Those men had no inferiority complex at all with regard to their own country; they thought, and perhaps rightly so, that you could not add to or take away from anything in British history, yet a few centuries ago the British people cut off the head of Charles I, although he was a quiet, lovable fellow. I do not hold that against the progeny of those British people at all. I heard the deputy speaker of this house (Mr. Lavergne) condemn the Russians in a similar way, but some years ago his forebears in France rose in revolt against the thorough application of the caste system of the day, and I think if I had been there I would have been with them. They beheaded Louis XVI and Marie Antoinette, and knowing something of the fiery spirit of the deputy speaker I have no doubt he would have wielded an axe himself with considerable gusto if he had been in France at that time. Across the line our American friends at one time had a propensity for assassinating presidents, but I do not hold that against the American people. I do not think there is any other people in the world we would rather have on our southern boundary than the people of the United States. They even assassinated their great emancipator, Abraham Lincoln. I want to commend to hon. members across the way a few lines from that memorable address at Gettysburg, that great masterpiece of simple English.

> Fourscore and seven years ago, our fathers brought forth on this continent a new nation, conceived in liberty, and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal.

I have dealt, Mr. Speaker, with some of the civilized countries of the world, and I say that generally speaking we do not hold a grievance against any nation because in times past some group or other happened to assassinate some of the heads of that nation.

Now I should like to point out to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) something that probably will be of interest to him. Some little time ago our Minister of Trade and Commerce was a soldier in the American army, and he went to the South Seas with a rifle and bayonet. I do not know why he needed the bayonet, because the cannibals of the South Sea islands were pretty elusive, and had to be shot on the run. But, as I say, he went to these islands with his rifle and bayonet. A few years later we find him as our Minister of Trade and Commerce, as a delegate from Canada, going to Honolulu to meet a delegate from our sister dominion of New Zealand in order to try to repair some of the damage done by the Bennett eight cent tariff on butter. I do not think there was any warlike demonstration against him by the natives of that island because he had been there a few years before fighting their cannibalistic ancestors; in fact I believe they gave him a real welcome and decorated him with what is called the chain of peace. They even tell me that on the beach of Waikiki, where the natives dress like shredded wheat, they dedicated a song to our minister which was entitled "Honolulu Harry." So, Mr. Speaker, while that may sound rather ridiculous, it is no more ridiculous than the attack on Russia which has come from hon. gentlemen opposite.

Now I see my hon. friend the Minister of Justice is in his seat. The statement has been made that unemployment funds never have been used by this government for political purposes. I want to draw the attention of the minister to something that happened during the by-election in South Wellington. During the progress of that campaign there appeared in the newspapers an advertisement calling for tenders for the construction of a post office in the city of Guelph. Then on November 13, which was five days before the voting took place, this article appeared in the Guelph Daily Mercury:

Government Will Erect Fine Modern Structure On Quebec Street East

Official Word from Ottawa Received by P. Kerwin, K.C., To-day Are Calling for Tenders

Undertaking Will Provide Additional Work for City's Unemployed

Definite announcement was made to-day that Guelph will have a new post office and that it will be erected during the coming winter.

The official word was received by P. Kerwin, K.C., who is acting in the matter for the Department of Public Works and the Minister of Justice, the Hon. Hugh Guthrie, K.C., and the statement was also forwarded that tenders will be called for at once, with the closing date for the acceptance on these being set for December 10. The actual work on the building will be started just as soon as possible after a tender has been accepted.

Mr. Kerwin stated this morning that the prime object in the building of the new post office is to provide some relief for the unemployed men of this city and the assurance was given by officials that on the big job every possible bit of labour will be used. Men will be used to do the work instead of machinery in every possible case.

The site of the new post office is to be the property at present occupied by Daymond Bros., on Quebec street east, and the government, having taken over the ground, has notified the present occupants that they will be forced to vacate very soon.

Mr. Kerwin stated that he has been notified that the actual cost of the new post office, aside from the value of the land, will be from one hundred to one hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars. A further announcement was made to the effect that the present post office is to be put into use as the headquarters of the local customs and excise officials.

While the definite announcement of the building of the new structure has only been made, the matter has been under consideration for some time. When inquiries were first made by the government as to what work in Canada could be proceeded with to relieve unemployment, the Hon. Hugh Guthrie, K.C., considered that a post office building was needed here, and he had investigations made as to the advisability of such a procedure. The result is that the work will be carried out.

Bearing in mind that this notice appeared in the local paper five days before voting took place in connection with that by-election in South Wellington, you can judge for yourself the effect it had among the unemployed. They were told by this notice that wherever possible men would be used to do the work instead of machinery. A few days ago I had an inquiry from Guelph asking why work had not been started on the post office. I put a question on the order paper, and I found that tenders were called for in accordance with the advertisement, the closing date being December 10. I asked if anyone had authority to issue a statement of that kind on behalf of the government, and here is the reply which was given:

No one has been authorized to make any statement on behalf of the government in respect to this matter.

Here is a case, Mr. Speaker, where the powers given this government could have been used, had the government so desired, to build a post office in Guelph without requiring a vote of this parliament, but the fact of the matter is that as yet the construction of a post office in that city has not been commenced. It looks to me as though first there was a conspiracy with the Department of Public Works to call for tenders, and that then whoever inspired this article, which was given out by the former partner of the present Minister of Justice, also conspired to fool the people of South Wellington. Yet they say the unemployment funds are not being used for political purposes.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There was a vote for this post office in the estimates of last year, and furthermore the gentleman to whom my hon. friend refers is not my law partner.

Mr. HEPBURN: The firm is called Kerwin and Guthrie.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That was the firm with which my father was connected.

Mr. HEPBURN: The fact is that this notice was issued by Mr. Kerwin, who stated he was acting for the Department of Public Works and the Minister of Justice, and it states that work will be started immediately and carried on during the winter. That notice appeared on November 13 of last year, but construction has not been commenced yet. I might also mention that the minister was there himself during the progress of the election; he had his private car spotted on the siding, but he folded his tent like the Arabs and faded quietly away when he found how the wind was blowing.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I rise to correct an error on the part of my hon. friend. He has charged that I was there and was taking part in that by-election. That statement is absolutely untrue. I went to Guelph to attend an Armistice day meeting, and left the same day to return to Ottawa. I did go up to vote. Had I been there I do not know that my hon. friend would have had so much to blow about.

Mr. HEPBURN: Well, the fact stands out that we won the election, and I think the going will be pretty hard for the Minister of Justice if he tries to get reelected himself. This indicates just what can be done if we set up a dictatorship in this country; but if we are going to have a dictator I should like to have a man of proven worth, not a man of extremes.

The Prime Minister states on the one hand that this is the best country in the world, while on the other he tries to justify his request for these unlimited powers on the ground that we are facing a great national crisis and that conditions are so bad that only such legislation as he asks for will meet the requirements of government at the present time. The right hon. gentleman has made extreme promises, and on top of all that he has said, "All these things I will do or perish in the attempt." These are the words of an extreme man. He says that he is feeding 300,000 people in Saskatchewan and he brags about it, and at the same time he is using the axe in Ottawa, so that while he is feeding all these people in Saskatchewan he is leaving others to starve here. He is a man of extremes, I say. I do not think he minds being referred to as a dictator; it rather tickles his inordinate vanity. It flatters him to be so described. Some people say that he is like Mussolini. I do not think the comparison is fair to Mussolini because after all Mussolini is accomplishing something: he is building up a national spirit in his own country—something the Prime Minister is not doing in Canada. Some of his admirers across the way have referred to him as Napoleon. Well, there is only one similarity: Napoleon practised nepotism and put his relatives on the thrones of Europe. If the Prime Minister had another brother-in-law, the Hon. Howard Ferguson's job in England as High Commissioner would not long be retained by that gentleman.

Mr. GOTT: The Liberals of Ontario ought to be proud of their leader.

Mr. HEPBURN: There is another interruption from the hon. member for South Essex—the Minister of Onions, someone says. But I can plead extenuating circumstances for the hon. gentleman because he comes from a riding in which there is located Jack Miner's famous wild goose sanctuary.

An hon. MEMBER: Pouliot told you that.

Mr. HEPBURN: He is living among queer birds and he cannot get away from their influence. We have been interrupted so many times, Mr. Speaker, that I think it would be well to take up a collection and supply you with some insect powder to spray the hon. gentlemen with. The next time the hon. member interrupts us, let him have some of it. It will be justifiable homicide.

Mr. GOTT: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. GOTT: I want to say to the hon. gentleman that one of the Prime Minister's passing thoughts would give him a headache.

Mr. HEPBURN: I assure the hon. gentleman that if he had a headache it would get lonesome.

The only great autocrat in history that I can find, with whom I can fittingly compare the Prime Minister, is Nero. Nero had all the powers the Prime Minister is asking parliament to give him; yet he was a poor administrator. In fact, he ruined the civilization of his day. It is said that he fiddled while Rome burned, and we have the same situation in this country. The Prime Minister is trying one expedient after another, while debts and taxation are increasing and unemployment is getting worse, trade falling off, and commodity prices have fallen to the lowest level it has reached in the present decade.

Mr. GORDON: And you are doing the fiddling.

Mr. HEPBURN: Hon. gentlemen opposite can sit with a smirk on their faces now, but they are humble when they get back to their own concessions. They are not so enthusiastic when they explain to their people the record of this government. That brings to my mind an article I have here with reference to a speech delivered by the hon. member for Toronto Northeast (Mr. Baker). The hon. member was addressing Ward 9 Conservative Association in Toronto, with reference to the situation in this house—the hon. member for South Essex will have that spray gun turned on him if he does not keep quiet. This is what my hon. friend said:

"But, generally," he amended, "Mr. Bennett would stand it as long as he could, and then —would he go for them? And would they get it?"

Referring to the opposition.

Mr. MacNICOL: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. MacNICOL: I understood the hon. member to say that he was quoting the member for Toronto Northwest.

Mr. HEPBURN: Toronto Northeast.

Mr. MacNICOL: Pardon me.

Mr. HEPBURN: I do not blame any man for trying to get from under this kind of rubbish; I fully appreciate the hon. gentleman's feelings in this matter. According to the report, the hon. member for Toronto Northeast continued:

"He never lost his temper, mind you, but sometimes when his patience was stung to the limit he would start after them. Gentlemen, it was a treat of a lifetime to see the Hon. R. B. Bennett give it to them. And he generally closed the question. They didn't have much to say after he got through with them. For there isn't a man in that house knows the ins and outs of every question the way he does. When he summed up a situation there just wasn't anything left to say."

Mr. BAKER: I have the honour to be the member for Toronto Northeast, and I should like to know when and where that was said.

Mr. HEPBURN: The heading reads:

Ward Nine Tories held first meeting of the season.

Richard L. Baker, M.P., and Coulter McLean, M.P.P. are strong for leaders.

That appears under date October 15, 1931, in The Herald, North Toronto's Own Weekly.

Mr. BAKER: I deny the accuracy of the statement.

Mr. HEPBURN: Well, the only point I want to make in regard to this very illuminating and interesting and elevating address is with respect to the concluding sentence:

When he summed up a situation there just wasn't anything left to say.

[Mr. Hepburn.]

That applies very well to hon. members across the way, because they dare not say anything after the Prime Minister has summed up a situation. I want to say to the right hon. gentleman that we on this side are not going to be bullied or browbeaten or intimidated by him or any other hon. gentleman there.

Now, Mr. Speaker, a further reason why I do not like to delegate all these powers to the present executive is that I do not think their policies are applicable to the best interests of the country. After all, this country has an ever-increasing exportable surplus, and its future development and prosperity depend upon an expansive trade policy and not a policy of trade restriction such as is in force at the present time. The government's policy is becoming more drastic all the time and the only thing left for the Prime Minister to do is to order the guns of Quebec to fire on trading vessels coming up the St. Lawrence, or to bring back our wandering navy and station it at Vancouver island to attack any trading ships coming up the Pacific coast. Probably hon. members opposite think I am a little bit bitter in my condemnation of the government.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, no.

Mr. HEPBURN: But let me say that in the back concessions the people are actually suffering to-day as a result of the application of the present government's policies. There is real suffering among these people and I sympathize with them; and I lay the whole blame on the Tory element, not only in this country but in every other country. But we in this country particularly had a glaring example of the application of Tory policies at the special session of the Canadian parliament held in September, 1930. In 1928 we had in this house the report of an economic commission which had investigated conditions in our sister dominion of Australia. There they were just a little ahead of us in the application of the same kind of policy we have adopted. They put into effect a forty per cent tariff, thus serving to stimulate falsely the industries of that country, and increasing the cost of production to the basic producer. The farmer of Australia, the real wealth-producer, could not get a corresponding increase in price for his wheat or butter or anything he had to sell, although he had to pay more in cost of production. So that in the great struggle for world markets the basic producers were actually put out of business there. Industries falsely bolstered up could not be maintained, with the result that there was chaos; and then the basic producers, who were suffering most of all as a result of that policy, applied to the government. The government in the second of the three stages leading to bankruptcy started to subsidize. The first stage was high tariffs; the second stage was subsidies. Then when the people started to feed out of the public treasury they found that they could not stand the taxation any longer, and the whole financial structure of Australia collapsed, and collapsed as a result of the application of the very same policies which were put into effect by hon. gentlemen opposite in the special session of 1930.

In the United States we had a very similar situation. Notwithstanding the glaring example of what had occurred in Australia, President Hoover, for his own aggrandizement, went up and down the country promising the basic producers increased prices for their products if they would but vote for his high tariff policy. He put that policy into effect, increased the tariff on 1,100 articles of trade, but that did not help the basic producers of that country in any way. The basic producer is not getting any more for his products, which are sold in competition with other countries. The wheat grower is not getting any more, the cotton grower is not getting any more, the dairy producer is not getting any more for his products, but the basic producer did lose in this respect, that he had to stand increased production costs, and on the other hand the markets in which he might have sold his products were closed to him as the result of the policies put into effect by President Hoover. There was the second stage.

After high tariffs, you found subsidies applied. Then the government was confronted with the people clamouring for President Hoover to redeem his promises, and the only thing left to do was for President Hoover to appropriate money out of the treasury, which he did to the amount of $500,000,000, and he put this huge revolving farm loan fund into the hands of a board created by himself. This board tried by unsound economic measures to buy wheat off the market, to buy dairy products off the market, and to buy cotton off the market, in order falsely to stimulate the price. But that did not help the basic producers. After this $500,000,000 revolving fund had been appropriated by President Hoover, the basic producers, to their disillusionment, saw the prices of their products go to the lowest level known in the history of the United States, and now these same producers have to stand additional taxation to meet the deficit created by such a policy. There in the United States, as well as in Australia, you see first of all high tariffs, then the demand for subsidies, then a huge deficit, and in the end there will be bankruptcy over there unless their policy is changed. So I say that we had these examples before us of a thorough application of such a policy in the United States and of a thorough application of such a policy in Australia, and yet hon. gentlemen opposite, for their own aggrandizement, adopted this false doctrine which they knew was not applicable to the needs of this country. The events which have transpired since they adopted such a policy have proved beyond a shadow of a doubt that what I say is absolutely true.

Are we fundamentally tackling any of the great problems before us in this country? Certainly not. We are simply resorting to expedients. Is there any justification for a five cent bonus on wheat? It is just a sop to the western wheat farmers. The tariff policy of this government has cost the western wheat farmers $200,000,000, yearly, and then as a sop the government throw to them a bonus of five cents a bushel on wheat.

We had a debate on wool in this house the other day, and hon. gentlemen opposite supported a tariff on wool. That is an unsound policy, because we are now exporting more of the wool produced in Canada than our domestic market can consume.

Some hon. MEMBERS Oh, oh.

Mr. HEPBURN That is quite true. Because of climatic conditions we are able to produce in this country only a coarse grade of wool which is not suitable for use in the manufacture of the finer grades of woollen goods. We have to import the wool for these finer grades from Australia, New Zealand and other countries, and we export the surplus of the low grade wool produced in Canada. A tariff on wool will have no beneficial effect. The only effect will be to increase the cost of a class of wool not produced in Canada, and that cost will be passed on to the consumers in this country.

We had another resolution presented to the house asking for a bonus for the beet sugar industry. We have never had as much sugar in the history of the world as we have to-day, and yet we in this country are asked to tax ourselves to stimulate the production of a product which is to-day glutting the markets of the world.

Mr. SPEAKER The hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. J. A. MERCIER (Laurier-Outremont): At this stage of the discussion, Mr. Speaker, it must be evident to everyone that it is difficult to bring forward any new arguments or to say anything that has not already been said since the Prime Minister brought down that innocent looking little resolution on the 8th of March last, reading as follows:

Resolved, that it is expedient to introduce a bill to amend chapter 58 of the statutes of Canada, 1931, striking out the word "March" in section 8, and substituting the word "May" therefor.

If I venture to take part in this debate it is only because the electors of my division might otherwise think that my silence meant that I approved of this resolution, the effect of which is to upset the fundamental principles of our parliamentary institutions and relegate them to the dump heap of uselessness.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. MERCIER (Laurier-Outremont): As some of the electors of my division may not be aware of the situation which presents itself before the house to-day, I should like to make a few brief remarks.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I wish, Mr. Speaker, you would kindly rule that we have better order. We cannot even hear the speakers on this side.

Mr. MERCIER (Laurier-Outremont): I would like in a few words and in a simple manner to sum up what has been said in this debate. I do not intend to guillotine any crowned heads, to shoot any cannibals in the back, or to eat any Russians. The question raised by the opposition is a constitutional issue. It is whether parliament shall be supreme over the expenditure of public moneys, or whether the governor in council shall be given while parliament is sitting the powers which the government possesses during the recess, powers which expired on March 1, nearly a month after the opening of parliament, and which the government seeks to have continued until May 1.

The right hon. leader of the government (Mr. Bennett), in introducing this resolution, admitted his reluctance from a constitutional standpoint to ask for a continuance of the powers he sought. He expressed himself as follows:

I am reluctant, in the constitutional sense, to ask for the continuance of these powers; I am not reluctant on any other ground. And if I knew of any other method which I believed would accomplish the end we have in view, of assisting in the fair discharge of our obligations, I would not ask this. But after the most careful thought that I have been able to give to the subject—and I will welcome any suggestions that others may offer towards the solution of the problem—I know of no way, except by this method, whereby we can assist the provinces and supplement the work they have to undertake, and at the same time have ready at all times the executive power which would enable us, if the occasion arose, to deal with the situation on a competent basis.

The Prime Minister further stated that his government were confronted with a serious situation, and the question they had to consider was how that serious situation was to be met, whether by a supply bill, as suggested by the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King), or in the manner proposed by the right hon. the Prime Minister, namely, by extending the provisions of the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act of 1931 for a further period of two months until May 1. The Prime Minister had this to say:

I think it is fairly obvious to those who have followed me that to ask for any particular sum of money at this time in the form of a supply bill with the usual limitations that are imposed upon such measures would not meet the situation. In our judgment at any rate, having regard to our experience, it would not. Parliament is in session, parliament has the fullest opportunity to consider and criticize and deal with every step the administration takes. I am not lacking either in sympathy or respect for the views that were so strongly urged last session, and doubtless will be again urged, against our taking the course which I am asking the house to permit us to take, namely, to declare that the provisions of the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act of 1931 shall continue for a further period of two months. I do that, you may say, with some reluctance, but I do it because I believe it is the only method having regard to the necessity for elastic provisions to deal with complex problems promptly. But I do sympathize with the views expressed in a few words yesterday by the right hon. leader of the opposition, and so I suggest to this house that we frame and add to the single section of the bill which makes the provisions of the statute of 1931 applicable for another two months, a provision whereby every order in council that is approved by the Governor General shall be laid upon the table of this house at the next sitting following its passing. That, of course, would be the next day, if the house were in session. I cannot but think, having regard to the gravity of the situation and the difficulty of dealing with it by any hard and fast rule, that this chamber will confer these powers upon this government. I would not deprive this parliament of its right to criticize freely and, if it thought desirable, destroy this administration for the improper discharge of its obligations, but I can conceive of no way in which this house can have larger powers conferred upon it than by the method I have suggested, so that in every instance it might have the fullest opportunity of dealing with these matters.

The answer is, of course, that it is done before the opportunity is afforded to criticize.

The right hon. gentleman gave no intimation to the house as to what might happen after the first of May. He does not say how much he will take, how much he will expend, what appropriations he will make. He wants simply to draw once more on the blank cheque given to him at the last session. He asks for an additional two months during which he will spend whatever money he sees fit without stating what that amount is to be. The Prime Minister says that he knows of no other solution of the problem than this extension of the act, and that he would welcome any suggestions that others might offer. The leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) offered two suggestions as to a constitutional solution of the problem when he expressed himself as follows:

My right hon. friend—

Speaking of the Prime Minister.

—spoke, next, of the province of Saskatchewan, and he dealt with what he described as the admirable manner in which relief had been administered in that province. He stressed the splendid service which had been given by the unemployment relief commission, and he drew the attention of the house to the fact that the federal government made its contribution to the province by means of a cheque payable to the unemployment relief commission. He stated that this commission had carried out the work of unemployment relief in cooperation with the province and the municipalities, in addition to what was being achieved by voluntary cooperation, and that it had used all the safeguards which it could in the matter of protecting public expenditure.

If an unemployment relief commission has worked so successfully in one province in connection with the expenditure of public moneys for relief, why has not my right hon. friend adopted, before this, the suggestion which has been made over and over again from this side of the house of having an unemployment relief commission deal after the same manner with dominion unemployment relief? Instead of giving to the governor in council the power to spend money at its will without consultation even with parliament, why are we not doing what was done in Saskatchewan, particularly when the example has so much to commend it as the Prime Minister says it has? I say to my right hon. friend that even now he should adopt that course, notwithstanding the fact that he has not adopted it up to the present time.

With the example of Saskatchewan before him, instead of coming and asking this parliament to give to the government the power, by order in council, to grant unemployment relief and relief for distress in rural areas, my right hon. friend should establish immediately an unemployment relief commission, composed, as I stated the other day, of representatives of the different economic interests involved. This commission should be given the power to do what may be necessary and this parliament should make its cheque payable, through the executive, to the relief commission, which would transmit to parliament with a full statement of the manner in which the money has been expended. I say that it is no longer defensible to ask parliament to vote further sums to the governor in council when, out of the lips of the Prime Minister himself, we have the declaration that unemployment relief has been better administered under a relief commission in Saskatchewan than has been the case elsewhere.

That is one suggestion offered by my right hon. leader. Here is another he made when he protested against the resolution in the form in which it is presented:

In saying that, let me make this perfectly clear. I am not raising this objection as a merely technical one. I am raising it, as I have said, because I feel that the precedents which are established in this house are all-important, and that members of the House of Commons incur a very grave responsibility in countenancing precedents which should not be set. To make clear that this exception is not being taken on merely technical grounds; that we are not trying to obstruct the voting of any moneys which may be necessary in order to give the provinces the needed loans that my right hon. friend says he now proposes to give them, let them say again as I said yesterday: If my right hon. friend will drop the resolution which is now before us and ask his Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) to come to the house this evening with a supply bill indicating the amount of money which the administration feels it will be necessary to have in order to meet the situation between now and the first of May, or the period during which parliament may be in session, if he will take that course, and move that the rules be suspended so that such a supply bill can be speedily passed through the house and sent over to the Senate, we of the opposition will cordially join with the government in agreeing to the suspension of the rules, and will seek to expedite the passage of such a measure through the house to-day. I make an urgent appeal to my right hon. friend—who as Prime Minister surely has an appreciation of the responsibility involved in the setting of a precedent, who surely venerates British parliamentary institutions and would like to have them upheld—I appeal to him at this time not to be responsible for a controversy in this house over the method of doing something which all of us, regardless of the parties to which we belong, are prepared to assist the government in doing and say should be done, particularly when the controversy relates only to the taking of a right course, and the avoidance of a course which hitherto has not been taken in this parliament, and cannot be countenanced under constitutional practice and procedure, as we have sought to uphold them.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What is the date of that?

Mr. MERCIER (Laurier-Outremont): I do not know the date, but those remarks were made by the leader of the opposition in answer to the speech made by the Prime Minister.

Mr. GOTT: Doesn't the right hon. gentleman remember making that statement?

Mr. MERCIER (Laurier-Outremont): I believe the date was March 8.

An hon. MEMBER: What year?

Mr. MERCIER (Laurier-Outremont): Then, later in his speech the right hon. leader of the opposition offered this further suggestion:

Why should any power be given to the government to do by order in council what can be done in the regular way by parliamentary enactment? We cannot permit a step of that kind to be taken, if it is at all possible to prevent it. We do not wish to obstruct the government in any legislation they may have in mind. We do not wish to add an hour's delay to their obtaining any sum of money that they may consider necessary to meet existing needs; but we cannot countenance a step which means giving the government power to do by order in council, while parliament is in session, the thing which parliament itself alone should do. It is an indignity to parliament itself that any such power should be asked for.

On Tuesday the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) made an appeal in a well prepared and well presented speech. I thought, however, that the fiery delivery which usually characterizes the speeches of the hon. gentleman was missing. I do not know whether his lack of fire could be attributed to the responsibility of holding office or to the fact that he knew he was defending a weak cause. During the course of the minister's remarks he said:

I am reminded that at the moment the fundamental issue here is the relief of the people and the bettering of conditions with which we are confronted to-day.

Then the leader of the opposition interrupted as follows:

And I might add the immediate relief, which can be given at once if the government will bring in a supply bill this afternoon.

Hon. members on this side of the house are not offering captious opposition of the resolution. In his speech the Prime Minister made the suggestion that he was reluctant to take the course he is taking, and remarked that if any suggestions were made to him whereby he could deal with the situation in a purely constitutional manner, he would accept them. Sir, we have offered suggestions to the government, and we appeal to them not to ignore the rights of parliament, not to discard our parliamentary procedure, as they are doing in this case and have done in others. Canada is confronted with a serious problem. Hon. members in this house are trying to do what they can for the betterment of conditions. Hon. members on this side are sincere in their desire to do what they can to end the suffering of the Canadian people, and it seems to me that when the opposition offers helpful suggestions, the government should accept them, even if they come from the opposition benches. By such acceptance they would prove their sincere desire to bring to an end the distressing situation in which Canada finds itself to-day.

Mr. LUCIEN DUBOIS (Nicolet) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in my turn to protest against the resolution actually before the house. This resolution constitutes a challenge to the dignity of the deputation, Conservative as well as Liberal, Progressive or Labour and Independent. I wish to make my position absolutely clear at the outset. With the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King), with all my Liberal colleagues and all the right-thinking men in this house, I am prepared to vote the amount the government will request, determine and advise us is requisite to meet the needs of the present crisis. I am ready to vote in favour of a measure involving an expenditure of twenty-five millions, fifty millions, even one hundred millions, if need be, on condition that the government proves to us these expenditures are necessary. But to vote in favour of a resolution such as that we are presently debating, never!

I want to register the sharpest possible protest against this measure, in the first place because it is ineffective, and secondly, because it is what I call a sacrilegious encroachment on what we hold dearest, namely: constitutional government, responsible government.

One must admit that few really practical means have been taken to cope with the economic crisis, principally unemployment, since the present government is in power. At the special session held in September, 1930, the government had a sum of $20,000,000 voted to aid the unemployed and give them work. In order to secure their share of this sum which the government made available, the provincial governments and municipalities were required to carry out works that could certainly have been postponed until such time when they could be more readily undertaken at a lesser cost to the taxpayers.

What is the result of the policy which the government extolled in September, 1930? The provincial governments and municipalities were driven into debt and no great advantage accrued to the unemployed.

In July, 1931, in order to throw dust into the eyes of the people and the group of citizens known as the unemployed, the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) induced his slavish majority to vest him with the plenitude of power and hand him a blank cheque, authorizing him to spend whatever sums of money he deemed necessary to end unemployment, to relieve the agricultural class and to maintain order and good government in this country. It was a case of securing a temporary dictatorship and nothing else! Under the terms of this bill, the government will be free to propose and apply by order in council any remedies of its own choosing in order to alleviate distress among the Canadian people. Armed with this legislative authority and supported by this expression of confidence on the part of its followers, the government will do all in its power to help the workers and the farmers. The law embodied in chapter 58 of the statutes confers certain powers on the government with respect to the relief of unemployment, the helping of agriculture and the maintenance of peace. On October 19, 1931, the government passed an order in council banning gold exports. To relieve unemployment, to help agriculture, the government passed another order in council on October 27, 1931, amending the Bank Act. Some time later, we have a further order in council amending the Insurance Act. And again, always in accord with Bill 58, to relieve unemployment, help agriculture and maintain peace and order, on December 16, 1931, the government passed an order in council whereby 300 men were added to the police force and the expenses of the country increased by $274,435. We have in a nutshell what was done with the wide authority secured at the 1931 session. And we would refrain from stating this constitutes an abuse of power? And the Liberals would be doing wrong in opposing this measure?

Let us go on: under the terms of Bill 58, the federal government authorized public works involving an outlay of $70,000,000 with respect to which it contributed its proportional and agreed share of 25 per cent. Then, in order to convince the people, to convince itself of the efficacy of the remedies applied, this same government comes forward at the present session and from the lips of its Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon) tells us emphatically that in the course of the year 1931 and by reason of the above-mentioned dictatorship some 300,000 people were employed and given 6,917,000 days of work at a cost of $70,000,000 to the treasury. These gentlemen remind me of the individual with a Gascon temperament who folded his bills in two and added the figures at both ends to convince himself he was rich. 6,917,000 days of work—close to 7,000,000 days—$70,000,000 of public money expended, that really amounts in round figures to an average expenditure of $10 per work day. The labourer's average wage being $3 a day, can the government tell us what happened to the $7 that makes up the difference or who secured the benefit of that amount? The workingman received three dollars out of every ten dollars disbursed. Where did the seven other dollars go?

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): They bought cement in my part of the country.

Mr. DUBOIS (Translation): Was this money distributed in expropriation costs, in benefits to the manufacturers supplying material?—

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): They are so untruthful!

Mr. DUBOIS (Translation): —or again did the money go to the merchants dealing in implements?

What splendid aid to the unemployed! Of every ten dollars expended, three dollars go to the workers and the seven other dollars we know not where. What an effective means to end unemployment! I would like to speak less harshly of the government but I can feel no admiration for those who after securing a mandate under false representations treat the suffering people with such haughtiness and impudence.

Figures convey something to me, and I am using the information of the hon. minister of Labour for my figuring. Mr. Speaker, are we not justified in opposing the present resolution, when after an almost two year tenure under a Conservative administration that promised to remedy everything we observe that the unemployment problem remains unsolved, the country is in debt, certain provinces are in a bad way financially and a number of municipalities are almost bankrupt?

And we would grant the Prime Minister an extension of power to continue this poor job? If parliament was about to prorogue, there would be a semblance of reason to warrant the present resolution, a measure designed to instil a little life into Bill No. 58 which died of old age on March 1. But parliament is in session. All of us delegated here by the people and assembled for the purpose of discussing legislative measures and seeing that public funds are administered in a business-like manner, we would abdicate our powers, we would betray the people and hand over our responsibilities to an incompetent administration! Never. We are ready to co-operate with the government in remedying the present situation, and if, to achieve that end, as I stated at the outset, he requires 25, 50 or 100 million dollars, we are prepared to grant him that sum. Let him set whatever sum he chooses, let him prove to us that this sum is necessary to relieve the present crisis, and we will vote the money required inside of twenty-four hours. But to surrender the people's rights, never! Giving a blank cheque to the Prime Minister would be tantamount to an admission of incompetence on our part and it would ill behoove us to remain here any longer.

The Prime Minister realizes the gravity of the situation and seeks to enlist the support of all men of good will. We are assembled here for that purpose. Parliament is convened with no other objective. What more does he want?

I also protest against the present resolution because it is ultra vires and unconstitutional. More eloquent speakers, greater authorities on the subject than I am, have discussed the issue with marvelous thoroughness. I will not tarry any further over the legality of the present resolution but I protest against its adoption because it implies an unpardonable encroachment on what we hold dearest, I mean responsible government. Some honourable members are unwilling to face the constitutional point raised in the course of the debate. Some honourable members who enjoy a certain repute outside the precincts of this chamber have steered clear of the constitutional aspect when discussing this resolution. The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) who stood up in this house also evaded the question. Yet, he is lacking neither in intelligence nor knowledge. He even went further and ventured to assert that the Liberals were equally responsible for the blank cheque which parliament gave the hon. Prime Minister in July, 1931. Do they imagine they can disabuse the people?? Do they believe our electors are so lacking in intelligence as to be unaware that a law adopted by the Commons always secures the support of a majority? When the majority is Conservative and the blank cheque is secured under a Conservative régime, the Conservatives alone are to be held responsible for this measure.

The honourable member for Dorchester (Mr. Gagnon) also discussed the resolution but he did not touch upon the constitutional aspect of the question.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Hear, hear.

Mr. DUBOIS (Translation): He also evaded the issue and when he delivered his speech we thought a provincial election campaign was in full swing. They say he is a brilliant lawyer. Qualities are ascribed to him and he is reported to be a man of some worth. Yet, he practically avoids the question in the course of a speech that takes up nine columns of Hansard. He devotes four columns and a half to the election in Three-Rivers, and a column and a half to disparage the premier of our province, Mr. Taschereau.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Shame, shame!

Mr. DUBOIS (Translation): In one column he applies himself to the task of hurling darts at the former Minister of Justice, the honourable member for Quebec-East (Mr. Lapointe). He takes up a column and a half speaking of the benefits of the 1930 enactment and in a half-column he tries to convince us that all the young people of to-day are imbued with Conservative ideals, that they greatly admire Bennett, that they think of him only, that they are ever dreaming of him, and that they hope to some day have the opportunity of banding together in the province of Quebec and giving assent to his policies. The honourable member who took up part of his time criticizing the former Minister of Justice must be well aware if he is proud to-day to live in this country which shook off the colonial yoke, he is indebted to my leader and the former Minister of Justice. The honourable member must know that if the government has the power of signing treaties to-day in the name of Canada he owes it to my leader and the former Minister of Justice. The honourable member should know if Canada now has representatives in Washington, Paris and Tokyo we owe it to the honourable leader of the opposition and the hon. member for Quebec East.

Instead of discussing the question and trying to prove this resolution is really constitutional, he preferred wandering far afield. Instead of trying to prove the honourable member for Quebec-East was in error when he stated this measure was unconstitutional, the honourable member for Dorchester preferred discussing petty politics probably with the object of securing certain favours. Instead of respecting those who truly served their country he preferred playing the part of a Félix Poutré. Others who are always content to play second fiddle seem happy and feel honoured in surrendering their responsibilities and the people's rights into the hands of their cherished leader. As for the honourable member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Dorion), if he chooses to sell his birthright for a mess of potage, he is free to do so; but we who are accustomed to walk with our heads erect, and to see beyond the feed trough those fruitful doctrines that safeguard our rights cannot approve of his abdication.

This resolution seems insignificant if one merely considers its immediate object which is to substitute the word May for the word

March; but it really implies an extension of legislative power which deprives us of our prerogatives and our right of deliberation.

You can sense the danger, Mr. Speaker. In 1932, they already avail themselves of the precedent of 1931, and if we were to grant to-day the two months' extension as requested, how could we refuse to-morrow a four months' extension, or again refuse an eight months' extension, or even a twelve months' extension. Thus it happens that the removal of one stone from the foundation causes the fall of another stone, of four, of ten other stones, and finally the building itself collapses. As precedents always end by becoming laws, the adoption of the measure now before the house would show the way to even more dangerous requests. What accounts for this thirst after absolute authority on the part of the Prime Minister? Why this desire to legislate as he likes? Under cover of Bill No. 58 adopted to provide unemployment and farm relief, the government deemed fit to pass orders in council banning the export of gold, amending the Bank Act, amending the Insurance Act, increasing the Mounted Police establishment by 300 men and adding thereby $274,435 to the expenses of the country. Let us suppose for a minute that we are going to vote in favour of this resolution, and the thought occurs to-morrow to the Prime Minister that in order to relieve unemployment, help agriculture and maintain order in the country, it is necessary to pass an order in council enjoining or favouring the fusion of our two great railways! . . . . I will carry the point further: everybody is aware that grave questions loom on the horizon at this stage. If in order to relieve unemployment, help agriculture and maintain order and peace, the Prime Minister believes an order in council should be passed ordering the carrying out of the St. Lawrence deep waterway, what could we say by way of a reply?

Under cover of the bill which we are now asked to extend, various orders in council providing for the expenditure of public funds have been passed, when, as a matter of fact, we are delegated here by our respective constituencies to see that the people's money is properly administered, to see that the laws conform to the people's needs, and to keep a watchful eye over those matters that relate to the public interest. The Right Honourable Prime Minister who knows the value and force of precedents could, following the granting of the present request, ask us to grant a second, possibly a third extension of power, and thus exercise a complete dictatorship during his full term of office. And we would have no cause to be distrustful; we would have no cause to offer opposition. I ask myself, can we, in order to please a potentate about whom there is no touch of chivalry, abdicate our most noble responsibilities and surrender our most sacred rights? Can we, simply in order to please the leader of a party never sated with authority, sacrifice on the altar of autocracy the prerogatives that devolve upon us as representatives of the people? Can we, to avoid being taxed with political partisanship or ill-will, surrender to a papier-mâché dictatorship that which belongs not to us but to our constituents; I refer to the guarantee of exclusive legislative authority conferred on the Canadian Parliament. Can we sacrifice these things without giving some thought to the matter simply to please our friends opposite? No, never; we shall never do it. I protest with every ounce of energy at my command and with the full force that the rights of 30,000 British subjects in my riding represent against this unconstitutional measure which violates section 91 of the British North America Act.

One had to live in the twentieth century, Mr. Speaker, to hear a government propose such audacious measures. And to think that our forefathers should have fought for years and years to secure this legislative power. Our forefathers would shed their blood in seeking an objective that did them credit? Our forefathers would appeal to the broad-mindedness of English statesmanship and receive this legislative régime in token of their devotion to Great-Britain? Our forefathers would by word of mouth, the use of the sword and innumerable sacrifices offered up for the sake of future generations, establish their claim to freedom only to see their cowardly grandsons hand over to a sham dictator the fruits of so many struggles? No, Nicolet county will never lend itself to these tactics!

Were it possible for the right honourable prime minister and his followers to relent in the face of all these arguments! But they will not relent. The honourable member for Quebec East ably proved in the light of constitutional law that this resolution was utterly arbitrary. The prime minister did not unbend. Held fast, like a prey in the tentacles of some giant octopus, by the very apt and cogent speech of the honourable member for Ottawa (Mr. Chevrier) he did not flinch. He was still unmoved in the face of the sarcasm and satire so cleverly dispensed by the honourable member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa). I do believe, were we to crush him under the weight of all the arguments we could marshall after poring over all the books in the library, he would still persist in his stubbornness to put this measure through and claim this dictatorship. If one could at least ascribe the quality of courage to this attitude. I have tried to understand this mentality, to grasp this state of mind. I resorted to what little psychological knowledge I possess and I failed. I even perused La Bruyere's "Les Caractères" in the hope of finding the prime minister's double, and I met with no greater success. I had to go far back into antiquity .. ..I had to search among the fossil characters to find the prime minister's counterpart. I went as far back as Plato and Aristotle and I ran across an individual by the name of Theophrastus who in one of his works entitled "Les Caractères" gives us a very accurate portrayal of the present prime minister. Here is what he says with reference to the great men of a certain republic:

> The ruling passion of those holding the first places in a popular state is not the desire for gain nor the accretion of their income, but an impatience to aggrandize themselves and to set up for their benefit, were it possible, a sovereign power above and beyond that of the people. If a man of this type called a meeting to consider whom among the citizens he would commission to help the first magistrate in the management of some festival or spectacle, this ambitious man whom I have just described stands up, demands the position and protests no other person can discharge the duties of the office quite as well. He does not approve the domination of the many, and of all Homer's verses he remembers this line only:
>
> "Nations are happy when only one man governs them."

During the 1930 campaign, we saw our opponents going up and down our respective ridings telling the electors: "Do you want prosperity? Do you want to be happy? Vote for the Honourable R. B. Bennett." They distributed the honourable prime minister's photograph with these lines appended: "If butter does not sell, if the land is becoming impoverished, if there are unemployed, if factories close their doors, the Liberal government is to blame. Do you want prosperity, do you want work, do you want to see the price of butter increase? Vote for the Honourable R. B. Bennett." And inscribed below were these words: "People, this is your master." Citizens of Canada, the prime minister told them through his acolytes, if you want to be happy, vote for me, because the people will be happy when I alone govern them.

He alleged the same reasons when demanding a blank cheque in 1931: I cannot administer the country hand in hand with the opposition, he was wont to say. Give me a blank cheque so that I alone may govern. Give me a blank cheque, and I am convinced the people of Canada will be happy when I hold sway. One feels tempted to call his actions hallucinations. We will not do so in this chamber, but the people on the outside have weighed his actions and they impatiently bide their time until opportunity offers to take their revenge.

The honourable members to the right have accused us of not offering any constructive suggestions. The honourable member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) confuted this specious charge this afternoon. With the honourable member for Nipissing (Mr. Hurtubise) I suggest to the present government just as I suggested last year when I spoke on the address in reply to the speech from the throne, that it should do all in its power to encourage the establishing of industries and the return to the land. Why spend millions and millions on works that provide the workers with a mere pittance? Could these seventy millions of public funds not have been used to encourage the return to the land? With these seventy millions the government could have given a home and shelter to at least 350,000 citizens. How many people are there living in our cities to-day who, attracted by the lure of easy gain abandoned their farms, and who would be willing now to return to the land but are unable to do so? Why does the federal government not come forward with a generous measure of assistance to the provincial governments in order to enable these people and their families to return to these farms for which they experience a feeling of homesickness? Who can gainsay that the land breeds morality? Who can gainsay that the land is the most favourable environment for the development of civic virtues, virtues that are the warp and woof of strong races? Can one ignore the fact that the land constitutes the soundest capital? How many of our people would be happy to return to the land? All might not remain, but a large number would be proud to renew acquaintance with the wholesome soil which, when one loves it, when we give it our hearts and offer it the use of our arms, when we lean lovingly over it, is never ungrateful and returns a hundredfold what we give it. With the object of recalling the matter to mind and in order to convince the government the return to the land is a sound policy, that the expenditure of millions in furtherance of the return to the land is a good investment for the country, I will quote a few observations made by a Catholic priest who was a leader in the agricultural settlement of the country.

Landed capital is the most stable producer of real wealth. It goes its way unshaken by stock market upheavals. One might liken it to the ocean liner riding the storm which small craft could not weather. Landed capital is the most stable and fixed capital; it is the only truly stable capital.

Industry is the airplane that soars above the clouds but whose fall involves a complete loss.

The land is the plough moving along gently but incapable of sustaining any fall.

If we settle our sons on the land, we will develop a generation that will be an honour to us, that will be an honour to the race. In the years to come, when their eyes rest again on their little valleys, homes and fields, they will be able to repeat the lines which we speak when we again set foot on our farms:

Que j'ai de joie à vous revoir, ô paysage!
De quel regard d'amour j'enveloppe, ô sommets,
Votre forme rustique et votre humble visage
Qui malgré les antans, ne vieillissent jamais!...

Mr. PAUL MERCIER (St. Henri): Mr. Speaker, I had no intention of speaking to-day, but after looking over the house and observing that to-day is March 17, St. Patrick's Day, and therefore a day for speeches, I am going to say a word. I am glad to offer my congratulations to hon. members on both sides of the house who are observing this as a national day of celebration. St. Patrick was a good saint and a great protector; I am told he belonged to no party at all and never entered politics, and therefore he is always blessing good Irishmen all over the world.

Speaking of St. Patrick reminds me of a man in provincial politics in Quebec of whom we have heard a good deal in the last week or so. I refer to Hon. Mr. Dillon, who was in charge of a bill which passed the Quebec legislature last session. I see my good friend from Compton (Mr. Gobeil) in the house. He made quite a long speech yesterday about Mr. Dillon and his bill, but that must be a sound law—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): Just a moment. I also see my good friend from Chateauguay-Huntingdon (Mr. Moore), who is also a worthy Irishman. This must have been good law, because it was introduced by an Irishman, and when it left the legislative assembly and went to the council it was sponsored by Hon. Mr. Bryson, another able Irishman, and was seconded by Mr. Kelly, still another reputable Irishman. Then, after it was passed, it was duly sanctioned by still another very brilliant Irishman, the lieutenant governor of the province of Quebec, Hon. H. G. Carroll.

That law has helped many elected candidates, and they were not all Liberals. I know that for one it helped Mr. Bertrand, who is now a Conservative member of the legislative assembly for Saint-Sauveur. His election was contested and because of that law he now represents that constituency. Ask Mr. Bertrand if he does not bless that law to-day; he knows it gave him the chance to sit in the provincial house as a Conservative member. To meet the argument advanced by my hon. friend opposite let us imagine that the Liberal party, after the last dominion election had contested one hundred seats in the house. Of course that is absurd, but by making a comparison it is easier to understand the fact. It would have been an intolerable thing if we had taken that action; perhaps an order in council would have been passed by the present government, declaring the petition null and void. But we saw the spectacle in the province of Quebec of 55 seats being contested, some of them having been won by majorities ranging from 500 to 1,500, as was the case in my own county of St. Henri. Of course when we look at a thing through a binocular it always seems greater than when we look at it through a microscope; in the latter case it seems very small.

During the course of this debate we have heard many things about the province of Quebec. As members of parliament we should do our best to foster a proper appreciation of the provinces from which we come. What is the use of criticizing the Liberal administration in Quebec because it is a Liberal one? Why suggest that the people were bluffed in the last election in that province? The people were not fooled, they were not bluffed; you cannot fill them up as though they were bottles. The Liberal party in that province were returned by a vote of the majority of the people, and any stranger, viewing the situation impartially, will agree that the people in that province were right. Where is my proof in support of my contention that the people of Quebec were right in returning the Liberal government to power? It is to be found in the report of the Dominion Director of Unemployment Relief, March 1, 1932, published by this government. This report gives an accounting of the appropriations and disbursements throughout Canada under the act. I do not find, according to the report, that my province has come to Ottawa and asked for any advances, but I do find that the province of Manitoba asked for three and three quarter millions, Saskatchewan almost seventeen millions, and Alberta four and a half millions. And what about the province of Ontario— a wealthy province forming, along with the province of Quebec, the cornerstone of the Dominion of Canada? It is true that Ontario asked for a small amount, but just the same that province did ask for $190,364.74. Then British Columbia, on the verge of bankruptcy, gets an advance of $5,664,366.19. Altogether, we find that over $31,000,000 has been advanced to five of the provinces; but I see nowhere any mention of the province of Quebec. Now I do not say this in order to belittle any of the other provinces of Canada; not at all. My sentiments are too broad for that. I know that the nine provinces of Canada are the nine jewels in the crown of confederation, and each part of the dominion should be willing, if necessary, to come to the assistance of the rest. On the other hand, I think that my contention is borne out by the figures disclosed in this report, for they show the condition of the province of Quebec, the first settled land in this dominion. My province, I claim, still leads the dominion. I am proud of that province, and when I say so I am speaking on behalf not only of the Liberals of Quebec but of all the people who so strongly supported the government of Premier Taschereau in the last provincial election.

The province of Quebec, we are told, had a deficit of $10,000,000. As everyone knows, we were obliged to contribute our share under the unemployment relief scheme. For every dollar advanced, for provincial works, Quebec was obliged to pay its share on a fifty per cent basis, and for municipal works, Quebec was paying between thirty-five and forty-five per cent. We were obliged to take money from the treasury of Quebec to contribute to such work as was done. Perhaps other provinces were not on a financial basis strong enough to meet current liabilities, but Quebec was ready to meet hers, from her surpluses. But at that very moment she was obliged to contribute millions towards works carried on in the metropolis of Canada. It is not surprising, therefore, that the treasury of the province should be depleted after helping to meet the exigencies of the federal government. But let me say that before the first of May the banks will be reimbursed that $10,000,000, for the credit of the province of Quebec is still unimpaired in Canada, in England, and in every other country of the world, and Quebec will come back with flying colours. That province will balance its budget and will go ahead and prosper, to the advantage of the farmers and the people of the cities.

I have looked through this report very carefully, and it is astonishing to see the amount of money that has been spent under the Unemployment Relief Act. I may say quite frankly that when the bill was introduced last year I realized that the situation was desperate. When the Liberal government was in power there were signs of the tornado that was about to strike us. Anyone could see the clouds hanging over us, and the Liberal government foretold a tremendous storm. Our opponents did not agree with us, but the storm came just the same and we are in the midst of it now.

I should have liked to see this bill drafted differently. Does any business man in this house imagine for a moment that he would confer upon his manager or upon any other person in his firm or industry such wide powers as were given to the government under this act? Not at all. Not at all. Parliament must retain control over the expenditure and over the mandate given to the government so that we may hold the government to account and see that our ministers do not engage in risky undertakings. The government are asking that the powers conferred under the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act of 1931 be extended for a further two months. It is true that the government has presented a report on the work that has been done under this act, but why does not the government ask parliament to vote a specific amount? If it did that, I would be the first to support it. Navigation will be opening up at Montreal within two months. I see on page 19 of the report on the administration of the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act, schedule 18, that there has been spent by the Dominion government, as its share, in the city of Montreal for public works $1,200,000, but I contend, Mr. Speaker, that the money should not have been spent in the way it was. I am not here to give advice, for I know that any advice coming from the opposition will not be listened to by the government, that it will have no more chance than a cat jumping in an alley. But if the money had been spent on improvements to the Montreal harbour, for instance, not only would it have given work to the labouring people of Montreal, but work would have been done that would have been of benefit to the city and to this whole country for the next ten or fifteen years. Sheds, for instance, might have been built and new construction of various kinds which would have supplied the port's requirements for the next ten or fifteen years. The unemployed in Montreal would be glad to work with a pick and shovel on this work. I contend that that would have been a much better way to spend the money, because not only would work have been provided but public works of value would have been constructed which would serve this country for a considerable number of years to come. The government might have built a new custom house, for instance, at Montreal. A foundation was laid for such a building nearly fifteen years ago by a former Conservative government, under Sir Robert Borden. This foundation on McGill street cost approximately $1,000,000, but nothing further was done with regard to it. If work had been proceeded with on that project, we would to-day have a new federal building in the city of Montreal which would have served the needs of the city for perhaps twenty-five years hence, and at the same time work would have been provided for the unemployed. But I humbly submit that at present the money is being spent in a way that is not of benefit to Canada, and if this crisis continues, and if the treasury remains empty of revenue, the government will be obliged to increase taxation. They will have to borrow money and they will not be able to say to the people: Look at the public works that we have built with the money voted for unemployment relief. It would have been far better to construct public buildings, dredge rivers, and make harbour improvements, providing for the needs of the future as well as looking after the present.

I read in a Montreal paper a few months ago—if I am wrong I shall be glad to be corrected—that the chairman of the Montreal harbour commission had urged the building of a wharf and shed at Windmill Point at Montreal. This project would have provided work for a very considerable number of men and would have been of benefit to the Marine department and to Canada as a whole. But nothing was done. If that project had been gone on with, you would not see 30,000 unemployed walking the streets of Montreal to-day. Money voted for unemployment relief and to be spent in the city of Montreal should have been spent in the harbour of Montreal, in the construction of improvements.

In distributing the money to municipalities, I contend that the government is relinquishing too much of the control over the funds voted by parliament. In the city of Montreal, for instance, more was expended in expropriation proceedings than on public works undertaken for the benefit of the unemployed. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the amendment which this government has proposed will be withdrawn because I humbly submit that a constitutional issue is involved. The control of public moneys should not be taken out of the hands of parliament.

I heard the learned speech the other day of my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens). He argued that it was impossible to spend a definite amount without asking parliament to vote it, and that if it was not voted the Auditor General would scrutinize the item very closely to see that it was devoted to the purpose designated by the house. That is the very principle that I am advocating, that parliament should have control over the moneys it votes. But to-day we do not know where we are going. Are we going to spend fifteen or twenty or fifty million dollars during the next few months for the relief of unemployment? Nobody knows. But if the government would ask this house to vote a definite sum, say fifty or sixty million dollars, if needed, that would be in accordance with constitutional practice and in accordance with the principle of the voting of supplies by parliament which has always prevailed in this country.

I hope that I have not delayed the house too long, Mr. Speaker, but what I have said I have said sincerely, presenting my view as to the issue involved, and speaking also in the interests not only of the city of Montreal but also of my beloved province of Quebec, which in common with the other provinces of this dominion is vitally concerned in the prosperity and welfare of our country.

Mr. A. E. MacLEAN (Prince): In rising to make a few observations on the resolution before the house, I wish to be as fair as I can and to present the view which is taken by hon. members on this side of the house.

At the outset there is one question that I should like to ask. If the government were very anxious to bring in this measure in time to have the amendment made before the first of March, why did they not introduce it earlier in the session? The speech from the throne was disposed of in a couple of days and there was no reason in the world why the government could not have introduced this measure and had the act amended before it lapsed. Our friends, however, chose to sit back quietly, do nothing in connection with the situation, and allow the act to lapse. Then, after it was dead, they came to parliament and asked for an amendment to what has been termed a dead statute. I do not think our hon. friends opposite or the country at large can take any objection to the criticism that has been offered by this side of the house, because it has been made clear from the first that the Liberal party are perfectly willing to vote the supply necessary to carry on any undertakings the government may have on hand or any new ones on which they may wish to embark. It was made quite plain by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) that if a supply bill were brought in to take care of any emergency that might arise, it would be put through the house in the course of a few hours and then the government could bring in a new bill which they could frame at their leisure, without attempting to rush through a bill to amend an act which, as has been pointed out, is defunct and no longer capable of amendment.

If any mistake has been made in this regard, our hon. friends on the government benches will have to assume the responsibility. I do not think the government could ask for anything clearer than the offer which has been made by the opposition that if a supply bill were introduced, it would be put through all its stages without undue delay. The government, however, are not satisfied with that; they come to parliament and, under this resolution and the bill to be founded on it, ask us to hand over to the executive the exclusive power to put through almost any legislation they may wish. Why do they do this? I think we have a complete answer in the speech which was delivered the other day by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens). This is what he said on March 12:

> It is true that at that time an appropriation might have been voted, and it was very largely the burden of the complaint of some hon. members that that was not done, but I invite hon. gentlemen to consider this, that when an appropriation is passed the purpose for which it is to be used must be specified, and the Auditor General and other officers of the crown in scrutinizing expenditures under such an appropriation always keep the government very closely to the purpose specified in such a vote.

If there has been advanced from any part of the house one argument which condemns more strongly than any other the action of the government in proposing this amendment to the act, it is the speech of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. He says positively that if they bring in a supply bill, then the country is going to know where every dollar of that money has gone. If they bring in an amendment to the act, then the government can do almost anything they want and the Auditor General has not the power to scrutinize that he would have if a specified sum were voted.

Mr. STEVENS: I am quite sure my hon. friend does not wish to misrepresent my statement. If he will refer to the remarks which I made on that occasion, and part of which he has just quoted, he will note that I was referring to conditions that could not possibly have been foreseen or provided for, and therefore an appropriation which must specify what it is for, could not be used for unforeseen circumstances which might arise under these emergent conditions, particularly the drought conditions of the west.

[Mr. MacLean.]

Mr. MacLEAN: My hon. friend's argument would hold good if the house were not in session; but the government must know the commitments they have made up to the present time; they must have a fairly good estimate of what is needed for the different provinces, and they could have brought in a supply bill sufficiently large to take care of any emergency that might arise within the next two months. That supply bill could have been passed by the house and then the Auditor General could have been in a position to check up and see where every dollar of the money went. The hon. member for St. Henri (Mr. Mercier) has referred to the report which has been submitted to the house. What does that report show? Do we get any itemized expenditure in it? We do not. All we get is a statement showing lump sums that were approved by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon), one sum for this province and another for that. Those appropriations were approved and the government gave the municipality or the provincial government authority to go ahead and carry out the relief works at a specified amount. Nobody knows whether those projects cost too much or not, or what was done for the amount stated, or how the money was really expended. I do not wish to be harsh, but if when the former Liberal government was in power my hon. friends opposite had had half the chance that we on this side have had, I know the criticism they would have offered. As I said before, the Minister of Trade and Commerce has condemned this course of asking for a blank cheque more strongly than any member on this side has been able to condemn it.

If they are given a blank cheque and this wide power in regard to the provision for peace, order and good government, they may do anything. We might have a merger of all the banks in Canada; we might have a merger of the great railway systems; we might have the deep waterway scheme put through in this country by order in council, and we know how divided public opinion is on the question. We know the attitude which is being taken in the great province of Quebec; they are prepared to carry the matter to the seat of the throne rather than give away their rights. Therefore, to give this blank cheque and this wide power of legislation to the government at this time, is going a step too far. The situation should be dealt with as it arises; our friends opposite should now know pretty nearly what they want; they should bring in a new bill and allow the house to debate it, without asking for a blank cheque at this stage of the game.

They say that we have made no worthwhile suggestions. It has been pointed out by the speakers to-night that the leader of the opposition has on different occasions indicated that the appointment of an independent commission in each province is the proper manner of handling the situation. This is the people's money. One of the regulations approved by the Minister of Labour under the statute that was passed is as follows:

> All agreements with provincial and municipal authorities shall contain a provision to the effect that all persons employed on the works or undertakings referred to herein shall be residents of Canada, and in no case shall discrimination be made or permitted in the employment of or in the granting of direct relief to any British subjects by reason of their political affiliation, race or religious views.

This was to be a fair deal to the country as a whole. We have heard representatives from different provinces state that this principle has not been followed. I am not going to complain in regard to Prince Edward Island; I think the work was handled there as well as in any other province, but a new Conservative government had just come into power; their friends were very hungry for government jobs, and there is no doubt in the world that they pressed that government very hard. We had complaints by the score from people who said that no one need apply unless he was of the right political stripe. I do not know whether or not that is true, but I do know that we have had complaints that the money did not go to the men who needed it, that for some reason or another those moneys in many cases did not reach their proper destination—that is, the man out of work. A large amount of the money spent went to people who did not need it, to people who could afford to buy motor trucks, to merchants, to contractors and to speculators who were able to grab a large proportion of the money. Those people received the benefit rather than the men who were really in need of assistance. No wonder the public press and the people in general condemn this measure. I think it was "Alfalfa Bill" Murray, or Senator Bill Murray, of the United States who said that people do not exist for government, but that the government exists for the benefit of the people. Our hon. friends opposite seem to think that the people exist for the government, and we find them endeavouring to control everything in the way of expenditures to suit themselves.

Turning to the public press for expressions in this connection we find the following in the Financial Post:

> It must be obvious to everyone that the proposed plan for carrying on relief work in the same way as last season does not commend itself to the public generally.

When we see such papers as the Financial Post, publications which have made a study of the plan, condemn it and make publicly the statement that the procedure is too expensive, I think it is time for the government to call a halt and take into consideration some of the suggestions put forward by the press and by hon. members in this house.

The Financial Post of January 30, 1931, states that $10 has been added to the public debt of Canada for every day's work given to the unemployed. The figures reveal waste and prove that the plan is unsound, that it is calculated to strain the credit of municipalities and provinces, and is loading them up with debts that they would not otherwise assume. That is the view of the Financial Post. In the same issue I find the following statement:

> In other words, it cost the state not more than $20 per head to carry the unemployed under direct relief, and $210 per head to give 332,000 people 22 days work each in the year. The expense of the relief work was at least ten times greater than that of direct relief. The figures for this year will run about the same.

That is the astounding statement contained in the Financial Post, a publication which has gone into this matter thoroughly and has attempted to show to the public that the giving of relief has not been economically handled. The article in the Financial Post goes on to say:

> A relief problem of 350,000 unemployed, therefore, can be met by direct relief for $7,000,000; by indirect relief (22 days work apiece), $70,000,000.

An analysis has been made by that publication to show that some $60,000,000 has been thrown away in an attempt to carry out the relief plan adopted last year by my hon. friends opposite.

Concerning the question whether or not the provinces are able to carry on, a great deal has been published in the public press. Mr. C. A. Bogert, general manager of the Dominion bank, stated at the annual meeting of that institution that Canada is now borrowing $6 for each $1 she is repaying. Referring to the public debt of Canada he said:

> The Dominion government during the past few years had reduced the public debt approximately 11 per cent from its peak, but this again was more than wiped out in the past few weeks by the national service loan.

That is a very strong statement coming from a man who holds the position of general manager in one of our greatest banks. Hon. members must realize that we cannot go on rolling up debts in the municipal, provincial and dominion governments, because there is a limit to credit. The time would soon come when even this Dominion of Canada would not be in a position to borrow enough money to keep going. There is no use misleading the people regarding these grants, because down in our little province of Prince Edward Island we know that in the past few years we received fair treatment from the federal Department of Public Works. Last year, however, when the dominion government gave $125,000 to that province for unemployment the contribution was heralded throughout the press, and statements were made about the wonderful help the federal government was giving. May I point out that on the one hand this government is withholding hundreds of thousands of dollars from Prince Edward Island, and on the other hand it is making a contribution of $125,000 for the relief of the unemployed.

Let us survey the situation. We find that the amount voted for public works in the province of Prince Edward Island for the year 1928 was $339,800. In 1929, the sum of $229,800 was voted. What do we find in the estimates for 1932? There are only two items, totalling $8,000. Yet, under a Liberal government in 1929 the province of Prince Edward Island received $339,800. Although our hon. friends opposite are spending money for the relief of the unemployed, they are at the same time allowing the public works of this dominion to run down. Public works in the province of Prince Edward Island will fall into a state of decay; the amount stipulated in the estimates for this year is not sufficient to keep them in repair. True, the sum of $50,000 is set aside for harbours and rivers. That sum, however, is voted every year, and is used only in cases of emergency where trouble may develop after a storm, and repair work may be necessary.

Let us consider dredging in the maritimes. In the year 1929, the sum of $540,000 was set aside for that purpose, and of that sum $60,000 or $70,000 was spent in the constituency I have the honour to represent. We find that for 1931-32 the amount was only $235,500, indicating a reduction in that one item of $304,500.

Mr. GOTT: The Conservative governments apparently did more for the hon. member than the Liberal governments did for us.

[Mr. MacLean.]

Mr. MacLEAN: I think the records show that the country was well cared for by the Liberal government. During the last election campaign the Conservative candidates were telling about the wonderful things they were going to do when their party came into power. so far, none of their promises have been fulfilled. They promised to find a market for our products. They went up and down the country telling the people to look at their milk cheques. I ask my hon. friends to-night to look at their milk cheques, and not only their milk cheques but all other cheques for farm produce. Look at the cheques they receive from the sale of their potatoes, their poultry, their pork, their beef, their grain. I ask my hon. friends what has happened to those silver-lined promises they handed out so freely during the election campaign.

In the few moments I have at my disposal before eleven o'clock I wish to make an appeal to this government on behalf of the potato growers in Prince Edward Island. Millions of dollars have been voted in this house for the benefit of other provinces. My hon. friend from the province of Quebec who preceded me told us that within the last year about $32,000,000 had been voted to the different provinces to take care of unemployment and farm relief. If hon. members would take the time to search the records from confederation up to the present they would not find one dollar voted for the relief of farmers in Prince Edward Island. To-day those farmers are in a worse position than they have been at any time since confederation. In western Canada the farmers are blessed with a fertile soil, and about all they need do is put in their crop; then if there is anything like a good growing season they are assured of a bountiful harvest. In short, the only essential thing is seed. But in Prince Edward Island we need not only seed, but something that is equally essential—fertilizer. For the past two years our farmers down there have been in a most unfortunate position. Last fall the potato association shipped large quantities of potatoes into the United States on the understanding that they would be sold when the market opened up this spring. They had to pay the duty and freight and storage charges, and now the prospects are that they will get scarcely anything in return. I see my friends from Prince Edward Island on the other side and I know they will agree with every word I say. To-day our farmers need some cash assistance to help them buy their fertilizer for this year's crop. They cannot get that fertilizer on credit because it is a cash article. The banks are carrying the farmer's notes for the fertilizer purchased last year and they decline to make any further advances for this year's requirements. I appeal to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon) —and if the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) were in his seat I would make the same appeal to him; I appeal to them to have a survey made of the situation. It can be easily done through the provincial government or the Potato Growers' Association, either of whom, I know, would verify the statements I am now making. I think the provincial government and the association would be well-advised to put in a claim for $500,000 to enable the farmers to get their fertilizer this year. If this appropriation were made it would be greatly appreciated by our farmers on the island, and would be only doing justice to the province in view of the millions of dollars that have been voted to the farmers of the western provinces. Our friends opposite were going to blast a way into the markets of the world, but they have not been able to blast out of the way even that little insect, the potato bug, and so get removal of the British embargo against our potatoes. I believe unless our farmers can get an outside market for their potatoes they will have to discontinue potato growing altogether.

The question of subsidies has also been agitating our people in Prince Edward Island. In the election of 1930 they were told that if the Conservative party came into power the Duncan report would be fully implemented; but this government has not shown the slightest disposition to redeem that promise. I know that the Conservative campaign literature circulated throughout the province at that time was very definite in promising that if the party was successful they would supplement the treasury of Prince Edward Island by a subsidy of $700,000. I see the premier of the province in his budget speech states that the provincial debt in 1910 was $877,756, that by 1920 it had grown to $1,176,264, and that at the end of 1931 it had pyramided to $3,342,241—or an increase in the last eleven years of $2,165,817. It took fifty years from confederation up to 1910 to bring the debt of the island up to less than a million dollars, yet in the decade from 1920 it has, as stated by the Premier, reached a total of over three million dollars. From this it will be apparent to every hon. member how necessary it is that the province should have an increased subsidy. The premier paid a wonderful tribute to the Liberal party in his budget speech. He said in effect that the Liberal government under Mr. Mackenzie King had increased the subsidy by $125,000. When asked by the opposition if anything had been done with regard to getting a further increase, he said, "No, now is not the time to go to Ottawa to ask for an increased subsidy. It will be years before we can get any increase." In that statement he unconsciously paid a fine tribute to the Liberal government. In effect he said: We got $125,000 under the Liberal government, we have not been able to get a cent since, and we shall have to wait until the Liberal party gets back to power before we can expect a further increase in our subsidy.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Friday, March 18, 1932

The house met at three o'clock.

UNEMPLOYMENT AND FARM RELIEF

CONTINUANCE ACT, 1932—CONSIDERATION OF RESOLUTION

The house resumed from Thursday, March 17, consideration of the motion of the Prime Minister that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee of the whole on the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to introduce a bill to amend chapter 58 of the statutes of Canada, 1931, striking out the word "March" in section 8, and substituting the word "May" therefor.

Mr. P. F. CASGRAIN (Charlevoix-Saguenay): Mr. Speaker, to any keen observer of politics it is apparent that the government is not on "easy street" to-day. It does not like the turn that this debate has taken, and hon. members opposite who have spoken in support of the resolution have tried to introduce political issues entirely apart from the subject matter and thus to becloud the real issue before the house. This is done in an endeavour to have the country forget the two main points of this resolution, to wit, relief for farmers and the unemployed, and the constitutional aspect of the powers sought by the government to carry out this relief.

By some hon. gentlemen on your right, Mr Speaker, we have been accused of playing politics, and we have been severely criticized for the course we took during the by-election in Three Rivers-St. Maurice, and throughout the late provincial election in Quebec. The hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) was severely taken to task by the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Gagnon) for some of his utterances during the campaign in Three Rivers-St. Maurice. The hon. member for Dorchester attempted to make political capital out of the result of that by-election. Apparently to please his political chief, he told the house that the result of that by-election represented the unanimous opinion of the province of Quebec in favour of the Tory party. That is far from the fact. The hon. gentleman forgot to state that another by-election took place about the same time in the riding of East Hamilton in this province, always regarded as a safe Conservative seat, but the government candidate was overwhelmingly defeated, and to-day East Hamilton is represented in this house by a Labour member. The hon. member for Dorchester also told the house that the people of Quebec, and more especially the younger generation, were enthusiastic in their admiration of the right hon. leader of the Conservative party, that in fact he was the idol of the province. Many counties in my province, including the county which I have the honour to represent in this house, gave very large majorities to the supporters of the Liberal party at the election in 1930, and I affirm to the house and to the country that the majority of the electors of Quebec as well as the younger generation are not at all enthusiastic admirers of the right hon. leader of the government. Our young men do not regard him as their idol and they decline to follow him. Speaking for my own county, I am confident that our people both old and young are ardent supporters of the right hon. leader of the Liberal party (Mr. Mackenzie King) and our leader in Quebec, the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe).

Let me say, Mr. Speaker, that those hon. gentlemen who have followed the lead of the hon. member for Dorchester do not represent the real feeling of the people of my province. Those hon. members, it is true, were returned to this house at the election of 1930, but at the last provincial election they were not able to return any of their candidates for the local house. Last August the province of Quebec in the most unmistakable terms returned a verdict of confidence in the Liberal administration which has been controlling the affairs of the province for the last thirty-four years. On that occasion the electors of Quebec had a chance to choose between the Hon. Mr. Taschereau and Mr. Houde, and by an overwhelming majority they showed their preference for the leader of the administration that had enjoyed the confidence of the province for the past thirty-four years rather than turn to a demagogue like the provincial leader of the Tory party. Let me remind hon. gentlemen to your right, and more especially the hon. member for Dorchester, that although they may try to belittle our leader in Quebec, my hon. friend from Quebec East, they are playing a very poor game, and they may rest assured that long after they have gone into the valley of oblivion the name of the Hon. Ernest Lapointe will be held in honour and esteem by many generations yet unborn, for he will stand in history as one of the greatest men of our race both in the province of Quebec and in the dominion.

It is not surprising, Mr. Speaker, to hear our hon. friends opposite talking in such a reckless fashion. They were over-enthusiastic after the general election of 1930, and they thought they could repeat their success by fooling the people again in 1931 at the provincial election, but the electors of my province were wiser then than they were in 1930. Our friends opposite are bad losers, and having suffered a severe defeat in the provincial election, naturally they vent their disappointment upon our esteemed leader in Quebec, my hon. friend from Quebec East. At the next federal election I am convinced that the electors of Quebec will display the same sound judgment as they did at the recent provincial election, and that their example will be followed by the electors of the other provinces, and they will send back to their homes our friends opposite so that they may have an opportunity to meditate over their defeat.

We have been accused by some members on your right, Mr. Speaker, of unduly delaying the adoption of this resolution, and thereby becoming responsible for the suffering of the unemployed because this measure of relief is not enacted immediately. But the blame is not to be laid at our door; rather it is the fault of the government which waited for over a month after the opening of the session before introducing this resolution. On reference to the orders of the day it will be found that it was only after the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Heenan) had introduced his amendment on the motion to go into supply that the government decided to bring this resolution before the house. The debate has not been unduly long; to-day we are entering on the eighth day. I take issue with the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) who stated the other day that the debate had been in progress for over two weeks. Only thirty-seven members of the official opposition have spoken so far, and they have been joined in debate by fifteen of our hon. friends on the opposite side and by seven members representing various groups on this side of the house—fifty-nine all told.

In 1926 it will be recalled that there were debates continuing for weeks and weeks, and in 1930 also, when this very question of unemployment was an issue the majority of hon. gentlemen who were then sitting on this side got up one after another and read to the house carefully prepared briefs that had been drafted for them by their party organization. Are there two kinds of justice, one for the Tories and one for the Liberals? If in the days of 1926 and in 1930 it was right to oppose the resolutions and motions proposed by the government of the day, Mr. Speaker, surely to-day we should be given the same freedom of speech and the same liberty of action enjoyed by the Tory party in those days. After all we are here to perform a duty. When we took our places in this house we took an oath of office, and we cannot let this resolution pass, after hearing speeches such as those delivered by the Prime Minister, the Minister of Railways and Canals, and the Minister of Trade and Commerce, without entering our protest. I should like to refer especially to the speech delivered in this house the other day by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens), in which he said:

> It is true that at that time an appropriation might have been voted, and it was very largely the burden of the complaint of some hon. members that that was not done, but I invite hon. gentlemen to consider this, that when an appropriation is passed the purpose for which it is to be used must be specified, and the Auditor General and other officers of the crown in scrutinizing expenditures under such an appropriation, always keep the government very closely to the purpose specified in such a vote.

That is the reason, Mr. Speaker, why the government to-day comes before this house asking permission to evade that scrutiny of every appropriation voted by parliament which is required by the laws of our country. It is our prerogative to see where our money goes, the money which comes from the taxpayers of this country, and to see that the government does not commit any abuses in the use of that money. That is the reason why this debate is going on. Further, the Minister of Trade and Commerce said:

> We have certain commitments which have been made under the act; that is, agreements have been entered into with each of the provinces and various works of a different character are being carried on by the provinces with the aid of the dominion, and we ask for an extension of the act for two months, because the difficulties which then confronted the country have not been surmounted. . . .

If it were only to carry out such commitments and finish such works as have been undertaken under this act, speaking for myself and I think for all hon. members on this side of the house, there would be no objection to letting the bill pass, because it would be simply completing those works which have been undertaken for the benefit of the people. But the Minister of Trade and Commerce also said that further relief was required, and that is the point upon which we take issue. While parliament is sitting, and while we are here to decide these issues as representatives of the people, we do not want these powers given to the government. We are here to vote upon any amount of money required by this government to carry on its relief work in the cities and throughout the country.

Since the government has been in power I think it is safe to say that it has been given by the country at large and by the opposition in this house fair play, a free hand and ample opportunity to inaugurate any policies it desired to bring into force; it has not been hampered unduly by the opposition. But discussion is necessary on the part of any opposition, though that is not synonymous with inaction or acquiescence. We are not here simply to listen to the government and abide by its dictates; we are not supposed to say "ditto" to everything the government may propose. The country expects that at all times the opposition shall be vigilant in the preservation of established rights and the liberties of the people, and do all in its power to prevent the usurpation of any rights or powers which do not belong to those entrusted with the government of the country. It is the duty of the opposition to stand by its own principles and policies, especially when there exists throughout the country to an appreciable extent a critical attitude towards the government. It is the duty of the opposition to express that attitude in this house and to present our criticism with regard to the measures brought forward by the government. In the province from which I come I may say there is a good deal of criticism directed against the government as to the manner in which this unemployment relief money has been administered, and also as to the way the government has put in force the policies it promised to bring forward during the election of 1930. That is why this debate has gone on for some days and the reason why it may go on for some time longer.

I think we are all in agreement with the object of this resolution; that is, we all desire to seek ways and means of relieving the farmers and the unemployed throughout the country. But as to the methods adopted in the past and proposed to be continued in the future we disagree. This proposal is too far reaching in its scope; it strikes at the very basis of our parliamentary institutions. If this resolution passes, the powers, dignities, rights and privileges of parliament are no more, and we might as well go home. My right hon. leader has proposed to the government that they bring in a supply bill naming a definite amount to be used for a definite purpose and as a member of this house, representing the people who sent me here, I would be willing to vote for such a bill. But the Prime Minister sticks to the one method; it is the only thing he has to offer the people of this country even after being in office two years. The Prime Minister and the other members of the government who have spoken on this resolution have no clear explanation to offer as to why they want this bill extended. Why do they mention the first of May? Is it because that is moving day, and because the government will be expected to move after that? Will unemployment be ended by that time? If not, what is going to be done after parliament is prorogued? I have received many communications from people in my constituency asking what the government propose to do after May 1, if we pass this resolution, but we have had no definite announcement from the government in that connection. The government is living from day to day, waiting for something to turn up; it has no definite policy for the solution of the problem of unemployment, which was promised by the Prime Minister when he was seeking power in 1930. The truth is that the ship of state is floating on a sea of uncertainty; the government are in a desperate situation, trusting to fate and chance to get them out of their troubles.

Let us see what is proposed by this resolution. By it we will reenact the bill passed last year for unemployment and farm relief. During the election campaign of 1930 the then leader of the opposition, now the Prime Minister of this country, was very specific in his utterances and very definite as to his program. Unemployment was to be relieved over night. No consideration of the question was necessary; no study of the matter was promised. Everything was to be settled at once if the present Prime Minister came into power and had direction of the affairs of the country. It was not a question of whether or not the municipal, provincial and federal governments were each to act within their respective spheres; the Prime Minister said he would settle the matter himself. There was no doubt in his mind at that time, apparently, that unemployment would be ended or that he would perish in his attempt to end it, and it was upon the strength of such promises that this government came into power.

I do not think it necessary, Mr. Speaker, to read to the house all the promises made in those days. They are fresh in the memories of all hon. members, but there is one promise made by the present Prime Minister to which I should like to refer. At Sarnia on July 17, 1930, he said—I am giving the French version:

(Translation):

Someone is responsible for unemployment; not individuals, but governments.

The leader of the government, when he was leader of the opposition, said that if there was unemployment someone was responsible for it, and he laid the blame on the government of that day. The same thing applies to-day. If unemployment exists in this country at the present time the blame must be laid at the door of the government now in office. That government is responsible for it and must take the blame for the great burden that afflicts the dominion. Now after fourteen months of power, what does the leader of the government say? In October, speaking at Toronto, the Prime Minister said —again I give the French:

(Translation):

I am firmly convinced as I stand here to-night that nothing but the grace of God will save the world. You may talk of your suspensions of gold standards, demonetization of silver, of tariffs, of balance of trade, of import and exports, but one thing only will save christianity and the world, the grace of God.

What a change from the utterances of the Prime Minister in the year 1930. At that time he trusted to himself to settle everything in the country; to-day he trusts to the Almighty because he realizes that it is impossible for him to carry out his promises.

We are sometimes told that we have no definite program to offer; in fact, this charge is frequently made. The hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie), speaking yesterday in this house, enunciated the program which we of the official opposition have been advocating: A national unemployment relief commission, which has been proposed in this house on different occasions and which was suggested last year by my leader (Mr. Mackenzie King); proper procedure through a supply bill; a system of auditing; a comprehensive system of unemployment insurance; assistance to the coal industry of Nova Scotia; a Peace River outlet; a national research council for social and economic purposes; the writing-down of interest on bonds; and an adjustment of the wages of money in keeping with commodity prices and the wages of labour.

That is the program which the loyal opposition has put forward; that is what we should like to see put into force.

At the special session in 1930, the government forced us to vote $20,000,000 for the relief of unemployment, and under the pretext of unemployment relief we were told that we had to enact, by coercion lest the Prime Minister should decide not to go to the Imperial conference in Great Britain, far-reaching tariff measures giving very wide powers to the governor in council to value goods for duty purposes. Everyone knows what the result of that policy has been. In 1931, during the session, although the unemployment situation was going from bad to worse and members were pressing the government for a definite plan of action, nothing was done except that in the dying hours of the session Bill No. 58 was introduced. That bill became law and that is the act which we are now asked to revive, because it is dead. It was a bill to provide unemployment and farm relief and there was no limitation so far as the money that might be spent by the government was concerned. There was no direct specific policy mentioned in the bill for the relief of unemployment. Well, we know what has taken place since; hundreds of orders in council have been passed for various purposes; tariff laws have been changed and altered at the will of the government. Each time any friends of the government had suggestions to offer, or thought it expedient to have changes made, such changes were made without any previous investigation by the government, notwithstanding the fact that last year, by a special act of parliament, a tariff board was created to look after such matters. Under the bill which we are called upon by this resolution to revive, drastic changes have been made in the existing statutes of the country. The export of gold has been abolished and amendments have been made to very important statutes such as the Bank Act. The provinces have been helped and the wheat pool also, and the Insurance Act has been amended. Further, ammunition, gunpowder and bombs were brought under the powers extraordinary given the Prime Minister in the last hours of the session. But that is not all. With the policy which the government has adopted in prohibiting the export of gold, after England had gone off the gold standard and a specific valuation was placed upon the pound sterling, rendering more difficult our transactions with the mother country, what has the government done? By this order in council that was passed, and also by the changes made in the British preference, it has been impossible for the people of Canada to obtain an entrance into the markets of Great Britain. What do we see? In yesterday's Journal, March 17, I find the following:

> Soviet Lumber Contract Is Valued at £4,500,000
>
> London, March 17.—The approximate cost of the huge timber contract completed between British importers and Soviet Russian exporters is placed at £4,500,000 by the Times. The schedule of prices for the timber, amounting to 450,000 standards, and to be delivered this year, provides that if market prices of similar grades of wood from Sweden or Finland fall, appropriate adjustments up to a limit of £2 per standard may be made in the schedule of Russian prices.

That means that England went to Soviet Russia to obtain a certain amount of timber or lumber instead of coming to this country, because of the rate of exchange and the restrictions placed by this government through the manipulation of the tariff under the orders in council passed under this very bill which we are asked to revive. This has made it impossible for the people of England to trade with us and consequently we have lost that market. The people engaged in the lumbering industry in Canada in its various forms, had it not been for this, would have been able to obtain such contracts. They would have got this contract had not the Prime Minister altered the tariff in the way he has done. The amount of this contract was £4,500,000 or $20,000,000.

A great many of these orders in council passed under this law were not passed directly for the relief of unemployment. Some of them have created an upheaval in the tariff such as we have never seen before in this country, so much so that there is no longer any tariff stability in Canada and importers, traders and manufacturers do not know where they stand. They will not enlarge their enterprises.

Is this the way to encourage the unemployed? Is this the way to give work to people whose only commodity they have to sell is labour? When the Prime Minister was leader of the opposition he said, "When I am called in I will prescribe. The federal government should step in and handle the situation." Yet when he spoke on this resolution the other day he read from certain decisions by Viscount Haldane, indicating that under certain circumstances the federal government had to take cognizance of the provincial and municipal authorities. We see, therefore, that the government, in regard to unemployment and farm relief, has had to go to the very source to which, as we pointed out before, it was necessary to go in order to settle the problem. We stated that cooperation was necessary among the municipalities, the provinces and the federal government.

We have been told of the wonderful success that has been achieved in Saskatchewan through the relief commission appointed there under the bill; yet a general relief unemployment commission, such as has been advocated by my leader, has been refused by the government. Notwithstanding the efforts of the government, the situation has been going from bad to worse, and to-day we have only to refer to the speeches of certain western members in order to see that in the provinces of Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Alberta conditions to-day are worse than they have ever been. We find the members from those provinces asking for feed for cattle and for seed for the spring. We have also heard of the complaints that were made in British Columbia regarding the administration of the act. Owing to the maladministration of the act, it has been necessary to appoint a commission to investigate matters. I have in my hand an editorial which appeared in Le Soleil of Quebec on August 27 last. This editorial discloses the fact that certain hon. members who sit to your right, Mr. Speaker, attempted to play politics in the last provincial elections in Quebec. They tried to make use of the efforts put forth by the government to grant unemployment relief in order to force the electors to vote in their favour. This editorial quotes a letter which had been written by the hon. member for Levis (Mr. Fortin) dated August 22, 1931, addressed to the electors of Bienville and Lauzon. The editorial is in French and is as follows:

(Translation):

Sell Yourself Or Starve!

Such seems to have been the motto of certain Houdist electioneers in the last campaign. Sell yourself or starve! These words are actually embodied in certain documents that we have in our possession and which bring shame on those who had them circulated. It is impossible to close our eyes, in connection with this literature, to the blackmail directed against the liberty of citizens.

The following circular letter which Dr. Emile Fortin, member for Levis, at Ottawa, addressed to the electorate of his county to bribe them by promising bread in return for their vote in favour of Mr. Noël Belleau, the Houdist candidate, is an instance of the corruption carried on in this election:

[Mr. Casgrain.]

Do You Want Work?

Levis, August 22, 1931.

Electors of Bienville,
Electors of Lauzon.

Famine Is At Your Door!

There are signs that winter will be severe! Unemployment increases: Workmen of Lauzon, whatever may be your party attachment or feelings, do you want work? Do you want bread? Help me! and put your trust in the only government which can relieve you.

Heretofore, I have not spared my time or energy to help you. Shall you, by an unfavourable and thoughtless vote undo my twelve months of work and anxiety?

You need the Dominion government. Vote for it by voting for Noël Belleau, thus you will be endorsing the following contracts:

Fire-engine boat, $350,000.

Repairs to the Prince Edward Island, $270,000.

Repairs to the dry docks, $36,000.

Repairs to the forts, $150,000.

Repairs to government boats, $100,000.

Repairs at the engineers' camp—target range, $20,000.

Think how advantageous it would be for Levis if I had to help me: Noël Belleau, K.C., minister of the crown, at Quebec; Hon. Maurice Dupré, a son of Levis, minister at Ottawa; Mr. Onésime Gagnon, member for Dorchester and future minister in the Bennett administration.

What help can Mr. Belanger be to you in contrast with what we can do for you?

The provincial government can do nothing without the support of the government, at Ottawa.

Mr. Bennett can give you prosperity. Three Rivers endorsed his policy and received $700,000.

Let Lauzon and Bienville do their share, they will be given in return work and prosperity.

Workmen of Lauzon if you disown the Conservative party what can you expect from it next winter?

(Sgd.) Dr. Emile Fortin,
Member at Ottawa.

Never has the Conservative party admitted more impudently to what means they resort to bribe the people.

"Three Rivers endorsed his policy and received $700,000." What a confession! So, when the country is in the throes of a critical economic crisis, the Conservative party, at Ottawa, in an endeavour to destroy the Liberal party, grant almost three-quarters of a million to the ratepayers in Three Rivers to purchase their votes and ease their conscience! A party which resorts to such means deserves to be wiped out. It is what the Liberals did, last Monday, to the Houdists, and it is what they will do in four years to Mr. Bennett.

I shall translate a part of this editorial as it may prove interesting to the people at large. The letter says that Bennett alone can give prosperity, that Three Rivers has approved of his policy and has received $700,000 in the form of relief, and the electors of Bienville and Lauzon are advised to do likewise and they will see a return to prosperity. They are told that if they renounce the Conservative party they cannot expect to receive anything during next winter.

Mr. Speaker, if the hon. members who sit on your right have not used this act to play politics, I should like to know what they have done. They used it to appeal to the people in the province of Quebec during the last provincial election. Had there been appointed a relief commission, as advocated by my right hon. leader such things would not have occurred. I think I am safe in saying that this act has proved to be inadequate and futile, its administration has been wasteful and extravagant and the necessary relief has not reached the people. The hon. member for Prince (Mr. MacLean) quoted last night an extract from the Financial Post which showed the cost of the administration of this act. The figures showed that the debt of the country has been increased because of the expenses of administration.

Has unemployment been relieved and work given to the people? I have before me figures which show that in September, 1931, one year after the government had taken office, 7,798 firms were employing 972,537 people. In January, 1932, the figures stood at 7,832 firms employing 835,960 people, a considerable decrease in the number employed. In February, 1932, the totals had declined further to 7,766 firms employing 819,175 people. These figures show that not very much work has been provided for the people of Canada. The index of employment in industry in Canada is at its lowest ebb since 1922. Who is responsible for this? The Prime Minister admitted that the government was responsible when he made the speeches to which I have alluded.

The hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon) speaking in the house on February 23, 1932, said:

> As time went on it was apparent that further measures would have to be adopted in order that those in want might be given such employment as would tide them over, and the result was the legislation of last session. Under that legislation 334,301 persons have been given employment up to January 31, 1932, the total number of man-days being 7,415,973. The total commitments necessary to carry on the work to February 22, 1932, amounted to $76,426,387, the federal government's share being $32,822,847. This work is still proceeding. The figures I have given will be subject to some slight variation when the report is tabled which I trust will be shortly.

The total cost was $76,426,387 to provide 7,415,973 man-days, or slightly more than $10 for every day's work provided. Where did the balance go? Is that the way to take care of unemployment? When the $20,000,000 was voted in 1930 we were given to understand that many public works would be undertaken in order to provide unemployment relief. After the act had been passed the Minister of Labour wrote to various members of the government and of the opposition asking us to point out the various works which would be necessary in our constituency in order to assist the people. I replied to the hon. minister under date of August 15, 1931. He acknowledged receipt of my letter but he did not take cognizance of the requests which I had made and the suggestions which I had given.

I cannot see how we can abide by the dictates and requests of the government and pass this resolution without protest. We are being asked to extend for two months legislation which vests in the government all the powers which this house has over the control of public money. I have demonstrated the results which have been obtained from the administration of this act and I cannot conceive how we, representing our constituencies and having taken an oath to fulfil our mandates, can give to the government while parliament is sitting the rights granted under the constitution to this house. We are being asked to do away with the committees of supply and ways and means, the very bases of the parliamentary system.

Hon. members of the government have asked for cooperation but how can we cooperate when we do not know what amount will be expended and for what purpose? How can we cooperate with the leader of the government when he does as he pleases, even with his own supporters and refuses to accept counsel or advice from anyone? Most of the hon. members on this side who have spoken, and I think some on the other side, will agree that the gentleman who leads the government to-day wants to do it by himself alone. Hon. members have called him Nero and Mussolini, and the names of other absolute dictators in history. We have also called him Mussolini. For my part, last year I said what I thought of him and I do not want to say any more, because the people of the country know him well enough.

I protest against this resolution, and this is the reason I and other members have been carrying on this debate. We contend that if this resolution is passed, it means that we shall be giving up all the rights and privileges for which our forefathers fought in 1837 and for which a fight was carried on in England hundreds of years ago, in order that the representatives of the people might obtain control of the public money.

Mr. OSCAR L. BOULANGER (Bellechasse) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to speak at length on the legal and constitutional issue involved in this resolution. Others, better qualified and informed than myself, have already done so. I merely wish, on behalf of a population anxious to preserve its rights, privileges and liberties, the people whom I have the honour to represent, to protest in this house against the irregularity and abuse of authority which the right hon. Prime Minister of the Dominion of Canada (Mr. Bennett), in his unbounded self-conceitedness, is determined to perpetrate.

For over three hundred years, my electors have been deeply rooted in the Canadian soil, and at the time when representative government was established in Canada, in 1791, the county of Bellechasse was one of the first constituencies to be erected. That signifies that, for 140 years, the voice of Bellechasse has been heard in the struggle waged by the people against tyranny, oligarchy and oppression. Likewise, nothing is more highly appreciated, in the eyes of my constituents, than liberty, constitutional security and proper working of responsible government, because they have not forgotten the endeavours and sacrifices through which they won such privileges. They do not want to go back a hundred years; they will not stand for reaction; they are against any interference with our parliamentary institutions for the sole purpose of gratifying the vanity of a man who, in his frenzied love of power, wants to see to just what extent it is possible for him to impose his will and domination on a servile majority.

In those heroic days of our parliamentary history, at the time when our forefathers were relentlessly fighting to secure for the Canadians the right of self-government, the right to levy taxes and control the funds paid in by the people to the national treasury, the county of Bellechasse was represented by the distinguished patriot whose name has been mentioned during this debate by my hon. friend from Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) and by the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. St-Père), the Hon. Augustin Norbert Morin, himself a son of an unassuming farmer of Saint Michel de Bellechasse.

I would deem myself unworthy of the confidence in which I am held by the free and proud electors of my constituency should I not, following on the example set by my eminent predecessor and without aiming to raise myself to his level, protest with all my might against the unfairness of this pernicious legislation now introduced by the Prime Minister and through which he is attempting to compel the representatives of the people to give up their inherent right to the control of public funds, a share of which is being contributed by my own electors.

To the Prime Minister may I say that he is playing a most dangerous game. If ever there was a time when peace should prevail in the public mind and when the greatest care should be taken not to cause perturbation, disagreement and discontent, it is surely during this period of hard times we are experiencing at the present time.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Translation): Hear, hear.

Mr. BOULANGER (Translation): The Prime Minister should remember that this is no time for rash action, that this is no time for him to test the extent of his power, for "they who sow the wind shall reap the whirlwind." Instead of encroaching upon our government system and of introducing reckless measures, the Prime Minister should endeavour, in these hard times, to proceed along regular lines and abstain from any novel departure likely to unduly magnify, in the public mind, the seriousness of the situation. Such was, during the war, the policy followed by statesmen who were well worth the present Prime Minister, and as was already pointed out, by this resolution, the Prime Minister is attempting to assume power a hundredfold larger than those enjoyed by Sir Robert Borden under the War Measures Act and the War Appropriation Act.

The Prime Minister should not, also, be unmindful of the lessons of history. One cannot, with impunity, offend public feeling, nor can one hurt with impunity that sense of justice and freedom so deeply rooted in the hearts of every Canadian. One cannot, with impunity, ignore the system of government we owe to the wisdom of our ancestors nor could one demolish such barriers as the people have seen fit to erect against the tendency to absolutism on the part of the executive. The Prime Minister should recollect that the movement which took place a hundred years ago in connection with the control of public expenditures by the peoples' representatives led to the rebellion of 1837-1838. And in support of this, I may cite the very words of Lord Gosford, governor general of Lower Canada in 1837, and therefore in a better position than anyone else to know the situation. In the debate that took place in the House of Lords on the union of the two Canadas, Lord Gosford stated that the chief responsibility for the rebellion was to be laid at the door of those who having, at the conquest, monopolized all the money, all the power and all the important posts, persisted in governing the Canadians without their consent and participation. The following is an extract of the statement of Lord Gosford, as found in the history of Canada:

> There are, specially in Montreal and in the vicinity, a number of English speaking citizens to whom every liberal-minded and independent man must be hostile, whose acts and behaviour have been characterized by a spirit of domination over the whole population of French origin; they have continuously aimed at acquiring power and exercising patronage in the country. They are the men who must be held chiefly responsible for the troubles that have recently occurred.

I earnestly urge upon the Prime Minister of Canada to ponder over the events that took place previous to the rebellion of 1837, and to seriously consider the statement of Lord Gosford, former governor general of Lower Canada.

We are told, Mr. Speaker, that this measure must be passed in the shortest possible time, it being a matter of life and death for the unemployed and the farmers, and that any opposition to it means a delay in granting relief. I take the strongest exception to a threat of that sort, to that intimidation and duplicity to which recourse has been had so frequently during the last two years in connection with unemployment. It has been said, on this side of the house, that the government had organized the unemployed into a regular profession; more than that, they have used unemployment as a pretext and a justification for all their misdeeds. Every time the government wishes to camouflage any of their arbitrary acts, every time they want to work in the dark and frame some plot against our parliamentary institutions, they plead the same old excuse, the same old motive, that is the necessity of giving relief to the unemployed, to the farmers, and of rendering assistance to the needy in this country. I protest against that procedure on the part of the government and against such an exploitation of public distress, which is simply used to play politics.

It is needless to repeat, in the course of this debate, the offer so many times made by us to the Prime Minister to the effect that we are willing to vote any amount of money. We have offered, and still offer to him to vote supplies, provided he can give sufficient cause therefor. We are entitled to know from him the reason for the expenditures to be incurred by the government. We would feel remiss to our duty and, for my part, I would feel unworthy of the mandate I hold from my electors, should I not raise my voice against that mode of procedure on the part of the government and should I not, after the other hon. members who spoke before me, insist upon the government for a statement of their reasons and motives for the contemplated expenditures.

We have heard our hon. friends on the government side, the butter-makers of 1930, not to say the "buttery" promise makers of 1930, speak in laudatory, but senseless and ludicrous terms, of the Prime Minister and of "Bennettism." Instead of wasting such a torrent of praise, our friends, specially the government followers in the province of Quebec group, should have called upon the government to take action. I do not say that they should have appealed to the liberality of government, as they were in duty bound to do, but it would have been better for them to secure the aid of the government in behalf of the farming community of Eastern Canada, particularly of the province of Quebec represented by us in this house. I charge the government with having completely failed to do anything for the relief of agriculture in Quebec. The farmers in that province may not lament as loudly as those in some other parts of the country,—they are not in the habit of taking such political action,—but the fact remains that they keenly feel the hardships of the present depression, which has been made worse through the folly of high protection. If it be in order to give relief to other classes of the community, if it be fair to erect exceedingly high tariff walls for the protection of the manufacturing interests, for instance, it is equally fair and proper to afford the same measure of protection to agriculture.

The legislation we are now asked to revive is entitled: "The Unemployment and Farm Relief Act". I fear no contradiction when I say that the farmers in the province of Quebec have benefited in no way from the legislation we are asked to extend. Should it be revived, I am quite sure that it would not be more beneficial to the farming class in Quebec than afforded them the old act that expired on the first of March last.

Instead of entitling the act: "The Unemployment and Farm Relief Act" the government should, abstaining themselves from any camouflage and deceit, call it: "An Act for the relief of financiers at bay." In the course of this debate, it has developed that the act was used to come to the help of the bankers, insurance companies, financiers and bondholders in certain western provinces, rather than to actually give relief to the unemployed and to the farmers.

Mr. POULIOT: (Translation) For the relief of cement dealers.

Mr. BOULANGER (Translation): And for the relief of railway ties manufacturers.

If the government had been sincere in its effort to improve the conditions of the farming community, they would have done more than the small works undertaken, and they would have adopted means other than the makeshift measures carried out since the unemployment act is in existence. A few moments ago, I said that no benefits had accrued to the farmers of the province of Quebec from the enforcement of that legislation. I might perhaps qualify this statement to a certain extent, for some works have been attempted in winter time, such as, for instance, the hauling of gravel or other unimportant work in connection with road building. But such works, which are mere incidents, simple make shifts and palliatives, have not altered the conditions. At the most, a dozen of men in a parish, have been enabled to earn $10 or $12 working at these jobs in this time of depression. And yet that money was not earned by those who were in the greatest need, but by farmers in easy circumstances; and the reason why those who needed relief the most were unable to secure it was that, having no horses nor rigs of their own, they were ineligible to employment in connection with the hauling of gravel or other road work, all of which was undertaken in midwinter for the purpose of relieving unemployment.

I charge the government with having no comprehensive plan, no definite policy for the relief of unemployment, and particularly of agriculture. We have been criticized for our lack of suggestions to the government. If the government had listened to what has been said in this house last session, and during the special session of 1930, as well as to what has been proclaimed almost everywhere, on the hustings and in the public press, they would have realized that constructive suggestions have been made to them. For my part, I would humbly suggest to the government, —and that, obviously, after many others for the idea is not mine,—that the best way to bring relief to the farmers of Quebec would be to grant a bounty for the clearing and breaking of the soil, which premium would enable the farmers to live with the income from their holdings. In a section of my constituency, as is also the case in the southern part of Montmagny, Dorchester and L'Islet, the farmers' lands are not in a sufficiently advanced state of cultivation to support their owners. Until recently, the farmers in that district mostly earned their living in the bush; but for a year or two, the lumbering activities have ceased, on account of the depression, and the farmers, no longer able to work in the lumber camps and enjoying but a scant income from their farm, are now in the direst need. Last year, I raised that question in the house and I also discussed it both in public and in the press. But up to this time the government have not troubled themselves about that suggestion and did not draw any plan to carry it into effect. Instead of pledging the credit of this country for the security of the bondholders of the western provinces, instead of spending enormous sums of money in railroad ties or to increase the strength of the police force, for instance, the government would be well advised to appropriate a certain amount in order to carry through the suggestion I have already made and which I am repeating now after many others. The government should cooperate with the provinces with a view to granting a clearing bonus to farmers whose lands are not sufficiently cleared to keep them alive. With such a bonus a farmer could clear let us say thirty or forty acres of his land, and when a farmer has enough land cleared, then all he has to do is to cultivate it, and he is assured of a livelihood. That is one permanent means of relieving distress among farmers. It would be far better than the contrivances and palliatives hitherto used. That would be a good investment, the capital would not be wasted, it would be effective and profitable, whereas, up to this time, we have simply thrown money away. The government thus could keep a great many farmers permanently on the land, who otherwise, unless we give them some assistance, will have to leave their farms and go to the cities where they will add to the number of unemployed and those who are a public charge. Some will say: "What is the use of having the farmers rooted in their lands? What is the use of promoting a back to the land movement? What is the use of encouraging former farmers who live in the cities to take to agriculture again, since the prices of farm products are so low and the products so hard to sell?" This is my answer: "Even though farm products are cheap, even though farming is not profitable, at least a man can earn his livelihood more easily on the land than in the cities and towns; a farmer is in a better position than the poor laborer who has no work or the mechanic who is unemployed. The latter have to pay for everything they need, even for the water that they drink. In the countryside, they get all that from the soil. The farmer can get enough to eat, he is sure to have some bread on the shelf and pork in the salting-tub. He is sure of getting vegetables and also wood to warm his house, and that requires but labour on his part. Thus it would intensify the clearing of land and the government would secure a permanent livelihood for a great many people. By cooperating with the provinces for the granting of a clearing bonus to farmers, that would induce them to cultivate a greater acreage; they would become real farmers thinking only of improving their land and living on what it may yield, and that would keep them awey from the shanties; because, after all, a farmer has nothing to earn by going there. Cultivating the soil is the traditional mission of our people in the province of Quebec. They are not shantymen, they are not manufacturers, nor mechanics; the only avocation in which they will succeed and for which they are qualified and competent, is farming.

Mr. Speaker, not only could the government cooperate with the provinces for the granting of clearing bonuses in order to expand the land under cultivation, but they could also grant ploughing bonuses for the purpose of inducing the farmers to cultivate more and to improve their lands and thus add to the productive wealth of Canada.

I was speaking a moment ago about the back to the land movement. It is a good way of relieving decidedly and permanently the unemployment situation, and the government ought to foster that movement. The hon. Minister of Immigration (Mr. Gordon) has already commented upon this policy for the return of former farmers to the land, and I congratulate him for it. It is a good move on the part of the government, we give them credit for it, and we appreciate what they have done along these lines. But it is not enough, and the government should intensify that movement and cooperate with the provinces, more especially with the province of Quebec which has done wonderful work in that direction. The province of Quebec has reinstated on the land about five or six thousand families of former farmers who were merely existing or starving in the towns; the government of the province of Quebec helped them to return to their farms where they have become an asset for their country, instead of remaining idle or being a public charge in the cities. Such is the bold suggestion that I am making to the government for the purpose of curing unemployment. I have another suggestion to offer. I would like the government to try and stop the centralizing of money in the hands of a few individuals.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Hear, hear.

Mr. BOULANGER (Translation): That practice has completely changed our rural life. Money has been drawn from the rural districts to the cities, where it has been centralized in the hands of a few. In the past, in every rural locality there were small local industries: one was building carriages, another was making furniture or spinning wheels; there were makers of agricultural implements and of many kinds of household tools, and all these small rural industries were drawing their livelihood from the rural population. But the withdrawing and centralizing of money have completely ruined that rural industry. The centralizing of money in the hands of a few has enabled them to set up trusts and monopolies that are ruining the small rural industries. So much so that the people in the rural districts now buy their bread from the bread trust, and their meat from the grocery trusts in the cities; and the same may be said of shoes and clothes. The trusts and monopolies of the large centres, the establishment of which was promoted by the banks and the financial institutions, have ruined the small rural industry and rural trade as well. It is a bad thing for a country to have all the money and all its inherent power thus centralized.

I was just saying that this centralization had fostered trusts and monopolies which have smothered rural trade and industry. For instance, everybody knows that most of our banks have trust companies as subsidiaries with the same directors or almost the same. The funds of these subsidiary companies belong to the banks or rather to the banks' depositors. When a man wants some money, or when a company wants to issue bonds, the bank refers them to this trust company which is in a position to impose its own terms, and often drastic terms. It is through these trust companies that the banks, by using the money of their depositors, establish the monopolies I was complaining about a moment ago.

I remember when the Prime Minister, last year, denounced speculation. He said that speculation was one of the principal causes of distress in the western provinces. He stated that the western farmers had speculated too much on their grain and they had bought too many implements, pianos, radios and other similar articles, on the instalment plan. That is the cause of the present distress in the western provinces. Speculation has been the misfortune of the rural population, according to the Prime Minister. When a poor farmer gambles on his crop or buys a radio on the instalment plan, they call it blamable speculation; but when it is suggested to inquire as to the way the banks, the trust companies or the insurance companies use the people's money for the purpose of stock-jobbing and speculation, it is altogether different, and the Prime Minister then says that we are hurting the credit of the dominion, and that we should not talk about these things in this house.

Mr. Speaker, I took the opportunity, a moment ago, to congratulate the hon. Minister of Immigration; but I am afraid that I shall have to find fault with him now on another point. If it is necessary to give a blank cheque to the government, and, without any explanation, to let them free to spend all the money they want without accounting for it, for the purpose of assisting the unemployed and relieving a supposedly terrible and urgent situation, it seems to me that this is not the time to open our doors to the immigrants and further to increase the number of unemployed that we have to feed. That is why I am bound to blame, to a certain extent, my friend the hon. Minister of Immigration for the statement he made in this house some time ago, and also for another statement which he made earlier in the session.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Do not hesitate to blame him.

Mr. BOULANGER (Translation): The hon. minister probably wanted to echo the words of Mr. J. H. Thomas, Secretary for the Dominions in the British government, when the latter asserted that if Canada wanted to sell its wheat to Great Britain, it would have to accept, in exchange for it, a large number of British unemployed whom Great Britain is obliged to feed. The hon. minister, returning the statement of Mr. Thomas, declared in this house, in the early days of this session, that he would never close the door to British immigration. I beg to differ completely with the hon. minister on that point. Undoubtedly I have nothing against British immigration and I am not adverse to people from overseas, but, in my opinion, if it is necessary to adopt extraordinary, bold and mischievous measures such as this one, this is not the time to have our doors wide open to the unemployed of Great Britain and to bring them out here only to increase the number of those whom we have to feed.

As the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion) said the other day, 27,500 immigrants came to Canada during the last year, while we have already over 500,000 people out of work. It is 27,500 people too many. The government should have barred them out, more especially when you think that at the present time we have to send back every day hundreds of emigrants who came here and were unable to live in this country. I personally can testify to it, as I have seen it when returning home on Fridays on the Ocean Limited, the great Canadian National train going from Montreal to Halifax and Saint John. There are always one or two cars hooked to the rear of the train, full of emigrants that the Dominion government is obliged to send back at the expense of this country. However the statements of the hon. Minister of Immigration (Mr. Gordon) are no surprise to us who have been in this house for a certain number of years. During the election of 1930, our friends tried, particularly in the province of Quebec, to take advantage of the question of immigration, and endeavoured to show that the Liberal party was responsible for the great number of immigrants that came into this country under their administration. But we, who were in this house when hon. gentlemen opposite were sitting on this side, know that the Conservative party, in 1928, had a committee of inquiry appointed by this house with a view to finding means of accelerating the immigration to this country. We know that the Conservative party was censuring at that time Hon. Mr. Forke, because he was not bringing in as many immigrants as in 1912, for instance, when the Conservatives were in power. The year 1912 was always the record year, the standard year which our friends were describing as the ideal goal. They were always reproaching us with doing too little or not as much as the Conservatives did in 1912, and they insisted so much that they secured an inquiry before a committee of this house for the purpose of finding means to increase immigration to this country. They very severely censured Hon. Mr. Forke and I remember the very harsh and very offensive words which the present Prime Minister directed against Hon. Mr. Forke when he accused him of lacking competence because he did not equal the immigration record set by the Conservatives in 1912.

An hon. MEMBER (Translation): It is true.

Mr. BOULANGER (Translation): Regarding the immigration of these young boys which the hon. Minister of Immigration mentioned the other day, may I be allowed to read a letter of protest from the Anglican bishop of Montreal. This is what Bishop Farthing said:

When one has seen hundreds of these boys in the bread line in Montreal during the past year, when one knows that a good number of them have been sent back to England to their own families by the generosity of private citizens, to say nothing of those who have been deported by the government; and when one sees now a large number of these boys are depending upon public charity, one feels indignant indeed that 500 more should be brought out to share the fate of those who have come in the last few years. No doubt some of the boys brought out have been comfortable on farms, but there is no doubt either that many of those who have been brought out have left the farms in the west and in Ontario, and even some in Quebec, and that they have been drifting from place to place, depending on the charity of the people. I cannot imagine a worse moral influence to which a boy could be subjected than to lead the life of a tramp, stealing rides on the railways from place to place, having no home, no one to be responsible for him, often times falling in the worst elements of our community.

One is thankful for the efforts which are made in many cities to try to help these boys. If there are situations for 500 boys from the old country, why not give these places to our own Canadian boys and those old country boys who are out of employment here now? Why bring 500 boys between 14 and 18 years of age to face the conditions of Canada as they exist to-day? Many of them will gravitate into our large cities and share the experiences of those drifters who have passed through the past two or three years.

It seems to me criminal to bring these boys out. I am told that it is necessary to bring them in order to avoid the danger of various immigration organizations becoming disbanded. These boys are then to be offered as sacrifices to keep together immigration organizations of various kinds. Surely it would be better to disband every organization rather than to keep them together at the expense of 500 old country lads.

There will be no difficulty in reorganizing immigration societies when the country revives and the time comes to encourage immigration; I appeal to Canadians of all classes to unite and enter an emphatic protest against what seems to me to be a most unwise and unjust action, and one which under existing circumstances will do a great wrong to defenceless lads.

I add that to encourage the immigration of these young men would be unjust not only to the young men themselves, brought here when things are at a low ebb, but to our own young Canadians. If the government have money to help these young immigrants let them spend it first of all to give employment to our own youth, to help them finish their studies in our colleges and universities and to acquire a genuinely Canadian education.

Mr. Speaker, I have another suggestion to offer the government looking towards the betterment of farming conditions. We are to have an Imperial conference this coming summer. Trade between the different countries of the empire is an excellent thing, and I hope the Prime Minister gets what he wants; but, permit me, I have my doubts on that score. Are we to believe for instance that the Irish farmer will readily give way before the Canadian producer on the British market? Can we expect the British consumer to buy our Canadian products in preference to Denmark's butter and bacon, Holland's cheese, and the early vegetables and fruits from Britanny and Normandy? You cannot go on endlessly fighting against geographical conditions and no matter what artificial arrangements may be made in the way of customs duties, Denmark, Holland, Britanny and Normandy will still be close to the British market and Canada will still be at a great distance. The suggestion I make to the government is this: While developing empire trade let them give a thought to Pan-American commerce. Although we may make much of belonging to the British Empire it must still be borne in mind that we are on the American continent, the natural outlet for our products, in preference to Europe and the other continents. I ask the government to bend their efforts first of all towards finding markets for our Canadian products on the American continent.

The other day I noticed in the leaflet that the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) has handed to us each morning, and which I find very interesting, that the Minister of Trade and Commerce complains that the high United States tariff prevents Canadians from disposing of their products in the neighbouring country. Here is one way in which the government could improve Pan-American trade: Instead of raising the customs tariff against the United States why not conclude with them a treaty based on reciprocity? We should strive to develop commerce with United States before reaching out for more distant markets.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member has spoken forty minutes.

Mr. W. C. S. McLURE (Queens): Mr. Speaker, it was not my intention to speak on this resolution, but according to Hansard the hon. member for Prince (Mr. MacLean) in the course of his speech last night said:

> I see my friends from Prince Edward Island on the other side and I know they will agree with every word I say.

I think the hon. member was taking a lot for granted in making that statement. While I do not know how many members on this side of the house will agree with him—and I am not interested in how many on the other side may share his views—in his attempt to justify the blocking of this resolution and consequent interference with the government in its endeavour to relieve unemployment, I say emphatically that I do not agree with his remarks with respect to several matters relating to Prince Edward Island. Later on I shall give my reasons for this disagreement.

The debate on this resolution has partaken of a character quite different from what I had anticipated. At first I thought the resolution would be discussed from the constitutional point of view, and that the great legal minds from both sides of the house would enlighten us on this issue; but the debate soon became divested of all its legal robes and in a short time became clothed in a distinctly political garb. This has resulted in the debate covering a wide field, and several hon. members, especially on the opposite side, have seized the opportunity to put political propaganda on Hansard for the benefit of their constituents. Whether I choose to follow the constitutional line or the political, or whether I discuss the resolution strictly on its merits, I expect that the latitude accorded to other members will be accorded to me also.

I have listened to this debate for hours and hours, yes, for days and days, and now almost for weeks, and the more speeches I listen to from the other side of the house the more I am impressed with the sincerity of our hon. friends opposite in their stubborn adherence to their traditional attitude towards relief of the unemployed and the unfortunate of this country. The right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) led off with a severe criticism of the manner in which the relief has been administered under the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act, and each of his supporters who followed him carried on the same line of attack. All seem to be imbued with the one idea—to stop the passing of any measure for further relief. Their whole object seems to be to obstruct the government in its endeavour to enact further legislation for the benefit of those of our fellow countrymen who are out of employment and in need as a result of this world-wide depression. Even admitting the sincerity of our hon. friends opposite—and they certainly demonstrated it as each one took up the cudgels for his party—I cannot understand their uncompromising opposition except on the ground that they are determined to adhere to their time-honoured policy of "not a nickel for the Canadian unemployed." That is their policy, apparently, and their stick-at-it-iveness dates back many years. I have been in this house only since 1930, but during that session the Liberal party argued strongly against any form of relief, they adopted the same course in the session of 1931, and now in this session they are still running true to form and proclaiming their favourite policy, namely, "not a nickel for the Canadian unemployed or those in distress."

Several hon. members have informed the house how the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act has worked out in their constituencies. Last night the hon. member for Prince (Mr. MacLean) touched on this subject very gingerly with reference to the province of Prince Edward Island. He made a few remarks about unemployment in that province and said some complaints had been made with reference to the work carried on, but he said he did not know whether or not the complaints were well founded. I believe the hon. member knew very well that the unemployment relief work in his constituency, and in the island in general, was carried out solely in the interests of the unemployed and the deserving, and that it was absolutely satisfactory. With reference to the constituency of Queens, which I have the honour to represent, the relief work and the resulting benefits to the unemployed were simply godsends in a time of distress.

The proportion of federal funds allocated to Prince Edward Island was small in comparison with that allotted the other provinces, but possibly this was due to the fact that ours is an agricultural province and did not have so many unemployed as the industrial provinces had. But we did have unemployment; when we did get our allotment it was a great help to those people who were anxious to work, and we had very satisfactory results indeed. The people in my constituency and throughout the entire province as well were loud in their praises of the Department of Labour and the federal government with regard to the way in which the relief measures were carried out; every dollar of money coming from the federal government, the provincial government and the municipalities was spent entirely in the best interests of those who were unemployed, and there was no question of creed, class or politics when a man was looking for work. If he was out of work and in need the local government and the committee in charge asked no questions as to whether the man was a Grit or a Tory; they simply gave him what work was available, and everyone seemed quite satisfied with the way this work was carried out.

Some hon. member speaking in this house the other day made the statement that this money was wasted. I do not believe the hon. gentleman really meant that, because I claim that any money spent for the benefit of the poor and needy is not money wasted but is a gracious act on the part of whatever government granted that money. In 1931 we had a Conservative government in Prince Edward Island and certainly they fully cooperated with the federal government, but in 1930 there was a Liberal government in power in that province. I want to be just as fair to the Liberals as I am to the Conservatives; I believe that in the expenditure of unemployment relief moneys in 1930—and I will speak for my own county in particular—the Liberal government did the very best they could and were absolutely fair in the distribution of work. I think it ill behooves anyone from Prince Edward Island to say that a man had to be of the proper political complexion in order to get work, because the facts show that any man seeking labour found it if work was available at all, irrespective of politics.

Last night the hon. member for Prince also placed on Hansard some remarks with reference to local conditions in Prince Edward Island. There was one statement I have heard him make time and time again; it is with reference to the generosity of the late Liberal government so far as the province of Prince Edward Island was concerned. I think the hon. member brought out that old chestnut last year, and in case he repeats it so often that he begins to believe it himself I should like to make a little comparison in this connection. I am sure when we compare the grants made to Prince Edward Island by different governments we will see that the generosity of the Liberal government was not so great as the hon. member for Prince would endeavour to have us believe. I should like briefly to compare the federal grants to my province in the year 1922-23 and the year 1929-30. The statutory subsidy was $381,931.88 in both years; it is fixed by the British North America Act and will remain the same until that act is changed. In 1922-23 the highway grant amounted to $106,277.01, but in 1929-30 this grant was discontinued by the Liberal government. In 1922-23 the grant for agricultural instruction and technical education amounted to $37,607.68, while in 1929-30 that grant was cut to $22,117.30. So we see that in 1922-23, as a result of legislation passed by a Conservative government, Prince Edward Island received a total grant of $525,816.57, while in 1929-30 the total grant was $404,049.18. Even if we include the interim payment of $125,000, granted in lieu of the fulfilment of the recommendations of the Duncan report, we find that under a Liberal government in Ottawa the province was very little better off than it was in 1922-23.

During the course of his remarks the hon. member stated that the Duncan report had not been implemented by the Prince Edward Island government, and he intimated that the Conservative government of that province should have come to Ottawa in order to see that the recommendations of the report were carried out. During the election campaign of 1930, the candidates of the Liberal party in our province went from one end of the country to the other, declaring that the Duncan report had been implemented one hundred per cent. Now the hon. member for Prince goes back on that statement, for he is urging upon the government of Prince Edward Island that they come to Ottawa and have the report implemented. That was their campaign policy in 1930, and I repeat emphatically that nothing has ever been done for Prince Edward Island from a political point of view, nor have any grants ever been made to that province, except through legislation put upon the statute books of the country by the Conservative party in power in Ottawa. I will admit that the Liberal government gave us an interim grant of $125,000 in lieu of the Duncan commission's report, but that was made to our province as a political gesture prior to the election. We were told during the election campaign that the Liberal government at Ottawa had a large audit committee figuring out the great grant that was to be given to Prince Edward Island. We heard this all through the campaign of 1930, and one would have thought listening to the Liberal candidates on that occasion, that half of the civil servants of Ottawa were employed on this audit committee. One night I challenged one of the candidates on the platform; I told him the facts regarding the matter and I said to him on that occasion that it was only Liberal political bunk they were handing out for election purposes. I was told then that it would be my fault if no further grant came from Ottawa, because I had described this audit committee as bunk. However, we do not expect at the present time any further implementing of the report under the conditions that exist, but as soon as any signs of improvement are noticeable we shall expect, and we know that we shall receive the fullest implementing of the Duncan report not only with respect to the maritimes generally but so far as our own province in particular is concerned.

The unemployment problem is one of the most serious that the world has ever known. In this house we have heard many speeches on the unemployment situation, but we should all take into consideration one thing, and apart from politics it should be the endeavour of every hon. member to work out some solution whereby the problem may be met in this fair Canada of ours. The other day, speaking in this house, the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Heenan) said a great many things with reference to unemployment and labour, condemning the Conservative party and the policy of the present government with regard to this question. As reported at page 435 of Hansard, he said:

I know that my hon. friends on the other side are all recently converted to the idea of doing something for the working man.

We will take that for what it is worth, but I regret to say that the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River and his followers have a long way yet to go on the road to Damascus before the scales will fall from their eyes and their conversion will take place in connection with the unemployment situation in Canada. It is all very well to criticize the government and their policy on unemployment, but it would be worth while, if we had time, to study the attitude of the present opposition towards this problem. It is not necessary, however, to go over all this ancient history; suffice it to say that, through the press and Hansard, future generations will know just what attitude the Liberal government took towards the unemployment situation and those who were in distress in this country. Their policy with regard to the unemployed was simply this—not a nickel of aid to those in distress.

Canada has always had a certain amount of seasonal unemployment, but from 1924 down to the year 1930 the unemployment problem had been going from bad to worse throughout the length and breadth of this country. We recall the climax that was reached in February, 1930, when the mayors of the leading towns, from Sydney on the Atlantic to Vancouver on the Pacific, and especially in midwestern Canada, came to Ottawa. These chief magistrates were supported by labour organizations, churches and various societies engaged in relief work. They could not cope with the situation and therefore came to Ottawa and pleaded the cause of the unemployed. They tried to get some relief from the then government. What happened? The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River, who was then Minister of Labour, and the government of which he was a member, turned a deaf ear to the pleadings on behalf of the unemployed and the needy. The government of that day preferred to go on with their bungling trade policies and so did not lend any aid to the unemployed in 1930. I mention this climax to show that unemployment has been a growing problem in Canada over a number of years; it is a problem which was bequeathed to this government by the late administration after the election of 1930. Besides world conditions which have been a cause of unemployment, the factors next in importance, contributing to the present situation, have been, so far as Canada is concerned, the trade policies of the late government.

Let us consider the immigration policy of the late administration, especially as it affected unemployment. During the nine years they were in power they brought into this country over 1,250,000 people to replace the labour of almost the same number of our own people. While we have no objection to immigrants entering our country, we do object to their coming in when there is not sufficient work for our own people. Why bring in other people at such tremendous cost to the country? During those years about $26,000,000 was spent on immigration. What effect did it have? It had the effect of driving out of Canada over one million people; these men and women left Canada to seek employment in other countries. When conditions got bad in the United States and the other countries to which these people had gone, many of them were forced to return to Canada and they are being included in our unemployment lists.

The trade policy of the former administration proved to have a very bad effect upon the employment situation. Their policy was one of flirting with free trade, and they paid no attention to what effect it might have on home conditions. Because of this policy hundreds of factories have been closed during the past ten years, and thousands of workmen thrown out of employment.

We are proud to say that the immigration and trade policies of the present administration have proven to be most statisfactory. The hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon) has made the statement that the influx into this country practically had ceased and it would not be allowed to commence until such times as Canada could take care of her own unemployed. Hon. members of the opposition should give credit to this government for the inauguration of new policies with reference to immigration and trade. Under these policies industry is again starting to develop and we are looking to the time in the very near future when it will be able to take care of all who are unemployed at present.

Canada has had to face problems before but she has always endeavoured to work them out to the best possible advantage. One must have faith in a country with great natural resources, and I have faith in Canada. I have the greatest faith in the government of the day because this country is fortunate in having an administration which can take care of the problems facing the country and solve them to the advantage of the unemployed. I was interested in an editorial which appeared the other evening in the Ottawa Citizen, and from which I shall quote in part. This paper, apparently having sensed public opinion with regard to this debate which has been continuing for so long, says:

> It is safe to say that the majority of Canadian people are more concerned with Mr. Bennett's efforts to find the way out for Canada than with the Liberal party's protests about the rights of parliament as the controlling authority of government.

And again:

> Without worrying too much about the opposition's constitutional criticism, they may well look to Premier Bennett to go on trying to carry out the mandate given to him to abolish the evil condition of unemployment in Canada.

The opposition to this legislation is causing the greatest distress to the unemployed and needy throughout the country. As far as I am concerned, this opposition can continue for weeks, but it would be better for those who oppose and for the country generally if they would say what their stand is with reference to unemployment. From the speeches which have been made from the other side, we know that they are opposed to the granting of any relief at the present time.

Mr. POULIOT: No, not at all.

Mr. McLURE: We have heard from one county only.

Mr. POULIOT: I am speaking for all.

Mr. McLURE: They should cooperate to see that employment and relief are given, and they might well join with those on this side and be a party to the granting of relief to the unemployed.

Mr. JULES DESROCHERS (Portneuf) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, when I rise to speak on this resolution I feel that I am, as has been intimated by the hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat, one of those who are obstructing the adoption of this measure and do not wish to cooperate with the government. To my leader, to my friends and colleagues on this side of the house I offer my sincere congratulations and my thanks for the able manner in which they have participated in this debate and also for the life and spirit which characterized their speeches.

The people at large, and the backbiters at any rate, will stop saying that we have shown too much speed, if not too much weakness, in the debate of this blank cheque given last year to those who were asking for it in our national interest, when it was urgent and when parliament was not in session. It was the universal remedy that was supposed to cure everything, unemployment and every difficulty; it was still intended to maintain peace and good order and to bring to our door all the fruits of the garden of Eden.

To-day we know by experience the utter nonsense of those contentions and, notwithstanding the statements of our friends opposite, it seems well proven that they completely failed, if not already after having spent so many millions of dollars, surely in the near future and throughout the width and breadth of our Dominion.

We are not surprised to see that they enjoy this system of blank cheques and orders in council; it had to come; the machine runs so smoothly when there is only one conductor. But everything must necessarily end and here we are with this bill No. 58 which has expired. The remedy is simple though: a brief motion of four lines and the phoenix will rise from its ashes, and parliament will have to bow down.

But, my friends, you have shouted: Stop! And I feel that in our country, from one end to the other, a unanimous voice approves you, your speeches so full of national pride, delivered in the two official languages and stating the will of all the nationalities that are to be found in our Dominion. I feel sure that already, from one ocean to the other, your ideas have been received and accepted.

Mr. DORION (Translation): We even listened to some speeches delivered in the Iroquois language.

Mr. DESROCHERS (Translation): The hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency is just venting his Iroquois disposition.

All those who cannot hear and who cannot see—and I wonder why they are not dumb also; perhaps it would have been much better—are there on the other side; they form a small group taking an impassive attitude and trying to be whimsical just to put on a countenance.

But here is the point: with figures and data all those who spoke before me have proven the futility of the measures heretofore adopted to relieve the unemployment situation; they have fought against the danger of having this country administered by a small group seeking to substitute themselves for the house in session—for two months only; but would that be a cure for all our ills?

As for me, Mr. Speaker, I shall endeavour and do my best to show that we are unjustly charged with what is called obstruction. I shall try also to show if it is at all possible to work hand in hand with people so minded. But, Mr. Speaker, to obstruct signifies putting something in the way and, when the point at stake is the retaining even of a small particle of our constitutional rights and our parliamentary privileges, is there a reason to deny us the duty of so doing? What was the impression made not very long ago by those allied nations who sacrificed so many of their sons to safeguard the invaded countries? They were defending with all their might civilization injured through the infringement of treaties. They had recourse to obstructive methods but, thank God, if some Germans are to be found here it is not on this side of the house. As in the days gone by we are proud to stand up and be an impediment and we shall fight to the end, even for a whole month if necessary, before we adopt a measure which implies inefficiency and the uselessness of this house in session. So easy would it be to adopt the usual practice followed in this house; but it is said—

Mr. DORION: Beauharnois.

Mr. DESROCHERS (Translation): It seems to me that the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Dorion) should show a little more respect for those who speak in this chamber. He must not forget that, politically speaking, he is still a suckling.

Mr. DORION (Translation): And you, you are still lingering in prehistoric ages.

Mr. DESROCHERS (Translation): Dixit Deus! The obstacle must fall before a servile and subdued majority. It will be at least gratifying to know that we have done our duty and Hansard will bear witness to it. Honour is safe!

So, Mr. Speaker, it is in that spirit of domination beyond measure that they are asking for our cooperation? Or else, would the members of the government have in mind some other kind of cooperation that is still unknown to us, poor human beings? Until now, cooperation meant work in common, and, so far as we are concerned, there is only one sort of cooperation, that which is based on good will and good faith. Then, how can you work hand in hand with any one who seeks isolation by requesting the maintenance of this do-as-I-please government? Cooperation is so contrary to the mind of hon. members opposite—Tories or Conservatives—that even their principles lead us to the antipodes of cooperation.

Gentlemen, if you care to do it, cross over to this side of the house with whatever good will and good faith are left in you, and kindly accept the assistance of these long established Liberal tenets: Respect for the law, respect for the constitution, respect for the house in session; and the obstacle will immediately fade away. Give us some expression of your good faith and good will and we will cooperate with you. Leave the abode of the false deities, come down into the realm of man and human misery, and you will find us ready to help you.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, after the protests voiced by my friends and my party against this measure that is submitted to us, allow me, on behalf of my constituents of Portneuf, to lay a particular complaint before the government: The workingmen of La Tuque have been sending you petitions and telegrams for the last several weeks, which have remained unanswered so far. Well, if the delay is due to our so-called obstruction, I may tell you that these good workingmen are too sensible to reproach us for having fought as we are fighting now, and they are too noble-hearted to allow their distress to be used as a lever for the destruction of our constitutional rights. They knew, when they granted me their votes, that they would never, under any circumstances, have the occasion to call me Judas.

Had I not already spoken so long, Mr. Speaker, I would ask hon. members opposite—lord and people, ministers and subjects—whether it would not be a good thing for them to go and draw a little light and philosophy from the teachings of Universal History. The present era resembles somewhat many others; a great number of potentates have fallen; many civilizations once perverted had to return to a sense of realities. Et nunc erudimini, you, who are emulating their example.

Mr. T. ADELARD FONTAINE (St. Hyacinthe-Rouville) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I shall require the whole forty minutes allotted by the rules of the house to express my humble opinion on the merits of the measure that has been submitted to us and which we are now asked to consider and discuss. I need not make a very long speech to enumerate the reasons why we are opposing a measure of this kind, which may lead to the most serious consequences. There is above any other consideration a fundamental principle which we must bear in mind, that of the legitimate control by the representatives of the people of the revenue derived from taxes imposed upon and paid by the people. In other words, parliament—not the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) or the executive—has the right to appropriate and control all the revenues of the country. That is the fundamental principle which the Prime Minister wishes to forget and to put aside, losing sight of the very important fact that the parliamentary system is in force in this country and that, according to our constitution, the right to appropriate public funds belongs exclusively to parliament. The transfer of powers involved in this resolution simply means a breach and defiance of a fundamental disposition of our constitution.

The government may notice that this resolution has caused a wholesale uprising of fighting energies against this arbitrary measure which is being perpetrated right under a system of constitutional freedom. This is the most arbitrary measure that a government could take in our country. It certainly is a challenge to the liberty which is guaranteed to us by the constitution of this country. Do we not remember the dissensions, the disputes and even the hatreds which the famous question of supply gave rise to. Supply must be granted freely by the house and to transfer that privilege to the prime minister alone would be equivalent to say that parliament has no reason to exist. To adopt a measure of this kind would simply mean that we are reverting to the unfortunate days of the Family Compact. One recalls how this aristocracy responsible only to the Colonial office in London administered the country's affairs. Land sales, mining operations, customs duties, taxes, in a word, all the country's resources were entrusted to the members of the "Family Compact." Moneys voted for the improvement of roads and highways were expended in other directions. In fact, one could not find out exactly how the money was spent. All these intrigues, all these injustices helped to bring upon us the dark, unhappy days of the rebellion. And it was to prevent for all time a recurrence of such calamities and similar persecutions in the parliamentary arena that our ancestors did not hesitate to fight, shed their blood on the battle-fields or forfeit their lives on the gallows. We can never forget the chapter they wrote.

Now, here is the wording of the resolution the honourable prime minister submits to this house:

Resolved, that it is expedient to introduce a bill to amend chapter 58 of the statutes of Canada, 1931, striking out the word "March" in section 8, and substituting the word "May" therefor.

As everybody knows, parliament adopted in the closing days of the 1931 session, at the express request and upon the special representations of the Prime Minister, an extraordinary law the object of which, as represented at the time and as the wording of the law itself made clear, was to confer upon the government special powers relating to unemployment and farm relief as well as the maintenance of peace, order and good government. This is what the draft resolution submitted to parliament stated:

That it is expedient to bring in a measure to confer certain powers upon the governor in council in respect to unemployment and farm relief; and for the maintenance of peace, order and good government in all parts of Canada; and to authorize the governor in council to expend for the said purposes out of the consolidated revenue fund such sums as may from time to time be necessary.

The law adopted at that time in accordance with this resolution was to lapse on March 1, 1932. That is what section 8 of the said law enacted and it is this provision the honourable prime minister is now asking this house to amend by extending to May 1st next the time limit of this measure.

The simple recital of these provisions clearly shows this eighteenth day of March, 1932, that this law whose expiry was set for March 1, 1932, has lapsed, is dead and inoperative since several days. As a matter of fact, if in law, certain agreements, for example leases, can in certain cases, imply a continued tenancy without renewal of lease, the same procedure cannot be applied to a law such as this. Moreover, they are not asking this house to revive the law. Instead, they are asking parliament to modify, alter and amend a law that no longer exists, that lapsed on March 1.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Hear, hear!

Mr. FONTAINE (Translation): Here is a primary motive which from the standpoint of parliamentary procedure prevents us from considering and much less adopting a measure of this kind that is absolutely ill-grounded. One can invoke many other reasons against its adoption. May I be allowed to point them out as concisely and rapidly as possible, because many of the speakers who preceded me and whom, by the way, I congratulate upon their excellent speeches, have in the main covered the ground in a very able manner. If I may be allowed, I would like to mention especially the speeches delivered by the right honourable leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King), the former Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) and the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa).

It is exceedingly regrettable, indeed, that the right honourable Prime Minister whose talents and industriousness we acknowledge should be intent on wanting to control and administer everything by himself. In so far as this authority relates only to matters of ordinary administration, it is true that we may possibly not have anything to do with such questions, but when things reach a pass where he undertakes, by measures such as those adopted last year and that submitted to us at the present time, to arrogate to himself the absolute and arbitrary control of the expenditure of public moneys, then it is an altogether different matter and constitutes an illegality parliament should not countenance. Such autocracy and such dictatorship have been denounced at sufficient length in the course of the present debate, and one need not dwell further on the subject. However, there is one aspect of this case which reminds me of a gallant English elector who was elected member under very exceptional circumstances. Historians chronicled this very peculiar election case in the following manner. (See Mignault, Parliamentary Law, page 95.)

It is said that an election being held, only one voter, except the sheriff and the returning officer, was present at the nomination meeting. The lone voter took the chair, opened the meeting, called the voters' roll, answered to his own name, and chose himself as member for the constituency. Being the only voter, he was elected by acclamation and the so-called representative of Bute county courageously sat at Westminster.

When we see the right honourable prime minister trying to assume absolute and dictatorial powers such as are conferred by this resolution, we would think that he is ready to revert a few centuries in the past, to go back to that period where such things, as the one I have just mentioned, could occur,

It has been said, and I repeat it, if through such wide powers as are conferred in respect to unemployment and farm relief, and the maintenance of peace, order and good government, the prime minister intends to follow his past attitude and avails himself of this procuration, this mandate or this authorization to do as he pleases without consulting parliament even when it is in session, our presence here is not needed and it is useless to waste money which could be put to a better use while the country is suffering from hard times, depression and unemployment.

It is to be regretted that the Prime Minister should want to discard the formalities and procedure which have always been followed by this house so far as voting and spending public funds are concerned. He has taken this irregular course, from the moment of his accession to power, that is during the special session of September, 1930. We all well remember what happened then. The government submitted legislation stipulating that a sum not exceeding twenty million dollars could be paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada to relieve unemployment in constructing, extending or improving public works and undertakings, railways, highways, etc., which would assist in providing useful and suitable work for the unemployed. This first step was contrary to the parliamentary procedure always followed in such cases. To obtain this money the government should have presented a supply bill first; then they should have pointed out clearly what they intended to do with the money; and finally it should have been stipulated that this amount was only available till the end of the fiscal year. The opposition wanted to consider the measure and to raise some objections, even if they concurred in the principle of the bill or in the amount specified, but the right honourable prime minister having stated that if we delayed the adoption of the bill he would be unable to take part in the London conference, this unemployment legislation was immediately passed.

The second false step was taken by this administration towards the end of last session, when the right hon. Prime Minister, for the same reason, that is in respect to unemployment and farm relief, etc., asked parliament to confer on him the wide powers which would enable him to remedy all evils before the next session. It was rather strange that unemployment should still exist at that time, because the right hon. Prime Minister had promised during the election campaign of 1930, that he would put an end to it. We can even say that his party was elected on that definite and formal promise.

The statements made then by the present Prime Minister shall not be soon forgotten. On one occasion after having stressed the fact that there should be no unemployment in a rich country like ours if the government discharged its duties as it should, he added:

The leader of the Liberal party promises consideration of the problem of unemployment, to call a conference to this end, etc., but I promise you to put an end to unemployment or to perish in the attempt.

Later he found out that the crisis could be due to other causes than negligence on the part of the government, and last session in one of his speeches (Hansard, page 780), he said that speculation brought disaster in its wake, and he added:

It is known that over $400,000,000 of Canadian money was lost last year by speculation in Wall street.

This was almost two years ago. What have been the results? What has happened? Alas, the very opposite of what was expected happened. Not only is the unemployment problem unsolved, but it is getting worse; unemployment is increasing at an alarming rate. And as to farming; it has never been so completely and entirely stagnant as it is to-day.

And this is the moment chosen by the government to advance another step along the road of irregularity, as I was saying a few moments ago. But if they had some slight excuses to follow that course, in the two first instances, they had no reason whatever to keep on ignoring the constitution and the parliamentary usages and, at the same time, to trifle with the privileges and prerogatives of members of parliament.

Taking this stand and behaving towards parliament as he does, the right hon. Prime Minister surely cannot feel hurt at being designated by such terms as dictator, autocrat, sultan, etc.; or at being compared to Mussolini, Lenin, and to other potentates. Having presented legislation so arbitrary, unfair and radical in character, he should not be surprised if he is given such names. Some of his supporters are shocked on that account, but let them not forget that Liberals will never blame him half as much as did some eminent Conservatives in years gone by. The late Sir Sam Hughes, for example, who was Minister of Defence in a Conservative government, did not hesitate, in 1917, to speak of the present Prime Minister from the floor of this house, in the following terms:

He has brought bad luck to all enterprises, companies and capitalists with whom he has been associated. He is the most striking example of failure in public life which has ever taken place in the Dominion of Canada.

The members of the opposition have said nothing during this debate which at all compares with the preceding paragraph.

The hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) pointed out the other day, while speaking on this resolution, that it was very strange to note how lightly the Prime Minister considers our parliamentary traditions to-day, whilst he availed himself of every opportunity, when he was leader of the opposition, to show off as a staunch champion of the British parliamentary traditions, to invoke this or that precedent to induce members to respect the fundamental basis of our parliamentary institutions. How could such a change come about in this man? We may very well say in this case, "Quantum mutatus ab illo"? But this is not the only instance where he has changed his views or his ideas.

Let us take immigration, for example. On this question as well as on many others, the right honourable Prime Minister is entirely at variance with himself. Last session he stated that the admission of over 100,000 immigrants in this country, in 1929, and during the first seven months of 1930, and the lack of foresight on the part of the last administration, were two of the principal causes of the present depression. On the 21st of April, 1931, at pages 783 and 784 of Hansard, he is reported as follows:

Let us go a step further and examine one of the great causes of conditions in this country. How many people do hon. members think were brought into Canada from continental Europe, in the year 1929 and seven months of 1930, preceding the time we assumed power? Let me place before the house one statement shown by figures I have in my possession. Do hon. members realize that during that period of time 104,556 people came into this country from central Europe? They came here, and they are now largely being kept by Canadians.

Some hon. Members (Translation): Hear, hear.

Mr. Bennett (Translation): Most of them are being kept—not all of them—by Canadians, with our taxes. The howl that is heard in some quarters about direct relief arises from the fact that the government of 1929 and the early part of 1930 could not foresee what was coming. They brought them here in increasing numbers for us to feed.

Moreover the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon) stated very recently in this house that this immigration, which took place a little before 1930, was mainly responsible for the unemployment problem. On February 23, at page 440 of Hansard, the hon. minister is quoted as follows:

What was the situation during the months just prior to this government coming into office? I think I am stating what was in the mind of every man who travelled within Canada when I say that the late government, not recognizing the condition that was becoming all too apparent, did not take any steps to curb the undisciplined flow of immigrants into Canada, which had been carried on for three or four years prior to 1930. I want hon. members of the house to remember this: During the sixteen months ended July 31, 1930, 221,561 people were brought into Canada, 99,367 of whom were adult males. This factor contributed largely to the unemployment problem.

Considering all these statements, it would be of interest to note what were the views at that time of our present Prime Minister, who was then leader of the opposition, on this question of immigration. Allow me to quote on this subject an extract taken from a speech delivered in this house on February the 11th, 1929:

> We have here one of the largest undeveloped areas in the world; we have a very pressing necessity for more people. There need be no misapprehension about that, notwithstanding what has been said from time to time to the contrary. It will be found that the increase of population in this country, brought about through bringing additional people in, will not only lessen unemployment for those who are now in, but will increase all employment.

It seems very strange that when commenting on the speech from the throne, the Prime Minister, then in the opposition, criticized the government for not setting aside sufficient funds to encourage immigration.

There is no need of commenting at length over his words to prove that, at the time, the leader of the opposition, now the Prime Minister, worked strenuously to encourage immigration and to show that by such a policy we would decrease unemployment and create new openings for unskilled labour. He was not the only one among the members opposite to propound such a policy. On this same immigration question, the following views were expressed in 1929, by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion), at page 2798 of Hansard:

> I am not complaining so much of the small number of British immigrants, as of the small number of immigrants, in general. . . . We can receive many times the number of immigrants of all trades that we are to-day receiving.

If our hon. friends opposite have found it possible, within a few years, to change their views and their policy on such an important question, I have no doubt that some day they will realize—when it will be perhaps too late—that the measure they have just introduced is greatly vexatious, arbitrary, unjust, ultra vires and outrages our most cherished parliamentary rights.

The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals in his speech on March 9, made an ardent appeal to all the members on your left, sir, requesting their support on the present measure. To answer this invitation, I think it is first necessary to again point out that we are most willing, under the circumstances, to give the government our entire support in helping it to extricate itself from the difficult situation in which it finds itself. The opposition, therefore, has clearly shown and openly stated—this will be found in all speeches delivered—that we are ready to vote all the money that government may require to meet the situation. All we ask is that the customary procedure be followed by respecting the privileges and prerogatives of parliament. Otherwise, our presence here is not needed and the holding of this session is unnecessary. To despoil ourselves of these privileges and prerogatives in favour of the Prime Minister and his government would simply mean to be false to the mandate we received from those who have asked us to represent them in this house. This we cannot do.

I cannot understand the attitude of hon. members opposite. They know perfectly well, as we do, that one of the fundamental principles of self-government and which has been the cause of so many struggles in this country, so many sacrifices and so many heroic deeds on the part of our forebears—is that parliament alone possesses, by virtue of the constitution which governs us, the privilege, control and responsibility of the expenditure of public funds. And what is required from us to-day—by way of cooperation—is to concur, in the midst of a session, without any plausible reason, in a flagrant violation of the constitution. Again I repeat, this we cannot do.

But there is much more. Mention is made of precedents. It is again a minister of the crown, the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) who, in his speech the other day, contended that a precedent had been created by the act passed at the end of last session. I cannot understand how the hon. minister can forget that the main reason given by the Prime Minister to obtain such a blank signature, was precisely that we were on the eve of prorogation and that he absolutely needed such extensive powers to maintain peace, order and good government after parliament had prorogued. I do not see the necessity of further insisting to show clearly that conditions have changed and that such a precedent cannot be invoked, if one wishes to be honest.

However, the argument put forth by the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, throws light on the real intentions of the government to resort to so-called precedents which are unfounded, and we have far more cause to very strongly oppose this measure. Since the government intends to authorize itself by such unfounded precedents, it is a further reason to be more watchful and wise and bring to bear more opposition to such measures and breaches that nothing can justify.

We are not to be deceived nor must we ignore that what is expected from us is nothing else but a blank signature so as to allow the Prime Minister or the cabinet—which after all is the same thing—to expend the public funds as they please, no stipulated amount being mentioned. And, they seem astonished even shocked that such an unheard of measure finds opposition and is greatly criticized. But, sir, this year, we have other serious objections to such legislation. One of them, is the use made of this blank signature by the Prime Minister. To facilitate the adoption of this bill, last year, it was stated and guaranteed that its aim was to relieve the unemployed and farmers. How can they explain that, notwithstanding these extraordinary powers and a policy of high protection, unemployment has spread in an alarming way and farmers are in great distress?

It seems that the government made use of this exceptional act, to carry out, by orders in council, special measures in connection with banks, insurances, the mounted police, etc., matters which had nothing to do with the relief of unemployment and agriculture. To sum up, we can state without doubt that the government put up no valid reason to induce the house to adopt such an arbitrary measure, on the contrary, we have excellent reasons and good ground both as to the drafting and provisions of the bill, to oppose what I might call an arbitrary, vexatious, unjust and anti-constitutional measure.

I ask hon. members opposite not to forget, when voting time comes, the common hopes and trials of our forebears in the development of our country, the maintenance of self government, our political conquests, the struggles to uphold our rights which are now guaranteed by the constitution.

I trust that, in closing my remarks, I shall be allowed to quote the following beautifui words by Rameau:

> The living image of one's country which one bears in his heart is as indestructible as the human soul itself, like the latter it revives, expands and participating to its sublime nature escapes immortal from the clasp of tyranny and subterfuges of politics.

I trust that our friends opposite are numerous who, when voting times comes, will realize as good patriots that to support such a measure is equivalent to destroying what we hold most sacred in parliament, namely the constitution, the rights and privileges which are assured and guaranteed to the representatives of the people. As in the sad days of 1926, the people, when the reckoning day comes, will certainly remember this new assault against the constitution and contempt of the liberties, attributes, privileges, rights and prerogatives of this parliament and, that day, as in 1926, the great wave of the masses will sweep everything in its path. Then shall we register again with joy, a great Liberal victory.

Mr. A. L. BEAUBIEN (Provencher): As it is almost six o'clock, Mr. Speaker, I would ask you to be good enough to call it six o'clock.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go on.

The ACTING SPEAKER (Mr. MacNicol): There are about twelve minutes yet.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Then I am very sorry that I shall have to be discourteous to the Speaker by not attending his tea. I think one of the duties of a member of parliament is to do everything in his power to uphold the dignity of the Speaker.

In making a few remarks on the resolution before the house I intend to follow my usual practice and be as brief as I possibly can. This government is plainly in trouble to-day, and you do not have to go very far, Mr. Speaker, to learn that they are in trouble, for you can read it in the expression on their faces. When did that trouble start?

Mr. TURNBULL: You are wearing blue glasses.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: When my hon. friend from Regina (Mr. Turnbull) goes back to his constituency he will need a magnifying glass to find any elector who will vote for him unless the government soon changes its policy.

Mr. TURNBULL: You are a better politician than a prophet.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: We have one member of the house that mumbles all the time; I hope that we shall not have another one. The troubles of this government started during the election campaign, and those troubles were all brought on by the government themselves, and the biggest offender in that respect was the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) himself. In 1930 he spoke at Calgary. I shall not read all that he said on that occasion because it would take up too much time, and anyway most of what he said is not worth repeating because it has not been carried out. But he did promise in that address that he would find work for every man in Canada who was willing to work. Has he done it? He knows that he has not, and his followers surrounding him know that he has not done it.

I felt truly sorry for the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) when he spoke in this chamber the other day. He made the most feeble attempt I have ever known a minister of the crown to make in this house in undertaking to defend a piece of legislation. We on this side for several years listened attentively to the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce when he spoke from this side.

Then he used to make beautiful speeches, full of vim and fighting spirit, but his effort the other day was really the greatest sham I have ever witnessed.

As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, the troubles of this government began in the election campaign of 1930. Then, what happened in the short session of 1930 when this parliament was called together to cure unemployment? The Prime Minister asked parliament to vote him the sum of $20,000,000. That was done. What did that $20,000,000 do? It did one thing and one thing only. It did not relieve unemployment. The only thing it did do was to induce the municipalities in every part of this dominion and the provincial governments to enter upon expenditures which they otherwise would not have undertaken, so that eventually the sum of $70,000,000 was spent by the municipalities, the provincial governments, the railways and the federal government combined. But even that expenditure did nothing to relieve unemployment. Most of that money went into the pockets of contractors and of those people who control the supply of materials.

What happened next? The Prime Minister amended the tariff in order to cure unemployment, a thing which never had been done before in the history of this country. He put the tariff up so high that nobody could jump over it. I believe that the Prime Minister in increasing the tariff has some idea in his mind, because I observe that an order in council was passed on February 23, 1932, and reading the list of articles to which this order in council applies I am firmly convinced that he is trying to cure unemployment by preventing families from being raised. For instance, this order in council passes regulations concerning the following articles:

Baby pants: 30 cents per pound plus 40 cents per dozen.
Crib sheets: 30 cents per pound plus 35 cents per dozen.
Deflated play or water balls: 60 cents per pound.
Bathing caps: 30 cents per pound plus 30 cents per dozen.

It seems to me the Prime Minister is trying to cure unemployment by making it harder for our people to raise families. I come from a race which is well-known for its large families, and I think my right hon. friend the Prime Minister is not just to our energetic French-Canadians. Of course, a bachelor cannot appreciate the difficulties that we married men labour under. That is about all that happened, and the only thing that I can see will relieve unemployment is what I have just stated. The Prime Minister during the campaign said he was going to "blast" his way into the markets of the world. "Listen to me, you farmers. I will make the tariffs fight for you." Well, as a commentary on that promise I have a statement here from a friend of mine. He had great hopes in this wonderful Prime Minister of ours—in fact I think a lot of people had faith in him, but they are being disillusioned. Is it not too bad the electors were fooled? In 1930, this man bought a young heifer for $20, a promising looking animal, and he took her into his herd. He is a dairyman. Last fall he thought he would get rid of her as she was not a good milker.

Mr. STEVENS: Was that the Prime Minister's fault too?

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I am going to come to that in a minute. My hon. friend will see by the time I am through that I am not labouring as hard as he was the other day.

Mr. STEVENS: I enjoyed myself.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: My friend sent the heifer to Winnipeg and it realized $4.05. He paid $3 transportation and $1 commission: his credit balance on the transaction was five cents! There is the statement, Mr. Speaker. My friend is French-Canadian, and he said to me, "Take this statement et présente le à ton moses de Bennett." Those are the exact words he used. That is how the Prime Minister has "blasted" a way into the markets of the world for the products of the farming community. This government, with its tariffs, is on the back of the agricultural industry. This government is on the back of the newborn babe—as soon as he is born his back begins to bend with the weight of the taxation imposed by this order in council on everything he wears. That is where this government is in trouble, and it will never get out of trouble because it cannot see the light. But, thank heavens, the electorate will have a chance sooner or later to pass judgment.

Now, we are charged by our hon. friends opposite with delaying the supply of seed grain and other farm relief. Well, they themselves have made a fair contribution to the so-called delay. But have we really delayed this much needed relief? I find this in the regulations issued by the director of unemployment and farm relief:

All public moneys and undertakings to which contribution may be made under the provisions of clauses 6, 8, 9 and 10 of this agreement are to be carried on from the date of their commencement to the date of their completion, which latter date shall not be later than May 1, 1932.

Then if you look at another page you will find a table giving the number of provincial, municipal and federal undertakings, together with the moneys paid and the moneys still owing. But the work is going on. My hon. friend from South Cape Breton (Mr. MacDonald) in the course of his speech yesterday said:

From a fairly extensive knowledge of the operation of that arrangement, may I say that it was followed religiously.

They are very religious in the maritime provinces.

The city of Sydney, to which I referred a few moments ago, borrowed the money and spent it on public works. Those works have been passed upon and approved by the local legislature and this government. To-day however that city cannot carry on its work because this government is not in a position to pay its share.

I submit that the government is in a position to pay its share, because the report of the director of unemployment and farm relief so states. The government is still committed to the undertakings which it entered into, and the accusation that we are delaying these works is absolutely false and without any foundation whatever.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

MONTREAL TERMINAL COMPANY

Mr. L. G. BELL (St. Antoine) moved the second reading of Bill No. 33, respecting the Montreal Terminal Company.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. BELL (St. Antoine): This bill has been before the house for some time, Mr. Speaker. There are no new provisions respecting this matter, and of course the full particulars will be given in committee.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the select standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT

COMPENSATION TO EMPLOYEES ON DIVERSION OF TRAFFIC—STANDARD OF CLEARANCE

Mr. G. B. NICHOLSON (East Algoma) moved the second reading of Bill No. 29, to amend the Railway Act.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

41761—80½

Mr. NICHOLSON: I cannot add very much to what I said in moving the first reading of this bill, which is being introduced at the instance of the running trades brotherhood of railway employees. Section 179 of the act establishes the principle that when by the closing out of a terminal or the diversion of a railway line it is made necessary, the railway board may order such compensation to employees who are forced to abandon their homes as in their judgment they deem wise. The present amendment merely extends the same principle in the event of traffic being diverted from one line to another. The added words are:

. . . nor make any change in the routing of traffic, nor run crews through divisional points where their homes are established, nor make any other change.

It also provides that thirty days' notice of the authorized change shall be given those affected. Then the amendment to section 250 merely provides that the railway commission shall have no authority to change the provision by which the standard of clearance is maintained between the top of the highest freight car and the abutments of any superstructure over the railway, until notice of the hearing has been given all parties interested. In other words, at present the board under special circumstances may deviate from the common practice and grant permission to have the clearance less than the act provides.

I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the amendments contained in this bill be given second reading and referred to the railway committee, where all parties can be heard.

Mr. J. K. BLAIR (North Wellington): I strongly recommend the adoption of this bill. It may be a great loss to railway employees to have their place of residence changed without proper notice being given and without the matter receiving due consideration by the railway board. I strongly approve of the amendments suggested.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the select standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

UNEMPLOYMENT AND FARM RELIEF

CONTINUANCE ACT, 1932—CONSIDERATION OF RESOLUTION

The house resumed consideration of the motion of the Prime Minister that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee of the whole on the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to introduce a bill to amend chapter 58 of the statutes of Canada, 1931, striking out the word "March" in section 8, and substituting the word "May" therefor.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Mr. Speaker, in the twelve minutes at my disposal before six o'clock I showed that this government had been in difficulties since the election, and since the Prime Minister and his supporters broadcast their promises throughout Canada. I also showed that by the vote of $20,000,000 at the special session a combined expenditure of $70,000,000 by the municipalities, the provinces and the railways had resulted, which otherwise would not have been made. I also proved, at least to my own satisfaction, by reading an order in council passed on the recommendation of the Minister of National Revenue, that by taxing everything required in the home the government had taken about the only method possible to relieve unemployment, and that was by preventing people from raising families because of the taxes involved.

I made reference to the fact that we have been accused of delaying the relief which might be afforded. There is a statement appearing in the Winnipeg Tribune—which is not a Liberal paper—from the Minister of Agriculture of the province of Manitoba, in answer to a question asked by a member of the legislature of that province, to the effect that seed is being provided the farmers of Manitoba, and that no delay has been occasioned. I also showed that all commitments contained in the blue book laid on the table of the house a day or two ago were being proceeded with, so there has been no delay in that regard.

After the special session of 1930, when the $20,000,000 was voted, we had the regular session of 1931, when the Prime Minister asked for a blank cheque. By virtue of his election promises, and by virtue of that blank cheque, the impression was created among the unemployed that the government had unlimited money to spend in order to provide work. I might tell the house of an experience I had personally. I live just a few minutes' walk from the village, and every time I went to that village the unemployed said to me, "Here are the promises of the Prime Minister; he has been given a blank cheque, so why do we not get work?" The worst feature of this depression is the feeling held by the unemployed throughout Canada to-day, that the government should do everything for them, because of the fact that last year the Prime Minister asked for a blank cheque.

What is the meaning of this blank cheque legislation? It is that the government can amend by order in council any legislation passed by the house. I have under my hand an order in council dated December 16, 1931. It is P.C. 3087 and reads:

> The committee of the privy council have had before them a report dated 12th December, 1931, from the Minister of Justice, submitting that to maintain peace, order and good government throughout Canada it was expedient to increase the strength of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police by approximately 300 men.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens), speaking in this house on Tuesday, March 15, laboured to defend this legislation. He said:

> What are the facts? Two hundred men were added to the force.

According to this order in council it was 300.

> Under legislation previously passed by this parliament and by two of the provinces, the federal government was asked to take over the policing of those provinces, Alberta and Manitoba.

I venture to say that there was no arrangement between Manitoba and the Dominion government on December 16 when this order in council was passed, although I do not say that an arrangement was not contemplated. In my opinion this order in council should have read: The committee of the privy council have had before them a report dated 12th December, 1931, from the Minister of Justice, submitting that to maintain discontent, disorder and bad government throughout Canada it was expedient to increase the strength of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police by approximately 300 men. I say this, Mr. Speaker, because nothing will tend more to create disorder and dissatisfaction among the people of this country than to have the government increasing the police force and buying bombs, as stated in this order in council. Nothing will contribute more to a spirit of dissatisfaction, as well as to disorder in the country, than that, and I defy any man to contradict me in this regard.

With regard to this resolution, may I say that in my opinion I have a mandate from my electors to contribute my share to the discussion of any legislation in this house. Is it wise and proper that I should disregard that mandate, that I should surrender my rights to one man or half a dozen or a dozen men in the executive? It is asking too much. The oath of allegiance which every member takes in the clerk's office when he enters this house, the allegiance to the crown, is best maintained, in my opinion, by preserving the rights of the people, and parliamentary control, rather than control by the executive. This is a very serious matter, Mr. Speaker. Every day at three o'clock you, sir, recite a prayer, and I hope that hon. members take it seriously. We stand here humbly, with bowed heads, asking Almightly God to do certain things for us. I do not intend to read the whole of that prayer, but we do solemnly commit ourselves to certain things when we say:

Most gracious God, we humbly beseech thee, especially for Canada, and herein more particularly for the Governor General, the Senate and the House of Commons in their legislative capacity at this time assembled, that thou wouldst be pleased to direct and prosper all their consultation, and ordain by their endeavours, upon the best and surest foundation, that peace, happiness, truth and justice may be established amongst us for all generations.

"The House of Commons in its legislative capacity at this time assembled." Am I going to stand here with bowed head every day and recite that prayer with you, Mr. Speaker one day in French and another in English and then, having done so, having asked the Almighty, the King of Kings, to endow me with the necessary ability to pass on legislation to the advantage of future generations, to commit the sacrilege of uttering such words and then transferring all my rights as an elected representative of the people, and all the powers that belong to parliament, into the hands of one minister, or a few members of the cabinet? I repeat, sir, that is asking too much. In my opinion, everything depends upon the sincerity of one's prayers, and I am sincere when I utter those words with you.

An hon. MEMBER: Who told you it was a sacrilege?

Mr. BEAUBIEN: It is a sacrilege for us to pray for certain things and then to do quite the contrary.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): It has been said that the prayer of the wicked availeth nothing.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Evidently my hon. friend takes it as a joke.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I do, exactly.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: If you do you should not come here at three o'clock and pray. I have not very much more to say, Mr. Speaker. I do want to emphasize the fact, however, that I am not prepared to stand in this house or to sit here and be made a rubber stamp by the government, especially by a government who have not kept their pledges, a government who have been spending the people's money in the way hon. gentlemen opposite have done, thus creating in the municipalities and provinces throughout Canada a situation which will land us no one knows where. If the government were relieving unemployment, if they were doing anything to solve the problem, there would be some excuse. But what have they done to solve the problem? Nothing. We have more unemployment in the country to-day than ever before, and the farmers are worse off than at any time in my recollection. Yet hon. gentlemen opposite sit there demanding that we hand over to them all the rights and powers of parliament while they wait for Almighty God to help them.

Mr. F. W. TURNBULL (Regina): The hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Beaubien) will pardon me if I do not follow him throughout his speech. Indeed, I do not intend to traverse the field that has been covered except to point out what in my view is the real issue between the parties at the present moment. If I rightly gather the contention of the opposition in this matter, they are of the opinion that the motion before the house constitutes an invasion of the rights of parliament because in the first place—a somewhat technical point—it is an attempt, as they say, to resurrect a bill now dead, and because in the second place the resolution asks that the powers of parliament be placed in the hands of the governor in council, depriving parliament of the right to legislate in respect to the expenditures of money. That is as far as I care to go with reference to the particular controversy before us.

I rose partly to correct a statement made, inadvertently, I am sure, by the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps), on Wednesday. At page 1186 of Hansard he is reported as having said:

Hon. members on the government side of the house have complained bitterly about the time taken by hon. members on this side. I might point out however that until this afternoon two out of three speakers have been on the government side.

I took the trouble to check that statement because I thought there must have been some mistake. As a result of my check I found that up until the afternoon the hon. member for North Winnipeg spoke, there had been twelve speakers on the government side who had taken up 92 columns of Hansard; twenty-six speakers on the Liberal side had used 225 columns of Hansard, and six other hon. members had used 58 columns. Instead of two out of three of those who had spoken being on the government side of the house, the fact is that twelve speakers were on the government side and thirty-two on the other. Up until the evening of March 17, fifteen speakers on the government side had used 120 columns of Hansard; thirty-seven Liberal speakers had used 320 columns and seven others, 68 columns. There had been fifteen government speakers as against forty-four others, using 120 columns of Hansard as against 388. Not only were there a smaller number of speakers on the government side, but they had used less space and taken on an average less time than the speakers on the opposite side of the house.

I mention this fact in order to direct the attention of the house to what is happening in the province from which I come. I have no idea of what is happening with respect to the distribution of seed grain in the province of Manitoba, but I fancy the situation is not serious. If I remember correctly the figures given the other day, only a small amount of money will be required by that province for seed grain distribution. It may be possible that the province itself will be able to finance this distribution, but I am told that some $6,500,000 will be required by Saskatchewan for seed grain. A municipality in that province covers 324 square miles, and 76 municipalities have not had a crop for three years. An immense amount of grain will have to be distributed, and this distribution will require a large sum. I think it is beyond the powers of the province at the present moment to finance this undertaking unless they receive assistance from the federal government. Should this assistance not be forthcoming immediately the farmers of Saskatchewan will be without seed for their crops.

An hon. MEMBER: Bring in a supply bill.

Mr. TURNBULL: I thought some bright hon. member would raise that question. I am not trying to deal with this question in any controversial sense, and I do not intend to discuss whether action should be taken by means of a supply bill or otherwise. I am not going to say that the government is or is not to blame for the course it has pursued, and I am not going to argue that the opposition is right or wrong in the stand it has taken. I do not intend to be brought into any partisan discussion as to whether or not this matter should be handled by means of a supply bill. I say merely that at the present moment the snow is disappearing in southern Saskatchewan, the frost will soon be out of the ground, and hon. gentlemen who come from that province know what it is to haul wheat from the elevators over the roads when frost is coming out of the ground. They know that the wheat has to be hauled home and cleaned before it can be sowed, and the distribution of that immense quantity of wheat cannot take place in a week or two. The wheat cannot be moved out of the elevators until the money is found to pay for it. What has been going on in this house for the last eleven or twelve days will be of serious consequence as far as my province is concerned.

According to press reports the following question was asked in the provincial legislature on March 14:

> Is it true that the lack of legislative authority on the part of the federal government is hampering seed and feed distribution in Saskatchewan and the failure to pass the farm relief bill now before the Dominion house is actually aggravating the situation?

The answer of the Premier was to the effect that, a few hours previously, arrangements had been completed for a temporary financing of the distribution, but unless the bill passed the federal house promptly great inconvenience would result and many farmers would suffer from lack of feed and seed. He urged that the leader of the opposition, knowing the situation in the province, should use his influence with Liberal federal members at Ottawa in an effort to speed the passing of the farm relief act. I refer to this for the purpose of calling the attention of hon. gentleman to the condition which existed last Monday in the province of Saskatchewan. To-day is Friday, and I have reason to believe that the financial arrangements which have been made, and which are the last arrangements which can be made, will expire to-day. This will mean that the remaining wheat will stay in the elevators until authority is granted to this government to advance the money to pay for it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Did I understand the hon. gentleman to make some reference to the leader of the opposition using his influence with his party to help expedite relief?

Mr. TURNBULL: I was referring to the leader of the opposition in the provincial legislature of Saskatchewan.

Mr. MANION: The hon. member should have referred to the leader of the opposition here.

Mr. TURNBULL: That is the condition which prevails in my province. Regardless of the merits of the motion before the house, I submit that the opposition could very well rest on their oars. Their position was stated very clearly many days ago by their leader and—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Why should not the government rest on its oars, or rather, get busy?

Mr. MANION: The government cannot make any move until this blockade by the opposition is over.

Mr. TURNBULL: I do not intend to enter into any controversy as to the merits of the question. The opposition have stated their case; almost forty speakers have addressed the house on this question and on everything else, including the last and the next elections. The position of the opposition has been stated over and over again, so what is to be gained by continuing this debate compared with what is to be lost in my province unless immediate relief is given? While we are debating whether or not the rights of parliament are being infringed upon, we are gambling with next year's crop, because if these men cannot get their seed in in time, they will be faced with a fourth crop failure. Should that happen, some hon. member will blame it on the government.

Mr. YOUNG: Do you think you are justified in gambling with the crop?

Mr. TURNBULL: We are not.

An hon. MEMBER: That is just what the hon. member is doing.

Mr. TURNBULL: Look at the futility of this whole proceeding. While the farmers in western Canada have been waiting for their seed for twelve days, we have been discussing everything but the subject at issue.

Mr. VALLANCE: I know the hon. member wants to be fair; we all do. Does he not know that the manager of the relief commission, Mr. Daniel, announced on the twelfth of this month that on and after the 15th of March any farmer in the southwestern portion of Saskatchewan presenting himself at the elevators would receive seed grain provided he was duly qualified to receive it?

Mr. TURNBULL: My hon. friend knows quite well what the qualification was and further he knows quite well that the announcement was made anticipating that the financial arrangements would be made in due course. He is aware that the qualification is a certificate from the relief officer that the man is entitled to a certain amount of seed grain, and that certificate of the relief officer will not be given until the seed grain is available. So that every man who presents a certificate will receive seed grain, but he cannot get it until the financial arrangements are made. As I say, while those men in Saskatchewan are waiting for the seed grain, we have been discussing onions in South Essex, Nero fiddling in Rome, something away back in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, the unfortunate fate of Charles I whose head toppled into the basket some hundreds of years ago, the days of the family compact, and other matters.

These men in western Canada have met with unprecedented disaster through no fault of theirs or of any government, but through the mere fact that climatic conditions for three years have not been favourable. They have met those conditions with a fortitude and courage unsurpassed in the history of any nation of the world. They have received a large measure of assistance from the Dominion of Canada; they have been grateful for that aid, and as a sign of their gratitude they have distributed relief from time to time throughout that large area to upwards of 300,000 people in a manner that has evoked the approval of people all over this North American continent. Except perhaps in a few isolated cases, there has been no attempt in Saskatchewan to take advantage of the relief commission or of the circumstances. In fact, there are to-day in western Canada men and women who have already started to pay back their indebtedness to the government. It is on behalf of a people of that type that I appeal to both sides of the house. The issues between us have been stated, and they cannot be further clarified by additional discussion. The opposition, so far as I can see, have already placed their case before the people. When the time comes to vote, the result will be just the same a week from now as if we were to vote to-night, and my hon. friends opposite can go no further in defending the liberties of parliament than they have done up to the present moment. They can add nothing to what they have said, and from now on, in my opinion, they have absolutely nothing to gain from the course they are now pursuing so far as defending the liberties of parliament before the people of Canada is concerned.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I ask my hon. friend a question? He has made an appeal to both sides of the house. Is it not true that the opposition has no power to introduce a money bill, and also is it not the case that the government has power to introduce a money bill at any moment?

Mr. MANION: Which the government has done.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is not what it has done.

Mr. MANION: Because we are being held up by my hon. friends opposite.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The government has not introduced a money bill. The moment the government will introduce a money bill in the regular way, hon. gentlemen on this side will support it and allow it to be proceeded with immediately.

Mr. TURNBULL: With my right hon. friend's statement concerning a money bill, I have no quarrel. As I said in the beginning, I am not now condemning him for taking the attitude he has taken that the government has no right to introduce a bill in this way. I refuse to express any opinion upon that controversy. I merely say that, having taken this stand, having expressed it clearly twelve days ago and having had it discussed ever since, he cannot better his position or clarify his statement by further obstruction.

The time has now come, when, in the interests of my people in Saskatchewan, this controversy in this house of parliament should stop. The opposition should now let us decide the issue between us, so far as our votes can do so. But my hon. friends are willing to play ducks and drakes with the welfare of the people of Saskatchewan. When I appeal to them in the name of those people who are suffering and who are liable to suffer more, this is what is going on in parliament to-day. The only answer the leader of the opposition can give me is to say: Well, do it our way and we will support you. I ask the house whether that is the sort of conduct we have a right to expect from a leader of the opposition who has the interests of the people of Canada at heart.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is the way in which it has always been done.

Mr. TURNBULL: If my right hon. friend thinks for one moment his course is going to gain support for him in Saskatchewan or in any other part of Canada, he is badly mistaken. I refuse to be drawn into the controversy as to whether he is right or we are. I merely say: Let us end this present farce; let us vote on this measure, win or lose, and let our people in Saskatchewan know whether we are going to give them farm or other relief in time to save the situation.

Mr. P. A. SEGUIN (L'Assomption-Montcalm) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to speak at length to-day, but I feel it is my duty to protest with all my energy, in the name of the worthy constituents which I have the honour to represent in this house, against this new attempted encroachment formulated by the right honourable prime minister (Mr. Bennett) in the resolution now before us.

[Mr. Manion.]

This resolution reads:

That Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee of the whole on the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a bill to amend chapter 58 of the statutes of Canada, 1931, striking out the word "March" in section 8, and substituting the word "May" therefor.

Mr. Speaker, I may be mistaken, but I am really surprised to see the prime minister attempt to submit to the parliament a bill intended to substitute the word "May" for the word "March" in another law that has ceased to exist since the first instant. While not claiming to be a legal light, I think I have a certain experience of these things, I think I understand laws and I cannot help entertain the greatest doubt on the possible effect of the new law proposed by the right hon. Prime Minister. Either the law of 1931 is still effective or not; if it is, then why do they ask us to substitute in this law the word "May" for the word "March"? And I am inclined to believe that it has ceased to exist when I read paragraph 8:

This act shall expire on the first day of March, 1932.

Therefore, this act has expired; it seems to me quite evident that it has ceased to exist, if so, is it inconceivable that an act which exists no more can be amended.

The Prime Minister's tactics under these circumstances can but inspire us with the greatest distrust. How is it that previous to the expiration of the stipulated time of the 1931 act, the Prime Minister did not think of requesting parliament for an extension of the provisions of the act, which he desires to-day? What has happened to induce the Prime Minister to have recourse to this strange manoeuvre which obliges us to greatly doubt of his good intentions?

At the last session, in spite of strong protests from this side of the house, the hon. members opposite under the rod of their master forced this parliament to enact this extravagant measure, known as the "blank cheque" act.

This act is embodied in chapter 58 of the statutes of Canada, 1931 and is intituled:

An act to confer certain powers upon the Governor General in Council in respect to unemployment and farm relief, and the maintenance of peace, order and good government in Canada.

By this act the government conceded to themselves the power to take out of the consolidated revenue of Canada, the necessary funds and expend them as they pleased. It goes without saying, that never, since confederation, has a government attempted to usurp such authority. If members of parliament have an important duty to fulfil, it is certainly, I think, that of controlling the expenditure; and the imperative duty of the government in having subsidies granted or expending the people's money, is certainly to justify, previously, where these outlays are to be made and what amounts will be required.

The 1931 act, sir, had the effect of removing this obligation and to justify himself, the Prime Minister stated then that he was unable to state the amount required to relieve unemployment and help the farmers, etc. This reason cannot be invoked to-day, and the mention of March 1, in the expired act was simply to make provision while the house would not be sitting. To-day, when parliament is assembled and the government with its past experience, is able to inform us what amounts will be required, there is not the least justification to ask for an extension of time up to May 1 for this arbitrary act of 1931. This cannot be justified by any precedent; it can only inspire the greatest distrust under the circumstances.

If the government could clearly prove to us that as a result of the act embodied in the statutes last year, it had succeeded to relieve the unemployed and farmers, we might trust them, and, in spite of the encroachment on the powers of parliament, we might perhaps make certain concessions and vote a stipulated amount to carry out such relief. But, sir, is it not a fact that far from having relieved the situation, unemployment has spread to an alarming extent and, that the relief given is not in proportion to the wide breach caused in our finances.

About July or August, 1931, the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Robertson) forwarded, to members and Conservative candidates defeated in the last election, a circular letter inviting us to suggest work of a federal nature that could be done in our respective counties in order to give work to the unemployed. On receipt of this letter, I immediately complied with the wishes of the hon. Minister of Labour and sent him a list of the public works that I thought were needed in the county of L'Assomption-Montcalm and, that I also considered of a nature to relieve the unemployed in the various localities. First, I mentioned what repairs were urgently required for the post office in the town of L'Assomption.

What was done to meet my suggestions? The inspector of public buildings paid a visit to L'Assomption and sent in a report that considerable repairs were needed on the post office, that the walls of the building itself were on the eve of crumbling. What was done to relieve unemployment? A carpenter and two men were employed, for hardly five or six days, to put supports so as to prevent the walls from falling. The government should be ashamed of having the public see such a building in ruins supported by beams, when it would have been an easy task for them to rebuild the defective walls and employ during a few months the fifty or so good people who are without work and reside in the town of L'Assomption, they ask for nothing better than to work in order to support their families.

I had also pointed out to the Labour department that a public building would not be out of place at L'Epiphanie, one of the most important localities in my county where the government collects each year excise duties and postal revenue to an amount of over $50,000. I had also mentioned the necessity of building a post office in the town of St. Lin-des-Laurentides, and which had been requested for a long time past; I had also pointed out the importance of having a post office built at Ste-Julienne, the chief town of the county of Montcalm. Notwithstanding all my suggestions, the Labour department paid no attention to these public necessities which, however, were very much needed and would have given work to a large number of workmen who at present find it extremely hard to support their families.

As to agriculture, sir, I defy any member from Quebec who supports the government, and especially the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Sauvé) whom I see in his seat, to mention any help whatsoever given by this government to the farmers of Quebec. Yet, all are aware of how the price of farm products have decreased in the most alarming way, notwithstanding the fine pledges of the right hon. Prime Minister during the 1930 election. Butter which then sold at 32 to 34 cents per pound sells to-day for 20 and 22 cents. The same may be said of eggs and all other farm products. Yet our opponents had publicly promised that with the advent to power of their renowned leader the greatest prosperity would reign in this country. It is thanks to these false pledges that a number of the government supporters, hailing from Quebec, were elected.

Not only did the government neglect the farming class and did not relieve the distress of these people, who are certainly the most deserving class in this country, but it did worse. By upsetting the tariff the government forced the farmer to pay much dearer for the needs of his family and to cultivate the farm, while on the other hand he is unable to sell or has to sacrifice at ridiculous prices the products of his toil.

I have no hesitation in stating here that these fine pledges were but a bait, and, under such circumstances, nothing would justify parliament to revive the act of 1931, and extend to May 1 the provisions of an unjust law by which last year parliament despoiled itself of its rights and authority to place them in the hands of the Prime Minister and his cabinet.

Again, sir, I wish to strongly protest against this new attempt of dictatorship on the part of the leader of the government, and acting thus, I feel certain of expressing the wishes of my most faithful constituents who for nearly twenty-five years have honoured me with their trust.

Mr. C. E. BOTHWELL (Swift Current): From the opening of this debate on the eighth day of this month it was made clear by speakers on this side of the house from day to day that they were prepared to co-operate with the government in voting a sufficient sum of money to take care of unemployment and farm relief. The responsibility, then, does not rest with this side of the house if relief is not being administered and if the farming areas of the west are going without seed. The responsibility is upon the government alone for their neglect in not bringing this matter to the attention of the house in time to get the legislation through.

I was much interested in the remarks which were made in this debate by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion) when he spoke on the ninth of March. He referred to the fact that the members from the west had not complimented the government on the work they had done and upon the manner in which they had administered relief throughout Canada. He seemed to feel that it was the duty of the Liberals from the west, and I presume of everyone from the west, to utter expressions of thanks and appreciation and to compliment the government. A page 970 of Hansard he finds fault because hon. members had not praised the government. He said:

> Why, when the wheat bonus was given to the western farmers, not one of my hon. friends opposite praised us. They have been finding fault with us ever since for giving the five cent bonus on wheat.

I have followed the debates in this house rather closely, Mr. Speaker, and I am satisfied that there has been no statement made by a member on this side of the house finding fault with the government for giving the five cent bonus on wheat. We did not believe that the five cent bonus on wheat would solve the ills of the people of western Canada. We thought that it was a very weak palliative, and we did ask for other methods of assistance. But the people of the west were appreciative of the five cent bonus and were willing to accept it, because they realize that this government is bonusing many other industries and there is no reason why the agricultural industry should not be bonused to the extent of five cents a bushel. The minister further said:

> They have been talking again and again not only about our failing to relieve unemployment, but our failing to do anything that my right hon. leader promised when he went throughout the country.

Then he says:

> The leader of the present government, as nobody will question, promised many things when he went through the country, but he has carried out a greater proportion of those promises in the time that he has been in power than any other Prime Minister has done in a similar period. Let me name a few of them.

Then he refers to the promises: He says:

> He called a special session, which he had promised.

Yes, a special session was called, and as we understood it, it was called for the purpose of voting money to relieve unemployment. When the special session met, a bill was introduced to appropriate $20,000,000 for that purpose, and a tariff bill was also introduced amending the tariff on about two hundred different items. The minister says:

> He put through a $20,000,000 vote for unemployment, which he had promised.

It is true that that vote was put through, and that it did relieve the distress to some extent, but one of the reasons why the people of Canada are not prepared to give the government a free hand in this matter is because of the manner in which some of the expenditures under that fund were made. I intend to give the house an instance of an expenditure in the province of Saskatchewan out of that $20,000,000 appropriation.

There was spent out of that appropriation, as shown in the report on the administration of the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act, 1931, or at least there was a contribution made by the dominion government for the purpose of building highways, roads and sidewalks other than the trans-Canada highway, amounting to $1,114,160. In the province of Saskatchewan, on No. 9 highway running north from Northgate, the government put in a relief camp, and they graded 2·28 miles of road. I have here the figures given in answer to a question on the floor of the legislature in Saskatchewan as to what that road cost, and they show that the gross expenditure for grading that 2·28 miles of road was $26,643.26, less credits and refunds, $2,140.26, or a net expenditure of $24,503. The net amount paid to labourers and teamsters on the job was $16,566.82; then there were foremen, timekeepers, straw bosses, stable bosses, cooks and cookees—they got $1,801; rental of equipment cost $109.55; there were other expenditures amounting to $744.57; making the total cost of the road per mile of grade $10,746.93. That seems to me to be a lot of money for grading. A citizen of Saskatchewan went down to inspect the work. He saw the kind of construction work. Then he crossed the American boundary and found that the road was continued into the state of North Dakota at the same width, running through similar territory and with the same kind of grading. After inspecting the road he wrote to the highways department of North Dakota to ascertain the cost of the work. This is the reply he received:

> We wish to acknowledge receipt of your letter of August 10th relative to the cost of the above mentioned project, and to advise that this project is 7·332 miles in length and was constructed with a cost of $23,821.34. For your further information the costs would be segregated as follows, grading $18,664.52.

That is the portion in which I am interested. There were also metal pipe and concrete pipe culverts and concrete structures, that do not enter into the comparison. This represents for the construction of that graded road in North Dakota a cost of $2,545.62 per mile. If the road on the Saskatchewan side of the border had been built on the same cost basis it would have involved an expenditure of $5,804.01, instead of $24,503—representing a saving of $18,698.99. I ask the house to listen to this further statement contained in the answer given on the floor of the Saskatchewan legislature. The amount paid to labourers and teamsters was $16,566.82. Had we constructed our road in the same manner as North Dakota constructed its road, we would have saved $18,698.99. In other words, we could have paid every teamster and labourer that worked on the job the actual wages he received and left them at home to attend to their farm work and still have made a saving on the road of $2,132.17. Some hon. members may say: But what about the straw bosses, the stable bosses and others; they would not get anything? If we include them in the computation as well as the labourers and teamsters we could have built the road at a saving of $330.82. This expenditure is part of the $20,000,000, appropriation. That is one of the promises that the Minister of Railways says the Prime Minister carried out.

Then he says the Prime Minister attended the economic conference, and that is another of the promises he carried out. Well, the economic conference has been discussed so frequently that I do not think I will refer to it any further except to read this portion of an editorial:

> A Liberal hates to go around town these days hurting the feelings of Conservatives by asking them what they think about Ottawa's courses of action. Any Liberal who has a bit of politeness in him shuns politics when talking with his Conservative neighbours and his neighbours must be grateful for it. It is the decent thing to do.

The next promise he started to carry out was the building of the trans-Canada highway. Yes, the trans-Canada highway has been started. The Minister of Railways seemed to take great credit to the government because of the fact that they had relieved some 300,000 persons in the drought district in Saskatchewan. According to the report of the dominion director of unemployment relief, at page VI, dealing with the province of Saskatchewan we find:

> Advances for relief purposes pending completion of agreement, $500,000.
> Advances for credit of Saskatchewan Relief Commission for relieving distress and providing employment, $4,750,000.

That $5,250,000 apparently was paid to the relief commission in Saskatchewan in order to relieve what was really a famine condition. The work on the trans-Canada highway was given out in order to provide employment to people in different parts of Canada. Quite a number of people in the drought area in Saskatchewan would have been glad of an opportunity to work on the trans-Canada highway; but they do not seem to have been given any such opportunity. For the trans-Canada highway the Dominion government appropriated moneys for Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Ontario, Manitoba, Alberta and British Columbia, but nothing was provided for Saskatchewan, Quebec or Prince Edward Island. The total amount of the dominion share of that highway is apparently $4,106,-136.35. The total appropriation for relief to a famine stricken district of Saskatchewan was $5,250,000. I presume Saskatchewan eventually will have to pay its share of the construction work on the trans-Canada highway in the other provinces.

Mr. STEVENS: No.

Mr. BOTHWELL: Saskatchewan will also have to pay back apparently the $5,250,000 appropriated by this government for relief in that province. Saskatchewan is the only province, so far as I know, where notes have had to be signed for unemployment relief.

Mr. STEVENS: Did I understand my hon. friend to say that Saskatchewan would have to pay back the $5,000,000 advanced for relief?

Mr. BOTHWELL: That is as we understand it; the question has been asked several times in this house.

Mr. STEVENS: My hon. friend is wrong; no such statement ever was made by the government. This money was advanced by the federal government, and the government of Saskatchewan has not been asked to contribute a cent to this relief.

Mr. BOTHWELL: In any event I think it is up to the government to make a pronouncement with regard to the matter, because the people in these drought areas have been asked to sign notes. I will give an example. In that stricken area a certain young man was farming his mother's land, which he rented. He applied to one of these wonderful officials for relief and eventually was told that he would get the relief if his mother would endorse his note. He was a young married man, and his mother made it her business to find out whether he would be denied relief if she did not sign the note, and as a matter of fact he did not get the relief until an appeal was made to the relief commission in Regina. That is how I know these people in the drought areas do not get relief until they sign these notes, but if they do not have to pay the notes we would like an announcement to that effect by the government.

Mr. STEVENS: Any one who needs relief is treated very generously.

Mr. COWAN (Long Lake): Is it not a fact that No. 1 highway through Saskatchewan, which is known as the transcontinental highway, was built as such, and is it not the best highway in Saskatchewan?

Mr. BOTHWELL: If No. 1 highway is the transcontinental highway it was built by the Saskatchewan government without the assistance of this government.

Then, in carrying out his next promise, the Prime Minister imposed the tariffs which apparently he had promised in order to help the industries of Canada. Those tariffs were imposed during the special session of 1930, and some of them were made even higher during the session of 1931. I should like to touch briefly on some of the things that have arisen in connection with the tariff changes made by the right hon. gentleman.

Apparently the idea the government had in making the tariff changes was to solve the unemployment problem in Canada. We all know that during the election campaign the Prime Minister went across the country making promises in connection with the relief of unemployment, and he spoke at various places from coast to coast. In order to keep the record straight I should like to refer to some of the promises he made. At Winnipeg Mr. Bennett said:

> The King government is blameworthy for failing to provide employment that would keep people in the country.

At Regina he said:

> Unemployment would not exist had the King government done its duty.

At Calgary he said:

> We pledge ourselves to find a solution to the unemployment problem.

At Calgary and Victoria he said:

> We in Canada cannot tolerate a dole.

At Moose Jaw he said:

> I will as soon as possible call the house together, not for the issuance of doles but for the inauguration of a scheme whereby national institutions will be set up which will provide jobs for the unemployed men of the Dominion of Canada.

Again at Calgary he said:

> This is a new country, and there is no excuse for unemployment in Canada if a government does its duty.

Then at Victoria he said:

> Is there any excuse for Canada to have hard times if the government is discharging its duties as it should?

At Woodstock he said:

> We must pass laws at the special session that will anticipate work for our people on national highways, on great canals, that we must make for our waterways to the sea. . . .

At Moncton he said:

> I promise to end unemployment.

At Sarnia he said:

> Someone is responsible for unemployment, not individuals but governments. Governments by their majorities in parliament are responsible for enacting all legislation.

I presume that the tariff changes made during the special session were for the purpose of ending unemployment, but during the course of this debate figures have been put on Hansard showing the result of these changes. During the special session of 1930 we were furnished by the government with details of unemployment throughout Canada.

I still have that file, and it shows a total of 117,000 unemployed throughout this country. According to figures placed on Hansard during this debate we now have 550,000 unemployed, and the number of unemployed in the manufacturing industries, which were supposed to be helped by these tariff changes, has increased by some 203,000, so the tariff did not relieve unemployment.

What was done by those tariff changes? Business was unsettled to such an extent that people were afraid and are still afraid to do business because they do not know what changes will take place next. The government took power to fix valuations for duty purposes by order in council, on practically all goods coming into the country. Most of our manufacturers must import some portion of their finished product, and they do not know where they stand. Rather an entertaining editorial was written in this connection, and I should like to read from it just one paragraph. I do not pretend to enumerate all the changes that took place after the budget of last year was brought down, but I should like to read this portion of an editorial written on June 9, last:

In view of these on-again-off-again-gone-again-Finnegan performances, it is interesting to recall Mr. Bennett's protestations while in opposition that a tariff made by him would be a stable tariff; something that industry could depend upon; a tariff that would "stay put." Instead of that, we have tariffs and excise duties that go up and down as erratically as the cars on a roller coaster. Instead of having something to depend on, industry does not know from one day to the next what changes will be made over night.

You cannot expect people to do business when they are kept in that state of mind. I should now like to give some results of this tariff. On the train I met the western manager of one of our road machinery companies, who also acted as agent for a lateral ditcher made in Boise, Idaho. You would rather imagine that any government would allow machinery not made in Canada to come in without a very heavy duty, but that was not the case in connection with two lateral ditchers required for irrigation purposes in Alberta. The two ditchers cost $168.75 at Boise, Idaho. There was added 15¼ per cent as dumping duty, amounting to $25.73. Duty was assessed at 35 per cent, amounting to $67.90. The four per cent sales tax amounted to $10.48. The one per cent excise tax amounted to $2.62, and the freight, including a ten per cent surcharge, totalled $47.85. The profit to the dealer was 25 per cent, or $42.20, so that the total cost of these ditchers, which was $168.75 in Boise, Idaho, was $365.53 to the purchaser in this country.

Here is another example taken from the Winnipeg Free Press:

The Free Press has been shown an invoice of woollen goods from England with the accompanying notation which would make an interesting exhibit if an investigation were being held as to the causes for the startling diminution in trade with Great Britain which is now taking place.

The goods involved were serges and worsted; actual value as paid by the importer, $408. The duty proper based upon the mixture of ad valorem and specie rates which is the feature of the textile schedule in the Bennett tariff was $221.61; to this was added the special penalty because the pound was some 43 cents under the allowed rating. This brought the total customs taxation to $265.44—the equivalent of an ad valorem tax of 65 per cent. This total does not include excise or sales tax which amounted to another thirty-eight dollars. The customs levy upon these goods was about half as high again as under the former tariff.

A rate of 65 per cent is of course intended to be prohibitive and is so except in the limited number of cases where quality rather than price is the deciding factor. The imperial conference is to meet shortly for the purpose of encouraging trade between this country and the other British nations, especially Great Britain; in preparation for it the Canadian people might give some thought to this matter of prohibitive duties on British goods for which there is, under fair conditions, a market in Canada. Is a duty of 65 per cent against British goods permissible under any conceivable set of circumstances?

No wonder trade is stagnant in Canada; no wonder trade has fallen off to such an extent, as indicated by various speakers in this debate; no wonder unemployment is increasing in different directions. We must realize that in this country we produce very much more than we can consume and must therefore find markets outside, and you cannot find markets unless you are prepared to buy something in exchange. Even members of the government are beginning to realize that. I notice that the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Sutherland), the other day came to a realization of this truth, and I hope that the idea he has will be shared by other members of the government. In The Citizen of March 5 he is reported:

Must Be Ready To Buy As Well As Sell Wares

Imperial Conference Results Seem Sure to Be of Tremendous Importance Says Col. Sutherland

Sarnia, Ont., March 4.—"We can't expect to get a lot of things unless we are satisfied to give something in return," declared Col. D. M. Sutherland, Minister of National Defence tonight, outlining plans for the Imperial conference to be held at Ottawa in July.

The next promise is with respect to the St. Lawrence waterway. In this regard the Minister of Railways said:

His promise in regard to the St. Lawrence waterway he has carried out in conversation with the United States government.

We do not know what those conversations were but we shall probably hear more about the matter before the end of the session. So far as we on this side are concerned, we do not know anything about it. The next promise which we are told was carried out was in regard to unemployment relief:

In regard to unemployment relief he has helped 350,000 of the Canadian people to get work which they could not have got under any policy which anyone in the house has heard enunciated by any one of my hon. friends opposite in the last three years.

I read to the house the promises made by the Prime Minister during the election campaign, and suggestions have been made on this side of the house as to what might have been done. But these suggestions have not been heeded. At all events, unemployment has not decreased, business is more at a standstill than it ever was, and we hardly know where we are drifting. I am glad to note, however, that the Minister of Railways disagrees with his leader in one respect. At page 971 he says:

In this country we have a condition which is due to a world situation and not to anything we have done, and, I say frankly, not due to anything the leader of the opposition has done; one which is due——to the aftermath of the war, to the demands for reparations by various countries, particularly perhaps by some of the richer countries; to the pocketing of gold by two great countries—to the competition of Russia—and finally to a great extent to the decrease in the selling price of the commodities of this country.

Here he gives the reasons.

There he gives the reasons for the distress in the country, and admits that it is due to no fault of the Liberal administration which preceded this government.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the real point at issue in this debate is the constitutional question. My hon. friend from Regina (Mr. Turnbull), in his speech to-night, was not prepared to discuss this question. All he wanted to do, and all he did do, was to say, "You are holding up the passage of this bill and if there is distress in Saskatchewan, if the farmers are not able to get seed wheat, then the fault lies with you." We believe there is a vital question at stake, and if this government is going to take all powers of legislation into its own hands as a government, then we on this side of the house might just as well go home. In fact I will throw out this suggestion to the government now. If hon. gentlemen opposite are determined to go through with this bill, no matter how long it takes, if they are determined to make it law because they have the support behind them, then I say to them:

[Mr. Bothwell.]

You might as well take all the power you need and allow us to go home; you might as well make another saving in this regard, as I am going to point out. The government is cutting down expenses everywhere and I do not blame them for this. But I say to them that they might as well make another saving. It might be well for a few years to retain a portion of the house in order to give a semblance of democratic government; but since you have a redistribution coming shortly, it might be well for you to redistribute Canada and cut down the representation of the house to fifty or one hundred instead of two hundred and forty-five members. This would lend some semblance of democratic government to your deliberations. And it might be well also to take steps to abolish the Senate, which is costing the country a good deal of money. What is the use of having two hundred and forty-five members here and ninety-six members in the Senate if a government of from twelve to fifteen gentlemen are going to govern the country? I offer that suggestion as one means of saving money.

My time is almost up but I want to mention one thing more in connection with seed grain for Saskatchewan. I have here a section of the Regina Leader-Post of March 12, in which the following appears:

Announcement made by C. B. Daniel at meeting at Swift Current.

Swift Current, Saskatchewan, March 12.—Distribution of seed wheat will start simultaneously at all points in the drought area on March 15, C. B. Daniel, general manager of the Saskatchewan Relief Commission, announced in an address here Friday night before a meeting of relief officers representing the southwestern section of the province. The object of the meeting was to discuss relief matters with the relief officers and representatives of the various municipalities with a view to facilitating seed distribution, particularly in view of the limited time available for such distribution.

That was the announcement made by the manager of the relief commission in Saskatchewan. If the government has not yet purchased seed wheat for the prairies, then I say it is through inefficiency on the part of the government itself. When they wanted to get wheat for relief purposes last year they appeared to be proud to announce to this house the number of bushels of wheat they had purchased and set aside. Why has not wheat been purchased this year for seed purposes? We have been in this house since February 4 and this resolution was introduced on March 8. The act itself is no longer law, and up until March 1 the government had ample opportunity to bring in the necessary measures. The Saskatchewan government and the relief commission should have known what they were talking about on March 12.

This is simply the holding of another club over our heads. When we came down to the special session in 1930, we were told that if we did not pass the tariff items and vote the $20,000,000, the Prime Minister would not go to the Imperial conference. Almost from the opening day of the session of 1931, hon. members on this side pleaded with the government to bring down unemployment relief measures. The government was asked to appoint a committee of the house to investigate and report on conditions throughout Canada. In spite of this, the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act was not brought down until, I think, July 29, just about the closing days of the session. The Minister of Trade and Commerce now states that the principle has been approved. This question was not decided a year ago. We have been sent here to fulfil a duty, and we intend to do that. A club was held over our heads in 1930, and in 1931 the bill was not introduced until the closing days of the session. When we on this side of the house dare to question the government this year on the stand it has taken, it replies: We will not give you any wheat in the province of Saskatchewan. A club again is being held over our heads.

Mr. COWAN (Long Lake): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. MANION: The government did not take that attitude.

Mr. BOTHWELL: Hardship is being placed upon the people of Saskatchewan.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member has spoken for forty minutes.

Mr. C. G. POWER (Quebec South): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member for Swift Current (Mr. Bothwell) I was much impressed by the moving appeal made by the hon. member for Regina (Mr. Turnbull), ostensibly to hon. members on this side of the house, but I think in reality to his own leader. The hon. member for Regina is a lawyer and I gathered from his remarks that he understood perfectly the situation. In answer to a question asked by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) he agreed that it was within the power of the government and of the government alone to initiate and to introduce into this house a money bill. In order to relieve distress in Saskatchewan, in order to carry on the work of unemployment relief throughout the Dominion of Canada, money must be found. We, through the leader of the opposition and twenty-five hon. members who have spoken on this side, have expressed not only our willingness but our eagerness to vote any sum which the government may require to carry on this work. May I call the attention of the government to the words of its leader, as quoted a moment ago by the hon. member for Swift Current (Mr. Bothwell) to the effect that governments are responsible for the enacting of legislation. I say to the government, as other hon. members on this side have said: Enact legislation with respect to relief and unemployment and we will vote it at once, but we refuse most emphatically and energetically to be coerced into abandoning the privileges and rights which belong to our constituents in order to satisfy the waywardness and stubbornness of the leader of the government. Money the government may have, and welcome in so far as we are concerned; but if we respect ourselves, and we think we do; if we have any respect for the people who sent us here, we must enter a protest against their being deprived of the rights and privileges to which they as British subjects are entitled and which is their birthright and their inheritance.

Let me examine for a moment the scope of this legislation. I do not propose to deal with the financial features other than to repeat what I have said already, that we are prepared to vote the money. By the legislation passed at the last session, this parliament, a representative body sent here to voice the opinions, sentiments and feelings of the people, is deprived absolutely of the rights which from time immemorial free parliaments in free British countries have exercised. I do not desire, nor have I the time, to cast my eye back over the pages of history and to repeat, as has been already repeated, that rebellions, revolutions and changes of government have taken place on less excuse than that given by my right hon. friend opposite.

I desire to deal with a phase of this legislation which has not met with the attention which it perhaps deserves from hon. members on the other side. Section 4 of the act which it is proposed to revive or resurrect reads:

> The governor in council shall have full power to make all such orders and regulations as may be deemed necessary or desirable for relieving distress, providing employment and, within the competence of parliament, maintaining peace, order and good government throughout Canada.

May I interrupt the trend of my discourse to say that if the government had had ordinary common sense and foresight it would have provided the seed grain necessary and would have made arrangements for the carrying on of relief before March 1. Under this section of the bill the governor in council—during the course of my observations I hope to show that that means only the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Bennett)—takes full power unto itself to make any law it desires. The words "peace, order and good government throughout Canada" contain the residuary powers left in the British North America Act to cover all the authority of the federal government of Canada. Under this act the government may make laws on any and all subjects. It may make laws to change the representation; it may make laws to change redistribution; may make laws to change the franchise; may make laws in regard to every conceivable subject within the competence of parliament. Further, as has already been said in the house, it may, whilst parliament is sitting, go down to the east block and repeal an enactment which was passed by this parliament the previous day or even that very afternoon. Against the granting of such powers as these we must, if we have any respect for our traditions, make the most emphatic protest.

The difference between hon. members opposite and ourselves is not merely one of procedure, as would seem to have been indicated by a number of my hon. friends on that side. It is a fundamental difference, of opinion, of state of mind, of sentiment. It is a difference between those who believe in responsible government and those who believe in autocracy, between those who believe in the rule of the people and those who believe in a kind of bourgeois dynasty. It is a difference in theory. Our theory—and we stand on the broadest grounds of constitutional procedure, practice and tradition—is that parliamentary institutions, as we know them in every country under the British flag, have not as yet outlived their usefulness. The theory of hon. gentlemen opposite would appear to be that which has its best expression in countries which are not British, which now finds its truest manifestation in the South American republics, in Italy and in bolshevik Russia which would seem to be the examples which hon. gentlemen opposite are willing to follow.

In defence of the position taken by the government and its leader we find two arguments: first, the one raised yesterday by the hon. member for South Cape Breton (Mr. MacDonald) and some days ago by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens), namely, that the government had undertaken certain commitments and therefore it is necessary that the powers conferred upon it by the statute of last year should be extended.

I repeat the language of the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) that if there are any commitments, they must surely be known to hon. gentlemen opposite. My hon. friends must know by now that to which they are obligated. They must know almost to a cent the amount for which they have assumed responsibility. If they will tell the house what that obligation, that commitment is, not only shall we vote that, but we shall add fifty, one hundred per cent more, and vote that too.

There is one other argument urged on behalf of the stand taken by the government, one that I heard from the lips of the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) himself, and if my recollection serves me well, also from those of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. It is that it is more convenient, more expedient, to carry on business in that way. We all know that this argument of expediency is one which has served to justify every private crime and every piece of political oppression and tyranny since the beginning of the world. Ever since the commencement of time expediency has been the justification of crimes, of oppression. It was expediency which brought about the tearing up of the treaty of Limerick by William of Orange, thereby antagonizing thousands of Irishmen against the British Empire for many years to come. It was expediency that animated the Chancellor of the German Empire in 1914 when he said: "We must cross Belgium; therefore our treaties are a scrap of paper." While I am mentioning this matter of 1914, it strikes me that it is the irony of fate that a nation which sacrificed over 50,000 of its sons in a fight to make the world safe for democracy, fifteen years afterwards is in this house destroying the last vestige of it. If expediency is to be our only guide, may I tell the right hon. gentleman and his colleagues that the lynch law, which is a most expeditious way of dealing with criminals, is a classic example of how expediency and convenience can be made to suit the purpose of an oppressive majority.

One other argument which was heard from the lips of the Prime Minister and, I think, also from those of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, was that no other means were at the government's disposal to deal with this matter of unemployment and farm relief. May I call the attention of hon. gentlemen opposite to the fact that during the election of 1930 the one, the important, the special means which the Prime Minister had to settle the unemployment question, was to call parliament, and to-day, forsooth, he asks us, in order to settle the same question, to do away with parliament. I say to the right hon. gentleman—who, I am sorry, is not in his place, because I would much rather talk to him than at him—that those words of his are a confession of incapacity. If he cannot, through parliament, through the institutions established from time immemorial, settle the most important question now confronting the Canadian people, then he has no business in a free British country. The place for him is in some South American republic where he can be dictator at his will, or, better still, in Italy or Russia.

It has been suggested by hon. members opposite—and there may be some merit in the suggestion—that they are justified in delegating their authority to the Prime Minister. Without wishing to be offensive, I would say: Were I in their place, instead of sitting here day after day, silent, watching the Prime Minister's every move and gesture, wondering when they will gain a smile from him, I would rather delegate the power to him and go home.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): The hon. member cannot look at me and say that.

Mr. POWER: No, I was perhaps addressing my remarks to my hon. friend because I recognize in him one who has a sense of humour and who can understand, as I do, the humour of the situation where people of his intelligence are placed in the situation in which he finds himself. Whatever may be the attitude taken by my hon. friends opposite in regard to this matter of delegation of power, surely we, who are elected to represent constituents who do not share the views of hon. gentlemen opposite, cannot be expected to agree with their idea that the greatest man since confederation sits on the treasury bench opposite. Our people do not share that view. Mine have a wholly, a radically different view from that of hon. gentlemen opposite. I believe I have in the house a mandate to represent the electors of the constituency of Quebec South, and also in a constitutional way to represent the electors of every constituency in Canada. But dealing for a moment only with those of Quebec South, I am under the impression that I have some sort of contractual obligation towards them to join in the discussions in this house, to debate matters which are within the competence of parliament, and to express their views. Were I to accept the salary, even a reduced one, and not perform the obligations which I undertook when I stood for parliament, I would feel, and I commend this to hon. gentlemen if perhaps they have the same kind of conscience as that which troubles me, that I had been false to my trust, that I had neglected my mandate, and that I was accepting the salarly under false pretences.

Having dealt with the powers which this act confers upon the executive, and having expressed my own view at least as strongly as I can, namely, that I do not believe that we should delegate such power to any executive or to any person, may I now deal for a moment, and I do it with some reluctance, with the next point which I wish to discuss, namely: Is the person to whom it is proposed to entrust these powers one to whom we can in conscience entrust all authority in the state?

An hon. MEMBER: Yes.

Mr. POWER: The hon. gentleman answers yes, and his opinion is a respectable one, but I regret that during the course of the observations that I wish to make I shall have to differ from him. This is a matter which I find it somewhat distasteful to discuss, since it has been my practice ever since I entered politics not to indulge in or discuss personalities. But on account of the peculiar circumstances of the case, in that it is proposed, as I hope presently to be able to show, to entrust to one man supreme power in this country, and in that this one man has, partly of his own volition and partly on account of the extravagant and exaggerated adulation of his followers, thrown his personality into politics so that it has become almost a political issue, we who take a definite stand on this matter must discuss that personality as any other live political issue. In doing so I wish to speak with candour and frankness and not to be unmindful of the somewhat inexplicable fact that personally I hold the Prime Minister in high esteem. If he were here I would spare his blushes by not enumerating at too great a length the high qualities which he possesses. Suffice it to say that he has talents of no mean order. He is able and energetic. On the other hand, I submit that perhaps on account of those very talents, and perhaps on account of the realization he has that he does possess them, he is unfitted to exercise supreme power and control in a country such as this. His very talents may be those which if checked, controlled, and braked would make him an admirable constitutional Prime Minister, but his very defects are those which I fear would lead this country into calamity and disaster if he were allowed to continue as the dictator thereof. He is, as I think his friends will agree with me, very able, but he is as unstable as the shifting sands.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. POWER: He is inconstant. I am glad to see the Prime Minister coming in. I should like to return, Mr. Speaker, to the category of the qualities which I ascribed to the Prime Minister, as well as the defects which I think more than negative those qualities when he asks us to entrust him with supreme power in the state. I was about to say—and I am very glad that he is here now, so that I can say it to him in the manner of a kind, frank and candid friend—that I believe he is as inconstant as it is possible to be, that he is variable, that he is unstable, and that he lacks in character that ponderation, that prudence and that wisdom which mark the truly great statesman.

Mr. BENNETT: Could you not find another adjective?

Mr. POWER: In order to describe the Prime Minister with praise or blame, one is apt to fall into exaggeration. The exaggeration of praise I may leave to hon. gentlemen opposite. Surely we on this side can tell the truth in the way of blame. However estimable the Prime Minister may be in his private character and in his private relations, I much regret to say that in his public relations here in this house he often exhibits the manners of a Chicago policeman and the temperament of a Hollywood actor.

Mr. STEVENS: Shame.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, I should think this highly characteristic of the hon. gentleman but hardly in order, and certainly out of taste.

Mr. POWER: I regret that my right hon. friend is mumbling again. If he desires to call me to order, I shall be only too glad to sit down while he states his point.

Mr. BENNETT: I should think the observations were not in order, Mr. Speaker, I am perfectly content that the hon. gentleman should exhaust himself, as his colleagues have, in adjectives. I have no complaint to make, but I have been reminded so frequently that I have some responsibility with respect to this house that I would ask the hon. gentleman if he thinks that as a matter of decent conduct in debate he is doing credit to the House of Commons.

Mr. POWER: That is not a point of order, but merely a protest from the right hon. gentleman.

Mr. BENNETT: Not a protest.

[Mr. Power.]

Mr. POWER: If it is a point of order, I am in your judgment, Mr. Speaker. The language which I used is language which I sincerely believe is that which should be attributed to the Prime Minister. I regret that I have to say it, but it is my sincere belief and conviction. An hon. gentleman asked me what good is it going to do? Whether or not the Prime Minister may learn to improve his manner in the house from having listened to those opposite who have had to feel in the past the weight of his cudgels and sometimes the hurt derived from his elephantine sense of humour, whether or not he will improve his manner towards those of us who after all have a perfect right to be here, I at all events shall have discharged my duty by saying what I think is proper to be said.

Having said perhaps all that may be necessary to show that from my standpoint at least the Prime Minister is not one to whom we should entrust the powers he is asking for, may I go a step further and say that the administration of the act which it is proposed by this legislation to extend has not been such as to assure us that we can confide our mandate, abdicate our powers, and allow the government to carry on as they have in the past. Let us see for a moment what steps were taken by the Prime Minister, and to a very limited extent by the members of his cabinet. The general election—I will refer to it only for a moment—was won by the Prime Minister on almost only one issue. It was won —and now perhaps he will not be so displeased—it was won largely through his efforts, and largely through the use of his resources. After the election—probably the greatest personal victory which any statesman had ever won in Canada—he proceeded to organize his government and, taking as his model the soviet system to which I have already referred, he proceeded either rigidly to exclude the intelligentsia from his councils or to reduce them to a state of taciturnity. Having obtained control of his cabinet, he proceeded by the strength of his personality —which admittedly is very great—to overawe and subdue his own followers. During the whole of one session and the greater part of another no one, not even a cabinet minister, was allowed to speak in this house. The situation at that time reminded me somewhat of that which is said to have existed in the city of Boston at one time—

> Where the Lodges speak only to Cabots,
> And the Cabots speak only to God.

Members sitting on the opposite side could talk only to ministers, and the ministers could talk only to the Prime Minister's private secretary.

My right hon. friend, not satisfied with the control of his own cabinet and of his own party, proceeded to overawe parliament, which he did—I will admit it—and by a law passed last session made himself supreme dictator in this country. It is in giving consideration to that act that I think we ought to judge whether or not we should renew our mandate to him. Earlier in my remarks I made reference to his inconsistencies and his instability. I can illustrate this best, perhaps, by referring to the changes in the tariff, whereby a miracle which has not been seen on this earth for many a day was wrought by the right hon. gentleman when he turned potatoes into radishes; or by referring to his course of action on the budget, which provided that no longer would there be any sales tax exemptions, yet one month afterwards he restored all those exemptions; or by referring to his legislation on the income tax, whereby he explained to the house that at last we were to have a real income tax act, and a month or so afterwards, because forsooth someone had intimated that the bill as proposed would have the effect of de-taxing wealthy men—of whom he was admittedly one—this so offended his pride and self-complacency that he scrapped the whole amendment, even although sections of it were in the general interests of Canada.

But to revert to the procedure followed in the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act. The first phase, if I may so call it, was that of extraordinary and extravagant expenditure. The right hon. gentleman and his followers went about the country, I will not say hat in hand, but begging municipalities, railways, provinces, "For heaven's sake, spend money." They were endeavouring to spend their way out of depression. Acting under those instructions and following that theory, public works were begun from one end of the country to the other: they built everything from sewers to cemeteries, from theatres to —well, they are called vespasiennes in French. The next phase was when they began to economize on the money voted for public works by this parliament and thus shift the burden on the municipalities and the provinces. The third phase was a still more drastic curtailment, followed by what practically amounted to a policy of dole—a dole not restrained, not covered by any legal enactment, but a dole of the kind which it was impossible to control in any way, shape or form. The fifth phase—the phase that we seem to have reached now—is that in which persons receiving relief are obliged to give notes. I heard with considerable interest the statement of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) to the effect that in the city of Winnipeg people receiving relief—I take it that means the labouring classes and the middle classes—to the extent of $3, $4, or $5 worth of groceries every week are obliged to sign a note before they can obtain that relief.

Mr. BENNETT: That comes from the province.

Mr. POWER: Whether it comes from the province or from the federal government, the responsibility taken by my right hon. friend was to relieve unemployment, was to give those people work—at least when he gives them charity let him not ask them for a note in return.

Mr. BENNETT: He did not; that was the Manitoba government.

Mr. POWER: Take it in whatever way the right hon. gentleman wishes, one-third of the relief, if I understand it correctly, is payable by the federal government, one-third by the province of Manitoba, and one-third by the municipal authorities. Well, in Winnipeg, as I read the statement made by the member for Winnipeg North Centre, there is no question of giving a note for one-third of the relief to the municipality; a note is given for the whole amount of the relief. If that is the situation in Winnipeg, I ask my right hon. friend how it is that the citizens of Manitoba are being penalized when the citizens of other sections of the country are not. In my city you are not asking for notes—nobody is asking for notes in return for relief. If notes were asked in return for relief, I can assure the right hon. gentleman that that is not the kind of relief that we expected from him.

So that we have five different policies in respect of unemployment alone. I ask hon. gentlemen opposite—I know it is useless; I ask hon. gentlemen on this side of the house: Can they conscientiously give full power and authority to someone who on the face of it, and on the face of his past performances in this very matter, does not know which way he is going, how he is going, or how far he is going?

In regard to the whole question of unemployment relief, I am firmly convinced that if it were possible for the Prime Minister to admit for one moment even the suspicion that he had made a mistake—which I doubt—he would have to say that in his own heart and soul he has been bitterly disappointed in the success or lack of success of this relief measure, and that he knows this policy has been an utter dismal failure. I have here extracts which I do not propose to read, but from which I gather that the very men who supported the Prime Minister, who were his most enthusiastic backers, who saw in him a great business man who had the training and ability to bring Canada out of this crisis, now are convinced that the very best thing he can do in regard to this matter of unemployment relief is to welsh on the promises he made during the election. I do not know that it is necessary for me to translate for the benefit of my right hon. friend the meaning of a word borrowed from the gambling houses and the race tracks, but a welsher is a man who does not pay his debts of honour or who does not redeem his promises. I believe that the great body of the supporters of the Prime Minister would like him now to abandon his useless attempt to gamble with the future of this country, and to come before this house and the country and say, "I recognize that this depression, which I believed would last six months or a year, is of much longer duration, and I realize that no new Moses can bring us out of our difficulty but that it is a matter which must be dealt with by the common and concerted effort of all the people."

I believe that if instead of saying to members of this house, "I do not want your advice; I will not listen to you; I, and I alone, am sufficient to deal with this matter and settle the affairs of the Canadian people," the Prime Minister would take another attitude and really seek the cooperation of those who are just as sincere and just as patriotic as he, and of those who believe in the future of this country just as much as he believes in it, more good would be done. There are no whispers of death from this side of the house; there is not one of us who does not believe that this country will come through with flying colours, but if we wish to retain our self-respect we cannot concur for one moment in the proposal that only by giving one man supreme and unlimited power, by giving him supreme control over the finances, the lives, the properties and the laws of the people of this country, can we get out of the present depression. To that proposition we answer no.

Mr. CHARLES EDOUARD FERLAND (Joliette) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I feel in duty bound to raise my humble voice in a protest against this pernicious legislation which the government, thanks to a servile and submissive majority at his command, is attempting to pass.

This debate deals with the resolution of the right hon. the Prime Minister who moves that the house resolve itself into committee and decide "that it is expedient to introduce a bill to amend chapter 58 of the statutes of Canada, 1931, striking out the word "March" in section 8, and substituting the word "May" therefor." In other words, he is asking for the extension of two months, of the legislation which is the subject matter of this discussion.

In the days of my youth, I often heard children singing this proverbial truism: "Mr. de la Palisse is dead; he lost his life; a quarter of an hour before his demise, he was still living." Our friends on the government side have gone to a great deal of trouble in their attempt to show that this legislation, null and void since the first of March, is still extant and should survive another two months.

During this debate, it has been shown to the satisfaction of those willing to examine facts dispassionately and without any evidence of unfairness, that this legislation has not given the results which the government expected from it. Everybody knows that, under the measure which was intended to remedy unemployment and give relief to the farming community, nothing whatsoever was done for the farmers in the province of Quebec; it is also a well known fact the number of the unemployed has been steadily increasing throughout the country; and lastly, out of the millions spent for the relief of the unemployed, only $3 went to the men employed for each labour day that cost the sum of $10 to the government. At least, it is realized that the suggestion made by the right hon. the Prime Minister calls for no constructive action as far as the future is concerned and that we are merely asked to extend, for two months, or for a month and a half from this day, the dictatorial powers which will enable the government to go on spending the public funds without the advice of parliament and under which the government shall be authorized to amend or disregard existing laws without consulting parliament and in contradiction with parliamentary traditions.

During this debate, a good deal has been said about the right hon. the Prime Minister. On the one hand, hon. members from both sides of the house were pleased to admit that he was a man of brilliant achievements, a lawyer of great standing and a business man of vast experience. Some went so far as to endow him with extraordinary powers, at times comparing him to an emperor, then calling him a dictator; others went farther and said of him that he was the Mussolini of Canada. Reference was also made to the exaggeration of his qualities, obviously in connection with his administration of public affairs. This afternoon, the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Beaubien) even suggested that, had the Prime Minister been a married man, he would have proved a better administrator.

Mr. BARRETTE (Translation): That will come.

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): As the saying goes, talent is acquired in the solitude of study while a person's character develops itself in society. It seems to me that, if the Prime Minister, who is a man of rare talent, had married, the companionship of a comely Canadian woman, would have somewhat tempered his rather autocratic disposition. It might be argued that my leader is in the same situation; but it must be remembered that the latter has been in power for nine years and that during this period, he has devoted himself to his country; he contracted a solemn and lawful marriage with the population of Canada which became his sole concern; and we all know how imposing and numerous a family will be his at the next election.

Mr. BARRETTE (Translation): Where is the lady?

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): Mr. Speaker, the 30th of June, 1930, was a fateful day for Canada. Shortly after the Conservative party was elected, a special session of parliament was called. At that time was inaugurated by the government a sinister era of extravagance; and from that day they have met with the approval of all the political clowns in the Conservative party who do not mind witnessing this disregard of the constitution, ignoring perhaps a century of struggle for responsible government, and at least nearly a hundred years of constitutional liberty won at the greatest cost.

When members on your right, sir, endeavoured to uphold the act under discussion, all, without exception, avoided, by all means, to discuss the constitutional aspect of the question. They contented themselves with stating that they had confidence in their leader: and each time we pointed out to them that our constitution, our traditions, our parliamentary usages and customs were being outraged by this resolution, their only answer was: "Magister dixit," the master has spoken, "ipse dixit," we are fully satisfied.

This act which one endeavours to revive, at present, has been disapproved and condemned by an important section of the press of this country, by numerous institutions, by all members of the opposition and even by the Canadian Bar Association of which the right hon. Prime Minister was president in 1929 and of which he is still a member, so that I can state, with some truth, that this resolution has been disapproved and condemned by the Prime Minister himself. Let me simply point out, in this respect, that at the last meeting of the Canadian Bar Association, in October, 1931, the president, a legal light in Quebec, Mr. St. Laurent, spoke as follows in his presidential address, as reported by the Canadian Bar Review of October, 1931, at page 525 and the following. I shall quote his words in English, as I have not the French version:

> A delegation by parliament of its powers in the widest possible terms the executive authority for the period during which the act is to remain in force.

And, on page 528, he continues:

> . . . in these trying times great indeed are the responsibilities of statesmanship, but great also is, at all times, the responsibility of the legal profession to guard with the utmost care, giving of course due and unprejudiced consideration to all pertinent circumstances, against any measure which might tend to unduly abridge the actual participation of the citizens at large in the making of the laws under which they shall live and their actual and timely control over the expenditures of their common funds.

Parliament has now been in session for almost a month and a half; we are aware that unemployment is wide spread throughout the country and distress exists in all towns large or small. May I state that in the town of Joliette alone, which comprises hardly 11,000 people, there is almost 700 unemployed who to support their families, can only obtain a few days of work per week from the municipality. It is amazing to note that the government, notwithstanding its pledge to relieve the situation and to improve the lot of the workmen, has not yet thought fit to take efficient means to put an end to the widespread distress in this country. One would have thought that the government would seek, for instance, to find a solution to the desperate situation in which are our railways. Every day we are informed that their returns are gradually decreasing; every day we are told that the management is forced to dismiss its employees. In the town of Joliette alone, which I have the honour to represent in the house, constantly employees are dismissed who, for the last fifteen or twenty years, earned honourably a livelihood in the employ of the railways, to-day they are without work and unable to find any occupation as they know no other trade which might facilitate their earning a livelihood.

Mr. BARRETTE (Translation): That is due to Mr. Thornton.

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): It is a pity that the government does not exert itself more in seeking to adopt measures better designed for the welfare of this country, when we witness industries dismissing a number of their employees and cutting the salaries of others, when foreign trade decreases from day to day owing to the Chinese wall which the government has erected by its tariff policy and which precludes the advantages of foreign trade; when farmers are starving and a great number of them have been bankrupt, their products selling at wretched prices and they are forced to purchase at exorbitant prices the articles they cannot produce themselves.

Our hon. friends opposite have often stated that we should suggest to the government the measures to be taken to relieve unemployment. It was shown by Liberal speakers that a great number of practical suggestions were made, but that the government completely ignored them.

Mr. BARRETTE (Translation): What does the hon. member suggest?

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): That you should hold your tongue.

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): If one takes into account the disastrous effects of the Conservative policy, the most pressing matter would be an appeal to the people, the calling of an election that would bring about a change of government.

An English humorist once stated that the parliament of Great Britain could do anything except change a man into a woman. The right hon. Prime Minister with this resolution—

Mr. BARRETTE (Translation): He never attempted that.

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): —with this audacious resolution enabling him to take away parliament's powers and entrust them to the executive, conveys the impression that he also believes himself capable of doing anything. I would not be surprised if he tried in South-east Grey at the next elections to change into a man the only woman member we have the honour of sitting with in this house.

Mr. BARRETTE (Translation): I object.

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to note the results of the Conservative policy as distinguished from the results secured under a Liberal régime. If we look backwards a little, we observe that each time the Liberal party assumed the reins of office it restored prosperity to the country. On the other hand, the Conservative party always was a bad administrator and an impediment to the country's progress. That party's administration always ended with deficits and a general business stagnation throughout the country. In 1896, when Sir Wilfrid Laurier was returned to power, our friends from the province of Quebec who were elected on the butter issue, the butter-makers as the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Boulanger) called them this afternoon, will recall that eggs were selling at that time for eight or nine cents a dozen, and butter brought a ridiculously low price, varying from ten to fifteen cents a pound, according to the season. In 1930, when the Conservatives promised during the election campaign to secure forty cents a pound for butter—

Mr. BARRETTE (Translation): That will come.

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): —they succeeded in seizing power, yet, what happened? Butter was sold at a ridiculous figure that ranged during the summer—

Mr. BARRETTE (Translation): Twenty-nine cents.

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): —from fifteen to twenty cents a pound in the various Canadian markets, this depending on the districts where the commodity was offered. Eggs are also being sold at an exceedingly low price.

Mr. BARRETTE (Translation): Thirty-seven cents.

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): There is very little demand for all the other products. The farmer can find practically no market for his commodities. In a word, everything seems on the verge of a collapse throughout the country.

Mr. Speaker, this measure which the government seeks to adopt transcends mere material things. There is a principle at stake. It seems to me the country must be rather puzzled that the Conservative members, particularly those from the province of Quebec, many of whom were educated in classical colleges, took university courses and entered the professions, and who, for that matter, acquired a thorough knowledge of our country's political history, know what our forefathers sacrificed to secure responsible government and are not unmindful of their struggles to win our constitutional liberties; it seems to me,

Canadians must find it strange to see these hon. members ready to surrender the rights of parliament and place the country in that particular situation that obtained more than a hundred years ago when it groaned under the rule of the "Family Compact." The country must consider it an extraordinary spectacle, the readiness on the part of these gentlemen to repudiate many centuries of stern struggles and show contempt for the finest pages written into our political history. I tell these hon. members they will have to give an accounting to the people who trusted them, and justify their betrayal. I may state they will be as helpless to justify their change of front as they proved to be when trying to motivate in this chamber the measure they seek to adopt. This is a radical enactment and we are duty-bound to oppose it. It runs counter to our most cherished traditions, to the time-honoured interpretation of our laws and to the constitution the people gave themselves. I say the Liberal members have nobly done their duty in opposing energetically, with all their might, this dangerous law which creates a precedent other governments or other parties could invoke at some later date.

In closing, I also wish to register my protest against this measure which marks a tendency in a certain direction and is also altogether too radical. I want my electors to know that we remember the past, respect our traditions and meet the people's wishes. Finally, I want the whole country to know that the descendents of the Sons of Liberty do not quail before the successors of the notorious Family Compact.

Mr. J. FERNAND FAFARD (L'Islet) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, allow me to offer my congratulations to the hon. members for Joliette (Mr. Ferland), Quebec South (Mr. Power) and to the other speakers who preceeded me upon their splendid treatment of the various aspects of the resolution before the house.

At the risk of displeasing the hon. member for Regina (Mr. Turnbull) who seems to have taken upon himself to count the number of columns each member fills in the pages of Hansard, you will allow me to address the house for a few minutes. I hope the hon. member for Regina will for once be liberal enough to forgive me. I will try and avoid offending the chaste ear of the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinonge (Mr. Barrette).

The resolution we are debating is so important that I would feel remiss in my duty to the electors of L'Islet county if I did not rise to voice my protest against the autocracy of a government which wants to take from us the rights bequeathed by the Fathers of Confederation, and also against the shameless expenditures effected under cover of the bill we are now asked to revive.

Before proceeding any further, Mr. Speaker, allow me to advert for a moment to the speech delivered in this house during the week by the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Gagnon). The member for Dorchester tried to graft his political career upon that of the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe)—

Mr. BARRETTE (Translation): He was not wrong.

Mr. FAFARD: Certainly not. However, he did forget one thing. In order that grafting may be successful, it must be practised upon a tree of the same family and size, that is if my memory of the lessons I learnt in botany serves me well. I think I can claim to be a true prophet when I state the grafting tried by the hon. member for Dorchester will not succeed and the new shoots will never bear fruit. For instance, there is one thing certain, though. The tree representing the riding of Quebec East will continue to thrive in the province of Quebec and throughout Canada. Its powerful branches will continue to canopy the Canadian soil it loves so deeply, and it will continue to bear those fruits which right-thinking Canadians could not fail to relish.

The member for Dorchester is one of my personal friends. He is a talented young man who completed a brilliant course at Oxford University. He is an able lawyer and possesses the gift of self-expression. In 1930, he abused the good faith of the electors of Dorchester county to whom he promised butter bringing sixty cents a pound and a general increase in the prices of all farm products if his party achieved power. Unfortunately for him, the Conservative party did come to power and the hon. member for Dorchester realizes that his promises have not been fulfilled. Thus, somewhat put out and finding perhaps his popularity waning in his riding, he thought it would be an excellent thing for him if he tried to reestablish himself before public opinion. I am not sure whether I am mistaken, but in his speech he seem to be trying to undermine the popularity of the hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Dupré) and that of his colleagues, for he kept repeating that he received requests from Levis and the ridings in the vicinity of Quebec. He wanted to show thereby, perhaps, that his popularity was much greater than that of the Solicitor General. However, I am under the impression —I may be in error—the great ambition of the hon. member for Dorchester is to secure appointment as Postmaster General and if his recommendation alone were lacking to ensure the elevation of the Postmaster General (Mr. Sauvé) to the Senate, I would not be surprised if he gave it very heartily.

If I had a word of advice to offer to the hon. member for Dorchester who is somewhat my junior in politics, I would tell him it sometimes bodes ill to try to build a political career upon the wreckage of another man's career. I regret that this talented young man tried to discredit the province of Quebec during the few minutes he spoke. He stated in the course of his speech that the electors of the province of Quebec had sold themselves last fall. I am more experienced than the member for Dorchester. I have taken part in several election campaigns, both provincial and federal, in the county of L'Islet, and I defy him to buy the vote of a single elector in my riding. I think I could make the same assertion with respect to the electors of Dorchester County. One proof that the electors did not sell themselves during the last provincial election is to be found in the fact they did not vote for the opposition party which promised them money at a rate of two per cent.

In the course of the last election campaign, the hon. Solicitor General covered the whole district of Quebec with a well-appointed organization for this pilgrimage. He was surrounded by brilliant speakers. He even had a loud speaker which he could make use of, when oratory failed, to broadcast selections played on a Victrola. Mr. Speaker, do you know what happened in all the Quebec ridings where he spoke? The Liberal candidates were elected. There was but one place where the hon. Solicitor General did not speak, his own riding. A Conservative was elected there.

Mr. BARRETTE (Translation): He had no Victrola.

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): I stated a moment ago this resolution was unconstitutional. We are contending to-day for rights given us at confederation; those rights for which our forefathers fought so many years. It is no longer a question of Conservatives or Liberals, of "reds" or "blues" in this chamber. We are concerned with the preservation of rights handed down to us. All of us were elected, you who sit to the right of Mr. Speaker, we who sit on his left, to pass laws that inure to the advantage of the country, and vote what money is required for the good government of Canada. Are we to now destroy the laws we enacted? Have we the right to do so, especially after the abuses committed under cover of the bill that expired March 1? I say no. You command a majority. By resorting to force, you may possibly succeed in carrying this resolution, but should you follow that course, I have no hesitation in saying you will sully the mandate your electors committed to your care.

Did the Prime Minister himself (Mr. Bennett) not state in his speech some ten days ago that it was repugnant to him to introduce such a measure? The right hon. Prime Minister knows full well he should not administer the country by orders in council, and that it is the function of parliament to legislate. I hold in my hand a copy of a very ably edited Conservative newspaper, L'Evénement. When a delegation came here some days ago to meet the premier and request grants for the city of Quebec, what was his answer? "This is a question which parliament must decide at the proper time."

Mr. Speaker, I ask myself why the members to the right do not approach their leader at the next party caucus, in order to submit to him—that which he admits himself when receiving delegations—that parliament must settle these questions? Why does he not adopt the same attitude in this house?

During nine years, from 1921 to 1930, our opponents preached on all sides the gospel of a very high customs tariff. We heard them proclaim repeatedly in various ways but always with great eloquence the advantages to be derived from such a fiscal policy. I well recall them telling us during that period: Gentlemen of the Liberal party, if we had a high tariff, you would see industries developing throughout the country and there would be no unemployment. Everybody being employed, there would be a steady market for farm products. At the 1930 session, the present government unfortunately put this policy of high protection into effect, and one has but to look around to-day to note the consequences. Our opponents tell us the tariff has resulted in the establishment of about one hundred new industries, but they refrain from adding the same tariff caused some three or four hundred industries to close their doors. At all events, nobody can confute this simple argument: If industries prospered as they did under the Liberal administration, we would not have the number of unemployed we have to-day.

Mr. Speaker, this much is obvious: the Conservative policy has operated disastrously. The Prime Minister himself admitted as much last summer. I remember him stating at that time in a moment of despair: "Only Providence can save us." I am convinced if Providence had told him: "Mr. Premier, I am willing to bring back prosperity if you will only withdraw your blank cheque," he would have replied: "My answer is no."

Mr. Speaker, the time has arrived when one must face squarely the grave conditions prevailing throughout the country. This is not the time to tell those who appeal to parliament for work or bread: "Get the Olympic spirit." This is not the time to tell the farmers who cannot find markets for their products: "Get the Olympic spirit." When the hour strikes for the people to pass judgment on the government's policy, and our friends face the electorate we will tell them: "Get the Olympic spirit."

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Monday, March 21, 1932

The house met at three o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

GOVERNMENT ORDERS TO HAVE PRECEDENCE ON MONDAYS

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved:

That on Mondays after the 21st March instant, until the end of the session, government notices of motions and government orders shall have precedence over all business except questions by members and notices of motions for the production of papers.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVILEGE—MR. VENIOT

Hon. P. J. VENIOT (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. I hold in my hand the St. John Telegraph-Journal for March 19, 1932, which contains the report of a speech delivered in the New Brunswick legislature on Friday last by the Minister of Public Works for that province, in which reference is made to myself. The report states:

In Gloucester the ex-Postmaster General had made charges which, if based on facts, would have been grave.

At his request, Hon. Mr. Stewart continued, an official from the federal government had investigated the charges, which were disproven.

The complaints I made to the department were not reported on at all. A report was submitted by Mr. Carter, referring to only one complaint which, after all, was not made to him by myself, and in that connection he stated that no federal money had been expended on that particular road. When I was speaking on February 23 the Minister of Labour interrupted to state that on none of the roads mentioned by me in connection with my complaints had federal money been expended. I differed with the minister and repeated the statement that federal grants had been made in connection with the roads upon which my complaints were based. I have before me a report submitted by the Minister of Public Works of the province of New Brunswick, which was laid on the table of the legislature last week and which gives the list of works for which federal aid has been received. The name of every road mentioned by me on February 23 is to be found in that list.

I take objection to the statement that the complaints or charges which I had to make have been disproved. That is not the case, and I am prepared to stand by what I stated at that time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

LOANS TO BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. REID:

What sums of money were granted or given by way of a loan, to the province of British Columbia for purposes other than grants or loans under the Unemployment Relief Act of 1931, during the fiscal year 1931-1932, giving the amount of money, if any, so granted and the respective dates any such moneys were given and for what specific purpose?

Mr. CAHAN:

Amount	Date	Specific purpose of payment
$ cts.
369,408 33	July 2, 1931	Amount due on subsidy account.
369,408 33	Jan. 2, 1932	" " "
4,302 67	Oct. 19, 1931	Subvention under Employment Offices' Co-ordination Act quarter ending June 30, 1931.
4,529 24	Feb. 5, 1932	Subvention under Employment Offices' Co-ordination Act quarter ending September 30, 1931.
162,383 52	April 19, 1931	Dominion Government's proportion of expenditure under Old Age Pensions Act quarter ending March 31, 1931.
167,228 53	July 31, 1931	Dominion Government's proportion of expenditure under Old Age Pensions Act quarter ending June 30, 1931.
175,134 42	Oct. 27, 1931	Dominion Government's proportion of expenditure under Old Age Pensions Act quarter ending September 30, 1931.
182,752 12	Jan. 28, 1932	Dominion Government's proportion of expenditure under Old Age Pensions Act quarter ending December 31, 1931.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—UNITED STATES COAL

Mr. RALSTON:

1. What is the amount of United States coal: (a) anthracite; (b) bituminous, used by the Canadian National Railways during the year 1931?

2. What was the cost of such coal?

3. What is the analysis of the marketable grade of United States coal used on Canadian National Railways compared with the marketable grade of: (a) Springhill; (b) Cape Breton coal suitable for such use?

4. What are the comparative prices of such Cape Breton coal, Springhill coal and American coal delivered at Montreal and Toronto by water?

5. Is there a satisfactory coal handling plant at Toronto and Levis, and what coal storage is there in each of such places?

Mr. MANION:

1. (a) United States anthracite 6,350 tons; (b) United States bituminous 1,585,459 tons.

2. The cost of United States anthracite was $59,333.13, or $9.34 per ton on cars Canadian National tracks. The cost of United States bituminous was $6,182,479, or $3.90 per ton f.o.b. cars Canadian National tracks, duty paid.

3. Approximate chemical analyses on "air dry" basis are as follows:

—	R/M Pittsburg No. 8 seam, Belmont Co., Ohio	Nut Freeport seam, Armstrong Co., Pa.	R/M Pittsburg seam, Indiana Co., Pa.	Egg Pittsburg seam, Monongalia Co., N.W. Va.	R/M Cape Breton various mines, Sydney area	R/M Springhill
Moisture	1·50	0·97	1·00	0·83	1·38	1·55
Volatile	39·50	32·52	33·28	35·44	32·32	32·27
Fixed carbon	50·90	60·04	59·05	57·39	58·45	58·62
Ash	8·10	6·47	6·67	6·34	7·85	7·56
Sulphur	4·00	1·82	1·51	1·52	3·29	1·71
B.T.U	13,500	14,256	14,232	14,377	13,834	13,654

These figures are based on C.N.R. sampling and analyses, and are considered by Canadian National authorities to be representative.

4. Water delivery at Montreal; duty and wharfage paid: Cape Breton coal, $5.10 on cars; Springhill coal, no information; United States coal, $4.78, including exchange, $4.52, excluding exchange; British Coal, $4.38.

The above figures are f.o.b. cars and do not include anything for winter storage, etc.

Water delivery at Toronto: Cape Breton coal, $5.65 to $5.75 f.a.s., $5.94 to $6.04 on cars, wharfage paid; Springhill coal, no information; United States coal ex Erie, $4.12 on cars including wharfage, with exchange, $3.86 on cars including wharfage, without exchange.

Water delivery to Toronto, thence rail to Mimico, add 10 cents to above figures, as approximate out-of-pocket cost of haul.

Note.—The cost of water delivery of Cape Breton coal to Toronto, is not credited with any subvention, as it is the understanding of the railway company that subvention assistance so far only applies to railborne movement.

5. In the opinion of the Canadian National Railway authorities there is not a satisfactory coal-handling plant at Toronto. At Levis there is one. There is no coal storage space adjoining the Levis plant, but there is space for 250,000 tons at Joffre, nine miles from Levis dock.

The railway officials claim that the analysis of a coal does not tell the whole story, because some coals may be fairly high in B.T.U's, but are friable and difficult to handle. However, the analyses given are representative of coals which the railway is now using.

There is no Springhill coal, so far as the company is aware, shipped by water to Montreal.

In all cases the figures used relate to net tons.

WEDGEPORT, N.S.—LONG WHARF

Mr. RALSTON:

1. Were moneys paid out in cash by the foreman or other person paying workmen, in connection with the repairs to Long wharf at Wedgeport under the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act of 1931?

2. If so, to whom and in what amount, and by what method was such cash made available to such persons or person?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds):

1 and 2. All wages at Wedgeport, N.S., unemployment relief works were paid by individual cheques sent to the foreman for distribution.

MONTREAL ELEVATORS

Mr. ROSS:

1. How much grain has been received in Montreal elevators, shipped or transferred from Buffalo, U.S.A.?

2. How much of this grain arrived in: (a) Canadian boats; (b) American boats; (c) Eastern Transportation Company boats?

Mr. STEVENS:

1. See statement below.

2. See statement below

Canadian grain shipped from United States ports (principally Buffalo), to Canadian ports (principally Montreal), down the Welland Canal.
1931

—	Wheat	Oats	Barley	Total
	bushels	bushels	bushels	bushels
In United States boats	282,700	.....	31,000	313,700
In Canadian boats	9,634,700	195,705	1,516,750	11,247,155
*In Eastern Steamship Company boats	3,435,038	.....	337,605	3,772,643

*Included in "Canadian Boats".

NEW GLASGOW, N.S.—WHARF

Mr. ILSLEY:

1. What amount of money was expended by the government during the year 1931 on repairs and extensions to the public wharf at New Glasgow, Nova Scotia: (a) for material; (b) for labour?

2. Who was the foreman in charge of the work?

3. What remuneration did he receive?

4. On whose recommendation was he appointed?

5. In what capacity was Clifford Rose of New Glasgow employed?

6. What remuneration did he receive?

7. On whose recommendation was he appointed?

8. By whom was the timber for said work supplied?

9. Were tenders called for the supply of timber?

10. Who was the lowest tenderer?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds):

1.

(a) Material.. .. ..$ 6,027 63
(b) Labour.. .. .. 4,678 20

$10,705 83

2. J. H. McDonald

3. $5 per day for 81 days from November 19, 1931, to February 23, 1932, total $405.

4. District engineer.

5. Employed as sub-foreman.

6. $4.50 per day for 81 days from November 19, 1931, to February 23, 1932, total, $364.50.

7. District engineer.

8. C. H. Glendinning, New Glasgow, N.S.

9. Yes.

10. C. H. Glendinning lowest on whole order.

LIEUT.-COL. DANIEL SUTHERLAND

Mr. ILSLEY:

1. In connection with inspection of wharves and other construction work by the present government, what position does Lt.-Col. Daniel Sutherland, formerly of Halifax, Nova Scotia, and now of Pictou, Nova Scotia, hold?

2. On whose recommendation was he appointed?

3. What are his duties and his salary?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds):

1. Supervising foreman for eastern Nova Scotia, in connection with works carried out by Public Works department and authorized under Unemployment and Farm Relief Act, 1931.

2. District engineer.

3. (a) Answered by No. 1; (b) $7 per day.

CHAMBLY CANAL—SUPERINTENDENT

Mr. GOULET:

1. How was the present superintendent of the Chambly canal appointed?

2. Who asked for the inquiry which was held last year in connection with certain employees of the Chambly canal?

Mr. MANION:

1. Appointed by Civil Service Commission, after usual advertisement calling for applications.

2. Hon. Mr. Duranleau.

JOSEPH DESROSIERS

Mr. LAFLECHE:

1. Is Joseph Desrosiers, inspector of fruits, in the county of Rimouski, still in the employ of the government?

2. What was the total amount of salary paid to him from July 28, 1930, to January 1, 1932?

3. Is he paid by the day or by the month?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort):

1. Yes.

2. $1,528.85.

3. By the month except for occasional work on per diem basis during the period of the year when he is not on continuous duty.

TECHNICAL EDUCATION GRANTS

Mr. SPEAKMAN:

1. What sums, if any, have been paid each province, under the provisions of the act passed by this parliament last session, and which provided for the payment of an annual grant, for the purpose of assisting technical and vocational education?

2. Was an order in council issued, suspending the payment of this grant?

3. If so, when was this order in council issued, under what authority, and for what period was the payment of this grant suspended?

4. Is it the intention of the government to rescind the said order in council within the near future?

Mr. GORDON:

1. None.

2. No.

3 and 4. Answered by No. 2.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF—QUEBEC

Mr. CASGRAIN:

1. When were projects to aid unemployment in the province of Quebec for the year 1931, submitted to the federal government for approval, and what projects were so approved?

2. What amount was allocated to the province of Quebec for unemployment relief works up to March 31, 1931, and how much for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1932?

3. What projects were approved for the year ending March 31, 1932, and what were the dates of approval?

4. What projects, if any, were approved in the years 1931 and 1932, to the 31st of March, in the county of Charlevoix-Saguenay, and for what amount in each case?

CENSUS ENUMERATORS—BROME, MISSISQUOI

Mr. RHEAUME:

1. Who was in charge of the census enumerators in Brome-Missisquoi in 1931, and how much did he receive for his services?

2. Who was the enumerator in each municipality, and how much was each paid?

Mr. STEVENS: Tabled herewith.

TRADE WITH ARGENTINE

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia):

1. Of what commodities did our exports and imports with Argentine consist in each of the years 1930 and 1931?

2. What were the amounts and values of same, by months, in each of the said years?

3. Does the general or the intermediate tariff rate apply on goods between Canada and Argentine?

[Mr. LaFlèche.]

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—DINING CAR EMPLOYEES

Mr. LAFLECHE:

What are the names of the employees on the dining cars of the Canadian National Railways travelling between Montreal and Halifax?

CANADIAN MERCHANT MARINE

Mr. LAFLEHCE:

1. What are the names of all vessels of the Canadian merchant marine?

2. What are the names of the men manning each of said vessels?

J. D. PARMELEE

Mr. PICKEL:

1. What was the amount of the travelling and other expenses, year by year, from 1919-20 to 1924-25 of Mr. J. D. Parmalee, late inspector of customs for the Sherbrooke division?

2. What was the amount for travelling and other expenses year by year from 1926-27 to date, for the same services performed by Mr. J. C. A. Bordeleau, present customs inspector of the same division?

UNOPPOSED MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF—LEVIS

Mr. POWER:

For a copy of all papers, correspondence, reports and pay sheets, giving in detail the name of each person employed, the amounts paid for labour, and the amounts paid for material in connection with work performed at Levis, Quebec, under order in council, P.C. 2650.

VALCARTIER CAMP

Mr. POWER:

For a copy of all papers, correspondence, reports and pay sheets, giving in detail the name of each person employed, the amounts paid for labour, and the amounts paid for material in connection with repairs and improvements at Valcartier camp, Quebec, under order in council, P.C. 2650.

FORTIFICATION WALL—QUEBEC

Mr. POWER:

For a copy of all papers, correspondence, reports and pay sheets, giving in detail the name of each person employed, the amounts paid for labour, and the amounts paid for material in connection with work performed on the fortification wall at Quebec, under order in council, P.C. 2650.

JERSEY COVE, QUEBEC, LIGHTKEEPER

Mr. BRASSET:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, and other documents, including copy of evidence heard at the inquiry in connection with the charge of political partisanship against Mr. Camille Dunn, of Cap des Rosiers, lighthouse keeper at Jersey cove, county of Gaspe.

ST. GEDEON, QUEBEC—WHARF

Mr. DUGUAY:

For a copy of all correspondence, accounts, and vouchers, relating to the expenditure in connection with the wharf at St. Gedeon, from January 1, 1929, to December 31, 1930.

IVRY, QUEBEC, POSTMASTERSHIP

Mr. POULIOT:

For a copy of all correspondence, evidence, inquiries, reports, petitions and other documents, in connection with the dismissal of Joseph Morneau, postmaster at Ivry, county of Témiscouata, Quebec, and the appointment of his successor.

LAMY SUD, QUEBEC, POSTMASTERSHIP

Mr. POULIOT:

For a copy of all correspondence, evidence, inquiries, reports, petitions and other documents, in connection with the dismissal of Mr. Narcisse Ouellet, postmaster of Lamy Sud, county of Témiscouata, Quebec, and the appointment of his successor.

RAUDOT, QUEBEC, POSTMASTERSHIP

Mr. POULIOT:

For a copy of all correspondence, evidence, inquiries, reports, petitions and other documents, in connection with the dismissal of Mr. Andre Beaulieu, postmaster of Raudot, county of Témiscouata, Quebec, and the appointment of his successor.

CHEMIN DU LAC, QUE, POSTMASTER

Mr. POULIOT:

For a copy of all correspondence, evidence, inquiries, reports, petitions and other documents, in connection with the dismissal of Mr. A. Bélanger, postmaster of Chemin du Lac, county of Témiscouata, Quebec, and the appointment of his successor.

RIOU, QUE., POSTMASTERSHIP

Mr. POULIOT:

For a copy of all correspondence, evidence, inquiries, reports, petitions and other documents, in connection with the dismissal of Mr. Omer Sirois, postmaster of Riou, Quebec, and the appointment of his successor.

DENONVILLE, QUE., POSTMASTERSHIP

Mr. POULIOT:

For a copy of all correspondence, evidence, inquiries, reports, petitions and other documents, in connection with the dismissal of Mr. Thomas Dubé, as postmaster of Denonville, county of Témiscouata, Quebec, and the appointment of his successor.

NORMANDIN, QUE., POSTMASTER

Mr. POULIOT:

For a copy of all correspondence, evidence, inquiries, reports, petitions and other documents, in connection with the dismissal of the postmaster at Normandin, Lake St. John, and the appointment of his successor.

ISIDORE JEAN

Mr. POULIOT:

For a copy of all correspondence exchanged between Mr. Isidore Jean, of Sully, Quebec, and all other ministers, except those of the Post Office and Pensions and National Health, relating to the position of postmaster at Sully, Quebec.

WEDGEPORT, N.S., LONG WHARF

Mr. RALSTON:

For a return showing the pay sheets, vouchers and particulars of the moneys expended in connection with the repairs on Long wharf, Wedgeport, Nova Scota, under the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act of 1931.

ANNUAL TRAINING COSTS, 1931

Mr. RALSTON:

For a return showing the amount spent in each military district for the annual training in the fiscal year ending March 31, 1932.

CARLYLE, SASK., MAIL CONTRACT

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia):

For a copy of all correspondence exchanged between the Post Office Department or any official thereof, and any person or persons between August, 1930, and September, 1931, relative to the mail contract for transfer of the mail between the Canadian National Railways and Canadian Pacific Railway depots at Carlyle, Saskatchewan.

QUEBEC, UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

Mr. LAFLECHE:

For a copy of all correspondence and resolutions in possession of the Labour department, forwarded by the Quebec government and municipalities, requesting delay in carrying out public works in connection with the unemployment relief.

GEO. HUDON

Mr. CASGRAIN:

For a copy of all correspondence, letters, documents, reports, evidence and inquiries in connection with certain complaints made against Geo. Hudon, an employee of customs and excise at Chambord, Lake St. John, during the years 1930 and 1931.

GIRONDE, QUE., POSTMASTERSHIP

Mr. POULIOT:

For a copy of all correspondence, evidence, reports, inquiries and other documents in connection with the dismissal of Mr. Johnny April, as postmaster at Gironde, county of Temiscouata, and the appointment of his successor.

MONTAGNE RONDE, QUE., POSTMASTERSHIP

Mr. POULIOT:

For a copy of all correspondence, evidence, inquiries, reports and other documents in connection with the dismissal of Mr. David Lebel, as postmaster of Montagne Ronde, Quebec, and the appointment of his successor.

LA RICHARDIERE, QUE., POSTMASTERSHIP

Mr. POULIOT:

For a copy of all correspondence, evidence, inquiries, reports, petitions and other documents in connection with the dismissal of Joseph Michaud, as postmaster of La Richardierre, Quebec, and the appointment of his successor.

VOCATIONAL EDUCATION ACT, 1931

Mr. HEENAN:

For a copy of all correspondence and other documents in connection with the decision of the government to postpone the operation of the Vocational Education Act, 1931.

AUGUSTE TÉTREAULT, DISMISSAL

Mr. RHEAUME:

For a copy of all correspondence, reports and other documents in connection with the dismissal of Mr. Auguste Tétrault, postmaster at Henryville, county of Iberville. Also for a copy of all correspondence, reports and other documents in connection with an inquiry held in 1931 relating to charges lodged against said Auguste Tétrault, including the evidence of all witnesses heard in said inquiry and the report made by the commissioner.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

SAPPER HARRY BROWN

Mr. SPENCER (for Mr. Garland, Bow River):

For a copy of all correspondence, documents, medical reports and findings in respect of Sapper Harry Brown, Reg. No. 2503424—pension No. 114467.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, it has not been customary to bring down documents with respect to individuals in connection with pension matters, and I submit that this order should not pass. There are obvious reasons why correspondence in connection with individual cases should not be laid before the house. The pensions tribunal is always ready and willing to give members of parliament any information that may be thought desirable, but to bring down such particulars as are asked for here has not been customary heretofore. I ask that the member content himself with having made the inquiry and let the motion drop.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) to allow the resolution to stand?

Mr. SPENCER: The hon. member for Bow River is out of the house, Mr. Speaker. I would ask that the motion stand for the time being.

Mr. SPEAKER: In the absence of the member for Bow River, No. 14 will stand.

[Mr. Pouliot.]

WAR PENSIONS, 1931-32—NORTH BATTLEFORD

Mr. McINTOSH:

For a return showing all European war pensions paid by the Department of Pensions and National Health to veterans or their dependents in the North Battleford federal constituency during the fiscal year 1931-32, showing: (a) the names and addresses in alphabetical order of those receiving said pensions; (b) the amount of the pension; (c) qualification therefor; (d) date of commencement of pension; (e) classification of pension, that is whether the pension was given for services in the naval, militia or air forces of His Majesty's government in Canada or any other self-governing community of the British commonwealth of nations.

Mr. MacLAREN: I would ask, Mr. Speaker, that this motion be dropped. It is not customary for the department to table information such as that asked for; it is not considered to be in the public interest.

Mr. McINTOSH: I thought it was considered in the interest of the public or I would not have asked for it. If that is the only answer the minister has I will have to report it to my riding.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. McINTOSH: We will see just what advantage you can get out of it.

Mr. MacLAREN: All other requests of the same character have not been complied with; that is the general practice.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is the hon. member willing to drop the resolution?

Mr. McINTOSH: I am not ready to drop the resolution unless I can get the information.

Mr. BENNETT: I think the hon. gentleman should be aware that there is no constituency list maintained. To secure the information would necessitate going over the whole list of pensioners.

Mr. McINTOSH: I might state to the Prime Minister that when I asked for the post office addresses of each man interested I figured that the department could give me the information for the constituency as they have the post office addresses to which they send the pension cheques every month. I cannot see why the information cannot be given.

Mr. STEVENS: It would take a year or two to get it.

Mr. SPEAKER: Shall the resolution be dropped?

Mr. McINTOSH: Mr. Speaker, I am going to try to get the information from another source. If I cannot get it I will come back to this house again.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: Do I understand the hon. gentleman is not dropping the resolution?

Mr. McINTOSH: If you insist, Mr. Speaker, I guess I will have to.

Mr. STEVENS: That is very graciously done.

Mr. MacLAREN: If the hon. member will call at the department the officials will be only too willing to assist him in any way they can, but it is not customary to table such information as he asks for.

Mr. McINTOSH: That is a different answer from that which the minister gave at first, and I thank him for his statement.

Mr. COTNAM: Publish it in your metropolitan paper.

Mr. McINTOSH: Just keep the change. You go back and report to your own riding; never mind mine.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. McINTOSH: I have a statement to make.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The motion is not a subject of debate.

Mr. McINTOSH: I am not debating it.

Mr. SPEAKER: The motion is dropped, and the matter is not debatable.

MARITIME FISHERIES, QUEBEC

Mr. P. F. CASGRAIN (Charlevoix-Saguenay) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, it is desirable that the Dominion government should cooperate to a greater extent with the provincial government in order to assist the maritime fisheries in the province of Quebec.

He said: I am bringing this motion to the attention of the house, Mr. Speaker, because a similar motion was adopted by the legislature of Quebec at the instance of the hon. member who represents the county of Charlevoix-Saguenay, Mr. Rochette, in the local house, seconded by his colleague for Gaspé, Mr. Chouinard.

It is not my intention to relate the history of the fishing industry in the province of Quebec. Suffice it to say that the history of the new world and of Quebec is intimately connected with the fisheries of the Atlantic seaboard, part of which is in the province of Quebec. Who does not remember reading in the history of Canada that in the early days of its settlement our fishermen from Brittany and the Basque country used to come and fish in the waters of the gulf of St. Lawrence, in the river itself?

In the early days of New France, and after the conquest, our fisheries were subjected to all sorts of troubles. Even after confederation several cases were taken as far as the privy council to determine the respective jurisdictions of the federal and provincial governments. The last judgment rendered in 1920 declared the administration and control of the fisheries of the interior to be in the provincial government, but that jurisdiction over the fisheries in salt water rested with the federal authorities, subject to the qualification that the provincial jurisdiction was supreme in so far as the soil of the province was concerned. Paragraph number two of the order in council dated February 13, 1922, which gave the administration of the fisheries to the province of Quebec, reads:

That as under the privy council decision of November 30, 1920, the province has the exclusive power to grant the right to fix engines to the soil, where the soil is vested in the crown in the right of the province, so far as such engines and the affixing of them do not interfere with the right of the public to fish or prevent the regulation of the right of fishing by private persons without the aid of such engines.

After this judgment of the privy council had been rendered, several orders in council were passed by both the federal and provincial governments vesting in the province of Quebec the administration of the fisheries in salt waters within the limits of the province. Since the provincial government has had control of the administration of the fisheries within the limits of the province they have made marvellous progress. A department called the Service des Pêcheries Maritimes, with Mr. Gibault, an expert in fisheries, at its head, was created, which department is now presided over by the Hon. Mr. Laferté. Since that time an amount has been included in the annual estimates of his department to help the development of the fishing industry. The present government has rendered more assistance to this industry than any previous government. I think I am safe in saying that approximately $300,000 is spent annually to develop the fisheries within the limits of the province.

The provincial government has given assistance to the fishermen by the distribution of guns and ammunition with which to destroy the porpoises, which have caused great trouble to the fishermen during the last few years. A grant of $4 per keel foot is given towards the construction of new schooners, and also a subsidy of twenty-five per cent of the total cost of equipping such vessels, up to the sum of $500. These subsidies have been of great assistance to the fishermen in remodelling their fishing apparatus and tackle, as well as providing work during the slack seasons. Apart from this, the provincial government has carried on public works and undertakings on the north shore of the St. Lawrence river, in the county which I represent, to provide assistance for destitute fishermen. This has been especially the case during the past few years, during which time poor fishing conditions have prevailed on the north shore. It has been said that the porpoises are the great cause of trouble and annoyance to the fishermen and might be considered as one of the reasons for the poor conditions which have prevailed on the north shore, but I do not think that is the case. The problem which faces the fishermen is that of selling their fish on the domestic and foreign markets. Previously, fish could be dried or salted, but to-day the public require fresh fish, and this product controls the market. The fisheries of the province will meet with success and come into their own only when their efforts are directed towards the production of fresh fish.

At the present time there are between four and five thousand vessels engaged in fishing and employing between ten and twelve thousand people. In 1930 the value of the production was $2,502,998, the salt water production being valued at $1,976,798 and the production from interior waters, $526,200. This question is of vital importance to the county of Charlevoix-Saguenay, which I have the honour to represent, because a large portion of the people living on the north shore of the river derive their livelihood from the fisheries. This is true also of a large part of the population of the counties of Gaspe and Bonaventure. Deep water fishing is to be found along the north shore and I remember a few years ago when buyers from Nova Scotia, such as the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysboro (Mr. Duff), the former member for Lunenburg, and some of his friends used to purchase fish from our people.

Mr. DUFF: We do yet.

Mr. CASGRAIN. They do yet.

No industry, however great it may be, can expand unless its affairs receive wise administration and a methodical program of expansion is carried on. The last year the federal government had the administration of the fisheries it spent in the province of Quebec about $88,000. At that time the maritime provinces received about one million dollars and the province of British Columbia, approximately $400,000. To-day the maritime provinces and British Columbia receive equal assistance while the province of Quebec has not received any subsidy since the year 1922. The federal government derives its revenues from all the provinces and, to my mind, when distributing subsidies it should give to each province a share proportionate to its population and to the need for the development of the fishing industry.

If my information is correct, the federal government receives about twenty-five per cent of its revenue from provinces from the province of Quebec. The average budget of the Department of Fisheries amounts to about $2,000,000 and, based on revenue received, Quebec should receive about $500,000. In other words, the Dominion government should spend half a million dollars in the development of the fisheries in Quebec, As I said a moment ago, the maritime provinces receive about $1,000,000 a year, and it would appear that they are receiving our share. Our province is the natural outlet for the products of the fisheries of the east, and yet the share of assistance to which we are entitled goes to help the maritimes to shut out our fishermen from their own markets.

No doubt the objection will be raised that as Quebec has control over its own fisheries it should look after them. Quebec controls its fisheries in the same manner as it controls its agriculture, mines and natural resources, and the federal government makes a contribution by way of subsidies to the development of agriculture and mining within the province. The federal government maintains in Quebec sixty-four demonstration farms and has a remount depot at St. Joachim. The government cooperates with the provincial government in the raising of sheep and hogs, and cooperates in the providing of assistance along other lines. The federal government also conducts scientific research in bacteriology and mining and has financed expeditions under the control of the Department of the Interior. All this has been done although the province controls its own natural resources. The federal government is seeking markets outside of Canada for our wheat. Why should the same assistance not be given to the fishing industry in my province? Instead of helping the fishing industry, the federal government last year imposed a duty on goods coming from Italy, with the result that the Italian government through Mussolini has imposed a duty of 15 per cent on fish coming from Canada. This affects in particular dried cod for which Italy offered a profitable market to the fishermen of Quebec.

Instead of aiding the fishing industry which is one of the largest in Quebec, the government, by their tariff changes of last year, have injured it.

Mr. BENNETT: How?

Mr. CASGRAIN: On account of the imposition by the federal government of those duties that were placed against Italy, the Italian government imposed a duty of 15 per cent against dried cod for which, prior to that time, the fishermen of Quebec had a good market in Italy and also in Germany. I have not Germany particularly in mind now. I know the outlet for cod was more especially in Italy.

Mr. BENNETT: There are other countries in the same position.

Mr. CASGRAIN: That may be so, but this action on the part of the federal government has been detrimental to my province and particularly to the marketing of our cod.

There is in Ottawa a biological service with stations at St. Andrews and Halifax, but we have nothing of that kind in Quebec. This branch of the Department of Fisheries conducts scientific research work and has technical men carrying on investigations and practical tests. I am informed that thirty-five investigations were made in the maritime provinces through this branch of the fisheries service in Ottawa and am advised that no similar research work has been carried on in Quebec. Investigations of this character might have been carried on along the north shore of the St. Lawrence in regard to halibut, scallops and lobsters, which I am told also abound in that district. Last July, due to the efforts of Mr. Copley Amory, a resident of the United States, a gentleman who has large interests on the north shore of the St. Lawrence river, a scientific convention was held at a place below the seven islands, where this gentleman has an extensive establishment. Gentlemen were invited there from all parts of the world including Denmark and Norway, and I understand representatives from the provincial government also attended. I am told the Deputy Minister of Fisheries was invited to be present, but I do not know whether the federal government gave any assistance in connection with this convention in order to help the people who are really making an effort to discover a solution of our problems and to develop the fisheries. I have not before me the report of the work of that convention.

There is also in operation under control of the Department of Fisheries, for the benefit of the maritimes and British Columbia, a fishery intelligence service furnishing information to fishermen as to water temperatures and movements of fish, but in Quebec we have not had the benefit of such a service. There is also in operation under the control of the Department of Fisheries, for the benefit of the maritime provinces, a fish collection service, a service which has often placed the purchaser in contact with the fisherman. We have never had in Quebec the benefit of such a service. The best service which fishermen of Quebec have had in order to help them to market their fish was through the efforts of the provincial government in assisting in the establishment of a special department through La Société Cooperative Fedéré which has aided farmers and fishermen in marketing their products.

In the past, fish, salted, dried and pickled was accepted in the markets of the world; to-day things have changed and there is a much greater demand for fresh fish, the sale of which is more remunerative. Our fishermen of the north shore of the St. Lawrence, are however, not able to adopt these new methods in order to compete with other people on the markets of the world for fresh fish, because they have no money to build, equip and maintain the modern refrigerating plants necessary to preserve their fish and bait. Being far away from the large centres and being served only once a week in summer by a steamboat service, the fishermen of the north shore are thus at a disadvantage with other fishermen. In the province of Quebec, 90 per cent of the fresh fish used is imported for the most part from the states of New England and from British Columbia. On account of the lack of refrigerating plants our fishermen are compelled to sell at a low price to the export trade 60 per cent of their production, the greater part of which is salted, dried or pickled fish. The only thing the federal government is doing is to supply the fishermen with plans and designs for the refrigerating plants; no subsidy or help of any kind has ever been given in that connection. The provincial government is considering the adoption of a system for establishing along the north shore of the St. Lawrence and other places where there are many fishermen, some of these refrigerating plants, but of course the cost of this would be very high and as they would not be able to obtain the help of the fishermen who are very poor, they require the assistance of the federal government.

Let me now quote a few paragraphs from the publication known as Les Ressources Naturelles de Quebec, 1924:

(Translation):

The gulf of St. Lawrence is still in its infancy as regards the development of its fisheries. There are vast stretches of coast and numerous "banks" which have never been fished, except by the antiquated hook-and-line methods. Yet these waters are one of the world's chief congregating places for the cod, while many other varieties, including halibut and the unrivalled Atlantic salmon, are also more or less numerous in certain localities, and sea trout swarm in the brackish waters of the rivers where they meet the tide water.

Strange to say, most of the fish consumed in the province has been coming from the United States. Advertisements of fresh cod shipped direct from Portland, Maine, frequently appear in the Montreal papers. More remarkable still, fish from the Pacific coast is advertised and sold as far east as Toronto, Ottawa and Montreal, 3,000 miles or more from the waters where they are caught, while the salmon and cod and other fine varieties of fish at the very door of the province have been exported in a salted or dried condition to Europe, the West Indies and the United States. It would appear, therefore, that opportunity exists for enterprising fishermen to build up a considerable home market for their catch.

Our sea fisheries like many other industries are at the present time suffering through lack of proper markets. It is most essential that something be done to help them, because in aiding them we help the country at large and are building up a real Canadian industry which at all times in our history has been considered basic. Lest the government say that they are powerless as regards the sea fisheries of Quebec, on account of the fact that the administration of the fisheries was taken over by the provincial government, let me read from the order in council passed in 1922 when the federal government transferred the administration of the fisheries to the provincial government:

Mr. CASGRAIN (translation): The Minister recommends that the whole administration of the Department of Fisheries which is amenable to the Fisheries Act and regulations thereof should be transferred to the provincial authorities.

There is nothing in that order in council which prevents the federal government giving assistance to the provincial authorities. The administration of all the laws of the federal parliament formerly administered through the Department of Fisheries, is transferred to the provincial government of Quebec. As I said before, our agriculture and our mines are helped by the federal government, but we have not been able to obtain any assistance from this government for the fisheries in Quebec. The reason I have placed this resolution on the order paper is that there seems to be growing at the present time in Quebec a greater interest in what should be done in the way of developing the fishing industry. I have in my hand a pamphlet which is called Le Canada Français de Québec, February, 1932, and under the heading of Le Développement des Pêcheries de la Province de Québec, Professor Louis Bérubé has given many points which will be of interest to the house.

But as my time is rapidly passing I shall content myself with bringing this article to the attention of the government. The article entitled Le Développement des pêcheries de la province de Québec, is divided under four headings as follows: Stabilisation de l'industrie de la pêche; Stabilisation et amélioration des conditions de vie chez les pêcheurs; L'apport de la science au développement des pêcheries; L'apport de l'Etat au développement des pêcheries, and under the last heading this gentleman states:

(Translation):

"The carrying out of an exhaustive program of our maritime fishery development requires the cooperation of all and especially that of the government at Ottawa. Indeed, there are, as we shall later on discover, questions which are directly relevant of the jurisdiction and activities of the Dominion government and without the solution of which the activities of the provincial government are, so to speak, paralysed. There are, moreover, problems in which the cooperation of the two can but double the results to be obtained.

First, we shall insure the freedom of the seas, the protection of markets and the grading of products; in the second, scientific research and financial aid."

Further on he says:

The protection to be given to markets is very intimately linked with the tariff problem. The Dominion government, which, is solely in control, can therefore, alone, give the necessary protection to our local markets, by levying a duty on foreign products; again alone it can foster our export markets by special tariff treaties. We might mention, as an instance, the 15 per cent duty levied at present by Italy on our dry fish. The Dominion government by agreeing to a tariff reduction on other articles would perhaps succeed in overcoming this drawback.

Other articles and other suggestions have been brought to my attention since this resolution has been on the order paper. One is in the form of a memorandum which I have received from Mr. S. J. Flynn, secretary-treasurer of the county of Gaspe. In paragraph one of the memorandum, under the heading, Aide du Gouvernement fédéral, appears this suggestion:

(Translation):

Finally, the Dominion government should further assist our fishermen by improving our fishing harbours, building breakwater barriers, dredging, etc., by establishing in all parts of the country meteorological stations to signal the approach of disastrous storms, help our fish markets by resorting to a protective tariff and the activities of its officials abroad or otherwise.

Further on he says:

We believe that a loyal agreement between the Dominion and provincial governments would place at our disposal a minimum of $300,000 per year, that is 50 per cent at least of the theoretical amount due and which could be used as follows:

1. Establish a fishing centre:—
(a) Oceanographic station—Biological.
Oceanographic station—Economical.

This Dominion station would be the only means at our disposal to establish a permanent link with the International Council for sea exploration, and of which Canada forms part as well as France and the United States (American section).

(b) Refrigerator for bait (Dominion Act, grant of 75 per cent).

(c) Freezing plant (Dominion Act, grant of 30 per cent).

(d) Service of fish collecting (Dominion service which is already in use in the other provinces).

2. Organize a more effective service of inspection (Dominion Act), This is requested by almost (95 per cent) the entire fishing industry of Canada;

3. Organize an effective supervision and protective service: observance of the treaties and laws. Assistance to navigation, protection of the various coasts of the province of Quebec, Labrador, Anticosti, Madeleine Islands, etc., etc.; which is done, at present, through Halifax. Our own protective service was abolished in 1922.

4. Organize a service of commercial and industrial intelligence for fishermen, fish dealers and heads of industries. (A service recommended since 1893 by F. X. Joncas). All the provinces, with the exception of Quebec, possess such a service.

5. Begin a reasonable improvement of the ports which carry on fishing on a small scale;

6. Organize a scientific, technical and administrative staff.

These gentlemen, as will be observed, are apparently very much concerned about the development of the fishing industry in the province of Quebec; they say that the best development of that industry cannot be obtained for the reasons mentioned unless the federal government give further assistance and cooperation to the provincial government. Since a similar debate took place last session in the local assembly at Quebec many delegations have interviewed the provincial government. There was a delegation on the 15th of March, 1932, from Gaspe which was received by Hon. Mr. Hector Laferté, Minister of Fisheries in the province of Quebec, and on the 17th of March a delegation from Gaspe made representations to the chamber of commerce.

March 15, 1932. "Delegation from the Gaspé Peninsula to the Legislature. The hon. Mr. Hector Laferté, Minister of Colonization, Fish and Game receives an important delegation from the Gaspé Peninsula and the North Coast."

March 17, 1932. "The fishermen of the Gaspé Peninsula, and the fish dealers of Quebec wish to establish reciprocal markets. The former met the Chamber of Commerce. Both groups discussed the means to take so as to establish a Quebec market for the Gaspé products and vice versa."

Another reason which has prompted me to bring this resolution before the house is that I noticed in the newspapers a few months ago that other provinces which seem to have been well looked after by the government at all times have been seeking further assistance from this government. In the Montreal Star of January 27, 1932 I read this:

Fishermen Urge Government Aid

Officers of Maritime Body interview Hon. E. N. Rhodes

Ottawa, Jan. 27.—(C.P.)—Claiming that nothing has been done for the fishermen comparable to what the Dominion government has done for agriculture, and asking for a comprehensive and intensive effort to place the Canadian fishing industry on a profitable and business-like basis, delegates from the United Maritime Fishermen presented an appeal yesterday to Hon. E. N. Rhodes, Minister of Fisheries.

Alfred Hanlon, Canso, N.S., president, and Bruce Burke, Drum Head, N.S., vice-president, laid before the Minister a resolution drawn up at a meeting of the federation in Halifax last Friday. Mr. Rhodes gave the brief considerable study, but advised the delegation that the department was doing everything possible under present economic conditions, to grapple with the unsatisfactory situation existing in this important industry. He will discuss the matter with the maritime officials again to-day, but no definite decision as to what extent the government will be able to act, will be available for some time.

The United Maritime Fishermen asked the government to place research men in the field to study marketing agents in foreign countries to represent the organized fishermen, broadcast regularly the trend of prices and market conditions, and to carry on with a competent staff of field men, educational work in production and selling.

So in case the government does anything for the people of these other provinces I should like the same consideration to be extended at the same time to the people that I have the honour to represent in this house as well as to the fishermen of Bonaventure and Gaspe counties and of the province of Quebec in general.

Another article which struck me was headed, "Fishing Industry facing Big Crisis—Maritime M. P. suggests solution in Canadian Club address." The article goes on to quote my genial friend from Queens-Lunenburg (Mr. Ernst), who is keenly interested in the development of the fishing industry in the maritime provinces.

Mr. ERNST: And in Quebec too.

Mr. CASGRAIN: And in Quebec too. We are on the same ground there. My hon. friend is quoted in this despatch as follows:

> Another remedy for the fishing industry was to be found in trade treaties, and the member for the Queens-Lunenburg constituency of Nova Scotia added that other remedies had been suggested to the government which he did not feel at liberty to discuss but he did believe that with encouragement the industry was going to come through.

If other remedies have been suggested to the government which my hon. friend from Queens-Lunenburg did not feel at liberty to discuss, when those remedies are brought forward I wish to see them applied for the benefit of the people of the other provinces and the country at large. The people of the province I represent should be given the same benefit and advantage as the people of other provinces. My hon. friend from Queens-Lunenburg went on to say:

> The speaker realized, because of the geographical conditions of the Dominion, that there were difficulties in the way of developing the fresh fish industry. Prime cod was being sold at a cent and a half a pound at the wharf and the fisherman could not understand the reason for the spread between the wholesale and retail prices. The fresh fish industry had been hard hit by the United States tariffs, which had practically shut out its chief market, and the extension of the Canadian market for such a perishable product presented many difficulties. Experiments were being tried with chemical ice which when it dissolved left no trace and no water, and other methods were also being tried to increase the per capita consumption in Canada, which would increase the livelihood of the men.

All these are reasons, Mr. Speaker, which have led me to believe that I would be derelict in my duty as a member of this house if I did not bring these facts to the attention of parliament and the government. In order to remedy the present existing conditions in the province of Quebec I think there should be a conference between the Dominion government and the provincial government at which the foundation of an entente could be laid defining the scope or field of operation of the province and of the dominion in order that out of such a conference proper cooperation between the two governments might be obtained. It is with this intention, sir, that I have brought this resolution before the house and that I submit it humbly for the consideration of the government. I do not want to play any politics in this matter. In presenting this resolution I am not seeking for myself or the party to which I belong any political advantage or benefit, and I trust that that will be the attitude of all hon. gentlemen on this question relating to an industry which is one of the largest and oldest in the province of Quebec and in the eastern part of Canada, and which, like other industries, has been suffering from lack of markets and possibly from lack of subsidies which may be necessary to develop it in the way it should be developed. True, the provincial government is doing its best to develop that industry, but it has not been able, within the last few years of its administration of fisheries, to develop scientific and technical men, and also to carry on various establishments such as those maintained here in Ottawa in the federal Department of Fisheries, which have been in existence for a good many years, and are about the best on the continent of America.

I think Mr. Speaker, that the resolution should carry because I am not asking anything unreasonable. My request is for further assistance and cooperation from this government. We have been asked to develop certain programs whereby we might help the government through its present financial difficulties. Here is a practical suggestion in which cooperation should not be lacking, should not be refused and should be forthcoming from this government and from my genial friend the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) who was at one time Minister of Fisheries, and who is thoroughly familiar with the matter now before us.

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in the ordinary course of events this resolution would have been spoken to by the Acting Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Duranleau) who, I regret to say, is not present this afternoon. Consequently in his absence I feel it incumbent upon me to say a few words in reply. I should have preferred to have had the opportunity of referring to data and materials which I would have had before me, had I known I would be called upon to say a word or two in this connection.

I do not think I can take any marked exception to the resolution, nor to the tenor of the remarks of the hon. member who sponsors it. I wish however in the course of my remarks to take exception to one or two of the statements he has made. The resolution now before us reads:

> That, in the opinion of this house, it is desirable that the Dominion government should cooperate to a greater extent with the provincial government in order to assist the maritime fisheries in the province of Quebec.

I should have preferred the wording of the resolution to be that the government should cooperate to the "greatest possible extent," because the wording as it now appears in the resolution might indicate that there had been some lack of cooperation by the federal government in its association with the province of Quebec. In case anyone should be inclined so to interpret this resolution I wish to say at once that such an interpretation cannot properly be held. Especially is my statement true when we bear in mind that at one time the fisheries of the province of Quebec were under the full direction and control of the Department of Fisheries at Ottawa.

Mr. DUFF: And they should have stayed there, too.

Mr. RHODES: And my hon. friend from Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Duff) says they should have remained there.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I think so, too.

Mr. RHODES: I concur entirely with my hon. friends opposite in that point of view, and I do not for one moment wish to be understood as finding any fault, much less of attempting to impart any political flavour to this discussion when I say that the reason they are not still under the control of the federal government is that in the judgment of the then Minister of Fisheries, the present hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe), Quebec had taken itself out of the control of the federal Department of Fisheries and set up its own house in the matter of fisheries control. My hon. friend who is sponsoring this resolution is familiar with that fact. So when he says that no industry can expand unless wise administration is given to it, in so far as that expression of opinion on his part is applicable to the lack of improvement in the fisheries of the province of Quebec, I must say the responsibility rests entirely with the Department of Fisheries in that province.

Coming back to the terms of the resolution, or that phase of it which would indicate, at least by inference, that there had not been complete cooperation with the dominion Department of Fisheries, let me say to my hon. friend that in my experience in the federal department I know of no instance where there was not complete and, I may say, harmonious and pleasant cooperation with the Department of Fisheries of the province of Quebec. I know of no instance where they sought our assistance and we did not respond. As a matter of fact, my mind goes back to one or two particular instances last year which would bear out my statement. At that time there came up for consideration with respect to salmon fisheries common to Quebec and the province of New Brunswick, not only the question of season, but the method and the use of the implements incidental to fishing. That is to say, there were considered the size of nets to be used, the manner in which they were to be placed in the water, the length of leaders and all such things. In the city of Ottawa there was held a conference representative of all phases of the fisheries industry. One of the first things we did was to communicate with our friends in the Department of Fisheries of the province of Quebec and ask them to send a representative to the conference. With that request they complied, and we were favoured throughout the whole of the meetings with the presence of Mr. Gibault, representing the Department of Fisheries of the province of Quebec. Decisions arrived at at that time were unanimous, and made possible by complete cooperation between the Department of Fisheries in the province of Quebec and the federal department here in Ottawa.

My hon. friend has referred to that very unique conference held at Matameck on the north shore of the St. Lawrence river, which was made possible by a gentleman to whom I think a word of praise might at this time properly be given. He is a distinguished citizen of the United States and has a summer residence near Matameck. Having lived there a number of years during the summer seasons he became very much attached to that area and its people. It was his desire to assist, amongst other things, the fishing industry as well as the poor people in the vicinity, and arising from that desire he arranged the conference which lasted a week or ten days, and which cost him a large sum of money because he provided transportation and all facilities to the representatives present. He put his services, time and money to the use of the people of Canada, solely with the idea of assisting the people of the province of Quebec.

One of his first acts was to communicate with the department at Ottawa, asking that the department be represented. His communication arrived at a time when the house was in session and for that reason the Deputy Minister of Fisheries could not attend. Arrangements were made, however, for the attendance of Doctor Huntsman, head of the biological board. During the whole of the conference he attended and represented the federal Department of Fisheries. There was also present Doctor Camsell, deputy minister of the federal Department of Mines.

I have mentioned these facts in passing to indicate to the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Casgrain) that there has been complete cooperation between the federal and provincial departments. My hon. friend has referred to certain subsidies which he says have been given to the people of the maritime provinces and the people of British Columbia in which the province of Quebec has not participated. I know of none. The only direct subsidy in the fishing industry is the sum of $160,000 voted year after year which arises, as my hon. friend knows, out of the Halifax award.

Mr. NEILL: No, no.

Mr. RHODES: It does not come out of the funds of the treasury of Canada—

Mr. NEILL: It is taken out of the consolidated fund. There is no reference in the act at all to the Halifax award.

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend may differ from me, but I adhere to my statement as originally given, with all due deference to my hon. friend from Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill).

Mr. DUFF: The United States paid $4,500,000 to Canada and $1,000,000 to Newfoundland for certain privileges.

Mr. RHODES: Yes, and it is the yield upon that sum, at a fair interest rate, that has been divided among the fishermen.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Were there any subsidies for the construction of refrigeration plants?

Mr. RHODES: As my hon. friend knows, I am speaking now without reference to the statute and with no notes before me, but I think he will find upon inquiry that the provisions of that act are applicable to the fishing industry throughout Canada. With reference to the cold storage act, if the fishermen of the province of Quebec wish to avail themselves of the provisions of that statute, it is just as open to them to do so as it is open to the fishermen of any other part of Canada.

My hon. friend has stated that the administration of the fisheries by the dominion costs something like $2,000,000 a year. As a matter of fact, there have been some reductions in the estimates of the Department of Fisheries. Speaking from memory, I think the reduction last year was about $345,000, and this year there has been another reduction of about $80,000, so the total expenditure is really less than $2,000,000. But my hon. friend would leave the impression that all this money was spent in other parts of Canada and not in Quebec. In the first place let me say that even if this were so Quebec has only itself to blame. They cannot come here now and take the position that, having eaten their cake, they still want it. They deliberately took themselves out from under the direction and control of the Dominion Department of Fisheries, but in any case it is not so that this entire amount is spent in portions of Canada other than Quebec. It is quite competent for the Quebec Department of Fisheries, for the fishing industry of that province or for individual fishermen there to avail themselves of the services of the federal department. In my own experience I have known many occasions when that has been done.

My hon. friend has referred to the fact that there is a biological station at St. Andrews and another on the Pacific coast, while there is none in the province of Quebec. It does not follow that the work of a biological station is confined to the locality in which the station is located; as a matter of fact, if proper work is done in the field of biology in connection with our fisheries, it can be done as well at St. Andrews as it could be done at any other place on the Atlantic seaboard. The point I wish to make, however, is that the statistics obtained, the results of experiments carried out and all the knowledge gleaned through the expenditure of that money and the work of the scientists, are made available to the people of the province of Quebec just as they are made available to the people of the other provinces. The same thing is true in connection with the engineering branch of the Department of Fisheries. Plans and specifications with respect to the construction of cold storage plants, ships and all the rest of it, together with all the data that has been obtained, are available to the fishermen of all parts of the country, without regard to provinces.

My hon. friend has stated that the federal department provided a fish collection service in the maritime provinces while it did not provide that service in Quebec. I could very well say that Quebec is running its own fisheries and that this matter should be attended to by the government of that province, but I wish to point out to my hon. friend that there was a limited extension of this service to cover a portion of the Nova Scotia coast which did not possess the facilities found in practically all other coast waters of the maritime provinces, Quebec and British Columbia. These facilities consist in the main of local steamship services, and if my hon. friend would take the trouble to look at the estimates he would find that each year we vote hundreds of thousands of dollars for subsidies and subventions to steamships and packets both on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts in order to provide these services, and the provision of these services has brought about improved transportation facilities so far as the fisheries in Quebec are concerned.

Arising out of the interruption of my hon. friend from Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Duff)—to which I do not take exception—if I might say so with all deference, without wishing to find any fault and without canvassing the ground that has been covered already, I would suggest that his attention might be far better directed towards the return to federal control of the fisheries of the province of Quebec.

Mr. DUFF: Especially now that we have a minister from Quebec.

Mr. RHODES: Quite so. I believe a unified direction of our fisheries is greatly to be desired. If we tried to direct our fisheries by provincial control, each province differing from the other in method, with resultant duplication of service, we would have a tremendously expensive and cumbersome machine, and we would get nowhere in the way of national direction.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I am afraid the answer from Quebec will be "What we have we hold."

Mr. RHODES: Quite so, but that is purely a matter for our friends in Quebec. My hon. friend from Antigonish-Guysborough has been very frank in his expression of opinion, and I wish to be equally frank and say that I entirely concur in what he has said. Let me repeat that I know of no case where we have refused to cooperate or to give every assistance within our power and our competence. Just here let me say this: During the time I had the honour of heading the Department of Fisheries it was a matter of great pleasure to me to have some contacts with the fisheries department of the province of Quebec. In every respect our relations were harmonious, cordial, and I hope mutually helpful. As a matter of fact, one of the last acts I performed while head of that department was to conclude an arrangement to provide fish demonstrations, the idea being to enlarge the market for fish by teaching the housewives better methods of preparing them. We employed the services of a lady who is known throughout the continent of North America as one of the foremost exponents of the art of fish cookery, and I wrote the Minister of Fisheries of Quebec and said I should like him to cooperate with us in that movement. I received a very nice answer; he said he would be very happy to join with us, and to-day the province of Quebec is paying the salary of a lady who was associated with Mrs. Spencer, who is able to demonstrate to the people of that province in the French language. Naturally we started that campaign in Ottawa, but the very next place where the demonstrations were carried on was the city of Montreal. They are being given there to-day, as they have been for some weeks, and I believe this action has brought about good results so far as the industry and the province are concerned. I merely mention that as a concrete example of how we have endeavoured in every possible way to cooperate with the provincial government.

Bearing in mind what I have said, so far as I am concerned I have no objection to this resolution, though as I said in the first instance it might have asked that the government should cooperate to the greatest possible extent, instead of saying that we should cooperate to a greater extent.

Hon. CHARLES MARCIL (Bonaventure): I wish, Mr. Speaker, to congratulate the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Casgrain) on bringing this matter before the house. He has done so, as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) has said, in a very lucid manner and has furnished us with much valuable information. This dual control of our fisheries by the dominion and the province is a very, very old question. When I had the honour in 1897 to be the candidate of the Liberal party in the county of Gaspé, the then premier of the province scored heavily by announcing during the campaign the decision of the privy council to the effect that the fisheries were within the provincial jurisdiction, and that thereafter the province would control them. That practice continued until control reverted to the dominion. In 1922 Quebec again secured jurisdiction over the fisheries. No matter what the position is at the present time, it is not satisfactory. When I had the honour of being elected for the county of Bonaventure thirty years ago, all the coast was lined with fishermen's huts. We had important fisheries at Port Daniel, Gascons, Paspebiac, Bonaventure, and Caplan. The men of these districts earned their livelihood in the fishing industry. For some reason or other the industry has declined and to-day a very small number of men earn their living in that way.

In 1922, the provincial authorities relieved the dominion to a great extent by taking over control of the fisheries. Our fisheries are one of our great natural resources and anything that will develop them in Quebec will be for the benefit of Canada generally. Whatever may be the reason, it is an unfortunate fact that our fisheries in Chaleur bay are not being developed. We have provincial control in certain things and federal control in others. The Minister of Finance has referred to numerous lines of steamers subsidized for the benefit of the maritime provinces to assist in the development of these fisheries. So far as my constituents are concerned we used to have a line between Gaspé and Dalhousie, New Brunswick, but that line was discontinued years ago. The people in my constituency are complaining of the rates they have to pay on the Canadian National railways to gain access to the large markets of Quebec and Montreal. I am not prepared to discuss this phase of the question, having only this morning received a copy of the report of the interview that the representatives of the fishermen in the Gaspé district had with the provincial Minister of Fisheries, but from glancing through the long report I conclude that things are not as they should be. The Minister of Finance, who is probably the best-informed man in this house on the question of our fisheries, should make a point of seeing that something be done, because the condition of these fisheries is not what it should be.

I had an opportunity last week of introducing to the Acting Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Duranleau) a deputation from New Brunswick and Quebec with regard to salmon-fishing in the Chaleur bay district. There is long-standing dissent between the anglers and the fishermen of our Gaspé salmon. The dominion regulations requiring the raising of nets from Sunday till Monday morning is a great obstacle to the net fishermen. While the Deputy Minister of Fisheries, who is an authority on these matters, contends that it is in the interests of the salmon fishermen themselves that they should get out into the centre of the river, they take objection on the ground that they lose the best runs of the season. Be that as it may, the department has again turned down the request made by the fishermen, and I think a meeting should be arranged as soon as possible between the dominion and the provincial authorities to see if some better understanding cannot be brought about.

The government of Quebec last week took steps towards the establishing of some freezing stations along the coast for the use of the fishermen. At the present time as the member for Charlevoix-Saguenay stated, the fishermen have to salt their fish, thus reducing its value by fifty per cent, and at the same time they find their markets in Brazil, the West Indies and elsewhere have shrunken to a very serious extent. In a word, our fishermen find themselves, in common with our other producers, in the unhappy position of a lack of markets. We have not the markets to-day to be prosperous as we had under the old régime of moderate tariffs. But whatever be the cause of the decline of our fisheries, both the dominion and the provinces are interested in their development and in finding new markets. In Quebec the provincial authorities have control of the fishing regulations at the present time, but when it comes to securing access to markets, cheap transportation and sale abroad we come into the federal domain. Means should be found of preserving the fish, giving cheap transportation, and securing access to foreign markets.

I hope this resolution will meet with the approval of the whole house. I have heard the question discussed many times, but the main trouble seems to be the conflict between provincial and federal control. I agree to some extent with the Minister of Finance that it is highly important that there should be uniform control of all our fisheries. In Montreal, where I have resided all my life, the fish that we eat during the winter comes largely from Maine and the maritime provinces. There is no reason why some understanding should not be arrived at by which our fishermen would be given a better market and increased remuneration for their work. Canada should be one of the first countries in the world as far as the fishing industry is concerned. We have some of the finest fish to be found anywhere. In order that we may get the fullest advantage from this great natural resource it is necessary that the difficulties between the province and the dominion should be arranged on a basis satisfactory to all concerned. I am glad the government has in charge of this department a man who is thoroughly conversant with the subject. The time has come when this question should be considered in earnest with a view to seeing whether we cannot do something to assist our fishermen who are in dire need.

A new factor must be considered in dealing with this question. American fishermen come to the waters of Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick for sport fishing, and some consideration must be given to these men. They spend a tremendous amount of money in the pursuit of their sport, and I have been told that it costs $200 for every salmon taken out of the Restigouche river. They observe the law to the fullest extent, they register every fish taken, and they give every assistance possible. The Minister of Pensions and National Health (Mr. MacLaren) does me the honour of fishing every year in my constituency. I trust he will be spared for many years to come to continue to enjoy this sport. He is a friend of the fishermen. Sir Douglas Hazen, a very prominent man in the maritime provinces, who was minister of marine and fisheries in the old days, is a frequent visitor to my constituency. On behalf of these men, I urge the dominion government not to turn a deaf ear to this question.

I can remember in the old days seeing the fishermen use dynamite and salt their catch in barrels, employing somewhat the same process as was used in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia with the oyster. The oyster has practically disappeared from Canada, except in Prince Edward Island. The time has come when assistance should be given to the fisherman. His life is a hard one, he leaves early in the morning not knowing when he will return. He has to face all sorts of weather and at times his income is small when compared with his labour. We have dual control over agriculture and mining, we should have similar control over our fisheries. I urge the government through the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) and the Minister of Pensions and National Health to take up this question seriously and see if something cannot be done to improve the present condition of our fisheries.

Mr. W. G. ERNST (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I rather welcome the opportunity which has been afforded by the resolution introduced by the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Casgrain) for a general discussion of the fisheries, but before I proceed to discuss fisheries generally I want to say a word or two with reference to the hon. member's resolution. He confines his resolution to the province of Quebec, and from his closing remarks I gather that one of the motives for his doing this was that other districts were seeking relief and he did not want that relief granted until it was granted to the province of Quebec. I happened to be present with a delegation which waited upon the government with respect to the salt fish industry, with which the hon. member is most particularly concerned, and while they asked aid for their industry, they never at any time asked aid only for the industry in Nova Scotia. They recognized frankly that any relief must be given equally to the four provinces which engage in this industry.

The hon. member stated that inasmuch as the province of Quebec pays some twenty-five per cent of the revenue of Canada, at least $500,000 should be paid to the province as aid in the development of its fisheries. The first answer to this was given by the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) when he stated that the province of Quebec had chosen to administer its own fisheries since 1922, the authority for this being in an order in council which we can safely assume was passed at the solicitation of the province. I remind my hon. friend, but not in a partisan spirit, of the dictum laid down some few years ago by his own leader. The right hon. gentleman stated that he considered it to be a vicious principle that one taxing authority should raise revenue and give it to another taxing authority to spend without any control being held over such expenditures. I think that is a complete answer to any demand for a cash subsidy to be paid to the province of Quebec in aid of its fisheries.

I agree with the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Duff) that it would be in the best interests of the fisheries of the dominion as a whole if the fisheries of the province of Quebec were placed under federal control as are those of the three eastern provinces. When the Minister of Finance made that suggestion the hon. member for Rimouski (Sir Eugène Fiset) interjected the remark "What we have we hold." He might at least have completed the quotation by saying: "What we have not we're after."

Having given my reasons for not being able to support the resolution in the terms in which it appears, I want to say something about the problems which face the industry generally. The problems which face the Gaspé peninsula are the same as those confronting the fishermen along the whole coast of Nova Scotia, especially in my own constituency, which has the largest salt fishing fleet in the world. Before dealing with these problems, let me refer first to the causes thereof. The hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil) and the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay have suggested that in some measure tariffs are responsible for the present difficulties. If they mean by that the tariffs of the Dominion of Canada, then I cannot agree; if they mean the tariffs of other countries, I admit that to some extent that is true.

There are three primary reasons for the difficulties which now face the salt fishing industry of the world. First, there is a general world depression which must be faced when you have a product which must be sold in the export market. Second, and accentuating the first in a peculiar manner in so far as the fishing industry is concerned, there is the almost complete collapse of purchasing power in Brazil, one of the largest salt fish importing countries in the world. A similar collapse, perhaps not so great, has taken place in the purchasing power of Spain and Portugal. Third, there is the fact that nearly all the great salt fish producing countries in the world have increased their production. Take for instance, Norway, Iceland, Newfoundland and Great Britain; all of these countries are entering the markets of the world with increasing quantities of fish, and the result is that there are more fish than can be absorbed by the consumer. Practically the only markets left to us are those of the West Indies, Cuba and Porto Rico.

The fishermen in the Gaspé section of the coast have been shipping their product to Spain and Portugal and, to a smaller degree, to Italy, but these markets have been almost completely closed.

This fisherman produces a superior product and he has been accustomed to a superior price. To-day he has to take the same price as all the others are taking in the export markets of the world, a price that is far below the cost of production. Added to all the difficulties of the depression, come those of the exchange situation. As I said, practically the only markets which are left are Cuba, Porto Rico and the West Indian islands, and when we do business with those countries, all the exchange comes through New York. The exchange rate in regard to both the Canadian dollar and the pound sterling has been most uncertain, it fluctuates from day to day, and I think I may safely mention that the lowering in value of the pound sterling due to the action of Britain in going off the gold standard, which placed the pound at a lower value than the Canadian dollar, has given to the English exporter an advantage of from 20 to 25 per cent. I realize the difficulties of the exchange situation and I am not expressing anything but a personal view, but I am by no means anxious to see the Canadian dollar get back to par too quickly.

Mr COOTE: Par with what?

Mr. ERNST: With the United States dollar.

Mr. COOTE: Then the Canadian fishermen will get less.

[Mr. Ernst.]

Mr. ERNST: No. These are fluctuations which do not affect the Canadian dollar internally but do affect our ability to sell abroad. Some of these things will right themselves, and if we have any faith in the future we must feel that they are going to do so in the course of time. Broadly, we see the natural reaction in that some of the great exporting countries are curtailing the production this year, so that we look forward with some hope towards increased prices next year. For the present year, however, our difficulty is apparent and real.

Having said that about the condition of the industry in general, because the industry in Gaspé in connection with salt and pickled fish is similar to that in Lunenburg, I should like to say to the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay that when he suggests that the remedy for his fishermen is that they handle fresh fish, he is speaking only a partial truth in the economic sense. Again I am voicing only a personal opinion. It seems to me that one of the most tragic blunders we made in the administration of the fisheries of this country was to endeavour to turn the individual fishermen scattered along thousands of miles of coast line into dealers in fresh fish. This cannot be done. Fresh fish is an extremely perishable product. It has to be taken quickly to the cold storage or else it deteriorates, and when it deteriorates it is no longer fresh. In Nova Scotia, by a system of collection boats, we have endeavoured to turn the entire coastline into the fresh fish industry, but this has proved altogether uneconomic and unsound and I believe it will prove equally so in the Gaspé peninsula. In my opinion, the remedy does not lie there; it lies in teaching our fishermen improved methods of conserving and curing. I am not satisfied that the salt fish, as we know it to-day, represents the ultimate in the production of cured fish at home by the individual fisherman. I am convinced research will show that much more can be done and that a much better quality of fresh and cured fish can be placed on the market by the individual fisherman working from his own fish house, than is being done at the present time, even in the Gaspé peninsula, where they have, as I have said, a superior type of salt fish.

Having said that and having tried to make it clear that the problems of the Gaspé peninsula are those of Nova Scotia, of Lunenburg county, let me say that I concur in the statement of the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil) that the fisherman to-day is in a really pitiable condition. I am talking now of the salt fisherman. Some of the fresh fish industries are operating almost to capacity, but in those the fisherman receives only a pittance for that which he brings to port. But I pass over the fresh fish industry, because the two cannot be confused; each offers a different field for investigation and a different line for development. Further, with reference to the fresh fish industry in eastern Canada—and I am making no reference to British Columbia because I do not know anything about the fishing industry there—we sell a very substantial proportion of our catch in the home market where we are not subjected to the fluctuations of the export price and world conditions. The salt fish industry is entirely different.

Let me come now to my own constituency of Lunenburg. Some few years ago we had 120 vessels which operated out of that port, and at that time they were propelled mainly by sail. They carried crews of from twenty to twenty-five men. The method of fishing was that the men went two by two over the sides in dories and fished with lines or trawl lines, which are long lines baited at intervals. When they got their catch they took it back to the mother ship, where it was salted, and eventually when the season expired or the vessel became loaded, she would return to port. A hundred vessels at that time meant direct employment to between 2,000 and 3,000 men. In fact, it meant something more than that: it meant indirect employment to thousands more, because when the fish were brought back they had to be cured; that is, they were brought back green salted and had to be washed and dried in the sun. That gave work for a portion of the year to a large number of people scattered along the coastline of the county. Then there were the shipyards, because the vessels in which our people fished were built in our own shipyards, using our own lumber, timber and materials so far as they were available. We imported cordage and canvas and the ironwork was largely fashioned by local blacksmiths. I can think of six such shipyards in Lunenburg county alone and an average annual pay-roll for one of them would be about $50,000, with another $50,000 spent in the same year on materials. That is an average year. To-day every one of those shipyards, with one exception, and that one is not building a fishing vessel, is closed.

Furthermore, the fish were exported in casks which were made of hardwood staves from trees which were cut locally by local labour and made in local cooperages. Speaking from memory, I believe there are a large number of them scattered throughout my constituency. The hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Duff), who has just come in, is thoroughly familiar with this because he has been in the salt fish trade all his life. A fair average payroll for one of these cooperages would be from $10,000 to $15,000 a year, with material taking a like amount. Those cooperages are in a large measure closed down. The men who pack the fish, who work on the wharves, the docks, have practically lost their livelihood, and the fleet which was once 100 strong was last year down to forty-two. This year, if conditions remain as they are and without some measure of governmental assistance, I do not believe ten Lunenburg vessels will go to the banks to catch salt fish.

The method of operation has changed. Sail is giving way by degrees to the Diesel engine, but basically our fishermen still catch their fish, salt them and bring them in. What is the outcome unless we obtain relief? It must be the destruction of that industry. I have heard it argued by many that the farmer is in a like position. He is, and he is not. A farm is not perishable. A farmer may lose it, it is true, by a process of foreclosure, but it still remains a farm capable of production as it always was. A vessel property is perishable. The average situation of the vessels of the Lunenburg fleet is this: they are operated largely under the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act. Each vessel is divided into sixty-four shares, and under the act one man will act as manager, owner or agent for the rest. The crew and the owner work on a share basis or on a kind of partnership scheme or venture. Each year, when a vessel goes out, the managing owner advances the money or guarantees an advance by the bank to outfit it for the voyage that year at a cost of $4,000 or $5,000. In former days when commodity prices were higher, the amount would be greater. He trusts to the success of the venture in the sale of fish to recoup himself for his advance, but for the last two years he has not been able to recoup himself, and nearly every vessel fishing out of Lunenburg is in debt from three thousand dollars up to eight thousand dollars, and some for much more than that. That may not seem a staggering amount when you remember that the vessels cost from twenty-five to thirty thousand dollars, but if you try to sell those vessels to-day and on the auction block they bring approximately only $3,000. There is no demand for them; no one wants them, and the result is that the managing owners cannot advance any more money to operate them, and the banks will not and cannot be expected to advance any more money to operate these vessels this year. If they cease to operate for one year, their markets are gone, or if their debts are not paid the vessels will pass from ownership in the constituency that I represent, and the fleet which has been built up over a period of nearly a century and a half will cease to exist; and the present method of livelihood of approximately half the people who live in the county of Lunenburg will be rendered impossible. Having said that, and it applies, if not in equal measure, to a greater or less extent, to the fishermen all along the coast of Nova Scotia, whether they operate in boats or vessels, and it is true also of the fishermen of New Brunswick and of the salt fishermen in the Gaspé peninsula, what do we suggest as a remedy?

My hon. friend from Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Casgrain) did me the honour of quoting from a speech I made in Montreal some time ago, and he invited me to state what we have to suggest as a remedy. At the time that speech was made I was aware that a delegation was waiting on the government at Ottawa, a non-partisan delegation, including among its members my hon. friend from Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Duff), asking for certain remedies, and I did not feel that I was at liberty to reveal those remedies until such time as they had been presented to the Prime Minister and his colleagues; but now that they have been presented and are public property I do so without hesitation.

The first remedy asked for was a bonus. I know that my free trade friends will say that bonusing is unsound. I am not enamoured of the idea of a bonus if I could think of any other method. It is only as a measure of temporary and immediate relief, and if any other method could be suggested I should be glad to consider it, but I have had the opportunity of collaborating with those vitally interested in this industry in my constituency, with men on both sides of politics with whom I have sat in round table conference to discuss the situation and endeavour to find a remedy, and we have not been able to devise any other method. It is purely a temporary expedient, but unless we do get a bonus the paralysis which threatens will grip that fleet and the livelihood of half the people of Lunenburg county will be gone. So I urge the remedy of a bonus for the favourable consideration of the Minister of Finance, and when I ask him for it, I ask the house to remember that we do not ask it for Lunenburg alone, because we quite recognize that what we get must be given to all fishermen similarly situated. But we do ask it because we feel that in no other way can our industry be saved. It is purely a temporary expedient. To say that the salt fishing industry cannot and will not recuperate is equivalent to losing one's hope and faith in the future so far as the economics of the situation is concerned, and if we are going to face the future in a spirit of hopelessness generally, we might all just as well throw up our hands. But on the contrary, if we look forward to improving conditions, we see no injustice in asking this country for this temporary relief to tide us over this particular time because never in the 150 years of the existence of the industry have we asked anything similar before.

Having suggested a bounty, I come to the second remedy which we propose, and that is trade treaties. We realize that trade treaties cannot offer us any immediate relief, but they can offer us relief for the future. I might be asked, trade treaties with whom. I answer quite frankly, with any country in the world that is willing to take our fish. Again I give you my personal view and the viewpoint of my own constituency; we would say a trade treaty with Cuba. I know the difficulties which present themselves in that connection, the difficulties of the British West Indies treaty, because once you start to negotiate with Cuba immediately you will be told that you cannot negotiate unless you give Cuba a preference on sugar, and you cannot give Cuba a preference on sugar because of the British West Indies treaty. But I say to this house that as far as the maritime provinces are concerned, and I am speaking now not only of the fishing industry but of the potato industry as well, a treaty with Cuba would do more to rejuvenate those provinces than a treaty with any other single country in the world. Porto Rico, of course, does not offer the same opportunities because her tariffs are controlled wholly by the United States. We may be able to do something to help ourselves at the forthcoming Imperial conference, but we must remember that amongst our competitors with whom we shall have to deal are Newfoundland and the British Isles themselves, and what we get, of course, they must get. But even narrowing the field down to that extent would be of material assistance to us. As I said at the outset, trade treaties with almost any salt fish consuming country in the world are desirable to us.

Now I come to the last remedy which I suggest, and that is that we should get, even if it is only within the empire, some stabilization of currency. I am giving purely my own personal view and looking at the problem wholly from my own standpoint and that of my constituency, but from the standpoint of my constituency, which is an exporter, we are by no means eager to bring the Canadian dollar back to par in terms of the American dollar bill. We do, however, want some stability of exchange, because with exchange fluctuating we cannot sell at thirty or ninety days not knowing what we are going to get at the end of that period. This instability makes it almost impossible to do business.

There is nothing further I want to add except this, and again I voice a purely personal view. Coming from Nova Scotia I realize that we cannot for some years to come, in any event, become a highly industrialized community. This is an age of hydro-electric power, and hydro-electric power so far as it is available to us is available only in comparatively small quantities as compared with many of the other provinces of Canada. Until we can get cheap electricity, we cannot become highly industrialized. On the other hand, we do not want to lose sight of the fact that we desire to become industrialized because by no other means can we hope to take care of the natural increase of our population, but until that time comes the industries on which we have to rely are the basic industries—our coal mines, fisheries, farming, and to a lesser extent our timber resources—and anything that can be done to help those industries helps to keep Nova Scotia alive. Personally I look forward to the day, and I do not think it is very far distant, when we shall be able to utilize our coal to produce electric power cheaper than it can be produced from the great rivers of Ontario, Quebec and British Columbia, but until that day comes I feel it my duty as one who was born and bred in a constituency in the province of Nova Scotia to press the interests of the greatest basic industry that I have in my constituency, and one which employs in the maritime provinces as many people as the coal and steel industries combined. We only ask the government to give us that fair consideration which they give to other provinces and other industries throughout the dominion.

Mr. CASGRAIN: May I ask one question with regard to the remedy of a bonus which my hon. friend mentioned? What form would that bonus take? Would it be a bonus to each individual fisherman dependent upon the size of the catch?

Mr. ERNST: With your permission, Mr. Speaker, the suggestion as to a bonus was a per quintal bonus to each fisherman on his production.

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): I rise, Mr. Speaker, merely to corroborate the interruption I made when the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) was speaking. Although this is a very burning subject with the province of British Columbia I had not intended to speak to it at the present time for fear in some measure I might divert the line of argument of the hon. member who introduced the motion. However, as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) has made certain comments in this debate I feel compelled, on behalf of the province of British Columbia—with which province I now find the province of Quebec should also be associated—to raise once more my voice, even if it be a feeble and fluttering one, in support of the rights of our province.

I think I might best size up the situation by quoting some remarks I made on June 2, 1928.

The act—

Under which this grant,—not a bonus, I would emphasize—is made—

—is now chapter 74 of the revised statutes of Canada, 1927, and it is called the Deep Sea Fisheries Act. It was passed in 1882—

That is 50 years ago.

—what did the act do? It provided that an annual grant—

I wish the house to note that word.

—not a bounty, a grant, of $160,000 a year be paid. Where was that grant obtained? By looking at section 2 we find that it is to be taken out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

Mark that, Mr. Speaker.

This was not some ear-marked fund set aside, but the money was to be taken out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada. What was to be done with it? I again quote section 2. It was to be used:

"To aid in the development of the sea fisheries of Canada, and the encouragement of the building and fitting out of improved fishing vessels, and the improvement of the conditions of the fishermen."

That is the fishermen of Canada.

May I say that Canada is a large country and takes in the Pacific as well as the Atlantic. The quotation from Hansard of my remarks continues as follows:

The act under section 7 took power to make regulations as follows: "The governor in council may, from time to time, make such regulations as he deems necessary or expedient respecting the payment of the said grant and the manner in which applications for the same or any portion thereof shall be made."

I would ask hon. members to note that the word "grant" is used, not "bonus". My remarks continue:

It is just the regular phraseology that allows the minister to make regulations for the carrying out of the act. But it is an axiom of law . . . that parliament can give power to a minister to make regulations under an act, but those regulations must always be merely in an administrative capacity for carrying out the act. They are confined entirely to the administration of what is in the act. It is absolutely ultra vires and impossible for parliament to confer, and it never does confer by an act of that kind, legislative powers on a minister; that is to say, he cannot under those regulations go out and make legislation or change the legislation concerning which he is authorized to make regulations.

Then my remarks continue in a later paragraph:

But what the minister did in this case under the regulations was practically the same as if he had made a new act. He might as well have said that this money should be given for the production of cabbages or sheep or something of that kind because, by means of regulation, he changed the whole spirit and intent of the act. I am not speaking about the present minister, of course, because this thing has been going on for—

Fifty years.

By provisions made under the regulations the act was confined practically entirely to the maritime provinces and particularly Nova Scotia. They dared not do this in so many words . . . but they introduced, in connection with the application, language which practically confined the act to Nova Scotia.

And then I go on to an explanation which at this time I need not read. Then, later in my speech I find the following:

In addition to the provision against participation by those engaged in salmon fishing it did not even allow British Columbia fishermen to qualify where they were engaged in cod or herring fishing. In other words they said indirectly what they could not and dared not say directly, namely, that British Columbia—

And now, Quebec—

—should not participate in this grant which was announced to be entirely for the development of the deep sea fisheries of Canada.

Then I asked the question what they had done with this money, and the answer was:

As the bounty is based on the interest on Canada's share of the award made under the fishery articles of the treaty of Washington, 1871, and as the said articles apply to the Atlantic coast only, the payment is restricted to that coast.

Then my remarks continue:

That is a very nice answer if you want to believe it, but you do not have to. In the first place it is a grant, not a bounty, and it is so specified in the act. I am not talking about what happened in 1871; I am talking about the act which was passed in 1882.

While I say 1871 was the date of the Washington treaty, the award was not made until 1878. Then my remarks continue:

We have nothing to do with the intention or what somebody thought or did not think—

When the act was passed.

—we have simply the act to bind us. I have a letter from an official of the department making a very valiant and desperate attempt to justify the action of the government in years past. He writes in part: "The fishing bounty —" I object to the word "bounty"—"grew out of the award of the Halifax commission, which was made under the provisions of the Washington treaty of 1871."

And so on. That treaty was concerned with disputes between Canada and United States in connection with certain fishing rights. To make a long story short, Canada sold certain privileges to the United States for $4,500,000. In other words they sold a little bit of Canada, a little bit of the rights to which the industrial worker in Toronto, the fisherman in British Columbia, as well as myself, are entitled. They received $4,500,000 for those rights. What did they do with it? They put it into the consolidated revenue fund; nothing can be more certain than that. There were no restrictions, no reservations, no strings to it at all. That was in the year 1878, and nothing happened until the year 1882. At that time the Deep Sea Fisheries Act was passed which says that they would take $160,000 out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada and use it for the development of deep sea fisheries. There is no reference made nor is there any connection whatsoever with the transaction which occurred four years before.

I could point out an analagous situation in the province of British Columbia where the American government paid the government of Canada a large sum of money for relinquishing pelagic sealing on the Pacific. What was done in that case? Those moneys were paid into the consolidated revenue fund of Canada as they should have been, because Canada's rights had been affected.

I know this is a painful subject to Nova Scotia representatives, and nothing but the extreme righteousness of my cause makes me bring it forward. I know this matter is an unpopular theme in the house. We realize however that a matter is never settled until it is settled right. I hope I may live to see the day when the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis and the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. MacDonald) will, like Saul of Tarsus see a great light, and rise in their places and say, in the words of the Prodigal Son, "Mr. Speaker, we have sinned and done wrong." I hope they will be content to surrender our share of this money which, to put it mildly, they have been retaining all these years.

We in British Columbia are not going to be finicky about the situation. We are not going to say, "Give us back all the money of which you have robbed us all these years." We will make a grand gesture and say, "Keep your ill-gotten gains, but let us in future participate in the moneys which were undoubtedly dedicated by the parliament of Canada to the development of the deep sea fisheries of Canada, and not to only one small section of the fishing industry." Commission after commission has dealt with this matter and has recommended that the distribution as at present made should be done away with; the money is wasted. It is doled out in little dabs, little amounts whereby one man gets $8 and another man $4.25, and so on. It is a perfect farce. As commission after commission has reported, it is a perfect farce to think that by such methods the deep sea fisheries of Canada can be developed. I think a part of the sum goes to the lobster fishermen.

Mr. DUFF: No, not one dollar.

Mr. VENIOT: No.

Mr. NEILL: Not in the province of Nova Scotia?

Mr. DUFF: No.

Mr. NEILL: Very well, I shall take that statement back. I know that not one cent goes to the deep sea fisheries on the Pacific coast.

I should not have brought up this subject which is so painful to my hon. friends opposite had it not been for the assertion made by the Minister of Finance who, by the way, I believe comes from the maritime provinces. I do not think however that will affect his sane judgment at this time, when he has had his attention called to actual facts. I think he will agree that this act ought to be dedicated to the purpose for which it was intended, namely the development of the deep sea fisheries of all Canada. The provinces of Quebec and British Columbia should have a share in it.

Mr. FINLAY MacDONALD (Cape Breton South): There are few members in this house, Mr. Speaker, to whom I listen with greater pleasure than the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat. Usually he has the wrong end of the argument, but since he first brought up this matter in 1928 he has been, I might almost say, obstinate in refusing to see this question in its proper light. He appears to have an obsession with regard to this question of the fish bounties, and perhaps for the information of the house it would be well to clear up this matter and find out exactly what the bounty amounts to.

In 1871 the treaty of Washington was agreed upon by Great Britain and United States, and by article 18 of that treaty the fishermen of the United States were given liberty to exercise certain rights in the waters of the coast of the maritime provinces, Quebec and Newfoundland, while equal rights were given our fishermen with regard to United States waters. At that time there was no question of British Columbia or any other place; the question was as to the relative value of the rights which were given. To determine what those rights were worth a commission sat in Halifax.

Mr. DUFF: Have you the names of the commissioners?

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): I have not the names here, but most of us remember that one commissioner came from St. John, one from Quebec, one from Prince Edward Island—Sir Louis Davies—and one from Nova Scotia, I think five in all. At all events, as a result of their investigation compensation was fixed at $5,500,000, which was to be paid by the government of the United States to the government of Great Britain. This amount was not paid until January, 1879. Later the British government paid $1,000,000 of the award to Newfoundland and $4,500,000 to the government of Canada.

The amount paid to this country, as the hon. member stated, was put in the consolidated revenue fund, and subsequent to the payment of that amount the claim was advanced by the fishermen of the Atlantic coast that this amount should not be regarded as consolidated revenue but that at least the annual interest on the award should be specifically devoted to the development of the Atlantic coast fisheries. Thus it was determined that the difference in the value of the rights given the fishermen of both countries was $5,500,000. The report to which I am referring goes on to say that it is to be regretted that the legislation empowering the governor in council to authorize the annual grant of $160,000 does not in specific terms state that this amount is for the benefit of the Atlantic coast fisheries. I am referring to the report of the royal commission investigating the fisheries of the maritime provinces.

Mr. NEILL: Of what year?

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton South): The report was issued in 1927. I agree with my hon. friend that this amount never should have been placed in the consolidated revenue fund.

Mr. NEILL: Yes, it should.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): This is a trust fund, and the beneficiaries are the fishermen of the Atlantic coast and Quebec. My hon. friend need not try now to muscle in on this amount, because it is our money and no government, Liberal or Conservative, would dare break faith with the fishermen of the maritime provinces and Quebec by diverting any part of that $160,000 to some other portion of Canada.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Are there not certain conditions imposed before this bounty is paid?

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): The bounty is regulated according to the catch, and so on.

Mr. DUFF: And the time they are engaged in fishing.

Mr. NEILL: And the size of the boat, and so on.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): In any case, that procedure has been followed through all the years, and now it is too late for my hon. friend to try to claim a share of that money. I quite agree that the wrong method was taken at that time; the money should have been placed in a trust fund, but the unfortunate thing is that this was not done, and the mistake made at that time has afforded my hon. friend several opportunities to bring forward this claim on behalf of his province.

Mr. NEILL: Hear, hear.

Mr. DUFF: Is it not a fact that the German reparations payments to this country go into the consolidated fund, just as this money went into it?

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): Yes, in the same way.

Mr. NEILL: Yes, but the German reparations payments did not disappear for four years, as this money did.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): The point I am making is that this money must be regarded by any government as a trust fund to be used for certain purposes. Possibly the time has come when this whole matter should be reconsidered. I am not at all convinced that this payment of bounties is the best way to use this money. I am particularly interested in boat fishermen; I differ with my hon. friend from Queens-Lunenburg (Mr. Ernst), who is interested in large vessels. My constituents are all poor men along the fringe of the Cape Breton coast; they are all boat fishermen, and they all receive this bounty, which is graded according to the size of the boat, the number of men working, the amount of fish caught, and so on. For years this industry has been declining; the fishermen are getting poorer, and in many cases they are leaving their homes. In this report of 1927 the statement is made that the fishing villages along the coast are growing fewer and smaller year by year. That should not be so. Within ten or twelve miles of the coast of Nova Scotia we have the richest fishing area in the world, with enough fish to feed Europe and Canada. We see that industry declining year by year and the fishermen becoming poorer and poorer. It is simply a statement of fact that past governments, Liberal and Conservative, did not have their eyes open to the value of this great natural resource.

Mr. DUFF: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): Even under present depressed conditions we find eighteen or twenty million dollars a year derived from these fisheries, but unfortunately the industry is declining and the fishing boats are rotting on the shore. Surely with such a great natural resource placed in the hands of our people we should be sufficiently alive to its importance to take the necessary steps to develop it along sound lines.

What is the cure for the present unsatisfactory condition of our fishing industry? Every person who has given the matter the slightest consideration knows that something must be done or the industry will perish. Our fishermen must be given leadership and asistance to equip themselves with boats and nets in order that they may be encouraged to carry on their hazardous calling. Curing plants should be established and transportation facilities provided. This government and the preceding administration have given some attention to providing subsidies for boats and other assistance. But last and possibly most important of all is the necessity of educating our people to the value of fish as a food. The people of Ontario and the west do not know anything of the food value of fish. Since I have been in Ottawa only on one or two occasions have I had the pleasure of partaking of fish fit to eat. Of course, the people of these parts have no opportunity of judging just how good fish is as a diet. I hope my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Mullins) will not be offended if I tell him that a good, well-cooked fish is far preferable to the best piece of western beef that ever came off the prairies. The great problem, as I view it, is to instruct the people of Canada as to the food value of good fish. The second problem has to do with putting the fish on their tables. Some work along that line is being done at the present time. Before we talk about securing markets for our fish in other countries, I believe with a proper system of transportation and a proper realization of the food value of fish there is a market in Canada alone for many millions of pounds of this commodity, a market that would be sufficient to place the fishermen of the maritime provinces on their feet and make them prosperous and happy. But to-day it is necessary to begin from the ground up and educate our people to the importance and value of fish in their daily diet.

Now, with regard to the resolution itself, I have no quarrel with it at all. I am in favour of it.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Thank you.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): But I want the resolution broadened out; it should not be confined to the province of Quebec alone. Quebec is in the same category as the maritime provinces. We have this great wealth of fisheries on our Atlantic coast extending from the St. Lawrence down to Cape Breton and all around Nova Scotia. It is a lamentable fact that in the past those in authority in this country have not realized the value of these fisheries, but it is to be hoped that now the matter has been brought to the attention of the government they will regard it not as a party question at all, but as a national question, and will take such action as will tend properly to develop one of the most important of the natural resources of Canada, --the fisheries of the maritime provinces.

Mr. A. E. MacLEAN (Prince): Mr. Speaker, as this discussion has taken more or less of a general trend, and the question of bounties has been brought up, I desire to bring one phase of it to the attention of the house. I regret that neither the acting Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Duranleau) nor the former minister of the department (Mr. Rhodes) is in his seat. Possibly members have noticed through the press that there is a strong agitation among the Maine fishermen to place an embargo on the importation of live lobsters into the United States. One of the reasons for the agitation is the very question that we have been discussing this afternoon. They say the fishermen of Canada are subsidized, and that therefore the American fishermen cannot compete with them. I take strong exception to the statement, for I think I am correct in saying that the lobster fishermen of the maritime provinces, especially Prince Edward Island, are not subsidized in any shape or form and do not qualify for the bounty which is paid under the fisheries award. If I am not correct I should like to be put right.

Mr. DUFF: That is right.

Mr. VENIOT. That is right.

Mr. MacLEAN: I am quite certain that individual lobster fishermen cannot qualify for any bounty, consequently our friends across the border are wrong in the stand they are taking. Recently two bills have been introduced in the Senate of the United States and have received strong support. Their purpose is to impose an embargo on lobsters under ten and a half inches. At the present time our fishermen are allowed to ship into the United States live lobsters measuring nine inches in length. The American fishermen are not allowed to ship in lobsters under ten and a half inches in length. Now they are asking that an embargo be imposed against Canadian lobsters and that the requirement as to size apply to all lobsters offered for sale in the United States, namely 10½ inches. I have in my hand a press report in which it is stated:

> We are not seeking to keep out Canadian lobsters. Canada can ship all she wants to if she'll follow the proper conservation practices and ship in lobsters of the proper length. Canada subsidized lobster fishermen and their competition had cut prices.

I want to direct the attention of the Department of Fisheries to how seriously such an embargo would affect the lobster fishermen of the maritime provinces. I do hope the minister will take cognizance of what is going on and endeavour to present the facts of the case to the United States Department of Fisheries, because it is absolutely unfair that our fishermen should be treated in this way when our friends across the border are labouring under such a misapprehension of the facts. A few days ago I wrote to the United States authorities. This letter, which was addressed to the Department of Fisheries, Washington, and dated March 16, reads:

> Sometime ago newspaper reports stated that the United States government intended putting a duty on live lobsters going into the United States market but recently I have not seen anything in connection with this matter.
>
> Will you kindly let me know if any action has been taken regarding it and at what stage such legislation, if any, is at the present time.

The reply, dated March 18, reads:

> Dear Sir:
>
> In reply to your letter of March 16, it is presumed that the newspaper reports mentioned may have referred to bills introduced by Senator White (S. 2370) and Congressman

Nelson (H. R. 6586), of Maine which would have prohibited the importation of lobsters less than 10½ inches in length which accords with the legal restrictions in the State of Maine. So far as the bureau is aware, neither of these bills have ever been reported out of committee.

Very truly yours,
Lewis Radcliffe,
Acting Commissioner.

It would appear that these bills have not yet come before the house, but are still before the committee. Under date of March 19, I replied as follows:

Your letter received and I wish to thank you for the information contained in same.

By the newspaper reports it would appear that your department is under the impression that our Canadian lobster fishermen are subsidized by the government. This is not quite correct as any fishing bounty given in Canada goes to line fishermen and lobster fishermen alone cannot qualify for the bounty, so that this argument cannot be used.

As I said before, I should like to see the government take up this matter in a departmental way and advise our friends across the border that the lobster fisherman of the maritime provinces is not subsidized, and that this should not be used as an argument for the putting on of an embargo or restriction such as has been suggested. Possibly the former Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Rhodes), who is now in his seat, may have some further information on this matter. I know it will be welcomed by the house and by the fishermen of the maritime provinces.

Mr. G. M. McDADE (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the observations of the last speaker and also with the remarks of the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. MacDonald): I come from the Miramichi district, and unquestionably this river is the greatest salmon fishing river in the world, as to quality, and second only to the Pacific coast, as to quantity. I should like to speak very briefly in connection with a problem which is of vital importance to the salmon fishermen in this river.

We welcome the American angler to Canadian waters and appreciate the money expended in the payment of guides, the opening up of camps, and the purchase of supplies, but unfortunately at the present time there obtains in certain quarters in New Brunswick the impression that commercial fishing on the Miramichi should be curtailed if not entirely eliminated. Last year I had the pleasure of attending a representative gathering of the various fishing interests held in Chatham, where the Deputy Minister of Fisheries explained the desire of his department that the several interests should cooperate for the good of this great fishing industry. Unfortunately, conflict exists between the American angler and the set-net men, the anchor men and the drifters, but it is the policy of the department, as enunciated by the deputy minister, to endeavour to arrive at some common ground so that this great asset on the Atlantic can be protected and conserved for the common good.

As I said before, the curtailment of the commercial fishing is being agitated. I think this agitation is being inspired by eminent legal counsel who have seen fit to accept retainers from our American friends to advance the cause of the American angler as opposed to that of the set-net men and drifters. I submit that the interests of the Canadian people are paramount and that there should be no undue interference with the liberties which they have enjoyed from time immemorial. I submit also that the commercial fisherman should cooperate to a reasonable extent with the angler; he should realize the immeasurable benefit which accrues to other sections of the country from the investments of our American friends. I might mention that the Hon. Mr. Justice Maclean, as chairman of the royal commission in 1928, did not make any recommendation as to the curtailment of driftnets. The situation is so serious to our people that in these days of economic distress I submit that any change contemplated should be deferred, at least, until times improve, which we trust will not be in the very distant future.

I am heartily in sympathy with the hon. member who has submitted this resolution to the house for its consideration, but I would have preferred had its principles been extended to the maritime provinces. I realize the absolute need at the present time for economy and that subsidies to our fishermen would of necessity involve a large financial outlay. But the situation is serious, and, consistent with the need for economy in all departments of the public service, I appeal to the administration to consider seriously the representations which have been made and to grant them as far as the finances of the country will permit.

While I am on my feet I should like to refer briefly to the earnest plea which has been made by the fishermen of the Miramichi for a system of cooperative marketing and the provision of adequate cold storage facilities.

May I add that the situation facing the driftnet fishermen of the Miramichi is a vital one. This industry employs a large number of people who have no other possible means of earning a livelihood. We welcome the American to Canada, but I submit, with all due deference to my good friends of the bar who have accepted large retainers, that this is not the time to curtail seriously the liberties of our people. The various interests, including the American angler, should be able to find some common ground upon which to work for the good of the public generally.

Mr. VENIOT: The hon. member referred only to the Miramichi river; does he not mean the bay as well?

Mr. McDADE: I was referring particularly to the river, but my remarks would apply equally to the counties of Gloucester and Kent.

Mr. VENIOT: I was afraid the wrong impression might be given by referring only to the river.

Mr. JEAN-FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to speak at great length, but I have a few words to say on this matter on behalf of my constituents. First of all, the fish should belong to the people who live along the rivers and streams, to be used for their food, the surplus to be sold on the outside market for the use of people who live at a distance from those rivers and streams. In my constituency, which is fairly large, there are at least 150 lakes and many streams and rivers. I congratulate the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Casgrain) on his excellent move in directing the attention of the house to the fisheries of this country and more particularly of the province of Quebec. I am sorry to say that the most important lakes and streams of my constituency have been rented to United States citizens through the influence of a legislative councillor, whom I shall not name but whom everyone will recognize, and who by some unknown means has been able to secure leases of those lakes and streams on behalf of foreigners. In fact, last winter at least thirty people, who were not fishing but hunting on the grounds of those landlords, were arrested and had to spend thirty days in gaol.

My idea about fisheries is that, first of all, the people of any particular province should benefit from its own natural resources. I do not know what the conditions are in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and British Columbia, but in Quebec the fishing industry is a real one. I contend that it should be enjoyed by the citizens of that province, and it is on their behalf that I suggest that the Minister of Fisheries, in case he takes the matter up with the provincial government, see to it that all the leases that have been secured through the influence of that legislative councillor, who was elected a long time ago but who is no longer elected by the people, be cancelled, and that orders be given that in future no recommendation be accepted from him on behalf of any United States or other foreign citizen for the enjoyment of the exclusive privilege of fishing in our territory.

Mr. RHODES: Is the hon. member not aware that the question he raises is one solely within the purview of the province of Quebec?

Mr. POULIOT: I understand that very well, but what I say is directly connected with fisheries. I am discussing broadly the question of fisheries, especially as it concerns my constituency. I am not asking the federal parliament to enact any legislation in that regard; I am merely suggesting this to the Minister of Fisheries who I am sorry, is not present. Is the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) acting as Minister of Fisheries? I am sorry that when we are discussing such important legislation the Acting Minister of Fisheries is not in his place. My good friend the Minister of Finance, however, has been kind enough to listen to my remarks, and I suggest to him that the next time he meets the Acting Minister of Fisheries in council, he give him my suggestion if he is dealing with the provincial government in regard to the matter of fisheries.

Mr. CASGRAIN: May I interrupt my hon. friend? The Acting Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Duranleau) is not present, it is true, through no fault of his own. I hold no brief for him, but I understand there has been some bereavement in his family and that is the reason he is not here.

Mr. POULIOT: I offer my apologies. Under those circumstances he is not to blame; but I shall explain the matter to him personally and relieve the Minister of Finance of that burden.

Mr. RHODES: It will be a pleasure.

Mr. POULIOT: I thank the minister very much, but let me say to him in all earnestness, I shall be delighted if he will be disposed to talk the matter over with the provincial authorities when he meets them. Probably they are not aware of the situation and it should be brought to their attention. I am sure that as soon as the fact is disclosed to them, they will immediately see to it that the leases are cancelled, that the people who live along those wonderful streams and lakes have their rights restored to them, so that in future there will be no such reason to complain. This is why I should be glad if the hon. gentleman would say a word in support of the matter. I am sure his wonderful smile shows that he has been convinced.

Mr. ONESIME GAGNON (Dorchester): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful indeed to the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Casgrain), first of all for having brought up a very interesting question for discussion, and, second, for having informed the house that the absence of the Acting Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Duranleau) is due to a very sad bereavement in his family. As you know, Mr. Speaker, this morning he was obliged to attend the funeral of a brother to the late Hon. Rodolphe Monty, who was at one time a prominent figure in this house and member of this party.

Before attempting to comment on the resolution submitted to the house by my hon. friend, may I tell him I am rather surprised that he has waited such a long time before asking the federal government to cooperate with the provincial authorities in an endeavour to alleviate the sad situation which confronts the fishermen of Quebec. I am afraid I shall have to crave the indulgence of the house for being obliged to pass in review some of the judgments delivered by the privy council in reference to the question of fisheries.

Before 1922, as it is well known, the federal government was administering the fisheries in Quebec as it does now for the maritime provinces and British Columbia. Under the British North America Act "sea coast and inland fisheries" are, by inclusion in article 12, placed under the jurisdiction of the federal government. No difficulty arose about fisheries between the federal government and the provinces "until about 1882, when the federal government undertook to lease salmon angling privileges in non-tidal rivers in New Brunswick." The privy council held in the famous case of Robertson vs. the Queen that in non-tidal waters, the fisheries did not come under the legislative power of the federal government, "but remained the property of the riparian owners."

Following the above decision, the provinces claimed that they had jurisdiction in tidal waters as well, and it was agreed upon between the federal and provincial governments to submit for decision a stated case to the supreme court and finally to the privy council. Lord Haldane, in delivering the judgment of the lords of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council on November 30, 1920, in the case of the Attorney General for the Dominion of Canada against the Attorney General for the province of Quebec, gave a very comprehensive study of the different laws and decisions with respect to the fisheries and the respective rights of the federal government and the governments of the provinces. I shall not venture to quote in full the notes of the learned jurist, but allow me, Mr. Speaker, to draw your attention to the following:

In the province of Quebec, under the old French law and before 1760, "the right of fishing in navigable waters belonged to the domain of the crown and the public enjoyed the right of fishing in such waters, only subject to the prerogative of the king of France, to grant at his pleasure exclusive rights of fishing to individuals." This state of law, however, was altered "by statutes passed after the session of 1763."

It is not necessary for me to dwell at great length on the various statutes passed until the British North America Act became law in 1867.

In the case of the Attorney General for the Dominion vs. the Attorney General for the Provinces, submitted to the privy council in 1898, it has been held that the exclusive power of regulating fisheries, "no matter where they were situated, was vested in the federal government, under the British North America Act, but that any rights which the provinces had prior to confederation were still retained by them." It has been contended that this decision "did not define what were those property rights of the provinces." After the rendering of the said decision in 1898, the provinces along the sea claim the administration of their respective fisheries.

It was decided in 1914, in the case of the Attorney General for British Columbia vs. the attorney general for the dominion (1914-A. C. 153) that:

> —it was not competent for the legislature of British Columbia to authorize the government of the province to grant exclusive rights of fisheries in tidal rivers or in the sea, including arms of the sea and estuaries of rivers. It was laid down that in the sea wherever the common law of England applies the right of fishing is a public right not dependent on the proprietary title and that consequently the regulation of the right must rest exclusively with the Dominion parliament.

It has been said that this decision settled all causes of litigation between the dominion and the provinces, everywhere except in Quebec.

In the province of Quebec, as you know, Mr. Speaker, the law is different from the law of the other provinces. The latter are governed by the common law of England and the former by the civil code and the statutes of the local parliament.

Immediately after the decision of the privy council, in 1914, the Dominion of Canada published, in the official Canada Gazette, a notice stating that on January 1, 1915, "it would assume control of the fisheries in the tidal rivers of the province of Quebec hitherto administered by the federal government" and at the same time, on the 25th of January, the government of the province of Quebec published, in the Quebec Official Gazette, a notice that "the decision of the British Columbia reference did not apply to the province of Quebec and that, therefore, any person wishing to fish in the river and gulf of the St. Lawrence and any tidal waters, should make application to the Department of Colonization, Mines and Fisheries" to obtain the necessary license or permit.

As a result of the fresh controversy which then arose, a new reference to the privy council was agreed upon and in 1914 the case of the Attorney General for the province of Quebec vs. the Attorney General for the Dominion of Canada was submitted to the court of the King's Bench of the province of Quebec, and afterwards to the privy council. That case is precisely the one I referred to a moment ago, when I quoted the judgment of Lord Haldane. The decision of the privy council was decidedly in favour of the Dominion of Canada. The distinction made by the lords of the privy council is very clear. In tidal waters the power of granting rights of fisheries is vested exclusively in the federal government when the fishing is carried on in the waters without attaching engines or nets to the soil; but when the fishing is carried on by way of fishing nets attached to the soil, the provincial government has the exclusive power to grant the right to affix engines to the soil.

Be that as it may; that decision was not at all a victory for the government of the province of Quebec, as was admitted by the former Minister of Justice, the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) on April 3, 1922, at page 620 of volume 1 of Hansard for 1922, when he recognized that the decision of the privy council in 1920 gave to the federal government the exclusive power of regulating the fisheries.

May I say, Mr. Speaker, that that decision was certainly a very wise one. It marked the end of a long struggle the sole result of which had been, federally as well as provincially, to divert attention from a basic industry, just as important as agriculture, and to delay for a quarter of a century the rational organization of our deep sea fisheries. It finally placed Quebec on a basis of equality with the other provinces, permitting it:

(1) To have a single and complete fishery service: (a) to compel respect for the laws and regulations; (b) to ensure the observance of the treaties concerning foreign fishermen on our coasts;

(2) To put an end to abusive and indefinite claims derived from certain seigneurial privileges;

(3) To place the entire service, police and education, under the experienced direction of the federal department, which is equipped with the required means of action;

(4) To establish a system of cooperation, along well defined lines, betwen the federal and provincial governments, in order to revive our deep sea fisheries. The highest authorities of the country, united under the name of Natural Resources Conservation Commission, had already recognized that such cooperation was essential to ensure the full application to the deep sea fisheries of the administration's salutary influence.

(5) To liberate the provincial treasury from an expensive and difficult service, entailing if it is to be carried to the same degree of perfection and usefulness as those of the maritime provinces, for example, an annual expenditure that cannot be less than $400,000 or $500,000. As these provinces cost the federal treasury over $1,000,000 a year, it is considered that from $400,000 to $500,000 should be allowed to the province of Quebec, where all is yet to be done.

During the season of 1921, in pursuance of the decision of the privy council, the federal Department of Marine and Fisheries assumed the administration of all fisheries "in navigable waters accessible from the sea by navigation." The department drew up and started to carry out the following program of reforms:

(a) To create a staff of younger men who would follow a course of special studies and secure technical qualifications, etc. To begin with, fish wardens had to be trained, just as agronomists are in agriculture, along the lines already followed in the maritime provinces.

(b) To increase salaries in order that the new staff should devote its whole time to the fishery service.

(c) To establish a bureau of fisheries at Quebec.

(d) To establish an educational centre somewhere in the Gaspé peninsula to meet the immediate requirements of the service, then to develop into a marine biological station, demonstration, study and information centre, etc.

(e) To carry on throughout the province a publicity campaign for the products of the sea, etc., etc.

It is interesting now to ask ourselves whether the government of the province of Quebec at any time in 1921 expressed its willingness to cooperate with the dominion authorities in putting into operation the program of reforms which had been proposed by the federal Department of Fisheries. The government of the province of Quebec was desirous of concealing from the electorate of that province the fact that it had gained nothing in the long and protracted litigation which lasted more than twenty years. It gave the keynote to the Liberal newspapers of the province of Quebec to proclaim that the privy council had recognized the predominant claims of the province over the rights of the federal government. The present hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) on April 3, 1922, admitted in the House of Commons that there was still a conflict as to jurisdicition in the administration of fisheries along the coast. Instead of safeguarding the rights of the fishermen of the province of Quebec the Dominion government in the month of February, 1922, by a mere order in council, transferred the whole administration of Quebec fisheries to the legislature of that province.

May I state, Mr. Speaker, how that came about. Hon. members know that a general election was held in the year 1921. Throughout the campaign in the province of Quebec not a word was uttered on Liberal platforms concerning the administration of fisheries within the province. The Conservative government was defeated at the polls. In the month of January, 1922, the new administration took office. At that time the present hon. member for Quebec East was made Minister of Marine and Fisheries and began to negotiate in camera with the Minister of Fisheries in the province of Quebec. As I have said, in February, 1922, by a mere order in council, without the authority of parliament, the government of the dominion transferred the administration of fisheries to the legislature of the province of Quebec.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. GAGNON: Before recess, Mr. Speaker, I was discussing the purport of the order in council passed by the Dominion government on February 14, 1922, transferring the administration of fisheries in the province of Quebec to the government of that province. I stated that this order in council, although very far-reaching in its scope, had not been made the subject of public discussion during the federal elections which had taken place only two months before it was passed, and that neither the Liberal candidates for the federal house nor the premier of Quebec, who took a great part in those elections, let the people of that province know the drastic change which was contemplated with regard to the administration of fisheries.

Mr. DUPUIS: I would like to know where and in what circumstances the premier of Quebec took such a large part in that federal election.

Mr. GAGNON: I am surprised at such an interruption by my hon. friend, because he knows very well that Mr. Taschereau has taken a large part in every dominion election. During the last election, in July of 1930, Mr. Taschereau spoke in Quebec and asked the people of his province to vote against the present Prime Minister because of conscription, although that question had been buried years before. Now I hope hon. gentlemen opposite will let me speak about fisheries, because so far as I know there is no connection at all between fisheries and conscription.

Although the Liberal platform previous to the election of 1921 did not include the transfer of the fisheries to the provincial government, during January and February of 1922, meeting in camera and without consulting parliament, the Liberal government of the day passed this order in council, this mere scrap of paper, which was entirely against the best interests of the fishermen of Quebec. It was not surprising that when parliament met, immediately after the election of the Speaker, Right Hon. Arthur Meighen, at that time leader of the opposition in the house, moved for the production of all the correspondence and the order in council itself. The order in council was produced, but fearing that a public discussion might take place in Quebec the Liberal government of that province took the precaution of inserting long articles in Le Soleil of Quebec and La Presse of Montreal, proclaiming what they called the great victory of the provincial government over the federal government. I have before me Le Soleil of February 15, 1922, on the first page of which appears the heading "A great victory for the province of Quebec." The article goes on to say that the province of Quebec secured a great victory, after twenty-five years of struggle, by obtaining relief from the oppression of the federal government; that the rights of that province finally had triumphed and the perseverance of the provincial government had been rewarded. Reading such extraordinary statements one would think the province had been threatened with a plague or something of that kind, whereas the article only has reference to the transfer by order in council of the control of the fisheries of Quebec. The same issue of Le Soleil contains a statement by Hon. Mr. Perrault of Quebec, who was then and is still Minister of Fisheries for that province.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Mr. Perrault is not Minister of Fisheries now.

Mr. GAGNON: Mr. Perrault is reported to have said that from that time on the province of Quebec would have absolute control over its fisheries, and when a debate took place in the provincial legislature Hon. Mr. Perrault boasted of having achieved such astounding results. The leader of the opposition, who then was Mr. Arthur Sauvé, the present Postmaster General, expressed some fears as to the legality of the transfer of such rights which, by the British North America Act, were vested solely in the dominion parliament. He suggested that the provincial government should have some legislation enacted which would really protect the interests of the fishermen of Quebec, but nothing of the sort was done.

The Liberal newspapers, inspired by the leaders of the party at Quebec as well as at Ottawa, took care to proclaim the great victory achieved by the province in preventing the dominion from contributing any money to provide the fishermen of Quebec with an efficient and reasonable service. After having read those remarks I am not surprised that hon. gentlemen opposite have been silent and deaf for eight years and that they never invoked the authority of the federal government to come to the rescue of the fishermen of Quebec. But now, Mr. Speaker, when we have a Conservative administration here in Ottawa, hon. gentlemen opposite proclaim themselves the saviours of the fishermen, and want to have the impression go throughout Quebec that we are not adequately protecting the fishermen of that province, though that province has taken the matter under its own control and this government has been prevented from contributing anything to help those men.

This afternoon, before the dinner hour, I heard the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil), helping his friend the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Casgrain), ask that the federal government cooperate with the provincial government. I have before me Hansard for 1922, and I find that the hon. member for Bonaventure brought forward a resolution congratulating the Dominion government, presided over at that time by the present right hon. leader of the opposition, for having secured that great victory for Quebec, in the transfer of the administration of fisheries. I find also the speech made in this house by the former Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe), who explained very fully all the different legislation, the orders in council and the judgments of the privy council which had to do with the matter. When Mr. McQuarrie, at that time a distinguished member from British Columbia, rose in his place and put some questions concerning the administration of fisheries in Quebec and in British Columbia, one of the many reasons advanced by the former Minister of Justice to justify the transfer was that the federal government had spent in Quebec $88,000 and had received only $12,000. On April 3, 1922, answering a question put to him by Mr. Ladner, another distinguished member from British Columbia, the former Minister of Justice said:

> I do not see how any revenue could be enjoyed in view of the fact that we expended $88,000 last year and the receipts were only $12,000. So the Quebec fisheries will be a charge on the provincial government.

Now, this is the wonderful way in which our friends opposite have seen fit to serve the interests of the fishermen of Quebec. It is no surprise that they who have been deaf and mute for twelve years now say that the exchequer of Quebec has not sufficient revenues, and that this is the reason why the federal government should contribute more towards the Quebec fisheries service.

I am not opposed to the federal government helping the fisheries of Quebec, and I am ready to support the motion; but, Mr. Speaker, I think it is imperative that we on this side of the house should tell the people of Quebec what motives lie behind this motion, and that we should tell of the great betrayal in 1922 of the fishermen of Quebec by our friends opposite. Mr. Meighen, the then leader of the opposition, speaking on the same motion expressed his surprise at the astounding procedure the government had chosen to adopt to get rid of the administration of fisheries, and he added:

> The minister's remarks have been of value as interpreting the judgments delivered since 1882 by the privy council. I may go further and say that they are illuminating on every question except those questions which may possibly come in controversy and be of moment in connection with the conduct of administration, that is to say, on the question of the right of the government of Canada to abdicate to any other government a function placed in it by the constitution, the right of the government of Canada by order in council to amend the British North America Act.

The hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay and the hon. member for Bonaventure have referred to a delegation which last week interviewed the provincial Minister of Fisheries at Quebec, but the former hon. gentleman deemed it wise not to read the memorandum which that delegation then submitted, for it strongly condemned the fisheries administration of the provincial government. The text of this memorandum was published in the Quebec Chronicle-Telegraph on the nineteenth instant. As hon. members know, that newspaper supports the provincial government. This appears on the front page.

The object of our visit, Mr. Minister, is to bring to your kind attention the following facts:

1. Stagnation and decline of our fisheries:

It is an axiom of general knowledge that, "When we do not advance, we recede." In 1922, in the legislative assembly, Mr. Fabien Bugeaud brought to notice our state of stagnation; the total yield of our fisheries has not changed since fifty years. Therefore, if there must be a change, if it is to come soon, it appears that it will come under the heading of a deficit. To back up this assertion, allow me to quote some figures establishing a comparison between the revenues of the Quebec fisheries and those of three other important provinces; New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and British Columbia. These last show a total augmentation of approximately $29,000,000 during this period while we show a decline.

Then they give these figures:

Nova Scotia
1880	$ 6,219,061
1930	10,411,202
New Brunswick
1880	2,744,447
1930	4,853,575
British Columbia
1880	713,335
1930	23,103,302
Quebec
1880	2,631,556
1930	2,503,998

I ask hon. members to notice that in the fifty years from 1880 to 1930 the fishery revenues of British Columbia increased from $713,335 to the huge sum of $23,103,302, while the fishery revenues of Quebec decreased in that period from $2,631,556 to $2,503,998.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Shame.

Mr. GAGNON: Those facts are astounding, and they tend to prove that instead of resorting to litigation for half a century the government of Quebec should have come to an understanding with the federal government. Now, the only way to remedy the situation is to arrange a conference between the provincial and the federal authorities, to ascertain by what means the interest of the fishermen and the public interest would be best served. Although, as I said a moment ago, this resolution is moved only in order to try to impress on the people of Quebec that the Conservative party never did anything for the fisheries of Quebec, for my hon. friend knows very well that the federal government has no jurisdiction over the fisheries of Quebec, yet if my humble vote can do something to relieve the sufferings of our fishermen brought about by the misguided policy of our friends opposite when they held office and assumed to transfer the administration of the Quebec fisheries by a mere order in council, a procedure which was ultra vires, and extraordinary—I say if I can do anything to help relieve our fishermen from the disadvantages which they are now labouring under as a result of that ill-advised action, I will vote for the resolution.

Mr. MAURICE BRASSET (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with much attention to the debate and I am in full accord with the purpose of the resolution. I am very much interested indeed in the ultimate settlement of this question, my county being situated in that part of the Gaspé peninsula where the province of Quebec has control of its fisheries, while the Dominion government have control of the Magdalen islands.

I do not quite understand the motives underlying the speech delivered by the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Gagnon). This is not a question of politics, it is not a question of Conservative or Liberal policy, it is simply a question of helping the fishermen. In 1922 the province of Quebec asked the Dominion government to take over control of the fisheries of the province, because the fishermen, especially those on the Gaspé coast, were in a state of distress. After the war there were no fishing boats on the Gaspé coast, these people not being able to resume fishing operations, and the provincial government asked the Dominion government to cooperate in the control of these fisheries, not simply to have control but to cooperate in the helping of the fishermen of Gaspé and of the province.

I cannot understand the attitude of hon. members opposite, especially those from the province of Quebec. Every time they rise in their places to discuss a matter concerning Quebec, they do not discuss it from the federal angle, but blame everything on Premier Taschereau. It is not the premier's fault that this government is in its present condition. Every time hon. members speak of Quebec they bring in the name of Premier Taschereau. He can handle his own business and I ask this government to handle the business of Canada.

We ask that the government give assistance to the fishermen of Quebec. Only a few years ago the farmers of the west had no need of dominion assistance; the country was prosperous and they were able to take care of their own needs. But a crisis came and the farmers of the west had to ask the federal government for assistance, which was granted last year in the form of a bonus on wheat of five cents per bushel. The same thing is true of Quebec. In past years the fishermen had no need of assistance from the federal government or from the provincial government. During the past ten years the provincial government has helped them to the extent of paying fifty per cent of the cost of the construction of their schooners as well as assistance in the purchasing of equipment. A very grave state of affairs exists to-day on the Gaspé coast and the provincial government alone is not able to grant the assistance required. These people now come to the federal government to ask that they be granted the required relief. The fisheries of the dominion expended in 1929-30, $2,400,000, a large portion of this amount being in the form of taxes paid by the fishermen of Quebec. It is only right that these men now have a share in the expenditures being made by this government. It is up to the federal government to contribute something towards the support of the fishermen of Quebec, and it is because of this that I am in full accord with the resolution moved by the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Casgrain).

Mr. L. W. JOHNSTONE (Cape Breton North-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, before this discussion closes I should like to make a few remarks. The ground has been covered very ably by the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg (Mr. Ernst) and there is very little more to be said. However, as I represent a constituency in which there are a great number of fishermen, I feel that I should say a few words on their behalf.

I am in accord with the resolution moved this afternoon by the hon. member (Mr. Casgrain) but I would have liked to have seen it phrased in broader terms. He should have made his resolution apply to coastal water generally. The situation facing the fishing industry is serious. In Cape Breton we are confronted with the interference of outside fishermen and the high price of bait.

Only to-day I received a letter from a fisherman in my constituency complaining about the Newfoundland fishermen coming into Antigonish and other ports on the northern coast. These men catch and clean their fish outside and then come into our ports to salt their catch, and they interfere with the rights of our own fishermen.

Another very serious question is that of bait. These men want cold storage facilities provided in Cape Breton. There is one plant there already, one-third of which is owned by the government, but it has been leased to a private concern and our fishermen cannot obtain their bait at reasonable prices, and this is causing great distress at the present time. The price of bait asked by the local firms is so high that the men cannot afford to buy it, and there are no cold storage facilities provided for the storage of their own bait. It would be of great assistance to the fishermen if they could obtain their bait at a proper price.

The lack of markets is a great problem, and I agree with the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. MacDonald) that Canada should provide a market for our fish. I do not desire to say anything detrimental to the cooking abilities of Canadian women, but I contend that they should be educated in the use of our fish. An attempt has been made to educate Canadians to use coke instead of foreign coal, and similar education could be carried on in connection with our fish. The women of Canada should be taught how to use and cook Canadian fish.

I am sure that this resolution will do some good because it has provided the opportunity for a discussion of this question. I feel quite confident that the government will take such action as will improve the condition of a very important part of our population.

Hon. P. J. VENIOT (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, coming as I do from a county where over half of the population earns its livelihood by fishing, I think I should be lax in my duty if I allowed this opportunity to pass without saying a word or two, even though the resolution pertains only to the province of Quebec. I regret that the hon. member who introduced the resolution (Mr. Casgrain) did not make it dominion-wide. He bases his resolution on the fact that the province of Quebec, which administers its own fisheries, is not now in a position to give the required assistance to the fishermen of that province, and he asks for cooperation between the governments of the province of Quebec and the Dominion of Canada.

I regret that this resolution has been taken as an excuse for political discussion, but since it has drifted into the realm of politics, may I point out to hon. gentlemen opposite from the province of Quebec that Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island do not administer the fisheries of their respective provinces. If the fact that the government of Quebec has jurisdiction over its own fishermen has brought about chaos, as my hon. friend attempts to show, what must we say of the last two or three years of the administration by the federal government of the fisheries in the three maritime provinces?

I am not going to lay upon any government the blame for the depression in the fishing industry. During the last two years especially, the fishermen of Nova Scotia have been repeatedly asking the federal government, and rightly so, to come to their assistance. Even when times were good, even from 1926 to 1929, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick as well as Prince Edward Island fishermen appealed to the federal government for greater encouragement. Why? Because, owing to the greater development of the fishing industry in European countries, we could not get the markets that we previously had. For that reason the governments of the three maritime provinces took upon themselves the responsibility of appealing to the federal government, even under the Duncan report, to do something for the fishermen. Therefore I take it that the condition existing in Quebec to-day is not because of the fact that jurisdiction over the fisheries in that province was transferred to the provincial government in 1922.

Having said that much about the political aspect of the matter, may I be permitted to draw the attention of the house to the fishing industry in the maritime provinces, and especially in New Brunswick. I am not doing this in order to criticize the government of the day. I firmly believe you cannot attribute present conditions in the fishing industry in New Brunswick to the government of the day or to any other. As I have explained before, circumstances have arisen which have placed our fishermen in a position which renders it very difficult for them to make a livelihood as they did in former years. But there is one thing which governments can do in the matter of regulation for the conservation of the fishing industry. In mentioning that point, may I call the attention of the government to the regulation governing lobster fishing? For years and years there has existed in New Brunswick a regulation which divides the province into different fishing seasons of lobsters. For instance, there is an imaginary line drawn from Ste. Anne in the county of Kent to Cape Tormentine. Under the regulation establishing those limits lobster can be fished in that section in the fall of the year. Many fishermen further north in Ste. Anne du Bocage claim that line should be extended to include the whole north shore and that the spring season should be abolished.

What are the conditions? In the counties of Kent and Westmorland, lobster fishermen can fish in the fall of the year, I think from August 15 to October 15. What happens? The fishermen in Kent and Westmorland west of the dividing line, during the spring season of fishing north of that line, go up into Northumberland, Gloucester and Restigouche and fish during that season. Then when the spring season is over, they go back to their homes and fish during the fall up to the 15th of October. In this way they have two fishing seasons whereas our fishermen north of the line, as far north as Restigouche county, have only the one. There is at present a petition before the Department of Fisheries requesting a change in the fishing season in the nothern section of the province, and I hope the department will consider it very carefully. I am told that owing to scientific reasons the date should not be changed; that if we change the date, we may contribute to the rapid destruction of lobsters in northern New Brunswick. Storms in northern New Brunswick during the winter have caused more destruction to the lobster industry that lack of proper regulations. During the storm in the latter part of December of last year, it was estimated that 100 tons or more of live lobsters were driven ashore in the gulf of St. Lawrence on the island of Miscou, Shippigan island, the mainland of Shippigan down as far as Tracadie beach. These lobsters died on the beach. I am not saying that the government should establish a regulation to prevent such an occurrence, but I wish to point out that nature at times causes more destruction to the lobster industry than any lack of regulation.

We know there is poaching, and if there is poaching in any line of the fishing industry it is in regard to lobsters. Education is required to teach those people that they should give up poaching. There is no doubt they will give it up in the very late season, but between seasons, from the middle of June to the middle of August, is the period when the regulations should be strictly enforced, because it is the time in that section when the lobster sheds its shell and, and so to speak, takes on a new dress. But between August 15 and October 15, the lobster shell is just as hard and firm in the waters of northern New Brunswick as it is in the section of the province where the fishermen are permitted to fish during that period. I would ask the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes), who was formerly Minister of Fisheries to extend to the present Acting Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Duranleau) his knowledge of the situation and not to give too much heed to the theorists, who, calling themselves scientific men, are preventing the fishermen of northern New Brunswick from earning an honest livelihood.

Another question touched upon by the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg (Mr. Ernst) was that of salted fish. I am in full accord with him on this subject. It is absolutely necessary in these trying times of depression that we should give more encouragement to our fishermen. I do not believe in a bonus, but as the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg said this afternoon, if that is the only means which this government can devise to help out our fishermen, I should be willing to support it. We have been asked to give our support to a bonus to help the farmers of the west, and I willingly and cheerfully agreed to that because it was pointed out to us that that was the only way in which those farmers could be helped at that time. We have also given a bonus to the coal industry in Nova Scotia, and with that I also agreed. Now we are asking that some encouragement be given to an industry which to my mind is greater even than the mining industry in the maritime provinces. Our fishemen by the thousands and hundreds of thousands are suffering to-day because they cannot get a proper market or a proper price for their fish, and if there is no other way to help them except by a bonus, if they cannot obtain the markets which formerly gave them a reasonable living price for their products, then I would agree to a bonus of so much to each fisherman; or perhaps one way to help would be to assist in the construction and maintenance of the vessels that are used in carrying on that business and which cost so much.

I am not going to discuss to-night the salmon branch of the fishing industry, because I dealt with that last winter, and the one reproach that I have to make to the Minister of Fisheries of that day—

Mr. RHODES: Only one?

Mr. VENIOT: Only one. My one reproach is this: He promised that he would come and visit our salmon nets last summer and see how our fishermen laboured to catch the salmon, and he did not keep that promise. I know he was a busy man, but he was not too busy, Mr. Speaker, to spend a day or two on the Restigouche. He was not too busy to enjoy the hospitality of those American gentlemen who to-day are claiming that they should have rights over the fishermen of the province of New Brunswick. I am going to say to the present Minister of Finance that that invitation for him to come and visit our salmon fisheries is still open. He may reply: I am not the Minister of Fisheries; there is an Acting Minister of Fisheries; invite him. No, Mr. Speaker, because the present Acting Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Duranleau), when a delegation appeared before him two weeks ago, although he received us in a kindly way and was very courteous, admitted quite openly—I compliment him upon his frankness—that he knew absolutely nothing about salmon or fishing, not even about the casting of a line. Therefore I want somebody to come on the spot who knows something about angling.

Mr. SWANSTON: You know all about firing postmasters.

Mr. VENIOT: I have fired postmasters, but I have never fired one-tenth of the number that have been fired since your party came into power; and I am not blaming the Postmaster General for doing the firing but those hungry Tories at his back. I am a little surprised, Mr. Speaker, that on a question of this importance the hon. member who interrupted has nothing more to say than that. I am sure his constituents would be pleased if they saw that he had once stood on the floor of this house and delivered a sensible speech that would be reported in Hansard, instead of interrupting hon. members who are trying to do their duty in this house.

I am not going to take up the time of the house further, except once more to draw the attention of the Department of Fisheries to the petition that is now before them touching the change of date in the lobster fishing in the northern section of New Brunswick.

Mr. P. F. CASGRAIN (Charlevoix-Saguenay): I shall try to be brief in my remarks, Mr. Speaker. The discussion on the resolution has been going on for some time; I never thought it would be so lengthy. The consensus of opinion among the members of the house seems to be in favour of the adoption of this resolution and I am pleased that both members from the maritime provinces and members from the province of Quebec on the government side are willing to support my motion.

There is one thing I should like to point out, however. Although the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Gagnon) has discussed this question in the way he has, and launched upon an attack against what he called the bad administration of the fisheries in the province of Quebec due to the fisheries having come under the control of the provincial government in recent years, he seems to be not quite in accord with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes), who this afternoon stated that nothing had been taken away from the fishermen of the province of Quebec, because they had still the right to avail themselves of the various provisions that are on our statute books, such as the federal grant of seventy-five per cent for refrigerators for bait, and the regular grant of thirty per cent for other refrigerators which are necessary for fishermen. The difficulty is—and it is the reason for this motion—that the fishermen in the province of Quebec, and more especially on the north shore of the river St. Lawrence, are in a very unfortunate situation at the present time, having had a poor catch of fish for the last few years; therefore they are not in a position to avail themselves of any such grants or to contribute in the proportion which the law requires before they can obtain these refrigeration facilities. The consequence is that last year and the year before the provincial government has had to do practically everything on its own account in the way of establishing these refrigerator plants on the north shore of the river St. Lawrence in my county. As far as other laws on the statute book of which fishermen might take advantage are concerned, they are not in a position to do so, and since the administration of the fisheries was entrusted to the provincial government in 1922, it has had to do everything on its own account. The revenues derived from the fisheries by the provincial government, I am informed, although I have not exact figures, amount to hardly one per cent of the amount which the provincial government is spending nearly every year on the fisheries of the province, which is $300,000. When the provincial government was entrusted with the administration of the fisheries in 1922, it was due to the fact that it was desired to avoid the difficulties that had prevailed before with respect to licences in interior waters and also in deep and salt water down the lower part of the gulf. That is one of the reasons why the provincial government took over the administration of the fisheries as they stood within the limits of the province of Quebec. Now if the administration of the fisheries by the government of the province of Quebec has been bad, although my hon. friend from Dorchester claims that the blame should be laid at the door of the provincial government, surely the same blame should be laid at the door of this federal administration when we find conditions obtaining in the maritime provinces as they have been represented by the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Veniot). Conditions there do not seem to be much better than in the province of Quebec. If the federal administration did not do well in turning over to the provincial government the administration of the law, not the rights of the fishermen, as was suggested by the hon. member for Dorchester, I say, Mr. Speaker, that this government is here to settle all ills. They were elected to give better and more efficient administration, to settle all existing difficulties, to bring back prosperity, happiness and plenty to all. As I have said, I am merely asking that they give the necessary help to the province of Quebec, and I have given my reasons.

I wish to touch upon another point—and for this reason I hope hon. members will hear me a few moments more. The hon. member for Dorchester says we have been absolutely silent for the past eight years, that nothing has been done since the administration of the fisheries was turned over to the government of the province of Quebec. I was not a member sitting for the county of Saguenay on the north shore of the river St. Lawrence when the administration of the fisheries was transferred to the provincial government of Quebec. I was then sitting for the county of Charlevoix-Montmorency. In that district there were not very many fishermen, and the conditions affecting the deep sea fisheries did not obtain there as they do now on the north shore of the St. Lawrence. Since the year 1926 I have represented in this House of Commons the county of Saguenay on the north shore of the river St. Lawrence, and have been deeply interested in the fisheries. I have been working much more than my hon. friend from Dorchester would lead the house to believe. If he were to refer to the royal commission which investigated the fisheries of the maritime provinces and the Magdalen Islands he would find that on March 20 in the year 1928 the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay appeared before the commission and presented a brief in the interests of the fishermen along the north shore of the St. Lawrence. At pages 85 and 86 of the report of that commission, issued in the year 1928, my hon. friend will see that the commissioners took cognizance of certain remarks that I made at that time in the interests of the fishermen in my constituency. I shall not take the time to read all the comments contained in this report, because there are many paragraphs which might not be of interest to all hon. members. There are certain points however to which I think I should direct the attention of the house. At page 86 of the report I find the following:

> In marketing the fish products of the Gaspé peninsula and the north shore of the gulf of St. Lawrence, most of which is without railway communication, and is completely isolated during many months of the year, shippers have to rely upon subsidized steamship services performed under contract by the Clarke Steamship Company.

Then, further on in the report I find the following:

> Accordingly, there is a demand for improvement in the service performed by the Clarke Steamship Company. We recommend a consideration of the existing contract with the view of affording to this section of the country more adequate transportation facilities.

Mr. Speaker, this is a matter entirely within the jurisdiction of this parliament and the Department of Trade and Commerce. Following the report to which I have referred endeavours were made successfully to secure an enlargement of the subsidies so that adequate facilities, such as refrigeration services in the boats of the Clarke Steamship Company, might be had on the north shore of the St. Lawrence. I am told that such service was extended to the boats of the same company plying between Quebec and the Gaspé peninsula.

I find in the report the further paragraph:

> Railway freight and express rates are also complained of in that portion of the Gaspé peninsula which has railway connection.

Railway facilities are under the control of this parliament, and are matters of which this government should take cognizance. In the report a further request was made for harbour improvements or shelters for shore boats on the Gaspé peninsula. At the same time I appeared before the commission, I mentioned that such facilities should be afforded to people along the north shore of the river St. Lawrence.

If hon. members in this house or people outside the house would look at some of the estimates tabled in the years 1928, 1929 and 1930, they would surely find out that your humble servant has not been remiss in the discharge of his duties, because on many occasions I was rebuked by hon. members who then constituted the opposition, and was taken to task even by some members in my own party, because I was asking for too many improvements, such as wharf accommodation, dredging, and harbours, to benefit the fishermen on the north shore. The government implemented part of this report of the commission by paying attention to some of the requests made and by improving facilities at many points along the north shore. That is true more especially at a place called Tunday river, where a wharf was needed, and at Bredor Bay, near Labrador, where similar work was necessary. Many little harbours and breakwaters have been built to help the fishermen, and to implement the report made by this commission.

There is another paragraph in the report dealing with matters which might well be developed by the Department of Fisheries in the province of Quebec. I refer to the grading and inspection of fish, the establishment of a technological and biological laboratory for experiments, the institution of a bureau of information, a scientific study of the oceanography of the river and gulf of St. Lawrence, the migration of the different species of fish, the making of fishing charts, the adoption of a policy of subsidies for cold storage plants, fish canning factories, drying establishments and reduction plants. I think the provincial government in Quebec, which now looks after the administration of laws concerning the fisheries, has begun to deal with the matters here mentioned in the report. As I stated previously the amount required from year to year is far greater than the province of Quebec can afford to spend. The need is always increasing, and there is the added reason that in the years 1930 and 1931, the catch has been small along the north shore of the St. Lawrence. A large amount of the money which might have been divided to help the services mentioned in this report was given by way of subsidy or relief to the people along the north shore of the river. That was the condition obtaining before the relief measures were passed two years ago in this House of Commons.

So, Mr. Speaker, although hon. members opposite may want the country to believe that the hon. member representing Charlevoix-Saguenay has not discharged his duty, it is quite clear they are not stating the facts. Since I have represented that constituency I have given my best attention to the needs of the fishermen. If in the years 1929 and 1930, the government was not approached to secure the relief now described in the resolution, it was because conditions at that time were not so bad. Our markets had not been closed, and the fishermen were in a position to dispose of their product at reasonable prices. To-day they are in a much different position, and it is for that reason this resolution has been introduced before the house.

This afternoon I was pleased to hear the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg say he was going to take this matter up with the government with a view to helping the fishermen. Apparently three remedies were suggested. The first was a bonus to be given to the fishermen; the second, trade treaties, and the third, the stabilization of currency. If some of those remedies could be applied, fishermen not only in the province of Quebec but also along Atlantic and Pacific sea coasts would receive some benefit.

If we are soliciting federal assistance, it is so that there may be established on the coast of Gaspé, and possibly on the north shore of the St. Lawrence, biological and experimental stations from which the fishermen would be able to obtain information required, such as meteorological reports. Such reports should be printed in the French language. May I call the attention of the house to the fact that two-thirds of the fishermen in the province of Quebec are French, and they cannot take full advantage of all the valuable work that has been done at the biological stations if the results of that work are not translated into French. These stations are far away, and the fishermen cannot go to St. Andrews and Halifax from their own towns or villages on the north shore of the St. Lawrence in order to obtain information. I have in my hand a letter which I addressed last year to the Department of Fisheries, asking for a number of publications which I thought might be of interest to the fishermen in my district. I found that the French edition of a pamphlet entitled "Dried Cod Fisheries" was almost exhausted. Who is to blame for that?

These things should not be allowed to go on if we really want to help the fishermen in Quebec. Measures should be taken also to develop our fish trade more than it has been developed in the past. This might be done by reducing the cost of transportation and creating local markets for our fresh fish. If this were done it would be of great help to the fishermen in my constituency.

I did not introduce this resolution because I wanted to play politics at all, as the hon. member for Dorchester suggested; I did not bring up this matter at the request of any person in the provincial government. As I said in my opening remarks, a similar resolution was adopted by the provincial house, after being introduced by the local member for my county, and I thought it behooved me to lay the case before this house with regard to the fisheries of Quebec. I think a bonne entente might be arrived at, and by cooperation and conference between the two governments the little troubles that have existed in the past may be ironed out and we might start anew in order to help the fishing industry in Quebec as it should be helped.

Mr. RHODES: I suggested to my hon. friend that while his resolution was not unacceptable to the government in its present form, it would be more acceptable if he amended it by substituting the words "the greatest possible" for the words "a greater" in the third line.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I have no objection to amending it in that way if it will then be acceptable to the government.

Mr. RHODES: It will be quite acceptable.

Motion (Mr. Casgrain) as amended agreed to.

NATIONAL HEALTH

PROPOSED PROVISION FOR MEDICAL EXAMINATION AND MEDICAL RELIEF

Mr. J. P. HOWDEN (St. Boniface) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should take into immediate consideration steps which would: (a) provide for periodic medical examination of the Canadian people; (b) afford medical relief for those suffering from disease.

He said: Mr. Speaker, without casting any reflection on the debate that has just concluded, one might mention in passing that it has been rather fishy. I hope the subject I seek to place before the house to-night will not bring out any political arguments but that the attitude of last year will be the attitude of this year also.

Last session, Mr. Speaker, it was my privilege to present to this house a resolution similar in principle and meaning to the resolution I am moving to-night. It was very well received, generously considered and not unsympathetically criticized. Of the seventeen members who spoke to the motion all but three either spoke in favour of the resolution or of the principle which it sought to establish. The right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett), however, opposed the motion and stated at some length his reasons for doing so. He said it was a purely academic resolution, and with that statement I have no great fault to find, unless the right hon. gentleman meant to infer that the idea could have no practical application. If that was what he meant, of course I do not agree, because my purpose in bringing the matter before the house was not to precipitate a highbrow debate, but rather in the hope that some time Canada would adopt a measure of public medicine which would assure the people of this country of succor and relief in times of ill health, and as far as possible immunity from disability caused by disease.

At that time the Prime Minister stated that probably the greatest objection to the resolution was that it would wipe out medical service as it existed at the present time and would completely eliminate private enterprise in medicine, thus destroying the initiative of medical men. He did not say so at the time but I rather fancy he meant that this would occur quickly. I had no idea that my innocent looking resolution might become such a force for disruption and revolution, but not wishing to abandon what I considered to be a good cause I have brought forward the resolution again to-night in a form which I hope will be more acceptable to the government.

This is quite an important matter, Mr. Speaker, and it deserves a fair amount of consideration. I understand quite a number of our members wish to speak to the resolution, if possible, so in order to set forth the situation as clearly as possible I should like to refer quite freely to the written text I have before me.

It would seem rather anomalous that we should try to preserve and prolong life in Canada at this time when, if it were not for relief measures instituted by various governments, we would have many thousand of our people underfed, hungry or actually starving. It might be said that the more rational procedure would be to find some means of quietly doing away with about one third of our population, that is, that part which has no visible means of support. Thereby we would summarily and effectively dispose of that sorely vexing question of unemployment. Something of the same idea is hinted at by Sir Andrew Rae Duncan and one of his colleagues in a report I have before me. This report points out the somewhat antagonistic interests of the individual and the state in a time of illness. Each time a sick person recovers it is but against the time he will sicken again and further burden the state. If in the meantime such person has been the means of begetting other life, and the offspring, like the parent, be of inferior mental and physical stamina, also subject to illness and requiring an undue amount of care and medical attention, the state in rendering the service which saved the parent has thereby largely added to its own responsibility and expense, and in the report the wisdom of this is mildly questioned. Were it not better to let the fittest survive and the devil take the hindermost? There is a good deal to be said in support of this, Mr. Speaker. Such a principle obtains in the life of all wild species and all primitive or aboriginal peoples and when given a reasonable show they seem to do pretty well. Since fewer would survive there would be less unemployment, and since chiefly the stronger would survive it would be the means of building up a strong and virile nation and perhaps saving us a good deal of trouble and expenses. In the history of civilization there was a time when imbeciles and other subjects of hopeless infirmity were smothered, drowned or whatnot, but fortunately, or otherwise, civilization has advanced to the stage where such procedure is no longer practised, where each individual human born is accorded a right with his brother to survive and afforded the same opportunity to a fairly substantial degree. Probably it is just as well that it is so, Mr. Speaker, for by some strange turn of fate the ugly duckling becomes a handsome drake; the puniest member of a flock or litter lives to outdo the more thrifty members; undersized, delicate children often become sturdy specimens of adult life, and on the other hand the world's greatest accomplishments in art, science, literature, in commerce and in war have been achieved in many instances by men of frail make-up, at times the subject of wasting disease and altogether below the average in ordinary physique. It would almost seem that the frail form is given the better brain by way perchance of compensation.

Therefore civilization and society being as they are, we must adopt the only alternative and endeavour to modify our social structure so as to minimize unemployment on the one hand and eliminate as far as possible the existence of disease and the causes of defective manhood on the other. In the last session of parliament, Mr. Speaker, I had the honour to present to this chamber a resolution reading:

> In the opinion of this house a measure of federal state medicine would be in the best interests of the Canadian people.

On that occasion it was suggested that the wealth of any land could be obtained by labour and labour only, that efficient labour could be the product of only a sound body, that therefore the wealth of a nation depended on the health of its citizens and that as Canada was a land of stern realities only those of strong physique and stern resolve could hope to prevail. But, Mr. Speaker, we are not all strong in either body or mind. Unfortunately a very large number are defective either mentally or physically or both, are either chronic invalids or rapidly succumb to illness and become a government charge or a burden to their relatives. Under the heading "Canada is at War" the Canadian Social Hygiene Council issued a pamphlet containing some facts which the house would do well to consider. Let me quote:

Every year thousands of Canadians die of diseases which could be prevented.

It then asks a pertinent question:

Why are these diseases not prevented?

It states further:

During centuries man has acquired the habit of regarding disease as unavoidable. To-day the average man—even the average statesman—retains that medieval attitude. Leaders of the people must come forward to save the thousands of Canadian lives that are lost every year through diseases which could be prevented if a nation-wide organized effort were made to prevent them. Most splendid work is being done by health departments in various parts of Canada. The following facts and figures will show that their work must be united in a great national offensive against the common enemy—disease—which is silently and undramatically wasting our lives and our money. Canadians have shown how they can fight against a human foe. Disease is in our midst—a far more dangerous enemy. In organizing to fight it we have everything to gain and nothing to lose. But we must develop in the minds of our citizens a sense of individual responsibility if nation "health-mindedness" is to be achieved.

It would appear that one person out of three dies ahead of his time of diseases that could be prevented. Canadian statistics dealing with sickness indicate that over half of all disabling illness could be prevented!

Sound, authentic estimates show that from two to three per cent of the population is continuously on the sick list. Of these, between 91 per cent and 96 per cent are ill enough to be disabled. So that about two per cent of our population is always too sick to work.

Public health officials agree that sickness costs the people of Canada over $311,000,000 a year. Almost nine-tenths of this is a direct charge upon the individual.

Later on the report, dealing with diphtheria and other diseases, states:

Diphtheria has killed 1,200 Canadians—mostly children—in a single year. Yet the toxoid treatment against diphtheria, if applied in a nation-wide drive against this disease, would completely wipe it out in a very few years.

Typhoid fever takes 1,111 lives annually. Yet during the Great war not one Canadian soldier died of typhoid. This is one of the most readily preventable of diseases. During the war, the authorities protected the lives of the troops by means within the reach of everyone. Are Canadian lives less valuable in peacetime?

[Mr. Howden.]

Tuberculosis destroys about 7,764 Canadians every year. Yet with proper health machinery, it could be absolutely eliminated.

Cancer ends 7,912 Canadian lives every year. Periodic health examination frequently reveals this terrible destroyer in its incipient stages, when there is an excellent chance of curing it. Universal periodic health examination would make the cancer death rate dwindle sharply. The public must be led to conserve health by adopting the physical examination scheme.

Heart disease is responsible for the staggering total of 11,775 deaths a year in Canada. Periodic health examination frequently reveals the causes of heart disease, or the disease itself in its early stages.

Maternal mortality—1,295 mothers die each year in child-birth. Proper prenatal care would reduce this appalling total.

Venereal diseases—Canada's successful attack upon these diseases points the way to success in dealing with others. Thanks to a nation-wide, well-organized and perpetual campaign against venereal diseases, recent surveys in Toronto and Winnipeg showed that these cities have the lowest incidence of venereal diseases of 17 cities in which similar surveys have been made on this continent. These rates will be still further reduced when the public attitude towards all diseases has been modernized by proper education and leadership.

At this point I would appeal to the Minister of Pensions and National Health (Mr. MacLaren). I understand that the dominion grant to the provinces has been discontinued. It has been the custom, for a number of years now to make a grant of some $200,000 a year to be divided among the various provinces to aid them in fighting the venereal evil. I have just quoted the results of this fight in Toronto and Winnipeg, and certainly they have been amazingly successful. This year apparently the government does not feel justified in making the grant. The discontinuance of the grant is a very, very serious matter, and I appeal to the minister and to the government as a whole to continue the grant for another year. The pamphlet continues:

There is one solution. Periodic health examination—a periodic and thorough overhauling by a competent physician. To induce people to adopt this solution is a task demanding prompt and constant attention of health authorities, thoughtful citizens, and statesmen.

Disease strikes from coast to coast. It is a national menace and combating it a national problem. Dominion leadership is needed, because at present there is no uniformity of health management. In some places health is well safeguarded, in others, deplorably neglected. Cooperation between the dominion and the provinces in a concerted attack upon venereal disease has proven the value of maintaining a united front against disease. Not until this unity is achieved in attacking all diseases, can we expect a rapid change in the present unsatisfactory disease and mortality rates.

This brings me to the pith of my argument, which is that Canada should institute, either federally or with the cooperation of the provinces, a periodic health examination of the citizens, yearly or as often as may be found desirable, and that all illnesses discovered at such times or at any time should receive intelligent medical attention and treatment. I am willing to admit that this is a big order and there are many difficulties in the way. There is first the constitution, and it seems as though this can do or undo whatever the government in power may desire, and the people of Canada have nothing much to say. The men who made it have all passed on and I doubt if they are greatly concerned about the Canadian people at present. Meanwhile, we are here trying to live useful lives and to see that the greatest good for the greatest number pertains. If any government wished to provide periodic health examinations and sick treatment for the Canadian people, they could very soon find a way, the constitution notwithstanding. After all, parliament is all-powerful.

The matter of expense is preeminent. As stated before, the estimated cost of sickness in Canada is $311,000,000 annually, no doubt largely a direct charge. Even at that, many sick persons receive poor or indifferent attention while others are charged unfair and exorbitant fees. Many of those in remote districts are not able to receive professional treatment at all. The Endicott Johnson corporation, an American manufacturing concern, has a medical system by which it supplies complete medical care for its 16,000 workers and all their dependents. The cost of this service is $400,000 annually, one and one quarter cents per pair of shoes turned out. The service must reach at least 30,000 souls, and it is extended to cover every medical attention from infancy to old age. The staff consists of twenty-seven whole-time physicians and includes one general surgeon, one eye specialist, two throat and nose specialists, one pediatrist or child specialist, three dentists, two pharmacists, one masseur, one X-ray technician and fifty-one trained nurses. They have also maternity hospitals, an isolation hospital, chemical and bacteriological laboratories and a convalescent home. It is hardly reasonable to compare a service of this kind with a system of state medicine where the cost might be greater or less, but supposing it was one-half greater, say $180,000,000 yearly, Canada's health bill would still be far below the estimated cost of $311,000,000 and certainly the benefits to be derived would warrant a greater cost than we have at present. Let me enumerate some of these benefits.

At present there are in Canada several thousand regularly qualified medical men and many other so-called doctors, in all probably a greater number than is actually required, many being of doubtful value or benefit. Under state medicine there would be just as many doctors, nurses, masseurs and druggists as were actually required and practitioners of doubtful value would be eliminated.

At present there are in many towns and cities more doctors than are needed, while many rural communities are entirely without medical service. Under state medicine every community would be part of some health district and the service would reach every family in the land.

At present doctors are competitors of each other and economic pressure makes professional ethics farcical and impossible, largely to the cost and undoing of the patient. Under state medicine there would be no need for ethics; professional cooperation would predominate.

At present doctors in general are poorly paid, fees are irregularly collected and the financial interferes constantly with the professional side. Under state medicine doctors would be paid suitable salaries commensurate with their ability and work. They would strive to secure advancement and would not be harassed with the anxiety of ill-health, a penniless old age or lack of income. These matters would be taken care of by the state.

At present the medical profession thinks the rich and well-to-do should pay for the services rendered to the poor, but the rich resent being penalized in this manner. Under state medicine all men, rich and poor alike, would receive the best we have to offer.

At present the people consult physicians only in the instance of a known or obvious ailment and often when the disease is well established. Under state medicine preventive medicine by periodic health examination would overcome this evil and would supplant largely the system of curative medicine now pertaining.

At present consultations with specialists are expensive and frequently too long delayed. Under state medicine consultations would be free and there would be no cause for delay. Suspected cases of cancer, tuberculosis, and so on, could be promptly diagnosed and given a chance of recovery.

At present people spend millions yearly in self-prescribed and counter-prescribed medicines, often of no value. Under state medicine there would be no patent medicines, nostrum or other drug traffic.

At present the medical service is hindered by lack of public confidence, the economic interest of the doctor and the patient being largely opposed. Under state medicine the economic interest of the doctor and the patient would coincide and the service would give full confidence.

At present surgery is often employed only as a last resort and is denied the chance to do its best. Its use is denied to many because of the fees demanded, while others refuse it because of suspicion of the surgeon. Under state medicine surgery would be used where indicated and without delay because there would be no suspicion on the part of the public.

At present owing to lack of official control of surgeons and other specialists, a large number of unnecessary and more than poorly performed operations are carried out, with a much larger death rate than should be the case. Under state medicine no incompetent man would be allowed to operate.

Mr. SPOTTON: Who will decide?

Mr. HOWDEN: The decision probably would be in the hands of a suitable board who would allow only such men to practise as were found to be fully qualified.

At present under haste in delivery, lack of proper knowledge and occasional contact with intercurrent infection causes the untimely death of many hundreds of mothers yearly. Under state medicine a woman would be delivered in a well-equipped lying-in hospital where no contact with other infection could occur. The work would be done by a specially trained obstetrician and haste would not be a factor.

At present a doctor who is once qualified and licensed has a free hand to practice medicine as he likes. He may be negligent, reckless or utterly behind the times and still continue to practise with impunity. Under state medicine his work would be supervised by a board of examiners and he might be retired from the service because of ignorance and incompetency. He would not only have to pass his examinations but he would have to maintain his standing or drop out.

Lastly, at present any physician can announce himself as a specialist without having taken special training. Under state medicine no one would be permitted to pose as a specialist without first satisfying the board of examiners as to his qualifications.

These, Mr. Speaker, are some of the advantages to be gained by a system of state medicine. They by no means exhaust the list, but others are more or less intricate and technical and not of a nature to appeal to the chamber. I would, however, pause to say that the greatest benefits to accrue are that sickness would be largely nipped in the bud; that hundreds of cases of unsuspected, incipient or criminally hidden disease would be brought to light; that all would receive the best treatment and that the great mass of citizens who desire to pay and who do pay their way in life, would not be faced on every occasion of sickness in their homes with a money outlay that might cripple them financially for months or even years. A prominent doctor in Winnipeg said to me a few days ago that sickness caused an almost impossible expense, even in a doctor's home, where there are no doctor's bills to pay, and from this remark one can readily appreciate the position where a family is faced with a bill for medical attention in addition to other expenses.

I have no wish at this time to estimate the cost of illness, but I would venture the opinion that each birth in a family of moderate circumstances entails an expense ranging from $100 to $300; that a laparotomy, meaning an abdominal section, means an expense ranging around $500, and that few protracted cases get away with an expense of less than twice that amount. The disadvantages are of a dual nature: first, the difficulty, though not a very serious one, of divorcing people from the use of a family doctor; and, second, the difficulty of finding the best or even a satisfactory method of applying the principle. In the first case not much need be said. Family doctors are like family preachers. For one reason or another they are changed from time to time, and in the case of doctors, often by the family itself. If the Canadian people of either high or low degree find that they are being given careful, courteous and intelligent service, they will soon overcome their aversion to not having always the same family attendant. On the other hand, the more fastidious can always retain one man by prearrangement or some slight extra expense.

The second matter is not so easy of manipulation. It is not part of my responsibility in presenting the resolution to submit a plan of practical application. Parliament, as we are frequently told, is all powerful when its members are in complete accord. It is the business of the government to evolve means of applying principles adopted by the house, and I think a way can be found which could be worked out on a provincial or a federal, or, as with old age pensions, on a provincial and federal basis, preferably the latter. In any case there would have to be statutory legislation from the dominion house so as to create a uniform national system. Indeed, parliament would have to do no more than create the machinery, the operation of which could be left to the provinces. In such a case, parliament would have to pay the cost or at least contribute a portion. Since parliament has power to collect taxes from any source or by any means and to allot them to whatever legal use seems wise, there should be no difficulty in this regard.

In discussing a similar resolution last session, the Prime Minister stated that to give practical application thereto would mean to sweep away at one stroke all existing medical service. Nothing was further from my thoughts. I claim that parliament, at a comparatively small cost, can provide for a periodic health examination of all the Canadian people, and, further, can furnish succour and medical aid in time of sickness without disturbing present conditions to any great extent. That the movement would ultimately eliminate present-day forms of service, as stated by the Prime Minister, and bring about a system by which the state would become the employer and the doctors the employed, I venture to hope and believe. The hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Gershaw) stated in last year's debate that this effect would slowly come about by an extension of existing service units, but why wait for this in the face of the unsatisfactory condition existing at present? The health of the general public is one of the prime objects of statecraft, and the securing of it is the duty of all.

If I may for a moment revert to the Prime Minister's remark on the occasion of the previous debate, I should like to say that after carefully reading his observations I decided that they hinged on three points of objection. The first was that the application was almost overnight. It seemed to me the objection was there would be a sweeping change from the present system of medicine to one whereby the state would become the employer and medical men would become the employees of the state. As a matter of fact, I cannot see any great reason why such a condition should not be brought about. That is really the idea of the resolution. But that such a condition could be brought about suddenly is very improbable, practically impossible and certainly most undesirable. A sudden change from one system to the other would undoubtedly cause a great deal of confusion, much unfairness to medical men throughout the country and probably a very poor service for a while. There is, however, no danger of such a change being brought about suddenly. My suggestion would be just to initiate a measure somewhat along the lines of the compensation board legislation, and I think the Prime Minister would see the people taking to it, as they say, like a cat to milk. If we can just make the start, the opening, I do not think we would have much trouble in educating the people to state medicine which would give them very much better service.

The second point was the destruction of medical initiative, destruction of the incentive that causes medical men to strive to excel in their work and lives. I wonder whether the Prime Minister knows that in most of the great European centres the men who have done the best work in research and who have blazed trails in medicine, pathology and surgery, the men who have accomplished the greatest successes, have quite frequently been so poor both before and after their successes that they have not been able to afford the ordinary comforts that obtain in the home of an artisan.

Not so very long ago I was talking to another medical man in Winnipeg who had just come back from a post-graduate course in Europe. He told me that he and a number of other men who were taking the same course one day were on their way to the hospital where the clinic was being held when they saw the man whom they expected to lecture to them in a few moments, trudging along the street carrying a parcel. They later learned that this man, although he worked about twelve hours a day at surgery, was a writer of some note, and was one of the most successful operators in Vienna, was actually too poor to take a tram and that he carried a lunch of bread and cheese to work every day. Just imagine one of the foremost teachers and operators in Vienna, probably in Europe, walking to work and carrying his lunch! I wonder whether the right hon. gentleman knows that an army officer, Ronald Ross, of the Royal Army Medical Corps, while receiving but small pay, discovered, by his initiative and effort alone, the cause of and freed the west coast of Africa from a disease that had rendered it well-nigh uninhabitable. Another officer of the British army, also on low pay, Leichman, during the South African war initiated research and developed a vaccine for typhoid fever which he perfected during the war, and so rid the army of this scourge which was killing the soldiers by the hundreds.

Here is an instance from the United States. After the construction of the Panama canal had been discontinued for over twenty years, Major Gorgas, an American army officer on small pay, went into the district and after a certain amount of investigation discovered the causative factor in the great death rate from malaria in the canal zone. Work on the canal had been discontinued because men would not go in there and face the tragic death rate from malaria, but Gorgas discovered that mosquitoes were responsible for the transference of the malarial virus, and very soon he had treated the swamps and sluggish pools with oil and destroyed the mosquitoes, and thus made it possible for men to go in there and complete the building of the Panama canal. I mention these four instances, a noted teacher and professor in Vienna, and three humble army officers, who initiated and perfected these great works.

I do not think the right hon. the Prime Minister need have any fear of destroying the incentive to medical research. I do not believe that either he or all the legislators in all the legislatures and parliaments all over the world can ever destroy the initiative and incentive to medical research which springs from the desire of truly great men to learn the truth so that they can serve their fellow men.

The third point which the Prime Minister raised last year when a similar resolution was under discussion was that neither the doctors nor the people were ready for such a step. May I say this? It has been calculated that the average medical man in Canada and the United States earns an income of about $3,000 a year. Some, of course, run very much higher, some doctors earning from fifteen to twenty thousand a year, but the income of the average doctor is about three thousand dollars, and out of that he has to pay office costs, automobile expenses, and so on. In the United States at the present time the federal government employs several hundred doctors on a yearly basis. They start with a salary of $2,500 to $4,000; at the end of a number of three-year periods they are required to take examinations, and if they fail to pass they are dropped from the service a year later. If they pass the examinations successfully they eventually receive a salary of about $7,000. I think I can speak for the medical men of this country, Mr. Speaker, when I say that if they could figure on a permanent yearly salary of anywhere from $5,000 to $7,000, they would be ready to go into a salaried scheme of this kind.

The matter has been taken up by provincial governments and medical societies all over Canada. Quite recently the local medical association in the city of Winnipeg, where I grew up, and to which I largely belong, took this matter up and the local government is investigating it at the present time. The medical association of Manitoba found nothing to object to in this scheme after having investigated it, and they submitted to the provincial government a series of principles which they think ought to be followed.

I shall not detain the house by reading them. I merely wish to state that the medical association is fully in accord with a movement of this kind and would be glad to see it brought about. I should like to read again the words of the Prime Minister—

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. G. D. STANLEY (East Calgary): May I congratulate the hon. gentleman (Mr. Howden) upon his very excellent presentation of the argument from his standpoint in regard to state medicine. His resolution as it appears on the order paper reads as follows:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should take into immediate consideration steps which would: (a) provide for periodic medical examination of the Canadian people; (b) afford medical relief for those suffering from disease.

A rather interesting application of the provisions of the first section of this resolution as applied to a legislative body may be found in the records of the legislative assembly of upper Canada back in 1810, when there was a very early application of state examination applied to certain legislators in that assembly. On March 2, 1810, they were checking up on some of the absentee legislators from the assembly. May I read the record as it appears?

March 2, 1810:

On motion of Mr. M'Lean, seconded by Mr. Gough, resolved that the Speaker be directed to order medical assistance to attend on Benjamin Mallory, Philip Sovereign, Joseph Willcocks, John Roblin, John Wilson, and James Wilson, and report the state of their health at the bar of this hon. house.

The Speaker, having put the question, a division took place; the names being called for, they were taken down and are as follows:

"Yeas—Messrs. M'Nabb, Frazer, Burritt, Marcel, M'Gregor, Baby, M'Lean, Gough, Elliott, G. Wilson, and Secord.

"Nays—Messrs. Howard, Rogers and Lewis.

"The Speaker did then order Doctors Richardson and Lee to visit those gentlemen and inquire into the state of their health, and report the same to the house as soon as possible.

"Doctors Richardson and Lee came to the bar of this house and did acquaint the Speaker that, in obedience to his orders, they had called at the lodgings of several of the members absent from this house, in consequence of indisposition, and have the honour of making a written report on the state of health of Joseph Willcocks, James Wilson, John Wilson and John Roblin, Esq's., which report is as follows:

"Mr. Speaker, we have seen and examined Mr. Willcocks, Mr. James Wilson, Mr. John Roblin and Mr. John Wilson; are of opinion from Mr. Willcocks' statement, and from his present state, that it would not be proper for him to attend the house this day. Mr. James Wilson states that he has taken medicine this morning: but we think (if it is absolutely necessary) he might attend in his place. The other two gentlemen complain very much, but have taken no medicine. We think they might come to the house. Whether they would be able to remain, 'tis impossible to say. Those gentlemen all say they think they will be able to attend to-morrow. We are of the same opinion.—(Signed) R. Richardson, W. Lee."

Mr. Speaker, if such examinations were made of absentees from this house hon. members might find it very inconvenient. I am sure the hon. gentleman will not press his resolution that far.

The general question of the socialization of medicine is very interesting and important. When one goes back over the history of the development of scientific medicine, and the application of socializing efforts made by the state and the medical profession, one comes to the conclusion that in the present state at which it has arrived scientific medicine must not stand still. We cannot stay where we are; we cannot go back; we must go forward. The development of scientific medicine in our country must proceed; there is no question about that. In our minds the ideal condition is one when all citizens shall have available to them all that is necessary in scientific medicine to relieve their ailments. For many years such an ideal has been before our minds. In fact if we go back to the early days of history, back to the prophet Isaiah, we find he said:

> There shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days; for the child shall die an hundred years old.

Since that ideal was set up progress was very slow. During the last fifty years however great strides have been taken; we have an ideal towards which we may direct our efforts. Many difficulties, with which I shall deal as I go along, stand in the way.

May I say first and foremost that in regard to scientific medicine and all that the term includes, jurisdiction rests exclusively within the realm of the provincial legislatures. Therefore to-day, despite what the hon. gentleman opposite may have said a few moments ago, while state medicine may promote an academic discussion of an educative nature that is worthy of a place in this house, legislation in this regard must rest with the legislatures of the various provinces.

I think the general statement is contained in the two clauses of the resolution now before us. Scientific medicine as we have it to-day might very properly be divided under two headings, namely preventive and curative. True, to a very considerable extent they overlap, but in a general sense the division is correct. State medicine, using the term broadly, implies that all the health activities which could be extended by the state, whether they be of a preventive or of a curative type, should be extended as a public utility. That, I presume, would be a fair definition of the term "state medicine." However, as the term is used frequently both in private conversation and on public platforms, it carries an entirely different meaning. It is almost always confined to the curative side and overlooks the preventive. Conversations and addresses from platforms would seem to imply that the state has some mythical bottomless purse from which funds may be supplied to give to the citizens everything in medicine for which they may ask. On the other hand infrequent mention is made of taxes or contributions necessary to pay for such services rendered.

Personally I am in favour of state medicine, have always said so and still say so. I refer however to state medicine following a safe and sane progressive program built upon the firm foundation laid during the years. I am not in favour of any undertaking which would ignore what the state has done in years past. I am not in favour of "kicking over the checkerboard" and entering into some mysterious experimentation, but am in favour of that which is safe, progressive and working towards an ideal.

When we consider the question of jurisdictions what do we find? The provinces in this dominion have authority to deal with any of the health activities, either of individuals, groups, organizations, societies or municipalities—in fact, all the health activities are within the jurisdiction of provincial legislation. Therefore the proposals embodied in the resolution certainly come within the jurisdiction of the provinces. Health measures undertaken by the federal government are of a restricted nature, dealing mainly with the administration of the opium and Narcotic Drug Act, of pure food laws, proprietary medicine acts, the examination of immigrants, marine hospitals, and the administration of grants given to certain eleemosynary organizations. Whether federal health activities can be extended is a matter which in a few moments we will consider.

In a general way preventive medicine, as we understand it, is almost exclusively within the jurisdiction of the state, whether it be the municipality, the province or the dominion. Preventive measures which are taken by various health organizations, having to do with groups of individuals, belong exclusively to the state. Heretofore, speaking in a general way again, curative medicine, which is that part of medicine which brings the physician into close and intimate relationship with his patient, has been left almost entirely to the individual physician. In a very general way that has been the position in the application of scientific medicine in Canada.

What have been the activities of the state, in general terms? They have been preventive, of course, dealing with groups of individuals, with sanitation, with food and water inspection, with the inspection of schools and school children, with the administration of health regulations, with the questions of quarantine and isolation, with the administration of hospitals, with medical education, with nursing training and other activities of this nature. Last but not least it has to do with what we might call pure science in connection with scientific medicine, or in other words the scientific medical research work carried on in our hospitals and universities. I think all these can be very properly included in the activities of the state; so when we talk about state medicine I think it unfair for us to leave aside all that the state is doing with so much success and such energy and at such great cost, giving the people to understand that the state has not been doing anything and that it should launch out into a new line of activity which heretofore has not been included in the term "state medicine."

Mr. POULIOT: I am following my hon. friend very closely, and I wonder if he would be kind enough to tell us if in his province there are county sanitary units.

Mr. STANLEY: I will come to that in a few moments. The result has been that the state has specialized in removing the causes of sickness and decreasing the number of cases of sickness throughout the country, and in this work the state has met with very considerable success. I should like to quote just a few statistics to show how much has been accomplished during the last thirty years, which is the length of time I have been privileged to practise medicine. I was interested to find out just what has been done in this regard, and I find that in that period of time the mortality in cases of typhoid fever has been reduced from 313 in a million of the population to 16 in a million of the population, and during the last two or three years I think it has been almost completely eliminated. In measles the mortality has been reduced from 134 in a million of the poplation to 25; in tuberculosis it has been reduced from 1,754 in a million of the population to 647; in scarlet fever it has been reduced from 96 in a million of the population to 19. As a matter of fact, if you consider any age period up to sixty-five you will find that during the past thirty years the mortality has been very considerably reduced. In the period under five years of age it has been cut in two, and in the period from twenty-five to thirty-five it has been reduced until now, in relation to the previous mortality, it stands as six does to ten. To summarize the mortality from all diseases, in that period of time it has been reduced from 17,195 in a million of the population to 12,343. So, as a matter of fact, preventive medicine and its application by the state has reduced mortality and brought about a remarkable saving of life throughout the country.

Now I should like to go one step further and say that the best authorities are thoroughly convinced that the progress which will be made in scientific medicine and in the reduction of mortality will be made in preventive medicine to a very large extent. So we have this situation, that while some progress has been made in curative medicine, the outstanding success in scientific medicine is that which has resulted in the reduction of mortality which has been effected by the preventive measures handled almost exclusively by the state. In the next fifty years we look to the state to accomplish, through preventive medicine, almost all that will be accomplished. No doubt there will be some advance in the line of curative medicine, but not the advance we might hope for.

There we have the situation. The fact, then, is that the state has concentrated upon preventive measures and has met with success. Naturally we must ask this question: Will or can the state—using that word to include all health activities and all state agencies—continue to concentrate on preventive medicine if it divides its efforts and undertakes curative work? I am not answering that question; I am simply bringing it up for your consideration. More than that, can the state undertake to keep up the preventive work it has been carrying on, and in which we look forward to great advances? Can the state continue to finance those obligations and at the same time undertake to finance the curative work of which the hon. member has been speaking? If the state is to divide its activities, or to divide the finances presently used in the work, it will mean disaster to the splendid work that has been done and is to be done in preventive measures. That is a question we will have to decide, but it cannot be decided in this house in a legislative way. It must be decided by the taxpayers and contributors in the various provinces. So while we are discussing this academically, and in a profitable way I believe, at the same time we must leave to the various provinces the answers to these questions.

Now, let us look into the possibilities of the future. There is a very promising outlook for preventive medicine. There are some great obligations for the state to undertake. I shall not attempt to outline all of them, I shall deal with two or three only. For instance, heart disease; I have already given some statistics which demonstrate what the state has already done in the reduction of mortality from various causes. Unfortunately when we come to diseases of the heart we find that the mortality figures have been getting progressively worse and worse. The same remark applies to cancer, and this disease is now receiving very serious consideration from scientific medicine. Diseases of the heart is the greatest single cause of deaths in our country. Unfortunately the mortality, as I say, is increasing each year. One out of every seven deaths is the result of some disease of the heart. Two persons out of every hundred have this disease. In the examination of recruits for the United States army three out of every hundred were found to suffer from this disease. In 1929 pneumonia caused 1,430 deaths, cancer 960, tuberculosis 930, diseases of the heart 2,664 to the million of population. Going back over the thirty years to which I have already referred, in 1900 the mortality from diseases of the heart was 1,374 to the million of population; during that period the mortality has almost doubled—2,664 to the million of population.

I have no doubt that the hon. gentleman who has introduced the resolution (Mr. Howden) desires that some effort should be made to broaden out the federal Department of Health by co-ordinating the activities of the Provincial Departments of Health. In that I am quite prepared to agree with him. I make this suggestion. Here are two diseases, the mortality from which is increasing by leaps and bounds. What is required in this country is not so much treatment of individual cases, but rather a broad national coordination in respect to all the cases throughout the country. Then take cancer; scientific medicine has not yet located the cause of this disease, but certain very important principles of treatment have been laid down which give promise of considerable assistance in the control of this disease. Here is a field for preventive medicine during the next few years. The Canadian medical association, in common with similar associations in other countries, is undertaking to make a national survey in regard to cancer. All members, I am sure, have been keeping in touch with the work in the various provinces, including Ontario, Saskatchewan and Alberta. The trouble is that so far there has been no correlation of data, no clinical information of any value to those who are trying to determine what steps may be taken to overcome the increasing mortality. The same remark applies to diseases of the heart. We can divide heart diseases broadly into three groups: first, that which we understand fairly well and know how to treat; second, that which is debatable among the profession; third, that of which the profession knows very little or practically nothing. I am sorry to say the third is the largest class, and a class in which the mortality is thought to be increasing. Clinical data is very badly needed, data that may be correlated so that it may be of practical use in a national way in our efforts to find successful preventive treatment for this disease.

May I point out that the federal department of Health can very well broaden the scope of its operations along these lines. For instance, we find certain information sadly lacking. We want to know: What are the causes of these diseases of the heart that are increasing so rapidly? What are the various types of these diseases? What is the natural history of each individual type? Which of these types is preventable? How is it preventable? Which of these types is increasing, and why is it increasing? What are the regional distributions of all the various types of this disease? What has climate to do with diseases of the heart, and what types are affected by various climates? What is the proper treatment for these diseases? What is vocational guidance accomplishing? What influence have social and economic surroundings on these diseases? This and other information has never been brought together. Scientific men who are enthusiastic about promoting the overcoming of this great cause of mortality in our country are thoroughly convinced that the greatest necessity is the bringing together from all the hospitals in all sections of the country, from all universities, from all medical men, even those located in the most outlying regions, the fullest information in a uniform way. The efforts of the departments of health could be extended along this line.

May I give one illustration to emphasize this point? During the period of the war when the United States undertook to bring together large numbers of their soldiers to send overseas, an influenza epidemic started and ran rampant through the camps. A large number of those who had influenza developed pneumonia, and many of those who had pneumonia developed empyema, or pus in the pleural cavity of the lung. In many cases the usual operation was performed but resulted in an alarmingly high mortality; so much so that a commission of skilled surgeons and physicians was appointed to find out what could be done to reduce this terrific toll. The advantage which this commission had was that these men were grouped together in the camps under the closest survey, their case histories were available and the coordinated and correlated efforts of all the physicians were before the commission. The result was that in a few weeks it discovered just exactly where the difficulty lay and when and how an operation could be successfully performed. The mortality rate dropped immediately to what had been considered before as the normal rate. I will not go into the details other than to point out the significance of the work of that commission in regard to this one disease.

This is what medical and scientific men want in regard to heart diseases. The cases are spread all over the country and isolated, but the information should be brought together and correlated, so that correct conclusions could be reached, and made available to the profession. This work could be undertaken by our federal department of health, as far as its guidance and financial burden is concerned.

After all, the greatest cause of sickness is poverty. We have here an economic problem which cannot be overcome by treating those who are sick. For illustration; a village may be overtaken with an epidemic of typhoid fever because the water supply is contaminated; it may be humanitarian for the state to send in a physician to treat each individual case, but it would be vastly more humanitarian for the state to send in its sanitary men to purify the water supply. The state's activities should be directed towards removing the causes of disease, and poverty is the greatest. As St. Augustine said: Thou givest bread to the hungry; but better were it that none hungered, and that thou had'st none to give him.

The Registrar General of England and Wales recently divided the deaths during the past year into five groups—employers, foremen, skilled workmen, unskilled workmen and common labourers. In general terms, he found that the mortality from all diseases was fifty per cent higher in groups four and five than it was in groups one and two. In the case of tuberculosis and pneumonia, the acute and chronic diseases of the lungs, the index figure for groups one and two runs from 40 to 80 while the index figure for groups four and five runs from 110 to 160. Poverty, unemployment and disease are not three problems; they are one problem or three aspects of the same problem.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. A. E. ROSS (Kingston City): Mr. Speaker, the motion before the house is one of vital importance to any state. I may not have the time at my disposal to state my reasons, but I must say I am wholly in accord with the conclusions of the last speaker (Mr. Stanley), namely, that this motion as it stands at present will not rectify the situation we have to-day. It is perhaps a step in the right direction, containing as it does the suggestion of a better medical service for the people at large. I think it was Disraeli who said that "public health is the foundation of the happiness of the people and the power of that state."

If we look back over what has been accomplished by the medical profession as a whole and by the state, I think we must come to the conclusion that our present position hardly could have been reached or attained under a state system of medicine. A state system of medicine can be defined as a system approved of or supported by federal, provincial and municipal authorities; we are in that position to-day and we have not attained the success we would have liked to attain.

The history of medicine shows that man to-day is in the same position in which he was some 350,000 years ago; man's paramount thought is to search for health, and this he has been doing for thousands and thousands of years. There is no question that when man came upon this earth he found the causes of disease here to meet him, and from that day to this he had been in constant contact and conflict with disease and has made a continuous effort to overcome it. The accumulation of man's experience in this fight against disease has been written down and we should take care now that a similar situation will not arise in the future as has arisen in the past.

It is thousands of years since man first laid down systems of sanitation and medical science. We are not the first people who have faced this situation. Five or six thousand years before Christ there were systems of medicine; there was state medicine. The Assyrians in their time had a system of state medicine under which free attendance, free service was given to the people at large, and we are just about coming to that situation to-day. But what they had accomplished thousands of years ago was practically wiped out by one great event, the fall of the Roman Empire; when the Goths and Visigoths came down upon what was the civilized world, at one fell stroke they wiped out all that was then known of medicine. The libraries, the accumulation of knowledge, were destroyed, and humanity went down into a thousand years of the deepest and grossest system of magic, mystery and superstition. After that what happened? Plagues and epidemics swept over the world. Italy at one time lost half of her population; Florence, with a population of 130,000, lost 100,000; France lost three-quarters of her population; Germany lost 1,240,000; England lost half her population and only about one out of every ten in London survived those epidemics. Such was the situation that prevailed without a system of medicine.

But just after this thousand years of darkness we leaped at once into three centuries of the finest invention and the greatest progress the world has ever seen. That brings us to the situation we have to-day. From the sixth to the sixteenth century we had all these plagues and epidemics. Then following the sixteenth century there was for three centuries the most wonderful progress in the development of medicine. The eighteenth century saw a development of magnificent hospitals, without which we would never have attained to what we have to-day. We had Westminster hospital in 1720; Guy's in 1727; London in 1740, and Middlesex in 1745. In that one hospital, Guy's, there were discovered three diseases: Addison's, Bright's and Hodgkin's.

The heather then was afire with the formation of those hospitals and the medical science developed rapidly. I should like to point out to the mover of the resolution (Mr. Howden) and to the house that the question is not so much what you will accomplish by the proposal as it is a matter of eliminating, if you insist on a system of state medicine, the possibility of the discovery of things that have produced the wonderful medical development so far attained. Virchow lifted pathology to a high place and led to the fight against a bacilli and bacteria. In the old days the idea was that through the will of God certain demons entered the body; to-day we know that it is certain bacilli that have caused the trouble. The discovery of that was due to pathology. Then there was the discovery of the microscope, which gave another great impetus to medical science and stimulated the investigations into the development of animal life. The discovery of the microscope brought about the germ theory. From the germ theory we had at once the discovery of anthrax and hydrophobia by Louis Pasteur, the tubercle bacillus by Robert Koch, syphilis by Paul Ehrlich, and, in our day, diabetes and insulin by Banting. These discoveries gave the medical service such an impetus that the medical men are now in the position that they are challenging youth to give them the opportunity of preventing sickness and disease. The few men I have mentioned have made it possible for the medical profession of to-day to say to every country: Here we are, ready to prevent disease from overcoming your people. So Disraeli was well informed when he said: Public health is the foundation of the happiness of the people and the power of the state. That is the position in which we are to-day. We have all these discoveries: the X-ray, the microscope, the knowledge of the germ theory, the preventives against germs, and we have them ready for the service of the people.

How can we give the people the benefit of this medical service? The mover of the resolution had in mind the fact that in the last three centuries medical science has developed to such an extent that, with the exception of two or three diseases mentioned by the last speaker, we can challenge any disease there is. In the face of such wonderful things as the medical profession has to offer, what have we in the way of organization to deal with conditions? The last speaker has referred to many things. Let us study this organization, just as the hon. gentleman has suggested. Some have said: Well, this is a provincial matter; what is the province doing? I think you can sum it up by saying that as a matter of organization it is a horrible mess. The provinces look after hospitals, clinics, drug stores, laboratories of all sorts; health departments of many industrial firms; private organizations, tuberculosis associations, visiting nurses' societies, maternal clinics, infants' welfare, venereal diseases. The provinces control public health in the way of communicable diseases, collection of vital statistics, water supply, disposal of waste and sewage, diagnostic laboratories, inspection of factories, state of medical colleges. The federal department control the inspection of food markets, narcotics, immigration inspection, army and navy medical stores, and marine service. Surely it must be admitted that this incongruous mess in what is called state control or assistance is very unsatisfactory in the face of the wonderful discoveries to which I have referred.

What is the answer? What can we do? I agree with the last speaker that we cannot by any such resolution as this, calling for state medicine and the examination of individuals, accomplish very much. If you want to inaugurate a system of state medicine that will bring every physician under the control of the state, then I contend that you will wipe out the great discoveries I have mentioned—the invention of the microscope and all the appliances that are now available. The physician to-day finds himself in the position of being unable to give to the people all the services they should have in the war against disease. We cannot with just one resolution come to the ideal situation. The mover of this resolution (Mr. Howden) deserves the commendation of the house for bringing before it such an important question, but I do not see that such a system as he advocates would be practical. I believe that to-day we have in the federal Department of Health the nucleus which would enable us to take the next step, and that is the coordination of all the forces in the state which are contending against disease. There should be some control of these forces, which now are like comets, flying through the air and getting nowhere. If there was a department with power to take all these different agencies in hand and coordinate the forces that are at work in the activities directed against disease, we could accomplish a great deal for our people. We could endeavour to coordinate the industrialists who are finding it to their advantage to put into practice some of the theories that have been advanced, and coordinate also the private capitalists who might wish to place at the disposal of the state for the welfare of the people the money that would help in this great work.

What is the use of going on as we are at the present time? The province of Ontario is engaged in a fight by itself against cancer. In the army, in the last great war, we came to this conclusion. In the early stages we would send a battalion to attack. Then we got a little stronger and said: We will try a brigade. If that was useless and we were losing men, we would try a division, and finally we got to the stage where we sent in a whole army. If you are going to attack anything, attack it with all the forces that are available, and there should be some power in this country that should be able to coordinate all the forces that are now available and concentrate them upon an attack, a cannonade on this one objective.

The situation to-day so far as the British North America Act is concerned is antiquated. Preventive medicine is no longer a provincial or a municipal matter. The speed of transportation is such that an epidemic can spread very rapidly, and yet we are perhaps attacking this thing as they would have done in that thousand years of darkness which I pictured. The only protection from disease that people had then was flight, and kings, legislators, aldermen and physicians, all took advantage of it. What was the result? Their flight only spread the disease further. In those days they had no protection other than separation and isolation, but to-day we have science. Nevertheless the development of transportation has made the possibility of the spread of disease greater than it ever was before. For instance, in South Africa in a little tribe of three hundred thousand people a disease known as sleeping sickness developed which wiped out that whole tribe, and in a few short years, owing to the ease with which people can move about, the disease had spread all over the world. To-day an epidemic can be spread across this continent in a very few days, so that the question of prevention is no longer a provincial one. It has developed into the larger question of federal protection. Here in the federal government we have a department which perhaps we do not think very much of, but which nevertheless covers all the work I have mentioned, and in it we have the nucleus of a department than can be of great use to our people. This is not only a national question, but an individual one. Do you know, Mr. Speaker, that at the time of the Roman Empire the expectation of life was only about twenty-one years? To put it in the language of the scientific man, a child born at the time of the Roman Empire had a prognosis of life of twenty-one years. Let us trace that expectation of life down through the ages. In the dark ages the expectation of life was twenty years; in the sixteenth century, twenty-one; in the seventeenth century, twenty-six; in the eighteenth century, thirty-five; in the eighteenth century and a half, forty; in the nineteenth to the twentieth century, fifty. The expectation of life, according to insurance companies, has reached the high point to-day of from fifty to fifty-one years. So this question is not only of national but of individual importance. Every man should be glad to know that this prognosis of life has been more than doubled since the time of the Roman Empire.

The situation to-day is this: the medical profession finds itself in the position that it is no longer able to give the people the benefit of the wonderful discoveries that have been made in the last three centuries, and the hospitals are finding it a difficult matter. As the mover of the resolution says, perhaps in the very near future it must devolve upon the governments of this country, provincial and federal, to provide a better medical service to the people than they have had in the past. My conclusion is, with regard to the latter part of the resolution at least, that it is our duty to provide medical service and to prevent disease, and that can be done only by the coordination of all the forces that are now at work fighting against disease and which are responsible for the wonderful progress that has been made up to this time.

Hon. MURRAY MacLAREN (Minister of Pensions and National Health): I think that a number of members proposed to take part in this discussion, but time is unfailingly moving on and unfortunately we in the house shall not have the benefit of hearing them speak on this important subject. The mover of the resolution (Mr. Howden) has proved his faith and enthusiasm by again bringing forward this year the subject of state medicine. One must recognize that the object of his speech to-night, as it was of his speech of last year, is the amelioration of the health of our citizens. We appreciate the truth and the importance of the hon. member's statements regarding health. We recognize that good health is a boon, and we are familiar with its full meaning. On the other hand we know the distress, the grief, the loss and all the disastrous consequences that are wrought by disease. Therefore anything we can think of to add to the health of the nation and curtail disease is worthy of our best effort and attention.

The hon. member for St. Boniface has in his resolution brought forward two distinct propositions. One is the periodic examination of the people, and the other the provision of medical treatment for those requiring it. May I say first that periodic examination is a big question, and I would say the same about the provision for medical treatment. I cannot help thinking that the mover might have proceeded with one phase of the matter and left the other until a later time. Little by little is a sound motto in matters pertaining to health and medicine. However, his enthusiasm has induced him to bring both measures before us.

I should like to draw the attention of hon. members to the fact that I am not aware of any country which has adopted a system of periodic examinations. I know of no country on the face of the earth where such examinations are made. I do not argue that for that reason we in Canada should not think of attempting such examinations, but I do suggest that the course adopted by other countries should make us pause. We find countries in Europe leading in scientific advancement which have not adopted the principle set out in the resolution. Those countries have done magnificent work, yet I can think of no place where periodic examinations have been adopted. I learn that a London physician named Dobell—I believe we are all familiar with the Dobell solution—about seventy years ago proposed periodic examinations.

Mr. HOWDEN: I should like at this point to interrupt the minister. I suggest to him that in many provinces of Canada there is periodic health examination. In those provinces there are district health nurses who make primary examinations, and in cases where diseases are found a doctor is called. That is a provincial matter.

Mr. MacLAREN: Quite so. My point, however, was that there was no state, in the broad sense of the term, where these examinations have been adopted. Two years ago periodic examinations were suggested by the Canadian Medical Association and as a result four life insurance companies adopted the suggestion. They were assisted by the Canadian Medical Association, and the federal Department of Pensions and National Health provided literature. The result was that the Canada Life, the Sun Life, the London Life and the Confederation Life are now carrying out at their own expense periodic medical examination on their risks. However that is a very long way from the country at large accepting such a program.

After all we must to a considerable extent begin with ourselves, and examinations must be voluntary. I should like to ask how many hon. members in this chamber undergo periodic medical examinations. At the present time many people in Canada are aware of the benefits to be derived from such examinations, but I venture to say a very small percentage take advantage of them. I am simply pointing out, however, that the procedure suggested by the resolution has not been followed by other countries, and that enormous organization, effort and expense would be required.

I am afraid time will not allow me to go further into detail. I should like to indicate however that although this is a matter which might well be brought to the attention of hon. members and the country generally, it does not lie within the purview or jurisdiction of the federal government; the provinces are wholly responsible, and I cannot help but think that in the end they will hasten the advancement of the suggestions brought forward by the mover of the resolution.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Tuesday, March 22, 1932

The house met at three o'clock.

BEAUHARNOIS POWER PROJECT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. D. EULER (North Waterloo): On two occasions within the last two or three weeks I have asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) whether he could give the house information with regard to any guarantees given the banks with respect to the work at Beauharnois. I do not intend to press the matter unduly but it is becoming of very considerable importance to the public; bonds and stocks of the company are going down and the press is asking for some explanation. If it were possible for the Prime Minister to give an explanation I think it would be desirable.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I regret that I am not in a position to give the hon. gentleman the information he asks for.

INCOME TAX EXEMPTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. G. SANDERSON (South Perth): I wish to ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) a question based upon an article which appeared in the Toronto Globe of yesterday, Monday, March 21, on the front page, under the following headlines:

Exemptions cut in half under new income tax, Conservative M.P. hears.

Childless married men receiving more than $1,500 a year must pay, Col. Robinson understands—turnover tax project is rejected by government.

[Mr. MacLaren.]

The article itself is a special despatch to the Globe and reads:

Windsor, March 20.—Income tax exemption will be cut in half and the rate of tax increased in the forthcoming budget, it is generally believed at Ottawa, according to Colonel Sidney C. Robinson, M.P. for West Essex.

Present exemption of $3,000 granted married men without children may be only $1,500 after the budget proposals become effective, Colonel Robinson instanced. He has heard no figure indicating the new lower exemption for bachelors, who now are tax-free on incomes up to $1,500, although the presumption is the same rate of reduction will be general.

No word has circulated yet as to what the new tax rates will be, although it is supposed they will be scaled, with larger incomes bearing higher rates, as at present, said Colonel Robinson.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. Will the hon. member come to the question he wishes to ask without reading the entire article?

Mr. SANDERSON: I am coming to the question, Mr. Speaker, but I cannot very well put it until I have read the article.

Mr. SPEAKER: Surely the hon. member has sufficiently prefaced his question to be able to put it to the minister.

Mr. SANDERSON: I should like to read the article, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. SANDERSON: Then I will put the question. Is it the policy of the government to take private members on their own side into their confidence in regard to what will or will not be contained in the budget? We have always understood it—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. That is not a proper question to put to the minister on the orders of the day.

Mr. SANDERSON: The question, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member must know that the question is not a proper one.

Mr. SANDERSON: All I want to know is whether the hon. member for West Essex (Mr. Robinson)—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. SANDERSON: —was speaking with authority from the government. I think that is a fair question.

Mr. SPEAKER: The question is not one that should be put to the government.

Mr. SANDERSON: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order, I protest the attempt of the hon. member for South Perth to make a burlesque of the proceedings of the house. Order.

CLOSING OF BRANCH BANKS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. G. COOTE (Macleod): I wish to direct to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) a question based on a telegram which I have received from Cowley, Alberta, protesting against the closing of a branch of the Royal Bank of Canada at that point. A great number of branches are being closed and I understand that this is a matter of policy on the part of the banks at the present time. Would the Minister of Finance be good enough to take the matter up with the different banks concerned to see whether some arrangement might not be made to keep these branches open in order to give service to the people in the different localities.

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance): I have received a number of communications arising out of the closing of branches of banks. The hon. member will appreciate the fact that the question of location of or the closing of branches is not a matter within the purview of the Department of Finance; it is solely a question of administration for the banks themselves. In each instance, however, I have forwarded the communication direct to the bank concerned.

RUSSIAN LUMBER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. BRADETTE (North Timiskaming): I wish to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) a question with reference to certain press despatches that appeared last week to the effect that the British government had given an order to the Russian government for $25,000,000 worth of lumber of a kind and quality that can be produced in Canada. Has the Canadian High Commissioner in London ever notified the government here or any of the trade commissioners in Europe that such an order had been given to Russia in preference to Canada?

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The matter to which the hon. gentleman refers is merely gossip. We have no official information on the subject.

UNEMPLOYMENT AND FARM RELIEF

CONTINUANCE ACT, 1932—CONSIDERATION OF RESOLUTION

The house resumed from Friday, March 18, consideration of the motion of the Prime Minister that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee of the whole on the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to introduce a bill to amend chapter 58 of the statutes of Canada, 1931, striking out the word "March" in section 8, and substituting the word "May" therefor.

Mr. J. F. FAFARD (L'Islet): Mr. Speaker, let me extend my congratulations to the ex-Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm), who has been away owing to illness. We all rejoice to see him in his seat once more and trust he will have a complete recovery.

When the house adjourned at eleven o'clock on Friday night I was discussing the resolution now under consideration, and I was opposing it on various grounds. In the first place, as I pointed out, it is unconstitutional inasmuch as it is an abuse of power, and because the money expended under the provision of the statute last year was spent lavishly and without consideration for the farmers of the country. When the measure was brought before the house last year it was strongly opposed, but it was understood then that the blank cheque, so-called, was to be used to relieve unemployment, to aid agriculture, and to assist the country generally. We find now, however, that under that blank cheque the government has seen fit to pass orders in council to amend the Bank Act, to lend money to the provinces—which money will likely be given away at the next election—to increase the force of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, to buy riot machines, guns and so on, and to spend $20,000 for the secret service, which secret service, if I am rightly informed, is used to have men follow the Liberal speakers throughout Canada in case they say anything against the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett).

Certainly, Mr. Speaker, a member of this house who respects the mandate given to him by his constituents will not vote to give such power to one man, whatever his ability may be. In the second place, the money was spent in such a way that only one-third went to the unemployed, the balance having been used to buy material to build camps, and for expropriations, creating new rich at the expense of the unemployed. The narrow politics of this government has stopped our trade with other countries, has depreciated our money, and has created all sorts of suffering throughout Canada.

No matter what the mistakes of the government may be, we are ready to help them. We are ready to help our sister province of Saskatchewan in her need and we thank God that a similar disaster has not fallen upon the other provinces. However, I consider I would be a traitor to my country, if, while doing that, I should forego my rights in parliament. That I will not do.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, the present government has spent to ill purpose the money voted for the unemployed. In order to cure an ailment, the diseased or affected organ or member is first treated. The agricultural industry is the really sick individual at this stage. So long as that industry does not receive the treatment which will restore its economic health, prosperity will never exist in Canada.

What has the government accomplished for agriculture? It cannot be credited with helping the agricultural population of this country by a reduction of three million dollars in the estimates of the Department of Agriculture. I wonder what has become of those orators taking part in the last federal election campaign who then evinced such affection for the agricultural classes. The government has done nothing and the ministers who represent our province in the cabinet have done nothing either. Surely it is not by the dismissal of hundreds of postmasters in the province of Quebec that the powers that be have helped agriculture.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Shame!

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): And they certainly did not help the agricultural classes by the construction of a fire engine boat to meet the situation should the St. Lawrence catch fire.

Mr. Speaker, some have complained, though very wrongly, that the members sitting to the left failed to submit constructive proposals. Last Friday I asked the government to help agriculture. For instance, it would have been quite an easy matter to utilize some of the millions expended in the past two years for land drainage in our province. Many farms require drainage and it is a well-known fact that the returns from farms of drained land are 200 per cent greater. Why did the government not help the settlers improve their farms? The government could quite easily have appointed in each parish committees comprised of the parish priest, the agronomist, the mayor and four or five leading citizens, and the unemployed could have applied to these committees for work. The government could have placed an unemployed at the service of the farmer who wants to drain his land on condition that he also engages in that work. It would have been equally easy for the government to place a man at the disposal of the settler who wished to clear his land of stumps. Through the application of these various measures, the government would not only have given work to those who needed it but would also have shared in the improvement of farm lands in our province.

[Mr. Fafard.]

A representative from Prince Edward Island, I believe, recently demanded that his province be supplied with fertilizers. We who come from the province of Quebec would also like to receive fertilizers from the government. But this is only a temporary expedient. Once the benefits to be derived from fertilizers on our farms had disappeared, we would be back at the starting point. However, if the hon. minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) who will address us shortly made a grant of $75 to the farmers to enable them to build manure sheds, he would help the cause of agriculture to a much greater extent than he would by distributing fertilizers, for the same buildings would still be of use to the farmers fifty years hence. The provincial government makes a grant of $25 for this purpose.

Mr. DORION (Translation): One would have to construct them of cement (ciment).

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): They are such liars (si menteurs, cimenteurs). We have to keep in mind that the province of Quebec is the premier province in the Dominion and that many, many farms have been under cultivation two or three hundred years. I do not intend to enlarge on the advantages of fertilizers for agricultural purposes. Agronomists and technicians have already stressed these advantages. However, it is well to remember that nitrogen, phosphoric acid, potash and vegetable matter constitute the principal elements absolutely requisite for plant life and no substitute can perform the function of potash in vegetable economy.

I have observed, Mr. Speaker, that the money was spent without any regard for the agricultural class. If the few suggestions I submit to the government were acted upon, the unemployed and the agricultural class would both be helped at the same time, and any help given to the agricultural population is a contribution to the country's assets.

I am told the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Gordon) has inaugurated a return to the land policy. I must congratulate him.

Unfortunately, I cannot see eye to eye with many economists on this point. I have always observed that a farmer who abandoned his farm, lived in the city five or six years, enjoyed the benefits of modern improvements and the somewhat artificial amusements he may find therein, finds it somewhat difficult to once more get in touch with the land. I believe the Minister of Immigration by inaugurating now a return to the land policy puts the cart before the horse, as we say in my part of the country. Before urging the return to the land, they should apply a policy that will enable the farmers to earn a decent living.

We have heard many complaints from other provinces. Coming as I do from the province of Quebec, I can tell my friends from those provinces that Quebec in common with other sections of the country has suffered and is still suffering.

Mr. DORION (Translation): That is not what Mr. Taschereau maintains.

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): Potatoes, butter, eggs, in fact everything the farmers produce at the present time—

Mr. DORION (Translation): Are going up in price.

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): —are selling below cost. I recently met a member from the west and he asked me how the farmers were getting along in the province of Quebec. I told him the old parishes in the province would come through the crisis for three reasons: in the first place, our early settlements in the province of Quebec instead of taking advantage of prosperity to run into debt, availed themselves of the good times to wipe off their indebtedness. In the second place, they would come through the crisis by reason of their industry and sense of thrift which are things unknown in many other provinces. Thirdly, their spirit of charity and Christianity, a subject which was so ably treated in the past few days by the hon. member for Nicolet (Mr. Dubois) and the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. St-Père), the workingmen's "Saint Père," would see them through their difficulties.

We have poor people in our parishes. We have always had some. I will avail myself of what little time is at my disposal to outline to my colleagues in this chamber the manner in which the problem of the poor is handled in our old parishes of the province of Quebec. As a rule, at the end of December, during the Sunday service, the parish priest addresses his flock thus: "My dear friends, the harvest has been poor this year. Your returns have not been as good as in former years. However, we must not forget that there are poor people in our midst. Monday, Tuesday, such and such a one will go through the parish and collect for the poor. And you would be surprised, Mr. Speaker, if you were to see the quantity of provisions, farm produce, and the sums of money they collect. And these provisions and money are distributed without anybody having any knowledge as to their destination, this being done in order not to hurt the feelings of the poor. We are happy to have these poor people with us in the province of Quebec, for we are indebted to them for the development of a charitable feeling and Christian spirit which possibly do not exist everywhere.

Canadians living in the province of Quebec are aware that sixteen million dollars have been loaned or given to Saskatchewan. They are also well aware that the province of Saskatchewan is under the premiership of Mr. Anderson who persecuted French-Canadians and who still persecutes them by means of his school laws. Well, Mr. Speaker, because of the spirit of charity we have developed amongst our citizens it is possible to make them understand the necessity of helping Saskatchewan notwithstanding the wrongs committed by the premier of that province.

The spirit of charity! Let us compare the methods of the federal government with those of the provincial government. Upon our arrival here for the parliamentary session, the Prime Minister rose in the house and without consulting anybody recommended a 10 per cent salary cut for all government employees. For many years, a very large number of these civil servants made generous contributions to the Salvation Army, the St. Vincent de Paul Society. They practised what we call "charity" in our part of the country. In the province of Quebec, the Prime Minister told the government employees: "You need not worry, there will be no salary reduction. On the other hand, we have in the city of Quebec many people who used to work in offices or stores and who are now idle. They are what we call the "white-collared needy." He asked the civil servants to be charitable and they were. They were true to the spirit of charity which we have developed as I mentioned a moment ago. They contributed hundreds, thousands of dollars in donations for the relief of the needy. I believe the members who sit to the right, including the Prime Minister, do not understand the mentality of the province of Quebec very well. Were I so bold as to offer him a word of advice, I would say to the prime minister: If you wish to win the goodwill of the province of Quebec, appeal to her heart. You will not secure her cooperation with blank cheques such as you are now demanding.

Mr. DORION (Translation): How wonderful!

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): Is that a question?

Mr. DORION (Translation): No, it is a find.

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): My, but that fellow is dull!

Mr. Speaker, what are they doing to relieve unemployment? Well, the municipalities and cities are asked to spend money, and the government believes it can attain its objective by inducing them to spend $100,000, $200,000 or $500,000. We are willing to help you, they say, and to give you an equal amount. I would not be surprised if the Prime Minister before the close of this session were to offer a premium to the municipality or city that spent the most money. What would you think of a farmer who, at the end of the year, having no money to pay his taxes, his insurance premiums or his debts, would say to himself: "This has been a bad year, but I have found a way of restoring prosperity; I will borrow one thousand dollars to construct a large building. I do not need it, but it may be of some use to me fifty years hence." You would evidently agree, Mr. Speaker, that such a policy was foolish. Yet, that is what the present government is doing.

These enormous amounts granted for the relief of unemployment are nothing more than dope handed to the unemployed to put them asleep. The ailment remains uncured. If we seek a remedy that will be of some real benefit to the unemployed, let us develop our industries, let us reestablish the prosperity tariff, the Laurier tariff, and we will see our industries thriving again and our people resuming work by hundreds of thousands. In order to do away with unemployment one must encourage agriculture. I will go so far as to tell the government: if you wish to end this unemployment crisis, you need do one thing only: first, help agriculture.

Hon. ROBERT WEIR (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have sat here day after day listening to the debate on this resolution hoping against hope to see it end, with the full appreciation that I have of the incalculable danger of suffering that is liable to occur if the debate should be prolonged to such an extent as to make it too late, especially for the farmers in western Canada, to receive the seed grain which they need so badly for this year. Moreover, the prolongation of this debate has held up the machinery to look after the problem of unemployment relief work throughout the dominion to such a degree that great distress has been caused, which perhaps few members of the opposition seem to realize.

I have hesitated to rise, but I feel that we have reached the stage when I cannot keep my seat any longer. I shall, however, be very brief. What are the questions that have been under discussion in this debate? First, why has this resolution been brought down in this particular form? Members of the government believed that by a continuation of the act the work that had been started could be carried on with the same machinery and with less disturbance than would otherwise be the case. We were also advised to this effect by the premiers of the western provinces. No one will accuse the government, in dealing with this whole problem, of not in every way cooperating with the provincial governments. Therefore, this being our opinion, and it being backed by that of the premiers who were in the field, we felt that the only logical course to pursue was to ask for a continuation of the act for a period of two months.

During the debate hon. gentlemen have asked: Why was the bill not brought down earlier? At the time this resolution was put on the order paper, it was believed that the report which was to be brought down not later than March 15, setting forth the works that had been undertaken and the amounts spent under the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act, would be ready by March 1, and it was not deemed advisable or fair to ask for an extension of the act if the information was not before the house and especially before hon. gentlemen opposite so that they might have the facts available in order to discuss properly the resolution leading to the bill. As has been said, however, due to the illness of Senator Robertson, the former Minister of Labour, it was impossible to have this report brought down at the time it was then thought certain it would be ready.

Hon. gentlemen opposite, in reply to the criticism that money will not be available for the purchase of seed wheat in western Canada and particularly in Saskatchewan, have said that this wheat should have been bought and delivered much earlier. That at first sight would seem to be an honest criticism, and I shall ask the indulgence of the house for a very few minutes in order to disclose to it the steps which were taken. I believe that hon. gentlemen, especially the farmers from the west, will agree when I have concluded that no precaution has been overlooked to place in the hands of the farmers in that great dried-out area in Saskatchewan the wheat that was felt to be most suitable to that particular soil and the conditions of farming in which they are engaged in that territory; and not only that, but placed in their hands at the lowest possible cost.

It was realized early in 1931 that seed wheat would have to be supplied to the extent of many millions of bushels. It was realized after June 1, 1931, that there would not be any considerable crop in a large area in Saskatchewan. The wheat best suited to this area is marquis wheat. The farmers from western Canada know that if the wheat held in the elevators in storage throughout this area had been allowed to be shipped out it would have been well nigh impossible to get pure marquis wheat from any other part of western Canada, and therefore steps were taken to hold the crop of 1929-1930 for the distribution of seed wheat if it were necessary. This crop has been held by the taking of options at the lowest price to which wheat went, and exchanging these options until finally we had options for the delivery of wheat on May 1, 1932. Hon. gentlemen opposite who have said that this wheat should have been bought a year ago will surely realize if they are western farmers what a great addition to the cost per bushel it would have meant to the western farmers had the wheat been bought a year ago, the cash paid, interest on the money paid, plus storage and insurance costs, and so forth. No precaution has been overlooked. We have to put into the hands of the farmers the wheat most suitable to their operations in the territory in which they farm, and also put that wheat into their hands at the lowest possible cost, and we have put it into their hands at a cost very much lower than even the most optimistic of these farmers felt was possible.

Hon. members of the opposition have discussed what they call the constitutional issue raised in the resolution leading to the bill. I am free to admit that there are hon. gentlemen opposite who were serious in their discussion of this question, but I do not think that anyone reading Hansard seriously, especially the farmers in the west who are in such dire need, could feel in reading the speeches of most hon. gentlemen opposite that the constitutional issue was taken very seriously by the great majority of members who have spoken on the other side of the house. Time does not permit me to go into the details of speech after speech, but in order to be as fair as I possibly can I shall take some of the speeches of the so-called back-benchers and then some of the speeches of those who sit nearer to the front benches on the opposition side.

Surely no farmer and no sane person would think, listening to the speech of the hon. member for Yorkton (Mr. McPhee), and hearing him discuss his communion with the dairy cows away back in 1930, that he was very much concerned with the constitutional issue or with the distress in which his fellow-farmers find themselves in the province of Saskatchewan. Who would think it of the hon. member for Swift Current (Mr. Bothwell), also from the province of Saskatchewan, who in dealing with a piece of highway built back in 1930 did, much as I regret to have to say it, misrepresent the facts of the case when he stated that the 2·68 miles of road that he was discussing was very similar to the highway that was built in the United States. I shall not dwell further on the speeches of hon. gentlemen opposite from the back benches.

I shall now take a few minutes to deal with the speech of a member who has always stood high in the Liberal ranks, one therefore who must be considered pretty much as a standard of the present Liberalism in Canada, one who must be considered pretty much as the yardstick by which young Liberals would measure Liberalism, one whom the young Liberals of to-day, taking part for the first time in the discussion of great public questions and following the traditions of what has been a great Liberal party would hold before their mind's eye as their ideal. I will take his speech to see if he made any serious contribution in the way of a discussion of the constitutional issue or said anything of a serious nature suitable to a crisis like that in which we find ourselves at the present time. I refer to the hon. member for Melville (Mr. Motherwell).

Take, for instance, that passage in which he stated that whenever a minister went to Regina the relief officers used to rush in to see what it was all about and who would be coming next. I think I am in a position to state, Mr. Speaker, having made visits to Regina, that that statement is absolutely without foundation in fact. Never at any time when I visited Regina were any of the relief officers called in for consultation. They had their work to do in the field, and they did it. I do not impute that the hon. member deliberately made a misstatement. I will be more charitable and say that I think it was rather a mental habit.

Secondly we had his statement, or rather imputation, that the men who are in charge of the branches of the various works of the relief commission had had no experience for their work. I think it is only fair to hon. members of this house and to the people at large to refute that imputation, and therefore I shall read in short the qualifications of the men who had charge of the branches engaged in the distribution of relief:

Charles Stevens, Accountant, nine years' experience; chartered accountant certificate; former secretary, Regina Trading Company; ex-service man.

Leslie Whitley, Clothing, twenty-five years in wholesale clothing business with Gault Brothers, Ames Holden and Commission Lines.

A. W. Snider, Fuel, seventeen years' experience wholesale and retail, fuel, lumber and hardware business.

Guy Hummel, Feed and Fodder, farmer, age forty-nine, eleven years on executive rural municipal association, now president for sixth year, reeve of own municipality for eighteen years.

William McMullen, Foods, twelve years' experience wholesale groceries; ex-service man.

A. E. Wilson, Grain Purchasing Department, long experience as grain man and prominent farmer.

All with either high school or college education.

There is another statement in the speech of the hon. member for Melville, a rather prolonged and winding statement, to which I feel I must make reference on account of the part that I played in the matter, and that was his reference to Percy Gordon's connection with the relief commission in Saskatchewan.

Who is this Percy Gordon about whom statements, or rather imputations, are made that leave an impression that is absolutely unwarranted? He is an example, of which we have many in the west, of a boy who came out from the east and who with his brother rode as a little lad from farm to farm in western Canada to make a few cents here and a few cents there to support his early widowed mother and themselves. He has overcome practically all obstacles until he finds himself now in a very enviable position at the bar. Percy Gordon will take second place to no man in this country for integrity, for public service and for everything that marks a man in the truest sense of the term. It was only after some considerable persuasion on my part, and I did not minimize the sacrifice of time that it would mean for him, that he undertook this work, but I was able to persuade him to give his time to the work, and he has discharged it with great credit. Let me read the inference of the hon. member for Melville with reference to Percy Gordon, and show the time that the hon. member took in leading up to that inference. I must refer to the remarks of the hon. member for Melville in using his notes for the statement appearing in Hansard. I wonder if any hon. member in the house would take a chance of saying what I am about to quote without first having made notes on the subject. The extract from Hansard is as follows:

[Mr. R. Weir.]

Percy Gordon, Conservative, K.C.—that is the one I expect the Prime Minister was referring to. I am not going to report to the house what I have noted here in regard to him because I cannot prove it. But I know there was somebody around the Regina Star for two years before the provincial and federal elections conducting a violent anti-French—

Campaign. I think we have heard that anti-French statement made before, from somewhere. Then the extract continues:

—and pro-K.K.K. campaign, and this gentleman was also associated with it in some way.

Percy Gordon has never been an instigator of propaganda for the Ku Klux Klan. He does not belong either to the Ku Klux Klan or to the Knights of Columbus; I have that from his own words. Neither has he conducted an anti-French campaign, but the very opposite to anti-French. I regret to have to refer to this incident, but I am sure hon. gentlemen will agree that I am responsible, perhaps more than any other hon. member, and it is is only fair I should say these few words in defence of the man who has been attacked. Surely no one would expect such reward to be given to a man who has devoted nine-tenths of his time, free of charge or remuneration of any kind, to this relief work.

I have endeavoured to show in a few words that the debates on this resolution have not been of a serious character. With a few exceptions speeches have not dealt even with the constitutional question. Then, why all this debate? There must be some reason other than what appears on the surface. The point that strikes hon. members from the west is this, that in consequence of the delay in the passing of this resolution and the bill one province in Canada will suffer more than any of the others; I refer to the province of Saskatchewan. Two years ago the right hon. leader of the present opposition, so far as his party was concerned, declared a very definite financial policy in reference to the province of Saskatchewan. Hon. gentlemen behind him acquiesced by their silence. That policy was not declared in the heat of the moment, because it was finely calculated, carefully thought out; the calculation was perhaps finer than on any other financial policy or fiscal policy at any time in Canada. He stated that his policy towards the province of Saskatchewan was that he would not give a cent to that province, to a Tory government. The whole basis of such a policy was that there was a Tory government in Saskatchewan.

Mr. VALLANCE: There was not.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): That was the reason the right hon. gentleman gave, and that is the substance of my argument. The reason that statement was made is evident to everybody. It was made because the Liberal government, which had been in office in Saskatchewan for over twenty years, had been defeated, and another government had taken its place. The answer of the province of Saskatchewan to that statement made by the right hon. gentleman lies in the fact that although in the previous federal parliament there was not one Conservative from that province, at the last election eight Conservatives were elected. I hate to think that any mind could conceive of anything so diabolical to vent further his vengeance upon the people of a province, but it would seem that the right hon. leader of the opposition wishes to continue this debate further to embarrass the people of Saskatchewan because they elected eight Conservative members.

In what condition is the country in which we find ourselves at the present time? So far as the west is concerned 50,000 farmers are waiting for seed wheat. They are looking as they never looked before, for the passing of the winter months and to a spring which holds for them either the possibility of retaining their homes, or of losing them if they do not get their seed and their crop. They may lose their homes representing the toil of a lifetime, losing not only something of financial value but also the memory of their successes and defeats. This is, however, not a problem for Saskatchewan alone, and the question as to whether or not there will be a good crop interests more than the province of Saskatchewan; it pertains to the whole of the Dominion of Canada. No one could estimate the importance to Canada if in the year 1932 in western Canada there were another bumper crop of, say, 500,000,000 bushels of wheat. Who can estimate, even with wheat selling at 50 cents or 60 cents a bushel, the stimulating effect such a crop would have throughout this dominion, when again millions of dollars of wealth from the west would again flow through the channels of trade into the coffers of the east? Yet, with that position before us, and with disaster liable to ensue if succour and aid is not given by the way of relief, what have we witnessed during the past ten days?

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): We have seen the worst exhibition of autocracy on the part of this government that has ever been witnessed in Canada since confederation.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): No hon. member on this side of the house has in any way tried to hamper the debate. The situation is apparent to anyone who will look at Hansard. Only eighteen government members have spoken on this subject while fifty-two opposition members have spoken. The speeches of government members cover only 130 pages of Hansard, while those of opposition members cover 463 pages. At this point I should like to place on Hansard some figures in connection with this debate, showing the names of the different provinces, and the number of government and opposition members representing those provinces who have spoken:

Province—	Government	Opposition
Alberta	1	3
British Columbia	1	3
Manitoba	1	4
New Brunswick	0	1
Nova Scotia	3	2
Ontario	3	10
Prince Edward Is.	1	1
Quebec	5	21
Saskatchewan	3	7

I maintain, Mr. Speaker, that every opportunity has been given hon. members opposite for free and frank discussion. There has been a cry of autocracy, despotism and the like. However has any hon. gentleman in the opposition made one serious criticism of any abuse by this government, or by any member of it, of the powers given under the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act? Not one. Therefore, why should there be such opposition, if it were not for political purposes, to an extension of this policy for two more months? The question, I take it, before the house at the present time is not so much the question of this resolution or of a constitutional issue in the resolution as two or three

hon. members have suggested; the question is greater and more fundamental in this supposedly democratic parliament.

An hon. MEMBER: Supposedly.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): In view of what I have said I maintain there is only one conclusion at which we can arrive, namely that hon. gentlemen opposite, a minority in this house, are deliberately obstructing, holding up, legislation at a time when there never was such a crisis.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Therefore, in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I do move, seconded by Mr. Murphy that this question be now put.

Mr. SPEAKER: Mr. Weir moves, seconded by Mr. Murphy, that the question be now put. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. A. F. TOTZKE (Humboldt): Mr. Speaker, before the question is put I want to say a few words on the subject. When the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) rose in his place to-day I did hope I would have the opportunity of congratulating him on the remarks he was about to make. I want to tell hon. members that the Minister of Agriculture held in the minds of the people of Saskatchewan quite a high position; I have known of him for quite a number of years; he was more or less concerned with the affairs of my own constituency, and the people thought a lot of him. But I want to say that his maiden speech in this house did a lot to lower him in the estimation of the people of Saskatchewan. He has somewhat improved since then, Mr. Speaker, and I trust that as he goes along and gets more experience in the house he will improve still further and devote more of his time to the important affairs of the country and of his own department, rather than to these partisan issues with which he was dealing. The minister stated to-day that owing to the obstruction and delay caused by members on this side of the house the farmers of western Canada would suffer through not being able to get their seed wheat for spring seeding. Before I say anything else, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that if the government will come down with a bill or even amend the present measure, striking out the words "peace, order and good government" and putting in an amount for seed grain or relief of any other kind, we will have nothing more to say and will do everything we possibly can to expedite the passage of the measure.

Mr. BENNETT: Since when did minorities run governments?

Mr. TOTZKE: If I understood the question correctly, Mr. Speaker, it was "since when did minorities run governments." All I can say is that in Canadian history this is the first time that I have ever known any government to undertake to run the affairs of this country under the authority of only one man.

In making my contribution to this debate to-day, Mr. Speaker, I do so without fear of the accusation of hon. members opposite that we are deliberately blocking the legislation in regard to unemployment and farm relief. In my opinion the present situation which must be faced is the most important one to engage the attention of parliament since I have had the honour of sitting in this house. The question of whether the government should be given the dictatorial powers they are seeking, while parliament is in session, has been fully discussed and does not require any reiteration on my part. I want to say, however, that I am in entire accord with the attitude taken by my right hon. leader (Mr. Mackenzie King), and I am sure my constituents will expect me to support that position to the utmost. Conditions in my province have not improved, and cannot improve for some time. My constituency is perhaps in a little better position than many others in my province, but we have had sufficient distress even in my own constituency to enable us to realize the seriousness of the situation, and I want to say that I am ready to do everything I possibly can to assist in bringing about a solution of the problem. When the Prime Minister said, during the campaign of 1930, that he would end unemployment and would find markets for our products, enough people believed him to enable him to be returned to power. Since then the people have been waiting for him to implement his promises, but the fact is that to-day there is more unemployment and more distress than there was at the time that promise was given. This government has been a complete failure; they have no scheme whatever for the relief of unemployment.

The Prime Minister was most prolific in his promises during the campaign of 1930; they have been placed on Hansard a number of times and every hon. member of the house is familiar with them. The other day the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion) enumerated some of those promises which he said had been implemented, and I should like to take just one or two of them and see to what extent they have been fulfilled. At page 24 of Hansard for the special session of 1930 I find that the Prime Minister speaking in Calgary on June 12, said:

There are great national works that may be undertaken in times of stress and strain. They will be undertaken, and I propose that parliament shall formulate a definite plan for permanent relief, and that parliament shall deal with this national problem and provide amelioration for the conditions in order that next winter the Canadian people may not be facing the crisis that is upon us, without having a remedy at hand.

Let us admit, Mr. Speaker, that some national projects were undertaken, and that they did ameliorate the distress to some extent. But where is the definite plan for permanent relief which the Prime Minister promised at that time? At Victoria on June 17 he said:

You have my promise that if the Conservative party is returned to power, that as soon after July 28 as possible parliament will be called together to deal with the problem of unemployment by providing not doles, but work, and that legislative action will be taken to bring about the future security of our country and the well-being of its people. We cannot tolerate the dole. Men and women of this country want work, not charity. Is there any excuse for Canada to have hard times if the government is discharging its duties as it should?

Well, Mr. Speaker, the Conservative party was returned to power and the special session was called. To some extent work was provided, but where is the legislative action which was to bring about the future security of our country and the well-being of its people? And let me recall the last sentence of that quotation:

Is there any excuse for Canada to have hard times if the government is discharging its duties as it should?

I listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks of my hon. friend from Regina (Mr. Turnbull) the other night. He introduced an entirely new line of thought in this debate. He pleaded with the hon. members of the opposition to forego their obstruction and to allow the resolution to pass. He said that because of our tactics a large number of farmers of Saskatchewan would be unable to obtain seed wheat, and to-day that argument was supported by the hon. Minister of Agriculture. Further, the hon. member from Regina said it would require an immense amount of grain, and that the distribution of that grain would entail a large cost. Then, at page 1270 of Hansard the hon. member went on to say:

I think it is beyond the powers of the province at the present moment to finance this undertaking unless they receive assistance from the federal government. Should this assistance not be forthcoming immediately the farmers of Saskatchewan will be without seed for their crops.

An hon. Member: Bring in a supply bill.

Mr. Turnbull: I thought some bright hon. member would raise that question. I am not trying to deal with this question in any controversial sense, and I do not intend to discuss whether action should be taken by means of a supply bill or otherwise. I am not going to say that the government is or is not to blame for the course it has pursued, and I am not going to argue that the opposition is right or wrong in the stand it has taken. I do not intend to be brought into any partisan discussion as to whether or not this matter should be handled by means of a supply bill.

It sounds very well, does it not? The hon. member takes a lofty attitude and asks members of the opposition to let the government help Saskatchewan farmers secure seed grain —and this in face of the fact that every member on this side of the house has assured the government that if they will bring down a supply bill for the amount required we will do everything we can to facilitate its passing. Why did not the hon. member address his appeal to his leader, the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett)? The hon. gentleman said he would not discuss the question of the right or wrong of the attitude taken by the opposition. Knowing him as I do, I would say it is an admission on his part that the stand taken by the government is wrong. The hon. member is a lawyer; surely, therefore, he realizes that there can be no justification for the continuance of these unheard of dictatorial powers given to the government while parliament is in session. He is sitting in this house as a supporter of the government, and he and his colleagues from Saskatchewan will be held responsible if there are farmers who do not obtain seed grain this spring. Perhaps he has tried his persuasive powers on the Prime Minister and has failed. It is just another illustration of the vanity and stubbornness of the Prime Minister. He has made another mistake but he cannot admit it.

Let me discuss for a moment the importance of this question of seed grain to the Saskatchewan farmers. I wish to quote a Canadian Press despatch dated Swift Current, March 12. It was quoted in part the other day but I wish to put the whole of it on record:

Drought Areas In Saskatchewan To Get Seed March 15

Distribution To Be Made Simultaneously At All Points, C. B. Daniel Announces

Swift Current, Sask., March 12.—Distribution of seed grain will start simultaneously at all points in the drought area on March 15, C. B.

Daniel, general manager of the Saskatchewan relief commission, announced in an address here Friday before a meeting of relief officers repreсenting the southwestern section of the province.

The object of the meeting was to discuss relief matters with the relief officers and representatives of the various municipalities.

On and after March 15, farmers holding allotment tickets from the commission will be at liberty to take delivery of their seed grain from the elevators.

"The commission will insist upon the repayment from the 1932 crop of all advances of grain for seed purposes, fuel oil, greases, formalin and machinery and harness repairs," Mr. Daniel said.

Mr. Daniel also announced that a million and a quarter bushels of oats for seed purposes have been purchased and ordered out, and that distribution is proceeding at the present time.

There is another news item which was referred to by the hon. member for Regina but which was not quoted. It reads:

Sask. Seed Plans Awaiting Passage Of Federal Bill

Regina, Sask., March 15.—The $6,000,000 seed plans of Saskatchewan are hanging fire until the passage through the federal house at Ottawa of a bill now under debate there, said Premier J. T. M. Anderson in the legislature, Monday. The premier was replying to a question put by John Gryde (C., Cypress.)

The premier suggested that the leader of the opposition might use his influence, if any, with the federal opposition to facilitate the passage at Ottawa of the amendment to the relief act, 1931. The amendment referred to, proposed to extend the "blank cheque" to Premier R. B. Bennett's government and is encountering heavy opposition.

Here we have on March 12, four days after the introduction of the resolution and the position of the opposition definitely stated by its leader, a statement made by the general manager of the Saskatchewan relief commission that on and after March 15 farmers holding allotment tickets from the commission will be at liberty to take delivery of seed grain from the elevators; and in the last sentence of that despatch Mr. Daniel states that a million and a quarter bushels of oats for seed purposes have been purchased and ordered out and that distribution is proceeding at the present time.

Then on March 15, after this resolution had been debated for almost a week, we find the premier of Saskatchewan saying that the distribution of seed grain was being held up until the passage of the bill under discussion. What happened between March 12 and March 15? Perhaps the hon. member for Regina can tell us that. Perhaps he can tell us whether or not seed grain is being distributed in accordance with the statement of Mr. Daniel. So far as I know, no member on this side of the house has had any word protesting our action in this matter; and so far as we know distribution of seed grain is now going on. Perhaps that last statement of mine is not strictly correct because we have had a wire from Premier Anderson of Saskatchewan. I had better read it for the information of the house. It is dated Regina, Saskatchewan, March 21, and is addressed to myself:

In interests of thousands Saskatchewan farmers victims of national disaster through drought respectfully urge your sanction relief bill before Easter recess as indications early spring and provision seed dependent upon passing bill.

My reply to that telegram is dated March 21, addressed to Premier J. T. M. Anderson, Regina, Saskatchewan:

Strongly urge you wire Premier Bennett that he bring down supply bill for amount required for seed grain and relief before Easter recess. If this is done opposition will facilitate passage in every way.

Perhaps I am wrong there too; perhaps Premier Anderson did wire to the Prime Minister without success. Perhaps the suggestion for the wire from the Saskatchewan premier came from Ottawa. Let me quote what the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) said when he introduced this resolution on March 8. At page 906 of Hansard he is reported as follows:

The federal authorities feel that they are not in as good a position as the provincial authorities to arrive at a proper judgment. Therefore we have concluded that instead of doing what has been done in days gone by, merely undertaking the responsibility for seed and feed as a national or dominion obligation, we will advance the necessary moneys by way of loans to the three provinces on their treasury bills, to enable them to provide seed and feed to fulfil the requirements of their agrarian populations. It may interest this house to know that we took steps last year to acquire through the aid of Mr. McFarland—who has so generously and freely without salary or compensation given of his time in the management of the wheat pools—sufficient quantities of wheat to take care of that situation at a price which I should say is at least ten cents lower than the rate to-day prevailing.

What does that mean? It means, if I am any judge of the English language, that the wheat has been purchased, and there is, in my opinion, no necessity for the holding-up of seed wheat for the farmers of Saskatchewan. The Prime Minister, in his statement, said that it was being advanced to the provinces by way of loan and that the security was to be their treasury bills. I submit that the issuing of provincial treasury bills is not dependent upon the passage of this legislation in this house. It is just another method of using the big stick to coerce us into acquiescence in the passage of this legislation.

May I say to the Prime Minister that however much he may be able to dictate to his own followers, we on this side of the house will resist coercion to the utmost. Let me repeat that if Saskatchewan seed grain distribution is being held up until this dead bill is revived, and if the Prime Minister has the interests of Saskatchewan farmers at heart, as he says he has; he should bring down a proper supply bill to take care of the situation. Let him do that and we will give him every support.

May I discuss for a few moments the statements made by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Beynon). As appears on page 1156 of Hansard, he said:

> There were municipal councils that were wholly non-political, but they were few in number, and while the municipal organizations were administering relief, the dissatisfaction was very, very pronounced, as the relief was administered inequitably. That was one of the reasons for discontinuing their services. Another reason was that even where the municipal councils were non-political and did their utmost to administer relief—
>
> Mr. Totzke: Did the hon. member say the municipal councils were political?
>
> Mr. Beynon: Oh, yes.
>
> An hon. Member: They were Grits.
>
> Mr. Beynon: I do not think anyone coming from Saskatchewan seriously disputes it. In fact, I might just tell the house that for the last twenty-five years there was very little, if anything, in the province that had not had politics in it.

I resent the allegation that the municipal councils are political. In so far as my own constituency is concerned there has never been any question of politics in the election of municipal officers. What strikes me as peculiar in the remarks of my hon. friend, and which illustrates his ingenious mind, is the statement that these municipalities should not be used in the work of the distribution of relief because they are political, and then his government proceeds to appoint its own political friends for this purpose. The hon. member then went on to discuss the personnel of the commission, and on page 1259 he is reported as saying:

> He could not choose men and women trained in that particular work; he had to go out among the unemployed and the needy and choose his staff and form his organization.

As an illustration of how these men were chosen from among the unemployed and the needy, I shall give the particulars of the appointment of three men in my own immediate home vicinity. The first man chosen was more than an ordinary relief officer, he was a sort of superintendent over a number of relief districts. I have nothing to say against this gentleman personally; he is a friend of mine and I have known him for many years and I believe him to be a man of the highest integrity and ability. However, this man was a hardware merchant and did not come from the ranks of the unemployed and needy. He was not chosen because he had no political affiliation; in fact, during the last two elections he appeared on a number of platforms throughout the constituency and made speeches on behalf of my opponent, the Conservative candidate.

The second man chosen was carrying on the business of blacksmithing and could not be termed as being unemployed or needy. He was a man who had worked as hard as possible on behalf of the Conservative candidate in both the provincial and federal elections, and his political affiliations were well known. I have nothing to say against this man as to his integrity; he will do the best he can, and I will not say anything as to his ability.

The third man chosen was employed and could not be classed as one of the needy. It may not be creditable, but the fact is he was a postmaster—he was one of those whom this government has said must keep their fingers clean of political partisanship. A number of postmasters in my constituency have been wrongfully dismissed on charges of political partisanship, and I will have something to say about this later on. This third man was noted for his political activities. During the elections of 1926 he went through my constituency and appointed scrutineers for the Conservative candidate.

The hon. member for Moose Jaw has stated that the officers of the rural municipal councils could not be used because of their political activities, and yet I am able to give illustrations of three men who were appointed in my own community, each of whom was very active politically. From experience I know that 95 per cent, I might almost say 100 per cent of the relief officers are supporters of the government.

The hon. member did instance one constituency in Saskatchewan where no Conservatives were appointed. I took the trouble to inquire into this and I found that no Conservatives had been appointed as relief officers but everyone who had been appointed was a supporter of the Saskatchewan government.

I do not make these remarks as a complaint against the carrying out of the duties of these officers, but I contend that if the relief commission and the government had used the municipal organizations for the distribution of relief, the cost would have been much smaller.

In conclusion I say that I believe that the only way in which this country can be brought back to a position of prosperity, the only way in which we can get away from this serious problem of unemployment is for the government to make a complete reversal on its fiscal policies—restore trade in the country and unemployment will cease. I think that the government should introduce at the earliest possible moment some form of unemployment insurance. I do not know in just what way this can be done, but the government should introduce some measure to show the people that they are trying to do something to help the unemployed.

Mr. W. G. WEIR (Macdonald): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that anyone in this house or in the country can deny this feature of the debate. An attempt is being made to reinstate a measure which has been in operation for a year and a half and I think we are entitled to the fullest opportunity to discuss and consider the details thereof and the progress which has been made under this particular legislation. The resolution reads:

> Resolved, that it is expedient to introduce a bill to amend chapter 58 of the statutes of Canada, 1931, striking out the word "March" in section 8, and substituting the word "May" therefor.

Of course that is an innocent looking change, but when one reviews the act to be amended he gathers the true significance of what is being asked. By the way, this act has been dead now, for twenty-two days. Section 4 of the act which we are being asked to amend reads as follows:

> The governor in council shall have full power to make all such orders and regulations as may be deemed necessary or desirable for relieving distress, providing employment and, within the competence of parliament, maintaining peace, order and good government throughout Canada.

I do not propose to enter into a discussion of the constitutionality of this procedure except to point out that we on this side of the house take the position, and I believe rightly so, that the government by its action in this regard is taking from parliament control which rightly belongs to parliament and vesting that control in the hands of the cabinet. To this procedure we conscientiously protest, particularly when parliament is in session and in a position to do the very thing the government is trying to do under this legislation. It seems passing strange that when the original bill was introduced last summer, the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) himself on his own initiative changed the date upon which this measure should expire from March 31 to March 1. The argument used on that occasion was that there was every likelihood that parliament would be in session during the month of March and the money could be voted in the regular way. At that time the right hon. gentleman took the position, and I believe properly so, that parliament had a right to know how the money is going to be expended and that the purpose of the act as passed last July was to provide for a period when parliament would not be in session. When the Prime Minister changed the date from March 31 to March 1, he admitted by his own action the desirability of parliamentary control over expenditures.

In addition to that hon. members on this side of the house have pointed out several instances where the authority secured under this legislation has been used for purposes far from having any connection with unemployment or farm relief. I should like to indicate a few of the orders in council that have been passed under this legislation, under the supposed authority of maintaining peace, order and good government, the legislation having been passed in the interests of unemployment and farm relief. Under this legislation there was passed first an order in council guaranteeing the advances made by the banks to the wheat pools; second, an order in council prohibiting the export of gold; third, an order in council increasing the strength of the mounted police by over 300 men; and, fourth, an order in council virtually amending the Insurance Act and thereby allowing the insurance companies to arbitrarily value certain of their securities. I cannot see how measures of this kind have anything to do with unemployment relief; they are totally foreign to it, and why they should be connected with this legislation, I fail to see. These actions may have been good or they may have been bad; I do not propose to discuss that. The point is that they are totally foreign to the measure which we understood we were passing nearly one year ago.

In this country there are several very controversial problems on which public opinion is probably quite evenly divided. Under this legislation those problems could be dealt with by the government, the measure decided and the subject closed for all time to come without parliament or the people of Canada having had an opportunity to express themselves. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir), during his remarks this afternoon, indicated that there must be behind the actions of the opposition in prolonging this debate, something which could not be seen on the surface. I would venture the same assertion to him, that the introduction of this legislation in the way in which they have brought it in, in the expectation of maintaining it in force, indicates something below the surface which the government are not prepared to bring into the open. I believe there is grave danger in this legislation. There is danger to the government of the day. I cannot see why a government should want to take to itself power of this nature. Why not share the responsibility of the making of laws? It is dangerous for a government to possess such power and authority as this and it will sooner or later undoubtedly run them into difficulties.

A few days ago the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens), in discussing this legislation, said in effect that the principle of this measure had been established last year when we passed the measure at the last regular session of parliament. If that is the position of hon. gentlemen opposite in regard to this legislation, we have every right to prolong this debate as long as we possibly can. I for one certainly was not voting in support of that principle, and if it is going to establish a precedent for parliaments yet to come we have an absolute right to fight it just as hard as we can. The government argue that the reason they want to resurrect this legislation is that they are not in a position to know what their actual requirements are. To me that shows weakness on their part. They have had full control and power since 1930 and they now by their actions admit that they are not in a position to know what their requirements will be for sixty days in advance. That is the situation. They have had full control in this regard, being able to gather all the reports, and from their experience they should be in a position to know exactly, or very nearly so, what they will require to carry on their undertakings for sixty days. Their argument in this regard is, however, further shattered by the Prime Minister's remarks of a few days ago. When he was speaking to this resolution earlier in the debate he said that calculations had already been made as to the feed and seed requirements of the three western provinces. He stated the amounts of money that each of the provinces had asked for, that is the amount of money required for that purpose is definitely known to-day by the government. The applications of the three western provinces have been made to the government, and I understand from despatches from Winnipeg that the Dominion government has agreed to the amounts suggested. Therefore the amount of money for seed and feed purposes and the cost of putting in the crop in these three provinces has been determined so far as it is possible to do so. For instance, the Prime Minister said that Alberta had asked for $140,000, Manitoba for $650,000 and Saskatchewan for some $6,000,000. Therefore the government's argument in that regard is not sound. They already have the information they need.

I wish to make a few observations with respect to seed and feed relief, particularly as it applies to Manitoba. I do this because of an interjection made by the Prime Minister some days ago when the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown) attempted to adjourn the house to discuss a matter of grave national importance. On that occasion, the right hon. gentleman interjected: "What is your Manitoba government doing?" That would indicate to those of us who heard the remark that there was an implication that the Manitoba government was not fulfilling its duty in this regard. The Manitoba government has requested that the federal government in respect of seed and feed relief share with it certain of the obligations. It has asked that the Dominion government assume one-third of the cost of feed and seed and also one-third of the freight cost of bringing in those materials, the provincial government agreeing to assume a similar responsibility. I think that is a very reasonable request and one which if the Dominion government is going to assist in the matter of relief they might very well act upon. That there will be loss with respect to feed and seed there is no doubt. Any municipal man who has had experience in this matter in years gone by knows that there will be loss in that regard, but I will let that pass for the moment because the Prime Minister in his remarks on that same day did state that whereas these advances to which I have referred were loans to the provinces, and that the dominion was assuming no responsibility for losses in connection with them, but that when the losses were actually determined and known the matter might be opened up for further consideration. Those remarks of his will be found at page 906 of Hansard, and I hope that the Prime Minister will keep them in mind when this matter comes up for consideration after we have found out what the losses actually are in this regard.

Coming back to the inference that the Manitoba government was asking for something unreasonable, I really got the impression that the Manitoba government had been asking for something that no other government had been asking for, and therefore I was very much surprised to learn from the remarks of the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) the other day that the government of Alberta had asked for exactly the same thing. So why pick on Manitoba?

A return was brought down in the house some days ago which showed the amount of money which had been advanced by this government to the three prairie provinces and British Columbia. This return shows that Alberta has received advances of $4,624,000; Manitoba, $3,205,537, and that figure has since been raised to $3,775,000; Saskatchewan, $16,302,496, and that figure has since been raised to $16,800,000. In addition to that, may I point out that the province of Saskatchewan has had advanced to it, for the drought area of seventy-six municipalities, $5,250,000 as a straight gift. I am finding no fault with that whatever. In addition Saskatchewan has received for purely provincial purposes $6,500,000; in other words, Saskatchewan has received $6,500,000 for carrying on purely provincial undertakings.

Coming back to the matter of seed and feed relief so far as it affects the province of Manitoba, the Prime Minister stated in his remarks that the three western provinces were being treated in exactly the same manner, that these moneys that were being advanced were being advanced as loans pure and simple and it was intended that they would be paid back. I think there has been some misunderstanding in this regard. I take the Prime Minister's word, of course, but I should like to put it in this way: Is this government advancing that money to Saskatchewan as a loan, or is it giving some money directly and assuming responsibility for some of the losses in the drought area? I am sorry that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) is not in his seat because I have under my hand a letter signed by him dealing with the matter, in which he says:

> This government is providing the funds to purchase food, clothing, fuel, feed and seed which is being distributed by a relief commission.

I do not propose to deal with that further, but hon. gentlemen can easily see how differences of opinion might arise in that regard. So I think that the inference of the Prime Minister and it was merely an inference—with respect to Manitoba was quite unfair and quite uncalled for.

May I point this out, that up until January 26 last the Dominion government actually had no policy with respect to this very matter of farm and unemployment relief, because I have under my hand a letter from the Minister of Agriculture, dated January 26, 1932, in which he says:

> I hope to be able to get in touch with the Ministers of Agriculture within the next week, and set out the extent to which we will be able to help or not help.

That shows that the Dominion government actually had no definite policy on the date of January 26 last in spite of the fact that the matter was brought to their attention in a conference as early as August 31 last, correspondence respecting which I have under my hand. Now the Dominion government comes along and says that we are holding this matter up, that seed and feed are wanted badly by the farmers of the western provinces and that the government is not in a position to provide it. In spite of the fact that the Dominion government was able to provide bombs and other paraphernalia for the police force, they were not far enough advanced in their program to have the seed wheat ready for the farmers of western Canada.

We have heard from several members on the other side of the house indicating that they would like members on this side to cooperate with them in dealing with this vexed problem of unemployment and farm relief. I would point out, Mr. Speaker, that cooperation works both ways. For example, last summer when we were discussing this question the Prime Minister indicated that the members of the house would be communicated with and asked to submit to the director of unemployment relief federal projects that might be undertaken in their respective constituencies. That letter was received in due course and I presume that most of the members acted upon it. I know that I spent considerable time in getting in touch with the reeves of municipalities and the mayors of various towns and the local provincial representatives, of whom there are five in my constituency, two of them good Conservatives, and I submitted their suggestions to the dominion director of unemployment relief, but of all the projects I suggested, and there were several, I was informed that only one project could be classed as a federal undertaking, namely, the building of a small post office in a rural town in my constituency.

Further, the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Murphy)—I am sorry he is not in his seat—visited my constituency last fall in the interests of unemployment and farm relief. He visited the largest town in my constituency, a town of some twelve hundred people. I live only some ten or twelve miles out of that town; in fact, it is my business town. Of course, I did not expect that the minister would get in touch with me, because that would be expecting too much, but I became curious after I knew that he was there and I began to make inquiries as to who he did see. Mark you, Mr. Speaker, it was published in the paper that he was out there in the interests of unemployment and farm relief. On checking up on his activities I found that the hon. minister did not even see the provincial representative, who lives in that town, that he did not even see the mayor of that town, who lives right in the town, that he did not see the reeve of the municipality, who lives a few miles out of the town; in fact, he did not officially see a single representative of the town or rural municipal council, and he was there in the interests of farm and unemployment relief. But he did see some people, Mr. Speaker. I see the minister coming into the house now. Strange as it may seem, about a week or so after the hon. gentleman's departure, a Conservative nomination convention was held for that provincial constituency. That is the way the hon. gentleman proposes to cooperate with us in dealing with this vexed problem of unemployment and farm relief.

I wish, Mr. Speaker, to refer to another feature of this legislation which I think is very unfair and unjust. I call it the big stick feature. When we met at the special session of 1930 the request was made for $20,000,000, and at that time we were told that we had to vote the amount asked for or the Prime Minister would not go to the Imperial conference. That was the big stick held over us at that time. Then we come along to the regular session of 1930, and we find that no legislative program was brought forward with respect to unemployment until the dying days of the session when everyone was fatigued and anxious to get home. In other words the government waited until everybody was wearied of attending parliamentary sittings, knowing all the time that the government's majority would carry the measure through the house. That was the big stick used on that occasion.

Now, at this session of parliament, we find another big stick being used when, in effect, we are told, "If you do not pass this legislation the farmers in western Canada will not get their seed and feed grain." So, we are being coerced into the adoption of this measure. I think the government is going altogether too far. If hon. gentlemen opposite maintain the position taken by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) that the principle of this legislation was endorsed last year, hon. members on this side of the house would be making a very serious mistake if they were to let this measure go through the house without finding out definitely the government's policy in connection with relief.

I wish to touch upon the government's policy with respect to unemployment and farm relief from a little different angle. To my mind the government's difficulty in handling the present situation is one of its own making, and I make that statement for three reasons. First, there were the election campaign promises made by hon. members opposite. Every man was promised a job. According to hon. members opposite the reason men did not have jobs in 1930 was the failure of the previous government. I ask hon. members to think of the psychological effect created by that kind of campaigning. A good many people took the Prime Minister and his followers at their word; they accepted the statements made by hon. members opposite at their face value.

Then we come to the $20,000,000 voted for the relief of the unemployed. The voting of that money was another very definite factor in creating the attitude of mind among the unemployed. Then we come to the blank cheque, whereby unlimited money was placed in the hands of the government. People are still looking for the government to carry out its promises. They accepted in good faith the utterances of hon. members opposite, believing that they would be carried out. I ask, Mr. Speaker, if it is any wonder we have delegations at Ottawa who place their views very forcibly before the Prime Minister. He created the attitude of mind in the people of this country that there were jobs for everybody. Probably they think he is a machine, that he can turn a wheel and kick out a job whenever he likes. The problem with which the government is faced is of their own making.

There is another feature of this legislation to which I think reference should be made. I think we should give very serious consideration to the continuation of a policy of spending money to create employment. Up to the present time that is all we have been doing. Have we obtained results justifying the amount of money which has been spent? We have adopted a policy forcing municipalities and provinces to go further into debt so that jobs may be created. I am not so sure the country is prepared to continue with that policy. By this legislation we have already increased the debts of the provinces and municipalities by about $100,000,000. How much actual employment has been supplied? I think those are questions the people of Canada are anxious to know. Lack of time prevents me discussing further this phase of the question. I say again, however, that the feature to which I have referred is one which should be given the greatest possible consideration by hon. members in this house. Has the government's policy of spending money produced the results expected when the legislation was originally introduced and passed at the various sessions of parliament?

Summarizing the remarks I have made, the situation presents itself to me from three distinct points of view. First, the constitutionality of the procedure adopted. In other words, will this house reinstate a blank cheque policy for another sixty days, or shall we follow the procedure of voting supply in the ordinary way? The government has taken the position that they have not sufficient information, that they do not know the actual conditions they might run into, that their information does not enable them to name a definite amount of money, and bring in a supply bill. I think hon. members on this side of the house, knowing the circumstances surrounding this legislation, are quite justified in pressing for a money bill which could be brought in in the ordinary, proper parliamentary way. Is a precedent being established for years to come? I sincerely think that hon. members must view the proposed legislation with real seriousness, because it would seem that the government is establishing a precedent whereby they may have control of the spending of money, the making of policies, the placing of law making in the hands of a few cabinet ministers and probably the hands of only the Prime Minister. Such policies are going much too far in the creation of an absolute dictatorship in Canada.

Then, I should like again to refer to the policy of obliging provincial and municipal governments to go further into debt, so that work may be created for the unemployed. Is that a policy which this government will continue to follow? I think that that is a feature of the proposed legislation which should receive the most careful consideration from all parties concerned, if our municipal and provincial governments—and particularly those in western Canada—are to remain solvent. To my mind this is a very important matter, and one which this house cannot afford lightly to pass over. I feel that the government should be in a position to state the amount of money it requires to carry on business for a period of sixty days. For the life of me I cannot conceive of any board of directors while they are in session, saying to their general manager, "Go ahead and do what you like; you do not need to consult us." I do not think we would find any board of directors which would give their management such unlimited powers. Why should we be obliged to do that so far as this government is concerned? We have a right to know the amount of money required to carry out the proposed program, and should proceed in the regular way by bringing in a supply bill, thereby eliminating further discussion.

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (West Edmonton): Mr. Speaker, after listening to the debate of the past week concerning the resolution before the house one is constrained to think that the government might at least pay some attention to the objections registered. I am quite well aware however that no attention will be paid, and that the government will not take heed to the objections registered against them. I am quite well aware that the majority sitting opposite will, as usual, vote for this resolution, and when the time arrives, put it through the house.

Perhaps I would not have spoken on this occasion, knowing the futility of speaking in this House of Commons at this time, had it not been for the fact that my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) the other day announced that the principle of this legislation had been established at the last session of parliament, and that parliament had given the government the right to legislate in every particular. In the first place parliament gave the government the right so dearly bought, and which caused so much friction and distress in days gone by, to control taxation and expenditure. The expenditure of public money is carried on by the government under the direction of parliament, or at least that was the principle in days gone by. Now, however, by the force of the majority of members behind the government, that right has been wrested from parliament and given to the government of the day. Then, forsooth, hon. members on that side of the house excuse themselves by saying, "You delegated this right to the government so what have you to say about it"? That is about all the satisfaction we get from our protests against this high-handed behaviour on the part of the government.

Then, not content with that, my hon. friends took the right to reestablish what was known amongst us as the War Measures Act; by the force of their majority again they seized the right to interfere with statutes already passed, which is the clear prerogative of parliament.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, if we believe in a free parliament, we who have some respect for the rights of parliament and the representatives of the people have the right upon this occasion to protest as vigorously as we can against actions of this sort.

Perhaps the thing to which I personally take the greatest exception is the power taken by this government to interfere by order in council with our tariff. I do not know of a single industry in this country or of a single importer who is not in entire agreement with what I have to say with respect to this point. Why should this government take from parliament the right to fix the tariff upon imports entering this country? Where is the necessity for that? No other answer can be given, Mr. Speaker, except that they wish to seize authority upon any and every occasion not to impose tariffs upon goods coming into this country but absolutely to exclude those imports. This might be classed as the most high-handed piece of legislation this government has seen fit to pass, and the way it has been administered is infinitely worse than the seizure of the power itself. But hon. gentlemen opposite were not content with getting parliament to place upon the statute books the highest duties in the history of this country and in the history of most countries of the world; paying no attention to the results that would accrue, they took this step in the name of unemployment relief. They announced that their policy would be to spend money in conjunction with provinces and municipalities in order to relieve unemployment, but the permanent cure for unemployment was to be these drastic increases in the tariff. That was the cure-all for the difficulties in which they said they found this country when they came into office in 1930.

Did hon. gentlemen pay any attention to what would be the results? Have they cured unemployment by the drastic increases which they put through, followed by the orders in council which practically shut out many imports? Has that cured unemployment? Has it increased the revenues of the government? Are they paying their way? What has it done to our great transportation system? In Canada, rightly or wrongly—and no government and no party will take credit for it—we built up what we thought was a great national transportation organization known as the Canadian National Railways. We spent money lavishly on our ports, upon steamship subsidies and in the construction of vessels; we dredged our rivers in order that the larger vessels could get to our ports; we improved the harbours of Vancouver and Prince Rupert and spent millions of dollars on all these undertakings. For what purpose was that done? Was it done for domestic trade? No one for a moment will say yes to that question. Certainly not; we spent this money for the purpose of creating international trade, and we were all in agreement about it. Then along came this government, and what did they do? During the short session of 1930 they started to stem the flow of imports into this country by unreasonable and excessive tariffs, and they created unemployment to an unprecedented degree by that action. Then, not satisfied with that, whenever they found an opportunity, whenever some poor importer was endeavouring to get some goods into this country and they were notified of that fact, overnight they placed prohibitive duties against such articles by order in council, and in particular with our trade with Great Britain.

What has been the result of all this? Never in the history of Canada since Canada has had a railway; never in the history of Canada since Canada has had steamships has there been unemployment to the extent there is at the present time, and I say it is useless for these gentlemen to rise in the house and argue that because of the excessive tariffs in the other countries, because of obstructions placed in the way of international trade by other countries, Canada is suffering and they are only moving by way of retaliation. That retaliation is coming home; it is striking back in the way of ever-increasing unemployment, and I say if the government persist in their present policies and continue along present lines we will not have half a million unemployed in this country; we will have a million unemployed in the very near future.

Not only have the government persisted in this policy with regard to the United States and other foreign countries; even prior to the visit of the Prime Minister to England at the time of the Imperial conference increased tariffs were put into operation against the best customer Canada ever had. Now we are approaching another conference, and I for one am very gravely concerned about the success of the conference that is to be held in this city this coming summer. If this conference is not a success, Mr. Speaker; if it does not bring about something in the way of inter-imperial trade between ourselves and the motherland, then I have very grave fears that the government of Canada will find itself in the same position financially that the western provinces are finding themselves in to-day, largely as a result of the policies inaugurated by this government.

In 1930 the public were told that if they voted for the Conservative party the farm products which, so it was said, the government of the day were unable to market, would find markets under the direction of the Conservative government. Prices would be increased; all they had to do was vote for the Conservative party. What a spectacle we have to-day. I defy hon. gentlemen opposite to name one single promise made by the government of the day or by any speaker on behalf of the government, which has been fulfilled in any single particular. Rather the opposite; they have brought ruin and disaster in their path by the policies they have adopted and persisted in. That is the situation we have to face to-day, and then we wonder why unemployment is on the increase. Is it any wonder that unemployment is increasing? I reiterate that unless that policy is changed there is no hope for the relief of unemployment. In view of the attitude of the government to-day on this very simple but very vital question, is there much hope for a change in the attitude of those gentlemen who will be our Canadian representatives at the forthcoming conference? They are destroying our markets everywhere they can by refusing to buy, by refusing to consult parliament as to where they shall buy; and by the most highhanded procedure that has ever characterized any government under the British constitution, hon. gentlemen opposite to-day persist in this mad policy so fatal to the Canadian people. Then they say, "Why do you protest? Why are you not willing to give us a blank cheque to purchase the necessary grain and fodder for the relief of western farmers?"

Mr. MANION: Does it take ten days to protest?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): As the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Weir) said a few moments ago, only four or five days ago, standing in his place, the Prime Minister stated that he knew how much money was required to purchase seed for the relief of the western provinces. He stated the amount to the house. What, therefore, is the use of hon. gentlemen suggesting that they do not know how much is required? Moreover, have they not been told time and time again that if they will follow the constitutional practice they will get in five minutes whatever further money they require? They will get it if they will ask for it in a constitutional way. But what is the use of making the statement that the Liberals are delaying progress in this regard?

Mr. MANION: So you are.

[Mr. C. A. Stewart.]

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): We are not doing anything of the kind.

Mr. MANION: For ten days.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The Minister of Railways boasts about his red blood. When he was standing on this side he used to speak about his red blood.

Mr. MANION: You people talk about it; I don't.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No, he does not to-day because a tremendous change has taken place since he crossed the floor. There is a great change in his attitude towards a good many things. My hon. friend sees through a different pair of spectacles to-day than when he was in opposition fighting the policies of the then government. But I will say one thing: The Minister of Railways would give a good deal if he had the record to point to such as the ministers whom he criticized so vehemently at that time had when they were sitting on his side of the house. He would be glad to be able to say that the institution which he administers to-day as Minister of Railways was in the same happy position it was in when administered by the Liberal party. He would be glad to be able to say that his government was making the same reductions in taxation that the government of that day made for the relief of the people of Canada. He would be glad to be able to say that his government was reducing the debt of the country. There are a great many things which he would be glad to be able to say but which he dare not say to-day because of the insane policies, if I am permitted to say so, which have been inaugurated by the government he supports so strongly.

No, Mr. Speaker; the root of the matter is not the gold standard. That is not what is troubling us to-day, nor is it the currency question. These are incidental, it is true; but the whole trouble results from the fatal policy which hon. gentlemen opposite are pursuing.

One would have thought, to hear hon. gentlemen speaking about what was happening in foreign countries, and particularly what had been done in the United States since the great war, that if the Liberal party, when in power, had only put into practice the policies adopted in the country to the south of us, Canada would have benefited very largely. And no one was more vehement in these statements than the leader of the government (Mr. Bennett), who was continually pointing to the success of the United States as a result of the tariff policies put into force in that country.

In speech after speech which he made he repeated that statement, on the floor of the house and outside parliament. Is he saying much about the United States to-day? Do we hear any speeches now about the prosperity which the people are enjoying across the line, and about the depression in Canada necessitating young men and women leaving this country? Well, they cannot leave Canada now because there is a restriction against Canadians entering the United States for the simple reason that they have more unemployed there than they know what to do with.

Mr. GORDON: They are coming back in large numbers.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am glad to know that they are coming back. But may I suggest to my hon. friend that he read some of the speeches made by members of the Conservative party when they were on this side of the house. When we were wanting to go slow with respect to immigration, what did those hon. gentlemen say? I heard my hon. friend state in this house the other night that his difficulty was the result of too much immigration. I agree with him in part.

Mr. GORDON: Of the kind you permitted.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Had we accepted the suggestions which were put forward by hon. gentlemen who belong to his party when they sat on this side of the house, I can assure the minister that his difficulties would have been very greatly increased and to-day, not one or two farmers but millions of them with millions of expenditure, would be involved in those difficulties. That would have been the result if we had adopted the suggestions his hon. friends made. What was said to me in 1922 and 1923? We were then told that if we did not change our policy with regard to immigration into Canada we should not be able to discharge the public debt. Speech after speech was made to the same effect. They will make nice reading for my hon. friend if he will look up some of these statements which hon. gentlemen who belong to his party made when they were in opposition. It is a fortunate thing that immigration was kept at the point at which it was held. But that was not the point; that was not so much the criticism that was offered by hon. gentlemen opposite; their point was that it was the policies of the government then in office that were driving the young men and women out of the country.

An hon. MEMBER: Hear, hear.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Well, let me say to the hon. gentleman that there are a good many young men and women in the country now who would be mighty glad to get out if they knew where to go, if they knew where they could do better.

Mr. GORDON: But they cannot do better.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): There are 500,000 of them who would be glad to leave.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That is absolutely wrong.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, there are 500,000 out of employment, and how many more there are out of employment about whom we know nothing is another question. My hon. friends do not like this.

An hon. MEMBER: Where would they go?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): They might go to England and be infinitely better off.

An hon. MEMBER: England?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, they might go to England, which some hon. gentlemen think so little about.

Mr. HACKETT: Free trade England?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Who said free trade England?

Mr. HACKETT: I did.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Let me say to my hon. friend that, notwithstanding all her difficulties, England has never adopted, and I doubt whether she will ever adopt, the insane policy with respect to protection which this government has adopted. If the hon. gentleman is a student of political economics he will agree at once that if ever there was a country which perhaps would profit by a little bit of protection England is that country. But up to the present time she has steadfastly refused to adopt such a policy. I do not know what my Conservative friends would have her do if they were able to; perhaps she may adopt some small measure of protection. I say, however, that the government could reduce unemployment in Canada considerably over night if they would adopt the same scale of tariff protection in Canada that England is putting into effect. Moreover, they would have room for people in Canada. But I say to the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Gordon) that until the government changes its policy we shall never have room for anyone in this country.

For many years I have been arguing both in and out of this house against excessive protection in Canada or any other country. We have never had demonstrated how ruinous a policy of this kind can be until the present occasion. I ask my hon. friend to point out one country which has adopted excessive protection which is not to-day in difficulties, in which unemployment is not rife, and which is not unable to pay its way promptly. If he will show me one country which has adopted an excessive scale of protection and which is not in these difficulties, then I will make no more moderate protection speeches.

Mr. MANION: When did the United States stop paying its debts?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I cannot prophesy what this government will do, what taxation it will bring down or how large its deficit will be, but if my hon. friend has been reading the press he will have seen that the United States has a considerable deficit under the present system. This will have to be taken out of the pockets of the taxpayers, as will any deficit in this country.

Mr. GORDON: How does it compare with the deficit in Great Britain under free trade?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Under free trade that country had far more surpluses than deficits. If my hon. friend will look up Canadian history he will find that this country has had the most serious deficits when Conservative governments were in office and Conservative principles were being practised. He does not need to go to Great Britain to find an example; he will find it right here at home. He will find also that the most prosperous period in the history of Canada was during the eight years when the Liberal government was in office.

Why do I say these things? Because we are discussing unemployment. Hon. gentlemen opposite have a majority and they are going to carry on until the end of their term and demonstrate to Canada what a high tariff policy will do. If they have as much success during the next two years as they have had in the past, there will not be much left of the Conservative party. May I say to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) and to the Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion): If you have the same success in financing during the next two years as you have had in the past, we will not have much of a Canadian National railway system.

Mr. MANION: We did not have much when you left.

[Mr. C. A. Stewart.]

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The time will come when the people of Canada will be totally unable to bear the burden. This is the sort of thing which must be giving the Minister of Finance many headaches. He has my entire sympathy, as has every member of the government. I do not deny for a single moment that they have a difficult situation with which to deal; it is perhaps the most difficult which has ever been faced by Canada, but I say to them: You are making it infinitely worse by the adoption and pursuance of policies which are leading to complete exclusion of trade. Canada was most prosperous when we had the greatest amounts of imports and exports. Hon. gentlemen opposite will argue the exact opposite, but history demonstrates that that is the fact. The government continue to pursue these policies and then state to the house and to the country that their difficulties are not of their own making, that they arise from conditions outside of Canada.

Why have we not heard of the Australian treaty up to date? Why the reserve with respect to treaties with countries which would be willing to trade with us on a reasonable basis? The very vigour with which the government pursue their policy of protection to the exclusion of trade, prohibits trade with any country. We are ten million people trying to live within ourselves, producing more foodstuffs than three times ten million people could consume, and our limit of production has not been reached. We are manufacturing more goods than we can consume, and we have the facilities to manufacture still more. We are mining more minerals than we can possibly use within our own country, and yet the government says: We can live within ourselves, and we intend to blast our way into some unknown markets. How silly, how futile and how helpless this government is in the face of the most serious situation with which Canada has ever been faced!

I have some sympathy with hon. gentlemen to my left who claim that our monetary system has something to do with the situation, but as I said a few moments ago, the monetary system is secondary in importance to the policies of this government with respect to tariffs. I will go as far as to say that we would welcome the bringing down by the government of a bill which would prohibit the charging of a greater interest rate than six per cent, and to make it a criminal offence to do so. We have had all the credit that is good for us in Canada, not because the policies of this government have prohibited investments in this country; they have been limited to a large degree—I ask the most ardent supporter of a new currency: If you had $10,000 or $15,000, where would you invest it? Where could that amount of money be invested in Canada with a hope of return? I ask that question in all sincerity. Does any hon. member know where it would be safe to invest that amount? I do not know. Where could it be invested in Canada to return six per cent? Could it be invested in farming? Could it be invested in mining? Could it be invested in manufacturing?

An hon. MEMBER: I would not invest it in Beauharnois.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): May I say to my hon. friend that if this government persists in helping Beauharnois as it has done, that would be a pretty safe investment, just about as good as anyone would want. We will have more to say about Beauharnois one of these days, and I am thankful to my hon. friend for raising the question because it is something in which I am vitally interested. I am quite prepared to discuss Beauharnois and intend at a later stage to do so.

Where could this money be invested? Is this the condition to which agriculture, manufacturing, mining and lumbering has come? It is not credit we want, it is a different policy and a different attitude on the part of the government. That is why I am speaking this afternoon; I hope to speak on the budget and urge again this point upon hon. gentlemen opposite. They do not want advice. We were told this afternoon that minorities do not count for anything in this parliament. We knew that before, but we want to point out clearly and distinctly that unless there is a change of attitude on the part of the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) and his ministers to the imperial delegates when they meet in conference in Ottawa from that exhibited at the last conference, then our last hope is gone for a revival of trade in Canada and for the cure of unemployment.

The government is asking for a blank cheque. To do what? For the purpose of spending money to buy grain and fodder, the amount to be required having been stated in the house a few days ago. They have had ten months' experience in dealing with unemployment and they know exactly, or should know, how much money is required. I am not going to be critical of the ability of hon. gentlemen opposite. They do know, and why do they persist in flaunting in the face of the opposition, in the face of parliament itself, the statement that they are going to have a blank cheque, irrespective of traditions, irrespective of the rights of a free parliament, in order that they may do just as they please with it? Then, forsooth, we are told that while we are in session, the day after they pass any order in council, they will table it in order that we may know what they have been doing. It is a complete reversal of the system of parliamentary government that they should take upon themselves the responsibility first of making expenditures and then of telling us all about them after the expenditures are made.

May I reiterate: never before have the traditions of a free parliament been trampled upon to the extent to which that is being attempted by the government on this occasion. Hon. gentlemen may say that the situation is serious. If so, why in the name of common sense did they not introduce this measure over a month ago, the first day that we met? They knew they were going to be out of money at the end of February; they knew the appropriations expired then. I sometimes wonder why they do not take the responsibility in their own hands, and, quite irrespective of the fact that parliament is in session, continue passing orders in council and spending money. They might just as well do that as do what they are proposing now—to take that responsibility given to them by a majority of their own followers who trust in them. By the way, sometimes I wonder whether they really do, or whether they are overawed by the superiority of intellect behind which they are sitting. To me the proposal is unthinkable. For twenty-five years I have been in a legislature and in this parliament and I thought one question that was settled for time and eternity, so far as British institutions were concerned, was that parliament should control the expenditure of money, and of its own volition should make, amend or repeal laws. But I have come to regard the government who sit opposite me in another light. They are blazing new trails, I confess most dangerous trails. For that reason I am opposing this legislation and I intend to oppose it as vigorously as I can. Indeed, I intend to oppose it so vigorously that no more will any hon. gentleman opposite rise in his place and say that I have been a party to establishing a principle of this kind.

Mr. JOHN VALLANCE (South Battleford): Mr. Speaker, it was not my intention to take part in this discussion this afternoon, but after listening to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir), naturally I could not keep my seat. The minister had to make his speech in order to try to excuse the action of the government in holding up the distribution of this much-needed seed.

I should like to refer to the text of the resolution before the house. It reads:

That it is expedient to introduce a bill to amend chapter 58 of the statutes of Canada, 1931, striking out the word "March" in section 8, and substituting the word "May" therefor.

The hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Totzke) this afternoon read a telegram received from Premier Anderson who, like the Minister of Agriculture and the rest of us, is naturally interested in seeing to it that those farmers who need seed, receive it. But in view of the attitude that has been taken by the opposition, in the beginning by my right hon. leader (Mr. Mackenzie King), in pointing out to the government that the resolution suggesting an extension from March to May would not meet the situation, I should like to read to the house a clipping from the Ottawa Citizen of March 22, which I hold in my hand, and I take it as authentic. I want the house to listen very carefully to what Premier Anderson has to say. Those of us who come from the province of Saskatchewan, in common with the leader of the opposition and the hon. member for Humboldt, each received a telegram from that gentleman. It reads as follows:

In interests of thousands of Saskatchewan farmers, victims of national disaster through drought, respectfully urge your sanction of the relief bill before Easter recess as indications are for early spring and provision of seed dependent upon passing of bill.

The Citizen comments as follows:

The above telegram was sent to-day by Premier J. T. M. Anderson to Right Hon. Mackenzie King, leader of the opposition at Ottawa. In addition to indicating his effort to have the seed grain distributed as early as possible, Doctor Anderson gave out the following statement in part.

I should like the members from Saskatchewan, including the Minister of Agriculture, to listen to what Premier Anderson had to say:

During the past year Saskatchewan suffered what has been termed by people generally throughout the Dominion as a "national disaster." This came as a result of three successive crop failures, the failure of 1931 affecting directly one-third of Saskatchewan's population. In order to meet this situation, a provincial relief commission was set up and it has been serving the needs of 50,000 families throughout Saskatchewan.

I want to point out to the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) and the government that if this resolution were adopted, it would not fulfil the needs of the province of Saskatchewan. It would last merely until the first day of May, and then we would find the government in a position where of necessity they would have to accept the suggestion of the opposition. I make that point just in passing and I leave it for the consideration of the house.

I was rather amused, shall I say, by some of the statements made by the Minister of Agriculture. He referred to those of my friends on this side who had already taken part in the debate, as back benchers. Might I say to him that one of the most colossal mistakes the Prime Minister ever made was in the appointment of the present member for Melfort to the very dignified and high position of Minister of Agriculture in the federal administration. I think he would have filled with some dignity and probably with some success a back bench in this house, but I think I may say, speaking for the farmer, that as Minister of Agriculture he has been an utter failure. What has he tried? There is not a policy he has evolved since coming into office that has not been a colossal error. Take his sow policy; he can go into his own constituency and he will find that just about the time the house was meeting, those farmers who accepted his suggestion and went into the hog business, when they sold the hogs that came from the sows, found there was not enough to pay for the sows they took from the Minister of Agriculture.

I was rather amused to hear the minister pointing out that the reason those eight Conservatives were elected from Saskatchewan was that the leader of the opposition had said at one time that he would not give one cent to that province. Let me point out to the minister —and he well knows it—that the only reason why the hon. member for Regina (Mr. Turnbull), the hon. member for Long Lake (Mr. Cowan), the hon. member for Rosetown (Mr. Loucks), the hon. member for Maple Creek (Mr. Swanston), and the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Beynon), the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. MacMillan) and the other two were elected was simply because of the promises made by the present Prime Minister of Canada. I do not have to reiterate those promises, but he told the farmers that they were lacking in markets for their excess farm products, and he promised that he would blast his way into new markets; that he would resurrect old markets, and so on. That promise, as I say, was responsible for the election of those eight Conservative members from Saskatchewan now sitting behind the government. What did he do? At the very first opportunity, which was in the session of 1931, he moved an order of reference to the agriculture committee whereby he proposed to throw on that committee the responsibility of a pledge which he had given to the farmers of Canada. Those members on this side of the house who come from the west immediately rose and objected that the Prime Minister was throwing on to a committee of this house the responsibility that he had undertaken towards the farmers of Canada. What happened? The committee sat day in and day out and listened to many experts in various branches of the government, to Mr. W. A. Brown, chief of the poultry division, Mr. A. W. Ault, egg and poultry division, Mr. W. L. Brown, member of the firm of William Brown Company, cattle importers, Manchester, England, Mr. A. A. MacMillan, chief of sheep and swine division, and many others. What was the finding of that committee? I defy those members from the province of Saskatchewan who are to-day siting behind the government opposite to refute the statement that they are sitting there to-day, not because, as the Minister of Agriculture said, of the statement made by the present leader of the opposition in reference to not giving a five cent piece, but because of the promises that were made by the Prime Minister as to what he would do if returned to power. Here is the finding of that committee:

> In view of the situation as it presented itself to the committee it is not considered advisable to make any recommendation. Your committee, however, submit that the evidence submitted to it might be usefully studied by members of the house.

Was that any solution of the great marketing problem? I do not see the chairman of the agriculture committee in his place, but I would point out, Mr. Speaker, that concurrence in the report of that committee was never moved. Those of us from western Canada sitting on the committee moved amendment after amendment which was voted down by those sitting behind the government, and we stated that whenever concurrence in the committee's report was moved in the house we proposed to stage a full dress debate; and concurrence in that report, Mr. Speaker, has never been moved. So the Prime Minister was elected, I say, not for the reasons given by the Minister of Agriculture, but for the reasons that I have indicated.

The Minister of Agriculture before the election—he did the same thing after the election—went throughout his constituency and advised some of his followers to hold on to their surplus products because he said prices would soar if the Conservative government were returned to power. What are the facts? On July 26, 1930, two days before this government came into power, No. 1 northern wheat was selling at Winnipeg for 96·02, and in December of that year the price had dropped to 57·07. Did the Prime Minister solve our marketing problem? Has he done so even yet? Do the eight members from Saskatchewan who sit behind the government feel that they are in a position to go back to their electorate and prove to them that their election was justified?

Mr. BEYNON: May I ask the hon. member a question? Has the export of agricultural products increased in the last year?

Mr. VALLANCE: So far as the exports are concerned, it does not amount to a snap of the finger.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. VALLANCE: If I had time to go into the marketing of Canada's wheat crop, I could place this government in a very precarious position. Now that the subject has been introduced I would like to take hon. gentlemen back to the Imperial conference of 1930. Whom did the Prime Minister take with him to the conference as his wheat expert? It was John I. McFarland. Where is he to-day? He is the manager of the central selling agency of the greatest cooperative organization that has ever existed in Canada. What was the first thing he did? He accepted the position only on the understanding that he would be given full control regarding the marketing policy of that great organization, and the first thing he did was to close all the European offices which served as contacts between the buyers in Europe and the pool and the farmers of western Canada. The result is that to-day those people in Europe who may be in a position to buy our wheat have nowhere to go, outside probably of the representatives of the Department of Trade and Commerce, but as long as those offices existed in Europe which had been established by the pool we could maintain close contact with the European buyer. John I. McFarland is the man who was appointed by this government, and it was upon the understanding that the Prime Minister would come to the assistance of the pools when they were in difficulty. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) the other night pointed out that an order in council went through guaranteeing the pools. But did the government guarantee the pools? No, they guaranteed the banks. The Minister of Trade and Commerce claimed that the government had kept the market up. If that is so; it is rather peculiar that at no time in any of the export markets of the world do you find the price of wheat lower than it is in Winnipeg. So if this government is going to claim credit for keeping up our wheat price level, they must also claim credit for maintaining the world price level. But I think the Minister of Trade and Commerce knows well enough that the portion of wheat supplied by Canada which goes into the export market is merely sixteen per cent, and how could it be expected that this government could maintain the price of the other eighty-four per cent that finds its way to the markets of the world?

I could go on talking at great length, Mr. Speaker, of the other promises which this government made, but it would only be reiterating. I say that what Premier Anderson is looking for is for legislation to be brought down to supply the needs of these fifty thousand people that we are interested in, not merely until the first of May next, but until another crop is harvested or until one is visible. I appeal to the eight Conservative members from Saskatchewan sitting behind the government to say just how soon a crop is visible in western Canada. They know well that it cannot be counted on until probably the 15th of August, because up until that time the crop has to combat all the vicissitudes of drought and all the other things that go to spoil a crop.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I think the members on this side have fully vindicated our position that the government should have brought down a supply bill to look after farm and unemployment relief, and not simply until the first of May, but to take care of all the needs and not only of the province of Saskatchewan but of all the people of Canada who find themselves in a similarly precarious position.

Mr. CHARLES B. HOWARD (Sherbrooke): In rising to make a few remarks on the resolution before the house I should like to say first, Mr. Speaker, that members on this side have fully vindicated our position that we are not in any way obstructing the legislation that the government proposes to bring down dealing with unemployment and farm relief. We have assured the government repeatedly that if they will only follow the constitutional practice and bring down a supply bill, we will support it unanimously. Had the government done that, this debate would have been entirely avoided. The government knows that perfectly well, and it knows more. It knows that the rights which were fought for by the people at the French revolution, the rights and privileges which were secured for the British people at the signing of Magna Charta, and the rights which we have won in this country over a long period of years, stood at their very peak two years ago, but since then we have been backsliding from the rights that up to that time the country had gained. This government know that when they say we are holding them up so that seed wheat cannot be supplied in the west, they are not stating the facts, because if they wanted to they could put the legislation through. Furthermore they know that the government in this house to-day and not the opposition is responsible for legislation.

Let us go back for a moment to one of the outstanding periods in the history of this parliament, namely, the election of 1930. We must remember the undertakings that were made by hon. members opposite. Hon. members who have preceded me have outlined the promises which were responsible for the change of government in Canada. Chief among the statements by hon. members opposite were those concerning the relief of the unemployed. During a period of two years since their election to office practically no criticism has been made against the government; they have been given a free hand to do as they saw fit in the best interests of Canada. We remember that at the special session of parliament which lasted only about ten days, we were asked to vote the fixed amount of $20,000,000 to be used for the curing of unemployment, and to give the government an opportunity to carry out one of its election promises. The $20,000,000 voted at that time was to fulfil election promises; but what happened after that? The situation became worse and worse, and at the last session of parliament we were faced with the legislation which to-day we are asked to renew, owing to the fact that it expired on March 1.

First we voted $20,000,000, and the government spent it as they saw fit. Then we voted a blank cheque, and up to the present session they have been spending that money as they wished. Now they come back and ask for a renewal of that legislation. Never in the history of Canada did a government in power have the backing of provincial governments that this government enjoys. We must remember that this government has one provincial government favourable to it and eight legislatures of the same political feeling as are hon. members opposite. Only in the province of Quebec is there a Liberal legislature, and at this point may I say there never was any government which gave better cooperation to a federal administration than did the Taschereau government in the province of Quebec.

This government has received from banking and financial institutions in Canada support the like of which was never before experienced by any federal administration. Banks have gone the limit in offering them support. They have followed the advice of the Prime Minister. They have done everything he has asked them to do; they have been one hundred per cent with the government in an attempt to solve the present difficulties. The credit of the country has been used; people have subscribed for loans floated by the present government, and subscriptions have been promoted without extraordinary effort, regardless of what the rates of interest might be. Never was there a time when general public opinion was so solidly behind a government. The people are saying, "We want to give this government a fair chance to make good the promises they made to the people. We want to give them a trial." Public opinion has backed the government during the past two years.

What is the situation now? The government have expended the $20,000,000 granted for unemployment relief. They have used the blank cheque as they saw fit, and have loaded extraordinary debts on the provinces. The western provinces have found that they cannot carry out their share of the bargain. The municipalities in the province of Quebec have become indebted so that they might supplement the efforts of this government to carry out the promises made during the election campaign and which up to the present time they have not carried out. In spite of that, the government accuses the opposition of obstruction. What do they say?—"Well, we have not succeeded, but give the boys another chance."

Mr. POULIOT: But they pretend they have succeeded.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Loud applause.

Mr. HOWARD: What are the results, after two years of administration? I am not going to give figures to show the number of unemployed. I do not care to what section of the country you go—you may go to any point between the Atlantic and the Pacific, or you may visit the town of Sherbrooke—you will find conditions are serious. I believe, further, that they will become more serious. Payments from the city treasury of the city of Sherbrooke are increasing every week so that direct relief may be carried on. In the debate on the budget I shall give exact figures. I am not in the least pessimistic, but I do say that the present government have no right to come back and ask for an extension of the blank cheque, without telling us what they are going to do.

What is the industrial situation in Canada? With the exception of the silk industry, to which the Prime Minister referred, practically all industries are in a serious condition. They do not know what way to turn.

Mr. DUFF: What does the Prime Minister know about silk?

Mr. HOWARD: At a later time I shall give figures to the house concerning trade. I must say, however, that for the last two years, or from the time this government took office, trade in Canada has been decreasing. I might be willing, at this stage of the game, to give this government a blank cheque, but I would certainly want them to put the legislation through in a constitutional way. There is something in the proposed legislation, however, which is more important than would appear on the surface. Let us not be fooled. The mere matter of changing dates from one time of the year to another looks very simple, and there would seem to be nothing extraordinary in such a change. If, however, hon. members examine what has been done under the legislation of last session, and if they will look forward to the next twelve months, they will begin to realize how serious the proposed measure really is. They will realize that the Liberals and Progressives in this house are justified in the stand they have taken.

Let us see what has happened under this legislation. We find that under it the government has guaranteed advances to the Beauharnois interests, a private corporation in Canada.

Mr. DUFF: Hear, hear.

Mr. HOWARD: On any previous occasion has a government guaranteed a private corporation? I can think of only one occasion, namely when the Taschereau government backed the Banque Canadienne Nationale. Outside of that I do not think any guarantee has ever been given. It would seem, therefore, by guaranteeing advances to the Beauharnois company they are creating precedents. Without consulting the elected members of the people this government changed the Bank Act. This is getting more serious, though I want to say that I am not criticizing the change they made in the Bank Act; I am one hundred per cent in favour of what they did.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): They did right.

Mr. HOWARD: Yes, they did absolutely right; there is no question about that, but what right had the government to amend the Bank Act without submitting that question to this House of Commons, the elected representatives of the people? The government undertook to fix the prices of stocks in order to prevent tremendous losses to the public, and they did right, but let me ask this: Did they fix the prices of agricultural products? A man who was carrying wheat with his banker at 60 cents a bushel got into difficulties when the price dropped 20 cents; and his banker said to him, "My dear boy, we cannot carry your wheat because the price has dropped 20 cents a bushel. You will have to increase your margin." That was the position in which the other fellow found himself, but did this government guarantee the price of wheat? They did not, but they guaranteed the prices of stocks; they took one stock which was worth only $10 and set the price at $25. They did not have the courage to say to the farmer: "Your wheat will be worth so much," although the man with wheat had just as much right to have prices fixed for him as the man carrying stocks in the province of Quebec.

Mr. BOWMAN: Would the hon. gentleman mind telling me to what stock he is referring, which had its price fixed at $25?

Mr. HOWARD: I could give a list as long as your arm, but I will just mention one. There was the Detroit International Bridge bond, which to-day is worth only $3, but which was valued at $25 by the insurance department.

Mr. BOWMAN: What did the government have to do with fixing that price?

Mr. HOWARD: I will only refer my hon. friend to the remarks of the Prime Minister the other day; those are his own words, as my hon. friend will find on looking up Hansard.

Mr. BOWMAN: I heard the Prime Minister's speech but I did not hear him say anything about fixing the prices of stocks.

Mr. HOWARD: Further, Mr. Speaker, I claim that it was not necessary for the government to take that action, that the superintendent of insurance could have placed a valuation on those stocks without any necessity for an order in council being passed.

I am only stating these things to show the seriousness of this legislation that is before us, and now we are accused of holding up the business of the house and delaying the giving of relief, because we will not open up and pass this extraordinary measure. A discussion took place in this house with regard to insurance securities. I say again I am one hundred per cent in favour of what was done by the government; in our present situation extreme measures are necessary, but who put us in these difficulties? Of course, now hon. gentlemen opposite will blame them on world conditions, but I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that before 1930 they did not say anything about world conditions; it was all the fault of the previous government.

As six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. HOWARD: When the house rose at six o'clock I was discussing the fixing of prices under the blank cheque legislation, so far as it affected the chartered banks of Canada and bank stocks and securities. As I said then, I am absolutely one hundred per cent in favour of the fixing of prices, as has been done. But I am directing the attention of the house to this matter to-night because, in my opinion, this legislation has not gone far enough and because, further, I wish to show the dangerous features of legislation of this sort when such an enactment is not submitted to the House of Commons. Furthermore, I do not think that the parliament of Canada should legislate with respect to certain classes and not extend benefits to all other classes.

As regards the securities held by the banks, I have here a copy of the order in council that was passed making that legislation possible. In my section of the country as well as in other parts of Canada the prices of farm products have not been fixed. Take, for example, the butter situation in the eastern townships; take the prices of cream and milk in those townships, and the prices of all kinds of dairy products. At the present time the farmers in the townships produce hogs which they ship to Montreal, selling them at from 4½ to 5 cents per pound live weight, so that it can be seen that they do not secure actual cost of production at that figure. Yet in face of such a situation, prices of agricultural products have not been supported, but the government is singling out collateral held in the banks, as pointed out this afternoon, and a price is fixed to prevent any reduction.

I am going to offer a word of criticism which possibly will bring out later on some explanation in regard to the handling of the monetary system, the gold standard, during the past four months. Under this very same legislation which we are being asked to-night to extend from March 1 to May 1, Canada virtually went off the gold standard. The Prime Minister said time and again, in interviews throughout the country, that we were not off the gold standard nor would we go off it.

Mr. BENNETT: Pardon me, Mr. Speaker. No such statement was ever made.

Mr. HOWARD: Well, I have not the right—

Mr. BENNETT: Exactly; no such statement was ever made.

Mr. HOWARD: That we were not off the gold standard?

Mr. BENNETT: We were off the gold standard, as hon. gentlemen understand it, since 1929, when the former Minister of Finance shipped $40,000,000 of gold to New York.

Mr. HOWARD: I was going to make the observation—I am glad of the correction—that that has been published in the newspapers throughout Canada.

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Mr. HOWARD: I will produce the clipping. At any rate we have been off the gold standard because only a few weeks ago we came back on it, as many newspapers broadcast the fact that we had done so. And we came back on the gold standard in this way. A clause was inserted by the government allowing the exportation of gold only by a permit system; and under this system the payment of the difference on American exchange was practically putting us off the gold standard. What did that situation create in Canada? If we wish to develop this country we are not so keenly interested in what we have to buy from other people, as the government says, but we are keenly interested in what we are going to sell; and if we are going to maintain the price of money in Canada it means that we are not going to be able to sell in the markets of the world where they have depreciated currencies. As a matter of fact, the sales of our merchandise in England fell off very considerably during that time.

I do not like the suggestion that if this legislation is held up seed grain cannot be issued and that the people in that section of the country will suffer because of the opposition that has been put up so far. I hesitate to endorse this legislation for this reason. Considering what has been done in the past, if we renew this mandate and pass the legislation now before us, what can we expect to happen in regard to any legislation that comes down in the near future? Let us take one piece of legislation. A committee has been investigating one of the greatest problems that Canada faces to-day, namely, the railway situation. That report probably will not be brought in in time to be dealt with at the present session of parliament. Suppose it did not come in. Under the legislation we are asked to grant to-night this government would have the power to do with that report whatever it might see fit and to act upon it in whatever way it might wish. I submit, therefore, that it is not fair to ask the house to pass this legislation in the form in which we have it before us.

Mr. BENNETT: Surely the hon. gentleman must know better than that. This legislation expires on the first of May.

Mr. HOWARD: That is exactly the point. This legislation will expire on the first of May, and the Prime Minister probably figures that this parliament will be dissolved and the house will not be in session on the first of May, and consequently this legislation will continue and allow the government to do as they please.

Mr. BENNETT: It will expire whether the house is in session or not.

Mr. HOWARD: But after that you can do what you like.

Mr. BENNETT: No, because the legislation will have lapsed.

Mr. HOWARD: Let me say this and see whether it will be contradicted. The House of Commons is in session to-night, and the members are ready to deal with all questions and bills on their merits. But instead of that the government wants power, while we are sitting here, to handle the situation by orders in council as it may see fit. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that there is behind this legislation something which we do not see on the surface. If there is some legislation which the Prime Minister does not want to submit to the house we should be informed of it now, as I certainly am suspicious. I do not think we know the whole story when we are asked to grant this blank cheque legislation in its present form.

I am now going to offer a few words of criticism of the administration in the past few months, and I wish to say something first in connection with the national service loan. The national service loan was floated in Canada and the Canadian public handed over its money to the government to be used for the benefit of the country. But the loan was floated at five per cent, which I regard as too high an interest rate for Canadian financing in these times. I believe that the committee in charge of the national service loan could have had the money subscribed just as well at a lower rate of interest than five per cent. Let me point out as emphatically as I can where this has brought us. The city of Montreal, whose credit is as high as any city in Canada, had to float its loan at 97. The interest rate was six per cent but the return to the purchaser was more than that, and the cost to Montreal nearly 6¼ per cent. The province of Ontario, whose credit has been excellent not only throughout Canada but throughout the world, had to float its bond issue at 97. The interest rate was six per cent and the return to the purchaser was above that figure.

Labouring men are working for less than $2 per day and the price of farm products is at a very low level. The discrepancy between these high interest rates and wages paid is too great. This discrepancy is unnecessary and, to a large extent, has been created by the flotation of the national service loan at a high rate of interest. The bonds converted by the conversion loan were selling at above par, but after this loan came out at five per cent interest it was natural that the old bonds would decrease in price. To-day they are selling at 91, so those who were good enough to convert their bonds have suffered a monetary loss. I do not think that that is fair treatment.

Up to the present time the Quebec government has not floated a loan; it is still waiting and intends to wait until the other loans floated in Canada at high interest rates have been taken up and the banks are satisfied to carry the account of the provincial government. When this occurs a Quebec loan will be floated and I am sure it will be at a much lower rate of interest. If these rates continue it will mean that money for legitimate business, and that is what we need most in Canada, will be charged such a high premium that no business can succeed. Present rates of interest are too high especially when compared to the wages of labour.

Since speaking this afternoon I have obtained a pamphlet which shows the percentage of unemployment increase during the last twelve months in the different countries of the world. New Zealand is at the top of the list and Canada stands fifth. That country which was in such dire straits some time ago, England, has the honour of being second from the bottom—her increase in unemployment has been only 12 per cent while Canada's has been over 80 per cent.

The people of Canada are looking forward to the Imperial conference with a great deal of optimism. I hope that great things will come from that conference and that the government will be able to complete negotiations with the countries within the empire with beneficial results not only to Canada but to all the empire. I want to go on record as saying that if the present government makes a success of the Imperial conference it will be because it adopts the principles for which the Liberal party has been fighting since 1896. We hope to sell wheat, we hope to sell lumber and we hope to sell a lot of things to Great Britain, but I ask hon. members opposite to think over what we can purchase from England, because, after all, you cannot make a one-sided bargain.

I hold in my hand the report of the dominion director of unemployment relief. I think the relief in my constituency has been handled in an excellent manner. This has been done through the provincial government, as provided for by the legislation. and through the municipal councils. The relief in the city of Sherbrooke has been extremely well handled. On pages 13, 14 and 15 of this report will be found the allotments for the provinces of Quebec, giving the percentages paid by the municipalities, the province and the dominion. I knew that certain works had been authorized in the section of the country from which I come. I looked for these in this tabulation but I looked in vain. On turning to page 65 I found that money had been expended under the act directed by this government, without passing through the provincial government's hands. I know that has been provided for in the act, but I do not think it is a fair way of handling the money nor do I think it is the way it should be done.

I have many other matters which I should like to discuss, but I shall make but one more comment before I finish. This government has been in power two years but I cannot see that the province of Quebec has benefited in the least. I should like to mention one matter to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir). A farmer in Sherbrooke county, a man who has been in business for a considerable time, went out west last year to purchase fattening steers. He shipped them from the central west to Waterville, Quebec. He fed the steers throughout the winter and when he decided to export some of them he found to his suprise that although he had paid the freight rate from the west, he would have to pay the export rate from Waterville to Montreal, which rate happens to be higher than the domestic rate. This means that the people in my section of the country will be penalized if they want to purchase stock in the west to fatten in the east for export purposes. If the government is going to make it easier to agriculture in my section of the country it should look into just such matters as this. The Minister of Agriculture should make it easier to have more western cattle shipped into the east for fattening purposes, which would be of great benefit to this section of the country.

Hon. W. D. EULER (North Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, as one who desires to see the business of parliament conducted in as reasonably expeditious and efficient a manner as possible, I hesitate to prolong a debate which has gone already to a considerable length. However, my opposition to the principle involved in this resolution is so strong that I feel it becomes my duty to register a protest.

In my opinion, this question resolves itself into three primary features. First, it proposes to give authority to the cabinet to spend an unlimited sum of money without reference to parliament. Second, it proposes to give to the cabinet the power to make or change laws already made by parliament. Third, and the most extraordinary, it proposes to delegate these powers to the cabinet at a time when parliament itself is in session.

It is not denied by anyone that it is not only the inherent right but the responsibility of parliament to exercise control over expenditures. Parliament has an equally inherent right to make the laws of the country. It is also true, and I think my hon. friends opposite, members of the government, will admit, that such undoubtedly primary rights of parliament should never be surrendered by it except for the very strongest reasons and when any other course might result in disaster to the nation. If I were convinced that the method proposed by the government were the only one possible in order that they might properly cope with the difficulties with which they are contending, I should raise no opposition to the resolution. I listened with interest to the speeches made by the members of the government, in an attempt to give reasons why this was the only method which they could logically adopt. I listened perhaps with greater interest to the speech which the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) delivered some time ago. He usually argues in a very logical and convincing manner, and although he does not always convince me, I give him credit for a method of debate and argument which is impressive and convincing in most instances. But it seems to me on that occasion he laboured to prove himself wrong. He laboured to prove that the resolution was wrong in principle.

Mr. STEVENS: I was sorry for my hon. friend.

Mr. EULER: It was not necessary. Under that portion of the legislation which gives the government power to do by order in council anything that parliament would otherwise do, he attempted to justify the orders in council which were passed during the recess by saying in one instance—and I am speaking now from memory—"What else could we do while parliament was not in session?" Thereby he gave the reason why this resolution should not pass, namely, that parliament is in session and could itself deal with the questions which otherwise the government alone could deal with. During the next month and a half can anything happen with which parliament itself might not reasonably expect to be able to cope? If there is anything the cabinet can do better than parliament, that might be regarded as a reason for parliament handing over to them the power to do it. But here we are, ready at a moment's notice to pass any legislation which they might consider necessary.

I listened very attentively to the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett), his colleagues in the cabinet and other hon. members opposite for a convincing reason why we should so alter the regular procedure of parliament as to divest ourselves of all our powers in order to hand them over to some sixteen or seventeen gentlemen of the cabinet who, supermen as they may be, are after all not superior in their collective wisdom to all the members of the House of Commons. But I have heard nothing. We are told that the blank cheque that is being asked for is required for the purposes of farm relief and in connection with the relief of the unemployment generally. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) this afternoon, probably quite in good faith, made an effort to give to the country the impression that unless this resolution were passed, the farmers of western Canada would not receive relief by way of money for the purchase of seed grain and so forth. That impression, if it went abroad, would be incorrect, because, as has been reiterated time and again during the course of this debate, if the government asks the house for any reasonable sum for the relief of the unemployed or of the farmers in the west or elsewhere, this side of the house —and I think I may speak for all of it—is prepared immediately to grant it that sum of money. I think the people of Canada should understand that clearly. There may be a danger of the impression going abroad that the opposition in parliament is deliberately attempting to withhold from those who need the money that which is necessary for them to carry on. Such is not the fact. There is not on this side of the house a man who will not do all he can to relieve distress throughout the dominion, whether it be on the farm or in the towns and cities. But we are not ready to give away to sixteen or seventeen estimable gentlemen the powers of parliament, nor have we any right to give away the authority we received from the electors who sent us here.

I should like again to ask of the government: Why do you seek this power? Why is it necessary? Why depart from the regular procedure of parliament and take a step which is unprecedented in any democratic country? The Prime Minister has been called by some of my friends on this side an autocrat, a despot and a dictator. I am not going so to designate him. I believe he is sincere in that which he is attempting to do. Naturally those who in past years have not had what I might call the experience which makes it necessary to yield sometimes to the opinions of others, to compromise a bit now and again, and who, I was going to say, have more or less of a superiority complex—I am not saying that in a derogatory way—find it just a little difficult to act under restraint. They like freedom of action. Perhaps I might use a slang phrase and say that it cramps their style if they are not absolutely free to do what they please. But, after all, the Prime Minister and his colleagues of the cabinet should realize that so long as we have a semblance of democratic government this administration must submit itself to the very restrictions upon which democratic government is based. I am usually fairly temperate in my language, but it is an astonishing demand that for a period of two months—

Some hon. MEMBERS: One month.

Mr. EULER: —well, now a month and a half—just precisely during the period that parliament may be expected to be in session, they propose to take from the house the authority which properly belongs to it and to it alone. Last year the Prime Minister still had a reasonable amount of respect for parliament. When the legislation was passed at that time he provided that it should expire at the end of February, the assumption being that by the first of March parliament would be in session and could itself deal with those questions as they arose. But this year, rather than take similar action, he almost deliberately, one would think, fixes the period during which this new legislation shall be in force as that during which parliament may be expected to be in session.

Mr. MANION: Does my hon. friend prefer that he make it six months instead of two?

Mr. EULER: Not at all. I would object just as strongly to that. My hon. friend is usually fair-minded. I would ask him: Is it only a coincidence that this legislation is to expire on the first of May, which is about the time when most of us were hoping we might be relieved of our duties in the house? This seems to me almost like a challenge to the supremacy of parliament.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It is.

Mr. EULER: Perhaps it is an effort to establish a new principle in government; I do not know. We have had examples of it in other countries. Perhaps the Prime Minister is now attempting to establish, as my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce said was established last session, although I do not agree with him, that the creature is greater than its creator.

Mr. MANION: Would my hon. friend permit me a question? How does he claim that this is a challenge to the supremacy of parliament if the majority in parliament supports the government in its action?

Mr. EULER: In answer to that, if we followed out my hon. friend's interpretation of what parliament may mean, there would be no such thing as democracy. After all a minority has some rights.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The majority might decide to abolish parliament. Would the Minister of Railways say that that was right?

Mr. GORDON: The minority does not rule.

Mr. EULER: The Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon) has just raised a point upon which I was going to comment. The Prime Minister this afternoon, perhaps in an aside, intimated that a minority never rules. If my hon. friend wants to carry that to its logical conclusion he might just as well say to us on this side of the house that we might as well stay at home. But my conception, Mr. Speaker, although I am in the minority, although I am not a supporter of the government, is that I am sent here, as is every other member of this house whether on the government side or on this, to represent his constituents, and he may hope, although perhaps unreasonably so, that occasionally some suggestions of his may influence those who sit in the seats of the mighty on the other side.

Mr. STEVENS: But the minority should determine what should be done; that is your position.

Mr. EULER: Not at all, but I would remind my hon. friend of an old saying, that minorities are usually right, and I would commend that to his consideration. That is all I have to say, Mr. Speaker, with regard to what is sometimes called the constitutional aspect of this question. I am not an authority on constitutional government, but it does seem to me eminently reasonable that this parliament ought to keep its power within itself, especially at a time when it is in session. I could make some excuse for the government if they said that during the recess an emergency might arise in which they should have extraordinary powers. That is debatable, and the government might make out a good case, but for the life of me I cannot see why they should ask for this authority when parliament is here assembled ready to act at any time.

I will say this further. This discussion has been carried on at great length. I think sometimes the time of parliament is wasted, and we on this side are as much to blame as those on the other side, sometimes perhaps more. But I do not believe that this discussion has been a waste of time. I believe that the people of Canada, when they are thoroughly seized of the importance of this particular resolution and of the bill to be founded upon it, will justify us in what we are doing. I would say this further, and I am speaking for myself alone: I would invite the government, if it feels that we are blocking legislation deliberately and not with the interests of the country at heart, to apply the closure, and we are quite willing to abide by the decision with regard to it.

Mr. STEVENS: Is that all you want? That is what the opposition is for.

Mr. EULER: I am speaking for myself alone.

Mr. STEVENS: That let the cat out of the bag all right. All you want is closure.

Mr. EULER: If my hon. friend will allow me to proceed, I should like to say a few words with regard to unemployment itself.

A good deal has been said with regard to the promises made by the Prime Minister. I am not going to refer to them. They have not been kept. It was not possible to keep them, and the only comment I would make with regard to them is that intelligent and capable a man as the Prime Minister is, I can hardly conceive that he himself did not know when he made the promises that it was not possible to keep them. But what is more important is that a remedy should, if possible, be found for the condition in which this country finds itself. I am frank to say that I do not know what the remedy is. I have heard a good many suggestions made. Some think that our currency is at fault. Some think that the restoration of the balance of trade is a tremendous accomplishment and must result in great good. Others say that the war debts must be wiped out. Others think that we should have shorter hours of labour. Some even believe that we should introduce the era of socialism. But the only definite remedy which the government has advanced and applied has been an increase in the tariff to unheard-of heights. I think it is fairly well known that I am more or less a believer in reasonable tariffs, although I have never been what my hon. friends might call a high protectionist. I have never believed and do not believe now that a country can live to itself alone.

Mr. MANION: A tariff of 42 per cent on furniture was pretty good.

Mr. EULER: My hon. friend speaks of furniture. I am not personally interested in it, but the people of my city are very much interested in that industry. I would point out that despite the fact that the government have put the tariff on furniture up to 40 or even 45 per cent, together with the increased valuation which the Minister of National Revenue is empowered to fix, there are to-day more furniture mechanics walking the streets of Kitchener than ever before. In fact, some of the factories are closed down entirely.

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend put a 42 per cent tariff on furniture himself.

Mr. EULER: Yes. I was proceeding to say, Mr. Speaker, that I do not believe in that kind of a tariff which absolutely excludes the importation of goods from other countries. I could read, if I cared to, from a speech made not long ago by one of the greatest industrialists in Canada, but I have not the time. He condemns extremely high tariffs because he says they must necessarily lead to reprisals, and that has already taken place. Take my own city of Kitchener. I did not intend to refer to this, but my hon. friend has mentioned it. The market in New Zealand for rubber products has been entirely destroyed because of the action of this government in imposing a prohibitive duty against New Zealand butter. I have been hoping day after day that my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce would come along with his treaty, which perhaps would give some encouragement to the people of my town in particular, that they might have their trade with New Zealand restored. That is not an isolated case, but I have not time to go into the matter further at this time.

Mr. STEVENS: It was the government of which my hon. friend was a minister that abrogated the New Zealand treaty.

Mr. EULER: The government of which I was a minister did not put a tariff of eight cents a pound on butter. I am not going to deal any further with the tariff because a discussion of that would perhaps be more fitting when the budget is brought down.

If I were to give one cause for the depression which now exists, and I recognize as factors in the situation the causes which I have already recited, I would say that perhaps the system under which we are working—call it the capitalistic system if you will—our economic system has been outgrown by the necessities of the case. We have developed and grown industrially in such a way that the system under which we are now working needs either to be scrapped or very substantially modified. I presume that some of my friends will say that I am practically talking socialism. I am not, but I do believe this, and perhaps this is a pretty drastic statement, that either capitalism as we have it to-day will break down altogether or we must modify it in such a way that it will meet the needs of existing conditions. There is a lack of confidence in the country. In years gone by, during previous elections, we used to hear what we called blue ruin talk. It destroyed confidence. We have plenty of blue ruin talk just now, and perhaps there is plenty of justification for it. It is true that there is a lack of confidence. If I may, Mr. Speaker, I should like to mention one matter which I think is regrettable. Perhaps the circumstances to which I am about to refer were unavoidable, but they have led to a loss of confidence in Canadian public men and public institutions. I refer to scandals like the Beauharnois, and some others I might mention. I am not going into the Beauharnois transaction in detail. For my purpose it is sufficient to say that the Beauharnois matters are most regrettable. I am making no excuse for anybody or for any practices which may have developed, but state merely it does not look to me fitting that, in street parlance, the pot should be calling the kettle black. I am afraid the people of this country have come to the conclusion, unjustly, that all political parties—I am saying all political parties—are corrupt, through and through. The people have lost confidence in them. I say that loss of confidence is unjust because I believe the proportion of honesty and sense of duty is just as great among members of parliament as among any other classes. I suggest that when history is written the greatest crime of all recorded in connection with Beauharnois and some other enterprises will be the fact that these great natural resources which ought to have been preserved for the welfare of the people of Canada have passed over to private interests.

A minute ago I mentioned socialism. Remaining an individualist I am not particularly afraid of the word "socialism." For a good many years Canadians have in many ways been socialists, and perhaps to some extent communists. We live in communities; we have community schools; we have community enterprises of various kinds In some of our towns and cities, and especially throughout the province of Ontario, we find all our public utilities under public ownership. As I have said, however, I am still an individualist, but go so far as to say I believe the great public services of the country, upon which the prosperity, convenience and happiness of nearly all the people depend, should be under the control of the public.

As I said a moment ago, we must make changes, adaptations, qualifications or modifications in our present system. I was pleased to note that the resolution offered some time ago by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman) was accepted, and that arising therefrom we may expect an intelligent study of a tremendous world problem so that proper action may be the result. Such a study cannot be carried out in a day. As a matter of fact I am not convinced as to just what should be done. I do believe, however, that unless we modify our system and gradually bring about some changes, we stand in danger of changes coming through violent means and in ways we would not desire. I would say that in a land of plenty such as Canada there should be no want and no distress. If it be true—and no doubt it is—that there is plenty for everyone, yet some are suffering want and privation, it must follow that some people have more than they ought to have, while others have less than they need. I am led to repeat what my hon. friends in the corner of the house have said, and with which I absolutely agree, that there is not a proper distribution of wealth, and that workmen are not getting the full share to which as a result of their labours they are entitled.

From time to time we have heard that machinery has been the cause of unemployment. Some people have suggested that at least to some extent we should do away with the operation of machinery. I do not believe in that policy; on the contrary I believe in the full development of machinery so that it may be a real labour saving factor. Let labour receive fair advantage from the inventions of labour saving machinery. There are people who believe that men should work for the sake of working, because Satan finds mischief for idle hands to do. I do not believe that. If machinery can produce cheaply and plentifully it might very well be used to the advantage of labour, so that men would not have to work from early morning until late at night and would be afforded an opportunity to enjoy the pleasures and blessings of life.

There has been no basic remedy for conditions as we see them to-day. The only one which has been tested, and announced as a remedy, is the increase of tariffs. If we cannot find an immediate and complete remedy —and I know we cannot—then we must take steps to relieve those who are in want. Hon. members on the government side have lodged the criticism that we have made no practical suggestions. I am loath to make suggestions, and yet I would agree with those who have recommended some form of unemployment insurance. Just what the form should be I am not prepared to say. I advance the more or less practical suggestion, for the consideration of the government, that labour is entitled to just as much consideration as is capital. In the conduct of a well organized business, whether it be a bank or an industrial concern, a reserve fund out of profits is laid by against a time when business may not be so profitable. Hon. members will find that such concerns usually maintain the same rate of dividend in years not so prosperous as in years when business is good. In that way capital gets its return every year out of profits. If that is true why should not the same action be taken so far as labour is concerned?

A few days ago my attention was directed to an illustration which at this time I might very well describe. Let us suppose a machine cost $1,000. From year to year that machine is wearing out and we may suppose that its life would be only ten years. A prudent business man will set aside a reserve of ten per cent per year against the depreciation of that machine. At the end of ten years it would be paid for. Then, let us imagine that that machine is a black slave. From year to year the energies of that slave would deteriorate, and after a period of ten years he might not be able to labour for his master. If the master is wise he will set aside an amount for depreciation so that at the end of a ten year period the slave is paid for. Then the rather striking interrogation presents itself: If that can be done for a black slave, why should it not be done for a white working man? Is that not a fair question? I advance the suggestion that from the profits of industry made during prosperous years there should be set aside a reserve from surplus gains against a time when there may be unemployment. Such a fund might well be used for the relief of the unemployed. I fully expect the criticism that business cannot stand an extra charge when it is in competition with other countries. As a partial answer I submit that it would be no harder for business concerns to lay aside a certain amount in prosperous years than to contribute heavy taxes for the relief of unemployed.

I have spoken longer than I had intended, and it may be that I have not made any constructive suggestions. I rose with the intention of registering my protest against the provisions contained in the resolution before us. I realize that the questions the government has to solve are very difficult. Quite sincerely I want to assure them that so far as I am concerned—and I think I speak for all hon. members on this side of the house—I am perfectly willing to cooperate, where cooperation is possible. Though things are difficult it seems to me it is only a challenge to intelligent men to go forward. The race has progressed and surmounted difficulties in the past that seemed insurmountable, and it will continue to do so. So it seems to me that it should be possible, with men of intelligence and good will, gradually to develop our institutions so that in this land of plenty every man may be rid of this fear of the future, which is with all of us, and be assured that if he is willing to work, provision will be made for himself and his family.

Mr. WILLIAM DUFF (Antigonish-Guysborough): Mr. Speaker, I have remained quietly in my seat for the last fourteen days and listened to the hon. members of this house, on all sides, debate the resolution now before us. Unlike some of the hon. gentlemen who preceded me, I felt it was not my place to criticize any of the remarks which hon. gentlemen have made. We are here, sir, representing people in all parts of Canada;

we are sent here by our constituents to voice their opinions, and consequently as I sat in my place and listened to the various speeches, I felt that hon. members were presenting the views of their constituents and had a perfect right to do so without criticism from me. However, after the hon. member for Melfort, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) spoke this afternoon, I thought perhaps it might be well if I said something with regard to this resolution.

I have had the honour, sir, of sitting in this house for some seventeen sessions. I came here in the session of 1918, but even when I was a back bencher and a green youngster from the county of Lunenburg I never had the gall to get up in my place in parliament and refer to other members of this house as back benchers.

Mr. COWAN (Long Lake): Too bad.

Mr. DUFF: Yes, it is too bad that, after this government has done honour to the hon. member for Melfort by making him a cabinet minister and a privy councillor, he should come to parliament and insult members on both sides of the house who do not happen to sit in the seats of the mighty as members of the cabinet.

We have been here discussing this resolution for fourteen days, Mr. Speaker, and what is it we are discussing? The resolution suggests that it is expedient to introduce a bill to amend chapter 58 of the statutes of Canada, 1931, striking out the word "March" in section 8 and substituting the word "May" therefor. This resolution appeared on the order paper, if I remember correctly, about February 25, four or five days before the act expired. In this parliament during the session of 1931, we passed an act which is known as chapter 58 of the statutes of 1931. That act was brought in during the dying days of the session, and was assented to on August 3, giving certain powers to the government of this country in the interests of the people of Canada who were unemployed and the farmers who needed relief. When the act was introduced in parliament, on both sides of the house it was thought necessary to give the government certain extraordinary powers, and we of the opposition were very glad indeed to join with the government in passing that act.

We have been told by the Minister of Agriculture,—this back bench minister,—and we have been told by other speakers on the other side of the house that we are obstructing this legislation. It is amusing to me, sir, as a fairly old member of this parliament, to hear hon. members who have not been here so long as I have, hurl across the floor of this house the charge that we are obstructing this bill and obstructing the legislation of the government. I have not quite as short a memory as other people have. I sat on the government side of the house for nine years, from 1922 to 1930, and I never objected if during that period my hon. friends the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie), the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens), the Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion), or the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Stewart), thought it was their duty to get up and not obstruct but discuss the legislation before the house so far as they felt it should be discussed. Then why, sir, should we independent members of this parliament, who have been sent here by our constituents, have the accusation hurled across at us that we are obstructing this particular legislation? I say, sir, it is an insult to all the hon. members who are sent here by their constituents and told to go into all the phases of legislation and do their duty as they see it. I say it is an insult to the members on this side of the house and, as well, to any member who felt it necessary to get up and express his views on the floor of this free and independent parliament.

Now, what about this legislation? We passed this act in 1931 for a special purpose, and section 8 of the act stated that it was to expire on March 1, 1932. I think the opposition were very generous to the government in the first days of this session, Mr. Speaker. We met here on the fourth day of February, and certainly then the government knew it would be necessary to introduce some legislation with regard to the unemployment and farm relief problem. In order to show our good will towards the government, inside of a week we passed the speech from the throne, and left the door wide open for the government to introduce any legislation it saw fit. If the government had been seized of its duty to the people of this country who were told during the election of 1930 that this government would end unemployment, the first legislation they would have introduced, immediately the speech from the throne was passed, would have been a bill with regard to unemployment and farm relief. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice is a good speaker; during the campaign of 1930 he told the people of this country that if they would turn out the Grit government and put in the Tory government, the Tories would end unemployment in three days.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is not right.

Mr. DUFF: Does my hon. friend deny that?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes.

Mr. DUFF: Then I take his denial, but I want to say to you, Mr. Speaker, that it is very strange that no matter what we on this side of the house see in the newspapers of this country—and I have a great respect for newspaper correspondents—and no matter what we quote from the newspapers, every time we make such a quotation hon. members sitting on the treasury benches get up and say they have been misreported. While I must accept my hon. friend's denial, I am rather surprised to hear it. I did see a report of his speech in a newspaper of that time, in which he was reported to have said that this government would end unemployment in three days. Now he says he did not make that statement, and I must accept his denial.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I have explained it three or four times.

Mr. DUFF: My hon. friend's explanation has always been a denial, but his leader also made a similar statement. I remember listening, with a great deal of interest, to a speech made by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett), who was then the leader of the opposition, in the town of Antigonish in my constituency. The leader of the opposition of that day, the gentleman who is now Prime Minister of this country, in my hearing made the statement that he was going to end unemployment, and I thought perhaps he knew more about it than the then prime minister or the members of his cabinet surrounding him at that time. That was in June, 1930. Almost two years have passed since the Prime Minister made that statement, and while it is true that at that time in Nova Scotia and in other provinces there was some unemployment, what is the condition to-day? The condition to-day is at least four times worse than it was then. Yet the government of this country in the year of Our Lord one thousand nine hundred and thirty-two, after we have given them every opportunity to introduce their policy in regard to unemployment, have come down eight days after the expiration of the act which we passed in 1931 and have asked us to resurrect that dead statute, a statute which expired on March 1. I want to say to you, sir, that I am rather surprised that with your knowledge of parliamentary procedure you have allowed this debate to go on.

Mr. SPEAKER: Does the hon. member suggest that it should stop now?

Mr. DUFF: In answer to your question, sir, I would say this, I should have been very glad indeed if this debate had stopped fourteen days ago. If the ministers surrounding the Prime Minister—I will leave the Prime Minister out—from the Minister of Justice down to the back bencher who is occupying the position of Minister of Agriculture, had said to the right hon. gentleman, "Your action in this matter is all wrong. There is necessity in this country with respect to unemployment; there is need to vote money for the relief of unemployment, for seed for farm relief, and we ask you to drop this resolution, which is illegal and out of order,"—if they had said this to the Prime Minister and he had come to parliament and said, "We want $50,000,000 or $100,000,000 or $150,000,000", I should have been glad to vote for it so long as the government told us what it was for. In further answer to your question, sir, may I say this. If the Prime Minister will walk in now—or, if he feels embarrassed, he can get the Minister of Justice to do it—and will drop this resolution and bring in a supply bill, or if he will get the Minister of Finance to bring in a supply bill for whatever amount may be required, we on this side of the house will gladly join with him and pass that supply bill within the next half hour.

An attempt is being made to place upon the members sitting on this side of the house the responsibility for the delay in the passing of this legislation. But that will not go down with the people of this country. We fought the constitutional question in Canada in 1926 and we are going out now and will fight it again. We who are sent here to represent the constituencies in Canada, from the Pacific to the Atlantic, are going to see that constitutional practices are observed in this country. There is no excuse for this government to say to us now that we must resurrect a dead bill, a bill which cannot be resurrected under the rules of parliament. I have no hesitation in saying that in view of the fact that this bill expired on March 1 this resolution is out of order, and consequently this discussion is also out of order, and I feel that you, Mr. Speaker, should not allow the discussion to proceed.

Why did not the government introduce this legislation in a regular manner? In the dying days of the session of 1931 the government introduced a certain resolution, not a resolution to try to revive something dead and buried, because if we can resurrect this act of 1931 we can revive it ten years hence. It makes no difference whether the act is dead one day or ten years; if it is true, as we are told by hon. members on the other side of the house, that we can pass this legislation to revive this dead act, to give the government power whilst parliament is in session to do as they please, then in ten years' time this government, if it were in power, could come to parliament and ask to have the act revived. That, I say, is unconstitutional, and notwithstanding what has been said on the other side, we on this side of the house, standing on constitutional doctrine, will not allow such a resolution as this to go through except by closure.

What have we done? We allowed the government to put through the address in reply to the speech from the throne in a week, and for three weeks the government hesitated; it did nothing with regard to unemployment or farm relief. I do not think that this act is necessary, as I will show in a moment or two. After two years of experience the government, I submit, should have a definite policy with regard to unemployment, and I think you will agree with me, Mr. Speaker, that we can come to no other conclusion than that hon. gentlemen opposite have no definite policy in this matter. They are admitting that they have fallen down on the job. If, however, as I contend, they have no definite policy, and therefore wish to renew the act, then I say they should have come to parliament and introduced the same resolution they brought down a year ago. How did that resolution read? On July 24, 1931 the Prime Minister gave this notice of motion:

> Resolved, that it is expedient to bring in a measure to confer certain powers upon the governor in council in respect to employment and farm relief; and for the maintenance of peace, order and good government in all parts of Canada; and to authorize the governor in council to expend for the said purposes out of the consolidated revenue fund such sums as may from time to time be necessary.

I respectfully submit that if the government had been seized of their proper duty with respect to unemployment, and if they felt that the proper legislation on the question was to revive the act that was passed then, instead of introducing this resolution which we are now discussing for the purpose of resurrecting a dead statute, the Prime Minister or one of his ministers should have introduced the resolution which I have just read. I say again, Mr. Speaker, that this house has no right to discuss this present resolution, and that is proved in the fact that within two days of the placing upon the order paper of the resolution now under discussion there was notice of the introduction of a bill with regard to unemployment—the strangest procedure that has ever taken place in this house. The government, I presume, realized that the 1931 act was nearing its natural conclusion, and, in order to rush matters, in addition to putting upon the order paper this resolution we are now discussing they put on the order paper a bill to amend the same act—a most unusual procedure. You, Mr. Speaker, saw it yourself, because for two days, realizing the position the government had placed itself in, with your usual courtesy you did not proceed to read that bill, which should have been read every day. I say, sir, that there is no excuse for the position the house finds itself in at this moment. The government and no one else is to blame for the present impasse with regard to unemployment. It is quite possible that if the government had introduced a measure similar to the one passed in 1931 it would have been opposed on this side of the house, because there is no reason, when parliament is sitting, when the people's representatives are here to do the business of the country, why the government should introduce a bill asking for a blank cheque under which they can do whatever they deem necessary.

This government stands condemned before the people of the country so far as unemployment is concerned. Almost two years have passed since the Prime Minister and other members of his cabinet criticized the Liberal party for its attitude with regard to unemployment. Shortly after the elections a special session of parliament was called. We came down here in the month of September, 1930, and one of the first things we did was to vote a sum of $20,000,000 for the relief of unemployment. This was done with very little criticism of the government because we realized that it had not then had sufficient time to work out a policy in regard to this great question. We realized that the government had made certain promises and we wanted to give it enough rope to hang itself.

Another thing we did at that special session was to allow the government to raise the tariff. The government had two ideas in its mind, to vote money for unemployment and to raise the tariff to stop unemployment, and we agreed to both measures with very little criticism. I am sure that no hon. member within sound of my voice or no hon. member of the house can say that the opposition did anything at that time to keep the government from carrying out its policy—we gave it a free hand.

I was rather interested the other evening to hear the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. MacDonald), in his usual calm, deliberate and decent way, try to blame the Liberal party and the opposition because the city of Sydney had not received certain moneys for unemployment relief. The hon. member for Cape Breton South, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens), as well as the back bench minister with the portfolio of Agriculture, challenged us on this side by saying that everything had gone well with the expenditure of this money. If there is one thing of which the Liberal party should be proud with regard to the present situation of unemployment, it is the fact that there do not seem to be any Liberals out of work, at least as far as the expenditure of unemployment relief is concerned. I have no hesitation in saying that 95 per cent of the money spent by this government for unemployment has gone into the hands of Tories. That is why Liberals, according to what has transpired, are not out of work while Tories are. What happened to this $20,000,000 which we gave to the government to expend? It seems to me that when the money was to be spent for unemployment, everyone should have been treated alike. I can understand in the ordinary distribution of patronage and the construction of public works that to the victors should belong the spoils; I believe that when a party is in power its representatives and its friends should be treated right, but this money was voted for unemployment, not for Tories or Grits but for everyone.

What did hon. members opposite proceed to do with the $20,000,000 voted for unemployment in the year 1930? Some $700,000 was spent in the province of Nova Scotia in the fall of 1930. During the course of my business, and sometimes for pleasure, I drive over the roads of Nova Scotia as well as in some parts of New Brunswick. I am rather curious at times and during my drives I have noticed men employed on the roads. I would stop to talk to the different foremen, and I admit, in order to get the information I wanted, once in a while I would pretend to be something different from what I was; I even went as far as to say that once in a while I voted Tory. I found out that the men who had spent provincial money during the spring and summer of 1930 on the highways of Nova Scotia were the same men driving the same trucks and the same teams who were spending the unemployment money in the fall of 1930.

We come now to 1931. When the government brought down the estimates at that session the newspapers contained headlines stating how the government had economized by cutting down the expenditures of this country by some $27,000,000. In looking over the estimates I noticed that a considerable reduction had taken place in the votes for the Department of Public Works. Knowing the coast of Nova Scotia as well as I do, I realized that this was a penny wise but pound foolish policy; the government in its attempt to retrench and economize had put the blue pencil through the votes for certain works in the province which were absolutely necessary. We have now the report of the director of unemployment relief and we find that although the government tried to make the country believe that it was economizing in public works' expenditures, in fact it was spending part of the blank cheque voted in 1930 for unemployment for the construction of public works throughout Canada. I think the house will agree with my contention that these expenditures should have appeared in the main and supplementary estimates. Instead of doing that, and in order to cover up, the government took some of the unemployment relief money and spent it on public works. I notice that this department was given $1,593,000 to spend from this fund on the construction of about two hundred works throughout Canada. In Nova Scotia alone some $537,000 was expended, which amount should have appeared in the main and supplementary estimates. This parliament voted this money for a particular purpose, and this is how it was spent.

I noticed the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon) in his place a few moments ago when he was interrupting the hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Euler), but I am sorry he is not present now as I wanted to refer to one item which appears in this blue book in connection with his own constituency. I understand that charity begins at home, and the Minister of Labour evidently believes in that proverb. An item appears in this blue book covering a vote of $67,000 for a breakwater and harbour for seaplanes at Haileybury, to be carried out under the supervision of the Department of Public Works. During 1931 some $17,809.84 of this amount was spent. I do not object to this money being spent in Haileybury if it is necessary, but I do object to the way in which it was spent. If there are any in this parliament who should see that money is spent according to the constitution and law it is those gentlemen who think that because they are privy councillors they are more superior than the ordinary members of parliament. During the past few days we have heard a good deal about the position of privy councillors and I contend that the Minister of Labour who asked for and received from the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Stewart) an authorization for $67,000 should be the first one to not vote this money unless he could see it was properly expended.

How was this money expended? Some time ago I asked the Minister of Public Works for a return with regard to expenditures of money under this Unemployment and Farm Relief Act, and he was good enough to send me this return which I hold in my hand. My first question was:

> Amount of money expended under the supervision of the Public Works department and its officials, out of the money voted by parliament for unemployment purposes, and the act passed in 1931 dealing with unemployment relief.

The answer is $1,509,893.88. My next question was:

> Whether tenders called for the expenditure of said moneys when estimates for the work exceeded $5,000.

What does the house think the answer was to that very reasonable and fair question? It was:

> In some cases.

Is that an answer to give to a member of parliament? Is that an answer which the Minister of Public Works should give to me as one of the representatives of the people? It is a direct insult to me as a member of parliament for the Minister of Public Works to say in answer to my question: "In some cases."

Let us proceed a little further. I asked:

> If tenders were not called in all cases, the names of the works and the amounts expended.

I have in my hand a list of two pages of works for which no tenders were called. I need not refer to the act of parliament which states distinctly that wherever an expenditure of more than $5,000 is contemplated, tenders must be called for. It is true, of course, that there is a section in the act providing that under extraordinary circumstances there are certain exceptions. Let me read the first part of that, which is section 36 of chapter 166 of the revised statutes of Canada, respecting public works:

> Whenever any works are to be executed under the direction of any department of the government, the minister having charge of such department shall invite tenders by public advertisement for the execution of such works, except in cases,
>
> (a) of pressing emergency in which delay would be injurious to the public interest.

Surely with regard to the expenditure at Haileybury in the constituency of the Minister of Labour, there was no such pressing emergency that this money had to be expended without tenders first being called for.

[Mr. Duff.]

The Minister of Labour deliberately appoints one of his own friends as foreman to do the work, instead of the Minister of Public Works, in his position of privy councillor of this country, calling for tenders in the regular way and asking different people to submit tenders for the work so that the contract might be given to the lowest tenderer. The Minister of Labour asks the Minister of Public Works to allow work in the Minister of Labour's own constituency to be done without tender and without contract so that one of his own friends and supporters may be made foreman on the work and can appoint the men who he thinks should be employed to do it. Evidently the business must be stinking in the nostrils of even my good friend the Minister of Public Works, because I notice from the estimates of this year that this work at Haileybury is taken out of the unemployment relief fund and the Minister of Public Works has placed in his estimates an item of $45,000 to finish it. This shows conclusively that there is something rotten in the state of Denmark and something wrong in the constituency of the Minister of Labour with regard to the expenditure at Haileybury.

Let me go a little further. I said that under the Public Works Act for work comprising an expenditure of over $5,000, tenders should be called. There is another exception, paragraph (b) which reads:

> (b) In which from the nature of the work it can be more expeditiously and economically executed by the officers and servants of the department.

That does not apply to Haileybury, or to a number of other cases which I shall mention in a few moments. There is a third exception:

> (c) Where the estimated cost of the work is less than $5,000, and it appears to the minister, in view of the nature of the work, that it is not advisable to invite tenders.

That is the law, and I think I am right in saying that since confederation, since the time that law was placed on the statute books, every government and every minister, whether in the Public Works department or any other, has endeavoured to comply with it as far as it is humanly possible so to do. But we find in the act which we passed last year, chapter 58, regarding unemployment and farm relief, a provision respecting the maintenance of peace, order and good government in Canada, and I suppose the Minister of Public Works will tell us that if he had not given that $65,000 or $70,000 job to a supporter of the Minister of Labour, there might have been trouble in Haileybury, and peace, order and good government would have gone to the winds.

There are a number of other similar cases in Nova Scotia, and in the few minutes at my disposal I have not time to discuss the different items. I know, Mr. Speaker, you are a busy man, and you have a great deal to do, but I should like you to go over this appendix F on page 60 of the report of the Dominion Director of Unemployment Relief and note the different works in Nova Scotia and other provinces where the amounts exceeded $5,000 and where in not one case did the government call for tenders. At the outside, it should have taken only a fortnight for tenders to be called and for the lowest tenderer to get the contract, but the government, with the powers given to them under this act, deliberately gave the work to their own friends, and the men employed were, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, their own friends. We cannot, in a free parliament, extend the same power to my friends on the other side, and especially to the Minister of Public Works, because I notice in the estimates brought down a month ago there is very little money to be voted for Nova Scotia. It will be found that if we pass this resolution; if we allow this act, chapter 58, to be extended—and it cannot be extended because it is dead; this resolution is entirely out of order because we cannot resurrect the act—if parliament, I say, stultifies itself, passes this resolution and resurrects this act, under its provisions our friends of the cabinet will again do exactly what they did in 1931.

In the election campaign of 1930 they told us that they were going to do away with unemployment in Canada, and I almost believed them. For instance, in my constituency, I and others who came before me endeavoured to have a railway built in the counties of Pictou and Guysborough. My good friend the present member for Pictou (Mr. Cantley), even before he became a member of parliament, was good enough to come to Ottawa several times at his own expense in order to appear before the House of Commons committee and the Senate committee and advocate that this railroad be built. A government of which I am a supporter was in power at the time, and I am sure he will not object if I take a little more credit for getting the bill through than I give him, although I am willing to give him all the credit to which he is entitled, because he did help. In 1929 a bill was passed in this parliament to build what was known as the Sunnybrae-Guysborough railway. Some $3,500,000 was voted for the purpose, and a contract was given for the building of the road. In the fall of that year construction commenced. The McLean Construction Company, who were the lowest tenderers and secured the contract, put their equipment on the ground, and all that fall, the next winter and the following summer they were at work building the road. In spite of the fact that practically all the right of way was completed, that the rails were all bought, that the bridges were all bought and completed, that the ties had been purchased and were practically on the ground, within one month of this government coming into power in 1930 it deliberately cancelled the contract with the McLean Construction Company and stopped the work on the Guysborough railway, although there was considerable unemployment in Nova Scotia at that time. In the committee on railways and shipping I asked the officials of the Canadian National Railways a question, and I found out from them that, as I said a moment ago, all the necessary supplies, the rails, the bridges and ties, had been purchased, and that all it was necessary to do to complete the railway was to lay the ties and ballast the roads. In other words, outside of the building of the station houses, the $700,000 which they estimated would complete the road would be practically all spent in labour, and yet my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals, Sir Henry Thornton and this government threw some two thousand men out of employment whom only one month before they had asked the people to vote for them to stop unemployment in this country. The work on the road was stopped and the men were thrown out on the streets.

Mr. MANION: I know that my hon. friend does not wish to give any wrong information. The government had nothing whatever to do with cancelling any contract with the railway because the contract was with the Canadian National Railways. The government does not make the contract, and it did not break the contract.

Mr. DUFF: I am very sorry indeed that my good friend the Minister of Railways made that statement, because if what he said is true we do not need a Minister of Railways in this house.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. EUSEBE ROBERGE (Mégantic) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the present resolution, its purpose being to hand over a blank cheque to the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett). I have followed closely the debate on this motion and I am somewhat amazed at seeing Ministers of the Crown and members opposite contend that if the funds to relieve unemployment and agriculture are not yet voted, the Liberals are to blame. The people of Canada are better informed than these hon. gentlemen imagine. The former are fully aware that the Bennett government is not, since Confederation, the only one that has been at the helm of affairs in Ottawa, and at all times, regardless whether these governments were conservative, liberal or unionist, when the Prime Minister required an appropriation, he had it inscribed in the yearly estimates or voted by special legislation; on each occasion, however, the amount was specified. Let the government ask for a stated sum in the supplementary estimates, and it can rest assured that, we liberals, will immediately grant their request, because we have always been prone to assist the workman and farmer. But to hand over a blank signature to the Prime Minister, never shall I consent.

Both on behalf of the people of Megantic, whom I represent in the house, and myself, I strongly protest against the authority which the government wishes to assume in order to amend our constitution without appealing to the people.

The lack of competency, sir, which the government has displayed within the last twenty months in the administration of the affairs of this country, and which has resulted in a complete failure, gives us greater cause to protest. When this government stood before the electorate of Canada, seeking a mandate to govern the country, there was no mention of altering the constitution. This government, however, were elected through pledges which they knew beforehand they would not keep or never intended to fulfil.

The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion) endeavoured to prove the other day, in his speech, that the Prime Minister had fulfilled his pledges made during the last election. If the hon. Minister obtained for his county some favours to relieve the condition of the farmer and unemployed, since 1930, he has been shown partiality.

May I, sir, commit to Hansard a few of these pledges made by the Prime Minister and repeated in my county by the Conservative candidate and his followers. Mr. Bennett stated at Winnipeg, on June 8, 1930:

> Listen you agriculturists from the west and all other parts of Canada, you have been taught to mock at tariffs and applaud free trade. Tell me, when did free trade fight for you? You say tariffs are only for manufacturers. I will make them fight for you as well. I will use them to blast a way into the markets that have been closed to you.

[Mr. Roberge.]

Then at Vancouver, June 17, 1930, he stated:

> If Mr. King thinks that I will not so build up our agricultural and industrial life that its strength will drive our products into the markets of the world, then he is wrong. For that I will do. If he thinks I will not establish new markets for those products, strive with all my heart to retain them, drive our products with all my power into new markets, into old markets, into reluctant markets, he is wrong. For that I will do.

What benefit did the farming class receive from all these pledges? Since this government has been in power, the price of farm products has decreased from 40 to 50 per cent, and the farmers are experiencing a crisis unknown under the Liberal regime.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear!

Mr. ROBERGE (Translation): As this question was discussed at length by my hon. friend, the member for Nicolet (Mr. Dubois), I shall not deal with it. I shall refer to the pledges made to the workmen and commit to Hansard a few of them. I shall afterward quote some figures to prove that far from decreasing the number of unemployed in my county, the government were responsible for its increase and that they even refused to help these unemployed when the money was available. As my county comprises industrial and mining centres, I shall begin by referring to some of the promises made, during the last election, in connection with the assistance to workmen and by which he was to end unemployment.

The following is a statement made by the Prime Minister at Calgary, on June 12, 1930:

> This is a new country and there is no excuse for unemployment in Canada if a government does its duty.

According to this statement this government is far from having done its duty. On June 17, 1930, he is quoted as saying:

> Governments can regulate policies of the country so that facilities may be provided to give employment and not make it necessary for thousands to leave home and go elsewhere to get jobs to make a living.

At Sarnia, on July 16, 1930:

> Someone, he said, is responsible for unemployment; not individuals but governments. Governments by their majorities in parliament are responsible for enacting all legislation.

The same day, he stated at Moncton:

> Mr. King promises consideration of the problem of unemployment. I promise to end unemployment. Which plan do you like best?

I now wish, sir, to explain how he settled the unemployment question in the county of Megantic. At Plessisville, a town of 3,000 inhabitants, on January 15, 1932, there were 230 more unemployed than on July 30, 1930.

At Black Lake, a mining centre with a population of 4,000, there were 500 to 600 people employed in July, 1930. The Conservatives had promised that if they were elected every body would have work. What happened at Black Lake? Four months after the Conservative party had assumed power, all the mines were closed, and nobody has worked in those mines since. If the government had had at heart the relief of unemployment, it would have improved the situation at Black Lake, however the contrary happened.

Under the Liberal régime I had obtained that an amount of $26,000 be included in the 1930 estimates, so as to build a post office. When the Conservatives assumed power, the plans and specifications of this building had been approved by the engineer, it was to be erected at Black Lake. Tenders had been asked and received; an order in council had been passed by this government on August 5, 1930, authorizing the construction of this post office. It was, sir, an excellent opportunity to help the unemployed. What happened? Rather than put up this post office because the money had been voted under the Liberal regime, at the request of the representative of the county, the government preferred not to carry out the construction of this post office and in that way deprived the people of work. That is the kind of help the workmen of Black Lake obtained from this government, notwithstanding all the pledges given during the 1930 election.

At Thetford mines, another mining centre with a population of 12,000, there are, to-day, 500 to 600 more people unemployed than in July, 1930. So that in Megantic county alone, this government, far from having ended unemployment as promised, has increased it by 1,200 to 1,400 men more than it was under the Liberal administration. That is how the government has settled the unemployment question.

As regards the farming class, as I stated at the outset, the price of their products has decreased 40 to 50 per cent. One thing, however, has increased in Megantic, namely taxation. The people may be deceived once but not twice. I think this is an excellent opportunity to repeat the words which the right hon. Prime Minister stated at North Vancouver, on June 18, 1930:

> After I am Prime Minister on July 28, I will see that my promises are carried out or the government will go out of power trying to do so.

Well, sir, I can assure you that the people throughout the country are waiting for that opportunity to put him out of power.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, if I understand correctly the effect of the motion made by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) on behalf of the government this afternoon, it is to reopen a debate which had virtually drawn to a close at the time the minister spoke. The motion of the minister was that the question be now put. According to the rules of the house, the motion itself is among the number of those which are debatable, and, therefore, I conclude that all hon. members who have already spoken on the resolution before the house may speak again.

In order that there may be no mistake, I should like to draw the attention of hon. members to standing order No. 38 under the heading "Debatable Motions":

> 38 (1) The following motions are debatable:
> Every motion,—
> (a) standing on the order of proceedings for the day (except government notices of motion for the house to go into committee at a later date);
> (b) for the concurrence in a report of a standing special committee;
> (c) for the previous question;

It is on the motion for the previous question that I am now speaking. As I have just said, the effect of the motion of the Minister of Agriculture has been to enable every hon. member on this side of the house, or on the opposite side, who so desires, to speak again for a period of forty minutes or his allotted time on this particular subject. I have found difficulty in understanding the reason the administration must have had for bringing forward this particular motion, and especially at this stage of the debate. As I looked through the evening papers I thought I discovered it. I may be wrong, but sometimes one gets a clue in that way. The evening papers seem to regard the motion as an application by the government of the closure rule. Evidently they are conveying to the country, no doubt from an inspired source, the information that in order to bring this debate to a close the administration has introduced closure. If I am correct in my interpretation of the rules, the effect of the motion, which the government must have brought in with full knowledge of its significance, is exactly the reverse. It has the effect of reopening the debate, and reopening it extensively.

Standing order No. 39 deals with closure. In order that there may be no mistake, and that the suggestion may not be made that the motion introduced by the government is one of closure, I shall read the first portion of this standing order. It is as follows:

Immediately before the order of the day for resuming an adjourned debate is called, or if the house be in committee of the whole, or of supply, or of ways and means, any minister of the crown who, standing in his place, shall have given notice at a previous sitting of his intention so to do, may move that the debate shall not be further adjourned, or that the further consideration of any resolution or resolutions, clause or clauses, section or sections, preamble or preambles, title or titles, shall be the first business of the committee, and shall not further be postponed; and in either case such question shall be decided without debate or amendment; and if the same shall be resolved in the affirmative, no member shall thereafter speak more than once, or longer than twenty minutes in any such adjourned debate.

I need not read the rest of it; I believe that is sufficient. The point I wish to make clear, Mr. Speaker, to members of this house, and through the house to the country, is that the government has not introduced any motion of closure. What has been done by the motion introduced this afternoon by the Minister of Agriculture is to extend to all members of this house the privilege of speaking a second time, at a time when the debate, in regard to the first stage at least, had practically drawn to a close. As I say, what may have been the motive of the government, I leave to my hon. friends themselves to explain; and, as for the country, it may judge for itself.

This evening, I wish to deal briefly with one or two of the remarks of the Minister of Agriculture this afternoon made at the time of introducing his motion. In the first place, the minister said—I think I understood him correctly—that the reason the government had been late in bringing down this measure, which is now on the order paper and which we have been discussing for a couple of weeks, was that the former Minister of Labour, Senator Robertson, had been ill, and that, as a consequence of Senator Robertson's illness, the government had not found it possible to bring in the report of the Department of Labour with regard to the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act as early as had been hoped. It is rather extraordinary, to say the least, that we have had to wait until to-day to hear a single word of the kind expressed in the house. We have not been told before that the reason there was any delay was due to Senator Robertson's illness. This is the first intimation we have had of anything of the kind. But may I ask, Mr. Speaker, in all seriousness, whether anyone for a moment assumes that such is the reason why the government has delayed until this time to bring in a measure which has to do with unemployment relief—the most important of all the matters which will have to be taken up this session?

The speech from the throne, which outlined the important business of parliament, did not contain a single word with reference to unemployment and farm relief. Surely that was not because of Senator Robertson's illness. The right hon. Prime Minister made an address of considerable length in the course of that debate. He made no reference to any policy of the government with respect to unemployment or farm relief; he made no statement with regard to any intention to bring in, at any time this session, any measure in regard to unemployment relief. Surely that was not due to Senator Robertson's illness. A little later the Minister of Labour himself (Mr. Gordon), the successor to Senator Robertson, made a speech, but it contained no reference to any policy which the government had with respect to unemployment relief. He did not say they did not have a policy because Senator Robertson had been ill; he simply made no reference to any policy.

Speakers on this side directed the attention of the house to the fact that it was a rather extraordinary thing that we had heard no statement of policy from hon. gentlemen opposite with regard to unemployment relief or with regard to the intentions of the government in that connection. I drew the attention of the Prime Minister to the fact that, unemployment relief being the most important matter which this house would be called upon to consider, it was extraordinary that he had found it necessary to appoint a special committee of parliament to consider a personal matter in which he was interested, before we had any committee to discuss the question of unemployment relief or before we were told what measure of relief would be given the farmers of Saskatchewan and the other people who were suffering in the west. From this side of the house it was made clear that we were filled with amazement that the government had brought down no legislation and had indicated no policy with regard to unemployment relief in reference to Saskatchewan or any other part of Canada.

Then what happened? The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Heenan), the former Minister of Labour, brought in an amendment on going into supply, complaining that the government had not carried out its promises with respect to unemployment relief. That amendment concluded with the statement that the government had announced no policy which was at all adequate to deal with this particular and all-important subject. Parliament opened on Thursday, February 4, and on Tuesday, February 23, the former Minister of Labour (Mr. Heenan) introduced his amendment on the motion to go into supply. Was it due to Senator Robertson's illness that we had no mention of any policy, and no statement of the intentions of the government, from February 4 to February 23? Was that the reason? If it was not, why does the Minister of Agriculture with reference to the present resolution put forward a reason of that kind in the house at this stage of the debate? But what happened when the ex-Minister of Labour drew the attention of the house and the country to the fact that there was no statement of policy from the government, and that there was nothing anywhere on the order paper or anywhere else dealing with the subject of unemployment relief? After all this had been drawn to the attention of the government in the amendment proposed by the former Minister of Labour, on the day following, Wednesday, February 24, for the first time, there appeared in the votes and proceedings of parliament, under the name of the Prime Minister, the following notice:

Resolved, that it is expedient to introduce a bill to amend chapter 58 of the statutes of Canada, 1931, striking out the word "March" in section 8, and substituting the word "May" therefor.

In other words, until the government was confronted with a motion of want of confidence from this side of the house on the score that they had no policy whatever to deal with the question of unemployment, we had not so much as a sign of a resolution of any character dealing with the subject. Then we had hurriedly placed upon the order paper by the ministry a motion to extend until May 1 the present measure, or the measure that was to expire on March 1. That was all.

But how did the government proceed thereafter? Did the government the next day anxiously come to the house and say "It is getting near the end of the month and we must take up at once this resolution which appears on the order paper"? Remember, Mr. Speaker, the government has, subject to the rules of the house, the arranging of the business of the house from day to day, and the government designates the night before what particular business is to be taken up the following day. Now I want to direct your attention to the proceedings of the next few days, because I was watching, in the interests of Saskatchewan and other parts of the country, what the government were going to do in this matter of unemployment relief.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think I shall be able to show by the records of the house, from which I am about to quote, just how carefully I was watching. On Friday, February 26, the notice appeared on the orders of the day for the first time; under government notices of motion the following resolution appeared:

Resolved, that it is expedient to introduce a bill to amend chapter 58 of the statutes of Canada, 1931, striking out the word "March" in section 8, and substituting the word "May" therefor.

On the same day the Prime Minister gave notice of his intention to proceed with the resolution at the next sitting. On Monday, February 29, nothing was done; that was private members' day, but I ask you now, Mr. Speaker, and those who were jeering a moment ago—including the Prime Minister himself—to look at the records of the debates in the house, as they appear in Hansard, and see what was done. I find the following at the close of the evening of Monday, February 29:

Mr. Mackenzie King: Will the Prime Minister kindly indicate the order in which government orders will be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. Bennett: Second readings first, and then supply, Departments of Agriculture and National Defence.

No word appears there with respect to this resolution concerning unemployment relief; no mention was made that the next day would be the first of March, and that chapter 58 would then expire. The Prime Minister said:

Second readings first, and then supply, Departments of Agriculture and National Defence.

Then I said:

Mr. Mackenzie King: That means the motion of the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Heenan)?

Mr. Bennett: The motion to which an amendment was moved by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River.

Mr. Mackenzie King: Is it intended to take up item 10, with respect to amending chapter 58 of the statutes of Canada, 1931?

That is, this resolution.

Mr. Bennett: I intended to take that up if we reached it, but the Senate does not meet until Wednesday. There is no point in taking it up before Tuesday.

Mr. Mackenzie King: That would be after supply, anyway?

Mr. Bennett: Yes.

Mr. Mackenzie King: Thank you.

I think I made it clear that evening that I was watching closely to see when the government would proceed with this measure.

The time was getting very short. If the government had intended to deal in time with unemployment under the resolution which was on the order paper, if they were genuine and bona fide in their intention, they would have proceeded immediately the opportunity was provided. What about the next day? Tuesday, March 1, was a government day, and there was no rule of the house against the measure being gone on with on that day. Moreover, the Prime Minister knew that the act would expire on March 1. If he wanted to avail himself of a technicality in order to save the situation, he could at least have made a statement the night before of his intention to deal with the matter the next day, in view of the fact that the act was expiring on the 1st of March.

But on March 1, what happened? At the very outset, the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown) moved the adjournment of the house to discuss seed and farm relief as matters of urgent public importance. You, Mr. Speaker, remember what happened to my hon. friend's motion. He was denied that right. He was told that he could not discuss that matter—that it was not a matter of urgent public importance at that time. Yet the act was expiring that very day, and no relief could be given thereafter until another bill went through. The hon. member rose to express that point of view but he was told by the Speaker, in the best of good faith and in accordance with what His Honour believed to be correct procedure in the house, that he could not go on. Then the debate was continued on the amendment of the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River, and in the course of that debate, I, myself, spoke, pointing out that on that day chapter 58 would expire. I directed the attention of parliament very pointedy to that fact.

Now, if there was great anxiety on the part of the government to deal with the question of unemployment relief under chapter 58, surely on the next day they would have made some effort to take it up without further delay. Private members' day, I hear someone say—the Prime Minister, I think. Well, at the time of adjournment on Wednesday, I called the attention of the government to the fact that the alternative for Thursday, March 3, lay between order No. 10 on the order paper, which was chapter 58, and the motion with respect to civil service salary deductions, which stood as order No. 9. I drew this to the attention of the minister who was leading the government at the time, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens). As Hansard will show, the hon. gentleman was speaking for the government:

Mr. Stevens: We can proceed with No. 9.

Order No. 9, for Thursday, another government day, was the question of civil service salary deductions—not this resolution which is now pressed as all-important; not at all, but civil service salary deductions. This was extraordinary if the ministry had been intent on proceeding with chapter 58 having regard to the situation in Saskatchewan. On Thursday the question of civil service salary deductions was taken up and there was no discussion of, nor was there any mention of chapter 58. At the time of adjournment I inquired what the business for the next day would be:

Adjournment—Business of the House

Mr. Mackenzie King: What business will be taken up to-morrow?

What was the Prime Minister's reply?

Mr. Bennett: We will proceed with this debate,—

That is to say, the debate on civil service salaries.

—after which we will consider item No. 9 on the order paper.

Now, item No. 9 on the order paper of March 3 was the Heenan amendment on going into supply and not chapter 58. Did that look as though the Prime Minister was much concerned about when chapter 58 would be taken up, though we were getting further away from the date of expiry of the act? The act had expired several days before. What happened on Friday? Nothing was done with regard to chapter 58 on that day; instead, the day was taken up with the discussion of civil service salary deductions. At the adjournment I again inquired with respect to the next day's business:

Adjournment—Business of the House

Mr. Guthrie moved the adjournment of the house.

Mr. Mackenzie King: I suppose on Monday we shall have private members' resolutions?

Mr. Guthrie: I think they will take the whole day.

Mr. Mackenzie King: In the event of the private members' resolutions not taking the entire day, will my hon. friend indicate the measures that will be dealt with?

Mr. Guthrie: In that event we will take up second reading of the bill to amend the Judges' Act, third reading of the bill to amend the Criminal Code, the bill in respect to railways—I think it is ready, and then we will go into supply.

That was for the following Tuesday. Again, nothing was said in regard to chapter 58.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That was for Monday.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Monday, yes—I beg your pardon. That was for Monday, if we got through with private members' resolutions. That is right. But in regard to Tuesday, what happened? On Monday inquiry was again made with respect to the matter. On the order for motions on Monday afternoon, March 7, I directed the attention of the Prime Minister to the urgency of the question of unemployment and farm relief. An entire week had gone by; I had given the government, at the close of each day, an opportunity in so many ways to disclose when chapter 58, which was the measure we were concerned about, would be proceeded with. A whole week having gone by without anything having been done, in order that the government might not take a course of procedure which would be certain to precipitate a lengthy debate, and so that they might know fully in advance that we were prepared to vote any supply they wanted for relief, but that we should necessarily have to oppose, on principle, any effort that might be made to put through a bill similar to the one passed at the previous session, requiring us to give a blank cheque to the government, or requiring us to delegate to the governor in council power to legislate on peace, order and good government while parliament was in session, I drew attention to the fact that the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act had lapsed, and offered on behalf of the opposition to facilitate the passing of an interim supply bill at that time if the government would bring in a measure. Then for the first time the Prime Minister indicated that it was the intention of the government the next day to take up the resolution with respect to chapter 58.

In the meantime the government had had on the order paper notice of a bill to amend chapter 58. That notice remained on the order paper at least two or three days. You will know, Mr. Speaker, better than anyone else, the reason you did not call that bill on two occasions; I think you were asked by the administration not to call it. At any rate, it stood on the order paper for some days. We on this side were asking ourselves, "What is the bill to amend chapter 58?" In all innocence, we came to the conclusion that the government, realizing that parliament would never wish to pass a bill that would give to the government power to legislate on peace, order and good government while parliament was in session, intended to wipe out that obnoxious clause and thereby seek to strengthen its position with regard to the supplying of relief under chapter 58, which gave the governor in council a free hand to deal with the question. But to our amazement notice of this bill was subsequently dropped. What its provisions were, I do not know. Why it was not called on two or three occasions when it appeared on the order paper, though other bills were called, the Speaker and the Prime Minister I presume alone can declare. But there are the facts; the records speak for themselves.

What was the position on Monday? In order that there might be no mistake about our position and point of view as well as intention, I made the following statement, as appears at page 921 of Hansard of Monday, March 7—and this is March 22—speaking before any debate at all had commenced in relation to the question of unemployment relief:

> Mr. Speaker, as we do not reach the orders of the day until late in the day, if at all to-day, there is a matter which I would like to mention to the Prime Minister on the order for motions which is of importance at the moment, and which may not have occurred to him.
>
> There appears to be an obvious necessity for the voting of money for unemployment relief, and particularly for supplying seed grain and other forms of farm relief to those who are in need in the west. What I wish to say to my right hon. friend is that if he will bring into the house a supply bill asking for the amount that he may regard as necessary and wish to have for this month, so far as the opposition is concerned we will be prepared to do what we can to facilitate its passage rapidly through the house. We recognize that it is a week since the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act lapsed and that my right hon. friend will certainly be coming to parliament for some moneys, for this purpose. If a supply bill is brought in at any time to provide what may be necessary for the balance of this present fiscal year, so far as the opposition is concerned we shall be prepared to agree to any suspension of the rules which will allow the bill to go through this house with as little in the way of criticism or delay as possible.

What was the Prime Minister's reply?

> Right Hon. R. B. Bennett (Prime Minister): I assure the right hon. gentleman that I appreciate his observations, but the government has not overlooked the fact that it is necessary to provide money for seed and feed. But it is not its direct responsibility; that rests with the provinces.

That was the statement made that day. The Prime Minister said further:

> I thank the right hon. gentleman for his offer of assistance so far as the dealing with this emergent situation is concerned.

I then said:

> I would like to make clear to my right hon. friend that one reason I mention the matter immediately is that if it is proceeded with by means of a supply bill I believe there will be no question as to the rapidity with which the bill would pass, but if my right hon. friend has in mind proceeding with a bill such as the one passed at last session, which was intended to meet a situation while parliament was not in session, I may say that we on this side would have to take very strong exception to proceeding in that way.

As I said, that was before any discussion had taken place on this resolution, and it was at a time when the government knew that the previous act had expired. They knew what our position was with respect to seeking to amend a statute which was dead. They knew of our willingness to give them whatever they needed in the way of supply for relief purposes. Notwithstanding that, the Prime Minister, for reasons best known to himself, proceeded to deal with this particular resolution.

That we are here, Mr. Speaker, with the Easter recess about to begin, still discussing this question, is not the fault of the opposition. It is the fault of the government in having had no policy to announce in the speech from the throne, in having had no policy announced as to the intentions towards Saskatchewan or any part of the country when the Prime Minister spoke on the address, and in having had no statement made by the Minister of Labour on the subject of unemployment relief. For more than an entire week, after notice had been given of the intention to proceed with the resolution, parliament devoted itself to other questions, notwithstanding the fact that, night after night, during the interval, the ministry was asked what business would be taken up the following day. After it had announced its intention the ministry had the freest opportunity to proceed with this measure for more than a week before the time it was proceeded with.

Under these circumstances, I do not think there can be any question as to who is responsible for the delay that has occurred up to the present time. Before I conclude my remarks this evening, I intend to indicate pretty clearly who will be responsible for any further delay. I do not think there will be much doubt as to where the opposition stands when I restate our position; indeed, there never has been. We shall soon discover what motive is underlying the tactics of the administration in this matter.

This afternoon the Minister of Agriculture gave what he termed the reason for the action of the opposition. What did he say? I confess that, if I had not heard his speech last year, I would have been amazed. However, after listening to that speech, I shall never be surprised at anything from him. In his maiden speech, the minister told the house that he was such an innocent in the matter of politics that he did not really know the difference between a Liberal and a Conservative, that he was not interested one way or another in party politics, and he then went on to make one of the most partisan, bitterest and nastiest speeches that has ever been made by any public man in this country. What did the minister say this afternoon? He said the reason why this opposition was taking place at the present time was that the leader of the opposition was filled with revenge against Saskatchewan for having returned to this parliament himself and a few other Tories. We are discussing an unemployment relief measure which, as the Prime Minister would say, deals with the lives of men and women, with hungry and starving people, and the Minister of Agriculture talks about playing politics! I wonder what significance is to be attached to the statement that the leader of the opposition is filled with revenge against Saskatchewan? If that is not playing politics, the most diabolical politics which can be conceived of, I should like to know what is. What revenge would I have against Saskatchewan? Was not Saskatchewan the province which gave such splendid support to the Liberal party as to ensure its continuance in office from 1925 to 1930? Am I unmindful of the fact that I stand to-night in this house honoured with the representation of a constituency in the province of Saskatchewan, and that, taking by-elections into account, Prince Albert in Saskatchewan has on four different occasions returned me to this parliament? I speak as a representative of the province of Saskatchewan, and I intend to speak more particularly from that point of view during the concluding part of my remarks.

I challenge the Minister of Agriculture to point in the course of my entire public career to one single act of mine which has been inspired by the spirit of revenge. Only those who are themselves capable of that kind of thing would think of imputing that sort of action to others. As for the remarks of the minister, I am prepared to treat them as being beneath contempt. When the people of Saskatchewan read what the minister said in this house this afternoon in regard to this measure, when they learn what he has had to offer as a reason for not giving them relief and giving them the seed and feed that they need, their appreciation of the minister, if it ever amounted to anything, will cease to be of much account.

Why has the opposition taken the course it has with regard to the resolution before us? We took this course for one reason, and one reason only. It was a very simple reason but a very powerful one—it was the right course to take, that is all. It was not from any political motive, it was not from any desire—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Hon. gentlemen opposite cannot understand that. They are so accustomed to every move being actuated by some political partisan motive that they are unable to appreciate a contrary course though it be the obvious truth. What are the rules of this house governing supply? One has only to look at the rules to discover how the administration is supposed to go about getting supply for any purpose. Did we say: "If you bring in supply for unemployment relief we will oppose it"? Did we say: "If you make your measure broad we will oppose it; if you make your measure narrow we will oppose it; if you make it this way or that way we will oppose it"? Had we done that, there would have been some ground for saying that we had offered opposition. But we did the very reverse; we left it to hon. gentlemen opposite to make whatever motion they liked, so long as it was in accordance with the rules and procedure of this parliament, the rules and procedure which govern not only the parliament of Canada, but the parliament of every self-governing country under the British flag. We have endeavoured, as representatives of the people, to secure to them their rights and liberties, and preserve so far as we are able to, the control of taxation, a very important matter in times like this. We said: It is our duty, if we have any duty at all, to see that the government acts in accordance with the rules and procedure which are the known practices, traditions and customs of the House of Commons and of parliament. That is all we sought, that is all we ever asked. But we have at this time emphasized the reason for so doing.

We have pointed out that whatever the government may have done under pressure—pressure upon themselves, pressure which they have exerted upon us, pressure for any reason that you like, leaving aside altogether the motive—whatever they may have done for those reasons and whatever, under pressure, may have gone through the house in the form of a statute giving them power, while parliament was not in session, to deal, without reference to parliament, with matters which should be the subject of legislation by parliament only, we could not undertake to give them those powers while parliament itself was in session. That has been the point, and that is the whole point to-day. Whatever, for any reason, may have been necessary to deal with an emergency when parliament was not in session, whatever may have been necessary to deal with an unknown condition when parliament might not be in session, cannot possibly apply when the king's representative in this country is surrounded, not only by his ministers but by the members of parliament whom he has summoned from all parts of Canada to deal with great questions of this kind. That is the position.

How can it be contended that it is not making a mockery of parliament for His Majesty's representative to cause to assemble members from all parts of the country to deal with a great question, only to have them told that they are to be deprived of their rights of dealing with such matters; that they must delegate those rights to the ministry of the day, in order to permit the ministry to enact by order in council whatever they wish? The Prime Minister says: in consideration of all this, we, the ministry, will reward you, the representatives of the people, by presenting you on the day following with copies of the orders in council which we have passed. I ask: Could a greater indignity to a parliament be conceived of than an action of the kind?

It is for reasons like this and for that alone, we have taken the position we have. We shall continue, and we must continue to take it, unless we are going to abandon for all time in this country, the authority, the supremacy, the rights of parliament and all that is associated therewith. Why have a parliament at all, if the executive alone is to deal in secret council with all such questions, pass laws, fix fines, establish penalties, award contracts running into a million dollars at a time, without any reference to the people's representatives who are assembled in this house? Does the government think, that, because there are men and women anxious for food, clothing and work, they are going to be so blind politically they will not recognize that there is a responsibility upon parliament to proceed in the right way to do the right thing? Nobody is asking the ministry to do the wrong thing. We all agree that relief should be given. We all agree that, whatever amount the ministry says they need, we will give them, if only they ask for it in the right way.

What is left then? One of two motives alone can account for the attitude of the ministry. One is that the ministry must intend to do something which will not bear the light of day. There must be something they are determined to do which would not be done by the members of parliament here assembled. I cannot conceive that such is their motive. What then is the only other motive? The only other motive can be that the Prime Minister of the day has said: I am going to take a certain course, and I shall not change from it whether it be right or wrong; I am going to be a dictator; I am going to do as I please with parliament, and this might as well be conceded first as last. That is the only reason parliament is being forced to proceed in this way. I say, Mr. Speaker, that the people of Canada are not prepared, as has been said time and again here, to trust any government with powers of dictatorship as long as we have a constitutional parliament assembled in this country. Least of all will they be prepared to trust my right hon. friend with any such powers. He has been in office now long enough, not only for the House of Commons, but for the country to know what his tendencies, his methods, his principles are in the matter of government. And I say, if for no other reason than, as shown here the other evening in the most conclusive language, because of the stand which he himself has taken in dealing with the House of Commons in many matters, this house will never surrender to him rights which have been won for the people through their representatives.

May I point out something else? I said that we were taking the course we were because it was the right course. As is well known, if you start on a right course and follow it, you never have to change. It is equally true, if you start on a wrong course and keep following it, you do not know where it is going to lead. It is certainly not going to lead to anything better; it is bound to lead steadily to something worse. At the outset, in regard to this measure, we pointed out to the ministry that, by taking a wrong course they would get into deeper and deeper water all the time. We wish to avoid that.

I should like to point out why the ministry, even now, should correct its course as speedily as possible. Assuming the motion brought forward this afternoon had not been moved, and this debate had terminated this evening, as would probably have been the case, with a decision that we would go into committee on the resolution. What would then have been the next step? We would have gone into committee on the resolution. What is the first question that would have come up? Assume that is the stage we had now reached. The chairman of committees would read the resolution, and, as leader of the opposition, I would be obliged to ask whether it was within the competence of parliament to entertain a resolution of the kind. To what does the resolution relate? It relates to a dead act. It reads:

> That it is expedient to introduce a bill to amend chapter 58 of the statutes of Canada, 1931, striking out the word "March" in section 8, and substituting the word "May" therefor.

Chapter 58 of the statutes of 1931 expired on March 1. This is March 22, so that the statute has been a dead letter for three weeks. It is a dead statute. Is parliament to be subjected to the further indignity of having to consider something that is dead, to amend something that has no life, something that no longer exists? The Prime Minister the other day, when we were discussing the salaries of civil servants, gave parliament the assurance that this cut in the salaries would end on March 31 of next year; that the act would expire at that time. What did he say about the expiry, so that all would be doubly sure, the civil servants after March 31, 1933, need have no fear about that act ever troubling them again? I have under my hand my right hon. friend's words as they appear on page 564 of Hansard of February 26. He said:

> As the resolution itself indicates, the bill will expire on the 31st day of March, 1933. It has no vigour or life beyond that date.

He says that act will expire on March 31, 1933. The act it is proposed to amend says in its context that it will expire on March 1 of this year. If the Prime Minister's words are to apply in one case as in the other—and I do not think anyone can dispute that they are equally applicable—then this statute which expired on March 1 has had no vigour or life beyond that date. Are we, the people's representatives here assembled, to be asked to consider this dead thing, and to spend our time, in the name of affording unemployment relief, in seeing what we can do about amending something that doesn't exist?

Assume that it is ruled, dead or not, we must consider it. What is the next step? The Prime Minister comes forward with a motion to amend this wretched resolution that relates to this dead object. What happens then? Immediately the committee is confronted with the rules on which the chairman of committees will have to base a decision. He is faced with this: It is an imperative rule that every amendment must be relevant to the question on which it is proposed. This amendment is relevant to what? to a dead thing. Is the chairman of committees to place on record, for the guidance of subsequent parliaments, a decision that, simply because one ministry has started on a wrong course, hereafter any government may amend a statute that has ceased to exist, and that it shall be the serious business of parliament to consider matters of the kind? I say that it is that kind of thing which we wanted to spare the ministry, which we wanted to spare the Commons, which we wanted to spare the country. I say that, if this resolution passes, that will have to be the first question which will have to be raised, and I submit in all seriousness again, Mr. Speaker, that, in the interests of this parliament, and of the parliamentary institutions and rules and practices of this house which we value so highly, great care should be taken not to run the risk of having decisions given for any immediate purpose which may be of embarrassment to all parliaments of Canada for all time to come.

But more than that. Suppose the chairman of the committee rules that it is in order to amend this dead statute, and the amendment would be that we revive this dead thing, that parliament resurrect statute 58 and give it life. Parliament can do that, not by amending a statute that does not exist, but by introducing a new bill. The ministry can bring in a bill to-morrow saying, "By this measure the provisions of what was chapter 58 1931 are hereby re-enacted." That in all probability would be the equivalent of the terms of the new statute. That is a perfectly proper way to proceed. If they were determined to deal with the matter by chapter 58, that is the way the ministry should have proceeded, instead of proceeding by way of a resolution that seeks to amend something that has long ceased to exist and has gone into oblivion.

But supposing it has been ruled that the amendment is in order, and assume that after discussing it the amendment carries and the amended resolution carries. What question is raised then? Immediately you are face to face with other rules of this house, rules, again, which have been enacted by the wisdom of preceding parliaments to safeguard the public treasury, because all parliaments in past generations have felt that the most sacred of all their duties was the safeguarding of the public treasury. It is for that reason that the measures by which a ministry draws money from the public treasury are surrounded with more in the way of caution and safeguards than any other class of measures that can be conceived of and which may be brought into a deliberative assembly.

What are the rules of the house in regard to measures which purport to draw money from the treasury? They must, first of all, receive the approval of His Excellency the Governor General. We sometimes smile when we hear hon. gentlemen opposite repeat in parrotlike fashion that His Excellency the Governor General has been apprised of the subject matter of the resolution and commends it to the favourable consideration of the house. A great many think that is a mere form of words, but I hope I may assume that my right hon. friend has taken the same course as I did when Prime Minister, which was to obtain from His Excellency the Governor General a standing permission to make that announcement to the house in his name upon one consideration, that I, as Prime Minister, would take care to see that, if there was the slightest doubt about any resolution not being entirely in accordance with the general rules and practices of the house, such a resolution would be presented to him in advance so that His Excellency might have the opportunity to pass upon it. That is the only course a constitutional Prime Minister can take. The Crown, Mr. Speaker, still has some responsibility. It might not seem so in view of some of the things that have already happened in this session of parliament. It might seem that the Crown does not count, for anything, except to be swept to one side, but the Crown does count for something even in the affairs of this parliament of Canada; and the rule applies here.

Now may I draw your attention to this, Mr. Speaker? The first question that must be asked of the ministry when they have chapter 58 in resurrected form before the committee for consideration is this: Has the consent of His Excellency the Governor General been obtained? We all know that His Excellency's consent has not yet been obtained. I put that question now to the ministry: Have you obtained the consent of His Excellency the Governor General to whatever bill is going to be brought in here later, following this resolution? You know you have not. It is not sufficient to say that His Excellency the Governor General gave his consent to the resolution now on the order paper in the month of February when statute 58 was still alive. Certainly His Excellency may be assumed to have given consent to the introduction of a resolution which related to chapter 58 while chapter 58 was still in existence, because His Excellency would then be consenting to a course with respect to something that was vital, something that had a future. Had the proper course been followed, and that resolution been gone on with before the statute expired, certainly His Excellency's consent to the introduction of the resolution would have continued with respect to any bill based upon it.

But I submit that all that can be said with respect to His Excellency's consent is that it is applicable, unless expressly provided otherwise, to moneys that may be paid out after the bill relating thereto has received royal assent; it does not, except with expressed provision, apply to retroactive payments. A resurrected measure of the kind being thought of before becoming law would have to pass the Commons and the Senate and receive the assent of His Excellency. Until His Excellency's assent—not consent—has been given, expenditure of moneys under that act could not be made. When assent is given, it is for expenditures of money to be made under its provisions from the time it is passed; it is not an assent to retroactive payments unless consent to a resolution expressly mentioning retroactive payments has been given before the bill itself was introduced. The ministry cannot so construe it. They cannot put the crown in the embarrassing position of being a party to voting the moneys of the people for the purpose of meeting payments that have become due before the measure itself under which they are to be made is law. There must be some special authority in advance so to do. So I say to the ministry, even now, before you begin to bring the Crown into this position of embarrassment—the Prime Minister laughs. That appears to be the Prime Minister's chief role in this parliament, to laugh, to laugh.

Mr. BENNETT: He remembers 1926.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: And the more we deal with seed relief for the farmers, and poor relief, and the like, the more the Prime Minister laughs. That is his chief contribution.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Shame.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is a shame, I admit, with hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. BENNETT: The valley of the shadow.

Mr. ERNST: The Prime Minister was thinking of 1926.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I say again, Mr. Speaker, that the people of this country, and particularly the people of Saskatchewan, have a right to know the situation before they are again hoaxed in a matter of this kind by the present administration.

If a bill is to be passed, and something will have to be passed to make good payments which have been made or may have become due since the first of March and up to now for unemployment and farm relief. There is existing at present no legal authority for any such payments; everything done in that matter since the first of March, if anything has been done, is illegal. The only way whatever has been done can be legalized is by this parliament at some stage legalizing it—in that event, a bill will have to be brought in sufficiently broad to legalize what has already been done illegally, and a bill to that effect will have to be preceded by a resolution which will have received de novo the consent of His Excellency the Governor General. The process will have to be started all over again from the very beginning before payments can be made in respect to all obligations undertaken in regard to farm and unemployment relief between March 1 up to the present time. So I say that if we have been contending, as we have, for the right course to be pursued, it has been, amongst other things, to avoid all these pitfalls, to preserve the practices and the traditions of parliament, and to see that matters were expedited in the right way.

Let me say this: The ministry itself is not in ignorance of the correct way to go about obtaining money from parliament. During the course of this very debate, our proceedings were halted one day to receive a message from His Excellency the Governor General signed by his own hand, and there was presented to this House of Commons by the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) further supplementary estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1932, totalling $1,059,474.33, and there was another supplementary estimate for 1931-1932 in regard to the Canadian National Steamships. Why was there no supplementary estimate, I ask, for seed and feed relief for Saskatchewan? Was that not needed just as much as any of the things mentioned in the particular estimates which were brought down the other day? Let me mention a few of the items in those estimates. Here is an item for External Affairs, Paris; something for Geneva; here is something for the Montreal harbour commission; here is something with regard to governor general's warrants; here is something for public printing and stationery; something for contingencies, expenses of committees and clerical assistance in the House of Commons; here is something for the Yukon territory. Is this question of unemployment and farm relief not as important as any of the matters mentioned in these supplementary estimates? Why, then, did not the ministry include in these supplementary estimates an estimate for the relief of distress in Saskatchewan? They know as well as we do that an estimate of that kind might have been included in a single line on this sheet. All hon. members on this side of the house would have agreed to pass it, and it would have been thoroughly in order and regular. Therefore, hon. gentlemen opposite cannot say we have been blocking them in any matter of mere procedure. If they had taken the same procedure in regard to the relief of the unemployed and the relief of distress in Saskatchewan, as they have adopted in connection with matters of very secondary importance, they would have long ago brought in a supply bill and already had the moneys required.

Now may I add these further remarks: I do not think the followers of the right hon. gentleman opposite have even yet a correct idea of what the ministry has in mind, or what its intentions may be. Last week, during the course of this debate, we listened to the remarks of the hon. member for South Cape Breton (Mr. MacDonald). What did he say? He said that the government is simply asking parliament for an extension of two months to carry out commitments already made. Throughout the country, the press has been repeating that statement; it has been saying that all the government is asking is to make good the commitments they have already made. I made it very clear that if such were the case we would end our oppostion at once. When the hon. member for Cape Breton was speaking I asked him, as recorded at page 1206 of Hansard, the following question:

Does he say that the bill to be introduced goes only to the length of asking that the government shall have authority to complete the commitments already made?

In reply to that the hon. member said:

That is the intention and justification for this resolution.

Then I made the further statement:

May I tell him that if the Prime Minister is prepared to introduce a bill based on the hon. member's interpretation given a moment ago, that is, a bill containing power only to meet the commitments that already have been made, we on this side will stop our opposition at once.

That was an assurance from this side of the house that, if all the government was seeking was to make good in the next two months commitments already made, we would stop our opposition at once. I say the mere fact that an hon. member of this house, a supporter of the administration, made the statement to which I have referred, and made it seriously, shows that hon. gentlemen opposite do not understand even yet the intentions of the government.

May I outline the present position. So that there may be no mistake, let me repeat what I said before the debate commenced, and what hon. members on this side of the house have said over and over again. At the same time let it be remembered, we are on the eve of an Easter recess. Tomorrow evening at six o'clock parliament will adjourn until the following Tuesday. I desire to make it perfectly clear that, between now and that time, if the government wishes to proceed with regard to unemployment relief as they have proceeded with these other matters which they brought in in the supplementary estimates, we will do all in our power to see that the rules of this house are suspended to permit a supply bill being put through tomorrow afternoon and the necessary supply for relief voted before adjournment at six o'clock. I want the people of Saskatchewan to know tomorrow night, beyond all possibility of mistake, if they have to go through this Easter period without relief, who is responsible for the fact. They will know where the responsibility lies if the course I have suggested is not taken. I am making my speech this evening in order that the ministry, which has the forenoon to arrange such matters, may present an estimate and draft a supply bill in the same form as they have always done on other occasions. If they will do that, we will do all in our power to expedite its passage through all its stages.

We will go a step farther. There is on the order paper at the moment a motion to go into committee of supply, and an amendment thereto standing in the name of Mr. Heenan. Until that motion is disposed of, the house cannot go into committee of supply. If the government will bring down a supply bill, stating their requirements for purposes of relief, we will be prepared to vote on Mr. Heenan's amendment at once, and get rid of it so that it will be out of the way, in order that the house may immediately go into committee to consider the necessary supply for unemployed and farm relief. We would not press the debate on the Heenan amendment any further; we are perfectly willing to get it out of the way, provided that is in order to have the decks perfectly clear to proceed in supply with unemployment relief. There can be no mistake about our position in this respect.

At this point I wish to direct my remarks more particularly in relation to the province of Saskatchewan. Within the last day or two communications from Premier Anderson have been quoted in the press, and to-day a reference to them was made in the house by an hon. member from this side. In addition to the telegrams Premier Anderson sent out, he made a statement last night which at this time I should like to read. It is as follows:

During the past year Saskatchewan suffered what has been termed by people generally throughout the Dominion as a "national disaster." This came as a result of three successive crop failures, the failure of 1931 affecting directly one-third of Saskatchewan's population. In order to meet this situation, a provincial relief commission was set up and it has been serving the needs of 50,000 families throughout Saskatchewan.

These people will have to be looked after until another crop is reaped or at least until one is assured.

That is the statement by the Premier of Saskatchewan. He says those people will have to be looked after until another crop is reaped, or at least until one is assured. Any legislation based upon the measure the government are now asking us to consider cannot extend beyond the first of May. But the Premier of Saskatchewan states that that province must have assistance until another crop is assured, in other words, until, say, the 1st of September. Supposing we were to consent to the passage of the proposed measure, would it meet the situation in Saskatchewan? Certainly not, according to the statement of the premier of that province. He says the farmers of Saskatchewan will have to have sufficient supply voted to help them until they are assured of their crop.

Speaking to the people of Saskatchewan, as a representative of the province of Saskatchewan, as well as leader of my party, may I say what the Liberal party in Canada is prepared to do for that province. If to-morrow, Wednesday, before this house adjourns, the Prime Minister, or any member of his government, brings in a bill stating how much money the government requires in the way of supply, to care for the unemployed and for the relief of distress in Saskatchewan—in fact, for relief in all parts of Canada—not merely until the first of May, but until the first of September, we will, so far as it lies within our power so to do, put that bill through the house before Easter adjournment.

We will go even a step farther, so that there may be no mistake about our position. The Imperial conference is to be held next summer; quite certainly the government will want time to consider matters in connection with it. Once the Easter recess is over, there will be great anxiety to deal with fiscal problems and to get away from those which have to do with unemployment and relief. If to-morrow, the government will say how much they need by way of unemployment and farm relief funds, not merely until the first of May, not merely until the first of September, but until March 31, 1933, and on their responsibility as a ministry will state the amount, I say that all hon. members in this Liberal opposition will do their utmost to see that the necessary supply required is voted to-morrow. In order that the people of this country, whether they be men or women out of work in our cities, or men and women in circumstances of distress in rural areas, whether they be grown-ups or children, whoever they are, may have the relief they require without delay, I now repeat that if this government will undertake to state its policy to-morrow, bring in a supply bill indicating what they need, place the amount at whatever figure they wish to put it, we, as members of this House of Commons belonging to the Liberal party, will do all in our power to secure the passage of the measure through this house before we adjourn for the Easter recess.

I should like to know if it is possible to go farther than that—but I am prepared to go farther. Rather than leave these people who are suffering in the different parts of this country—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Speaker, I hope Hansard will record the jeers of hon. members opposite the moment the word "suffering" is mentioned. The moment that word is mentioned hon. members opposite begin to jeer. I hope the records of Hansard will show where they stand in this matter.

I wish to make our position clear; we recognize that the government is in difficulty, and that they have got into the difficulty they have through their own fault. We recognize that it is hard for a man with the temperament of the Prime Minister to retreat from any position, however wrong, once it is taken, but we on this side have no desire to occasion him further embarrassment than he is prepared to bring on himself. Our position is related solely to the rights of the people through their representatives in parliament, and to the dignity and powers of parliament. If a way can be found to uphold the latter and at the same time relieve the Prime Minister and his colleagues of further embarrassment we are prepared to join in taking it.

May I say this: In this parliament we are all agreed that relief is necessary; there is no question of that. There is no doubt a certain amount of money is needed. The only point of difference is this: Hon. gentlemen opposite say, "We insist on proceeding under chapter 58, if we cannot so proceed, we will not proceed at all." We say, "Proceed under the regular rules of the house and we will give you whatever you want." But they insist, "Chapter 58 is something under which we have been acting for a good many months. We have become used to it, and we have made commitments under it." This afternoon the Minister of Agriculture told us that the government were anxious to continue under chapter 58 because—I have forgotten his exact words, but they were to the effect that it was less cumbersome, or something of the kind, than any other way. I took down his words, but I have forgotten them for the moment. Here they are; he said that it would mean less in the way of disruption with the provinces. I think the Prime Minister said it was a more expeditious way of dealing with things. Of course it is; the way of the Prussian autocrat is the most expeditious method on earth, but it is not the best method to be adopted.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am speaking of methods; I am not referring to anyone in particular. I say the methods of the Prussian autocrat, or the Russian autocrat, or any other autocrat, are not the correct methods of procedure. We do not want these military methods brought into this House of Commons and put into practice by any political autocrat. I hope my hon. friend understands the meaning of what I have said. Autocracy is not the way to proceed where there is a democratic form of government.

The Minister of Agriculture says it would mean less disturbance if we could deal with this matter by an act under which the government have been acting already. The Prime Minister said it will be more expeditious and efficient. The Minister of Trade and Commerce said the trouble with dealing with this matter in the ordinary way in which the government does things is that the Auditor General checks up the accounts, whereas by this method the government can get away from the Auditor General. We have seen how the Governor General has been side tracked, and how parliament has been side tracked. Now the suggestion is that the we should side track the Auditor General. With his colleagues side tracked, who is left? We have no one left but the Prime Minister.

At any rate, these are the reasons brought forward as to why this measure should be passed. If this measure is so dear to the hearts of hon. gentlemen opposite, if that is the whole excuse and reason for it being brought in, I say take out these few words which constitute the blank cheque provision and substitute any specific amount you wish; make it any amount you deem to be necessary, $10,000,000, $50,000,000, $100,000,000, or as many millions as you like to move, and introduce the bill in that form, with but one other change: take out the words that give to the ministry itself, while this parliament is in session, the power to legislate by order in council in connection with peace, order and good government: make those two changes in chapter 58, bring in a resolution to revive the provisions of chapter 58 changed only in these two particulars, and I do not hesitate to say that hon. gentlemen on this side will help to put even that measure through this house. I venture that statement at the moment on my own responsibility, but I will say to the Prime Minister now, in the presence of all hon. members of this house, that I am prepared to discuss that question with the members of my party at to-morrow morning's caucus, and I will be able to tell him by twelve o'clock whether we will be prepared to help put the measure through in that form if it is brought in.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Tell him now.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I hear the members behind me say "Tell him now." I will tell him. I say to my right hon. friend that if he is so very fond of this particular measure, if he has entered into commitments under it, if he is so used to the language of it or if the provinces are so used to the language of it, that there is nothing—

Mr. RYCKMAN: The hon. gentleman said it was dead, so how can it be dealt with?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am glad to see my hon. friend is not dead; I really am glad to see him looking so well, but may I say this to him—

Mr. RYCKMAN: You said it was dead and could not be dealt with.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: But I am trying to show my hon. friend how it can be resurrected; this is something he may be glad to know. Now may I say to the Prime Minister and the members of the government that, if they are determined to have this measure, because of its phraseology or for any other reason, if they will take out the blank cheque provision and the power to legislate by order in council with respect to peace, order and good government inserting whatever amount they deem necessary to meet all obligations; if they will to-morrow introduce a resolution to the effect that they intend to introduce such a bill, a measure similar to chapter 58, one which will revive the provisions of that chapter, one which will give it life—my hon. friend the Minister of National Revenue will be interested in this—a bill which will serve to revive the provisions of chapter 58 with only these two changes, that when that is done, if the government will move to suspend all further business of the house until the measure is put through this house, we of the official opposition will undertake to support such a measure, and to see if it cannot be passed through this house before the Easter recess.

Let me conclude, Mr. Speaker, with this word: It is a very serious business for the people of this country who are in distress to be kept waiting for a period of weeks—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: —because of the autocratic attitude of my hon. friends opposite, when, by following the ordinary rules of this parliament, and the known practices, customs and traditions of British parliaments everywhere, relief might readily be given before the Easter vacation takes place. I wish to repeat that having this in mind my purpose in speaking to-night was that the ministry may have to-morrow morning, and before this house meets in the afternoon, to prepare whatever measure may be necessary along the lines indicated; and in order that they may come here and present their measure to parliament, with the pledge that on our part we will do all we can to expedite its successful passage through this house. I do this in order that at this Easter season there may no longer be doubt in the mind of any man, woman or child in this country as to the measure of unemployment relief and of relief of the distressed wherever they are to be found which the government is prepared to provide.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Wednesday, March 23, 1932

The house met at three o'clock.

PRIVATE BILL

FIRST READING

Bill No 35, respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.—Mr. Matthews.

UNEMPLOYMENT AND FARM RELIEF

CONTINUANCE ACT, 1932—NOTICE OF MOTION FOR CLOSURE

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I beg to give notice to the house that at the next sitting I will move that the debate on item number 13 of the orders of the day, that Mr. Speaker leave the chair, and the previous question moved thereupon shall not be further adjourned.

Yesterday the former Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Euler) said:

> This discussion has been carried on at great length. I think sometimes the time of parliament is wasted, and we on this side are as much to blame as those on the other side, sometimes perhaps more. But I do not believe that this discussion has been a waste of time. I believe that the people of Canada, when they are thoroughly seized of the importance of this particular resolution and of the bill to be founded upon it, will justify us in what we are doing. I would say this further, and I am speaking for myself alone: I would invite the government, if it feels that we are blocking legislation deliberately and not with the interests of the country at heart, to apply the closure, and we are quite willing to abide by the decision with regard to it.

On Friday last I considered the desirability, in view of the fact that the Easter adjournment was imminent, of giving the notice which I have just read, but I thought that possibly the situation would clarify and it would not be necessary. In view of what has transpired it now becomes essential in the interests of those who are most concerned that such should be done. In view of the fact that the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King)—

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order, is this question debatable?

Mr. BENNETT: I desire to say—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker is not on his feet.

Mr. SPEAKER: What is the point of order?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I asked Your Honour's ruling as to whether or not notice of a motion to be moved at the next sitting is debatable.

Mr. SPEAKER: The leader of the government and the leader of the opposition are given a certain latitude in matters of this kind. I do not think the remarks have been over-extended on this occasion.

Mr. BENNETT: I was going to say when I was interrupted that inasmuch as the right hon. the leader of the opposition had expressed so great a desire to expedite the passing of legislation which would assist those who are greatly in need, and inasmuch as we propose to proceed with closure on Tuesday next when the house meets, it might be that in his great anxiety he will expedite the application this afternoon of the motion for closure and permit the passing of the legislation before we adjourn.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

MONTREAL HARBOUR COMMISSION—CLAIMS FOR COLD STORAGE SHORTAGES

Mr. TAYLOR:

What claims were paid by the Montreal harbour commission for shortage in the cold storage during the period from January, 1922, to June, 1926, and from October, 1926, to August, 1930?

Mr. DURANLEAU:

The following information has been furnished by the Montreal harbour commissioners:

The following claims were paid by the harbour commissioners for shortages at the cold storage warehouse during the period from January, 1922, to June, 1926, and from October, 1926, to August, 1930:

1924, January—Watt & Scott, Ltd., 2 bags shelled peanuts, short in R.R. car, but overlooked when car contents were checked into warehouse.. ..	$40 47
1925, February—Kelly-Springfield Tire Co., inner tubes stolen by outside thief; man chased, but not caught..	19 98
1925, March—Gunn Langlois & Company, 7 crates eggs; 2 boxes cheese; 8 boxes butter; delivered on order subsequently lost..	283 12
1925, October—Hudon, Hebert & Company, 2 cases apricots, short in company's lot when last delivery ordered..	10 50
1926—Nil.
1927—Nil.
1928—M. Pesner & Son, 31 lambs wrongly delivered..	286 44
1929, October—Montreal Fruit Exchange, 100 boxes peaches at $1.40 wrongly delivered by warehouse man J. White from Montreal Fruit Exchange lot, to fill an order for 100 boxes peaches belonging to Fruit Importers, Ltd...	140 00
1930, March—Jean Ruffo, 5 crates California celery at $12, delivered to M. Brown in error lot belonging to Jean Ruffo..	60 00
Total..	$ 840 51

ST. GODFROID, QUE., POSTMASTER

Mr. MARCIL:

1. Has the postmaster of St. Godfroid, county of Bonaventure, Quebec, been dismissed and for what reasons?
2. Has a temporary postmaster been appointed? If so, what is his name and on whose recommendation was the appointment made?
3. Has a permanent appointment been made in that office?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. Yes—Commissioners' report found postmaster guilty of active political partisanship.
2. Yes—Edmond Chapados. Recommended by Hon. Dr. E. Paquet.
3. Yes.

LITTLE CASCAPEDIA, QUE., POSTMASTER

Mr. MARCIL:

1. Has the postmaster of Little Cascapedia, county of Bonaventure, Quebec, been dismissed and for what reasons?
2. Has a temporary postmaster been appointed? If so, what is his name and on whose recommendation was the appointment made?
3. Has a permanent appointment been made in that office?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. Yes—Commissioners' report found postmaster guilty of active political partisanship.
2. Yes—Pierre Poirier. Recommended by Hon. Dr. E. Paquet.
3. Yes.

PORT DANIEL WEST, QUE.—POSTMASTER.

Mr. MARCIL:

1. Has the postmaster of Port Daniel West, county of Bonaventure, Quebec, been dismissed and for what reasons?
2. Has a temporary postmaster been appointed, if so, what is his name and on whose recommendation was the appointment made?
3. Has a permanent appointment been made in that office?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. No.
2 and 3. See answer to No. 1.

RESTIGOUCHE, QUE.—POSTMASTER

Mr. MARCIL:

1. Has the postmaster of Restigouche, county of Bonaventure, Quebec, been dismissed and for what reasons?
2. Has a temporary postmaster been appointed, if so, what is his name and on whose recommendation was the appointment made?
3. Has a permanent appointment been made in that office?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. Yes. Commissioners' report found postmaster guilty of active political partisanship.
2. Yes. Frank C. Roy. Recommended by Hon. Dr. E. Paquet.
3. No.

CARLETON POINT, QUE.—LIGHTKEEPER

Mr. MARCIL:

1. Was Louis Bujold, lighthouse keeper at Carleton Point, Quebec, dismissed?
2. If so, who was appointed temporarily in charge?
3. Has a permanent appointment been made, if so, who has been appointed?

Mr. DURANLEAU:

1. Yes.
2. Henry Joseph E. Martin.
3. No permanent appointment has yet been made.

PASPEBIAC, QUE.—LIGHTKEEPER

Mr. MARCIL:

1. Has the lightkeeper at Paspebiac, Quebec, been dismissed and who has been appointed in his place?
2. Has a permanent appointment been made, if so, who has been appointed.

Mr. DURANLEAU:

1. Yes; Arsene Poirier, temporary lightkeeper.
2. No.

ST. GODFROID, QUE.—LIGHTHOUSE KEEPER

Mr. MARCIL:

Has Jacques Grenier, keeper of the lighthouse and signal station at St. Godfroid, Quebec, been dismissed, if so, who has been appointed in his place?

Mr. DURANLEAU:

Yes; Philippe LeBrasseur as lightkeeper; William Edmund Sullivan as storm signal agent.

ST. OMER, QUE.—LIGHTHOUSE KEEPER

Mr. MARCIL:

1. Has the lighthouse keeper at St. Omer, county of Bonaventure, Quebec, been dismissed, if so, who has been appointed in his place?
2. For what reason was the keeper dismissed, was there an investigation held and by whom?

Mr. DURANLEAU:

1. Yes, Jean Arseneault.
2. Political partisanship. An investigation was held by Commissioner Gerard Simard.

CARLETON, QUE., LIGHTKEEPER

Mr. MARCIL:

1. Has the lightkeeper at Carleton, Quebec, been dismissed, if so, who has been appointed in his place?
2. For what reason was the keeper dismissed, was there an investigation held and by whom?

Mr. DURANLEAU:

1. Yes; Robert Lefebvre.
2. Political partisanship; an investigation was held by Gerard Simard, commissioner.

CAP ST. IGNACE, POSTMASTER

Mr. FAFARD:

1. Was the position of postmaster at Cap St. Ignace, county of Montmagny, Quebec, advertised as vacant?
2. If so, what are the names of those who applied for said position?
3. What is the name of the person who was appointed to said position?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. Yes.

2 and 3. Vacancy advertised up to 12th March, and report not yet received.

VESSEL ST. HELIERS

Mr. ARTHURS:

1. Does the government own a vessel called the St. Heliers?
2. If so, from whom was she purchased and at what price?
3. When and where was this vessel built?
4. What amount has been expended to date for remodelling and repairs of this vessel?
5. What is the estimated cost for fuel daily: (a) when in commission; (b) when idle?

Mr. DURANLEAU:

1. Yes.
2. Saint John Dry Dock and Shipbuilding Company, Saint John, N.B., $187,000.
3. 1919, Port Glasgow, Scotland.
4. $19,383.07.
5. (a) $94 when running; (b) $12 when idle, but under steam.

PICTOU, N.S., PUBLIC WHARF

Mr. ILSLEY:

1. What amount of money was expended by the government during the year 1931 on repairs to the public wharf at Pictou, Nova Scotia: (a) for material; (b) for labour?
2. Who was the foreman in charge of the work?
3. What remuneration did he receive?
4. On whose recommendation was he appointed?
5. By whom was the timber for said work supplied?
6. Were tenders called for the supply of timber?
7. Who was the lowest tenderer?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds):

1. (a) Material..	$1,145 74
(b) Labour..	1,834 72
	$2,980 46

(For repairs on public wharf known as commissioner's wharf).

2. Malcolm Langhill.

3. $5 per day for 72 days from 16th November, 1931, to 8th February, 1932, total, $360.

4. District engineer.

5, 6 and 7. Part of timber used to the amount of $251.20 was transferred from material remaining from C.N.R. wharves. The remainder to the amount of $624.70 was supplied by D. Fullerton & Son Ltd., Pictou, N.S., pursuant to tender.

ABERCROMBIE, N.S., PUBLIC WHARF

Mr. ILSLEY:

1. What amount of money was expended by the government during the year 1931 on repairs to the public wharf at Abercrombie, Nova Scotia: (a) for material; (b) for labour?

2. Who was the foreman in charge of the work?

3. What remuneration did he receive?

4. On whose recommendation was he appointed?

5. By whom was the timber for this work supplied?

6. Were tenders called for the supply of timber?

7. Who was the lowest tenderer?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds):

1. (a) Material..	$2,195 40
(b) Labour..	1,669 00
	$3,864 40

2. N. F. Henderson.

3. $4.50 per day for 47½ days from 16th October, 1931, to 15th December, 1932, total $213.75.

4. District engineer.

5. James R. Porter, Stellarton, N.S.; John Rafuse, R.R. No. 3, New Glasgow, N.S.

6. Yes.

7. J. R. Porter.

LARRY'S RIVER, N.S., POSTMASTER

Mr. DUFF:

1. Was Simon J. Pelerin dismissed from the position of postmaster at Larry's River, Nova Scotia?

2. Why was he so dismissed?

3. Was an investigation held and by whom?

4. What was the cost of said investigation?

5. Who was appointed postmaster or postmistress in his place?

6. What is the age of said appointee?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. Yes.

2. Postmaster found guilty of political partisanship.

3. Yes, by N. D. Murray, Halifax.

4. $106.70.

5. Miss Nina Theresa Murphy.

6. 23.

NOTRE DAME DU LAC, QUE., POSTMASTER

Mr. POULIOT:

1. Is the position of postmaster at Notre-Dame du Lac, Quebec, vacant?

2. If so, has the vacancy been advertised and when?

3. If not, why?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. Yes.

2. Advertised from 8th to 23rd of January 1932.

3. Answered by 2.

SULLY, QUE., POSTMASTER

Mr. POULIOT:

1. Who were the applicants for the position of postmaster at Sully, Quebec?

2. How many were returned soldiers?

3. Has the vacancy been advertised?

4. If so, when?

5. If not, why?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. Two applications already received: (a) Andrea Tardif; (b) Isidore Jean.

2. One.

3. No.

4. See number three.

5. Order in council, confirming the commissioners' report finding the postmaster guilty of political partisanship, has not yet been passed.

POINTE LEBEL, QUE., POSTMASTER

Mr. POULIOT:

1. Is Henri Granier, postmaster at Pointe Lebel, county of Saguenay, a British subject by birth or by naturalization?

2. If by birth, where was he born and on what date?

3. If by naturalization, on what date was he naturalized?

Mr. CAHAN:

Post Office Department:

1. By naturalization, according to postmaster's statement.

2. Born Visan (France), 15th May, 1861.

3. No information as to date of naturalization.

Secretary of State Department:

1. No record of his naturalization.

2. and 3. Answered by No. 1.

LA RICHARDIÈRE, QUE., POSTMASTER

Mr. POULIOT:

1. What is the date of the dismissal of Joseph Michaud, as postmaster of La Richardière, Quebec?

2. Why was he dismissed?

3. Did many persons apply for the position?

4. If so, what are their names?

5. On whose recommendation did the Postmaster General appoint the present postmaster and for what reasons was he given the preference over other candidates?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. September 7th, 1931.
2. Commissioners' report found postmaster guilty of active political partisanship.
3. One.
4. François Michaud.
5. Recommended by Mr. C. E. Dubé.

ST. ELOI, QUE.—MAIL CARRIER

Mr. POULIOT:

1. Who is the mail carrier between St. Eloi, county of Témiscouata, Quebec, and the station?
2. What is the total amount of this contract?
3. On what date was his tender accepted?
4. What was the amount of his original tender?
5. Were there other tenderers?
6. If so, what are their names and what was the amount of each respective tender?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. François Tardif.
2. $346.74 per annum.
3. September 16, 1931.
4. $366 per annum.
5. Yes.
6. Alfred Dionne, $275, withdrawn at the request of the tenderer; François Tardif, $366; Napoléon Rioux, $400; Joseph Dionne, $450.

CHEMIN DU LAC, QUE.—POSTMASTER

Mr. POULIOT:

1. On what date was Mr. Geo. Alphonse Belanger dismissed as postmaster of Chemin du Lac, Quebec?
2. Why was he dismissed?
3. Did many persons apply for his position?
4. If so, what are their names?
5. On whose recommendation did the Postmaster General appoint the present postmaster, and why was he chosen in preference to other candidates?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. March 2, 1932.
2. Inattention to duty and assistant tampering with mail.
3. Two applications received.
4. J. E. Caron, Andre Caron.
5. Recommended by Mr. C. E. Dubé, as most suitable candidate.

DENONVILLE, QUE.—POSTMASTER

Mr. POULIOT:

1. On what date was Mr. Thomas Dubé dismissed as postmaster of Denonville, Quebec?
2. Why was he dismissed?
3. Did many persons apply for his position?
4. If so, what are their names?

[Mr. Pouliot.]

5. On whose recommendation did the Postmaster General appoint the present postmaster and why was he chosen in preference to other candidates?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. November 13, 1931.
2. Removal of office to more central location.
3, 4 and 5. One applicant, Mr. Theodule Michaud, who provided a more central location. Recommended by Mr. C. E. Dubé.

RIOU, QUE.—POSTMASTER

Mr. POULIOT:

1. What was the date of the dismissal of Mr. Omer Sirois as postmaster of Riou, Quebec?
2. Why was he dismissed?
3. Did many persons apply for the position?
4. If so, what are their names?
5. On whose recommendation did the Postmaster General appoint the present postmaster, and why was he chosen in preference to other candidates?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. April 2, 1931.
2. Removal of office to a more central location.
3, 4 and 5. One applicant, Mrs. Emile Ouellet, who provided a more central location. Recommended by Mr. C. E. Dubé.

IVRY, QUE.—POSTMASTER

Mr. POULIOT:

1. On what date was Mr. Joseph Morneau dismissed as postmaster of Ivry, Quebec?
2. Why was he dismissed?
3. Did many persons apply for his position?
4. If so, what are their names?
5. On whose recommendation did the Postmaster General appoint the present postmaster, and why was he chosen in preference to other candidates?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. October 24, 1931.
2. Removal of office to a more central location, according to the report of the Inspector.
3, 4 and 5. One applicant, Pierre Fortin, who provided a more central location. Recommended by Mr. C. E. Dubé.

MONTAGNE RONDE, QUE.—POSTMASTER

Mr. POULIOT:

1. On what date was Mr. David Lebel dismissed as postmaster of Montagne Ronde, Quebec?
2. Why was he dismissed?
3. Did many persons apply for his position?
4. If so, what are their names?
5. On whose recommendation did the Postmaster General appoint the present postmaster, and why was he chosen in preference to other candidates?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. August 27, 1931.

2. Commissioners' report found postmaster guilty of active political partisanship.

3, 4 and 5. One applicant, Eugene Lepage. Recommended by Mr. C. E. Dubé.

DENONVILLE, QUE., CHARGES OF POLITICAL PARTISANSHIP

Mr. POULIOT:

1. Did the Postmaster General since August, 1930, order an inquiry in connection with the charges of political partisanship lodged against the postmaster at Denonville, Quebec?

2. If so: (a) at whose written request was this inquiry granted; (b) was said written request accompanied by many affidavits; (c) if so, what is the date, and the name of the person whose signature is attached to each affidavit; (d) on what date was each affidavit received by the Postmaster General; (e) on what date did the Potsmaster General order the inquiry?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. No.

2. See answer to No. 1.

CHEMIN DU LAC, QUE., CHARGES OF POLITICAL PARTISANSHIP

Mr. POULIOT:

1. Did the Postmaster General since August, 1930, order an inquiry in connection with the charges of political partisanship lodged against the postmaster at Chemin du Lac, Quebec?

2. If so: (a) at whose written request was this inquiry granted; (b) was said written request accompanied by many affidavits; (c) if so, what is the date, and the name of the person whose signature is attached to each affidavit; (d) on what date was each affidavit received by the Postmaster General; (e) on what date did the Postmaster General order the inquiry?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. No.

2. See answer to No. 1.

RIOU, QUE., CHARGES OF POLITICAL PARTISANSHIP

Mr. POULIOT:

1. Did the Postmaster General since August, 1930, order an inquiry in connection with the charges of political partisanship lodged against the postmaster at Riou, Quebec?

2. If so: (a) at whose written request was this inquiry granted; (b) was said written request accompanied by many affidavits; (c) if so, what is the date, and the name of the person whose signature is attached to each affidavit; (d) on what date was each affidavit received by the Postmaster General; (e) on what date did the Postmaster General order the inquiry?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. No.

2. See answer to No. 1.

IVRY, QUE., CHARGES OF POLITICAL PARTISANSHIP

Mr. POULIOT:

1. Did the Postmaster General, since August, 1930, order an inquiry in connection with charges of political partisanship lodged against the postmaster at Ivry, Quebec?

2. If so: (a) at whose written request was this inquiry granted; (b) was said written request accompanied by many affidavits; (c) if so, what is the date, and the name of the person whose signature is attached to each affidavit; (d) on what date was each affidavit received by the Postmaster General; (e) on what date did the Postmaster General order the inquiry?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. No.

2. See answer to No. 1.

SULLY, QUE., CHARGES OF POLITICAL PARTISANSHIP

Mr. POULIOT:

1. Did the Postmaster General, since August, 1930, order an inquiry in connection with charges of political partisanship lodged against the postmaster at Sully, Quebec?

2. If so: (a) at whose written request was this inquiry granted; (b) was said written request accompanied by many affidavits; (c) if so, what is the date, and the name of the person whose signature is attached to each affidavit; (d) on what date was each affidavit received by the Postmaster General; (e) on what date did the Postmaster General order the inquiry?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. Yes.

2. (a) Mr. C. E. Dubé; (b) and (c) written request was accompanied by written statement from Herman Tardif, dated 4th of September, 1931; (d) September 7th, 1931; (e) Instructions sent to commissioner 14th October, 1931.

NOTRE DAME DU LAC, QUE., CHARGES OF POLITICAL PARTISANSHIP

Mr. POULIOT:

1. Did the Postmaster General, since August, 1930, order an inquiry in connection with charges of political partisanship lodged against the postmaster at Notre Dame du Lac, Quebec?

2. If so: (a) at whose written request was this inquiry granted; (b) was said written request accompanied by many affidavits; (c) if so, what is the date, and the name of the person whose signature is attached to each affidavit; (d) on what date was each affidavit received by the Postmaster General; (e) on what date did the Postmaster General order the inquiry?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. Yes.

2. (a) Mr. C. E. Dubé; (b) and (c) written request was accompanied by statement, undated, signed by I. T. Voisine; (d) 27th January, 1931; (e) Instructions sent to commissioner, 6th March, 1931.

LAMY SUD, QUE., CHARGES OF POLITICAL PARTISANSHIP

Mr. POULIOT:

1. Did the Postmaster General, since August, 1930, order an inquiry in connection with charges of political partisanship lodged against the postmaster at Lamy Sud, Quebec?

2. If so: (a) at whose written request was this inquiry granted; (b) was said written request accompanied by many affidavits; (c) if so, what is the date, and the name of the person whose signature is attached to each affidavit; (d) on what date was each affidavit received by the Postmaster General; (e) on what date did the Postmaster General order the inquiry?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. Yes.

2. (a) Mr. C. E. Dubé; (b) and (c) written request was accompanied by statement, undated, signed by Isidore Ouellet; (d) 14th of January, 1931; (e) Instructions sent to commissioner, 26th September, 1931.

ST. ARSENE, QUE., CHARGES OF POLITICAL PARTISANSHIP

Mr. POULIOT:

1. Since August, 1930, did the Post Office Department order an inquiry into charges of political partisanship brought against the postmaster at St. Arsene, Quebec?

2. If so: (a) upon whose written request was this inquiry granted; (b) was the written request for this inquiry accompanied by many affidavits; (c) if so, on what date, and by whom was each of these affidavits signed; (d) on what date was each of these affidavits received by the Post Office Department; (e) on what date did the Post Office Department order an inquiry?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. No.

2. See answer to No. 1.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURN

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT, OTTAWA—INSIDE SERVICE APPOINTMENTS

Mr. BARBER:

1. According to the records of the Civil Service Commission, how many employees were appointed to the inside service of the Post Office Department at Ottawa during the past three calendar years: (a) temporary; (b) permanent?

2. According to the records of the Civil Service Commission, how many of the requests from the Post Office Department for the above-mentioned appointments specified bilingual employees: (a) temporary; (b) permanent?

3. How many of these positions to which employees were appointed are shown on the Civil Service Commission records as requiring bilingual qualifications: (a) temporary; (b) permanent?

[Mr. Sauvé.]

4. How many of these positions as shown by the Civil Service Commission records were formerly occupied by bilingual employees: (a) temporary; (b) permanent?

POLITICAL PARTISANSHIP INQUIRIES

Mr. POULIOT:

1. How many postmasters had to undergo inquiries for political partisanship since August, 1930: (a) each month, and (b) in each province?

2. In how many cases: (a) each month since August 1, 1930, and (b) in each province, did the Postmaster General require a written complaint accompanied by an affidavit before granting an inquiry for political partisanship?

GOVERNMENT PURCHASING AGENTS

Mr. FRASER (Cariboo):

1. How many: (a) full time; (b) part time; (c) temporary, purchasing agents were there in the employ of the government in each department, on each of the following dates, January 1, 1930; January 1, 1932?

2. How many: (a) full time; (b) part time; (c) temporary, assistants to purchasing agents in any and all classifications were employed by the government in each department on each of the following dates, January 1, 1930; January 1, 1932?

3. What is the total cost of this service to the government in each department, for each of the fiscal years ending March 31, 1930, and March 31, 1931?

TÉMISCOUATA COUNTY POSTMASTERS—CHARGES OF POLITICAL PARTISANSHIP

Mr. POULIOT:

1. Did the Postmaster General, since August, 1930, communicate by correspondence with certain postmasters in the county of Témiscouata, Quebec, in connection with certain charges of political partisanship lodged against them?

2. If so: (a) on what dates; (b) what are the names of the postmasters; (c) what form of letter was forwarded to each of them; (d) at whose request?

UNOPPOSED MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

CALDWELL BROOK, N.B., VEGETABLE INSPECTOR

Mr. VENIOT:

For a copy of all correspondence in connection with the dismissal of C. D. Smith, of Caldwell Brook, New Brunswick, as vegetable inspector; also the evidence taken at the investigation held into the charges made against him, with the report of the investigating commissioner.

UNEMPLOYMENT AND FARM RELIEF

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia):

For a copy of all telegrams received by the Prime Minister from the province of Saskatchewan, to which he referred in his statements on "Farm Relief" resolution, page 4277 of revised Hansard of July 29, 1931.

RUISSEAU LEBLANC BREAKWATER AND ST. CHARLES DE CAPLAN WHARF

Mr. MARCIL:

For a copy of the paylists and accounts for materials used in repair works at Ruisseau Leblanc breakwater in 1930 and 1931; also same information for works at the wharf at St. Charles de Caplan in 1931.

GREAT VILLAGE, N.S., WHARF

Mr. DUFF:

For a copy of all letters, telegrams, memorandums, reports and other documents, between the Department of Public Works and any person or persons in Nova Scotia regarding the expenditure of public money under the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act, 1931, on work on a wharf at Great Village, in the province of Nova Scotia, as well as copy of payrolls and invoices or memoranda re materials and prices thereof.

CLORIDORME-PETITE MADELEINE MAIL CONTRACT

Mr. BRASSET:

For a copy of all correspondence, contracts, reports, and other documents, relating to the contract for carrying the mail from Cloridorme to Petite Madeleine, held by M. C. Berubé, of Petite Madeleine, and also a copy of all documents and letters, relating to his dismissal, and the appointment of his successor.

FARM RELIEF

DISTRIBUTION AND INSPECTION OF SEED GRAIN IN SASKATCHEWAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. F. TOTZKE (Humboldt): I should like to direct to the Minister of Trade and Commerce or the Prime Minister, a question based on a press despatch dated at Regina, March 21, reading:

Seed grain delivered to farmers in the drought area by the Saskatchewan Relief Commission will be inspected by ten or twelve experienced grain inspectors loaned for two weeks by the federal department of Trade and Commerce, Ottawa, from the Winnipeg inspection point. They will start Monday.

The drought area will be divided into districts and each will be in charge of one of the inspectors. Distribution of seed grain will be conducted at all points in the drought area, and farmers are urged to take delivery of their seed just as soon as possible.

Will the government confirm this report and give assurance that the farmers are now receiving seed grain?

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Minister of Trade and Commerce): A request was made by the government of Saskatchewan for the cooperation of the experienced inspectors of the Board of Grain Commissioners. The Department of Trade and Commerce very readily acceded to the request and instructed those inspectors to render every possible cooperation.

As regards the latter part of the despatch, the grain now being distributed—I am at present speaking from what information I have at hand—is grain that was provided for prior to a week ago. It is hoped that as soon as the measure before the house is passed, the Saskatchewan government, with the assistance of the federal government, will be in a position to complete the quantity of grain required and to make the necessary distribution in time. That depends, however, upon the final disposition of the resolution and the motion before the house.

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Melville): May I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce: has no one at all on behalf of the government as yet purchased the necessary seed grain for the west?

Mr. STEVENS: I gave all the information that I had at hand.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It was no answer.

Mr. STEVENS: That is my hon. friend's opinion.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: As a matter of fact the seed grain is already purchased.

PRIVILEGE—MR. HOWARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. CHARLES B. HOWARD (Sherbrooke): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker: last night in speaking in the house, I made this statement as reported on page 1367 of Hansard:

The Prime Minister said time and again, in interviews throughout the country, that we were not off the gold standard nor would we go off it.

The Prime Minister immediately rose and denied the statement. I amended the statement as shown in the same page of Hansard:

That has been published in the newspapers throughout Canada.

The Prime Minister again denied it. In the Ottawa Journal of October 5, 1931, this statement appears in big headlines:

Premier Bennett declares Canada is not abandoning the gold standard.

In the Ottawa Journal, which is his own newspaper, a Conservative paper, of December 15, 1931, this statement appears:

Premier Bennett denies dominion off gold standard.

The Toronto Financial Post, October 3, 1931, in its editorial column on the front page, headed "The Nation's Business," speaking of Mr. Bennett, has this to say:

On the eve of Britain's suspension of gold payments Mr. Bennett announced that Canada was on a gold basis and intended to stay there.

Again, in the Ottawa Journal of September 21, 1931, this statement appears—

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member has gone far enough. He is elaborating his speech of yesterday, quoting from newspapers, reports of news of the day. As I understand the matter, this constitutes no question of privilege. The hon. member stated his position yesterday. That is enough and does not allow him to continue his speech to-day.

Mr. HOWARD: I have received from the man who made the statement, a denial of it.

Mr. SPEAKER: Even so, that is no question of privilege entitling the hon. member to elaborate what he said yesterday. If he had been misquoted, it would be quite right for him to point out the mistake, but it is not in order for him to continue his speech.

Mr. HOWARD: It is a question of privilege.

Mr. SPEAKER: It is not.

Mr. HOWARD: In my constituency they will wonder why the Prime Minister denied the statement. The last quotation is this:

"What Great Britain may do is for the government of Great Britain to determine," said Mr. Bennett. "As for Canada we propose to maintain the gold standard."

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

CANADIAN DESTROYER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): A few weeks ago I had occasion to ask the Minister of National Defence with regard to the activities of our fleet in Salvador. I notice, according to to-day's despatch from the Port of Spain, Trinidad, that a boat crew from the Canadian destroyer Champlain quelled a riot there. May I ask what our fleet is doing in quelling riots down in Trinidad?

Hon. D. M. SUTHERLAND (Minister of National Defence): The destroyer was down there in the course of her usual winter cruise. The department has not as yet had any definite report as to the incident mentioned by the hon. member.

[Mr. Howard.]

UNEMPLOYMENT AND FARM RELIEF

CONTINUANCE ACT, 1932—CONSIDERATION OF RESOLUTION

The house resumed from Tuesday, March 22, consideration of the motion of the Prime Minister that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee of the whole on the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to introduce a bill to amend chapter 58 of the statutes of Canada, 1931, striking out the word "March" in section 8, and substituting the word "May" therefor.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the warmth of the greeting which has just been extended is not directed to me personally but to the fact that the Conservative candidate has succeeded in being elected in the Athabaska by-election by a majority of upwards of 300 in a constituency in which a Conservative candidate has not run for ten years. It at least indicates that there is some support for the administration outside of this house, and in the house itself its support is quite ample for all purposes that may be required. But unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, there seems to be a lack of knowledge on the part of those who sit to your left that there has been an election and that they are no longer in control of the House of Commons. They seem to think that they can dictate legislation and that they are to be dictators while they talk about the autocracy of others. I think I need hardly say, Mr. Speaker, that, under our institutions, minorities do not govern and that the basis of all parliamentary institutions is the rule of the majority. But unfortunately some people are very poor losers, and they cannot for a moment contemplate the possibility of the parliament of Canada being conducted unless they themselves direct it, and failing to direct it from a majority they assume that they may do so with a noisy minority. I think probably it might be well to remind them that parliamentary institutions are based upon an entirely different assumption. The gentleman who for so many years presided at the table in the mother of parliaments wrote an approving introduction to a work from which I shall read just a few lines, namely, Redlich's Procedure of the House of Commons, the outstanding authority upon the subject. Reading from the third volume of that work, page 196, I shall now give a description of what has transpired in this house during the last ten days:

Focussing once more the results of our retrospect we may arrive at certain important conclusions which will be useful in the search for a solution of the problem set before us. The political development of our own day has laid bare—in the first instance in England, and then in nearly all the constitutional states of Europe—the conventional foundation of parliamentary government. Parliamentary conventions appear above all in the forms of parliamentary action, in the limitations to party strategy imposed by the inviolable bounds of the rules and in the tacit agreement among all who take part in parliamentary life to handle these rules in a reasonable way. It has further appeared that, though the observance of these conventions does, to a certain extent, depend upon the social character of the membership, a far more important consideration remains: parliamentary conventions are only effective, and the parliamentary government which they support is only possible, when there is an acceptance of the constitutional basis upon which state and parliament are founded. Irreconcilable parties, which oppose an existing union of states or stand for a subordination of state to church, parties which reject the whole framework of society, or which draw their life from a principle only less deep and powerful than that of religion, the principle of nationality, are all in mortal conflict—latent if not apparent, possibly unconscious for long periods —with the conventions of parliament; they are, therefore, knowingly or unknowingly attacking parliamentary government itself, at all events in the form known to the constitution. Obstruction is, in reality, nothing less than a repudiation of the existing constitution of the country, intensified to the point of denying the right of its parliament to exist, and expressed in a conscious misuse of the forms and principles of procedure essential to the efficiency of parliamentary action. Except within these rules, conventions and forms, parliamentary work is impossible: without their protection there is no security that the political assimilation necessary for the sustenance of the parliamentary organism can be obtained. It was no mere coincidence that the assault on the British constitution by the principle of nationality brought obstruction to maturity. On looking round in Europe, wherever we see a similar spectacle, we find that it is almost always a conflict of nationalities, a struggle against existing unions of states which has brought it forth.

Mr. Redlich declares that obstruction is, in reality, nothing less than a repudiation of the existing constitution of the country, and at great length he and other writers have developed the idea by which majorities control. It is well known that in this house there is a majority supporting the administration. It is well known that it is an ample majority for all purposes and that no specious appeals for support of legislation or otherwise have been made by the government to those of independent thought for the purpose of securing their adherence to legislation that may be brought down. What is more, we have, sir, to the right of you supporters from every province in this confederation. Ours is in every sense a truly national party extending from the east to the west, supporting common principles, giving adherence and loyal devotion to common policies. And we do not now nor do we at any time propose to truckle or ask for the sacrifice of our independence of thought in order to obtain the support of those who would retain us in power for the spoils of office.

But there is another principle, a principle that underlies the principle to which I have just referred. It is the principle as to the function of an opposition. Oppositions are essential and necessary in the development of a democratic state. They serve a great and useful purpose. To the extent that criticism is frank and thorough, to that extent they do a great service to the country. To the extent that criticism is petty, to the extent to which argument may degenerate into abuse, abuse personal in its character, it fails. To the extent to which men may set up, as they sometimes do, a man of straw for the purpose of knocking him down, an opposition fails of its end. But an opposition has a duty to perform. When that duty is performed, reiteration, the re-statement of speeches upon matters that are not cognate or allied to the subject matter under consideration are not calculated to advance the interests of parliament nor yet to bring any credit on parliamentary institutions themselves. May I point out that during the long years in which the Liberal party was in opposition from 1911 to 1917 under the direction of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, never during that whole period of time, with the exception of the naval debate, to which I shall presently refer, was there a case in which any effort was made upon a resolution introduced into parliament, a resolution, I repeat, asking that the Speaker do leave the chair for the house to consider the resolution, to have a debate that extended beyond the statement of a few broad principles. Criticism has always been deferred to the bill founded upon the resolution, for the resolution declares the principle and the bill declares the details. The bill in its sections amplifies the principle. But the principle of the resolution itself, to which His Excellency the Governor General gave his approval when the motion was submitted to him for his consideration, is the foundation upon which the measure is based, and to the extent that the bill does not depart from that principle, it is correct. To the extent that it may endeavour to depart from it, it is wrong, and successive Speakers have from time to time directed attention to that fact. As I shall presently point out, in the resolution that is now before the house, what was asked was that there should be a continuance of an existing measure until the 1st of May, and that principle is the principle which is now before the house for consideration.

When the house has engaged, as it has, as I shall presently point out, in long and weary discussions about matters that have as much to do with the subject matter of the measure under consideration as they have to do with the quelling of a riot by the sailors of the Champlain in the West Indies the other day, when I point that out, I think that the house will agree that the time had come when we had to take the course we did with respect to this measure, and say to the house that the time has come to end this prolonged discussion about matters that have no relevance to the subject matter of the resolution.

But, sir, I hold in my hand a special report from the select committee on Procedure on Public Business, together with the proceedings of the committee, minutes of evidence and index, which was ordered by the House of Commons in England, the mother of parliaments, as hon. gentlemen remind us so frequently, to be printed on the 7th day of October of last year. And it will be recalled that the Prime Minister of England, who is also a member of our privy council, there made a statement. Let me read that statement to this house. At page 5 I find the following:

> Really, what is the House of Commons itself? It consists not only of a government, but of an opposition, and they have both got functions and rights. The great right of the opposition is the full discussion of measures proposed by the government. It is there, I think, that our fundamental weakness lies. There is a doctrine that it is the function of the opposition to oppose. I have always regarded that as a crime against the state.

Those are Mr. Ramsay MacDonald's words, and they represent his opinion. He proceeds:

> It is not the function of the opposition to oppose; it is the function of the opposition to oppose second readings, but once the second reading has been accepted, the only function of the opposition is to improve in its own direction within the scope of the vote that has been registered, that is, that it should have full liberty to examine on committee and report, and then to say its final word of opposition on the third reading of the bill. The opposition has no right to obstruct in the sense of making parliament barren or unproductive.

That statement, together with the statement I made a minute ago as to the fundamental principle under which parliamentary institutions obtain, is the rule of the majority which constitutes the case we make to-day for the measure that is standing in my name. Those principles I believe cannot readily be questioned. Is it a crime against the state, as Mr. MacDonald thought it was, wilfully to oppose and maliciously to consume time in personal attacks, maliciously to consume time in making statements which must be known to be untrue, making statements which must be known are wholly beside the question? Is it not, if his statement be correct, in the true and just sense of the term, a crime against the state that this sort of thing should continue?

I will not traverse the ground so admirably covered yesterday as to the number of hon. members in this chamber who up to this moment have participated in the debate. I will not indicate how parliament has expressed its views through its constituted members. I will not—although I say if anyone did analyze the speeches which have been made such analysis would show that they might be equally applicable to a discussion on the budget, or on a measure dealing with a question respecting our foreign relations. They would be equally applicable to one case as to the other. They must have been made for one purpose, and that purpose, it is apparent to every hon. member in this house, was to fill in the time that was taken up in making those speeches.

Having concluded that phase of the matter, in short, I desire to divert the minds of hon. members to the consideration of other matters, and to draw their attention to the measure now under consideration. This measure may be described as a resolution asking parliament to reenact chapter 58 of the statutes of Canada. That is what it is. It is not in the nature of a permanent enactment but for a period of only two months or eight weeks, some three of which have now passed. To that measure I am now going to direct the attention of the house, so that there may be no misapprehension of the true purpose and import of the legislation. The following is the preamble to the bill:

> Whereas by reason of the continuing world-wide economic depression there exists in many parts of Canada a serious state of unemployment and distress; and whereas the partial failure of the wheat crop of western Canada has intensified the adverse economic conditions theretofore prevailing; and whereas it is in the national interest that parliament should support and supplement the relief measures of the provinces and other bodies in such ways as the governor in council may deem expedient, and for that purpose should vest in the governor in council the powers necessary to ensure the speedy and unhampered prosecution of all relief measures and the maintenance of peace, order and good government in Canada; now therefore His Majesty by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:

Then, section 1 gives the title. Section 2 authorizes payments at the discretion of the governor in council out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada of all such sums as may be necessary for relieving distress, providing employment and maintaining within the competence of parliament, peace, order and good government throughout Canada.

Then, in order that there may be no doubt as to what was in the minds of those who asked for such powers the further details are given:

Without restricting the generality of the terms of the next preceding section hereof, and notwithstanding the provisions of any statute or law, the governor in council may:

(a) Provide for the construction, extension or improvement of public works, buildings, undertakings, railways, highways, subways, bridges and canals, harbours and wharves, and any other works and undertakings of any nature or kind whatsoever;

(b) Assist in defraying the cost of the production, sale and distribution of the products of the field, farm, forest, sea, river and mine;

(c) Assist provinces, cities, towns, municipalities, and other bodies or associations, by loaning moneys thereto or guaranteeing repayment of moneys thereby, or in such other manner as may be deemed necessary or advisable;

(d) Take all such other measures as may be deemed necessary or advisable for carrying out the provisions of this act;

And, for the purposes aforesaid, may expend such moneys from the consolidated revenue fund as may be required.

Mr. Speaker, those powers thus expressed have been indicated not by accident. They were learned by experience to be essential to meet the situation which prevailed, and which we believed would prevail throughout this dominion in the year 1931 and part of the year in which we are now living.

I wonder if this house will say that any doubt exists as to the desirability of those powers being conferred upon someone? Will they doubt it? Will they question it? Then, why was it that the other morning there waited upon me a delegation headed by the mayor of the city of Quebec, surrounded by representatives of that district, including my hon. friends the ex-Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) and the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power)? Why did they appear? For the reason that they asked that the time he extended within which such works as had been agreed upon between the province and the dominion for the benefit of the city of Quebec might be performed. Those works were carried on under the provisions of this statute—under the provisions of this statute, and not otherwise.

What is true with respect to Quebec city is true also with respect to many parts of Canada. There come representations that owing to seasonal conditions it becomes essential that these works which are partially completed should not be shut down at once, but that the time within which completion may be effected under the contracts made and approvals given under this statute, should be extended. Then, if power is given by this parliament to its executive that this action be taken, not only in the city of Quebec but with respect to other communities, it is desirable that this measure of relief should be afforded. But does any member of this house suggest that a supply bill will meet that situation? Where is he? Does any hon. member in this house suggest that a single amount in a supply bill will take care of that situation? I wonder if those hon. members would explain to this house why it was that the former government brought into this house and enacted legislation based upon a resolution in connection with old age pensions? Does the old age pensions legislation impose any restriction upon the sum of money to be taken out of the treasury to meet the obligations created? It says that there shall be paid out of the consolidated revenue fund one half of all sums that the provinces have to pay. They do not appear in the estimates. There is no statement in the estimates with relation to it. One half of the sum has to be paid out of the consolidated revenue, willy nilly, and the province determines what the extent of the expenditure shall be—not the dominion.

Now, what difference is there between saying that there shall be paid out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada a sum of money for unemployment relief, for the purpose of giving effect to contracts that have been entered into, and saying that one half of all sums expended by the provinces for the purpose of carrying on the old age insurance business shall be paid out of the consolidated revenue? Here are the words, in section 3 of chapter 156:

The governor in council may make an agreement with the lieutenant-governor in council of any province for the payment to such province quarterly of an amount equal to one-half of the net sum paid out during the preceding quarter by such province for pensions pursuant to a provincial statute authorizing and providing for the payment of such pensions to the persons and under the conditions specified in this act and the regulations made hereunder.

That is now seventy-five per cent. The parliament of Canada, then, has contracted and pledged itself to undertake the payment of three-fourths of old age pensions as provided and defined by provincial statute. And section 7 provides:

All sums payable to any province in pursuance of any agreement made under this act shall be payable from time to time on the certificate of the Minister of Finance out of any moneys belonging to the consolidated revenue fund of Canada not otherwise unappropriated.

Now what is the difference in principle? There the executive is given power to pay seventy-five per cent of all moneys that may be paid for old age pensions, under provincial statutes out of the consolidated revenue fund, without limitation or question. It is true that there is a provision that $240 is the limit that may be paid to any one person. But the cheque is a blank cheque. And, what is more, when the bridge to the south shore of the St. Lawrence was under discussion in the house there was passed by the former administration a statute, one section of which provided that the governor in council might guarantee the payment of all bonds that might be issued by the proper authority for the purpose of constructing the bridge. There was no limitation there; the cheque was a blank cheque, and it was filled in for a handsome sum—there is no question about that. It was filled in for nineteen and a half millions of dollars; and if you remember the observations made by the right hon. the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) last evening, you will recall that he referred to the supplementary estimates, in which provision was made for payment in connection with the Montreal harbour commission. That represented the deficit which the taxpayers of Canada had to pay on the blank cheque which was taken for the purpose of guaranteeing the undertaking. Small though the transactions may be in some instances, I could increase the number of illustrations indefinitely if I so desired; but I have no desire to do more than establish this: that the principle that a blank cheque should be taken where necessary to enable the executive to discharge great and onerous responsibilities has been accepted by this parliament—not only last session in the unemployment relief act, chapter 58, but in statutes that were enacted by the late administration without reference to the opposition of that day. But it did not end there. The late administration, when it dealt with relief measures, used to take a governor general's warrant before the house met and then disburse the money while the house was still in session, instead of proceeding, as now, through supplementary estimates. There may have been a good reason why that should have been done, but that at any rate is the fact with respect to the matter.

[Mr. Bennett.]

I submit, therefore, sir, if hon. gentlemen desire a frank and fair discussion of the matter, that it is abundantly established by precedents—by precedents that have been created alike by the party that sits to the right of the Speaker and by the party that sits to his left—that wherever essential the executive shall be clothed with that power that is necessary to enable it to effectuate the will of parliament. That is also a cardinal principle of our institutions. It is impossible that government could be carried on where every item had to have reference to parliament—it is unthinkable that such could be done. On the other hand, there always is the possibility of there being abuse of power; and that is what is meant by the Lord Chief Justice of England when he speaks of the new despotism, where he declared that times without number permanent officials had substituted their opinions for the will of the people. But when you have the will of parliament expressed as it was in the Old Age Pensions Act, expressed as it was with respect to the Montreal harbour bridge, expressed as it is with respect to innumerable matters to which I might refer, then there is one way and one way only by which that will can be made effective, and that is through the executive, the governor in council. And as that governor in council or that executive discharges its duties, so is the life of the government. If it fails to measure up to the high standard parliament sets, if it is not honest, fearless and courageous in the discharge of its executive duties under the powers entrusted to it, the government falls. If, on the other hand, in the exercise of the powers thus conferred upon it, it carries out its duties fairly and courageously, and for the benefit of the people affected, then it meets always with the approval of the body politic.

That, I think, is a fair statement of the position. That being so, let me ask this house fairly: What was done under this statute? What was done under this statute appears in the report that has been tabled in this house. We had to remember that the provinces have their pride; they are not wards of this parliament. In the language of Lord Loreburn they are just as supreme within the ambit of their legislative powers as this parliament is within its. They have their pride, they have their duties, they have their legislative responsibilities; and the bounds of their jurisdiction are set by the constitution. Theirs, unfortunately, they say themselves, is the responsibility with respect to unemployment, with respect to relief measures. And it is for that reason that in days gone by we had what we called almshouses, old age homes, and various other institutions that have grown up under the aegis of the provincial governments for the purpose of giving effect to the constitutional obligations of the provinces, the counties and the municipalities. What did we do? We did the very thing that the opposition would have done had it been in our place—at least I trust and believe so—namely, entered into negotiations with the provinces, because our contact was not with the municipalities, not with the counties, but with the provinces. We could not deal with the creations of the provinces but with the provinces themselves. They make their agreements, determine the measure of their financial obligation and responsibility, and we determine the extent to which we will assist them. These obligations were expressed in writing. Agreements were drawn up. A subcommittee of the cabinet considered them; the cabinet as a whole considered them. In other words, the executive which this parliament has set up for that purpose considered these matters. The agreements were entered into with all the provinces, and I ask hon. members of this house if they do not think in the main they worked out fairly satisfactorily. I tried to say the other day, and I repeat in no spirit of boasting for a party, but for a people, that no people numbering ten millions, inhabiting half a continent, have ever had to face the problems we faced last winter. At one time we had nearly five hundred thousand men, women and children receiving assistance in one form or another, not unemployed but people who had lost their all, people who were holding on to their homes without being able, from the soil about them, to get any sustenance or return. That was not confined entirely to one province, and I pointed out the other day that the people of this country were so proud, shall I say, of the achievements of their fellow citizens that various eastern provinces shipped carloads of goods west to assist those who were more needy than themselves, and in doing so they did great good to themselves as well as to others. Perhaps the greatest good they did was to themselves.

Therefore we ask you to impose this test: Has this act worked fairly well, this part of it? Has it been in the main satisfactory? Has it given you, each one of you, and your people that measure of succour and assistance, through constituted channels, that you wished it would? What say you? I have not yet heard anyone in this house or out of it say aught but that it has been in the main successful. Mark you, I am not one of those who believe we are going to get perfection under such conditions. There have been errors and mistakes of judgment; in one or two instances there have been more than that; there have been cases where individuals have strayed from the narrow pathway and taken advantage of conditions as they should not have done. It has been charged that political considerations in some instances have prevailed. I can readily understand why in some places, where there are political parties in power in the provinces opposed to the party in power in the dominion, there may be constant suspicion and distrust. In the western provinces where we had neither a Liberal nor a Conservative government in power, we had our difficulties. There were the little suspicions and jealousies of United Farmers against a Conservative or a Liberal or some other party man, but in the main, taking human nature as it is and making allowances for it, I submit to this house and to this country that this legislation has worked remarkably well.

That being so, what would be the most natural thing in the world to do? Would it not be to ask the parliament of Canada to renew this measure for a time? Presently I shall indicate until what time and why the time has been fixed in this way. It has been said that nothing was contained in the speech from the throne with respect to this legislation. Of course it was not; why should there be anything of that nature in the speech from the throne? The statute was then in operation. The government determined that it would renew the statute, and for how long? It was not to be renewed until after this parliament had ceased to be in session, but for a period of time during which parliament would still be in session, until the first day of May, now less than six weeks distant. Why was that done? It was done because it is desirable that this whole question should be thoroughly canvassed and that there should be known to this parliament as well as to the people of Canada at large just what it is proposed to do in the future. It was nothing new to me to learn that in the province of Saskatchewan substantial numbers of people had to be taken care of until harvest time; it was no news to me that in other parts of Canada similar conditions obtained and, sir, now that the matter has been adverted to, I might state to this house that in January last I made it my business to endeavour to ascertain just as nearly as a man might what were conditions in various parts of Canada as to the operations of this act, and as to the future. I am bound to be frank with this house when I say that in many of the provinces there was expressed the view that they had expended sums of money on public undertakings that almost went as far as they could go, and there were municipalities that expressed the same view. It was my proposal, as it still is, that just as soon as these provincial legislatures concluded their labours, I should ask the premiers of all the provinces of Canada to come here that we might confer together for the purpose of ascertaining just what, with the expiration of the operation of this bill, which is to be resurrected or revived, would be essential for the purpose of enabling us to discharge our larger duty in assisting the provinces in the discharge of their constitutional obligations.

Is that fair? Is that a reasonable thing? Is it something which would be in the mind of any Prime Minister as the proper thing to do? It must be remembered that the recital of the measure indicates that, the constitutional obligation being that of the provinces, we are giving them assistance because of the general economic conditions that obtain throughout the world, and we believe we should confer with them as to how the situation may be best met. Notwithstanding all that has been said as to the values of autocracy and dictatorship, I still propose to do this.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It should have been done a year ago.

Mr. BENNETT: I may say I counselled with the premiers of the provinces myself a year ago. I went west after this parliament prorogued last session and discussed the situation with the premiers of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. I saw representatives of the province of British Columbia. I discussed the matter with a representative of the province of Ontario, and a representative of the government of Quebec came to this city and discussed the matter with the government. The premiers, or the representatives of the premiers, of the maritime provinces also came here and discussed the matter with the government, and everything that has been done has been done by arrangement and agreement with the provinces through their constituted authorities, namely their governments, without regard to their political faiths or the political complexion of their followers.

So, sir, I submit to this house that in asking for a renewal of this statute until the first of May we are following the course which reasonable and prudent men would follow, and unless there is some evidence of abuse or malfeasance, some reason cogent and powerful why authority should not be again vested in the executive, I submit that this parliament should do so. Despite what has been said, the governor in council consists of the cabinet of the country, a committee of this House of Commons, sir, of your fellow citizens and your co-members in this chamber, together with one ex-Prime Minister of Canada who sits in another chamber of parliament. Is it suggested that these gentlemen have no minds of their own? Is anyone so extravagant in the use of language as to assert that these gentlemen are without opinions, or having opinions have not the will to assert them and the ability to express them? Who, knowing the gentlemen who sit beside me, knowing their views upon all public questions, knowing their interest in their own provinces, for a moment will think that they have hesitated to express their views and to make known their opinions? The answer given to our application for a renewal of the power thus entrusted to the executive has been that it is a dictatorship and an autocracy; that it is a one-man government and that these gentlemen about me must not be trusted.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentlemen who say "hear, hear" will not discuss these matters with the members of the cabinet and hold any such opinion. I think it will be admitted, even by the most critical, that they are well able to hold their own in any discussion, at least with their opponents. I think it will be admitted, perhaps grudgingly, that man for man they are gentlemen who have opinions and who hold them with a tenacity and conviction equal to the tenacity and conviction with which hon. gentlemen hold theirs. To assume that these men suddenly lose their identity in council and forget their being and become mere recording machines is, of course, not only an insult to the gentlemen themselves but a reflection upon the intelligence of those who assert it.

I have indicated why we ask that we should be given the powers I have suggested, but there is another reason why this statute should be renewed, a reason which has to do with the conditions which at present obtain. There is still hope in the hearts of the people of the west and of the people in other parts of this country. We have faced great difficulties and have had great obstacles to overcome, and yet the courage, the enterprise and the faith of the people appear to be still equal to any demands which may be made upon them. The people of western Canada are facing another season with high hope, they are going out to sow seed upon the soil knowing not whether it will give them a return or whether it will be as it has been too often in the past. Because of the reasons I have indicated, we have not been able completely to control the situation.

The provinces have insisted upon our providing them with seed grain, with feed and with fuel in the way of coal, gasoline, kerosene or fuel oil for their traction engines. They have indicated their requirements and I believe I freely expressed the will of the Canadian people in July last when I said that we would endeavour to treat this national calamity on a basis at least worthy of what we had done for communities not within our own territorial jurisdiction. We have done that. It was suggested this afternoon that the seed grain has been bought and paid for. The position is that the seed grain has been bought but it has not been paid for.

An hon. MEMBER: Why not?

Mr. BENNETT: Why not? For the simple and obvious reason that we did not want to lose the interest on the money. We provided that delivery should be taken when the requirements of the farmer and the agrarian became apparent. What is more, this seed has been bought at a lower price than would have been expected, having regard to the conditions which obtain in the country.

Arrangements were made in connection with the matter at a time when the resolution was pending before the house. There is a limit to what the provinces can do, in fact there is not an hon. member from the western provinces who does not know that the only way in which the provinces can finance this situation is by loans made from the dominion treasury. We have assisted them up to a point; we have no authority to do more. Until we receive from this parliament the authority contained in the renewal of the statute we have no such power and the provinces will not be able to obtain the grain without paying for it. That is the position.

May I proceed a step further? The suggestion has been made that we should set a limit on what we might require. We have found in practice and by experience that by not having placed a limit upon the measure of last year we saved this country millions of dollars. That is the considered judgment of the best business men in Canada. The bankers and great commercial men had their doubts at first, but they have been free in their expressions of opinion that by reason of this fact we have been able not only to supervise but to insist upon a measure of economy which otherwise would not have prevailed.

The hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) referred to certain matters in connection with the administration of this relief act in one of the provinces. If he has any complaint at all to make, it is that we have not agreed to a reckless and extravagant expenditure of public money. In order to correct a misapprehension, may I say here that the hon. gentleman and one or two others have suggested that a commission should be appointed in each province to deal with these matters. I tried to make it clear the other day that this parliament has no power to create a commission to function in provincial matters within a province—that is the business of the province and the business of no one else. As long as the province have their pride and their jurisdiction they cannot be made wards of this dominion. A commission was set up in Saskatchewan, but it was set up by the provincial administration. It is true that we exercised supervisory control, and even more than that, we put in an accountant for the purpose of checking and rendering assistance to see that the greatest economy possible was practised in this time of stress.

One step further. Does or does not an emergency exist in this country? A year ago this house said it did; in August last it said it did, and in the speeches of the right hon. the leader of the opposition and other hon. members it has been said that such a condition does exist. If that be so, have we not the right to ask that in view of these extraordinary conditions the powers which we have safely and decently exercised during the last few months should be continued for the next six weeks? Is that fair? It has been suggested that there is some ulterior motive behind the desire that this statute be revived. I say here on behalf of the government that I know of nothing in connection with this statute that is contemplated or that is not known to this house at the moment. I know of nothing, but I do not know what might happen in twenty-four hours, as I shall indicate presently. There is no desire, there is no knowledge of any projected so-called legislation, about which I shall presently speak, or of any orders in council; there is nothing but a sincere and earnest desire on the part of a committee of this house, supported by a majority of this house in a constitutional fashion under the institutions created and built up, to see to it that their fellow Canadians are made as comfortable as possible under the conditions which prevail.

May I remind this house that we expressed some months ago the hope that no man, woman or child should be hungry during the past winter and that there should be no occasion for the civil disturbances which have been apparent in other countries. It is a matter of some pride and satisfaction to think that, in the main, has been accomplished.

Let me proceed to the second branch of the case. We have, it is said, asked for power, while parliament is in session, to pass orders in council for the peace, order and good government of Canada. The ex-Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) thought it was under that provision we dealt with the problems connected with the grain trade and the sale of wheat. If he will look at the statute to which I have just referred, he will find that one of the specific subdivisions of section 3 was to enable this dominion to guarantee repayment of moneys, and in furtherance of the powers thus specifically conferred and in pursuance of the understanding if the grain was not sold, the order in council to which he has referred was passed. But we did decline, as the house is aware, to guarantee a fixed price for grain. If there are fair-minded men who are not unwilling to bear tribute to at least the business acumen of their fellows, I think, having regard to the experience of the United States Farm Board, they will conclude that we were at any rate sound business men. That, I think, can be said with safety.

Now we come to the second branch of the case. I have heard appeals made to high heaven to save the shattering constitution from destruction. I have heard for twenty minutes a peroration from an hon. member who appealed to all the history of the past and the hope of the future to save Canada from destruction at the hands of this government. I have heard hon. members say that never, never, never had such a thing been done before. What would happen, we were asked in frenzied tones, if such an effort were made in Great Britain? What would the mother country say if any such effort as this were made?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh!

Mr. BENNETT: I am glad hon. gentlemen opposite, not having heard themselves, now understand how it sounds. Perhaps the hon. member for Vancouver Centre, recalling the words of his countryman, will say:

> O wad some power the giftie gie us
> To see oursels as ithers see us.

With apologies to the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan). If the house will be good enough to turn to chapter 48 of the statutes of Great Britain, an act passed on September 30, 1931, they will find that the mother of parliaments not only gave power to the executive to deal with problems to which I shall presently refer, but gave it to them on the distinct understanding that it must be exercised in thirty days while parliament was still in session. Listen to these words:

> An act to authorize the making of orders in council for the purpose of effecting economies in expenditure falling to be defrayed out of public moneys and improvements in the arrangements for meeting such expenditure.
>
> (30th September, 1931.)
>
> Be it enacted by the King's Most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:—
>
> 1. (1) During the period of one month after the commencement of this act, His Majesty may, in respect of the services specified in the schedule to this act and in respect of the remuneration (otherwise than by way of pension assessed before the commencement of this act) of persons in His Majesty's service, make such orders in council as appear to him to be expedient for the purposes of effecting economies in the expenditure falling to be defrayed out of the consolidated fund, out of moneys provided by parliament, or out of any fund established by the enactments relating to any of the said services, and of effecting improvements in the arrangements for meeting such expenditure; and, in particular, without prejudice to the generality of the said power, any such order may make provision—
>
> (a) for altering the respective proportions in which expenditure in respect of any such service is to be defrayed out of any fund so established as aforesaid and out of moneys provided by parliament and for making transfers and adjustments between any such funds or between any such fund and any other statutory fund;
>
> (b) for imposing duties on local authorities in connection with the administration of any such service;
>
> (c) for increasing the contributions to be made to the unemployment fund, and for securing that, as from the date on which the treasury cease to have power to make advances for the purpose of meeting deficiencies in that fund, any such deficiency shall be met out of such moneys as may be provided by parliament for that purpose;
>
> (d) —

And I ask my hon. friends who, in their frenzied appeal, talked of this legislation in the terms in which they did, to listen to these words.

> (d) for the modification or termination of statutory or contractual rights, obligations and restrictions subsisting at the date when the provisions of the order take effect.

That, it is true, was a national government. That, it is true, was a government in Great Britain. The act continues:

(2) The minister designated in any order in council made under this section, may make regulations for giving effect to the provisions of that order in respect of such matters as may be specified therein.

(3) Any order in council or regulations made under this section shall, as from such date not earlier than the first day of October nineteen hundred and thirty-one as may be specified in the order or regulations, have effect notwithstanding anything in any enactment.

2. This act may be cited as the National Economy Act, 1931.

There is a statute passed by the mother of parliaments, a statute that enabled the executive, while parliament was in session, to set at naught contracts and to deal with matters notwithstanding any enactments, to impose new duties, fresh obligations, to vary the sums of money and contributions to be made by various people, and in furtherance of that power, they did those things. The reason given was that there was an emergency. The reason given here is that there is an emergency. I do not give the reason: it has been given by members who have spoken in the house. Then I ask: In the face of that legislation because of the emergency, imposing upon the executive while the house was in session the obligations which I have indicated; in the face of the fact that there has been no abuse of the powers conferred upon this executive during the past months, why should there be hesitancy in granting those powers for the next six weeks? But in England, where they have had longer experience than we, it might be well to remember that a debate on a resolution such as this is forbidden; the rules do not permit it. There is no such debate; the resolution is not debatable. The British act was passed on September 30, 1931, and the ministry was charged with responsibility with respect to named subjects and here they are:

Education.
National Health Insurance.
Police.
Unemployment Insurance and Roads.

These being the services with respect to which orders in council might be made under the act. When that bill was passed, the resolution upon which it was predicated was not debatable. The House of Commons acted promptly; the measure was made effective speedily and all those cuts in salaries about which talk has been had in England, including unemployment insurance, teachers' salaries, police, work upon roads was done by the executive, under power given to them, while the house was in session, and they were to exercise it while the house was in session. I feel this: when an old country such as that with a population of 40,000,000, where liberty and regard for liberty are valued as they are takes such measures as these, it might well be said that in this new country we could surely afford in time of emergency to follow their example. But we have there the conception that Mr. MacDonald has indicated of what the duties of an opposition are, and that to oppose for opposition purposes only is a crime against the state.

Now let us proceed a step further. What did we do under the provisions respecting peace, order and good government? I have not time this afternoon to review the difficulties which the government has had to experience during the last six months. All I can say is this, that no man in this house need envy the position of any cabinet minister under present conditions, and I think none does. At least, I think some are grateful that they have not responsibility. But leaving that, may I say this? We were confronted with this one problem for example—and I will put it to the house promptly—the export of gold. I am not going to go over the whole ground again, but have the members of this house realized that unless by adequate and appropriate legislation we could deal with that situation, the gold reserves of this country would have fallen to ten million dollars, and then probably to nothing? Let me give an illustration. A group—perhaps I should hardly say a group; I will say men—in Seattle and in New York, I will take only those two points, conceived the happy idea of gathering up large quantities of Canadian bills selling at a discount, or they come in here with American funds and buy our Canadian bills at a discount, so far as they are concerned. They then go to the Receiver General's office and ask for legal tender, which means the promise to pay of the Dominion of Canada, and under the law the Receiver General had to pay them, or else we default; one or the other. As a matter of fact, when they are presented at the Receiver General's office, under the law they have to be paid in gold, or we default. In one instance fifty thousand dollars was presented by a gentleman, and the department had no option. That was the very start of things. The gold had to be found. Hon. gentlemen probably saw the figures as to gold running down. A few days later this gentleman tried a million dollars. Fortunately the long distance telephone made it possible for people who had some influence with him to stop him. Then I was confronted, for I was then at the Finance department, with this problem: How can I stop this? The law said that when our metallic coverage dropped below a certain point I had to go into the open market in this country or outside, anywhere I could obtain it at any price, and buy gold in order to keep up our reserves. That was my obligation as Minister of Finance. The provisions of the Finance Act provide for making a proclamation, in the case of an insurrection or war. But as a matter of fact, all we had to do was to frame our order in council prohibiting exportation under the provisions respecting peace, order and good government. Then, as the gold could not be exported, there was no point in cashing the bills and having gold that you could not do anything with except redeposit it, and the situation became normal.

There were other matters connected with the marketing of the 1931 crop of grain in this country which had to be dealt with. There were other matters, and we dealt with them. There were matters connected with the insurance companies and with the banks. The hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Howard) was very wrong yesterday in saying that we fixed the price of securities. That is not what was done. What was done was this: We said that for the purposes of the balance sheets the banks and insurance companies might value their securities at certain figures which were specified. That was a proper exercise of power, was it not?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. BENNETT: Was it not a proper exercise of power to say to the banks which had bought the securities of this dominion that for the purposes of their balance sheets they could value those securities at the price at which they bought them?

Mr. HOWARD: I think in fairness to me the Prime Minister should state that I did not criticize that.

Mr. BENNETT: I do not know that that has anything to do with my argument, but I thank the hon. gentleman for agreeing so heartily with me and I trust that he will vote accordingly. That was an exercise of the power that was conferred upon us. I said the other day, and I repeat, that I was very reluctant to ask this house to renew that power while the house was in session. I was reluctant, but, sir, my colleagues and myself discussed this matter very thoroughly and very often. Does any gentleman in this house think for a single moment that those who sit with me as the council of His Excellency the Governor General get any satisfaction out of the carrying of an added weight of responsibility? I wonder if they think there is any joy in standing up to be the target for abuse by any person who desires to throw abuse because one is trying to serve one's country. I wonder if they think that my colleagues and myself who labour, not eight hours a day or sitxeen hours a day or eighteen hours a day, but often twenty hours a day during the last six months, find any satisfaction in that except it be that it will be of some benefit and value to the country.

I have listened with the utmost amazement to some of the statements that have been made in this house as to why we should not be entrusted with this power. An hon. gentleman yesterday resumed his seat after I had heard him state that we should not be entrusted with this power because we had increased the mounted police. We did. We made a bargain with certain provinces by which we assumed responsibility for the policing of those provinces, and for which we are being paid. We increased the number of the police, and increased it for other reasons as well—the peace, order and good government of Canada—that there should be no possible chance of the breaking up of those institutions which this country has regarded so highly.

The hon. gentleman went on to say that we provided machine guns. Not a single machine gun is owned by the mounted police. The hon. gentleman said that we had bombs provided for the mounted police. So there were. They were tear bombs to escape the possible charge, if there be a riot or insurrection or difficulties, that the most humane methods were not used for the purpose of quelling it. The constables of Canada, having met, recommended that in such cases tear bombs would be highly desirable, and we supplied our police with numbers of them. Those are the bombs we had.

The hon. gentleman went on to say that we spent $20,000 on a secret service, going around listening to Liberal members to ascertain what their statements would be. All I can say is that the hon. gentleman had great suspicion of himself or else a very poor regard of his fellows if he thought that their utterances would be worthy of suspicion. Let us go a step further. That was put in an order in council for the purpose of taking care of a situation that developed in British Columbia in connection with the Doukhobors who had declined to make returns to the census enumerators, as no doubt most hon. gentlemen read in the press. Not a single cent of that money has been expended. That is the secret service to which the hon. gentleman referred.

There was a further charge that we were not entitled to confidence because of what had transpired about these buildings on a given day when it was said that a hunger strike was to march upon this capital. Well, Mr. Speaker, it does afford me some satisfaction to say to this chamber, and especially to the member who made that statement as to why confidence should not be reposed in us, that we did receive large numbers of communications from various parts of Canada indicating that on a given date there was to be a march upon this capital. In addition to that they were to take possession of this chamber and there promulgate demands against this parliament and the Canadian people, the hour for their visit being fixed at three o'clock. I mentioned the matter to my colleague the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie), in whose department control of the mounted police lies, and he, without in any way indicating what steps should be taken, communicated to the commissioner of police the information that if the evidence was to be relied upon a very large number of people would come here. So, without knowing how many might come, the commissioner of police placed fifty policemen about these buildings,—fifty. Twenty were in their usual uniforms with revolvers at their sides; thirty were mounted, without rifles and with wooden batons so that in the event of difficulties the crowd could be pushed aside without hurt, as has been demonstrated so often in cities like London, and elsewhere, where mounted police have been so usefully employed. There was no armoured car. No tanks are owned by the mounted police of the government. The only armoured car was the one belonging to the Department of Finance which conveys securities from the express office to the parliament buildings.

Now, I put it to this house and to this country as to whether or not we do not owe at least that duty to every man, woman and child in Canada. Who would do less than to take adequate precautions for the purpose of preventing a mad charge upon this chamber, at three o'clock for the purpose of enabling people to express their opinions?

An hon. MEMBER: Oh, oh.

Mr. BENNETT: That was what was said; that was what was to happen. It may well be that the hon. gentleman, who laughs so loudly and who later attended in a delegation which appeared before me, thinks there is no likelihood of it. I myself shared the view that it was not likely such action would be taken. But he who is in a public position and discharging a public trust is recreant to his duty and guilty of malfeasance if he does not take every precaution a prudent man would take to safeguard the interests of the people. I believe that the intelligent judgment of the Canadian people will support such steps being taken.

One other incident was mentioned as to why we are not worthy of further confidence, that to have the police about these buildings was a very un-British act, and that such things would not happen in England. I wonder if any hon. member happened to be in Great Britain during the time of the suffragette movement? I wonder if any hon. members attended Westminster in those days I wonder if they noticed how many fifties there were—not ones and twos—looking after the situation?

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Suffragettes or policemen?

Mr. BENNETT: Policemen. I wonder if they realize that? I merely mention the suffragettes because it goes to indicate how easily misconceptions and misunderstandings may arise.

There is one other matter to which, in all fairness, I think I should refer, because during the progress of this debate it has been mentioned more than once. The suggestion has been made that we are unworthy of support because on a given date an hon. member was voted down without having an opportunity to introduce a bill. Sir, I am delighted to make to this house an explanation of that incident. On the Friday preceding that Monday the Supreme Court of Ontario by a unanimous judgment decided that the evidence given at the trial of certain communists with respect to their having illegal and unlawful assemblies indicated that according to their evidence they were under the direction of Moscow, that moneys were being made available for purposes of their propaganda, and that they themselves had preached the doctrine of force. The chief justice of that court, speaking for all his brother judges, delivered a judgment which I trust every hon. member in this house has read, in which he reviewed the evidence and sustained the convictions and sentences. That took place on a Friday. On the succeeding Saturday telegrams began to reach me, and by Monday the numbers of telegrams had greatly increased. Two things were demanded: First, the repeal of section 98, that section under which the convictions were made, and secondly, the release of the prisoners who had been taken to serve their terms of imprisonment.

I have in my hand a very considerable number of these messages. They seem to be inspired from a common source, because the expressions in all were practically the same. Here is one from Kirkland Lake:

This organization demands federal government receive delegation. Stop. Meet demands repeal section ninety-eight criminal code Canada. Jugoslav Branch Canadian Labour Defence League.

M. Klubrcher,
Secretary.

Here is another:

This organization demands federal government receive delegation. Stop. Meet demands repeal section ninety-eight criminal code Canada.

C.L.D.L., P. Repuska,
Chairman.

Then, here is one from Hamilton:

Repeal section 98 release the working class prisoners.

Czechoslovak Branch of C.L.D.L.

I shall not take time to read more of them. I brought with me only a small number in case any question should arise, because I felt I should make the explanation I have made concerning the telegrams which bore in upon the government demanding the repeal of section 98. In case of such a repeal the release of the prisoners must follow, because if a section were repealed to-day men who had been convicted under it yesterday could not very well be kept long in prison. I believed then, as I believe to-day, that it was not in the public interest that we should enter into any discussion with respect to the matter.

It may be charged—it was charged—that this is the act of a dictator or an autocrat. But, sir, I ask any hon. member of this house charged with the responsibility of office, receiving demands such as this, whether he would be promoting the interests of this country, the peace, order and good government of Canada and the Canadian people, if he were in any sense to show other than the firmest front to any demands made in the terms and under the circumstances these were made. I mention that matter because it has been given as one of the reasons this government should not be entitled to support or should not be further entrusted with power. I say and I desire to repeat that nothing but a sense of the gravest responsibility on the part of this government is responsible for the suggestion that the words "peace, order and good government" should be maintained.

I am going to put this to the house: The right hon. leader of the opposition has said that when parliament is in session all we have to do is to pass a measure. How long have we been endeavouring to pass a resolution? How long? Hon. members say, "Oh, but you may count upon consent being given." Remember this: One member of this house can prevent the rules being set aside. And one member thus being able to prevent the rules of this house being set aside, I ask any hon. member here whether he does not believe that occasions have arisen and may arise when you cannot wait six days nor five for the purpose of taking the steps that may be necessary.

I do not believe that under the provisions with respect to peace, order and good government it will be necessary between now and the first day of May to enact any orders in council. I do not believe it will. My colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) says—routine, the continuance of existing orders in council where that may be necessary. I meant in the way of fresh orders in council, apart from routine in connection with the business of the country. Sir, during the war they were legislating in the east block every day while parliament was in session, and the War Measures Act was maintained in force several years after the end of the war. The Defence of the Realm Act in England, known as Dora, was kept in force in England for years after the end of the conflict, and the other day I looked into the last volume, a volume twice as large as the one I hold in my hand, containing orders in council of all sorts dealing with almost every phase of the life and activities of the country—its political life, its civil life, its social institutions.

Now I go a step further. I would not ask this power from any parliament except reluctantly, and I so stated when I introduced the resolution the other day. But, sir, after discussions between my colleagues and myself, and taking into consideration the views expressed to us by others who look at the matter dispassionately and from the outside, dare we as a government, charged with the tremendous responsibility in this emergency of caring for this dominion to the best of our ability, be without that power? We have said, no. We do not believe that this power will be called into play; nay, more, we sincerely and fervently hope that it will not be. But, sir, what is a man without a weapon in the midst of armed force? What is a man who has no instrument for his protection in the midst of the strife of brigands? Without this power we should be without a weapon that could be used except through a bill in parliament; and with the strange views that obtain in these days there is no assurance that the mind of the government would be sufficiently strong to secure consent for any measure it might introduce. And from what we know and have seen, we should certainly be opposed with respect to consent. Then the matter would go its weary way, for there is another chamber to be considered before legislation is enacted; and in the meantime the injury may be done.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): What?

Mr. BENNETT: Almost anything. What about the gold standard? Could anyone have foreseen that Great Britain was going off the gold standard?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Yes.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BENNETT: Well, all I can say is, I hope that the hon. gentleman used his prescience to good advantage. But if he was as wise as he now suggests I can only say that he was one of very few on the American continent who foresaw what would happen. I will give him firsthand information on that point. One at least of our great institutions sought information on that point only a short time before and the answer was that there was not the slightest likelihood of any such event occurring; and after the loan was made from the United States and France it would indeed have been a wizard who could have foreseen it. I recall meeting the president of one of the American financial institutions who happened to be in Berlin on the Sunday following the day on which the bank of England had gone off the gold standard. It was not then public; the announcement had not been made. A director of the Reichsbank told him that it was so and he telephoned through to Newport in America, and that was the first information which his partner in America had that such an event had taken place. We heard it late on Sunday night; when the message was decoded it was well on in the evening. If the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) foresaw it, he might at least have done me the honour of telegraphing me.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): If the right hon. gentleman had read Einzig's "The Fight for Financial Supremacy" and "Behind the Scenes in International Finance" he would have foreseen that some of the leading European economists predicted this very thing.

Mr. BENNETT: I cannot see what relation the Einstein theory has to the gold standard.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Not Einstein, Einzig.

Mr. BENNETT: I only mention this as one illustration of the necessity for action being taken promptly. Could we have called parliament together with gold depleted and reserves gone?

Mr. EULER: Was it not possible under the Finance Act to prohibit the exportation of gold?

Mr. BENNETT: No, not unless you declared a position that no one, having regard to the credit of the country, cared to take, and which bankers felt would be exceedingly disastrous to the country—insurrection, war or other conditions which the hon. gentleman will see if he takes the trouble to look up the act. That was the real difficulty. I put to the house, therefore, the question whether it is unfair or unreasonable to ask for such powers between now and the first of May. I may say to the house what my intention is. I have discussed it with my colleagues and I see no harm in intimating that, instead of asking for the right to pass orders in council with respect to peace, order and good government after the first of May, we shall specify the statute with respect to which we believe it may be essential in a time of crisis to enact reasonable regulations or orders in council.

Mr. LAPOINTE: A slight improvement.

Mr. BENNETT: It will be a very great improvement. As I have said in this house repeatedly, you cannot deal with emergent conditions on the basis on which you deal with everyday conditions. The only difference between us is that hon. gentlemen opposite, while with one breath they say that an emergency exists, with the next state that you must be governed by non-emergent regulations. While on the one hand they say that the conditions of a crisis exist, on the other hand they say that it is nothing but ordinary, humdrum political warfare. That is not our position; and with a full consciousness of exactly what is involved in the observations I have made, my colleagues and I are firmly convinced, although we hope and believe that there will be no occasion to use the power asked for, that we dare not go forward during the next six weeks without having such power conferred upon us. And it is not for self-advantage; it is not for personal aggrandizement; it is not for the purpose of advancing our political fortunes; and it certainly is not for the purpose of giving us any greater comfort and ease. If we do it, we do it for the reason that they did it in England with parliament in session. If we do it, we do it for the public weal. If we do it, we do it in order that the integrity of the country may be maintained in the greatest national crisis it has ever known.

Last night the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) having realized the seriousness of the position in which he had placed his party, made up his mind that the proper thing to do was to escape, if possible, by saying "If you will do what I want you to do, all will be well." If hon. members will look at his observations they will find that he said, "If hon. gentlemen will do so and so, mention $10,000,000, $50,000,000, $100,000,000, or $200,000,000, the bill will be passed. If they will yield their viewpoint to ours, although it is true we are only a minority, all will be well. Let us be the dictators; let us be the autocrats; let us say what shall be done. Give up government; subordinate your views to ours; abrogate the functions of parliament and we will govern." The people of Canada thought differently in 1930, and so far as their will has been recorded since, apparently they still think differently.

I observed that the right hon. leader of the opposition spent a great deal of time showing how great was his anxiety that this bill should pass; in fact his anxiety was so great that at one time I thought that in his heroic struggle to enact it he would exhaust himself, so great was his anxiety for the public weal, so great and desperate his efforts on behalf of Canada, the unemployed and the seedless farmers in the west. But when we analyse it all it resolves itself into this: First, that there has been delay. I should like to make clear just what were the circumstances. When we came into this house on February 4, we contemplated, of course, the necessity of asking for an extension of time in connection with this bill, and we assumed that it would pass as a matter of course, from the fact that it had worked out fairly satisfactorily, and that no complaints of any serious character had been made. It was a great surprise to me when I found the right hon. leader of the opposition expressing himself in the terms he used. But I could not go forward for this reason: We put upon the order paper on February 23 a notice that we would ask for the extension of this bill until May 1, just as it stood. But in fairness I realized that hon. gentlemen opposite were entitled to information as to the administration of the act. For instance, on March 1 I find that the ex-Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) asked when he might expect the return of the orders in council passed by the government. To use his own words, the hon. gentleman stated:

> May I ask the Prime Minister, before the resolution is proceeded with which he has placed on the order paper for the purpose of extending that statute from March 1 to May 1, that there be brought down all the orders which have been passed thereunder since last year, so that we can discuss his resolution intelligently.

In reply I said:

> It is intended to lay upon the table of the house all orders passed under the authority of the statute to which the hon. gentleman refers. They comprise a considerably large number of orders in council, and the report which the Minister of Labour proposes to table will cover them all.

It will be seen at once by the house that it was difficult to give that information at the end of the month, because undertakings were proceeding, and it was necessary that action should be taken from time to time in connection with the payment of accounts due provinces and in connection with the undertakings we were carrying on. We had the galley proofs of that report for weeks, but that report had to be brought up to date in order to make it complete. It will be recalled that on the very day that I rose in my place and moved that the Speaker leave the chair in order that the house might consider the resolution, the Minister of Labour laid that report upon the table. I apologized to the house at that time because a greater opportunity was not given for consideration of that report before the motion for consideration of the resolution was made; I meant that, because I believed it desirable that hon. gentlemen should have an opportunity to see from the report just what we had done.

That was the real reason for the delay. Had I thought there was any likelihood of difficulty arising on that score I could have easily given that explanation. It is true that Senator Robertson's illness contributed to that delay, for reasons which I think every hon. member of this house will realize. Many of the agreements had been made by Senator Robertson and he desired certain information contained in the report of Mr. Hereford to be communicated to him. But, sir, when the time elapsed and, in the language of the right hon. leader of the opposition, the bill became a dead thing, it was not necessary or essential as a matter of law to have a further submission of the resolution to the committee, for the reason that the resolution as originally submitted was for the extension of the bill for two months, and the revival of the bill by appropriate legislation accomplishes the same purpose. There is no departure from principle. The same principle is maintained, namely the extension of the bill for two months, now only six weeks.

But let me go a step further. It was suggested last night that we were making illegal payments. May I point out that some difficulty has arisen as to the construction to be placed on the original measure, chapter 58, and no bills are being paid. I think the suggestion made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) in connection with the Auditor General has been misunderstood; it should not have been given the meaning which was attached to it by the right hon. leader of the oposition, but just the opposite. There is a doubt, and rather than endeavour to force our views upon any official of the government, no accounts have been paid, and no orders in council have been passed. There was one order in council passed on March 2, with respect to which it was thought there was clear authority, but some question has been raised about that. So we have Manitoba, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Ontario, Quebec and the maritime provinces all looking for money under this bill.

A supply bill would not meet that situation, because these grants are not grants in supply; the measures never begin: "Most gracious sovereign." These are grants in aid, made upon terms and conditions and agreements, just as a few weeks ago we passed a statute in this house whereby we made a grant of $100,000 to the city of Ottawa. It was not in a supply bill; it was surrounded with terms and conditions upon the fulfilment of which the right to the money depended, and so in these measures providing for these payments there are terms and conditions and contractual obligations all of which are mentioned in the agreements and the discharge of which is essential for the purpose of creating the obligations thereby established. There is no analogy between a supply bill and this measure. To say, "I will give you a supply bill," would be like saying, "You ask for bread and I give you a stone." Indeed, it would be like saying, "If you do this, I will do that." A supply bill does not meet the situation; it does not meet the terms, the conditions and the obligations, contractual and otherwise, that surround the agreements that are the basis of the general administration of the act. It is for that reason that we are unable to avail ourselves of any suggestion such as that made from the other side last evening; it is for that reason that the Old Age Pensions Act is in the terms in which it appears; it is for that reason that the grant to the city of Ottawa is in the terms in which it appears; it is for that reason that the grant to the battlefields commission is in similar terms. These could not be covered by supply bills; these are no part of the annual charges upon the revenues of the country; these are no part of the grant which is made to the sovereign in a supply bill, which begins, "Most gracious sovereign." These are parts of grants in aid, which are based upon the observance of conditions and contractual obligations.

That, sir, is the reason why any talk of a supply bill is nothing more nor less than a mere effort to disguise what is the real issue. The real issue is a simple one: Shall the Canadian parliament, through a government supported by a majority in this house, be permitted to reenact, by proper words, the legislation of last session for the purpose of affording relief to the unemployed, and seed grain, food and fodder to those who require it so urgently in the province of Saskatchewan?

I will not trespass upon the time of this house to review, as I had intended, the various statements made in connection with this legislation beyond restating, first, the point which was taken as to the delay and, second, the question as to its constitutional character. Viewed in the light of the legislation enacted by the parliament at Westminster, and in all these cases, the great difficulty is that the opposition fails to realize that these are not normal times. This is not the time for playing high politics, or low politics, and we are in the judgment of the people as to which it is. I will not say more.

However, there is one statement to which I think in all fairness I should allude, and that was the statement with respect to the introduction of a bill and the suggestion that that matter had been settled between His Honour the Speaker and myself. I had no more knowledge that that was on the order paper than has an unborn child. I saw it there and the observation was made, whether by the Clerk or the Speaker, I do not remember, that it should not be there and that was all I knew about it. No one knows better than the right hon. the leader of the opposition that if it were properly on the order paper it could not be removed except by a motion to remove it. No motion was made, and it follows therefore that it was nothing but an inadvertent accident that it found its place upon the order paper. It disappeared without my having any communication, directly or indirectly, with the Speaker or the Speaker with me. I assume it was a mistake in connection with what had taken place the preceding day.

With respect to the delay and the necessity for it, and the fact that the discussion on the resolution had reached a day past the first day of March, I will not say more than that that necessitated only a very simple thing; it necessitated the use of the appropriate words to enable the principle of the legislation to be made effective. In the first instance, all that had to be done was to say that notwithstanding a certain fact the statute shall be taken to have continued to be in force until the first day of May. In the second instance, all that had to be done was to substitute for the word "March" the word "May." There can be nothing in the point suggested as to the necessity for a second submission to His Excellency the Governor General because the rule is that this is unnecessary as long as there is no departure from the principle. During the brief moments at my disposal since the chamber rose last evening, I took the trouble to satisfy myself upon this point.

There is one thing to which I desire to refer, and that is that the discussion on the part of many hon. members has centered about the Prime Minister. I noticed last evening that the right hon. the leader of the opposition associated himself with those attacks in these words:

> And I say, if for no other reason than, as shown here the other evening in the most conclusive language, because of the stand which he himself has taken in dealing with the House of Commons in many matters, this house will never surrender to him rights which have been won for the people through their representatives.

In associating himself with the personal character of the attacks made upon the leader of the government, the right hon. gentleman has substituted abuse for argument. I desire to say to this chamber that I am perfectly content, I have no protest to make or complaint to urge. It is wholly within the rights of hon. gentlemen who have contributed so greatly to this debate and to the elucidation of the difficult problems with which we have had to deal in this time of crisis to substitute abuse for argument, but I had some little doubt as to whether or not one who so prided himself upon his love of tradition and his regard for the high amenities of debate and the principles of British institutions would associate himself with the virulence of the attack made the other evening. However, the right hon. gentleman has seen fit to do this, both publicly and in this house, and I am glad to know that the attack which seemed to be the personal animadversion of one member was the considered attack of a party.

The motion made yesterday by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) that this question be now put was made in anticipation of any amendment which might be made by hon. gentlemen opposite. We had been advised that they contemplated making an amendment at the appropriate moment, and in order that the matter might come to an end, the previous question, which involved an opportunity for further speaking on the part of those who had spoken, was moved. This was moved for two purposes; first, that there would be no further amendments and, second, that an opportunity might be afforded to the Canadian people to ascertain whether the discussion was of the kind that really should be looked for, or indicated merely an effort to prevent the will of the people being made effective through their representatives in this parliament. There need not be much doubt, in view of what transpired yesterday, as to the controlling factor in the minds of those who sit opposite. However, we are content.

The procedure of this house provides a method whereby the will of the majority can be made effective against the autocratic dictation of a minority, and of that we have given notice. We propose to pass this legislation with the aid of the rules provided, in order that those who are entitled to its benefits shall receive them, and for the reasons which I have given, that facing the next six weeks of trouble and difficulty in a great crisis, the time has come when there is necessity for a clear power being vested in the executive to meet a situation which we hope will not arise but which may arise. We will go forward to our task undeterred by the abuse of our opponents or by the efforts on their part to substitute the will of a minority in government for that of the majority. By constitutional practices and privileges this government will be bound, and having a clear mandate from the Canadian people and a clear majority, not being required to be either cajoled or coaxed, we will discharge our duties to the best of our ability as earnest men who are entrusted with power from the Canadian people.

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Shelburne-Yarmouth): Mr. Speaker, after the references we have had to Lord Loreburn and Lord Hewart, after the self-pity which has been manifested by the leader of the government (Mr. Bennett) both for himself and for his colleagues and after the renewed pledge to go forward or perish in the attempt, let us go back to the question before this house. Let us examine whether the Prime Minister has given any valid reason why the government should, as the price of doing its duty by the unemployed in this country extort from parliament a measure to disfranchise the electors and to take away their right to regulate taxation and to say for what purposes expenditures shall be made.

My right hon. friend has strayed a long distance from the question and, as usual, has been most informative in connection with matters of fact and of administration. He has lowered his voice and appeared to take us into his confidence in regard to certain matters; but after all, when somebody reads his speech or has listened to it, will he not turn from his Hansard or from having heard it and say: For just what reason does the government want to insist on resurrecting the monstrosity of a year ago?

I am going to deal with a few of the alleged reasons that my right hon. friend has given, but one will search in vain the pages of Hansard to find a real and valid reason for my right hon. friend insisting on the legislation which he forecast in the resolution that was put on the order paper some time ago.

There is one reference he made to what my right hon. leader (Mr. Mackenzie King) said last night. The Prime Minister intimated that this could not be done by way of supply. He knows as much about parliamentary institutions as possibly does anyone in the house, and I say to him—and I do not think he will contradict me—that he could bring down a supply bill to-day providing an amount in the terms of this measure for the purpose of relieving unemployment and that on the offer which the leader of the opposition made last night, it could be passed in half an hour and become law. Everything which has been done with regard to which he says the western provinces have been so complimentary, could be done under such a bill. After all, what does my right hon. friend really mean when he says that the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act has been reasonably well administered? He is no more proud than we are of the fact that he used that act for the purpose of valuing the securities of insurance companies. He is not a bit more proud than we are of the fact that he stepped outside of the Finance Act and under the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act prohibited the export of gold. I do not think he takes much pleasure in having invoked the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act for the purpose of adding to the strength of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. Those were, he says, extraordinary measures. We have had mixed up with Lord Hewart and the suffragettes the idea that "The bogeyman will get you if you don't watch out." There is an emergency abroad in the country he says, war and insurrection and invasion and that is the sort of thing for which legislation of this kind is invoked.

Before I forget it my right hon. friend time and again referred to a statute which was passed at Westminster in September, 1931. In it, as he claims, he finds the precedent for what he proposes this parliament shall do. Let us look at the statute which he read a few minutes ago and consider the real effect of the legislation which we are proposing to pass here. This proposed legislation is to provide in effect that the government shall have all the powers of the dominion parliament to legislate in respect of peace, order and good government even although parliament is sitting. It will have an unlimited right to draw upon the public funds for all purposes within the ambit of those very broad and general terms. What is the British act to which my right hon. friend has referred and which he says is his authority and a great precedent from the mother of parliaments? It is an act for the purpose of effecting economies in expenditure and it provides that:

> During the period of one month after the commencement of this act—

I shall skip a portion of it because my right hon. friend read the whole of the first section.

> —for the purposes of effecting economies—

Watch this:

> —in the expenditure falling to be defrayed out of the consolidated fund, out of moneys provided by parliament, or out of any fund established by the enactments relating to any of the said services, and of effecting improvements in the arrangements for meeting such expenditure.

The money must first be provided by parliament or out of some fund established by statute. Not a dollar is to be paid out under that statute, it is only providing for an administrative rearrangement of the expenditure in connection with the five departments which are named:

> Education.
> National Health Insurance.
> Police.
> Unemployment Insurance.
> Roads.

Even that is going to be in force for only one month.

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Mr. RALSTON: It says:

> During the period of one month.

Mr. BENNETT: They must pass the orders within the month.

Mr. RALSTON: It says:

During the period of one month after the commencement of this act, His Majesty may, in respect of the services specified . . . make such orders in council as appear to him to be expedient.

Mr. BENNETT: Exactly.

Mr. RALSTON: It goes on:

(3) Any order in council or regulations made under this section shall, as from such date not earlier than the first day of October nineteen thirty-one as may be specified in the order or regulations, have effect notwithstanding anything in any enactment.

Mr. BENNETT: It is in force yet.

Mr. RALSTON: My right hon. friend does not derive much comfort out of that statute when he invokes it for the purpose of attempting to show that the British parliament had given to its government the sort of power which he is proposing under this resolution. I thought that was probably the strongest thing he said by way of reason, but when we look at the statute, we find it is simply one for administrative purposes, for reassignment of duties between different departments, for effecting economies and reducing expenditures.

I am sorry I have not the time that my right hon. friend had. What other matters were dealt with by him? He spoke of the Athabaska election. Although he professed to be speaking from such a high plane in dealing with unemployment generally in Canada he commenced by congratulating himself and his party on the victory they have achieved in Athabaska. He spoke at the same moment of the rule of the majority. Of course he remembers that his candidate, when he comes to parliament, will hold his seat by virtue of about one-third of the votes of that constituency.

Mr. MANION: And the Liberal candidate got one-quarter.

Mr. RALSTON: Yet my right hon. friend talks about the power of the majority and rails against the autocratic rule of the minority. What is he going to say to his friend from Athabaska when he comes to this parliament? The Prime Minister said half a dozen times—and I shall not take much time to deal with this point—that the legislation had worked well. We have dealt with this point during the debate; we have shown the deficiencies in the legislation and in the administration, and when the matter comes to committee, we shall have more to say about it. But in any respect in which the legislation has worked well, it has done so simply because he had the money to spend and under the suggestion made by my leader last night, my right hon. friend can spend money just as well as he could under the statute he seeks to resurrect. Is there any particular virtue or merit in this statute which would enable him to go further than he could if he put the same words into a supply bill and had it passed by the house in half an hour? Is there any reason why my right hon. friend whose heart bleeds so for unemployment at this time, instead of making a two-hour speech in connection with the matter, could not have introduced a supply bill, had it passed quickly by the house and then sent a telegram to Saskatchewan this very afternoon stating that the money was voted? He has not given any reason. He has mentioned two or three possible emergencies. Parliament is here should an emergency occur. Other parliaments are dealing with the same situation as that which presents itself to us. We are not so timorous as my right hon. friend would endeavour to have us in the face of situations in this country. We have met them before and we shall meet them again. We do not want my right hon. friend legislating over in the east block in the morning when we are here in the afternoon to pass any measures that may be necessary. The hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) reminds me that we are told the government are working twenty hours a day. We do not deny that; we realize they are having a difficult time, but they are giving themselves a great deal of unnecessary work in connection with these matters. If the Prime Minister would take the legal, constitutional, decent—I use that word in the legal sense—way of doing these things, he would not have half the trouble he has had in trying, if I may use the expression, to "bull" this iniquitous resolution through, regardless of what the result may be.

My right hon. friend rather twitted my hon. friend from Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) with regard to the fact that he had asked for money in connection with unemployment relief this month. I know that it seems difficult to get it into the minds of our friends across the way, but can we not get into their heads what not even the Prime Minister, much less the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) seems to understand, namely, that everybody agrees to the voting of more money and the money can be voted in a minute if the government really wants the money. My right hon. friend seems to think the argument is about the relief of unemployment, but we are all agreed on the relief of unemployment; there is no question about that at all. The question is whether my hon. friends opposite are going to be allowed to say to the unemployed and the people of this country who need relief: We will do nothing for you unless in addition to the money that is required parliament gives us all the powers of parliament. In other words, unemployment relief is made a mere incident to the demand which is being made by hon. gentlemen opposite for power, and unlimited power. The time they say is one of national crisis, but such times I would point out were lived through by Macdonald in the old days when he occupied the position of my right hon. friend, and such times were lived through by other Prime Ministers, and they did not have to ask for these extraordinary powers. The Prime Minister could only quote the war time as a time when such powers were delegated to the government, and I would remind him, if reminding is of any use, that even in war time there was a definite limit placed on every bill voting money for the purpose of carrying on the war, and as I am reminded, at that time a specific sum was voted every year.

My right hon. friend in an endeavour to special plead a little bit in the matter of a blank cheque trots out some statutes, and he says in effect: Here are some statutes which indicate that we have been given a blank cheque before. But he knows better than that. He knows that the Old Age Pensions Act is not on all fours with this measure, and it does not need a lawyer to draw the distinction between them. The Old Age Pensions Act is an act to appropriate from year to year, practically in perpetuity, a sum which is never exactly known but is always capable of assessment, a sum which was limited in the act to so much per person, and a sum which is granted only after a certificate has been forwarded that a certain expenditure has been made by the province. That has nothing to do with the proposal before us, which is that for the purpose of exercising unlimited power the government gets unlimited grants of money.

My right hon. friend also mentioned the Montreal harbour bridge, and his followers cheered lustily about that. I have the bill before me relating to the Montreal harbour bridge. That bill does not provide as the statute which is to follow this resolution does for the building of a wharf or some other structure down in Nova Scotia, and at the same time for the building of a grain elevator or the construction of a highway in British Columbia. It provides for the construction of one specific work, and for that work alone, a definite work across the harbour of Montreal, a bridge, and it provides that the harbour commission is authorized to build it. The only comfort my right hon. friend can get out of that, if there is any comfort in it at all for him, is that he says the governor in council—that is inferentially, because it says His Majesty—is authorized to guarantee the bonds issued by the commission for that undertaking.

Mr. STEVENS: With no limitations.

Mr. RALSTON: But the limitation is in the work itself. That is expressly specified, and every expenditure under the act is required to be approved by the governor in council before they guarantee the bonds, and as my hon. friend from Quebec East suggests, the money is owed by the harbour commission, and so far as I know the commission is a debtor which probably can pay, and I do not think there will be any difficulty about the government collecting the money or any danger of its being called on under its guarantee. So that instance also goes by the board.

My right hon. friend quoted one more instance, the relief of pensioners. I submit, with all due respect to him, that that is almost too puerile to mention in connection with a measure of this kind. The relief of pensioners, as my right hon. friend knows, is the subject from time to time of governor general's warrants because it is difficult to know just how much money is wanted. Further I would point out that even this year my right hon. friend who was not going to have any supplementary estimates at all from last year, who was going to see that the departments kept within their appropriations, laid on the table supplementary estimates amounting to something like $700,000 for the relief of pensioners. What has that to do with the measure with which we are dealing to-day? Nothing whatever, but mentioning all these irrelevant things helps to make people feel that the Prime Minister must have a vast store of information and gives them the impression that he must know what he is talking about. Many references are put on the record and people feel that they must be arguments or the Prime Minister would not make them. They do not know him as we do. He often makes the worse appear the better reason. He substitutes information for argument, information which while very interesting does not contribute much in support of the particular thesis he is presenting at the time.

My right hon. friend also mentioned that in England the rules permitted no debate on the resolution. Has that anything to do with this? Is there any reason why our rules should not be followed? Our rules do provide for debate on the resolution, and our rules have been made after a study by a special committee, and after a discussion by a committee of the whole house by members on both sides, and those same rules have been invoked quite often by my right hon. friend when he was sitting on this side of the house.

So much for the three or four statutes which the Prime Minister argues provide some precedent for the granting of a blank cheque. Then he goes to the other side of the argument and says: In connection with peace, order and good government, we have found already some reason for having these special powers. The only orders in council he has mentioned have been the order in council with reference to insurance securities, the order in council prohibiting the export of gold, the order in council with regard to the mounted police, and the order in council with respect to the Bank Act, and someone tells me that there was an order in council with respect to the purchase of railway ties by the Canadian National Railway. Well now, in view of the desire of my right hon. friend to give us all the information possible with regard to the expenditures made under this act, it did seem to me that the Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion) was very reticent about that purchase of railway ties. He once more put up the same old defence which we have heard so often since he has been over there, that he knew nothing whatever about the management of the Canadian National Railway. I suggest that he had better inquire into the expenditure of that $1,000,000 for railway ties, because I think he will find something that the government ought to know with regard to it, particularly a government which professes that this act has been fairly administered and the money of the people properly spent in the interest of the needy.

The working out of the act can be summed up in this way. The money was provided to relieve unemployment. I repeat again the figures I gave to my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) when he spoke the other day. I repeat that something like $46,000,000 of federal money has been spent for unemployment relief and about $100,000,000 of provincial and municipal money. I repeat again that 300,000 odd men have been provided with three days employment out of every month since that money was voted; and I ask my right hon. friend, even by and large, and taking it "generally speaking," to use his own phrase, does that show any real provision for unemployment relief, and is that any redemption of his election promises? I submit that from the point of view of affording employment an expenditure of $146,000,000 to provide only about 14,000,000 day's work or an expenditure of about $10 for every day's work performed, is not a very good record.

That is the general picture of the unemployment administration in Canada. I should have liked to deal with the administration of the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act, so far as political patronage is concerned, but will leave that because I want to deal with the position as described by my right hon. leader last night. I submit my right hon. friend opposite has shown in none of the precedents he has cited, in none of the statutes to which he has referred, any reason why unemployment relief should have to be accompanied by these extraordinary features. Let us look at the real position as between the government and those of us on this side. I should like to place before my hon. friends opposite and before the country a restatement of the position, but I cannot hope to state it in as masterly a fashion as did my right hon. leader last night. The position needs restating, and restating constantly, so that my hon. friends opposite may understand.

I am sorry the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) is not in his seat because yesterday he was very keen with regard to this resolution, and he tried to furnish reasons as to why the present and no other procedure could be taken. In passing may I say this: I notice in his speech he intimated the adoption of this measure had been advocated by the premiers of other provinces. I want to challenge—

Mr. BENNETT: I did not say that.

Mr. RALSTON: No, the Minister of Agriculture said it. He was advised by the premiers of other provinces—I thought my right hon. friend would not assent to the remarks of the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. BENNETT: Not in those terms.

Mr. RALSTON: These are the words of the Minister of Agriculture—

Mr. BENNETT: I think not.

Mr. RALSTON: I should like to ask the minister if the premiers of those provinces were ever asked if they would take the money any way they could get it, whether under the proposed measure or any other measure. Does the Minister of Agriculture mean to tell this house that the premiers of the provinces care one bit how they get the money, so long as it is voted and set aside for the relief of the unemployed. My friend trotted them in here and attempted to have us infer that it was their wish that the measure should be adopted in the form it now appears before us.

Now, what is the situation? People are unemployed; they need relief. The government says in effect, "We will not feed and help them, unless two things take place,—first, that you hand over not only the money but all the powers of parliament, and, secondly, that you give us unlimited control." I say Mr. Speaker, that that is putting the thing the wrong way about. I urge that the important matter is the relief of unemployment. The government has endeavoured however to make the acquisition of power the important point, to hang unemployment on it and to use those who are in distress in an endeavour to wring from this parliament what they succeeded in obtaining twice before, namely the total surrender of all the rights of the people. As my right hon. leader has said, they pledged themselves they would not take that action again, and I shall prove that by the remarks of the Prime Minister himself.

What is our position? The government has said relief is needed, that there is an emergency, and that people are starving or are hungry. We say to the government, we repeat it and will continue to repeat it, "Tell us what you think you want; if you want it until May 1, you may have it; if you want it until September 1 you may have it; if you want it until March 31, next year, you may have it. So far as we are concerned, if you are willing to strike out the words 'peace, order and good government' in the act, and are willing to place a limitation on the amount asked for—any limit you may wish to set—the bill may go through, and relief may be granted to-day." That is our position. Why wait for the closure rule to take effect on Tuesday? The action we have suggested may be taken to-day. So far as that goes it could have been taken last week. As a matter of fact it could have been done before the end of February.

My right hon. friend's excuse in regard to delay is pretty lame. If my right hon. friend believed the question of unemployment was so important during the days of the election campaign, if he felt it was so important last session when he asked for these extraordinary powers, did he not think it deserving of definite comment in the speech from the throne? Surely in his view the little bit of soft soap which appeared in the speech from the throne, to the effect that conditions are improving, was not sufficient. Did he not at that time think the matter of unemployment had to be grappled with? If it was not important then why are we now confronted with this emergent legislation as if the whole national structure was falling around us. At the time of the speech from the throne the Prime Minister did not seem to think that unemployment was a serious problem. After parliament opened he seemed to forget all about it until on February 26 someone woke up and said, "The best thing we can do for the unemployed is to rub out the word "March" and put in the word "May", in the old statute and run her along for another month or more."

Let us see what my hon. friend thought in 1931 about peace, order and good government, and the usurpation of the rights of the people. Let us see what he pledged at that time. My right hon. friend seems to think that this legislation is no invasion of the rights of the people; he seems now to think it is perfectly proper that rights of parliament should be vested in members of the government. We would hear a storm from my right hon. friend however if he were on this side of the house and any of the powers he now seeks should be vested in a Liberal government led by my right hon. leader.

A year ago, the Prime Minister was faced with a very determined protest and yet he asks us to believe that he thought this year that we were going to pass the present measure and that matters were going to run smoothly. He could not have forgotten that a year ago there was a prolonged debate on the resolution when hon. members on this side of the house protested vigorously against granting parliamentary powers to the seventeen gentlemen on the cabinet benches, and against giving them a blank cheque. Certainly he had no right to expect the present measure would go through without opposition, because if he remembered his experience of last year he must have known better. He was warned at that time. Hon. members on this side of the house pointed out that he was usurping the powers of the people. What did he do then in order to make the act less obnoxious? The Prime Minister of Canada gave his pledge that after March 1 of this year he would not further usurp the rights of the people. Here is what he said, as it appears at page 4448 of Hansard for the year 1931:

> I am not without full realization of what is involved in the bill, but in order to meet my right hon. friend I will shorten the time to March 1, and make it clear that we have no desire to usurp powers as was suggested.

Mr. BENNETT: Hear, hear.

Mr. RALSTON: The bill originally was for March 31; the right hon. gentleman opposite admitted that to have the bill run to March 31 at a time when parliament was sitting would be a usurpation of powers, and therefore he limited it to March 1. What was the situation? The situation was that last year parliament met on March 12. I have no doubt my right hon. friend expected that this year it would meet about the same day, and he was content that the date of expiry of the bill should be coincident with the meeting of parliament. He indicated plainly that if this bill were in force this year while parliament was sitting there would be a usurpation of the people's rights.

In the light of what is now proposed I should like again to read from the statement made last year by the right hon. gentleman:

> I will shorten the time to March 1 and make it clear that we have no desire to usurp powers as was suggested.

Now what does he purpose doing? I shall paraphrase his words, "I will lengthen the time to May 1 and make it clear that we do desire to usurp the powers, as was suggested." This is the right hon. gentleman who brushes to one side a constitutional question and says there is nothing in it, but who last year promised this parliament and country that after March 1, 1932, that monstrosity passed last year would not be upon the statute books.

My right hon. friend has given a number of instances in which he says extraordinary powers might be useful. There have been pointed out time and again the possibility of the extraordinary use of such powers, uses which would be quite within the letter and the spirit of the statute. Instances were given the other night. Let me remind the house that, if this bill becomes law, until May 1, with parliament sitting, my right hon. friend and his government if they liked could disfranchise any member who dared to criticize the government. Sitting over in the east block he could pass an amendment to the elections act. He has already amended the Insurance Act and he could amend any other statute. He has probably looked into this aspect of the matter or he would not have come here at all; but I am not so sure that if he had taken time by the forelock, if he had thought of it in time, he might not have succeeded in perpetuating himself by amending and extending the act by order in council before it had expired. Evidently he did not want to take that chance. He came here on February 26 and asked for what he calls a renewal of the act, but it is not a renewal. He speaks of a continuance of the act, but as we have pointed out to him, there is going to be a definite break between March 1, when the act expired, and the date when the new act is assented to, and my right hon. friend will not have any legalization for what has been done in the meantime.

I am trying to dig out all the reasons I can which have been given as to why this particular bill should become law. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) said that they needed the machinery provided under this bill; he says that this machinery is necessary, because there would be less disturbance if it were kept in operation. Let me ask: Is there any machinery in the world that would be changed in connection with the expenditure of the money whether it were spent under an ordinary parliamentary vote or under this statute. There is a director of employment, and he would still spend the money if it were voted under a supply bill founded upon estimates, just the same as he would spend it under this act. There are still subdirectors of employment in the different provinces; there is still the Department of Labour; exactly the same machinery would be used in either case, and the same kind of dollars would be paid out. I am afraid that in some cases the same sort of men would be employed in connection with the work, but I am sure there would be no change nor would there be any dislocation because of the fact that the money did not happen to be voted under this act but under an estimate passed by committee of the whole house and subsequently included in a supply bill. The only machinery wanting under the old act is provision for a director of peace, order and good government, and I think my right hon. friend will probably take care of that office himself. There is no need of any more machinery; there is no fear of dislocation of any kind or description. Canadian dollars are Canadian dollars no matter how they may be voted, but my right hon. friends demand that these Canadian dollars be accompanied by a complete surrender of all the rights of parliament and of the people.

I have spoken of the delay which has taken place, and in the moment or two left me I want to point out the situation in which my hon. friends opposite find themselves to-day. As a result of an absolute, callous indifference to this question of unemployment, as a result of the way in which hon. gentlemen opposite have treated it since the election this is the situation. The act has expired. A resolution was put on the order paper on February 26 but was never touched or mentioned by the Prime Minister until March 8, and the debate has been going on since that time; and the position in which my right hon. friend finds himself to-day is that he had to have his Minister of Agriculture move yesterday that the question be now put. And this afternoon the right hon. gentleman has himself put on the gag by giving notice of closure on Tuesday next. What is the situation so far as supply is concerned? To the motion to go into supply an amendment has been moved by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Heenan), the former Minister of Labour, which motion has not yet been disposed of. Going into supply automatically is blocked for this reason, that the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) has given the house an undertaking that the government will not proceed with any supply involving the ten per cent cut in civil service salaries, and the only estimates that are left to be considered are estimates of that kind. My right hon. friend will therefore find it necessary to dispose of the debate on deductions or reductions in civil service salaries before he can proceed with supply. And this jam, the position in which my hon. friends opposite find themselves now, is due simply to the delay and the indifference which they have manifested in connection with unemployment from the first of the session, when the matter should have been introduced and dealt with. Moreover, as my right hon. leader (Mr. Mackenzie King) points out, the financial year ends on March 31 next, so that probably the government will be coming to us for interim supply, because the voting of supply has been blocked by their own neglect and delay. Now that is a nice situation in which we are to break up as we go home for Easter.

I suppose my right hon. friend will not take any personal assurance from me, but I wish to give him one, and I believe I can get support for it if he still wants money for the relief of unemployment in Saskatchewan. And, by the way, I take the position that Saskatchewan is not the only province that needs unemployment relief. The people of my constituency and my province are in need of relief also. The fishermen there are in sore straits and need relief in the worst way. The only thing they have got so far is an extra lobster season to give them the great privilege, bless your heart, of six weeks' lobster fishing in the bleak months of December and January. That has been the extent of the unemployment relief they have obtained, with the addition of small works in connection with breakwaters and things of that kind. No real attempt has been made to assist the fishermen. Now my assurance to my right hon. friend is that we will stay here this evening and pass—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: And it is now five minutes to six o'clock.

Mr. RALSTON: I am suggesting—

Mr. BENNETT: Talk a little sense anyway.

Mr. RALSTON: I am suggesting to my right hon. friend in all seriousness that we are quite willing to stay, but he does not want money to relieve unemployment; he wants power. Unless chapter 58 is handed over to my hon. friends opposite they will not take the money to relieve unemployment. That is the position. My right hon. friend must admit that there is no need of chapter 58 in the next six weeks. As a matter of fact, there is very little in chapter 58 which he required in the last year. But it has been a good thing for him to have in his hands, as he himself says—a weapon; that was the word he used. But, Mr. Speaker, we are still living, at least we thought we were living, in a democratic country, whose people send their representatives to parliament to take part in the discussion of all legislation. But, from what has been taking place, I do not know what the Prime Minister wants parliament for. I do not see why if we should reenact chapter 58 there is really any need of the House of Commons. He can sit over in the east block and do everything that parliament could do. Why bother with parliament at all? I am going to repeat the suggestion to the Prime Minister, nevertheless.

Mr. LAPOINTE: We can come back at eight o'clock.

Mr. RALSTON: If the Prime Minister wants money for unemployment relief in Saskatchewan, he can have it, and we will stay here until he gets it. Once more, however, he laughs; once more he receives the suggestion with levity. Let me tell him, however, that I am as serious in this suggestion as I can possibly be. If my right hon. friend would open his heart and tell us exactly what he thinks, I am sure that he is as sick as anyone that he ever thought of asking for chapter 58.

Mr. BENNETT: He certainly is not.

Mr. RALSTON: He knows that chapter 58 is no good; his supporters have told him it is no good. I have no doubt that in the caucus held this morning they told him pretty freely and plainly that they thought he was making a mistake in hanging on to chapter 58, but apparently he is going to do so.

Now, Mr. Speaker, just this last word: My right hon. friend, I take it from the way in which he received my suggestion, is not going to stay to-night and is not going to take the money from us. He is going to let the unemployed wait until after Easter, until the dragooning process is put through and parliament is forced to vote this money in his way and in no other.

Mr. BENNETT: Did I understand my hon. friend to say, "Take the money from us?"

Mr. RALSTON: Yes, that is right, from parliament. We are parliament.

Mr. BENNETT: The minority is going to hand out the money?

Mr. RALSTON: We are parliament, and that minority argument does not carry my right hon. friend very far. Every hon. member here is a part of this House of Commons, and every man has an equal right to participate. While my right hon. friend's reference to the government as a committee of this house may be correct in point of fact, really the government are advisers of the representative of the crown, who happen to be members of this house. The right hon. gentleman has admitted that my right hon. leader was right when a year ago and at the special session as well he suggested conferences. My right hon. friend intimates that clandestinely, or apparently not openly, he has had some of these conferences with the provincial premiers, one at a time. I suggest to him that in spite of the twenty hours a day he and his government are working, no more proper thing could be done during the Easter recess than to have a conference called here at Ottawa. We might even adjourn for a day or two longer in order that the Prime Minister might have the benefit of the combined brains and business judgment of people of various walks of life who know something about unemployment relief, who know what conditions are in different parts of the country, who are non-partisan and who are actuated by only one motive, and that is to relieve distress. I believe if he does that it will be possible to bring in a measure which will really implement the promises which he made.

I say this bill does not and has not, in the experience we have had with it, in any way met the promises made by the Prime Minister. It has been ineffectual; it has been inadequate; it has been expensive; it has been extravagant. I want to repeat what cannot be repeated too often, that the money can be made available in the shortest possible time for the relief of unemployment if the Prime Minister really wants to relieve distress. I say, however, that as far as this side of the house is concerned, we do not propose to surrender the right of the people to control expenditure and taxation, which is one of the bulwarks of British institutions. We are not going to hand over the fortress of responsible government without a struggle and we refuse to be a party to this enactment unless by force of the gag invoked by a ruthless parliamentary majority. I tell my right hon. friend that he has forgotten the unemployed altogether in his avarice for power. I believe my right hon. friend would gladly retrace his steps if he had those steps to take over again, because he is coming to realize that his very success in forcing this measure through will be his defeat.

At six o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order, until Tuesday, March 29, at three o'clock in the afternoon.

Tuesday, March 29, 1932

The house met at three o'clock.

POINTE LEBEL, POSTMASTER

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (Secretary of State): I should like to correct a statement made at the last sitting of the house in the formal answer to a question asked by the hon. member for Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot), who made inquiry as to whether one Henri Granier, postmaster at Pointe Lebel, county of Saguenay, was a British subject by birth or by naturalization. As the question came, Granier was spelled Grenier, and owing to that mistake in typewriting, after an examination a report was made that we found no record of his naturalization. But the correct name is Henri Granier who was naturalized and received his certificate on April 22, 1929.

BANKRUPTCY ACT AMENDMENT

Mr. MAURICE BRASSET (Gaspe) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 36, to amend the Bankruptcy Act (Locality of a debtor).

Mr. GUTHRIE: Explain.

Mr. BRASSET: The object of the amendment is to repeal subsection one of section 4 of the Bankruptcy Act and to substitute therefor the following subsection:

Subject to the conditions hereinafter specified, if a debtor commits an act of bankruptcy a creditor may present, to the court having jurisdiction over the locality of the debtor, a bankruptcy petition.

The object of the subparagraph added is to remove the handicap under which a debtor is when an assignment is made at a great distance from his place of business and to avoid additional expenditure in the winding up of the estate.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

FRANCE—FOREIGN WHEAT QUOTA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): About a week ago France undertook to raise to 35 per cent the quota of foreign wheat used in the preparation of bread flour. I noticed in yesterday's newspapers a despatch intimating that on the 27th instant a further arrangement had been made increasing the quota to 40 per cent. May I ask if the government has any information in regard to this matter, and in both cases, the 35 and the 40 per cent, what percentage, if any, of this is Canadian wheat?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): The government has been kept informed as to the decrees that have been passed by the French executive and the figures that have been received by the Department of External Affairs from the representatives of Canada in Paris would indicate that purchases of Canadian wheat during the past year had exceeded 31,000,000 bushels, or twice the quantity that had been purchased in any one of recent years. The exact effect of the decree upon immediate importations is, of course, not known and cannot be known until its operations are apparent.

BEAUHARNOIS POWER PROJECT

GUARANTEES BY GOVERNMENT FOR ADVANCES MADE BY BANKS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (West Edmonton): I should like to inquire of the ministry what amounts have been guaranteed by the government to the banks for advances made to the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): The question will stand as notice of question.

UNEMPLOYMENT AND FARM RELIEF

CONTINUANCE ACT, 1932—MOTION FOR CLOSURE

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I beg to move, seconded by Mr. Guthrie:

That the present debate, namely, the debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Bennett that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee of the whole on the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a bill to amend chapter 58 of the statutes of Canada, 1931, striking out the word "March" in section 8, and substituting the word "May" therefor, and on the proposed motion of Mr. Weir (Melfort): "That this question be now put."

shall not be further adjourned.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Bennett) which was agreed to on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Anderson (Toronto-High Park),
Arsenault,
Barber,
Baribeau,
Beaubier,
Belec,
Bennett,
Bourgeois,
Bowen,
Bowman,
Boyes,
Bury,
Campbell,
Carmichael,
Charters,
Cormier,
Cotnam,
Cowan (Long Lake),
Dickie,
Dorion,
Duranleau,
Ernst,
Esling,
Fraser (Cariboo),
Gagnon,
Ganong,
Gardiner,
Garland (Carleton),
Gobeil,
Gordon,
Gott,
Hackett,
Hanson (York-Sunbury),
Hay,
Irvine,
Jones,
Kennedy (Peace River),
Laflèche,
Larue,
Loucks,
Lucas,
Luchkovich,
MacLaren,
MacMillan (Saskatoon),
MacNicol,
McDade,
McGillis,
McGregor,
McLure,
Manion,
Murphy,
Myers,
Pettit,
Plunkett,
Price,
Quinn,
Ryckman,
Senn,
Shaver,
Short,
Simpson (Simcoe North),
Simpson (Algoma West),
Smith (Victoria-Carleton),
Smoke,
Spankie,
Speakman,
Spencer,
Spotton,
Stanley,
Stevens,
Stewart (Leeds),
Stewart (Lethbridge),
Stirling,
Stitt (Nelson),
Sutherland,
Swanston,
Tétrault,
Thompson (Simcoe East),
Tummon,
Weese,
Weir (Melfort),
White (Mount Royal),
Wright.—83.

NAYS

Messrs:

Ahearn,
Beaubien,
Blair,
Bouchard,
Boulanger,
Casgrain,
Cayley,
Chevrier,
Denis,
Deslauriers,
Dumaine,
Dupuis,
Fiset, Sir Eugène,
Fournier,
Garland (Bow River),
Giruoard,
Goulet,
Hanson (Skeena),
Heaps,
Heenan,

Hepburn,
Hurtubise,
King, Mackenzie,
Mackenzie (Vancouver Centre),
MacLean,
McKenzie, (Assiniboia),
McMillan (Huron South),
Mitchell,
Motherwell,
Neill,
Perras,
Reid,
Rutherford,
St-Père,
Sanderson,
Stewart (Edmonton West),
Thauvette,
Totzke,
Veniot,
Verville.—40.

PAIRS

(The list of pairs is furnished by the chief whips.)

Messrs:

Anderson (Halton), Factor,
Baker, Bertrand,
Barrette, Rhéaume,
Bell (Hamilton), Mercier (St. Henri),
Bell (St. Antoine), Raymond,
Bell (St. John-Albert), Dubois,
Black (Halifax), Dubuc,
Burns, Butcher,
Cahan, Rinfret,
Cantley, Cardin,
Casselman, Howard,
Chaplin, Malcolm,
Cowan (Port Arthur), Ilsley,
Duguay, Boucher,
Dupré, Ferland,
Edwards, Elliott,
Embury, Bothwell,
Fortin, Fafard,
Geary, Mercier (Laurier-Outremont),
Guthrie, Lapointe,
Harris, Jacobs,
Johnstone, Donnelly,
Kennedy (Winnipeg), McIntosh,
Laurin, Fontaine,
Lawson, Gray,
Lennox, Pouliot,
MacDonald (Cape Breton), Urquhart,
Macdonald (Kings), Hanbury,
Macdougall, Euler,
McGibbon, Power,
Maloney, Young,
Matthews, Moore (Ontario),
Morand, Parent,
Mullins, Howden,
Nicholson, Bradette,
Perley (Qu'Appelle), Munn,
Perley, Sir George, Marcil,
Porteous, Macphail (Miss),
Rhodes, Ralston,
Robinson, Desrochers,
Rogers, Woodsworth,
Ross, Roberge,
Rowe, Lacroix,
Ryerson, Taylor,
Sauvé, Séguin,
Smith (Cumberland), Duff,
Spence, Fraser (Northumberland),
Stitt (Selkirk), Weir (Macdonald),
Stinson, Hall,
Sullivan, Brasset,
Turnbull, McPhee,
White (London), Gershaw,
Willis, Brown,
Wilson, Vallance.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. WILLIS: I was paired with the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown). Had I voted I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. McINTOSH: I was paired with the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Kennedy). Had I voted I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. MALONEY: I was paired with the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young). Had I voted I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. CAHAN: I was paired with the hon. member for St. James (Mr. Rinfret). Had I voted I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. SPENCE: I was paired with the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Fraser). Had I voted I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. VALLANCE: I was paired with the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Wilson). Had I voted I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. BERTRAND: I was paired with the hon. member for Toronto Northeast (Mr. Baker). Had I voted I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. DONNELLY: I was paired with the hon. member for Cape Breton North-Victoria (Mr. Johnstone). Had I voted I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. BRADETTE: I was paired with the hon. member for East Algoma (Mr. Nicholson). Had I voted I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. MATTHEWS: I was paired with the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Moore). Had I voted I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. LAWSON: I was paired with the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Gray). Had I voted I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. CASSELMAN: I was paired with the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Howard). Had I voted I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. BOTHWELL: I was paired with the hon. member for Hastings-Peterborough (Mr. Embury). Had I voted I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. MARCIL: I was paired with the hon. member for Argenteuil (Sir George Perley). Had I voted I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. MUNN: I was paired with the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Perley). Had I voted I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. SAUVE: I was paired with the hon. member for L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Seguin). Had I voted I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): I was paired with the hon. member for Toronto West Centre (Mr. Factor). Had I voted I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. WHITE (London): I was paired with the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Gershaw). Had I voted I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. BRASSET: I was paired with the hon. member for St. Ann (Mr. Sullivan). Had I voted I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. RYERSON: I was paired with the hon. member for Norfolk-Elgin (Mr. Taylor). Had I voted I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. EDWARDS: I was paired with the hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Elliott). Had I voted I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. MULLINS: I was paired with the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Howden). Had I voted I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): I was paired with the hon. member for East Hamilton (Mr. Bell). Had I voted I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. MERCIER (Laurier-Outremont): I was paired with the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. Geary). Had I voted I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. RHEAUME (Translation): I was paired with the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinongé (Mr. Barrette). Had I voted I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. ROBERGE (Translation): I was paired with the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Ross). Had I voted I would have voted against the motion.

UNEMPLOYMENT AND FARM RELIEF

CONTINUANCE ACT, 1932—CONSIDERATION OF RESOLUTION

The house resumed from Wednesday, March 23, consideration of the motion of the Prime Minister that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee of the whole on the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to introduce a bill to amend chapter 58 of the statutes of Canada, 1931, striking out the word "March" in section 8, and substituting the word "May" therefor, and on the proposed motion of Mr. Weir (Melfort): "That this question be now put."

Hon. PETER HEENAN (Kenora-Rainy River): Fortunately, Mr. Speaker, the carrying of the closure motion does not prevent us from drawing to the attention of the country that closure is being applied in this case for one reason and one reason only, and that is to permit the government of Canada to legislate by order in council, so that the government may do in the east block the things which they ought to do in this house of parliament. The government is asking for a blank cheque to spend the money as it pleases, and not in the interests of the unemployed. This is but one more evidence of the fact that the Conservative party and this government is again attempting to play petty politics with the unemployment situation in this country. They want to make it appear to the public that they are really sincere in their professions that they want to do something for the unemployed and that they are being blocked by the opposition, but, Mr. Speaker, the people have been too often deceived by such tactics on the part of the Conservative party to take any stock in such representations again. The people are aware that the leader of the Liberal party, even before this debate began, urged the government to bring down a supply bill to provide an adequate sum for unemployment and farm relief and assured the Prime Minister that if such a measure were brought down it would speedily pass the house. The people are also aware that that offer has since been repeated many times from this side of the house. Indeed, with the acquiescence of the Liberal party in this house I had the honour to make to the government as late as March 11 last, this offer, that if they would bring down a measure to appropriate a sum sufficient to take care of unemployment and farm relief in this country we would pass it within the hour. The government persists in telling the unemployed that they will receive nothing unless the parliament of Canada hands over its powers to the cabinet in council. They persist in telling them that distress will not be relieved unless by a measure coupled with provisions for peace, order and good government. Well, they have had some peace, and a little order, but we have seen no evidence of their good government.

The proposal now before us gives no assurance to the unemployed that one penny of the proposed expenditure will be spent on their behalf. It simply gives to the government the right to say whether or not they will do anything for the relief of the distressed. Why keep the unemployed in suspense?

Mr. STEVENS: Hear, hear.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Why, why?

Mr. HEENAN: Mr. Speaker, there is one very significant fact about hon. members opposite: They have no constructive suggestions to make, but—

Mr. GOTT: This ought to be good.

Mr. HEENAN: —but they are always making ignorant cat calls, heckling and using abusive language. Then when hon. members on this side of the house give them a little of it, Hansard will show that they cringe and whine and ask for the protection of the rules of the house.

Why keep the unemployed in suspense? Why not bring in a measure, now?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That is what we are asking.

Mr. HEENAN: Mr. Speaker, last year I had to threaten to keep order myself; I hope I shall not have to follow that course this year. Why not bring down a bill so that this government may do even some little thing, in an endeavour to redeem some of the pledges they made in the year 1930?

Mr. GOTT: What about the five cent piece?

Mr. HEENAN: Up to the present time this government has done little except to supplement the efforts of the provinces and the municipalities. Hon. members opposite have encouraged and induced provinces and municipalities to proceed with large expenditures on public works, and at the present time those smaller communities are unable to go farther. Those contracts were undertaken because encouragement had been given by this government, and they were told they would receive assistance. Indeed, on the one hand they did receive assistance to the extent of approximately $50,000,000, while on the other hand the provinces and municipalities were forced to commit themselves to the extent of over $100,000,000.

I repeat that if this measure were to become law to-day we have no assurance that the farmers and the unemployed would receive one cent. Such a measure would simply hand over to the government of Canada powers which they might use at their own discretion, and they would be in a position to decide whether or not one dollar would be spent. If the government adheres to the principle it has already adopted, namely to supplement only what the provinces and municipalities do, I say, "God take care of the unemployed of this country," because many of the provinces and municipalities are to-day on the verge of bankruptcy. I fear the unemployed will be disappointed just as they were last spring, summer and fall. Why cannot the government bring in a supply bill providing an amount sufficient to attend to the needs of the unemployed? Parliament should be given an opportunity to vote a specific sum so that those in distress may have some assurance that they will receive substantial assistance.

Many excuses have been offered by members of the government as to why the present and no other procedure should be followed. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) gives one excuse, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) gives another, and the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) yet another. I submit any one of the excuses given by ministers of the crown is ample reason why this government should not be entrusted with the powers they seek. Government supporters, many of my hon. friends opposite, who are now laughing, know very well that this government is taking a wrong step. Knowing that, they have busied themselves in an effort to make people believe the opposition has been blocking the relief measure. My reply to that is that the people have been deceived too often by the tactics of the Conservative party to believe any such suggestion. They were deceived in 1930. In that year the Conservative party promised that if returned to power they would end unemployment. They were deceived when unemployment increased as it still continues to increase. The people were deceived when the Conservative party promised that the unemployment problem would be dealt with on a national basis. The deception was completed when this government would do nothing except supplement the efforts of provinces and municipalities. On the one hand the people thought that this government had assisted the provinces and municipalities to the extent of about $50,000,000. They found however on the other hand that they had been deceived because this government withheld public works, old age pensions, technical education and national highways contributions to the extent of over $60,000,000.

We are asked by this measure to hand to the governor in council the rights of parliament, to trust to the discretion of a government which has already attempted to make a mockery of parliament. Hon. members are brought from every part of Canada and faced with a measure which deprives them of their rights. We are asked, in a period of distress, when people want work, to give up the powers which parliament possesses. We are asked to trust to a party which treats with scorn, disdain, abuse and heckling any constructive suggestion offered by hon. members on this side of the house. We are asked to trust a party which said in the year 1930, "We want no conferences; we want to give the people work. If we are elected to power we will give them work." Now, when all their policies have failed and they have brought bankruptcy on some provinces and municipalities, they cry out for a conference. We are asked to trust a government that on the floor of this house promised to insist on the payment of fair wages on all public works to which federal funds were contributed. Yet after parliament prorogued this government made agreements with the provinces providing for a maximum instead of a minimum wage and stood idly by while the government of Ontario reduced the rate of wages on such works in northern Ontario to thirty cents an hour, although in the constituency of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon) the federal government paid forty cents an hour for the same kind of work. We are also asked to trust a government whose Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion) has admitted that he has reduced the wages of men working on our canals. But he did more than that; he established certain classifications and grades by which the wages of those men could be still further reduced, and when this retrograde step was brought to his attention he enunciated a principle that I have never heard before in this house—that the government proposes to pay not one cent more than private employers are paying for similar work. In other words, if private employers take advantage of the times to treat labour as a commodity and drive men into slavery—and many employers are doing this—then the government is prepared to follow suit. We are asked to trust a government the head of which promised that if elected he would make everyone in this country prosperous; but when all his policies failed he went to the city of Toronto and told the people there that it was only by the grace of God that we could be saved; and then he comes to this house after making that declaration and asks for a blank cheque in order to try to save the country himself. Yes, we are asked to trust a government that during the last election organized the unemployed, furnished them with white ribbons to wear in their lapels, and sent them in to meetings to hiss and jeer at the then Prime Minister and his candidates, and to attend meetings of the Conservative candidates to cheer the great doctor that was to cure all their ills. But after the election when those same men marched to Ottawa to ask for work they were met at the gates of these grounds by an armed force. These same men who in 1930 were told that they were good honest citizens and simply wanted a chance to work, in 1932 are designated as communists and radicals and not to be trusted. How can anyone who has ever given a thought to labour affairs expect that a Conservative government will grapple successfully with any of the problems of the workers? They never have yet, and I do not expect they ever will solve the problems of our workingmen. It is only recently that this government has been converted to the idea of even suggesting any help for the workers. During the 1930 elections the Prime Minister told the people of Guelph: Never trust a convert to do anything that he has not been brought up to do, because he will always make a mess of it.

Mr. GOTT: We have heard that forty times.

Mr. HEENAN: I will give it to you forty-one times.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. HEENAN: The Prime Minister enunciated the principle, "Never trust a convert." I say he is right in that principle, because the Conservative party has only recently been converted to try to do anything for the unemployed.

Mr. GOTT: You are a convert yourself; you were elected first as a Labour member.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. HEENAN: What is more, Mr. Speaker, the Conservative party surely has made a mess of the unemployment situation in this country. We are asked to trust a government that never was able to grapple with labour problems without making a mess of them. The other day the Prime Minister told us about the great victory of the Conservative party in the Athabaska by-election.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. HEENAN: I am glad that my hon. friends opposite are very much pleased with the result of that by-election. Evidently it does not take very much to please them. If they will analyze the figures they will see that approximately 4,800 people voted for the Conservative candidate—

Mr. GOTT: How many voted for the Labour candidate?

Mr. HEENAN: —and over 11,000 voted against the Conservative candidate.

An hon. MEMBER: How many Liberals voted?

Mr. HEENAN: Eleven thousand voted against the Conservative candidate. But if my hon. friends opposite want to analyze by-election results let them look at what happened where there was a straight fight between autocrats and democrats.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Three Rivers.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. HEENAN: Let them look at East Hamilton.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Three Rivers.

Mr. HEENAN: Yes; and in Three Rivers the Conservative party were drowned during the last provincial election. In the next election it will not take even Three Rivers to drown the Conservative party. Let them look at East Hamilton where there was a real fight between democrats and autocrats.

An hon. MEMBER: Why didn't you put up a candidate?

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I must ask hon. gentlemen to desist from interrupting. Members in this debate are limited to twenty minutes, and even if they are given all their time without interruption they may not be able to say all they want to say.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. HEENAN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker; it will not take me many more minutes to tell all I want to tell about this government. I submit that we could not possibly trust this government—a government that went down into Quebec and the maritime provinces and deceived the old people by promising them that if returned to power they would treat old age pensions as a federal obligation. This induced the governments of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick to postpone taking pensions and as a result of the failure of this government to redeem its promise the old people of those provinces lost the benefit of old age pensions. We cannot trust these autocrats to do anything. I say to them: Bring in a supply bill even at this late date and give us an opportunity to provide for unemployment and farm relief; bring in a supply bill and we will pass it this afternoon.

Mr. THOMAS McMILLAN (South Huron): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I desire again to emphasize that in common with every member on this side of the house I am ready and willing and anxious to help the government pass any reasonable supply bill if it is introduced in a constitutional manner; but, so far as I can prevent it, I am not willing to allow any measure to be passed in the autocratic manner in which the government is attempting to force their proposals through the house. If we as members are here for any good purpose it is to try to hand on to those who come after us the free representative institutions which we now enjoy. The freedom which we and every other country enjoy under British parliamentary institutions is due to the sacrifices of our ancestors, and it is our duty to make similar sacrifices for those who succeed us. What difference does it need to make to us personally if conditions in this country are never any better? It will only be a few short years until we too are off the scene. So that if we are here for any good purpose whatever it is to hand on to those who come after us that degree of freedom and liberty which we now enjoy. If we are here for any other purpose, it would be better for ourselves and for our country if we were a thousand miles away.

After the convincing manner in which my honoured leader presented the whole question on Tuesday last there was no good reason why the Prime Minister should not have withdrawn his resolution and introduced a supply bill, had he wished to proceed in a constitutional manner. However, he has shown in the most unmistakable way that he is always ready to ride roughshod over the rights of parliament, and he is setting precedents which may guide and direct Canadian parliaments in the days that are to come. The Prime Minister asked this house if it did not agree that in the main the relief measures of the government had worked fairly satisfactorily. An honest review of the facts should tell him that they have been dismal failures.

What are the facts of the matter? Briefly stated, they are these: The Prime Minister, appealing to the electorate at Sarnia, Ontario, in July, 1930, said:

> Canada is now in a critical condition. Unemployment exists on a scale never before known in the history of this country. All by reason of the policies of the Mackenzie King government.

At Moncton, New Brunswick, in July of 1930, he said:

> Mr. King promises you conferences. I promise you action. He promises you consideration of the problem of unemployment. I promise to end unemployment. Which plan do you like best?

At Montreal on June 26, 1930, he said:

Unemployment has become a national problem in Canada. The first duty of the Canadian government is to provide work for Canadians.

Mark you, Mr. Speaker; he said this was the first duty of the Canadian government. According to the words of the Prime Minister, unemployment had ceased to be a municipal and provincial problem and had become a national problem, which should be dealt with in a national way. He did not then say "I will hand to some other authority the power to deal with this matter." No; he said, "I promise to end unemployment" and the electorate took him at his word. He called the special session of September, 1930, presumably to end unemployment by federal means, and at that session he jammed through a vote of $20,000,000 presumably for that purpose. But in as little time as it takes to tell he scrapped the whole theory of ending unemployment by federal means, and saddled upon the municipalities and the provinces more than 75.4% of the entire burden. No time was given for discussion; this vote and the changes in the tariff, were forced through parliament by the threat that until these measures were passed the Prime Minister would refuse to leave Ottawa to attend the Imperial conference. Every member of the Liberal party wanted to facilitate, and in fact did facilitate, his going to that conference, but subsequent events have demonstrated that it would have been a good thing for this country if the Prime Minister could have been tied hand and foot so he could not have left. It would have saved this country a lot of humbug.

Time went on, and as the right hon. gentleman continued his policy of humbug, the number of unemployed increased from 117,000 in September of 1930 to 379,000 in October of 1931. Now, according to the estimates of the trades and labour council, the number of unemployed has reached the appalling total of over 550,000, and every sensible person knows that throughout the country there are thousands of people not included in those figures. Then the session of 1931 was called on March 12, and we found that unemployment conditions were infinitely worse than ever before. Every hon. member expected to hear something from the government as to what was being done and what would be done in order to grapple with the situation.

Mr. GOTT: I rise to a point of order.

Mr. McMILLAN: For four and a half months, from March 12 to July 29—

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member has risen to a point of order.

Mr. McMILLAN: I have only twenty minutes, Mr. Speaker, and we know my hon. friend sufficiently—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. GOTT: Just between the pages my hon. friend is turning—

Mr. BEAUBIEN: State your point of order.

Mr. GOTT: I am going to state it, and I do not need a prayer book to help me. The hon. member always protests when an hon. gentleman on this side reads his speech, and I protest against my hon. friend reading his speech.

Mr. SPEAKER: I have not observed the hon. member reading his speech.

Mr. McMILLAN: I am within your judgment, Mr. Speaker, when I say that scarcely an hon. member rises to speak without keeping his notes either in his hand or on his desk. There is only one reason why I have my notes before me; this is the worst place on earth in which to speak, and sometimes it gets on my nerves.

Mr. GOTT: Then do not protest when others read their speeches.

Mr. McMILLAN: For four and a half months from March 12 to July 29 we were balked at every turn in our efforts to obtain from the government information which was long overdue. Even in the face of the solemn pledge of the Prime Minister that he would end unemployment by federal means we were continually sidetracked, either by dead silence on the part of members of the cabinet or by such expressions as, "This question can stand," or "The hon. member will be advised when this comes down," or "The matter is purely a provincial one," or "The primary responsibility rests on the provinces and municipalities." In this way the chosen representatives of the people were cajoled by the delusive speeches and promises of hon. members opposite. Finally, on July 29, four working days before the session closed, with estimates totalling millions of dollars waiting to be passed and with other important business still before the house, the Prime Minister introduced this blank cheque proposition. No one can be criticized for saying that this measure was brought down in the dying days of the session, when the thermometer was hovering around 110 degrees and when members were so exhausted that they were not in proper condition to give it the serious attention it demanded. Nevertheless the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens), in defending this legislation, stated that it had been given full consideration. At all events, chapter 58 clothed the government with authority to do whatever they liked and expend any amount of money they thought necessary, with no effective check whatever by the Auditor General, the one official who cannot be dismissed by the government without a two-thirds vote of the members of the House of Commons, but who can only exercise his powers when supply is brought down in the regular manner and earmarked for a special purpose. Under this plan the Auditor General is not allowed to exercise his supervision. On this point the Minister of Trade and Commerce said:

> I invite the house to consider that when an appropriation is passed under supply the purpose for which it is used must be specified, and the Auditor General and other officers of the crown, in scrutinizing such expenditures, always keep the government very closely to the purpose specified in such vote.

That was where the shoe pinched; this government, in their reckless extravagance, did not want to be curbed, so through this blank cheque legislation they managed to accomplish their purpose. It was amusing to be told by the Prime Minister that in order to revive this dead statute it was only necessary to use another of his phrases and say, "notwithstanding such and such a condition." Well, sir, if there is anyone who can make black appear white through his phrases, the Right Hon. R. B. is certainly the gent who can do it. He reminds me of the two old Scotchmen who were conversing outside the door of a country crossroads inn. Sandy said to Donal, "I say Donal, d'ye ken what 'Meetaphysics' means?" "No!" said Donal, "I dinna ken." "Well," said Sandy, "just listen and I'll tell you. If you're tryin' to tell me about something you know nothing about and I know nothing about it either, that's Meetaphysics. And for half your time you are surely guilty of talkin' aboot the likes o'that."

But now, forsooth, as another reason for asking that this act be further extended the Prime Minister wishes a fair application of the test: "Has this act not worked fairly well?" The answer is, that the shameful manner in which some of the provinces have misspent these unemployment relief funds granted from the federal chest, should forever damn such an unsound and indefensible system of financing. It is another vindication of the stand which Mr. Mackenzie King and the Liberal party have always taken, namely, that it is a sad mistake to encourage a system whereby one authority shall provide the funds for another authority to expend without any responsibility for their provision.

Listen again to the words of the Prime Minister of British Columbia. The British Columbia government launched its program, employed 16,000 men, built 170 camps and contracted a cost of over $50,000 a day on the definite assurance of the federal government that it would pay half the cost. The scandalously lavish manner in which their camps were constructed surpasses all reasonable comprehension. Supplies of all kinds were purchased, including 50,000 blankets and over 100 Delco Light plants; and 450 steel wheel barrows were counted at one camp. A foreman had to be appointed to regulate their use. Men got jobs as surveyors whose fathers held high government positions. Other men, with cars, were running about the country with instruments, to lay out bunkhouses, and erect elevated water supply tanks, where no suitable water supply could be found.

To show further on what a lavish scale the money was handled, they built two camps, only a mile apart. Coal was shipped from Vancouver island for fuel purposes, while lots of suitable wood was lying upon the roadside. Is it any wonder that ultimately orders were received from the federal authorities that such extravagance must cease? But not until over $3,500,000 had been expended in this scandalously extravagant manner. Machinery was bought on a scale never before known in connection with relief work. Take the whole country over. During the sixteen months ending with January 31, 1932, out of the entire expenditure of $146,899,219 only 331,145 workmen were given employment for only some 44½ days over the entire sixteen months, or an average of less than 3 days per month. Out of $147,000,000 expended in all, only $35,147,320.80 went for unemployment relief, less than one-third of the entire sum, constituting one of the most scandalously indefensible expenditures ever put over in the whole history of this country. And yet the Prime Minister had the temerity to stand up the other day and tell the house that the scheme had worked remarkably well.

I would like the Prime Minister to tell us where the other $112,000,000 has gone. Verily, were I in his predicament with such a record to my credit I would feel that I ought to be lashed for the remainder of my life.

Take also the administration of that $5,250,000 which has gone to direct relief for those 50,000 families in Saskatchewan, who have been in the burnt-out area for three successive seasons. To think that these people through no fault of their own should suffer the loss of their all, for three successive seasons, and then at the hands of this government be compelled to sign promissory notes, which may hang over their heads for years. Do the members of this government not know of the carloads upon carloads of fruit, vegetables and provisions sent out this last fall from Ontario for the help of those people— almost eighty per cent of which came from my county of Huron?

Mr. GOTT: No. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): And we were proud to come to their succour with this gift, for which we charged not a cent. When it comes to providing out of the federal chest by the government of Canada, or in other words through the whole of the people of Canada, they compel these farmers to sign promissory notes. Just picture the situation. Here are 50,000 farmers who have lost their all; yet, sir, they are compelled to sign promissory notes. An election comes on. Suppose I am in the field as a candidate. All I need to do is to send my emissaries all over that section of the country and warn these people of the obligation which hangs over their heads, telling them that they had better realize on which side their bread may be buttered. This is one of the most detestable stipulations which it is possible to think of. These promissory notes ought to be cancelled at once. It is one of the most detestable tricks which any administration could be guilty of, and so far as my voice would carry, I would stand here to Domesday to insist that the government withdraw that stipulation. I appeal to the better judgment of every hon. member of this house. I know there are many hon. members sitting across the floor, men who are honestly inclined, who in the ordinary affairs of life would not think of stooping to anything of a questionable nature. Why can we not for once in our lives stand shoulder to shoulder and insist that this government shall at once relieve these people of any such promissory notes?

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member has spoken twenty minutes.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron): Thank you. Interruptions constitute the argument, Mr. Speaker, which we always get from Tories who have not a case.

Mr. WILFRID GIROUARD (Drummond-Arthabaska) (Translation): I have followed closely the debate on this resolution and I cannot conceal my astonishment in seeing the government showing such obstinacy and stubborness in adhering to a policy so devoid of results. All those who think rationally over the true state of affairs in this country cannot help but acknowledge that, up to the present, the government has followed a policy of groping in the dark which is disastrous to business as a whole. It is, therefore, not surprising that it is unable, to-day, to give one sound reason to justify this resolution. It must again resort to force by applying the closure and, for my part I would not be fulfilling my duty towards my constituents were I not to protest on their behalf against such an arbitrary measure.

Many good reasons militate against our endorsing this resolution, and I think it should be rejected because it tends to place especially in the hands of the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) a weapon which enables him to uphold a dictatorship in a constitutional country. The Act which this resolution purports to revive is not in keeping with the needs of the people, it has been a complete failure, especially as regards the interests of the farming class. I am further strongly opposed to this resolution because to prolong a measure which has given rise to such gross abuses would be, to some extent, placing our country defenceless under a despotic regime; moreover its enactment would always be a threat concealed, if you wish, but nevertheless a real one, to the maintenance of peace, order and good government.

The act to relieve unemployment and the farming class was adopted at the end of last session. The resolution which preceded it, being moved on July 29, 1931, was intituled: "Power to deal with the agricultural distress and labour situation." That is, sir, a year after assuming power the government is forced to admit, notwithstanding the remedy which it boasted of having alone the prescription and which was to cure all ills, that the situation in Canada, from the unemployment viewpoint, is very serious and that farming is very much depressed. However, the previous year, in 1930, the Prime Minister had travelled through the provinces stating from town to town that his party alone had a policy, the beneficent and immediate results of which were to bring back prosperity to the farming classes and end what he then termed the plague of unemployment. A year elapsed after these fine speeches were made, and the Prime Minister, in 1931, was obliged to ask the house to adopt measures to relieve unemployment and the farming classes. This authority was granted to him. He has now been in power for two years and to-day we are entitled to ask him what results he obtained from this Act. We must judge of the measure which he has had enacted by its results. If it has not produced the benefits expected we have a right to oppose a similar measure. Did the Unemployment Relief Act put an end to unemployment? We are fully aware that those who have no work in this country are more numerous than ever. Has the agricultural distress, to which the Prime Minister pointed in 1931, been alleviated? Never have the farming classes shown such discouragement as they do, to-day. Therefore, if this act has not borne any fruit, if it has not proved an effective remedy, why does the Prime Minister insist that it should remain in the statutes? He has now been in power for two years; it seems to me that we were entitled to expect, at the outset of the session, that the government would introduce in the House a measure which would result in relieving the unemployed and the Canadian farmer. Either the government have made no effort to realize the situation, or if they have done so, they have not sought earnestly the means to improve it or studied the problems with which the country is faced, and that is why, after two years of administration, the Prime Minister is obliged to come before parliament without any remedy to the situation which he was to solve on his assuming power.

However, we have already seen that the actual reason for this resolution is not solely the need for funds, because the Liberal party more than once have stated that they were willing to vote the required money, not only until May—as the Prime Minister requests—but a sufficient amount to last for a year if necessary. The government thought fit to refuse this offer. It was not accepted because they wished to again enjoy the arbitrary powers which the provisions of sections 3 and 4 of the act conferred upon them. These sections authorize the governor in council—that is the Prime Minister—to pass, notwithstanding any act to the contrary, the measure which they may deem necessary for peace, order and good government.

I respectfully submit, sir, that to grant such powers would be equivalent to parliament, of which we form part, surrendering absolutely rights which were dearly conquered; it would amount to proving ourselves traitors to those who obtained self-government, and, especially, it would be making the Prime Minister a dictator, he who assumed power by means of false representations made in all the provinces and who, to-day, seeks to remain in authority by force.

The Prime Minister in the course of his speech, last Wednesday, disclosed, I think, his true nature when he spoke of the delegation of unemployed which came to Ottawa on March 3, 1932, and which included people from all provinces of Canada. After having reported and attempted to justify the reception he gave to this delegation, the Prime Minister expressed himself as follows:

> Now, I put it to the house and to this country as to whether or not we do not owe at least that duty to every man, woman or child in Canada. Who would do less than to take adequate precautions for the purpose of preventing a mad charge upon this chamber, at three o'clock for the purpose of enabling people to express their opinions?

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): He made them mad.

Mr. GIROUARD (Translation): I do not think that such a speech is worthy of a Prime Minister. This, perhaps, is a proof that he is endowed with a great imagination, but it also shows his fears when meeting those who, peacefully, come to parliament seeking work promised by the Prime Minister. In preference to the views expressed by the Prime Minister, I would rather listen to those of a Conservative newspaper, "The Ottawa Journal" which commenting on the government's policy and the Prime Minister's attitude, stated in its editorial page of March 4, 1932:

> The scene on Parliament Hill yesterday was one that no British citizen could view with pride. The task of a government is to govern. But while under certain circumstances performance of that duty may compel the use of force, there is little but revelation of timidity and panic in the sort of thing that was flaunted in the face of Ottawa yesterday. These things were not a revelation of strength: they were a revelation of fear. Strong government is required—sometimes. But there is a difference between strength and hysteria. And it was the latter that Ottawa saw yesterday. Unnecessary fear.

Here is a newspaper supporting this government which condemns in no uncertain terms the way people in this country are received at the gates of parliament, when they come to ask the Prime Minister to fulfil his pledges of 1930.

However, the Prime Minister, in the course of his remarks, went further, and I wonder if, on this occasion, he did not really disclose what was at the bottom of his heart when speaking about section 4 of the Unemployment Relief Act which allows the government to take all the necessary measures, according to him, to maintain order. The following are the views expressed by the Prime Minister:

> I would not ask this power from any parliament except reluctantly, and I so stated when I introduced the resolution the other day. But, sir, after this discussion between my colleagues and myself, and taking into consideration the views expressed to us by others who look at the matter dispassiontely and from the outside, dare we as a government, charged with tremendous responsibility in this emergency of caring for this dominion to do the best of our ability, be without that power? We have said no.

And the Prime Minister adds further on:

What is a man without a weapon in the midst of armed force? What is a man who has no instrument for his protection in the midst of the strife of brigands?

I think, sir, that these few remarks make it clear why the Prime Minister wishes to have this resolution adopted. But before placing a weapon in the hands of the Prime Minister, we have the duty to put to him three questions: Why the need of this weapon? Does the present state of affairs in this country warrant granting such a request? Against whom will this weapon be turned if parliament grants him what he wishes? In other words, what has the Prime Minister of Canada to fear?

I really wonder whether the Prime Minister has not begun to realize that his 1930 campaign, which consisted in depicting with gruesome colours the situation, by exaggerating unemployment and the distress which may have existed, and in stating that should he assume power he would adopt a policy which would immediately bring back prosperity, had given rise to hopes which vanished but nevertheless, left among our people a feeling of deception which was more bitter and cruel among those who had reposed their trust in his pledges. He wished, in 1930, to sow the wind, but he fears to-day to reap the whirlwind. I state, sir, that if the Prime Minister and his colleagues fear that their policy is the cause of so much discontent in this country, not only should we not authorize them to do what they please on behalf of peace and order but it is our duty to let them know that they are to blame for this discontent and that their presence at the head of the administration is a challenge to the maintenance of peace, order and good government in this country. Like all who claim exorbitant powers, and follow only their whims and fancies, the Prime Minister imagined that he had but to raise his voice to have this resolution adopted. Had he given it a thought he would have understood that the Liberal members could never consent to approve a measure which despoils them of their parliamentary rights. He would have realized that notwithstanding all the coercive means at his disposal and the closure which he now applies, the Liberal party will expose before the people the loathsome character of this measure.

There is another point to which I want to draw the attention of the house. The government by virtue of this act has passed laws on many questions: they have, however, neglected the Canadian farmer; they seem to have ignored him entirely. Last year, when the government granted to the western farmers a rebate of five cents per bushel of wheat, we asked that the same favour, the same bonus be given to those in the east who were in the dairy industry. They refused. We again make the same request this year. The budget has not been brought down yet, therefore the government can still meet our request. The Quebec farmer—I trust the Conservative members of that province, who hear me, will join us in making this request—the Quebec farmer as well, I stated, requests the Prime Minister to cease dabbling solely in high finance and to introduce measures which will improve the situation. The Unemployment Relief Act, as its title indicates, was adopted to help those out of work and endeavour to relieve the distress of the farming class. Rather than apply this act where it was needed most, the government made use of it to amend the Bank Act. Instead of having an order in council passed to amend the Bank Act, would it not have been preferable to amend the Farm Loan Act?

Some hon. MEMBERS (Translation): Hear, hear!

Mr. GIROUARD (Translation): All farmers in the east want to see this act amended, they wish to look forward to some improvement. I received, recently, from the "Union Catholique des Cultivateurs de Quebec, Inc." —many members of which are to be found in my constituency—a letter dated March 18, 1932, and signed by the president of that association. The following are a few extracts from this letter:

We believe that our farmers deserve the support of the Dominion government just as much as those of the western provinces to whom was granted a rebate of 5 cents per bushel of wheat for export purposes. Farm loans proportionate to the needs of our farmers are urgently needed. It would be necessary therefore that the loans be 50 per cent of the value of the property, landed property and buildings and that the borrowers be not held to subscribe to the association funds.

Further on the letter states:

The "Union Catholique des Cultivateurs" at three different meetings, adopted a resolution to request that the Bankruptcy Act be so amended as to exclude from its provisions the farmers and settlers whose credit it destroys.

Mr. OSCAR L. BOULANGER (Bellechasse) (Translation): I wish to take this opportunity to participate, once more, in this debate so as to complete the remarks which I made the other day with reference to the failure of this act, so far as the farmers I represent are interested, and which we are now called upon to revive. However, previous to broaching my subject, I wish to discuss an attempt made by the Prime Minister to patch up the present debate. In the course of his speech last Wednesday, the Prime Minister contended that the fighting spirit shown by the Liberal members in the house was simply that of poor losers, that it was out of spite and disappointment for having lost the election that the opposition opposed the renewal of this act, which is designated as the "blank cheque act." I protest against this statement of the Prime Minister and his attempt to qualify this debate as a pitiful one. If we have taken up this struggle, it is because there is a principle involved, and I cannot admit that a question of principle is beyond the comprehension of the Prime Minister and his followers. If there are poor losers in this house, if there are members who took advantage of this debate to vent their spite and disappointment, they certainly are our hon. friends the Conservative members from Quebec.

In the course of this debate they rehearsed the wrangling of the Quebec election—which took place last August—they reenacted the comedy of wholesale election contestations and referred to the Dillon Act. To sum up they took advantage of this debate to throw mud at their province—

Mr. DORION (Translation): It is soiled enough, under the present regime.

Mr. BOULANGER (Translation): —they took advantage of this debate to vent their anger and disappointment upon their fellow-citizens. I protest against this—

Mr. DORION (Translation): I rise to a point of order.

Mr. BOULANGER (Translation): —disgraceful conduct, not to say disgusting, of these hon. gentlemen.

Mr. DORION (Translation): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has no right to characterize as he has just done, the conduct of hon. members on this side of the house. I ask him to withdraw those words.

Mr. BOULANGER (Translation): First, I should like to know what are the words to which the hon. member takes exception. As long as he does not mention them, I cannot withdraw anything.

Mr. DORION (Translation): Carry on.

[Mr. Boulanger.]

Mr. BOULANGER (Translation): We, the members from Quebec, form a small group; we belong to and represent a minority in this house, and the whole country have their eyes on us. I think therefore that it is a disgraceful spectacle to witness members from Quebec attack and cry down their province.

Mr. LAFLECHE (Translation): It is Mr. Taschereau who is attacked.

Mr. BOULANGER (Translation): Let us speak about Mr. Taschereau. If Quebec is the only province which the Dominion government is not obliged to feed on the bottle, it is thanks to the administration of Mr. Taschereau.

Mr. LAFLECHE (Translation): I think that the Quebec government feeds more "on the bottle" than any other!

Mr. BOULANGER (Translation): If there is a province whose finances are well balanced and has resisted the present crisis better than any other in the Dominion; if there is a province which does not need the financial aid of the Dominion government; if there is a province which is not under the guardianship, domination and control of the Dominion government, it is certainly the province of Quebec.

Mr. LAFLECHE (Translation): Why has it a deficit of $16,000,000?

Mr. BOULANGER (Translation): After having registered this protest, I wish to return to the remarks that I intended to make at the outset of my speech.

Mr. DORION (Translation): Taschereau will have a kindly feeling towards you from now on.

Mr. BOULANGER (Translation): I do not need Mr. Taschereau's love to be elected in my constituency.

An hon. MEMBER: That is an easy task, in such a constituency.

Mr. DORION (Translation): Bourassa was defeated in your county.

Mr. BOULANGER (Translation): I have enough conceit to believe that I was elected on my merits, and the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency is, perhaps, not able to say as much. My statements are made not to please Mr. Taschereau, but because they are facts.

The act which we are asked to extend is intituled: "Unemployment and Farm Relief Act," it has been a complete failure so far as farming is concerned. The Quebec farmers received no benefit or advantages from this measure which was enacted to relieve them. Not only this measure did not benefit the farmers and agriculture, but the government, which asks us now to revive this act, which was intended—

Mr. DORION (Translation): This is Easter time.

Mr. BOULANGER (Translation): —to be in the interest of the farming class, cuts down the estimates of agriculture by one-third.

Mr. DORION (Translation): This is Easter time, resurrection time.

Mr. BOULANGER (Translation): The estimates of agriculture were decreased by $3,000,000. When it is a matter of helping agriculture and the farming classes, one does not begin by cutting down the ordinary estimates affected to agriculture. If these estimates had not been decreased by $3,000,000 this year; if the same amount were to be expended as in preceding years to maintain the technical and ordinary staff of the Department of Agriculture, and to distribute the grants which agriculture usually receives from the Dominion government, it strikes me that it would be unnecessary to introduce a special measure to relieve agriculture.

Mr. DORION (Translation): Will the hon. member allow me a question?

Mr. BOULANGER (Translation): With pleasure.

Mr. DORION (Translation): Does the hon. member contend that, under the present régime, the Department of Agriculture contributes less to the province of Quebec than in the past?

Mr. BOULANGER (Translation): Certainly. In the budget provisions of this year the total estimates of the Department of Agriculture are reduced by $3,000,000, that is to say one-third. It therefore follows that the amounts to be expended this year in Quebec will equally be reduced by one-third.

Mr. DORION (Translation): With what year are you making your comparison?

Mr. BOULANGER (Translation): With last year.

Mr. DORION (Translation): Compare your estimates with those of two or three years ago.

Mr. BOULANGER (Translation): There is a cut of one-third compared with last year. It is ridiculous to ask us to adopt a measure to relieve the farming class when, on the other hand, the estimates of the Department of Agriculture are reduced by $3,000,000.

Mr. DORION (Translation): The estimates are similar to those of your party when it was in power.

Mr. DENIS (Translation): Do try and understand!

Mr. BOULANGER (Translation): There exists a Chinese proverb which says that agriculture is the foundation of the economic system of a nation. The economic system of the nation is compared to a tree whose roots represent agriculture; the branches, industry; the leaves, trade.

Mr. DORION (Translation): What becomes of this tree in winter?

Mr. BOULANGER (Translation): When the roots are diseased, the branches dry up and the leaves fall. In order that the tree may remain vigorous and strong, the roots must be kept healthy. That is why we criticize the policy of the government who instead of looking after the roots which gives life to the whole tree, busy themselves with the leaves and branches.

Mr. DORION (Translation): This is the time to notch the trees.

Mr. BOULANGER (Translation): In times of crisis as we are passing through, the government should first concern themselves with the main industry, the one which is the foundation of prosperity and the economic system of a nation: Agriculture. Instead of cutting down the agricultural estimates, this year, they should have increased them. Instead of dismissing the employees of the Department of Agriculture and technical men who help in fostering agricultural science, thus rendering a service to the farmers, the government should have enlarged the staff, increased the estimates and concentrated their efforts to make a success of farming, because the farmers belong to the most numerous class, they are the purchasers, the consumers. If one wishes to relieve the crisis the lot of the most numerous class must first be improved, the lot of the purchasing class.

Mr. DORION (Translation): That is why Taschereau cuts down the estimates of Agriculture.

Mr. BOULANGER (Translation): When farmers are well provided for, industry and trade will be prosperous, because, again, they are the most numerous class, the purchasers and consumers.

Mr. ST-PERE (Translation): Hear, hear!

Mr. BOULANGER (Translation): If one wishes to relieve distress, the lot of the most numerous class must be improved and its purchasing power increased. This class is that of the farmer. When the farmers buy, everybody will be prosperous; when the farmers have money, industry will be doing well and trade flourishing.

Some hon. MEMBERS (Translation): Hear, hear!

Mr. BOULANGER (Translation): I heard recently that the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) intended to dismiss a number of technical men whose occupation is live stock breeding. I have here a resolution adopted by the association of live stock breeders which I trust I may be allowed to read to the house. This resolution reads as follows:

Resolution adopted by the board of directors of the Live Stock Breeders' Association of the province of Quebec as well as by the executive committee of breeders of Canadian cattle, sheep, pigs and horses of the province of Quebec, at their meetings, held at the Queen's hotel, Montreal, on Tuesday, March 15, 1932.

Whereas the live stock breeders have been informed that the hon. Minister of Agriculture, at Ottawa, intends to dismiss a certain number of technical men employed in the Dominion branch of the live stock industry;

Whereas considerable and very necessary work was undertaken and is at present under the supervision of these experts, in our province;

Whereas the live stock breeders of Quebec made investments in certain enterprises in connection with live stock breeding, because they had a right to expect that the cooperation of these experts would be continued, so as to bring such enterprises to a successful issue;

Whereas numerous breeders would undergo considerable losses by the fact of being deprived of these experts;

Whereas by the dismissal of these experts the Department of Agriculture cannot carry out its policy of encouraging the service of good sires.

An hon. MEMBER (Translation): A Bull policy!

Whereas a large number of live stock breeders have made sacrifices with the view of assisting the Department of Agriculture by providing and maintaining among their cattle excellent bulls so as to sell them to live stock breeders who were anxious to take advantage of the loan and bonus policy to encourage the purchase of sires and that a large number of them will remain unsold if the Department of Agriculture does not carry out their policy.

Whereas the Canadian Live Stock Breeders' Association find that it is inadvisable to discontinue the work of inspection in connection with the registration of cattle, which is in charge of Mr. Robert Marcotte, B.L.A.

Whereas Mr. Alfred Cavanagh is the only bilingual agricultural expert who is employed in the office of Mr. C. S. Wood of the Dominion Branch of Live Stock Industry.

It is therefore moved by Mr. L. P. Villemaire, seconded by Mr. Damien Coulombe and unanimously carried: That a request be forwarded to the hon. Minister of Agriculture, at Ottawa, praying him to kindly continue granting us the services of Messrs. Robert Marcotte and Alfred Cavanagh as well as the services of all other experts which are in the employ of the Dominion Branch of Live Stock Industry in the province of Quebec.

(Signed) Andrea St. Pierre. sec.,
General Stock Breeders' Association.

The other resolution, sir, reads as follows:

Resolution adopted at the general meeting of the members of the Live Stock Breeders' Association of the province of Quebec, held at the city hall in Quebec, Wednesday, February 24, 1932.

The secretary having read to the meeting the last letter received from the commissioner of Live Stock Industry Branch of the Department of Agriculture, at Ottawa, informing them that in the future the department would discontinue the grants made in the past to the exhibitions of class "A", as well as the grants given as special prizes for the winter fairs, the meeting express their regrets that such a decision has been arrived at.

It is moved by Mr. Frank Byrne, seconded by Mr. Ernest Sylvestre, and unanimously adopted:

That the association through its secretary, request the hon. Minister of Agriculture, at Ottawa, to kindly grant to our exhibitions at Quebec, Sherbrooke, Three Rivers, Valleyfield and Ormstown, the same grants which they received in the past, and that a copy of this resolution be also forwarded to our federal representatives.

(Signed)
Andrea St. Pierre, sec.,
General Stock Breeders' Association.

An hon. MEMBER (Translation): It is useless.

Mr. BOULANGER (Translation): I shall again ask my friend, the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Dorion) instead of bewailing, in the house, over the results of the Quebec provincial election, to kindly give us his support in our request to the government to continue the services of these agricultural experts and also continue the grants to the agricultural fairs.

By giving us this support, he would be doing far more useful work than belittling his province and making use of the House of Commons to wash Quebec's soiled clothes.

Mr. DORION (Translation): The clothes are so soiled that they are unwashable.

Mr. BOULANGER (Translation): Another thing which my hon. friend from Quebec-Montmorency, who unceasingly interrupts me, could do, would be to help the Quebec and New Brunswick farmers who are requesting the government to negotiate a reciprocal trade treaty with Cuba so as to sell their potatoes and other farm products on the markets of that country.

Mr. ST. PERE (Translation): Hear, hear!

Mr. BOULANGER (Translation): In the lower part of Quebec, in the counties of Rimouski and Matane, for instance, potato growing was once an important industry; the farmers got good returns which allowed them to live in comfort. Now, owing to the poor prices which potatoes fetch, the farmers' returns are not sufficient to cover the expenses of growing them, and on account of this situation, the Quebec farmers are in a sad plight. Assistance should be given to the farmers of that part of Quebec and the Quebec Conservative members...

Mr. DENIS (Translation): The members "by accident".

Mr. BOULANGER (Translation): ...especially those who here represent the farmers, should join us in our request that the government should find markets for the Quebec potato crop as well as for our other farm products.

Mr. Speaker, instead of doing that, instead of helping us to serve the best interests of the farmers that we are representing here, our Conservative friends, in the course of this discussion, went so far as to revive the old question of conscription, which is defunct, even more so than chapter 58 of the statutes of 1931, the very act we are asked to restore to life. Seeing how fond they are of talking about conscription, why do they not suggest to the government to conscript wealth? According to the Prime Minister, the crisis was not as serious during the war as it is now; still conscription was established at that time. It was a conscription of blood. It was then "our war," the war of the common people,

> . . . . nous, les petits, les sans-grades
> Que allions pied nus, transis et malades,

. . . as it is described in L'Aiglon.

Mr. DORION (Translation): The old story!

Mr. BOULANGER (Translation): During that period, our great financiers, our purveyors of bacon and military equipment were growing rich, while the common people, the rank and file were sent to the shambles.

Now we have another war, we are going through a crisis which is said to be far more serious than that of 1914-18; it is "their" war, the war of the financiers, brought about by their own blunders and more particularly by their own cupidity. Since it is "their" war, let them bear its consequences and obligations, let them make now the same sacrifices as they asked us to make between 1914 and 1918.

Some hon. MEMBERS (Translation): Hear, hear.

Mr. JOSEPH THAUVETTE (Vaudreuil-Soulanges) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I think I would not be doing my duty as a representative of the people of Canada and more particularly of the people of my own constituency if I did not take part in this discussion, in order to protest on their behalf against this motion which we have been discussing for several days past.

In order to justify my opposition to this measure and to grasp the import of this resolution, it is necessary for me to consider its very terms, the time at which it was submitted to us and the constitutional results its adoption might bring about. These various considerations offer, to my mind, a wide field for discussion. So far as I am concerned, during the few minutes at my disposal, I cannot give this question all the attention its importance calls for. Most valuable suggestions have already been made by hon. members from this side of the house; therefore, I shall not try to rise to the plane of those experienced parliamentarians and prudent economists. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I shall only express my humble opinion and that will take me only a few minutes.

First, let us see what the resolution says:

> That it is expedient to introduce a bill to amend chapter 58 of the statutes of Canada, 1931, striking out the word "March" in section 8, and substituting the word "May" therefor.

Apparently the changing of the word "March" into "May" is not in itself a difficult operation.

Mr. DORION (Translation): No need of a surgeon.

Mr. THAUVETTE (Translation): To find the reason why, we must refer to the act itself, which is chapter 58 of the statutes of Canada, 2nd session.

Mr. ST-PERE (Translation): Et nunc erudimini!

Mr. THAUVETTE (Translation): The act says:

> Whereas by reason of the continuing world-wide economic depression there exists in many parts of Canada a serious state of unemployment and distress;

That was on August 3, 1931.

> . . . . .and whereas the partial failure of the wheat crop of western Canada. . . .

Mr. DORION (Translation): That is a good book you have there.

Mr. THAUVETTE (Translation):

. . . .has intensified the adverse economic conditions theretofore prevailing.. . . .

Those are the first words of the act. I pause here...

An hon. MEMBER (Translation): You may well pause.

Mr. THAUVETTE (Translation): ...to call your attention to the inconsistency between the attitude of the government at that time and the stand they took during the 1930 campaign. The leader of the opposition, who is now the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett), knew how to meet the situation, and that great doctor prescribed to the citizens of this country two remedies which could cure all their ills.

Mr. ST-PERE (Translation): O doctor optime!

Mr. THAUVETTE (Translation): There is not one hon. member who did not hear or read in the press the statements made at that time by the present Prime Minister throughout the country. The voters were deceived by those promises. The people tried this new saviour, and the great healer became prime minister of this Dominion. He tested his universal remedies: a grant of $20,000,000 and the upsetting of the tariff along the lines of high protection.

What was the position of the country after the first year of this administration? It is clearly expressed in the preamble of that very same act which was sanctioned on August 3, 1931.

Let us now consider what was the financial condition of our western friends at that time. On that subject I shall take the opinion expressed by the Prime Minister himself, at the beginning of the 1931 session, as reported in Hansard, page 779. Answering the unceasing requests of our western friends who described their distressing condition, the Prime Minister said:

Let us see if the west is as badly off as some hon. gentlemen would have us believe. I took the trouble to obtain from the Bureau of Statistics some information with respect to the conditions prevailing in western Canada. I had first-hand information, but the figures disclose that during the years 1928, 1929 and 1930 the gross agricultural revenue—it is estimated partly for this year—from the three prairie provinces amounted to the enormous sum of $1,900,000,000. This was new wealth produced in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta from field and farm crops, farm animals, wool, dairy products, fruits, vegetables, poultry, eggs, fur farming, clover and grass seed and honey.

[Mr. Thauvette.]

During the same period there was produced a vast quantity of mineral wealth. It must be remembered that the application of capital and labour to these natural resources is responsible for this new wealth. The great mining areas in the three western provinces produced during the last three years the vast sums of over $100,000,000. Thus we have the gigantic total of over two billion dollars of new wealth produced in three years—

That is under the King government.

—by less than two million people in the three western provinces of Canada. That is something of which any people might well be proud and it ill behooves the representatives of these people to have it sent abroad to other parts of the world that this country is worn out and in a bankrupt condition.

Those were the words uttered by the right hon. Prime Minister in 1931. He therefore admitted that in 1928, 1929 and 1930, the western provinces had made a great deal of money. Shortly afterwards he blamed the western farmers for having too many automobiles, stating that millions of dollars had been squandered in the purchase of those cars. He thought that the people of the western provinces were not as unhappy as they thought they were, and I would have been inclined to believe it, had I relied upon his statements.

The hon. member of Last Mountain (Mr. Butcher) replied to the right hon. Prime Minister. I shall quote some of his remarks which are reported in Hansard of 1931, page 1336. After endeavouring to attenuate the exaggerated account of the Prime Minister concerning the comfort prevailing in the western provinces, the hon. member explained that there were some automobiles in the west, but that the farmers of those districts, are not any more than the eastern farmers, bound to walk to church or to their business places and that the motor car was to-day a necessity. He showed that motor cars do not cost any more to the western farmers than to the people of other provinces, and he added:

The next statement which the right hon. the Prime Minister made is also irrefutable, namely, that there is a large number of cars in western Canada—261,778 in the three prairie provinces, to be exact. I known that the right hon. gentleman merely stated a fact. I do not believe that he intended any implication, but I gathered from the response that his statement met with from his followers, that there was a certain implication in the minds of many of them. It is rather remarkable that since I have been here in the east I have had on several occasions the suggestion made to me that the farmers of the west have been very extravagant. It has been suggested that they have bought too many cars and other things, like radios. There is one thought that comes to my mind in that connection. Who is more entitled to own a car than the farmer? Who can use a car more profitably than the farmer? The car has not only been a very profitable thing for the farmer to have, but I will tell you what it has done for the farmers' wives of the western prairies. It has made life far brighter for the women of the prairies and for the children. Before the advent of the car it was rare experience, for the hard-working wife of the hard-working farmer to have an outing. Many a farmer, having worked the whole day, and working six days a week, puts his horses away at night. Perhaps on Sunday he would hitch up his team and take his wife and children to church. That was about the limit of the outings the wife and children had. In these days things are different and the car is used to give a little pleasure to farmers' wives and children. I fear there is misconception in the minds of a great many people regarding the statement made concerning cars owned by farmers.

He followed the same line of argument for several minutes; he did not deny anything, but he corrected the facts as he knew them.

What must we infer from these different statements? I have come to the conclusion that the Prime Minister was misinformed as to the financial condition of the western farmers, as evidenced by the emergency measure, the famous blank cheque, which he saw fit to obtain from Parliament at the end of that very same session. And that is the act, defunct since March 1, 1932, that this government wishes to revive now.

The right hon. Prime Minister, at the beginning of the session of 1931—I quoted his words—would not admit that our friends, the western farmers, needed relief. He showed that they were wealthy and leading an easy life; however, just at the end of the session, he presented a bill stating that:

Whereas by reason of the continuing world-wide economic depression—

The depression was then world wide! It was not so in 1930.

—there exists in many parts of Canada a serious state of unemployment and distress; and whereas the partial failure of the wheat crop of western Canada has intensified the adverse economic conditions therefore prevailing;

Those words, Mr. Speaker, are a denial of the statements made by the Prime Minister at the beginning of the session, since at the end of that very same session he was obliged to ask the house for an amount which he would not or could not specify, for the relief of our western friends. Could you find a more flagrant inconsistency in the decisions of a public man, regarding the administration of this country?

If I make these few observations Mr. Speaker, it is not for the mere purpose of finding fault, but to justify the stand that I am taking now in raising my voice and protesting as strongly as I can against this resolution. Another reason why I should oppose this measure is that I regret to see, as I pointed out last year, that the government has done nothing to relieve the farmers of Ontario and Quebec. The farmers of my province are not yet reduced to a state of beggary, but they need markets to dispose of their surplus products. They would willingly accept a bonus to help in selling their dairy products, such as butter, milk and cheese. In that regard, I wish to renew the request made by the hon. member who preceded me (Mr. Girouard). Should the government not help the farmer to reduce the cost of production? They could easily do it by lowering the duties on farm implements.

Prices of farm products have been cut 50 per cent, at least in most cases. The farmers of my district cannot get any more than seven dollars a ton for number 1 hay. I noticed lately, during the Easter holidays, that a farmer was having some straw pressed which he would sell at $3 a ton, when it cost him $2 for the pressing and $2 more for the hauling. You will say that it would have been better for him to leave it alone, but the farmers of the province of Quebec, like the farmers of Ontario work twelve months a year on their farms and thus they are able to earn, not $2 a day, but enough to take care of their families and meet their obligations. Other farm products have been reduced in a like proportion. I would not like to lengthen unduly the list of farm products which are being sold at very low prices. After all, Mr. Speaker, to be convinced, one has but to look at the market price list which confirms my statements. But there is more than that. In several parishes of my constituency organizations for the control of dairy products are springing up. The object of these organizations is to help the farmers in improving their herds to increase the milk production. They are being set up under the supervision of federal and provincial inspectors. I understand that the services of these federal employees shall not be required after the 1st of April. If that be true, I regret that such a decision was made by the Department of Agriculture, because these organizations were very useful to the farmers.

I am wondering why hon. gentlemen work so hard to revive a dead legislation under pretence of helping the farmers, when, on the other hand, they cut down the appropriations to the department of Agriculture. Really, it is hard to understand the methods to which this government is resorting. Canada certainly will not recover its prosperity by such means.

Mr. Speaker, there is a sound principle of philosophy that says: "The end does not justify the means." We are fully agreed on the principle of this resolution; we are clamouring for the relief of the farmers. I shall further say that as long as the government does not lower its tariff walls in order to let other countries exchange their goods for the surplus of our farm products, there cannot be any prosperity in this country, specially among the farming class.

One must bear in mind that the large farming community comprises 53 per cent of the population of Canada. When the majority in a family is suffering and unhappy, it is easily understood that the other members cannot be cheerful. Let us bring prosperity to the farm because it is the fundamental industry in a country. It is an industry whose products are perishable. The farmer is not in the position of the manufacturer whose goods can wait on shelves or in storage for higher prices. He is governed by the law of supply and demand. Therefore, the duty of the Canadian government is to create a demand.

The ACTING SPEAKER (Mr. Cormier): The hon. member has spoken for 20 minutes.

Mr. E. R. E. CHEVRIER (Ottawa): The question before the house now, as moved by the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) is that the debate shall be not further adjourned. In other words, the Prime Minister is invoking a rule of procedure which is now one of the rules of this house. Without going into its history, I submit that it is a rule that should be used only with the greatest discretion and only in times of absolute need. I say that, Mr. Speaker, because the reaction from the use of such a rule of procedure is bound to reach far beyond the precincts of this house. I submit that the time had not yet come when this rule should have been invoked. When this house rose on Wednesday last, out of 138 supporters of the government 18 had spoken, and there were therefore 120 government supporters who by some process of alchemy or otherwise had suddenly been stricken dumb. Probably the Prime Minister himself could explain why this was so. On this side of the house, out of 85 members, 61 had spoken, leaving about 24 still to speak, and this afternoon when the vote was taken, that number had been reduced probably to 15. We had, therefore, on this side of the house 15 more members who probably wanted to exercise their right of free speech, in addition to the 120 members on the other side who for reasons best known to themselves and the Prime Minister had decided not to speak. But there were at least 15 members on this side of the house who wanted to avail themselves of their privilege to speak on this issue.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) rose in his place on Wednesday last and moved that the question be now put, and the Prime Minister himself explained the reason why that had been done, that it was in anticipation of an amendment being moved to the resolution from this side of the house. Once more the Prime Minister's calculations fell by the wayside. He anticipated something that did not happen. What he should have done, I submit, was to wait until this debate had exhausted itself, until every member on this side of the house, at least, had had the opportunity of speaking on the resolution, and then having so spoken, the debate would have ended there, and if an amendment was moved, that might have been the time to apply the rule; or if all the members on this side of the house had spoken, the debate would have petered out. Then there would have been no reason to apply this rule of closure. However, the Prime Minister has seen fit to apply it, and he says he is quite content to do so. I leave it to the people of Canada, Mr. Speaker, to say whether they are content with such a practice.

The objects of this resolution I would divide under three heads: First, to prolong the provision for peace, order and good government as it appears in the preamble of chapter 58 of the statutes of Canada for the year 1931; secondly, that for those purposes, such moneys as may be necessary may be expended from the consolidated revenue fund, and thirdly to extend the time, March 1, 1932, mentioned in the statute to May 1, 1932. We are now debating a resolution concerning a statute which has been dead for twenty-nine days. That is no fault of ours, but arises because of the way in which the resolution was allowed to stand. Mr. Speaker, we did in 1931, submit to a vote for a certain amount of money, for the relief of unemployment. But in the same session of 1931 we objected to the principle, but were told that the words "peace, order and good government" were necessary. At page 4278 of Hansard for 1931 I find the following words of the right hon. Prime Minister:

> The measure provides for the maintenance of peace, order and good government in Canada. It is not for a moment to be thought that an insignificant number of strongly vocal persons shall be able so to affect the populace of this country as to make it impossible for us, in cooperation together as Canadians, to work out our destiny.

That was the reason why the Prime Minister wanted those words inserted. He referred to "strongly vocal persons." At page 1412 of Hansard for 1932 we find the Prime Minister stating:

We increased the number of police. . . .

And

They were tear bombs. . . .

At page 1413 he is recorded as follows:

The commissioner of police placed fifty policemen about these buildings—fifty.

He went on to state that twenty carried revolvers and thirty were mounted, carrying batons. That is what the Prime Minister has stated was done. Then at page 4439 of Hansard for the year 1931 we find the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) reported as follows:

If the bill is not founded upon the theory that it is necessary to maintain peace, order and good government in Canada, then parliament would have no authority to pass it.

Without these words the bill in the form in which it is enacted into law might be set aside when challenged in the courts. . . . They were placed in the bill as the foundation of our authority to pass such an enactment. . . . They are merely a declaration to give us jurisdiction which we know we have under the circumstances, but of which we want to be sure.

There is the reason given last year. It would seem that those words were inserted in order to be sure that the government's action was proper.

Referring to page 1419 of Hansard for the year 1932, we find that because of those words, and despite the fact that they were used merely as a declaration to give jurisdiction, the government amended the Bank Act, valued securities of insurance companies, prohibited the export of gold, and increased the mounted police. In addition, the government have taken a multiplicity of actions, although we had the assurance last year from the Minister of Justice now sitting in his place, and from the Prime Minister, that those words were placed in the act merely to take care of strongly vocal people. The Minister of Justice took the ground that the words were inserted purely and simply to make the bill constitutional.

Now however they want a renewal. They want to revive their dead plans and amend this dead statute. At page 4279 of Hansard for the year 1931 the Prime Minister is recorded as follows:

I will say frankly to the house that in asking what euphemistically is spoken of as a "blank cheque," we are not unmindful that we are asking very considerable from this House of Commons.

Of course they were. Then, at page 1414 of Hansard of 1932 the Prime Minister is reported as follows:

I would not ask this power from any parliament except reluctantly. . . .

Of course he would not, because the right hon. gentleman is not unmindful of the fact that he is asking for something which is absolutely unconstitutional. He knows what that will mean, and how it will affect the fundamental principles of responsible government. He knows he is undermining the very base of constitutional and responsible government. Both he and the Minister of Justice know that the cases cited bear no relation whatever to the matter under discussion. The Prime Minister has placed cases before hon. members in an attempt to show that the proposed measure is constitutional, and he has objected to the fact that minorities have had something to say. I am sorry I have not time to deal with the subject of minority rights, but to my mind they are highly important. The right hon. gentleman has expressed his surprise and astonishment that under certain conditions we would let this resolution go through. The right hon. gentleman simply flouted our offer in our faces, and said, "What? Must we submit to the wishes of a minority?"

I want hon. members to realize that the procedure under the resolution now before us is not proper. The Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice know that we cannot amend the statute. I challenge the Minister of Justice, with his reputation as a lawyer of eminent standing, to say that the amendment of a dead statute is within the competency of parliament or any other body. That is what we are called upon to do. Had we been in a position to continue this debate another ten days I think we would have shown conclusively that the Prime Minister is wrong. He has retraced his steps considerably by stating that now he wishes to revive the statute, to resuscitate the statute, to put new life ino it, to reenact it. He has changed his wording, and it would seem that now he does not seek to amend the statute.

I have endeavoured to show that the present procedure is absolutely unconstitutional. I have been unable to find an authority exactly in point because in British parliaments no such procedure has been attempted. When statutes such as the one enacted last year have been passed, they have passed voluntarily; all parties in the house have agreed. There was however a case in the year 1917 which went before the privy council. I refer to Ottawa Separate School Trustees vs. Ottawa Corporation. The head note explains that the school trustees refused to obey certain dispositions of the school law, and when the Ontario legislature decided to create a commission to administer the schools injunction proceedings were taken, and the action finally went before the privy council. There and then the privy council held that this commission was ultra vires of the legislature in that it had taken away the rights of the electors to the duly elected commission that was administering their schools. All through we have been told: This procedure is quite in order because we will not make use of the powers which will be given to us. I am sorry, sir, that time does not allow me to place before the house the full judgment delivered by Lord Buckmaster; I must content myself by quoting a few excerpts from it. The judgment will be found in 1917 Appeal Cases at page 81. Lord Buckmaster states:

> The case before their Lordships is not that of a mere interference with a right or privilege, but of a provision which enables it to be withdrawn in toto for an indefinite time. Their Lordships have no doubt that the power so given would be exercised with wisdom and moderation,—

I want the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) to listen to this:

> —but it is the creation of the power and not its exercise that is subject to objection, and the objection would not be removed even though the powers conferred were never exercised at all. To give authority to withdraw a right or privilege under these conditions necessarily operates to the prejudice of the class of persons affected by the withdrawal.

It is on all fours with this particular situation —the rights of parliament are being taken away and are being conferred upon the governor in council.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we are called upon, in order to grant the wishes of the Prime Minister, to amend this dead statute. Those who have spoken for the government have not touched upon that aspect of the situation at all; they have simply said that no damage has been done, that we could not place our finger on anything that was wrong. That does not make the principle of this proposal right. When the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) waxed eloquent about this particular subject he reminded me very much of Bassanio in the Merchant of Venice:

> And I beseech you,
> Wrest once the law to your authority:
> To do a great right, do a little wrong.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

I thought that probably he would continue along that line, but I find he did not. We have told the Prime Minister he is wrong, but he insists on being right.

> There is no power in the tongue of man
> To alter me: I stay here on my bond.

There is Shylock! Then there is this other passage:

> The pound of flesh, which I demand of him,
> Is dearly bought: 'tis mine and I will have it.
> If you deny me, fie upon your law!
> There is no force in the decrees of Venice.
> I stand for judgment: answer; shall I have it?

Here is the answer—closure. Here is the Prime Minister's dead statute and here is Shylock.

> You'll ask me, why I rather choose to have
> A weight of carrion-flesh than to receive
> Three thousand ducats: I'll not answer that:
> But say, it is my humour: is it answered? . . .
> So can I give no reason, nor I will not,
> More than a lodged hate and a certain loathing
> I bear Antonio, that I follow thus
> A losing suit against him. Are you answer'd?

But, sir, I am convinced that the people will be satisfied with the stand we have taken. Evidently the Prime Minister, having made up his mind, will never change it. Allow me to give the house this appropriate quotation from the same play:

> You may as well go stand upon the beach,
> And bid the main flood bate his usual height;
> You may as well use question with the wolf,
> Why he hath made the ewe bleat for the lamb;
> You may as well forbid the mountain pines
> To wag their high tops, and to make no noise,
> When they are fretten with the gusts of heaven;
> You may as well do any thing most hard,
> As seek to soften that—than which what's harder?—
> His "own stubbornness": therefore, I do beseech you,
> Make no more offers, use no further means,
> But with all brief and plain conveniency
> Let "us" have judgment and "the Prime Minister" his will—

And the Prime Minister is equally insistent for judgment. In this connection these words of the great Macaulay come to my mind; they occur in his essay on Hallam's Constitutional History:

> A statesman ought to pay assiduous worship to Nemesis, to be most apprehensive when he is at the height of his power and popularity, and to dread his opposition most when he considers that party most completely prostrated.

Then I quote these words from Proverbs; they are carved over the windows of the Tower:

> Where there is no vision, the people perish.

There are some other words that should be engraved over the door of the privy council office and over the door of the Prime Minister's sumptuous apartments, and they should be taken very much to heart by the Prime Minister; I quote them:

He, that being reproved, hardeneth his neck, shall suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy.

We have been reproving him for some time, his neck has become stiffer and stiffer, and redder and redder. Let him repeat those words to himself daily and hourly "lest he perish."

Mr. PAUL MERCIER (St. Henry) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I now rise to take part in this debate because I earnestly feel that we, on this side of the house, have proceeded along constitutional lines in our opposition, during the last few days, to the motion to amend bill No. 58 by substituting the word "May" for the word "March". One of the chief duties of the members of the opposition is unquestionably that of upholding the rights and privileges of the house. Rules and regulations have been made as to the procedure to be followed, and a perusal of parliamentary law and practice shows that when it comes to grants of public money, the house is supreme, and that is the very thing we are contending for when protesting against this measure. Had the government asked for a definite amount, no matter how large, in order to relieve unemployment, in the farming community as well as in industrial circles, we would have indeed been pleased to vote the funds, leaving it to the government to give an honest account of the expenditure, and reserving ourselves the opportunity of ascertaining, through the public accounts committee, just what use would have been made of the funds thus voted.

According to the principles laid down by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett), a majority should enable a government to do anything, and it is a fact that his ministry commands quite a large majority at the present time. However, the minority is called upon to offer constructive suggestions in the name of His Majesty, for it must be remembered that the leader of the Liberal party is the spokesman of His Majesty's loyal opposition. The opportunity now offers to uphold the rules and regulations of this house and it is our duty to see to it that the procedure followed is in accordance with the constitution.

Under the circumstances the idea of giving a blank cheque to the government and of conferring unusual powers upon them should not be entertained. No industrial, no dealer would ever think of such a thing in connection with his own business. Take, for instance, the average business man in this country: would he give to his manager unlimited powers and authorize him to sign a blank cheque whereby that manager could dispose of the larger part of his employer's property? How could the latter keep tab of his own affairs, ascertain what are his profits and check up the doings of his manager or his accountant? Common sense alone tells us that such a stand is a sheer impossibility. We are now being asked to give the government a blank cheque for an indefinite amount.

We are not unmindful of the fact that relief must be given to the unemployed and to the farmers in this country, but as members of the opposition, we must be suspicious of such a resolution as that now being introduced by this government. Should we have allowed the measure to pass without a word of protest, we would have been charged by the people with having made no opposition to it and therefore, with having made no attempt to safeguard the constitutional privileges of this House of Commons, privileges which our forefathers have striven to secure, under the Union, and which they succeeded in vindicating along with responsible government, by strenuously opposing governors bent on extorting a civil list from the people.

Looking back upon the past, we find a parallel to the present situation. Referring to the official report of the Debates of the House of Commons, for the session of 1912-13, under date of April 7, 1913, page 7223, I see that at the time a similar debate took place. Even now, I visualize the countenance of my hon. friend from Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Dorion) when I shall read a certain extract of that report. It is said that, barring electricity, the radio and the wireless, there is nothing new under the sun; indeed, one only has to revert to the past in order to find similar political conditions. For instance, under the heading "Motions for Papers", I notice—

Mr. DORION (Translation): Are you giving us a spiritual lecture?

Mr. MERCIER (Translation): It is perhaps as a matter of entertainment.

Mr. DORION (Translation): We are in no hurry, take your time.

Mr. MERCIER (Translation): What I am going to read to my hon. friend from Quebec-Montmorency, has reference to a Quebec lawyer, with whom he is well acquainted.

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, etc., exchanged between the hon. the Postmaster General and Mr. Aimé Dion, advocate of Quebec, concerning the purchase of a certain patented lock for mail bags.

That motion was made by Mr. Verville.

Then, we read "Naval Forces of the Empire." Let us see how history repeats itself in the political world.

Consideration in committee of Bill No. 21, to authorize measures for increasing the effective naval forces of the empire.—Mr. Borden resumed from March 10. (Mr. Deputy Speaker in the chair.)

On section 2:

From and out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada there may be paid and applied a sum not exceeding thirty-five million dollars—

There is a definite amount asked for at that time, just as in another case, a specified sum was asked for by Sir Robert Borden during the Great War; millions were then voted; at times their destination was unknown to us; they would go...

Mr. DORION (Translation): Say it.

Mr. MERCIER (Translation): May be they would go to the devil; however, the amount was known beforehand.

—for the purpose of immediately increasing the effective naval forces of the empire.

And then, this is most interesting:

And the amendment thereto proposed by Mr. Guthrie.

I often wondered how Mr. Guthrie had come to propose an amendment; he should surely have been on the same side of the House. How times have changed! Human beings and even buildings, are at times carried away, like ships, by ground swells; I see indeed that, at times, conditions are being reversed. On that occasion, Mr. Guthrie's amendment read:

That after the word "dollars," in the third line of the section, the following words be inserted:" to be expended in Canada in the construction and equipment of naval forces as hereinafter set out."

May I say to my hon. friends on the Government side that the debate I refer to, begun on March 10, 1913, was continued from day to day, from sitting to sitting, until—

Mr. DORION (Translation): Until 1930.

Mr. MERCIER (Translation): Until the 9th of April 1913, when the famous closure rule was inaugurated. At that time, Sir Robert Borden, rising from his seat in the House, on the ninth day of April, 1913, and moved the following resolution. It is a rather a lengthy one, and so, I wish it could be taken as read.

Mr. DORION (Translation): Take your time; read it.

Mr. MERCIER (Translation): Time flies, goes the saying. I beg leave from this House to consider the resolution as read—

Mr. DORION (Translation): Granted.

Mr. MERCIER (Translation): —in order to come to a most interesting paragraph:

. . . and if the same shall be resolved in the affirmative, no member shall thereafter speak more than once, or longer than twenty minutes in any such adjourned debate; or "if in committee" on any such resolution, clause, section, preamble or title; and if such adjourned debate or postponed consideration shall have been resumed or concluded before two of the clock in the morning, no member shall rise to speak after that hour. . . .

Which means that we shall sit until two o'clock in the morning; it is what we may call the last watch, the farewell dinner of the Girondists. Some time later, Mr. Northrup, then a member and subsequently clerk of the House, now defunct and who was a man of great ability, moved the previous question. For what reason was the previous question proposed on that particular occasion? The motion for the previous question was made in order to prevent the right hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier from moving an amendment. Here are the words uttered by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, as recorded in the same volume of the Debates of the House of Commons, session of 1912-13, page 7430:

Sir, it means this: closure in anticipation. I had a motion ready to move in amendment; I cannot move it now.

The right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) said the same thing the other day to the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) when he stated that the previous question had been moved because the Government apprehended an amendment from the leader of the Liberal party, just as had happened in the days of Sir Robert Borden who thus prevented Sir Wilfrid Laurier from moving an amendment before the House.

Mr. DORION (Translation): This is the time for barricades.

Mr. MERCIER (Translation): The hon. member speaks of barricades. No doubt, he will recall that in the history of Quebec, mention is made of the Long-Sault barricade; I do not know whether the hon. member's intention is to compare us with Dollard des Ormeaux; we may fall; we may not succeed in our effort to scale the wall; it being too high; but we can nevertheless carry on the fight, as the opposition is bound to.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier spoke on the closure rule passed on the 9th of April, 1913, under the then Prime Minister, Sir Robert Borden. To-day, history repeats itself! I shall quote the very words of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, that outstanding figure in the history of Canadian Parliament, that venerated leader of the Liberal party—

Mr. DORION (Translation): You lament his loss.

Mr. MERCIER (Translation): —who prematurely departed in a haze of glory—

Mr. DORION (Translation): And to this day he has not been replaced.

Mr. MERCIER (Translation): —and whose speeches are even now more impressive than those of any member in this house.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Mr. Lapointe is there to replace him.

Mr. MERCIER (Translation): As may be seen at page 7434, volume IV, of the Hansard for the parliamentary session of 1912-13, Sir Wilfrid Laurier said:

Everybody knows that each time supply was demanded, we granted it without hesitation.

These words still apply to the present case: Supply has been asked for in connection with the Department of Public Works, and the house has voted same forthwith; we were even criticized for our haste in granting same. The address in answer to the speech from the throne was voted within twenty-four hours.

Continuing, Sir Wilfrid Laurier said:

"Everybody knows that when my right hon. friend came to me and asked for a vote on account, I agreed without hesitation and with unstinted hand, perhaps too unstinted indeed. Everybody knows that whenever a measure of public importance was brought to our attention we gave it our best consideration and it was passed. When the bill for the renewal of the bank charters was brought to our attention, there was not a word said on our side to oppose it. We discussed it fairly; we discussed it completely, but we offered no obstruction to it. When the bill to ratify the Japanese treaty was introduced, there was not a word on our side which went to oppose the passage of that bill. And so it has been with every measure. It is true, sir, that we oppose a certain measure. It is true that we oppose the bill for naval aid. We did that with all the might at our command; we did it by the means at our command under the rules of the house. Am I to be told that in the exercise of this power of strenuous opposition we did anything which is not in accordance with the best traditions of parliamentary government? Sir, at all times in this house, at all times in the mother of parliaments, there have been questions upon which the minority thought it owed to itself to offer the most vigorous opposition possible. Under the rules of the house it is expected that the two sides of the house shall carry on the business, as was stated by my right hon. friend to-day, and so it is generally; but there are occasions, I repeat, when an opposition or a minority—

That minority to which reference was made the other day, which was not to impose anything upon this house, and be willing to allow the majority to conduct public affairs.

—a minority owes it to itself, on account of the strong views it holds upon some public measure, to oppose that measure with all the force at its command."

That is what took place on the 9th of April, 1913; and on that occasion the rule of closure was applied. The methods employed at the time to oppose Sir Robert Borden's motion for closure are nearly the same that are used just now. Why would you wish to enforce that closure rule against us? Such a drastic action could easily be avoided. If, by this resolution, you had asked for a stated amount from the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada, as was done in 1913 when a sum of thirty-five million dollars was applied for as an aid to the naval forces of the empire, you would have been granted all the moneys required to carry out your plans, complete your works, and give what relief you deemed fit to give to the unemployed in the rural districts as well as in the cities. You would have been granted all the funds asked for; the debate would have been of short duration and the expenditure incurred through this debate would have been avoided. At the same time the principle of responsible government would have been safeguarded through a procedure acceptable to all, to the opposition and to government side alike.

These utterances of the past prove most interesting reading.

Mr. DORION: And are quite illuminating.

Mr. MERCIER: Unquestionably, it is illuminating. It is in the records of days gone by that I find what is best in our Canadian institutions. To my mind, the story of the past revives an era of self-sacrifice to which we owe the great men in our history. If, one day, the gag was forced upon Sir Wilfrid Laurier, we of the opposition, are afforded this day the same privilege of figuring—

Mr. DORION: In history.

Mr. MERCIER: —in the gallery of those who were gagged, with the expectation, however, of securing ultimately the approval of the people.

Mr. Speaker, what did Sir Wilfrid Laurier say at that time?

Mr. DORION (Translation): At what page?

Mr. MERCIER (Translation): You are fond of reading the speeches delivered by Sir John Macdonald. He was a great man. One is apt to take his inspiration from his own authorities; as for us, we belong to the Laurier school; his teaching is still paramount and is bound to prevail in after years, for Laurier just as Macdonald, in former days, was considered a bright light—while at the same time respectful of the constitution.

Mr. DORION (Translation): What page is my hon. friend quoting from now?

Mr. MERCIER (Translation): I will tell you. At page 7435 of Hansard for the 1912-13 session, vol. IV, Sir Wilfrid Laurier said:

As I have said, there are some occasions on which there is a cleavage between the majority and minority, and then there is an easy remedy, an easy solution. The remedy is not closure; it is not the application of brute force. The remedy is an appeal to the people. The people, after all, are the judge and the jury. The people, after all, are the parties to pass judgment as between the government and the opposition, as between the majority and the minority; and, sir, the most I would have expected on such an occasion as this was that the government of the day would have adopted that remedy, and not have resorted to closure. I am sure it was not a pleasant task that my right hon. friend performed to-day; and for my part, when I compare my conduct with his conduct, I am proud that I resisted all applications for closure, and that, when the time came I appealed to the people, as I did on reciprocity.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is well that I should quote the concluding words of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. I am speaking in French now and I do so as a tribute to my own people—

Mr. BRASSET (Translation): To the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Dorion).

Mr. MERCIER (Translation): —to my province, to the land of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. But, so that I may be understood by everyone in this house, I shall use the English language for my concluding remarks.

I should like to conclude my remarks in English in order to be understood by everyone. The words I intend to utter are not mine; they were spoken in the past, and I have secured them from the library of this House of Commons, which I commend to every hon. member. On the shelves of that magnificent library may be found many jewels of literature, often expressing the exact situation with which hon. members may be faced in this house, I refer to volume 4 of the debates of the House of Commons for the session 1912-13, in order to quote the concluding words of Sir Wilfrid Laurier in connection with the discussion which then took place on a closure motion, that crippled child which we do not see very often but which comes to life once every twenty years or so in order to show that it is not absolutely lifeless. Sir Wilfrid Laurier said:

My right hon. friend has not forgotten the words of Shakespeare:

"—this even handed justice
Commends th' ingredients of our poison'd chalice
To our own lips."

The poison that he offers to us to-day will come to his own lips at some future day. We are in the minority; we can be gagged; we can be prevented from expressing our opinions; they can trample upon our rights. But, sir, the day of reckoning will come, and it will come as soon as we have a dissolution of the present parliament.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member has spoken for twenty minutes.

Mr. MAURICE BRASSET (Gaspé): (Translation): At the very outset of his speech, when he spoke the other day on the resolution now before the house, the right hon. Prime Minister waxed eloquent on what he termed the victory won in connection with the election held in Athabaska. He claimed, —to use his own words—that a great victory had been achieved by the government and that, therefore, the majority should rule. I have no official returns concerning that election; I simply have press reports which we can assume to be fairly reliable. According to these reports, 4,914 votes were cast in favor of the Conservative candidate in Athabaska, while 10,308 votes were polled against him. That means that 4,631 votes actually went to the Liberal candidate—

Mr. DORION (Translation): Is that a provincial or a federal contest?

Mr. BRASSET (Translation): It is a federal election. My hon. friend does not read the papers, or he cannot read at all. The United Farmers who, as my hon. friend from Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Dorion), must know, are dissenting Liberals, secured 3,434 votes, and another united farmer, a member of the Farmers' Unity League, polled 2,303 votes.

Mr. DORION (Translation): Are these official figures?

Mr. BRASSET (Translation): If my hon. friend will only bear with me another five minutes, I shall give him some interesting information in a few moments. I trust my hon. friend will rise, when I am through, and speak himself for twenty minutes; the privilege is his in common with any member on this side of the house.

I therefore submit, Mr. Speaker, that the constituency of Athabaska has not sent to this House a representative of the majority since more than twice the number of votes cast for him went against him. The right hon. Prime Minister made a rather strange statement a few moments later when he said that, in this house as well as elsewhere, the majority must rule. As I said before, the member for Athabaska who is to take a seat in this house, shall not be the elected representative of the majority, and should the right hon. Prime Minister dare bring forward any anticonstitutional measure, he would not have the support of the actual majority of the people. When a government introduces a fair measure and when they are backed by a majority of the people, we may say that the majority at their command in the house is a real majority. But, when the Prime Minister has recourse to a majority,—I do not like to use the adjective I have in mind,—that is ready to stand by him on every occasion, in order to secure the passage of all kinds of anticonstitutional measures, whether they be in the interest or not of the people, I say that he should not rise in this house and talk about majority or government by majority.

Why are we opposed to this measure, Mr. Speaker? We oppose the measure for several reasons.

Mr. DORION (Translation): We should know them by this time.

An hon. MEMBER (Translation): You do not understand anything.

Mr. BRASSET (Translation): The hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency must be deaf for he has been told many times, and he does not know yet. For his own benefit I will try to restate these reasons, and I hope that this time he shall pay attention.

We do not want to confer unlimited powers on the government. The other day, the right hon. Prime Minister attempted to define the powers he is asking for in the following terms:

> Without restricting the generality of the terms of the next preceding section hereof, and notwithstanding the provisions of any statute or law, the governor in council may:
> (a) Provide for the construction, extension or improvement of public works, buildings, undertakings, railways, highways, subways,—

Very likely it means a tunnel under the citadel at Quebec, an undertaking such as would interest my hon. friend.

> —bridges and canals, harbours and wharves, and any other works and undertakings of any nature or kind whatsoever;
> (b) Assist in defraying the cost of the production, sale and distribution of the products of the field, farm, forest, sea, river and mine;
> (c) Assist provinces, cities, towns, municipalities, and other bodies or associations, by loaning moneys thereto or guaranteeing repayment of moneys thereby, or in such other manner as may be deemed necessary or advisable.

Such powers, Mr. Speaker, are unlimited and I believe that use could be made of them in order to secure the passage of any measure the government may introduce. I even think that, under that blank cheque, the government could proceed with the St. Lawrence Waterway Project, in which case, knowing as I do how my hon. friend from Quebec-Montmorency stands on the matter, I am safe to say that he would be bound to vote against the government.

Mr. DORION (Translation): You are mistaken.

Mr. BRASSETT (Translation): The government would be enabled to spend enormous sums of money, do what they please, indulge in any extravagant expenditure, for any reason, simply under the guise of relief to those who are in distress. We too, are quite willing to give relief to those who are hungry and to alleviate distress among the people; but we refuse to let the government resort to that measure in order to have their own way. Let the government say just what they intend to do, let them state the amount to be expended and we shall be the first to cooperate with them, to give them authority for such expenditures as are called for.

I submit the government are indulging in extravagance at a time when they preach economy and solicit a blank cheque for the purpose of reckless expenditures. On this side of the house we have our misgivings as to the manner in which the government may use the funds at their disposal. "L'Evénement," a newspaper that has the approval of the hon. member who is so fond of interrupting me, has this to say:

Mr. DORION (Translation): This is quite an event.

Mr. BRASSETT (Translation):

> In a few days from now, the Minister of Finance shall announce the extent to which he shall raise the tax rate, in the hope of making good the deficit of the administration for the coming year. That increase in taxation will affect every taxpayer proportionately to their families and fortunes. At a time when the people already experience so much trouble in balancing their own budget, who shall come to their aid? They will be compelled to cut down their expenditures and deny themselves quite a number of the necessities of life. But why the government should not themselves reduce their expenditures?

That is what we hear throughout every province in Canada. We are willing to co-operate with the government and help them to cover up their deficit; we are ready to cut down our own expenditures, but let the government set the example themselves in the matter of economy. We contend that the government, in carrying out an unsound policy of economy, should not discharge their own employees after fifteen or twenty years of service, and at times more; we protest against the government's own employees being made the first victims of that policy. Such is the contention of the province of Quebec as well as of every province in this Dominion. What we want is a government that will practise economy, not a capitalistic government, and above all, not a government ready to spend the money without giving us any information as to its destination.

What would all the provinces of Canada, what would those who sit in this House, either on this side or on the Government side, think should the municipal council in a small town empower the mayor, for a whole year, to spend money at his own will and manage the public affairs without the advice of any one? Would the electors of such a municipality have cause to be pleased with their mayor, and could, in the name of common sense, a municipality endorse such a policy, simply because it may be necessary for the good government of the town? For a long time, we have always had, every year, and in every town in the province of Quebec and elsewhere in the Dominion, a certain number of unemployed for which the municipal authorities had to provide.

Mr. DORION (Translation): To be continued.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILL

SECOND READING

Bill No. 35, respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.—Mr. Matthews.

[Mr. Brasset.]

UNEMPLOYMENT AND FARM RELIEF

CONTINUANCE ACT, 1932—CONSIDERATION OF RESOLUTION

The house resumed consideration of the motion of the Prime Minister that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee of the whole on the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to introduce a bill to amend chapter 58 of the statutes of Canada, 1931, striking out the word "March" in section 8, and substituting the word "May" therefor,

And on the proposed motion of Mr. Weir (Melfort): "that this question be now put."

Mr. MAURICE BRASSET (Gaspé) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, when at six o'clock I was forced to suspend my remarks, I was referring to the extravagance of the Government. The hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Dorion) repeatedly interrupted me; evidently, he was displeased with my remarks as I am quoting extracts from his favorite newspaper, L'Evénement. Once more, to be agreeable to him, I will continue my quotation. Under date of the 28th March, 1932, L'Evénement said:

On the first of April, Mr. Ferguson will triumphantly arrive in Ottawa to put to shame the witness who said that the former Toronto politician had claimed his share of the bribes in connection with the Beauharnois. No doubt, such a denial has already been given in a cable and Mr. Ferguson could have refrained from undertaking, at our expense, a hurried and pleasant voyage, for the sole purpose of repeating his denial here.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that, at this time when there is so much distress to be relieved, when the Government can hardly make both ends meets, and when, in a few days, he will be compelled to add to the burden of taxation now weighing upon the people of Canada, expenditures of this sort should not be undertaken. It is true that the government cannot carry on without funds, but, after all, why should they incur expenditures like those I referred to the other day, such as, for instance, the Gordon inquiry, and so forth? And to-day, it looks as though the whole of Canada should bow to the will of the right hon. Prime Minister and his ministry.

Mr. Speaker, the right hon. Prime Minister, when he spoke the other day, wanted to know whether it was a matter of urgency to relieve distress among the people. To the Prime Minister I may reply that the matter is indeed one of urgency, but that it is so through the fault of the government; the urgency exists because the government themselves have failed to administer public affairs as they should have done. The history of the Confederation shows that every time a conservative government comes into power, their arrival is always followed by a period of depression. When Sir Wilfrid Laurier was defeated in 1911, prosperity was prevailing throught Canada, and two years later, in 1912 and 1913, depression came bringing in its wake distress and starvation. In 1921, when the right hon. Mr. King came into power, Canada was on the verge of bankruptcy, and after a few years of resoluteness and industry on the part of the liberal administration, we saw once more the return of prosperity. Then, the conservative government comes back and we have the same conditions as formerly; we are going through a new period of depression; distress and want are prevailing in Canada.

The right hon. Prime Minister has also referred to what took place when a few persons came here and endeavoured to secure his aid. Who were the men that called on him? A great deal has been published in the papers concerning them, and according to the English press they were undesirables coming from all parts of Canada. Mr. Speaker the people who came here for the purpose of obtaining relief, were honest citizens, representing every section of the country. They wanted help for themselves and their families. I think that they were entitled to a reception different from that which was given by the right hon. Prime Minister. The other day, I quoted an article from a conservative paper, the Ottawa Journal. Since then, a good deal of discussion has taken place and a controversy has developed in connection with that famous trip of the unemployed to Ottawa. I would like to put on record on the Hansard an article which appeared in the same paper, under date of the 8th March, 1932. It says:

A General and a "Mob"

Major-General W. A. Griesbach, an Honourable member of the Senate, writes The Journal in disagreement with this newspaper's editorial criticism of what it deemed to be an un-called for and un-British parade of armament on Parliament Hill. In his opening paragraph Major-General Griesbach states that he writes "with humility," but the statement seems hardly borne out by succeeding passages. What is revealed, instead, is that attitude of mind which, more than anything else, was responsible for the Junkerism which Ottawa witnessed last Thursday. Consider this from Senator Griesbach:

"Does a display of force invite disorder from a mob, or, conversely,

"Does a display of force dissuade a mob from disorder?"

Note well the word "mob." Major-General Griesbach knows what it means. The dictionary defines a mob as "the lower classes of the community; the common mass; a disorderly element of the population; a disorderly crowd; riotous or low people in a crowd."

The Senator appears to think that because Canadian citizens are hungry and unemployed, and come to the Capital of their country to ask their Government for aid, that they are "the lower classes of the community," or a "disorderly element of the population," or "riotous or low people in a crowd." That, consequently, they must be terrorized by force.

To this sort of mind, it is perfectly all right for people to assemble as Conservatives or Liberals, to cheer some Senator or M.P., but all wrong, and something to call for a display of guns, if they assemble because their families are hungry. The right of lawful assembly dosen't apply to the unemployed!

Of that sort of thinking, if it can be called thinking, the world is becoming tired. There is an old man now living in Doorn, and who was once the All-Highest, who used to think that way; but, unfortunately, all the Junkers didn't live in Germany. There are too many of them in all countries.

The Journal has never had sympathy for lawlessness, has no sympathy with it to-day, never will have sympathy with it. But there was no evidence of lawlessness in Ottawa on Thursday last; consequently The Journal protests, as all of British blood should protest, against the exhibition of Prussianism which took place on Parliament Hill. More that that, The Journal hopes the day will never come in Canada when the British right of lawful assembly will be denied to citizens simply because they are unemployed, when people who are without work and the means of sustenance will be met by nothing more decent than a threat of bullets and bluster. Canadians won't stand for that sort of thing any more than they will stand for Communism.

If Major-General, the Hon. Senator Griesbach and those who think like him are fearful of the unemployed, and think that theirs may be the fate of the Hon. Mr. Squires of Newfoundland, then it is just too bad. We suggest to them, however, that their fears are not shared by the public.

And in answer to Senator Griesbach's hypotheses he might be referred to the fact that in London, where the problems of maintaining law and order are continuously great, the Metropolitan Police carry no lethal weapons and there is no interference with lawful assembly.

The people who have come to Ottawa in the past, and who did most damage to the country, didn't arrive hungry and unemployed. Some of them came in private cars, and, judging from some recent political history, with too-great rolls of greenbacks. If they had been met by policemen with guns Canadians would have saved a lot of money.

There is no question about that. Ottawa is the Canadian capital and, it seems to me, the unemployed are entitled to a hearing from the right hon. Prime Minister. When the right hon. gentleman goes back on the unemployed after the pledge he took, throughout Canada, to provide work for them, I submit that such an occurrence should never be witnessed in the capital of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, we are ready to aid the unemployed and it is because of our desire to help the needy that we object to the granting of the powers asked for by the Prime Minister.

We must, in the first place, know what measures he intends to take, and how he will spend the funds voted by this House; we also wish to know whether those millions will actually be used for the relief of distress.

Mr. F. W. PERRAS (Wright): Mr. Speaker, when for the first time I read the resolution that is now before the house I could hardly conceive that the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) who is a financier of no mean ability and a lawyer of repute, really intended to see unemployment relieved in that way. I say that because I do not think that at any board meeting at which he might ever sit he would accept a resolution giving the directors a blank cheque to administer the affairs of the company. What difference is there between that case and the present one? I see none whatever. As the director of a company he would know through his officials just what amount had been required for the past year and what would be required for the coming year in the way of current expenses, contingencies, reserve and sinking fund. When departmental estimates are being prepared, the whole situation is canvassed, and then a supply bill is brought down.

In 1930 the Prime Minister made the statement that there were then about 117,000 unemployed in this country, and that in the winter months the number would probably reach 177,000. At the special session of 1930 he asked for $20,000,000 for the relief of unemployment. So the unemployed man would get for himself something like $100 for three months, or $30 for each of the three winter months. Evidently that was but a rough estimate, but the situation at the time being critical, we on this side of the house agreed to vote that sum of $20,000,000. I am not prepared to say that that fund was in all respects properly administered. I have not all the data I should like to have before me in that connection, but I am afraid that a vast portion of that sum never went into direct relief, never went to those for whom it was primarily destined. I am afraid that much of it was frittered away in costs, commissions, implements and so forth, and that the unemployed did not get the full benefit of that $20,000,000.

The Prime Minister in 1931, having had the experience of 1930, should then have had the situation well in hand, but instead of that, the situation was decidedly worse. Many things go to prove that. The number of people out of work had considerably increased, and the price of farm products, to mention only those, had pretty nearly touched bottom. The situation throughout the country was daily getting worse in all spheres of activity and everyone was feeling more deeply the acuteness of the crisis. Still another proof that the Prime Minister had failed in his efforts was that while on the first occasion he had asked parliament for $20,000,000, in 1931 he asked for a blank cheque. Evidently he was afraid, I might say ashamed, to ask for a definite sum, conditions being so bad. He got that blank cheque, and we have not heard the end of the story as yet. But at all events we get this from the Labour Gazette under date of September 30, 1931:

> Up to August 31, 1931, there had been 327,990 men employed doing 7,228,744 so-called man-days' work. According to the statement made by the Minister of Labour the other day from August 31, 1931, up to January 31, 1932, there were 334,301 men employed for 7,415,973 man days. That means that for the first period every man worked an average of 22½0 days—dividing the number of men into the number of man days; and for the latter period up to January 31, 1932, there were provided 22¼ days for each man, or a little over 44 days' work per man during the combined periods. Therefore, as a result of this unemployment relief measure, during the period from October 1, 1930, to January 31, 1932, roughly four hundred working days, there has been supplied only three days' work out of a month to the men who have been given employment.

Will anyone say that that measure worked wonders when the best that was done under it was to give to those who worked, only three days' work per month?

May I now point out at what a cost that was done? The hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) has already explained that. According to the returns, there was spent $146,899,219. To employ all those men at three dollars per day for the 14,000,000 odd man days, that is combining the two groups of man days of about 7,000,000 each, would have meant an expenditure of something like $44,000,000, instead of the $146,000,000 that was actually spent. Some may say that the difference was made up by the cost of materials, but if we are to assume that $100,000,000 out of the $146,000,000 was spent for materials, it is certainly a pretty high percentage. We have only the statement made by the Minister of Labour. The fact remains however that to pay those men three dollars for every day's work would have cost $44,000,000. The next fact is that according to the Minister of Labour we have committed ourselves to an expenditure of $146,000,000, or three times the amount spent for labour. Possibly some of that expenditure went to buy material. I wonder if anyone will say that the people supplying materials are those for whom relief should be provided.

The money was voted for the purpose of providing work and employment for those in need. The fact is that $100,000,000 has been spent over and above the moneys paid to those in distress. The only conclusion I can arrive at is that out of every $10 spent only $3 reached the unemployed. To date, that is the cold, blunt result. The Prime Minister comes back this year and asks for another blank cheque. When last year he obtained the blank cheque it was understood his expenditures under it were to end on March 1, 1932, though of course his commitments would lead him farther on into the year. As I understood it, after the first of March of this year he could not enter into any new commitments, but could continue paying in respect of those entered into before that date. As a business man I would say that his note matured, or that his lease expired on that date.

We are now told the Prime Minister needs money to carry on until the first of May. Under the terms of his dead lease he cannot enter into any new contracts, and it is for that reason he is worrying. If he needs money he must come to parliament with a supply bill and state the amount he requires, what he wants it for, and how he will spend it. That is just what he does not want to do. He wants to get more money under the old blank cheque, and keep on spending it in the way I have shown. Now his position is very clear; the situation is not complicated. He needs authority to spend more money until May 1. If the term of the blank cheque is extended until May 1 what assurance has parliament that between now and the first of May the Prime Minister will not make commitments for the whole of the fiscal year 1932-33? That is where the joker comes in. If we resuscitate the dead statute and then amend it by giving it breath until May 1, we still give the Prime Minister the right to any sum he desires to have, a right similar to the one he possessed under the dead statute.

Then, by virtue of that statute he will again have the right fully to engage any sum before May 1, 1932. He will be at liberty to engage the entire amount he may need for the year 1932-33, and on May 1, 1932, he may say to this house, "I do not need a supply bill for unemployment relief, as I have all the money I desire, and I will not make any new commitments after May 1." That is the situation. Hon. members on this side of the house say that would not be the proper attitude, but rather one in complete violation of the constitution. Conservative members who have spoken have not denied that the proposed legislation is anti-constitutional, but they have said, "What matter, even it does trangress constitutional law"? I am not a lawyer, and shall not go further along this particular line. But I am a lover of justice; I respect duly constituted authority, and when I am confronted with a choice between a right and a wrong method, I prefer to follow the right. That is the Liberal way. I desire to make it clear that hon. members on this side of the house are not trying to inflict pain, misery or suffering, or to delay relief. Under present conditions the Prime Minister may continue to pay for all commitments made before March 1, 1932. There must be in existence many commitments under which money is daily being paid and will continue to be paid long after March 1, 1932.

If the Prime Minister had wished to proceed properly the whole matter would have been very simple. Had he come to this house and stated candidly, "In the light of the experience gained during the past two years I think I will need so many millions, but in case of emergency or for something unforeseen, I should like to have so many more, and I desire to spend what I get along the following lines"—he would have obtained the required sum. I feel I must at this point quote the words of my right hon. leader, as they are reported in Hansard of March 7, 1932:

> What I wish to say to my right hon. friend is that if he will bring into the house a supply bill asking for the amount that he may regard as necessary and wish to have for this month, so far as the opposition is concerned, we will be prepared to do what we can to facilitate its passage rapidly through the house. We recognize that it is a week since the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act lapsed and that my right hon. friend will certainly be coming to parliament for some moneys for this purpose. If a supply bill is brought in at any time to provide what may be necessary for the balance of this present fiscal year, so far as the opposition is concerned, we shall be prepared to agree to any suspension of the rules which will allow the bill to go through this house with as little in the way of criticism or delay as possible.
>
> I would like to make clear to my right hon. friend that one reason I mention the matter immediately is that if it is proceeded with by means of a supply bill, I believe there will be no question as to the rapidity with which the bill would pass, but if my right hon. friend has in mind proceeding with a bill such as the one passed at last session, which was intended to meet a situation while parliament was not in session, I may say that we on this side would have to take very strong exception to proceeding in that way.

Then, at page 916 of Hansard of March 8 last, I find the following:

> Now, my right hon. friend has parliament in session. He does not need to summon parliament again to get an additional sum for the purposes for which he now requires this money. He has indicated this afternoon that something, I think, like $7,000,000 will be required for the purpose of loans. Well, let him ask for $7,000,000 for the purpose mentioned and we will vote it. If, between now and the first of May, he finds $7,000,000 will not be sufficient, let him come back and tell us it is not sufficient and say what additional sum he requires. But I submit he has no right, while we are assembled here, to ask for a blank cheque to do as he pleases by order in council.

Last session my right hon. friend secured from parliament the right to exercise at will, during the time parliament was not in session, those powers which heretofore had never been exercised except during a period of war, insurrection and invasion. Now he comes to ask us to allow him to exercise them while parliament itself is in session. I say, Mr. Speaker, that we as members of the House of Commons, responsible to the people of this country, cannot surrender every obligation that is imposed upon us to protect their rights May I briefly summarize our position, as I have endeavoured to state it. With the object which the government has in view, namely supplying public moneys for purposes of relief, we are in complete accord and agreement. We are ready to leave to the judgment of the ministry itself the amount it may need for the purpose of dealing with unemployment relief, the supplying of seed or the meeting of any other need which would come within the provisions of the legislation proposed. All that we ask is that the ministry bring in a supply bill indicating the amount they wish to have for the general purposes, and allow us to vote it in that form.

With those sentiments, Mr. Speaker, I am in full accord. I submit once we decide to do something to cure what the Prime Minister said he would cure or end in one day, we should do our utmost to this end. But as I have said, there is but one right way of doing it. If doing it the wrong way would more quickly help the needy, then that might be an excuse for this procedure, but it would not. Let me again quote what my right hon. leader said in that respect, as it appears on page 914 of Hansard of March 8:

> I am not raising this objection as a merely technical one. I am raising it, as I have said, because I feel that the precedents which are established in this house are all-important, and that members of the House of Commons incur a very grave responsibility in countenancing precedents which should not be set. To make clear that this exception is not being taken on merely technical grounds; that we are not trying to obstruct the voting of any moneys which may be necessary in order to give the provinces the needed loans that my right hon. friend says he now proposes to give them, let me say again, as I said yesterday: If my right hon. friend will drop the resolution which is now before us and ask his Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) to come to the house this evening with a supply bill indicating the amount of money which the administration feels it will be necessary to have in order to meet the situation between now and the first of May, or the period during which parliament may be in session, if he will take that course and move that the rules be suspended so that such a supply bill can be speedily passed through the house and sent over to the Senate, we of the opposition will cordially join with the government in agreeing to the suspension of the rules and will seek to expedite the passage of such a measure through the house to-day.
>
> Again I urge the ministry not to create a controversy, particularly when delay might only serve to cause added suffering to many people throughout the west and in other parts of Canada. There need be no delay whatever. As I have said, we can expedite a supply bill to the extent of having it pass this House of Commons to-day, if the ministry wishes to proceed with it in the regular manner in which all supply is granted by parliament.

I have repeated that, Mr. Speaker, so that it may again be taken as the expression of the attitude of the Liberal party.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman has exhausted his twenty minutes.

Mr. PERRAS: I will finish my speech, sir, in my constituency.

An hon. MEMBER: Put the climax on it in your own constituency.

Mr. JEAN-FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): I desire, Mr. Speaker, to congratulate my hon. friend who has just resumed his seat (Mr. Perras) on his excellent speech. I am sure his constituents will be very glad to hear the remainder of his speech which the twenty minute limitation has prevented him delivering to the house.

I am very sorry that the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) is not in his seat to listen to the further quotations which I propose to place before the house in answer to what he said last Wednesday in the course of his two-hour speech. On page 1402 of Hansard he stated:

> The gentleman who for so many years presided at the table in the mother of parliaments wrote a book from which I shall read just a few lines, namely, Redlich's Procedure of the House of Commons, as the outstanding authority upon the subject.

To use the right hon. gentleman's own words, there seems to be a lack of knowledge somewhere, because if he had looked at the first page of the book he would have seen that Josef—J-o-s-e-f—Redlich is a professor in the faculty of law and political science in the University of Vienna and author of Local Government in England. He would also have observed that his work on the procedure of the House of Commons was written in German and translated by A. Ernest Steinthal of Lincoln's Inn, barrister-at-law, formerly fellow of Trinity college, Cambridge. The name

J-o-s-e-f—the German form of J-o-s-e-f—appears on the title page of each of the three volumes.

In the Encyclopaedia Britannica, fourteenth edition (1929), volume 19, page 24, I find the following:

Redlich—Austrian historian and politician. Was born in Göding, Moravia, on June 18, 1869. He studied jurisprudence and history in Vienna and travelled extensively, especially in England.

He never "presided at the table in the mother of parliaments." He may be an outstanding authority on parliamentary procedure, but so far as the mother of parliaments is concerned he is a rank outsider.

Had the right hon. Prime Minister looked at page 315 of the index he would have found under "Opposition" the following:

Obstruction as a function of the opposition (1) 81—note.

Turning to page 81 he would have found this note:

In 1840 Sir G. Sinclair made bitter complaint of the slow and slovenly manner of conducting parliamentary business, which he ascribed to the improper behaviour of many of the members:—

Just as the right hon. Prime Minister does.

—he stated that, at the beginning of the session especially, much time was thrown away. The speech does not seem to have made much impression on the house. See Hansard (54), 963.

Much the same as the effect of the right hon. gentleman's speech last Wednesday. On the same page Redlich quotes Sir S. Walpole as follows:

The fashionable young gentlemen who had been nominated as the representatives of rotten boroughs, had been replaced by earnest men chosen by the populous places enfranchised by the Reform Act. Representing not a class, but a people, they brought the house into harmony with the nation. They insisted on receiving a public hearing for their own views; and on obtaining comprehensive information on the many subjects in which they and those who had sent them to parliament, were interested.

There is a footnote to that paragraph in these words:

Sir Erskine May also points to this cause in his pamphlet "Remarks with a view to facilitate the dispatch of public business in parliament" (1849). The development of freedom, he says, had enormously increased the desire to speak in the house. Delays and even obstructions must not always be regarded as illegitimate parliamentary weapons,—

It is our weapon; on the other hand. The Prime Minister wants to use orders in council or special powers as his weapon.

—as they afforded the means of collecting the opinions of constituencies and the public. For the future, on important legislative proposals, long debates might always be reckoned on.

This quotation is from the very same author that the right hon. gentleman cited last week; should he not have read the first volume before delving into the third. And he says this is the outstanding authority on the subject.

The right hon. gentleman quoted another authority, chapter 48 of Westminster, 1931. The hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) has demonstrated beyond doubt that it cannot be invoked as a precedent in favour of the proposed legislation, any more than Mr. Josef Redlich, an Austrian, can be said to have "presided at the table in the mother of parliaments."

Let us proceed a step further. There is another matter that has been forgotten by the Prime Minister. In his elegy he forgot to mention one of the greatest accomplishments of the dead relief act, the purchase of railway ties to the extent of some $1,300,000, so eloquently referred to by my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie). Railway employees have been set back while profiteers have been given contracts for railway ties.

Why not make an anthology of the gems contained in the Prime Minister's speech? At page 1254 of Hansard he said:

May I point out that during the long years in which the Liberal party was in opposition from 1911 to 1917 under the direction of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, never during that whole period of time, with the exception of the naval debate, to which I shall presently refer, was there a case in which any effort was made upon a resolution introduced into parliament, a resolution, I repeat, asking that the Speaker do leave the chair for the house to consider the resolution, to have a debate that extended beyond the statement of a few broad principles.

When Sir Wilfrid Laurier was leader of the opposition Sir Robert Borden never amended, or thought of amending, a dead statute.

Now let us proceed a step further. The Prime Minister said:

Does any hon. member in this house suggest that a single amount in a supply bill will take care of that situation?

Where is the Prime Minister to-night? He is not here; I do not know where he is. Then on September 11, 1930, the Prime Minister said:

When you expend large sums of money, there should be parliamentary sanction for the expenditures. That has been a cardinal principle of liberalism at least. It is for that purpose that the sanction of parliament is now being asked to spend twenty millions for two purposes: (a) to provide useful work suitable, so far as possible, to engage the energies of the unemployed; (b) to provide for relief for those for whom there is no work, and who are unable to find useful work. I have said that several times; I repeat it, and I hope it is satisfactory.

It is too bad he did not repeat it in his speech last week. In that speech he said:

Despite what has been said, the governor in council consists of the cabinet of the country, a committee of this house of commons, sir, of your fellow citizens and your co-members in this chamber, together with one ex-Prime Minister of Canada who sits in another chamber of parliament.

At page 244 of volume 2 of Redlich, our outstanding authority, it is stated that the ministry is the channel of communication between the sovereign and parliament, which is true. Parliament is supreme, and the duty of the cabinet is to execute the will of parliament. I might point out here that the etymology of the word "minister" is "servant"; first the ministers were servants of the king, and now they are servants of the people. We are servants of the people also, and the ministers are the servants of the servants of the people.

Then there was something said about a blank cheque. I ask the Prime Minister, or any member of this house, if he is willing to sign a blank cheque in favour of anyone. No farmer and no business man would do such a thing; it is not done in the ordinary course of business, so why should we have such legislation? It is a smoke screen, but there is nothing behind it. It is made necessary because the Prime Minister is unable now to repeat about unemployment relief those famous words: "ready, aye ready!"

I have not time to quote at length an extract which will be found at page 2866 of Hansard for last year, but when I asked the number of each order in council passed on October 7, 1930, the Prime Minister refused to give that information. Every hon. member of the house remembers the trouble to which my good friend the ex-Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) went in order to secure copies of those famous orders in council passed in virtue of the dead statute, and some of which had no more reference to unemployment than they had to the man in the moon.

Now let us proceed a step further, as the Prime Minister would say. He said:

We do not now, nor do we at any time, propose to truckle or ask for the sacrifice of our independence of thought in order to obtain the support of those who would retain us in office for the spoils of office.

I do not wish to offend any hon. member on the opposite side, but let me say that while we were cheering the speech of the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power),

[Mr. Pouliot.]

Conservative members blamed the hon. gentleman for not going far enough. Then the right hon. gentleman went on to say:

Is anyone so extravagant in the use of language as to assert that these gentlemen—

That is, the members of the cabinet.

—are without opinions, or having opinions have not the will to assert them and the ability to express them?

They may have the will and the ability, but the Prime Minister has a louder voice. I remember very well that one day I asked a question of a minister—it is not necessary to name him, but this will be found at page 2199 of Hansard for last year—and while the minister said "answered" the Prime Minister said:

Surely we have reached the stage where such a question should not be asked.

The Prime Minister had no business to make that statement when the minister concerned had politely answered the question. Then I said:

I should not like to ask a question which causes discomfort to the cabinet.

In another case the minister concerned answered the question; the answer was sent to the officers of the house and it was printed in Hansard the next day. At the same time, because the Prime Minister said "order for return," in the votes and proceedings there appeared a return of the house for the question which appeared in Hansard as being answered on the previous day. I remember that on another occasion an hon. member who has been here quite a long time rose to a question of privilege, and the Prime Minister told him in a gentle fashion to sit down. I refer to page 376 of Hansard for September 18, 1930.

Then the Prime Minister went on to say:

May I remind this house that we expressed some months ago the hope that no man, woman or child should be hungry during the past winter, and that there should be no occasion for the civil disturbances which have been apparent in other countries. It is a matter of some pride and satisfaction to think that, in the main, has been accomplished.

There is a lack of contact between the government and the people. As you know, sir, I have the highest respect for the royal family; we all know that the Prince of Wales prevented a strike of miners in Wales by visiting them, and that he prevented a rebellion in India by shaking hands with the untouchables, also called the pariahs. Why do not the members of the cabinet, after the house adjourns, go to Bowles lunch or the Honey Dew to meet the unemployed and find out the sentiment of the people?

Let us go a step further. The Prime Minister said:

I wonder if they think that my colleagues and myself who labour, not eight hours a day or sixteen hours a day or eighteen hours a day, but often twenty hours a day during the last six months, find any satisfaction in that except it be that it will be of some benefit and value to the country.

We are trying to make things easier for the government; we are trying to share their work, but they refuse to let us do so. The Prime Minister may work twenty hours a day, but we never see him working. He reminds me of the mythical god Vulcan, the fireman of the Olympus; he comes here twice a day, at three o'clock for the opening and at eleven o'clock for the adjournment, and we do not see him in the meantime. As for my genial friend the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon) he reminds me of Pegasus in full sweat, marking time on a treadmill without gear, serving no practical purpose. If Sir Malcolm Campbell, in his Silver Bullet, drove the Prime Minister at record speed to Hull, but over the Quebec bridge, he might kill thousands of hens and ducks on the highway, and he would get there exhausted and several hours after a pedestrian who had not forgotten that a straight line is the shortest distance between two points.

Some time ago President Hoover asked Rudy Vallee the crooner to sing a song to chase depression. It would not be necessary, indeed it would be foolish to ask him or anyone else to sing a song for a similar purpose so far as Canada is concerned, because we already have a song appropriate to the unemployed who are working on the transcontinental highway. That song is the Volga Boatman.

The Prime Minister, during the election, said, "I will end unemployment or perish in the attempt." I hope, we all hope, that the country will never perish in the attempt. We are ready to support all measures that are constitutional which the government may bring forward, but we refuse to be impressed by the humbug of the Prime Minister and by the ignorance of his colleague, who is using this legislation as a smoke screen to hide his ignorance of the miseries of the people.

Mr. D. M. KENNEDY (Peace River): In connection with this debate there are two points that are of chief interest to me, namely, the question of relief and the constitutional question. In view of the fact that this debate has lasted so long, I may say at once that the question of relief is the paramount question so far as I am concerned. It does not seem to me that the constitution itself is in very grave danger. I know, of course, that we run risks more or less every day we live as we walk around the streets or as we do anything, and some risk must be attached to any powers given any government. But at the same time the question does not appear to me, even after reading the statement of the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King), to be so very far-reaching and so very important. I find at page 1393 of Hansard of March 22, 1932 the following statement by the right hon. the leader of the opposition:

If this measure is so dear to the hearts of hon. gentlemen opposite, if that is the whole excuse and reason for it being brought in, I say take out these few words which constitute the blank cheque provision and substitute any specific amount you wish. Make it any amount you deem to be necessary, $10,000,000, $50,000,000, $100,000,000, or as many millions as you like to move in, and introduce the bill in that form, with one other change.

That is the reference to the blank cheque. Now after all, in practice, what is the difference between introducing a blank cheque provision and the leader of the opposition's statement, "Bring in any amount you like and we will O.K. it?" I canot see any real difference at all between the two propositions. The leader of the opposition continued:

Take out the words that give to the ministry itself, while this parliament is in session, the power to legislate by order in council in connection with peace, order and good government.

Now these are far-reaching powers but the only objection taken to them by the leader of the opposition is that the government should have these powers while parliament is in session. It may be possible to contend that this is a valid objection; possibly it is quite reasonable to say that the government is asking for a great deal. But after all the government has had that power for some six months while parliament was not in session and then for one month up to March 1 while parliament was sitting. I do not know whether they have had the power or not for the last month, but I will say this, that throughout the present debate the abuse of the power as it has rested in the hands of the government has not been seriously suggested by any member of the house. If this is going to be a fairly short session I cannot see that there is any tremendous risk considering that we have been living under a government that has had these powers and that nothing desperate has happened. The government has not been seriously challenged on its use of these powers and I do not think we ought to be afraid of extending them another five or six weeks.

With regard to the constitutional question in general, perhaps I am not very well qualified to speak; it is largely a lawyers' question. It may be because of the density of my own mind or possibly because of the manner in which it has been presented to the house, but I have never worked up very much enthusiasm about the constitution one way or the other. The discussion, in part, has reminded me of some theological debates that I have read that took place some five or six hundred years ago. The constitutional question is a somewhat academic one, but in any case I do not think the constitution should be a rigid thing. In our interpretation of the constitution and the powers of any body under that constitution it seems to me that we must always exercise critical common sense, and should not be bound too rigidly by what people thought in past centuries or generations. This generation and this parliament must be ready to discover new truths, ready to re-define and re-apply old principles. That is our responsibility and our right as truly as it was the responsibility and the right of any group of people that ever sat in any parliament. If we must find out some things by trial and error, as in the past, we ought to be willing to make reasonable experiments and not be held back too much by fear, especially when we attempt to deal with so serious a situation as exists throughout the world to-day. No parliament, no people were ever faced with the circumstances that we are faced with to-day. Present conditions are not normal by any stretch of the imagination; they are abnormal from whatever angle you look at them. The Macmillan report submitted in Great Britain frankly recognizes the fact that we cannot function as organized communities indefinitely under present conditions. Within the last year certain things have happened that no one had any idea twelve months ago would happen. In the last few days I have read H. G. Wells' The Work, Wealth and Happiness of Mankind. In the closing paragraph he has this to say:

> Unless the gross amount of purchasing power in the entire world is increased, the getting of a larger share by Great Britain and her associates, will only mean that some other populations will have less. In spite of the suspension of war-debt payments—payments which it now seems clear will never be resumed—France and America still remain great absorbers of gold, and are still apparently unable to use their swelling hoards even to mitigate the deepening distresses of their own peoples. The poor nations are still growing poorer, becoming less and less eligible as borrowers as the need to redistribute money grows more and more urgent. They are sinking deeper into discontent, until it only needs a demonstrable rise in the Russian standard of living to make communism a vivid issue in half the cities of Europe. An immense amount of misery is being produced during these slow blunderings towards adjustment—if indeed they are towards adjustment—and it is still an open question whether the world conferences needed for the restoration of the ebbing economic life of mankind, can now be assembled and made effective, before the intolerable vexations and sufferings of the generality produce a world-wide series of social catastrophes.

Therefore, after all, the government is asking for great powers to deal with extraordinary conditions, and somebody apparently must have those powers. So, if we cannot find in days gone by any precedent for granting these powers, I submit the extraordinary conditions are at least some justification for giving the government some powers other than we might be willing to give them under ordinary circumstances.

I come now to the problem of relief, and I want to deal particularly with farm relief. The opposition of course has said: Bring in your bill in such and such a way and we will help you through. Under our system of government, with a majority and an opposition that opposes sometimes on sound ground and sometimes not, I do not think we can reasonably expect this to happen. When the party now in opposition was on the other side I recall situations in the house when similar suggestions were made from the opposition side, but I have no recollection of their being accepted. As a matter of fact, under our present system a government that pursues such a course is looked upon as weak or afraid, or something else. So I am assuming that we are going to pass this bill and give relief within the next few days.

As regards seed and feed, looking at the matter from the standpoint of a farmer in the west who has been struggling through a bad year and has now reached the seeding season, I believe he realizes, as every man does whether he is on the land or not, that if there is going to be any effective distribution of seed, it must be within the very near future. We are now entering the season when that seed must be distributed. I suppose it will take a few days or a couple of weeks to make the distribution, and I feel sure that if it is an ordinary spring some of the land will be ready to be seeded by that time.

As regards the importance of the western crop to the general economic life of the country, there is no question that if we do not get in a crop under reasonable conditions the constitutional issue will be worse from other angles than it is from the standpoint of the opposition and the government now. If the Canadian constitution will not enable us to distribute seed to the farmers in distress in western Canada, I have not very much respect for it. It does not matter from what angle you look at the matter, whether it be from that of the farmer who has been struggling in the face of adverse seasons, trying to keep his farm in shape for seeding during the coming spring, or that of the general standpoint of the economic life of the country, the relief must be given and it must be extended through the assistance of the Dominion government. It is because of the seasonal nature of this relief, because of the fact that to be effective it must be given at a certain time, that to me this is the great issue and the reason why I want to support this measure even though under ordinary conditions I should have had some objections to it.

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Melville): Mr. Speaker, we have all returned after the Easter recess, refreshed in body and mind and possibly rather tempered by the great event that Easter commemorates. Nevertheless we have returned to our duties just where we left them, and whether they be pleasant or unpleasant, we must face them and represent those who sent us here, and that not by delegating to the executive powers that properly belong to us as parliamentarians.

Let me deal with what has been said by the preceding speaker (Mr. Kennedy, Peace River) with respect to nobody challenging the legislation asked for on the ground that it was abused. I say that it was grossly abused. How many hon. members ever dreamed the government were going to use this Farm Relief Act for the purpose of amending, let us say, the Insurance Act or the Bank Act? Outside of the government I venture to say there was not one who thought they would use this measure for the purpose of amending the Insurance Act, and I say that they abused this legislation most grossly and atrociously. What did they do in connection with that act? They authorized the insurance companies of Canada to appraise their assets at a fictitious valuation dating back to last July for the purpose of their balance sheets. If the valuation were false, then the balance sheet must be false. How are we to have any confidence in the future in balance sheets if these acts are under the legislative powers of the executive and not of parliament? Taking that one case alone, I say that the government has grossly abused the purposes to which this law was supposed to be dedicated. Under an unemployment and farm relief act we have had a bank act amendment, an insurance act amendment, and guarantees given to this, that and the other thing. I shall invite any hon. gentleman outside of the executive, to say that he expected these things to be done. If not, we were all deceived, and because of this I object more than ever to have such an atrocious act perpetrated now that parliament is in session. Last year this old measure was passed at the last moment, in the dogdays of summer when we all wanted to get away, at the tail end of the session, as is always the case with such important legislation. But these things I have mentioned were done during the recess. Now the government have the audacity to ask us to extend this power to them when parliament is sitting. For my part, I object; I shall oppose it at every stage of the game until the last dog is hanged. That is my reply to the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Kennedy) who generally seeks every opportunity to show how delightfully progressive and U. F. A. he is by supporting the government. Give me a straight, out-and-out Tory rather than one so thinly camouflaged as that.

Let me say a word about the speech of the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) which was an excellent apologia or whatever you call it, a beautiful recital. It was more or less a plea for mercy and a hiding behind the closure. He pointed out what a very much overworked government this is. Of course it is overworked. When it takes on all the duties that properly belong to the parliament of Canada, naturally it will be overworked. A very much overworked and under-estimated government. Well, Mr. Speaker, if they knew just about what was the country's estimate of the Prime Minister they would not say much about it. A further complaint was that the government were abused. Am I abusing them now? If it was my leader (Mr. Mackenzie King) and the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) to whom the Prime Minister was referring more particularly, though we all had our say, certainly those two gave it to them in good shape, and there was no defence from over there. Just closure. Look at my hon. friend from Rosetown (Mr. Loucks). Why does he not get up and defend the government?

Mr. LOUCKS: I am well pleased with them.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Why did not the government answer these attacks if they were attacks? They were unanswerable; that is the reason. The government got the spanking of its life, and it would be a wonder if they invited any more, or did anything else but rush for closure, to avoid more and well deserved spanking.

If I assented to this measure, Mr. Speaker, what would my constituents say to me?

An hon. MEMBER: Oh, oh.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that you must hear these absurd interruptions coming from the other side. Hon. gentlemen opposite have nothing of their own to say, and so simply engage in coarse guffaws. But I have something that I want to say if you, sir, will just keep the treasury benches quiet.

I object to this measure, Mr. Speaker, because of the too comprehensive legislative nature of the powers which the government is seeking. Why, if the government is granted these powers, my friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) who sits opposite to me, could recommend and have passed an order in council authorizing the mixing of grain again. That was done in 1917 under the War Measures Act by this same breed of government, although it was supposed to be a Union government it was just in the transition stage. That government passed an order in council authorizing the mixing of grain, notwithstanding the provisions of the Canada Grain Act to the contrary. Those were the words of the order in council authorizing the mixing of grain. That is no hypothetical case. It is an example of what the government could do if granted these powers. It took us twelve years to get that grain mixing practice stopped. I suppose the Minister of Trade and Commerce would be horrified at the thought of doing any such thing now, but what they have done once they may do a second time, and then some more. They might, for instance, bring down that report with respect to the railway situation, and how do we know that they might not pass an order in council merging the two great railway systems in this country? It seems absurd, I admit, but they have done equally absurd and equally outrageous things before, and that is one reason why I refuse to delegate my powers and my responsibility as a member of parliament to any executive, especially this one, of which we know sufficient to withhold our confidence in them in the exercise of such powers. I can imagine going back to my constituents if I agreed to this measure and being asked, "Did you delegate your powers to Premier Bennett?" "Yes," I reply, "because I thought it the best thing to do." They would at once say to me, "That is not what we sent you to parliament to do. The last thing we told you to do was to give them h—, and instead of that you have delegated your legislative powers to the government." If I did any such thing, Mr. Speaker, I would never see this parliament again and I would deserve not to see it. So much for that phase of the question.

The general tenor of my remarks when I was speaking on this question at a former stage was with regard to the political character of the farm relief organization. I took the ground that the organization under the relief commission was ninety per cent partisan; in other words, ninety per cent Tory. I took the ground that relief had always been administered satisfactorily by the rural municipalities, and that it had been taken out of their hands deliberately, out of the hands of a non-partisan body familiar with the requirements of the ratepayers and familiar with the administration of that kind of work in the past, and put in the hands of a partisan body. This is not the first time that relief has been administered, and by the rural municipalities. They have had experience in that work, but it was taken out of their hands, I repeat, and turned over to a partisan body with a Conservative organizer at the head of it as general manager. I am going to call to my support in that connection the remarks that were made by an hon. gentleman on the other side of the house, who went even further than I did at that time, and even boasted of the fact that partly on his recommendation his organizer who was responsible for him being here was appointed as general manager of the relief commission. I refer to the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Beynon). Here is what he says in Hansard:

> Now I come to the general manager, and this was where the ex-Minister of Agriculture took a little slap at myself.

I did not intend it to be a slap because I did not know that my hon. friend had recommended Mr. Daniel. He goes on:

> He said this gentleman organized the Conservative campaign in the constituency of Moose Jaw. That is very true; he did, and that is why I am here.

My hon. friend evidently thought that any organizer who could put him across in Moose Jaw would be all right to put in charge of relief distribution. He went on to say:

What has this man—

That is Mr. Daniel:

> What has this man done? He was called upon, as general manager of this organization, to build an organization from the ground up, and to undertake one of the most momentous tasks ever undertaken in Canada. He could not choose men and women trained in that particular work.

But he discarded an organization that was trained in that particular work:

> He had to go out among the unemployed and the needy and choose his staff and form his organization. He did that. An organization was built up, with inexperienced people—

That is exactly what I said, although I mentioned a few exceptions, but my hon. friend from Moose Jaw makes no exceptions. He says:

An organization was built up, with inexperienced people, men and women taken off the streets—

Off the highways and byways apparently, compelling them to come in:

—and in a very short time the organization was functioning.

That goes further than ever I did, and I now call on the hon. member for Moose Jaw in support of the testimony that I gave with respect to the inexperienced character of the staff and also with respect to the political character of the staff. No one has disputed anything I said with respect to the political character of the staff . The hon. member for Moose Jaw goes on to say:

There were municipal councils that were wholly non-political, but they were few in number, and while the municipal organizations were administering relief the dissatisfaction was very, very pronounced, as the relief was administered inequitably. That was one of the reasons for discontinuing their services.

That is the first living man that I have ever heard make that statement. For the last twenty-five years, wherever seed and relief was required, it was administered through the rural municipalities, and this is the first time I can recall that that practice has ever been departed from. It is not a sound reason for objection, because it is not a true reason. The municipal councils are not elected on a political or partisan basis. They are not elected for political reasons but purely for municipal reasons, and that is the only reason. Why were the urban councils not also discarded? It is strange that the rural municipalities should be scrapped for relief administration purposes and the urban councils retained. There is no uniformity or consistency there. I think I heard a chickadee voice or something over the way, Mr. Speaker.

Now I come to another phase. The Minister of Agriculture made certain appointments of supervisors, and of course he thought that they were just the real thing. He was not able to be up there himself, he said, and these supervisors had to be appointed. There was some difference of opinion between the Minister of Agriculture and myself with respect to a certain appointment that was made. I referred to one Percy Gordon, a Conservative gentleman in Regina. At one time he was one of my constituents, and I have run across him several times since. In his various capacities he has been known as a Conservative, from the ground up. Between elections he is a very respectable man, but during elections he is ready to do almost anything to win. A few days ago, when making my speech, I hesitated to state whether or not he was directly connected with the Regina Star, or whether he was a director of that newspaper. I am now in a position to inform the house that throughout the provincial campaign of 1929 and the federal campaign of 1930 Mr. Percy Gordon was a director of the Regina Star Co., had been from its inception in 1928, and, so far as I know, still holds that position. So that as a director of that rag of a Tory Star, that head, tail and middle of the anti-French campaign which was carried on throughout the west and particularly in the province of Saskatchewan during the last two election campaigns, he was pretty close to the Conservative campaign organization. I am surprised the hon. member for Long Lake (Mr. Cowan) has not interrupted. The connection of Mr. Gordon with the Star has been broadcast across Saskatchewan not once but many times, and nobody has dared to challenge the accuracy of the statement. I do not hear any hon. members objecting, so I shall proceed.

I should like at this point to direct the attention of the house to some remarks of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) concerning promissory notes, and if time permits I shall deal with seed relief. Twenty minutes is a very short time in which to consider this matter, but fortunately there will be other opportunities. I should like to assure the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Kennedy) that the distribution of seed is going on without interruption. The injection by Premier Anderson of a telegram into the midst of this discussion was a pure political game of bluff, an effort to jack up this government and intimidate the opposition. That is all it was for. He seemed to think that the farmers in the west would be up in arms against us, that they would allege that we were at fault, or that we had delayed the passage of this proposed legislation.

Mr. LOUCKS: That is what is happening. They are up in arms in the province of Saskatchewan.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I will take my chances.

Mr. LOUCKS: So will I.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: You have not taken any yet by speaking or defending the government. The despatch comes from Regina, through the columns of the Regina Leader-Post, that the relief commission or the provincial government has negotiated a short term loan at the banks to carry on relief and of seed measures while the matter is being adjusted in this house. So that hon. members may rest easy; relief is going on. Hon. members opposite do not need to worry about it, and certainly they cannot intimidate hon. members on this side of the house. We will do our duty, and at the same time seed will be furnished and relief will go on.

The only complaint I have heard yet is that some of the seed grain supplied was so dirty and smutty that the people thought it must have come from the Tory committee rooms. The government is giving orders on elevators, and the grain is being sent out before it is cleaned. A number of travelling cleaning plants have been secured, and they are perambulating around the country. There is a big jamboree going on over the quality of grain. In some cases the quality is so low there is very grave objection to it. That is the first time I have known of seed grain being sent out by a government in so objectionable a condition.

Mr. LOUCKS: The hon. member sent it out in the same condition.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Now, Mr. Speaker, did you ever see the like of that? When the hon. member is sitting he seems to be able to cackle, but when he is standing he cannot even crow.

I shall now preceed with certain statements made by the Minister of Agriculture. It is most unfortunate that the ministers responsible for this measure are not in their seats. They are generally away when their presence is most required. In the month of February the minister told us that he met a deputation who took the ground that they did not want charity. Although the minister's statement is in Hansard I shall give only the substance of it, and not take time to quote. The delegation seemed to be of opinion that the seed and relief were to be given free, but objected to such. We must remember that under the five cent bonus some of the farmers received as much as $1,000, but the deputation before the minister was not looking for charity. That deputation may have consisted of only three or four people. Supposing however there were a dozen, we are asked to believe that because a dozen farmers wanted to sign a note the minister decided that all farmers receiving relief should sign notes.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member's time has elapsed.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I'll have another chance at it Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Motherwell.]

Mr. MARTIAL RHEAUME (St-Johns-Iberville) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, since I have the opportunity of speaking a second time in this debate, I wish to tell the right hon. Prime Minister of this country (Mr. Bennett) that if he applies the gag rule, he is at liberty to do so, but he has against him the people who have their representatives in this house and who will have the last word the next time, when they will seize the opportunity to avenge themselves. Everybody recalls the famous election act of 1917, that was devised by Senator Meighen to remain in office against the will of the people; but the people had their revenge in 1921, the Conservative party was swept away and entirely disowned by some of the provinces.

Mr. Speaker, during the last election the Prime Minister travelled throughout the country, making all kinds of promises to all classes of the community, specially to the farmers, to whom he promised higher prices for their products, such as butter, cheese, eggs, vegetables and so on. This reminds me of a little incident which was related to me by a farmer of the county of Chateauguay during the last provincial election, in 1931. He had personally heard the Prime Minister address a meeting of farmers at Ormstown. The Prime Minister had said he just had visited the southern part of the province of Quebec and, along the road, he had seen women, assisted by their children, who were busy milking cows; he thought it was a pity to see the prices of milk so low that they would not even pay for the cost of labour. He had also seen whole families picking up and bundling vegetables to take them over to the market, at Montreal, and he knew that they could not get enough out of the sale of these vegetables to pay for the trouble of putting them up into bundles. Mr. Speaker, after these statements and the stand taken by the Prime Minister in depriving the farmers of their markets and increasing their cost of production by raising the taxes on farm implements, can we have confidence in his pledges? His supporters and himself claim that he has fulfilled his pledges, that he had promised an emergency session and we had it, that he had $20,000,000 voted by parliament for the relief of unemployment, so that he kept his promises. But his supporters and himself travelled throughout the country, promising to build bridges and wharves on all lakes and streams, and to give employment to those who would be willing to work. He was then saying: "Put me in office and I promise you that I shall bring comfort, joy and happiness into every home or I will perish in the attempt."

In what way did he try to cure unemployment? He compelled the provincial governments to contribute 25 per cent and the municipalities, 50 per cent, while the dominion was giving 25 per cent. He thus placed some of the provinces and a great number of municipalities on the verge of bankruptcy.

Last Wednesday, replying to the leader of the Liberal party, the right hon. Prime Minister spoke about the elections in Three Rivers and Athabaska. I remember, Mr. Speaker, that many promises were made during the election in Three Rivers, and we have not yet been told by the hon. member for that constituency (Mr. Bourgeois) whether these promises made by his party had been fulfilled. He surely had the opportunity of doing so, but he carefully avoided it. Like many hon. members opposite, he was content with flattering his leader, in the course of his speech on the address.

In his reply, last Wednesday, the Prime Minister referred to the speech of the hon. member of Quebec South (Mr. Power). I realize that the remarks of the hon. member may have hurt his pride. There is a proverb that says: "Spare the rod and spoil the child." Mr. Speaker, there is a lot of truth in the remarks of the hon. member. If the prime minister will coolly peruse that speech, he will find in it a true picture of himself. He is a very intelligent man; everybody acknowledges his many qualities, but he has one failing that surpasses his qualities: he is a recognized autocrat. At the Imperial conference, in the fall of 1930, some minister over there called him names that he did not like and he was not the only one to do it. Prominent Conservatives made some unkind remarks about him. In 1917, a member of the Conservative government, of which he was himself a minister, directed some remarks to him that nobody here would care to repeat; they were reported in Hansard, and anybody can read them. If the Prime Minister would only take notice of these remarks, I think that perhaps he could reform; it would be all the better for his party, and the country would be administered in a constitutional way.

Mr. Speaker, hon. members opposite, in this debate, are putting aside what is dearest to all Canadians, namely the constitution of this country which our forefathers secured at the cost of so many sacrifices. We, on this side of the house, are not ready to sacrifice it to a Tory government. The right hon. Prime Minister, in his speech, on March 23 last, stated that he had a certain task to complete; he says that there is nothing very serious, but I am afraid of such a statement. If there is nothing very important, why does he persist in demanding that blank cheque?

Since I am a member of this house, I have always followed very closely the Prime Minister, and I noticed that he often changed his opinions, according to circumstances. I shall mention a particular instance concerning immigration. On April 21, 1931, he is quoted in Hansard, page 784, as follows:

> That is the story. Let me place before the house one statement shown by figures I have in my possession. Do hon. members realize that during that period of time 104,556 people came into this country from central Europe? They came here, and they are now largely being kept by Canadians.
>
> Most of them are being kept—not all of them—by Canadians, with our taxes.

But let us see what he said on February 11, 1929:

> We have here one of the largest undeveloped areas in the world; we have a very pressing necessity for more people. There need be no misapprehension about that, notwithstanding what has been said from time to time to the contrary. It will be found that the increase of population in this country, brought about through bringing additional people in, will not only lessen unemployment for those who are now in it, but will increase all employment.

Mr. Speaker, when the Prime Minister of a country makes such a statement, and two years later recommends the very opposite, and blames the Liberal party for not fostering immigration to the utmost, I have a reason to say that he changes his opinions whenever it answers his purpose.

Let us see now what his colleague, the hon. Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion) said, when he was in the opposition. I quote Hansard, page 2746, of 1929:

> My complaint is not so much that the number of British immigrants is not larger, as that our immigration of all classes is much too small. . . . . I submit that we could take many times the numbers of people of all kinds than we are getting at the present time.

Whenever it answers their purpose, hon. gentlemen opposite blame the Liberal party for having fostered immigration to the utmost, but they were pleading themselves in favour of immigration when they were in the opposition. In view of such inconsistency, I am wondering whether we have not some good reason to be apprehensive of the future, for I know that the Prime Minister is not the man who would change attitude, when it is a question of serving his political ends.

Mr. Speaker, one more word, and I am through. I would like the hon. Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau), whose constituency is next to mine and which is one of the most beautiful districts of the province of Quebec, and the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Sauvé), the great supporter of the farmers in the Quebec legislature, to urge upon the Prime Minister and the members of the cabinet, the necessity of doing something for the farmers of the eastern provinces. In my constituency, and others that I know, there are farmers who are on the verge of bankruptcy, and others are too poor to buy their seed. Special attention is given Saskatchewan, but it is not the only province that is suffering. The hon. member for Regina (Mr. Turnbull), in his speech on March 18 last, appealed to us to assist his province. I would suggest to the hon. member to tell his prime minister, Mr. Anderson, if he needs the support of other parts of this dominion, if he requires their financial assistance to pay the debts of that province, to think of the province of Quebec which will probably pay a big share of the relief appropriation and to think also of the French Canadians and Catholics of this country, who will certainly not refuse to give. But I would ask him, in return, to give the French Canadians and Catholics of his province the same treatment as we are giving to other races and creeds in the province of Quebec. In Quebec we are just like brothers, we respect the minorities and consider that we are all Canadians, irrespective of race or creed.

Mr. VINCENT DUPUIS (Laprairie-Napierville): Mr. Speaker, you have the responsibility of presiding over this assembly of free men who, because of the action of the constituted authorities, are in actual danger of losing their status as representatives of the people—people whose ancestors through the centuries have struggled to obtain the right to control the administration of their own affairs.

Is there any good reason for the government to take this course? What is the state of affairs at the present time? Apparently Canada, like all other countries, is seriously affected by this industrial and economic crisis. Industry is upset; commerce is not only stagnant, but topsy-turvey; capital, accumulated in the hands of the few, is kept hidden behind steel doors; our unemployed are starving and in a state of indescribable misery, while those engaged in the cultivation of the soil—our farmers, the most important class in the community—are unable to sell their products, and in fear of becoming destitute in the midst of plenty. At the same time they are astounded to find that although their barns are filled to capacity many of their fellow Canadians lack the necessaries of life.

[Mr. Rhéaume.]

These conditions are the common lot of all the nations of the civilized world. Did this government do, as all other governments did, their utmost to prevent any aggravation of the crisis? No; because of their vain pride they attempted to live up to all the promises they made. They promised to close the door to all foreign goods, thinking that was the cure for low prices, and they raised the tariff to new heights. The result has been that other nations have applied the policy of an eye for an eye, and our producers find themselves in a still worse condition. In a desperate attempt to redeem their pledges the government spent hundreds of millions of dollars in an endeavour to rescue labourers and farmers from unemployment, but it has been established that only thirty per cent of the money spent went to the working men. Now this same government is throwing on the streets hundreds and thousands of civil servants and other employees under their control, thus increasing unemployment while they profess to diminish it.

The capitalists, in their turn, instead of lending their money in order to encourage trade and industry, refuse to make any investments, and what is more serious and less comprehensible, these same capitalists, wishing to secure their usual income even during the depression, had their representatives in the cabinet who carried out the so-called national loan, supposedly to meet the present emergency, at a rate of interest so high that all the money available flowed into the treasury of the government. The small industries and the farmers in great need could not get the necessary capital to maintain their credit, and these were left with no alternative than to go bankrupt or perish in the attempt. Because the suffering people of this country, witnessing what was happening, came in delegation after delegation to protest while we were here assembled, the government found it more expeditious to accumulate in the hands of the executive all the powers of government, legislative as well as executive, and so get rid of the representatives of the people whose duty it is to be vigilant in their control of the executive.

What are the arguments advanced by members of the government in justification? In answer to the suggestion of my right hon. leader (Mr. Mackenzie King) that the constitutional way was to bring in a supply bill, the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) said, if I might condense his statement, "In our judgment"—and of course in the mind of the Prime Minister that meant in his judgment —"to ask for any particular sum of money in the form of a supply bill would not meet the situation." And that was all. This reminds me of the way he disposed of the arguments of his opponents during the last campaign. Speaking at Caughnawaga, in my constituency, on June 9, 1930, the Prime Minister was met with the contention that he had been responsible for the blocking of a bill in connection with the construction of a bridge in that vicinity. In reply to that argument, which was unanswerable, he said, "Well, take a good look at me and see if you think I am a man who would do that."

In the speech made by the right hon. gentleman on March 23, he disposed of the suggestion of my right hon. leader by asking, "Since when has the government been led by the minority." In answer to that I should like to remind the Prime Minister that under our parliamentary system the loyal opposition is not here to govern but to offer legitimate criticism and bring forward useful suggestions. If the Prime Minister does not accept this interpretation of the duties of an opposition I would ask him what he thinks about several instances in the history of our own and other countries. For example, in 1775 the majority refused to grant the legitimate demand of the thirteen colonies of America—

Mr. GOBEIL: I rise to a point of order, Mr. Speaker; the hon. gentleman has been reading his speech from the start.

Mr. SPEAKER: I hope the hon. member will keep himself within the rules in that regard.

Mr. DUPUIS: I am just quoting some instances, Mr. Speaker, and if the hon. gentleman takes up my time in this way it must be because he is afraid of what I am going to say.

Mr. GOBEIL: The whole speech is a quotation.

Mr. DUPUIS: If the hon. gentleman is afraid now of what I am going to say he will be much more afraid at the next election. I was going to say, Mr. Speaker, that in 1775, when the thirteen colonies fought for their liberty, they did not constitute the majority, but they were fighting for that principle of responsible government to which we have adhered ever since, no taxation without representation. The hon. gentleman who just interrupted apparently does not remember that; he seems bewitched by his chief, because apparently he is unable to utter a single word of protest with regard to a policy which takes us back three centuries. Apparently my hon. friend is pleased to be taxed without being represented. Among the citizens of those thirteen colonies there were some who, wishing to be loyal to their king, left all that was dear to them, their goods, their homes and the country of their adoption, and came into Canada. They did so because to them loyalty was dearer than security. Will the Prime Minister say that they were wrong because, as a minority, they came here? I hope not. Let us come to the year 1837 in our own history. At that time the citizens of Lower and Upper Canada, although in the minority, fought that oligarchy which was then known as the Family Compact. Where was the power? Where was the majority? It was to be found in the parliaments at Quebec and Toronto. And who fought for liberty, who fought to ensure that the representatives of the Canadian people should come within the precincts of parliament in order to control the spending of money and to control the executive? It was the minority of that time, led by the Papineaus and the Mackenzies. Is the Prime Minister prepared to say that they were wrong? I know he will not say that.

Let me now dispose of another argument. It is contended by my right hon. friend that if we do not vote for this legislation the farmers of the west will be deprived of their seed grain, their fuel and their feed, and that we on this side shall be responsible. That reminds me, Mr. Speaker, of the strategy of some generals in the war. With the enemy in front of them, and with some strategic point in danger, forgetting the ordinary and elementary laws of human nature, they took the wives, the old people and the children of the enemy and gave orders to their own soldiers to push these defenceless creatures before them at the point of the bayonet, making of them a curtain or veil to prevent the enemy from firing upon themselves, because they knew that the enemy would not fire upon their own kith and kin. That is the same strategy, the same plan as is adopted by the government to-day. Hon. gentlemen opposite know that the people in the west are dear to us. They know that there is not a family in eastern Canada that has not friends or relatives among the people of the west. The Prime Minister knows that; he knows that the people of western Canada are as dear to us as they are to him. And so he threatens us, saying that if we do not vote for this measure the responsibility will be ours for the people of western Canada being deprived of the necessaries of life. I say that is not a proper way to handle the affairs of this country. The Prime Minister must know that not a single farmer in the west will be deprived of his grain as a result of our protest against this act of oligarchy on the part of the present government in denying members of parliament the right to control the executive. As he has said in some of his speeches, he spent $71,000,000 to redeem the credit of the western provinces; and he went to considerable trouble in the first part of his speech on this subject to point out that, according to certain judgments of Lord Haldane's quoted by him, the responsibility for coming to the rescue of the unemployed and of the farmers rests with the provinces and not with the dominion. He knows that the provinces, having their credit restored by act of this government, will see that the citizens, in their respective territories, will be given relief. He has no right to fool the people. I would remind him, in the words of Lincoln, that while he may be able to fool all the people some of the time, or some of the people all of the time, he will not be able to fool all the people all of the time.

When the Prime Minister and his colleagues have lost all hope, they play up Providence. Last year we heard him from Vancouver to Halifax saying to the Canadian people: "Just a moment. I promised you lots of things and I am unable to redeem all my promises; but wait; Providence will come to your rescue." Allow me to give the opinion of a great statesman, Woodrow Wilson, in his book The New Freedom, to show what he thought of those who played up Providence in this way.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman has spoken twenty minutes.

Hon. P. J. VENIOT (Gloucester): At the risk of being regarded as perhaps too persistent, I am going to deal once more with the method adopted in the expenditure of federal relief money in the province of New Brunswick; and if I take advantage of this opportunity to do so again it is because of the difference, which seems to be a vast one, between the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon) and myself, touching certain statements made by me first on February 23 and again on March 8, in discussing the expenditure of unemployment relief money in the county of Gloucester.

On February 23, referring to complaints made by me in detail, and submitted to Mr. Carter, a gentleman sent from Ottawa to investigate complaints in Gloucester, the Minister of Labour from his seat in the house contradicted my statement that this was federal unemployment relief money. He stated that the complaints made by me referred to roads on which New Brunswick provincial money had been expended and that not one cent of federal money was spent on those roads. It is not my practice to make, in a deliberate body, statements like this without being in a position to back them up. When I made that statement on February 23 I had personal knowledge of the facts and I refused to accept the statement then made by the Minister of Labour.

I wish now to justify my action. I hold in my hand a reply to a notice of inquiry made on Friday, March 4, by Mr. Richard, member for the county of Gloucester in the local legislature. He asked for the names of the roads in Gloucester county upon which federal money had been spent. The Minister of Public Works of New Brunswick laid before the legislature this statement which I hold in my hand and which comprises some seventy-five roads upon which federal money had been expended, and every one of the roads that I mentioned in my speech of February 23 is to be found in that list. On that occasion I also spoke particularly about the amount of federal money spent on what is known as the East Bathurst or old Miramichi road, and again the Minister of Labour interjected that not one dollar of federal aid had been expended on that road. I have under my hand reply to inquiry No. 7, made on the floor of the New Brunswick legislature and containing the following questions:

1. What amount of money was paid for work done on the old Bathurst road from East Bathurst going towards the Miramichi road, during the months of October and November last?

The answer was:

$17,266.60.

The next question:

2. Was the work performed under the federal employment relief?

Answer:

Partially—$11,870.35, unemployment relief; $5,396.25, provincial funds.

Let me go further. On that occasion I also stated that nearly every dollar expended on the projects approved by the federal Department of Labour for unemployment relief in the county of Gloucester on November 26, 1931, had been expended months before the projects were approved. I hold in my hand reply to notice of inquiry for Tuesday, March 8, made in writing and submitted to the New Brunswick legislature by Mr. Doucet, provincial member for the county of Gloucester. These are the questions that were asked:

1. What amounts were expended in the county of Gloucester during the months of June, July, August, September, October, November and December, 1931 on: (a) permanent roads; (b) secondary roads; (c) by-roads; (d) patrol; (e) ordinary bridges; (f) permanent bridges? In answering set out in detail, amounts spent in each above-mentioned service per month—not lump sums.

2. Indicate what portion of the above sums have been paid out of: (a) provincial funds; (b) federal unemployment or other sources?

The answer is:

1 and 2 answered on attached page.

I hold in my hand a return laid before the New Brunswick legislature reading as follows:

Main Trunk Roads

Month—	Provincial funds	Federal unemployment
June. . .	$ 519 06	$1,354 08
July. . .	1,356 74	10 50
August. .	4,492 57	——

I wish to draw the attention of the house to the next two months, September and October, the period when we were carrying on the by-election in that county. What do we find? The figures are as follows:

Main Trunk Roads

Month—	Provincial funds	Federal unemployment
September.	$ 337 45	$6,376 77
October. .	1,630 70	4,834 79
Secondary and Branch Roads
September.	$ 35 30	$3,992 85
October. .	....	4,197 67

Then we go down the line and we come to patrol—patrolling the roads:

Patrol

Month—	Provincial funds	Federal unemployment
September.	$1,239 98	$1,640 22
October. .	925 60	415 33

Those were the months of the by-election.

Month—	Provincial funds	Federal unemployment
November.	347 04	381 86

I include November in this because I wish to point out that federal aid for unemployment relief, to give work to those out of employment, was used to the extent of $2,550 in the county of Gloucester in September, October and November, to pay the salaries of men regularly employed in that county. These men are permanently employed under salary, and it was not relieving unemployment in Gloucester county to use federal aid that was voted by the house to help the unemployed, to pay the salaries of those regular patrol men.

Let me speak now of the province as a whole. The government of New Brunswick charged up to the federal aid fund the patrolling of the roads in nearly every county in that province. This is a misuse of money that was voted to relieve unemployment. If hon. members will look at the figures for September and October, when we were in the heat of a political battle in Gloucester county, they will find that in those two months alone the provincial government spent $27,000 which they charged up to the federal relief fund. If, as the Minister of Labour stated, in regard to the complaints I made of the manner in which that money was spent, it was not expended under federal aid, then the dominion Department of Labour is entitled to ask the province of New Brunswick to refund to the federal treasury the amount thus charged. I believe the minister has been led astray; I know he would not deliberately mislead the house; but if he got from the New Brunswick Minister of Public Works the information on which he based his interjection to me and which gave him grounds for saying that no federal money was expended on the roads in regard to which I complained, he was led astray by that gentleman. If Mr. Carter, when he went down to Gloucester county to examine into the expenditures there, and his attention was drawn to the padding of the pay sheets for the 26th day of October on the east Bathurst road, or the old Miramichi road so-called, was informed by the Department of Public Works of New Brunswick that no federal money had been spent on that road, then Mr. Carter was led astray, and in consequence of having been led astray in that manner he led his minister astray and the minister gave to this house information that had no foundation. I hold in my hand, and I think I have read this before in the house, the proof that in the month of October there was practically $12,000 of federal aid spent on the east Bathurst or old Miramichi road. I have also in my hand absolute proof from the lips of the Minister of Public Works of New Brunswick himself that I correctly stated the situation on the floor of this house when I said that the pay sheets for the 26th of October had been padded and that the names of hundreds of men had been placed on the pay sheets as working under the federal relief fund when they had never done a tap of work that day. They were induced to go to the polls and vote for the provincial government candidate on that day on the understanding that their names would be placed on the pay sheets, and their names were placed on the pay sheets. If this house wants any better proof than my word, I have here the words of the Minister of Public Works of the province of New Brunswick speaking in the legislature of New Brunswick on the 22nd of March last. What did he say? I am going to read it and I hope that I shall have time to read it all:

Mr. Stewart—

That is the name of the Minister of Public Works of New Brunswick:

—also reiterated his statement that the statement made in Ottawa by Hon. Dr. P. J. Veniot, ex-Postmaster General, regarding roadwork in Gloucester county last fall had been substantially disproved.

He reiterated that statement. Mr. Stewart also said:

There was in the possession of his department documentary evidence which disposed of three of Hon. Dr. Veniot's allegations.

He does not name those three allegations. They are only three out of about fifty that I made. He went on to say:

The former Postmaster General had made the assertion that two hundred men who did not work that day were on the payroll of the east Bathurst road on October 26, 1931, the day of the Gloucester by-election, and had been paid out of unemployment relief funds.

"Now this is absolutely false," Hon. Mr. Stewart said. Continuing, he further said: "While it was true that some men were down on the pay roll of the East Bathurst Road as having worked on the day of the by-election, he had ordered these erased. Subsequently the department had received authentic information that some of the men had worked."

Let me right here correct the Minister of Public Works of New Brunswick. He cannot find in Hansard or in any interview that I ever gave to the press anything to show that I ever said that those men had been paid out of the federal relief fund. What I did say was that the pay sheet was padded with the names of men who had not worked, and when Mr. Carter came to Bathurst I drew his attention to it and asked him to see that those men would not be paid for that day's work because they did not earn the money. I never said that they were paid out of the federal relief fund.

Mr. GORDON: What seems to be your difficulty, then?

Mr. VENIOT: They were placed on the pay sheet to be paid, and if I had not made the complaint they would have been paid.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. VENIOT: It is not a joke. I will go further. Mr. Carter is right here in the city. Mr. Carter called in the timekeeper on that work, Mr. William Gallagher.

An hon. MEMBER: Let 'er go, Gallagher.

Mr. VENIOT: That is right, let 'er go Gallagher, and that is what they did; they "let 'et go" for all that Gallagher could go that day. Mr. Gallagher told Mr. Carter that it was unaccountable. He could not understand how it was that these men were put on the pay sheet, but perhaps his assistant could give the information. His assistant was a young boy by the name of Caie, a schoolboy. He was sent for, and as soon as he came into the hotel room to Mr. Carter he started crying because he knew that he was going to be called to account for something that he had done wrong. Mr. Carter told him that he had nothing to fear, that all he wanted was the truth, and the boy was asked if he had put these men's names in the time book. He said yes. Then he was asked, under whose orders, and he said, "My father and Will Gallagher." Now Mr. Carter has that information. He does not need to go to Gloucester county and make another investigation to ascertain whether I am telling the truth or not. I will let him report to the minister. That money was federal money and provincial money combined, and the Minister of Labour stood up in this house the other day and said that not one cent of that money was federal aid money. I am not blaming the minister. He acted upon the information, the wrong information, given to him by the authorities down in New Brunswick.

Mr. GORDON: Go ahead. Don't mind me.

Mr. VENIOT: If I wanted to hit the minister on this, I could do it perhaps, but I do not think there is any need of it. All I want the minister to do now, seeing that I have given him the evidence of what took place in the legislature of New Brunswick, where the Minister of Public Works for the province stated that my statement was correct when I said that this money was unemployment relief money—

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member's time is up.

Mr. VENIOT: I will come back.

Mr. ECCLES J. GOTT (South Essex): Mr. Speaker, up in Essex county we do things a little differently from what they do in New Brunswick.

Mr. VENIOT: Especially onions.

Mr. GOTT: Yes, especially in onion growing. I have an onion here which I desire to present to the hon. gentleman as a compliment from the onion growers of the county I have the honour to represent. I want to say to the hon. gentleman:

Carrots get by on their colour,
Spinach gets by on its rep,
Lettuce or beets for vitamins eat
But give me the onion for pep.

Silver-skinned onion or Spanish,
Or little ones green on the top,
They build up physique, make you strong where you're weak,
But socially cause you to flop.

For even the mildest of Essex
Will not be forgotten when gone
'Tis not erratic but very emphatic
Their melody will linger on.

In presenting this onion to the hon. member for Gloucester, with the compliments of the onion growers of South Essex, I want to say to him that we grew eight hundred thousand bushels of onions in Essex and Kent counties in 1931, and instead of selling them at one dollar a bag, as we did last year, we sold them for two dollars a bag, and had a complete sell-out.

Mr. VENIOT: If my hon. friend cannot grow better onions than that in his constituency he has nothing to crow about. We can grow better than that in Gloucester.

Mr. GOTT: Only a small sample, but a good one. Not a single charge has been made that one solitary penny for unemployment relief in Essex county has been misappropriated. I should like to add that the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Sanderson) was radical in his statements that unemployment relief measures had become a political football in the province of Ontario. Of course we expect the hon. member to make such extravagant statements. During the last election campaign he and the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) came into Essex county, and in a vein of ego he said, "I want to leave this man Gott to the people who know him best." He was speaking before 199 Liberals who managed to attend a Liberal convention —just imagine, 199 at a Liberal convention. Picture the ego displayed by the hon. member for South Perth. I thought I should look into his record and compare it with mine. I found that in 1921 there was a Liberal majority of 325 in the town of Amherstburg, my home town, and in 1925 they gave me a majority of 295 whereas in his own town of St. Marys, where they know him best, his opponent had 508 of a majority. Those are the people who know him best.

In this debate the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) has been charged with everything but the theft of the Lindbergh baby. The hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Veniot) made the same speech to-night that he made a couple of weeks ago. A year ago the opposition adopted similar tactics. They selected an item of $5,000 in the estimates of the Department of Agriculture, and debated it for twenty-two days. Then in fourteen minutes they passed estimates to the extent of over $27,000,000. This resolution should have been carried without opposition. All hon. members were hoping that the session would be completed by the end of April, but after listening to a debate on a resolution such as the one now before us, which should not have been debated at all, we cannot tell how long we will be here.

At this point I should like to read from the Toronto Globe concerning the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Hepburn), the dual leader of the Liberal party in the province of Ontario who referred to me as the minister of onions. I want to say to him that he never was a minister, never will be a minister, never was a leader and never will have a party to lead, because he is not the recognized leader of the Liberal party in the province of Ontario to-day. Here is what the Toronto Globe has to say about this great dual leader of the Liberal party, the wizard of repartee:

Mr. Mitchell F. Hepburn did not exhibit the wisdom and fairness expected from either a member of parliament or a provincial political leader in taking advantage of his privilege to state in the House of Commons that he believed the Sun Life Company was insolvent. Mr. Hepburn should realize that the spreading of such a view in the public records and before the people of the country is liable to have an unfavourable business effect. Had he made the statement outside of parliament he might be called upon to prove it, and in all probability he would avoid such liability. Is there any reason why a public man should be less careful in making speeches where he knows he is immune from the courts?

The Globe recently has criticized rather sharply the practice of politicians making allegations in public for political purposes without having convincing proof behind them. There could have been no political end served by the charges made three days ago in parliament concerning two insurance companies; hence not even this excuse is available. Premier Bennett had no misgivings as to the solvency of both companies. Therefore the worst possible view that might be justified was that a difference of opinion existed. Surely in such a case it is wise and patriotic to give a business institution the benefit of the doubt in these times of stress, when no constructive advantage could be gained by condemning it.

The fact that Mr. Hepburn made this allegation in the House of Commons is not proof that he was right. He knew he could not be called upon to submit proof; and if he wishes to measure up to leadership heights he should guard carefully, both in the house and out, against speeches which do not carry a sense of responsibility.

There is an editorial from the Toronto Globe—

An hon. MEMBER: A Tory paper?

Mr. GOTT: Yes, a good Conservative paper. I think the hon. member for South Perth should be absolutely ashamed of himself, after his remarks before a gigantic meeting in the city of London. On that occasion 75 were present. I shall read from the London Free Press the words of the hon. member for South Perth, words he would not have dared to use in the House of Commons. However when he appears before a large assembly of 75 Liberals in that wonderful city of London, he makes rash statements. The hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Gray), the illustrious gentleman, during the course of his remarks at London said that he was speaking in the heart of Liberalism, despite the fact that the hon. member for London (Mr. White) sits in this house after securing a majority of over 4,000 votes. Yet, we are told by the hon. member for West Lambton that London is the heart of Liberalism in western Ontario. The hon. member for South Perth is reported in the London Free Press as follows:

> Thereupon the Liberal whip switched his remarks back to his own fold, federal politics, and took up most of his time in launching a personal attack upon Hon. R. B. Bennett in which he termed the Prime Minister "a great believer in himself: not the type of politician who hated himself: ruthless to an opponent; thin-skinned, and one who cannot stand criticism."

What do hon. members think of remarks like this by a fellow member of this house? Then the article continues:

> Major Sanderson doubted very much if anything of benefit to Canada would come out of the Imperial conference.

Let me say that nothing would come of the Imperial conference if the hon. member for South Perth could prevent it. He would oppose for political purposes anything which might be of benefit to the Dominion of Canada. I shall repeat the article in the Free Press:

> Major Sanderson doubted very much if anything of benefit to Canada would come out of the Imperial conference to be held in Ottawa this summer, if the Premier stuck to his present politics. He asserted the members of the opposition are ready to cooperate with the government any time for the benefit of Canada, but that Mr. Bennett will get all the criticism the opposition wishes to give him.
>
> After considerable reference to the plight of agriculture . . .

The plight of agriculture; that is amusing. After nine years of Liberal administration we have an hon. member opposite talking about the plight of agriculture, despite the fact that during the year 1928, owing to the Australian trade treaty, the farmers of this country lost $80,000,000. The farmers of Canada began to slip as soon as the treaty was operative. The adverse trade balance with the United States from the year 1921 until the Mackenzie King government was routed at the polls in 1930 was upwards of two billions of dollars. The last year the Liberal party was in power there was an adverse trade balance with the United States of approximately $400,000,000.

An hon. MEMBER: Attaboy!

Mr. GOTT: Yes, "attaboy!" The hon. member from Provencher (Mr. Beaubien) who read from the prayer book the other day, said he was sincere in his remarks and referred to the prayers of the House of Commons. Let me say to him that if he does not put more sincerity into his prayers than he put into his speech the other day the devil will get him when he completes his earthly toil.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: May I be permitted a question?

Mr. GOTT: No. The hon. member would not permit me to ask him a question the other day when he had the floor, and I will not permit him to ask me a question now. The hon. member for Quebec South who is sitting right in front of the hon. member for Provencher, came into my riding in 1930. I was glad he came there because wherever he spoke I had a large majority.

To hear hon. members opposite talk about the plight of the farmer is an insult to intelligence and makes me smile. For nine years they refused to give one solitary bit of consideration to the farmers of Canada. As I said a moment ago, the action of the King government in 1925 in arranging a trade treaty with Australia did more to demoralize our farmers than any trade treaty ever negotiated by any government since Confederation.

An hon. MEMBER: What about the price of butter?

Mr. GOTT: You ought to know something about the price of butter because you slipped on it in 1930. I will say something about butter.

An hon. MEMBER: What about the price of eggs?

Mr. GOTT: Well, I will say something about the price of eggs too. But let me deal with butter first. In 1920 this province exported upwards of 20,000,000 pounds of butter to the United States. In that year the dominion exported to the United States over 20,000,000 pounds.

An hon. MEMBER: Not now.

Mr. GOTT: Of course, we don't export butter to the United States now. I will tell you why, if you will listen to me. In 1920 the United States' tariff on butter was only 2 cents a pound and they imported 36,000,000 pounds; they raised their tariff to 4 cents and the imports decreased to 18,000,000 pounds; then they raised the tariff to 6 cents, 8 cents, 10 cents and finally to 12 cents a pound. What was the result? You say, "Not now." Certainly we don't export butter to the United States now, simply because their tariff excludes our butter now. You cannot sell a pound of butter in the American market to-day; it is prohibited. That is why we don't export butter across the line now. But what about the Australian trade treaty and its extension to New Zealand by order in council; what result did that bring about? Before the King government was defeated in 1930 it resulted in the importation of 100,000,000 pounds of butter to compete with butter made by the farmers of Canada. No wonder the hon. gentleman says butter does not go into the United States now. The United States government will not permit it.

An hon. MEMBER: What about the price?

Mr. GOTT: What do you know about the price of butter? Why, Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman actually referred to the plight of the farmers. How could our farmers help being in a condition of depression after nine years of government such as we had until hon. gentlemen opposite were defeated in 1930? I should like to know if one person could tell me of one solitary thing that was done for the farmers of Canada from 1921 to the 28th day of July, 1930.

Mr. POULIOT: Conditions were better.

Mr. GOTT: I understood that the station at Riviere du Loup had been thoroughly fumigated and that all the bugs in that riding had been killed; but I see there is one left who has made his way to the House of Commons. Let me say to the hon. member for Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) that he is sitting in this house for the last time. He is here by virtue of a majority of 117; he had 2,000 majority in 1926. The next election will leave him like many others opposite—at home. The hon. gentlemen who will be left at home will include the hon. member for West Elgin and the hon. member for South Perth. I want to say another word to the hon. dual leader of the Liberal party.

Mr. POULIOT: He will be Prime Minister of Ontario.

Mr. GOTT: There will not be ten Liberals elected in Ontario under the leadership of the hon. member for West Elgin.

Mr. POULIOT: You are a charming speaker, but a poor prophet.

Mr. GOTT: I don't think the hon. member will be leader of the Liberal party when the next Ontario election is held. Listen to this from that good, old Tory sheet, the Toronto Mail and Empire of Friday, March 11—

The ACTING SPEAKER (Mr. Pettit): The hon. member has spoken for twenty minutes.

Mr. GOTT: I regret my time has expired, Mr. Speaker for I had merely commenced my remarks.

Mr. F. G. SANDERSON (South Perth): Mr. Speaker, in my limited time of twenty minutes I shall not be able to deal with my hon. friend from South Essex (Mr. Gott)—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

The ACTING SPEAKER (Mr. Pettit): I must ask hon. members to keep better order.

Mr. SANDERSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. MEMBER: Don't mention it.

Mr. SANDERSON: I do not want to waste much of my twenty minutes on my hon. friend, but I marvelled at his participation in this debate. In the old days there was always a court jester, whose duty it was by his buffoonery to revive the spirits of the king and his court whenever they were despondent. I think we have had a good example of the necessity for a court jester to-night, when the buffoon of the house, the clown from South Essex, was put up to revive the drooping spirits of the government and its supporters.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

The ACTING SPEAKER (Mr. Pettit): The hon. member should refrain from using such epithets.

Mr. SANDERSON: Mr. Speaker, if he is not a buffoon I do not know how to characterize him.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SANDERSON: I will deal with my hon. friend from South Essex at some other time, when I shall have more than twenty minutes at my disposal.

Mr. GOTT: I will take you on at any time and in any place.

Mr. SANDERSON: Now, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a word or two on the subject before the house.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. SANDERSON: I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to keep order. If hon. members who support the government have not enough courage to get up and defend the government, for heaven's sake let them keep quiet when someone else is trying to speak.

If I may be permitted to go on, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that during this debate there has been a tendency on the part of the few ministers and hon. members opposite who have spoken to blame the opposition speakers for prolonging the debate and preventing money from being spent throughout the country for unemployment and farm relief. In that connection I want to quote from the speech of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) as it appears on page 1344 of Hansard for March 22:

Hon. Robert Weir (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have sat here day after day listening to the debate on this resolution hoping against hope to see it end, with the full appreciation that I have of the incalculable danger of suffering that is liable to occur if the debate should be prolonged to such an extent as to make it too late, especially for the farmers in western Canada, to receive the seed grain which they need so badly for this year. Moreover, the prolongation of this debate has held up the machinery to look after the problem of unemployment relief work throughout the dominion to such a degree that great distress has been caused, which perhaps few members of the opposition seem to realize.

That is rather a strong statement to come from a minister of the crown. I see the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon) in their seats, and I should like to ask any minister or any hon. member opposite if the government have received a single complaint from one end of this dominion to the other, or if they can name any specific case where suffering has not been relieved and could not be relieved because this debate has proceeded.

Mr. GORDON: If the hon. gentleman really is serious in directing that question to me as Minister of Labour I will answer him and say yes, we have received many complaints from municipalities, from provinces and even from individuals.

Mr. SANDERSON: Would the minister give me a specific case?

Mr. GORDON: I could give the hon. gentleman a long list.

Mr. HACKETT: The city of Montreal, for one.

Mr. SHORT: And the city of Sydney for another.

Mr. SANDERSON: It is quite apparent that the government have no cases to cite. If hon. gentlemen opposite will just possess their souls in patience I want to say something now about the Prime Minister and the speech he made in this house on March 23. Before I go on to his speech, however, I should like to refer back to the debate which took place in this house during the session of 1931. In the dying days of that session, after parliament had been in session from March 12 to August 3, the government brought in this blank cheque legislation. What reasons were advanced at that time by the Prime Minister? If I had time I could read those reasons from Hansard, but unfortunately I have not the time. The Prime Minister advanced two main reasons, and one was that he feared that before he could call parliament together some great emergency might arise in the country, and the government should have unlimited power with regard to financial and other resources to deal with such emergency as and if it arose. Yet we find that even with parliament in session now the same government comes back asking for an extension of that legislation until May 1. Another reason given by the Prime Minister last year was that if a specific amount was voted by parliament, say $100,000,000, or $150,000,000, that amount might be too large, and as a result the provinces and municipalities might get more than their share. I am summarizing the exact words of the Prime Minister. Could any argument have been weaker? Now the government come along and practically say to the elected representatives of the people of this country, "We want to run this country. We will run it. We do not need you here and you might as well go home."

Mr. COWAN (Long Lake): You would be better there.

Mr. SANDERSON: My hon. friend from Long Lake (Mr. Cowan) could have gone home months ago and we never would have missed him in the house. So we have the same autocratic government coming back to this parliament for another blank cheque, the most despotic piece of legislation this country has ever seen. I hope parliament will never have another piece of legislation like it.

Let us look at the Prime Minister and his cabinet, and we may find some reason why they require this unlimited power.

Mr. GORDON: You mean blankety-blank cheque.

Mr. SANDERSON: During the campaign and the special session which followed it the Prime Minister used to say that he was a man who thrived on difficulties. He was a miracle man then but a few months ago he said he had come to the conclusion that only the grace of God would save this country. When I read that I thought to myself that it was an admission by the Prime Minister the superman, that at least one was mightier than he.

How many ministers of this government have risen in their places to defend this legislation? It is true that the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Trade and Commerce did so. I see my friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce in his seat and I will pay this tribute to him: I used to listen to him sometimes with a great deal of pleasure when he was in opposition. He is resourceful in debate, but he made a woeful mess of his case the other day. In the bottom of his heart he knew that he was defending something in which he did not believe, and his defence of the government was rather pitiful to hear. The Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion) also defended the government in one of his fiery stump speeches which perhaps would have sounded better out on the hustings than in this House of Commons. But what about the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie)? Should he not be here to defend this legislation? The Minister of Justice is perhaps the minister who should bear the brunt of a debate such as this. I would not expect the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Stewart) to defend this legislation, though the other day the Prime Minister said, almost with tears in his eyes, that opposition members were criticizing the cabinet because they did not assert themselves. The Prime Minister said, "I want to tell the house and the country that we have many differences at cabinet meetings; we do not always see eye to eye. I have great difficulty with some members of the cabinet."

I should like to know who are those members. Can anyone imagine the Minister of Public Works combating the Prime Minister? Can anyone imagine even the Minister of Justice, in this late day, when he is nearing the end of his political career and is looking forward to something else, combating the Prime Minister? It is quite obvious that the Minister of Labour never combated the Prime Minister or he would not have been elevated to his present office. They take it lying down and sitting up; there is one man at the head of this government all the time, and that is the right hon. Prime Minister. Then I come to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Sutherland) who is a good friend of mine. I do not think he ever combated the Prime Minister. The great trouble, Mr. Speaker, is that the government are in a hole; they know that is so, and they are in that hole because of their own blunders. The record of this government has been one blunder after another since they took office on August 7, 1930, and they are now asking for sympathy. They say that the opposition is criticizing them and they are pleading for sympathy. They do not deserve any sympathy and I can assure them that they are not going to get any sympathy from the people of this dominion anywhere from coast to coast. The people are going to seize the first opportunity they have to turn them out of office because they came in on promises which they have broken and they have carried on the most bungling government we have ever had in this country.

An hon. MEMBER: Except one.

Mr. SANDERSON: My hon. friends across the way do not like this; they are very sensitive.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. SANDERSON: Let me say to hon. gentlemen who are jeering over there that they have not the courage to get up and defend this legislation. I could name some of those gentlemen but I will not honour them by doing so. They are the most docile lot of sheep I ever saw. They will follow this government everywhere, although they would like to vote against the government. Many of them at the bottom of their hearts would like to vote against the government to-night, but they are afraid that if they did so the government would be defeated and they would not get back here again. The result is that they are following their leader everywhere. They are following the miracle man, the superman, the man who has been overcoming difficulties all his life and who thrives on difficulties; and here we have him attempting to enact in this parliament a piece of legislation the like of which has never been heard of.

There is more I could say about the Prime Minister. My hon. friend from South Essex (Mr. Gott) said that I had criticized the hon. gentleman in London, Ontario. Perhaps I did criticize the Prime Minister, and I will criticize him whenever I have reason to do so. Who is he that he should not be criticized? My hon. friends are afraid of him; every member of the cabinet is afraid of him. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon) is a very large man but his courage fails him when he comes up against the Prime Minister; his courage oozes right out. And that holds true of all members of the cabinet. This debate has been going on for fourteen days now and not a cabinet minister gets up. If my hon. friend from South Essex had had on his head the cap which one of the Ottawa papers said he should wear, that might have made the debate complete. That hon. gentleman has been put up to defend the government, but not a cabinet minister gets up to perform that duty. What is this government coming to? What is the country coming to? Is the Minister of Labour tongue-tied? Is the Minister of Trade and Commerce tongue-tied? I see the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Murphy) is in; is he tongue-tied? Are they all tongue-tied? The superman, the boss, has said, "No one shall speak to-night," and they are not speaking—that is, except the hon. gentleman from South Essex who got up to make a wonderful speech. And this, mind you, is the government that has a normal majority of thirty-one or thirty-two in this house. I want to say to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the members of this house that the country is watching this debate.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

An hon. MEMBER: They are watching you.

Mr. SANDERSON: My hon. friend from Toronto East Centre (Mr. Matthews) speaks out; he says they are watching me. Well, we are watching him until he steps up as lieutenant-governor of Ontario. My hon. friend from Toronto East Centre will defend the government and vote with them because he has the prospect of a nice position as lieutenant-governor of the great province of Ontario. He will be very docile at all times. Is there any other hon. gentleman who would like to say anything over there? If I had unlimited time I would take on the whole crowd to-night, but I have not the time.

Let me say, in closing, what has been said many times from this side in regard to this matter. This supergovernment could bring in a supply bill to-night for $50,000,000 or $100,000,000 or any amount they might want and we would pass it in half an hour. What are they afraid of? The Prime Minister likes to speak of peace, order and good government; he likes to refer to the mother of parliaments and the British constitution and to talk about peace, order and good government. We have peace in this country, Mr. Speaker, and we have order in this country; but I cannot say that we have good government in this country. No one can say that; no one will say it unless it be the members of the government themselves.

Mr. DURANLEAU: What about Athabaska?

Mr. SANDERSON: I want to say in all seriousness that just such legislation as this government are trying to force upon the opposition, to secure unlimited powers without consulting parliament, without even asking parliament whether it is right or wrong, the very fact that they are attempting to-night to put through legislation will upset peace and order in the country quicker than anything else. And these tactics will upset, not this good government but this bad government.

An hon. MEMBER: Why worry?

Mr. SANDERSON: Did one of the ministers speak to me?

Mr. MURPHY: The hon. gentleman is looking in my direction. I was too much pleased with his diatribe to interrupt him.

Mr. SANDERSON: It would have been a delight to hear the minister, because you cannot hear a peep out of the ministers; they are all dumb except the Minister of Labour. That hon. gentleman did attempt something to-night but he did not get very far. Perhaps instructions have not come in from the office behind the corridor. When instructions from headquarters do come in, then perhaps before to-morrow morning some of the ministers will have the courage to get up and say something, and then we shall hear the banging of desks over there and all will be well. I do not know whether my time is up.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go on.

Mr. SANDERSON: Very well, I shall be glad to go on.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member has spoken twenty minutes.

Mr. CAMERON R. McINTOSH (North Battleford): Mr. Speaker and friends of the despotic government of Canada opposite, I hold in my hand—

An hon. MEMBER: Which hand?

Mr. McINTOSH: Have a laugh—"the loud laugh that speaks the vacant mind." This line is from Goldsmith. Perhaps, if you would be good enough to hold your peace for a few minutes, we might get on with this debate. I was saying that I hold in my hand a copy of The New Despotism, and as I look across the floor of the house and see men who are supposed to be the representatives of the Canadian people, but who stand for a policy of constitutional despotism and are followers of a despotic Prime Minister, and when I look at the resolution before the house and note the phraseology in which that despotic resolution is clothed, I wonder just what hon. gentlemen opposite think of themselves. They are trying to tell the people of Canada that there is an exceptional emergency in this country. They are trying to tell the people of Canada that we must have this type of legislation because a national disaster is facing them. That is all nonsense; no national disaster is facing Canada except the disaster of bad government brought into existence by hon. gentlemen opposite during the last two years.

One begins to wonder just why we have more than a hundred members of parliament from all parts of Canada sitting still and saying practically nothing when such an important question in regard to unemployment and farm relief is before us. Although for the last three weeks in the house we have had a debate on this problem, only infrequently has a minister or a private member opposite had the courage to tell the riding he represents and the people of Canada just where he stands on this proposition. If we read the resolution, we find in the first line the significant word "expedient." It states: Resolved that it is expedient to introduce a bill to amend a certain chapter and to strike out a certain word and substitute another word therefor. When we come to consider just what the government is trying to do, the word "expedient" has certainly an important significance. What is it? One explanation of the word is that it is "a shift made to make the best of things," and I believe the government is to-night trying to put forward a type of legislation that will enable it to get out of a bad hole. But when this fight is carried to the electors, as it will be two or three years from now, I am badly mistaken if the government will not be sorry for ever attempting, as they have done, to rush through the house such a piece of arrogant legislation.

Again, the term "expedient" is "a device or contrivance to serve in lieu of something better." It is "something characterized by mere utility rather than principle," and, indeed, there is not much principle to the government's move. Further, it is "an objective conducive to special advantage rather than what is universally admitted to be right." That makes me wonder why the Prime Minister, his cabinet and all the members sitting behind them will attempt to defend a policy that seeks to attain an objective that is not in the best interests of this country at the present time in the way of unemployment and farm relief.

As a member from western Canada I am ready to vote now, before this question is put, any sum of money that is necessary for relief and unemployment in Canada. I am, however, very anxious to make it plain that as a member from a riding in western Canada I shall not stand for a type of government that will want me, as a representative of a free riding, to delegate legislative authority from this chamber to a cabinet that will by order in council override the commons and practically annihilate what is left of responsible government in this country. I am not ready to do that, and for that reason I am opposing this legislation. I am ready to take a stand on it and to carry this fight into my riding for the next two or three years. If other hon. members will do the same, then, when the government goes to the country, no matter what other questions there may be, this will not be a forgotten issue. I think it is now generally conceded among Conservatives themselves that if the house were dissolved to-night and the people were left to pronounce the verdict, the government opposite would be defeated by at least fifty of a majority.

Mr. DURANLEAU: What about Athabaska?

Mr. McINTOSH: I will answer that.

Mr. HACKETT: The people have already done so.

Mr. DURANLEAU: What is your answer?

Mr. McINTOSH: In Athabaska the Tory candidate received about one out of every three votes; in other words he was defeated over three to one.

Mr. DURANLEAU: What about the Liberal candidate?

Mr. McINTOSH: If the government went to the country to-night, they would be beaten three to one in the house.

Mr. MULLINS: We would have a larger majority than ever.

Mr. McINTOSH: In your imagination only. Under this legislation the government can scrap the constitution; they can take the written constitution of this dominion and annihilate it gradually. Yet we have hon. gentlemen opposite standing for action of that kind and afraid of defending the constitution in the house. We have in section 91 of the British North America Act the exact terms that the Prime Minister uses in this resolution:

For the peace, order and good government of Canada.

Why talk about peace when there is no peace? Why talk about order when I believe one of the real reasons for the introduction of this resolution is that the Prime Minister is afraid of a national uprising in Canada? He is afraid the labour people and the communists are going to give trouble. Consequently, he wants to have at hand the power of a despot to crush any movement that may arise. The very fact that the Prime Minister believes this proves that he is not in touch with public opinion. There is no fear of any such thing in this country; there is no possible danger in that direction. Therefore one is lost in trying to find out just what the ideas of hon. gentlemen are in introducing vicious legislation of this kind.

This sort of legislation is foreign to any parliament in any British dominion. It is foreign to any legislation enacted by the home government. We are told that free institutions are the lifeblood of the empire. Yet we have hon. gentlemen opposite, who on the hustings are always saying how they stand for the dear old empire and for the old Union Jack, giving us the spectacle of supporting in the House of Commons legislation that is not in any sense of the word symbolical of free institutions. Free institutions are the lifeblood of the empire; free cooperation is the instrument of the empire and peace, order and progress, the objectives of the empire. Yet how are we going to attain those objectives of the empire when we resort to legislative tactics of this kind in our national parliament?

If I read my history aright, the whole battle in Canada for hundreds of years was to win responsible government. We had throughout the French period governor after governor, intendant after intendant, bishop after bishop, council after council, doing what? Representing French imperialism, and through their action and interaction with one another throughout that period, very little was accomplished. But they did this much: they laid the foundation in that probationary period, of responsible government in the dominion, and we are building on that historic foundation to-day. Later, in Upper Canada the fight was against a legislative council that was not responsible to the people; in Lower Canada the fight was the same. In New Brunswick, in Nova Scotia and in Prince Edward Island the same battle had to be fought to win for us the boon of responsible government. Yet to-night, Mr. Speaker, we have a motion before the house by which the government is practically trying to drive its thoughtless legislation through by what we might call gag rule. When we think of the splendid contributions that have been made by the different parts of this dominion in days gone by in the cause of responsible rule, I am sure that we ought all to be concerned, irrespective of party, for the future of constitutional government in this country.

One of the speakers this afternoon intimated that so far as this particular legislation is concerned there might not be very much danger in it, that we could judge the future by the past. But that is just what we cannot do. We may judge it in a particular way, but I say, Mr. Speaker, that we cannot estimate the future by the past, and I would like to put on record a statement made by one of the assemblies, years ago, in the eastern provinces in respect to that very question. It said:

> The assembly admitted that no evil has thus far resulted from the opposition of the council—

That is the legislative council:

> —but pointed out that the future could not be anticipated and that there was no deficiency of independent men who had every qualification for seats in the legislative council.

That means, Mr. Speaker, that we cannot constitutionally anticipate the future, and it is utterly impossible for any man who wants to stand by the constitution in this country conscientiously to vote for a piece of legislation of this kind, because if one wants to play fair with the people he cannot give to any government or any cabinet or any prime minister, no matter what its particular political stripe may be, the powers that are being sought under this iniquitous piece of legislation.

I might go from one province to another throughout this whole country to prove conclusively that in the working out of responsible government in this country the policy that is being backed by hon. gentlemen opposite is a futile one and will prove to be a failure. What does Lord Hewart say on this question in his book, The New Despotism, which I hold in my hand? He says that the time has arrived in all the overseas dominions when a tendency has become manifest to hand over to the executive the powers of parliament, and he says that there are three or four excuses given for doing so. One is that it is said that parliament simply has not time to do otherwise than delegate its legislative power; another is that parliament has not the requisite aptitude for the work; another is that the task of government ought to be left to the executive. These three excuses do not amount to anything. They do not constitute a sound reason why we should depart from the principle of responsible government in this dominion. Lord Hewart says as to the third of these propositions, the delegating of legislative power to the cabinet:

As for the third of the propositions, if it contemplates anything over and above what in a particular emergency may be rendered necessary by "sudden causes and occasions" or "promptitude to meet the exigency of the case," it is not easy to imagine anything more mischievous or more subversive.

There is the point exactly, that the minute we hand over the legislative power of parliament to any cabinet or any executive, at that moment we endanger the constitution of this country, and therefore to-night, Mr. Speaker, I am utterly and absolutely opposed to this legislation. I am opposed to the motion before the house. I am opposed to the resolution because I believe that the government, although satisfied that it is in the wrong, is trying to drive this thing through by the sheer force of its majority, and that if it had the courage of its convictions it would even at this late moment back up on its tracks and bring down a regular supply bill which parliament could put through in half an hour or so, thereby bringing to bear upon the problem of unemployment and farm relief in this country the necessary responsible parliamentary authority.

In closing, may I say that so far as western Canada is concerned I do not believe that the action of the government will be in any way popular. I believe that the rank and file of the people are opposed to the policy of the government as enunciated in this resolution, and therefore I am only too pleased to have had an opportunity to say what I have said in the house to-night in opposition to it.

Mr. EUSEBE ROBERGE (Megantic) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, the right hon. prime minister, by the resolution which he has submitted to this house, wishes to revive that pernicious legislation, that was devised for the first time in Canada by the conservative party in order to prevent the greatest Canadian that ever sat in this house from upholding the rights of the minority—I refer to the right hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier. The right hon. prime minister and his colleagues ought to remember, before again resorting to this measure, that when it was applied to Sir Wilfrid Laurier, there was much resentment throughout the country. What was the result? At the election of 1921, the people showed their dissatisfaction by defeating this government. It is the same measure that the right hon. prime minister proposes now to apply to the opposition, to prevent us from upholding the rights we have secured through the confederation pact.

Mr. Speaker, the right hon. prime minister told us last week that he had been placed at the head of the government by the people and that he still had their support. There are both some truth and untruth in that statement. It is true that he was placed at the head of the government by the people, but how did it happen? If the people gave a confidence vote to the conservative party in the last election, it was on account of the promises made by that party, through its present prime minister; those promises having been repeated by its candidates and the various speakers who supported them. They promised to put an end to unemployment, to secure work for everyone, to open new markets where manufactured and farm products could be sold at a higher price. Thus the manufacturers would have paid higher wages, and at the same time the farmers would have enjoyed greater prosperity, but that has not yet materialized. In our rural districts, the speakers who supported the conservative party, went a little further; they said: "You are aware that Hon. R. B. Bennett is an acknowledged business man and an experienced financier; besides, his past proves it." Furthermore, in our mining centres, where there was some unemployment in 1930, they stated: "Hon. Mr. Bennett is enough of a business man to find money to reorganize your companies, so that all of you, workingmen, may work six days a week with better wages." What happened? Wages went down 40 or 50 per cent since.

It is on account of those promises that the people of this Dominion placed him at the head of the government, but these pledges were never fulfilled. How disappointed he must be to day, when he realizes that they have not materialized, that the condition of agriculture is worse, that unemployment is steadily increasing, in spite of the explicit promises made to the people of this country in 1930. If, in the past, the prime minister showed himself to be a business man—when he was working for himself—it must be a great disappointment for his friends to see that he fell short of his reputation so quickly after his appointment as prime minister. We often meet in our life and in different activities, men who never succeed when they are working on their own account, but who make a success of the business of others. In the case of the prime minister, it is the opposite. In his own business, everything is well; but when it comes to administering the country's affairs, his ability slackens very quickly. Judging by the result of the last twenty months, he showed himself to be the poorest financier the country has ever had as a prime minister since confederation. As soon as the opportunity presents itself, the people will show him what they think of him.

In the course of the same speech, the prime minister said that he still had the support of the people. Before making that assertion, I would advise him to appeal to the people who will tell him what they think about that "blank cheque" which he wants to secure now, in spite of the opposition. I am sure he would get the same answer as the president of United States got from his colleagues, when he tried to raise the tariff, last week.

The people of Canada want a man who keeps his promises, and will always be opposed to a government that does not fulfill its pledges. Under the liberal administration, the promises made by our leader were fulfilled. I shall go further, Mr. Speaker. An honest man does not promise any more than he can accomplish, and this applies with greater force to a prime minister, who occupies that high position because the people trusted him.

Under the Conservative government, in 1917, the people were deceived, and the same party is in power to-day. That party should remember that in the election of 1921, the people showed clearly that they had not forgotten how they had been led astray in 1917. The Conservative party should remember how they were thrown out of power on that occasion.

The people are tired of promises; they do not want any more. They demand a change of government.

The Prime Minister, under this resolution, seeks to amend our constitution and deprive this house of all the powers that were conferred upon it by the Confederation Act, and concentrate them into his own hands. He should remember that the experience of the last twenty months of his administration is the best proof of his incompetence. None of his pledges were fulfilled. Unemployment has increased and the crisis is getting worse.

Mr. DORION (Translation): It is a long reading!

Mr. ROBERGE (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I think the time has come for all hon. members in this house to get together, in order to uphold the rights that we have secured through the confederation pact, and to see that the laws of the country, the work of great men, be respected, instead of being altered to suit the whim of the Prime Minister. The people of this country know that our Prime Minister is fond of honours and titles. By applying again the gag rule, he will be considered as the champion gagger of Canada.

[Mr. Roberge.]

Mr. J. A. VERVILLE (Lotbiniere), (Translation): Mr. Speaker, we have been discussing for several days—

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): Several weeks.

Mr. VERVILLE (Translation): —a resolution presented by the Right Hon. Prime Minister, and we have a right to wonder at this late hour—a newspaperman just gave me the time—what is the meaning of the measure that is before the house this afternoon. Some call it the gag rule. Apparently, it is true, according to the rule of procedure which we have to conform to. There is one sure fact: this rule of closure was inaugurated by a Conservative government, and the Prime Minister, following the tradition, said to himself, after having usurped the power: I would not like to break the tradition; my party inaugurated the gag rule, and if it were found wanting in my glory, that would be the end of me, so I will apply it too.

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): Hurrah, hurrah!

Mr. VERVILLE (Translation): This afternoon we witnessed a typical scene. The Right Hon. Prime Minister said: "Three weeks ago, I submitted this resolution and I asked for exceptional powers, because it was a case of emergency." He submitted the resolution, that is quite true; but since three weeks, he has let things go. If it were so urgent three weeks ago why did he wait until to-day to apply the gag rule. Either that man is consistent, sincere, or he is not.

Mr. DORION (Translation): Quite so.

Mr. VERVILLE (Translation): If it was urgent, he should have applied the gag right away.

Some hon. MEMBERS (Translation): Hear, hear.

Mr. VERVILLE (Translation): He should have resorted to that rule and have the bill approved by his servile majority.

Some hon. MEMBERS (Translation): Hear, hear.

Mr. VERVILLE (Translation): If it was not urgent, why this farce which he has gone through to-day? The resolution was submitted on February 26; the Prime Minister lets the discussion drag on during three weeks, and then he says—

Mr. DORION (Translation): It was Lent, time, and you had to do penance.

Mr. VERVILLE (Translation): It will be Lent for you following on the next election.

Mr. DORION (Translation): It was Lent, one had to do penance for one's sins.

Mr. VERVILLE (Translation): Let it be understood, your Lent will begin after the next election.

The Prime Minister said to himself: I shall resort to a clever strategy, I shall apply the closure at the end of three weeks. How very rational, what a superior man! After having endeavoured to settle the question of unemployment, after three weeks of debate, he applies the closure, to prevent the representatives of the people from speaking on behalf of the ratepayers, to hinder us from championing the rights of the people against his autocratic methods, against his wishes and those of his followers.

Mr. DORION (Translation): Marvellous!

Mr. VERVILLE (Translation): We have but fulfilled our duty during these three weeks. We have registered our protest and told the government: We are here as representatives of the electorate, as representatives of the people, bring down a bill requesting us to vote millions and millions of dollars, we are ready to do so, but let us know at least, what you intend to do with those amounts.

That was our right and duty, and I do not think that the Canadian people will find fault with us for acting thus.

Mr. DORION (Translation): Athabaska has just given its answer.

Mr. CHEVRIER (Translation): Make a speech.

Mr. VERVILLE (Translation): This resolution calls for funds; as I stated a few days ago, the disposal of the people's money should always be under the control of parliament. No one on the government benches has ever given a worthy answer to this contention. My friend, the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Dorion), whom I highly esteem, and with whom I am paired is here in the house by the people's will. I trust—

Mr. DORION (Translation): We were both Conservatives in our youth.

Mr. VERVILLE (Translation): —but perhaps through no fault of his; however, I wish to give him all the credit and merit which he deserves. I would ask him, however, not to act, in the future, as a guide to the government, to look after his own affairs, to make a speech in his turn and not interrupt others when speaking.

There are, sir, many members who are lavish with their wit.

Mr. DORION (Translation): That is why you are left with little.

Mr. VERVILLE (Translation): One can only dispose of what he possesses. If one is endowed with much the whole community benefits, if little, no one benefits. I do not wish to be personal, it is a dangerous game. I should like to see everybody mind his own business and attend to his own duties. If any one wishes to perform childish freaks, let him step out into the lobby. We have been witnessing, for the last few weeks, a scene that our friends opposite may perhaps call—

Mr. DORION (Translation): Ridiculous.

Mr. VERVILLE (Translation): —perhaps they will call it talking pictures; it is somewhat true. But they are beautiful ones; both in English and French, with the addition of real living actors representing all the dignified personages of the nation; however it looks as if the idea was not endorsed by a government who show disrespect for their opponents.

An hon. MEMBER (Translation): Hear, hear!

Mr. VERVILLE (Translation): We therefore have talking pictures; let it be so, but to make a contrast, allow me to recall the time when you were children and ask you whether it was a fact that twenty-five years ago, puppet-shows were then the fashion. If to-day, in keeping with progress they are replaced by moving pictures. If we are allowed to go back twenty-five years—

Mr. DORION (Translation): Permission is granted.

Mr. VERVILLE (Translation): —and recall the time of the puppet-shows, you will remember then—I am specially addressing myself to my good friends of Quebec who do not share my political views—that our countryside was visited by people who gave shows that we use to call the dance of the puppets. They were shown in a miniature theatre erected for the occasion—

Mr. DORION (Translation): You still can dance. You are playing your part well.

Mr. VERVILLE (Translation): —these puppets were moved by a spring. A hidden hand worked the eyes, the lips, the arms, the legs and the people wondered. We can, to-day, establish a fairly close comparison with what was happening at that time. What have we here? We have representatives of Quebec, members who do not share our political views, and we have a man behind the scene, who forces them to open their eyes, their mouths and move their arms—

Mr. DORION (Translation): A painting of the author by himself.

Mr. VERVILLE (Translation): —and who too often makes them say what he wishes because he is the real actor behind the scene: I command, do not move.

Mr. DORION (Translation): A painting of the author by himself.

Mr. VERVILLE (Translation): That is so, the author is the Prime Minister of this country, the puppets, yourselves.

An hon. MEMBER (Translation): Hear! hear!

Mr. VERVILLE (Translation): I was listening a short while ago to my good friend, the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Kennedy), who dared to assert that the debate on the constitutional aspect of the question had been dragging too long. I think it should last many weeks more and even longer. We, the Liberal party, were criticized long enough for having a leader who was supposed to administer the country in the interest of the west, a number of hon. members on your right, sir, proclaimed it on the hustings throughout Quebec, when there was not an iota of truth. But, to-day, it is a fact, and yet, these hon. members dare to support those who are guilty of such an act and deny what they then said.

Mr. ALPHONSE FOURNIER (Hull) (Translation): May I, sir, at the outset of my remarks on this resolution quote, as an introduction, a few sentences of the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett), taken from his speeches delivered on March 8 and 23 last, when he was discussing this proposed measure, and speaking on the motion of the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir). His comments will give us an insight into the state of mind under which the Prime Minister laboured when he endeavoured to impose on this parliament an act which is contrary to all parliamentary traditions of this country.

On March 8, he stated, when introducing this resolution:

> It confers a wide discretion upon the executive; I said so last year, and I repeat it now. I am not one of those who do not understand and appreciate the attitude of mind taken by the opposition with respect to this question, but I do say with some degree of pride and satisfaction that although that statute came into force in August and we have administered it ever since, you will have great difficulty and indeed I think you will find it impossible, sir, to point to any case in which there has been an abuse of authority under it or where there has not been an honest administration of its provisions.

[Mr. Verville.]

In his speech on the same motion, he repeats his argument giving it a different form, as follows:

> I would not ask this power from any parliament except reluctantly, and I so stated when I introduced the resolution the other day. But, sir, after discussions between my colleagues and myself, and taking into consideration the views expressed to us by others who look at the matter dispassionately and from the outside, dare we as a government, charged with the tremendous responsibility in this emergency of caring for this dominion to the best of our ability, be without that power? We have said, no. We do not believe that this power will be called into play; nay, more, we sincerely and fervently hope that it will not be. But, sir, what is a man without a weapon in the midst of armed force? What is a man who has no instrument for his protection in the midst of the strife of brigands?

The above quotations from the speeches of the Prime Minister indicates clearly that he is conversant with the constitution of our country, that he is familiar with the fundamental principles which must govern our parliamentary life and it is with repugnance, and reluctantly, that he submits to us this resolution.

I listened closely to the speeches delivered by the members of the government and to those who supported them, and it struck me that hon. members opposite seemed to not understand the attitude taken by Liberals on that question. I did not hear one single Conservative member state that it was reluctantly that he supported this violation of our constitution. The right hon. Prime Minister's supporters seemed to pay little attention to his speech, while he, himself, was fully aware to what extreme means he had recourse to impose his will. If we turn over the pages of our history, we shall note that, for over one hundred years, our forbears had to struggle to obtain what is known as self-government. Following the conquest; the military government of 1763, recognized no rights to the Canadian people nor granted any representation in the nation's council. The Quebec act of 1774 acknowledged some privileges to the people of Quebec, or to those who had remained in Canada after the conquest; such as their language, customs and religion. In 1791, the Constitutional Act separated the two provinces and allowed us to have a number of represenatives in the council of the nation, but no control over supply or the taxes levied on our people. In 1837, the rebellion took place, blood flowed in an endeavour to obtain the control of the treasury. Even in 1840, under the Union Act, this responsibility of governments was not yet achieved; it was only in 1867, by the British North America Act, looked upon by us, from our childhood and youth, as the ideal condition for a people, that we obtained to be represented, to decide how the taxes were to be levied, how we were to limit them and how the disposal of the revenues would be made in the interest of the whole nation. If we study the constitutional history of our country, we will note that in the conventions negotiated between Lower and Upper Canada, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, there seems to be an understanding by which consent of the parties is necessary to enact radical changes in our constitution.

Since 1867, we find but three instances, in the history of our confederation, where the government undertook the responsibility of requesting a fixed amount but without being able however to determine how the funds would be expended. In 1885, during the Riel rebellion, in the west, parliament granted to the government of that day a sum of $1,500,000, so as to crush this rebellion; the amount had been mentioned but without giving details or the information usually required when such amounts are asked.

The second instance in our parliamentary history, when parliament trusted the government by granting them a stipulated amount, but without giving details, goes back to Queen Victoria's Jubilee. The last instance, was in 1914, when the war, in which we took part, was declared. Under the Conservative régime of 1914, parliament granted the government on various occasions during the years of war, large amounts to meet the expenditure of our active participation in the conflict. However, on no occasion did a government think of requesting the house to despoil itself of the rights conferred upon it by the British North America Act. Pursuant to these rights conferred upon us by the Confederation Act, the people's representatives alone, by an unwritten law, have full power over the disposal of the public funds and their duty is to supervise the expenditure of these funds.

Now, we have a Conservative Prime Minister, whose mentality, character and autocratic methods are known, he assumes himself full responsibility and decides that the Conservative party is willing to undertake such a task which may lead to abuses—which the Prime Minister himself admits—and endeavours to deny the supremacy conferred on parliament by the will of the people, in order that he can transfer it to the executive, which is but a committee of this house.

If you peruse the British North America Act, you will find the powers of the executive defined in sections 9 and 16. If you examine section 17, you will note that the legislative powers reside in parliament which comprises the House of Commons, the Senate and an executive to whom is confided the administration of the laws adopted by the two chambers just mentioned. These powers were never ceded to the government, an extraordinary crisis must exist to force this government to resort to these unheard of methods, even during the period of war, such extreme measures, as to reverse the roles in parliament, were never thought of.

Parliament has the right to legislate on the various matters enumerated in section 91 of the British North America Act. This section confers on parliament the exclusive authority to legislate so as to maintain order, peace and good government in this country. Further on the act enumerates the various matters over which we have the power to legislate. This resolution requests us to admit that the Canadian parliament is incapable of legislating in order to relieve the present crisis; but, in this parliament, there exists a group of men who have all the necessary qualifications, energy and will to govern the country, as a small committee, without making any report to parliament. These are the men who are supposed to relieve the situation.

The first remedy to which they resorted, at the special session of 1930 consisted in the definite amount of $20,000,000. This sum sufficed to meet the emergency during 1930. By voting this $20,000,000, parliament or the house was not asked to renounce its powers. It was in 1931 that a blank signature was requested. It was on July 31, if my memory serves me right, that this bill was discussed in the house, and parliament prorogued on August 3. In the dying days of the session the enactment of this measure was requested, notwithstanding the statement of the leader of the opposition that, if circumstances warranted it, he was ready to sit until the government introduced a bill which would be acceptable to all, because it was quite clear that the bill introduced was in violation of the principle of self-government, by virtue of which the house has control over the expenditure made by the government.

By this measure which they wish to thrust upon us, it is contended that means will be found to meet the situation, end unemployment and relieve the people. With this aim in view they state, we have devised the following scheme: we have a group of fifteen or sixteen men who, we think, are much better endowed than you are and we therefore request that they should be given your authority to legislate.

I often wonder what the electorate think of the government's followers when they witness their attitude on this question. At the next election, I know that, in Quebec, this question will not be a dead issue and the people of that province will prove to the entire country that, at least, they still are attached to the constitution and they will certainly support the representatives who champion their rights. The ridicule which the government attempts to saddle on the opposition, because they champion those liberties which were conquered at the price of our blood, the people of Quebec, the whole Dominion will remember. The Canadian people themselves, will discover that the measure, which the Prime Minister wishes to impose on us, leads to many abuses.

One argument put forth in favour of this act is as follows: We cannot state the amount because we are not aware of the disbursements we will have to make. It is not what the hon. member for Regina (Mr. Turnbull) stated some time ago in the city he represents:

> The present government will within a few months, have to borrow six or seven hundred million dollars.

He is then aware of the amount necessary to meet the expenditure of his government. How does it happen that an ordinary member can state that next year Saskatchewan will need $26,000,000, that the rebate of five cents per bushel of wheat will amount to $10,000,000 and that the loan to that province will amount to $6,000,000?

If this hon. member is so well acquainted with the requirements of the provinces so as to relieve the present crisis, why should not the government specify an amount, as the leader of the opposition and his followers stated. They could request $600,000,000, and I think the opposition would agree to that amount, believing sincerely that the government would limit useless expenditure. We could then have some control over the funds disposed of. If $50,000,000 had been voted in 1931, it would have met the situation then existing, since the reports laid on the table of the house show that only $34,000,000 or $36,000,000 were expended. They might, today, if the requirements are greater to relieve the situation, state a definite amount, thus the authority of this parliament and the prerogatives of the house would remain intact. The industrial conditions in our country instead of improving after all the means taken, is worse than in 1930, and we are also aware that there are more unemployed in Canada, per capita, than in any other country.

I would have been recreant to my duty had I not protested against this legislation which will certainly have disastrous results, since the Prime Minister himself admits that it may pave the way to abuses.

Mr. T. F. AHEARN (Ottawa): Mr. Speaker I propose to make only a few brief remarks with respect to the measure now before the house. I have always understood that precedents play a most important part in the parliaments within the British empire. Such great importance is attached to precedents that the establishment of any new and important precedent which may have grave and far-reaching effects is a very serious responsibility for any government to undertake. The measure now before the house does constitute a grave and far-reaching precedent. It permits the cabinet to change or amend existing laws and takes away from the House of Commons control over public moneys; indeed it vests almost unlimited authority in the cabinet. This, of course, creates a constitutional issue, and from my observation it is being so considered by the man of the street.

This grave departure from the established order of things has resolved itself into a question as to whether this parliament shall support the old-established order of parliamentary procedure or depart from it as a matter of so-called expediency. The government of the day has made its choice and by invoking closure has plainly indicated that it proposes to stick by that choice. The Liberal party opposes this step by all the means in its power, and I am convinced that when the people become fully aware of all the implications of the step the government is now taking, and of the hollowness of the excuses it offers for so doing, they will make their opinion felt in no uncertain manner.

The other day the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) spoke of the vote of confidence that he and his party had received in the recent by-election in Athabaska. That so-called vote of confidence amounts to less than one third of the total vote cast in the election. If the hon. gentlemen who sit to your right, Mr. Speaker, are content to call that a vote of confidence, we on this side of the house are content that they should do so.

More than once I have heard this debate referred to as a waste of time. That is not correct. This debate has done a great service, if only to establish that the measures the government has taken in conjunction with the provincial governments and the municipalities have not been adequate or successful, even to a small degree, in coping with the depression. Nearly $150,000,000 has been spent and thereby employment amounting to less than one month in a year to each person has been afforded. One member sitting on the government benches said that this expenditure had enabled many people "to keep body and soul together." In my opinion the one thing more than all others that has enabled hundreds of thousands of our unemployed to weather the storm as well as they have is the wonderful kindness that Canadian families, still in receipt of an income, have shown to relieve relatives and friends in distress. This should cause a feeling of pride in every Canadian heart. Organized charity is also playing its part nobly, and the time and money that have been given to this great cause will not be soon forgotten by those who have benefited.

I am one of those who believe the government has been actuated by good motives, but the results of the tremendous expenditures of public moneys have been most disappointing, and I think the people are convinced that the policy of the government with regard to unemployment has failed in its object.

I once hoped that state unemployment insurance never would be necessary in Canada, but the efforts of the government in the past two years, during which I have seen so many good citizens suffer the miseries and hardships of unemployment, have about convinced me that the time has come for the government of Canada to explore seriously and sincerely the advisability of bringing down a measure to provide contributory state unemployment insurance suitable to the needs of Canada's army of unemployed men and women, and to the conditions that obtain in Canada, not only now, but during years of prosperity as well. That is a personal opinion, but it is one which I feel must be expressed. It is obvious that such a measure, if it were introduced, would have to be very carefully framed in order to guard against the abuses that are stated to be apparent in the unemployment act of Great Britain. The Dominion government, the provincial governments, and all employers and employees throughout Canada would have to bear their just and equitable share of the cost of such unemployment insurance, but I think all classes in Canada are ready to do so in order that certain and orderly relief may come to those who suffer the tragedy of unemployment.

As I said before, I had hoped that such an enactment might not become necessary in Canada. It would be costly and it has certain obvious drawbacks, but it would be infinitely better than present conditions. The people of Canada want the money voted for unemployment relief to go into the pockets of those who, through no fault of their own, are unemployed, and not to contractors and so on; and through the unemployed they want this money to go to the small merchants, who need it most in these days. The present policy of the government has shown very clearly that the creation of special jobs is very unsatisfactory and very expensive; this method has been given an extensive trial and has failed to meet the situation. Obviously the government must try another policy if it is to satisfy the people of this country. The Prime Minister has said that Canada will never have the dole, but I take that to mean that the dole will be given as a last resort. We are rapidly approaching that situation, and we cannot afford to further disregard the failure of another "noble experiment."

Mr. HARRY BUTCHER (Last Mountain): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the proposed legislation now before the house, which when amended is intended to revive chapter 58 of the statutes of 1931, I have but little to say except to remark that the substitution of a fixed sum for the words "such moneys as the governor in council in his discretion may deem to be necessary," in section 2, and the elimination of the words "and maintain within the competence of parliament, peace, order and good government throughout Canada," in sections 3 and 4, would have made this measure entirely acceptable to the opposition.

I want to speak at greater length with regard to the closure which is to be applied at this time. I was startled when the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) moved closure; I wondered just why that should be done. I thought I might find in the speech of the Prime Minister some substantial reason for this action having been taken, but diligent study of his speech has not rewarded me. I should like to direct attention to a few of the statements made by the right hon. gentleman, and a few of the quotations given by him, which statements and quotations no doubt were intended to give his reasons for applying closure at this time.

The Prime Minister quoted Redlich, and a little later I intend to refer to some of the details of that quotation. In general, however, we were reminded that in the latter part of the nineteenth century there was real, substantial obstruction in the British parliament.

The dangerous nature of that obstruction was pointed out, threatening as it did British parliamentary institutions and established practices. Finally, attention was directed to the steps that were taken to control the situation. Then the Prime Minister inferred that a parallel situation existed in Canada at the present time, and apparently he attempted to justify the guillotine thereby. With the permission of the house I should like to direct attention to the first quotation given by the right hon. gentleman, which is found at page 1404 of Hansard for March 23. This is part of a speech made by the Prime Minister of England, and reported in the proceedings of the special committee on Procedure on Public Business:

> Really, what is the House of Commons itself? It consists not only of a government, but of an opposition, and they have both got functions and rights. The great right of the opposition is the full discussion of measures proposed by the government. It is there, I think, that our fundamental weakness lies. There is a doctrine that it is the function of the opposition to oppose. I have always regarded that as a crime against the state.

I should like to direct particular attention to these words:

> . . . they have both got functions and rights. The great right of the opposition is the full discussion of measures proposed by the government.

That is exactly the stand taken by the opposition here; we claim that we should have the right to discuss the amount to be expended under the proposed legislation, and that we should be able to discuss and criticize the manner in which it is to be expended, whether in public works at the federal expense, in grants in aid to the provinces to assist them in the carrying on of public works, or in direct relief. Then we should like to discuss whether or not the government should have other powers than merely those of providing relief to the needy, seed grain and feed to the farmers and employment on public works, whether alone or in conjunction with the provinces. We claim that it is not full discussion if we are not to have any voice in the fixing of the amount to be appropriated or in the manner in which that appropriation is to be expended.

The Prime Minister referred to the mother of parliaments, and quoted chapter 48 of the statutes of 1930-31, passed by the British parliament. He pointed out that very large powers were conferred by that statute upon the privy council of England, but close examination of this chapter shows that the only power conferred is the power to make orders affecting certain economies. The closer we study that chapter the more that view will be confirmed. We should note also that these powers were conferred upon a council that formed the executive of a national and not a party government; that the powers were conferred for one month only, and that the subjects to which they might be applied were only five in number, education, national health insurance, police, unemployment insurance and roads.

The Prime Minister directed attention to one particular clause which gave power to increase or vary the contributions made to the unemployment fund. I am referring now to page 1410 of Hansard. The words of the act are, "For increasing the contributions to be made to the unemployment fund." So, search as you may, you will not find the slightest power to spend money; it only has to do with effecting economies. Within the four corners of that statute will be found no blank cheque and no blanket authority. I wish to refer now to a certain quotation of the Prime Minister's from Redlich's Procedure of the House of Commons. I shall read only a brief extract from it:

> Irreconcilable parties, which oppose an existing union of states or stand for a subordination of state to church, parties which reject the whole framework of society, or which draw their life from a principle only less deep and powerful than that of religion, the principle of nationality, are all in mortal conflict—latent if not apparent, possibly unconscious for long periods—with the conventions of parliament; they are, therefore, knowingly or unknowingly attacking parliamentary government itself, at all events in the form known to the constitution. Obstruction is, in reality, nothing less than a repudiation of the existing constitution of the country, intensified to the point of denying the right of its parliament to exist, and expressed in a conscious misuse of the forms and principles of procedure essential to the efficiency of parliamentary action.

Before making this quotation the Prime Minister used these words:

> Reading from the third volume of that work, page 196, I shall now give a description of what has transpired in this house during the last ten days.

In other words, the Prime Minister attributes to the opposition those very things that I have read in your hearing. The paragraph preceding the one from which the Prime Minister quoted begins with these words:

> Such is the political atmosphere in which the latest procedure reforms have been produced.

I think it is wise that we should find out what that particular atmosphere was. Many of us who have read the history of the British parliament during that trying period from 1867 to 1902 know that the political atmosphere was most disturbed all the time. To begin with, there was the burning question of home rule for Ireland; there was the South African policy of the imperialists; there was the imperialist tariff policy, and there was the education question. Probably during the last century no other question had disturbed the minds of the British people to the extent that these particular questions did. Take for instance the question of home rule for Ireland. I need not remind hon. gentlemen that for about thirty years this was one of the most vital questions discussed in the British House of Commons. Two years after his election Mr. Parnell became the storm centre of that house. He tried first of all by so-called constitutional means to induce the house to listen to him, but when he found that he was getting nowhere, what did he do? He and his party set out to upset the proceedings of the house. Parnell was called the originator of systematic obstruction, and he certainly was. On one occasion he said, "I feel a special satisfaction in preventing and thwarting the intentions of the government." What happened during those hectic times? On July 31, 1877, O'Donnell, with four others, moved thirteen motions for adjournment. On that occasion the sitting lasted twenty hours and fifteen minutes, and the highest number of the minority at any time during those motions for adjournment was seven. On another occasion the sitting lasted twenty-two hours, the result being 251 votes for the government and 33 for the opposition. But there came a time when the sitting lasted forty-one and one-half hours. On one occasion 132 amendments were moved.

Mr. MALONEY: Mr. Speaker, what has this to do with the question before the house?

Mr. POULIOT: The difference is that one knows his business and the others seem to be all mixed up.

Mr. BUTCHER: As I say, on one occasion in the British house 132 amendments were moved to one clause, and now this closure rule has been invoked here in this parliament to prevent one amendment being moved. The Prime Minister quoted Redlich and I wish to quote from that authority too. Redlich says:

> Moreover, the feeling of the universal benefit conferred, as a rule, by strenuous and powerful opposition is one which centuries of experience have worked into the very flesh and blood of the English nation. Over and over again it has been seen that the energetic resistance of a minority has roused the entire country to take part in political life, and has brought a whole subject up for discussion in all its aspects: hasty measures have been checked, and proposals for large alterations in the law have been made by way of compromise, and in the end have only been partially carried out. The feeling of the need for opposition and the experiences which support it have led to the characteristic tendency of English procedure which finds expression in the strong emphasis placed on the protection of the minority.

I have a much longer quotation but I will not read more. What has been the view of the Prime Minister heretofore, even in the year 1931? At page 4279 of Hansard of July 29 last, the Prime Minister said:

> I will say frankly to the house that in asking what euphemistically is spoken of as a "blank cheque" we are not unmindful that we are asking very considerable from the House of Commons.

At page 4448 he said:

> I am not without full realization of what is involved in the bill, but in order to meet my right hon. friend I will shorten the time to March 1 and make it clear that we have no desire to usurp powers as was suggested.

Again, at page 4449:

> I need hardly say to the committee that I do this reluctantly; I do it from a sense of duty. What the right hon. gentleman said last evening as to the advisability of grants of money being limited, is so elementary I shall not do more than say that its general application in itself involves the necessity at times of exceptions.

At page 4449, again, he said:

> Realizing that, understanding fully the soundness of the criticism that is urged against the principle in general and not endeavouring to minimize it, we are with great hesitancy seeking from the house these powers. . . . If I were less mindful of the soundness of the criticisms that are made by the right hon. gentleman opposite as to the interference with the general principle, I would not make the observations I do.

Note the slipping of the Prime Minister. In 1931 he said that this was repugnant to him; in 1932 he is impatient with those to whom it is still repugnant. In 1931 he was apologetic; in 1932 he says that to oppose is a crime against the state. But analyze the opposition. Has any member spoken who had no right to speak? Did any member exceed forty minutes I think not. We are not asking for minority rule; all we ask for is regularity of procedure. We say to the government: Give us the details of your proposition; let us discuss them and criticize them. We may induce you to amend them and compromise somewhat, bearing in mind that last year the proposed income tax amendments were withdrawn, probably because of opposition from this side of the house. The duty on magazines was reduced, probably also because of opposition from this side. We say to the government: Bring all your business before the house and let us discuss it freely, and you may depend upon it that if you defeat us on the floor of the house we shall bear the defeat with resignation; we shall be content.

I noticed with a good deal of pleasure that the Prime Minister did send over a dove, if not with an olive branch, at least with a leaf from an olive branch, when he said:

> I see no harm in intimating that, instead of asking for the right to pass orders in councils with respect to peace, order and good government after the first of May, we shall specify the statute with respect to which we believe it may be essential in a time of crisis to enact reasonable regulations or orders in council.

When our esteemed friend from Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) interjected:

> A slight improvement.

The Prime Minister said:

> It will be a very great improvement.

And I think we entirely agree with him.

Mr. M. F. HEPBURN (West Elgin): Mr. Speaker, in anything I shall say to-night I assure you that I am not prompted in any way by the speech made by the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Gott), who said so many uncomplimentary things about myself. I realize that the hon. gentleman has to justify an otherwise barren existence. He made one of his usual contributions to-night and talked of onions, and as he was swept along on the flood tide of his own verbosity I thought as I watched his facial contortions and violent gesticulations that he must have got some onion juice in his eye, but in fairness to the onion I would not want to put the blame for his parliamentary conduct on that lowly vegetable. After he sat down he was obviously quite exhausted. I think there was not an unuttered thought in his mind, and that being the case, he is more deserving of sympathy than of censure. As far as his prediction about my own future is concerned, he has already been proved a false prophet because he said during the last federal campaign that both the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Sanderson) and myself would be defeated in our ridings, but the election results did not bear out his prognostications on that occasion. I understand fully why he did not attempt to deal with the matter under discussion, because we are discussing an important principle and I know the argument is quite beyond the capacity of the hon. member for South Essex.

[Mr. Butcher.]

The principle involved in this measure, Mr. Speaker, does not in any way relate either to farm relief or unemployment. Toryism, as in the past, is trading and trafficking on the adversity of those who are out of work and those who are otherwise in need of relief. If the hon. gentlemen opposite are sincere and really want to do something in a monetary way for the unemployed and the farmers in distress, all they have to do is to ask this parliament for any sum that is required, and that amount of money will be forthcoming at once with the absolute cooperation of every Liberal member on this side of the house.

But there is an ulterior motive behind this legislation, and because of that our hon. friends opposite have to muddy up the water and becloud the issue. What the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) wants, this great Moses of the Tory party, God's gift to the Canadian people, as he would have us believe, is absolute power. Under this legislation he wants to be given the power to disregard any statute of Canada and to make any new law that he likes without appealing to parliament at all. That is in contravention of every established principle of British parliamentary government. Think of it, Mr. Speaker! Over in the east block the cabinet to-morrow, if we pass this legislation, can meet and absolutely disregard any of the statutes of Canada and make any new law which the cabinet may see fit to make. What function is left to parliament if we delegate these powers to the executive? I leave that question to any fair-minded Conservative member opposite.

Apparently, after all the promises which he made in the last campaign, the Prime Minister finds himself in difficulty. He cannot in a constitutional way fulfil any part of the obligations he incurred so readily during that campaign, so now he says: What I cannot do in a conventional way I want parliament to give me authority to do in an unconstitutional way. Speaking in this house a few nights ago I suggested that if we were going to delegate any such powers it would have to be to a man of proven worth. This government has been in office now for a considerable time. This is the third session of parliament, and up to date I cannot find that one constructive suggestion has emanated from the other side of the house, not one single constructive suggestion which is fundamentally sound, and I think hon. gentlemen opposite will agree with me in that respect, particularly when we look at conditions obtaining throughout Canada to-day after this government has had every opportunity to apply thoroughly the policies which they advocated during the campaign as being in the best interests of the people of Canada.

What, for instance, is the condition of industry to-day? We know that there are 220,000 fewer men employed. We know further that our industries are only running to forty per cent of their capacity. That situation did not obtain a few years ago under the régime of the Liberal government. What is the position of our financial institutions? I think this is a fair test as to general conditions throughout Canada. We know that our financial institutions are in a bad way, so bad, in fact, that the Prime Minister had to invoke the powers that were vested in him under this legislation of last year in order to save our financial institutions, and by order in council he permitted the banks to file with the Department of Finance statements which were absolutely false, bolstered up, inflated statements. There must be something wrong when a condition like that obtains.

Further, by another order in council the Prime Minister allowed the insurance companies to make a retroactive valuation of the speculative stocks which they held, and not only stocks but government bonds as well. The fact that the Canadian dollar is below par and that our own government bonds are selling at a discount indicates that the policies of this government are certainly not working out in the way it was argued they would work out during the election campaign.

Take the situation as to unemployment. Hon. gentlemen opposite, those of them at all events who did not know anything about economics, probably were sincere when they told the people of this country that if elected to office they would end unemployment. They have had every opportunity to apply their policies since, and what has been the result? Instead of having 120,000 people out of work, to-day there are 550,000, and what relief is in sight? If a man loses his job to-day, picture his hopeless condition! What is he going to do about it? Is the government providing any means of employment? Has it one single constructive policy to put forward? Not one that is fundamentally sound, nothing but to give the man more of the hair of the dog that bit him.

Take the position of the farmer—and I know whereof I speak, because I have been in the rural sections in the last few days. I will tell you what is happening there. Because of the low commodity prices and the loss of markets brought about by the trade policies of this government, our farmers to-day are not in a position to hire help, and here is a strange anomaly as a result. These men who cannot be employed in a gainful occupation by the farmers are crowding into the cities and towns as unemployed, where they are simply aggravating the unemployment situation, and the farmers who cannot employ these men gainfully under present conditions are going to be taxed to keep them in idleness. Some hon. gentlemen opposite will say that industry is going to bear some of this extra taxation, but I say that many of our industries that are sheltered behind tariff walls are above the civil law, and if you add to their costs of production they will simply take it out of the farmer in the prices they pay for his raw products or take it out of the consumer in the prices which he will be called upon to pay. The condition is pitiful. There is no relief in sight for the farmers. There is just a dark lane ahead of them. Picture the lot of a married man working on a farm to-day. He is not getting over $25 a month, and on that he is trying to feed and clothe his family and send his children to school, and in the country districts many little children are trudging along the sloppy roads to school without rubbers and proper footwear. Yet hon. gentlemen opposite say that they are going to help them under this farm relief legislation. Nothing of the kind. All that you are doing is to see that the big interests will have greater privileges than they ever had before. Strip this thing of all its camouflage and you find that it is nothing but an attempt to give by order in council additional privileges to the big interests.

With regard to unemployment, I do not of course blame hon. gentlemen opposite entirely for world-wide unemployment conditions. We know that the introduction of labour saving machinery, the mechanization of agriculture and industry, has contributed very largely to unemployment by the displacing of labour. But I do blame this on Toryism, that instead of the masses of the people benefiting by the cheaper methods of production by getting a corresponding increase in purchasing power through the lower prices of the products produced, Toryism allows monopolistic industries sheltered behind tariff walls to increase the prices of the products they have to sell, but the masses of the people have no corresponding increase in purchasing power.

That is what is wrong to-day in Canada, namely, lack of purchasing power; it is the root of all our trouble. The masses are being thoroughly exploited. We know this condition cannot continue to exist. The other day it was said that there were 1,125,000 automobiles in Canada, and I venture to say that because of the tariff protection given to the subsidiaries of United States companies in Canada, we Canadians have paid for those automobiles $750,000,000 more than we would have paid had we bought them on a free market. That is exploitation. That money was taken away from Canada, removed from our spheres of taxation and disbursed amongst the money barons of the United States. Talk about no truck or trade with the Yankees! The government is making Canada a catspaw for the United States financiers who have subsidiary companies in this country. Heaven knows Rockefeller does not need to add to his wealth, but he controls to a large extent the oil refineries of Canada. What happens in that respect? We are paying eight cents a gallon more than the United States price; that is about the present disparity between the two prices. It does not cost that much more to manufacture gasoline in Canada, and we know that is pure exploitation as a result of certain privileges having been given to these interests by our hon. friends opposite. The people of Ontario consume about 300,000,000 gallons of gasoline annually, and these oil interests, after being allowed to bring in their raw material free, take out of the pockets of the consumers of gasoline in Ontario, on the sale of 300,000,000 gallons per annum, something like $15,000,000 or $20,000,000 in excess profits. That means a loss of purchasing power to that extent, and it is aggravating the condition confronting us to-day in the ever-increasing concentration of wealth in the hands of fewer and fewer people.

Some people say that the country is hard up. That is a wild statement; we never before had so much money in Canada, but it is in fewer hands. I should like to deal with this matter, but I have not the time at my disposal. Before, however, we settle this world-wide condition of depression, a great deal more is going to be said about the concentration of wealth in the hands of fewer and fewer people. I heartily concur in the statement made a few days ago by the hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Euler) that we might yet reach the point when we would have to put into effect a capital levy, because the mass of the people cannot exist much longer under present conditions.

The hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Gott) asked: What has any Liberal government done to contribute to the prosperity of this country of ours? I think, if we look back into the political history of Canada, we shall find that the Liberal party has a policy that is applicable to the best interests of the country. There are two schools of thought; there are those who believe in a restrictive trade policy, and there are those who believe in an expansive trade policy. I am one of those who subscribe to the Liberal school of thought. I believe the policy that best serves the interests of Canada is one of trade expansion. We have had both policies in effect at different times over a period of years. The late lamented Sir John A. Macdonald put into effect the national policy which brought about restricted trade markets and increased the cost of production. We had an ever-increasing production and a greater need year by year for markets, but we were not provided markets, and so we had stagnation to such a degree that we almost had an economic revolt in Canada prior to 1896. Then when Sir Wilfrid Laurier came into office he reversed that policy; he opened up trade channels and lowered the cost of production. Under those conditions we had an era of prosperity between 1896 and 1911. Following that we had a Conservative government in office, and after it came into power not a single new trade treaty of any consequence was consummated. During that time we had stagnation and at the same time the protected interests were given a little more privilege—because that is all extreme tariff is, a privilege to exploit the masses. On the one hand we had restricted markets and on the other we had higher costs of production.

I shall pass over the war years, but in 1920 and 1921 we had still a thorough application of this policy, and conditions became so bad that we had almost a revolt. At that time the United Farmers of Ontario and other farmers' organizations sprang up. Following that we had a change of government, and what did my right hon. leader (Mr. Mackenzie King) do on that occasion? He changed the fiscal policy of Canada; he negotiated trade treaties; he lowered the cost of production and Canada prospered under the King administration between 1922 and 1930.

My hon. friends opposite are now in office. What have they done? They have abrogated our treaties; they think we can have trade running in only one direction, but that cannot be done. They have increased the cost of production, and that, particularly at this time when we have a world-wide overproduction, when the struggle for markets is becoming fiercer and when the countries that will suffer most are those with high cost of production. So I say to my hon. friends opposite: When you restrict trade, when you give interests certain privileges which allow them to exploit the masses, and when you increase the taxation which is finally passed on to the basic producer, you are doing an irreparable injury to a progressive country like Canada.

I should like to refer to the Australian trade treaty and to put on Hansard the true story of what happened with respect to the dairy industry of this country. I should know whereof I speak, because I operate a dairy farm and I have operated a cheese factory. I could see the weight in the propaganda used by our hon. friends opposite during the time of importation of New Zealand butter. It was good propaganda, but it was not in the interests of the dairy farmer. We have now shut out New Zealand butter and we are accepting the lowest price in this decade, and probably in this generation, for our product. If that be the case, surely hon. gentlemen opposite will admit that their policy is wrong.

Mr. COTNAM: Will the hon. member explain how it happened that he voted to abrogate the New Zealand treaty?

Mr. HEPBURN: The abrogation of the treaty had no direct effect upon the trading in butter between the two countries; it was the application of the eight cent tariff, that prohibitive tariff, which brought about the disaster in the Canadian industry. I know my hon. friend opposite is sincere and honest. He represents a number of dairy farmers in his constituency. May I explain the situation to him? We had for export two products: butter and cheese. Our cheese graded 96 per cent number one, and our butter 70 per cent number one. Because of climatic and other conditions beyond our control, we cannot produce butter that will grade more than 70 per cent number one, and it is not a good product for the export market in which we have to compete with competitive butter of other countries. The product that we should have fostered for export was cheese, and our cheese, because of its high grade, was selling on the export market at a three cent premium. Hon. gentlemen opposite said: This New Zealand butter coming into Canada is ruining the market for our product and something must be done to maintain the price of our butter. One way to do that was to keep within the bounds of the consumptive capacity of Canada, and the alternative was to go on the export market. Was it good business to go on the export market with an inferior product, or to do so with cheese that graded 96 per cent number one and received a three-cent premium on that account? My hon. friends opposite put into effect a tariff of eight cents a pound which was prohibitive. The New Zealander, however, did not throw his butter into the sea; he made it into cheese which he sold in England in competition with ours. The effect was that the price of cheese dropped to twelve cents a pound and the low price was reflected in Canada. We had the anomaly in Canada of twelve cent cheese and thirty-seven cent butter; and that is not a fair ratio between the prices of the two commodities. We immediately turned to an increased butter production; we went beyond the saturation point and when we produced more butter than we could consume in Canada we had to sell that inferior product on the export market. The consequence was that the price collapsed entirely.

In the meantime the New Zealander continued the production of cheese, and he has captured part of our market in England. According to Doctor Ruddick, we have lost our continuity of market there; we have done an irreparable damage to our dairy industry, as a result of the propaganda which our hon. friends opposite put forth in order to get into office. The dairy industry is in a state of chaos. Some of them might have been sincere, but I am sure enough of them knew of the ill effects of the introduction of a policy such as that, that if they had wanted to stop the application of the eight cent tariff on New Zealand butter, they could have done so.

To follow that up, a few weeks ago the price of butter dropped to sixteen cents a pound because we had an exportable surplus. That was due to the fact that we were again on an export basis. Then we had a spell of cold weather when production slowed up and we went back on the domestic basis. As a consequence of that the price of butter jumped about seven cents a pound. That is the policy, namely, that of keeping within the consumptive capacity of the country, which we advocate as being in the best interests of the butter producers. In a few weeks we shall be going back on an export basis and the price of butter will again fall. Some hon. gentlemen opposite contend that we should have a surplus to export, but such a policy will damage the Canadian industry more than anything else. The damage, indeed, has been done now; we are going to continue floundering between a surplus and an underproduction of butter. At the same time we have lost in England the market we enjoyed for our Canadian cheese. In that market we had sold at a premium of three cents a pound; that alone brought into Canada a large amount of money which at the present time we do not receive. When we see loss in trade such as I have described we have proof that the policies defended by the government are not in the best interests of the country, and we may safely conclude that to delegate complete authority to the executive is not in the best interests of Canada. If policies were sound and brought about any measure of relief we might be inclined to give some latitude to the government, but when we realize conditions obtaining in Canada, when we know we are living in a state of chaos, that our financial institutions are floundering, we realize that to delegate the rights of parliament to the Prime Minister of Canada would be highly dangerous.

Mr. T. M. CAYLEY (South Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I can assure hon. members I am very proud indeed to follow the brilliant young leader of the Liberal party in the province of Ontario. If I can read the countenances of hon. members opposite I think they have now come to the conclusion, as have hon. members on this side of the house, that in a few short months he will be the premier of the province of Ontario.

I think it is most lamentable that the government of Canada at any time, and especially at this time, should bring a constitutional question into the political arena. Of course we understand that eternal vigilance is the price of liberty, and we have to be on guard so that the precious heritage handed down to us by your forefathers should not be lost. That is why we are opposing—not obstructing—the measure now before us, displaying the same respect for the liberties of parliament as did our forefathers. I come from a county which a hundred years ago produced those people who endured hardship and suffering so that the constitution and the principles of the people might survive. It is therefore with a feeling of pride that I speak concerning the preservation of our rights under the Canadian constitution.

Chapter 58 of the statutes of Canada, 1931, has become famous. Owing to the fact that some people will want to know the cause of all this talk in Ottawa I shall quote briefly from the statute. In the preamble I find the following:

> Whereas by reason of the continuing world-wide economic depression there exists in many parts of Canada a serious state of unemployment and distress; and whereas the partial failure of the wheat crop of western Canada has intensified the adverse economic conditions theretofore prevailing; and whereas it is in the national interest that parliament should support and supplement the relief measures of the provinces and other bodies in such ways as the governor in council may deem expedient, and for that purpose should vest in the governor in council the powers necessary to ensure the speedy and unhampered prosecution of all relief measures and the maintenance of peace, order and good government in Canada. Now therefore—

And so on. If we were to put the word "because" where the word "whereas" occurs, the contention of the government might be summed up as follows: "That because the people of Canada are in a serious state of distress, and because there has been a wheat failure in western Canada, and because this government wants despotic power, we want this measure passed." There we have the three whereases. "Whereas the people of Canada are in distress, and whereas the people of western Canada have had a crop failure, and whereas this government wants absolute power, we want a renewal of chapter 58 for another term."

Mr. VENIOT: And the government is in distress.

Mr. CAYLEY: Yes, that is right. Then, they want a blank cheque for an unlimited amount, and another blank order for unlimited power. Did anything ever beat that? Has any hon. member heard of anything in the last one hundred years of Canada's parliamentary history to equal the present requests of the government? They are saying to the people of Canada who are in distress, "We cannot give you relief until we satisfy this craving for power." It is said of one of the characters in the good book, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth." This government comes along and says, "Well, we will relieve you of all power on earth."

The Prime Minister has said the government did not abuse the absolute power given them in the session of 1931. Well, there is a difference of opinion in that direction. The facts are that they amended the Bank Act, they stopped the export of gold, they amended the Insurance Act, they increased the number of Canadian mounted police, and armed them. That is a pretty good start for the first year. Lord knows what they would do in the next six weeks if they were given an opportunity. I think there are many little problems they would like to straighten out if they were given absolute power.

The Prime Minister praises the Canadian people for their courage and olympic spirit. In the next breath he speaks as though he was afraid of them. I try to be liberal minded, but I am forced to the conclusion that the government is suffiering from nervousness. They are getting panicky; there is something wrong with them. They are working too long —much too long. Twenty hours a day is too long. If they would take a little time off to sleep or rest I think their actions would be more sane. I turn to page 1175 of Hansard for the present session and I find the remarks of the hon. member for East Algoma (Mr. Nicholson):

Russian agents are in every hamlet in this country from the Atlantic to Pacific, and I am not so sure that she has not agents around these parliament buildings.

I think that statement bespeaks the fears held by hon. members opposite. They are lying awake at night; they neither sleep nor slumber, and when they go to bed I think they look under it. Why all this fear? Why all this armed force against these heroic spirits, these olympic men? Policemen come armed with revolvers, others are mounted and carrying batons; then there is the use of tear bombs. Why all this? Well, the Prime Minister told us they were mounted on horses so nobody could get hurt. I think he would have been more humane, more peaceful, and less dangerous if he had armed the police with boxing gloves.

I believe in his own mind the Prime Minister is persuaded he is wrong; his conscience tells him he is wrong. In his remarks of March 23 he said:

I would not ask this power from any parliament except reluctantly, and I so stated when I introduced the resolution the other day.

He does it "reluctantly;" he feels he is wrong; he knows he is wrong. He comes from that splendid United Empire Loyalist stock and should know better. Conscience and reason tell him he is wrong, but ambition urges him on. What other interpretation can one place on his actions? No speaker for the government has given any valid reason for the change. For months the right hon. gentleman was Prime Minister, President of the Council, Secretary of State for External Affairs, Minister of Finance, and a whole lot of other things—because the other ministers did not say very much. He had his eye on power. The Montreal Gazette of June 9, 1930, contains a report of his speech in which I notice this passage:

So will I when the government is mine—

Mr. CASGRAIN: And parliament too.

Mr. CAYLEY: Not this part of parliament.

So will I when the government is mine continue to blast a way through all our troubles and difficulties.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Hear, hear.

Mr. CAYLEY: "When the government is mine." And it is his. But this is the sad part of it; these words reecho and strike them like a boomerang:

They play with the lives of men and women. What for? Do they realize that they are playing with lives,—food for wives and children, hunger?

All those on this side of the house who have taken part in the debate have urged the government to avoid this constitutional issue, to treat the authority of parliament as a sacred thing, a great heritage, and to take immediate constitutional action to relieve our suffering people. Let us do it to-day. Let us have a supply bill, late as it is, without any conditions, without any price. What a spectacle in this parliament—the people suffering; the government holding out for unlimited power. We are not in Russia; we are in Canada where the majority of the people are educated and intelligent, and all the problems of the day can be adjusted without setting up a dictatorship. Did the Canadian people ever fail in a time of crisis? The Conservative party asked the people to trust them, they begged the people to trust them, they called upon the people to trust them. Now all is far from well, and the Conservative party no longer trust the people. The people are not now singing that old hymn "We are standing on the promises;" they have learned that those promises are worthless. The people have been taken for their ride—and now they are walking home.

The thinking people of this country are wondering why the Prime Minister seeks for himself these vast powers, and some good reasons come to their minds. They ask, "Why these great powers—powers only surpassed by the supreme ruler—Why do the government seek such powers? Are there great things at stake?" There come to the minds of the people the great problems before Canada and they ask: "Has this anything to do with the St. Lawrence project? Has this anything to do with the Imperial conference? Is the government trying to put something over with regard to the railways?" These are honest questions the people are asking. I urge on the government a little more frankness as to their policies, I ask them to clarify matters, and so ease the feelings of the people. The people are worthy of your trust. Canadians are jealous of the precious heritage of responsible government. Through the development of these institutions Canada has risen to the splendid position she occupies to-day. In a recent speech at Albert hall in London, England, the Prince of Wales said:

The enemies to-day are depression and apathy. Let us attack them with two of our old-fashioned characteristics—good sense and good humour.

Let the government in this crisis assist in preserving the morale of our people. I doubt very much if this procedure will do so. I have been back in my riding and I know how my people are feeling. They are questioning why at this time they should be so treated. Let the government keep the citizens of Canada hopeful, not jumpy, wavering, unstable and mistrusting. Let the government so act that they will create in the people a feeling of hope and confidence.

The Literary Digest of February 27, 1932, contains a despatch with respect to Sir Richard Squires, Prime Minister of Newfoundland. It seems he has been getting into trouble lately. He was roughly treated by a large party of unemployed who stormed the council chamber. The Literary Digest contains this quotation from the St. John's Watchman:

> The whole unfortunate affair was brought about by the callous indifference of the Prime Minister and his pigheaded refusal to meet the committee and talk over ways and means.

Now, I submit it is absolutely unnecessary that this offer of relief should be made to us on condition that we surrender all the rights and privileges parliament has gained down through the centuries. Let us have a relief measure without strings attached to it. We are quite willing and ready to grant relief. The government tell us that no harm will befall the country by reason of the acceptance of this measure. Can we any longer rely upon the promises of this government? The opposition has come in for a great deal of criticism from our friends opposite and we have been accused of trying to play the part of a dictator. But that is not so; we are simply defending the rights of a free parliament.

The Prime Minister cannot make a mistake in giving heed to the advice of the opposition at this time to follow constitutional methods. He certainly made no mistake in 1931 when he accepted our advice and withdrew the income tax schedules. That is to his eternal glory. I am surprised to learn that now he is ready to call a provincial conference—a plan which he rejected when my right hon. leader suggested it during the campaign of 1930. It will be recalled that on that occasion my leader suggested that the government call a conference of the provinces to study the whole matter of unemployment and relief. I say that now he is following this advice and accepting the provincial conference suggested by my honoured leader, and in this he makes no mistake. Later he will have a national committee, and again I say he will be on sound ground.

[Mr. Cayley.]

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that we are jealous of our rights as a free people and in this free country of ours we do not want "government of the people, by the people and for the people to perish from the earth."

Sir EUGENE FISET (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, in rising to make a few remarks on this resolution I intend to approach the subject from a point of view that has been hardly touched in this house since the debate began. I may assure you, Mr. Speaker, and you may assure the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett), that I do not intend to follow the example given by his staunch supporter, the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Gagnon) and carry you through every phase of the last Quebec provincial election.

I intend, sir, to deal with the administrative aspect of this question. In his last statement in this house the Prime Minister left me under the impression that the officers of the crown had expressed a doubt, first of all, as to the extent of the powers conferred by, and, secondly, as to the scope of, the orders in council passed under the authority of chapter 58 of the revised statutes of Canada, 1931. I confess, sir, that careful perusal and study of these orders in council, and especially those contained in the report tabled by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon), has brought me to the conclusion that a real doubt exists as to their powers and scope. Let me give the house a concrete example. If you look at page three of the report you will find that certain credits were allotted six different departments of the crown, all ear-marked to be paid out of consolidated revenue. To all intents and purposes these credits became departmental appropriations and, in accordance with the ordinary rules applying to appropriations usually voted by parliament, the unexpended balance of these appropriations should have lapsed at the end of the fiscal year, which in this case was March 1. But, sir, after a further perusal of these orders in council, I note that certain commitments were extended much beyond March 1; as far as the commitments of the provincial governments were concerned, they were extended to May 1.

Therefore, sir, you have this to consider: You have two different opinions, and in view of the doubt that seems to exist even in the mind of the Prime Minister I took the trouble to try to ascertain from high administrative officers of the crown what interpretation they were giving these orders in council. I asked them if any accounts had been paid since the expiration of the act, which was March 1 last, and I was told that as yet they had not had occasion to pass on such accounts, but that they had grave doubts in that connection and might be compelled to ask for a ruling either from the treasury board or from the Department of Justice. In his speech the Prime Minister went even further; he stated that in view of these doubts that existed in the minds of high officials, instructions had been given to stop further payments in connection with these commitments.

I frankly confess, sir, that I cannot understand why the administration hesitate so much to bring down a supply bill. I heard my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) state to the house that, financially, the reenactment of chapter 58 was really the only way to cope with the situation. Well, sir, even at the risk of bringing down upon my head the wrath of the mighty, I am going to propose to this house a form of supply bill which, in my humble opinion, would meet not only the present situation but also any emergency that might arise.

In his admirable statement in introducing this resolution the Prime Minister gave enough information to enable the Minister of Finance to frame a quasi-specific supply bill, and it is with this information in mind that I propose the form of supply bill I am about to suggest. Let the Minister of Finance provide in a supply bill: first, for the unexpended balance of the commitments already authorized, either through federal grants or in conjunction with the provinces, and if you take the trouble to look at page six of the report of the Minister of Labour you will find that the commitments so far as the provinces are concerned amount to some $26,000,000; second, let the Minister of Finance provide for direct relief in accordance with what is already in hand; third, let the Minister of Finance provide for the necessary sums to pay for seed grain for western farmers that has been already purchased; fourth, let the Minister of Finance provide for further commitments in accordance with the requests already received from the provinces; fifth, let the Minister of Finance provide for further commitments in connection with federal works, the cost of which is to be borne entirely by the federal administration; sixth—and perhaps this is the crux of my suggestion—let the Minister of Finance provide for a contingency fund to be administered by order in council, so that the contingency vote may be equal to say one-third or even one-half the total supply bill. In order that every department of the federal administration may benefit by that vote, let all expenditures be administered by the governor in council.

This method was adopted in the great emergency of 1914, and it worked admirably. Here I want to correct an impression that seems to exist in the minds of some hon. members in this house, that the War Measures Act—on which the present measure was based—enabled the then administration to authorize by order in council the expenditure of public funds. Some hon. members went even further and stated that the War Measures Act authorized a special vote of $50,000,000. These impressions are all wrong, Mr. Speaker. We all seem to have forgotten that the expenditures for the war were authorized by a special act of parliament called the War Appropriation Act. We have forgotten that this War Appropriation Act provided a vote of $50,000,000 for expenditures in connection with the war, and expenditures authorized by governor general's warrants pending the summoning of parliament. We have forgotten that the War Appropriation Act created a special vote for war appropriations and that this vote was administered under a special proviso that every department of the crown that desired to use any of the moneys provided in the war appropriation should obtain first of all the authority of the governor in council. What I have suggested in the contingencies vote is based on the methods used during the war; and surely no one will pretend for a moment that the emergency that existed in 1914 was not, at least financially speaking, as serious as the situation we are facing to-day.

There is a second phase of this administration. Frankly, sir, I do not understand the reluctance of the government to bring down a supply bill. In my humble opinion they are simply militating against the very object they have in view. Do you realize that when the bill based upon this resolution is brought down it will have to be given retroactive effect? If not, the orders in council that have been passed subsequently to the expiration of the time limit provided in section 8 of chapter 58 will have to be reenacted. I will go further. I do not believe that the auditor general has the power to authorize any payments on the commitments already authorized during that period of time when the act was not in existence and especially during the interlude from March 1 to the date when the bill will have received royal assent. But there is the other phase of the problem. The Prime Minister has stated most emphatically his reluctance in requesting parliament to reenact chapter 58, and this request he has said is for a specific period of six weeks—six weeks from the present day up to the first of May next. May I ask what is going to happen after May 1 next? Is the Prime Minister going to ask parliament again to extend the time limit provided by the act? Or, in view of the fact that the bulk of the works and undertakings under commitment cannot possibly be completed by May 1, is the Prime Minister going to ask the house to pass special supplementary estimates? If he is going to do so, why not do it now?

There is a third course which the administration might possibly take, and, frankly, I am rather reluctant to mention it. I am one of those who think that the powers granted under chapter 58 are so broad that if the government so desired they might by order in council amend the act itself. As a matter of fact, this has already been done. I would refer you to order in council 2043, contained in the report tabled by the Minister of Labour. If you will look at appendix C, setting out the agreement between the dominion and the provinces, you will find in paragraph 13 the following words:

> All public works and undertakings to which contributions may be made under the provisions of clauses 6, 8, 9 and 10 of this agreement, are to be carried on from the date of their commencement to the date of their completion, which latter date shall be not later than the 1st of May, 1932.

Therefore as far back as August last the government, by order in council, have extended the time limit provided by the act. In view of these apprehended administrative difficulties which I have mentioned, I am forced to the conclusion that in pursuing this course the government have created for themselves an extremely awkward situation, the effect of which is bound to be reflected on those very people whom they are trying to help, namely, the unemployed. On the other hand, a specific appropriation voted by parliament, including the contingencies vote I have mentioned, would eliminate all these obstacles and enable the government for a full fiscal year to go on with past and future commitments, and it would also enable them to meet emergencies.

In submitting this concrete proposal to the house I have tried to avoid all blame for criticism. But there is one sweeping statement made by the Prime Minister to which I wish to refer. He has stated that the demands of the members of this house, in answer to Mr. Hereford, were so exceedingly large that it was impossible for the administration to comply with them. Let me qualify that statement so far as my own constituency is concerned. All the demands that came from me for the county of Rimouski never exceeded $35,000. I asked that a special credit of $5,000 be placed at the disposal of the local engineer, and I asked also that all labourers to be employed under that appropriation should be chosen by the parish priest or the municipal council. I wanted to avoid politics in the matter. But what have we seen so far as the rural constituencies of Quebec are concerned? We have seen that in a few constituencies represented by Conservative members their demands have been met; but so far as the Liberal members were concerned, we never got one sou. Well, even at this late date I appeal to the Minister of Labour to look more carefully into the demands made, more especially from my county.

Mr. GORDON: I wonder whether the hon. gentleman will tell me one instance where relief was denied when application was made.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Let me cite at once exactly what the hon. member for Dorchester stated, as to the relief that he had obtained for his own county.

Mr. GORDON: But from you.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Even now I am appealing to the Minister of Labour.

Mr. GORDON: But from you.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Is this another dictatorship?

Sir EUGENE FISET: I have already made the statement. The demands we have made for Rimouski are of such importance to that constituency that I dare, even at this date, to appeal to the minister to relieve our population. I have tried my best, throughout my remarks, not to criticize. The only criticism I have made has been with reference to what was said by the hon. member for Dorchester himself. I have perused to the best of my ability the details of this report, and I cannot possibly see for our rural constituencies—

Mr. GORDON: I rise to a point of order. Will the hon. gentleman give me one instance in his constituency—

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is not a point of order.

Mr. GORDON: —where consideration was not given to an application for relief?

Sir EUGENE FISET: I have already mentioned the application that came from the county of Rimouski. I never mentioned the word "relief"; I said for public works authorized and paid for by the federal government, and I say the demands of the county of Rimouski amounting barely to $35,000 for the whole county are so legitimate that I appeal to the minister again to peruse the demands made by me. If he does so, I think he will find them so reasonable he will be unable to refuse to help my people.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, during the course of this debate we on this side have contended that this measure submitted to the house is a usurpation of the rights of parliament. This is not a mere expression of view; we have the best possible authority for the statement. I regret that the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) paid only a flying visit to the chamber and has left just before I could ask him some questions regarding his speech of the other day. The right hon. gentleman, in his own words uttered in this chamber last year, characterized the present action of the government as a usurpation. This is what he said on that occasion, when he shortened the time during which that statute was to be in force:

I am not without full realization of what is involved in the bill but in order to meet my right hon. friend I will shorten the time to March 1 and make it clear that we have no desire to usurp powers as was suggested.

What does that mean? It means that for the government to take those powers while the house was in session constitutes a usurpation, and that is what he is going to do this year. Why is it necessary then, to do this? Why usurp the rights of parliament, as admitted by the Prime Minister, has been done? Why make this parliament a mere recording machine and a rubber stamp? The obstinacy of my right hon. friend, of course, gave rise to many suspicions and misgivings. We had our surmises, but he himself in his speech last Wednesday gave in so many words the real purpose of the measure now before the house. I refer hon. gentlemen to page 1414 of Hansard, where the Prime Minister is reported as saying:

We do not believe this power will be called into play.

That is the present power asked for by this legislation.

Nay, more, we sincerely and fervently hope that it will not be. But, sir, what is a man without a weapon in the midst of armed force?

What the armed force is, I fail to see.

What is a man who has no instrument for his protection in the midst of the strife of brigands?

Where the brigands are, I still fail to see. Note these words:

Without this power we should be without a weapon that could be used except through a bill in parliament—

And note particularly these last words:

—and with the strange views that obtain in these days there is no assurance that the mind of the government would be sufficiently strong to secure consent for any measure we might introduce.

What does this mean? It means that the Prime Minister is not sure even of his followers. He is not sure of the strength of the government; he wants power to enact legislation by order in council, and our hon. friends opposite are applauding their own humiliation.

An hon. MEMBER: Eighty-three to forty.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Hon. gentlemen opposite are cheerlessly whistling to keep up their courage. Further, what does this mean? It means that parliament is being asked to abrogate its position as the predominant factor in legislation. It means that we are being asked to agree to be dragged at the wheels of the Prime Minister and to make parliament an appendage of the executive. This attitude of the Prime Minister makes our duty to resist this legislation more imperative. The first duty of parliament is to remain a parliament, not to become a subservient and ornamental body. Parliament has a right which is certainly paramount to the convenience of the Prime Minister, the right to live. It has the duty to defend itself and not to allow anybody to invade its rights and privileges. It is the will of parliament, not that of the government, that is the will of the nation. When the Prime Minister says that he speaks for the whole of the country, he is mistaking the echo of his words for the voice of the Canadian people. It is parliament which is and must remain the authorized exponent of public opinion and of the public will. The legislation, the policies, must be what this house makes them. Even the government must be what the house makes it.

Mr. GOBEIL: That is what it will be.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That is very intelligent; it reminds me of the words of the Greek poet Homer that the gods deprive of half their intelligence those who lose their freedom. Parliament, and not the executive, is the instrument, the machinery selected by the people for the expression of their will.

Mr. GORDON: Whom the gods would destroy, they first make mad.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The Minister of Labour, instead of interjecting his little interruptions, might have the courage to make a speech. Under the British system of government, the parliamentary rules and procedure are the safeguard of those fundamental principles which protect and advance liberty, and they provide the protection for that liberty against the whims, selfishness, greed, thoughtlessness and injustice of any man or set of men. The sovereignty of the people is delegated to parliament, not to the executive, and when I say "parliament," it means the minority as well as the majority in parliament.

The Prime Minister has a queer notion of the rights of a minority in parliament. He quoted the words of the Right Hon. Ramsay MacDonald about the duties of an opposition. I agree with every word expressed by Mr. MacDonald in that regard. The duties of an opposition are, as he says, to discuss the measures which are submitted to parliament on the various stages of the bills, certainly not to obstruct. He says that would be a crime against the state. But, Mr. Speaker, when the measure is one that has the effect of making parliament extinguish itself, when it is a measure for the purpose of taking away all the rights, privileges and powers of parliament, it is then the duty of the opposition to try to prevent its adoption, and those who perpetrate a crime against the state are those responsible for bringing down such a measure.

An hon. MEMBER: Humbug.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Hon. gentlemen opposite know what that word means. They have been following something that looks like it for some considerable time.

In expressing his distrust of parliament—because those words of the Prime Minister amount to that—of course he is true to his real Tory mentality and traditions. Parliament, according to this gentleman, cannot safely be trusted. What he would conceive as a parliament is that we should stand at attention and salute when the Prime Minister wants us to do so, a parliament that would be ready to goose-step at the behest of the Prime Minister. Sir, the methods of the czar have produced bolshevism, and we do not wish to introduce that in Canada. It is an evil work, I claim, on the part of those who are in this way undermining the authority of parliament; and to say that parliament is not equal to any emergency is a libel on parliamentary government. Parliamentary government is the only form of free government, and it has stood the test. It has stood the test especially during the great conflict of ten or twelve years ago. All those countries which enjoy parliamentary government have come out of that conflict solid as the rock of Gibraltar, while the other countries where there was no parliamentary government have gone to pieces.

If hon. gentlemen opposite have failed, let them not blame parliament. Let them not blame the constitution, parliamentary rules and parliamentary practices. They are the originators of their own troubles; they are the creators of their own failures. And, Mr. Speaker, what a pernicious example is being set by the present method of government, and especially by the words of the Prime Minister of Canada. Why, only two days ago the newspapers were reporting that in the legislature of Ontario a bill was introduced, read the first time, read the second time, without being printed, without being on the order paper, and against the protest of both oppositions in the house, and then a vote was taken in the house declaring that what was done was right. When the example starts from the mother of parliaments in this country, it is no wonder that such a thing happened.

Sir, the Prime Minister resents the charges of dictatorship which have been mentioned. He was very eloquent in describing the will power of his colleagues and the great work they are doing in the cabinet. Well, even if that is true, it does not change the situation so far as this bill is concerned. The executive as a whole is the servant, and not the master, of parliament. In the process of gaining freedom it has never been the intention of modern men to substitute an autocrat with many heads for an autocrat with only one head. They have struggled to create a representative legislative body, and to define the area of civil and political liberty into which no body of men and no autocrat, whether with only one head or many heads, could enter.

The cabinet, Mr. Speaker, is a partisan body. It has been created by partisanship.

An hon. MEMBER: It always was.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It certainly always was. But in parliament other views than those of the cabinet are represented, and that is what makes the difference. In parliaments, minorities have the right to express their opinions on measures and on policies which are submitted to them. Not so around the council table, where only a body of partisans sits. It does not matter that all provinces are represented in the cabinet, as my right hon. friend suggested the other day. They are represented, yes, but only by one shade of opinion. Let me say that so far as I am concerned the electors of Quebec East—they may be wrong—prefer that I should express their views rather than that they should be expressed by my friend the Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau) or by the Postmaster General (Mr. Sauvé). More than that, for us from Quebec city and the district of Quebec there is all the more reason for objecting to only the executive speaking for us, because we have nobody in the cabinet representing us at the present time. Our minister is in Geneva, doing great work, I have no doubt, but we have nobody around the council table to express our view.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Very cheap.

Mr. LAPOINTE: There is nothing cheap in that. I do not blame him for doing that. I think it is great work that he is doing at Geneva. But at the same time there is nobody around the council table speaking for Quebec city and the district of Quebec.

Mr. GORDON: Will my hon. friend—

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am sorry I cannot give way to my hon. friend, as I have only twenty minutes and my time is nearly up.

A great prime minister of England once said—I do not think the Prime Minister of Canada would repeat this—that all his ministers were ciphers, that he was the only unit that was giving value to them. I hope that that is not the idea of the right hon. the Prime Minister, but by introducing legislation such as this he seems to consider not only his ministers, not only his followers, but the whole of parliament as nothing but ciphers and himself as the only unit that gives value to the legislative body of Canada.

Mr. GORDON: Nonsense.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Will you keep quiet? The Prime Minister is able; I am the first to admit it. I admire his qualities, but he will forgive us if we on this side of the house do not trust him. We have no confidence in his methods, in his mentality and in his doctrine. We cannot make him the sole power. May I add that he has also some weaknesses, as I mentioned the other day, and perhaps the leader of a party, as a chain is no stronger than its weakest link, is no stronger than his weak points and his weaker moments. The real motive behind this proposed legislation, I am afraid, is that the government has no definite policy to offer to parliament. There has been all the time a policy of indecision, nothing definite. Their stand has been: Sufficient unto the day is the statesmanship thereof. They have not been very successful in the things they have undertaken. The statement has been made that the House of Lords does nothing in particular, but does it well. This government has done many things, but has never done them well.

In former days the Prime Minister was very respectful of the rights of parliament. At page 1261 of Hansard, 1928, he is reported as follows:

> It will be a poor day for the Canadian parliament when it becomes a rubber stamp to enforce the will of the Prime Minister; it will be a poor day for this country when the parliament of Canada is to be a rubber stamp to record the will of the Minister of Railways or the Minister of Agriculture; it will be a poor day, sir,—

And it would seem that the next statement proves Mr. Dunning must have had prophetic powers:

> Mr. Dunning: Or to rubber stamp your will.
> Mr. Bennett: That might be.

Why to-day should he be in such a frenzy to destroy parliamentary power?

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member has spoken for twenty minutes.

Mr. J. T. HACKETT (Stanstead): Mr. Speaker, hon. members have listened with interest to the eloquent remarks which invariably fall from the lips of the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe). As a coiner of phrases, a man accustomed to the hustings and to the tricks of the hustings he is deserving of high praise. He has endeavoured to place before the house the views of hon. gentlemen who surround him; his speech is probably one of the last to be uttered in this debate from the opposite side of the house. He has availed himself of that opportunity to summarize and to place before parliament the case as hon. members on his side of the house view it.

I find however that the hon. member is slightly inconsistent. One moment he complains of the vacillations of the government; he makes the statement that the government has no policy. Then with that swift transition of which he is capable he complains of the relentless energy with which the government is forcing home the proposed legislation. Hon. gentlemen opposite have complained in tones major and minor that the government has no policy. I should like to remind them that from the early days of its existence this government has had a policy which it has enforced fearlessly and energetically. It has had a policy in which it believes and which it is willing to enforce.

Mr. SANDERSON: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. HACKETT: The government has attempted to execute its policy without reference to a commission, a committee or a conference. Hon. gentlemen opposite are of that peculiar ilk who think that if a government does something directly and of its own initiative without the dawdling intermediary of a commission, conference or committee, the work cannot properly be performed.

Mr. SANDERSON: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. HACKETT: For the first time in ten years—

Mr. SANDERSON: I rise to a point of order. Mr. Speaker, I direct your attention to the fact that the hon. member who is now speaking is not speaking from his own seat.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. HACKETT: Mr. Speaker, the interruption typifies the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite—more constructive criticism.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. HACKETT: For three or four weeks we have listened to idle criticism by hon. gentlemen opposite.

An hon. MEMBER: C.P.R.

Mr. HACKETT: The other day the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) told the government that the opposition had made what he was pleased to call constructive criticism. If hon. members will turn to page 1201 of Hansard for this year they will find he referred to twelve constructive suggestions. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I shall enumerate them: First he suggested that a national unemployment relief committee should be appointed. It was to act as a shock absorber, or a body behind which the government might shield itself from the ill will of an incensed electorate. My reply to the hon. member is that this government is able and willing to take the responsibility for its actions. That was the first constructive suggestion of the hon. member opposite to relieve unemployment. The second was to bring in a supply bill. Then followed ten other suggestions, some of which were constructive, but every one of which emanated from the far corner of the house. Since when has the hon. member for Vancouver Centre been authorized to speak for that independent element in the house which so frequently supports the constructive work of this government?

An hon. MEMBER: C.P.R.

[Mr. Hackett.]

Mr. HACKETT: Hon. gentlemen opposite indulge in personalities; they ask me to speak of railways. I am willing any day to meet any of them on that topic. However until they are able to explain the inroads they made upon the finances of this country, and until they can explain their wild and extravagant administration of the railways, and the unbridled expenditure which has brought this country to the verge of bankruptcy, I feel they would be better advised to hold their peace on the railroad question.

My views may differ from those of other hon. members on this side of the house: I concede that there is a constitutional question—not a constitutional issue, but, thank God, a constitutional difference between hon. members on this side and hon. members opposite. That difference, Mr. Speaker, is the difference between the doer and the dilettante; the difference between men who are able to undertake and carry out a definite policy and men who obstruct that policy and seek by shifting methods to shield themselves from popular censure. This government made pledges that it would raise the tariff; it has carried out those pledges. It made pledges that it would relieve unemployment; it has relieved unemployment. It made pledges that it would help the farmers—and gentlemen opposite for four long weeks have stood between the farmers and that aid. This so called constitutional issue, this party cry of tiresome antiquity which has echoed through the house for the last three or four weeks is without substance and without sincerity. In the days when there was a constitutional issue in Canada there were men in the house who took the matter seriously; everyone knows to-day that it is but a subterfuge, but a futile attempt to justify in the eyes of the electorate conduct—most reprehensible conduct—of gentlemen opposite.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. HACKETT: This constitutional cry is dead, killed by party disfavour and by popular contempt. There is something before the house, Mr. Speaker, which is of deeper and graver import than the topic which has been talked about in a most irrelevant, if not irreverent, fashion. We who have sat in the house for the last three weeks have heard dictionaries, antiquated Hansards and books of reference read to fill in the forty or twenty minutes allotted to hon. gentlemen sitting opposite. To-day we are dealing with a crisis, we have it from the mouths of hon. gentlemen opposite that there is no crisis. The fact is they have failed to realize, as demonstrated by their conduct, that there are great issues at stake. Let hon. gentlemen opposite go into the constituencies, let them go into the cities, let them mix with the ordinary man on the street, in the store, in the market place, and they will learn that there is an issue; they will learn also that the men who are dealing with it possess public confidence. Men who are willing to dare and do, who are not bound down by any antiquated rules of procedure in their attempt to carry out the popular will, are endowed with the confidence of the public to-day.

During this debate we have had from a remote part of a remote province what I suggest to hon. gentlemen opposite is a very clear indication of popular feeling towards them and their attitude with respect to this legislation. A thoroughly agricultural community, a community which depends probably as much as any other in the whole western area upon the assistance to be received from the government in the way of seed and feed, has said emphatically and clearly that it will not countenance the tactics of hon. gentlemen opposite. The hon. member for North Battleford (Mr. McIntosh) this evening told us that the gentleman who was elected for Athabaska represented a minority of the votes. I will not attempt to contradict figures, but since he spoke I have availed myself of information at hand and I find that the hon. gentleman from North Battleford came into parliament in much the same way—and it is not to his discredit.

Mr. McINTOSH: Not quite the same way —altogether different.

Mr. HACKETT: Not quite the same way? The hon. gentleman polled 7,168 votes; the candidate who came next polled 6,073 votes; and the third candidate polled 2,248 votes. My hon. friend is a minority representative by nearly two thousand votes. I do not hold that up to him as a reproach, but I want him to realize that under our constitution minorities do not control. That may not be a wise rule, but it is the rule under which British institutions have held sway for many a century. That rule holds just as true in parliament as it does in constituencies. In this house a substantial majority favours this legislation, that the people in Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg and Vancouver may have the moneys which have been promised to them; that the farmers of the west may have that seed which they hope to sow next month that they may reap a crop in the autumn, and thus recoup themselves for the misfortunes of the past three years. Do hon. gentlemen opposite realize that we are dealing with bread and butter, with human sustenance? One hon. gentleman told us to-night of children walking along sloppy roads in footwear that was ill-suited to such conditions. Is he aware that the tactics that he and his friends have adopted stand between those children and comfort and health? Hon. gentlemen opposite have failed to realize that this government has come into office to perform a very definite function—to alleviate suffering which is the result to a large extent of a world-wide depression. Do they realize that there is a crisis, that there is suffering, that there must be a distribution of means of support, and that this government has adopted the only means within its reach to bring assistance to these people? Do hon. gentlemen opposite understand that the whole conception and sweep of the policy of this government has been to bring help to those who are in need? Do they realize that the government dislikes this legislation just as much as they do, but that they deem it necessary, and therefore are unwilling to shirk the duty which rests upon government to minister to those who for the time being have been confided to their care?

I admit, Mr. Speaker, that there is this constitutional difference between men who fail to realize and who are unwilling to achieve, and men who do realize and who are willing to do. I do not ask hon. gentlemen opposite to cooperate; men of their point of view, who fail to realize the actualities of the day and fail to live up to the opportunity of the hour cannot be expected to cooperate with those who do realize the position and who have staked their all to relieve the trying conditions in which the Canadian people find themselves to-day. Such cooperation, Mr. Speaker, would be a defiance of the very laws of nature. I turn to hon. gentlemen on this side of the house and say: Be of high heart; your cause is good. Our right hon. leader is called a Mussolini and a czar because there is no argument to offset his policy. All that remains to hon. gentlemen opposite is the vocabulary of exaggeration and the small arms of petty politics.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Weir) which was agreed to on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Anderson (Toronto-High Park),	Barber,
Anderson (Halton),	Baribeau,
Arsenault,	Barrette,
Arthurs,	Beaubier,
Baker.	Belec,
	Bennett,

Bourgeois,
Bowen,
Bowman,
Boyes,
Bury,
Campbell,
Cantley,
Carmichael,
Casselman,
Charters,
Cormier,
Cowan (Long Lake),
Dickie,
Dorion,
Duguay,
Duranleau,
Embury,
Esling,
Fortin,
Fraser (Cariboo),
Gagnon,
Ganong,
Gardiner,
Garland (Bow River),
Garland (Carleton),
Geary,
Gobeil,
Gordon,
Gott,
Guthrie,
Hackett,
Hanson (York-Sunbury),
Hay,
Irvine,
Jones,
Kennedy (Peace River),
Laflèche,
Larue,
Laurin,
Loucks,
Lucas,
Luchkovich,
Macdougall,
MacLaren,
MacMillan (Saskatoon),
MacNicol,
McDade,
McGibbon,
McGillis,
McGregor,
McLure,
Manion,
Matthews,
Moore (Chateauguay-Huntingdon),
Myers,
Nicholson,
Peck,
Pettit,
Pickel,
Plunkett,
Price,
Quinn,
Robinson,
Ross,
Rowe,
Ryckman,
Sauvé,
Senn,
Shaver,
Simpson (Simcoe North),
Simpson (Algoma West),
Smith (Victoria-Carleton),
Smoke,
Spankie,
Speakman,
Spence,
Spencer,
Spotton,
Sproule,
Stanley,
Stevens,
Stewart (Leeds),
Stewart (Lethbridge),
Stinson,
Stirling,
Sutherland,
Swanston,
Tétrault,
Thompson (Simcoe East),
Thompson (Lanark),
Tummon,
Weese,
Weir (Melfort),
White (Mount Royal),
Wilson,
Wright.—107.

NAYS

Messrs:

Ahearn,
Bertrand,
Blair,
Bothwell,
Bouchard,
Boucher,
Boulanger,
Bourassa,
Bradette,
Cardin,
Casgrain,
Cayley,
Chevrier,
Denis,
Deslauriers,
Desrochers,
Dumaine,
Dupuis,
Euler,
Factor,
Fafard,
Fiset, Sir Eugène,
Fontaine,
Fournier,
Fraser (Northumberland, O.),
Girouard,
Goulet,
Hall,
Hanson (Skeena),
Heaps,
Hepburn,
Howard,
King, Mackenzie,
Lacroix,
Lapointe,
Mackenzie (Vancouver Centre),
MacLean,
McKenzie (Assiniboia),
McMillan (Huron South),
Mercier (Laurier-Outremont),
Mitchell,
Moore (Ontario),
Motherwell,
Neill,
Perras,
Power,
Reid,
Rhéaume,
Roberge,
Rutherford,
St-Père,
Sanderson,
Séguin,
Thauvette,
Totzke,
Vallance,
Veniot,
Verville.—58.

PAIRS

(The list of pairs is furnished by the chief whips.

Messrs:

Bell (Hamilton),
Bell (St. Antoine),
Bell (St. John-Albert),
Beynon,
Black (Halifax),
Burns,
Cahan,
Chaplin,
Cotnam,
Cowan (Port Arthur-Thunder Bay),
Dupré,
Edwards,
Harris,
Johnstone,
Kennedy (Winnipeg South Centre),
Lawson,
Lennox,
MacDonald (Cape Breton South),
Macdonald (Kings),
Maloney,
Morand,
Mullins,
Murphy,
Perley (Qu'Appelle),
Perley, Sir George,
Porteous,
Rhodes,
Rogers,
Ryerson,
Short,
Smith (Cumberland),
Stitt (Nelson),
Stitt (Selkirk),
Sullivan,
Turnbull,
White (London),
Willis,
Mercier (St. Henri),
Raymond,
Dubois,
Coote,
Dubuc,
Butcher,
Rinfret,
Malcolm,
Hurtubise,
Ilsley,
Ferland,
Elliott,
Jacobs,
Donnelly,
McIntosh,
Gray,
Pouliot,
Urquhart,
Hanbury,
Young,
Parent,
Howden,
Stewart (Edmonton West),
Munn,
Marcil,
Macphail (Miss),
Ralston,
Woodsworth,
Taylor,
Heenan,
Duff,
Beaubien,
Weir (Macdonald),
Brasset,
McPhee,
Gershaw,
Brown.

Mr. COTNAM: I was paired with the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Hurtubise). Had I voted, I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. DONNELLY: I was paired with the hon. member for Cape Breton-North Victoria (Mr. Johnstone). Had I voted, I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. RALSTON: I was paired with the hon. the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes). Had I voted, I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. ILSLEY: I was paired with the hon. member for Port Arthur-Thunder Bay (Mr. Cowan). Had I voted, I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): I was paired with the hon. member for West Hamilton (Mr. Bell). Had I voted, I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. EDWARDS: I was paired with the hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Elliott). Had I voted, I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. WHITE (London): I was paired with the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Gershaw). Had I voted, I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. SHORT: I was paired with the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Heenan). Had I voted, I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. MULLINS: I was paired with the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Howden). Had I voted, I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. RYERSON: I was paired with the hon. member for Norfolk-Elgin (Mr. Taylor). Had I voted, I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. WILLIS: I was paired with the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown). Had I voted, I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. BLACK (Halifax): I was paired with the hon. member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Dubuc). Had I voted, I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. PORTEOUS: I was paired with the hon. member for Southeast Gray (Miss Macphail). Had I voted, I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. POULIOT: I was paired with the hon. member for North York (Mr. Lennox). Had I voted, I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. McINTOSH: I was paired with the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Kennedy). Had I voted, I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. BRASSET: I was paired with the hon. member for St. Ann (Mr. Sullivan). Had I voted, I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I was paired with the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Murphy). Had I voted, I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. PARENT: I was paired with the hon. member for East Essex (Mr. Morand). Had I voted, I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. LAWSON: I was paired with the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Gray). Had I voted, I would have voted for the motion.

The house divided on the main motion (Mr. Bennett), which was agreed to on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Anderson (Toronto-High Park),
Anderson (Halton),
Arsenault,
Arthurs,
Baker,
Barber,
Baribeau,
Barrette,
Beaubier,
Belec,
Bennett,
Bourgeois,
Bowen,
Bowman,
Boyes,
Bury,
Campbell,
Cantley,
Carmichael,
Casselman,
Charters,
Cormier,
Cowan (Long Lake),
Dickie,
Dorion,
Duguay,
Duranleau,
Embury,
Esling,
Fortin,
Fraser (Cariboo),
Gagnon,
Ganong,
Garland (Carleton),
Geary,
Gobeil,
Gordon,
Gott,
Guthrie,
Hackett,
Hanson (York-Sunbury),
Hay,
Jones,
Kennedy (Peace River),
Laflèche,
Larue,
Laurin,
Loucks,
Macdougall,
MacLaren,
MacMillan (Saskatoon),
MacNicol,
McDade,
McGibbon,
McGillis,
McGregor,
McLure,
Manion,
Matthews,
Moore (Chateauguay-Huntingdon),
Myers,
Nicholson,
Peck,
Pettit,
Pickel,
Plunkett,
Price,
Quinn,
Robinson,
Ross,
Rowe,
Ryckman,
Sauvé,
Senn,
Shaver,
Simpson (Simcoe North),
Simpson (Algoma West),
Smith (Victoria-Carleton),
Smoke,
Spankie,
Spence,
Spotton,
Sproule,
Stanley,
Stevens,
Stewart (Leeds),
Stewart (Lethbridge),
Stinson,
Stirling,
Sutherland,
Swanston,
Tétreault,
Thompson (Simcoe East),
Thompson (Lanark),
Tummon,
Weese,
Weir (Melfort),
White (Mount Royal),
Wilson,
Wright.—100.

NAYS

Messrs:

Ahearn,	King, Mackenzie,
Bertrand,	Lacroix,
Blair,	Lapointe,
Bothwell,	Lucas,
Bouchard,	Luchkovich,
Boucher,	Mackenzie (Vancouver Centre),
Boulanger,	MacLean,
Bourassa,	McKenzie (Assiniboia),
Bradette,	McMillan (Huron South),
Cardin,	Mercier (Laurier-Outremont),
Casgrain,	Mitchell,
Cayley,	Moore (Ontario),
Chevrier,	Motherwell,
Denis,	Neill,
Deslauriers,	Perras,
Desrochers,	Power,
Dumaine,	Reid,
Dupuis,	Rhéaume,
Euler,	Roberge,
Factor,	Rutherford,
Fafard,	St-Père,
Fiset, Sir Eugène,	Sanderson,
Fontaine,	Séguin,
Fournier,	Speakman,
Fraser (Northumberland, O.),	Spencer,
Gardiner,	Thauvette,
Garland (Bow River),	Totzke,
Girouard,	Vallance,
Goulet,	Veniot,
Hall,	Verville.—64.
Hanson (Skeena),
Heaps,
Hepburn,
Howard,

PAIRS

(The list of pairs is furnished by the chief whips.

Messrs:

Bell (Hamilton),	Mercier (St. Henri),
Bell (St. Antoine),	Raymond,
Bell (St. John-Albert),	Dubois,
Beynon,	Coote,
Black (Halifax),	Dubuc,
Burns,	Butcher,
Cahan,	Rinfret,
Chaplin,	Malcolm,
Cotnam,	Hurtubise,
Cowan (Port Arthur-Thunder Bay),	Ilsley,
Dupré,	Ferland,
Edwards,	Elliott,
Harris,	Jacobs,
Johnstone,	Donnelly,
Kennedy (Winnipeg South Centre),	McIntosh,
Lawson,	Gray,
Lennox,	Pouliot,
MacDonald (Cape Breton South),	Urquhart,
Macdonald (Kings),	Hanbury,
Maloney,	Young,
Morand,	Parent,
Mullins,	Howden,
Murphy,	Stewart (Edmonton West),
Perley (Qu'Appelle),	Munn.
Perley, Sir George,	Marcil,
Porteous,	Macphail (Miss),
Rhodes.	Ralston,
Rogers,	Woodsworth,
Ryerson,	Taylor,
Short,	Heenan,
Smith (Cumberland),	Duff,
Stitt (Nelson),	Beaubien,
Stitt (Selkirk),	Weir (Macdonald),
Sullivan,	Brasset,
Turnbull,	McPhee,
White (London),	Gershaw,
Willis,	Brown.

[Mr. Lawson.]

Mr. WHITE (London): I was paired with the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Gershaw). Had I voted, I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. EDWARDS: I was paired with the hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Elliott). Had I voted, I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): I was paired with the hon. member for West Mamilton (Mr. Bell). Had I voted, I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. DONNELLY: I was paired with the hon. member for Cape Breton-North Victoria (Mr. Johnstone). Had I voted, I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. MULLINS: I was paired with the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Howden). Had I voted, I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. LAWSON: I was paired with the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Gray). Had I voted, I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. WILLIS: I was paired with the hon member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown). Had I voted, I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. RALSTON: I was paired with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes). Had I voted, I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. POULIOT: I was paired with the hon. member for North York (Mr. Lennox). Had I voted, I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. BRASSET: I was paired with the hon. member for St. Ann (Mr. Sullivan). Had I voted, I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. ILSLEY: I was paired with the hon. member for Port Arthur-Thunder Bay (Mr. Cowan). Had I voted, I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. McINTOSH: I was paired with the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Kennedy). Had I voted, I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. SHORT: I was paired with the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Heenan). Had I voted, I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I was paired with the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Murphy). Had I voted, I would have voted against the motion.

Motion agreed to, and the house went into committee on the resolution, Mr. Hanson (York-Sunbury) in the chair.

Mr. GUTHRIE: It is evident, I think, from the reading of the resolution, that it was framed some time ago. Notice was given of the resolution about February 24 last, and the wording of it would hardly be appropriate to the situation which exists to-day. I therefore beg to move:

That all the words after the word "bill" in the said motion be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

To extend until the first of May, 1932, the operation of the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act, 1931, which expired on the first of March, 1932.

This, I submit, is a change of form, not of substance, and does not alter in any way the principle of the resolution.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I ask whether it is not essential that any amendment be relevant to the resolution that it proposes to amend? The resolution reads:

That it is expedient to introduce a bill to amend chapter 58 of the statutes of Canada, 1931.

The resolution is not that it is expedient to introduce a bill; it is that it is expedient to introduce a bill to amend chapter 58 of the statutes of Canada, 1931. Chapter 58 of the statutes of Canada, 1931, is non-existent, and a non-existent entity cannot be amended, no matter what it is. The act does not exist, and I would ask you, Mr. Chairman, to rule as to whether, in the circumstances, the amendment is in order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): I rule that the amendment is in order and quite relevant.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: On what ground is it relevant? Can the chairman give us the reasons?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): If reasons are required, I shall refer hon. gentlemen to May, page 546, which states:

The approval or the reduction of the expenditure under consideration, or a modification of the terms and conditions of the charge thereby created, are the matters specially entrusted to such a committee, and to these objects amendments are directed, but when the motion made in committee is more restricted than the resolution upon which, with the royal recommendation, the committee was appointed, amendments to the motion extending its scope are in order as long as they fall within the terms of the resolution upon which the committee was appointed.

I think that authority would be quite sufficient. It would simply be a change in form and not of substance.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If I understood what the chairman has just read, the words are that an amendment must be within the terms of the resolution.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): The authority is that in committee the terms of the resolution can be changed.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Certainly the terms can be changed if what is before the committee is something that exists, but a non-existent measure cannot be amended.

Mr. RALSTON: I understood another sentence that the chairman read from that authority was—

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): I have given my decision. It may be appealed.

Mr. RALSTON: I was raising another point. I understood from the authority the chairman read that the amendment must not involve a greater commitment than the original resolution. I beg to point out that this amendment involves a greater commitment because it involves a commitment from March 1 to the present time.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): I would not think it involved a greater commitment. It is simply a change in terms.

Mr. RALSTON: Would the Chairman mind reading that paragraph again, on the point of order? We have not the authorities before us.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): May, at page 546, states:

The approval or the reduction of the expenditure under consideration, or a modification of the terms and conditions of the charge thereby created, are the matters specially entrusted to such a committee, and to these objects amendments are directed.

That is sufficient, I should think.

Mr. RALSTON: I am pointing out that this amendment is for neither the approval nor the reduction of the resolution, but for the increase of the amount which would be provided under it.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Not at all.

Mr. RALSTON: If the original resolution was simply to ratify expenditures from the time the bill founded on it was assented to, and this resolution is for the purpose of laying the foundation for a bill which will ratify all expenditures made from March 1, I submit it is certainly not reducing the amount, but extending it considerably. I understood from some remark made from the other side, that a very considerable amount of money had either been expended or committed to expenditure from March 1 to the present time. If that be so, this amendment certainly involves an increase in the amount which was originally recommended to the house by the representative of the crown, as announced by the Prime Minister.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): That is not the sense of the amendment as I understand it. I direct the attention of the house to May at page 510, which states:

> As is subsequently explained (see page 531), the constitutional principle which vests in the crown the sole responsibility of incurring national expenditure, forbids an increase by the Commons of a sum demanded on behalf of the crown for the service of the state. This principle, however, is apparently disregarded when the recommendation of the crown is given to a resolution empowering the expenditure of public money which, framed in general terms, places no limitation on the amount of expenditure to be authorized by the resolution.

That is in point, and I rule against the point of order.

Mr. RALSTON: I should have an opportunity to discuss it.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): The point has been discussed two or three times.

Mr. RALSTON: Do you rule, Mr. Chairman, that we cannot discuss it any further?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): The hon. member may appeal from the chairman's ruling. Shall the amendment carry?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I rise to a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BENNETT: The question is put.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): I declare the amendment carried.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I submit, Mr. Chairman, that a certain deference is due to the committee. There is no reason why on this particular resolution the committee should be treated any differently from what it would be on any other resolution. Never before has the chairman of the committee attempted completely to prevent discussion on a resolution.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): The hon. gentleman was not on his feet.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The committee was awaiting some further word from yourself, Mr. Chairman, as to whether you had pronounced the last word, and was considering whether or not it would appeal from your ruling. In any case we have not yet begun to discuss the resolution, and we wish to do so. I would like to begin by asking the Prime Minister a question.

Mr. BENNETT: There is a question before the chair.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): The question was put to the house and declared carried.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I was on my feet raising a point of order, Mr. Chairman, when the question was put.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I ask you as the chairman of this committee, with considerable experience in the house, whether it is not wholly reasonable for members to ask for an opportunity to debate the resolution, Mr. Chairman, and whether they should not be given the same opportunity they would expect to be afforded with respect to any other resolution.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): The answer is this, that when the question was put no hon. member rose.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I was on my feet, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): While the question was being put the hon. member for Vancouver Centre rose to a point of order.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say that my understanding, and certainly what we understood on this side was that you yourself, Mr. Chairman, were to state further to the committee whether you had given a final ruling. We were awaiting from the chairman a final decision, and I submit that a courtesy of the kind should not be taken alvantage of to prevent discussion of the resolution.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): Nobody rose.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I state to you now, Mr. Chairman, as leader of the opposition, that the only reason I did not rise was that I had a question I wanted immediately to address to the Prime Minister. I was awaiting a pronouncement from you as to whether or not you had given the last word on your ruling.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): I am sorry the right hon. gentleman did not hear me, but I put the question and declared the amendment carried, and nobody rose.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There have been many similar misunderstandings on previous occasions. Do I understand that the Prime Minister and hon. gentlemen opposite are unwilling to allow the committee to discuss this resolution and are going to take advantage of the technicality raised by the chairman of the committee to prevent further debate? If that is the decision, well and good; we will abide by it. But I submit that before that decision is given—

Mr. BENNETT: Do not threaten.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That is a monopoly.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There is no threat in saying that we will abide by the decision of the chairman of the committee, but there is a very distinct threat when the Prime Minister gets up and supports the chairman in an arbitrary ruling which would shut off all discussion.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): I take exception to the statement of the right hon. gentleman that I gave an arbitrary ruling. I submit that the ruling was sound. If it was not, there was the right of recourse by way of appeal to the Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: May I ask a question, Mr. Chairman, for information? Assuming the amendment to have been carried in accordance with your ruling, the question still remains as to whether the resolution as amended shall carry, does it not? And debate may be carried on upon the resolution as amended?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): That is my exact understanding of the situation, that the debate may be carried on upon the resolution as amended.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): That is not the point of order raised.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I wish to inform hon. gentlemen that I have the same rights on the floor of this house as any Tory in this assembly. I regret the highly nervous condition of the Prime Minister.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): If hon. gentlemen opposite want any expedition in regard to this legislation, I would ask them who is now obstructing unemployment relief for the people of Canada. My hon. friend from Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) raised a point of order, Mr. Chairman, and you gave a decision on that point of order which, with all due respect, I submit was premature. You immediately put the question without extending to this committee the full courtesy of debating the point of order. I respectfully suggest that the point of order should be revived, because in my humble opinion the amendment that has been moved by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) is not a proper amendment to the resolution before the committee.

Mr. SHORT: How do you know?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I know as much about points of order as my hon. friend. A little knowledge is a dangerous thing, and my hon. friend should know that better than anyone else.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): The ruling of the Chair was that the resolution was properly before the committee, and that the amendment was regularly moved.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I shall not sit down until the chairman rises.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): Will the hon. gentleman take his seat?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): That is different.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): The position as I understand it—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Stand up.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): I apologize to the committee. If I have been lacking in courtesy it is only because of inexperience. The position as I understand it is that the resolution was regularly before the committee on the vote of the house, that an amendment which was quite in order was moved by the Minister of Justice, and no one objecting the question was put and the amendment declared carried. The motion now before the Chair is the motion as amended, and it is quite in order to debate that. The amendment has been declared carried.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): By what procedure, Mr. Chairman, was it carried?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): By yea and nay vote.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I was never asked to record my vote on this amendment, Mr. Chairman. I rise, sir, to another point of order. I say in the first place that the amendment moved was not a proper amendment, but you have ruled against that. In the second place, on account of your putting the question so expeditiously, Mr. Chairman, hon. gentlemen on this side of the house have not yet been accorded the courtesy of having a vote on this particular motion, and I ask as a matter of courtesy and consideration—it may seem surprising to ask it at this late date—that the question be renewed.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): The hon. gentleman has asked for something that does not take place in committee. There is no recorded vote in committee.

Mr. LAPOINTE: There is a standing vote.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think we have the right to ask for a vote if we wish to have it.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): Yes.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We do that now.

Mr. GARDINER: I rise to a point of order, Mr. Chairman. Did not the Prime Minister move and the Minister of Justice second a motion that this house go into committee of the whole to consider the resolution?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): Yes, that was carried in the house, and we are now in committee to consider the resolution.

Mr. GARDINER: My point of order is that the Minister of Justice, having seconded the motion that the house resolve itself into committee of the whole, cannot move an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): I rule against the hon. member. The motion does not even require a seconder.

An hon. MEMBER: Can he amend his own motion?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): Those in favour of the amendment will please rise.

[The Chairman.]

Mr. GARDINER: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. GUTHRIE: Who is in charge of this committee, the chairman or someone else? Put the question.

Mr. GARDINER: What is your ruling?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): Is the hon. member bringing up another point of order?

Mr. GARDINER: What is your ruling on my point of order? I cannot hear at this end of the chamber.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): My ruling is that the point of order is not well taken, because the motion does not require a seconder; therefore I rule against it. Further, the point of order is not well taken because I do not understand that Mr. Guthrie did second the main motion. At all events, he is entitled to move an amendment.

Mr. GARDINER: Mr. Chairman, it is quite evident you did not understand my point of order.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. GARDINER: Very well, I shall stand here until order is restored in the committee. My point is that the Prime Minister moved, seconded by Mr. Guthrie, that the house resolve itself into committee of the whole to consider this resolution. Having seconded the motion to go into committee of the whole, I submit that according to the rules of the house the Minister of Justice is not permitted to move an amendment to the resolution.

Mr. GUTHRIE: What rule is that? There is no such rule.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): The motion of the Prime Minister was before the house; this is a motion in committee. We have now reached the committee stage, and therefore I rule that the amendment is in order. Those in favour of the amendment please rise.

Amendment agreed to: yeas, 101; nays, 62.

The CHAIRMAN: I declare the amendment carried, and the question is on the main motion as amended.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I should like to ask the right hon. the Prime Minister a question. When last session we were debating what came to be chapter 58 of the statutes of Canada, 1931, exception was taken by the opposition to the fact that as the time fixed for the expiration of the act was March 31, in all probability parliament would be in session at the time, and we would be giving powers to the government to deal by way of order in council with matters pertaining to the peace, order and good government of the country, that we would also be giving to the government a blank cheque during a time when parliament was in session, and that that would mean a subversion of the rights of parliament. I think the Prime Minister will recall that I stressed that side of the question. In order to meet my objection my right hon. friend changed the date from March 31 to March 1. As his reason for the change he gave that it would avoid any question being raised of the subversion of the rights of parliament. In order that there may be no misunderstanding I will quote his words as they appear in Hansard of 1931 at page 4448:

> I am not without full realization of what is involved in the bill, but in order to meet my right hon. friend I will shorten the time to March 1 and make it clear that we have no desire to usurp powers as was suggested.

What did my right hon. friend mean when he changed the date from March 31 to March 1 in order that there could be no question of a subversion of powers?

Mr. BENNETT: I take it, Mr. Chairman, that I am not here to be cross-examined. I have no observation to make at all as to what took place last session.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: As leader of the opposition may I say I am here to discover what value is to be attached to the word of the present Prime Minister. Last year the Prime Minister of Canada gave to this parliament a solemn pronouncement in the words which I have just read and which he now repudiates, and which for the most part has occasioned the debate which has taken place. Last year we accepted in good faith the word of my right hon. friend; we believed he meant what he said. We did not think he meant to deceive parliament when this year came round.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We believed he meant that on March 1 the act would expire, that parliament would be in session, and that no effort would be made to extend its provisions while parliament was in session. It was because of the promise which at that time my right hon. friend gave to the opposition that we then ceased to press our opposition to the measure. I ask: what guarantee have we that the change in date now being made has any significance whatever? Can the Prime Minister's word be relied upon?

Mr. BAKER: Always.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: This is an instance where it cannot be relied upon. I wish to repeat that I have asked the Prime Minister what he meant when he gave his word to parliament.

Mr. BAKER: He always means and makes good what he says.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I regret very much that as leader of the opposition I have to say to the Prime Minister of Canada that he has broken faith with parliament—

An hon. MEMBER: Never.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: —that he has not kept his word, and that from now on we will be unable to accept his word in regard to any public measure.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Hanson, York-Sunbury): Shall the resolution as amended carry?

Mr. RALSTON: No, Mr. Chairman. I desire to ask the right hon. Prime Minister by whom the returns are made which are summarized on page III of the Report of the Dominion Director of Unemployment Relief.

Mr. BENNETT: I have not the report beside me. But if the figures are those to which I think the hon. gentleman refers, they are sent forward by the provincial governments to the federal government, if the expenditure is partly discharged by the municipalities, partly by the provinces and partly by the dominion. If the expenditure is made directly by the federal government for public works or matters of that sort, the ordinary vouchers are provided through the Auditor General's department and are purely matters of federal administration. I think that is a correct statement of the position as far as I know.

Mr. RALSTON: I had before me a very recent number of the Labour Gazette which purported to show the number of man-days employment provided under the provisions of this act as being something over 7,000,000. I notice that this report shows less than 7,000,000. I want to find out how the discrepancy occurs and whether those returns were made up by the Department of Labour on a basis different from the basis employed by the Dominion Director of Unemployment Relief, who, I understand, is an officer of the Department of Labour.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman perhaps knows that an effort was made to bring the report down to date. But he will find there is no discrepancy between those figures and the figures appearing in the Labour Gazette. It merely means that the latter figures are later in point of time than those appearing in the report. They are made up from the same report by the same gentleman. Mr. Hereford is an employee of the Department of Labour. The report in the first instance, now before the house, was made up to a particular date with respect to these figures. He did not give the date of the Labour Gazette, but I take it to be later in point of time. There can be no discrepancy because the figures are arrived at in the same way.

Mr. RALSTON: I remember now that the figures were given not in the Labour Gazette, but by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon) in a speech he made a short time ago. It will be found on page 441 of Hansard as follows:

> Under that legislation, 334,301 persons have been given employment up to January 31, 1932, the total number of man-days being 7,415,973.

I call the Prime Minister's attention to the fact that the report of the director of unemployment relief shows that up to January 31, 1932, employment was afforded to 339,007 individuals—that is about 5,000 more than the figures quoted by the Minister of Labour; but the number of man-days is only 6,917,366 —a difference of half a million for exactly the same date. That is why I am trying to find on what date the reports are made up.

Mr. BENNETT: I have explained the information is made up from reports furnished on printed forms supplied by the Department of Labour. Those reports are returned by the provinces. It may be there were some discrepancies. If the hon. gentleman had directed attention to it I would have seen that the matter was disposed of. I find that at page 441 of Hansard the Minister of Labour said:

> The figures I have given will be subject to some slight variation when the report is tabled, which I trust will be shortly.

I think that is perhaps the explanation. I recall that the computations were hurriedly made.

Mr. RALSTON: The point was raised by the hon. member for Rimouski (Sir Eugène Fiset)—the Prime Minister was not in at the time—with regard to what was covered by these expenditures. He pointed out that on page 5 of the report of the director of unemployment relief is contained the form of agreement between the provinces, the municipalities and the dominion. Paragraph 13 provides:

> 13. All public works and undertakings to which contributing may be made under the > provisions of clauses 6, 8, 9 and 10 of this agreement, are to be carried on from the date of their commencement to the date of their completion, which latter date shall not be later than the 1st day of May, 1932.

Take page 35 of the report, where a total expenditure of $20,000 is apportioned between the municipality, the province and the dominion—fifty, twenty-five and twenty-five. The dominion proportion is $5,000. Does that $20,000 represent money actually spent, or is it a commitment for the work under the agreement, the form of which I have already referred to?

Mr. BENNETT: I think if the hon. member will look at the top of the page he will get the information.

Mr. RALSTON: The columns are headed: Schedule number—description of work—total expenditure—percentage, municipal, provincial, dominion—dominion proportion.

Mr. BENNETT: The two questions the hon. gentleman has asked are answered in this way. As to the first of May being fixed as the period of time within which the agreements were to be completed by the execution of the work, the Department of Justice ruled that with respect to matters of that kind there should be a reasonable time within which to close out the work, provided a contract, so to speak, had been let. I made personal inquiries about it when it was brought to my attention, and that was the explanation given. So far as the other point is concerned, I have not the report before me, but in some instances—and I think they are detailed in the report—expenditures actually made are distinguished from expenditures authorized. I will give the hon. gentleman an illustration. Works in the province of Quebec are being paid for by the dominion, and the province and the municipalities are each making a definite contribution. An agreement has been drawn up and executed by the province and the dominion, the only body with which the dominion has contact being the province. In the instances indicated in that report it will be found that the whole of the contemplated expenditure is expressed—that is, we will say for the sake of argument, not exceeding $20,000 by the dominion, $10,000 by the municipality and $10,000 by the province. There are other instances in that document in which the work has been actually completed and the expenditure made.

The hon. gentleman raised another question, with which I will deal, as to whether under the several agreements executed between the dominion and the provinces, obligations were created before March 1. In point of fact no fresh obligations have been created since March 1, and I should like the hon. gentleman to follow that. The department decided, as a matter of law, that a reasonable time in which to close out work that was under way, and with respect to which the contract was outstanding, was sixty days; hence the reference to May 1 with regard to which the hon. gentleman from Rimouski raised a question.

I should like to quiet my hon. friend's mind with respect to one other point. Apparently he thinks expenditures have been made without warrant and without authority, but this is the position: Some question has been raised as to whether or not, under chapter 58, there was power to pay obligations already created prior to March 1 but which came in for payment subsequent to March 1, and there was one order in council to which attention was directed by the hon. member for Quebec East, dated March 2, which authorized payment to the province of British Columbia of $500,000. That is my memory as to the amount; I speak subject to correction on that point. With respect to that, since the statute was held to be uncertain, we held up every order in council so that there would be no question, after the passing of this bill, that they could be paid. Numbers of these orders in council are now awaiting the passage of this legislation, in order that no question may be raised with respect to their payment.

Mr. RALSTON: Can we take it from my right hon. friend's explanation that no payments have been made or authorized since March 1, except the $500,000 to which my right hon. friend referred?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes. I speak subject to correction, but I have looked over the matter very carefully, and I have had it looked over very carefully, and so far as I know no order has been signed constituting a charge against the consolidated revenue since March 1, except the one to which I have already referred.

Mr. RALSTON: Then can we take the words "total expenditure" as they appear in the table setting out municipal works to which the dominion contributed, as meaning that this money has been actually spent?

Mr. BENNETT: I am now advised that the cheque for $500,000, in point of fact, was held up in consequence of the question as to the certainty of that legislation.

Mr. RALSTON: I was referring to page 35 as a sample page, and I am asking whether the column headed "total expenditure" represents money actually spent.

Mr. BENNETT: No. As the hon. gentleman will see by reference to the context, in every instance starting with page 10 or page 11 these columns indicate the works that are covered in the agreements with the several provinces. That is, they were approved by the provinces and by the dominion, and if the work had been carried to completion the obligation imposed upon the province would be that mentioned in the one column, the obligation on the dominion would be that mentioned in the other column, and where there would be a municipal obligation it would be that mentioned in the first column.

Mr. RALSTON: This is the reason for my difficulty in understanding the report; while the column with regard to municipal and provincial works is headed "total expenditure," which in ordinary English language means that the money has been spent, the column with regard to public works—and I refer my right hon. friend to page 61—is headed "amount authorized," which I should think would be the appropriate term to use in connection with these municipal works if the expenditure was not actually made.

Mr. BENNETT: If the hon. gentleman will turn to page 35 he will see that the first item appears as number 133 in the schedule. The description of the work is "sewers and water mains in Grantham township" and the total expenditure contemplated is $20,000.

Mr. RALSTON: It does not say "contemplated."

Mr. BENNETT: That is the way it was made up, and it is stated that of that expenditure the municipality is to pay 50 per cent, the province 25 per cent and the dominion 25 per cent. It is set out in this way in order that this House of Commons might have full information as to the way in which the work was to be paid for. As to page 61, that being our own transaction over which we had complete control, in that particular case the Department of Public Works was able to indicate the exact sum expended up to February 29, 1932, and that sum appears opposite the amount authorized.

Mr. RALSTON: What I am finding fault with is that with reference to municipal works the column is headed "total expenditure," which we are told means only the amount authorized, but when we come to page 61, which has to do with federal public works, the heading is "amount authorized," and we are told that means only the amount expended. Mr. Hereford wrote me about this and I asked the question in the house as to how much we were committed to in connection with municipal public works, because all that appears in the report is expenditures and not commitments. Now I understand the Prime Minister to say that, keeping to page 35, the column headed "total expenditure" really means total commitment?

Mr. BENNETT: No, it means the total authorized expenditure under the terms of the agreement to which these several schedules were attached.

Mr. RALSTON: And does not really represent expenditures?

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so.

Mr. RALSTON: It represents only the amount authorized or approved under the agreement?

Mr. BENNETT: It might well be that in some cases the sum was expended by the end of February.

Mr. RALSTON: But we can take it that nothing has been expended since March 1?

Mr. BENNETT: I said no payments had been made, but no works have been discontinued by those carrying them on under the agreements which provided for the carrying on of the works authorized.

Mr. RALSTON: Then I take it that in the bill which will be founded on this resolution no authority will be given to contribute the full amount for which the federal government is committed in connection with municipal works which as yet have not been completed?

Mr. BENNETT: I explained to the hon. gentleman that in my judgment that is perhaps not a correct way to state the situation. The question has been raised as to whether under chapter 58 there is ample power to complete the payments on work already started, as authorized by the agreement.

Mr. RALSTON: Is there really any question about that?

Mr. BENNETT: I think there might be, and those who have had to do with it in our own business think there is no doubt about it in the ordinary course. If the work is not completed within the given time there is still an obligation to pay. But in order that any difficulties might be removed and that it might not be said that there had been any effort to do this, the house is being asked for authority to make matters clear in that regard.

Mr. RALSTON: There is no doubt that the Auditor General would not pass any payment made under this statute after the first of March.

[Mr. Ralston.]

Mr. BENNETT: I think there is doubt as to that. Provided that the work was commenced before the first of March under a contract between the province and the dominion, approved by order in council, the obligation being created and the work being completed, the obligation to pay would continue. But in order that there might be no difficulty about it the house is being asked for authority. The only order in council that was presented was one on March 2. I thought it had gone forward but I am told that as soon as the question was raised—and it was not raised by the Auditor General but by others—it was thought undesirable that the cheque should go out, and the cheque did not go out.

Mr. RALSTON: My right hon. friend says that I suggest there is no doubt. I feel satisfied that there would be no doubt in the mind of the Auditor General and that he would refuse to pay a cheque issued after March 1 for money authorized under the authority of the act which expired on that date.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not clear.

Sir EUGENE FISET: The Prime Minister stated that no commitments have been made since March 1. Have any payments been made since that date on old commitments?

Mr. BENNETT: In answer to the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston), I explained that the only order in council authorizing payment subsequently to the first of March was that with respect to British Columbia, on the second day of March, and which as a matter of fact was not made. And there are awaiting action of council a very large number of orders in council which represent in some instances work completed up to March 1 but which did not get here until the 10th, 12th, 13th and so on, They have not been paid.

Mr. VENIOT: I should like the Prime Minister to make some explanation with regard to item No. 10 on page 12, relating to loss of stumpage due to reduction in stumpage rates. I see there is a total expenditure of $120,000 divided fifty-fifty between the dominion and the province, the dominion's share being $60,000. Can the Prime Minister inform the committee whether that is an estimate or whether that amount has been paid?

Mr. BENNETT: It is an estimate.

Mr. VENIOT: In assuming responsibility for the payment of fifty per cent of this estimate, did the Department of Labour see to it that reasonable wages would be paid to the men in the woods in view of the reduction? I understand that wages are being paid at a very low rate. The lumbermen are getting the benefit of this reduction of $120,000 and the men are getting wages as low as $15 per month. If that is the case, the Department of Labour ought to look into the matter before payment of this $60,000 is made. As I say, the lumbermen are getting the benefit of the reduction of $120,000 and they should certainly be in a position to pay the men more than $15 or $16 per month.

Mr. BENNETT: And their board.

Mr. VENIOT: I should like the Minister of Labour or the Prime Minister to look into the matter, in the interest of labour, before the dominion's share is paid over.

Mr. GORDON: We must be a little reasonable in regard to the rates that obtain in connection with relief. The hon. member probably forgets that there is a great difference between the rates of wages paid labour in connection with relief work and those that obtain in the ordinary course of business. The difference is obvious to everyone. So far as these works are concerned, where it is a matter of relief the control is very largely in the provinces, the municipalities and those concerned with caring for people in distress. With respect to federal works, in the ordinary course the rates of wages for labour are governed by the rules, practices and law that obtain in establishing, through the Department of Labour, such rates as men are entitled to.

Mr. VENIOT: This is not in the form of relief. It is relief in one sense, to the lumbermen, but not relief to the unemployed: If the lumbermen are going to get a bonus of this kind to encourage them to go on with operations which they otherwise would not carry on, it cannot be called relief to the unemployed. It seems to me that the Department of Labour ought to be in a position to ensure that a reasonable rate of wages will be paid before the dominion's share of $60,000 is paid. I can readily understand that in these times of distress one would not expect, in connection with relief work, that such rates of wages would be paid as were paid prior to 1930 or even 1931. But surely when the government are assisting the industry through a bonus they should see that at least reasonable wages are paid, and not starvation wages of $15 a month.

Mr. BENNETT: Fifteen dollars and board.

Mr. VENIOT: Yes, but in 1929 men were being paid $45 and $60 and board.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman is in error with respect to the bonus. All that happens is that the province has abandoned the claim to stumpage, which amounts to $120,000, and the dominion government has assisted the province, as against the loss of the whole, by paying them half of it. The hon. gentleman knows how it has been carried on.

Mr. VENIOT: I did not mean to give it any other interpretation. The province of New Brunswick said to the lumbermen, "We will give you a reduction in stumpage provided we can get a return from the dominion of a certain loss." That was done, and the dominion entered into this agreement with the province—I believe it is the only province in the dominion with which such an agreement was entered into. I am not criticizing the government for having entered into that agreement, and perhaps I am using the wrong term when I speak of a bonus; but I do say that where federal money is furnished in a matter of this kind we should see to it that reasonable wages are paid.

Mr. GORDON: I must confess that I could not hear all that the hon. gentleman said, but the tenor of his remarks was that reasonable wages were not paid. Let me make myself abundantly clear, if I can. In all contracts that have been let in connection with this legislation, the wages were determined by the Department of Labour in the usual course. There were some works, some places of employment where people could not be established on the rate of wages that usually obtains in the Department of Public Works. With respect to that we had to do and did do the best we could in the way of trying to take care of people who were needy and in distress. Surely the hon. gentleman recognizes that. But in no case has the Department of Labour adopted an attitude that is calculated to imperil the rights of the wage earners as regards his standard of wages or standard of living. We must draw a line of demarcation between standard of wages, standard of living and relief.

Mr VENIOT: In the establishment of a system of relief as contributed to by the federal government, there was made with the provinces an agreement under section 14 of which the government stipulates that the province must do so and so. It states:

A maximum work day of eight hours shall prevail on works and undertakings carried on under this agreement, unless a modification of this requirement is previously agreed to by the Minister of Labour.

On that point I am in agreement. It would be very difficult to establish an eight-hour day in a lumber camp if the work is to be properly carried on. Therefore I am not referring to that; I am reading the section merely to come to the next point. It continues:

Fair and reasonable rates of wages shall be paid by the province and municipalities but such rates shall not be in excess of the rates required to be paid by the federal government for the character or class of work in the district.

And so forth. The reply may be made to me that this is work carried on, not by the province, but by virtue of an agreement entered into between the dominion and the provincial governments that they will become responsible for so much loss owing to the reduction in stumpage rates and therefore it can reasonably be called one of those undertakings or enterprises in which a reasonable rate of wages shall prevail. What is the use of having an agreement such as there is under section 14 if the lumbermen are permitted to pay as low as $12 a month? A little while ago I said $15 and I can prove the statement that such low rates have been paid. On the other hand, what do we find under this very section? We find lumbermen instead of hiring, contracting with men at a very low rate of pay, a rate at which they cannot make a living in the cutting of pulpwood, and saying to these men in their agreement: In that district we have a camp opened and you shall board at it; we shall board you and charge you seventy-five cents a day for your board. The men in accepting a contract of that kind, have not been given the privilege of boarding themselves. Therefore, at the rate of $1.50 which they receive per cord of pulpwood, which they have to haul and pile, making their own roads, no lumberjack can handle more than two cords a day and, indeed, he is a good man who can do that. He pays 75 cents for his own board; he has to pay the board of his horses and then at the end of the month there is nothing left for his family. It is for those reasons that I offer this, not in a critical mood; I wish the government or the Department of Labour, if in future they are making any such agreements as this with a province, no matter what province it may be, they will see that the labour men or lumberjacks receive a fair day's rate of wages.

I wish to direct attention to another section on page 63 of the report, where I see under the amount authorized for the county of Gloucester:

Little Shippigan—proposed wharf (estimated cost $30,000)—amount authorized, $15,000.

[Mr. Veniot.]

Perhaps the Minister of Public Works can give me the information I seek. Why has this work not been carried on? Heaven knows, unemployment in that section of the country is very acute. Among the recommendations I made in response to the request of the Department of Labour was one that this work at Little Shippigan be carried out. In 1930 I think $30,000 was estimated for that work. Tenders were called for and received, the lowest tender being $26,000. When the present government came into power in that year, they withdrew from the expenditure of that money; they did not award a contract. I took the matter up in the house in 1931 and the minister promised consideration. I was pleased when in November last I saw published in the St. John Telegraph-Journal among a list of projects for the province of New Brunswick, that the Little Shippigan proposed wharf at an estimated cost of $30,000 was one of the projects agreed to or ratified by order in council. I see nothing has been done. If there is in New Brunswick a place where unemployment is severe, it is in that section of Little Shippigan. The people there are not farmers; they farm very little; they are fishermen and last year fishing was a failure both in quantity of fish and in price obtained. There has been real hardship in that section of the county of Gloucester ever since the close of the fishing season. I should like to know why, after this work had been approved by order in council, it was not carried on. I do not think the reason was that I had recommended it; I have more faith than that in the Minister of Public Works or even in the Minister of Labour.

Mr. GORDON: I do not wish to interrupt the hon. member, but surely no complaint can be made so far as this government is concerned. This work has been approved, and if it has not been proceeded with, why criticize this government?

Mr. VENIOT: Why not go on with it?

Mr. GORDON: The work has been approved. We are ready to pay the money for it.

Mr. VENIOT: What is the good of the approval to the men who are out of employment unless the work is being carried on?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): When it was decided to embark upon a program of works for the relief of unemployment the engineers of the Public Works department were asked to go over the list of works which they had under consideration and make up as complete a schedule as they thought they could carry out. My hon. friend will notice that the total expenditure for this wharf was estimated at $30,000, while the amount authorized was only $15,000. After the order in council was passed, the engineers went over the schedule of works which had been approved and were instructed to undertake only such works as, considering the season of the year and the time available, and having regard to works best suited for the relief of unemployment, they could hope to complete by the first of March. Making a study of the situation it was found that this particular work was one which could not be completed by that time, and therefore it was not undertaken. The appropriation was not sufficient in any event to complete the work, and it was thought inadvisable to undertake the work and leave it half finished.

Mr. VENIOT: The explanation given by the minister is not as reasonable a one as I expected from him. I have found him in my dealings with him very reasonable, but when it comes to giving an explanation for avoiding an expenditure he is not as clear as I would like him to be. If I understood him aright he said that the engineers were asked to go over a schedule of projects and recommend only those which they felt they could complete before the first of March, and secondly that the appropriation was not sufficient to complete this work. I do not wish to introduce the element of politics, but I am afraid that I shall have to do it.

Let me say to the minister that this particular work was approved during the by-election in Gloucester county, and it was heralded all over the county. When I attempted to say that I had recommended the work to the minister and that I was glad the minister had accepted my recommendation, I was pounded by the other side as hard as a man could be pounded on the ground that I was trying to take too much credit to myself. I do not wish to imply that the approval of this work was made public for any effect it might have in that by-election, but the fact is that the knowledge that it had been approved came out just at that time. Let me go further and say to the minister that other projects were approved and contracts let without the full amount of the cost of the work having been voted. That has been the practice all through, and it is a proper one. Sufficient money is voted to permit of the minister entering into a contract, and then, when the tenders are in, the amount is known and the minister can provide the further amount required in a supplementary estimate. All that he would have to do would be to get another order in council passed. A contract could have been let for this work in the month of November last, and the work could have been gone on with and relief given to these people. The work of providing the lumber and gathering the stone for the ballast for the wharf could have been gone on with during November, December, January and February. The work of construction in that secluded and protected area within Miscou harbour could have been gone on with in the winter time and could have been constructed, as has often been done in the shallow waters, on the ice, sinking their cages with ballast. In that way the work could have continued right along.

Mr. GORDON: By day labour?

Mr. VENIOT: No, by contract. The government is carrying on a lot of public works to-day under contract for the relief of unemployment. I would not suggest that a work of this amount, $30,000, be carried on by day labour. The government is perfectly justified in calling for tenders, providing the wage-earner is protected under the contract, which matter is looked after by the Department of Labour. If that work had been carried on the municipality of Gloucester to-day would have been relieved of the demand which is being made for direct aid in that district. The county of Gloucester has sent in an estimate for direct aid amounting to $110,000. That will give hon. gentlemen some idea of the distress in that county. A great many of the people in Gloucester county are fishermen; in fact, I think I am safe in saying that one-half of the population depends upon the fishing industry. All along that coast where this wharf was to be built, there is no farming. There is a shifting, sandy soil, and the people do very little farming, but they fish. As I said before, the fishing season was a failure both as to quantity and price, and I now appeal to the government to take the necessary steps to proceed with this work as soon as it is possible to do so.

Mr. BENNETT: We cannot until the statute passes.

Mr. VENIOT: Oh, yes. The hon. gentleman could have done it by awarding the contract at the time that approval was given to the project, and if the contract had been let the work could have been carried on beyond the first of March because under the agreement the time can be extended by order in council to the first of May. Even Bill No. 58 is being extended by order in council. It may be quite true that the work is held up now, but between now and the time when the bill passes is not very long, and I would appeal to the government that in the interests of these people they award a contract as soon as possible to help relieve unemployment this spring. May I go further and say it will help to relieve unemployment not only this spring but during May, June and July. These people cannot go into the fishing business as they did in the past because they have no market. They have been shut out from their largest market, which was Italy. Italy is taking tariff reprisals against Canada for raising the tariff against Italian goods, and has put on a tariff on the very kind of fish which our fishermen catch for their livelihood, which makes importation into Italy prohibitive, and our market is completely lost. Therefore these people for months yet to come will be without any employment, and it is for this reason that I am urging the government to consider this proposition. Hon. members will recall that on February 23 I drew the attention of the government, and especially that of the Minister of Labour, to two projects, numbers 12 and 13 at page 12 of the report of the Dominion Director of Unemployment Relief. I refer to the transmission line from Fredericton to Oromocto at a cost to the dominion of $28,700, and the transmission line for Restigouche and Gloucester counties at a cost to the dominion of $27,522.50. I want it to be distinctly understood that I am not opposing the construction of the extension of a hydro system in any part of the province of New Brunswick. I should like to know, however, if it is the government's intention to adopt the practice of bonusing—that is what it means—the construction of hydro lines bringing in a revenue and a profit. If that construction is for the relief of the unemployed it should be under the control of the provincial government, because they receive the full benefit from the construction of those two lines once they are in operation. They would receive a revenue sufficient to pay the interest on the bonds, to pay for sinking fund and replacement value, and the whole is assessed against the district at the rate of 12½ per cent of the cost and divided up at so much per kilowatt hour and so much for monthly service. For some time I was chairman of the hydro cvommission and I know how it operates. Under my administration when the hydro was first established in New Brunswick the system I have described was adopted. The hydro development being a revenue earning and profit earning enterprise the Dominion government would do well to let the provincial government carry on the development and take the money that has been given to the province to help relieve the unemployed in other sections of the province.

While I am on the subject I should like to inform the Minister of Labour that they are now stringing poles in the county of Restigouche from Dalhousie to Jacquet River. While I have no personal knowledge of what I am about to state, I learn from reliable sources that the persons engaged in the work are far from being entitled to work under unemployment relief measures. I ask the minister to look into the matter, because from the names submitted to me I know the men employed have no right to the employment. The work should be given to men who need it, not to men who do not need it. I hope the minister will make inquiries and that the Department of Public Works or the hydro commission of the province of New Brunswick will not report that no federal unemployment relief money is being used, as has been reported concerning some cases I have submitted to this house.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The resolution now before us is rather scarred. In its original form the resolution read as follows:

> Resolved that it is expedient to introduce a bill to amend chapter 58 of the statutes of Canada, 1931, striking out the word "March" in section 8, and substituting the word "May" therefor, and on the proposed motion of Mr. Weir (Melfort): "That this question be now put."

That was the resolution as it stood yesterday afternoon. The amendment by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) is to extend until May 1, 1932, the operation of the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act of 1931 which expired on March 1, 1932. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask this question: By what process of law can this extension be made? Notwithstanding the wonderful legal attainments —and they are well known—of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice how, may I ask, can we extend until May 1, 1932, the operation of the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act of 1931, which expired on March 1, 1932? It is not a question of asking leave to introduce a new statute or to revive an old one, but to extend the operation of a statute which, on the admission of the government itself, is dead and has expired. I challenge the Minister of Justice, who at one stage of this debate said he would be heard, but who has kept a most religious silence, to pledge his standing as an eminent jurist at the bar, and say that there is some process of law whereby the operation of an expired statute can be extended.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Yes; this parliament can extend a statute any time it wishes. In that respect parliament is clothed with every power.

Mr. CHEVRIER: That may be so, if we desire so to stultify ourselves.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is the only question.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I do not wish to be a party to that stultification.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Very well, that is your answer.

Mr. CHEVRIER: This government is omnipotent; the Prime Minister has stated that he has a comfortable working majority and that he cares not—n-o-t or n-o-u-g-h-t, whichever word you choose to use—for the rights of minorities. Therefore, with an accommodating majority at his back willing to pass the proposed legislation, of course it will be passed. However, they will have to take that step on their own responsibility.

An hon. MEMBER: We will.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The responsibility will be on their own shoulders, if they wish to place themselves in that awkward position. In their eyes might is right. If they wish to extend the operation of the statute, they are welcome to do so, but it is their responsibility.

Mr. SHORT: Why worry about it?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I wish the hon. member would tell us what is worrying him.

Mr. SHORT: Nothing.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Well then, why does he not keep quiet? What has surprised me throughout this debate is that hon. gentlemen sitting on the other side have kept wonderfully and religiously silent; from the one hundred and twenty of them we have heard nothing; but the moment we put a finger on a sore spot they jump up like so many marionettes, as was said this afternoon. But up to the present not one of them has dared to say where he stands on this question.

An hon. MEMBER: You got it on the vote, didn't you?

Mr. CHEVRIER: If they have so much to say, why in mercy don't they stand up and make a speech?

An hon. MEMBER: You make one.

Mr. CHEVRIER: If the hon. gentleman who is so prone to make these interruptions would speak for twenty minutes only once during the session I would listen to him and say he might interrupt as often as he liked for the remainder of the session. But he is satisfied merely to grunt, to make these disturbing noises now and then. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) says we may extend the operation of a dead statute, but I do not want to be associated with this strange fashion of legislating. I do not know if any of his colleagues, if for instance my hon. friend the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Ryckman) who is also a member of some standing at the bar, is prepared to subscribe to the idea that we may legally extend the operation of a dead statute. On the opposite side there are many men of eminent legal attainments, and I am quite sure that one of the reasons why they have not endorsed the view of the Minister of Justice is that they have some respect for their standing at the bar. When the Prime Minister introduced this motion he said he wished to extend the operation of the act. Quite properly he stated even last year that he had some hesitation as to the constitutionality of this procedure. I quote from page 4279 of Hansard of last session:

> I will say frankly to the house that in asking what euphemistically is spoken of as a "blank cheque" we are not unmindful that we are asking very considerable from this House of Commons.

I pay the right hon. gentleman this tribute to his legal acumen, that he knew he was skating on thin ice, but was willing to take a chance. This session I find that at page 335 of Hansard he said:

> I would not ask this power from any parliament except very reluctantly.

Again I pay him the tribute that he had some hesitation because of his legal attainments and felt that he was on very thin ice. The Prime Minister smiles. I do not wonder at his smiling when he realizes the position he has placed himself and those who follow him. If it were not for the fact that he has such a very accommodating majority behind him he would not dare take such a position. I am confident that before the Privy Council he would never venture to propound such an unsound theory. The Prime Minister brought this motion down for the purpose of amending the statute, but as we hammered away at it he finally found himself on the road to Damascus—and the light started to shine. In the course of the last few days he said—I am quoting from page 1407 of Hansard:

> The government is determined it would renew the statute.

The Prime Minister did not say the government were going to amend the statute, but that they were going to renew it. No one in this house knows better than the right hon. gentleman that there is an absolute difference between renewing and amending a statute. At page 1409 he again used the word "renew." He also said:

I desire that this statute be revived.

Not that its operation be extended, but that it be revived. He knows there is an absolute difference between reviving and amending a statute. At page 1410 he said:

Shall the Canadian parliament through a government supported by a majority in this house—

And a very accommodating majority.

—be permitted to reenact by proper words the legislation of last session?

Not to amend, not to extend the operation, but to reenact, to do something absolutely new, to start de novo. Now watch how the Prime Minister is coming down very reluctantly, but he is finally driven to this point. At page 1418 he said:

The use of the appropriate words to enable the principle of the legislation to be made effective.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the right hon. gentleman, even with all his legal attainments, took some time to find out that his magic was dead, that there was no process under British law whereby a dead statute could be amended, but instead of coming out frankly he has hedged all along. Now he asks that the operation of this expired statute be extended until the first of May, 1932.

There are many other reasons why I would have opposed the passing of this motion, but I think that one of the soundest reasons is to take the stand that you cannot extend by any recognized legal means—although you may do it by a majority of this kind—the operation of a dead statute.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: As we know, under this bill power will be given to the governor in council to pass orders in council up to the first of May. May I ask: will any such orders in council have any effect after the first of May, or will their operation cease entirely on that day?

Mr. BENNETT: Except for the purpose of enabling payment of balances unpaid on contracts not completed; they would cease to be valid on the first of May.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The Prime Minister refers to orders in council that may relate to money payments. There may be orders in council relating to other matters. I assume such orders in council will have no force and effect after the first of May?

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Mr. BENNETT: The right hon. gentleman is quite correct. It is proposed in the bill that orders in council shall forthwith be laid on the table of the house.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I understand that. With regard to payments between now and the first of May is it the intention of the government to initiate new contracts or to make fresh commitments which will run beyond the first of May, or will everything be confined to the first of May?

Mr. BENNETT: That is a question, Mr. Speaker, which at the moment I cannot answer. For instance, a few days ago a delegation from the city of Quebec waited upon the government, and my right hon. friend's colleagues who were present suggested that there should be an extension of time in connection with work which was to be done in that city, which climatic conditions had made it impossible to complete during the winter. The hon. member for Gloucester urged that since spring was coming on, and unemployment was so serious, the matter should be so dealt with. I could not say definitely that pressure of conditions such as those existing in Quebec, for instance, might not have some effect. I was quite convinced, I may say frankly, by the statement of the mayor of Quebec city that they were unable to complete that work, and might not be able to complete it by May 1. They asked for an extension of time, the matter being already reduced to a contract for which authorization was given in the report tabled in this house. I cannot answer that question beyond saying that the necessities of the particular case would have to govern.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My right hon. friend refers to a contract, the terms and extent of which are already known. My question refers to something which at the moment is not known. Between now and May 1 will the administration make any new contracts which will run beyond May 1?

Mr. BENNETT: Obviously I could not say yes or no to that question, but it has been provided that if any affirmative action is taken the order in council will be laid on the table of the house forthwith, which will be at the next sitting. I know of no such cases at the moment, beyond those which are already extant and which have been asked to be continued. Beyond that I know of no new cases, although there may be some of which I have no personal knowledge.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question which has already been asked once or twice on the orders of the day. Does the relief commission at Regina take seed grain liens on all crops resultant from seed grain advances, and if so when are they payable?

Mr. BENNETT: The question of the character of the security taken by the commission is something between the commission and the provincial authorities, and the dominion has nothing whatever to do with it beyond the fact that we are given to understand, and do understand in advancing the money, that the commission is adequately protecting itself with respect to the crops. I cannot say whether a lien is taken on one or two crops, but my understanding is that the lien has to do with the first year's crop, and in some instances with the second year's crop, but the money is loaned to the province of Saskatchewan, which province is responsible for the arrangements made between the relief commission and the farmers with respect to the collection of the sums so advanced.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My understanding is that this government has already agreed to the use of the relief commission as a collection agency for this government. If there is an understanding of that nature I think the government should be aware of what kind of security is being taken from the farmers.

Mr. BENNETT: The relief commission is a provincial body set up by the provincial government, and as such it is subject to provincial control. They made the arrangement with themselves. All we did was to supervise, so far as we could, the proper expenditure of the money in the manner indicated in this house. The form of security they may take, in order that they may be able to repay to the dominion the moneys advanced, is not our business.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not see why we cannot get this information now; we have asked for it several times.

Mr. BENNETT: I shall be glad to give the hon. gentleman any information I have.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: In the application for relief made by a farmer in Saskatchewan, the farmer faithfully promises to pay to the Saskatchewan Relief Commission, on behalf of His Majesty the King in the right of the Dominion government, on or before such and such a date, all advances made to him by way of relief or seed grain, at the value and prices stated by the commission. I take it that the obligation is assumed by the commission to collect for the seed grain as well as for the relief on behalf of the government of Canada, and with all due respect to my right hon. friend I do feel that someone in the government should be able to give this information. I think the Minister of Agriculture was asked the question, but he was not in a position to answer it very definitely. Before going further I think we should have this question answered I have before me a bill which recently passed the Saskatchewan legislature incorporating the Saskatchewan Relief Commission, and the way in which our farmers are being hog-tied in connection with these seed grain and feed advances is simply terrible. I do not think we should go further without complete information in this regard.

Mr. BENNETT: I will answer the hon. gentleman, and I hope he hears me. First, the province of Saskatchewan is making the arrangements, through its relief commission, with the individual farmers with respect to seed grain; second, the seed grain is being provided by the Dominion government; third, the province is undertaking to repay to the Dominion government the money expended in the purchase of seed grain; fourth, my understanding—and I am not advised fully—is that the legislature of Saskatchewan is taking such steps as are regarded as essential for the purpose of enabling it to secure repayment of the advances so made.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Then are we to understand that this government accepts no responsibility at all for the terms imposed upon the farmers by the Saskatchewan government or the relief commission?

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I suppose in Regina they will say the same thing, that they have no responsibility either.

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I submit that there is an individual as well as a joint responsibility resting on both governments in regard to the terms upon which these farmers get this seed grain.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There are a number of questions we should like to ask in connection with this resolution, but I understand that when the bill is in committee ample opportunity will be given for discussion.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so, and I think it will expedite matters when the committee has the bill before it. The only reason I have remained until this hour is because some safeguards have been suggested to me, but I believe it will be much clearer when the house is in committee. Then we will be able to answer any questions that may be brought forward.

Resolution as amended reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Bennett thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 24, respecting unemployment and farm relief.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Bennett moved the adjournment of the house.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What will be the business this afternoon?

Mr. BENNETT: We will continue with this bill. If we finish it we will take the motion with regard to supply which is now pending.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 4.20 a.m. (Wednesday).

Wednesday, March 30, 1932

The house met at three o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

FIRST READINGS

Bill No. 37, to incorporate the Fort Smith-Fitzgerald Railway Company.—Mr. Irvine.

Bill No. 38, to incorporate the Ontario-Quebec Canal and Power Company.—Mr. McGillis.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

SIZE OF CANADIAN BANK NOTES

Mr. BOULANGER:

1. Is it a fact that the government intends to reduce the size of state-notes?

2. Will the Canadian banks also reduce the size of their bank-notes?

3. Will the reduction in size of the state-notes and the Canadian bank-notes necessitate the making of new designs, new lithographic plates, new dies and new stereotype plates to print the new reduced notes?

4. Will the proposed reduction in size of state-notes necessitate letting out new contracts for the engraving and printing?

5. Will the government take advantage of this opportunity to have the new state-notes of Canada issued in the two official languages of this country?

Mr. RHODES:

1. The question of reducing the size of Canadian bank notes has been under consideration for some years, having in fact been initiated by the previous administration. As yet no decision has been arrived at. If and when a decision is reached, the house will be advised in due course.

2. No information.

3, 4 and 5. Answered by No. 1.

Mr. EULER: Why not cut the nickle too?

FACTORIES CLOSED IN CANADA

Mr. CASGRAIN:

How many factories have closed down in Canada, since September 1, 1930, to date?

Mr. STEVENS:

Information not available in Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

BLACKFOOT INDIAN RESERVE—COAL MINES

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River):

1. What sums of money were spent in each of the years 1929, 1930 and 1931, in modernization and developing the coal mines on the Blackfoot Indian reserve?

2. Has there been a Dominion engineer in charge of these developments?

3. What was the total output of coal from these mines in each of these years?

4. What is the price charged for the coal at the shaft head?

5. What were the profits in operation?

6. To whom do these profits accrue?

Mr. MURPHY:

1. 1929, $56.11; 1930, $100.56; 1931, $2,193.39.

2. No.

3. 1929, 260 tons; 1930, 600 tons; 1931, 3,085 tons.

4. Lump coal, $3.25 per ton; Nut coal, $1.25 per ton.

5. No profits are estimated. Any surplus remaining after Indian miners are paid is credited to mines account, from which costs of operation and supervision must be met.

6. Answered by No. 5.

ST. ANDRE DE RESTIGOUCHE, QUE., POSTMASTERSHIP

Mr. MARCIL:

1. Has the postmaster of St. Andre de Restigouche, Quebec, been dismissed and for what reasons?
2. Has a temporary postmaster been appointed, if so, what is his name and on whose recommendation was the appointment made?
3. Has a permanent appointment been made in that office?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. No.
2 and 3. See answer to No. 1.

ST. JEAN L'EVANGELISTE, QUE., POSTMASTERSHIP

Mr. MARCIL:

1. Has the postmaster of St. Jean l'Evangeliste, county of Bonaventure, Quebec, been dismissed and for what reasons?
2. Has a temporary postmaster been appointed, if so, what is his name and on whose recommendation was the appointment made?
3. Has a permanent appointment been made in that office?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. Yes, commissioners' report found postmaster guilty of active political partisanship.
2. Yes, Georges Frenette. Recommended by Hon. Dr. E. Paquet.
3. Yes.

ST. SIMEON DE BONAVENTURE, QUE., POSTMASTERSHIP

Mr. MARCIL:

1. Has the postmaster of St. Simeon de Bonaventure, Quebec, been dismissed, if so, for what reasons?
2. Has a temporary postmaster been appointed, if so, what is his name and on whose recommendation was the appointment made?
3. Has a permanent appointment been made in that office, if so, who has been appointed?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. Yes, commissioners' report found postmaster guilty of active political partisanship.
2. Yes, Lazare Poirier. Recommended by Hon. Dr. E. Paquet and E. A. D. Morgan.
3. Yes, Lazare Poirier.

GASCONS WEST, BONAVENTURE COUNTY, QUE., POSTMASTERSHIP

Mr. MARCIL:

1. Has the postmaster of Gascons West, county of Bonaventure, Quebec, been dismissed, if so, for what reasons?
2. Has a temporary postmaster been appointed, if so, what is his name and on whose recommendation was the appointment made?
3. Has a permanent appointment been made in that office?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. Yes, commissioners' report found postmaster guilty of active political partisanship.
2. Yes, Mrs. Marguerite Huard. Recommended by Hon. Dr. E. Paquet.
3. Yes.

NEW RICHMOND, QUE., MAIL SERVICE

Mr. MARCIL:

1. Has a contract for the mail service between New Richmond, Quebec, and New Richmond Station, been awarded?
2. If so, to whom, at what price and when does it become effective?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. Yes.
2. A contract was awarded to Romeo Fournier at $295 per annum. Contract dates from 1st April, 1932.

NOTRE DAME DU LAC, QUE., POSTMASTERSHIP

Mr. POULIOT:

1. On what date was Mr. Antoine Landry dismissed as postmaster of Notre Dame du Lac, Quebec?
2. Why was he dismissed?
3. Did many persons apply for his position?
4. If so, what are their names?
5. On whose recommendation did the Postmaster General appoint the present postmaster, and why was he chosen in preference to other candidates?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. 28th October, 1931.
2. Commissioner's report found postmaster guilty of active political partisanship.
3. Five.
4. Thomas Voisine, Dominique Côté, E. H. Dumas, Omer Bouchard, and Miss Josephine Côté.
5. Temporary appointment of Thomas Voisine on recommendation of Mr. C. E. Dubé. Permanent appointment will be made by the Civil Service Commission.

LAMY SUD, QUE., POSTMASTERSHIP

Mr. POULIOT:

1. On what date was Mr. Narcisse Ouellet dismissed as postmaster of Lamy Sud, Quebec?
2. Why was he dismissed?
3. Did many persons apply for his position?
4. If so, what are their names?
5. On whose recommendation did the Postmaster General appoint the present postmaster, and why was he chosen in preference to other candidates?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. November 28, 1931.
2. Commissioners' report found postmaster guilty of active political partisanship.
3, 4 and 5. One applicant, Isidore Ouellet. Recommended by Mr. C. E. Dubé.

RAUDOT, QUE.—POSTMASTERSHIP

Mr. POULIOT:

1. On what date was Mr. Andre Beaulieu dismissed as postmaster at Raudot, Quebec?
2. Why was he dismissed?
3. Did many persons apply for his position?
4. If so, what are their names?
5. On whose recommendation did the Postmaster General appoint the present postmaster, and why was he chosen in preference to other candidates?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. October 31, 1931.

2. Commissioners' report found postmaster guilty of active political partisanship.

3, 4 and 5. One applicant; Alexandre Lebel. Recommended by Mr. C. E. Dubé.

MONTAGNE RONDE, QUE.—POSTMASTERSHIP

Mr. POULIOT:

1. Did the Postmaster General, since August, 1930, order an inquiry in connection with charges of political partisanship lodged against the postmaster at Montagne Ronde, Quebec?
2. If so: (a) at whose written request was this inquiry granted; (b) was said written request accompanied by many affidavits; (c) if so, what is the date, and the name of the person whose signature is attached to each affidavit; (d) on what date was each affidavit received by the Postmaster General; (e) on what date did the Postmaster General order the inquiry?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. Yes.

2. (a) Mr. C. E. Dubé; (b) written request was accompanied by witnessed statement dated February 23, 1931, from (c) Eugene Lepage; (d) February 26, 1931; (e) instructions sent to commissioner, March 25, 1931.

MATURING CANADIAN OBLIGATIONS—GOLD PRODUCTION

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver):

1. What Canadian obligations are maturing outside of Canada in 1932?
2. How many of these (in amount) are maturing in New York?
3. Are these all payable in gold?
4. How many of these Canadian obligations are owing by: (a) the federal government; (b) the various provincial governments; (c) Canadian municipalities; (d) Canadian railways; (e) other parties?
5. How much gold is there available in Caanda at the present time for export if considered necessary?
6. What was the gold production of Canada in 1931?

Mr. RHODES:

1, 2, 3 and 4. Dominion of Canada: $55,000,000, payable in gold in New York. While certain data are obtainable from public and other sources, particulars of the debts of all other governments, corporations, etc., are not matters of Dominion government record.

5. Total gold held by banks and government, $118,500,000.

6. Estimated value, $55,715,120.

LAUZON ENGINEERING SHOPS—SALE OF MACHINERY

Mr. FORTIN:

1. Did Mr. Beer, of the Interior department, during the summer of 1931, call for tenders in connection with the sale of machinery and other articles in the shops of Lauzon Engineering at Lauzon, Quebec?
2. If so, what are the names of the tenderers?
3. What was the lowest tender?
4. To whom was the sale made?
5. Was it to the lowest tenderer, if not, why was the lowest tenderer not given the preference?

Mr. RHODES:

1. Yes (by the salvage officer, government contracts supervision committee).

2, 3 and 5. No bid was received prior to date set in call for tenders.

4. To B. S. Judson, who made written offer subsequently.

ST. ARSENE, QUE.—POSTMASTERSHIP

Mr. POULIOT:

1. On what date was Edmond Rioux, postmaster at St. Arsene, Quebec, dismissed?
2. Why was he dismissed?
3. Have many persons applied for this position?
4. If so, who are they?
5. Upon whose recommendation did the Postmaster General appoint the present postmaster, and on what grounds did he select him in preference to the other applicants?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. September 10, 1931.

2. Post office was removed to a more central site.

3. Two.

4. Mr. Edmond Rioux, the postmaster released on account of site not being central. Mr. J. B. Laforest who offered a more central site.

5. The temporary selection of Mr. Laforest was made on the recommendation of Mr. C. E. Dubé, on the grounds that Mr. Laforest offered more central site, as it was reported by the district superintendent of the department in 1927 and 1931.

CRANE ISLAND, QUE.—MAIL SERVICE

Mr. FAFARD:

1. On what date was the contract of Mr. Alphonse Normand, for carrying the mail between Crane island and the mainland, cancelled?

2. Was this contract cancelled following an inquiry?
3. Why was it cancelled?
4. Upon whose request?
5. Who carries the mail between Crane island and the mainland at the present time?
6. Were tenders called for in connection with this service?
7. If so: (a) on what date; (b) what was the name of each tenderer, and what was the amount of his tender?
8. If not, why does the department not call for tenders?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. On August, 18, 1931.
2. No.
3. In the public interest.
4. Armand Lavergne, M.P.
5. Emile Gagne.
6. No.
7. See Answer to No. 6.
8. Department considers present rate of payment reasonable in view of the conditions under which service is performed.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF—EASTERN TOWNSHIPS

Mr. HOWARD:

1. Were there any moneys allotted or paid to counties in the Eastern Townships of the province of Quebec, in connection with unemployment?
2. If so, what were the amounts in each case, and to which county were they paid?

Mr. GORDON:

1. Yes.
2. Return attached hereto:

Moneys allotted and paid to counties in the Eastern Townships of the province of Quebec to relieve unemployment under the Unemployment Relief Act, 1930.

Counties	Total amount allotted for Public Works	Dominion proportion	Dominion payments to date for Public Works	Dominion payments to date for Direct Relief
	$	$	$ cts.	$ cts.
Arthabaska	68,300	17,445	14,612 39	12,476 56
Brome	23,200	5,800	5,556 62	150 00
Compton	58,000	19,800	19,153 56	15,405 49
Drummondville	33,300	8,325	7,189 99	402 35
Megantic	131,000	46,795	46,771 87	4,237 73
Missisquois	40,500	10,125	10,124 98	1,033 34
Richmond	69,000	20,155	16.705 56	243 98
Shefford	78,500	19,975	18,474 99	73 74
Sherbrooke	191,000	48,150	46,701 76	483 33
Stanstead	73,500	18,675	15,065 50	1,616 45
Wolfe	36,500	19,955	12,412 26	2,286 41

Moneys allotted and paid to counties in the Eastern Townships of the province of Quebec to relieve unemployment under the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act 1931.

Counties	Total amount allotted for Public Works	Dominion proportion	Dominion payments to date for Public Works	Dominion payments to date for Direct Relief
	$	$	$ cts.	$ cts.
Arthabaska	13,000	3,250	.....	.....
Brome	3,000	750	.....	.....
Compton	62,700	25,455	.....	34 35
Drummond	58,000	16,300	.....	.....
Megantic	188,000	78,625	34,493 21	.....
Missisquois	20,000	5,000	.....	.....
Richmond	75,000	23,100	1,144 61	.....
Shefford	122,000	30,500	369 63	.....
Sherbrooke	333,000	84,500	5,230 96	.....
Stanstead	114,000	29,100	218 79	.....
Wolfe	17,500	7,000	747 07	938 37

RESIDENT ENGINEER, RIMOUSKI, QUE.

Mr. MARCIL:

1. Has Mr. P. E. Amiot, resident engineer, of Rimouski, been superannuated?
2. If so, who has been appointed to replace him, and is the appointment a permanent one?
3. Has any change been made in the district under the control of this officer?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds):

1. Yes.
2. No appointment has yet been made.
3. No.

ST. FRANCOIS D'ASSISES, QUE., POSTMASTERSHIP

Mr. MARCIL:

1. Has Cleophas Chabot, postmaster of St. Francois d'Assises, county of Bonaventure, Quebec, been dismissed?
2. If so, who has been appointed temporarily, on whose recommendation, was an investigation held, by whom and for what reasons?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. Yes.
2. Arrangements being made for appointment of Miss Marguerite Martin, recommended by Hon. Doctor Eugene Paquet. An investigation was held by Mr. Gerard Simard and the postmaster was found guilty of active political partisanship.

DETOUR DU LAC, QUE., POST OFFICE

Mr. POULIOT:

1. On what date was the post office of Detour du Lac, county of Témiscouata, Quebec, abolished?
2. At whose request?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. March 23, 1931.
2. The matter was brought to the attention of the department by Mr. C. E. Dubé. The report submitted by the district superintendent indicated that the office was serving only five families and could be closed without serious public inconvenience.

HIGHWAY NO. 6, BONAVENTURE COUNTY

Mr. MARCIL:

Who is in charge of the works of blasting, clearing, widening and grading the highway No. 6, in Bonaventure county, for which $31,250 were authorized, the provincial government paying 60 per cent and the dominion 40 per cent, the dominion's proportion being $12,500, and on whose recommendation was this appointment made, and what amount has been paid up to date?

Mr. GORDON: Under the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act, 1931, the dominion government has paid to the province for the work of blasting, clearing, widening and grading on highway No. 6, in Bonaventure county, the sum of $1,412.23, which represents 40 per cent of the total expenditure made in connection with this project to date.

As the project is being carried out by the provincial authorities, information such as "who is in charge of the works" and "on whose recommendation was this appointment made" will have to be obtained from the province.

PAYMENTS TO MR. GERARD SIMARD

Mr. MARCIL:

1. What amount has been paid to Mr. Gerard Simard, commissioner, appointed by the Post Office Department, to investigate charges of political partisanship in post offices in the county of Bonaventure?
2. How much of this amount was for travelling expenses?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. $1,567.05.
2. $502.29.

LETTER CARRIER SERVICE—NEPEAN TOWNSHIP, ONTARIO

Mr. MARCIL:

1. Does the Post Office Department intend to introduce the letter carrier service in Westboro and other parts in Nepean township?
2. Is there any reason for preventing this from being done, and what is the reason?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. Not during the coming fiscal year at least.
2. Yes. Even if conditions governing the establishment of letter carrier delivery were fully complied with, the fact that no funds are available to cover the additional expenditure involved would preclude the establishment at the present time.

LAURIER, LOTBINIERE COUNTY, QUE., POSTMASTER—SALARY

Mr. VERVILLE:

1. Was the salary of the postmaster at Laurier, county of Lotbiniere, more than $400 for the years 1930 and 1931?
2. What amounts were paid to said postmaster in salary and commissions for 1930 and 1931?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. No.
2. Year ended 31st March, 1930, $358.80; year ended 31st March, 1931, $353.95.

ST. OCTAVE DE DOSQUET—ST. AGATHE, MAIL SERVICE

Mr. VERVILLE:

1. Was the contract for the carrying of mail between St. Octave de Dosquet and Ste. Agathe, county of Lotbiniere, renewed?
2. Were tenders called for?

3. What are the names of the tenderers and amount asked by each?

4. To whom was the contract given and on what date was the tender of the successful tenderer received?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. No.

2. Yes.

3. Achille Lehoux, $395; Joseph Faucher, $435.

4. Contract awarded to Achille Lehoux. Tender received 21st December, 1931.

DESCHAILLONS, LOTBINIERE COUNTY, DREDGING INSPECTORS

Mr. VERVILLE:

1. Were Messrs. Hector St. Jean, Lucien Guertin, Paul Gervais, McDonald Bourbeau, employed by the government at Deschaillons, county of Lotbiniere, during the summer season of 1931?

2. If so, in what capacity?

3. Is it the intention of the government to hold an inquiry in connection with political partisanship shown by these persons during the last provincial elections in Quebec?

Mr. DURANLEAU:

1. Yes.

2. Dredging inspectors in connection with river St. Lawrence dredging contract.

3. No; their services terminated at the close of the dredging season in the fall of 1931.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

EXPORT OF GOLD

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver):

1. How much gold was exported from Canada to New York since January 1, 1932, giving dates and amounts?

2. Were such amounts exported at the request of Canadian chartered banks?

3. If so, which bank made the request in each instance?

MONTREAL HARBOUR COMMISSION—M. P. FENNELL

Mr. SENN:

1. Has any pension been paid to M. P. Fennell, late general manager of Montreal harbour commission, and, if so, why?

2. What was Mr. Fennell's age at time pension was granted?

MONTREAL HARBOUR COMMISSION—COAL

Mr. SENN:

What harbour plant was used and what labour performed by the Montreal harbour commission in the handling of coal for the Ogdensburg Coal and Towing Company, and the Century Coal Company, during the period January, 1922, to June, 1926, and from October, 1926, to August, 1930, and did the harbour commission receive full tariff rates for such service?

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS, VANCOUVER HOTEL

Mr. MacINNIS:

1. Who are the architects for the Canadian National hotel now under construction at Vancouver, British Columbia?

2. On what basis are the architects paid?

3. How much have they been paid to March 1, 1932?

4. Who are the contractors for the said hotel?

5. What is the total contract price?

6. Is the work done as a straight contract or on a cost plus basis?

7. If on a cost plus basis, what per cent is allowed?

8. How much have the contractors been paid to March 1, 1932?

9. Is the cost of furnishings and equipment included in the contract price?

10. If the answer to No. 9 is no, what is the estimated cost of furnishings and equipment?

11. What is the total amount paid on the construction of the said hotel to March 1, 1932?

12. What is the estimated amount required to complete the building?

13. What was the date on which the building of the hotel was: (a) approved; (b) contract signed?

CIVIL SERVICE—RETIREMENTS

Mr. CHEVRIER:

1. What is, from April 1, 1931, to March 15, 1932, the total number of government employees, by departments: (a) temporary; (b) permanent, who (1) have been actually retired from the said service; and (2) have not been actually retired from the service but who have received notice that from and after a given date their services will no longer be required?

2. What is the number of government employees, by departments: (a) temporary; (b) permanent, who, from the 15th March, 1932, have received notice that from and after a given date their services will no longer be required?

3. When all of the said employees shall have been actually retired, how many will be: (1) enjoying the benefits of: (a) the Superannuation Act, (b) the Retirement Act, (c) any other such act; (2) without the benefits of any superannuation measure whatever?

UNOPPOSED MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

ST. HILAIRE, ROUVILLE COUNTY, POSTMASTER—DISMISSAL

Mr. CASGRAIN (for Mr. Fontaine):

For a copy of all correspondence, reports, evidence, petitions, and other documents, in connection with the dismissal of Mr. Philibert Auclair, postmaster of St. Hilaire, county of Rouville, and the appointment of his successor.

ST. ANGELE DE MONNOIR, ROUVILLE COUNTY, POSTMASTER—DISMISSAL

Mr. CASGRAIN (for Mr. Fontaine):

For a copy of all correspondence, reports, evidence, inquiries, petitions, and other documents, in connection with the dismissal of Mr. J. Remus Boulais, postmaster of Ste. Angele de Monnoir, county of Rouville, and the appointment of his successor.

STE. ANGELE DE MONNOIR, RURAL MAIL SERVICE

Mr. CASGRAIN (for Mr. Fontaine):

For a copy of all correspondence, reports, evidence, inquiries, petitions, and other documents, in connection with the cancelling of the contract of Mr. Donat Vincelette, mail carrier on rural route No. 1, Ste. Angele de Monnoir, county of Rouville.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF—DIGBY COUNTY, N.S.

Mr. ILSLEY:

For a copy of all letters, telegrams, memoranda, reports and other documents exchanged between the Department of Public Works and any person or persons regarding the expenditure of public money under the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act of 1931, on the breakwater at Port Gilbert, Digby county, Nova Scotia; also a copy of the payroll showing the amounts expended for labour; also a copy of accounts showing the prices paid for iron, logs, ballast, ballast poles, timber and planks, from whom purchased, the amount paid for a wharf site at that place, and from whom purchased.

Mr. ILSLEY:

For a copy of all letters, telegrams, memoranda, reports and other documents exchanged between the Department of Public Works and any person or persons regarding the expenditure of public money under the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act of 1931, on the breakwater at Little Brook, Digby county, Nova Scotia; also a copy of the payroll showing the amounts expended for labour; also a copy of accounts showing the prices paid for iron, logs, ballast, ballast poles, timber and planks, and from whom purchased.

BOULANGER, LAKE ST. JOHN, POSTMASTER—DISMISSAL

Mr. POULIOT:

For a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams, affidavits, petitions, evidence at the inquiry, and reports, in connection with the dismissal of Mr. Boulanger, as postmaster, in the parish of Sainte Jeanne d'Arc, Lake St. John, Quebec, and the appointment of his successor.

He said: I should like to make a correction in this motion, Mr. Speaker. Instead of reading "the dismissal of Mr. Boulanger" it should read "the dismissal of the postmaster of Boulanger."

Mr. SPEAKER: By consent the motion is amended accordingly.

Motion as amended agreed to.

[Mr. Casgrain.]

LOWER BURLINGTON, N.S., WHARF

Mr. ILSLEY:

For a copy of all letters, telegrams, memoranda, reports and other documents exchanged between the Department of Public Works and any person or persons regarding the expenditure of public money under the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act of 1931, on the wharf at Lower Burlington, Hants county, Nova Scotia; also a copy of the payroll showing the amounts expended for labour; also a copy of accounts showing the prices paid for iron, logs, ballast, ballast poles, timber and planks, and from whom purchased.

HANTSPORT, N.S., WHARF

Mr. ILSLEY:

For a copy of all letters, telegrams, memoranda, reports and other documents exchanged between the Department of Public Works and any person or persons regarding the expenditure of public money under the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act of 1931, on the wharf at Hantsport, Nova Scotia; also a copy of the payroll showing the amounts expended for labour, and a copy of accounts showing the prices paid for iron, logs, ballast poles, timber and planks, and from whom purchased.

CACOUNA, QUE., INDIAN AGENT

Mr. POULIOT:

For a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams, petitions, applications, exchanged between all persons in the county of Témiscouata, and all ministers and officials of the dominion government, in connection with the position of Indian agent at Cacouna, since August, 1930.

BEAUHARNOIS POWER PROJECT

On the orders of the day.

Mr. P. F. CASGRAIN (Charlevoix-Saguenay): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are called I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question with reference to the Beauharnois waterpower development. In view of the declaration made a year ago in this house by the Prime Minister that the bona fide subscribers to this enterprise would be protected, and that declaration having been made during the course of a debate which took place in this house last year, would the Prime Minister be in a position to give to the country to-day a statement in connection with this matter along the lines suggested by hon. members for North Waterloo (Mr. Euler) and West Edmonton (Mr. Stewart).

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): There is also a question on the order paper dealing with the same matter. I have certain information which I will endeavour to communicate to the house before the closing on Friday. At the moment I have not all the information in my possession, but I shall endeavour to secure it and have it available before the house rises at the end of the week.

GRADING OF GARNET WHEAT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JOHN VALLANCE (South Battleford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, I have before me one of many communications which I should like to read. This is from Scott, Saskatchewan, and is as follows:—

In regard to the proposed placing of Garnet wheat in a grade by itself: A statement of the decision of those in charge of this matter should be made before seeding time. In many districts, this for one, Garnet is the best wheat and farmers are holding Garnet for seed. If Garnet is to be penalized next fall, growers should be told of it in time to change their seed.

Is the minister in a position to tell us when the department will announce a policy regarding Garnet wheat?

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I think my hon. friend will recall I introduced a resolution referring the matter to the committee on agriculture. I understand that committee will be called on Tuesday next, and that Mr. Ramsay, the chairman of the Board of Grain Commissioners, and others who have been making a study will attend before the agriculture committee so that the whole matter may be given careful consideration.

FACTORIES CLOSED IN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. F. CASGRAIN (Charlevoix-Saguenay): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct the attention of the Minister of Trade and Commerce to an answer given to a question standing under my name which has been on the order paper for some time. My question was:

How many factories have been closed down in Canada since September 1, 1930, to date?

The answer I received was:

Information not available in Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

Mr. Speaker, I think I am entitled to draw the attention of the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the government to such an answer. Surely the government is in a position to find out how many companies have made returns under The Companies Act, or how many have filed returns for business taxes. Any hon. member should be in a position to secure such information. To my mind the answer is not satisfactory. The Department of Labour also has a statement of factories and new institutions established in Canada.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I have a right as a member of this house to draw attention to a question which has been badly answered. No answer whatever has been given. I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Prime Minister to reconsider the question which has been on the order paper for nearly a month. If it has required a month to give an answer which is not satisfactory, I wonder how long it will take to give a satisfactory answer. The government must know the number of institutions or factories which have been opened since the tariff changes were made, and we should like to know also how many have been closed down since the new tariff has been in force.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, replying to my hon. friend may I say that a great deal of care was taken in an endeavour to secure an answer to his question. It would take some time to give all the explanations which go to indicate that the answer given to-day is a fair one and based upon very sound reasons.

Mr. CASGRAIN: It is no answer at all; it is a joke.

Mr. STEVENS: I am sorry.

STAMP COMMISSION EXPENDITURES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. L. BEAUBIEN (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce when I may expect an answer to question No. 1 which has been on the order paper for some time. The question is simple and should not entail a great deal of work.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Probably I should answer the hon. member. The question has not been answered because the information is not all available. Another matter has to be considered, and that is the reason this question has not been answered.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Could the Prime Minister give me all the information he has before the estimates are considered for that department?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

RESIGNATION OF POSTMASTERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JEAN FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata) (Translation): As the hon. Postmaster General seems to have his smile of happy days, may I inquire as to when he will bring down the documents which were ordered by the house at the end of February and at the beginning of this month, in connection with the resignation of a number of postmasters in the counties of Temiscouata and Lake St. John? I have waited patiently until now because the hon. Postmaster General had assured me that he would shortly bring them down, I trust that he will soon keep his word.

Hon. Mr. SAUVE (Postmaster General) (Translation): Certainly. I shall bring down these documents as soon as possible.

UNEMPLOYMENT AND FARM RELIEF

CONTINUANCE ACT, 1932—CONSIDERATION OF BILL

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved the second reading of Bill No. 24, respecting unemployment and farm relief.

Hon. IAN MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, owing to the fact that we have only comparatively recently had an opportunity of obtaining a copy of Bill No. 24, hon. members might have expected that the Prime Minister would have given an explanation to the house of the provisions contained in the bill. However as he has not done so we must rely on our own analysis of the measure when we are discussing it before this house.

Mr. Speaker, this is the concrete product after about three weeks of debate offered by the administration to this assembly and to the people of the Dominion of Canada. Bill No. 24 constitutes the unemployment policy of this administration now offered to the people of the Dominion of Canada. It is but fair and proper to recall on this occasion that on February 24 last notice of a certain resolution was given by the Prime Minister. On February 26 that resolution appeared on the order paper, the purport of it being to amend chapter 58 of the statutes of Canada, 1931, by substituting the word "May" for the word "March." Although chapter 58 expired on March 1 of this year, and although no real, concrete, excuse has been given to this assembly for the failure to take appropriate action, that resolution was not submitted to this assembly for discussion until March 8, seven days after chapter 58 had expired. The debate on that resolution lasted from March 8 until its termination in the early hours of this day, which was brought about by a process of compulsion, coercion, closure and gag.

[Mr. Pouliot.]

As a result of that resolution hon. members on this side took the position that the resolution was entirely out of order, that it proposed to enact something by way of resolution, which could not be enacted by this assembly, and that it proposed to amend a dead statute. After the administration informed this assembly that the resolution would be offered, we took the position that presumably in the first instance the resolution had received the consent of His Excellency the Governor General, and that the amendment submitted by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) last evening dealt with an entirely different principle, an entirely different matter, and dealt with it in an entirely different way.

So we have the three positions taken by this administration. In the first place we have the resolution appearing on the 26th day of February to amend chapter 58 of last session. In the second place we have the declaration of the Prime Minister in regard to what the proposals of the administration might be. Last night the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) moved in committee an amendment, not to amend a dead statute, but to extend chapter 58; and to-day we are given what presumably is the concrete result of that amendment. I find, Mr. Speaker, this third variation in the unemployment policy of the administration in the last three weeks. First, we had a resolution, that was admittedly out of order to amend a dead statute—so described, and properly described—although it occupies the valuable time of this house for some three weeks. Then last night under the compulsion of closure they forced this resolution through the house and into committee of the whole, when my hon. friend the Minister of Justice moved another resolution to extend the provisions of chapter 58. To-day we have the second reading of Bill No. 24 which does far more than extend chapter 58. It is an entirely new bill. This is not an extension of chapter 58 of last session; there are some provisions in this bill which were never in that statute. It contains all of the vicious, pernicious, contentious and iniquitous clauses—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): There are not sufficient adjectives in the English language to describe the iniquity of that measure. We find that in deference to the criticism offered by hon. members on this side of the house section 2 of Bill No. 24 provides:

All orders in council and regulations made under the provisions of this act shall be laid before the House of Commons forthwith after the making thereof, if parliament is then sitting, or if not, within the first fifteen days of the next ensuing session.

That was a grudging concession to hon. members on this side. The administration are to pass orders in council in the east block to-day, and they are gracious enough to lay them on the table of the house on the succeeding day. Under this procedure we are nothing more than a glorified information bureau after the administration has acted through order in council. But I would ask the house to listen to section 3:

The Unemployment and Farm Relief Act, 1931, and this act, shall be read and construed as one act, and this act may be cited as The Unemployment and Farm Relief Continuance Act, 1932.

I suggest that a better title for this legislation would be the Tory Government Dictatorship Perpetuation Act, 1932. The Unemployment and Farm Relief Act of 1931 is a dead thing, it is absolutely extinct, but by this peculiar bill we are trying to breathe some vitality into the bare bones of this skeleton of Tory policy. We are trying to bring about this unholy alliance, to make these two one flesh, this bill and the dead act of last year. That is the policy of the administration. What is this thing after all? It is the child of chaos out of closure—the result of Tory administration.

Had my right hon. friend heeded the admonitions of hon. gentlemen on this side of the house he could have amended the act before it expired on the first of March, that is, if he still desired to retain the clauses of that legislation. If he had paid proper attention to our admonitions, on the second of March he could have introduced another bill containing all the clauses of chapter 58, adding thereto the provisions contained in section 2 of the present bill. That would not be such a violation of the rules of procedure as is now being attempted. What is being offered the house this afternoon is the result of chaos, confusion, coercion and closure.

It is true we were silenced yesterday by the closure. But I wish to inform hon. gentlemen opposite that we will fight out this issue on the public platform. Hon. gentlemen opposite in all their mishandling of the unemployment situation have been sliding down the slithery slope of political expediency; whereas we on this side with our minority—not a dictatorship minority, because one of the fundamental principles of a British parliament is not only the rule of the majority but also the protection of the minority—we on this side of the house stand on the firm bedrock of principle. They are sliding down the slithery slope like those Gadarene swine in the old book, with their progress accelerated by the sow policy of the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir). While they are animated only by the principle of expediency, we on this side—though our numbers are small, it is true—have right on our side; and right at all times is better than expediency. Until the last word is uttered in this debate we stand firm and solid on the bedrock of principle, and from that position we will not recede.

In regard to what he termed the "dictatorship of the minority," my right hon. friend quoted certain sentences from what is admitted to be one of the greatest authorities upon the procedure of the British House of Commons, Redlich. He did not quote the entire substance of some of the finest passages in that book. For instance at page 49, volume 1, Redlich says:

The principle of the protection of the minority is a fundamental basis of parliamentary government.

At page 193, volume 3, he says:

The feeling of the universal benefit conferred, as a rule by strenuous and powerful opposition is one which centuries of experience have worked into the very flesh and blood of the English nation.

And again:

Over and over again it has been seen that the energetic resistance of a minority has roused the entire country to take part in political life—hasty measures have been checked and proposals for large alterations in the law have been modified.

