Abroad in the gusty night?

Moaning under the windows
Like the voice of a child that grieves, Making the maples shiver And creak at the cottage eaves; Listen, Susie, my darling, The winds are singing a song Of the Spring that is softly stealing From Summer lands along. The snowdrops smile as they hear it-A smile for the Spring's sweet sake-And the shy little violets whisne

And the daffodils whisper together And wait for the April rain.

After handing the doorkeeper a oundle of tickets about the bulk of a pack of cards we are allowed to enter and at the expiration of half an hour, I have secured seats for my numerous family, and found a congenial companion with whom I am discussing the topics of the day. Being a comparative stranger my acquaint. ance with the assembled throng is by no means general. My good wife Dorothy who prides herself on the respectability of her connexions is determined that this state of things shall be so no longer. Coming along at the head of a crowd like the tail of an election, I am introduced to them severally as her husband. Thanking my stars that this ordeal is over, I look around and see Cynthia Ann at the head of a brigade of her relations—a truly heterogenous crowd-to whom she insists on introducing me as her husband. The Shippegan Breakwater.

The work on the Shippegan Breakwater seems to be very much delayed and we fear the contractors are not disposed to carry it to completion. The dam across the Blind Gully stands well, but the main breakwater threatens to go to pieces if not soon looked after. Some of the brush is already washed away. There is more water in the channel than before, owing to the quickening of the tide-current by the works already constructed. If these were finished up and made secure, so that what has been done would not be suffered to go to pieces, it would be no small advantage to the fishermen of the locality. We hope the Dominion Government will not allow the undertaking to be abandoned.

Not Discouraged.

The people of St. Stephen seem in no way discouraged by their late misfor-tunes but have gone to work to repair their losses with undaunted enterprise. A large number of men are at work learing away the debris left by the fire rise to view in all directions.

Our War Correspondent. Since the invention of the telegraph, one might almost suppose that the economy of the human race had been reduced to the fact, that one half of the world was condemned to all kinds of misfortunes and calamities for the purpose of furnishing telegrams to the $12,000 due them on original contract ed in the Dominion, including new and other half. Sir Frederick was much gratified at the unnistakable effect his wife created, and very much astonished at the cordiality with which he himself was received by a number of men who, for the last few years, had deliberately ignored his expenses. In mind would be more easily guessed. To any one young, and without care, such a fete as that which she had prepared for his royal highness ought to have afforded the keenest gratification; and Lady Wilmington would watch her young friend, and if she saw the absence of delight, and the presence of wearings, ennui, or worse, she would know that the rumors which had reached her years, had deliberately ignored his extensive the satisfaction of the presence of the part of the presence of the pres years, had deliberately ignored his existence, but who were now delighted to take him by the hand and to beg him to present them to Lady Randall.

Late rumors which and reached her sears were not without foundation.

So Lady Randall agreed to go, little suspecting that she was to be the object of so much scrutiny; and to her great astonishment, Sir Frederick announced astonishment, Sir Frederick announced.

The messenger with this directly to Mrs. Moreton, 24 Park Row. This is a matter," he said to himself, "in which Kitty will be of inestimable value."

Of course the Countess of Wilmington was invited to Lady Randall's reception at Park Lane, and equally of course he went; but like many other persons, only on one occasion. The old lady's chigh breeding was not proof against the horror which she felt at the persons with whom she found herself surroundwith whom she found herself surround-

At the first sound of the announcement of her carriage, she arose from her seat, bade Lady Randall good-night, and took her departure and, though often invited, departure and, though often invited, never entered the doors again. She pleaded her age, her inability to come out at night, etc., and led Minnie to understand that she would always be welcome at Grosvenor Square.

Lady Wilmington's invitation to Sir

Frederick had dined out, as usual, but was to return home to accompany his wife about eleven o'clock. That hour had already arrived, and Minnie was sitting in anxious expectation when she heard his step at the door. It was not staggering and undecided, as was frequently the case, but swift and hurried.

Frederick was not so pressing; but then he had never been thoroughly reinstated in her good graces. There was no doubt however, that for Minnie the old lady really entertained a warm regard which stood the position of affairs in the household. the girl reciprocated, looking up to the Countess as one of her best friends. and Sir Frederick entered the

She sat on a sofa at the extreme end of the room, keeping Minnie by her side as much as the latter's duties of hostess would permit; and during her hostess would permit; and holds it up before his eyes.

Why, then, at the time of her distress, did not Minnie seek for consolation and in the impetuosity of his movement advice at the hands of this friend so experienced in the world's ways? Alas?

She was wrong. There is no greater proof of simplicity and ignorance of wordly matters than to envy those who enjoy rank or riches, and to argue therefrom their position and to argue therefrom their position.

An hour afterwards, Minnie's symp toms looked serious.

"Is there no one here," asked Dr. Travers of Elise, "who can watch over her and be about this lady? Has she no mother or female relations?" "Milady's mother is in Amerique," said the girl; "and she has no other re-

Sheriff of Sheriff of Sheriff of 20th January, 1877. COMMERCIAL COLLEGE.

We have a thousand wants, which a thorough We have a thousand wature, such as the business edu ration will aid us to satisfy. I wish it were possible to give every young man who is going to take charge of a farm, or a factory, or a mechanical establishment of any kind, or to enter into commercial pursuits, the elements of a business education. Business colleges mean that there are wants which pre-existing institutions were not shaped or calculated to meet. I say prosperity and success to business colleges.—Horace Greely. OUR course is interesting and instructive; and is adapted not only to the educated, but to those whose training has been neglected.
