A. M. McCoy of Horsecave, Ky., is famous throughout the Blue Grass State. For about twoscore years he owned the stagecoach lines between Horsecave and Mammoth cave and Glasgow and Mammoth cave. He operated these lines all through the troublous times of the civil war. Of course he met with many harrowing experiences during the time, and which he likes to tell.

Probably no incident connected with hold up of one of his stages by Jesse James and three of his "pals" some time back in the seventies. This incident is described in one of the stories of that notorious highwayman. It occurred early one morning. When the stage was about half way between Horsecave and Mammoth cave, four men sprang out from the side of the road and ordered the driver to halt. One of the men caught the horses and the other three drew pistols and held them at the heads of the driver and passengers. The driver of course did as ordered, and the men proceeded to search the passengers. Everything of value was taken.

Miramichi Advance.

A Jesse James Hold Up.

One of the men robbed was a man named Roundtree, who was well known at that time. He had a valuable gold watch, which James confiscated for his own use. The timepiece was held very dear by Roundtree, as it had been presented him by ex-Governor Knott, who was at that time a young man. The notorious Jesse carried this watch during

She Was Well Posted. In the Sunday school room of an Episcopal church in Brooklyn the other day a lecture was given for the benefit of some worthy object. It was on a week-day, but on the hymn board in the front of the room were what the regular members of the congregation said were the numbers of the hymns that had been sung on the Sunday before. But an outsider was struck with something peculiar about them. There were four numbers arranged in line one under the other, as is customary on the hymn boards, and they were, as they appeared to the audience gathered for a lecture, "4, 11, 44," and "7-11." "Why, it was the funniest thing," said a woman who was present. "I noticed it the minute I went in, and it must have been done on purpose, for there is no seven hundred and eleventh hymn in the hymnal; six hundred and something is the last. The first three were policy numbers and the last craps.

Wasn't it funy?"
"Funny?" said the friend, who was listening to the joke. "I should say so.

But not so much the numbers being there as that you should know what they meant. Now, confess, how in ever

A succession of hissing sounds is next made by drawing in the breath between the closed teeth, interspersed with a series of complimentary phrases uttered with great volubility in a sort of undertoned falsetto, each trying to outdo his friend in rapidity and extravagance of language, while the palms are diligently rubbed against each other. At last the climax is reached, and each endeavors to give the precedence to the other. For some moments, per-haps for a full minute, the polite contest continues. Then the ceremony abruptly ends, as if the difficulty were capable of none but a brusque solution, and the two pass on hurriedly, with a look of extreme relief. An eelskin leather factory is situated in a quiet street in the neighborhood of London bridge, Here are prepared and manufactured various articles from the skin of the common eel. The skins are manipulated by numerous complicated processes until they resemble and would easily be taken for leather, although of a more glutinous and pliable nature. This strange commodity is cut into long, thin strips and plaited very closely together for whiplashes and to cover portions of the handles of more expensive whips. Certain kinds of lashe harness laces are also made of eelskin. This leather is almost indispensable in articles of this description, where flexibility allied with an uncommon tough-

Duffy and His Poems. Sir Charles Gavan Duffy relates that he once had put into his hands by a hostess a volume containing some of his own poems and was asked for his opinion of them.

"There is some one swinging a lantern across the track," said the en-

The crew went ahead once more to see what was the cause of the light. The conductor, who was a good shot, drew his revolver and at the second shot he made at the mysterious light there was a crash, a scream and the light went out and merous guns and men, and therefore the light went out and merous guns and men, and therefore the light went out and light went out at the merous guns and men, and therefore the light went out and light went out and Queer Funeral Mistakes In Maine. There have been some queer mistakes made of all kinds, but this is one of the most unusual and undesirable, although no real harm was done: A man, one time prominent in professional life of this city, died. He was a member of a certain society in this city, which sent representatives to the funeral. The members of the organization were noti-fied of the death of their fellow member by postal cards sent out by the sec-retary. One of the cards was addressed to and delivered at the late residence of the dead member, inviting him to attend his own obsequies.

A similar incident was, if anything, worse. A member of a secret society died and his fellows were notified of his death and the time and place of the funeral, as usual. A card was delivered at the address of the dead man, directed to him in his own handwriting. He had been the secretary of the organization and had addressed sets of postal cards to the members at his leisure. When a member died, a set of the addressed cards were sent to the printer, who printed the name of the deceased member on the back with the other matter used in the notice. So when the secretary died his assistant or successor sent a set of the cards to the printer. so that the dead man was sent one addressed by his own hand.—Portland

Express. Victoria and John Brown. "Pol Manear" is a favorite cast near Balmoral castle and was always held as the special preserve of the late John Brown, her majesty's personal attend-ant. John was an enthusiastic and inveterate fisher, and often the royal larder was indebted to his prowess for its supplies of spring salmon when the rods of the other fishermen failed to bring them to the bank. It is authentically reported among anglers on Deeside that when the queen wanted John he was immediately at her call, except when angling, and at such times she studied not to disturb him. The tacit understanding between them is said to have arisen in the following fashion: Her majesty one day sent an imperative message to the river side, desiring John to immediately wait upon her. "Tell her majesty," replied John, in his usual Doric, "that I am rinnin a salmon and I canna come."

The messenger came back to him in hot haste saying that the queen desired to see him this very minute.

"Well, tell her majesty this time that I am rinnin a salmon and I winna come," and that settled it.—Pearson's

When the Prince of Wales was studying under Sir Lyon Playfair in Edinburgh, that gentleman, after taking the precaution to make him wash his hands with ammonia to get rid of any grease that might be on them, said: "Now, sir, if you have faith in science you will plunge your right hand into that caldron of boiling lead and ladle it out into the cold water which is

"Are you serious?" asked the pupil. "Perfectly," was the reply.
"If you tell me to do it, I will," said the prince.
"I do tell you," rejoined Playfair, and the prince immediately ladled out the burning liquid with perfect impunity.-London Standard. In the course of a conversation between two workingmen's wives one happened to remark that her husband always put on a clean white shirt on Sunday morning. The other replied: "I never care so much about the Sundays, but I aye like to see John wi' a clean shirt on Saturday afternoon, because he's gey hot tempered, and if he should take off his coat to fecht I like him to look clean and decent!"-London Telegraph.

Guns For Battleships. It appears that the tendency in the British and the United States navies is to reduce the number of guns and to inrease their arcs of fire and also to have no guns above 6 inch caliber for sup porting the 12 or 13 inch. This method of decreasing the number and caliber of guns is an ideal theory for reducing weights, but ships are built to carry guns and to fight, and it would seem better to reduce weights elsewhere than in the battery and ammunition.
In an engagement between battleships of similar armor and displacement omething white came fluttering down ship that carries the larger number of guns and that has a reserve force of men below in protected places for filling the vacancies at the remaining guns will certainly have the advantage, and some obscure guns that are generally looked upon with disfavor on account of their small arcs of fire may, at the critical moment when their companions of larger arcs are dismounted, become the means of insuring victory.—Lieutenant E. W. Eberle, U. S. N., in Cassier's Magazine.

> The French are very temperate in food and drink, a cup of coffee with a piece of bread being considered quite sufficient until noon, when the dejeuner a la fourchette is served. This consists of a first course of eggs or macaroni, a second of one chop each or stew, and a third of fruit and cheese. Plenty of bread (always good in France) is eaten during the meal, but butter rarely, and a glass or two of wine diluted with water, but never iced or sweetened, is drunk by each member of the family including the children. Dinner, usually at 7 o'clock, is a little more elaborate meal, from which soup and a salad are seldom omitted, and black coffee is often served with cognac at the end.
> Owing to the fact that so much chicory is used French coffee is not much to the taste of Anglo-Saxons. I have never yet had what I call a cup of "good" in France, whereas in Vienna and Munich it is simply delicious. Coffee being very dear in France (60 cents per pound for good quality) may account for the excessive use of chicory.—What to Eat. One View of a Mort Point It may be said that the little word "my" placed before the word "dear" has a significance of its own. When used between the ladies thus, "My dear Mrs. A.," it is to devote an extra amount of cordiality and friendling and again when a gentleman so writes to a lady of his acquaintance it has the same reading. On the other hand, "My dear Mr. B." is seldom or never written by ladies to their men acquaintances,

"Dear Mr. B." being considered sufficiently affectionate. Elderly ladies, however, are outside of this rule and write "My dear Mr. B." to men whom they have known as boys.—Philadelphia North American. Theodore F. Seward, the organiser of the Don't Worry clubs, tells a good story of a little boy who had reached the multiplication table in the course of his education. One night he was sitting anxiously over a paper of figures, when his mother came along and said, "Johnnie, do you find your arithmetic very hard?" "Yes, indeed, mamma, I do," was his reply. "It was so awful hard that I prayed to God to help me, but he's made three mistakes already."—Naw York Tribune. New York Tribune.

The Prophet Lost. "Lochiel, Lochiel, beware of the day. The prophet put on a menacing look s he spake the grim words. "Out and upon thee," quoth Lochiel, "Why should I listen to the sorry ravings of a dotard churl?"

"And I an overseer," said Lochiel, and he beat him forthwith four sa slaps on the wrist.—Buffalo Enquirer. hard woods give more heat in burning than soft varieties, it has been shown that the greatest power is possessed by the wood of the linden tree, which is Brave Acts. On Jubilee day, which commemorated the discovery of gold in California in 1849, a squad of Battery I of the regu-lar army was firing a salute at Lime Point fort, near San Francisco. One load—the charge was 50 pounds of powder inclosed in a woolen bag—did not go off, and the officer in command orlered it to be pulled out of the cannon. The charge was withdrawn, and as it dropped to the ground it was seen that one corner of the woolen bag was on fire. In an instant the powder would have caught and the seven men with their officer would have been killed. Private John M. Jones jumped toward the smoldering bag, rolled it in the mud and with his bare hands plastered the singed edges with damp earth.

It was a quick, brave deed, and had the hero been a British soldier it would have brought him a Victoria cross to wear on his breast. During the sepoy war a young captain of artillery saw an ignited shell fall near his battery. Instantly he lift-ed it up, carried it to a distance and flung it away. Just then it burst, shat-tering his left forearm. In the Crimean war Captain Peel of the royal navy, son of the former prime minister, Sir Robert Peel, commanded a naval battery in front of Se vastopol. One day a large shell, its fuse burning, fell into the battery near where Peel was standing. Picking it up, he carried it to the rampart and tossed it over. It exploded before it reached the ground. - Exchange.

"You know me, and that what I say

"should do this?"

His words had revealed to her with lightning vividness the full horror and hopelessness of her position. The price of her sin had nearly been murder, and the thought overwhelmed her, yet she was helpless. Thy was her fate linked with that of this man of infamy, who held in his relentless hands the power to crush her life and dog her to ruin?

Where could it all end save in greater misery for them all? And then she re-proached herself bitterly for having sought to escape from the meshes of the net which fate had woven round her. For some time she could not regain her self command; but, recognizing at last how worse than useless with a man like Pierre Turrian was any attitude but that of firmness, she made a great effort to show a bold front to him. "Better?" he sneered as soon as she raised her head. "It was rather a hard hit, I dare say, but you mustn't lose your nerve just now. There's work to

"You are right," she answered steadily; "there is work, but it must not and shall not be murder."

"You'd be much wiser if you didn't use such ugly terms. You seem to forget that half the actions of the whole world depend for their respectability upon their description. Now, if you've enough pluck left to listen quietly, I'll soon show you which way your interest

"You can say what you like. It is immaterial." He glanced at her angrily and mut-tered an oath at her for the tone in which she spoke.

'There is no time now for losing our tempers, or else you'd make me do so with that infernal sneering manner," he cried angrily. "This is how things stand: You married me at Montreux at the Chapel of St. Sulpice, and you are now in law, if not in love, my wife. Being still my wife, you married the master of this place, and in doing that itted what your law calls bigamy. You did it, as you will say, in ignorance, hoping that you had seen the last of me when the stamp of that pretty but energetic foot of yours sent me rolling down into the gorge from the Devil's rock, but unfortunately for your plea of ignorance when I came here you went on pretending that you were Sir Jaffray's wife and continued to stay here, though you knew the marriage was bigamous and void. Do you see what that does? It just pricks the bubble of your innocence, and it puts you a deal deeper into the mud than you were before. That's all, and if it's any consolation to you you may know that I saw that from the first, and it suited my purpose that you should be compromised as much as possible." He stopped and looked at her in triumph and as if expecting an outburst, but she had mastered her emotion by this time completely.

"Go on," she said quietly. "That means that you can at any moment be put on your trial for bigamy and have to face the whole world from the prisoner's dock, and, what is more, that I can put you there and will if you drive me to it. Get that into your head

I am waiting to know what you want. I have never doubted either your bullying cowardice or your cunning. to clear away from your path the difficulties that threaten to ruin you."
"You are suddenly very solicitous on my account," she retorted.

"And I mean to show you the only way in which it can be done," he continued, not heeding the interruption. "Sir Jaffray has settled on you a good many thousands of pounds, and, as I happen to know, he has in his will, like a loving husband should, left you everything that he could leave without touching the entailed estates. Now"— he paused and looked very closely at her and spoke very deliberately—"if Sir Jaffray were to die, say, by any acoident or suddenly in any way you would as suddenly be freed from all

She met his look and returned it with one which seemed to hold his eves fixed nearly ran into her palms, and she bit her lip hard in her agitation, and it was fully a minute before she trusted herself to speak.

The Frenchman filled up the interval by lighting a fresh cigarette and walk-ing up and down the room. He was glad of the pause, for the strain of the moment told on him. He was very pale and the perspiration came out in a line beads on his forehead.

"I think I understand you," said Lola at length when she could trust herself to speak. "And what is to happen after—after what you mean?"

He was by the door of the room when she spoke, and he turned and answered, standing still. He tried to speak lightly. "What should happen?" he cried, with a wave of the hands and a shrug of the shoulders. "You would be free, and I would claim you as my wife."

"You would claim me!" she repeated. "Certainly." he said masterfully. 'You would be my wife''-He stopped suddenly without finishing the sentence and turned toward the

"What's that?" he oried. He rushed to the door and tried to open it quick-ly, but in his haste fumbled with the handle and then threw it open and

He made no answer to this.
"Well, you know my plan now," he said. "It is the only one possible to get us out of this mess. What do you

"You don't expect me to reply off-hand that I am ready to take part in a plot to murder my husband?"
"Why not? You have already rehearsed the part with me."

The malice in his tone and face made Lola clinch her teeth and flush with anger. But she did not let the hot words that rese to her lips escape them. Instead of this she asked as calmly as she could force herself to speak:

'How do you propose to carry out Oh. there are 50 ways. Any one "Oh, there are 50 ways. Any one of a hundred drugs that can be got without difficulty will do all that we need, and any one of a hundred opportunities which can be as easily found who had been watching the pair closely and thinking rapidly what to do. The minute's breathing space which Sir Jaffray's hurried questioning of Lola had afforded had given time for reconsideration and had changed the current of the Frenchman's thoughts and the whole development of after

At the moment of Sir Jaffray's entry Pierre Turrian's first instinct had been to save himself from an exceedingly awkward complication by throwing the baronet's anger on to Lola and exposing the true character of the relations be tween her and himself.

But the minute's consideration caused him to change his intention completely. If he were to do anything of the kind, all chance of benefiting by Lola's connection with the baronet would be gone. He would have lost his hold over her entirely, and the whole object which he had so long and so closely cherished would be sacrificed.

On the other hand, all that there was to fear was an unpleasant experience with Sir Jaffray's riding crop, a fight in which he might or might not get the worst, followed, of course, by expulsion from the house, but he would still have Lola in his power and still be able to reap the reward he was striving for.
He measured up Sir Jaffray's strong, well knit frame and recognized the cer-tainty that he could not hope to escape without some hard blows, but the stake

"How dare you lay your hands on my "I answer no man who speaks to me in that tone and backs his words with a weapon while I am defenseless," he replied, with a good assumption of bold-"This is no weapon," said the baron-et angrily, "in any such sense as that. It is merely a horsewhip for the back of a dastardly coward who dares to strike

Pierre Turrian made no reply, but he folded his arms across his chest and stood staring resolutely at his opponent, the mark of Lola's whip flaming like a brand of red shame on his face.
"Look out!" were Sir Jaffray's only words, and the next moment the long strong lash of the hunting whip curled round the Frenchman's shoulders. It was like the first taste of blood to a wild animal mad with pent rage, and Sir Jaffray seized him by the collar of the coat and put his whole heart and strength into the swinging cuts which he rained on the Frenchman's shoulders and back. Then at the close he went to the door and threw it open.

"Now, go," he said hurriedly, "and let this be a lesson to you never to raise your hand against a woman again. Go, or by heaven I shan't be able to keep my hands from thrashing you again."

To do the man justice, he had passed through the ordeal with as much composure as a man can hope to show under a horsewhipping. He had neither winced nor flinched, though the hurt of the blows had seemed to strike right to

"I will go, and, mark me, every blow that you have struck I will pay back a hundredfold. I swear it!" "Bah! Get out! This is not a theater." growled Sir Jaffray. Then, seeing a couple of menservants in the hall, he said to them, "Turn that man out of the house, and if ever he comes here again you have my express permission to kick him right down to the lodge

"And now, sweetheart, that the room's clear of that brute, tell me what earth does it all mean?" He sat down by her and first took her hand in his, and then, seeing that she was greatly agitated, he ran his arm round her waist and held her close to him and kissed her.
She was inexpressibly glad to be in

With that he shut the door and turned his arms, for she had grown to love him with a love to the full as passionate as that which she had formerly simulated, and his demonstrative movements were rare enough to make her prize them all the more.

She nestled close to him now, and

"Better to be the wife of a man like will everybody else. Is it anything to do with you, Lola?" Sir Jaffray looked at her and smiled. "It's no use, little woman," he said, "You seoundrel!" cried Lola. All the twining her arms about his neck clung to him and drew down his face to hers. covering it with long, sweet kisses, while her eyes filled with tears, which raising the riding whip which she held he could not understand. She knew well enough, however, that they were in her hand, she struck him with all her force right across the face, leaving a crimson wale on his livid cheek. drawn from a too certain foreknowledge that such moments in their lives were His rage was so violent that he trem-bled with the force of it, and, rushing soon to cease entirely. It was a growing pain to her, too, to have to lie to him, as now she must, to forward, he tore the whip from her hand and flung it to the other end of the room.

account for this extraordinary scene with Pierre Turrian, and for the moment her wits failed to suggest even an idea of the tale she should tell. She was completely unnerved and unstrung in the moment of relapse from the excitement caused by the interview with the Frenchman and the struggle in which it had ended, the tension when in which it had ended, the tension when she had expected the truth to be blurted out and the shock, half delight, half of his. Sir Jaffray on his side was very disquieted by the affair. Her riding what he saw, and he neither cared nor habit hampered her, and she began to fear that he would overpower her. She strove hard to think how she could prestopped to think.

When he had sated that desire and had lashed the man to his soul's delight and content and sat waiting for Lola to speak, he grew uneasy as to what could possibly have happened between Lola and the man whom he had regarded as well the desperate character of the man she had to deal with, and it was only in the last extremity, when she felt that she could not continue the struggle and that her life would be in danger if she "How did this happen, child?" he said when Lola's agitation seemed to be "I hardly know. I think he meant to try to kill me. He insulted me. You saw that mark on his face. I did it. I struck him with my riding whip. It was then he attacked me." She spoke graciously. She was cross, as a gossip the sound of a horse's gallop and the stamping of its feet as the rider checked in short sentences, like a child recover-

"Did the man dare to make love to you?" asked Sir Jaffray, the thought driving his eyebrows together in a heavy frown and making him clinch his teeth. "I was always afraid of his coming here." said Lola evasively. "You know I said at the time I did not want him asked. Ugh! He is loathsome and dan-'Never mind, sweetheart. Pluck up courage. He won't trouble us any more," said Sir Jaffray in a much lighter tone than he felt and wishing cheer her up. "And if he doesn't clear out from the neighborhood of his own free will after today's business I'll find a way of making him; that's all." His mood of demonstrative affection had passed, and Lola, with a sigh, let him go from her side. He got up and then lit a cigarette.

'It'll be a lesson to me not to encourage traveling fiddlers again. To think that he should turn out such a brute! And I actually liked the fellow. By gad, but I'm glad I thrashed him, and I'm only sorry I didn't lay it on a little longer and a good deal harder.'' He paused and looked at Lola and then said very kindly:

"Do you feel better now, sweetheart?" "Yes, Jaffray; I'm all right now. I'll run up to my room and get my habit off. It must be nearly lunchtime Has the exercise made you hungry?'

And she smiled. Her spirits had risen for the moment at having got out of the work of ex-planation so easily, and she thought it best to appear as if she had shaken off the worst effects of the morning's "I would rather," she answered.
"As you will, then," said Sir Jaffray

But as soon as she was in her own room and had locked the door and shut out the chance of being observed she looked the truth full in the face.

The end had come. With Beryl Leycester in possession of the secret on the one hand and with Pierre pressing her from the other there was no hope, no chance, no possibility of escape. What to do she could not resolve yet. At the moment she had to go on playing the part that she had chosen, but what-ever the result a few days must settle everything, perhaps a few hours. If she were to avoid utter shipwreck, she must be prepared with some definite course of action, and the sooner she could de cide what that was to be the better. The very safety of the man she loved demanded this. She knew Pierre well enough to feel quite confident that he would now have a double incentive to do Jaffray haim. She had listened to his devilish scheme in order to learn what it was, so that having learned it she might take measures to foil him. But she knew also that he was quite capable of acting by himself from the outside, and so long as there was a thought in his mind that not only could he have revenge for the horse-whipping, but also be, as he hoped, a gainer through Jaffray's death, the lat-ter was not safe for a day. She had reached this point in her thoughts when the luncheon gong sounded and her maid knocked at the door. Lola let her in and then changed her dress and hurried down stairs. At luncheon Mrs. De Witt's curiosity
