Mr. Billings said the British could Mr. Billings said the British possessing and must exterminate the Zeppelins. He asserted that the British possessing and pilots than at the beginning of the war, and that the machines were capable of carrying from four to ten times greater quantities of explosives. If Harold J. Tennant, Under-Secretary of State for War, believed the tary of State for War, believed the British had an insufficient number of pilots, Mr. Pemberton-Billings said the could introduce him to a hundred such men within twenty-four hours, and if Mr. Tennant said the British to them in Zion appeareth before God. The congregation was glad to see Mr.

In the Under-Secretary said the British had not sufficient bombs, the new ish had not sufficient bombs, the new member offered, with the permission of the Speaker, to place them on the table of the House.

Mr. Pemberton-Billings concluded with the assertion that the country was demanding that the existing material be used and that airmen were pleading to be sent out to fight instead of sitting at home to think.

Noel Pemberton-Billings was a temporary Flight Lieutenant in the temporary Flight Lieutenant in the Royal Naval Air Service when he resigned to stand for Parliament on the issue of better protection against Zeppelin raids. He was elected for 14 00 to 17 00 East Hertfordshire by a majority of 1,031 over the coalition candidate, Brodie Henderson.

THE RELIGIOUS LIFE.

Religion enters very largely into the life of the people, and though the lates are took the lates, and it is not until the last service is over that the bands in the estaminets or lakes and toys station themselves at the roadside. On week days two church bells begin calling before it is light, and continue at intervals until they close with the angelus.

Sitting in the vast cathedral, we watch people steal in and out to pray; a group of children enter; each makes a bow to the altar, kneels for a few moments before some shrine, and departs; then a woman lifts a child to the stoop of Holy Water and makes the sign of the cross on his brow; and countryman clatters in, in heavy clogs, carrying a basket, to ofter a coin or a candle as a thanksgiving for a good day's business in the market which is kept with group of the lold gateways. Every house is decorated with flags, flowers and lighted tapers, and the most reverence and enthusiasm are displayed but a large concourse of visitors as well. From early morn a constant stream of people pours in through the old gateways.
