CHAPTER XVII.
For Better or Worse.

As Lashmore lifted her into the wagon, he pressed her to him and murmured rather hoarsely, "My wife!" Then on again, she nestling within his arm, over vast plains, through thick woods, then out in the plains again and to a fertile valley lying basking in the sunlight below them, a substantial house, with smoke wreathing from the chimneys, and behind and beyond vast hills crowned by gigantic firs.

"Quirapata, dearest!" he said, with a whisper, breaking the silence which had reigned like a magic spell. "But we do not stop here; the cottage—our cottage—lies in the dip beyond the trees there."

But they had to stop, for the round and comfortable figure of a man with a shrewd, good-natured face was standing at the gate leading to the farm.

"Mr. Coke," whispered Harry. "That's kind of him! He's one of the best."

Mr. Coke raised his hat, and with a smile, came to the wagon.

"I couldn't let you come to Quirapata without saying a word of welcome, Miss—I mean, Mrs. Lashmore," he said, as he shook hands with her.

Then he shook hands heartily with Lashmore and nodded and smiled approvingly.

"You'll find it all right down there, I think," he said. "Polly—that's your maid, Mrs. Lashmore—has got everything ready for you. You'll come up to the house when you feel inclined, and as often as you feel inclined, I hope."

Lashmore drew him aside and whispered huskily:

"Thank you, thank you! Isn't she— isn't she beautiful?"

"She is!" assented Mr. Coke. "And she looks as good as they make 'em. You're a lucky chap, Lashmore. Be good to her! Off with you, my lad, and God bless you!"

Lashmore went back to Kittie, laughing rather shakily.

"He told me to be good to you!" he said as he pressed her to him. "Do you think I shall be, dearest?"

They came in sight of the cottage, and Kittie drew a long breath. "Oh, how beautiful!" she murmured.

She was at the gates of her earthly paradise; they were swinging wide open for her; she had only to enter.

A man was waiting to take away the horses; a rosy-cheeked, well-fed looking girl was standing at the door to receive them.

"Well, Polly," said Lashmore, beaming at her; "this is Mrs. Lashmore, your new mistress." His voice rang with pride. The girl gazed at Kittie with an admiring awe; she had never seen any one like her, and thought of the portrait of the queen on the almanac nailed on the kitchen wall.

"Supper's ready, miss—ma'am, when you're ready," she faltered.

Kittie went up to her room, a dainty room with new furniture, snow-white chintz, with flowers on the dressing-table, the window sill, everywhere. She took off her things slowly, and heard Lashmore's voice as he talked to the girl below. Still in a dream, she went down stairs again; she supper was laid, as Polly had said; Lashmore had changed his riding-suit for one of blue serge. He looked, as Mrs. Vanstone had said, amazingly handsome, distinguished; a man whom any woman might love and be proud of.

He drew her to the head of the table and kissed her.

"Welcome home, dearest!" he said. He held a folded paper in his hand, and he shook it at her, laughing, his eyes brilliant, his face flushed with happiness.

"What do you think it is, Eva?" he said. "You'll never guess! It's the draft of a deed of partnership. I'm 'man' no longer, but part 'master.' Didn't I say he was one of the best! You'll like him, darling; no one could help it. He's as sharp as a needle, but as soft-hearted as—as a woman. He's been like a father to me; and I feel like—a son to him. You must eat something, dearest!"

He put something on her plate, poured out a glass of wine, brought them round to her, and, of course, availed himself of the opportunity to take her in his arms.

"Do you think you like the place, dearest?" he asked. "Do you think you will be happy here, away from the old country and—all your friends?" He looked at her anxiously, gratefully, as he put the question. "Don't think I don't know all that you have given up for me, and that my only way of making it up to you is to make you happy."

She raised her eyes to his with something like entreaty in them.

"I—I have given up nothing," she said. "I have made no sacrifice. I am—ah, yes; I am happy, happier than I deserve to be." The last words were spoken more to herself than to him.

He laughed, but his eyes glowed. "That's your way of putting it, dearest," he said. "You speak like an angel. You are an angel! But I was wondering whether you'd feel lonely—there is no other woman here but Polly."

She caught her breath. "I shall not feel lonely. I do not want any one else. I only want—you."

She breathed the word with such an intensity of passion that he sat and looked at her for a moment in silence.

"My wife!" he said in a whisper.

There was such an accent of devotion, of pride, of perfect trust in his voice, that it broke Kittie down. She struggled for a moment, then her head fell in her hands, and she burst into a storm of tears. He sprang to her and put his arms round her.

"My dearest, my dearest!" he murmured consolingly, and in a terrible fright and anxiety. "What is it? What is the matter? Tell me, Eva. Oh, my love, why do you cry? Is the sacrifice too great, are you—repenting?"

His face was white, his voice shook. She hid her face against his breast, pressed it there, as if to force back her tears; her small hand gripped his coat and clung there, as a drowning man clings to a rock; her voice found its way through her sobs.

"There is no sacrifice," she said, almost inaudibly. "I am not giving up anything. I am wicked, wicked, wicked! Oh, I can't tell you—but I ought to do so, I ought! But I love you—it's my love that makes me wicked—and selfish. If you knew—if you only knew—but I can't tell you. I feel as if it would kill me. I couldn't bear to see you change to me—I should die. Yes, I should die!"

Manlike, he thought it was only hysteria. He had come upon her suddenly at Cornita; she had had a long journey, the excitement of the wedding, the solitude of this lonely spot—perhaps all newly married girls broke down in this way. He soothed her, kissed her brow and lips, gently stroked the hair from her forehead, drew her on to his knee and murmured phrases of tender endearment and encouragement.

"Of course you realize all that you have lost, dearest," he said. "That's only natural. I expected that. Leaving England, your father, wealth, rank—entrusting yourself to a man you scarcely know. Why, yes; it's only natural. But, dearest, you know that I love you, that I would give my life to make you happy? And you love me—just a little, don't you?"

Her arms strained round his neck and she hid her face still more closely against him.

"Yes, yes, I love you, I love you! That is it, that is why! Oh, I am weak and wicked—I can't speak—I can't tell you." She raised her face suddenly and looked at his anxious, but still love-laden eyes. "Harry—"

"Do you know that is the first time you have called me that," he said with a forced laugh—he really must try and get her to laugh, coax her into a lighter mood. "Harry! I didn't know the name sounded so good. I like to hear you say it. Call me by it again, dearest. But what were you going to say?"

She looked beyond him for a moment; then her eyes returned to his, seeming to search them, to plead for mercy, to seek assurance there of his love, of his pardon.

"If"—she said, as if speech cost her pain. "If some day you found that I was—not so good as you think me; that I had not—not given up all that you thought I had—"

"Would I love you still!" he laughed. "Why, yes!"

Her hands writhed together behind his neck, she drew a long breath and her eyes closed; but, as if she were forcing herself to speak, she went on again, her eyes seeking his, with a feverish, agonized eagerness.

"But if—I want to know how much you love me? They say that when a man loves with all his heart, he can forgive everything."

"I am prepared to forgive everything, Eva, dearest," he said with a laugh, as he tried to imagine something he would have to forgive, some little, trivial, foolish, girlish fault. "Try me!"

"I am—I am!" she panted. "I am trying to tell you—but, oh, I can't, I can't! If you found that I had deceived you, I was—was—not what I seem—would you love me still? Oh, don't laugh. If you knew—if you knew!"

His face suddenly grew grave, a look of anxiety, of something between disappointment and doubt came into his eyes.

"You were going to tell me that you once—once cared for some other man," he said huskily. "Hold on, dearest! Don't be frightened. Was it long ago; before I met you that night—would you remember—at the Exhibition at Earl's Court? Was that one of the reasons why, when I saw you again at Ripley's Court, you kept me to my promise, our agreement, pretended that we had never met before? Was he—did he exist then?"

She shivered and shuddered in his arms as he referred to Ripley Court! for his words called up Eva Lyndhurst and all that may have passed between them; and her heart grew hot with jealousy.

Mother! Give Child "Syrup of Figs" if Tongue is Coated

If cross, feverish, sick, bilious, clean little liver and bowels.

Children love this "fruit laxative," and nothing else cleanses the tender stomach, liver, and bowels so nicely. A child simply will not stop playing to empty the bowels and the result is they become tightly clogged with waste, liver gets sluggish, stomach sour, then your little one becomes cross, half-sick, feverish, don't eat, sleep or act naturally, breath is bad, stomach-ache or diarrhea. Listen Mother! See if tongue is coated, then give a teaspoonful of California Syrup of Figs, and in a few hours all the constipated waste, sour bile and undigested food passes out of the system, and you have a well, playful child again.

Millions of mothers give "California Syrup of Figs" because it is perfectly harmless; children love it and it never fails to act on the stomach, liver and bowels.

Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly printed on the bottle. Beware of counterfeits sold here. Get the genuine, made by "California Fig Syrup Company." Refuse any other kind with contempt.

Why the Allies Are Optimistic.

Optimism is an incurable disease, and perhaps it is just as well. An epidemic of it has lately broken out among the Allies, and it must be a matter of concern to the pessimists that it is this time most prevalent among those best informed. Lloyds may or may not be included in this number, but it is of interest that they are betting ten to one on an end to the war within less than ninety days from this date. They reflect what is very nearly a general opinion in England. What are the chief reasons for it?

They are, roughly, of three kinds, economic, political and military. The first—and it may be the most important—consists in the fact, comforting or the reverse according to the point of view, that the whole world is reaping the fruits of destruction and rapidly approaching starvation, but the Central Empires far more rapidly than the rest. Their staying power depends upon a wonderful organisation and, to give them their due, an almost equally wonderful spirit. But organisation may regulate but it does not create, and there are unmistakable signs of decline in the spirit.

Secondly, no less unmistakable has been the effect of the gradual emergence from the struggle of the issue between democracy and autocracy, always the essence of it and now brought sharply into prominence by the rapid succession of the Russian revolution and the entry of the United States. The German people are docile but they have some intelligence. They are beginning to see that they stand alone and the more important fact that there is but one way out of it all for them. The most striking and momentous exposition of the issue aforesaid that the world has read is President Wilson's speech to Congress on April 2nd. Only one German newspaper has had the courage to print it in full. The aim of the Allies are obligingly repeating the omission. Truth, like murder, will out, and every German will soon be able to know exactly what the President said and, let us hope, do some thinking for himself for once. Slowly but surely the indications multiply that Germany is being divided against herself. Von Reventlow is abusing Zimmerman in unmeasured terms, and Harden, who speaks to the people, tells them without hesitation that the fortunes of the ruling house are completely dependent upon a German victory. In other words, victory being out of the question, if ruinous defeat is to be averted the ruling house must go. Bit by bit the purpose of the Allies to hold no parleys with that house is being made clear to the German people. Add to all this the fact that the rest of the Alliance (it is rumoured Germany herself as well) has separately made secret bids for peace.

Finally, there is the military situation. And here we must protest against the popular fallacy which, in spite of three years' of war, still prevails among many who call themselves experts. They point to the great tract of land from which the invader has yet to be ousted and warn us that the outcome is going to be a long business. The warning is justified, but the reason is ridiculous. One would think that once the German armies are driven back to the Rhine peace will automatically ensue. Ceteris paribus, we can imagine nothing that more effectively tends to prolong the war. Those armies advanced along a line that opened up very like a fan. Our own opinion is that the war will end long before this happens. But if any proof were needed of what seems to us an obvious contention it is provided by the nature of the fighting that is now proceeding. The Germans are throwing their reserves, which they have been husbanding with care, into the battle with reckless and desperate prodigality. The British are within an ace of breaking their line at Douai, and they know that if the line is broken it is all up with them. That is the simple reason why the military observers among the Allies are at last in accord with the economists and politicians and share their high hopes. They

DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS CURED MRS. MERCREDI.

She Had Been Ill Two Years and Could Find No Cure. That's Why Her Husband is Enthusiastic Over Dodd's Kidney Pills.

For Smith, Alberta, April 24th.—(Special).—Among all the thousands of Canadians who praise Dodd's Kidney Pills for the good they have done, there is no more fervent admirer of the great kidney remedy than Isidore Mercredi, of this place.

"Yes, it always gives me pleasure to say a good word for Dodd's Kidney Pills," Mr. Mercredi says. "My wife was sick for two years. We could not find anything to restore her to health. Then we found a pamphlet telling of several persons who had been cured by Dodd's Kidney Pills.

"My wife used just two boxes of them and she is perfectly well, to the great surprise of all our neighbors. They can tell you the same thing. I cannot recommend Dodd's Kidney Pills enough."

Dodd's Kidney Pills are the greatest of all remedies for weak, suffering women. They cure the kidneys. The kidneys are the root of nine-tenths of women's ills. Moreover, cured kidneys mean pure clear blood all over the body. That means good health everywhere.

McMurdo's Store News

WEDNESDAY, April 25, 1917. We hope to have the well known remedy for Eczema D.D.D. to-morrow. This preparation, esteemed by many as the most potent external remedy for eczema, has been "on the road," coming, for a considerable time, and has only now arrived; and we think the announcement of its advent will arouse interest in a good many people who have for weeks been trying in vain to obtain it. There are several other popular remedies on the market, but we are sure that you will be able to announce being again in stock during the next few days.

ATLANTIC LODGE, No. 1, L.O.O.F., will observe the Anniversary of the Order on Thursday, the 26th inst., in Grenfell Hall, when a Lecture will be given by the Rev. Geo. L.L.D., B.D., to Odd Fellows and friends, entitled "The Odd Fellow and the Other Fellow."

A Strange Find.

Minister of Marine Piccott is in receipt of a message stating that Mr. Joshua Stanford and crew, of Grate Cove, have picked up a boat, painted green, with black bottom, in which were three seals and three men's coats. One sail was set on the boat and there were also aboard two oars, powder and shot, one axe, one pocket knife and one bread box partly filled. The boat is about twelve feet keel. The coats, which are ordinarily men's short coats and apparently much worn, have been forwarded and are now in the possession of Minister Piccott for identification, and anyone seeking information should communicate with his department. It is quite evident from the foregoing that the owners of the coats were seal hunting, but up to the present their names are unknown. The coats have been examined and contain nothing that would lead to identification. There is much credence given the theory that the boat became jammed in the ice and the occupants decided to walk to the shore, bringing their guns and some food in their pockets along with them. It is sincerely hoped that the seal hunters will turn up all right, though so far there is no word of their having reached the land.

Preparing the Land.

A MINIMUM PRICE ASKED. A gentleman from Hr. Grace, who reached the city by last night's train, informs the Telegram that in answer to the appeal of the Agricultural Committee the citizens of the Second City are putting forward every effort to prepare and seed every available piece of land within a reasonable distance from their homes. A great patriotic wave is sweeping over the whole of Conception Bay, and with the proper seed and favourable growing conditions a record potato crop is assured. However there is a feeling existing among some farmers that the local market might be over-run, and if a minimum price of say $2.00 a barrel was guaranteed the producer a much larger crop would be counted on.

You Can Always Change It.

By RUTH CAMERON.

RUTH CAMERON

"I had my bill from J's," I heard a woman say the other day, "and it was only forty dollars."

"After all the shopping you've done, this month," marveled the other woman. "Oh, yes," said the first, "but you know, my dear, I sent back more than half the stuff I bought. There were sixty-five dollars in credits! Really, I'm rather ashamed!"

She Sent Back Almost Twice What She Kept.

I suppose that was a big admission for a woman who was evidently a confirmed shopper to make. But I hope the day will come when any decent woman will be not "rather" but "entirely" ashamed to confess that she has so far abused the privileges conceded customers by the shops, as to send back nearly twice as much merchandise as she kept.

Bad For Women's Characters.

There is an interesting essay in one of the current magazines on this propensity to buy with the feeling that you can always change it if you don't like it. The author thinks that thus removing the burden of making a definite decision from women's shoulders must weaken their characters. They do not train themselves to accuracy of judgment because they do not have to suffer from their mis-

It is an interesting thought, isn't it? Incidentally he mentions the fact that the cost of permitting an unlimited exchange privilege is said to be something like a ten per cent tax on everything in the shop.

Can we, especially in view of the high cost of living, afford such a tax? Suppose The Government Taxed Women's Clothes Ten Per Cent.

How bitterly we should resent such a tax if imposed by the government! Yet we willingly permit our own inclination to impose this upon us.

There are conditions under which an exchange privilege is justified, but to buy thoughtlessly, hastily, foolishly, just because you know you "can always change it" is not fair.

We don't have a right to all our rights.

It is good that the stores permit us to make changes. In return we ought to keep our mistakes at the minimum. Personally, I should not grieve to see a small tax put on returns and the proceeds used to lower all prices, should you?

Your Boys and Girls. Big Benefit at Rossly's

As soon as baby can grasp and hold a toy, every mother knows that it goes into his mouth. My baby had several bright, fascinating things that she must not put into her mouth, so I tied them on a string that I could slip over chair posts just far enough away so she sit in her high chair and reach them but not near enough so she could put them in her mouth.

An old watch, mirror, or bottle, as well as a painted toy, can be enjoyed by a baby in this way. These toys can also be fastened on the carriage or the cradle bed. This helps greatly to prevent the sucking of fingers and thumbs.

It is possible to make little washable toys of wool with yarn and the crochet needle. White woolly dogs are very lifelike, and there are funny little tassel dolls made of a single large tassel. The top of the tassel is tied together with a piece of yarn so that there is a ball like formation at the top. Two more sections are divided from the sides and tied for arms, and the lower parts of these sections are tied with another piece of yarn, so that they resemble hands.

WAKING UP.

I see my neighbors buying flags, and waving them on every hand; they stand around and make their brags about Columbia, happy land. "We don't want war," I hear them say, "we do not lust for wound and scar, but if a foe should come our way, there is no sacrifice we'll bar. Breathes there a man with soul so dead he would not for his country scrap? If such there be, we'll punch his head, and from his system knock the sap." Bill Kicksaw sprang a musty gag, the other day, down by the jail, reflecting on our starry flag, which makes all other flags look pale. At other times his idle speech would not have stirred us up to ire; but now we rose with wrathful screech, and mauled him like a house afire. We've all grown soft in times of peace, the worth while things we have disdained; we've lolled and basked and put on grease, and cash is all for which we've strained. So, when our country strikes a snag, it's good to see, throughout the town, our neighbours bless the dear old flag, and mob the man who'd pull it down. The nation is not gone to seed; still throbs the soul of Bunker Hill, to battle, at the country's need—it always has, it always will.

Free air is something which is put into the tires of an automobile before it leaves the factory, after which the owner furnishes his own air and propanity.

The ordinary pneumatic tire is so constructed that it will not stand up unless it is crowded full of air. The modern touring car would be a constant delight if it could be made to operate on stilts or had four sturdy legs, like man's friend and prototype, the mule. So long as automobiles are held up by air and the aid of providence, however, the driver will be confronted with the specter of the hissing puncture and the ear-splitting blow-out.

All automobiles come equipped with free air, which is the only accessory which does not cost anything and which is not subject to a 65 per cent. depreciation the first year. Sometimes the air which is put in at the factory shows great powers of resistance. A great many men have pointed with pride to a set of tires containing air which came from the factory, and the very next time they took the road they ran into a series of punctures that sounded like an artillery action off Sandy Hook. Just because a tire has run 8,400 miles on one filling is no reason why it will not collapse suddenly on a hot day and wring a bucketful of perspiration from the owner.

Free air can be obtained at any first class garage if the owner of the car is willing to insert it himself. Four sagging tires can be filled from a leaky garage pump in an hour or back, or two or three valve stems are missing. The hand pump can also be used successfully, but the man who uses a hand pump regularly can never get insured against anything except hail and tornadoes.

Free air is not used in truck tires, which are made of solid rubber and cannot be punctured with anything short of a pick axe. If the truck tire could be applied to the pleasure car, some people would not want to get any nearer heaven than they are.

The Rossleys with their usual generosity have given all their best efforts to provide a very beautiful performance for the benefit of the new Convalescent Home, Watertown Hall, and surely for such a good cause many people will want to do their bit. All the Rossleys ask is for the crowd to attend and they will do their best to make it a most enjoyable affair. The Allies Revue has been selected as a most appropriate playlet and there are other new features introduced. The costumes are all correct and when the Allies all assemble will make such a sight as is seldom seen on any stage. The entertainment is under the distinguished patronage of His Excellency the Governor and Lady Davidson.

The Cost of Tea

sharply and considerably lately, after a previous earlier rise, but still it looks like even much higher prices for teas.

MOUNT VIEW TEA,

in 1 lb. air-tight packages, which we retail at

50c. per lb. only,

is the best value on the St. John's market. We have kept this tea at the square price of 50c. lb. for some time, despite various advances in landed cost, and will do so as long as our present stock lasts. At present market quotations the price should be 70c. lb. and it follows that prices must advance later.

MOUNT VIEW TEA

is a comparatively new arrival in St. John's, but has been gaining many patrons and holding them. The flavor is right, and the quality is shown by the fact that a pound of Mount View Tea will go as far as any other tea on the market selling from 60c. to 70c. lb. and at least half as far again as any tea selling at 45c. lb. Wise housekeepers who try our Mount View Tea will find they save much money and get a delightful tea.
