CANADA

HOUSE OF COMMONS DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

FIRST SESSION—TWENTY SIXTH PARLIAMENT

12 ELIZABETH II

VOLUME I, 1963

COMPRISING THE PERIOD FROM THE SIXTEENTH DAY OF MAY, 1963, TO THE TWELFTH DAY OF JUNE 1963, INCLUSIVE

INDEX ISSUED IN A SEPARATE VOLUME

ROGER DUHAMEL, F.R.S.C.
QUEEN'S PRINTER AND CONTROLLER OF STATIONERY
OTTAWA, 1963

28902-5—1½

CANADA

House of Commons Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT

Speaker: The Honourable Alan A. Macnaughton

FIRST SESSION—TWENTY SIXTH PARLIAMENT

The twenty fifth parliament having been dissolved by a proclamation on Wednesday, February 6, and writs having been issued and returned, a new parliament was summoned to meet for the dispatch of business on Thursday, May 16, 1963, and did accordingly meet on that day.

Thursday, May 16, 1963

This being the day on which parliament is convoked by proclamation of His Excellency the Governor General for the dispatch of business, and the members of the house being assembled:

Leon J. Raymond, Esquire, O.B.E., the Clerk of the House, read to the house a letter from the assistant secretary to the Governor General informing him that the Honourable J. R. Cartwright, M.C., puisne judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, would proceed to the Senate chamber to open the first session of the twenty sixth parliament of Canada on Thursday, the sixteenth day of May, at 10.30 a.m.

A message was delivered by Major C. R. Lamoureux, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Members of the House of Commons:

The Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of honourable members in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, the house went up to the Senate chamber, when the Speaker of the Senate said:

Honourable Members of the Senate,
and Members of the House of Commons:

I have it in command to let you know that the Honourable the Deputy Governor General does not see fit to declare the causes of his summoning the present parliament of Canada until the Speaker of the House of Commons shall have been chosen according to law, but this afternoon, at the hour of three o'clock, the administrator of the government of Canada will declare the causes of calling this parliament.

And the house being returned to the Commons chamber:

ELECTION OF SPEAKER

MR. ALAN A. MACNAUGHTON, MEMBER FOR THE ELECTORAL DISTRICT OF MOUNT ROYAL

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Raymond, it is a source of some encouragement to me to feel that the first words I utter from this side of the house may, I believe will, receive more approval, indeed I hope unanimous approval, than some I may be uttering as the session continues. We have just been reminded, in a ceremony that goes to the very roots of our parliamentary history and emphasizes the continuity of that history, that we will not be in a position to receive the speech from the throne, indeed we will not be in a position to take any action—in fact I am not sure that we are constituted as a House of Commons at all—until we choose a Speaker. It is my duty to begin the process of rectifying this omission, and for that purpose it is my privilege to nominate the hon. member for Mount Royal, Mr. Alan Aylesworth Macnaughton.

Mr. Macnaughton was born in Ontario and was educated in Ontario, Quebec and the United Kingdom. He is a Queen's counsel learned in the law, and he has had experience and success in business. He has been a member of the house since 1949 and has made distinguished contributions to the work of parliament during that period.

Perhaps I might be permitted to mention particularly his work during the twenty fourth parliament as chairman of the public accounts committee, when he showed those qualities of impartiality, objectivity, a sense of proportion and fairness which I believe make him eminently suitable for the high office of Speaker of this house. In that office he will be the guardian of the rights and privileges of the house and of all the hon. members of the house in accordance with the historical and valued traditions of our parliamentary system inherited from the mother of parliaments at Westminster.

His functions, of course, will also include presiding over the deliberations of the house, not always the easiest responsibility to discharge and one requiring both judicial fairness and impartial firmness.

Perhaps the qualities that are required for a Speaker of the House of Commons were never better described than by the Greek philosopher Socrates when, referring to the qualities that are required for a judge, he said, "four things belong to a judge; to hear courteously, to answer wisely, to consider soberly and to decide impartially." I believe the hon. member for Mount Royal has these qualities to a very unusual degree; therefore I take great pleasure in moving, seconded by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier):

That Alan A. Macnaughton, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Mount Royal, do take the chair of this house as Speaker.

(Translation):

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Raymond, it gives me great pleasure to second the motion of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) for the nomination of Mr. Alan Macnaughton, member for Mount Royal, as Speaker of this house.

As the Prime Minister pointed out a while ago, we have known Mr. Macnaughton for many years. In fact, not only do we know him for his qualities as member of the House of Commons, but more particularly for the talent he has shown as chairman of the public accounts committee.

As I recall, the task of that committee was both difficult and delicate, and when the then prime minister suggested that Mr. Macnaughton be appointed chairman of that committee, I must tell the house that each and every one of us entertained some misgivings as to the manner in which both the members and the chairman of the said committee would behave. However, Mr. Macnaughton discharged his duties in brilliant fashion and also with a sense of fairness to all members regardless of their political affiliation.

I am pleased, therefore, to second the motion of the Prime Minister and wish to add that Mr. Macnaughton, who already has the required qualifications, will show wisdom, intelligence, patience and calm in the performance of his important functions.

[Mr. Pearson.]

(Text):

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Raymond, my first words as Leader of the Opposition will be in full agreement with what the Prime Minister has said regarding the qualifications of Mr. Macnaughton. I am sure this will not be one of those occasions that will be taken as a precedent for the days ahead, in that my first words are of agreement with the leader of the government. As he said, the Speaker of the House of Commons has a high and exalted position, one revered in the history and the traditions of British parliamentary government and, as the Prime Minister has said, a position that commands high qualities, knowledge of parliament and its traditions, recognition of the rights of minorities and the preservation of the ancient privileges of parliament. He needs tact and, as one British Speaker said, the ability to hear when it is appropriate to do so and not to see when it is appropriate not to see. In other words he needs to have that tact which maintains the traditional atmosphere of parliament, which maintains decorum in the thrust of debate, and above all assures that of which the famed Speaker of the British House of Commons, Mr. Lowther, has said:

The House of Commons is not a public meeting, a conference or a convention, where opposition can be stifled by disturbance or silenced by shouting. History records many instances of the failure of representative assemblies to listen to the voice of reason and to be overborne by concerted and prearranged, or even spontaneous, noise and violence.

In other words, if this and all other parliaments are to be effective there must be that co-operation among hon. members to assure that the institution shall be preserved as a deliberative body wherein free speech is the right, not the privilege, of every hon. member of the house.

The Speaker is the custodian of the rights of parliament. He has great rights and great privileges. In the United Kingdom he enjoys freedom from income tax. That is one of the rights that we have not brought to this country for the Speaker, but in these 60 days of decision the Speaker who is chosen may live in hope that this will be included in the promised beneficence of those who now hold office.

Mr. Clerk, I noted in the remarks of the Prime Minister that he did not make any reference to bringing about that of which he spoke on a number of occasions, the permanence of the Speaker, making it possible even under our system for a Speaker to have that authority which comes through permanence. In that connection I would point out that in 1957 I endeavoured to take a step in that direction, but it was not effective. The Prime Minister of today has often spoken in favour of this, and I would have thought this would be an occasion when he would have been able, in his position of responsibility, to give his views thereon. In point of fact it has been debated recently in the British House of Commons, the mother of parliaments. There, on April 23, a bill came before the house which would have provided for the setting up of a special constituency known as the electoral district of St. Stephen.

It is of interest that a similar view has been expressed in our parliament. In the course of the debate, limited as it was, it was pointed out that it is better to have a permanent Speaker who is a member of the House of Commons, rather than one set apart through a medium other than election. In other words, the first commoner should be one of us, and I would hope that we, in the days ahead, will be able, in the setting up of the Speaker's committee, to deal with this question in order to assure that we in our country, recognizing the constitution as it is and the inherent bilingualism of our country, will be able to achieve the strength and authority that comes from permanence of this office.

Now, speaking of the nominee may I say this. The Prime Minister referred to the fact that Mr. Macnaughton had been chairman of the public accounts committee. That was a step we took in order to make that body effective, strong and efficient. He discharged his responsibilities there with ability, capacity and impartiality.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mention was made of the fact that he was raised in Ontario and had gone to Quebec. There are other instances among the members of this house in which that has been an effective result. I congratulate the Prime Minister upon his nomination of Mr. Macnaughton, and in a spirit of co-operation which I hope will be effective in all parts of this house we will endeavour to do our part, if he is chosen, to make him the great Speaker for which his experience as chairman of that committee indicates he has the talents and capacity.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Monsieur Raymond, it would be repetitious to again go over the importance which the position of Speaker holds in this House of Commons and the necessity of having in this position a man who can, in fairness, chair the proceedings of the house and give the stability which only the Speaker can give the house. We do agree with the remarks which have been made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and by the leader of the official opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) in this regard.

I believe it is our responsibility to consider carefully during the days ahead—and I believe this responsibility falls particularly on the Prime Minister—those reforms which will make the position of Speaker permanent in our midst. It is not an easy task that we are asking the hon. member for Mount Royal to perform, if we give our approval, which I trust we will. It would add much to the efficient carrying out of his responsibilities if he were to have the permanence about which the Leader of the Opposition has just spoken.

I trust that the Prime Minister will have more success in the months ahead in establishing the permanency of the Speaker than did the leader of the official opposition when he was prime minister. It is something that we all talk about being in agreement with, but it seems it is very difficult to produce the necessary action to bring in those reforms. We in our group are in favour of action being worked out in the necessary committee, and proposals being studied and put through to effect such a reform.

We as a group do not know Mr. Macnaughton, the hon. member for Mount Royal, so well personally, but last year we were impressed with the manner in which he carried out his responsibilities as chairman of the public accounts committee. If he carries that same ability and fairness into this position, I am sure he will prove himself an able Speaker of this house, if he is given our confidence. For our group it is with a great deal of pleasure that I state we will give our support to his nomination. Certainly the country needs a responsible attitude in this House of Commons toward the needs of our country, and this is a very good way in which it can begin.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Raymond, the New Democratic party members of this house are happy to support the motion which has been moved by the Prime Minister.

We feel that the nominee, Mr. Macnaughton, the member of parliament for Mount Royal, is eminently suited to occupy this high post. In spite of the unanimity which has greeted his nomination we shall witness in a few moments the hon. gentleman having to be dragged to the Speaker's chair. This is part of a long tradition by which members always express great reluctance to occupy this post. This was understandable in days gone by, when it meant the possible loss of your head by an irate monarch, but I am sure that even now the reluctance is not completely feigned. To leave the floor of the House of Commons and accept this exalted position does imply some hardship and some surrender of the things one would like to do, for when a man occupies the Speaker's post he ceases to be the servant of a party or of the government and becomes a servant of this House of Commons. It is his task to see that the rights of all members are protected and maintained, and particularly the rights of minorities and the rights of the House of Commons itself.

Every member of parliament remembers with some pride the words of an earlier speaker of the mother of parliaments, Speaker Lenthall, who said to a monarch, King Charles I, "I have neither ears to hear nor eyes to see but such as this house shall command me". It is this tradition which has made our parliamentary institutions possible, that we have a member who is set aside to be the servant, not of parliament, not of the government, not of the opposition, but of the house itself.

We sir, will be very glad to support this motion and to co-operate with the hon. gentleman when he occupies this post, in order that this twenty sixth parliament may be useful and effective.

(Translation):

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Raymond, it is with great pleasure that I join with the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) to support the nomination of the hon. member for Mount Royal (Mr. Macnaughton) as Speaker of the house.

I feel it is appropriate that, as a member of a Montreal riding, I should be asked to support the nomination of a fellow member from the metropolis of Canada.

That this agreeable task should have been entrusted to a backbencher makes me feel very proud and shows that the Leader of the Opposition gives to ordinary representatives of the people as much importance as to members of the cabinet.

Mr. Macnaughton's personal qualities are well known by the members of the house, where he has friends only.

He showed impartiality—a sine qua non condition to hold the office of Speaker—when he presided over the deliberations of the public accounts committee, of which I had the honour to be a member.

Mr. Macnaughton is loyal, straightforward and honest. He will undoubtedly fill his post with dignity, as did his predecessors.

Therefore, Mr. Raymond, I am very happy to support his nomination and to wish him health and success in his new functions.

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Raymond, on behalf of the French speaking Social Credit members, I am happy to second the earlier statement of our leader, to the effect that we shall support Mr. Speaker in the discharge of his duties. We want to assure him of our fullest co-operation, while stressing that we shall not try to elude our own responsibilities as representatives of the people.

It was mentioned earlier today that the rights of minorities in this house must be protected. We shall, indeed, demand justice for each and every member of the house.

We have not been elected to play politics, but for serious reasons of administration. National affairs are not the concern of a single group, but of the whole nation and its representatives. We must therefore stress the need of affirming a living democracy, which means the freedom of expressing our thoughts and ideas, and also full freedom so that each group in the house may raise its voice loudly and firmly in saying "Long live Canada; long live the two races which are the cornerstone of confederation, and long live all Canadians."

(Text):

The Clerk of the House declared the motion carried in the affirmative, nemine contradicente, and Alan A. Macnaughton, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Mount Royal, duly elected to the Chair of the house.

Mr. Macnaughton was conducted from his seat in the house to the Speaker's chair by Right Hon. L. B. Pearson and Hon. Lionel Chevrier.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members of the House of Commons, may I express to you my humble acknowledgement of the great honour which you have conferred upon me by choosing me to be your Speaker.

I wish to express my gratitude to the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) for his generous words in proposing my name. May I digress just for a moment and say to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) that during the last five years while I was chairman of the standing committee on public accounts I appreciated very much—and I wish to testify in public to this fact—that at all times I had the active friendship and support which on more than one occasion was sorely needed. I wish to take this opportunity of thanking the right hon. gentleman publicly for his kind consideration and for his trust.

My thanks also go to the leaders of the Social Credit party and the New Democratic party for their most generous endorsations, and to the seconder of the motion, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier). I also appreciate very much the remarks of other hon. members. I hope I may be worthy of the high honour of this expression of your confidence.

It will be my duty to preserve the precious heritage of this historic chamber, to maintain decorum and order in debate and above all to exercise fairness and impartiality in protecting the rights of every individual member. I ask for your patience and co-operation in our joint endeavours, and pray that I may be guided in fulfilling my duties in such a way that I may do justice to all hon. members and to this house whose servant I am.

(Translation):

Hon. members of the House of Commons, I thank you most sincerely for the honour you are conferring upon me and for the great token of esteem and confidence you are giving me. I must admit most humbly that I do not possess all the qualities that you were good enough to see in me. I shall strive nevertheless to act in all circumstances with the same dignity, firmness and fairness shown by my predecessors in the chair.

I shall always keep in mind that the fruits of freedom have matured, so to speak, with the help of tradition in the flowery garden of parliamentary procedure whose origin goes back to the Anglo-Norman monarchy. Inherited from our common ancestors, the duality of language and culture which proceeds naturally and normally from this tradition and this freedom is nowhere more evident than in the Canadian parliament. And furthermore, we must remember also that it is enshrined forever in our constitution.

As for the future, I sincerely hope that with your co-operation, I shall succeed in maintaining in this house the proprieties, rights and privileges that we have inherited from the past.

Hon. members of the House of Commons, I thank you once again from the very bottom of my heart.

(Text):

SITTING SUSPENDED

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before making the suggestion which I wish to make I should like to congratulate you on your selection as Speaker of this house. I feel certain that you will conduct yourself in such a way as to strengthen the feeling of the desirability of permanence in the speakership to which the right hon. gentleman opposite referred this morning with such great approval, and which is a matter which can be discussed in the committee on procedure which I hope the house will be setting up without any delay. But I cannot hold out any hope to you for any move by this government which will exempt you from income tax, because of the terrific deficit which we have inherited from the last government.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the sitting be suspended until 3 p.m. this day.

Mr. Speaker: The house has heard the suggestion of the Prime Minister that this sitting be suspended until three o'clock this day. Is it the pleasure of the house to concur in this suggestion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the sitting suspended until the ringing of the bells at 3 p.m. this day.

At 11.35 a.m. the sitting was suspended until 3 p.m. this day.

SITTING RESUMED

The house resumed at three o'clock.

OPENING OF THE SESSION

Mr. Speaker read a communication from the Governor General's secretary announcing that His Excellency the Administrator of the government of Canada would proceed to the Senate chamber at three o'clock on this day, for the purpose of formally opening the session of the dominion parliament.

A message was delivered by Major C. R. Lamoureux, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, it is the pleasure of His Excellency the Administrator that this honourable house attend him immediately in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the house went up to the Senate chamber. Then Hon. Alan Macnaughton, Speaker of the House of Commons, said:

May it please Your Excellency,

The House of Commons have elected me their Speaker, though I am but little able to fulfil the important duties thus assigned to me.

If in the performance of those duties I should at any time fall into error, I pray that the fault may be imputed to me, and not to the Commons, whose servant I am, and who, through me, the better to enable them to discharge their duty to their Queen and country, humbly claim all their undoubted rights and privileges, especially that they may have freedom of speech in their debates, access to Your Excellency's person at all seasonable times, and that their proceedings may receive from Your Excellency the most favourable construction.

The Honourable the Speaker of the Senate, addressing the Honourable the Speaker of the House of Commons, then said:

Mr. Speaker, I am commanded by His Excellency the Administrator to declare to you that he freely confides in the duty and attachment of the House of Commons to Her Majesty's person and government, and not doubting that their proceedings will be conducted with wisdom, temper and prudence, he grants and upon all occasions will recognize and allow their constitutional privileges.

I am commanded also to assure you that the Commons shall have ready access to His Excellency upon all seasonable occasions, and that their proceedings as well as your words and actions, will constantly receive from him the most favourable construction.

Then His Excellency the Administrator was pleased to open parliament by a speech from the throne.

And the house being returned to the Commons chamber:

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to report that, the house having attended on His Excellency the Administrator in the Senate chamber, I informed His Excellency that the choice of Speaker had fallen upon me, and, in your names, and on your behalf, I made the usual claim for your privileges, which His Excellency was pleased to confirm to you.

OATHS OF OFFICE

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-1, respecting the administration of oaths of office.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that when the house did attend His Excellency the Administrator this day in the Senate chamber, His Excellency was pleased to make a speech to both houses of parliament. To prevent mistakes, I have obtained a copy, which is as follows:

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

I welcome you to the first session of the twenty sixth parliament of Canada.

I am honoured today to act for His Excellency the Governor General, whose place in the respect of the Canadian people is second only to that of Her Majesty the Queen and whose early recovery to full health is sincerely wished by us all. I know that all members of this parliament would wish to join in expressing to Her Majesty the sentiments of loyalty which were recently conveyed to her by the Prime Minister.

You are deliberating the course of our country in times of great change throughout the world. These are times that test old virtues. They are times that open up new opportunities. Familiar ways of thought and action are becoming less certain guides. Many old paths are no longer open to us. The task before us is to seek out, with wisdom and imagination, those new paths that will lead us surely forward.

As Canadians we can work with hope. Our country has a proud history. Now there are expanding opportunities open to us. But they depend on our overcoming serious problems. It is only with courage and perseverance and hard work that we will achieve the better life that is within our power, for ourselves and for our children.

Our progress is the work of all the people. In a free country, we are all responsible. The determination of my ministers is that the government through its policies will contribute the leadership, the purpose, the decision that are its responsibilities to the people.

The character and strength of our nation are drawn from the diverse cultures of people who came from many lands to create the Canada that is ours today. The greater Canada that is in our power to make will be built not on uniformity but on continuing diversity, and particularly on the basic partnership of English speaking and French speaking people. My ministers are determined that the partnership shall be truly equal. For that high purpose they are establishing, in consultation with the governments of the provinces, a commission charged to study, thoroughly but urgently, how the fundamentally bicultural character of Canada may best be assured and the contribution of other cultures recognized.

To make us a more united people, the government will in all things strive to strengthen and to give new direction to our Canadian confederation. It will foster the spirit of co-operative federalism, fully respecting the rights of the provinces while safeguarding and extending the equality of opportunity which properly belongs to all Canadians in all parts of our country. In these purposes, as in others, my ministers will seek frequent consultation with the governments of the provinces.

The principles of Canadian external policy are those of the United Nations charter, to maintain peace with justice and respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms; and to promote the welfare of all peoples by international co-operation. My ministers will seek solutions to international problems by diplomacy and negotiation. In particular, my ministers will strive to lessen international tensions and halt the arms race by seeking measures of controlled disarmament, including a treaty to end nuclear tests under reasonable safeguards.

Meantime, my ministers believe that there is no alternative to the maintenance of the defences of the free nations as a deterrent to war. In particular, a strong North Atlantic Treaty Organization, including adequate defence on the north American continent, remains essential to Canada's security. For this purpose, the armed forces of Canada should have available the modern weapons necessary to perform effectively the defensive tasks which Canada has undertaken in the alliance. Next week, we will take pleasure in welcoming to Ottawa the ministerial council of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. My government is convinced that on the foundation of the present alliance a true community of the Atlantic peoples will one day be achieved.

In recent weeks the Prime Minister has had friendly and constructive discussions with the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom and with the President of the United States of America. By such visits and other means the government will continue to improve political and economic relationships with other countries. It is my ministers' intention to assist in enhancing the unique value of the commonwealth partnership in international relations.

Canada's economic progress is vitally dependant on vigorous economic expansion throughout the world. We must expect continuing rapid changes in international trading relationships, changes that face Canada both with problems of adjustment and with new opportunities. My ministers believe that the nations can best achieve economic progress through policies that steadily reduce the barriers limiting trade. It is equally important to pursue active policies for the economic development of the newer nations, for the expansion of trade in primary commodities at reasonably stable prices, and for the improvement of international payments.

Canada will take a constructive part in trade and other economic negotiations. In order to increase employment and production in Canada, it is the purpose of my ministers to expand Canada's export trade, to strengthen our payments balance with other countries, and to ensure increasingly high confidence in our economy and currency.

Steady work is the basic need on which men and women depend for the well-being of themselves and their families. Unemployment, on the serious scale of recent years, is therefore the most urgent of our domestic problems. To provide the many new jobs that are needed every year, we must create new industries. The fiscal and monetary policies of the government will give priority to the encouragement of soundly based industrial expansion.

Provision will be made to assist labour and management to make manpower adjustments required by technological and other industrial changes. The special assistance for technical training will be extended in co-operation with the provinces.

Other measures will be put before you to assist in increasing production and employment in Canada.

You will be asked to provide for the early establishment of a department of industry, which will foster industrial expansion and provide a central point to which industry can look for consultation, stimulus and assistance. It will be proposed that, within the new department, there will be established an area development agency. This agency will work with the provincial governments and other organizations to co-ordinate programs for parts of the country where, because of chronic unemployment, a special thrust for development is needed.

Amendments to the Atlantic Development Board Act will be proposed, to strengthen the board and to provide for a capital assistance fund through which it can promote basic projects in the Atlantic region.

You will be asked to establish a municipal development and loan board, through which municipalities may obtain, with the approval of the provinces, loans and grants to carry out projects which will increase employment and improve services. Amendments to the National Housing Act will also be proposed.

A measure will be placed before you to establish a Canada development corporation, by means of which Canadians can more readily direct their savings to the building of new Canadian industries and to increasing the Canadian ownership of existing industries, which is one of the important objectives of the government.

A measure will be placed before you to establish an economic council of Canada, in order to assist the government, industry and labour to develop means of ensuring in Canada the highest possible levels of employment, of efficient production, and of sustained growth for our economy.

My ministers will pursue constructive policies for the development of Canada's great resources for the benefit of Canadians.

The government will undertake discussions with the government of British Columbia and with the United States, aimed at securing action on the development of the Columbia river.

A new Department of Agriculture act will be placed before you, to provide for two ministers in order that the needs of agriculture in both eastern and western Canada may receive closer attention. My ministers will institute new programs to make farming as a whole more stable and more prosperous. They will strive to expand markets for Canadian farm products both at home and abroad, with special attention to dairy products.

The government is initiating consultation with the provinces to work out a program for national fishery development. My ministers intend to secure the establishment of a twelve mile limit for the use of the Canadian fisheries, taking proper account of treaty and historic rights.

You will be asked to continue the existing payments to the railways, pending the approval of long-term measures concerning transportation. You will be asked to provide additional assistance for the completion of the trans-Canada highway.

My ministers have undertaken to establish a comprehensive system of contributory pensions. The new pensions will be co-ordinated with the existing provisions for old-age security, for the purpose of enabling all Canadians to retire in security and with dignity. While the arrangements required for this great advance in the social security of our people are necessarily complex, the legislation submitted to you will be designed to make the new pension plan operative as soon as possible.

Legislation on unemployment insurance is under consideration and in the meantime you will be asked to ensure that the fund is sustained to meet the claims on it.

The redistribution of electoral districts is overdue. You will be asked to authorize the establishment of a commission to undertake this important task.

A change in the Citizenship Act will be proposed to ensure full equality of rights for all Canadian citizens wherever they were born. Immigration policy will be reviewed.

Members of the House of Commons:

You will be asked to appropriate the funds required for the services and payments authorized by parliament.

You will be invited to establish a special committee of the house to examine defence problems.

It will be proposed that the standing committee on privileges and elections review the Canada Elections Act.

You will be asked to agree to the establishment of a committee on procedure, over which the Speaker will preside, with the aim of strengthening parliament and making it more effective.

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

In addition to the measures already specified, you will be asked to consider other legislative proposals.

May divine Providence guide you in your deliberations.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister) moved:

That the speech of His Excellency the Administrator, delivered this day from the throne to the two houses of parliament, be taken into consideration at the next sitting of the house.

Motion agreed to.

INTERNAL ECONOMY COMMISSION

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister) presented the following message from His Excellency the Governor General:

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons a certified copy of an order in council appointing the Hon. Lionel Chevrier, Minister of Justice, the Hon. J. W. Pickersgill, Secretary of State, the Hon. W. L. Gordon, Minister of Finance, and the Hon. Judy LaMarsh, Minister of National Health and Welfare, to act with the Speaker of the House of Commons as commissioners for the purposes and under the provisions of chapter 143 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1952, intituled: An Act respecting the House of Commons.

STANDING COMMITTEES

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister) moved:

That a special committee be appointed to prepare and report, with all convenient speed, lists of members to compose the standing committees of this house; the said committee to be composed of Messrs. Caron, Churchill, Knowles, Leboe, Pickersgill and Winkler, and that the provisions of standing order 65(1) be suspended in relation to the number of members thereon.

Motion agreed to.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

APPOINTMENT OF CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEES OF THE WHOLE

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a motion regarding the appointment of the chairman of committees of the whole house. For that purpose I wish to submit the name of Lucien Lamoureux, Esquire, the hon. member for Stormont. Mr. Lamoureux is a young man who has been in this house for only a short period of time, but who has many years of public service both in Ottawa and in the civic affairs of his own city of Cornwall. He is a barrister, and he possesses qualities which I think will commend him to the house for the position to which I am nominating him. He is fluent in both languages. I am sure he will prove to be a worthy and respected occupant of the important office to which I now have the privilege of proposing his appointment.

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier), that Lucien Lamoureux, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Stormont, be appointed chairman of committees of the whole house.

Motion agreed to.

APPOINTMENT OF DEPUTY CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEES OF THE WHOLE

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to move that Mr. Herman Maxwell Batten, the hon. member for Humber-St. George's, who has been a member of this house since 1953, be chosen as deputy chairman of committees of the whole house.

Mr. Batten has been in the house for a good many years. He is known to a great many members of this house and of previous parliaments. He is a man of quiet friendliness and tolerant understanding, and he has won the respect of all members who know him. He has qualities which, along with his knowledge of the rules and procedures of this house, would in my opinion make him a very acceptable and worthy deputy chairman of committees.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier):

That when this house adjourns this day it shall stand adjourned until tomorrow at 2.30 p.m., and that the provisions of section 1 of standing order 2 be suspended in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to.

On motion of Mr. Pearson the house adjourned at 4.20 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, May 17, 1963

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NATO—CANADIAN ATTITUDE RESPECTING MULTILATERAL NUCLEAR FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister what attitude the Canadian government intends to take at the NATO meeting next week in regard to the question of setting up a multilateral deterrent or mixed-manned nuclear force among the NATO nations. Does Canada intend to join in such a force? Would he also place before us something of the views that he exchanged and any decisions or determinations made in this connection during the conversations with the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom and the President of the United States?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question of the right hon. gentleman I would say that this matter of the stand to be taken by the government at the forthcoming NATO council meeting on a multilateral nuclear force and an inter-allied nuclear force is now under consideration by the government, and a final decision has not yet been reached. There was no commitment made or asked at the talks that I had with the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom and the President of the United States on this matter. The decision, of course, Mr. Speaker, is a very important one, and while the Canadian delegates to the NATO council meeting will have their instructions before the meeting opens, naturally the Canadian delegation will wish to hear what other delegations to the NATO council meetings say on the matter before a final decision is taken at the council itself.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister let the house know what the nature of the instructions will be in this connection, so the Canadian people will have information as to the course to be taken by Canada, the tentative course to which he has referred?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, no one knows better than the right hon. gentleman that it is not the practice to make public instructions to Canadian delegations to international conferences before those conferences take place. I may have an opportunity to say something about this on Monday during the speech from the throne debate.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is the NATO meeting being held here next week to be a full ministerial meeting with foreign, defence and finance ministers attending, or is it to be solely a meeting of foreign ministers as has frequently been the case with the spring meetings of NATO?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the meeting of the NATO ministerial council will take place on Wednesday next. It was originally intended to be only a meeting of foreign ministers, but ministers of defence will be in attendance and will form part of the delegations of their respective countries.

Mr. Harkness: As a supplementary question, I take it then that this is not a full ministerial meeting, and the finance ministers will not attend?

Mr. Martin: It is not intended that there will be any other ministers in attendance.

(Translation):

FINANCE

QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR LARGER SHARE OF TAXES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Could he tell us if he has received from the premier of Quebec a letter or an official document in which the latter asked that 25 per cent of personal and corporation taxes and 100 per cent of succession duties be turned over to the province?

(Text):

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge no such letter has been received.

(Translation):

Mr. Gregoire: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the Prime Minister aware that an ultimatum has been presented by the province of Quebec in order to secure a larger share of those taxes within a year?

[Later:]

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker, I am aware of no ultimatum from the province of Quebec on any subject.

(Translation):

[Later:]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Justice the question I put earlier to the Prime Minister. Is the Minister of Justice aware that the prime minister of the province of Quebec has given an ultimatum to the federal government concerning the distribution of the various sources of revenue and taxation?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no.

Mr. Gregoire: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the Minister of Justice mean that he did not read about the matter in the papers when it was discussed in the Quebec legislature?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I have no explanation to give the hon. member with regard to the answer I have just given. I have replied as the Prime Minister did, and I think that is a formal answer.

On the other hand, if the hon. member is trying to find some matter for discussion, he might perhaps do so in another place and at another time, but certainly not during the question period.

[Later:]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I have another supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Does that mean that the government feels no obligation to do anything in that respect until a letter or an official request is received?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

[Later:]

Mr. Gerard Chapdelaine (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister of Finance. Has he been reading the newspapers of the province of Quebec since April 8?

INQUIRY AS TO DEBT FREE MONEY POLICY

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Does the Liberal party always favour the debt free money policy, as he intimated last session?

(Text):

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in reply to my hon. friend the Liberal party, as always, is in favour of progressive and sound financial and currency policies.

CLAIMS FOR REFUND OF IMPORT SURCHARGES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. In view of the stand taken a few months ago by a number of ministers of the present government with respect to the validity of the import surcharge order in council, what position does the government now propose to take in connection with the claims for refund being made before the Exchequer Court of Canada?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows there is one case, if not several cases, concerning these import orders now before the court. I am sure the hon. member will agree with me that it would be most improper under the circumstances for me to make any comment thereon.

Mr. Knowles: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the Minister of Justice now table the opinion on this order in council which he, his colleagues and others of us sought to obtain a few months ago?

Mr. Chevrier: From the information which I have in my possession there is no doubt that there is no such written opinion prevalent in the Department of Justice, as we, when on the other side of the house, suspected at the time.

INQUIRY AS TO UNPEGGING OF CANADIAN DOLLAR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the innumerable erroneous statements which have been made by many of the men now occupying the treasury benches—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Simpson: —to the effect that a devaluated Canadian dollar would cause uncontrollable inflation, I should like to ask the minister if he can advise the house when he is going to unpeg the Canadian dollar?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as I said during the course of the election campaign, it is the responsibility of all hon. members of this house, including the hon. member who just asked this question, not to cast any doubts upon the strength or permanence of the dollar.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

(Translation):

[Later:]

Mr. Remi Paul (Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance.

Can the minister inform the house about the pressure brought to bear by the American government in order to re-establish parity between the Canadian and the American dollar?

(Text):

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I know of no such pressure.

[Later:]

Mr. Lawrence E. Kindt (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Finance, who is watching the exchange rate on the Canadian dollar, if when there is a return to par or a movement in that exchange rate, he has made plans to take care of the losses that will be sustained by exporters of grain and cattle.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I would like to answer that question. Canada has a fixed exchange rate, and this government will do everything possible to see that that rate is held.

Mr. Kindt: In the event that it is not held, has the government taken into consideration any plans that will overcome the losses sustained by people who are now enjoying the exchange relationships that exist?

Mr. Gordon: So far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, that is a hypothetical question.

(Text):

AIR TRANSPORT

ALLEGED REFUSAL OF CANADIAN NATO DELEGATION TO USE T.C.A.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Why has the Canadian delegation to NATO in Paris refused to fly the Atlantic by T.C.A. to attend the NATO meeting in Ottawa next week?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I shall be glad to take this question as notice and give my hon. friend a reply on Monday.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

SUGGESTED EXAMINATION OF SECURITY AND INTELLIGENCE BRANCH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. In view of the public discussion that has taken place over the past few months, is the minister prepared to recommend to the house the setting up of a select special committee to examine the functions and activities of the security and intelligence branch of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for sending me notice of his question, although I must admit I had seen it in the press some time ago. The question of the establishment of a committee to deal with a matter such as my hon. friend has in mind is not one for the minister alone to determine. It is one for the house. So far as I am concerned, I must tell my hon. friend that at this time I am not disposed to recommend to the house the establishment of such a committee to look into the functions of the branch to which he has referred.

(Translation):

TRADE

WORLD FAIR—ACCEPTANCE OF MONTREAL SITE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Could he tell the house whether the site of the world's fair to be held in Montreal in 1967 has been definitely chosen and accepted by both the federal government and himself?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member's question, I should like to say that last Sunday I sent a cablegram from Montreal to Mayor Drapeau who was then in Paris. It read as follows:

Further to our meeting of May 9 and our conversations of May 9 and 10, I am pleased to confirm the approval of the site of the 1967 world's fair as indicated in the telegram sent by the former prime minister on March 28, 1963.

Inquiries of the Ministry

(Text):

LABOUR CONDITIONS

CONTINUATION OF WINTER WORKS PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Has a decision been made to continue the winter works program during the coming winter 1963-64?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): The matter referred to by my hon. friend is presently under consideration by the government.

[Later:]

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Labour and ask him whether, in his consideration as to whether or not the municipal winter works incentive program is to be continued, he is getting any resistance from the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who used to call this program a bagatelle.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): There is full co-operation in all regards.

INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION ON MANPOWER ADJUSTMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Labour. Does he intend to introduce this session a bill dealing with manpower adjustment as it relates to technological change and automation in industry? If so, will it be in the same form as the bill which was introduced last session, or does he contemplate any changes in it?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the intended action on the part of the government with regard to this matter was indicated yesterday in the speech from the throne. Beyond that general intention I have no comment to make at the moment.

REPORTED LAY-OFFS AT POINT EDWARD NAVAL BASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Has the minister received any representations regarding the lay-offs which started at the Point Edward naval base a couple of days after his government took office?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I will have to take that question as notice and advise my hon. friend as soon as I can.

REPORTED LAY-OFFS CAUSED BY STEEL STOCKPILING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Will the minister investigate and report on the allegations being made that certain steel companies are stockpiling steel and thus causing serious lay-offs of men in the shipbuilding industry in the maritimes?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in so far as this matter is within the responsibility of the Department of Labour I will be glad to investigate and report to the hon. member.

CAPE BRETON HIGHLANDS NATIONAL PARK— REPORTED LAY-OFFS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I have a question for the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Can he advise me whether he has received any protest in regard to the indiscriminate lay-offs that have taken place at the Cape Breton Highlands national park after the election of April 8?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have no information on that subject. I will take the question as notice and try to give my friend some information.

(Translation):

ARTS, LETTERS AND SCIENCES

TERMS OF REFERENCE OF ROYAL COMMISSION ON BICULTURALISM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister. Does the Prime Minister intend to extend the terms of reference of the royal commission on biculturalism to the Canadian armed forces, both in Canada and overseas?

(Text):

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the terms of reference of the proposed commission on biculturalism will be made known very shortly. I am sure the terms will be very satisfactory to my hon. friend and will cover all aspects of this very important matter.

(Translation):

Mr. Valade: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the Prime Minister tell us whether he intends to recommend that orders be given in French and in English in the armed forces?

(Text):

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, this is a very different question from the terms of reference, dealing with the agenda for the royal commission on biculturalism.

(Translation):

[Later:]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, as a supplementary question, I should like to ask the Prime Minister if, when this royal commission on biculturalism, may I ask the Prime Minister members will be from the province of Quebec as requested by that province?

(Text):

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend's curiosity in this matter will be satisfied, and I emphasize "satisfied", very shortly.

(Translation):

[Later:]

Mr. Gerard Girouard (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, on the subject of the royal commission on biculturalism may I ask the Prime Minister if he intends to designate an equal number of representatives for each province or rather for each of the two ethnic groups in Canada?

Mr. Speaker: That question has already been asked in the Commons today. The same question cannot be asked twice.

(Text):

HEALTH INSURANCE

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Can the hon. lady tell us whether there will be legislation at this session, or consultations with the provinces looking to legislation, with respect to medicare or health insurance for all the people of Canada?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to inform my hon. friend that these matters are under consideration, as always, by the government.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY AS TO ARMS TO BE PROVIDED TO ARMED FORCES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. For the benefit of the house I would like him to define what is meant by the "modern arms weapons" that are to be made available for the Canadian armed forces?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the answer to this question would be extremely long and involved, and in view of the fact that a resolution will be introduced shortly to set up a special select committee on defence problems I think that would be the best time to discuss these matters in detail.

(Translation):

Mr. Gerard Chapdelaine (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister.

Could the Prime Minister tell us if he is aware of the fact that it will cost the Canadian taxpayers $1 billion to equip the Bomarcs with nuclear warheads?

(Text):

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of no such fact, because no such fact exists.

[Later:]

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister and ask him whether any steps have been taken up to this date to renegotiate our nuclear defence commitments, such as he suggested last January?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the whole question of defence policy is under consideration by the government and it will soon be under consideration, I hope, by a select committee of this house.

Mr. Olson: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When can we expect this committee to be set up?

Mr. Pearson: At the very earliest possible date, Mr. Speaker, the house will be given a chance to deal with this matter through a resolution.

[Later:]

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Since I know that he is quite bilingual, will he give himself the pleasure of answering me in French. My question arises from a statement made by the Minister of National Defence, when he said that parliament did not have to be consulted in order to equip our armed forces with nuclear warheads. I would ask the Prime Minister whether he shares that point of view.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Defence did not make the statement attributed to him by my hon. friend. However, I have already said, and the Minister of National Defence agrees with me, that this whole question of defence policy, including nuclear weapons and weapon systems, will be before parliament for consideration at a very early date.

CHURCHILL, MAN.—INQUIRY AS TO MAINTENANCE OF U.S. AIR BASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. In view of the announcement yesterday that the United States air force were discontinuing their strategic air command base at Frobisher Bay, I wonder if the minister could tell the house whether a similar plan is contemplated in relation to Churchill, Manitoba.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I think I had better take this question as notice and reply at the beginning of next week.

THE MINISTRY

REQUEST FOR DESIGNATION OF SENIOR AND JUNIOR MINISTERS OF AGRICULTURE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. D. Clancy (Yorkton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question. Will he designate who are the senior and junior ministers of agriculture, just to clear up confusion when we ask questions in the future; and can he say by whom questions are going to be answered?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman ought to know that there is only one Minister of Agriculture at the present time.

An hon. Member: It had better remain that way.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO ADMINISTRATION OF HOSPITALS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs to allay the fears of many veterans and provide him with a first opportunity to wet his ministerial feet. Is it the intention of the present government to continue the policy of the former government with respect to continuing the administration of veterans hospitals within the Department of Veterans Affairs?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, for the present moment, yes.

[Mr. Pearson.]

[Later:]

Mr. George L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In an earlier reply I understood the minister to say that he is not contemplating a change at present in the operation of the veterans hospitals by the Department of Veterans Affairs. Can the minister say whether the government is contemplating a change in this relationship some time in the future?

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Speaker, this matter is under investigation and consideration. I just had a very brief opportunity to look into the question. A departmental group is at work. However, I do not wish to give here the kind of reply which will disturb the veterans in the hospitals and the staff. I wish to give assurance that, as always in this department, the interests of the veterans and of the staff in the hospitals will be safeguarded.

PENSIONS COMMISSION—INQUIRY AS TO FILLING OF VACANCIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. I should like to ask him whether he has filled the two vacancies on the pensions commission which were existing when the government took office on April 22.

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): To my knowledge there were no vacancies on the commission at that time.

Mr. Churchill: That is hardly an answer which can be accepted by the house. It is within the knowledge of the public generally that there were two vacancies.

I should like to ask a supplementary question. In view of the fact that the Minister of Veterans Affairs misled the public by his statement on May 2—

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I point out to the hon. member that a question should not be preceded by a statement of that kind. If he would give us his supplementary question perhaps we could get to the point quickly.

Mr. Churchill: In view of the fact that there were two vacancies on the pensions commission when the government took office on April 22, I should like to ask the minister why he found it necessary, as he stated, to create a vacancy when those two were in existence; and will he immediately correct the imbalance on the pensions commission and reinstate Mr. McKay so that representation may be restored for first world war veterans and for western Canada?

Mr. Teillet: I have given the hon. gentleman a complete and truthful answer in writing to this question.

TRANSPORT

WINNIPEG-SASKATOON—PROPOSED DISCONTINUANCE OF TRAIN SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister or the Minister of Transport. Have representations been received from anyone in connection with the proposed discontinuance of trains Nos. 9 and 10 from Winnipeg to Saskatoon, and what is the government's intention in this case?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, surely this is a question that should go on the order paper, as my hon. friends well understand.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, this is a question of urgency. These trains will be discontinued tomorrow, and there was not time to get a question on the order paper.

Mr. Speaker: Could I suggest to the hon. gentleman that this question be put on the order paper for tomorrow, or that he get into communication with the minister concerned.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, the trains will be discontinued tomorrow. Unless some decision is made in this regard, I am afraid after that this matter will not have any urgency.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, in the circumstances we will look into this matter at once, this afternoon.

NATIONAL PARKS

GARIBALDI PARK, B.C.—REQUEST FOR INFORMATION AS TO DEVELOPMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arnold Webster (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. In view of the fact that recent comments regarding the early development of Garibaldi park have been made by responsible members of both this house and the legislature of British Columbia, will the minister inform us whether any definite negotiations are proceeding between the two governments at the present time and, if so, what specific offers have been made to develop this recreational area as a national park?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, first I want to thank the hon. member for his courtesy in supplying me with notice of this question. The question with regard to Garibaldi provincial park becoming a national park was first raised in January, 1954 by Hon. Jean Lesage, who made the comment that he would welcome an invitation from the province of British Columbia with a view to transferring it to the national parks system. This was not forthcoming.

Later on, in 1958, Hon. Alvin Hamilton renewed the offer in a letter to the minister of recreation for the province of British Columbia, to which no answer was received. Last December 3 my immediate predecessor, in reply to a question from the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, said that the offer still held good.

There are no definite negotiations under way at the present time, but as I have had occasion to announce recently, we would welcome such an invitation from the province of British Columbia and will do everything in our power to bring this area of fantastic splendour into the national parks system of Canada.

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I should like to ask the Prime Minister a non-contentious question. In view of the minority government situation in this house has the right hon. gentleman given any consideration to following his own suggestion of last March that in such circumstances his party and the Conservatives should get together under new leadership.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): In reply to the hon. gentleman I may say that the people of Canada settled this problem a few weeks ago.

Mr. Fisher: Not very decisively.

(Translation):

[Later:]

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister have any comments to make on the suggestion made by the Quebec minister of municipal affairs, Mr. Laporte, that one way of stopping separatism in the province of Quebec would be to make of Canada a federation of ten independent states?

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Do the parliamentary privileges of a member give him the right to request another member's resignation?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, it is not one of the prerogatives of the Minister of Justice to give a legal opinion. I think that the hon. member should consult his lawyer.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Postmaster General who has just said that he has no advice to take from the Social Credit. Could he now tell us for example if the government is taking advice from American interests?

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

MONTREAL—STEPS TAKEN FOLLOWING MAIL BOX EXPLOSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Remi Paul (Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere): My question is directed to the Postmaster General (Mr. Denis), but first, since he is a native of my riding, I should like to congratulate him upon his appointment.

Could the minister tell us what steps his department intends to take about the explosions in Montreal, yesterday and today, which have damaged five mail boxes, property of the Post Office Department.

Hon. Azellus Denis (Postmaster General): I wish to thank my hon. friend for his congratulations. Indeed, five mail boxes were destroyed by bomb explosions. Also, this morning, four more mail boxes had to be covered with sand to prevent any accident.

Sergeant-major Walter Leja defused the first two bombs, but was unfortunately killed while trying to defuse the third one.

I wish to take this opportunity to offer my deepest sympathies to his family.

Now, in the face of this danger, we have decided to use trailers to remove these mail boxes and transport them to a safe place. We have taken this course of action after having received phone calls and after having been warned by those who are clearing letter boxes that they contained bombs. We have decided to take this action and we shall have to continue to do so. I believe that after 12 hours the danger will have disappeared. We have notified the municipal police authorities who are searching for the offenders, while setting up a special watch. I am waiting for more news from Montreal on this matter.

[Mr. Marcoux.]

INQUIRY AS TO SALARY INCREASES FOR EMPLOYEES

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Postmaster General. Since the 60-day period for the great Liberal achievements is drawing to a close and before my hon. friend becomes a member of the Senate, I would like to ask him if he intends to raise the salaries of the post office employees, which he so often advocated when he was a member of the opposition?

Hon. Azellus Denis (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member for St. Mary, who gives way as usual to his fancies, he is surely aware of the fact that the matter of salaries is a responsibility of the civil service commission. A survey has been made and, unless I am mistaken, the results are being studied at present by the treasury board. Accordingly, the announcement of the increases will be made in due time.

Mr. Valade: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the Postmaster General mean by this that he does not intend to raise the salaries of the post office employees?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I will say again that as soon as the report on the question is published, the hon. member will find the information he desires.

[Later:]

ALLEGED CONTINUATION OF PATRONAGE IN DEPARTMENT

Mr. Gerard Chapdelaine (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Postmaster General. Does the minister intend to maintain in his department the patronage which existed under the Conservative government, as well as under the previous Liberal administration, in the award of contracts for the conveyance and delivery of mail?

Hon. Azellus Denis (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, since we came to power only a few weeks ago, I do not feel we are responsible for everything that was done in the past under the Conservative government. But, at any rate, I do not think the Liberal party has any lesson to be taught, especially from the Social Credit party.

Mr. Chapdelaine: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister suggesting that the Social Credit party could give some advice concerning departmental administration?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's question is out of order.

POSTAL SERVICE

INQUIRY AS TO TWO DAILY MAIL DELIVERIES

Mr. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General. Could the minister tell us if he intends to re-establish two mail deliveries a day as he so often requested from his two predecessors?

Hon. Azellus Denis (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, contrary to the statement just made by the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot, I must say that I never promised that mail would be delivered twice a day. I simply reminded the house that the former postmaster general, the Hon. William Hamilton, had made such a promise without keeping it.

LOTTERIES

INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENT OF CRIMINAL CODE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Could the minister advise the house whether he intends to propose an amendment to the Criminal Code in order to allow provinces to organize lotteries if they wish to, as has been requested by Mr. Lesage on behalf of the province of Quebec?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has just asked a question which calls for a very complex answer.

When I came to the department, I learned that they had quite a file on this. In due time I intend to study those documents in order to see what should be done. I cannot elaborate further on this matter today.

[Later:]

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Is the Minister of Justice aware of the fact that some hon. members from the province of Quebec have promised that if the Liberals were elected, a Liberal government would establish lotteries?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, under the circumstances, I do not think I could add anything to the answer I have already given. I would have to get more information on the matter.

(Text):

SUGAR

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO PRICE INCREASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question which I believe should be addressed to the Minister of Justice, but if it should not I am sure he will correct me and redirect it. Can the minister assure the house that the government is taking appropriate measures to study, and if possible to check, the very marked and continuing increase in the price of sugar in Canada?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I did anticipate this question. The reply is that a study is now proceeding by the director of research in the combines investigation branch of the department. I am informed, however, in a preliminary manner that the question of the increase in the price of sugar in so far as refined sugar is concerned is due in large part to the increase in the price of raw sugar caused, first, by the shortage of crops, and also by the fact that there has been a loss of crops in certain parts of the world from which Canada imports. I am also informed that the increase in the price of refined sugar is proportionate to the increase in the world price of raw sugar. However, when I have a more detailed report I shall be glad to communicate it to the house.

[Later:]

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Justice which is related to the question asked earlier by the hon. member for New Westminster. I wonder whether the minister, in the investigation which he said he would make, would seek information and inform the house as to why sugar prices appear to be advancing drastically in Canada vis-à-vis much lower prices across the line in the United States?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I tried to indicate in my earlier reply that the information I had was that that was not entirely the case. However, I did add that an investigation was being made by the director of the combines investigations branch, and I will take notice of my hon. friend's question to see if any additional information can be given in that respect.

[Later:]

Mr. Harold W. Danforth (Kent, Ont.): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the drastic increase in the price of sugar in recent months, is the government now prepared to take measures to financially encourage the production of sugar beets in Canada and the increase of our own domestic supply?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, these matters are all under consideration. I might say that the price of sugar on the world market a year ago I believe was $2.70 per hundred pounds, and it has now risen to over $13 per hundred pounds. There is a serious shortage of sugar throughout the world. We have all these things under consideration, and I am sure we will have a satisfactory answer for the hon. member.

UNITED NATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO REPLACEMENT OF CANADIAN DELEGATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gordon H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Would the minister advise the house whether Brigadier J. H. Price has been replaced as Canadian delegate on the fifth committee of the United Nations and, if so, why?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I regret to say that Brigadier Price has not accepted an invitation to act as a member of the Canadian delegation at the special assembly of the United Nations which opened on May 14 last.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—INQUIRY AS TO RENEGOTIATION OF TREATY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister. Could the Prime Minister inform the house when he expects to commence discussions with the premier of British Columbia relating to the renegotiation of the Columbia treaty?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Very shortly indeed, I hope, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister with regard to the Columbia river treaty. Has any definite date been set for discussions with the premier of the province of British Columbia?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker, not yet.

Mr. Pugh: May I ask a supplementary question. Are you, sir, in correspondence with the premier so that date may be set?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the premier of British Columbia knows our desire to get ahead with this matter as quickly as possible. There are certain preliminary questions to be studied with the United States before discussions with the premier of British Columbia would be constructive. It is these preliminary questions which are at the present time being cleared with Washington so that we may present to the province of British Columbia, with the complete knowledge of the United States, changes that are considered desirable by this government.

Mr. Pugh: Has the subject of the discussions with the United States been put to the premier of British Columbia as yet?

Mr. Pearson: Those matters are going to be discussed with the premier of British Columbia, who, only the other day, said he was well aware of the attitude of this government toward this matter.

[Later:]

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In the event that changes are to be made in the Columbia river treaty may the house have the assurance of the Prime Minister that the treaty and any changes which are contemplated or advised will be referred to the external affairs committee of the house?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, it is the intention of the government to refer this matter as soon as possible to the external affairs committee of the house.

(Translation):

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

QUEBEC—PARTICIPATION OF R.C.M.P. IN INVESTIGATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier). Could the minister tell the house whether the R.C.M.P. is involved in the investigations currently being carried out on the activities of the F.L.Q. in the province of Quebec?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, according to our constitution the administration of justice comes under exclusive provincial and municipal jurisdiction and under the penal code it is the responsibility of the provincial and municipal authorities to carry out the necessary investigations and to make the necessary indictments.

Under the circumstances, I do not see any reason for changing this procedure.

Mr. Gregoire: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When there are troubles in the federal parks, is the R.C.M.P. supposed to deal with the matter as was the case when nthe Wolfe monument was toppled on the plains of Abraham?

Mr. Chevrier: I believe the situation to be about the same, except when the municipal and the provincial authorities ask the R.C.M.P. to step in. In such a case the circumstances are different, but I do not know what is the situation about the F.L.Q.

I believe the mounted police offered their services to the provincial and municipal police forces.

(Text):

GRAIN

WHEAT—INTRODUCTION OF TWO PRICE SYSTEM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Is it the intention of the government to bring down early in this session legislation to provide a two price system for wheat with a guaranteed price of $2 per bushel to the wheat growers, as was promised by the Prime Minister during the election campaign?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we should like to take that question as notice.

PUBLIC SERVICE

LEGISLATION TO PROVIDE FOR COLLECTIVE BARGAINING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Can he say whether there will be at an early date legislation providing for collective bargaining in the public service?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot say when legislation will be brought down. However, this is a matter to which this government is committed.

(Translation):

[Later:]

GLASSCO COMMISSION IMPLEMENTATION OF MINORITY REPORT RECOMMENDATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister without Portfolio, the hon. member for Outremont. Could he tell the house whether he intends fully to implement the recommendations of the Therrien minority report of the Glassco commission?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, that question is under consideration. During the next few weeks we will be in a position to announce the intentions of the government.

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm has certainly asked the hon. member for Outremont-St. Jean a very definite question that is, whether the minister intends to—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Valade: —and the minister—

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not think it is within the competence of any hon. member to pursue this matter much further. The minister did his best to answer in a very short space of time. In due course I am sure government policy will be announced.

AGRICULTURE

DAIRY PRODUCTS—INQUIRY AS TO CALLING OF CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Has the minister as yet had an opportunity to continue discussions with his colleagues the ministers of agriculture in Ontario and Quebec with respect to the various problems affecting the dairy industry, and also of discussing these matters with the heads of the dairy organizations? If he has not had an opportunity to do so, does he intend to arrange in the immediate future such a conference as that which has taken place in the past?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, before we dealt with the present policy, which has been widely publicized, I called in the dairy council and also the dairy farmers of Canada from coast to coast, and we discussed the policy with them. We had only two or three days to take care of this policy because, as you know, on May 1 it would have become effective on 80 per cent of the 10 year average if we had not done something in a hurry. This matter should have been taken care of long ago. Nevertheless we had to come up with something fairly quickly in order to protect the dairy farmers and the dairy industry of Canada, and this is the program which has been publicized. We were careful to seek the advice of all people interested in the dairy industry before we announced the policy which is now in effect.

[Later:]

Mr. Nesbitt: I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Has the minister as yet had an opportunity to arrange for reopening discussions with the ministers of agriculture for Ontario, and Quebec, as well as with the heads of dairy organizations, with a view to arriving at some solution of the dairy industry's problems? I refer particularly to the question of the pooling of milk.

Mr. Hays: We have not as yet, Mr. Speaker, had an opportunity to arrange for these discussions.

INQUIRY AS TO CONTINUATION OF ACREAGE PAYMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lawrence E. Kindt (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Agriculture whether he has had time yet to give consideration to the making of the usual acreage payments to western farmers, which they are expecting?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): No, we have not, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Kindt: A supplementary question. In view of the fact that the minister has not yet had time, and I take his word for that, is it his intention to do so?

Mr. Hays: Mr. Speaker, we are going to take a look at all agricultural policies as one relates to the other. The agricultural policy of the former government and our agricultural policy differ somewhat, but we are taking a long look at the situation with a view to doing the very best we can for agriculture from coast to coast.

Mr. G. D. Clancy (Yorkton): If the minister is not prepared to make acreage payments, has he considered paying $3 a bushel for the new crop year?

FISHERIES

NORTH PACIFIC COMMISSION—EXTENSION OF JAPANESE FISHING RIGHTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to direct to the Minister of Fisheries. Can the minister advise the house whether, in implementing the contentious recommendation of the north Pacific fisheries commission extending fishing rights to Japan, he incurred much opposition from his British Columbia colleagues in the cabinet, who opposed such a move a few months ago unless the matter was first referred to the standing committee on marine and fisheries?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member I wish to say that when the decision was taken by the government, on a matter which should have been decided months ago, it was taken by all members of the government.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister if his department sought a legal opinion as to whether this alteration in the treaty could be made by executive order?

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, all information required before taking such a decision was obtained by the government.

BROADCASTING

REQUEST FOR MEETING OF HEADS OF ORGANIZATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State in one of his roles, this time as house oracle for the broadcasting system in Canada, whether he did announce a decision that the heads of the board of broadcast governors, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and the Canadian association of broadcasters were to get together in order to determine what is wrong or what is inadequate with respect to the broadcasting legislation; and if he did will he give us more information as to his purpose?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I did not give any directions to anyone in this matter, as I would have no constitutional right to do so. I did make a request to the heads of the B.B.G. and the C.B.C. and the chairman of the Canadian association of broadcasters. I made the request to them severally and then made it publicly jointly, that they should meet together as individuals to try to make a brief report on the points of broadcasting policy on which they were in agreement and those points on which they differed, and to indicate the differences as clearly as possible. I thought this would be helpful to the whole of the Canadian public though, of course, we recognize that the paramount interest in broadcasting is in none of these three organizations but in the public itself.

It seemed to me, however, that before embarking on any changes it would be desirable to learn from the people most closely associated with broadcasting just how much agreement there was among them and the points on which they really differed. I read a written statement at a meeting, and I would be very glad to make a copy of that statement available to any hon. member who would like to see it.

Mr. Fisher: I should like to ask the minister whether this unofficial inquiry that he has suggested should get under way is likely to be preliminary to a general broadcasting inquiry such as we have had in the past, the Fowler inquiry, or to a parliamentary inquiry by a house committee.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, in the brief time this government has been in office there has not been an opportunity for the cabinet to give consideration to the question of whether or not there should be an inquiry. Until that is done I have nothing to say on the subject.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I should like to address a supplementary question to the Secretary of State. He has spoken about roles. Is it true that the Secretary of State is having difficulty in changing his personality from that of Jack the Ripper to jolly Jack?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I doubt whether the personality of any hon. member is a proper subject for inquiry in this chamber.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

REQUEST FOR U.S. REPORT ON DANGER FROM PESTICIDES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister of national health, welfare and truth.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fairweather: Has the minister received a copy of the report that was made yesterday or the day before to President Kennedy by his science advisory committee concerning the threat to life and health resulting from the overuse of pesticides? If so, will the minister see that the members of the house are supplied with a copy of that report? Are changes contemplated in the controls related to the use of pesticides?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I wish to thank the hon. member for the appellation by which he addressed me. I was not aware that there had been a change in the name of my department. However, I am glad, as a member of this government, to be known as a seeker after truth. I am sure the Canadian people will find this a refreshing change after the past few years.

In answer to my hon. friend's query, I should like to thank him for the notice which he gave me a few moments ago, and advise him that the answer is no.

THE BUDGET

INQUIRY AS TO PROBABLE DATE OF PRESENTATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister of Finance tell the house on what date he plans to bring down his budget?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have every expectation that a budget will be brought down within 60 days of April 22.

(Translation):

CANADIAN FLAG

INQUIRY AS TO ADOPTION OF NATIONAL FLAG

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

Does the Prime Minister intend to submit to the House of Commons—as he promised to do during his election campaign—a bill for the adoption of a distinctive national flag for Canada?

(Text):

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, that is a commitment of this government to be discharged within two years of the taking of office.

(Translation):

[Later:]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): I should like to direct an additional question to the Prime Minister. Will he entrust the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate with that choice?

(Text):

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

ADDRESS IN REPLY MOVED BY MISS PAULINE JEWETT AND SECONDED BY MR. AUGUSTE CHOQUETTE

The house proceeded to the consideration of the speech delivered by His Excellency the Administrator at the opening of the session.

Miss Pauline Jewett (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I have just received a very warm and very enthusiastic greeting and I am grateful for it. May I say first of all, I am sure on behalf of everyone here, that we were sorry His Excellency the Governor General was not able to deliver the speech from the throne yesterday and we join with the administrator in wishing him a speedy and full return to good health. Also at the outset, Mr. Speaker, I hope it is safe for me to assume that hon. members opposite have now used up their stock of questions for this session.

I should like to congratulate you, sir, upon your election to the distinguished office you now hold, an office which you, in turn, will I know make even more distinguished. I should also like to congratulate the other new officers of the house, the chairman of committees who is also deputy speaker, and the deputy chairman of committees on their appointments.

Further, and I hope again on behalf of everyone, I must not forget to say a word of good wishes to the leader of the Social Credit party who, I believe, is celebrating his birthday today.

To the new cabinet ministers and parliamentary secretaries, and especially to the new Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Pearson), may I offer my warmest, most sincere congratulations.

Finally, to all hon. members of the house who like me are new to it, may I assure them that I will be rooting for them when they, too, go into orbit.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the Prime Minister for the honour he has done the constituency of Northumberland in asking me, its representative, to move the address in reply to the speech from the throne. Of course, if I may say so, Northumberland is entirely worthy of this honour. In fact I have felt that it was in a class by itself ever since I first visited it as a small child many summers ago; and now that I am one of its residents, indeed since April 8 of this year its representative, I am even more acutely aware of its many virtues.

For one thing, Mr. Speaker, Northumberland has as great natural beauty as I think you will find anywhere in Canada—lovely lakes, hills, streams and woods—and I assure you it has a thoroughly delightful climate at all seasons of the year. My only wonder is that half the population of Canada has not taken up residence there. Then too, where man has added, he has added well—in the usual transportation facilities, harbours, highways, railways and waterways. In excellent farms of great variety producing dairy cattle, beef, pigs, sheep, tobacco and fruits, particularly apples, and vegetables. In attractive villages and towns with many delightful and historic buildings and great diversity of industry ranging from furniture, plastics and jello manufacturing, cloth, leather goods and rifle production, to cheese factories, canneries and many more.

Above all its people, its main asset, I have always found to be warm and friendly, intelligent and co-operative, and I have found this even when I lost last year as much as when I was successful in this year's election campaign.

As I have said, the only thing that leaves me with any wonder is that many, many others do not join us there. Perhaps one of the main reasons they do not, and indeed why the population has not increased very rapidly latterly is because there is quite a degree of distress in the constituency. In this, of course, it is not unique. It is like many other parts of Canada. There is a great deal of unemployment and the people who are out of work are out of work not necessarily because of seasonal factors but rather because there is basic, or what we call nowadays, structural unemployment, and they cannot get work at any time of the year. Even those who are employed one finds frequently are living at or close to the margin of subsistence.

Industry has not been developing very rapidly. Indeed in my own county some industries, particularly in canning, have been closed down. Harbours have not been developed very speedily and farmers somehow have not yet been able to be assured of prices that will always enable them to cover their continually increasing costs. These are things we know exist in Northumberland and everywhere in Canada today.

People talk about the affluent society we have. It is quite possible there are a few members of our society who are genuinely affluent; but with very large numbers, I should think close to a third, this is certainly not the case. Many of them live in conditions that should not be tolerated by any decent, thoughtful society, nor is this necessarily the fault of the individuals concerned.

We still hear people talking about the good old days of self reliant individualism when all an individual had to do was to get up and go. It is always very pleasant to wish we could return to those days; but the fact of the matter is, and we could see this if sometimes we were not blind, that we have moved from an individualist society to a collectivist society, a society where it is very difficult for a great many of us to make the decisions that affect our own destinies. These decisions are increasingly taken by others on our behalf, particularly by large organizations which exist throughout our whole economy. These decisions are simply beyond our control. When we are unemployed or in distress it is extremely difficult for us nowadays to do a very great deal about it ourselves on our own initiative.

This brings me, Mr. Speaker, to the main burden of my remarks, namely, a discussion of the philosophy, the leadership, the program and policies of the party that now forms the government of this country. It seems to me that the Liberal party, more than any other party in Canada, is aware of the kinds of change in our society that I have been discussing. Indeed, there is a sentence in the third paragraph of the speech from the throne which reads, "Familiar ways of thought and action are becoming less certain guides". I think the party, or most members within the party at any rate, are prepared to accept this growth toward a collectivist society that we have witnessed and furthermore—and this is even more important—are prepared to accept the argument that such a society can simply not be self-regulating, that such a society does require direction and guidance from the main institutions that the people have to help them, namely governments at all levels, municipal, provincial and federal.

It is through these institutions of government—and of course we here are concerned primarily with the institutions at the federal level—that we can hope somehow to achieve the ultimate end which I am sure we all have, namely the enlargement of the human spirit, the enlargement of the dignity and the equality of all individuals. Mr. Speaker, I do feel—and I trust I am right—that this party, traditionally and today a party of reform, does move forward in this direction with a greater sense of purpose and a greater sense of urgency than one is likely to find elsewhere, and therefore, having no central myth of either unregulated free enterprise on the one hand or all-inclusive socialism on the other, but having only a belief in the necessity of our institutions of government helping all of us and doing for us what we cannot do for ourselves, having only the belief that we must adapt as times change, is more likely to adapt itself to these changing times. I believe this is why we are on this side of the house today.

Another important ingredient in any political party in any democratic society, quite apart from its philosophy, outlook or set of attitudes, is of course its leadership. In the past, oddly enough, democratic theories did not pay much attention to leadership; it was just assumed, I suppose, that somehow it would grow up. But we have realized, particularly since the 1920's and 1930's of the present century, how important leadership is, not only in the attaining of power but also in the exercise of that power. Sometimes different qualities are required for the exercising than are required for the attaining. We are principally concerned with the kinds of qualities that are required for the exercising of authority. Here again—and I hope I shall not be accused of being too partisan—I do feel, and feel very strongly, that in this party we have in our leader, the new Prime Minister of Canada, the kinds of qualities of leadership that we need today. He is himself a man with purpose, a man who has a sense of direction. Perhaps a sense of purpose, a sense of direction, is as important as anything else. It is particularly important when we are going to have to break so many new fields of endeavour, when we are going to have to cast off old habits and ways of doing things in this country.

Our Prime Minister himself wants to and will pursue policies which will, I believe, enable us to live a better and fuller life. He is able, because he has courage, integrity, decisiveness and a facility for getting along with people both at home and abroad, to work with others and accommodate their needs and wishes without losing his own sense of direction, and then to carry out the decisions that are jointly reached. He is able to consult with others about the problems of today, to adapt to their needs and then finally to carry through the many tasks that must be carried out. I believe, Mr. Speaker, we are very fortunate in having as the Prime Minister the kind of man who is able to do these things.

An attitude or outlook, a particular kind of leadership, are all-important, but of course they must have with them a program or set of policies that will make the philosophy meaningful and will make the leadership even more purposeful.

This brings me to the speech from the throne, Mr. Speaker, which I am sure all hon. members have now read and which I am sure they will agree with me does present in precise, eminently readable prose, the kinds of things that we feel are urgently needed to be done in the first session of this twenty sixth parliament. Naturally, great emphasis is placed upon those parts of our program which are, we hope, going to bring Canada out of the economic doldrums, which are going to reduce unemployment, create greater opportunities for employment and improve the standard of living of all Canadians. These measures are several in number. They include, as I am sure all hon. members now know, the establishment of a department of industry and within it an area development agency, amendments to the Atlantic development board to strengthen it and give it capital funds, the establishment of a Canada development corporation, of an economic council for Canada, a second minister of agriculture to look after our needs in all parts of the country, and closely allied to this, the provision for greater assistance for technical training and for the establishment of a contributory pension plan.

I think we should make it clear that these measures are not simply a sort of potpourri of the kinds of things we thought might be meaningful to a particular group of voters here or a particular group of voters there. These measures are part of an integrated whole, designed to restore and promote our society's economic health and social well-being. There are more measures than I have outlined; there are more measures, indeed, than are outlined in the speech from the throne that will be brought into this integrated whole. Taken all together they are what we hope to do to provide for fuller employment, to encourage the expansion of industry, to help the municipalities to provide needed services, to develop a greater degree of social security for all Canadians, to encourage the investment by Canadians of their savings in Canadian enterprise, to provide for a more stable and prosperous agriculture. These are things we are hoping to do through these measures.

There are other things which I am sure hon. members would like to see us do right away. There are other things I should like to see us do right away. But one can only accomplish a certain number of tasks in a given period of time. Sometimes I think it would perhaps be possible to try to do everything at once and carry out a crash program on every front, but this is not always possible. My own feeling is that in the domestic program we have presented, in the measures I have just been discussing, we have done about as much as is feasible, at least within these first 60 days.

I am particularly pleased that we have emphasized, as indeed the Liberal party has always emphasized, the fundamentally bicultural character of Canada. What we hope to do is to promote and develop this bicultural character of our country. I should like to have seen still greater emphasis on cultural developments generally in Canada. This is one of the things we are concerned about; it is one of the subjects about which we shall have more to say in the near future.

I am still concerned about the state of public health in this country. I do not see how anyone can run for parliament and not be concerned about it. This, too, is a subject with which we shall be dealing as soon as we possibly can. We have taken a big bite, initially, in attempting to restore economic health and social well-being in the measures which we have proposed and which I have been briefly discussing.

Since the kind of measures which will be necessary in this country from now on must inevitably increase the role of government and lead to a greater degree of government regulation and intervention, may I say how glad I am to see toward the end of the speech from the throne a provision for the establishment of a committee on procedure over which you, sir, will be presiding. Certainly, as the positive state becomes more positive and as we move further and further into the era of government regulation, as I suggest we must do in the collectivist society in which we are living, it becomes essential that we should devise the means whereby we can control executive action through this house—a means whereby we ourselves can understand what is going on and make useful contributions, as well as of seeing that what is being done at the administrative level is being done justly and fairly. I expect it will be the function of this committee to look into these matters, as well as, I hope, revamping the whole committee system of this house, realigning its tasks in such a way as to bring its work more closely in line with the various responsibilities of government. Perhaps after that, in order to ensure the greatest degree of fairness and justice in the administration of complex public policy, we might give consideration to the question of reforms in administrative procedure. It might even be possible to introduce an administrative procedure act. This, I believe, is essential if we are going to pursue the kind of policies which we in this party feel are necessary for Canada.

We must also, of course, remember that we in Canada are not living in isolation, alone in the world. We must always bear in mind that the policies which others are pursuing have a direct bearing on what we do here. I am particularly pleased, therefore, to see the reference in the speech from the throne to what we in this party and in this government hope to do to associate ourselves as closely as we can with developments in other countries and to help to guide the changing relationships between countries in the rest of the world. This will involve changes in trading patterns—changes we have already been hearing about. It will involve us intimately in defence arrangements, as has been the case in the last several years. It will involve us even more than in the past in the activities of the United Nations. It will involve us in efforts to reach some form of disarmament agreement with the other countries of the world. So we must realize that what we do here is but one aspect of what must be done everywhere in the mid-twentieth century, if society as a whole is to advance.

One other point. It is not only the western world which is undergoing change. It is not only the countries of Asia and Africa, even, which are undergoing change. We should also bear in mind that central and eastern Europe, too, are undergoing change—that the whole system of international communism is undergoing change. Indeed, the tendency toward the bipolarization of power which we have known since the second world war may be undergoing change. I hope we may encourage our trading, cultural and other relationships with some of these countries in the communist world. I hope we may do this, because it is in this way more than any other, possibly, that we can be sure of peace. There are tendencies toward incipient pluralism in international communism and this, I think, is something of which we should take advantage. The best way to do it is by expanding our trade and cultural contacts with the rest of the world, and not simply with the western world. This may also lead—and I believe it should lead—to diplomatic recognition being given where it is not now extended.

I am particularly pleased that our attitude toward the international scene as well as toward the domestic is one of purpose, indeed one of urgency; and I feel that with this party forming the government of Canada we shall be able to fulfil this sense of purpose and this sense of urgency, both at home and abroad.

I should therefore like to move, seconded by my hon. friend from Lotbiniere (Mr. Choquette):

That the following address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General of Canada:

To His Excellency Major General the Right Honourable Georges P. Vanier, Companion of the Distinguished Service Order, upon whom has been conferred the Military Cross and the Canadian Forces' Decoration, Governor General and Commander-in-Chief of Canada.

May it please Your Excellency:

We, Her Majesty's most loyal and dutiful subjects, the House of Commons of Canada, in parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Excellency for the gracious speech which His Excellency the Administrator has addressed to both Houses of Parliament.

(Translation):

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbiniere): Mr. Speaker, before saying anything about the emotion I feel in speaking in this chamber, I wish to offer to Her Majesty's representative my best wishes for a full and speedy recovery.

Mr. Speaker, one always feels deeply moved when speaking before such a distinguished gathering for the first time.

I thank the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) for the honour he has bestowed upon me, knowing that he wanted first of all to pay tribute to the riding of Lotbiniere, which I have the privilege to represent, and especially to youth, the young people that our party has brought to life, which flatly contradicts those who, for a long time, labelled us an "old party", in particular the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire).

Mr. Speaker, following the remarks made by the hon. member for Northumberland—

(Text):

May I also extend my warmest congratulations to the hon. member for Northumberland (Miss Jewett) for the distinction, the charm and the great eloquence with which she performed her duty and delivered the wonderful speech we have just heard.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, I should like to offer you my warmest congratulations, not so much to follow a well-established tradition but because it is most obvious that your appointment is fully justified considering your outstanding capabilities, your deep sense of impartiality and the exceptional ability you always showed during parliamentary debates when you were chairman of a committee of the house. Indeed, your great qualities made you the likeliest choice to fill the honourable but difficult position of Speaker of the House of Commons.

I should also like to offer the Prime Minister my heartfelt congratulations for having succeeded in winning the confidence of the Canadian people. Canadians were happy to give him their confidence because they knew that under his efficient leadership our country would enjoy prosperity.

Mr. Speaker, may I express my most heartfelt appreciation to the voters of Lotbiniere for their confidence. I shall, in turn, assure them once again of my constant and persistent devotion when defending their interests in this house.

You know, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette)—I am sorry that he is not in the house at this moment—has helped to elect me in Lotbiniere riding, and I trust that the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire), will convey this message to him.

Indeed, resorting to the strategy of the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville (Mr. Dupuis), I challenged the hon. member for Villeneuve to face me in a contradictory meeting. To justify his absence, he said that he had to meet leaders and not lieutenants; indeed, considering recent events within the Social Credit party, we have to admit that the hon. member for Villeneuve has a certain taste for "secrecy", for he stated during a meeting: "I say to him who challenges me to face him in a contradictory meeting, that I shall see quite enough of him in Ottawa". His wish was so well fulfilled that the standard bearer of the Social Credit party in my county lost his deposit.

Mr. Speaker, we have gone before the people with a well-defined platform, containing the following essential points: first of all, a new start for the Canadian economy; restoring security and Canada's international standing; save our confederation which today is the butt of all sorts of ideological trouble.

The speech from the throne, though a succinct one, shows that the Liberal party has the will and determination to uphold its pledges to the people.

We want to revive Canadian economy. In order to do so, the government, in the speech from the throne, advocates the creation of a department of industry. In our era of technological revolution, where science is progressing at a terrific speed, and industrial development gets into a giant's stride, it is of primary importance that the Canadian government have a department of industry.

The speech from the throne also advocates the setting up of a system of contributory pensions. Here, Mr. Speaker, we can realize that in Canada the Liberal party has always been a pioneer in social legislation, because its philosophy is precisely based on the dignity of the human person. Thus, family allowances, set up by the Liberal party, establish the family as the basic unit of a rich and high-minded society.

The Liberal party, aware of the need for old age security, also established it. It is that party that set up old age pensions.

The Liberal party, aware of the fact that a nation that wants to be rich, strong and great must enjoy good health, established hospital insurance.

And, still in the same field, the Liberal party always in the van of progress, now advocates the establishment of a contributory pension plan to improve our social security system in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, in the Liberal party's platform the development and the rehabilitation of the agricultural industry is proposed, along with the appointment of a second minister of agriculture.

As a representative of a rural riding, I can only welcome this eminently beneficial measure which will provide for the appointment of a minister of agriculture to deal with the problems of the eastern farmers, which are so numerous and so pressing.

The Quebec farmers face serious problems, whether in the dairy farming, in the hog raising industry, in the mechanization of farms—which entail fantastic outlays for our farmers. Further, their insufficient income cannot provide them with adequate comfort. The department of agriculture for eastern Canada will have heavy responsibilities. It shall probably not be able to solve completely all the problems that exist.

The department of agriculture for eastern Canada will certainly have a heavy task, and will probably not be able to solve all the existing problems.

Georges Clemenceau used to say: "The state has too many children to be a good father". One thing is certain: the new department will be able to offer appreciable help to our eastern farmers, more particularly in the province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, the program of the Liberal party advocates a revival of Canada's international prestige. It is enough to mention the name of the Prime Minister to have a concrete and exalting vision of the international prestige Canada will enjoy in the years to come.

As for the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) we know that under the Liberal regime, from 1945 to 1957, he built up our whole system of social security. It is quite clear that his awareness of social problems will help him become a first-rate diplomat.

Mr. Speaker, for all those reasons and motives, I am honoured and pleased to second the address in reply to the speech from the throne.

(Text):

On motion of Mr. Diefenbaker the debate was adjourned.

(Translation):

MR. DENIS—CORRECTION OF STATEMENT MADE EARLIER IN PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Azellus Denis (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, before the house adjourns, may I raise a question of privilege in order to make a corrective statement?

Contrary to what I had been told by the Westmount police, fortunately Sergeant-major Walter Leja is not dead, although he is seriously wounded. Everything is being done to save his life.

(Text):

On motion of Mr. Pearson the house adjourned at 4.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, May 20, 1963

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN

DECLARATION OF LOYALTY ON CELEBRATION OF BIRTHDAY

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members, today we celebrate the birthday of Her Gracious Majesty Queen Elizabeth. As has been customary for some time now we in this house are showing our loyalty and devotion by continuing our work in parliament. As an expression of that loyalty and devotion may I suggest that, if the house so desires, I send on your behalf a birthday message to Her Majesty.

Does that meet with your wishes?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ARTS, LETTERS AND SCIENCES

TABLING OF TEXT OF LETTER TO PREMIERS CONCERNING ROYAL COMMISSION

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table two copies in French and two copies in English of a letter I addressed on May 15 to the premiers of all the provinces concerning a royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism. Mr. Speaker, I should like to suggest, if the house desires, these could be printed as an appendix to Hansard of this date.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: For text of letters referred to, see appendix.]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PROCEDURE REGARDING INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

Mr. Speaker: Before the introduction of the following 64 bills I would like to make what I hope will be a reasonably short statement. The house will note that there is a record number of bills, namely 64, listed for introduction by private members on today's order paper. I would like to compliment hon. members on their interest and zeal in submitting such a great number of bills on the opening days of the session.

Some of the bills were considered in the past session and are being reintroduced at this time, but there is also a substantial number of new proposals.

As a result of this flooding in the opening days it is difficult if not impossible for the Chair to review the provisions of these bills to ensure that they conform to the practices and usages of this house. Indeed, copies of most of them will be coming before me for the first time later on in the sitting during the course of subsequent proceedings.

I have two suggestions which I would like to submit to the consideration of the house in order to provide the maximum of time for speeches by the several leaders which, by tradition, are made at this stage of the address debate.

First, the house might wish to consider the advisability of proceeding with the first readings of these bills with the understanding that each will be scrutinized between now and the time appointed for its second reading, when any defects therein will be brought to the attention of the house. As hon. members know, the order for first reading of a bill merely authorizes its printing and, after it has been printed and distributed, they too will be in a position to discuss any irregularity that may be found in the bill.

I should say that a similar suggestion was submitted to, and accepted by the house, by my predecessor which is to be found at page 30 of Hansard, October 1, 1962, and also by Mr. Speaker Michener at page 2382 of Hansard, April 2, 1962.

Second, the house will appreciate that almost two hours or more may be required in order to introduce and give first reading separately to each of the bills listed for introduction in this sitting.

If the house is agreeable, I suggest that by unanimous consent the 64 bills listed for introduction be deemed to have been introduced, given first reading and ordered for a second reading at the next sitting of the house, subject, of course, to my prior remarks as to the examination and regularity of each bill.

Is it the pleasure of the house to grant unanimous consent for the suggested procedure?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Accordingly, by unanimous consent of the house I declare that the 64 bills listed for introduction by private members on today's order paper are deemed to have been introduced, read a first time and ordered for second reading at the next sitting of the house.

INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS

PROVISION OF STATUTORY HOLIDAYS WITH PAY FOR EMPLOYEES

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-2, to provide for pay for work performed on statutory holidays for employees in federal works, undertakings and businesses.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

PROVISION OF MINIMUM RATE OF WAGES FOR EMPLOYEES

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-28, to provide for minimum wages for employees in federal works, undertakings, and businesses.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

REPRESENTATION ACT

AMENDMENT TO CHANGE NAME OF ELECTORAL DISTRICT

Mr. L. P. Antoine Belanger (Charlevoix) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-3, to amend the Representation Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

AMENDMENT TO CHANGE NAME OF ELECTORAL DISTRICT

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-47, to amend the Representation Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

BROADCASTING ACT

ISSUE OF LICENCES SUBJECT TO COMPLIANCE WITH BILL OF RIGHTS

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-4, to amend the Broadcasting Act (human rights abuses remedied).

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

AMENDMENT PROVIDING CONTROL OVER COMMUNITY ANTENNA

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-30, to amend the Broadcasting Act (community antenna).

[Mr. Speaker.]

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING PARTISAN POLITICAL BROADCAST

Mr. H. C. Harley (Halton) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-54, to amend the Broadcasting Act (political programs).

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

BANKRUPTCY ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING PAYMENT TO PRODUCERS OF PRIMARY PRODUCTS

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Essex South) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-5, to amend the Bankruptcy Act (primary products under processing).

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING WAGE EARNERS' ASSIGNMENTS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-12, to amend the Bankruptcy Act (wage earners' assignment).

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

FINANCE

PROVISION RESPECTING CONTROL OF CONSUMER CREDIT

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-6, for the control of consumer credit.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

LEGISLATION PROVIDING RELIEF AGAINST UNCONSCIONABLE TRANSACTIONS

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-62, respecting relief against unconscionable transactions.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

PENSION ACT

AMENDMENT PROVIDING FOR APPEAL TO COURTS

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-7, to amend the Pension Act (judicial appeals).

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

NATIONAL HARBOURS BOARD ACT

PROVISION FOR CONSTRUCTION OF ELEVATOR AT TISDALE, SASK.

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-8, to amend the National Harbours Board Act (Tisdale grain terminal).

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

SMALL LOANS ACT

AMENDMENT REQUIRING STATEMENTS OF TRUE INTEREST RATE CHARGE

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-9, to amend the Small Loans Act (advertising).

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

AMENDMENT TO REDUCE MAXIMUM INTEREST RATE

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-14, to amend the Small Loans Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

AMENDMENT TO REDUCE MAXIMUM INTEREST RATE

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-23, to amend the Small Loans Act (cost of a loan).

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

INTEREST ACT

AMENDMENT TO PLACE CEILING ON INTEREST RATES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-10, to amend the Interest Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR DISCLOSURE OF COST OF CREDIT

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-31, to amend the Interest Act (finance charges).

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

AMENDMENT TO PLACE CEILING ON INTEREST RATES

Mr. Rodolphe Leduc (Gatineau) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-55, to amend the Interest Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

COASTAL FISHERIES PROTECTION ACT

PROVISION FOR EXTENSION OF FISHING ZONES

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-11, to amend the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act (twelve mile fishing zone).

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT

AMENDMENT TO ADD REMEMBRANCE DAY AS HOLIDAY

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-13, to amend the Civil Service Act (Remembrance Day).

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

PROVISION FOR COLLECTIVE BARGAINING AND ARBITRATION

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-51, to amend the Civil Service Act (collective bargaining and arbitration).

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING WITHHOLDING OR REFUSAL OF RIGHTS

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-39, to amend the Civil Service Act (bureaucratic oppression).

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

RAILWAY ACT

PROVISION FOR RETRAINING AND MOVING COSTS OF DISPLACED EMPLOYEES

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-15, to amend the Railway Act (responsibility for dislocation costs).

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

AMENDMENT RESPECTING ABANDONED RAILWAY LANDS

Mr. J. N. Ormiston (Melville) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-17, to amend the Railway Act (the public's royalties in abandoned railways).

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Proposed Legislation

AMENDMENT RESPECTING ABANDONMENT OF BRANCH LINES

Mr. W. H. A. Thomas (Middlesex West) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-27, to amend the Railway Act (abandonment).

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

WESTERN CANADA VETERINARY COLLEGE

PROVISION OF FACILITIES FOR STUDY OF VETERINARY MEDICINE AND SURGERY

Mr. J. N. Ormiston (Melville) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-16, to found and constitute the western Canada veterinary college.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

IMMIGRATION

PROVISION OF AMNESTY RESPECTING IRREGULAR OR ILLEGAL ADMISSIONS TO CANADA

Mr. Ian Grant Wahn (St. Paul's) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-18, to grant amnesty to and confirm the rights of Asians, Africans and other persons subject to racial discrimination whose admission to Canada may have been irregular or illegal.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

PUBLIC SERVICE

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH OFFICE OF PARLIAMENTARY COMMISSIONER

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-19, to establish the office of parliamentary commissioner.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

LEGISLATION TO PERMIT POLITICAL ACTIVITY

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-52, to enable civil servants to engage in political activity.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

ANNUAL VACATIONS ACT

PROVISION FOR TWO WEEKS HOLIDAY AFTER ONE YEAR

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-20, to amend the Annual Vacations Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

[Mr. Ormiston.]

SWEEPSTAKES

LEGISLATION TO AUTHORIZE PROVINCIAL SWEEPSTAKES FOR HOSPITALS AND UNIVERSITIES

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-21, with respect to hospital and university sweepstakes.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

LEGISLATION TO ESTABLISH HOSPITAL SWEEPSTAKES BOARD

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-24, to provide for the establishment of a hospital sweepstakes board.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE ACT

AMENDMENT TO CREATE DEPARTMENT OF FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-22, to amend the Department of State Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

DIVORCE

PROVISION FOR PARLIAMENTARY PROCTOR AND TAXATION OF COSTS

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-25, to establish the office of parliamentary proctor and to regulate taxation of costs.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

MEASURE TO MODERNIZE DISSOLUTION AND ANNULMENT OF MARRIAGE

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-50, to provide in Canada for the dissolution and the annulment of marriage.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

PROVISION TO REMOVE NECESSITY FOR HOUSE OF COMMONS CONCURRENCE

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-41, respecting procedure in relation to parliamentary divorce.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING COUNT OF VOTES AT ADVANCE POLLS

Mr. Rodolphe Leduc (Gatineau) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-26, to amend the Canada Elections Act (advance polls).

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

AMENDMENT TO REDUCE AGE OF VOTERS

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-60, to amend the Canada Elections Act (age of voters).

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

AMENDMENTS WITH RESPECT TO POLITICAL PROGRAMS

Mr. H. C. Harley (Halton) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-63, to amend the Canada Elections Act (political programs).

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

INDUSTRY

PROVISIONS FOR DISTRIBUTION OF INDUSTRY AND REDUCTION OF UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-29, to provide for the development of certain provinces by the distribution of industry and for the reduction of unemployment therein.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

LOTTERIES

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF CORPORATION TO OPERATE NATIONAL LOTTERIES

Mr. J. N. Ormiston (Melville) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-32, to establish Canadian futures.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

BILLS OF EXCHANGE ACT

AMENDMENT TO PREVENT FRAUD IN RETAIL CREDIT TRANSACTIONS

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-33, to amend the Bills of Exchange Act (instalment purchases).

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

28902-5—3½

Proposed Legislation

INDIAN ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING POSSESSION AND CONSUMPTION OF INTOXICANTS

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-34, to amend the Indian Act (liquor rights).

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT REQUIRING NOTICE TO PUBLIC SERVANT NOT REAPPOINTED

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-35, to amend the Criminal Code (a purge for the King's evil).

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR PROVINCIAL LOTTERIES

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-36, to amend the Criminal Code (provincial lotteries).

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

AMENDMENT TO ABOLISH CAPITAL PUNISHMENT EXCEPT FOR TREASON

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-37, to amend the Criminal Code (capital punishment).

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

AMENDMENT RESPECTING APPEAL IN HABEAS CORPUS PROCEEDINGS

Mr. John R. Matheson (Leeds) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-42, to amend the Criminal Code (habeas corpus).

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR PROVINCIAL LOTTERIES

Mr. Gerard Perron (Beauce) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-44, to amend the Criminal Code (provincial lotteries).

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

AMENDMENT WITH RESPECT TO WATER POLLUTION

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-48, to amend the Criminal Code (nuisance).

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Proposed Legislation

AMENDMENT TO CHANGE RULE RESPECTING INSANITY

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-53, to amend the Criminal Code (insanity).

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

AMENDMENT RESPECTING BIRTH CONTROL METHODS

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-64, to amend the Criminal Code.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADA FAIR EMPLOYMENT PRACTICES ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROHIBIT DISCRIMINATION BECAUSE OF AGE

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-38, to amend the Canada Fair Employment Practices Act (age discrimination).

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD ACT

APPLICATION OF PROVINCIAL DRAINAGE LAWS TO PIPE LINES

Mr. W. H. A. Thomas (Middlesex West) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-40, to amend the National Energy Board Act (drainage works).

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

BANK OF CANADA ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING ACCEPTANCE OF LOCAL CURRENCIES

Mr. Maurice Cote (Chicoutimi) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-43, to amend the Bank of Canada Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING BENEFITS TO EMPLOYEES IN AGRICULTURE

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-45, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act (agricultural employees' coverage).

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

[Mr. Herridge.]

AGRICULTURAL REHABILITATION AND DEVELOPMENT ACT

AMENDMENT TO EXTEND APPLICATION TO INDIAN RESERVES

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-46, to amend the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act (Indian reserve).

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

RADIO ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING DEFINITION OF "BROADCASTING"

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-49, to amend the Radio Act (community antenna).

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING READJUSTMENT OF REPRESENTATION IN HOUSE OF COMMONS

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-56, to amend the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1960, with respect to the readjustment of representation in the House of Commons.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

TRANSPORTATION

PROVISION OF FREE RAILWAY TRANSPORTATION FOR SENIOR CITIZENS

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-57, to provide for free transportation on the railways of Canada for senior citizens.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

ESTABLISHMENT OF 40-HOUR WEEK IN FEDERAL UNDERTAKINGS

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-57, to provide for of work for employees in federal works, undertakings and businesses.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

HUMAN RIGHTS

PROVISION FOR REVIEW OF ADMINISTRATIVE POWERS

Mr. John R. Matheson (Leeds) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-59, to provide for review of administrative powers and to relieve from their misapplication (administrative review).

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADIAN FLAG

PROVISION FOR NATIONAL FLAG AND NATIONAL ANTHEM

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-61, respecting a national flag and a national anthem of Canada.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING DUTIES OF SPEAKER AFTER DISSOLUTION

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Essex South) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-65, to amend the House of Commons Act (Speaker on dissolution).

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

POSTPONEMENT OF ITEMS UNDER GOVERNMENT NOTICES OF MOTIONS

On the order: Government notices of motions.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, for the excellent reasons Your Honour has just given with respect to the bills by private members, I would ask if this item could stand until tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that all items under government notices of motions on today's order paper stand until tomorrow?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

LABOUR RELATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO MEETINGS WITH U.S. SECRETARY OF LABOUR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Labour a question relating to the meetings he is reported to have held with the secretary of labour of the United States. Could the minister give us any indication as to the gist of these conversations, and some assurance that no action will be taken until the Norris inquiry report on the great lakes strife is available?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the secretary of labour for the United States was in Ottawa for several hours on Friday evening, and at that time we held a preliminary discussion of this whole question. It is expected that tomorrow the discussions will continue in Washington, at which meeting Mr. Meany and Mr. Jodoin will be present. At this stage in the discussions I do not think anything useful can be said in reply to the detailed aspect of the hon. member's question.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

WINNIPEG—TRANSFER OF OVERHAUL AND MAINTENANCE BASE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Does the government intend to honour the commitment made by the Prime Minister during the election campaign, to retain in Winnipeg and St. James the T.C.A. overhaul and maintenance base?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have not had notice of the question, but I have had an opportunity of looking into this subject matter and I can find no such commitment having been made.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Later:]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister supplementary to the one put to the Minister of Transport by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre. Was not the Prime Minister's telegram of March 30 to the Liberal candidate in Winnipeg South Centre a commitment by the Liberal party to keep the Trans-Canada Air Lines overhaul base in Winnipeg?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I have not that statement before me; perhaps the hon. member has. But there was no commitment in that statement in the terms put forward by the hon. member who asked the question in the first instance.

Mr. Knowles: I shall be glad to send a copy of the Prime Minister's telegram to the Prime Minister and to the Minister of Transport.

(Translation):

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO CONFERENCE ON FISCAL MATTERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Does he intend to call a federal-provincial conference on taxation?

(Text):

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give my hon. friend any precise date, but a conference on these matters will have to be called soon. As soon as I can be more precise, I will let the house know.

(Translation):

[Later:]

REPORTED ULTIMATUM FOR QUEBEC PREMIER

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Justice. Did he have any opportunity in the last few days to inquire about the ultimatum delivered on April 5 last by the Quebec premier respecting the sharing of taxation sources on a new basis?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no.

Mr. Gregoire: A supplementary question. Does the minister still believe, as he suggested last April, that the present government is the most qualified to meet the request of the province of Quebec for a new tax-sharing agreement?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, the answer is yes.

Mr. Gregoire: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the answer just given by the minister mean that the present government accepts the ultimatum of the Quebec government and intends to give back to the provinces their sources of taxation and income?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The minister does not have to answer that question.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I believe that the Minister of Justice was willing to answer.

ARTS, LETTERS AND SCIENCES

INQUIRY AS TO PERSONNEL OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the minister without portfolio, the hon. member for Outremont.

Does the minister intend to recommend to the government the appointment of Messrs. Gerard Pelletier and Andre Laurendeau as members of the royal commission on biculturalism and, if not, why?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, that question cannot be asked on the orders of the day.

INQUIRY AS TO TERMS OF REFERENCE OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the minister without portfolio, the hon. member for Outremont. Does the hon. minister intend to include in the program of the royal commission on biculturalism the question of returning to the provinces their sources of income?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe the taxation question will be among the terms of reference of the commission which is yet to be established.

(Text):

GRAIN

WHEAT—INTRODUCTION OF TWO PRICE SYSTEM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, last Friday I directed a question to the government asking whether we could expect legislation to be brought down soon with respect to the two price system for wheat to guarantee farmers $2 a bushel for wheat. At that time the Minister of Agriculture suggested he would treat the question as notice, and I wonder if the Prime Minister or any member of the government is now prepared to answer it.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): This is an important matter of government policy, and an announcement will be made in due course.

(Translation):

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADIAN MEMBERSHIP IN ORGANIZATION OF AMERICAN STATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Does the present government intend to have Canada join the organization of American states?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I must inform the hon. member that the question is still under active consideration.

(Text):

RED CHINA—INQUIRY AS TO RECOGNITION BY CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): I wish to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is his government considering at this time formal diplomatic recognition by Canada of red China?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): As the hon. gentleman knows, these questions are always under review, and it is in accordance with our tradition that the government shall determine when government policy will be announced.

NATO—PARTICIPATION OF CANADIAN OFFICIALS IN DRAFTING OF PRESS RELEASES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if any Canadian officials have participated in the drafting of the final official press releases for the NATO ministerial conference to be held in Ottawa this week?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): As my hon. friend knows, that is a wholly improper question.

AIR TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON DISPUTE RESPECTING INTERNATIONAL FARES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Transport. Does the hon. gentleman have anything to report to the house regarding Canada's position in the international dispute relating to trans-Atlantic air fares?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): I can report that the meeting of the air lines which took place in Bermuda last week was adjourned on Saturday night and will be continued in Montreal on Wednesday.

ALLEGED REFUSAL OF CANADIAN NATO DELEGATION TO USE T.C.A.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): On Friday last the hon. member for Three Rivers asked me why the Canadian NATO delegation in Paris refused to fly the Atlantic by T.C.A. to attend the NATO meeting in Ottawa which opens this week.

There was no such refusal. Normally Canadian government officials flying to and from Canada in the course of their duties travel by T.C.A. whenever this is possible. In the particular case referred to, it was necessary for the Canadian permanent representative to NATO and two of his officers to be in Paris for a meeting of the NATO council on Wednesday, May 15, and to be on hand in Ottawa in time to confer with the secretary general of NATO, Mr. Stikker, here on Friday May 17. This meant travelling on Thursday, May 16, and since there was no T.C.A. flight from Paris to Canada on that day it was necessary to use another carrier. The party travelled economy class and, before leaving Paris, booked their return flight from Canada on T.C.A. and will again travel economy class.

COMBINES

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING TIED SALES BY SERVICE STATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): I have a question for the Minister of Justice. Does the minister intend to implement the recommendations of the restrictive trade practices commission concerning amendments to the Combines Investigation Act to control the practice of tied sales imposed upon service stations by certain petroleum companies?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): The hon. member was good enough to send me notice of his question and I find that the report of the commission has been referred to an interdepartmental committee for the purpose of determining the implications for other industries of implementing the commission's report which, as the hon. member knows, was confined to the oil industry. Having said that, I am afraid an answer to the latter part of the hon. member's question will have to await the report of the interdepartmental committee.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. It is reported that the Saskatchewan Liberal leader said Wednesday that the Prime Minister had agreed to assign a federal cabinet minister to look after Saskatchewan's interests. My question is this. Is this going to be the practice of the government, to assign somebody to represent the people of Saskatchewan in parliament, instead of having the duly elected members of Saskatchewan attend to this business?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend, in accordance with constitutional practice in these matters, would cross to this side of the house we would be glad to give him that responsibility.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—CONSULTATIONS WITH INTERESTED PARTIES BEFORE RENEGOTIATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the very voluminous correspondence of the right hon. gentleman, when he was official leader of the opposition, with various British Columbia organizations, local authorities, and many other persons, stating his belief in the need for renegotiation of the Columbia river treaty, can the right hon. gentleman assure the house that all British Columbia interests, particularly those of the Arrow lakes water resources committee, will be consulted by the government before a final decision concerning the terms of the treaty is reached, as he indicated in his correspondence with these various people?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before adjustments, modifications or clarifications are made to this treaty, all aspects of the matter will be considered, and we will be glad to hear representations from all those concerned on any aspect.

TRANSPORT

WINNIPEG-SASKATOON—PROPOSED DISCONTINUANCE OF TRAIN SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last I directed a question to the Prime Minister in connection with the proposed discontinuance of trains Nos. 9 and 10, at which time he committed himself to look into the question that afternoon. I wonder if the Prime Minister is in a position to give me an answer to that question.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this question should more properly have been addressed, of course, to the Minister of Transport, but as I did take notice of the question last Friday perhaps I may be permitted to reply to it.

In answer to the question with respect to the discontinuance of trains Nos. 9 and 10 from Winnipeg to Saskatoon, representations were received, I am informed, and forthwith referred to the board of transport commissioners who have jurisdiction in this matter. The application for discontinuance by the railway had been heard in Drumheller on November 19 and 20, 1962 after due notice of time and place. All representations and all relevant evidence were duly covered. The board, in a judgment which runs to 47 pages, found that the sum total of inconvenience which might result to people using trains Nos. 9 and 10 did not justify requiring the railway company to sustain a continuing loss of $264,000 per annum and to forgo an estimated annual net financial betterment of $202,000. I am informed by the board that representations received since the date of the judgment gave no reasonable grounds to change the decision.

Mr. Korchinski: A supplementary question in connection with that reply. I wonder whether the Prime Minister would now take this question under advisement and consider reversing the decision of the board.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. Has the railroad considered giving the people in that area from Winnipeg to Calgary another type of service, such as a day liner service in place of trains Nos. 9 and 10?

Mr. Pearson: I am sure all aspects of the matter were taken into consideration. In answer to the other supplementary question, I believe there is a right of appeal from a decision of this kind.

RAILWAY BRANCH LINES—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF NOTICE PERIOD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the serious dislocation of business and community life caused by the present railway policy of branch line abandonment, is the government giving consideration to extending the notice period prior to abandonment to allow for the necessary adjustment within the communities concerned?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the question asked by the hon. member is a rather important one. The government is considering this whole policy in a rather thorough way at the moment and any announcement to be made will be made after consideration.

UNITED NATIONS

REPORTED BRITISH PROPOSAL RESPECTING SPREAD OF NUCLEAR WEAPONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the attention of the secretary of state been called to the proposal made on Saturday by the Earl of Home that the Soviet union agreed to prevent the spread of nuclear weapons to countries that do not yet have them, and his further statement that "if we could attach to it"—meaning a test ban treaty—"a treaty to prevent the spread of nuclear weapons to countries which do not possess them, that too would be an enormous gain"? If the secretary of state has had his attention called to this statement, will this affect the attitude of the Canadian government in this regard?

Mr. Speaker: Does the minister wish to answer?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have not been informed of any new British proposal in this regard. However, the British government, like the Canadian government and the other western allies, have consistently been in favour of international arrangements to prevent the wider dissemination of control over nuclear weapons. We have supported a resolution in these terms sponsored at the United Nations by Ireland; indeed, this resolution has been unanimously adopted by the United Nations. We continue to believe that measures in this field should be given careful consideration and that their adoption will be of great importance in reducing the risk of war.

So far as Canadian policy is concerned, the hon. member will be aware that there is no question of Canada acquiring nuclear weapons in the sense of obtaining unilateral control over them. No action undertaken by this government with respect to existing defence commitments would run counter to this general policy; and we continue to share the view of other western governments that extension of exclusive national control over such weapons should be prohibited as far as possible by international agreement.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister feel that Canada has any further useful role to play in any 17-nation disarmament discussions, in the light of the statement made by the Prime Minister in this house that the extension of nuclear weapons to countries such as Canada which do not now have them makes it quite impossible for any Canadian Secretary of State for External Affairs to argue against other countries having nuclear weapons?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman posed his supplementary question in the form of an argument, but I would say to him in reply that I am sure the great majority of Canadians feel that there is increasing opportunity now for Canada to make a contribution in this very important field.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NUCLEAR WEAPONS—REPORTED STATEMENT BY DEFENCE MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Defence. In an interview shortly after being sworn in the present minister is reported to have said that he expected a Canada-United States agreement on custody and control of nuclear warheads to be signed in about a month's time, an agreement which requires both parliamentary ratification and congressional approval as well as the signatures of the contracting parties.

In view of this statement, would the minister now refute his former claim, which misled the Canadian public, that the Conservative government had fully committed Canada to equipping its air squadrons and Bomarc missiles with nuclear warheads—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Will the hon. member state his question?

Mr. McIntosh: Would the minister now refute his former claim that Canada had made such a commitment?

CHURCHILL, MAN.—STATEMENT ON MAINTENANCE OF U.S. AIR BASE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the hon. member for Churchill asked whether the recent announcement regarding the closing down of the S.A.C. refuelling base at Frobisher Bay would affect the operation of the base at Fort Churchill.

In reply may I say that on May 15, 1963 a press release was put out under the authority of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In that release details were given to the effect that U.S.A.F. refuelling aircraft were to be withdrawn from Frobisher and Fort Churchill by July 1, 1963. This action was prompted by the development of newer longer range tanker aircraft, which has rendered further refuelling operations from these two bases unnecessary.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO TABLING OF ESTIMATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Finance. Could the minister inform the house as to his intentions with respect to tabling the main estimates for the current fiscal year and also whether he intends to table supplementary estimates at the same time?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will make an announcement on that subject a little later, after the debate on the speech from the throne has been completed.

STATEMENTS BY SPEAKER IN BOTH FRENCH AND ENGLISH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the fact that it is his expressed desire to speed up the operations of the House of Commons so as to facilitate dealing with the people's business, will the Prime Minister take under consideration consultation with the Speaker of the house, in light of the fact that we have simultaneous language translation to determine whether it is necessary for all statements made by the Speaker in French to be repeated in English and all statements made in English to be repeated in French?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think this is entirely a matter for your own decision, but if you would like to discuss it with me I shall be glad to do so.

(Translation):

FINANCE

CONSULTATIONS RESPECTING LOANS TO MUNICIPALITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Did any members of the federal cabinet get in touch with the premier of the province of Quebec, Hon. Jean Lesage, before recommending that federal loans be granted to municipalities?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of no communication such as the one mentioned by the hon. member.

CLAIMS FOR REFUND OF TARIFF SURCHARGES

Mr. Remi Paul (Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Does the minister intend to recommend that the government pay the claims for refund of the tariff surcharges levied last June by the Conservative government by order in council and presumably paid by merchants and businessmen, and which would amount to approximately $80 million?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I replied to that question last Friday by saying that, since the matter is pendente lite, it would not be proper for me to answer such a question at this time.

(Text):

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Minister of Justice if it is the intention of the government to put in a defence to the action when it comes before the courts?

Mr. Chevrier: I think my hon. friend will realize that government policy in this respect will be announced in due course.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question in connection with the strange answer given by the Minister of Justice. Specifically, it is this. Does the government intend to settle the actions instituted by the law firm of Mr. MacTavish, Q.C., without having recourse to the courts in that regard?

Mr. Chevrier: I think the same answer I made originally to this question applies to the question of the former prime minister. Because of the manner in which the question has been put I do not think it deserves any other reply than that since this matter is now before the courts it would be most improper for any minister of the crown to make a statement or reply such as that which the Leader of the Opposition now seeks.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I now ask the hon. gentleman this question, which does not concern the stand to be taken by the government. Does the government intend to put in defences to the actions that have been taken and have the matter come before the courts, or does it intend to settle these actions started by the law firm of which Mr. MacTavish, Q.C., is a member?

Mr. Chevrier: I now reply to the prime minister in the same manner—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Chevrier: I apologize. I meant to say that I now reply to the right hon. gentleman that he perhaps more than anyone else knows that these matters are the subject of court action, not only one action but perhaps 30 or more, and he knows that questions of that nature should not be replied to on the orders of the day, particularly when the matters in question are sub judice.

(Translation):

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the Minister of Justice intend to make recommendations to the crown attorneys concerning those cases which are now before the court?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, that question has been answered at least four times, and I certainly do not intend to give a reply which could in any way involve the Minister of Justice in a case or cases now before the court.

(Text):

LABOUR CONDITIONS

BELL ISLAND, NFLD.—REPORTED LAY-OFFS AT ORE MINES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour, after first congratulating him on his appointment. In view of the announcement of a major lay-off and an eight week shutdown period at Wabana iron ore mines at Bell island, Newfoundland, the community's only industry, may I ask the minister whether the government intends to take any action in this regard?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): I wish to thank the hon. member for his kind reference to me at the beginning of his question. In so far as the question which he asked is concerned, I shall be glad to investigate this lay-off to see whether any action can be taken in addition to the rather large array of anti-unemployment measures proposed in the speech from the throne.

CAPE BRETON HIGHLANDS NATIONAL PARK—REPORTED LAY-OFFS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria asked me whether I had received protests over what he described as indiscriminate lay-offs in Cape Breton Highlands national park. The answer is simply that I have received no protests because there have been no indiscriminate lay-offs. I think the question probably originated from the fact that on April 30 our department completed a piece of work on behalf of the Department of Transport which had been employing 25 men.

REPORTED LAY-OFFS AT POINT EDWARD NAVAL BASE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the hon. member for Cape Breton South asked a question, which I took as notice, with regard to the lay-off of civilian employees at Point Edward naval base at Sydney.

I am informed that a reduction in the refit work load necessitated the lay-off of nine casual ship repair labourers effective May 3, 1963. A release list was prepared in accordance with the department's standard point system, based on seniority, efficiency and veterans' preference.

The possibility of re-employing these personnel with other service establishments and government departments in the area is being investigated.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): As a supplementary question following the minister's answer, would the minister care to indicate what other areas in that particular region he has in mind for re-employment of these personnel?

Mr. Cardin: I understand there are other departments in the area where these people might be employed.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER MARKETING OF DRUGS AND CONTAMINATION OF FOOD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I love to ask questions of a lady. Is it the intention of the minister to propose, this session, that a special committee be appointed to consider and report upon (a) the law and practices relating to the control of the introduction, marketing and use of drugs and, (b) the danger arising from contamination of food by the use of chemicals to kill weeds, insects and other pests?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): It is always a delight to answer a question by a gentleman—an honourable gentleman. I should like to advise the house that the government is considering this matter and proposes to recommend to the house that a committee dealing with the area mentioned by my hon. friend be set up for this study.

Inquiries of the Ministry

FISHERIES

NORTH PACIFIC COMMISSION—EXTENSION OF JAPANESE FISHING RIGHTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. Last Friday it was indicated the government had decided to accept recommendations made by the international north Pacific fisheries commission. I can find no order in council which has been passed. Would the minister care to indicate to the house by what means the government intends to implement this decision?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): In reply to the hon. gentleman I would advise him, and advise the house, that the matter comes under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

[Later:]

Mr. Douglas: I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that the Minister of Fisheries has indicated that the government has decided to accede to the recommendations of the international north Pacific fisheries commission, what means does the government propose to take to implement that decision? Will the government bring down legislation to amend the treaty, or does it intend to deal with the matter by executive order?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): As my hon. friend knows, following the announcement which was made last week this matter of renewal of the treaty is now under negotiation outside of this country with regard to the consideration of the abstention principle so far as Japan is concerned. With regard to the question my hon. friend asked, I may say that after we have had an opportunity of ascertaining the results of these negotiations we will be in a position to announce in this house the course that we believe should be taken.

(Translation):

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

GILL REPORT—SUGGESTED CONSIDERATION BY HOUSE COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Does the minister intend to submit the Gill report to a special committee of the house for study?

(Text):

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): It is not the intention of the government to send this report to a special committee, but I can give to my hon. friend, and the house the assurance that any proposed legislative changes to the present unemployment insurance system will be sent to a committee at the appropriate stage.

(Translation):

TRADE AND COMMERCE

WORLD FAIR—APPROVAL OF SITE BY MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Public Works a question. Could the minister tell the house on what grounds he approved the choice of the present site for the international exhibition which will take place in Montreal, whereas, only a few weeks ago, he was favouring the east of Montreal?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I never favoured the east of Montreal, and the decision which was taken was the best under the present circumstances.

Mr. Pigeon: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. How did it happen that the minister sent an open letter to the newspapers recommending eastern Montreal as the international exhibition site during the election campaign?

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, at that time, I recommended that the eastern part of Montreal be included among the numerous sites which were to be taken into consideration.

(Text):

TARIFF REDUCTIONS—OPPORTUNITY FOR REPRESENTATIONS TO GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent, Ontario): I would like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister, but since it is of a general nature I did not believe notice was necessary. As a result of the great uneasiness found now amongst all branches of manufacturing and industry concerning tariffs, and especially as a result of the reports of tariff slashes sought by the government of the United States, can the Prime Minister inform the house whether this government is considering reductions in Canadian tariffs in any field? If the answer be yes, will the various segments of the industries involved be informed and allowed to make recommendations before a final decision is reached?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): This is certainly not a proper question for orders of the day, and I am not sure whether it is a proper question for the order paper. However, out of courtesy to my hon. friend I would inform him that of course all questions concerning tariff reductions and the elimination of other forms of obstacles to trade are under consideration by the government. Perhaps when the Minister of Trade and Commerce returns later this week from Geneva, where these matters are now under consideration, he will be able to report to the house.

PUBLIC SERVICE

GLASSCO COMMISSION—RESPONSIBILITY FOR DEALING WITH RECOMMENDATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister and ask whether the task of dealing with the recommendations of the Glassco report has been assigned to one minister of the crown and, if so, which one?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, every minister of the crown is concerned with the study and, where appropriate, changes made, arising out of the recommendations of the Glassco report. The President of the Privy Council has been given the responsibility of co-ordinating this work among other ministers taking special responsibility in this matter.

INDUSTRY

AUTOMOBILES—INQUIRY AS TO RECOMMENDATIONS OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether to direct this question to the Minister of Finance or the minister from Windsor, but the question is, what are the government's intentions regarding the recommendations of the Bladen report on the automobile industry?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the government's intentions in connection with the Bladen report, and all other reports of that kind, will be made known at the appropriate time.

PENSIONS

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF CONTRIBUTORY SYSTEM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Can the minister say whether the legislation regarding contributory pensions will be introduced at an early date, and whether it will provide for an immediate increase in the amount paid under the present old age pension legislation?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to note the hon. member is so interested in our new legislation, but I ask him to contain himself for just a little while so that he may see the bill.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed from Friday, May 17, consideration of the motion of Miss Pauline Jewett for an address to His Excellency the Administrator in reply to his speech at the opening of the session.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my first words must be to express the hope that His Excellency the Governor General will continue to improve in health so that he may soon again be able to discharge fully the duties and responsibilities of his office, which he has done with such distinction and honour during the period of his office.

I also wish to convey to you, sir, with the greatest deference my hope—and it is one which has been supported by the experience hon. members of the house have had during the period you were chairman of the public accounts committee—that in the discharge of your responsibilities you will carry them out, as we know you will, with fairness, with ability and, above all, with that integrity for which you have always been noted by hon. members of this chamber.

Next I want to do something that is not perfunctory in any way, and that is to extend my congratulations to the hon. member for Northumberland (Miss Jewett) for the manner in which she discharged her duties—and they are trying duties—in the making of a maiden speech. I also extend my congratulations to the seconder. Both are new members of the house and performed so creditably that I am sure in the months and years ahead their contributions to the public life of Canada will be in keeping with those whom they succeeded, with Harry Bradley in Northumberland, and with my longtime friend, the Hon. Raymond O'Hurley in the constituency of Lotbiniere.

At the opening of every new parliament it is always interesting to see the new members who come into the house. Without the infusion of new and able members the house tends to become more or less static. It lacks that enthusiasm and that idealism which new members bring to the thinking and the general conduct of this chamber. I welcome too the new ministers of the crown and also those who have fringe benefits in the position of parliamentary secretaries. To each and every one of them I extend my congratulations. I have been somewhat surprised, however, by some of the recent events that brought about seniority within the government of Canada. All of us who have known the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) for so long hoped he would have been in a position second only to the Prime Minister. As I suggested the other day, possibly in the light of retrospect of recent events, if he had only followed the course taken by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier) in leaving his province of Ontario and departing for Quebec, his seniority might thereby have been assured in a manner which would have been appreciated by hon. members of this house. The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer) shakes his head. I have here, but I am not going to waste them on him, some of the clippings in this connection in which reference was made along the line I have just mentioned.

To the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) I extend congratulations—I have already done so—on his achievement of this high office. At the same time I extend to him warmest felicitations on the honour that has come to him in becoming a member of Her Majesty's privy council, one of the greatest honours that can come to anyone within the commonwealth.

I hope this parliament will be an effective one. I hope no action will be taken by any member to degrade in any way this institution. I can assure the government that there will be no repetition of those things that took place last December, when from one end of Canada to the other there was condemnation against the opposition of that day for their attitude and action in refusing to allow the prime minister of Canada to speak in this chamber. The attitude of this party will be to do everything it can to make strong and effective its contribution to the bettering of the welfare of our country.

There are great problems to be faced. We shall criticize in a spirit of constructive fairness. Whatever practical knowledge and experience we have will be made available so that we may do our part to contribute to the economic and social welfare and prosperity of Canada. I do not intend to be very critical. I am not going to relive the days of the election or the events of last year, excepting in so far as those things will have to be referred to as a basis for argument. I do say this, though, that as a result of the election—while, naturally, it did not turn out as we had hoped—the Conservative party has a stronger opposition today than at any time in all its history since 1867, with the one exception of 1925. I say, sir, with the utmost sincerity, that I believe, in the light of subsequent events, the policies that were advanced will be vindicated in the thinking of the Canadian parliament.

I am glad there is going to be some action taken in regard to making parliament more effective. I think we will have to give consideration to the shortening of the period between the date the writs are issued and the holding of the election. I think now, having regard to the events that have taken place, the technological and transportation advances, we might even consider shortening the period to five or six weeks. That could be done, provided a permanent voters list is set up.

I think, too, we should give consideration to restricting the amount of expenditure that can be made by any candidate in an election campaign, for otherwise potentially good members are denied membership because of lack of financial assistance. I believe that expenditures will have to be limited if democracy is to be preserved within our country. I betray no secret when I say that the tremendous amounts available to the Liberal party in the recent election leads one to ask whence came those contributions. Wherever they came from, I want to emphasize once more the need of action being taken to prevent the ever mounting increase in the costs that are incident to elections.

Having made those few general remarks, I come now to the 60 days of decision. That is a most interesting expression, borrowed from President Kennedy, with the deletion of 40 days. President Kennedy thought it would take 100 days. The Liberal party decided on 60 so that they would not, according to those in the press gallery who know, be charged with political plagiarism. Sir, I too, read a book the other day about 60 days, 60 days of disaster in 1914, when a great tragedy followed from false optimism.

Today we live in this period; we are still in the 60 days, although the government is starting to recede from that. They do not like an attitude on the part of anyone of directing the attention of the people to the particular inning we are in. There have been some errors and few hits in the past 30 days. But we are in the beginning of the golden age of miracles, these 60 days, with generalities made brilliant by propaganda stardust, by splashes in the press and public relations gimmicks. It has been very interesting to follow the course of events. Only the other day the Ottawa Journal said:

> With one fourth or more of these now famous days of decision passed, the only thing Mr. Pearson seems to have decided is that we must not expect him to be deciding in so little time.

It has been most interesting. I am not going over these days; the opportunity will come on another occasion to outline them in some detail. But the Liberal party have learned a lot; they have changed a lot. Some of the policies of a few months ago have been altered in these days of decision. Within 20 days the 60 days had become shifty days. It is most interesting to follow the course of events, for in the light of responsibility the promises which were made in 1962 and 1963 have in many cases been found impossible of application. As far as the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) is concerned, some mention was made of him the other day and the question was asked whether he was the senior or the junior minister. Well, during the election campaign an announcement was made by the Prime Minister that there would be a Minister of Agriculture and an Associate Minister of Agriculture. However, in the light of experience, in the light of the search on the part of the Liberal party for biculturalism and bilingualism, these ministers are now to be co-equals and equals. Indeed, as far as the hon. member for Richelieu-Vercheres (Mr. Cardin) is concerned, he would not be in the cabinet at all if the promise made by the Prime Minister had actually been carried into effect that the portfolio should be abolished as one without responsibility. I am pointing out that in the light of experience the responsibilities of office do change the thinking of those who take office.

Now I read in the Financial Post of April 27 a statement that those who expect miracles from the new government are bound to be disappointed. The article goes on to say that our basic problems were created neither by the Diefenbaker regime nor by the previous Liberal regimes—so we are both cleared there. They were created, it says, by the exigencies of our history and brought to a head by economic developments in Canada, in the United States and in the whole Atlantic community during the two decades since the war. The article then goes on to deal with a subject about which we have heard much from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon). That hon. gentleman did not regard it as anti-American to advocate over and over again the need to assure control by Canada of her economic destiny. That has been the purport of his argument ever since he had the honour of being the head of a commission. Indeed, it says in this article to which I have been referring that the problems of manufacture and of United States ownership are the heart of our present difficulties. They determine our potential for economic growth; they limit our capacity for creating new jobs.

I intend to deal with the particular plan the government has in mind—the plan to set up a board whose purpose it will be to interest Canadians in buying Canadian stocks, to take over United States companies and to ensure that the ownership of our resources in Canada shall be guaranteed to Canadians as far as this can be done. Well, with $23 billions of foreign investment in Canada, if this proposed corporation is to be effective it would mean an addition to Canada's national debt beyond anything one can contemplate today.

What about the speech from the throne? All of us were led to await it in anxious expectation. What a document was going to be produced when that group of brains over there, coupled with other brains, was to bring forth the salvation of Canada, with the assistance of the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) as general factotum bringing them together. We expected tremendous things. I intend to deal with this speech from the throne, because in every part of Canada there is national disappointment. It is full of platitudes spaced out among economic generalities which indicate that the planners and the bureaucrats know best. Certainly, it is a new world they are going to take us to—one which they have criticized for many years; one in which all-powerful boards will be set up. I shall make reference to that later. All around us will be boards. The Atlantic development board will have $100 million made available to it. Its membership will be increased from five to eleven. The explanation put forward is that this is being done to strengthen the board. But it is perfectly obvious that the real reason for the increase in numbers is to assure that those whom we appointed to office will thereby be removed. That is the purpose. That is the aim of this alteration to be made in the bill, whenever it may be introduced.

As far as the budget is concerned, we have to wait for that now. Rumour has it that it will be introduced immediately after the speech from the throne. Rumour has it—and it is usually well authenticated—that there is a possibility there will be a baby budget followed by a real budget later. Oh, it is interesting to watch these planners. Certainly planning is necessary. But planning which turns over the government of Canada to any group of men without control, making available to them a sum of money to the extent of $100 million, is another matter altogether. Unless there is control by parliament we have taken a step which no other government, provincial or federal, has ever taken in this country. As a matter of fact, in 1957 the then leader of the C.C.F. party, Mr. Coldwell, moved an amendment which called upon the government to give immediate effect to the social and economic planning necessary to cope with certain problems. The amendment set out what those problems were—inflation, rapidly rising unemployment and other serious matters. Each and every member of the Liberal party at that time voted against the amendment. The speech from the throne indicates that today a new kind of philosophic and theoretical planning has become the essential program of the Liberal party, the theme being that the government knows best. If carried into effect by one or two of the ministers sitting over there—and by one who would have been a member but for the fact that the leader of the New Democratic party was successful in that constituency—the philosophy of hon. gentlemen opposite is a philosophy of planning, a philosophy of placing control in the hands of a few bureaucratic individuals who, unless circumscribed by protective measures in the legislation, will bring about in our country government by a bureaucratic autocracy.

It is most interesting to see these developments. What are the promises which were made? We know, now, that there is to be a dominion-provincial conference. The reason we know that, and knew it when we came here today, is because it was announced outside the House of Commons by Premier Robichaud on Friday last. Where is the plan announced by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing)? He went to Vancouver and announced that great plan on behalf of this government. Ten thousand scholarships were going to be brought into effect at once. He said there was a tremendous plan to assist in relieving unemployment. Is that going to be brought in? Has there been any consent from, or consultation with, any of the provinces yet? Has the premier of Quebec agreed to this?

What of the promises in 1962 and 1963 on the part of the Prime Minister in respect of all of these programs? These joint programs were going to be done away with. They were dangerous to confederation. They were going to be removed. Yet in the face of that promise we now have on the part of the minister of northern affairs a complete recital of a new plan. I ask, has that received the approval, the consent, the consideration of any of the provinces?

Then they were going to abolish these joint plans. An amendment is being brought in to the Trans-Canada Highway Act whereby, according to statements in the press, 90 per cent of the cost will be made available by the federal government. Premier Robichaud dealt with that. Is this the way in which the government that mocked joint planning, and which is now in a position to implement it, is carrying out their promise?

Then there was the medicare plan. What language was used in Saskatchewan against that plan. Has the Liberal leader in Saskatchewan been consulted in this connection? He said that there was nothing more dangerous than the medicare plan. What has happened to that? Mr. Kent is reported to have said that this would be one of those things to be introduced within 60 days. Of course, Mr. Kent is "up above". The others are "down below". I ask, what of the medicare plan? What of the plan to assist portable pensions? These were all matters which were discussed. These were matters of instant moment. We in this party came out in favour of action in this regard. We believe it is necessary that the federal parliament pass the necessary complementary legislation so that this proposal respecting a pension may be made effective in cases in which the provinces, under their own jurisdiction, have brought this plan into effect. I ask, what of these things? I believe that action must be taken along this line.

I am glad to see that those opposite today believe in technical training and the expansion of technical schools. The hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr), when minister of labour, brought this question before the house. We brought into effect one of the greatest plans of expansion of technical education in Canada to be found anywhere in the western world. As a result of that action $300 million is being made available to the provinces. Some 135,000 young Canadians will receive training each year. This is to be expanded. I should like the Prime Minister to give some indication as to his plans when he speaks, and whether he means to put flesh and blood on the skeleton of the promises which were made.

What about university assistance, aside from the scholarship plan? We were criticized very harshly, even though we were able to arrive at a plan acceptable to the province of Quebec, for extending the amount of assistance to universities by raising the amount from $1 to $1.50 and then $2. What is going to be done about that? It was said during the election that this matter would receive attention. The minister of northern affairs apparently placed some credence in those promises. I should like to ask the Prime Minister to indicate now what is going to be done. Has he received permission? Has he received consent? What provinces have been consulted?

Then in order to assure that the youth of our country can carry on, what is going to be done in respect of the important matter of family allowances, of extending their applicability to youths up to 18 years of age who are attending school? What action is being taken in this regard?

We had a complete unveiling of the speech from the throne from the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) when he spoke in Toronto a few weeks ago. What is going to be done in face of what now appears in the speech from the throne? There is nothing in the speech effectively to meet the problems we face, nor indeed to maintain the tremendous rate of economic growth in Canada which took place in 1962, and which is still continuing.

What of agriculture? The government are going to bifurcate the department. East is east and west is west, and only the twain shall meet in cabinet. What an idea. A problem which is facing all parts of Canada is to be divided. It was never originally intended that the heir to the eastern throne would be a co-equal, an hon. minister without portfolio. But this has now been changed; they are going to be equal. Who is to decide? Who is going to be the auctioneer when it comes to deciding the problems regarding the agricultural rights of eastern and western Canada? Where is assistance for agriculture? Have the government forgotten this? I can find nothing except generality in the speech from the throne. I find nothing of new programs promised to make farming as a whole more stable. I find nothing to provide expanding markets. Special attention was to be given to dairy products. We were ridiculed and reviled about our policy regarding dairy products, and now in office hon. gentlemen opposite adopt our plans and carry them on. Do they or do they not agree that it is necessary to expand credit for agricultural export sales? Do they or do they not agree on the need for a special feed grain and storage assistance plan for the eastern farmers? Do they or do they not agree that the promotion of better land use and conservation through ARDA should be followed? Do they or do they not agree that surplus products should be made available to support the world food bank? These are things that we would like to know about. But read the speech from the throne. It is noted for its brevity; it is equally noted for the paucity of the policies it contains.

What about economy? I spoke with admiration of the speech of the hon. member for Northumberland (Miss Jewett). She spoke with facility and ease. She had greater faith in those sitting opposite than, as will be understood, is shared by us. But she did speak of the need of getting the economy moving. That is one of the brighter examples of Liberal mythology—getting the economy moving. I intend to refer in general to what has been done, the actions we took for which we were ridiculed and the effect on the Canadian economy of the course we followed, so as to answer once and for all that spurious argument.

The Liberals inherited a buoyant economy. On the basis of what we did and the action taken the economy has remained buoyant and there has been an advance in the economy not equalled anywhere else in the western world. They speak of getting the economy going. Well, Mr. Arthur J. R. Smith, director of research for the Canadian-American committee, speaking in the city of Toronto on April 27, said: "The task of the new Liberal administration would be not to get the economy moving but to keep it moving".

I might point out what the situation was when we came into office. It was well summarized by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), speaking in the house in 1957, when he said that we claimed to have inherited declining revenues, and that was right; a shrinking national income, and that was the situation; a deteriorating economy, and that was a fact; and an arrested national development and foreign markets going or gone. That was the picture in 1957. In every part of the western world since there has been one serious recession and one lesser recession.

All through the piece one of those who said that the economy was moving forward very well was the president of the council. I have his address in that connection in which he pointed out that the economy was moving ahead very well in the summer of 1962, while at the same time in every part of Canada a doleful dirge was being sung playing down Canada's economic position. And today they pretend they have taken over a broken down Canadian economy. Sir, that kind of action is a despicable exercise in political deception endeavouring to lead the people to believe that the country has been slipping back. This is a myth, a myth resulting from a philosophy of undiluted despair.

I am going to review the situation in the country shortly to point out what the Liberals inherited when they took office, in order to answer these allegations that are so generously made without foundation and without being based on fact. Liberal despair over the Canadian economy has run into a flood of optimistic items in the financial pages of the press. Here are some of the recent headlines: Montreal Star, "Steel Climbs To

New Highs"; Financial Post, "Canadians Will Run Up Record Tourist Mileage All 1963 Signs Indicate". The hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale), as the former minister in charge brought about the expansion of tourist development during our period of office. It increased to such an extent as a result of our action in pegging the dollar that in 1962 we had the lowest deficit for many years in tourist expenditures.

Here are other headlines: Financial Post, "Liberals Riding Upturn"; Toronto Telegram, "1962 Best Year On Record Possible". The Toronto Star refers to the tremendous expansion in automobile production and in employment in connection with it. Here is one in the Globe and Mail: "Predict 1963 Record In Chemical Sales".

Canada's economy has enjoyed a high plateau of achievement ever since the upturn registered early in 1962. If the problems were so easy to meet why were they not met in the United States? I remember the promises of 1960, the new frontier and what was going to be brought about. What about meeting unemployment there? Look at the record and you will find that we in Canada have done better than has been done in the United States in meeting a problem that has always been serious in our country by reason of climatic conditions.

Sir, the steel industry is a sound basis for Canada's economic progress. It is advancing as never before. An economy that was supposed to be receding has exceeded the forecasts of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) when in 1956 or 1957 he, as head of a commission, produced a report forecasting the future. Last year was the greatest in steelmaking history. Production was up 10 per cent and home market saturation around 87 per cent. Exports exceeded imports for the first time. Already Canadian steel exports appear to be running ahead of the Gordon commission's forecast of 12 million tons by 1980.

And so on. I could mention various industries and the expansion that has taken place. While the Liberals ridiculed we worked to bring about policies to strengthen the economy. In December, 1962, the London Economist reported that Canada had outstripped every other nation in the world in the rate of economic growth. I want to pause here and say that with the kind of policies announced in the speech from the throne the expansion this year will not equal the expansion that took place last year compared with the preceding one. I make that prophecy on the basis of the uncertainty of the nebulous promises contained in the speech from the throne.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

The gross national product was over 8 per cent higher by value last year than in 1961. Again I point out the prophecy that was made by the Minister of Finance when he was a commissioner in regard to gross national product. Employment was higher month by month in 1962 than in 1961.

The latest figures show that 90,000 more Canadians were employed in April 1963 than in April 1962. This is the fourth month in a row in which unemployment has been lower than in the corresponding month of the year before. Labour income exceeds the 1961 figure by 6.8 per cent, and this is a new record. While we did not have the support of big business in many areas or in many fields of industry, corporate profits in 1962 were 12 per cent higher than in 1961. It is well known that without profits there are no jobs.

Foreign trade reached an all-time high in 1962. An unprecedented increase occurred in exports and in that year there was a surplus of $155 million in exports over imports. When we took office what was the position of those giants of intellect that today occupy the front benches? What was the position when we took office? Well, in 1956 there was a trade deficit of $713 million. Those were the halcyon days. We brought about a surplus in 1961 and 1962 when the challenge to our trade in every part of the world was infinitely greater than it had been following the war.

Mineral output was up 10 per cent during 1961 and there was a record production of nickel, copper, asbestos, crude petroleum and natural gas. What about the developments in western Canada in connection with oil? Markets were found in the United States and kept, as a result of which there was a tremendous expansion unequalled in the history of the petroleum industry. The construction of new residences was 8 per cent higher in 1962 than in 1961. Business investment in non-residential construction, machinery and equipment rose 4 per cent in 1962.

Sir, I place these figures on the record in order to answer the sham arguments that were advanced, and effectively advanced by those who today speak for the government of this country. Canada has never enjoyed a sounder business climate than that reflected in the 1962 figures which showed higher consumer spending, restocking of industry and general progress. Do you remember, sir, how they ridiculed us when we pegged the dollar? They said it was a frightful thing to do, and Canada would be bankrupt. They filled Canada with counterfeit dollars on the back of which they indicated there would be a tremendous increase in prices. They knew better than that. The high priest and prophet of finance of that party, himself, advocated the pegging of the dollar several years ago, yet all through the 1962 campaign they dealt with arguments that they knew were baseless. This policy elevated the Canadian economy to the plateau it achieved. I ask them, then, are they going to remove the peg?

We introduced surcharges in order to meet a situation similar to the one which had occurred in 1947 when the economy was expanding. They criticized us for removing all these surcharges on March 31. We undertook to remove them as soon as it would be proper to do so, and that was the end of the fiscal year. We removed them, and thereby brought to our country new confidence in financial circles in every part of the world.

Now, sir, what about the halcyon days of 1956, the last year they were in office? Well, the gross national production has gone up 32.74 per cent since; labour income 36.7 per cent; personal income 40.7 per cent. During our period in office we were able to keep in check inflation which is the thief of economic progress. I am not going to go farther into that because other hon. members will deal with other phases. However, I should like to point out that only a couple of days ago the Canadian National Railways reported that their financial position showed improvement by $18.2 million over the previous year and that Canadian National operating revenues were up $28 million over 1961. Sir, we left the Canadian house in good economic order.

In this party we have, throughout the years, from its beginnings advocated the need for maintaining and preserving Canada's integrity as a nation. There have been two particular policies that this party has followed throughout the years. One of them has been the maintenance on the north half of the North American continent of a free and independent Canada. In the days of Macdonald, on two occasions he fought battles for the maintenance of that principle. We followed it throughout the years. They charged us with being anti-American because we took a stand on behalf of Canada and her rights. I have no apologies to offer now or in the years ahead for that stand, which will be proven right. Never before, though, was there as much interference by certain elements in the United States in a Canadian election.

We had the closest of relationships with the United States. Only the other day the former president, General Eisenhower, that great American and great leader of men, said that we had no differences that could not be solved. We were able to get together. There was no interference on the part of either side. I say, sir, that we have a right to declare our policies for Canada and to determine them without dictation. I am going to refer to one policy and ask what is the position today in that connection.

A nation cannot survive if it becomes a satellite. Those are not my words. Those are the words of one of those who occupy the treasury benches today. Were we anti-American? What did the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) say? It is surprising how things said by them turn out to be pro-Canadian, but if we say the same thing we are dangerous to the unity of the western world. Let me read some excerpts from a speech given by the Minister of Trade and Commerce at Windsor on November 9, 1962. "Can Canada preserve a separate identity beside the United States," was the topic for discussion.

> As some of my friends have remarked, however, I have much to learn about politics, and one of the things I find most difficult to learn is always to play it safe.

He proved that in London a few days ago when he took his stand against the commonwealth. I will refer to that in a moment.

Then he went on to say this, that we need not fear the commission of a sexual offence or even an offer of marriage from the United States.

Then he said this:

> I suggest however, that we are in danger of losing the essentials of nationhood and perhaps our will to survive as a nation.

This is the man who today is Minister of Trade and Commerce in this government. He asked:

> Can anything be done about it?

Then he went on to say:

> —the key to the preservation of our separate identity is not so much to resist American penetration as to reduce and minimize our dependence on American money, ideas and culture.

Is that anti-American or not? Quote me as ever having gone that far. Then he went on to say this:

> We shall have to begin to regain control of our own destiny.

I had better read the whole of it or they will say I left something out.

> The remedy for this dependence is not to raise barriers against the capital inflow but to order our internal affairs that our international accounts are brought into balance, that is, to learn to live within our means. When that happens we shall begin to regain control of our own destiny.

What does that mean—that we have lost it? Then he said:

> Then and only then can we hope to bring the process of alienation of ownership and control of Canadian industry to a stop.

Then he said this:

> We should not be dependant upon foreign capital to maintain a healthy rate of economic growth any more than we should be dependant on United States magazines and T.V. for information and opinions.

When I speak about television, Mr. Speaker, I am reminded of the fact that United States television stations on the west coast and generally across western Canada on election night were broadcasting into Canada the results in the Atlantic provinces before the polls were closed in western Canada.

Then he mentioned the trading union involving only Canada and the United States, and said that the decision about easier tariffs in the beginning would be made in Washington and in the interests of the chief party, and added:

I find it difficult to believe there could be free trade between Canada and the United States in agricultural commodities... You will understand from these remarks, Mr. Chairman, why I said at the outset that we shall be able to preserve our separate identity as a nation if we believe strongly enough in ourselves and are prepared to pay the price of remaining separate and distinct from our great neighbour.

Who said that? The now Minister of Trade and Commerce and, sir, he went on:

By any standards Canada is a very fortunate country and if we lose our separate identity it will not be because we lack the means to sustain our Canadian way of life. It will be because we do not make the effort.

Sir, that was the stand we took. In order to have some control over our resources we brought in effective measures governing our mines, oils and gas located in territories under our control, and one of those regulations stipulated that 50 per cent of the equity stock in companies exploiting those areas should be made available in Canada. Now I ask the Prime Minister to tell us, when he replies, whether there is any foundation for the suggestion presently widespread that that regulation is going to be changed? I ask that because everywhere we hear it said that there are going to be changes in this.

I shall pass on to the international situation mainly for the purpose of asking a number of questions of the Prime Minister.

The NATO conference will be convened here this week. The former government invited the NATO nations here and the invitation was accepted. Union within this group of nations must be maintained. However, I must say I was somewhat astonished, when I asked the Prime Minister the question regarding Canada's ideas respecting the multilateral force, that he could not give me a reply. That was on Friday last, and in effect he said we have to wait until the meeting of the NATO nations. Is that not what I said all through the campaign?

I read press reports pretty carefully and just the other day I read where the Prime Minister spoke to a newsman in the United States. This is one story which he has not yet denied. I am just paraphrasing his words and if I misquote him I will be glad to make a correction, but what he said was that it is so much easier to say what you would do in international affairs when you read about them in newspapers than when you have available to you the information that comes from the various embassies maintained by the country.

This week's NATO meeting is an important one. At it there will be material discussions on the problems of defence; yet when I asked the Prime Minister what is Canada's view he said, "We cannot tell you that." They have not yet made up their minds and they will not be able to make them up until they sit down with these other nations. Did he not, when talking to Mr. Kennedy, discuss Canada's attitude in this regard? It said so in the papers. I do not know whether that has been denied but it is about the only thing the Prime Minister has not denied, except that he possesses the qualities that Jayne Mansfield ascribed to him.

If Canada is not going to fall in line with the views of the United States in this, should we not know? Is the course going to be determined by Canada as to the stand we will take? I ask should such a force be set up? The arguments generally have revolved around the fact that if it is acceptable it will deny Germany having atomic weapons for itself. It will assure a greater degree of unity in the western world by preventing France and Germany from having a joint deterrent force.

What of the mixed crews? Is Canada going to contribute to that idea? The Prime Minister said he thought he might be in a position to answer today and I hope he will be able to give us some idea as to what stand will be taken on the morrow regarding a question so important.

Today's press indicates that for now the United States has abandoned the multilateral nuclear force proposed for NATO. Is that correct? I ask these questions not for the purpose of dealing on this occasion with defence. That subject will be fully dealt with when action is being taken to set up the defence committee, but I ask them simply so that we will know in this country what attitude Canada will take at the NATO meeting.

I should also like to ask the Prime Minister what Canada's stand will be in connection with the maintenance of the United Nations. Today the United Nations faces the most serious fiscal worries of its time; $106 million is owing in assessments. If action is taken to exclude members then, of course, you have the beginnings of the end of this institution.

On the other hand there must be some action that can be taken to provide for the peacekeeping assessments being paid. Today more than 60 per cent of those in default, as I recall it, are the Soviet bloc and France. What is going to be done in this connection? What ideas has Canada in this regard? How can that institution continue to discharge its tremendous power for good and for peace in the world if its membership, or any of its members, refuse to pay the costs of belonging to that institution, without which there cannot be the hope of peace in the world?

I express the hope, in welcoming to Ottawa on behalf not only of the opposition but, I am sure, all Canadians, the NATO ministerial conference, that out of this conference will come a strengthening of the ties of NATO. In recent months, as a result of things taking place in Europe, there has been shown a weakening of the cement that binds that institution together. Without it there is no survival. Therefore a great challenge faces those who represent the several member countries to do their best at this conference.

I mentioned a moment ago that I would like to find out about something that is also omitted from the speech from the throne. Today an answer was given to the effect that the matter was being considered. Does the house remember how through the years they said to us, "You should get into the organization of American states. That will be the salvation of Canada. It will bring us closer to our friends in south and central America". I believe in close relations with them. The government of which I had the honour to be head extended to a very great degree the diplomatic posts in South America. I am frank when I tell you that I felt at one time it was a course that had an impelling demand to be followed by us. But events changed that. What is being done about it now? Today the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) was his evasive best; when he was asked about this he seemed to be getting away from it. Have the government not decided their course in this regard? The Prime Minister over and over again said we should get into that organization, that it would mean a great deal in the influence we would have. I wonder. What about the present difficulties in Haiti? What about other events that have occurred recently? They have said it might improve our trade. We want to expand our trade.

The Prime Minister was reported by the Boston Globe as having said that Canada would announce plans to join the organization of American states. The Prime Minister denied that afterwards, but it is interesting that the question should find its way into a United States newspaper. I ask the government, what is your decision in this regard? This was something upon which President Kennedy gave us advice. Standing over there, speaking in this chamber, he told us this was something we ought to do. Sir, we heard that during our term of office. We believed it was not something we should rush into, whether asked for by a friendly neighbour or not. We were pressed—some interpreted it as pushed—to get into this organization. The Prime Minister has been an advocate of this. I ask him now, why was there no mention of it in the speech from the throne? Has the enthusiasm of five years been dissipated in the experience of 25 or 30 days of decision? Has the Prime Minister found it easier to declare than to perform?

Indeed, there must be some basis for this newspaper report, because Mr. Charles Lynch said in the Ottawa Citizen of April 11, "Canada now to join O.A.S." He went on to say:

> This view was put forward forcibly by Paul Martin in his role as Liberal foreign affairs critic . . . Liberal leader Pearson is known to favour O.A.S. membership for Canada . . .

What are they going to do in this regard? They do not want my view, naturally, but I give it for what it is worth. It is pretty well summed up by an editorial in the Financial Post, to which I shall refer only in a general way. Summarized, it is this:

> Despite President Kennedy's blandishments, Canada's reasons for staying out of the organization of American states look as good as they ever were—and perhaps better.

Then the article says:

> There is no contribution to hemispheric peace and welfare that we can possibly make as a member of O.A.S. that we can't make as a non-member. And in some cases non-membership can be a positive advantage.
>
> It is quite understandable that President Kennedy wants more votes for his side in the O.A.S. He wants us to come in so we will vote with him the way other satellites like Byelorussia or Bulgaria vote with the Soviet union in the United Nations . . .
>
> As a member of O.A.S., Canada would everywhere be regarded as accepting a cat's-paw role for the United States.

I am not adopting those statements; I am simply saying that the Financial Post holds that view. What is the view today of the government of Canada? Was it omitted from the speech from the throne because of the effect of sober second thought?

I mentioned the commonwealth a moment ago. This party through the years has been a strong commonwealth party. We believed in the necessity of preserving this institution, though it has no authority, there are no agreements among its members excepting the trade agreements and it is held together without seal. But to be a member of that organization and to be present at a prime ministers' conference is to realize the strength it exerts for peace and its preservation. Yet it is being downgraded in some parts of the world. Dean Acheson, who is high in the administration of the United States, early in the year relegated Britain and the commonwealth to a "has been" position, the commonwealth by inference and Britain directly. The Right Hon. Selwyn Lloyd spoke these words in referring to that statement:

> Mr. Acheson's statement was as damaging to the commonwealth as any I have ever read from either side of the iron curtain.

There was a meeting last week in London.

How they ridiculed us, when they were in opposition, when I suggested a meeting of the trade ministers of the commonwealth in London before the Geneva meeting. They laughed at the suggestion. Now, the stone they rejected in the House of Commons has become the cornerstone of their policy. They ridiculed the idea I placed before the prime ministers' conference last September. I do not intend to quote what they or their supporting press had to say. They said the proposal to convene a meeting of the commonwealth, of the European common market, of representatives of the United States, Japan and other like-minded nations was an ephemeral dream. They said it was worthless. Worse than that, they said that in advocating it I had lost standing for Canada among the nations of the commonwealth. Well, a little later on, after the President of the United States had secured his trade powers, I brought the suggestion to his attention. I shall not repeat what he said but I ask hon. members to read Hansard. I placed the suggestion before him and he accepted it and said he would join with Canada in taking the initiative. Out of that has come this meeting of these nations in Geneva which holds hope for all mankind, in the western world in any event, for the reduction of trade barriers between nations. However, that did not in any way close out the commonwealth.

Now let me say this: without discussion in parliament but in keeping with the views expressed by the Liberal party over and over again, when this matter came before the conference in London a stand was taken on which I intend to comment now. I intend simply to use comment which has appeared in various newspapers to support what I have to say. The Toronto Telegram said the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) had tossed a blockbuster into the conference.

> Canada's new trade minister, Mitchell Sharp, tossed a blockbuster into today's conference of 16 commonwealth ministers by giving blunt warning that the Liberal government was writing off the commonwealth as a trading group.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: When I mentioned this a moment ago there were jeers from over there. Let me read on.

> He declared he had no suggestions on commonwealth trade to put before the two-day economic review.

Does that mean we are going to remove those preferences which we have—preferences which have stood the test of time and which have over and over again been a stumbling block among other nations? Let me go on to quote another statement from the Toronto Star. Both these newspapers, by the way, are not noted for being our supporters at this time. The Star says: "Sharp Rejects Commonwealth Trade Pact". I point out that there was no suggestion of an exclusive pact. It was a general agreement among the trading nations of the commonwealth. To read on:

> The political commonwealth, yes. The economic commonwealth, no. Trade minister Mitchell Sharp yesterday set Canada's face firmly against all proposals to rebuild the British commonwealth as an exclusive trading or economic bloc.

I go on from there. The Toronto Telegram of May 13 carried a headline: "Sharp Erases the 'Family' As Trade Unit". And so on. I could give the house various quotations. For instance, the Toronto Globe and Mail reported: "Sharp Firmly Rejects Proposal for GATT Commonwealth Bloc". Finally, the day after, the Star has a story headed: "Sharp Answers U.K. Critics; Says He's No Trade Villain".

I say this: no one asked that this be made an exclusive body. But is there any reason why we, within the greater amplitude of GATT, to which members of the government whose head I had the honour to be gave their support and leadership, there should not be consideration given to the expansion of trade within the commonwealth? That is our view. That has been the view of the Conservative party throughout the years. It is not a backward-looking view, because the commonwealth has in it inherently a power in the future for good as in the past which demands its preservation, its expansion and its strengthening.

In the speech from the throne there is surprisingly little about dominion-provincial relations. I shall not take the trouble to quote exactly what it says. It is beautifully general. It says that as Canadians we can now work with hope. Then it goes on to deal with biculturalism, and says:

> To make us a more united people, the government will in all things strive to strengthen and to give new direction to our Canadian confederation. It will foster the spirit of co-operative federalism—

That sounds suspiciously like the words of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lamontagne) in his immortal book on the federal system back in 1954.

—fully respecting the rights of the provinces while safeguarding and extending the equality of opportunity which properly belongs to all Canadians in all parts of our country.

Well, I should like to look into that for a moment. I should like to ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) this question: did he promise Mr. Lesage, the premier of Quebec, directly or indirectly, that he would bring about a new plan for sharing corporation taxation, personal income tax and estate tax? It is interesting to note the attitude of hon. members opposite in this connection. When Mr. Lesage was a member of the government, along with other distinguished people, Mr. St. Laurent, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier) and others, 10 per cent of income tax and corporation tax was sufficient. Now, it is 25 per cent of each of them. What undertakings were given? What has been the answer to the ultimatum? I noticed on Friday the Prime Minister said there was no ultimatum. Well, I would simply quote the words of Mr. René Levesque who called them immediate demands and an ultimatum. In other words: "Either you do, or you are out". The Prime Minister said it was not an ultimatum. Mr. Levesque said it was.

I ask the right hon. gentleman now whether he accepts the proposition advanced by Mr. Pierre Laporte that we should build up in Canada during the next few decades a confederation of sovereign states. That is not the concept of Canada, but they are the views which the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier) took with him from Ontario to Quebec when he went there "in exile".

These are very serious matters, and I ask, what is the attitude of this government? What undertakings have been given? I point out this fact, that had we not during the period we were in office increased from 10 to 13 per cent the tax on companies and incomes, added to the amounts being given in the past to the provinces, we would not have had a deficit in any year; but we chose to increase the allowances to the provinces in order to permit them to carry out their constitutional responsibilities. What is going to happen if this new plan is carried into effect? What is going to happen to the promise of hope which we do not hear about any more, that of a balanced budget? That was the first objective. It does not appear in the throne speech any more because this plan, if brought into effect, according to the estimate before me would bring about an increase in the amounts paid to the provinces of $301 million. What is going to be done in this connection? What are the plans for the setting up of a municipal development board? Whatever the amount may be, be it $400 million or what, who is going to determine which municipalities will receive support? Has this in any way been cleared with the provinces?

There is about this, in the general terms as set out in the speech from the throne, great dangers of centralization in the country. That has been the bureaucratic dream since the days of Macdonald—to centralize power. The municipalities are the creation of the provinces. What is the attitude of the provinces, or any of them, in this connection? What about the meeting which is going to be called? Premier Robichaud told us about it. What is going to be the attitude of the federal government in this regard? I suggest that instead of a royal commission being set up, as the government intends, they should do what we suggested in order to meet the problem of reaching a greater unity of understanding and of equalizing opportunities for Canadians: place this matter before a meeting of the provinces; bring together representatives of all four political parties and secure their views; bring them together and take the first major step. If this government is able to attain it, I will salute them for patriating our constitution. We tried it, and but for the action of only two provinces we would have achieved it. You cannot bring about a discussion among various provinces of our national symbols by means of a royal commission. You can do it only through a meeting between the federal government and the provinces so as to secure in a common unity the acceptance of principles. Without this they cannot be brought into effect. That would bring about a concept of a new sense of national purpose and destiny. We did much to ensure that under confederation there should be a recognition of the bicultural nature of the nation as the foundation to the building of a greater unity within our land. This we did. We were unable to bring about agreement on the constitution. I suggest now that if there is a new feeling in the country in this regard, bringing the provinces together would achieve this purpose.

There are many other matters which I could deal with but I do not intend to go further today. The opportunity to be critical will come later. Today I have been constructive, as constructive as possible under the circumstances. I have pointed out that there is very little in the speech from the throne excepting for the fact that certain things which we advanced are again being brought forward under new names. Beyond that, the imagination which was spoken of so generously and for so long by the former opposition is conspicuously absent.

Let me make a short review. Biculturalism I have already dealt with. The speech says that——my ministers will strive to lessen international tensions and halt the arms race by seeking measures of controlled disarmament, including a treaty to end nuclear tests under reasonable safeguards.

We tried to do that for five years. For three years the Hon. Howard Green gave a leadership at the United Nations which brought honour to him.

Then the speech says:

It is my ministers' intention to assist in enhancing the unique value of the commonwealth partnership in international relations.

I cannot understand how it was that when the Prime Minister arrived at Hyannis Port he forgot he had been to Great Britain, because he said: "This is my first visit outside of Canada since I became Prime Minister". His visit to the United Kingdom could not have had a very great effect upon him; or perhaps, in fairness and in frankness, I should say that the new stage was somewhat unsettling.

With regard to trade, the speech says:

Canada will take a constructive part in trade and other economic negotiations.

This will expand Canada's export trade. That is what we did. It was our co-operation with the President of the United States in bringing together like-minded nations which will have this effectual result when the meeting takes place at Geneva. In that connection, a few months ago the Prime Minister was all for the president's plan of a 50 per cent lateral cut in tariffs. It was a great thing—imaginative and bold, he said. I would ask him, is he for it now? I read in the press that he has some doubts. Certainly the Minister of Trade and Commerce has doubts. What is going to happen to us? I ask the Prime Minister this question; I know he has the answer. What will happen to us with the 50 per cent cut between Canada and the United States? Their tariffs are away up high; our tariffs are away down low, the lowest of any country in the world. If they cut theirs by 50 per cent theirs will still be high tariffs, but we will be open to competition the like of which Canada has never suffered before. I ask the Prime Minister, does he still believe in the 50 per cent lateral cut?

At Geneva today, according to press reports, there is agreement among the nations of the European common market in this connection. They realize what is going to happen. They are going to have little or no tariff and the United States is still going to have a very measurable tariff. When you had your discussions with the president did you point out to him that if he were to reduce tariffs on Canadian products to the same extent that we have on American products that would be one of the greatest steps forward in bringing about an expansion of trade between our countries? I would be glad to hear what took place during those meetings at Hyannis Port.

Unemployment will be dealt with by the former minister of labour. Suffice it to say I have already referred to the fact that there has been a great improvement in this regard, and on the basis of our policies we were able to look forward to the day when unemployment would be reduced to a minimum. I think the setting up of a department of industry is a very good idea if it carries out its purposes, to foster industrial expansion and provide a central point to which industry can look for consultation, stimulus and assistance. We did something in this regard. We set up a small business branch. We assisted small business by reducing company income tax and in many other ways endeavoured to encourage it. But if setting up a department of industry will bring about what is stated in the speech from the throne, naturally we are in favour of it.

I have dealt with the amendments to the Atlantic Development Board Act. The measure to establish a Canada development corporation is certainly a tremendous thing. I should like to know who is going to choose which United States companies are to be taken over. Who is going to choose in respect of what companies the individual will be advanced money so that he can purchase stock? I should like to know who is going to take the risk, because there is always a risk. At least, that has been my experience. There was a time when I was interested in stocks but I was never successful in knowing what was going to happen. What are they going to do in this connection? This is what they say:

—a Canadian development corporation, by means of which Canadians can more readily direct their savings—

I think there are approximately $8 billion in the savings banks. That is the figure in my mind. What co-operation are you going to have from the lending institutions and the banks in order to channel those savings in the direction that you desire?

A measure will be placed before you to establish an economic council of Canada, in order to assist the government, industry and labour to develop means of ensuring in Canada the highest possible levels of employment, of efficient production, and of sustained growth—

We had the productivity council which did exceptionally good work in connection with efficient production. We endeavoured to bring about a national economic development board. We brought the legislation before parliament. On the face of it this measure appears to me to be much the same as what we had in mind, but the opposition of that day and government of today spent six days debating our legislation and preventing it from becoming law. However, we are not going to react in kind. If this legislation when revealed indicates that it is not going to bring about a bureaucratic set-up whereby we will have anything of the bureaucracy that existed between 1945 and 1957, then we will do our part to give it constructive support.

My ministers will pursue constructive policies for the development of Canada's great resources for the benefit of Canadians.

How? When? Where? What? Nobody knows. It is a beautiful generality.

The government will undertake discussions with the government of British Columbia and with the United States, aimed at securing action on the development of the Columbia river.

I noted that the Prime Minister said the other day that he had to clear something with Washington before they could take up the matter with British Columbia. That was most interesting. He has to clear that up.

Mr. Pearson: It is a treaty with the United States signed by you.

Mr. Diefenbaker: But they have got to clear it up.

Mr. Pearson: We certainly do.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then we have the answer. I am glad the Prime Minister made that interruption. I ask him: What discussions are you having with regard to that treaty? What arrangements have been made for any change in the treaty in any particular? Have you agreed in any way upon any terms in that connection? If you have, we want to know. The very fact that the Prime Minister answered as he did indicates that something has been done in that connection. We will get the truth if we keep at it. I love these interruptions because they always reveal and never conceal.

The government is initiating consultation with the provinces to work out a program for national fishery development. My ministers intend to secure the establishment of a 12-mile limit for the use of the Canadian fisheries—

That is a very laudable objective. They would not have it in the speech from the throne unless they had made some advances in this direction. We were within half a vote of having an international agreement in that connection. We were that close to having an agreement on a 12-mile limit, or six and six, with the nations gathered together in Geneva on two occasions. We have pointed out, however, that unilateral action is dangerous when 80 per cent of our fisheries products are sold in the United States and action taken unilaterally like this might very well lead to retaliation that would have serious economic effects for the fishing industry of Canada. What discussions have there been in this connection? Have you got to a point where there is any agreement within the realm of possibility?

Then there is the comprehensive railway problem with regard to which the speech from the throne says that we will be asked to continue the existing payments to the railways pending the approval of long term measures concerning transportation. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that when we said there should be a full examination of the MacPherson report the now Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier) and then opposition critic on transport had all the answers. He said what could be done. He said, "Go right ahead". We would like to hear some explanation as to the reason why there has been a decision to change the assurance that was given so frequently that this was a problem easily met.

In that connection I do not wish to deal with individual cases. However, when the minister referred this afternoon, in answer to the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski), in such an offhand manner to the removal of those two trains in western Canada he indicated that he did not have any realization of the serious nature of this action both on a social basis and from the point of view of employment. Even now I ask him to give consideration to using the power which I believe rests with the governor in council to stop this action until a general and comprehensive policy has been worked out.

We come now to the question of contributory pensions. We will be looking forward with interest in this regard. We endeavoured to bring it about. We had the legislation ready but we wanted to provide for survivor benefits and in order to provide for survivor benefits, without which a contributory system will not be very effective, we found that a constitutional amendment was necessary. Has the government decided that we were right in that regard or is it determined to bring into effect a system of contributory pensions without survivor benefits?

Redistribution is referred to. I think this is a most important matter. We brought legislation before the house in the 1961 and 1962 sessions. We had it ready again last fall but we were unable to get the organization set up to secure passage of the legislation. I hope that this matter will be proceeded with and that for all time we will remove the partisan nature of the redistribution procedures of the past. I would point out in this connection that while representation by population is the objective and the desirable mean toward which we should work, having regard to the widespread nature of this country there can never under our system be equality in population between rural constituencies and urban constituencies. We provided for the determination of the bases for redistribution, and then having determined them allowed for freedom within percentage limits to the end that reasonable consideration would be given to the necessity of assuring that rural members would not be required to have the same population basis as those representing cities.

Then, there is the committee on procedure for the strengthening of parliament. I commend the government in that connection. From year to year steps forward are being made. I have often said, in that connection, that I think this chamber could be reduced in size by almost 50 per cent. You would not have desks here, then. Everybody would not have a seat that each day would be set aside for him or for her. This brings the members closer together, and brings about that relationship which the mother of parliaments has found so necessary to the establishment of a free and conversational style in the general discussion of public affairs. I think we can go a long way in the procedure committee. I should like to see an extension of the hours of sitting. I think we use up a great deal of time with the adjournment at the supper hour. A number of members could be present, as is the case in the United Kingdom, and an opportunity would be given to many members to have their say at that time. There would be an undertaking that no vote would be called during that period. We have so much to do and our sittings are taking longer and longer. We are still back many, many years in many of the procedures of parliament. I will deal with those again. I often brought them up when I had the responsibility of office. However, sir, I found out that tradition and a jealous regard on the part of members for the preservation of their prerogatives denies changes being made which would in any way interfere with rights to a degree that would be unfair to a private member.

In summary, may I say that many of the measures set out in the speech from the throne are simply a rehash of legislation that we had available and before parliament, with the added benefit of having a new name but which, taken together, do not constitute the kind of program which Canadians had hoped for and had reason to expect. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill), that the following be added to the address:

> While recognizing that Canada's economic growth during the year 1962 exceeded that of any country in the western world, this house regrets that many of the pledges made by the Prime Minister and his colleagues have not been incorporated in the government's declaration of intention as outlined in the speech from the throne, and further regrets that the policies announced fail to provide full opportunity for the people of Canada to continue the social advance and large economic growth of the past year.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in rising for the first time to speak in the house from this place I should like to mention that I do so on the official birthday of Her Majesty, our Queen. I should like to express to you, sir, if I may on behalf of all hon. members of the house our appreciation of the fact that you made reference to this fact and that you are conveying to Her Majesty the greetings and loyal good wishes of this house. I should also, Mr. Speaker, wish again to congratulate you on having been chosen by the house for the important and honourable post you now hold, and to echo what the prime minister has said about—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: I was bound to make that mistake, and I am glad that I made it at once. It is not easy, but in this case it is easier than is often the case, to abandon the habits of six years. I should like to echo what the right hon. gentleman, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), said about your qualities which will ensure that you will fulfil this important position with dignity and complete acceptability to all members of the house.

Then, I should like to pay my respects, and I do so in no formal way, and to extend my congratulations to the mover (Miss Jewett) and seconder (Mr. Choquette) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne, for what I thought was the very thoughtful and distinguished way in which they discharged the responsibilities and duties which are never easy but which they made seem to be easy. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, I may also be permitted to associate myself with the Leader of the Opposition in his gracious observations about His Excellency, the Governor General, and to express the wish of every member of this house for his speedy and complete return to full health so that he may continue to discharge the duties which he has already discharged with such great distinction as the Queen's representative in this country. The Queen, whom we do not forget today of all days, is the Queen of Canada and the head of that commonwealth to which we are all in this house, irrespective of party affiliations, devoted, and whose usefulness in the world for international peace and security we would like to see enlarged.

I would also like to extend a welcome on behalf of the government to hon. members in all parts of the house, and in particular I think it would be appropriate for me to extend that welcome to the new members who are with us. I did my small best to keep some of them from enjoying the honour and the privilege of membership but, Mr. Speaker, they got here in spite of, and perhaps even because of my intervention against them.

Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition congratulated himself—and I am not complaining about this at all, indeed quite the contrary—that during his two hour speech he showed a great deal of charity and forbearance, and for that measure of charity and forbearance which he displayed this afternoon we on this side, I suppose, should be grateful. However, he continued to show that passionate preoccupation with personalities, which he used to show on this side, and he interested himself in certain matters which I thought had very little to do with the business of parliament or the business of government at this time. In that respect I hope he will forgive me for saying so, and in respect of some other parts of his speech he showed he had learned nothing and forgotten nothing.

He pleaded with me, if pleaded is not too strong a word, to give certain decisions at once on matters of policy, when I got up to reply and to announce at once the decision of the government in respect of some very important matters of policy. He rather complained that we had not done so on this side right away. Of course, Mr. Speaker, I could remind him that this government has been in office for less than a month, and I think I am being accurate when I say that during that very short time we have made more decisions on matters of policy than the previous government made in a much longer period of time.

For instance, the Leader of the Opposition complained that we have not done anything about dairy policy except to make some minor changes and to indicate that we were going to follow the policy of the previous government; but he did not point out that we had only four days in which to act after taking office in order to avoid the lapse of the whole price support policy of the previous government. He complains that in four days we were not able to work out a complete new dairy policy and a new policy on other matters of agriculture. We will do that, but it will take a little longer than four days.

The Leader of the Opposition also indicated that we should do something now about reversing a decision regarding the abandonment of a branch line out west, a decision made as a result of hearings of the board of transport commissioners that took place last November when the right hon. gentleman was still in office.

I should point out, Mr. Speaker, that this parliament has been called together at the first possible date after the election. That in itself is a startling innovation as against the procedure after the last two elections. It would have been tempting to have postponed the meeting of parliament for a week or two so that we would have met after the NATO council meeting, which in some ways will interfere with the convenience of certain hon. members of the house. It would have been tempting to postpone the opening of parliament for a few weeks so that all hon. members who had gone through the rigours of an election campaign could have had some time to rest and refresh themselves, but we called parliament together on May 16 and this was done because the government, though technically in a minority in the house, as it is, is determined to do its utmost to move the business of this country forward at once, and that can only be done through parliament.

To the members of other parties in the house I say, Mr. Speaker, that in order to move forward the business of the country and the business of the house with the greatest possible expedition and effectiveness, which I am sure is the desire of all hon. members, the government will not be looking to any members of any party or group to give up any rights, or to act in any way against individual conscience or party principle. This government is not inviting any special arrangements and will not indulge in any special manoeuvres in order to remain in office. We do not believe that that is necessary or desirable.

We have put forward in the speech from the throne, and we will be adding to the proposals in that speech, a program which we believe to be constructive and which embodies projects for legislative action that will be to the advantage of the nation. It is my belief that this program, if parliament sees fit to put it into effect, will be for the good of Canada. I believe the program we have put forward and are now submitting to the House of Commons will enable this parliament to do a constructive job for our country and, of course, that program may be amended as a result of the decisions of the house from time to time.

I am hopeful that all of us as members of the house will be able to look back with some pride to the twenty sixth parliament of Canada, and I hope the time when we do that looking back will be some years from now. In this connection I cannot forbear to point out, as a great deal of mild amusement has been created in the minds of the Leader of the Opposition and others about our 60 days of action, that in the first 60 days after the election of 1957, when the Conservative party took over, there was no opportunity for parliamentary action, nor in the 60 days after the June election of 1962.

The Leader of the Opposition singled out for special attention not only the proposal in the speech from the throne but other ideas of his own to improve the processes and the effectiveness of parliament, and to improve the process for electing Canadians to the House of Commons. I am glad he did so.

Mr. Speaker, we on this side hope—and indeed we are confident—that the committee which will be set up under your leadership and which, of course, will be a committee representing all parties in the house, will make recommendations not only to improve our day to day operations and strengthen parliament by making parliament a more efficient mechanism, but perhaps Your Honour will see fit to look into the whole structure of parliamentary government to see how that structure can be strengthened. This is necessary because there is no way of making parliament—which is so essential to the free countries today, and against which so many attacks are being made—stronger in the minds of democratic people than by increasing the effectiveness of that institution and bringing it into harmony with modern conditions. When we were in opposition last session we put forward certain proposals with regard to measures we thought would be of immediate value in speeding up the business of parliament. Now we are in office we still consider those proposals to be good, and perhaps proposals of that kind could be proceeded with fairly rapidly.

The same considerations with regard to strengthening parliament apply to the strengthening of our electoral procedures and electoral machinery. As the Leader of the Opposition has said, it is becoming very expensive and very exhausting, and perhaps it is not necessary any longer—we have both spoken of this before—to take the length of time that is now required to choose a parliament of Canada. That length of time was laid down in 1867, when communications were not quite as rapid as they are today, when the media of communications by which candidates could get in touch with their people were not as efficient as those we now have, and which perhaps we sometimes think are too efficient. As far as expenditures are concerned, we on this side are on record, and have been on record for a good many years as part of our party platform, as desiring to do something about this question so that expenditures can be limited and covered by regulations which will have to be carefully laid down by the treasury. I hope in this parliament progress will be made in that regard.

The Leader of the Opposition talked about redistribution, which should have taken place before now, following the last census. In the redistribution we will never perhaps, under this federal system of ours and in this country so diverse in its elements and so vast in its expanse, be able to apply any exact mathematical criteria to our constituency representation; but it is of course important to correct, and correct as soon as possible, some of the anomalies which now exist. This may require, as I understood the Leader of the Opposition to say, some addition to the number of members in this House of Commons. He suggested this might require us to give up our desks and get a little closer together. I do not know whether this means closer together politically, or only closer together physically. However, I gather from his observation that perhaps we could indulge in this kind of, if I may put it this way, legislative bundling where you would have less legislative bungling. In any event it is an idea that I am sure will be pursued by the house and by the committee of which you, Mr. Speaker, will be chairman.

The Leader of the Opposition had something to say about the items in the speech from the throne. He asked me a good many questions, some of which I hope to deal with during my remarks. If they are not dealt with by me, they will be dealt with by my colleagues who will be taking part in this debate if it goes to its appointed day. According to the Leader of the Opposition the speech from the throne was noteworthy for its generalities rather than its specific proposals. I gathered the impression that he felt the speech from the throne contained certain dangerous tendencies toward centralization and toward a bureaucratic control of the economic life of this country. In that respect he was worried because it showed socialist inclinations on the part of hon. members on this side of the chamber. At other times this afternoon he expressed worry because we on this side are now becoming too deeply involved with big business in this country. It is perhaps a tribute to our agility that we are being criticized both for being too socialist and too big business at the same time.

So far as centralization is concerned, there is nothing in any of the proposals in the speech from the throne or in the legislative enactments which I hope will follow the speech from the throne, which will lead to the wrong kind of centralization in this country. We do not want that in our kind of federal state. We want to give to the provinces all the jurisdiction and all the powers they have under the constitution, and the means to carry out and exercise those powers.

I hope the Leader of the Opposition will remember when he says, as he did this afternoon, that centralization has been the dream of the Liberal party—I have his words here —"ever since the days of Macdonald", that you do not have to go into Canadian history since the days of Macdonald to discuss centralization, because the greatest centralizer of them all—and in the light of the conditions of that time he may have been right—was Sir John A. Macdonald, who favoured a legislative rather than a federal union in the origins of our political society. That dream, if it was ever held by Sir John A. Macdonald—and he certainly expressed it on more than one occasion—would today be very inappropriate indeed.

The Leader of the Opposition went through some of the detailed proposals in the speech from the throne. I would point out, Mr. Speaker, that these proposals, or the most important of them, are already on the order paper in the form of resolutions for legislative action. I ask the right hon. gentleman to compare that kind of action with the situation which existed when we confronted him from that side of the chamber, when he was prime minister; I ask him to compare it with the order paper on the first day after the opening of a session.

Mr. Diefenbaker: We had 31 items on the order paper.

Mr. Pearson: The right hon. gentleman says they had 21 items on the order paper—

Some hon. Members: Thirty one.

Mr. Pearson: —but look at the 21 items and see if they contained the items for economic advance, economic development and national growth that are on the order paper on the first few days of this new, twenty sixth parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nowlan: The only ones there are those you borrowed from us.

Mr. Pearson: The right hon. gentleman complained that a lot of things we talked about on this side when we were in opposition, and during the election campaign, do not appear in the speech from the throne. Well, there are limits to what even we can do in 60 days—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: —to say nothing of the limits that are required by adequate and full parliamentary consideration of all these measures. I think this is a very good first legislative stage. That is what it is, Mr. Speaker. This is the first stage—and this has been pointed out by us so many times—in a four year parliamentary program for development and advance in this country. That is how we put the matter to the people in the election campaign, and that is how we intend to act on it. This is the first 60 days of action, to be followed by continuous action after this 60-day period is over. The right hon. gentleman no doubt read everything we said during the election campaign and he will recall that we put forward our four-year program with what we considered to be appropriate priorities attached to it.

We said during the campaign and subsequently—and indeed, earlier in this house, in more detail, I believe, than any opposition party ever gave before, what we would do and in what order we would do it. Now we are taking steps to do what we said we would do. The intentions of the government as set out this year in the speech from the throne are not vague aspirations to be acted on sometime, maybe never. We have set out simply in the speech the main matters we intend to bring forward during this session. They are headed by the measures for economic expansion which I promised during the campaign to bring forward in the first 60 days of the government's life. These measures will be before the house during the next month and it will be for the house to decide whether they are to be converted into legislative action. When we have completed our program for this year, if we do complete it in accordance with the judgment of the house, we shall go on, if parliament sustains us, as I believe it will, to the further stages of our four-year program.

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) spent a good deal of time establishing the foundation for an argument which I am sure we are going to hear from him a great deal in the future. He tried to establish a foundation for the assertion that we on this side have inherited a booming economy.

We shall come to this in due course. The right hon. gentleman sought to show we had inherited all this, with people at work, people happy, enjoying incomes coming in; deficits ended and that kind of thing. So if anything should go wrong in the next four or five years it will be such a contrast with the happy situation which existed in April 1963.

Mr. Nowlan: That's the truth.

Mr. Pearson: However, the Leader of the Opposition was careful to leave himself an escape hatch. He talked more than once about the problems we face and, indeed, we do face problems. He went as far as to say that the Liberal government which went out of office in 1957 had also inherited—these were his words—a buoyant economy, and that we had handed over to the Conservative government which succeeded it a stagnating and a depressed economy.

Some hon. Members: Right.

Mr. Pearson: As the Leader of the Opposition himself has said, these interruptions are sometimes very helpful. The former minister of national health and welfare (Mr. Monteith) says "Right". In fact, we inherited the economy of 1935 which could hardly be considered a buoyant economy. The right hon. gentleman boasts, however, that his government left the country in fine shape with its economy booming. In fact, in the last month of the life of the old government there were 549,000 people out of work in this country. I do not intend to waste much time either in this debate or in subsequent debates on stale arguments about the past. But I do intend to put on record once and for all the truth about the economic situation of this country when it was under the leadership of hon. gentlemen opposite, because the Leader of the Opposition placed on the record some selective figures to establish his own position.

The right hon. gentleman boasted about the big increase in the gross national product last year. There was a big increase. I recall that in the last budget debate we had, in April, 1962, I believe—it was not really a budget debate because the minister of finance of that day ensured there would be no budget debate, but I had an opportunity to speak on the motion for interim supply—I pointed out that 1962 was going to be a good year and that the minister of finance of that day was too pessimistic in his calculation of the likely increase in the gross national product. I went on to say that although there would be a substantial increase in the gross national product it would not take care of some of the dangers of the economic situation which would persist in spite of this increase. Well, that is exactly what has happened. There was a big increase last year compared with what had happened in the five previous years. The right hon. gentleman says the increase, in constant dollars, was the largest in any country in the western world. No doubt, in the course of this debate we shall have to put on record the figures bearing on that statement. But it was an increase, in constant dollars, of 6.2 per cent, which was very good indeed compared with 1 per cent in 1957 and 1958, 3.5 per cent in 1959, 2 per cent in 1960 and 2.6 per cent in 1961. Those were the real increases in our gross national product over that whole period after allowing for price changes. Those were the increases during the period of Conservative government since 1957 over the whole six years—an increase which, over those six years, amounted to 18 per cent. What was it in the previous six years of Liberal administration? It was 36 per cent.

Now the right hon. gentleman says the economy is in fine shape though over the past six years it was advanced at only half the pace at which it was advancing before they came to office. That is the record of our national production. But what do these figures mean for the people of this country? After all, production is for people. These are not merely statistics in a table. The former government never seemed to understand that ours is a growing country—that our population is increasing, though I may say it is not increasing as it should be increasing or as it would be increasing if we could keep our people inside our borders. As a commentary on the right hon. gentleman's satisfaction with the situation in this country at the present time I would remind him that in the last year for which we have figures the net immigration into this country was practically zero; almost as many people left Canada as came in, and the people who left this country were, for the most part, educated people—technicians, scientists and teachers. Had they remained, our unemployment problem would perhaps have been worse but we suffered a considerable net loss in that particular exchange. Nevertheless, our population which stayed at home is growing. If our total production does not increase steadily and adequately, then the production available to each Canadian in this growing family gets smaller, and this does not represent progress in terms of people. This is what happened most of the time under the previous government and we do not intend it to happen during the lifetime of this government if we can do anything by governmental or legislative action to avoid it.

Last year the increase in production was only enough to put the country a little ahead of the six years of Conservative government. Our real production, as I have just said, was last year 3 per cent higher than it had been in 1956. There was a 3 per cent improvement in six years over the previous six years, when national production per head was not 3 per cent but 16 per cent. In face of these figures, the right hon. gentleman professes to be proud of the record of his government. It is not a record, Mr. Speaker, which we consider a cause for any satisfaction, and it is a record on which we are determined to improve. The government needs higher standards than that in assessing the development and position of this country. The people of Canada are entitled to higher standards than they have received over the past six years.

I saw no signs from the statement of the right hon. gentleman today, any more than I did in the previous statements when he was on this side of the house, that he understands that we are living in a twentieth century economy; that this is a scientific age, an age in which industry if it is given the freedom to which it is entitled in our society today, and if it is given the co-operative assistance which must come from government even when that means government intervention, can ensure that this country will go ahead in a way which will be adequate to take care of our work force. We are an advanced country in these matters. We are a growing country. Our production is increasing. But the questions to be answered are, how fast is it increasing, how far is it increasing, and is the increase sufficient to put people to work?

The basic truth about our economy today is that we must run very fast in production or else we will slip behind in employment. The number of jobs is going up, and the Leader of the Opposition has given us a figure today. But the number of jobs will not go up as fast as the number of people to fill them. That is the nature of the problem which we face, and that is what has been happening, Mr. Speaker, in the last six years. Over all that period, from the month of July 1957 to March 1963 inclusive, there were on the average 413,000 Canadians without work. That was the average figure. The number of jobs went up and we were all glad to see it go up; then it went down and we were sorry to see it go down. But all the time unemployment remained too high, at an average of 413,000 men and women without work. During the post-war years from 1946 to 1957 the average was 171,000.

Now, I admit at once that conditions were not the same in the earlier post-war period as they were from 1957 to 1963. There were difficulties to be faced which any government in this country would have had to face in that six-year period. Any government at that time would have been faced with bringing men home from the war to an unemployment problem which would be catastrophic, and they would be unable to put people to work. We were also told, and we had experience with this, that Europe would not be able to buy our products because Europe would not have the finances to do so. We faced certain advantages in export trade, but certain grave difficulties with controls which countries in Europe had to build up to keep out foreign goods as well as they could. There were difficulties in both periods; but in one period we had an average of 413,000 people out of work, and in the other an average of 171,000, which is a difference of a quarter of a million. It is that difference which we are determined to do something about.

I say no more than I said when I was on the other side of the house. It was not easy for the previous government, and it will not be easy for us. Perhaps we will make mistakes in our efforts to do something about it, but our policy will be to encourage industrial expansion as fast as possible. That is where the jobs must be found. We will take up the opportunities and make good the delays, the indecision and the mistakes which have been made. The policies of this government will do all the government can do to set and to keep our country on the road to that kind of economic expansion for which we have the resources of both men and material, so as to achieve the kind of economic expansion which is absolutely necessary in this day and age if people are to work. That may require a steady increase in gross national production beyond that which we have had even in our good days, and it will certainly require a much greater increase in expansion than we have had on the average over the last six years. That is our policy. That is our program which we expect on this side to put into effect stage by stage. Mr. Speaker, I believe that this house will understand the importance of this program, and I believe this house will co-operate with the government constructively, and critically when necessary, in putting this program into effect.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

Mr. Speaker: It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, at six o'clock I was dealing with some of the economic proposals in the speech from the throne and certain comments made by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) on those proposals and on the economic condition of the country as he saw it, the inheritance, the booming inheritance, as he put it, that he had bequeathed to us. I endeavoured to indicate that if this situation of so-called boom over six years were repeated during the next six years, if we had a six-year prolongation of that, we would be in serious trouble indeed in this country.

It is interesting to note that while the Leader of the Opposition referred to this period of boom in such terms and tones of glowing satisfaction, that satisfaction does not seem to have been shared by the people of Canada. Otherwise the Leader of the Opposition would not have lost 15 of his cabinet colleagues and 110 or 112 of his members in the course of 12 months.

The Leader of the Opposition also made some observations on the reference to farm policy in the speech from the throne, its inadequacy and its generally unsatisfactory character. He was inclined to sneer at the appointment of a second minister of agriculture so that the problems of agriculture and the problems of the farmers could be given more careful and detailed consideration. The party opposite has done a good job, and I freely and frankly admit it—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: —in selling its agricultural policies and in selling the successful policies of the Canadian wheat board to the farmers; but the facts themselves, the hard, cold, facts, show what it has in fact done for the farmers in terms of income over the period when it was in power. The latest official figures, those that were given to parliament last December by the then government and which can be found on page 2577 of Hansard, show that in 1956 before the government of that day took office realized net income from farming in Canada was $1,238 million and five years later in 1961, after adjustment for the increased cost of the things farmers buy, realized net income was $1,192 million. In other words, realized farm income was down during that period by 4 per cent.

That is the farm problem, Mr. Speaker. It is a serious and difficult problem. Hon. gentlemen opposite have talked a lot about it but they have not solved it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Was that not a crop failure year?

Mr. Pearson: They have not enabled the farmers of this country to increase their real income. The best way to prosperity for farmers throughout the country is through the expansion of markets at home and abroad. We will have expanding markets abroad only as we improve our trade policies, and I will have something to say later about the right hon. gentleman's observations on the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) and his enunciation of trade policy in London. We will have expanding markets at home only as the consumers of Canada again make rapid progress in prosperity and in income.

Therefore the first priority in the programs of this government for agriculture and for every other element of the economy is economic expansion. That is to the interest of the farmer just as much as it is to the interest of the people who live in towns and cities. As we restore and maintain economic expansion, this government will also have programs, practical, forward-moving programs, to help the farmer take advantage of improving opportunities. That, Mr. Speaker, is our pledge and that is the effective way of doing things rather than merely talking about them.

The right hon. gentleman asked me this afternoon if we were going to change our policy with regard to export credits for agricultural products now that we were in office. I would remind him if he needs reminding, because he must have known the facts, that export credits for agricultural products, including export credits for sales to countries behind the iron curtain, were a policy which was initiated by the previous Liberal government just as the policy embodied in ARDA for better land use was initiated by the previous Liberal government in its land use committee in the Senate. You can be sure, Mr. Speaker, that the Liberal government now in office will build on and expand those policies which it initiated in the early 50's.

I should like to say a word or two now about a matter mentioned by the Leader of the Opposition this afternoon which is very much in our minds and which embodies serious problems and great opportunities. I refer to the problem of the direction which should be given to confederation at this time, the problem of biculturalism and the proposal of the government to set up a royal commission to go into this problem, the terms of reference of which as submitted to the heads of government in the various provinces were tabled this afternoon.

I cannot imagine anything at this time more serious to the progress, indeed, to the survival of our country as a confederation than a successful solution to this problem. The determination of this government is that the partnership of English and French speaking people in this country shall become truly equal. I say that directly and very earnestly, and I am sure there is no single member of the House of Commons, to whatever party he may belong, who will take exception to that resolve. I emphasize as an English speaking Canadian to the English speaking parts of the country that this must be done. The partnership must be a true one and, equally important, it must be felt by all concerned in the country to be a true one.

For that purpose our confederation must be given new direction or the strains within it, of which we are all conscious particularly at this time, might well become, though there is no reason why they should become, tragically destructive.

But I want to say something else, Mr. Speaker, and with equal seriousness to my fellow Canadians in other parts of Canada who speak French, though I am sure not all of them need this advice. Perhaps not many of them need this advice just as perhaps not many of the English speaking Canadians need the kind of reference I just made a moment ago to the necessity for co-operation and resolution on their part to make our partnership equal. When we assert the need for equality in our partnership, we must not neglect also to assert the purpose of this partnership. English speaking and French speaking people worked together, Mr. Speaker, to found, to build and to develop a country, a country with diversity as well as with co-operation and unity, a country different from other countries in this hemisphere and many other countries in the world, particularly in its diversity and in its biculturalism.

But you cannot have a bicultural country without having a country. So Quebec, to be Quebec, must be Quebec in Canada. Our purpose, therefore, in working together now must be for all of us to maintain and develop our Canadian identity, the Canadian fact. That is the nature, surely, and that must be the purpose of our partnership.

This afternoon the Leader of the Opposition said our Canadian identity is not easy to preserve. It has not been easy to preserve in the past and it certainly will not be easy to preserve in the future. The influences that could submerge it are pervasive and powerful and very much in all our minds. The facts of geography, the facts of history have always meant that the establishment of a Canadian identity required positive leadership and action by the government of Canada. The facts of modern science and modern industry reinforce the need, especially in the economic field. Quebec, which is a province different from other provinces because it is a motherland to people who live in other provinces as well as being a province of Canada, needs the means to remain Quebec. The government of Quebec must have the resources to meet the needs of today as well as to fulfil the aspirations of centuries.

By the same token, Mr. Speaker, Canada needs the means to be Canada. The government of Canada must have the resources to act for Canada in the domestic and in the international fields, especially in the most important search for peace and security in the world in which Canada has played, and can continue to play, an important and constructive part, but only if it is a Canada strong and united. Canada will not be strong unless it is united. There is no conflict here, Mr. Speaker. There is merely the need for partnership. The aspirations of Quebec, the cultural identity Quebec wishes to sustain and develop, mastery in our own home, these things which the people of Quebec are asserting would not be possible within a weak country. They would not be achieved by restricting the actions of a federal government that are necessary to meet the needs that are common to us all and that are within the federal jurisdiction.

So we must be very clear about this. The government I have the honour to lead will strive for biculturalism and equal partnership. It will equally strive to be an effective government, able to do what today is necessary for the effective good government of a country. I hope and believe, Mr. Speaker, that the royal commission which it is hoped and expected will soon be set up will help us to achieve this objective of biculturalism with diversity. There is no reason why we should not achieve it.

This afternoon the Leader of the Opposition asked my views, and the views of the government, on certain international matters. I propose to deal with them, but not at length, because there will be an opportunity later in the debate for my colleagues, especially the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin), to go into more detail on some of these matters. The right hon. gentleman asked what our attitude was towards the United Nations. Our attitude towards the United Nations, the attitude of this government, will be the same as it was from the founding conference at San Francisco to 1957 when the Liberal government left office. During that period, Mr. Speaker, I think it was established that the policy of the Canadian government towards the United Nations was one of the firmest possible support, the most constructive support. I believe our reputation and prestige at the United Nations during those years stood high, as I believe it stands high today. We on this side will do our best to play a full part in all the activities of the United Nations, especially in the search for international peace and security through disarmament, beginning with nuclear disarmament, and in nuclear disarmament beginning with the abolition of tests.

If we take that stand with regard to the activities of the United Nations, we will have to take a positive stand with regard to the contributions we must make to keep the United Nations going at a time when there are pressures and forces which would weaken, if not destroy it, if only from a lack of that financial support which is so miniscule in reference to the amount we spend on other things devoted to the destruction of men rather than to the creative activity of men living together.

We are all very conscious of a fact the right hon. gentleman mentioned this afternoon, that the NATO council is meeting in Ottawa during this week. NATO has been the foundation of the foreign policy of Canadian governments ever since it was formed in 1949, and it will continue to be so. This week we have the honour of acting as host to the foreign and defence ministers of NATO countries who will be coming to Ottawa for the annual spring ministerial meeting of the council. The last time that Ottawa was privileged to receive the NATO council was in 1951, when some important decisions were taken. I think we can all derive satisfaction from the military effectiveness of the organization as it has developed during these years, an effectiveness in defence which has expressed itself in deterrent form with very good results; in that since NATO was formed, and it was formed at a time when it looked as if the red army might be moving right across western Europe, it had just entered Czechoslovakia; in that since that time of tension and danger in Europe after world war II, no single piece of western European territory has fallen as a result of communist or totalitarian expansion.

I think the North Atlantic Treaty Organization can take some credit for that good result. I think also, Mr. Speaker, we can take some satisfaction in the fact that since NATO met here last NATO has developed into one of the main forums for the co-ordination of the external policies of the Atlantic countries. Although, in the field of non-military co-operation it has not got nearly so far as all of us hoped it would go when article 2 was put into the treaty. Even in the field of foreign policy consultation as opposed to the mere exchange of information NATO has not got so far as some of us hoped it would go. But in so far as economic co-operation is concerned there have been other institutions growing up in these intervening years which have been more effective than NATO in bringing about economic co-operation on a somewhat wider basis than NATO itself. In so far as political consultation is concerned I think NATO is considerably more effective than it was in 1951.

The three day meeting of the council is to take place in the west block. The opening ceremony will be held on Wednesday morning in this chamber and will be addressed by the current president of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs in Britain, Lord Home; by the secretary general of NATO, a distinguished civil servant of the Netherlands, Mr. Dirk Stikker and by myself. Canada will be represented at this meeting by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) and by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer).

Normally the spring meeting of NATO is an occasion for foreign ministers to take account of the international situation. The foreign ministers and the defence ministers who are accompanying them to this meeting have been asked to make a review of discussions which have been taking place in the permanent council concerning certain proposals regarding the organization of the defensive forces of the alliance. So, in addition to the general review of foreign affairs which customarily takes place there will be a review of discussions that have been going on as to how to increase the defensive strength of the alliance.

Some information on matters to be discussed at the forthcoming meeting is, of course, already in the public domain. Hon. members, however, I am sure will appreciate that NATO ministerial meetings are held in restrictive private session and it would not be appropriate for me to make public, in advance of the meeting, the position the Canadian delegation will take on the various subjects that will be under discussion. But, I am not transgressing any rule of NATO when I say Canada will support those proposals which will be under discussion, and which we believe, after hearing the discussions, are likely to strengthen the defensive capacity and the cohesion of the Atlantic states. We remain, as a government, prepared to make a contribution from this country to that end.

It is an open secret, in fact I do not think it is a secret at all, that among the measures that will be proposed to strengthen the defensive strength of the NATO alliance will be the question of an inter-allied nuclear force, and what is called a multilateral nuclear force, which is a new idea and which provides for multinational manning of certain submarines, and perhaps surface vessels, with nuclear arms and nuclear capability.

It is sometimes forgotten, but it must not be forgotten, that NATO as an organization accepted nuclear arms for defence and deterrence as far back as December, 1957 at a meeting of the council of that time. The Canadian government at that time supported the acceptance of such nuclear arms for NATO, for defence and deterrence. Indeed paragraphs 20 and 21 of the communique issued by the NATO council issued on December 19, 1957, a communique which was accepted by the Canadian delegation and the Canadian government through that delegation, read as follows:

To this end, NATO has decided to establish stocks of nuclear warheads, which will be readily available for the defence of the alliance in case of need. In view of the present soviet policies in the field of new weapons, the council has also decided that intermediate range ballistic missiles will have to be put at the disposal of the supreme allied commander Europe.

The deployment of these stocks and missiles and arrangements for their use will accordingly be decided in conformity with NATO defence plans and in agreement with the states directly concerned. The NATO military authorities have been requested to submit to the council at an early date their recommendations on the introduction of these weapons in the common defence—

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, ever since the acceptance of that resolution the Canadian government has accepted the proposition that NATO itself, with NATO control, should develop a nuclear capacity and deterrence for protection.

The Leader of the Opposition said this afternoon that the statement I made yesterday in the house—and I repeated it this evening, that a final decision by the Canadian delegation will be given to the NATO council meeting, which meeting undoubtedly will be held in private—that that decision not to make public our position at this time vindicates the attitude taken by the right hon. gentleman in saying we should do nothing about the nuclear commitment which had been undertaken, nothing about implementing that nuclear commitment, until the NATO council actually met in Ottawa. But, Mr. Speaker, it is quite clear from the nature of this meeting that there will be no discussion, let alone any recommendation, about the actual role undertaken by any member of the alliance.

No question therefore will arise at this council meeting, and this must be well known by members of the previous government, of a change of policy for Canada unless the government represented at this NATO meeting reverses at once the decisions made years earlier by the government of Canada, and Canada abandons at once the role undertaken for the Royal Canadian Air Force to implement that decision, and I can assure the house we do not intend at this council meeting to abandon that role. We intend to take steps, as we are presently taking steps, to implement that role until that role is changed.

It may well be that at the NATO council meeting there may be a recommendation that the defence policy of the coalition should be re-examined. I would hope that could be done, just as Canada's defence policy will be re-examined in this house and by a special committee of this house. But until that re-examination results in an alteration of our policy we propose to discharge the commitments of that policy, so there is no relationship between the forthcoming council meeting and that decision at all.

A decision that may or may not be taken at the council meeting, I do not know if there will be such a decision, will be in relation to the re-organization of the nuclear forces of NATO; the forces in NATO which now have a nuclear capacity. The only question that will arise here is whether those forces will be under a separate NATO nuclear command; whether the R.C.A.F., if it discharges the nuclear role accepted for it, should continue its present position in the NATO command or whether it should be under a separate NATO nuclear command organization. That is the question before the north Atlantic council and that question itself does not affect the role already undertaken for Canada by the previous government.

The right hon. gentleman opposite confirmed this afternoon what has previously been said by him, I believe, and certainly by some others—certainly by my hon. friends of the New Democratic party—that we should state in this house now, before the NATO council meets and before any decision is taken, what we are proposing to do, so that the house will know in advance and will have a chance to vote on our policy in that regard. The answer to that proposition was very clearly and very well given by the right hon. gentleman when he was prime minister of the day, on September 20, 1961 in this house, as reported at 8596 of Hansard. He said this, and I am referring to the right hon. gentleman who is now the Leader of the Opposition:

The announcement of decisions of government policy on this important issue—

That is the issue of nuclear weapons:

—will be made in the house. I might also say this; that the government, when placing such decisions before the house, will, naturally, at all times afford an opportunity for discussion. However, and I emphasize this, in each of the instruments that we have, the Bomarc and the Voodoos, nuclear weapons could be used. The defensive requirements of Canada and the need for the preservation of security will be the overriding consideration in the mind of this government.

Then he went on:

No decision has been made. When a decision is made the house will be clearly made aware thereof, as I emphasized a moment ago. Speculation which has been going on in the last few weeks is based on nothing more than the views of those who, desiring one final stand to be taken, are not taking into full regard the international situation nor in the event that it should worsen, the welfare, the future and the safety of Canadians.

Then there is this sentence:

The responsibility is one which the government must take having regard first and foremost to the welfare of the Canadian people. I must add, of course, that in any stand it takes the government must ask for the support of the house. That does not mean, however, that the decision would first be tentatively placed before the house. That would be a denial of responsible government and a denial of the principles which the hon. gentleman himself has so long advocated.

The hon. gentleman was myself, Mr. Speaker, and I still advocate those principles so clearly put forward by my right hon. friend opposite.

The right hon. gentleman had something to say this afternoon about Canada's integrity as a nation. Although I do not have his exact words, I understood him to infer that this integrity had been prejudiced by United States intervention in the recent Canadian election. He went on to add that he and his party were determined that Canadian policies should be made without dictation from any outside source. Well, Mr. Speaker, this is one of those straw men which the right hon. gentleman loves to create, set up and clothe in raiment of various colours and with various statistics, and then knock down in order to protect our country from something which he seems to think threatens it because of the policy of our party.

I would point out to him that there is surely no difference of opinion in this House of Commons that Canada determines its policies by Canadian action, without dictation from outside, in so far as any country in the world today can determine its own policies. As an indication that perhaps we were not very solid or strong in this determination to protect Canada from these threats to its integrity, especially those from across the border, the right hon. gentleman referred to the current discussions regarding the Columbia river treaty. He pointed out that I had said we had to clear this matter with Washington before we could proceed with the amendments that may be required to this treaty. Of course, I was then stating the most obvious fact in the world, because this particular treaty is one made with the United States which was signed, sealed and delivered by the right hon. gentleman to Canada after it had been signed by the United States.

We can do one of three things, I suppose, about this treaty. We can let it lapse; that is, not bring it before parliament for approval at all and refuse to ratify it. We can denounce it, or we can go to Washington—because Washington is the other signatory to this treaty—as we would expect Washington to come to us in reverse circumstances, and say, "This treaty as it was bequeathed to us by the previous Canadian government is not satisfactory. It is not a good deal for Canada. We want some changes made to it. Are you agreeable to discussing those changes?"

We have done that, Mr. Speaker, and we have secured an expression of opinion from the other signatory to the treaty that she would be willing to discuss this and to consider amendments, clarifications and modifications to the treaty. Having received this indication of United States willingness to have another look at this treaty to see if it can be made more satisfactory, we have gone to the government of British Columbia to initiate discussions with that government, so that when we approach Washington this time with a view to these modifications we will have—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Pearson: —the views of the government of British Columbia also to this signed treaty; sealed and delivered.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister allow a question and say what changes he has asked to be made in the treaty, or is he going to obscure the issue by the words that he just uttered, which are of no meaning?

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I would not be a very astute negotiator with the United States if I gave details to the house in public at this time, before we have even begun to discuss the matter with the province of British Columbia, let alone Washington, except in terms of general principle that we should reopen the treaty. If I said what we were demanding to have done to the treaty to make it acceptable to us in its final form, I would be a far worse negotiator than I used to be.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Alibi.

Mr. Pearson: When the Leader of the Opposition talks about the iniquity of having suggested that we have to go to Washington before we go anywhere else in order to obtain Washington's approval to changes that Washington is being asked to make, I would remind the right hon. gentleman that this afternoon he warned us to be very careful of establishing a 12-mile limit, because Washington might not like it. I think I appreciate the importance of that warning because, as he pointed out, 80 per cent of our fish exports go to the United States, but I feel confident that we can establish our own jurisdictional zone of 12 miles, as I believe 50 other countries in the world, including the United Kingdom, have done, without getting into the kind of trouble with the United States that my hon. friend had a particular genius for getting into when he was prime minister.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You can always get agreement by surrender.

Some hon. Members: Be quiet.

Mr. Pearson: I can also state that regarding the obligation to discharge certain commitments for the common defence undertaken by the previous government, the commitments to carry out certain roles which cannot be carried out effectively, as the right hon. gentleman has so often pointed out, without the use of nuclear ammunition for the warheads and weapons required for the role, in order to discharge these commitments we have entered into negotiations with the United States, taking up where the right hon. gentleman and his colleagues left off some time ago. We have begun these negotiations for a bilateral agreement between our two countries, without which no technical agreement can be made, for the joint control of nuclear warheads. The bilateral political negotiations to this end which were carried on for such a long time by the previous government have been resumed. They will cover defensive nuclear weapons systems for Canada, as well as other matters which have been the subject of previous discussions with the United States including, of course, the role of the air division and the use of the Honest John weapon with our forces attached to NATO in Europe.

The right hon. gentleman asked me this afternoon to declare myself once and for all, finally and irrevocably for or against membership in the organization of American states. The right hon. gentleman having avoided making any such declaration himself for six years has now, with the new freedom given to him by opposition—and I understand and appreciate his position—come out boldly against Canada's entry into the organization of American states. If I understand what he said this afternoon, as far as he and his party are concerned the doubt is resolved. There would be no membership in that organization. We on this side will, in due course, declare the policy of the government in this matter. It has taken hon. members opposite six years; they might give us a few more weeks. I might point out to the Leader of the Opposition that the organization of American states is itself becoming a little worried about the proliferation of membership in that body, due to the emergence of a great many new states in the Caribbean not all of which, apparently, they think are qualified for membership. So perhaps we ought to wait and see what the criteria for membership are before we make up our own minds whether we would accept an invitation to join the organization if one should be forthcoming.

I must say I was not greatly impressed by the argument used this afternoon by the right hon. gentleman against membership—the argument that we were being pressured into this by the President of the United States. I can assure him that there was no pressure put on me with regard to this or any other matter when I visited the president a week or so ago. To say that the President of the United States, as the right hon. gentleman indicated—I think he was quoting with approval from a newspaper—wants us in this organization so that we shall vote like Bulgaria votes in the communist bloc is not worthy of the O.A.S. or of the president, or of the Leader of the Opposition himself.

The right hon. gentleman then accused us on this side of downgrading the commonwealth of nations. We have not downgraded the commonwealth; we have never done so. Indeed, one of the proudest achievements of the party to which I belong is that it has done so much through its successive leadership and members to convert the old British empire into the commonwealth of nations—a commonwealth which has new and enlarged fields of value and usefulness open to it because of the accession of African and Asian members, though a commonwealth which is very different indeed from the old commonwealth which used to be the toast of every after dinner speaker on this subject. It is not going to be nearly as easy to make this organization into such a constructive and effective international organization as it could be. It will not be as easy to do this as it was perhaps, in earlier days when the form of membership was somewhat different from the form which has recently been brought about by a considerable increase in membership of states which do not have the same economic approach to international affairs and which do not always have the same attitude internationally as the older members were accustomed to have. This situation will create new problems for the commonwealth as well as new opportunities.

The right hon. gentleman said the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) who is at Geneva at the moment wrote off the commonwealth as a trading unit in recent discussions at the commonwealth conference in London. I say there is not a shadow of evidence to support that statement. I have with me a verbatim account of everything which the Minister of Trade and Commerce said in this regard in London, though I do not intend to detain the house by putting it on the record. He adopted a constructive policy in all his statements, not only in those with regard to the desirability of increasing trade in the commonwealth—not by dramatic statements of 15 per cent diversions but by reducing barriers to trade between members of the commonwealth as part of a general process of reducing obstacles to trade throughout the world. He did say, and he is quite right, that to build up a commonwealth as an exclusive trade bloc would be unsatisfactory and unwise. I do not think anyone wants that.

He went from London to Geneva. He will be back tomorrow because of the unfortunate developments in Geneva which have set back the progress we hoped would be achieved there. He went there with instructions to do everything possible on the part of the Canadian government to implement the principles of the Kennedy program which is imaginative, constructive and far reaching, to reduce trade barriers and obstructions. But the Kennedy program in its application of a linear 50 per cent cut to all tariffs would work out unequally in different countries, as was explained and made clear to Governor Herter when he was here.

It is not intended that every country should be subject to the same mathematical terms in the application of the principle. That is obviously impracticable. But it was intended and required that there should be reciprocity of advantage, which means reciprocity of concession; if one member of GATT could not make the 50 per cent concession mathematically it must make a concession in relation to the benefit received. That is the kind of negotiation intended, and that is what the GATT ministerial conference was hoping to do.

When the right hon. gentleman said this afternoon we had scorned this Geneva meeting, and objected to it, he could not be farther from the facts. He was supposed to have initiated this ministerial conference some months ago. I would point out to him that this ministerial GATT meeting now taking place in Geneva originated at a meeting of the ministers of the GATT countries in Geneva from November 27 to November 30, 1961, long before the right hon. gentleman put forward the proposal in London—which he expected to be considered as a new proposal, an alternative to the United Kingdom joining the European common market. We all hope these United States and other proposals designed to reach the same objective at GATT will succeed because, with all its faults, GATT remains the best general international organization for accomplishing this purpose and the Canadian government will do its best to see that that purpose is achieved. If there is any temporary setback because of the inability of the European common market even to discuss this 50 per cent linear cut, we must find another way of achieving the same objective. This temporary setback must be only temporary, as I am sure it will be.

I have not dealt with all the points raised by the right hon. gentleman this afternoon but I can assure him that this will be done during the course of the debate. May I address myself now to his amendment. It is one which, obviously, we on this side cannot accept. We believe the speech from the throne does embody important constructive projects and proposals which, if accepted by this house, would lead to industrial expansion, the creation of new jobs and the general economic well-being of this country. Therefore, we confidently submit the proposals in this speech from the throne to the consideration of the house. When they appear, as I hope they will shortly, in legislative form, we believe they will commend themselves in that form to the judgment of this house. In that way this government, in the first stage and the first stage only of its program of action, will have made a very good beginning indeed.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate I should first like to take the opportunity to publicly congratulate you on your election to the office which you now hold. We are confident that you will uphold the responsibility which has been placed upon your shoulders in an efficient and effective way. As we celebrate today as the day which is set aside as the commemorative birthday of our monarch Queen Elizabeth II, I have appreciated the remarks which have been made in regard to the health of her representative in Canada, our Governor General. We in our group wish to extend to him our sincere wishes for a speedy and a complete recovery.

I also wish to extend my congratulations to the hon. member for Northumberland (Miss Jewett) for her eloquent and pleasing presentation in moving the adoption of the speech from the throne. I am sure that the hon. member will have much to contribute to this house in debates to come. The hon. member was lavish in her praise of her leader. Perhaps her feelings in this regard cover over a basic difference which may exist relating to the philosophy, the programs and the policies of her party. Her statement, as reported on page 23 of Hansard, that:

> It is through these institutions of government . . . that we can hope somehow to achieve . . . the enlargement of the human spirit, the enlargement of the dignity and the quality of all individuals—seems strangely different from the words of her leader, the Prime Minister, when he said in the throne debate last year that, "government cannot do everything, and the feeling that it can and that it should is one of the greatest threats to our freedom today". The switch from being in opposition to being the government may give the Liberal party a dangerous change of opinion in the power and wisdom of the government itself. We who are in the continuing opposition do not share this touching faith in the transforming power of a new party in charge of the government.

I should also take this opportunity to congratulate the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and his party upon their success at the polls, which in spite of the support of practically every major newspaper in the country and a seemingly unlimited supply of campaign funds were able only to elect a minority government. However, I must confess that I have been intrigued by his plan of action for 60 days. I have a feeling that it will become known in written history as Canada's great leap forward. For the good of Canada let us hope it will be more successful than that of the country to which we are now being urged to give diplomatic recognition. It was reassuring to hear the Prime Minister speak of a second four-year plan which will follow. Perhaps this will be known as the second great leap forward.

After having listened to the former prime minister this afternoon, now in opposition, and having listened to the reply from the Prime Minister, it would seem to me that neither one has learned too much from this last election. It is high time we stopped making this House of Commons a political arena. The election is past and there is not one of us who has been elected to this House of Commons who would honestly admit that it is good for the country or good for us to have another election at this time.

Mr. Woolliams: We have heard that before.

Mr. Grafftey: He is reading the same speech.

Mr. Thompson: Just a minute. Certain hon. members just have to have their memories refreshed a little. I would say, as I said at the beginning of the last parliament, that it is high time we recognized that it is our responsibility as 265 elected members to this house, representatives of the Canadian people, to get down and supply some leadership in seeing that we get the legislation this country needs and expects from us. Most people are interested in debates and fights in their proper place. But surely the people of this country have more to expect from us, with the tremendous amount of money and energy expended in the election which put us here, than the use of this house as a personal tilting ground for a couple of their fellow citizens.

Speaking on behalf of my colleagues and myself, we are here to do business, to come to grips with the internal problems of Canada so that she can have a stronger voice in a troubled world. We are not here to waste time on trivialities, Mr. Speaker. What we need is more than just a couple of watchdogs, who apparently are only concerned in fighting between themselves as to whose responsibility it is to watch over the house while all the time the house burns down. Yes, those are not new words. They have been said before in this house and I have said them; but I think it is even more important that we regard them carefully and with a deep sense of responsibility. That is why I say that the first job of this house is to get down to business.

Mr. Speaker, we again have a minority house, and the party with the largest number of elected members has the responsibility of forming the government, of bringing in this legislative program. We have the responsibility constructively to try to work out the best possible result from that program. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) has stated over and over again that the throne speech is a rehash of the policies of his last government. Then he goes on to move a vote of non-confidence in these same policies. The motion says that this house —regrets that the policies announced fail to provide full opportunity for the people of Canada to continue the social advance and large economic growth of the past year.

This really sounds more like hash than rehash. It is the intention of the Social Credit party that we will not resort to criticism just for criticism's sake.

What is our attitude going to be in this House of Commons? First of all, let us remind ourselves again that in spite of the election we have just come through this is still a house of minorities. Not much has been said about that in these latter weeks after the election, but that is what it is. We could not make the last parliament work. Can we make this one work?

An hon. Member: Ask Real.

Mr. Thompson: This much is for sure. If some of us do not reform our ways we will not do so. May I remind the Prime Minister that during the twenty fifth parliament his only objective was to oppose the government. He said many times that his objective was to cut the life of the minority government as soon as possible. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) and other leading members who sit on the front benches of the Liberal party expressed the same opinion. As found on page 1349 of Hansard of last session, the hon. member for Essex East stated that the members of his party were elected to oppose the government. May I ask the Prime Minister how long his government would last if members of the opposition were to adopt the same attitude he did and which he advocated last year?

I would also remind the Leader of the Opposition that we would never have had the last election if he had quit playing politics and carried his responsibilities through to the decisive action that we should have had.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You changed your mind after the election.

Mr. Thompson: If the right hon. gentleman does not have more appreciation and understanding of what took place in the house last February 5, then I can understand why we went into an election. It was said over and over again during the election campaign that the prerequisite of stable government is majority government. That statement may have some worth, but certainly a majority government is no guarantee of an effective stable government. It was not during the years 1958 to 1962. Leaving out the war years, it was not from 1945 to 1957.

A minority government can be a strong government. It can be effective and it can be stable if the members who make up parliament will put their responsibilities ahead of the politics which they are too often prone to play and if the man who is entrusted with the leadership of the government will give the leadership which a minority house requires. We did not have that in 1962. We hope we will have it in 1963. Not only do we in this house hope so but the entire nation hopes so as well. During the election campaign it was said time and again that the Social Credit group in the House of Commons toppled the government and cut short the life of the twenty fifth parliament. Over and over again the former prime minister told the Canadian people that the reason the last minority house fell was the blockage of the opposition.

An hon. Member: That is right.

Mr. Thompson: This is not true. The real cause of the failure of the twenty fifth parliament was indecision and the lack of leadership given to that house of minorities by the government. I am not making these remarks to dig up the past, but what happened ought to be a lesson for the future to the present government. If the former government had laid a positive program before the house, if it had organized the business of the house so that we had a timetable and knew what we were expected to do, if it had arranged the business so that we could have had a budget, if it had simply clarified a defence policy that we could understand, then we would never have had the crisis that led to the failure of the last parliament. I would say that no one, the official opposition or any other minor party, could have ever stopped a positive program if that program had been put on wheels and got rolling.

This is the responsibility of the present government and this is what the people of Canada expect from the present government. The twenty fifth parliament fell simply because it did not live up to the responsibilities it had to the people who elected it, because we in this house did not live up to those responsibilities.

An hon. Member: You don't know what you are talking about.

Mr. Thompson: Yes, that is why the former government lost the last election.

An hon. Member: How did you do?

Mr. Thompson: There is a dividing of political paths taking shape in Canada today. This demands the existence of minor parties and this is why both of them increased their popular support.

An hon. Member: How did you do?

Mr. Thompson: Both of them increased their popular support. It is our duty then, major parties and minor parties if that is the way they are to be described, to put our shoulders to the wheel in this situation. We sincerely hope that this session will not be a continuation of what we had last time. Such conduct is out of line with public feeling. Our duty in this debate is conducting the public affairs of our nation, and it is the duty of each one of us, I think, is to stand firmly on the basis of the principles in which we believe and from this basis examine constructively and critically the program that is put before us by the government.

Several measures in the speech from the throne are good and they will have our unqualified support and approval as they are brought before us in legislative form. I am thinking particularly of the defence committee which during the last week or two of the campaign the leader of the Liberal party, now the Prime Minister, saw fit to include in his program; and I am grateful that he is taking immediate steps to set up such a defence committee. Some of the affairs of our nation are above partisan politics and certainly defence is one of them.

I also wish to congratulate the Prime Minister on what he said tonight with regard to the question of biculturalism. His remarks were objective and if we together can approach the problem, which I am convinced is one of the basic problems before us as Canadians, in the light of those remarks, then there is indeed hope for the future. It was also good to hear him speak of the responsibilities which he believes we have in the Caribbean. For a long time we have advocated that we should be carrying a greater load of responsibility with regard to the relationships of our friends and neighbours in this hemisphere and this does mean ultimate membership within the organization of American states. But right now, with the changes that are taking place in the Caribbean, I am sure that all of us who know the area will agree that we must carry a greater degree of responsibility and offer a larger helping hand to those islands which today are going through the throes of finding their own status as independent self-governing areas.

There are other parts of the speech from the throne that I will not take the time to discuss in detail tonight, ideas which, while they were conceived for a good purpose, will not, we believe, achieve their intended purposes without amendment. We wait expectantly to see what will be brought forth with respect to the proposed municipal development fund. In particular, we are concerned about the source and the cost to the taxpayer of the money that is to be made available to the municipalities. We believe that other measures in the speech from the throne are wrongly conceived and require us to oppose them. But our opposition will not be for opposition's sake. It will be based on the merits of any such measures from the standpoint of the principles towards which we believe a democratic government should be moving at this time.

As the hon. member for Northumberland (Miss Jewett) pointed out, there is need for setting out on a new path. Perhaps the path is not so new, perhaps it is just a shift of policy in the light of the changing time. However, I am quite sure that it will fail in its purpose if it means more government interference with the individual's liberty. Yes, action rightly adopted as a watchword is good, if this is what the plan of the government is.

It is gratifying that action has been taken on the three points that were the issue as parliament fell on February 5. I refer to the setting up of a committee to arrange for the work of this house; the pledge to embark immediately on a program or timetable, with the assurance that we are going to have an early budget. The national development program is something that is necessary. The throne speech does not make concrete proposals on any specific point. The question we wish to raise at this time is whether or not the approach that is going to be used is one that will bring us to a satisfactory conclusion.

The great complexity of our society makes the individual more dependant upon the community of which he is a part. However, that community also grows more dependent upon the individual as he becomes more highly specialized in his ability and training. This is something that should not be forgotten. We have witnessed, with a certain amount of pride, the successful return of the astronaut Cooper within these last few days. As we study all the preparations that took place, we realize that behind him there were thousands of people who made up the team which resulted in his 22 successful orbits of the earth. On the other hand, that team could never have worked as it did if it had not been for the individual who had control of the space capsule. We realized this as we heard that the automatic control from the land base failed to operate, and the astronaut had to take over. So it is, I think, in our society. This is as it should be. All economic progress comes from the division of labour, specialization and the exchange of ideas.

I am not pessimistic about Canada's future. Somehow I am confident that free men will work their way out of their present problems so that all men can be free. However, I do agree with the contemporary philosopher who not long ago gave us these words:

> Corporate officialdoms are helpless and barren—the parties, bureaus, departments, cabinets, commissions, barren because of the inner cancellation of each other's certitudes. The composite program prudentially polished has every virtue in it but life.

This is what William Ernest Hocking said. It is very true. It is good that we remember this as we look at the problems with which we are faced.

It is well for us to remember that our monetary system has been the key to the organizational development of our society. We have passed through the stages of slavery, feudalism, yes, and compulsion. But what was it that brought us out of feudalism?

An hon. Member: Debt free money.

Mr. Thompson: Some of those who are making remarks would be more correct in displaying their intelligence by keeping quiet.

Money has been the key to the organization of society. Money makes economic democracy possible by making consumer choice the arbiter of economic direction. We can go back, if we so desire, to Great Britain during the 1500's when the renaissance was just developing, when the industrial revolution was beginning to take its embryonic form. Here, again, this development was preceded with a development for the facility of the medium of exchange in the monetary system which ultimately resulted in the present monetary system.

As we look for democracy, for a system of government, let us remember that economic democracy is at the root of democratic democracy. The one is not complete, and the one cannot survive unless it has the other. I am concerned because of the trend towards increased governmental control, increased taxation. This is actually an abandonment of our monetary system, an abridgement or an attempted abridgement of economic democracy. It does not enlarge the human spirit, but abridges it instead. It does not enlarge human dignity. It subjects individuals to the indignity of government by bureaucracy. If it promotes equality, it is precisely at the expense of that precious individuality that has been the spark kindling the fire of western civilization. As the Austrian writer Heimito von Doderer said, contemplating the difference between east and west, that in the east, "individual life does not rebel. There is too little of it for rebellion. One soul mingles with the other like smoke. But in the west, every life has its own special, if invisible, garden plot. A man stands alone between the tended flower beds and the little porticos of a house from which no one, by law and equity, is entitled to expel him...This is the only way he knows how to be. Only in this way can he be big or little, crooked or straight, good or bad".

So, as we consider this new path let us remember the old fundamentals that are basic to the very way of life we mutually agree is the way we should live. Is the new path we are taking, then, a new path or is it an old one? Is it the collapse of economic democracy which is forcing us to take actions which are contrary to the basic principles under which we live? Perhaps this sounds strong, but look at the socialist governments behind the iron curtain. It is the logical confusion of bigger and bigger governments. Creative ideas have never sprung from groups, they spring from individuals. No committee has ever painted a piece of art. No board of directors has ever written a symphony. No commission has ever invented a scientific machine. In our awe of the power of the organization compared with that of the individual, let us not forget the complementary need of the organization, however complex, for the individual's vision, skill and ability. It is the contact between the aspired mind of the individual and his Creator that enables him to bring to others a glimpse of the infinite and the eternal that lie outside the view of ordinary men. This suppression of creativity carries with it the seeds of decay of every socialist state.

Now, the question that faces us in this parliament is a simple one. Are we to master the mighty economic and social machine that we have created, or is it to master us? Some 40 years ago the founder of the Social Credit movement, which has developed into the political party I have the privilege of leading, pointed out that the answer lies in the difference between yet one more retreat into the dark ages or the emergence into the full light of day of such splendor as we can at present only envisage dimly.

[Mr. Thompson.]

I am convinced that if we are to continue as a private enterprise system we cannot cure this problem by the direction of production as this government, in the speech from the throne, indicates it intends to do. We must see that the consumers have the incomes to create a big enough market to absorb the immense production of which we are now capable. Let us begin at the proper end. Let us begin with people and their needs for better food, clothing, housing and education. If their incomes were sufficient to buy the things they already want to have, and which we are capable of giving them, our problems of unemployment and poverty in the midst of abundance would be solved.

We are still faced with problems which plagued Canada 40 years ago. The reason is that the old line parties have refused, and are still refusing, to solve them by methods that are already more than 40 years old. In the speech from the throne we have a promise that matters of detail will be taken care of, but our basic, underlying economic problems will continue without change.

In spite of what the Leader of the Opposition has said about last year's prosperity, we can no longer tolerate the stagnation of the past six years. Therefore we have two choices. We either make our financial system work—and there are perfectly simple reasons for its not working at the present time—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret I must interrupt the hon. gentleman but his time has expired.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I am sure no hon. member would wish to deny the hon. gentleman the opportunity of completing his speech.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Has the hon. gentleman the unanimous consent of the house to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Thompson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have only a few more remarks to add. Either we make our financial system work—and there are perfectly simple reasons why it is not working at the present time—so that we can give the poor and needy those things we have in abundance about us, or we abandon the use of money altogether and with it the economic basis of democracy in place of a completely planned economy. Every step that increases our taxes takes away our power of choice, takes us away from the free market and economic democracy which I believe we must have.

In considering the legislation which will be placed before us, instead of trying to badger each other back and forth as political parties, it is far more important that we get down to the basic fundamentals that will let us work together. Let us remember that in our parliament, complex as it is, the individual member must have preserved those rights that will give him the freedom to use the initiative and the enterprise which his Creator has given him.

Parliament, in my opinion, needs to do these things. We must through the Bank of Canada take charge of the credit supply of our nation. We already control the legal tender within our monetary system. Is it such an absurd thing that we should take charge of our credit as well? I think not. Reference has been made here tonight to debt free money. The fact is that because we have not taken charge of our credit—not as a government but as parliament itself—we have failed to give to our economy the necessary monetary bloodstream it needs.

I was interested to read the April 12 edition of the Winnipeg Tribune in which Professor C. L. Barber of the University of Manitoba was reported as saying:

> The Canadian economy has been trying to operate with an insufficient money supply for the past five years and needs creation of $1 billion to function successfully.
>
> Since it costs very little to create additional money, we are very foolish to try to get along with too small a stock of it.
>
> A growing economy needs a growing supply of money . . . the supply is barely keeping pace with the growth of the gross national product. There's nothing being done to make up our $1 billion deficit.
>
> The extra money in the economy would raise stock and bond prices and reduce interest rates, and might stimulate the rate of capital spending. The extra money would more likely be invested in Canadian enterprises than be spent on new cars and other consumer goods.
>
> The result of the money supply shortage has been the highest interest rates since the first world war.
>
> Canadians now expect "a great deal" from government . . .
>
> They (governments) are expected to take an underlying responsibility for the successful functioning of our economy—and properly so.
>
> Yet, I suspect few of us realize how much our standards of expected government performance have risen over the past decade or more.

He went on to explain how this would work. So, these things which far too many members of the house tend to laugh and jeer at, are things which people who are closer to an understanding of the function of our economy are thinking about. Since it costs very little and since the basic reforms that would be involved here are not major, it would not take long before our economy could produce the things that we agree are the desirable objectives.

France, Germany and Japan, during the years since the last war, have steadily increased their money supply and the growth of their gross national product. Their economies have expanded; they do not have unemployment today. Is it immoral to do the same thing here? The answer is not higher debt and higher tax burdens.

The government can be assured, in the light of this approach, of our co-operation in this parliament as we agree that something must be done, but we give notice to the government that we are afraid it is on a fundamentally wrong track in preferring physical control to financial reform in trying to make our economic system bring prosperity to all. I am alarmed at the possible consequences that might result to individual rights and freedom in a private enterprise economy.

This is no blank cheque for support, but it is an earnest appeal to each one of us to work together to make this session a responsible session in the eyes of the people who elected us. We can prove to the people of Canada that we are responsible representatives only by acting like responsible people. Frontbencher or backbencher, cabinet ministers or opposition, it does not matter where we sit. This is the challenge that is before us now. I hope each member will take the now. I hope each member will take the opportunity of participating in this debate as I do not think any one has all the answers to the questions that are involved. However as we participate and share this responsibility we will achieve that which the country expects from us and which it needs in order that it can continue to develop and move forward.

This is now just four years before the centennial of our confederation. These are four very vital years. Whether or not we are able to hold Canada together as a nation remains to be seen. I think we will find the answer before 1967. I do not think there has ever been so important or critical a period in the history of our nation, as it has existed as a nation, as we face standing on the threshold right now. Therefore I trust—and I am confident we will do this—that each one of us will be carefully thinking of our responsibilities in this over-all picture and will be playing our own parts in moving forward to make Canada the nation that I want Canada to be, that all of us want Canada to be, that Canada must be if she is to stand, and a nation such as the world must have.

We in Canada are actually a miniature world. It is true that we are only 19 million people. We came together as two founding nations 200 years ago, and into our midst have come a multitude of other nationals from other parts of the world. We came into being almost in spite of the laws of economics and the reasoning of men that such a nation could survive. In fact it is a miracle that Canada has survived to this point. But what hope have we of staying together as a peaceful world, of developing the human and material resources of this world, if we in Canada cannot work out our own problems? That is why I think our responsibility goes much further afield than this house or this nation. It reaches across the world. If we cannot do this, what hope have men and women as individuals who deserve the assurance of those things which they need in order to live, and who at the same time desire the freedom which will help them reach their objective in the world.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I offer you my congratulations and felicitations on the high office to which you have been elected by your peers. I notice that the Sergeant-at-Arms has been placed cheek by jowl beside the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) and myself. I hope this is not an indication that Your Honour fears trouble from this corner. I can assure you that we will be models of decorum.

Mr. Herridge: We are peaceful people.

Mr. Douglas: I should also like to extend my congratulations to the mover and seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne, the gracious hon. member for Northumberland (Miss Jewett) and the very able hon. member for Lotbiniere (Mr. Choquette). These two hon. members made as fine maiden speeches as I have ever heard.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas: I am sure they brought honour to themselves, their constituents and their party. As a matter of fact, when I heard the hon. member for Northumberland extolling the beauty and charm of her constituency I thought that her constituents could argue with equal force about the beauty and charm of their member.

I should also like to extend my congratulations to the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and his colleagues on having earned the right to be invited to form a government. When I look at the cabinet, with some notable exceptions it seems to me like an old timers reunion of the Liberal party. Most of the cabinet is made up of members of the former Liberal administration, along with former civil servants and economic advisers to the St. Laurent government. But I want to compliment them on the efficiency which they have already displayed in the dispatch of business, and to express the hope that they will not have competence without compassion, that we will not see efficiency without vision, the kind of vision that we need in the situation in which Canada finds itself at the present time.

Mr. Speaker, I think the one fact which is paramount is that the people of Canada want this to be a parliament that gets things done. This country is beset by deep rooted problems and there is little to be gained from arguing as to whose responsibility it is for these problems. There is nothing to be gained by mutual recriminations from both sides of the house. The child is on our doorstep; there is little value in arguing about who has the paternal responsibility. We all have a responsibility at this time to meet the situation which confronts us. The opposition parties, in my view, have a responsibility to refrain from all forms of frivolous obstruction and to give the government a chance to bring down its program for economic recovery.

I submit, on the other hand, that the government has a responsibility to tackle the problems which confront it with dispatch and to refrain from making any major policy decisions without reference to parliament. I think the people of Canada as a whole want a respite from elections; but the onus for that lies on both sides of the house. The members of the New Democratic party in this house are prepared to give the government a chance to carry out its domestic program for economic recovery, but on the other hand we expect the government to consult parliament rather than treating it with contempt. We can have in this country a period of stable government only if there is a degree, a high degree, of co-operation from all parties in this house.

Mr. Speaker, may I now say a word about the speech from the throne. This is a document of lights and shadows. Some of the proposals could prove very beneficial. I refer to the municipal development and loan board, the department of industry and the area development agency which will be created within that department, the Canada development corporation, the economic council and the contributory pension plan, all of which are mentioned in the speech from the throne. The value of these measures will depend on the terms of the legislation and whether these proposals are part of a planned assault upon our economic problems or merely a hit and miss set of proposals attempting to patch up a creaking economy.

We in the New Democratic party do not believe that this government, any more than its predecessor, is prepared to undertake the fundamental changes or adopt the far reaching policies which are necessary to make our economy function satisfactorily. May I just give two brief illustrations. Mention was made today of the rate of economic growth. The rate of economic growth is not like a hockey score; it is not an end in itself. Increased growth is only meaningful if it contributes to the two vital goals of full employment and a higher standard of living for all Canadians. The year 1962 demonstrated that we can have an increase in the gross national product without a corresponding increase in employment. The increase in that year was largely in the extraction industries which do not have a high employment ratio. Consequently, we had an increase in the gross national product but there was no corresponding decline in unemployment.

May I put forward another illustration—the matter of investment funds with which some of this legislation is concerned? Increased investment funds alone are not a solution. Over the period when investment was declining, business savings in Canada actually increased by 4 per cent. If the problem had been a lack of funds, surely the business community would have dipped into its reserves. Last year, in constant dollars, business investment increased by 4.8 per cent but in the same period gross business savings increased by 7.1 per cent. It is therefore apparent that the business community felt that present plant and machinery were adequate to meet the current demand for goods and services.

The great lack, is not just in terms of economic growth, is not just in terms of funds for investment—though these are important factors in our economy—it is the inability of large sections of our population to buy the goods and services which our economy is capable of producing. It is estimated that there is a gap of some $2.5 billions between what our economy is capable of producing and what the people of this country are able to buy. That is why we in this group have constantly advocated two measures, the first of which is that there must be massive doses of social capital injected into the economy. To my mind this is where the speech from the throne falls down. The municipal development and loan board will be some help in giving social capital to the municipalities, but what we need in addition are large scale public works by both federal and provincial governments. We need home construction on a gigantic scale. The unemployed should not be asked to wait until the effects of long run measures have found jobs for them. There are things which could be done now and things which must be done now if unemployed people are to be put to work.

The second thing we advocate is an increase in social security measures as one of the means of distributing purchasing power. Social security measures are not a luxury to be enjoyed after economic recovery. They are an integral and indispensable part of economic recovery. During the election campaign the Prime Minister spoke of welfare measures and health measures taking second place to economic recovery. We believe there can be no effective economic recovery or economic stability until purchasing power is restored to those sections of our population which have only a limited capacity to consume. An increased effective demand on the part of the lower and middle income groups is indispensable to economic growth and a full employment economy. If the government continues to retain the idea of getting ever closer to a balanced budget as the pivot of its economic policy it will not be able to do either of these two things. The government is facing a dilemma. If it carries out its pre-election talk about a balanced budget it will not be able to provide the social capital or the welfare measures necessary for economic recovery. It will have to make up its mind in the course of this and the other sessions of the present parliament whether it intends to adopt modern economic policies or whether it is going to worship the golden calf of a balanced budget. Today, a balanced budget is not essential. The essential thing is to balance consumption and production.

May I briefly mention some of the omissions from the speech from the throne? I have already noted that there is no reference to a short run program for providing jobs. There are in the neighbourhood of half a million persons unemployed in this country who are looking to this parliament to provide jobs. There is nothing in the speech from the throne which gives immediate hope that these jobs will be forthcoming in the months ahead.

There is no mention in the speech from the throne of a comprehensive health insurance program. I can recall in my own constituency of Burnaby-Coquitlam the Liberal candidate, Mr. Tom Kent, saying that the New Democratic party promised to pay 60 per cent of the cost to any province which would establish a comprehensive medicare program but that a Liberal government would not wait for the provinces to act but would bring in a medicare program of its own. In a television debate in which he and I participated he said this would be done in the first 60 days. It is true there was a slip of the tongue; he said "in the first 60 years" but he quickly corrected himself. Some people suspected that the Freudian slip was more accurate than the correction. However, the people of Canada will want to know during the course of this debate whether or not the government is serious about the medicare program promised in the course of the election campaign.

There is no mention in the speech of a two price system for wheat guaranteeting the farmers $2 a bushel for the wheat they deliver. Today, when I sought an answer to that question, the Prime Minister said it was a matter of government policy which would be announced in due course. The fact remains that the Prime Minister made this promise definitely to the people of western Canada. The Saskatoon Star-Phoenix on March 7 carried a full banner headline quoting him as saying that the Liberal party was pledged to a two price system and a $2 guaranteed price. Certainly I hope the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) or the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) will make a statement on the subject during the course of this debate.

There is no mention of the 10,000 scholarships of $1,000 each of which the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing) spoke in an article which appeared in the Toronto Star on May 1, and there is no statement on the pressing problem of railway line abandonment which is causing so much concern to the people of the prairies. I recall that only a few months ago the Liberal members, when they sat on this side of the house, were screaming for action. But the speech from the throne is as silent as the tomb about what the government intends to do concerning this large scale railway line abandonment being planned by the two major railway companies in Canada which will mean the uprooting of three or four thousand miles of railway line with all that this implies for the people who live in the communities affected and the farms which produce in those areas.

It is my intention to move a subamendment to the speech from the throne but I do not want to start on that before tomorrow, if that would meet the pleasure of the house. If I have the consent of the house, I should like to move that the debate be adjourned and to call it ten o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) moves the adjournment of the debate. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pickersgill: Under the circumstances, sir, I wonder if Your Honour would see that it was ten o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Ten o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if for purposes of identification the house leader would care to get his name on Hansard again and announce the business for tomorrow and the rest of the week?

Mr. Pickersgill: I must say, sir, that I deeply appreciate the solicitude of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre for my publicity. I hope he will continue to be my publicity agent, because I know I am going to need one.

To speak seriously, sir, it is the hope of the government that this debate will be continued uninterrupted until it is concluded. After what has been said by the hon. member for Red Deer this evening the government would, of course, be very grateful if we could conclude the debate a day or two earlier than the full length of time allowed by the rules. However, we are not wishing in any way to restrict the right to speak of any hon. member who has something to say.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

APPENDIX

LETTER AND TERMS OF REFERENCE RESPECTING ROYAL COMMISSION ON BICULTURALISM

(The following letter was sent to the premiers of all provinces)

PRIME MINISTER
CANADA

Ottawa, May 15, 1963

My dear Premier:

In a speech I made in the House of Commons on December 17, 1962, on the problems posed, and the opportunities offered, in Canada by the duality of language and culture established by confederation, I suggested that a broad and comprehensive inquiry should be conducted, in consultation with the provinces, on bilingualism and biculturalism. That proposal received widespread support in parliament and, I believe, in the country.

I am now writing to ask whether your government would favour such an inquiry by a royal commission with terms of reference such as those annexed to this letter.

Any recommendations from the proposed commission would, of course, not be binding on governments; nor would approval by your government of such a commission with these terms of reference imply any commitment to accept any recommendations that it might make.

I would be most grateful for your early consideration of this matter.

Yours sincerely,
Lester B. Pearson.

COMMISSION OF INQUIRY ON BILINGUALISM AND BICULTURALISM

To inquire into and report upon the existing state of bilingualism and biculturalism in Canada and to recommend what steps should be taken to develop the Canadian confederation on the basis of an equal partnership between the two founding races, taking into account the contribution made by the other ethnic groups to the cultural enrichment of Canada and the measures that should be taken to safeguard that contribution; and, in particular,

1. to report upon the situation and practice of bilingualism within all branches and agencies of the federal administration—including crown corporations—and in their communications with the public and to make recommendations designed to ensure the bilingual and the basically bicultural character of the federal administration;

2. to report on the role of the public and private cultural organizations, including the mass communications media, in promoting bilingualism, better cultural relations and a more widespread appreciation of the basically bicultural character of our country and of the subsequent contribution made by the other cultures; and to recommend what should be done to improve that role; and

3. having regard to the fact that constitutional jurisdiction over education is vested in the provinces, to discuss with the provincial governments the opportunities available to Canadians to learn the English and French languages and to recommend what could be done to enable Canadians to become bilingual.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, May 21, 1963

The house met at 11 a.m.

FINANCE

ANNOUNCEMENT OF LEGISLATION RESPECTING IMPORT SURCHARGES

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a brief statement respecting the surcharge on imports order that was passed by the previous government on June 24, 1962. As hon. members know the legality of this order has been challenged, and the matter is before the courts.

This poses a difficult problem because in many cases those who paid the surcharges, and who might now be entitled to claim refunds should the order be found to have been invalid, passed the amount of such surcharges on to their customers. These customers in turn may have passed the amount of the surcharges on to their customers, and so on. It would not be possible to unscramble a situation of this kind.

Accordingly I should like to inform the house that the government will be recommending legislation on the surcharge order. One effect of this proposed legislation would be to prevent any massive attempt at obtaining refund of moneys in fact paid by now unidentifiable Canadians, an action which would not be in the public interest.

ECONOMIC COUNCIL OF CANADA

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT AND DEFINITION OF DUTIES

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the establishment of an economic council of Canada and to define the duties thereof, to provide for the appointment of the chairman, directors and other members of the council and for the payment of the remuneration of the chairman and directors and of certain other expenses of administration of the council, to provide further that the council may engage the services of such advisers and staff as may be necessary to enable it to carry out its duties and to provide further for other related and incidental matters.

Motion agreed to.

MUNICIPAL DEVELOPMENT AND LOAN BOARD

PROVISION FOR FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO MUNICIPALITIES

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to promote increased employment in Canada by the provision of financial assistance by way of loans to municipalities, the object of such loans being to enable municipalities to augment or accelerate their capital works programs subject to the approval of the provinces concerned; and for this purpose to provide a special fund in the consolidated revenue fund not exceeding four hundred million dollars to be available for the making of loans to municipalities and certain other municipal authorities for specific municipal capital works projects; to establish a municipal development and loan board to administer the fund so provided; to authorize the acceptance of municipal debentures for any loans so made; to authorize a measure of forgiveness in respect of any loans so made, depending upon the date of completion of the projects for which such loans are made; and to provide further for other related and incidental matters.

Motion agreed to.

INDUSTRY

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF DEPARTMENT

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure (a) to establish a department of industry to be presided over by a minister of industry who shall be appointed under the Great Seal of Canada, to authorize the appointment of a deputy minister by the governor in council, and to provide for the appointment to the department on a temporary basis of persons having special knowledge of manufacturing industries to assist in the work of the department; (b) to provide for the establishment under the direction of the minister of an area development agency and to provide for the appointment of a commissioner and a deputy commissioner for area development; and (c) to make a consequential amendment to the Salaries Act to provide a salary for the minister.

Motion agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

PROVISION FOR APPOINTMENT OF TWO MINISTERS

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure respecting the Department of Agriculture, to provide that the department shall be presided over by a minister of agriculture (east) and a minister of agriculture (west) appointed under the Great Seal of Canada, and to make a consequential amendment to the Salaries Act to provide salaries for both ministers.

Motion agreed to.

ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING MEMBERSHIP, FUNDS, ADMINISTRATION, ETC.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Atlantic Development Board Act to increase the number of members of the Atlantic development board from five to eleven; to establish as a separate account in the consolidated revenue fund an Atlantic development fund to which shall be credited the sum of one hundred million dollars to be used for the purpose of financing or assisting in financing programs or projects that would contribute to the growth and development of the economy of the Atlantic region and for which satisfactory financing arrangements are not otherwise available; and to provide that the said act shall expire on the 24th day of January, 1969; and to provide further for certain changes in connection with the administration of the said act.

Motion agreed to.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

On the order:

The Prime Minister:

That a special committee be appointed to consider matters relating to defence and to report from time to time its observations and opinions thereon; that the committee have power to send for persons, papers and records and to examine witnesses; that it be empowered to adjourn from place to place; that standing order 67 be suspended in relation to the committee; and that the committee consist of 18 members to be designated by the house at a later date.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section 2 of standing order 21, this notice of motion is transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders at the next sitting of the house.

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING COUNCIL MEMBERSHIP, NAMES OF TERRITORIES, ETC.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Northwest Territories Act and to rename the said territories, and to effect certain consequential changes in the statute law with respect thereto, inter alia to increase the number of elected members of the council of the territory from four to five, to establish a separate territorial revenue fund and to provide for the transfer thereto of a portion of the amount standing to the credit of the Northwest Territories revenue account in the consolidated revenue fund upon the coming into force of the said measure.

Motion agreed to.

NUNASSIAQ TERRITORY

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT, GOVERNMENT, AND ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to establish a new territory under the name of Nunassiaq territory and to provide for the government thereof and the administration of justice therein; to provide inter alia for the appointment of a commissioner and deputy commissioner of the territory, the establishment of a council of the territory, the appointment and election and the tenure of the members thereof, the sessional indemnities for the elected members and one of the appointed members thereof, the travelling and living expenses of the members thereof and the legislative powers of the commissioner in council; to provide also for the payment of territorial revenues into the consolidated revenue fund and for the establishment therein of an account to be known as the Nunassiaq revenue account, to which shall be credited amounts equal to the territorial revenues paid from time to time into the consolidated revenue fund and all moneys appropriated by parliament to be credited to the said account; to provide also for the payment, out of the consolidated revenue fund, of money required for the territorial purposes specified in ordinances of the commissioner in council or, until the establishment of the first council of the territory, in orders of the commissioner, all such payments to be charged to the Nunassiaq revenue account; to provide also for the establishment of a territorial court and for the appointment of a judge and a deputy judge thereto; to provide also for the appointment of police magistrates in and for the territory and for the fixing of their salaries and allowances; to provide also that the governor in council may appoint justices of the peace in and for the territory and authorize payment of their remuneration and travelling and other expenses; and to provide further that the governor in council may appoint a clerk of the court, sheriff and such other officers as are deemed necessary for the administration of justice in the territory and fix their salaries and allowances.

Motion agreed to.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NATO—ARMING OF CANADIAN TROOPS WITH NUCLEAR WEAPONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence whether following his recent visit to the brigade in Europe he has made a decision to replace the non-explosive warheads on the Honest John rockets with atomic warheads, and permit the rocket battery crews to conduct practice shooting with live ammunition in order to complete their training.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): The question of the arming of the Honest John is one which is now under active consideration by the government and a decision will depend, I am sure, to a considerable extent on the outcome of negotiations now being carried on by my colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

QUEBEC—PROTECTION OF MILITARY INSTALLATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): I wish to direct a question to the minister of defence. Have any additional security measures been instituted to protect military installations in the province of Quebec and, if so, what is the nature of these extra precautions?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Additional precautions have been taken but I am not in a position to advise the house exactly what they are because to do so would, I believe, prejudice the security which they afford. I hope they will be successful in discouraging the type of incident we have been experiencing. Everything possible is being done and every co-operation is being given to the government and premier of Quebec in the hope that this situation can be brought under control.

NUCLEAR WEAPONS—INQUIRY AS TO CONSTRUCTION OF AMMUNITION DUMPS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence and ask whether, as a result of his recent visit to Canadian military establishments in Germany, he is in a position to advise the house whether the ammunition dumps for nuclear warheads which were planned in the fall of 1961 have now been constructed, or what is the position respecting construction at each location?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member probably knows, one of the ammunition dumps which would be used by the Canadian brigade group if a bilateral agreement is signed with the United States is located at Hemer, and that has already been completed. These ammunition dumps are constructed under the infrastructure of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and are not under our national control. Those for the air division have been approved, and one or two of those are now in the early stages of construction.

(Translation):

THE MINISTRY

INQUIRY AS TO DIRECTORSHIPS IN COMPANIES OR BANKS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister.

Could the Prime Minister tell us whether the ministers in his cabinet, who were directors of companies or chartered banks, have given up their directorships in these firms following their appointments as ministers of the crown?

(Text):

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): There is a question on the order paper dealing with that matter.

DEFENCE RESEARCH

POSSIBLE EFFECTS OF U.S. SPACE NEEDLES PROJECT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. First, has the government of Canada received any communications from the government of Great Britain with respect to the possibility that the United States space needles project may be hampering scientific research of other nations? Second, has the minister received any information or advice from his scientific advisers in this respect?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): With regard to the second part of the question, I have had some discussion with officials in the Department of External Affairs. As to the first part of the question, I have not received any information.

TRADE

URANIUM—INQUIRY AS TO NEW CONTRACTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. It was recently indicated in the press that the minister visited Elliot Lake to discuss with municipal officials methods to improve economic conditions in the depressed uranium mining area. Would the hon. gentleman tell the house whether his efforts to improve the sale of uranium have been successful and the amount of any new contracts negotiated as a result of his visit?

Hon. W. M. Benidickson (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): I thank the hon. member for having given me notice of this question a few moments ago. Shortly after my appointment I did visit Elliot Lake in company with the minister of industry and resources of the province of Ontario, Mr. Robert Macaulay, and officials of both governments. We are looking into this question very seriously at the present time.

INQUIRY AS TO RETURN OF MINISTER FROM GENEVA

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the right hon. Prime Minister whether the newspaper report in this morning's press is correct, that the Minister of Trade and Commerce is leaving Geneva and the GATT conversations there, and will be back in the house on Thursday.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, it is anticipated that the minister will be in the house on Thursday.

(Translation):

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

CONVERSATION BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND QUEBEC PREMIER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Has he recently been in touch with the premier of Quebec about a new tax-sharing scheme?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member asked exactly the same question yesterday. The same question cannot be asked two, three and four times.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I put that question to the Minister of Justice but, since then, statements have been made to the effect that the Prime Minister of Canada and the premier of Quebec have had a telephone conversation on that subject; I am now seeking from the Prime Minister himself information on that matter.

[Mr. Crouse.]

Mr. Speaker: The Prime Minister can answer that question if he wishes, but he is under no obligation to do so this morning.

(Text):

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I did have a telephone conversation with the premier of Quebec—I think it was last Friday evening—when we discussed matters of mutual interest.

(Translation):

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question? Was a new tax-sharing scheme included in these matters of mutual interest?

(Text):

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. I noticed a report in this morning's Toronto Globe and Mail to the effect that the Prime Minister would be having discussions with Premier Lesage of Quebec concerning tax concessions. Will these discussions take place with a particular premier for a particular province prior to discussions with the other provincial premiers?

Mr. Pearson: I am always happy to meet the provincial premiers on matters of mutual interest. Of course the question of fiscal relations with the provinces is one which should be discussed with all the heads of the governments of the provinces at a conference.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

LEGISLATION RESPECTING WAGES AND HOURS OF WORK

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I should like to ask the Prime Minister if it is the intention of the government during this session of parliament to introduce legislation requiring in federal industries a minimum wage of $1.25 an hour and hours of work, as promised last March in Hamilton by the right hon. gentleman.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Labour, who would normally reply to this question, is not in the house, being away on official business, but it is the intention of the government to deal with this matter as soon as possible.

PUBLIC WORKS

VANCOUVER, B.C.—FEDERAL GRANT FOR CONSTRUCTION OF SEA WALL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arnold Webster (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. In view of the change of government some doubts have arisen with regard to the continuity of work on the Stanley park sea wall at the entrance to the harbour of Vancouver. Would the minister please clarify the position of the government in relation to the federal sea wall grant for this year?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of this question. An item is included in the 1963-64 estimates of the department to continue construction of the Stanley park sea wall. Subject, of course, to the approval of parliament this amount will be available this year.

(Translation):

TRANSPORT

RICHELIEU WATERWAY—INQUIRY AS TO PROGRESS OF DISCUSSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs whom I wish to congratulate on his appointment. Can the minister tell the house what progress has been made by the international joint commission in their discussions on the advisability of developing a Richelieu river waterway?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for having given me notice of this question. The house is already aware that, on July 5, 1962, the governments of Canada and the United States of America asked the international joint commission to examine this project under section IX of the Boundary Waters Treaty (1909). The commission is busily carrying out its review. In the course of its proceedings it intends to hold public hearings in that area during the week of September 16. These hearings will be held in Saint John, Sorel, Montreal, Plattsburg, Burlington and Albany, so as to enable individuals and private and public organizations to put forward their point of view. In July the commission will issue notices giving all the necessary details on those hearings.

(Text):

CAPE TORMENTINE, N.B.-BORDEN, P.E.I.—CONSTRUCTION OF NEW FERRY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Transport. Has construction of a new vessel to operate between Cape Tormentine, New Brunswick, and Borden, Prince Edward Island, been approved by the government?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will have to take the question as notice.

Mr. Crouse: Ask the Solicitor General. He knows.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): I should like to ask an additional question related to this matter. How is it possible that the minister does not have the answer readily available, when the announcement has already been made by one of his colleagues?

PUBLICATIONS

IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. Could he inform the house whether the government is contemplating action toward the implementation of any of the recommendations of the O'Leary report on publications?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this matter is now under consideration, but I can tell my hon. friend that no action is likely to take place in the first part of the current session.

AGRICULTURE

WHEAT—POSSIBLE EFFECT OF U.S. REFERENDUM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that the wheat referendum in 21 states of the United States is being held today and there can now be no risk of being charged with interference in the affairs of a friendly nation, would the minister make a statement to the house as to the position of the Canadian government on this matter, and at the same time give some indication to farmers both east and west of action to be taken to meet the impact of the United States decision, whether yes or no?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, may we take this question as notice.

[Later:]

Mr. Hamilton: I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the wheat referendum being held in the United States today now puts the matter beyond any question of interference by any friendly nation, may I ask if this matter and the impact on Canadian agriculture was discussed with President Kennedy or any of his officials at Hyannis Port?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): The hon. gentleman may rest assured that agricultural problems of interest to both countries and other problems in the same category were discussed with the president at Hyannis Port.

(Translation):

FITNESS AND AMATEUR SPORT

INQUIRY AS TO AGREEMENT WITH QUEBEC

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gerard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Can the minister tell us whether an agreement was signed between the state of Quebec and her department in respect to the program for fitness and amateur sport?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for Chapleau for giving me notice of that question. The answer is, not yet.

(Text):

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

ST. JOHN'S, NFLD.—CONSTRUCTION OF TELEVISION STATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister who speaks for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation a question relating to certain uncertainties that exist in St. John's, Newfoundland, which I know he will appreciate. Can he tell us whether and when the C.B.C. is to begin construction of its new television station in St. John's?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the B.B.G. made a recommendation shortly before the 8th of April and that the matter was then remitted, as it has to be, to the Department of Transport where it is under study by the technical officers of that department. I cannot give any further information until that study is completed.

Mr. Fisher: A supplementary question. Could the minister indicate, as the minister from Newfoundland, whether he and the government are in support of this particular project?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman's question raises a very important constitutional point, and that is whether Your Honour feels it is proper for ministers to be questioned on matters that are not directly concerned with their responsibilities to this house merely because of the geographical location of their constituencies. I believe this is an important point, not in this particular case but in others, and I believe your predecessors have always ruled that it is not proper to ask ministers questions in the House of Commons except about those matters for which they have a constitutional responsibility to the house.

As to the substance of the hon. gentleman's question, the matter has not yet been considered by the government, and until it has been considered I would not presume to speak for the government.

GRAIN

WHEAT—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON MINIMUM PRICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact the farmers in the west are now in the midst of seeding operations and a reply would have a bearing on the amount of wheat sown, would the minister indicate to the house whether the government intends to introduce legislation at this session of parliament to provide for a minimum of $2 per bushel for wheat, to take effect immediately, or does he not consider that important enough to be decided within the 60 days of decision?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): I think this question has already been asked. This is a matter of government policy and will be dealt with later.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REQUEST FOR PROMPT DELIVERY OF "HANSARD" TO MEMBERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): May I ask the Secretary of State and house leader if, for the orderly and efficient conduct of business in the house, he will see that Hansard is available to all members prior to the opening of the daily sitting, and not to just a few as occurred today.

Mr. Speaker: If the minister will allow me, I may say I was advised this morning that Hansard would be late in arriving. It will be on the desk of every hon. member by noon today. I was asked also to request hon. members to leave their Commons Hansards here in the Commons for personal reference so they may be filed from day to day.

(Translation):

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

POSSIBLE SUCCESSOR TO PRESIDENT UPON RETIREMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport. Can the minister tell us whether it is true that the president of the Canadian National Railways would be soon replaced by the present Minister of Justice?

(Text):

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): I would point out at once that this is not the proper form of question to ask of a minister, whether some statement he has made is true. If I were to reply truthfully to a question in that form I would immediately be in violation of the rules by making remarks about the hon. member.

(Translation):

Mr. Gregoire: A further question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister tell us when the term of office of the present president of the Canadian National Railways will expire?

(Text):

Mr. McIlraith: I should like to check the date, and I can give the hon. member an answer if he will put his question on the order paper in the ordinary way.

(Translation):

INDIAN AFFAIRS

QUEBEC—PROVINCIAL JURISDICTION OVER ADMINISTRATION AND EDUCATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration who is responsible for the administration of Indian affairs. Does the minister intend to recommend to the government that it should comply with the wish of the government of the province of Quebec so that the administration and education of the new Quebec Indians may as soon as possible come under the sole jurisdiction of the Quebec government?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member, I may say that the problem concerning the education of Indian children is under consideration at present, as well as other matters of policy relating to Indian affairs.

(Text):

INDUSTRY

CHIGNECTO—INQUIRY AS TO SURVEY INTO INDUSTRIAL COMPLEX

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State. Has a comprehensive investigation been instituted by the present government into the potential of the Chignecto complex?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I am afraid I was unable to hear the hon. member. If he could pose his question in a slightly louder voice, having regard to my infirmity, I might hear him.

Some hon. Members: Which one?

Mr. Coates: Perhaps if I were given a better seat on this side of the house, Mr. Speaker, it might help. I asked whether a comprehensive investigation had been instituted into the potential of the Chignecto complex by the present government.

Mr. Pickersgill: No survey has been undertaken by the present government, but my recollection is that the previous government boasted that this matter had been under consideration for the whole six years they were in office.

Mr. Coates: Since the Atlantic development board has been left in such a state by the amendments that are proposed by the present government, I wonder if the government could now try to get an investigation carried out by whatever is left of the board.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should be delighted to take the hon. gentleman's suggestions under consideration.

PUBLIC SERVICE

INQUIRY AS TO SALARY INCREASES FOR CERTAIN CLASSES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. My question relates to the civil service pay increases that were announced by the previous minister of finance on December 10. Have the various groups of civil servants who were not given pay increases at that time received them in the meantime? If not, will the gaps be filled soon?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): The Civil Service Association of Canada has asked for consultations on the question of pay increases. These consultations began last week, and there is another meeting called for this afternoon. I hope the matter will be cleared up very soon.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask a supplementary question. What about the various groups of employees of the House of Commons? Have they all had their increases?

Mr. Gordon: That also is under consideration.

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I have a question I feel would be best directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Yesterday I had a desk delivered to my office in which I found a rather valuable item, and possibly the minister could direct me to the owner.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. MacInnis: The item can be identified by looking at it, because it says "Paul Martin for prime minister".

(Translation):

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Does the Prime Minister apprehend an inflationary pressure in Canada due to the overgenerous dividends paid by his party during the last election campaign?

(Text):

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—INQUIRY AS TO MEETING WITH B.C. PREMIER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): May I direct a question to the Prime Minister. This question is related to the question asked of the Prime Minister concerning meetings with the premiers of the other provinces. Has the premier of the province of British Columbia yet replied to the letter from the Prime Minister concerning a meeting about the Columbia river?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I think the premier would have received my letter only yesterday or the day before. I have not had a reply from him as yet.

[Mr. Knowles.]

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed, from Monday, May 20, consideration of the motion of Miss Pauline Jewett for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to the speech from the throne delivered by His Excellency the Administrator at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Diefenbaker.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, when the house adjourned last night I was dealing with some of the more glaring omissions from the throne speech. I said that in the light of those omissions, and in the light of the number of questions to which the government in the last two or three days has answered that government policy would be announced in due course, I hope that the 60 days of decision are not to be replaced by 60 weeks of indecision.

The government cannot be allowed, and must not be allowed, to dawdle. It is in a position in which it must either perform or perish. Earlier in my remarks I said that the opposition groups have a responsibility not to indulge in frivolous obstruction, and that the government in turn has a responsibility to tackle aggressively the problems facing the country and to consult parliament on major policies.

Mr. Speaker, I want to place before the house my contention that the government has already shown a callous disregard of parliament and parliamentary institutions. What is the role of the executive in relation to parliament, and particularly the role of a minority government in relation to parliament? I cannot give the house any better statement than to quote from the speech made by the leader of the Liberal party, addressing a meeting of Liberal M.P.'s and their supporters in the metropolitan area of Toronto on September 18, 1962. This is not taken from a press report but from the press release actually issued by the office of the leader of the Liberal party. At that time the present Prime Minister said:

> The other aspect of the election to which I wish to draw special attention is the complete contempt of parliament shown by the Prime Minister since he was left as the head of a minority government; and this by the man who cannot make a speech without boasting how he has restored the rights of parliament.
>
> Responsible government, which was not gained in Canada without bloodshed, is the foundation of our independence and our democracy in this country.
>
> What do we mean by responsible government? We mean that the Queen's ministers are responsible to the elected house of parliament. They have the right to remain in office only so long as they have the confidence and support of a majority of the elected representatives of the people.

In a parliament where no political party has a clear majority, this confidence cannot, of course, be taken for granted by the government.

The first such parliament in our times was the one elected in October, 1925. At that time Mr. Mackenzie King decided to remain at the head of a minority government until parliament could meet and decide whether or not his government should continue in office. But, and this is in strong contrast to the conduct of the present Prime Minister, Mr. King's government made no appointments and took no action beyond that required for the day-to-day routine business of government until parliament had met and decided the question of confidence.

The leader of the Liberal party went on:

As soon as it met the acting prime minister, as leader of the government in the house, sought at once to get a vote of confidence without even waiting for action by the opposition. After a very lengthy debate the government was sustained by a vote of 123 to 120. The essential point is that the Liberal government of that time did not presume to do more than to act as a caretaker government until the ministers were assured of a majority in parliament, and took steps to decide that point at the earliest possible moment.

The statement goes on:

I insist that nothing should be done in this parliament or by this parliament until the question of confidence has been settled in the proper constitutional way.

Unless that question is settled first, the right of parliament to control the executive will have ceased to mean anything. No plea of urgency and no excuse should be accepted by the elected representatives of the people, for any further delay in settling the question as to whether or not the Diefenbaker government possesses the confidence and has the support of a majority in the new House of Commons.

I agree with that statement. If the leader of the Liberal party meant it, then it is a ringing declaration of faith in parliamentary government. If he did not mean it, then it is nothing more than hypocritical claptrap, and only time will place this statement in its true perspective.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the Prime Minister and his colleagues have not made a very good start in this direction. I refer to two matters. First of all I refer to the announcement by the Minister of Fisheries and the Secretary of State for External Affairs that they have decided to accept two recommendations by the international north Pacific fisheries commission to permit Japan to fish for halibut in the east Bering sea and for herring off the Queen Charlotte islands. Apart altogether from the merits of the case, surely it would have been proper to have allowed this house and the fisheries committee of the house to go into this matter and express an opinion. Surely the request of the fishermen involved that they be allowed to make representations to the House of Commons committee on marine and fisheries was not unreasonable. What was the hurry? I think we have a right to know.

Does the government intend to deal with this matter by an order in council, a minute of cabinet or an executive order, or does it intend to refer this matter to parliament? If it intends to refer it to parliament, then why has a decision been made before parliament has had any opportunity to express its opinion?

An even more glaring example of this disregard of parliament is the government's announced decision to acquire nuclear arms for Canadian forces in Canada and Canadian forces in NATO. In this connection I refer to the speech from the throne, where it says:

For this purpose, the armed forces of Canada should have available the modern weapons necessary to perform effectively the defensive tasks which Canada has undertaken in the alliance.

In this context modern weapons can only be interpreted as referring to nuclear arms. Therefore I wish to move a subamendment.

We cannot support the amendment proposed by the leader of the Conservative party. There are two statements in particular in that amendment, one of which speaks of Canada's economic growth during 1962 as exceeding that of any country in the western world. I would challenge that statement on the basis of growth in terms of constant dollars, taking into consideration price changes. Certainly countries in western Europe with more pronounced economic growth and with unemployment of less than 2 per cent could hardly be said to have had less economic growth and stability than Canada.

I also refer to the last phrase, "to give the people of Canada full opportunity to continue the social advances and economic growth of the past year". I would point out that these social advances and economic growth still left over 500,000 unemployed in this country and large areas of our population with a very low standard of living. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge):

That the amendment be amended by deleting therefrom all the words after the word "address" and by substituting therefor the following words:

We regret that Your Excellency's advisers have indicated their intention of acquiring nuclear arms for Canadian forces, thereby lessening the chances for nuclear disarmament and increasing the danger of nuclear war.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words as to how the government have dealt with this matter since they took office on April 22. Within a few hours of being sworn in the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer) announced on television that nuclear arms would be acquired for Canadian forces in Canada within six weeks, and for NATO forces in Europe within six months.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, that is not what I said. I wish the hon. gentleman would quote me accurately if he is going to quote me at all.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman will have ample opportunity in the course of this debate to tell us what he said, but certainly I listened to the broadcast, and a great many of his supporters listened to the broadcast and telephoned me to tell me of their amazement because they had been told by the leader of the Liberal party that nuclear arms was not an issue, and yet one of the first things announced by the minister was the intention of the Department of National Defence to acquire nuclear arms.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas: The week end before last the Prime Minister had conversations with the President of the United States, and he is reported as having announced that the decision had been made to acquire nuclear arms. The Toronto Star of May 13 says:

> Prime Minister Pearson said today Canada's acquisition of nuclear weapons did not require formal parliamentary approval.

The report continues:

> Unless acquisition of weapons for Canadian forces needed a formal treaty, there was no need for formal parliamentary approval, Mr. Pearson said.

That is a strange thing coming from one who talked about the rights of parliament and the need for preserving parliamentary democracy and making the cabinet responsible to the elected representatives of the people. The Prime Minister professed to be amazed that the New Democratic party had protested this decision prior to consultation with parliament, because the Prime Minister contended that he was simply carrying out a commitment which had already been made.

When was this commitment made, Mr. Speaker? The strange thing is that neither the leader of the Liberal party nor any of his supporters seemed to be aware of this commitment prior to January 12 last, when the leader of the Liberal party changed the party's policy in this respect. I have here the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix of November 29, 1962. Mr. Pearson was speaking to the University of Saskatchewan students, and this report says:

> Mr. Pearson drew loud applause from the students when he told them he was "definitely opposed to the acquisition of nuclear arms by Canada".

The report continues and quotes the Prime Minister as saying:

> "I am opposed to nuclear weapons because, if we allowed such armaments on Canadian soil, we could never take the lead in the United Nations in persuading non-nuclear nations to refuse to adopt nuclear weapons".

Mr. Woolliams: Why did he change his mind?

An hon. Member: Adlai told him.

Mr. Douglas: Six weeks later the leader of the Liberal party made a complete reversal of his position. What happened in those six weeks to suddenly convince him that there was a commitment—

An hon. Member: A Gallup poll.

Mr. Douglas: —that he must carry out?

An hon. Member: Paul went to Paris.

Mr. Douglas: When the leader of the Liberal party made his switch he then proceeded to say that those of us who were opposing nuclear arms were seeking to promote the first objective of Soviet policy. That was a contemptible statement.

Mr. Woolliams: Terrible.

Mr. Douglas: I have no right to deny the Prime Minister the privilege of changing his mind, but I deny him the right to impute motives to those who support the position which he abandoned only a few weeks ago. By whom was this commitment made? It was certainly not made by the government that was in office at that time. They said they had made no such commitment. Certainly parliament made no such commitment. By whom was the commitment made? It is true there were arrangements between the Department of National Defence of this country and the department of defence of the United States. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that no commitment can be made on behalf of this nation except by this parliament, the elected representatives of the people.

I can recall that only a few months ago Liberal members in this house excoriated the government of that day for imposing $250 million worth of surcharges without the approval of parliament. I agreed with them. But I submit, Mr. Speaker, that surely imposing nuclear weapons is a much more serious matter than imposing surcharges, and I contend that if taxation without representation is undemocratic, then annihilation without representation is tyranny.

The government of this country has no clearcut mandate to impose nuclear weapons on this country. Only this parliament can give them that mandate. We in the New Democratic party believe that the acquisition of nuclear arms by Canada will increase the danger of nuclear war and will lessen the chances of nuclear disarmament. We contend that this is a fateful decision which is being made, and that this decision cannot and must not be made without being referred to this parliament. We believe that the members of this house should have an opportunity to state in clear and categorical terms whether or not Canada should acquire nuclear weapons at home or abroad.

For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I have moved this subamendment, in order that the house may have an opportunity to tell the government exactly where it stands on the matter of nuclear arms. In so far as this party is concerned, our position is unchanged. We believe that acquiring nuclear arms will add nothing to the military security of Canada. It will add nothing to the effectiveness of the NATO alliance. We believe that, on the contrary, it is a retrograde step; that at a time when the foreign secretary of the United Kingdom has made an appeal to the Soviet union not to extend nuclear arms to other countries which do not possess them, Canada might well set an example by saying that as far as we are concerned we intend to keep this country out of the nuclear club.

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, may I join in the numerous congratulations which you certainly must have received on election to your present office. May I also extend my congratulations to the mover and seconder of the address. The trepidation they must have felt on making their maiden speeches in the house is certainly shared by myself at this moment.

Many of the members on this side of the house—I am referring especially to the newer members—have had backgrounds in academic circles and in the public service which make us proud to be associated with them. They will undoubtedly contribute a great deal to debate in this parliament and to public life in Canada.

The constituency which I have the honour to represent is one of the ten largest in Canada, and for 96 years it maintained its allegiance to one political party. I do not think the voters of Carleton can be accused of contributing to splinter parties in a house of minorities, to use a phrase which I believe the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) used yesterday. They do not lightly change their allegiance, but this riding has undergone profound changes, especially in the post-war period. It now includes a substantial portion of the national capital region and the city of Ottawa in addition to a large rural and agricultural area. In Carleton there are no strictly rural interests or strictly urban interests; one blends into the other. We depend upon each other. It will be my privilege to serve all the residents of this riding, both old and new. It has been represented in this house by many distinguished men who rose to high positions, including Sir John A. Macdonald and Sir Robert Borden. It is a great honour to succeed them.

One of the matters concerning which legislation is to be placed before this house, as indicated in the statement of the administrator, is the redistribution of electoral boundaries. I hope it will be possible to agree upon action in this field early in the session. Generally speaking, the people in our cities and new suburbs have been seriously under-represented in this house. Nearly two years have passed since the last census, and it is clearly time for action. Since this task is to be undertaken by an independent commission, a considerable number of months must elapse before redistribution can be brought about, so I sincerely hope it will be possible to introduce the measure at an early date.

The statement of the administrator also indicates that the standing committee on privileges and elections is to examine the Canada Elections Act. It is interesting to note that both the Leader of the Opposition and the Prime Minister have agreed that campaigns should be shortened. I feel this is much to be desired. There is also agreement that some limitation on election expenses will have to be imposed. I think, also, that the recent legislation which has been introduced in the province of Quebec will have to be examined closely. In urban ridings the principle of dual enumeration has worked extremely well. I suggest we might consider extending this principle so as to have the deputy returning officer named by one party and the poll clerk by another. This would reduce the number of election day workers required. Provision should be made to allow many persons, including civil servants and their families as well as persons in hospitals, to mail their ballots if they are unavoidably absent on election day from their normal places of voting. I think, too, that free radio and television time should be used as far as possible to promote debates on an interparty basis between candidates in the ridings and the leaders of the national parties. Those of us who have had any familiarity with this medium are concerned about the effect of a trend toward placing it in the hands of public relations experts, who tend to produce a calculated image. A return to debates of a more spontaneous nature would, I think, be welcomed as being generally to the good.

The proposal to establish a municipal development and loan board will be welcomed, I am sure, by all municipalities across Canada. Those of us who have served on municipal councils know the tremendous demands on them for new works of all kinds, such as sewage disposal plants, sewers, water mains, roads, bridges, recreational facilities and a thousand other things. Measures such as federal loans to municipalities with forgiveness clauses for the development of sewage disposal facilities have set a pattern which has worked well. There is, I think, every reason to consider extending this pattern to other types of public loans. Careful administration, in co-operation with the provinces, of applications from rapidly growing communities whose credit has been strained to provide those municipal services now considered essential, will ensure success. New jobs will be created, and the burden of municipal property taxes lightened. Care should be taken not to disrupt local bond markets, or to make credit so easy that it would disrupt sound management of municipal budgets.

Closely associated with the program of the municipal development and loan board should be an expansion of federal assistance for urban renewal purposes. Older blighted areas should be redeveloped, but this requires capital on a scale not presently available to many municipalities.

The city of Ottawa, on whose council I have had the privilege of sitting for some years, should benefit from the new municipal development and loan board. The city of Ottawa has, however, a special and in many ways unique relationship to the federal government as part of the national capital region. As a municipality in its own right, the city of Ottawa is part of the national capital region. To members of the city council, members of parliament appear generally to be critical of city administration, especially of the potholes on Ottawa streets. The same members of parliament do not seem to be aware that the city borrows to the absolute maximum of its credit as permitted by the Ontario municipal board, and is seriously hampered by the inadequate grants in lieu of taxes paid by the largest employer in the area, namely the government of Canada. This chief employer makes demands for services, such as new bridges, which a private employer paying full taxes would have a right to expect. But the federal government does not pay what a private owner of property would pay to the city, and members of this house do not always seem aware of that fact.

Tonight I am offering my resignation to the council of the city of Ottawa in order to devote my full time to serving the city and the rest of the riding of Carleton as a member of this house. One of the matters which I hope the government will re-examine in the months ahead is the basis on which grants in lieu of taxes are paid by the federal government toward the development of the national capital. The federal government develops its plans for the national capital through the national capital commission established by federal statute. As the administrator noted in his statement, these are times of great change, times that test old virtues. Great changes have occurred in this metropolitan area of the national capital region. The rate of growth in the years between the censuses of 1956 and 1961 was exceeded only by two metropolitan areas in Canada. It is time to re-examine the relations between the national capital commission and the elected municipal government, and indeed between municipal governments themselves. This task will involve close liaison with provincial and municipal representatives.

The members chosen by the federal government to sit on the national capital commission should be chosen on the basis of their ability to contribute to the development of a national capital. Narrow political loyalty should not be the basis of selection, nor should reward for party service, and I am confident that future appointments made by this government will be on the basis of ability to make contributions. The long term development of a national capital which will be a source of pride from one coast of Canada to the other suggests, I think, that appointees to the national capital commission should not engage in active campaigning on the hustings at election time, and should observe after appointment a rule of non-partisan behaviour in so far as this is possible.

Mr. Speaker, our party, through its most capable leader, the Prime Minister of Canada, is alive to the needs of our changing times. A program to restore faith in Canada, to relieve unemployment and to promote national development is being laid before this house. The task before us is a very great one indeed, a challenge as strong as that which any generation has ever faced. I am confident that this government and this parliament will be equal to it.

Mr. Lawrence E. Kindt (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I should like to join those who have preceded me in this debate on the speech from the throne and congratulate you on your appointment to your high office. May I say that it is not an easy office to fill with impartiality and recognition. From long experience and training I am sure you must have been taught to look straight ahead, but if it were possible to have a third eye on this side of your head, we over in this corner of the house might receive equal recognition with other members of the house. However, this is something which is impracticable, and whichever way you as Mr. Speaker work out the problem, it will be greatly appreciated by those of us who sit in this corner. It might be suggested that you consult some of the women and get some sort of a rear view mirror arrangement in order that you may see all parts of the house at the same time. Whichever way you arrange it, we in this corner will be very appreciative.

I should also like to add my words of congratulation to the hon. member for Northumberland, the mover of the speech from the throne. I do so for two reasons; first because she made a wonderful speech, to which I listened with great attention. She had the information there, and her speech was brief and to the point. Second, she is a person who has had advanced training in political economy and economics. She is one among us in that field, and I hope that over the years she will be able to make that contribution which she is capable of to the thinking of the party in power.

Before going into the throne speech I should like to make one or two observations concerning some of the things which were said by the leader of the Social Credit party in his talk to this house yesterday. May I quote what he said, as reported on page 68 of Hansard:

> The real cause of the failure of the twenty fifth parliament was indecision and the lack of leadership given to that house of minorities by the government. I am not making these remarks to dig up the past, but what happened ought to be a lesson for the future to the present government. If the former government had laid a positive program before the house——and so on. We were all in the house on February 5 and know what took place. We know that on the evening of February 5, between six and eight o'clock, the deputy leader and the members of the Social Credit party from Quebec made a decision which was not altogether the decision of the leader of the Social Credit party. The deputy leader and his followers reached the conclusion that it would be better to have an election at that time and come back with 65 members rather than keep the then government in power. This was the reason for voting against the government and not the cover up statements made yesterday by the leader of the Social Credit party. These statements which were put before this house yesterday by the leader of the Social Credit party were for no other purpose than to give the impression that it was the things which he said, not the real political reason concerning his own party, which precipitated the last election. He went up and down the country, and I have heard him several times over television, repeating the story over and over again so that he actually believes it himself. The time has now come when the public should be put straight on the matter.

Who leads whom in the Social Credit party? Is it Mr. Manning? Is it the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette)? Or is it the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson)? All through the last session the hon. member for Red Deer led about three people in the Social Credit party.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I do not think the hon. member has the right to blame any member of parliament or any other person in this House of Commons.

Mr. Kindt: I will deal with the hon. member a little later. During the last election campaign in the speeches made by the leader of the Social Credit party he said a week before the election that he was even going to be prime minister. He made statements of that sort to an audience in High River. Some 400 people turned out on a Saturday evening in High River to hear him, but 250 of them were Progressive Conservatives, and he left the meeting before any one of them could ask him a question about what he had said.

Now, this old idea of going up and down the country preaching debt-free money—

An hon. Member: What is that?

Mr. Kindt: —which in essence is nothing more than the old Aberhart $25 a month with a new twist.

An hon. Member: What a twist.

Mr. Kindt: As one Alberta farmer said, "If you go back to the time when Aberhart first promised us $25 a month, that would amount to around $9,600 by now, and with interest it would amount to around $14,000." He said, "If they will pay the $14,000 they promised I will get up on the table and shout hallelujah."

There is one other point. If you want to learn the truth about Social Credit, if you have not been living with it as we have in Alberta, you should read the report of the New Zealand royal commission a number of years ago and satisfy yourselves as to the false position of these Social Credit doctrines. You should also obtain a copy of a book by F. J. Docker called "Douglas Delusions". For the benefit of my friends down in the corner let me read this concluding statement:

> But it has been proved, it is hoped conclusively, that the bankers, when they issue credit, do so upon the individual credit of the person to whom the credit is granted, and as evidenced by the character of the security that is offered. It is not the general credit upon which the loan is made. Douglas, therefore, is left without any source for his distributions of dividends, or issues of "discount vouchers." The adoption of his theories in any community could have but one result: chaos and irretrievable ruin for the unfortunate country that ventured upon the experiment.

I could quote other parts of the book. If these gentlemen in the corner would spend a little more time reading on the subject of economics instead of going out and preaching doctrines that are false, then the people of Canada would have the benefit of truthful statements.

An hon. Member: How about studying finance instead of economics.

Mr. Kindt: I have already taken finance, my dear boy. Even with all the things the leader of the Social Credit party said to the people, he barely squeaked by in the Red Deer riding, and instead of their party getting 65 seats in Quebec, lo and behold they came back with what; 18 or 19 from Quebec.

Mr. Caouette: How many did you get in Quebec?

Mr. Kindt: Instead of having one party they have three parties now, and I should like to know who leads whom in the Social Credit party. To come back to the speech from the throne, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Leboe: You are doing fine. Why bother about the throne speech?

Mr. Kindt: I could say a lot more, but it would cut into my time. I am loaded for bear, and I do not have the time to talk too much about Social Credit. I want to go into the question of chopping up the Department of Agriculture. In one fell swoop the marketing of grain was chopped off and put under the Department of Trade and Commerce again. That left production and certain other relatively small phases of marketing under the present Minister of Agriculture.

I go one step further. They have taken the remaining 50 per cent and chopped it in two. We are going to have an eastern minister of agriculture and a western minister of agriculture with equal status. In other words we are going to have a kind of east-west Grey cup game where there will be plenty of followers on each side, and I can assure you they will be rooting for their particular side. This action, instead of uniting Canada and bringing about a united country, is going to sow the seeds of dissension and division. It cannot result in anything else.

I have been asked a number of questions by farmers. One farmer asked me this question. He said, "If they are cutting the department down to one quarter, what is the reason? Have they cut it down to fit the size of the man available to fill it? If so will they cut the salary to one quarter?" So far as I know there is only one country in the world that contemplates having two ministers of agriculture, which is what this government intends to do in Canada. This action is certain to promote nothing but confusion among the farmers and people generally. When our farmers want to know something about marketing, where are they going to go? If they want to know something about production, where are they going to go?

In other words, the department has been chopped up. If you look at the table of precedence as found on page 3 of the debates of the Senate for May 16, 1963 you will see that agriculture is 26th. It is right at the bottom of the totem pole. It is the caboose. In other words the government has ranked it as the least important of all departments in order of precedence. That is what this government thinks of the Department of Agriculture and the problems of agriculture.

We in western Canada all remember the three periods we have gone through. First of all there was the C. D. Howe period. The deputy minister to Mr. C. D. Howe is now the new Minister of Trade and Commerce. We all remember Mr. Howe's famous statement:

We have the best wheat in the world and if they want it let them come and get it.

There was no effort to get out and sell wheat. They simply took orders. Quotas were down to four bushels. Many farms in western Canada were abandoned. The cost-price squeeze forced them out of operation. As one who lived through that period I want to say that there was terrific distress among the farmers of western Canada. The bins were full of wheat, and all you have to do is talk to the farmers to know what took place during the C. D. Howe period. They depended upon the government for action but there was no action.

After the Progressive Conservative government came into power there was agitation to have the Department of Agriculture put back together again. That was done by putting the wheat board and also farm credit under the former minister of agriculture, one of the greatest leaders that agriculture has ever seen, Hon. Alvin Hamilton.

I do not need to tell you, Mr. Speaker, what has happened. I do not need to tell you about the sales of wheat to China and Japan, or how the wheat bins out west were emptied, or how the wheels started turning. All I have time to say is this. Under the direction of one man the farmers got results. There was co-ordination among the various branches of government. The minister of agriculture was able to tell the farmers, we want you to grow so much wheat, and if you grow it we will market it for you. They loved it. They were told also how much barley to produce and how much oats to produce. This one man had his finger on the market and he also had his finger upon production. When you divide these two functions, what have you got? Nothing but chaos, nothing but false starts and stops, nothing but jealousy between departments and inaction.

As you know, since this government have come into power we have entered a third phase. They have torn the department apart again. They have put marketing back under trade and commerce and they have left production under the present minister. Everything is now arranged and they are back where they left off in 1957. The arrangement is perfect for them to go to sleep again. This is what the farmers of western Canada fear, and they might well be afraid of it.

If this government go back to sleep, if they lose these China sales, these 75 million bushels a year, then the quotas for western farmers may drop as low as five bushels per acre. These farmers are now enjoying almost unlimited quotas, say 10 bushels per acre, but they will find themselves in a position where they will have to go back to feeding pigs in order to get rid of their wheat. One of the first statements made by the new Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) was to the effect that he would not go behind the iron curtain to sell wheat. He made this clear the second day after he came into office. However, he had time to arrange a trip to Geneva. He put other things first. He also had in his mind, as the government had, that agriculture stood at the bottom of the list in terms of priorities. The minister's Geneva trip was far more important to him than putting forth every effort to retain wheat sales to China.

The government's efforts in so far as wheat sales are concerned are now divided. What the Department of Agriculture needs, what any organization needs if it is going to click, as any businessman can tell you, is one man in authority. One man must be able to wield the whip and get sales. This situation does not mean anything to the present government. They have divided the responsibility so they can all go back to sleep again.

Now I want to spend a minute or two on the question of industry. I notice that according to the speech from the throne a new department of industry is to be set up. According to the speech from the throne it is proposed to establish an area development agency. This agency will work with the provincial governments and other organizations to co-ordinate programs for parts of the country where, because of chronic unemployment, a special thrust for development is needed. This government is going to use chronic unemployment areas as the touchstone or as the approach in deciding the location of new industry.

Then the speech from the throne indicates that we must create new industries. The fiscal and monetary policies of the government will give priority to the encouragement and expansion of industry. However, two approaches toward the question of the location of industry are revealed by what I see in the speech from the throne. One approach is the chronic unemployment area, and this is the approach this government intends to follow. The other approach, and the method which is usually followed under the free enterprise system, is to locate industries not in surplus unemployment areas but in those areas where they have the greatest economic advantage.

The surplus unemployment areas are mostly in Quebec and Ontario, as everyone knows. There are ten cabinet ministers from Ontario and eight from Quebec. These ministers have fixed up the speech from the throne, and I can see the handwriting of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) in it. Instead of deciding to locate industries in places in Canada where they would have the greatest chance of success, they have decided to put them in surplus labour areas. Instead of establishing industries in Alberta, the government intends to put them in Ontario and Quebec. If this criterion is followed the majority of the industries will be in Ontario and Quebec, with a few scattered over the other parts of the country.

If you investigate the free enterprise approach to the location of industries you will note that businessmen try to locate industries close to a supply of raw material. Where do these raw materials exist in the country? They exist in the prairie provinces and British Columbia. There is a great source of cheap hydrocarbons on the prairies. In fact there are tremendous quantities of hydrocarbons that are being flared because there are no industries available to use them. The country, and the people in the west, are crying aloud for new industry, but they are not going to get it under the new department of industry which is to be set up. The speech from the throne says:

> It will be proposed that, within the new department, there will be established an area development agency. This agency will work with the provincial governments and other organizations to co-ordinate programs for parts of the country where, because of chronic unemployment, a special thrust for development is needed.

These industries are not going to be located in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta or British Columbia because in most of those provinces there are not chronic unemployment areas sufficient to justify the expenditure of public funds for new industries. The policy of putting these industries in the chronic unemployment areas is a trick or a method to be used by the government in order to locate industries in the east. Instead of having decentralization of industry and having industries spread all over western and eastern Canada, industries are to be located in Ontario and Quebec.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but his time has expired.

Mr. Kindt: May I just make one concluding remark, and it is this. I notice nothing whatever said in the speech from the throne about the development of the north and this, I claim, is one of the greatest mistakes so far made by this government.

Mr. M. J. Moreau (York-Scarborough): I would like to offer my congratulations to you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, on your election to high office, and I also wish to compliment the mover and seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. Like them I am also a new member in the house, and I hope my maiden speech will approach the standards they have set for debate in this chamber.

The recent election campaign really began in my riding of York-Scarborough when the right hon. Prime Minister made his now historic stand on defence. The Scarborough speech, as it became known, was made at my nomination meeting on January 12, and it played a large part in precipitating the defeat of the last government. For this I believe most Canadians will be eternally grateful, and I would like to extend my thanks to the Prime Minister on his choice of location for that speech.

As most hon. members know, my riding is the most populous in Canada. For this reason I feel I bear a heavier responsibility than most in adequately representing, or attempting to represent, nearly 300,000 people. As a matter of fact quite a number of hon. members now sitting in the house are electors in my riding.

Although York-Scarborough is considered a dormitory by many, it is also a riding with many industries, farms and other varying interests. Its 163,000 electors represent a cross section of our country. Indeed most of them, like myself, are recent immigrants to the area, the largest number having migrated to the riding during the past 10 years. They come from every part of Canada and from many parts of the world, but while they have varying backgrounds and face many different problems they all share one common problem.

We in York-Scarborough live in a rapidly expanding suburban riding and face great difficulty in providing the new schools, hospitals and other municipal services so urgently needed. We know that municipal taxation cannot provide the necessary funds quickly enough. In particular, since 1956 the costs and difficulties of municipal borrowing have been crippling the development of our communities. Indeed, the foreign currency debt of Canadian municipalities is very unevenly distributed in Canada, and in fact three quarters of this debt presently outstanding has been incurred by seven urban centres in Canada, of which Toronto is one. The bulk of this foreign debt was incurred since 1956 and has added considerably to our currency exchange difficulties of recent years. I mention these facts to indicate that the creation of a municipal development and loan fund is long overdue, and it was with great pleasure that I heard the proposal to create such a fund in the speech from the throne.

I also heard with pleasure the announcement of a commission to undertake the redistribution of our electoral boundaries. This is a matter of prime concern to many hon. members from urban ridings, but it is of particular importance to the electors in my riding. Redistribution has been an election issue in York-Scarborough since 1957. Indeed my predecessor made it one of his prime election issues in all four campaigns since that time. Unfortunately he apparently was unable to get his government to give the matter very high priority, because nothing concrete was done. Meanwhile the riding keeps growing, and the problems of representing this large group of electors become more difficult, not to mention the difficulties of campaigning and the expenses involved in conducting an election campaign.

I could draw comparisons with ridings where constitutional guarantees exist, to which I am not opposed; but the inequities of representation even in the province of Ontario are considerable. The riding of Bruce, with a population of 30,000, has the same numerical representation in this house as my riding with a population of almost 300,000 people. At this rate, using 30,000 as the yardstick, my riding should have elected at least nine members, certainly sufficient to have corrected the minority situation which exists in the house. In this respect perhaps we can see a clue to the difficulties my predecessor encountered in achieving any results from his government on this matter.

I might add that the electors of my riding saw fit to give me the largest total vote recorded in Canadian history, really a result of the large size of the riding, and it is an achievement I would not care to repeat. I am sure my wishes are shared by many hon. members when I say I hope the government will proceed with all speed to introduce legislation regarding the appointment of a commission to redraw our electoral boundaries. I was further heartened yesterday when, in debate, the Prime Minister reaffirmed the government's intention to proceed quickly in this matter.

(Translation):

I was happy to learn also from His Excellency, in the speech from the throne, that the government intends to institute a royal commission to examine the problems of bilingualism and biculturalism in Canada. I feel that a solution has to be found for those problems; otherwise, nothing worth while can be accomplished in our country. National unity is a prerequisite to the solution of the other problems which we have to face at this time on the home front.

In my opinion, in the speech he made yesterday, the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) acknowledged that too small a number of English speaking Canadians understand those problems.

I should like to point out also that I am in favour of the adoption of a distinctive flag. In the course of my work and of my travels in practically every corner of this country, I noticed that most Canadians share my views in this connection.

(Text):

Although no definite policies were announced in the speech from the throne regarding the development of our national resources, I was encouraged by the fact that the subject did merit mention. As a mining engineer, and realizing the importance of the resource industries to our future growth and prosperity, I was naturally most interested in the government's plans in this area. I notice, too, a large number of questions on the order paper dealing with gold production, mainly from the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette). I hope the government is giving consideration to revising the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act. The very name of this act has lost all significance, in that it indicates that an emergency has existed since 1948. This assistance, in my opinion, should formally be given some permanence in order that the communities involved can make longer range plans for their own development.

I believe also, Mr. Speaker, that some consideration should be given to changing the way in which the assistance is given. At the present time we are paying subsidies based on production costs and therefore penalizing our most efficient producers. It is my belief that an increase in the basic price of newly mined gold in Canada would be a more effective way of giving assistance to that industry. It would encourage efficiency of production and would stimulate much new production of gold in Canada. We can, I am sure, from increased corporate and individual income taxes justify such an increased basic price with no loss to the treasury, not to mention the increased employment which would result from increased production and the improvement of our currency exchange position through production being readily convertible to United States dollars.

There is also, Mr. Speaker, the matter of regulations governing the development of resources on Indian reservations. These regulations, while perhaps designed to protect the interests of the Indians, have so limited exploration on Indian reservations as to have had, in my opinion, the reverse effect. These and other matters dealing with resources development will, I am sure, be given some consideration by the government. I am looking forward to an opportunity to discuss these matters more fully in the future.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I should like to express my pleasure at the content of the speech from the throne. It included practically everything promised in my campaign literature. It was also my great pleasure, as a newly elected member, to be given the opportunity to occupy my seat in this chamber so soon after the election. This is in quite startling contrast to what happened in the last parliament.

(Translation):

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm.

(Text):

Some hon. Members: One o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall I call it one o'clock?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, as it is not one o'clock—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I do now leave the chair.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I think in the particular circumstances you should call it one o'clock, but I would hope that hon. members who are on the list to speak would be available.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): My first words are to thank the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) for his intervention shortly before one o'clock.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate you on your election to the distinguished place you now occupy in this house. We have all had the opportunity during past years to appreciate your competence, your knowledge and your integrity. We know that the office of Speaker is one of high responsibility. We of the loyal opposition will look to you for protection and guidance. Since you are bilingual, the debates should not go beyond the limits permitted by the rules or by the need for honest and frank discussion.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased also to congratulate the hon. member for Stormont (Mr. Lamoureux), who now holds the office of Deputy Speaker. I extend to him my best wishes and sincere congratulations.

We know, Mr. Speaker, that you will prove equal to the task, and we are happy to congratulate you upon your appointment to that high office.

(Text):

We should not become so immersed in the problems of government as to forget what made yesterday. Our party, sitting in opposition, which in itself is an institution in accordance with British parliamentary practice, is favoured by the fact that its great leader has been re-elected. There is no doubt that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), even though as prime minister he encountered the most difficult years in the history of our country, performed an excellent job. His name is linked with many important reforms and his fierce struggle during the political campaigns is always, for us, an incentive to fight for the good cause. My right hon. friend had to fight against three powerful parties as well as against foreign capital. He led us almost to victory once again, and nobody doubts that if the campaign had lasted one more week he would still be the prime minister of this country. He is a great leader, and we are proud and fortunate to serve under him.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, the head of the present government (Mr. Pearson), made a poor showing during the last electoral campaign. He contradicted himself from beginning to end on the question of nuclear arms. Indeed, according to La Presse of March 20, 1963, the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville stated at a meeting which was attended by the distinguished member for Hull (Mr. Caron):

> The premier of Quebec will soon become the prime minister of Canada.

Mr. Caron: That is not what was said.

[Mr. Pigeon.]

Mr. Pigeon: That is what newspapers like Le Devoir and La Presse reported. I would not want the member for Hull to insult newspapermen. I know he has a great deal of consideration for them.

Mr. Speaker, I should now like to list the reasons of our defeat.

(1) There was an inflow of U.S. dollars to ensure that Canada would become an American satellite.

(2) Numerous promises were made.

(3) Support was given by Quebec.

After the election, American finance was used to try to buy off several members of parliament.

In Le Devoir of May 14, 1963, the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Chapdelaine) is reported as saying during a caucus in Ottawa, that $50,000 in American funds were offered to him as the price of his open support of the Liberal party. And what about the six Social Credit members?

The premier of Newfoundland (Mr. Smallwood) and the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) who spent some time in Nassau after the election, could shed some light on this matter.

I would recommend that the government convene immediately the committee on privileges and elections to clear up this smelly business and to punish those who have tried to bribe members of the parliament of Canada.

A great deal of publicity was given to the number of Quebec members who were appointed to the cabinet.

Quantity does not mean quality.

I have here an excerpt from the newspaper Le Devoir of April 23, 1963, which I quote:

> Has Mr. Pearson chosen the most dynamic elements of his Quebec deputation? One feels that there was a compromise. On the one hand, the old guard: Messrs. Lionel Chevrier (whose selection was a must), Azellus Denis and Jean-Paul Deschatelets (the least that can be said about them being that their selection was not a must), as well as Mr. Lucien Cardin, who replaces Mr. Sevigny.
>
> On the other hand, the newcomers: Mr. Maurice Lamontagne to a position of honour—probably temporary—but not of influence; Mr. Guy Favreau to immigration, and Mr. Rene Tremblay, without portfolio.
>
> Those whose absence is disappointing but can be easily explained: Messrs. Maurice Sauve and Jean-Luc Pepin—the former because he had become the symbol of the new frontier and was sacrificed to the backbenchers, the latter because he has just arrived.
>
> In short, the "young" team is relegated to the bottom of the ladder. Make way for the good old Liberal stalwarts.
>
> For the moment, therefore, we are gaining in number but very little in quality and in influence.

And I am quoting from the April 27, 1963 issue of the newspaper La Presse:

> But what about his actions?

That is the question. If we were right now to judge Mr. Pearson on the appointments he has just made to the ministry, we would have to infer that he has not understood a great deal about the aspirations of the French Canadian people in 1963. He has behaved like a sort of immature Mackenzie King, who has made some progress in arithmetic but very little in sociology—

And the article goes on to say:

Who has been appointed at the head of the departments of Finance, of Defence, of Trade and Commerce, of Industry, and of Defence Production? Messrs. Gordon, Hellyer, Sharp and Drury.

By keeping his French Canadian collaborators out of the departments which have to do with the economy of the country Mr. Pearson is confirming once more the legend regarding our incompetence in such matters, even though the Quebec voters have given three economists to his party: Messrs. Maurice Lamontagne, Rene Tremblay and Maurice Sauve. But Mr. Lamontagne will deal with biculturalism, Mr. Tremblay with agriculture, and Mr. Sauve . . . with nothing at all, since the high efficiency and the genius-like intelligence of Messrs. Azellus Denis and Jean Paul Deschatelets were given preference over him. Such a selection obviously made automatic the choice of departments given to them; it is a well-known fact that the Post Office and Public Works Departments have more to do with patronage than any other field of human knowledge—

We must therefore bow to the obvious fact: Mr. Pearson has not understood that since Mackenzie King's time, French Canada has changed.

Mr. Speaker, may I read an excerpt of the speech made in this house by the hon. member for Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Sauve) at the end of the last session and in which we find comments which would prove our newspapermen right. This is what the hon. member said on December 18, as can be seen on page 2776 of the official record:

We have often given our mass support to this or that party which has made up the government, but we have given to our partners, to the Anglo-Saxon majority, the right to govern. We have nearly always obtained unimportant portfolios.

Mr. Speaker, with regard to the nomination of French speaking parliamentary secretaries, we notice that their number is very small, in fact there are only three of them. Moreover, there is very little competence to be found among them, except for the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron), who is well known to me and who was a very active member when he was in the opposition. I want to tell him that I am happy about his nomination as whip of his party and parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister, though I think that the people of Hull would certainly have preferred to see him accede to the post of minister of labour, because when he was sitting on the opposition benches, he was the official spokesman of his party on matters pertaining to the Department of Labour. I tender my best wishes to him in his new office and in the discharge of his great responsibilities.

During the last campaign, Mr. Lesage had Mr. Pearson elected in Ottawa so that Quebec might obtain part of its taxation powers, and thus be able to look after its cultural, economic and educational needs. But I am very much afraid that the 12 months of Mr. Lesage's ultimatum are not worth much more than the 60 days of decision announced by the Prime Minister.

The hon. member for Outremont-St. Jean (Mr. Lamontagne) is reported to have refused the finance portfolio. In this regard, I quote the following from La Presse of May 20, 1963:

It will be remembered that just before the election, the premier of Quebec requested from Ottawa a revision of the tax structure (in particular 25 per cent of the personal income tax) as a condition for his support of Mr. Pearson.

Mr. Pearson, who no doubt owes his victory to that support, is said to have trouble keeping his word.

Thus, according to well informed sources, Mr. Maurice Lamontagne has refused the finance portfolio Mr. Pearson intended to give him.

Though the member for Outremont-St. Jean felt qualified for such an appointment, he was not prepared to be the scapegoat with regard to Quebec.

In a telephone interview from his home last night, Mr. Lamontagne refused to deny or confirm the information above and simply declared that he had no comment.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Outremont-St. Jean refused to assume responsibilities because he did not want to return to the provinces, particularly the province of Quebec, their sources of revenue.

The hon. member for Outremont-St. Jean should immediately tender his resignation.

The speech from the throne is for neo-federalism. There is no mention of a decentralization of the powers of taxation. The right hon. Prime Minister is not even aware of Mr. Lesage's ultimatum. The speech of the throne, in my opinion, is essentially a document of centralization.

My fears are well founded if we consider that the hon. member for Outremont-St. Jean, who wrote "Fédéralisme canadien" in 1954, is responsible as President of the Privy Council, for federal-provincial relations, public administration matters and the Canadian economic council.

This is what Mr. Lamontagne wrote in his book:

In short, the right recognized to the provinces by the constitution to use direct taxes is illusory to a very great extent, especially if the federal government is required to perform its duties of ensuring economic stability.

The following is to be found on page 264 of the same book:

Therefore, it seems that the subsidies paid by the central government to the provinces are inevitable at the present time and are firmly established in our political tradition. The system of fiscal arrangements designed to answer the problem of the provinces' financial requirements offers a first solution based on federal grants.

Those quotations reveal a great deal of the present government's intentions respecting the new direction to be given to the confederation and its frequent consultations with the provinces. No mention is made in the speech from the throne of constitutional reforms, and even less in the way of a greater degree of decentralization.

Mr. Speaker, the centralization of revenue sources by Ottawa is the main reason for the separatist movement which exists today.

Mr. Lesage and the present leader of the federal government were those mainly responsible for centralization a few years ago, on the advice of the hon. member for Outremont-St. Jean. Today, Mr. Lesage is backing out and is becoming an autonomist. I am not blaming him, but I shall question his sincerity towards the province of Quebec as long as he does nothing to force Ottawa to beat a retreat as a Quebec premier did before. Mr. Lesage has not even delivered his ultimatum in writing to Ottawa. Is he being sincere, Mr. Speaker?

The premier of Quebec showed weakness in his demands, that is in asking for the return of 25 per cent of the personal and corporation income tax and 100 per cent of the succession duties.

He should insist upon 100 per cent of the personal and corporation income tax. And should Ottawa refuse to give in, let Mr. Lesage take steps. Then we shall know how sincere he is.

In addition, Mr. Lesage should demand:

1. That the federal government withdraw from joint programs;

2. That censure at the C.B.C. come under the government of the province of Quebec;

3. That the federal government withdraw from the field of education;

4. That Indian affairs and those of the Eskimos of new Quebec come solely under the administration of the province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, confederation is now in danger.

Here are, for instance, the amounts collected in Quebec by the federal government in 1961-62 as direct taxes only.

Personal income tax	$469,827,176
Corporation income tax	405,352,708
Non-resident income tax	35,540,690
Estate tax	14,991,904
Total	$925,722,478

By comparison, let us note that during the same period the total revenue of the Quebec government from direct and indirect taxes was only $754,107,000. So, the amount paid each year to Ottawa in taxes is larger than the total revenue of the Quebec government.

At present, Mr. Speaker, the province of Quebec collects 17 per cent of the personal income tax and less than 11 per cent of the corporation income tax. As far as the estate tax is concerned, Quebec collects about 50 per cent.

Not only the province of Quebec, but every province in the confederation is sinking into debts.

For instance, the province of Quebec, these last few years, has imposed 12 new taxes to meet its needs. First of all, the Quebec taxpayers are bearing a total debt of about $6 billion, if we add up the liabilities of the province, of the municipalities and of the school boards. Second, the direct and indirect debt of the Quebec government will then amount to $3,700 million, that is close to $4 billion. The average per capita debt in Quebec amounts to $675.

For the 1963-64 fiscal year, the Quebec government forecasts a $146 million deficit.

Here is the progression of the deficits:

1957-58: no deficit, but rather a surplus of $273,014;
1958-59: no deficit, a surplus of $373,738;
1959-60: deficit of $303,147;
1960-61: deficit of $108 million;
1961-62: deficit of $111 million;
1962-63: deficit of $183 million.

And the progression of borrowings is also getting larger:

1957-58: none;
1958-59: none;
1959-60: $25 million;
1960-61: $110 million;
1961-62: $150 million;
1962-63: $225 million.

For instance, Mr. Speaker, the Montreal Catholic school board cost the taxpayers some $54 million in 1961-62.

The debt is getting larger at the rate of $10 million each year.

Just for the school board of the city of Montreal—and the same is true of all the school boards in the province of Quebec which are threatened with bankruptcy—the increase in the debenture debt of the municipalities and the school boards for 1962-63, in the province of Quebec, adds up to the colossal amount of $500 million.

Needless to add, Mr. Speaker, that the provincial farm credit fund is empty. Sometimes, the highway department employees do not get their pay. Several classical colleges in the province of Quebec are seeking university charters; such is the case of the Loyola College, the Séminaire de Trois-Rivières and the Collège Sainte-Marie.

Everybody is hard pressed in the province of Quebec, for the provincial government has a responsibility and a mandate to fulfil as regards the cultural and educational requirements of the province. But the federal government had centralized all taxation powers. And that is due to ingenuity of the hon. member for Outremont-St. Jean.

Mr. Speaker, under the Conservative government, we had started this decentralization. During the fiscal year ended March 31, 1963, Quebec received subsidies in the amount of some $517 million while in 1957, under a government of which Mr. Lesage himself was a member, Quebec received only $177 million.

Our government raised from 10 to 20 per cent the deductible portion of the federal income tax for provincial purposes. Today, the province of Quebec collects up to 16 per cent. We wanted to keep on with that decentralization, but with the help of the Social Crediters, Mr. Speaker, the Liberals defeated us and prevented us from going ahead and giving back to the provinces more taxation powers. Mr. Speaker, the Quebec government wants to develop and to take care of the economical, educational and cultural needs of the province. Quebec wants to become a giant within confederation, to save Canada from American annexation.

I am not in favour for a moment of convening of the states-general to review the Canadian constitution.

Ottawa should start proving its good faith and retire from the taxation field which is, in fact, the responsibility of the provinces. Then we could convene the states-general to adapt the constitution to our contemporary life and extend the French fact from coast to coast. Let us first of all come back to the basic principles of Sir John Macdonald and Sir Georges Étienne Cartier. Otherwise, Quebec will separate itself from confederation and we shall, in 1967, witness the disintegration of the Canadian confederation.

I shall conclude, Mr. Speaker, by quoting from an article published in the local papers of Joliette city and its region, by the "Société Saint-Jean-Baptiste du Diocèse de Joliette Inc." I take pleasure in reading out that article published on February 27, 1963 and entitled:

> Confederation—The various currents of opinion which are now noticed in Quebec show an evident and generalized discontent among the population. The various positions expressed show the need of reforming the system established in 1867.
>
> We believe that those responsible for Canadian policy will definitely have to undertake an early study of our present constitution in order to give it a new direction.
>
> It is obvious that the present state of affairs does not satisfy anybody now. The statements of French Canadian political leaders and the sprouting of numerous independence movements among our population are an indisputable sign of discontent at this time.
>
> We therefore invite the people to make use of its influence to convince the political leaders of the need for undertaking a complete study of the present problems and to bring about some solution which, while observing the fundamental rights of the various communities, will satisfy their respective aspirations and allow them to develop in harmony and good will.
>
> It is signed:
>
> "La Société Saint-Jean-Baptiste du Diocèse de Joliette Inc.; René Charette, chief secretary."

Mr. Speaker, in concluding, I hope the hon. member for Outremont-St. Jean will write another book, and this time give a fair deal to the provinces so as to redress the bad service he rendered confederation. And I say, Mr. Speaker, that, following the advice they got from the hon. member for Outremont-St. Jean, those who sit on the other side of the house are responsible for the conflict and the turmoil of ideas which now exist in Canada, and more particularly in French speaking Canada. That is why I urge this government to reverse steam and go on with the decentralization in order to save Canadian confederation.

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I sincerely regret that the hon. member who resumed his seat did not make a similar contribution some three months ago when he was sitting on the government side.

Mr. Pigeon: Read Hansard.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Mount Royal (Mr. Macnaughton) on his appointment to the high office of Speaker of this House of Commons and I wish to congratulate you also for having been appointed Deputy Speaker.

I am also pleased to sincerely congratulate the hon. member who moved the address in reply to the speech from the throne. She did it in a way that was at once elegant, charming and convincing.

I also congratulate the member who seconded the address in reply, the hon. member for Lotbiniere (Mr. Choquette), who is not at his place this afternoon but who publicly thanked before this house, when he made his speech last week, the member for Villeneuve and the member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) for helping him so much in the last federal election. The hon. member meant that as a joke, I am sure, because he knew very well that what contributed the most to his election in Lotbiniere—a constituency where perhaps a greater proportion of the people are fighting against poverty than is the case in any other in the province of Quebec—was the distribution in the riding of funds coming I do not know where from, but apparently not from the province of Quebec because that province is not that far ahead financially, and especially the distribution of Quebec social allowances. The whole Quebec electoral machine was at work and the Liberal members from Quebec are aware that all sorts of allowances, especially social allowances were very generously distributed during the election campaign by the inspectors of colonization, the inspectors of all departments who paid amounts of $50, $60 and $75 to needy families in those ridings.

We have had examples of that from the Gaspe peninsula, from the riding of Lotbiniere, precisely the one represented by the hon. member who seconded the address in reply to the speech from the throne.

Mr. Speaker, all that meddling and political scheming leads people to think like the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Kindt), in Alberta, did this morning just before lunch, in attacking the Social Credit party as if we were in power. According to him, the Social Crediters are running the affairs of the state. He reminded us, among other things, that Hon. William Aberhart, the only Social Credit premier in Canada, was promising, during the years 1933 and 1935, a monthly dividend of $25 a month. The hon. member for Macleod was amazed that such a distribution had not been made in 1936 or in 1938, under the Aberhart administration, or was not even being made today.

He added a few words about Social Credit lies, saying that we lied shamelessly, that we did not know what we were preaching or that we were preaching something we did not understand.

I have here the report submitted in 1939 by the banking and commerce parliamentary committee. I quote from that report:

(Text):

Mr. Graham Towers, the governor of the Bank of Canada, was on the stand giving evidence and the members of the committee questioned him as follows:

Q. I understand you say they—

Referring to the banks.

—could not loan what did not belong to them. Mr. Towers: The banks cannot, of course, loan the money of their depositors . . . what the depositors do with these savings is something quite beyond the control of the banks. (page 455)

The hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Kindt) should go to that book and look into it so he might grasp something from it if he could.

Q. So that if they have got up to the point where they have got bank deposits to lend?

Mr. Towers: Well, they do not lend their deposits of course. (page 398)

Q. But there is no question about it that the banks do create that medium of exchange?

Mr. Towers: That is right. That is what they are there for . . . That is banking business, just in the same way a steel plant makes steel. (page 287)

The manufacturing process consists of making a pen and ink or typewritten entry on a card or in a book. That is all. (pages 76 and 238)

This is not an answer by a Social Crediter, it is an answer by Graham Towers, the former governor of the Bank of Canada.

Q. Ninety five per cent of all our volume of business is being done with what we call exchange of bank deposits—that is simply bookkeeping entries in banks against which people write cheques?

Mr. Towers: I think that is a fair statement. (page 233)

Q. . . . when the government delivers a $1,000 bond to the bank, what does the bank use to purchase it with? Is that the creation of additional money?

Mr. Towers: It is the creation of additional money. (page 113)

Q. . . . in other words, when a $1 million worth of bonds is presented to the bank, a million dollars of new money or the equivalent is created?

Mr. Towers: Again assuming that there is no decrease in its other investments or loans.

Q. I mean at the time, at the moment?

Mr. Towers: Yes.

Q. It is a fact that a million dollars of new money is created?

Mr. Towers: That is right.

Q. Yes, now the same thing holds true when a municipality or the province goes to a bank?

Mr. Towers: Or an individual borrower.

Here is perhaps the most important and significant question of all:

Q. Would you admit that anything physically possible and desirable can be made financially possible?

Mr. Towers: Certainly. (page 771)

Q. Will you tell me why a government with power to create money should give that power away to a private monopoly and then borrow that which parliament can create itself, back at interest, to the point of national bankruptcy?

Mr. Towers: ...Now, if parliament wants to change the form of operating the banking system, then certainly that is within the power of parliament. (page 394)

Those are the answers given by Graham Towers.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, those are replies to the questions which several candidates asked the people during the electoral campaign. They were reported on television, for instance, and on the radio—as did the member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville (Mr. Dupuis)—thus leading the public to believe that the Social Credit party would print money inconsiderately and without restraint and that we would flood Canada with currency as was the case in Germany in 1923 and 1924.

There was never any Social Credit party in Germany. If the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville is honest, he will admit that Social Credit never existed outside of Canada. That is a fact, but it does not mean that it will not expand past our frontiers in the future.

Thus, the problems which face us at this time and which are mentioned in the speech from the throne—to which I will come back in a few minutes—those situations and problems to which there are no solutions, as I say, are due to a financial system which has grown fatter on its deathbed than when it was born.

Mr. Speaker, all kinds of things were made up in the province of Quebec. My Liberal friends in that province bought full pages in La Presse, Le Devoir and other large newspapers in the province of Quebec to insinuate, for example, that Social Credit would create misery and inflation in Canada, whereas inflation is the result of an administration such as the present one.

When a municipal council borrows $300,000 or $3,000,000 to build a city hall, at a yearly interest rate of 5 per cent for a period of 20 years, the taxpayers have to pay back $600,000 for a $300,000 loan and $6 million for a $3 million loan. The $300,000 city hall will never be worth $600,000; on the contrary, it will be worth less and less as the years go by. But the people will still have to pay $600,000. That is true inflation. That is the kind of administration that the Conservatives and the Liberals have given us in turn.

Mr. Speaker, I will now deal with the speech from the throne, which talks glibly about biculturalism, the co-existence of the two great nations in Canada, the French and the Anglo-Saxon nations.

On the day parliament opened, together with our colleagues from all corners of the house we attended the splendid reception offered to the representative of Her Majesty.

The guard of honour and what was presumably its own brass band, faced the parliament buildings. His Excellency the Governor General—who, I trust, will very soon recover—was represented by an Administrator, the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court. We witnessed an impressive state pageant, truly beautiful and imposing. We welcomed Her Majesty's representative with the hymn "God Save the Queen", and I think this was as it should have been.

However, I wonder why we did not also hear the strains of "O, Canada"?

If, as we are told, it is essential that our two cultures should co-exist in Canada, we from Quebec have absolutely no objection to the "God Save the Queen"; but we feel that on such an occasion we should also have heard "O Canada", so dear to the heart of all Canadians, our national anthem.

Mr. Speaker, we also did note the absence —and I can just see the hon. member for Mercier (Mr. Boulanger), who is always somewhat nervous in similar circumstances —and this was so much the case when he heard "O Canada" being sung that he could not but smile.

Why did we not have a distinctive national flag at that time? I remember that in 1956-57, when the Conservatives had taken over, we expected to have a distinctive national flag. I hope that during all those years in the opposition the Liberals had the opportunity of studying the feasibility of giving Canada a distinctive national flag and a national anthem.

During the month of February, I had the privilege, right at the start of the election campaign, of visiting a country which is part of the British commonwealth of nations. I went to Jamaica. Now the first gesture of the Jamaican government when that country became independent in August 1962, was to adopt an authentic national anthem for Jamaica, as well as a distinctive national Jamaican flag. So the first gesture of a small country, practically trailing behind all other commonwealth countries, was to adopt its own flag and anthem, without a single emblem, either English, or French, or Spanish, without any outward sign of assimilation.

Now, we are asking for the same thing in Canada. We do not want a flag with a French emblem. As far as France is concerned, we have great respect for that country, in the same way as we respect England. But, we are first and foremost, Canadians. We want, in the first instance, Canadians to understand each other. We are not separatists. We want a Canada where people may understand one another, where Canadians would be able to speak to each other—a thing which is but rarely found here, in spite of all the election shenanigans we witnessed on April 8 last.

Mr. Speaker, another point to which I want to call the attention of all hon. members, whether they be French or English speaking, is that when we use the parliamentary telephone for a long distance call, nine times out of ten, we are told: "I'm sorry, I do not speak French. Would you like a French operator?" That happens nine times out of ten. I do not care in the least whether the operator's name is Bradshaw, MacDonald, Choquette or Dupuis as long as she is able to talk to me in my own language.

I think we should start by bringing about a respect of our country's dual culture within the parliamentary framework—not because we bear a grudge against those who do not know French, but because we want to be up to date in our demands with regard to the respect due to the two elements of Canada, which should be placed on an equal footing.

Mr. Speaker, the speech from the throne mentioned many fine things, serious and elaborate, which we mentioned many times ourselves in this house. I see, for instance, the following words in the speech from the throne, and I quote:

> These are times that test old virtues. They are times that open up new opportunities. Familiar ways of thought and action are becoming less certain guides.

The familiar ways of thought are personified by the economists of the Liberal party.

> The familiar ways of thought and action are becoming less certain guides.

We are not certain anymore.

> Many old paths are no longer open to us. The task before us is to seek out with wisdom and imagination—

Where will they take that imagination, since they have had none for the past 50 or 75 years? Is it with the kind of imagination they displayed in the province of Quebec during the last election that they will make us believe they are serious and sincere, when they say that those new paths will lead us surely forward?

What are those new paths? Is it the moon, the planet Mars or some space system? I do not know. Nothing definite, nothing factual.

They talk about new paths while we have been saying ourselves in the province of Quebec for the last 20 years, and also across Canada, that the present old finance system can only lead to complete and total failure. That failure, the previous government did not want to face it and if this government faces it without taking drastic measures to bring the finance system to reason in Canada, it will soon be the end of the road for our staggering democracy. And as long as they keep going over the same path, it will be a huge and total failure. And later on, it is said:

> But they depend on our overcoming serious problems. It is only with courage and perseverance and hard work that we will achieve the better life that is within our power, for ourselves and for our children.

Which Canadians are lacking courage and perseverance? Which Canadians have refused to work for the development and progress of our national inheritance? I think I have a right to say that those who lacked courage are the representatives of the people in the federal government, and also the representatives of the people in the federal parliament have lacked perseverance. And I think that the governments which succeeded each other since confederation have failed to work with zeal.

> Our progress is the work of all the people.

At last, here is a true fact.

> The determination of my ministers is that the government through its policies will contribute the leadership, the purpose, the decision that are its responsibilities to the people.

The people have been waiting for a long time and are more and more anxious. For a long time, the electors have been looked after only at election time and in order to juggle the popular vote, all that is done is to try and make them believe that the government in power is the one which received a mandate from the nation, when in fact, the votes of the people are obtained through fear, under threat, under the threat of losing their jobs or their pensions, and it happened in Canada on April 8 last. This is a sharp contrast with the fine wording of the speech from the throne.

Mr. Speaker, a great many matters are mentioned in the speech from the throne, but no details are given. When the government states for instance, that:

> It will foster the spirit of co-operative federalism, fully respecting the rights of the provinces while safeguarding and extending the equality of opportunity which properly belongs to all Canadians in all parts of our country. In these purposes, as in others, my ministers will seek frequent consultation with the governments of the provinces.

We are in favour of respecting the rights of the provinces, but let not the federal government assume alone the right to determine the needs of the provinces without consulting them. While listening earlier to the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon), I was thinking that they should have initiated those consultations themselves since they were in power from 1957.

> In particular, my ministers will strive to lessen international tensions and halt the arms race by seeking measures of controlled disarmament, including a treaty to end nuclear tests under reasonable safeguards.
>
> For this purpose, the armed forces of Canada should have available the modern weapons necessary to perform effectively the defensive tasks which Canada has undertaken in the alliance.

Mr. Speaker, that is a bit steep.

An hon. Member: That is a good one.

Mr. Caouette: It certainly is. On the one hand, we must strive to lessen tensions and on the other hand we must arm.

Mr. Speaker, the amendment moved by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) deals with nuclear weapons. We in the province of Quebec, together with other Canadians across the country, have taken a stand in that regard. We have stated our opposition to armaments and war, and I will tell you why.

We do not believe in the possibility of nuclear war any more than we believe in the possible use of bacteriological gases such as those which were used in the years 1914-18. As soon as the Russians, the British and the Germans realized that the winds could turn and push the gases back to their senders they met and decided: "Let us not use gas warfare, it is too dangerous. We can throw gases which may come back in our own face and then we may turn out to be the loser." The same situation would develop as far as nuclear warfare is concerned.

But nuclear weapon manufacturers are interested in producing such weapons. In my opinion, instead of following the path of destruction, the Canadian government should play the part of a peacemaker and invite all the nations of the world, including Russia, to promote peace and to guarantee the security and freedom of men, putting nuclear power at the service of men, instead of preparing it for the annihilation of humanity. That simply is the position we have adopted in defining our aims and our ideal in Canada and in Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, when I had the privilege of visiting Jamaica, a small and poor country where there is extreme poverty, I noticed that people in that country were not asking at all for nuclear weapons or atomic bombs but quite contrary they needed money that we now appropriate for atomic warfare. That money would help them to buy bread, butter, clothes and houses because they too are entitled to live as men, as creatures of God. And if our country undertook to do that it would give an example of true peace and of unity in the brotherhood of nations and that can become a reality provided we act in good faith.

Mr. Speaker, the speech from the throne also deals with industrial expansion. Now, I come from an industrial area, the mining area of Quebec where there are gold, copper and zinc mines. There are also to be found vast forests and large farms. But the economy of the area, and more particularly that of the counties of Villeneuve, Chapleau and part of Temiscamingue, is based on mining.

Our area has a great number of mining prospects and it would only be delighted to increase their development. The prospectors could make more discoveries, and the industrialists could set up more mills; should the government decide immediately to raise by $10 an ounce the price for Canadian gold, we would see a great number of new mining companies spring up in our area. Thousands of people would thus find profitable employment, while thousands of others would continue to manufacture other products in that area, which has been practically undeveloped so far.

I would also suggest that the government grant a yearly increase of 3 per cent to new production of gold. Such a step would revive the economical life of our area, especially in the riding of Villeneuve, and nobody would suffer from it. Moreover, the setting up of these new mining companies in our area would bring additional revenue to the government and would help to create more jobs for the people who are now loafing in certain towns, in the northwestern part of the province of Quebec, and throughout the province.

It is beyond doubt that such a policy would bring about employment opportunities, and we would thus contribute to the revival of the economic life of our area and, indirectly, to the improvement of the whole Canadian economy.

The same suggestion could apply to the Elliot Lake district where hundreds of houses, now empty, had to be taken over by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. The people who bought those houses five, six or seven years ago have lost all their life's savings. Citizens are idle in an area where it would be possible to set up new industries or promote the re-opening of mines which are already shut down, by signing agreements or contracts with the United States, England or other countries where uranium could be used, just like copper and zinc are being used today to bring about new production opportunities in our country.

Mr. Speaker, the speech from the throne does not contain any definite statement on the setting up of a department of industry. What will be the functions of such a department? What will it promote? Will it set up an organization to which industry can look for advice? Industry is ready to do everything it can to increase production.

As the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson), our leader, mentioned last night, Mr. G. L. Barber, an economist, and professor at the University of Manitoba, spoke to the point when he said that the injection of $1 billion into the Canadian economy would contribute to its recovery and to its continuous development. That theory is not very remote from the policy the Social Crediters have long advocated.

Instead of considering national production on a productive basis or with regard to the potential production, we should consider the whole of the economy of Canada from the point of view of the consumer, for it is the consumer who, after all, will get the whole Canadian industry moving. The consumer who will have sufficient purchasing power to buy the products manufactured for him shall order from industry; industry will be operating and thousands of unemployed will become employees who will contribute to the development of our common inheritance and who will help to establish peace, justice, security and abundance for each and everyone of us.

[Mr. Caouette.]

(Text):

Mr. Harold Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, this may sound repetitious, but I should like to add my congratulations to yourself upon your unanimous appointment as chairman of committees of the whole and Deputy Speaker of this House of Commons. I am certain you will find the experience most interesting and exhilarating. Through you, sir, may I convey my congratulations to the hon. member for Mount Royal (Mr. Macnaughton) on his appointment to Speaker of this house. I convey these congratulations with a great deal of sincerity because of my association with our present Speaker during the time he was chairman of our public accounts committee. It must have been a most unique experience for the hon. member to be the first opposition member in the history of this house, as far as my knowledge goes, to be appointed chairman of such an important committee. I can say, sir, without any hesitation whatsoever that I think it was the leadership he gave us and the impartiality he showed which made the public accounts committee over the years one of the most interesting, influential and powerful committees ever known in the history of this House of Commons. I know that the impartiality, understanding and compassion he showed in that committee will be carried forward into his honoured position as our Speaker.

Although this may sound a little impertinent or impudent, Mr. Speaker, may I say, in concluding these remarks and anticipating that he will do such a remarkable job that in so doing he will have to find, as experience in this house has already shown, firmness together with impartiality and compassion, otherwise a few individuals may try to take advantage of his compassion and reasonableness.

This leads me to the next subject about which I should like to make a few remarks. I sincerely hope that all the words which have been spoken in this debate will be followed through with action in the appointment of a committee of this House of Commons to make an early study and, I hope, early decision on the standing orders and procedures of this house. Sir, I have had a little experience in parliament, always in opposition, although there is always the hope of a change. Because of that experience I must say that we are 265 directors of the biggest business of this country. Therefore it is without doubt somewhat difficult to work out standing orders and procedures which can cover everything. However, I have no hesitation in saying, even if I may be called an independent thinker and something of a renegade, that we can do a lot more than we have ever done in the past toward expediting the business of the people by some reforms in our procedures and standing orders.

I hope, although this might be considered to be almost rebellious, that in the considerations of this committee—which I hope will be appointed very soon—they will give real study to the problems of expediting the business of the people as well as the necessity of all members having full rights of expression. I hope, sir—and may I say that I am speaking personally; I have not taken it up with the other members of our group—that some way will be found to stop some of the useless repetition that holds us up for days unnecessarily in the house. I hope some method will be found of outlining in detail just what is a question of urgency under the orders of the day. I hope some method will be found whereby those things that belong on the order paper will be put on the order paper, and some method of deciding just how many supplementary questions should be asked on one question under orders of the day.

I also hope, sir, that something will be done toward giving consideration to the appointment of select standing committees of this house. To me, quite bluntly, it has always been, I would say, stupid and asinine to have under our standing orders, as we have under standing order 65, committees of this house composed of 50 or 60 members of whom 10, 15 or 20 shall constitute a quorum. It is my firm conviction that serious consideration should be given to some revamping of standing order 65 in order that we may have not only committees which work efficiently but committees with as close to full attendance as possible, and not attendance just once in a while when decisions are made—which has happened in the past—when it comes to a vote, by members who were never in the committee when the data, information and facts were before the committee. These, sir, are some of the things which I believe should be considered. If considered properly and efficiently and decided upon by the members of this house in a responsible way, we can do much to expedite the business of the house and see that we achieve a great deal more efficiency than has been possible in the past.

Since this session opened, Mr. Speaker, I have been most interested in the debate in reply to the speech from the throne. It would be almost amusing, if it were not tragic, to note what has transpired thus far. Why do I say it would be amusing, if it were not tragic? Well, I do not think I have been absent from this chamber for many minutes since the session opened, and we have seen members of Her Majesty's most loyal official opposition rising in their places and challenging the government to consider and act upon problems and policies which they supinely refused to deal with in the six years they were in office, when they had the power to tackle them.

Then, of course, on the other side of the picture we have Her Majesty's government, who in the previous six years sat on this side of the house and raged and railed against the Conservatives when they formed the government about the way in which they answered questions. They said it was undemocratic, impossible, denying the rights of parliament and the rights of members. Hansard is full of such expressions day after day and month after month. In this twenty sixth parliament of Canada we had just got down to orders of the day when we could ask questions and, lo and behold, we found this government giving exactly the same answers that were given in the previous six years by the Conservative cabinet.

Mr. Robichaud: Explain.

Mr. Winch: There is no question about it; just look at Hansard. In all seriousness and sincerity, and not temerity, I say this is the kind of political hypocrisy which makes a sham of parliamentary democracy. What we need, whether we are in opposition or government, is a sense of responsibility and a sense of principle. I have long felt that one of the most important requirements to improving parliamentary democracy is that we do not say in opposition what we are not prepared to do in government.

An hon. Member: Have you tried it?

Mr. Winch: No, sir, I have not yet had the opportunity of trying it, but you may be surprised how soon we may have the opportunity.

Mr. Robichaud: You would be surprised.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Speaker, perhaps at this time the 265 members who make up this House of Commons have greater responsibility than ever before, because for approximately 18 months the business of Canada was brought to a halt. For almost 18 months there was too much rehashing of the previous election and campaigning for the next. There are too many problems which have to be faced—too many decisions which have to be made. It is, therefore, my sincere hope, and I know it is the hope of this group in the House of Commons, that we shall face our responsibility in a proper manner as Canadians elected to do a job first and to be political partisans second. I have already said that I feel a good deal of time has been lost in previous parliaments because of unnecessary and useless repetition. I do not want to be guilty of that myself. Therefore, I do not intend to comment at any length on what is contained in the speech from the throne. The most important aspects of the attitude taken by this group have already been outlined by our leader, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas). All I wish to say is that I find myself in agreement with his general statement that there are a number of proposals in the speech from the throne which could undoubtedly prove of benefit in the long run to the Canadian economy and to the Canadian people provided the legislation itself, when it is brought down, embodies the principles contained in the government's program. We shall therefore have to wait until the legislation is introduced before we are in a position to make specific and detailed comment.

However, much as I agree with long range planning—and such planning has been required for many, many years—I do want to say I was bitterly disappointed that there was not some indication that the government intends to put into effect the immediate measures which are required to handle some of the problems facing Canada. It is all very fine for the Liberals to campaign for one million jobs in five years. It is very fine to have something in the speech from the throne about long range planning through the establishment of councils or boards which will have an impact in years to come, as I hope it will. But, Mr. Speaker, that does not clothe and shelter the half million persons presently unemployed.

I should like to say—and I say this with full knowledge of what I am saying—that I had the privilege of spending 20 years in the parliament of British Columbia and I have now spent 10 years in this House of Commons. But never as in the two months preceding the opening of this house did I have as many visitors or phone calls to my home from people unemployed saying: "For God's sake, Winch, can you get me a job?" Nor did I have so many who were going off unemployment insurance because their payments had run out, or who were already off it. And what could I as an individual member of this house give to those heads of families in need of immediate attention? The Liberals said that they had the answer, and they did not say during the campaign that the answer would be forthcoming three or five years from now. They said they would have the answer when they took office. Mr. Speaker, there is not a thing in the speech from the throne to indicate any action to take care of the immediate problem of the half million unemployed and of those who are in a different category.

That brings me to something else. I do not know what was said by the Liberals across Canada during the campaign, but I do know that in B.C. in general, and in Vancouver in particular, they were interested in the training of our youth, in higher education for our youth. They were interested in seeing that our youth had the opportunity, irrespective of their family income, of getting that education. Yet I can assure you, sir, that each day before I came back to this house I had boys and girls coming to my home who were going into their last year at university, whose parents were not able to pay for that last year and to maintain them. They were themselves unable to obtain employment. Are they to be denied? While the Liberal party said they had the immediate answer in British Columbia, and the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing) said they had the immediate answer in Vancouver, that there would be 10,000 scholarships and the opportunity to take care of these people, the payment of their fees and their maintenance, I find no word of this in the speech from the throne. We have had no indication yet from anyone on the government side of the house as to what is going to be done for those young people in their last year or their second last year at university.

Surely, sir, it is not carping criticism, it is not irresponsibility, for us to draw this to the attention of the government and to ask them when they are going to act and how soon. Because the need is now, not three, four or five years from now. We agree with long range planning, but we do not want people to starve to death and not be able to take advantage of it in, we hope, the not too distant future. In the few days which lie ahead during this debate we hope that we will hear something from the government about the immediate emergency plans for those in need now, both with regard to the unemployed and with regard to education.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in the balance of time at my disposal I want to comment on the subamendment moved by our leader. May I remind you of the wording:

> We regret that Your Excellency's advisers have indicated their intention of acquiring nuclear arms for Canadian forces, thereby lessening the chances for nuclear disarmament and increasing the danger of nuclear war.

Mr. Speaker, this is a matter not only of major concern to every member of the New Democratic party, but also to the people of Canada, and indirectly through this Canadian House of Commons to the people of the world. I had the honour of being a Canadian delegate-observer at the United Nations in 1960. I have followed the speeches at the United Nations by Canadian delegates since 1960. I was a very proud man to hear the representations made in the United Nations by Canadian official spokesmen. I heard them in plenary session and in the No. 1 political committee speaking on subjects such as the cessation of nuclear testing, no expansion of the nuclear club, and general and complete disarmament along the lines laid down by Mr. Wadsworth when he was the United States ambassador, and which, it was suggested, could be accomplished in five or six years. Being so proud of the Canadian stand I would go into the lounge or into the corridors and hear the Afro-Asian delegates say: "You in Canada speak with a forked tongue. You talk this way at the United Nations, you act this way in the disarmament committee in Geneva, but at home you purchase weapons which can only be utilized if they have a nuclear warhead". Mr. Speaker, that was a keen disappointment to me and I maintain a double cross of the people of Canada, because you cannot speak one way outside of Canada and act another way inside Canada. Nor can I see any difference between the preceding government and the present one as regards talking with a forked tongue.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, I cannot accept the statements we have received thus far that decisions have to be made because of previous commitments. I find that what I heard when I attended as a delegate to NATO in 1961 and what I heard from NORAD in no way coincides with the position taken by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer). If I may briefly refer to that, with regard to NORAD it was my understanding from reading the newspapers that the Minister of National Defence said we were going to have nuclear warheads for our Bomarcs in Canada because this was a commitment made by the previous government. If the present government says that it is a commitment, then I cannot understand why on January 9 General John K. Gerhart, commander of the north American air defence system, said that there was no commitment to NORAD that Canada assume nuclear weapons or nuclear warheads.

This morning I had the opportunity of doing a double check to make sure that I had this correct. The Ottawa Journal of January 9 reports General Gerhart as having said:

> Lack of nuclear arms in Canada has not altered NORAD's over-all planning. General Gerhart made his comment while here to inspect the Bomarc and semi-automatic ground environment defence complex which form part of the NORAD set-up. The U.S. army officer stated Canada was not committed to nuclear arms under NORAD and this position was well known when NORAD was formed.

Surely General Gerhart, commander of the North American air defence system, knows what he is talking about. I presume he does. He also said, and this is in quotation marks:

> "Whether we have them here in North Bay or not is not germane to our planning."

On that basis I fail to understand why our Prime Minister, a Nobel peace prize winner, says that under NORAD we are committed to equipping our weapons with nuclear warheads. Moreover, the Bomarc is a defence against the manned bomber. Will he please explain this? I have here the Vancouver Province of January 31 last containing a Washington news service dispatch in which United States defence secretary McNamara makes it very clear that the problem in a future war is not the manned bomber, but the missile. I am not going to quote the article but it is here. I draw the attention of hon. members to the fact that McNamara said this on January 31 last.

Did hon. members read the Globe and Mail this morning? What does secretary of defence McNamara say in appearing before a congressional committee?

> The great problem is that in a missile age we must assume the Soviets will first attack with missiles before their bombers attack and almost certainly among the targets for their missile attack would be our SAGE centres, in which case they would be out of operation before the bombers arrive.
>
> Warning against an intercontinental missile attack comes through huge, powerful radar fences constructed in the far north, in Alaska and Greenland. No accurate western way of shooting down these intercontinental ballistic missiles exists yet.

Here we have Mr. McNamara, as reported in this morning's Globe and Mail, saying that any attack will be a missile attack first. The missile attack will be on our SAGE installations of which Canada only has one, that at North Bay where we have the Bomarc, and that installation will be blown up before the manned bomber comes against which the Bomarc installation is supposed to defend us.

We simply ask in all reasonableness that the House of Commons be taken a little more into the confidence of the government on this matter and that we be given a little more information.

What I have said about NORAD also applies to NATO. I am sorry I only have another four minutes. It is difficult to say in four minutes what I want to say about NATO but I am going to try. NATO was formed as a military alliance, perhaps a necessary and essential one at that time. I had the privilege of being one of the House of Commons delegates to the NATO parliamentary association meeting in Paris in November of 1961. The other delegates must confirm what I am about to say and if they do not they had better watch out because on my desk I have a transcript of every word said there.

Information was given us in 1961, not only by General Norstad, then the commander of NATO, but by leading speakers from other countries in NATO, that perhaps too much emphasis had been placed on the nuclear deterrent and that the great need was the building up of conventional forces. It was said at that conference that the country that could perhaps best build up the necessary, mobile, trained, conventional force was Canada. That is on the record.

Much has been said in recent weeks by NATO members and in the United States by the president himself about the need for the building up of a conventional force because any move in Europe outside of an all-out war will be a probing attack, and such an attack will be by conventional weapons. In 1961 at the NATO conference it was said that such an attack must be repelled by conventional weapons because if we use tactical nuclear weapons that will bring about a strategic nuclear war. This is all a matter of record. Why do we not follow it up?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. gentleman but his time has expired.

Mr. Winch: I am sorry also, sir.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I regret that I have to intervene again in this debate but the subamendment moved by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) and the terms in which he moved it, with some challenging references to myself, make it necessary for me to place before the house the position of the government in respect of the subamendment, which is very clear indeed in its terms, Mr. Speaker, though not, as I hope to point out, quite so clear in its implications.

I regret that the hon. member who has just sat down was not able to complete his remarks because they are always interesting and always listened to with attention by members of the house. He emphasized that he will perhaps forgive me for calling the righteous consistency of his party in these and other matters. It is interesting to recall, though I did not have very much opportunity to do as much research as I would have liked in recalling it, the position of the New Democratic party and its predecessor, the C.C.F. party, in respect of this matter of nuclear defence.

As I ventured to say earlier in this debate, NATO accepted a nuclear commitment for the alliance as far back as December 19, 1957, when at the council meeting of that year the communique stated, and I repeat, that NATO, not any individual member but NATO, "has decided to establish stocks of nuclear warheads which will be readily available for the defence of the alliance in case of need". Was there a violent or any other kind of reaction in this house from the C.C.F. party of that day to that communique, to that result of the NATO council meeting of that time which was reported in this house four days later by the prime minister of that day on December 21, 1957, in terms set out at page 2721 of Hansard? This is one paragraph only from his statement:

> We had to ensure that the NATO defence structure, first erected to meet the needs of 1949, was adjusted to meet the needs of 1957, to render impregnable, as I said a moment ago, the defensive capacity of the Atlantic community in the nuclear era.

That statement was made by the prime minister of that time after a decision taken by the government of that day to agree to NATO taking on a nuclear commitment for the coalition; and I would have thought, if my hon. friends were as consistent as they boast about being, that they would have reacted to that first commitment by Canada to NATO nuclear defence as they have reacted recently to statements from this side of the house. But, Mr. Speaker, there was no such reaction. There was no reference in the debate from which I have just quoted to the fact the government of the day was irresponsible or contemptuous of parliament in not consulting and getting the approval of parliament before it made this commitment. The government of that day had the right to take on that commitment as a member of a coalition, come back to parliament as it did and make the announcement of what it had done. It was the right of parliament, then, to accept or repudiate that commitment. This is responsible government, as I ventured to point out last night when quoting the prime minister of that day in support of my contention.

There was no complaint about the procedure that was followed at that time. In fact, the comment by the leader of the C.C.F. party at that time on the substance of the decision made was very, very mild indeed, although that began the process of making NATO into a nuclear defensive power to meet the new kind of threat which faced the members of NATO at that time. So it went on for a couple of years. There was very little reference in this house by any member of the C.C.F. to the inequity of this decision or subsequent decisions that the government of that day took on the roles which could only be fulfilled effectively by the use of nuclear ammunition for weapon systems which had been acquired.

I am not going to quote remarks made in the intervening years. However, it was not until 1960 that I was able to find any change in the opinion of the members of the C.C.F.

party, the predecessor of the New Democratic party. The first statement in which they indicated they had been contemplating a change in their attitude was made on July 14, 1960, page 6311 of Hansard. The hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) had this to say, and this was no doubt prior to the formation of the New Democratic party, but not long before. I quote from Hansard of that day when the hon. member said:

Western policy—

This was a statement of their policy at that time, the policy of his party.

Western policy is to balance NATO's weakness in conventional forces by being ready to use so-called tactical nuclear weapons. This idea is based on two false premises: first, that a weak force armed with nuclear weapons is going to beat the large force armed with nuclear weapons; second, that a nuclear war in Europe could possibly remain limited.

I am not quarrelling at the moment with the validity or otherwise of these premises. They might be valid. Then, the hon. member continued as follows:

Canada must insist that NATO recast its strategy, its tactics and its organization so that its defensive forces are capable of meeting any Soviet aggression with conventional weapons long enough——to allow diplomacy to seek a settlement before, progressively, tactical nuclear weapons and thermonuclear weapons are used.

I certainly agree with this.

In other words, according to the hon. gentleman who was the spokesman for his party at that time, NATO should have sufficient conventional strength in order to hold an attack until the forces of political negotiation and diplomacy could at least get working. If they were not successful, and if the attack continued on a scale which would be enlarged, as it probably would be, then according to this statement NATO would progressively be permitted to use tactical nuclear weapons and thermonuclear weapons.

Then, the hon. member for Kootenay West went on to say this:

We say that we should make it very clear to our NATO allies that we will withdraw from the alliance—

On what condition?

—unless they all honestly strive to give effect to disarmament and disengagement. The whole idea is to work toward the creation of a buffer zone in Europe at the same time as we make a buffer zone of Canada. That is our approach to this problem at the present time.

This represented I believe, Mr. Speaker, a very substantial change on the part of the C.C.F. party of that day. It was a move in the direction of the policy which was adopted at the founding conference of the New Democratic party. It is a policy towards NATO to which we on this side took exception, and will continue to take exception as a policy which would end NATO. We are not willing, on this side, to do anything to weaken let alone destroy NATO.

My hon. friend, the leader of the New Democratic party, will recall that at that founding conference—I have not got the resolution before me but he will correct me if I misinterpret it—it was made quite clear that if NATO itself became a nuclear power, and NATO had already indicated in 1957 its requirement for nuclear protection, then Canada should withdraw as a member of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. They went further. They said that Canada should work towards—I have not the exact words but I think I am right in saying this, the abandonment of the NATO pact and the Warsaw pact. We should get rid of them both. I think that was the resolution adopted by the founding convention of his party. To that, we on this side take strong exception and we interpret this particular subamendment in the light of the resolution of the founding convention of his party on this subject.

There could be no greater triumph, Mr. Speaker, for the forces of imperial communism than to have the abandonment of both the NATO and Warsaw pacts. When I say that, I am not for one moment suggesting, as my hon. friend tried to suggest I was suggesting, that he and his friends are deliberately supporting in any way any communist objective. His interpretation of what I said during the election campaign, as I hope to point out, is quite false. The abandonment of the NATO pact would mean the abandonment of western collective security, the abandonment of a coalition of free states bound together in freedom to defend their security and thereby preserve the peace by showing their resolutions to defend their security. The abandonment of the Warsaw pact would be nothing at all because the Warsaw pact is a façade. Who could say for one moment that if there were no Warsaw pact Soviet control over European communist satellites would be weakened in any way, shape or form? This is the part of the New Democratic policy in regard to NATO to which we take very strong exception indeed, and we relate that policy to the subamendment which is now before us.

The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) said this morning that I have stated, though he did not identify the statement in any way, that nuclear arms was not an issue. I did not know what he was talking about when he made that statement. Certainly, in the election campaign the acquisition of nuclear ammunition for those nuclear defensive arms systems which had been acquired previously was indeed an issue. We accepted it as such. We made our position clear in regard to the matter and we stood on that position before the people in an election. Indeed, my hon. friend and his followers took a definite position on that matter also.

Then, the hon. gentleman went on to say that the leader of the Liberal party, and I took down what he said so I think it is correct, said that those of us who were opposing nuclear arms were seeking to promote the first objective of Soviet policy. I would ask him to give any evidence to support that kind of statement which he said, if it had been made, was a contemptible statement. If it had been made, it would have been a contemptible statement, but it was not made.

Mr. Douglas: I rise on a question of privilege. Mr. Speaker, I have here the press report of a speech which the Prime Minister made when taking part in the campaign. The report is contained in the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix of March 7, and I should be glad to place that statement on the record if the Prime Minister so desires.

Mr. Pearson: I know that statement, Mr. Speaker. I contradicted that statement at the time. I did not make that statement in the form in which it was reported, and I said so at the time. I understood that the leader of the New Democratic party was referring to statements I made in Cooksville and Kingston on this matter. Of course if the hon. gentleman would like to place that statement on the record he can, and I will deny it again as being inaccurate, the same as when it was reported.

Mr. Douglas: I can see very little value in putting it on the record if the right hon. gentleman would only deny it, but certainly I followed the right hon. gentleman's statements very closely and I at no time saw any official denial. To my knowledge the statement was made on two separate occasions, one at Cooksville and one at Saskatoon, and the statement quoted in the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix of March 7 reads as follows:

> He quoted resolutions passed at the N.D.P. founding convention in 1961.
>
> Mr. Pearson said the break-up of north Atlantic alliance was the first objective of the Soviet union and the policy adopted by the N.D.P. "contributes to that break-up."
>
> Their defence policy therefore, is not only against all nuclear weapons in Canada in the alliance, however defence in character, but it would destroy the alliance itself and weaken the security arrangements which are, in present circumstances, essential for peace.

Mr. Pearson: Well, Mr. Speaker, that is exactly what I have been saying—and these are not the terms in which the hon. gentleman quoted me this morning—that the first objective of the Soviet union is to break up the north Atlantic treaty alliance.

Mr. Douglas: I draw the right hon. gentleman's attention to the phrase that says; > —and the policy adopted by the N.D.P. contributes to that break-up.

Mr. Pearson: And, Mr. Speaker, the founding resolutions of the N.D.P. were to the effect that if NATO becomes a nuclear organization we should withdraw from it and we should work towards the abandonment of both NATO and the Warsaw pact. If that is not a policy leading to the break-up of NATO, I would like to know what is.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask the Prime Minister does this mean he is not denying the statement?

Mr. Pearson: I am not denying for one minute that the policy of the N.D.P., in its founding resolutions, would lead to the break-up of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. Of course they would, and I would hope that perhaps the leader of that party, who may not hold these views or may have changed them since the founding convention, would make it clear it is not the policy of his party to break up NATO by refusing to be a member of that organization if it becomes a nuclear organization, which in fact it has been since 1957. I would also hope my hon. friend would repudiate the suggestion that we should work towards the abandonment of both the Warsaw pact and the NATO pact as being on the same level of interest to Canada in its determination to protect peace and security. It would be a very important gesture of clarification if my hon. friend, or one of his colleagues, would do that.

This morning the hon. gentleman made a very strong attack on the government, saying we had flouted parliamentary responsibility in not giving parliament a chance to decide on this matter before any decision was taken by the government. Well, Mr. Speaker, the proper constitutional position on this matter, which I have already repeated this afternoon, was put on the record by me last night, in the language of the former prime minister which he used some years ago, and which I need not repeat this afternoon.

Our position on this matter, as I have already said, was made clear during the election campaign. The N.D.P. position was made clear during the election campaign. Also the position of the Conservative party was made clear during that campaign, and that was to do nothing and wait and see what would turn up. Our position today in this parliament is that we are standing in the face of this subamendment on that position, and this is surely the proper constitutional position for a government to take.

As I said yesterday, we are at the moment negotiating a bilateral agreement. If it is not a satisfactory agreement we will not accept it. We hope there will be a satisfactory bilateral agreement with the United States, which must be agreed on before any other step can be taken with regard to the acquisition of nuclear ammunition for the Canadian weapons system.

As is common to all the agreements that have been made by the United States with all other NATO members, the United States will retain custody of any nuclear warheads which are made available to the Canadian weapons system, but there will be joint control so that warheads which would be ready for instant use in the awful emergency of war, after release by the United States in that emergency, can be used only on orders from Canada itself. This is known, of course, as the two-key system and is common to all agreements for joint control of nuclear weapons, made by the United States with any NATO member.

This bilateral, political agreement, which is only one step, cannot in any event be completed before parliament has had a chance to express its views on this whole question of nuclear warheads for Canadian weapons. The hon. gentleman criticized me for making the statement the other day that no formal parliamentary approval was necessary. That of course is perfectly true in the sense that no formal parliamentary approval is necessary for this kind of agreement between two countries, unless that agreement takes a formal character in the shape of a treaty or an agreement which has to be ratified, and submitted to parliament for approval before ratification.

This is not that kind of agreement; but we are giving parliament an opportunity to express itself on this question and that is why a paragraph was put in the speech from the throne, and the hon. gentleman quite correctly has seized on that paragraph as a justification for his subamendment; and if the subamendment had not been made in those terms, we would be bringing forward very shortly a resolution to set up a defence committee to discuss defence policy. The question of nuclear arms can be discussed then, and if the verdict of parliament is against the government on this matter, if the verdict of parliament is even in favour of the subamendment, then parliament will have decided, the government will have been defeated, and if that is not a proper constitutional position to take then I misread my constitutional history. If that is contempt of parliament I do not know what to say.

I would also point out to my hon. friend that parliament was called at the very earliest possible date so that it would have a chance to discuss and decide on this and any other matter. There was not one day's delay before parliament was called together. I would suggest to my hon. friend that the procedure adopted by the government in this matter satisfies, in spirit and in letter, the requirements that I mentioned in my speech of January 18 in Toronto, which my hon. friend himself quoted this morning.

Then the hon. gentleman said, and this has been repeated both by himself and others, that if we make this kind of agreement with the United States, and if this agreement is followed up by the technical arrangements which have to be negotiated to ensure the nuclear warheads will be available, under United States custody, for Canadian weapon systems in an emergency, then Canada will become a member of the nuclear club.

I would point out in that respect, Mr. Speaker, that the former prime minister on July 14, 1960 had something to say about this, and what he said seems to me to be very sensible and correct. He said at that time, as reported in Hansard at page 6271:

> Mr. Speaker, it is a well known fact that United States law requires that the ownership of nuclear weapons must remain with the United States and that the use of such weapons requires presidential authorization. That is the law as it now stands and as it has been in effect since 1945 or 1946.
>
> At the same time, as I have said before in the house, if and when nuclear weapons are acquired by the Canadian forces, these weapons will not be used except as the Canadian government decides and in the manner approved by the Canadian government. These two elements together constitute joint control, and joint control is consistent with the view I expressed in the house on February 20, 1959, that it is important to limit the spread of nuclear weapons at the independent disposal of national governments.

If joint control is desirable in order to prevent the extension of nuclear weapons under the control of national governments, because if a national government has control of nuclear weapons that would indeed be an extension of the nuclear club, surely it is even more desirable to have as broad a based control as is possible under NATO so there will be additional safeguards to the use of these weapons and there will be additional obstacles against their extension under national control inside the NATO coalition. The former minister of national defence also had something to say about this on August 5, 1960, when, as reported in Hansard on page 7652 he said:

> So whether these warheads are placed in Canada or in the leased bases in Canada or in the United Kingdom, the United States still retain possession of them until such time as the President of the United States releases them for use to the authorities of the country concerned.

That surely makes it clear that in the eyes of the recent government and in the eyes of the present government the provisions we are seeking for joint control of these weapons as long as these weapons are in the hands of Canadian forces, the provision for this kind of control to be brought under the authority of NATO to the greatest extent possible, is not putting Canada into the nuclear club and will not be interpreted by other countries as doing so. I ask the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas), if he doubts that, whether he considers that those members of NATO who already have nuclear agreements with the United States are members of the nuclear club—Turkey, Greece, Italy, the Netherlands, Germany and perhaps one or two others. Is Germany a member of the nuclear club? The position of Canada, if these negotiations are satisfactorily concluded, will be exactly the same as the position of those other members of NATO who have made agreements and acted on them. Therefore, it is perfectly consistent to maintain that position while doing all we can—and we shall do all we can—to prevent the extension of the national manufacture and national custody or control of nuclear weapons.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the right hon. gentleman allow a question? Did he not, on January 9, 1961, state in effect that the acceptance of nuclear weapons under joint control would in fact be making Canada a member of the nuclear club?

Mr. Pearson: I do not recall making any such statement in those terms. I am stating the position now as I know it to be in the light of all the information I have secured, including some information which was not available to us when we were in opposition and which reinforces the position we take on this matter.

The hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) says that Canada has no commitment, or that he cannot find any commitment which requires such a decision as we have taken in order that it might be implemented. The hon. gentleman in his interesting speech quotes General Gerhart in support of that point of view and says Canada was not committed to nuclear arms under NORAD. Of course, it is perfectly true that when Canada under the previous government agreed to the establishment of NORAD there was no commitment of any kind regarding nuclear weapons, because the Canadian contribution to NORAD at that time was the Canadian Arrow airplane. It was only subsequent to the destruction without trace of the Arrow and the acceptance by the previous government of the Bomarc missile that Canada accepted a nuclear commitment, because that missile, as the former prime minister has pointed out so many times, cannot be effectively used without nuclear warheads.

An hon. Member: Could the Arrow?

Mr. Pearson: Indeed, the Arrow could, and when the Arrow was constructed it was not suggested by those in charge at that time that the Arrow should carry nuclear weapons at all. But the prime minister of the day said, as will be found on page 1223 of Hansard of February 20, 1959, that the full potential of these defensive weapons is achieved only when they are armed with nuclear warheads—the Bomarc, the F-104, the Honest John and the Voodoo. He went on in the same speech to say—and I ask the house whether this is a commitment or not:

> It is our intention to provide Canadian forces with modern and efficient weapons to enable them to fulfil their respective roles.

And these roles, as the former prime minister stated at the time, could not be effectively fulfilled without the nuclear warhead. In the same speech, to make this point doubly sure, the prime minister of that day said:

> We must reluctantly admit the need in present circumstances for nuclear weapons of a defensive character.

Therefore, I ask the hon. gentleman if, having accepted this role, certain consequences do not automatically follow. When you accept a role you accept a commitment to undertake that role effectively. Having accepted the role, did not the previous government accept a commitment to acquire the ammunition without which these weapons systems would not be effective?

This is not a commitment put in the form of a treaty. It is not a commitment put in the shape of a formal agreement between two governments for ratification. But it is a moral and political commitment if any government ever made such a commitment to any other government.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask the right hon. gentleman a question? Did the Prime Minister think Canada had a commitment when he made his speech to students at Saskatchewan university on November 28 and said he was opposed to Canada accepting nuclear weapons?

Mr. Pearson: I have that clipping from a university question and answer period to which the hon. member has referred and to which he also referred this morning. He did not read all of this article and, of course, what he read was not in quotation marks. Oh, yes. I see it is in quotation marks. I said this, also in quotes:

> Canada's NATO defence commitments are such that they cannot be discharged without nuclear weapons.

That is what I told the students. I will read on. This is also in quotation marks:

> When these commitments were introduced, the Liberal party opposed them, not because of disagreement with the notion of collective defence, but because we felt it was the wrong role for Canada to play. Now we must either discharge our commitments or change them.

That, Mr. Speaker, is our position. The weapons systems are there. We learned last autumn that delivery of the F-104s was taking place—that the airplanes would in a few months be in Europe in the hands of the squadron. The Honest John missiles were in the hands of the regiments. The Bomarcs were on site at North Bay. At that time there was no possibility of changing this role without scrapping a billion dollars worth of equipment. Canada had to follow through until those roles were changed, and this government intends to do just that.

At that time, last autumn, we learned what could happen when you accept certain responsibilities. We learned from the Cuban crisis what the acceptance of certain commitments and responsibilities can do to our relations with our neighbour and our friend and we also learned last autumn over at the NATO meeting what the refusal of the government of that day either to alter the role they had undertaken or to follow through had done to our reputation in the NATO alliance. If the hon. gentleman in the face of all this evidence does not believe that some commitment was accepted by Canada, will he explain why the former minister of national defence and other ministers of the previous government resigned from that government? Was it not because the commitment was not being carried out?

Hon. members on the other side may now say there was no commitment, but they will not get support from at least one member of the front bench opposite in that regard. Therefore, it is clear the government cannot support the subamendment moved by the hon. gentleman. The subamendment says:

> We regret that Your Excellency's advisers have indicated their intention of acquiring nuclear arms for Canadian forces—

What we have indicated our intention of doing is to negotiate, if possible, a satisfactory bilateral agreement of the type negotiated between the United States and other NATO members and, if a satisfactory agreement providing for joint control can be reached, to proceed then with the technical arrangements which will make it possible, not to acquire nuclear arms but to acquire the nuclear warheads for the arms systems which have already been obtained and which cannot be used effectively without them. And we propose to do this in a manner which will not prevent in any way the fight for disarmament in which this government will participate to the best of its ability. The first form of disarmament we must seek is nuclear disarmament, and the first form of that is the abolition of all testing. It is possible for the government to adopt this policy, until our role and commitments are changed as a result of defence reviews, without weakening in any single respect our fight for disarmament and for peace and security in the world. Thus I think the terms of the subamendment, particularly the expression "acquiring nuclear arms" are not accurate.

Then the subamendment goes on to say:

> —thereby lessening the chances for nuclear disarmament and increasing the danger of nuclear war.

If the decision taken by the government to proceed in the direction I have indicated, along with other NATO members, is lessening the chances for nuclear disarmament and increasing the danger of nuclear war, then the implication of the criticism made by the hon. gentleman and his group is that we should withdraw from NATO, because the NATO alliance is now committed to a nuclear tactical deterrent. I do not believe for a minute that the nuclear tactical deterrent in the hands of the NATO council lessens the chances for nuclear disarmament or increases the danger of nuclear war. I think that until we can reach a general disarmament agreement, or some easing of tension which will allow a reduction of nuclear strength among those powers which now have it, there is no alternative open to the alliance but to make it conventionally strong in order to meet the first shock of an attack and then to build up a collective tactical deterrent should that conventional strength not be successful in holding the first attack. That seems to me to be a sensible defence policy and one which does not lessen the chances for nuclear disarmament or increase the danger of nuclear war. For these reasons we shall not be able to support the subamendment.

Mr. Nowlan: I should like the Prime Minister to clarify the thinking of one poor layman on this complicated subject. The right hon. gentleman has talked about commitments. He has talked also about negotiating. He used the expression "if we can negotiate an agreement". Are we committed before we negotiate an agreement or after we have negotiated it? If we cannot negotiate an agreement, what about the commitment?

Mr. Pearson: I should like to do everything I can to clarify the rarely bewildered mind of my poor layman friend. Surely, the hon. gentleman must know that when a government undertakes for its country a certain role in collective defence it also undertakes to adopt the means necessary to carry out that role. Otherwise, what is the point of accepting that role? You deceive your own people and you deceive the allies who rely on you to carry out that role. I am thinking, now, about the air division. Once we undertook the strike reconnaissance role for the F-104 aircraft we undertook to be effective in that role. That cannot be done without the acquisition of nuclear warheads. Having undertaken the role, the government of the day also undertook to negotiate an arrangement to that end with the United States. Indeed, it had begun negotiations for that purpose, thereby indicating it had accepted that commitment, too. But it did not follow through with those negotiations. We propose to do so.

Mr. Douglas: I wonder if I may ask a brief question. In view of the fact that Denmark and Norway have not accepted nuclear weapons under NATO, does the Prime Minister consider that they, too, ought to withdraw from NATO?

Mr. Pearson: I do not for one minute. The Danish and Norwegian position was made clear at the beginning. They did not wish to participate in any form of collective nuclear defence under NATO. They did not wish to acquire nuclear warheads for any of their weapons and they did not wish to have the nuclear weapons of any other member of NATO on their soil. They made that perfectly clear. They also accepted the resolution of December 17, 1957, concerning the necessity of NATO itself building up a nuclear deterrent force. However, they said from the beginning they did not wish to be involved in its implementation. Their decision was clear and it is respected. That is a very different situation from the one in which Canada finds itself at the present time.

Mr. Gregoire: About these commitments by Canada. Can the Prime Minister tell us at what level they were taken? Was it at cabinet level or at military staff level?

Mr. Pearson: The government of the day should answer that question. But the former prime minister spoke to the house on his return from a NATO council meeting and the minister of national defence also spoke to the house later indicating the new kind of strike reconnaissance role which had been undertaken. Therefore, the commitments were undertaken at the appropriate level, which was the level of the government of the day.

[Mr. Nowlan.]

Mr. Gregoire: But those commitments were not endorsed by parliament.

Mr. Pearson: They were brought before the House of Commons and the government was not defeated in the debate which followed the making of those commitments. Therefore, they were endorsed by the house.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, on entering this debate for the first time I should like to convey through you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, to the Speaker of the house my congratulations on his appointment to an office for which he is eminently suited by training, character and disposition. I should like to wish him well in the performance of his duties.

I should also at this stage express my congratulations to the mover and the seconder of this address who capably performed a rather difficult task, as is recognized by all of those who have preceded them in entering the House of Commons. I hope they continue to have success in their deliberations here.

I had not intended, Mr. Speaker, entering into the debate on this particular subject at this time, but it is an interesting topic and I should like to deal with some of the remarks which have been made. I take note of the fact that this morning the leader of the New Democratic party was as bold as a lion in presenting a case against the government, whereas the night before he had been very mild indeed, talking about no need for another election, and echoing the sentiments of the leader of the Social Credit party about it being urgent now for people to get down to business, that politics should be forgotten, and that a non-partisan approach should be taken to these various subjects. I do not see how you can have non-partisan approaches where political parties have divergent opinions on so many matters. The leader of the New Democratic party softened his attack when he finally came to move his amendment, with which I shall deal later on.

We have just listened with some interest but not much enlightenment to the remarks of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson). Yesterday he was talking about the building up of straw men and knocking them over. This is a field in which he is adept. Today he built up a straw man. He said that the dissatisfaction with the amendment moved by the New Democratic party was dependant upon an attitude taken by that party at some convention, or on another occasion, with regard to NATO. The amendment has nothing to do, as I see it, with NATO; it has something to do with the announced policy of the present government, but the Prime Minister spent a great deal of time talking about the New Democratic party and its general attitude. It was for that reason he said, that he could not accept the amendment.

We might suggest that the subamendment should be accepted by the government for the very reason that in days gone by the Liberal party time and again expressed itself quite forcefully against any extension of the nuclear club, against any extension of the use of atomic weapons, and was quite clear that there should be no nuclear weapons on Canadian soil. I think that now the Liberal party would find itself in agreement with this amendment in view of its past history.

Of course, a most remarkable change took place during the parliamentary recess last December-January. The leader of the New Democratic party asked the present Prime Minister where he had been during that recess, whom he had seen, to whom he had talked, from whom he had taken his instructions, and I would repeat those questions to which we have not had an answer. Something happened in the interval, and the reversal of a position taken occurred early in January.

In addition to building up a straw man concerning the policy of the New Democratic party, the Prime Minister also referred at some considerable length to the decision of the North Atlantic council in December 1957. He said that the parliament of that day raised no objection. I might remind him that there was no indication in that decision that Canadian forces would be using nuclear weapons or that nuclear weapons would be stored on Canadian soil. The North Atlantic council decided—and I read from the communique of that period—the following:

> NATO should establish stocks of nuclear warheads which will be readily available for the defence of the alliance in case of need.

The NATO council decided to accept an offer by the United States government under which that government—> —would deploy nuclear warheads under United States custody in accordance with NATO defensive planning in an agreement with the nations directly concerned. In the event of hostilities nuclear warheads would be released to the appropriate NATO supreme allied commander for employment by nuclear capable forces.

There was agreement by Canada to that general policy on the part of NATO in order to bolster up the weak conventional forces of that day; but there was no obligation, intention or desire on the part of Canada to play any part in that nuclear deterrent force; and in any case the weapons were all held by the United States. So I fail to see what relationship there is between the situation at the present moment and that prevailing in 1957 when the Prime Minister attempts to make out that the parliament of that day raised no objection to the NATO policy as announced in that year.

The main attack launched this morning by the leader of the New Democratic party was on the flouting of parliament, on the disregard of parliament by the present government, on the contempt for parliament shown by the present government. He made his case on the fact that the Prime Minister had announced that Canada was going to go ahead with providing nuclear weapons for her forces and was going to have nuclear weapons placed on Canadian soil. It was to this that the leader of the New Democratic party objected. He said that this was not correct. He said: "You, the government, have not received a mandate from the people to take any such action as this. Nor have you received a mandate here in parliament. You do not know whether you are acceptable to parliament as the government of this country. You have been taking action without authority". It was on that basis that the amendment was drawn.

My expectation had been that when the amendment was read out, after the word "intention" the phrase "without consulting parliament" would have appeared. The amendment would then have read:

> We regret that Your Excellency's advisers have indicated their intention without consulting parliament of acquiring nuclear arms for Canadian forces—

—and so on. That was the sum and substance of the speech made by the leader of the New Democratic party—the lack of authority in the hands of the present government, no mandate from the people to do this, no authority from this parliament to take any such action whatsoever.

I find it very difficult to follow the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) in his convolutions, ramifications and wanderings with regard to this particular question. Even in the speech from the throne, where there was a chance for clarity of expression after an election campaign when nuclear arms were discussed on every platform in the country, all that this government could come up with was the following phrase:

> The armed forces of Canada should have available the modern weapons necessary to perform effectively the defensive tasks which Canada has undertaken in the alliance.

Why should the Prime Minister and his colleagues not have put in clear and distinct words what they mean by "modern weapons"?

Mr. Pearson: The F-104.

Mr. Churchill: Do they mean weapons with nuclear tips? Do they mean nuclear warheads? They are just being evasive. They are afraid to set it out clearly and distinctly so that everybody can understand. I think one can say that our forces have modern weapons right now to perform effectively their defensive tasks. It depends on what the defensive task is and so far our armed forces are prepared for those tasks. There was no clarity there at all.

I noted that the speech the right hon. gentleman made yesterday was filled with many ifs and buts and other qualifications. He is speaking about the NATO council meeting and he says, as found on page 63 of Hansard:

> It is quite clear from the nature of this meeting that there will be no discussion, let alone any recommendation, about the actual role undertaken by any member of the alliance.

Just two paragraphs later he says:

> It may well be that at the NATO council meeting there may be a recommendation that the defence policy of the coalition should be re-examined. I would hope that could be done—

On the one hand, he says it is quite clear that there will be no discussion or recommendation about the role of any member and then he immediately goes on to say that there may be a recommendation with regard to the role or defence policy of the coalition. He then expresses the hope that there will be, and I presume he has given instructions to the delegation representing Canada at the NATO meeting to raise that question. Then he goes on to say, and he repeated it this afternoon—

> —just as Canada's defence policy will be re-examined in this house and by a special committee of this house.

I wonder what that will amount to? This is a great sop thrown to parliament. A defence committee on policy—I am not sure they have said it will be on policy—will be appointed. If it is a defence committee on policy the purpose is to give the government a chance to evade its responsibility. Time and time again we heard last year from members who now sit on the treasury benches that it was the duty of a government to make a decision and get on with the job. Here you have an ineffective, uncertain, poorly organized government not sure of its position saying: We do not know what we should do about defence policy so we will set up a committee of parliament to give us its opinion.

Why not set up a committee to determine the budget for parliament? That would be a nice, non-partisan interparty committee to determine the economic future of Canada. Is the government not prepared to make a definite statement of policy with regard to our economic conditions, with regard to taxation and things of that nature? I think perhaps it is; but on defence, oh, no. This is a very touchy subject, so we must all get together and get the government off the hook.

I call upon the government to come out clearly, decisively and with frankness and say just what its policy is because it is not disclosed in the speech we heard yesterday by the Prime Minister or in what he said this afternoon. He went on to say yesterday with regard to the NATO meeting:

> The only question that will arise here is whether those forces will be under a separate NATO nuclear command; whether the R.C.A.F.—

Then he puts in an if clause again.

> —if it discharges the nuclear role accepted for it, should continue its present position in the NATO command or whether it should be under a separate NATO nuclear command organization.

Why is there some suggestion of doubt whether the R.C.A.F. will discharge the nuclear role accepted for it? The if is there. There is an escape hatch, a way out for a person who has spent quite a bit of his lifetime working out means of evading issues and skirting around problems.

The Prime Minister was at great pains to point out that last autumn the problem was clear, that members of the Liberal party found out that Canada was not, as he put it, living up to her commitments. He has not defined those commitments. He is still searching to see what commitments there are, if any, but he said last fall that they had found out that the delivery of Starfighters was taking place in Europe. I ask the Prime Minister: What Starfighters were delivered in Europe last fall? How many? How many are now there ready for action? How many were ready in the middle of April this year?

An hon. Member: He does not know.

Mr. Pearson: Not one, because they need ammunition.

Mr. Churchill: The present Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer) does not know or did not know last winter. Only one squadron of 18 planes was ready by the middle of April of this year, and yet members of the Liberal party have been talking for the last several months about the air division in Europe being unarmed. The air division in Europe does not consist of Starfighters yet. It is being reorganized so that it will be equipped with Starfighters, and only one squadron, 18 planes, was ready by the middle of April and it will not be fully trained for active service until some time in June. Those are the facts.

Why did the people who made these great discoveries last fall not tell us and tell the people of Canada what they had discovered?

They discovered last fall that the Starfighters were only in the process of being sent over to Europe, that they had to be modified to a very great extent after they reached there and that only one squadron was to be ready by the middle of April.

An hon. Member: Political purposes.

Mr. Churchill: The Prime Minister interrupted and said there was no ammunition for them. They have created the impression that we have 144 planes flying around in Europe unarmed. Not at all. Only 18 of them were ready by the middle of April. When the time comes to arm them, are they going to be flying around with nuclear bombs attached to their undercarriages? Are they going to try practice shots with these nuclear weapons? This morning I asked a question of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer) with regard to the Honest John rocket battery. We had bogus information spread by the Liberal party for several months to the effect the Honest John artillery battery was sitting over in Europe unarmed, not ready for action. They said that the missile on board the rocket discharger had sand in the warhead. Well, it is not sand, it is concrete and it is there for a purpose.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: The Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) laughs, but he laughs from ignorance. This concrete is there for a purpose. In order to obtain the equivalent weight of the live warhead on the missile that will be used in wartime, this concrete filled warhead has been attached. This enables the troops to get their full training short of discharging a nuclear weapon. They have a missile of the same length, the same size and same weight as they would use in wartime. Would you have this battery of artillery travelling about Europe with nuclear warheads on board? What if somebody pushed the trigger by mistake? Of course, it is all nonsense. These weapons will not have nuclear warheads attached to them until the alert has been sounded and war is imminent.

Mr. Pearson: You have no agreement with the United States to make that possible.

Mr. Churchill: The Honest John artillery battery is only a 20-minute drive away from the missile storage dump and when an alert is sounded they could be ready to be deployed within two hours.

Mr. Pearson: The missiles cannot be released.

Mr. Churchill: They come under the British division which has charge of the missile dump. If war broke out the missiles would be provided for the Honest John battery. Here, we have been given the false information that this battery is over there, that it is useless, and so on. This is not true. The battery is well trained. I saw it and I saw the missile dump. They could go into action in under two hours fully armed with atomic warheads. It would be simply ridiculous to have these atomic warheads attached now and in the hands of troops who would be used on manoeuvres. You certainly do not take practice shots with atomic warheads.

I asked the Minister of National Defence this morning if he were going to have the Honest John equipped with these nuclear warheads. He said that this matter was under consideration by the government and the decision would depend to a considerable extent on the outcome of negotiations now being carried on by his colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin). Well, he will not get much help from him. Why is the Minister of National Defence not taking part in these consultations?

This is the situation with regard to these matters. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, when you talk about the Starfighter, the missile dump for the Starfighter at Zweibrücken was started in the wintertime and when I was there in February it was only partially completed. It will not be completed until June, so how can you arm Starfighters with atomic weapons when the missile dump has not been provided? My friends in the Liberal party have been misleading the public across this country by giving them false information concerning our air division in Europe and the availability of atomic missiles for that air division.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) talks about living up to our commitment. We have stated, and we state again, that we have met all our commitments. Let him produce a commitment that has not been met. On May 22, 1959, at a meeting of the NATO council, Mr. Dillon for the United States and Mr. Heeney for Canada signed an agreement for co-operation in the use of atomic energy for mutual defence purposes. This document was tabled in congress before being printed on July 14, 1959 and is listed as report No. 513 of the Senate of the United States, 86th congress, first session. I am sure that the Prime Minister would have this information available from that particular source. It is very familiar to him. In the days of the Eisenhower administration, there was no difficulty. President Eisenhower, in his letter of transmittal of this document to congress, wrote as follows:

These agreements will enable the United States to co-operate effectively in mutual defence planning with these nations and in the training of their respective NATO forces in order that, if an attack on NATO should occur, under the direction of the Supreme Allied Commander for Europe these forces could effectively use nuclear weapons in their defence.

The essential part of this agreement between the two governments is to be found in article I which reads as follows:

Each party will communicate to and exchange with the other party, information and transfer materials and equipment to the other party.

Article II—exchange of information—each party will communicate to or exchange with the other party such classified information as is jointly determined to be necessary to:

(B) The training of personnel in the employment of and defence against atomic weapons and other military applications of atomic energy.

Then, article VI reads:

Under this agreement there will be no transfer by either party of atomic weapons or non-nuclear parts of atomic weapons.

Atomic weapon is defined as any device utilizing atomic energy, the principal purpose of which is for use as a weapon. This is the extent of the agreement and it dates from 1959. We could have information, our troops would be trained in the use of those weapons, but under no circumstances would the United States allow these nuclear weapons to be transferred to the use of another country.

Here is the difficulty in which the Prime Minister finds himself. He talks airily about the United States having a finger on the trigger and Canada having a finger on the safety catch. He talks airily about joint control, the two-key system. Let us discover what he will come up with in his negotiations. He will find that strict control will be kept by the United States. As the Winnipeg Tribune put it in big headlines on May 16, "U.S. will guard nuclear warheads on Canadian soil". The Prime Minister said the nuclear storage points would have what he called an outside security guard of Canadian troops. Canadian troops will not be allowed within the compound; they will be kept outside. Not one nuclear weapon, if ever obtained, will be fired without the consent of the United States. The Canadians would simply be carriers or users under United States authority or control as the Winnipeg Tribune suggests. I quote from the editorial of May 16:

What he meant all along—

Referring to the present Prime Minister.

—on the "acceptance" of nuclear arms was the establishment on Canadian soil of American nuclear depots, under American control and custody.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but must inform him his time has expired.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is a former minister of national defence and I am sure every member of the house would wish to hear what he desires to say on this all important subject.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Has the hon. member the unanimous consent of the house to continue his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Churchill: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am very grateful for the consent of the house but I myself am not favourably disposed to extending the time for people to speak, so I will just conclude by reading the second paragraph in the editorial which is as follows:

As we progress from here, our government has at last made it plain that "acceptance" of nuclear weapons means the establishment of American military enclaves on our soil. The proposed agreement today supposedly entails depots for the Bomarc sites and perhaps the Voodoo fighter bases.

This is the issue which has to be considered very carefully in all these matters and, Mr. Speaker, I may participate again on this subject of defence at some future date.

I would like to finish by simply saying that the amendment as moved by the leader of the New Democratic party, taken in conjunction with the very telling attack he made on the Prime Minister this morning, makes good sense; and if it had read:

We regret that Your Excellency's advisers have indicated their intention——and we understood this in accordance with his speech—

—without consulting parliament—

—and this is the nub of the matter—

—of acquiring nuclear arms for Canadian forces, thereby lessening the chances for nuclear disarmament and increasing the danger of nuclear war.

—then the subamendment is not unacceptable because we think that parliament has been affronted and its rights derogated by the action as announced by the Prime Minister.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. gentleman would permit me to ask him one question?

Mr. Churchill: Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: My question is this: if the government is not now consulting parliament what does the hon. gentleman think the government is doing?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, we appreciate the kindness of the house leader and the members of the government in permitting us, the people on this side of the house, to move amendments and discuss those amendments. If they wish to consider this a form of consultation, well we will have to accept temporarily their interpretation, but if they continue to consider that this is consultation they will not last very long.

(Translation):

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): I should like first of all to congratulate you on your appointment to the office of chairman of committees of the house and of Deputy Speaker. I also extend my best wishes to Mr. Speaker himself.

I also wish to congratulate the mover and the seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne, as well as the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lamontagne) who, by getting himself elected as member for Outremont-St. Jean, has accomplished the most remarkable feat of his career.

I should like to take this opportunity to speak about my riding of Quebec-Montmorency and to point out that in the 1962 election, there were 12 candidates, while in April 1963, there were at least nine. This shows that Quebec-Montmorency is somewhat active in the field of politics.

I also wish to say a few words about certain industries of my riding which are faced with difficulties at present. For instance, the shipyard of St. Laurent, on the island of Orleans, which can build various kinds of ships is on the point of closing down because certain contracts that it could carry out have not yet been passed.

There is also the case of the employees of Valcartier arsenals and of the C.A.R.D.E., who wonder whether they will keep their jobs long, in view of the present circumstances.

Certain postal employees also often make representations to me with regard to their working hours, salary rates as well as other difficulties they encounter.

Finally, I wish to say a few words about veterans, several of whom asked me if it would be possible to receive old age pensions at the age of 65, without any means test as well as an increase of their regular veterans' pensions.

We have heard earlier about the election campaign. Someone hinted that the party now in power had received certain amounts of money. It was said that it had carried out propaganda, which if it was not untrue, was at least rather remote from the truth.

I have here some newspaper clippings, one being from L'Action dated April 4, containing a Canadian Press dispatch, which I quote:

> All parties, except the Liberals have reduced their publicity budgets.

Certain publicity methods have been employed which have elicited derogatory comments on the part of the very persons who were being quoted. I have here an article published in the Sherbrooke Tribune dated Wednesday, April 3, 1963, in which Father Bouvier denounces the use of his name and the opinions credited to him.

That is why I was very disappointed to learn that certain of my colleagues were throwing themselves wholeheartedly in the arms of people who had used such methods.

I should like now to comment on the international situation which seems to be in the foreground of the present time.

We should not forget that we are now living through and now witnessing a test of strength between east and west. It should not be forgotten also that the eastern group, ideologically speaking, is closely tied to its doctrine of atheistic materialism, while such is not the case with the western forces. So, I think we should identify ourselves a bit more with the anti-atheistic materialism doctrine by recognizing God as the object of our endeavours. Nor should we forget that the eastern powers use their economic system to make their ideology acceptable to underdeveloped countries.

As for us, we have always based our ideological policy on the restrictions imposed by our economic system. That is why Social Credit has constantly favoured an economic policy in keeping with the democratic system we wish to extend to all people on earth.

There is a lot of talk about nuclear weapons, to such an extent that the people of Canada, that of Quebec included, of which I am a representative, finally realize once again that the old-line parties are treating them with scorn most of the time and may change their mind. One wonders if it is not simply a question of taking over the government and of using arguments with which to win elections.

Most people today are inclined to believe that the question of nuclear arms is beyond discussion. There are some who are 100 per cent for, other who are 100 per cent against. It is said that the matter cannot be discussed. Be that as it may, it seems to me that we have here a complex problem the solution to which does not meet with unanimous approval.

Consequently, I should like to recall historical facts, the better to put ourselves in the picture, as I myself can see it.

At the end of what has been called the "Japanese war", the damages wrought by the atomic bomb were revealed to the public at large. The United States of America alone held the secret of atomic power. But Russia was not to remain far behind. With the assistance of spies, as the Gouzenko affair clearly revealed, they soon made up for lost time and perfected a bomb just as powerful as the one which was exploded over Hiroshima. Thus, a second giant was born which was a true match for the first one.

In the following years, the present Prime Minister used his influence to play a role which was later described as a mission of peace. At the time, he was trying to put across the following theory: The United States remained the great defenders of democracy. They were to increase their assistance to underdeveloped countries and, consequently, the American policy was the only one which could save the rest of the world from Soviet domination. That is still true today.

Then, in 1957, Canada gave a new direction to its foreign policy. Having never been too enthusiastic about the colonial powers and having never associated itself with capitalism, our aim was to take advantage of the situation and to stress the great prestige our country enjoyed considering its relatively small population to promote a policy of neutrality. Canada strived to convert the uncommitted countries of the world to form a group of neutral states which would stand up against the adoption of nuclear weapons.

While Castro fed Cuba to the Russian bear, Canada succeeded in winning the uncommitted countries to the idea of forming an association.

Thus, our country made quite a reputation for itself by its action among the new states, first to spread the American policy and then to unite the uncommitted countries for the maintenance of peace outside the sphere of influence of the two nuclear giants.

At the very moment when Canada was carrying on its work as a mediator, it decided to accept defensive nuclear weapons. Canada had to meet her obligations towards NORAD and NATO. Faced with this fact, the Canadian government had to make its decisions public, while safeguarding its interests as much as possible from the electoral point of view. With typical indecision, the Conservative government chose to remain on tne fence. The present Prime Minister expressed himself categorically. Canada should not become one day a nuclear power.

I have here the Liberal program of 1962 from which I shall quote a few excerpts:

For instance, Bomarc missiles are useless without nuclear warheads; on the other hand, their effectiveness is so doubtful that the previous government refused to equip them with such warheads. A new Liberal government would avoid such indecision and such costly wastefulness. It will not venture into projects entailing heavy expenditures and abandon them later on by refusing to purchase the weapons they require.

That was the Liberal program of 1962, and here is what we find further on:

In the light of current data, the defence policy of a new Liberal government will not require Canada to become a nuclear power through the manufacture, acquisition or use of nuclear weapons, whether under Canadian or American control.

This is again the Liberal program of 1962, bearing the picture of the present Prime Minister.

The socialists have also stated clearly where they stand. I am not speaking of the party itself, but of socialism in general. They are positively against nuclear arms. They even suggest complete disarmament to the United States and, apparently, the same suggestion is to be made a little later on to the Soviet union. There is then no compromise possible as far as they are concerned. It was said earlier, of course, following the statement of the Prime Minister, that both groups should not be too closely identified.

I have here an excerpt from the March 20, 1963 issue of the Moncton Transcript, where I find the following:

(Text):

Leslie Morris, leader of the Canadian communist party, said Tuesday night that party members across the country are being urged to actively "support, work for and help finance" the campaigns of the New Democratic party candidates in the federal election campaign.

(Translation):

This is what is said further on:

(Text):

Mr. Morris said strong N.D.P. representation in parliament is the best guarantee that nuclear arms will not be brought into Canada.

(Translation):

I have here a statement made by Mr. Leslie Morris, secretary general of the Canadian communist party, where he says the following:

We beg of you, in the interests of peace and of our country, to vote in the House of Commons, against the adoption of nuclear arms.

And we know that the Canadian communist party is doing much more for other countries than for ours. Furthermore, in this statement, the rejection of nuclear arms is requested.

A great number of voters refused to accept the Liberal platform regarding nuclear arms, devotedly subservient to Kennedy.

And, finally it is said in that circular letter:

Peace, national security and the life of each one of us will be endangered if we accept Kennedy's nuclear plans.

This means, Mr. Speaker, that the situation is not as simple as we are led to believe.

The election takes place, the sessions run their course, and the government cannot explain clearly its defence policy. And then the present Prime Minister goes to the United States. We know what happened there. Apparently he met with General Norstad. Following that interview he seems to have suddenly reversed his policy. Canada, it seems, must have nuclear warheads. He seems to be prepared to play again the part of the United States' emissary, consisting precisely in advocating the policy of our friends to the south and to become the non-official spokesman of the state department, which itself considered not without interest the possibility that the non-committed group might come round to its policy.

Then came the dissolution of both houses following the amendment everyone knows about. The present Prime Minister condemns again the adoption of nuclear arms while insisting that our commitments towards the United States must be fulfilled. Obviously, it is an admission that, in spite of his opposition to nuclear arms, he wants Canada to acquire them.

Speaking of commitments reminds me, for instance, of parents who would have been foolish enough to give rifles to their children and who would be even more so, in my opinion, if they were to give them also bullets to put in them.

The stand I take, along with many thousands of people in Quebec, is a little difficult to state clearly because that question is made up of so many facts.

We must, more than ever, be ready to fight communism, whether on the military or the ideological level. And, at this stage, I am happy to note that the United States are strong enough to challenge the U.S.S.R. in the field of atomic weapons. We will, therefore, morally support that country in its determination to stop the spread of the communist dictatorship in the world.

But—because there is a but—when the former government, after rejecting the Avro-105 program, decided to acquire Bomarc missiles, the President of the United States announced that the Bomarc missiles were obsolete, that they did not constitute, in any way, an effective weapon to stop or destroy enemy missiles carrying bombs of several megatons, in short, that our present means of defence have no value, and that the only possible "alternative" remains pure and simple offensive, and that is what the United States are capable of doing, I would imagine.

In the light of those new facts, and when one thinks of the huge sums of money uselessly spent on a defence system as ineffective as it is obsolete, one can declare oneself against nuclear arms and even ready to fight against the acquisition of such weapons.

Obviously, our low money reserves cannot be wasted. On the contrary, we must use them wittingly in order to help Canada fight unemployment, invest money to fight unemployment and also to help the underdeveloped countries who are waiting for our assistance to throw themselves in our arms instead of seeking help from our enemies.

I do not want to speak longer on the question of nuclear arms. Nevertheless that explains, I think, the various positions taken by different groups. Moreover, I think that we must take everything into consideration before reaching a decision, whatever it is. In my opinion, we cannot settle this question by saying yes or no, as have already done certain irresponsible persons. We must be familiar with all the facts related to the question.

The speech from the throne also mentions the question of bilingualism and also, indirectly, that of biculturalism. In my opinion, before setting up a commission, maybe the government should start by giving the house completely bilingual stationery, whether it is for a French or an English speaking member. I am of the opinion that if all the Commons stationery was printed in both languages, that would be at least a relatively official acknowledgement of the intention that the French language is to be officially recognized.

And when one knows that the President of the Privy Council is the one that will see to the application of these measures, one is entitled to wonder, allowance being made for the past and all respect due to him, if he is still in favour of centralization and if he is still advocating the taxation equalization system he himself invented with the help of a few associates. It is necessary that the autonomy of all provinces be recognized at any price and that the taxation means they need be given back to them.

The speech from the throne mentions the creation of a sort of municipal development bank. Of course this measure, if it is enacted, it will have to take into account provincial rights and privileges. May I point out to the house that nowadays the provinces are less cramped by their lack of funds than by the interest they have to pay on borrowed money. I have here a newspaper article, which appeared in L'Événement of Quebec on March 19, 1963; it states that in the sole province of Quebec, the debenture debt of municipalities amounts to $1 billion.

I think—as the Liberals themselves seemingly thought not so long ago—that only a debt-free money system can really help the municipal governments.

As for unemployment, we are not given too many details about what is going to be done in order to check it.

I remember that in 1958, the present President of the Privy Council, who tried desperately to put the Liberal party back into power, advocated a method which seems quite acceptable to the Social Credit party and which consists in a six-month period of fiscal exoneration which means that, during a period of six months, no taxes will be deducted at the source, as he said at that time, in order to give immediate purchasing power to the people, whereas public works can only be a long term solution.

Incidentally, I think that during the last election, the Liberals have shown that they did have a solution for the unemployment problem: it would be to hold an election for 12 months every year, because, during those campaigns they always had enough money at their disposal and employed very many people.

Another provision which would be very popular in some districts would be the elimination of receipts for charitable donations, which creates many difficulties when preparing income tax returns.

The speech from the throne refers to the redistribution of electoral districts. I hope that this task will be accomplished in a spirit of justice, and taking into account the various categories of citizens and social strata which are represented in this house.

Now, a brief reference to Labrador. I think that this territory should be given back to the province of Quebec. I know that this matter is the core of a very difficult issue. But for a government which claims it can do so much in 60 days of decision, it should be easy to give back to Quebec the Labrador territory which belongs to it.

I should also like to call the attention of the government to the fact that a certain form of socialism has crept into the civil service without its knowledge, I suppose. I received letters from employees of the Post Office Department saying that even in Russia, a treatment like the one experienced by those employees would not be tolerated. I suppose that some pressures could be exerted on the people concerned to make life a little easier for the post office employees. Someone even observed to me lately that some post office employees had enjoyed a holiday on the Queen's birthday while some others were not allowed the same privilege. Surely, something is not working properly in that department.

I would like now to make a suggestion to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier). We are told that a new penitentiary will be built. It is obvious that the province of Quebec and other areas need penitentiaries because there are laws and there are people who break the law. Instead of building a large penitentiary I would suggest that one be erected in the Montreal area and another in the Quebec city area. I do not imply that we should only build some in the city of Montreal or Quebec but simply in the neighbourhood of both those cities in order to reduce the hardship of those who have to go there.

I hope that this minority government will show that it is prepared to accept suggestions from the opposition parties which, even though they are sitting across the aisle, may have some rational ideas. The whole nation hopes to get real action from this government.

(Text):

Mr. Gerald A. Regan (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, upon this occasion of my first speech delivered in this house I should like to congratulate you upon your elevation to your high office. I am sure that the voices of approval of so many hon. members on both sides of this house properly express the unanimity of opinion upon your appointment. I would also take this occasion to extend to the mover and seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne congratulations on the fine jobs they have done.

I come from the historic constituency of Halifax, in the province of Nova Scotia, where we have some of the finest institutions of higher learning to be found in the nation. This is attested to by the fact that expatriate Nova Scotians have over the years held a disproportionate number of high positions in government, commerce and education, not only throughout this nation but also in the United States. My constituency comprises the cities of Dartmouth and Halifax, and the county of Halifax, with a total population in the vicinity of 225,000. Mr. Speaker, we are one of the two remaining dual constituencies in Canada, and I am proud to represent, along with my colleague, the fine people of that area. I might say, Mr. Speaker, that I am proud to be associated, in representing that constituency, with the mayor of Halifax, a man who has worked tirelessly and ably for the betterment of that city.

As a freshman member sitting on this side of the house I was greatly encouraged by the contents of the speech from the throne. Coming from an area which has contributed much to confederation but has never received a full share of prosperity from confederation, I was enormously encouraged by the expressed intention of this government to make the Atlantic development board a vital work force. The funds allocated to this board give it the potential to materially aid the economy of the Atlantic region. This is a vast improvement over the role in which the previous administration had cast this body. The former government made it only an advisory board without funds, capable only of making recommendations to the government, a role which the Atlantic provinces economic council, informally at least, was carrying out already along with its other duties, and doing so with personnel at least equally able. I was pleased to see recognition in the speech from the throne of unemployment as a problem which must be faced. Under the former administration there was an unwillingness to admit that unemployment was an existing problem. I was also pleased to notice the intention to establish a department of industry with an area development agency, because this is of great importance to Nova Scotia. I am confident that this government will use these tools to improve the economic level of the maritime provinces.

There seems today to be a new willingness across the country to recognize the need for special measures to aid the development of areas which have lagged in industrial growth for one or more reasons. Nova Scotia is such an area. As Nova Scotians, we are proud to be part of confederation; but never let it be forgotten that Nova Scotia has suffered much because of confederation. Our national trade lines have been altered and indeed obliterated by the tariff policies which were necessary to develop industry in central Canada. In my constituency, despite disadvantages we have made great strides. We have grown in size and enterprise to the point that we have created an immediate market which will attract and which has attracted many companies to establish plants to serve this market.

One of the principal cornerstones of our progress has been the existence as a vital part of our economy of the port of Halifax. The largest industry of our constituency has since the building of the railway link with Quebec and Ontario shortly after confederation been our port business in the role of handling goods shipped from or to central Canada, in the winter months. Indeed, the establishment of Halifax as a national winter port for this purpose was one of the main considerations which enticed Nova Scotia to come into confederation. This historic role of Halifax as a national winter port was recognized by the federal government many years ago in the establishment of extensive port facilities.

However, Mr. Speaker, successive freight rate increases since world war II, the use of American ports to ship Canadian goods and the ever-increasing volume of winter traffic on the St. Lawrence has adversely affected our port business, so that despite the natural growth of Canada our total import and export tonnage in the port of Halifax has been static or has decreased during the past six years. The competitive position of the port of Halifax has been upset by the new and large subsidies given to competitive areas in recent years. It is true that these subsidies were of an indirect type. The building of the St. Lawrence seaway was such a subsidy to the lake ports. The use of ice-breakers each at a cost of $13,000 a day, just to operate, on the St. Lawrence to lengthen the shipping season to Montreal is a new subsidy for the port of Montreal. Dredging at federal government expense in the St. Lawrence is yet another subsidy to the St. Lawrence.

(Translation):

In Nova Scotia, Mr. Speaker, we follow with interest and we admire and approve the desires of the people of Quebec to improve their situation in the confederation. We always support movements in this direction.

Nevertheless, I am sure that the representatives of this great province, who sit on both sides of the house, will recognize that Nova Scotia has been even less favoured by this same confederation.

Like all Canadians, Mr. Speaker, they acknowledge the need for regional development and they know that Nova Scotia needs help for its development because of the disadvantages of its geographical situation.

Therefore, I am sure that all Canadians will support a review of railway rates so that the Halifax harbour may remain competitive considering the development of winter navigation on the St. Lawrence river.

I am confident that the trade expansion of Canada will permit to increase the volume of shipping so as to make full use of the port facilities of the maritime provinces and on the St. Lawrence.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, I am calling for the recognition of the vital importance of winter shipping for Halifax.

(Text):

After hearing Halifax French, Mr. Speaker, there may be some question whether my colleagues of the French language still want people in other parts of Canada to attempt to speak it. In these days of giant government deficits perhaps our nation should fully utilize the port facilities readily available for winter shipping rather than spend vast sums to clear ports normally clogged by ice in the winter months. Perhaps this is an unnecessary expense causing our national investment in winter port facilities to be wasted and not used.

We have in Halifax the best year-round, natural, deep-water, ice-free port in the world. The finest port facilities have been established there and it is indeed false economy to abandon this winter port, giving rise to the need of some form of vast new federal aid to our area when we can move toward prosperity on our own, through full utilization of our port.

But, Mr. Speaker, we know that progress cannot be stopped, and if there is to be winter navigation on the St. Lawrence then I am sure that all hon. members will agree that we must have a new look at the railway freight rates applicable to goods imported or exported through maritime ports. I would urge the Minister of Transport (Mr. McIlraith) to establish a commission to investigate the effect of the seaway and of winter navigation in the St. Lawrence on the economy of the maritimes. I would expect that such a commission would revise the applicable freight rates to restore the competitive position of our port, because if that competitive position is restored we in Halifax with our ice-free port are willing to meet competition at any time. For every dollar spent by way of new subsidy to our competitors along the St. Lawrence, let us see a dollar spent by way of transportation subsidy on goods being shipped to or from Halifax.

I should like to say a word or two, Mr. Speaker, with regard to the recently announced pay increases and other improvements for the men of the armed forces. Canada has been able to build an effective volunteer army, navy and air force in the past by offering to the young men of our nation a career in the services which was attractive. It has managed to retain them in the forces by keeping conditions attractive. It has thus kept their morale high. This, many feel, has been far more satisfactory than a system of peacetime conscription but if we are to have our present system we must pay for it. Naturally we must continue to make service life attractive to our young people.

For this reason and because pay increases and other adjustments for our servicemen were long overdue, I hail this government measure as one of the real accomplishments of the first 60 days. These improvements were long overdue. The previous administration had neglected the men of the forces and had thus started to affect the morale of many servicemen.

Coming from the constituency which contains the principal base of the Royal Canadian Navy, I particularly want to say on behalf of the men of the navy that this was a step in the right direction. I am confident that under the able direction of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer) the navy will be equipped with the best and most modern weapons and that the welfare of the servicemen will at all times be considered. While I am a member of this honourable house I will, whenever the occasion presents itself during consideration of any matter relevant to the navy, stand with pride and say that I speak for the men of the navy.

A very large amount of my practice as a lawyer, Mr. Speaker, has been devoted to management-labour relations and I have had the privilege, in conciliation, arbitration, certification and in court matters, to act for many of the large unions of our nation. As one who has been very close to and very interested in the welfare of the working man, I want to say that I am extremely grateful for the support which many trade unionists gave me in the recent election. I think they too will find much in the speech from the throne which will increase their support for the new administration. After six years in which many of their problems were neglected and during which the government of the day refused to recognize unemployment as a problem, I feel that we are in for a wholesome and welcome change. I said earlier that the new government in the throne speech has already recognized unemployment as a problem, and I want to say that in my area it is a serious problem because for every person who is unemployed in Ontario there are more than two unemployed, in relation to population, in the province of Nova Scotia.

On the general subject of labour I also want to commend the government on its commitment made during the election campaign that a system of collective bargaining for civil servants will be established. I trust and I fully expect that this system of collective bargaining will also include the so-called prevailing rates employees, because in the past there have been many abuses with regard to the rights of prevailing rates employees and also, of course, of civil servants.

I will be particularly interested, Mr. Speaker, in seeing the pattern of collective bargaining which is outlined in subsequent government legislation and the type of arbitration which is to be implemented in the event that the bargaining parties fail to agree.

Mr. Speaker, I note by the clock that it is six o'clock.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Regan: Mr. Speaker, before the dinner recess I spoke of the need for assistance by way of the revision of the freight rates applicable on goods transported through the ports of Halifax and other maritime ports to offset the new indirect subsidies being given to the St. Lawrence area by the building of the St. Lawrence seaway and the use of ice-breakers in winter. I also complimented the administration upon the announced increases and other new benefits being given to the armed forces. I dealt with the question of collective bargaining for civil servants.

There is one other aspect of the speech from the throne upon which I should like to comment before returning to the question of the Atlantic development board. The subject to which I should like to refer is the expressed intention of the government to bring into effect the 12-mile fishing limit along the shores of our nation. The establishment of such a limit will end the disgraceful situation in which foreign fishermen are able to exploit the riches of our inshore fisheries, while Canadian fishermen are limited by the 12-mile rule. This is a measure, Mr. Speaker, which will bring great satisfaction to the fishermen of my area, and is a very important conservation measure for the north Atlantic fisheries in these days of ever increasing trawler activity.

I might say that during the last election campaign some hon. members on the other side of the house from the Nova Scotia area said that this 12-mile limit could not be unilaterally established without causing a very serious rift in our relations with the United States. I can only conclude that hon. members based these statements upon the established ability of the government of that day to get into trouble in the field of foreign relations. I think they also underestimate the capacity of the new administration to diplomatically negotiate a matter of this sort.

May I express the hope that the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Robichaud), whom I compliment upon his recent appointment, will soon find the opportunity to explore the desirability of expanding the present system of federally operated bait and ice stations. This is a service that is presently limited to Newfoundland, and is one of the services taken over by Canada at the time Newfoundland entered confederation. The expansion of this program to Nova Scotia and other areas would be extremely beneficial and would encourage our fishermen. It would also provide employment in our fishing villages and encourage those who would like to go into the fishery but have hesitated to do so because of the lack of these facilities.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I should like for a moment to quote from this morning's edition of the Halifax Chronicle-Herald. I think there is a particularly illuminating and interesting editorial in that newspaper and I shall deal briefly with only one aspect of it concerning the increased use of the committees of this house. The Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) has already indicated that this will be forthcoming. I quote:

> More use should be made of the standing committees.
>
> All too often these are bypassed completely; instead, long and rambling discourses are given in the committee of the whole house. The external affairs committee, for example, did not meet once during the life of the last parliament.
>
> If the government would send more of its important legislation to the standing committee, and prevent prolonged debate at the report stage, a considerable amount of duplicate discussion would be avoided.

I applaud this sentiment, Mr. Speaker, and I am pleased to see that there is an indication from the Prime Minister that this will be done.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I should like to return to the question of the Atlantic development board, a matter which is of great concern to the maritime provinces. As I indicated earlier in my remarks, there was disappointment at the time the Atlantic development board was appointed when the former administration made it only an advisory board and largely a duplicate of the work of APEC. Yesterday the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) indicated that he is opposed to the expansion of the Atlantic development board from five members to eleven members. I want to say that I feel the Leader of the Opposition is in error in this view, and that such expansion of the board could not help but be very beneficial, particularly in view of the fact that the five-man board as constituted does not contain any representative from labour. The board, as constituted by the previous administration, does not contain any representative of Acadian culture. Oh, it is true there is a gentleman by the name of Mr. Lalonde who lives in Moncton at the present time but I understand he is temporarily stationed in the maritimes and comes originally from Sherbrooke, Quebec. There are other areas and other aspects of the maritime economy which certainly should be represented on this board, particularly in view of the fact that the present chairman of the board is a comparative newcomer to the maritimes and to this country. Perhaps this might be an added reason for having a broader representation on this particular board.

May I, then, as a new member in this house state my approval of the speech from the throne and my appreciation of the portions therein which directly affect my constituency? May I say that it is a privilege to be associated in this house with hon. members from all four parties?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I thought I had completed anything that I had to say during the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne. During the course of my remarks I stated that I intended to deal with the defence problem at the appropriate time, which I considered would be the occasion when the motion to set up a committee on defence was being discussed. However, in view of the turn of events that occurred through the moving of the subamendment by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas), I find it necessary to speak again.

In view of some of the statements made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), I propose to deal in general with the problem of defence so far as it relates to the question of nuclear weapons. I will also refer to the subamendment and give a general indication as to the reasons for the stand the official opposition intends to take upon the subamendment. We meet here at a time when the nations of NATO are gathered in ministerial council to discuss the present and future of that organization which is the bulwark of our defence and the only assurance of our survival. This is a matter I dealt with at length prior to the defeat of my government in early February, and what I shall do now is deal with some of the subsequent events, some of the changes of viewpoint which have come to light in the government of today in its discharge of the responsibilities of office.

I am sure all who heard the former minister of defence speak this afternoon were impressed by the cogency of the arguments advanced by him and by the manner in which he placed the facts before the house, as they are and were. What I intend to do is review in some detail the changes of viewpoint on the part of ministers of the government, something of the gyromancy displayed this afternoon by the Prime Minister, and the changes of viewpoint on the part of the Liberal party. Indeed in this matter, while they would endeavour to lead the house to believe that their's has been the course of decision and definiteness, I doubt whether in the history of any parliament there has ever been seen such changes of viewpoint on the part of responsible members of the House of Commons, members in the Liberal party, as they have been blown about by the political winds, by special pressures, or even by visits across the border.

As to the last reference I intend to call as my witness the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer). He has given his reasons for that sudden change of front by the Liberal party when, on the 12th day of January last, at Scarborough, the party that had stood against nuclear arms suddenly did an about turn. Indeed, sir, the conversion of Saul en route to Damascus could not be compared with the complete change of viewpoint of the Liberal party.

One can understand changes of viewpoint providing they are based on circumstances that demand a change of viewpoint. But, when I last spoke in this chamber on the subject of defence and said that the techniques of defence were changing, that view was ridiculed by the opposition front bench. Yet today, in the Globe and Mail there is a report which reads as follows:

> Missiles on Mind, NORAD trims SAGE—The electronic eyes and ears of North American air defence against aircraft are gradually being reduced as the main threat of enemy attack switches from bombers to intercontinental missiles.

That is a proposition I placed before the house and the country on more than one occasion, and that view has been underlined and emphasized today in this press report which goes on to say:

> The Pentagon estimates bombers will remain a prime threat for several years, but the growth of the Soviet missile force—with no indication of any large new increase in bomber production—has caused Pentagon planners to rush more effort on missile defences.
>
> Thus, the semi-automatic ground environment system is marked for a thinning out. Conceived in the early 1950's and built at a cost of about $3,700,000,000, this network of giant electronic computers linked with huge radars was designed to detect approaching enemy bombers and alert interceptors and local missile forces—including Bomarcs—directing them into positions to destroy the enemy.

So, there has been a change or an alteration, and this question of nuclear weapons is one, as I stated in January last, that should be decided by the members assembled in parliament rather than decided by a group of ministers whose change of viewpoint has been kaleidoscopic in every way.

Mr. Speaker, you will remember how they poured contempt on us in 1959, 1960, 1961 and 1962 for ever considering agreement with the United States for provision of nuclear warheads against contingencies.

When I spoke on February 5 last I summarized what I felt was the proper course to follow, as reported at page 3440 of Hansard of that date, and I am going to quote what I said:

> It will be necessary, therefore, at this meeting in May—

—referring to the ministerial meeting of NATO—

> —for Canada to give consideration to this matter and we will, in co-operation with the nations of NATO, undertake a clarification of our role in NATO defence plans and disposition.

This afternoon, as the Prime Minister wrapped himself around the NATO organization I could not but agree with him, but I intend to review his views in this regard during those dark days of 1958 and 1959. Then he was not above emasculating NATO.

Mr. Speaker, there is no division of opinion among members of this house in their belief in the efficiency of NATO except a former member of the house who became a convert to Liberalism about 1962, a member from my own province, but he did not come back. What he said about NATO will have to remain embalmed in Hansard, for I do not intend to place it on the record again.

Mr. Woolliams: But it gave the Prime Minister some glee.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I went on to say:

> We are united in NATO. We have never and will never consent to Canada breaking any of her pledged words or undertakings.

That declaration stands today as it stood every day while we occupied the government benches. Then I referred to the meeting:

> It is at that meeting where there will be reviewed the entire collective defence policy, that we shall secure from the other member nations their views, and on the basis of that we will be in a position to make a decision, a consistent decision, first to maintain our undertakings and second to execute, if that be the view, the maintenance of our collective defence. In the meantime the training of Canadian forces in the use of these weapon systems can continue.

They said that was an indecisive action—and now they practice what they condemned on our part.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I also said this:

> Now, I say to the House of Commons this. After that meeting we shall bring this matter before parliament clearly, definitely and finally. I want to make that clear. There is no suggestion of any underhand agreements being entered into.

That was the declaration. That statement, in the light of subsequent events, was the proper stand to take. It is like the attitude taken by this government, after all these changes and tortuous journeyings, finally arriving at a policy and then denying this house the right to decide for itself whether or not that shall be the policy for Canada.

An hon. Member: Selling Canada short.

Mr. Diefenbaker: One begins to realize the meaningfulness of the subamendment. I wish there had been additional words in that subamendment. It reads:

> We regret that Your Excellency's advisers have indicated their intention of acquiring nuclear arms for Canadian forces, thereby lessening the chances for nuclear disarmament and increasing the danger of nuclear war.

However, over and over again in my years in this house members of political parties have determined their course not on the basis of the actual wording but on the interpretation placed thereon by the mover. The emphasis the leader of the New Democratic party placed on parliamentary control indicates the meaning of this subamendment to be, "We regret that Your Excellency's advisers have indicated their intention, without consulting parliament," and so on. That is the meaning I give to the subamendment, which represents, with those additional words which are to be implied, the stand that we in this party took. When speaking on behalf of this party on February 5 I stated that this matter would be brought directly before parliament. But you see what they are trying to do now. They are going to enter into agreements. They are going to acquire nuclear weapons. That was not the original idea, but that is my interpretation of what the Prime Minister said today.

On the other hand, in order to be fair I should quote the words of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer), who unfortunately is not in the house tonight. I understand fully the reason; he is attending important meetings where questions of defence are being decided. What interpretation did he give of the course to be taken by this government? On April 24 there was a Canadian Press dispatch headed", "Won't commit Canada to anything—Hellyer". Mr. Speaker, that was in the second day of decision. If you look back over the history of the creation of the world you will find what was done on the second day. But on the second day the Minister of National Defence, as usual, made one of his ex parte declarations, declarations that are either meaningful or meaningless. Knowing his responsibility I have no hesitation in paying my tribute to their meaningfulness. What did he say? He said:

> Defence minister Hellyer said Tuesday night a nuclear agreement with the United States would be "a permissive agreement" which would not commit Canada "to anything".

But that was not the attitude of the Prime Minister today. We want to find out what the result of this will be. He said on the C.B.C. television program "Inquiry" that with a permissive agreement "we do not bind ourselves to any specific action". What is this, Mr. Speaker? Is it a dialectic game? We would not commit ourselves to anything, he said. He spoke to the reporters immediately afterwards. It is always well to see them afterwards and give them the benefit of what you meant when you said something different. This report reads:

> On Monday Mr. Hellyer told reporters immediately after being sworn into the new Liberal cabinet that he expected a Canada-United States nuclear custody-and-control agreement would be signed in about a month and that the nuclear warheads would be made available to Canadian forces six months after that at a maximum.

You pay your money and you take your choice. By their words you shall know them. What did he say on September 12, 1961, as reported at page 8231 of Hansard?

> For this reason—

He was dealing with the question of Bomarcs:

> —we continue to believe that it is not worth while to put Canada into the atomic club—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, today there was a play on words on the part of the Prime Minister, who pretended that when he spoke of nuclear clubs and atomic clubs he meant the production within any country or the exclusive use and control within any country of nuclear weapons. Nothing of the kind. The definition is clear:

> —it is not worth while to put Canada into the atomic club, into the group of atomic nations, when the advantage of having atomic weapons on Canadian soil is so negligible.

Then he said:

> We reserve the right to reassess this position if at any time in the future the west should be successful in developing a really effective anti-missile missile. That would change the picture considerably. At the present time, however, there is none and we are basing our policy on the facts as they exist.

Well, we have not been effective in that direction. We have tried but, unfortunately, without success. Mr. Speaker, the facts have not changed since September 12, 1961, in that regard.

I intend to deal, now, with our attitude in general. I say immediately that there are and were no commitments on the part of Canada to accept nuclear weapons. And, Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt that since taking office hon. gentlemen opposite, busy as they are in these days of decision, have searched with microscopic care. They have searched but they have not found. Now they change their story and say that if there was no agreement one was implied in the acceptance of two Bomarcs on Canadian soil.

An hon. Member: What about the Voodoo?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I shall deal with that in a moment. Now I shall go back a little because—remember this—the whole basis of the argument put forward by the Prime Minister is that in 1959, on February 20, I made an undertaking, a commitment, on behalf of Canada. So he knew it. He cannot have it both ways. If he is right, he must have known since 1959 that there was a commitment. Yet, knowing there was a commitment, as he now says based on my remarks in the house at that time, he and those associated with him did everything they could in order to prevent Canada having nuclear weapons. They did not find this out in 1963. They did not find it when the light shone on the Prime Minister of today at Scarborough in January. They knew it from the time I spoke, they say, on February 20, 1959. I mentioned our stand at that time. I shall not quote it because it has already been quoted. I followed that stand throughout the years under repeated questioning from the opposition of that period. On January 18, 1960, I said:

> Canada's stand might be summarized in this way: eventually Canadian forces may require nuclear weapons if those forces are to be kept effective. We cannot change the principle of United States ownership—they have taken a firm stand in this regard—but there shall be Canadian control of use in Canada. I want to make it absolutely clear that nuclear weapons will not be used by Canadian forces except as the Canadian government may decide and in the manner approved by the Canadian government. Canada retains its full freedom of choice and decision.

Then, later on, on February 9 of the same year I said:

> I might add that if and when Canada does acquire nuclear weapons it would be in accordance with her own national policies and with our obligations under the North Atlantic treaty.

Then on July 4, 1960—I do not want to fill the record up except to show in this way the consistency of our stand—I said:

> On the one hand we are desirous of attaining disarmament. On the other hand we have to discharge our responsibility of ensuring to the maximum degree the security of the Canadian people. In so far as the discussions are concerned the responsibility must necessarily be that of the Minister of National Defence whose officers meet with their corresponding numbers in the United States and place before them the stand taken by the Canadian government, which is of the essence of any possible agreement in the future, namely, that if and when—

Over and over again I have said this.

> —the Canadian government should decide to equip its forces with nuclear weapons those weapons will be under Canadian control and would be used in Canada only as a result of a decision by the Canadian government.

Later on, on a number of occasions, the same question was raised. It was raised on November 30, 1960, when my answer was:

I simply say that the position of Canada is completely unchanged. We have made it perfectly clear that when and if nuclear weapons are acquired we shall not accept them unless we have joint control and there has been no suggestion at any time of any watering down or diminution of that stand.

I come, now, to September 20, 1961, when I said this:

As was made clear during the discussion of the defence estimate we have also equipment which will enable the use of defensive nuclear weapons should the government decide that these are required in the interest of national security... The government does not wish any decision it may take in this matter to impede in any way the substantial progress which may be possible in disarmament or limitation on the spread of nuclear weapons to the independent control of countries not already having them.

Again, on February 20, 1962, I said:

But should it be decided in the light of Canadian armament needs and defence responsibilities that nuclear weapons are to be had at any time, joint control is of the essence of the stand we have taken.

That has been our stand throughout. In 1963, on January 25, I said:

We will negotiate with the United States so that, as I said earlier, in case of need nuclear warheads will be made readily available.

Never at any time was an undertaking to accept nuclear weapons made by the government of Canada, and this was made clear by the former secretary of state for external affairs.

The argument advanced is this: if you have Bomarcs you must have nuclear warheads. In January the state department released that document which, in the light of events, must now be recognized by those who produced it as constituting a most improper course of action. In that release it was stated that the Bomarc B was not designed to carry any conventional warhead. Mr. Speaker, apparently the Pentagon does not let the state department know all of the facts, because what is stated there in that document is in conflict with the 1961 edition of the United States Air Force ROTC Air University Training Manual which states on page 397 that the Bomarc can carry either a conventional high explosive or a nuclear warhead. While the department of state said the Bomarc B cannot carry a non-nuclear warhead, certain information offered by the headquarters of the North American air defence command in the spring of 1961 when putting out the NORAD story for the benefit of the press is most significant. This is what it said at page 12:

Among the surface to air missiles used by NORAD, the Bomarc has the longest reach. The initial model, which became operational in 1959, can reach out 200 miles to strike down attacking aircraft. The advanced version Bomarc B has a range of more than 400 miles and is slated for use in Canada as well as the U.S. Bomarcs can be equipped with either high-explosive or nuclear warheads.

That was the view of NORAD in the spring of 1961 of Bomarc B.

In September 1961 John Laurence Kuter, commander in chief of the North American air defence command, mentioned the Bomarc in a speech at the Canadian international air show in Toronto. He said that it was a supersonic missile which could operate over a range of 400 miles from a very low altitude up to 70,000 feet. This is with regard to Bomarc B. He said it could be launched within two minutes of the alerting time and could be armed with either a conventional or a nuclear warhead.

Where is the implied agreement to accept nuclear warheads? Our position consistently was to negotiate and endeavour to arrive at an agreement that would preserve the sovereignty of Canada, so that in the event that the international situation became serious or critical we would be in a position to utilize nuclear weapons for the defence of North America.

What has been the attitude of the members of this government? They have made a complete circle. They took one view one year, and then suddenly that change of heart. We know now why there was a change of heart. Again the Minister of National Defence, speaking in Vancouver, said that the present Prime Minister had met with some armed forces representatives in the United States and that they had convinced him or had led him to believe that something would have to be done. I will return to that at an appropriate time.

Now I intend to refer to the Prime Minister and to follow him in what I have referred to as his gyrations while occupying the position of leader of the opposition. In August of 1958 he said, according to Hansard, that the Bomarc should be equipped with a nuclear warhead. That was his stand in August of 1958. In July 1959 he supported the arming of Canadian forces in Europe with tactical nuclear weapons. He stated that the minister of national defence would know that tactical nuclear weapons had now been reduced to the point where they could be used by small formations against purely military targets; that they were conventional in the sense that they were ordinary type weapons with nuclear ammunition. Then he went on to say that if these weapons were not used, NATO forces in Europe would be facing armies which had them and would not hesitate to use them. So the stand taken in 1958 was that NATO forces should be so equipped.

However, for some reason that I have never been able to understand, on January 18, 1960 he said—I am merely summarizing his words —that he had some reservations. He said that we should not accept what are sometimes called baby nuclear bombs for R.C.A.F. planes. He was referring to the strike reconnaissance role of the CF-104. In August 1960, again referring to the Bomarc, he said that he believed that in getting out of this position which he considered to be an ineffective one for Canada—meaning the Bomarc system—we would be rejecting the use by us of any form of nuclear weapons for what is mistakenly called the defence of our territory.

Mr. Speaker, why these changes? Why these sinuous turnings? Why these alterations in viewpoint? Then on that same day he confessed that his views had changed, compared with those he had outlined in July 1959. He summarized his position by saying that in addition to being against nuclear warheads for the Bomarc he did not support nuclear warheads for our forces in Europe. And he talks to us now about days of decisiveness with a strong, bold, imaginative government. Is this to be an example of what decisiveness means? He went on to say that Canada should categorically reject the proposition that our NATO forces should be equipped with nuclear weapons of any kind. When I listened to him today wrapping himself in the garments of perfection, he said to those on my left that they were dangerous in their view of NATO; that if the NATO forces of Canada did not have nuclear arms—which was what he advocated in 1959—that would be the end of NATO.

A year and a half went by. On January 9, 1961 the national Liberal rally took place in Ottawa. I made an error today when I asked the Prime Minister whether he had made a statement in the House of Commons on January 9 of that year regarding Canada becoming a nuclear power. That statement was not made in the House of Commons, it was made in Ottawa at that rally. He was even more emphatic then because he said that we should not acquire or use nuclear weapons under any kind of national or joint control.

Mr. Speaker, if anyone has got lost in trying to follow this course I can understand it. The Prime Minister said—and here I speak of the New Democratic party, which needs no defence on my part and is receiving none—that their view would destroy NATO. I ask him, when did this revelation come to him? That was not his view in 1961. Then he went on to say, and I can just hear him as he put all the force at his command into it, that a policy of strength and independence and of co-operation between allies does not require Canada herself to become a nuclear power. That is when he defined a nuclear power—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This is not the revised version of the 21st of May, 1963, the definition that what he meant by a nuclear power was that Canada would be in that category if she accepted any nuclear weapons either under national or joint control. He said that the policy does not require Canada to become a nuclear power and went on to say:

> Nor does it require Canada to continue her present role in NORAD which, among other things, would mean that Canadian forces would use nuclear weapons under single or dual control.

This is what he advocates today, dual control, and he spoke today as if this had always been his opinion. At this meeting in January, 1961, there was a resolution adopted in these terms:

> A new Liberal government should not acquire, manufacture or use such weapons—

—nuclear weapons—

> —under separate Canadian control or under joint U.S.-Canadian control.

He speaks of decisiveness. He prates of the necessity to be direct and definitive. I am sure the house and the country would like to know when the light finally came to rest upon him and made him recognize that the forceful arguments he was making in this house in 1959, 1960 and 1961 had no efficacy. Then he said this. The resolution said it; he did not:

> Under a new Liberal government Canada will withdraw from NORAD in so far as its present interceptor role is concerned.

What changed the thinking of the Prime Minister in the intervening days? It will be interesting to know, because today he would have the house and the country believe that he has always been completely dedicated, as he said, to NORAD and to joint defence.

> —Canada will withdraw from NORAD in so far as its present interceptor role is concerned. Liberal policy would, however, provide for an appropriate Canadian contribution to continental defence in co-operation with the U.S.A. The Canadian role in such defence should be that of detection, identification and warning.

An hon. Member: Bird watching.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Well, the falcon became the bird watcher. We ought to know, Mr. Speaker, the reason for these changes. That is what parliament wants to speak about. We want to know what the reasons were for these political peregrinations in thinking. Then the resolution went on to state:

> We would stop using our defence resources on interceptor fighter squadrons or on Bomarc missiles. There is no reason why Canada should participate in a role inappropriate to her circumstances.

Sir, I am sure the house realizes the need of having this problem discussed and determined by parliament. How do we know that the views of today may not be discarded tomorrow? We want to find out. Speaking to the annual banquet of the Ontario secondary school teachers federation in Toronto on January 21, 1961, the Prime Minister of today outlined Liberal defence policy, and he said this:

It is nonsense to say that nuclear weapons are necessary for this purpose.

The purpose being co-operation in defence with the United States.

So let's not get into this field at all.

You know, Mr. Speaker, he often speaks of baseball. He was certainly in the outfield then.

The role of surveillance for the R.C.A.F. in continental defence was one not only of great importance, but would also involve close co-operation with the United States. It would not, however, require us to use nuclear weapons in Bomarcs or in Canadian aircraft under national or even joint control.

He went on to say:

This is not, in my view, necessary or desirable for Canada as our part of continental air defences.

He knew then, Mr. Speaker, what the alleged undertaking was because he told us today that it was made by me in 1959. I ask him: Knowing that there was an undertaking, as he says today there was, why was he imploring us to evade our responsibility?

I come now to 1962. Prior to the general election of 1962 the Liberal party issued a pamphlet entitled, "The Liberal Program". Dealing with defence the pamphlet stated:

The defence policy of a new Liberal government will not require Canada to become a nuclear power by the manufacture, acquisition or use of nuclear weapons under Canadian or American control.

An hon. Member: 1962.

Mr. Diefenbaker: 1962, Mr. Speaker. He reads us a lecture today on the responsibilities of government. Yet as late as 1962, prior to the election of that year, knowing of the commitment, because he says the commitment was made by me in 1959 in a speech in the House of Commons, he and the Liberal party had decided that they would not require Canada to become a nuclear power by the use of nuclear weapons under Canadian or American control.

Mr. Monteith: How two-faced can you be?

An hon. Member: Where was Judy's truth squad then?

Miss LaMarsh: It is here now.

Mr. Pearson: While you are over there.

Mr. Woolliams: Where was the truth squad then?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I enjoy audience participation but I really do not need any help. All I have to be able to do is read what was said. This establishes once and for all, first, that they have not been able to find any undertaking between Canada and the United States in this regard.

Mr. Pearson: Why did you lose half your cabinet?

Mr. Diefenbaker: All they have been able to do is to quote from a statement made in 1959 which went no farther than subsequent statements, namely, that we would be in a position, if an agreement could be secured that would preserve Canadian sovereignty, to have nuclear weapons available.

Miss LaMarsh: Where is the member for Calgary North (Mr. Harkness)?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then, I want to refer to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer), and I dislike doing so in his absence, which is quite understandable. I was going to wait until a later opportunity presented itself. I have only been able to gather together a few of these items. If I had had more time, Mr. Speaker, this would have been a record of devious hypocrisy on the part of the Liberal party dating back to 1959.

I refer to the Minister of National Defence without any observations on what he said. I find his words on page 7567 of Hansard for August 4, 1960. If I may summarize these words before I quote them, he said no nuclear weapons for use on Canadian soil or in Canadian air space; scrap the plans to acquire the Starfighter for NATO. These were the remarks of the man who today is the Minister of National Defence. I will give you an explanation of the tremendous transformation and metamorphosis that took place in the thinking of hon. gentlemen opposite, and the explanation given by the Minister of National Defence. I quote now from Hansard where the present minister is dealing with North American defence.

Because of our belief that from the mid-sixties on there will be no possibility of effective air defence of the North American continent we can see no reason for continuing with the installation of equipment designed exclusively for that purpose. It is our contention, therefore, that the government should discontinue at once its participation in the SAGE-Bomarc system, and not proceed with the installation of radar gap fillers. These are only useful against attack by manned bombers. We contend that the possibility of attack during the next two or three years is not very great, and this is the only period during which these installations would be worth while. Interestingly enough, this would be the period during which they would be still under construction, not yet operational. By the time they are in place they will be obsolete, because by that time an all-out offence would involve the overwhelming use of missiles against which there is no defence.

Mind you, these are the words of one who has given thought and deep consideration to this problem. He said so. I continue to quote:

> Elimination of the SAGE-Bomarc system in Canada would eliminate the necessity for Canada storing or using atomic warheads on Canadian territory. The supersonic interceptors, which we would be acquiring under this arrangement, could be armed with conventional guided missiles such as the Sidewinder. There would then be no immediate question of extending control of atomic weapons to another power. I know that this is a matter of great concern, not only to us on this side of the house but to the government, the Prime Minister and to others.

There, in those words, he answers unequivocally the argument so often advanced that the interceptor that we secured would require to be armed with nuclear weapons. He said nothing of the kind, but that we need a conventional guided missile such as the Sidewinder.

Then, he dealt with NATO and I refer to page 7568 of Hansard of that date. I quote:

> I come now to NATO. At the time the NATO agreement was signed the objective was to build up in Europe a shield consisting of a substantial number of divisions armed with conventional weapons. Subsequently, however, at a time when the United States still had overwhelming superiority in atomic capability the NATO forces were reorganized along the lines dictated or at least rationalized by the theory of massive retaliation.

Then, later on the same page we find these words:

> With respect to the air division, we regret the decision of the government to re-equip on the basis of the strike attack role. Canada has not, in the past, contributed to the offensive potential in any way, and especially any nuclear potential. We feel that it is unnecessary and unwise to change this basic policy. Re-equipping the air division in this way creates a number of problems.

Then, he takes a strong and definite stand which remained the Liberal party's stand for over two years.

I should like also to refer, in order to answer the allegation of anti-Americanism so generously spread around, to what the Prime Minister said:

> It is not a defence, and in the nature of things I submit it cannot be a defence of our territory in the traditional sense of the word, and it will soon be no defence of anything.

He was dealing with the continental defence of North America by the Bomarc and interceptor aircraft.

> After all, this kind of defence is primarily a United States responsibility. It is the defence of the deterrent. We know how important that is; but it is a deterrent which is under the sole control of the United States of America.

How can one follow, Mr. Speaker, a mind that indulges in convolutions such as these in an endeavour to ascribe to us an attitude of vacillation, uncertainty and indecisiveness. Listen to these words:

> It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that our experience in the past three years has shown that in attempting to participate in continental defence in the way we have, we are becoming nothing more than just the last two knots on the Bomarc tail of the defence kite.

I can understand, Mr. Speaker, the silence on the government benches that greets revelations such as these. What a nerve for the Prime Minister to stand up and endeavour to point the finger of scorn at us. All through the piece there are these things. I think I have covered enough, even on this occasion, to indicate that the arguments of today are either without any basis in fact or that that change in thinking which occurred on January 12 could only have come about as a result of something having taken place across the line. No one knows what took place, although the Minister of National Defence did raise the curtain just a bit.

Here is what the Prime Minister said in November, 1961:

> If we join the nuclear club,—

And that is again having nuclear weapons in Canada under joint control or separate control.

> —Canada will be throwing away a great political asset, the asset of being a leader for world peace, for a very dubious mechanism. Its position at the United Nations would be ruined in the fight to stop nuclear arms. That's the next step.

Difficult as it is, Mr. Speaker, I ask you to follow this. Why was there a change, why the alterations? On March 30, 1962 the Toronto Star had this report:

> U.S. A-Base here not needed—Mike. Opposition Leader Pearson said yesterday he could see nothing in present circumstances to justify establishment of U.S. controlled nuclear bases on Canadian soil.

I ask the Prime Minister to tell the house and the country whether, during his discussions with the President of the United States did he or did he not agree to give favourable consideration for the United States of America to store nuclear weapons on American bases in Canada? There are two major United States bases within Canada, and I know the house and the country would like to know what has been considered in this regard.

When I occupied the responsible position of the Prime Minister, in this regard the attitude we took was that at all times Canada should maintain her sovereignty, always willing to co-operate, to do our part in collective defence, always maintaining that we within our country, and I emphasize those words, shall determine our course.

When did the resistance of the Liberal party get worn down? They resisted any suggestion of nuclear atomic weapons in Canada. Again I have to call on the Minister of National Defence as a witness. On September 12, 1961, as reported at page 8230 of Hansard he said:

> Now we are being prepared for the introduction of atomic arms into Canada.

I thought there had been a commitment on the basis of what I said in 1959, but not so according to the minister of defence. He added:

> The campaign to wear down the resistance in this house and in the country has begun. Speeches are being made by the Prime Minister and by the Minister of National Defence which lead us to believe that the introduction of these weapons is inevitable. The commander in chief of NORAD was brought to Toronto to make a speech which would frighten the Canadian people into submission.

Into submission to whom?

> At this point, Mr. Chairman, I think I should raise the question of the propriety of the Canadian government asking General Kuter to come and make a speech designed to do the government's political chores.

I am not going to make a reference to some other visits that have taken place. The present minister added:

> I think if the government has any policy in which it firmly believes, it should state the case and accept the responsibility without trying to palm it off on military officers.

We never tried to palm anything out on military officers, and we did not want to be palmed out either.

Then, as recorded at page 8231 of Hansard for September 12, 1961 the present minister said:

> Under these circumstances our Bomarc, even if it had any utility whatsoever, and our defence mechanisms other than warning and reconnaissance do not in fact protect the deterrent. They may do other things, but they do not accomplish this end. For this reason we continue to believe that it is not worth while to put Canada into the atomic club.

That is what they meant by the atomic club, and they spoke against it. Then he said this:

> —when the advantage of having atomic weapons on Canadian soil is so negligible. We reserve the right to reassess this position if at any time in the future the west should be successful in developing a really effective anti-missile missile.

You will pardon me, Mr. Speaker, if I refer again to the minister of defence. What did he say about the Bomarc? On October 31, 1960, speaking at Saint John he was reported in the Saint John Telegraph-Journal as follows:

> The outspoken M.P. for Toronto-Trinity said, "the Bomarc missile is about the most useless expense of money you can devise. The government might as well collect taxes and dump the money into Northumberland strait."

Mr. Speaker, the instrument that would have made Canada the last few knots on the tail—the value of it—was not worth dumping into the Northumberland strait, according to the Minister of National Defence, but now it is to be equipped with nuclear warheads. Oh, how they ridiculed us. I ask why the change? I suppose we will never know, but the Minister of National Defence gives quite a viewpoint on the subject. When he was asked in Vancouver how this great change, this vast metamorphosis, came about, he said:

> Lester Pearson advocated nuclear weapons for Canada because of new and vital information he received during the Cuban crisis. Paul Hellyer refused to say what the information was but he said Mr. Pearson realized he had to move immediately to save Canada's image within NATO and the United Nations.

What about the image of Canada in 1959 and 1960 and 1961, when the present Prime Minister, who had received the highest honour that could come to any Canadian internationally, the Nobel prize, who had occupied these high international positions, from day to day was castigating the government for daring to consider entering into an agreement that would have made possible the availability of nuclear weapons. The Vancouver report continues:

> Hellyer said the Liberal leader was informed by private U.S. military and NATO sources that Canada's integrity had dropped to an all-time low.

Where would Canada's integrity have been if we had followed the advice of the opposition in 1959, 1960 and 1961?

> "Washington was boiling," Hellyer said.

You can see the effervescence rise. "Washington was boiling"—boiling for what reason? Was it boiling because we dared to assert that in co-operation our sovereignty should be maintained. Referring to the Prime Minister the report continued:

> He was continually asked "What's wrong with Canada?" added Hellyer. Because of the grave situation Mr. Pearson felt Canada would have to take a positive stand in order to save her position of prestige.

I make no observation on that. Now, Mr. Speaker, I also want to read what the Minister of National Defence said. I have here an article written in the Toronto Telegram of September 20. I tell you, Mr. Speaker, that when they start turning author and writing articles, that is when difficulties arise. I point that out for the benefit of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon).

Mr. Woolliams: Who is reading his paper.

An hon. Member: Preparing his budget.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This article is headed, "The Bomarc debate". It is entitled "We shouldn't delude ourselves", by Paul Hellyer. I agree with that. This is what he said:

> Canada should not adopt defensive atomic weapons at this time, because none exist which provide any real protection.

What about the future? No one can foresee the future with clarity, but the position at present is pretty obvious in perspective.

October, November, December, January—less than four months later the perspective became clarified. Then he said:

After the Russians succeeded in building an atomic bomb they began—so it seemed at least—to build squadrons of long-range bombers capable of reaching targets on the North American continent. Realizing our vulnerability, we began a crash program of radar lines and interceptor construction.

The purpose of these—and it was never considered to be anything else by the military—was to provide protection for the U.S. strategic air command.

When I said that these things were not for the defence of Canada, they said I was wrong. But again I quote the Minister of National Defence in support of the position we took. Mr. Speaker, I was reading the approval of the Minister of National Defence. I know he has been kept by most important duties and I appreciate him now being in the house, because the vote is approaching. However, I was reading from an article written by him which should qualify him for membership in any authors' association for fiction. He also said this:

Any bombers shot down before reaching their targets would leave more of SAC intact and give more pilots a chance to return to their bases, from which they would deliver their retaliatory blow.

It was at this time—the early 1950's—that the concept of the Bomarc was accepted. A line of pilotless aircraft (Bomarc missiles) was planned to extend from coast to coast to provide increased protection for the atomic deterrent—the striking power of the United States air force.

The concept made some sense at the outset. It has long since been overtaken by time and technological development.

Well, Mr. Speaker, these were the viewpoints of last September, and now they are asking us to bring about this new plan whereby, as enunciated by the Prime Minister at Scarborough, they will bring over the atomic warheads, then they will place them on the Bomarcs, and then they will negotiate with the United States, to provide a dissolution after marriage. Why, Mr. Speaker, what nonsense is this?

Then the Minister of National Defence said, in this enlightening article:

October 1957 should be remembered as a turning point in modern military science. When the Russians put their first sputnik into orbit, and proved that they could easily build missiles capable of striking north Amercia, the missile age dramatically began. The subsequent five years have produced miracles in research and development.

Then he said:

Shorter range missiles can be fired from ships or submarines at sea. Air to ground missiles, otherwise known as stand-off bombs, can be carried under the wings of giant aircraft.

Against these three kinds of missiles there is, at the present time, no defence.

Now sir, I ask, what brought about the change of opinion? All I have tried to do this evening is simply review what has taken place. I have a great deal more material, equally effective, or revealing, I should say, that I will use on another occasion. No one yet knows the reason why on January 12 the Prime Minister announced a new policy. Why, it came with such revolting suddenness that the Manitoba Liberal association in session had just decided that they would not have nuclear weapons, and then they turned a complete somersault. They could not believe it. Possibly it will not be very long before we know some of the things that took place, some of the words of deep approval that were given to the Prime Minister for giving this remarkable calisthenic performance.

Sir, what is the policy today? Round and round it goes; what it is, nobody knows. Again I ask, what is it today? Well, on January 25 the Prime Minister stated in the House of Commons that they would accept a nuclear role at the moment. He intimated that this role would be changed if a Liberal government was in power. Cannot we just have some information. Was it arranged with the president at the siesta in Hyannis Port?

Mr. Pearson: Or Nassau?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Was it arranged that if we would accept nuclear weapons, or if we would enter into an agreement such as was outlined today, there would then be a renegotiation so that Canada could renegotiate herself out of that agreement? Surely we are entitled to know. It is very obvious that we are not going to have the opportunity. Today the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill), who is one of our leading authorities on constitutional development by appointment, said this: "You have the opportunity now to discuss it. We have not denied you that opportunity. One of the opposition parties has moved a subamendment, and we are going to let you discuss it". In effect, that is what he said. He said: "We have not denied you the right. Here you are; you can discuss it". That is not enough, Mr. Speaker. We have to know the reason for the change that has taken place in the attitude of this government over the stand which they took for three long years. Was that a conscientious stand which they took, or was it a political stand? Was the change, the migration from one side to the other in January, based on a consideration of the needs of Canadian security without regard to political considerations or was it determined as a result of representations made to the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) or to the minister of defence (Mr. Hellyer) by any one else at that time? These are questions whose answers we have a right to know.

I found it difficult to understand why the leader of the New Democratic party was unable to support the amendment which I moved. I felt it was one which deserved support, but the determination is always made on the basis of what is best for Canada and therefore I can make no criticism of that stand. I do not want to do anything which is detrimental to Canada but I am not going to be denied the right of having this important matter discussed and determined in parliament. The subject of nuclear arms is one upon which one's opinion changes or, at least, is affected by emotional considerations; but I cannot, in discharge of my responsibilities as Leader of the Opposition, allow this government to suggest to the opposition that because an opportunity has now come when the House of Commons may discuss this matter, that that is sufficient. Nothing of the kind. We want to know more. Whatever our views may be as to the need or the desirability of having the best defence which can be provided, parliament must have the right of decision. It will never have it. That was clear today.

I listened to the Prime Minister as he went over the field in a very able speech. How it would have appealed to me, that speech, if I had not known the facts as revealed by those quotations and many others which I could have placed before the house. We want to know. We want the facts. We cannot place reliance upon members of a government who in three years have held such a variety of opinions. What will the policy be? I think there were eight transitions between January 12 and the end of the campaign. Which of them represents the viewpoint of the members of the government today? We want the opportunity to be in committee—not the defence committee, but a committee of the House of Commons, here, to have this question answered. If hon. gentlemen opposite will not provide that, then let us have set aside a day on the basis of a resolution to be moved by the government in which frankly and fully the whole situation will be placed before parliament and the country. I cannot agree to less. At the moment I do not ask for more.

Yesterday the Prime Minister spoke of the Canadian people having decided all this. Well, 42 per cent, I think it was, voted in support of the government—43 per cent at the outside. Some 57 or 58 per cent voted otherwise. He said today this subject was one of the major issues. There has been no decision or mandate from the Canadian people in this regard. But whether with or without a mandate, members of parliament have their responsibility. All of us are prepared to have placed before us, not in panegyric form but in factual summary and analysis, the present situation. You will remember, sir, how those who now support this government poured their scorn on me when I said: Let us wait until the NATO meeting at which the whole question of defence will receive material consideration. They said: Nothing of the kind. Tomorrow and the next day the nations of NATO will determine one of the greatest questions facing the western world, namely, whether or not there is to be set up a multinational nuclear force and the terms upon which this would be done. Tremendous changes in defence thinking have taken place in the last few months. Britain had an agreement with the United States to have the Skybolt. That was changed as a result of the attitude taken by the United States, although Britain had depended upon it. Italy and Turkey had Jupiter missile bases upon which they depended. They are removed because of the changing concepts of defence. The new plan is, first, submarines and ships with Polaris missiles to be launched from them. The whole question of defence, as the minister of defence said so well last September, is changing and changeable. Therefore, I say that on the basis of the fact that we have had an undertaking, a statement, from the mover of this amendment that the problem is that parliament has not been consulted, believing that, as a result, it could be taken that these words are incorporated, namely "without consulting parliament", and that then the resolution would read in our interpretation—

—we regret that Your Excellency's advisers have indicated their intention without consulting parliament of acquiring nuclear arms for Canadian forces—

—we intend to support the subamendment.

(Translation):

Mr. Gerard Girouard (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the house for giving a member of each party the opportunity to put forward his views on what is going on in this chamber.

I noticed that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) has tried to limit my loquaciousness by forcing me to reduce my speech to some four minutes.

I shall therefore gloss over the congratulations which I intended to offer and the suggestions which I was hoping to put forward in this house in the name of the voters of the riding of Labelle who, as you no doubt know, have always been proud of the fact that they elected Henri Bourassa in 1900.

The other day, as I was listening to the junior member for Lotbiniere (Mr. Choquette), I was wondering whether he would show as much courage as Henri Bourassa who, while still young, left the ranks of the Liberal party to sit as an independent member.

Division

Mr. Speaker, the Liberal party platform has been quite interesting for the voters during the last election campaign except in one respect, where there is a lot of discussion, and, this evening, it is incumbent upon me to define the policy of my party on nuclear arms.

I believe that the Liberal party has not gained by the last election. Everybody noticed that western Canada, not altogether reluctant to accept nuclear arms, has nevertheless supported a party which was against accepting them, while the province of Quebec, opposed to nuclear arms, has nevertheless been generous towards the party in power.

But I must admit that a few days only after the election, I shuddered when I noticed the haste with which the present Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and the minister of defence (Mr. Hellyer) undertook to acquire nuclear arms. It came about so fast that, today, the members in this house are wondering whether they shall grant their support to a government which has made commitments so hurriedly without even consulting the house.

As far as I am concerned, I must say in my capacity as representative of La Macaza, where a Bomarc missile base is located—quite a significant fact—that even the workers of La Macaza, who helped my election, gave me the definite responsibility of opposing all acquisition of nuclear arms.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. It being 9.45 o'clock p.m. it is my duty pursuant to section 3 of standing order 38 to interrupt these proceedings and forthwith put the question on any subamendment now before the house.

The house divided on the amendment to the amendment (Mr. Douglas) which was negatived on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Alkenbrack
Balcer
Baldwin
Barnett
Beaule
Belanger
Bell
Bigg
Boutin
Brewin
Cadieu (Meadow-Lake)
Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands)
Cantelon
Caouette
Casselman, Mrs.
Chatterton
Churchill
Clancy
Coates
Cooper
Côté (Chicoutimi)
Crouse
Danforth
Diefenbaker
Dinsdale
Dionne
Doucett
Douglas
Enns
Fairweather
Fane
Fisher
Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke)
Flemming (Victoria-Carleton)
Forbes
Frenette
Gauthier
Girouard
Grafftey
Gregoire
Gundlock
Hales
Hamilton
Herridge
Horner (Acadia)
Howe (Hamilton South)
Howe (Wellington-Huron)
Irvine
Jorgenson
Kennedy
Kindt
Knowles
Korchinski
Lamb
Lambert
Langlois
Laprise
Latulippe
Lessard (Lake St. John)
Loney
MacEwan
MacInnes
MacLean (Queens)
MacRae
McBain
McCutcheon
Madill
Marcoux
Martin (Timmins)
Martineau
Mather
Millar
Monteith
Moore
Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria)
Muir (Lisgar)
Nesbitt
Noble
Nowlan
Nugent
Orlikow
Ormiston
Ouellet
Pascoe
Paul
Peters
Pigeon
Plourde
Prittie
Pugh
Rapp
Ricard
Rondeau
Rynard
Scott
Simpson
Skoreyko
Smallwood
Smith
Southam
Starr
Stefanson
Stenson
Thomas
Vincent
Watson (Assiniboia)
Webb
Webster
Weichel
Willoughby
Winch
Winkler
Woolliams—113.

NAYS

Messrs:

Addison
Armstrong
Asselin (Notre Dame de Grace)
Asselin (Richmond-Wolfe)
Badanai
Basford
Batten
Bechard
Beer
Benidickson
Benson
Berger
Blouin
Boulanger
Brown
Cadieux (Terrebonne)
Cameron (High Park)
Cardin
Caron
Carter
Cashin
Chevrier
Chretien
Côté (Longueuil)
Cowan
Crossman
Cyr
Davis
Deachman
Denis
Deschatelets
Drury
Dube
Dupuis
Emard
Ethier
Favreau
Forest
Forgie
Foy
Francis Garland
Gelber
Gendron
Godin
Gordon
Granger
Gray
Greene
Groos
Guay
Habel
Haidasz
Hahn
Harkness
Harley
Hays
Hellyer
Honey
Jewett, Miss
Kelly
Klein
Konantz, Mrs.
Lachance
Laing
LaMarsh, Miss
Lamontagne
Lamoureux
Laniel
Leboe

Leduc	Pennell
Lessard (St. Henry)	Pepin
Lloyd	Pickersgill
Loiselle	Pilon
Macaluso	Regan
Macdonald	Richard
MacEachen	Rideout
Mackasey	Rinfret
MacNaught	Robichaud
McIlraith	Rochon
McIntosh	Rock
McLean (Charlotte)	Rouleau
McMillan	Ryan
McNulty	Sauve
McWilliam	Stewart
Martin (Essex East)	Tardif
Matheson	Teillet
Matte	Temple
Mitchell	Thompson
Moreau	Tremblay
Mullally	Tucker
Munro	Turner
Nicholson	Wahn
O'Keefe	Walker
Olson	Watson (Chateauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie)
Otto	Whelan—124.
Patterson
Pearson

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment to the amendment lost.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the hon. member for Huron (Mr. Cardiff). Had I voted I would have voted against the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. More (Regina City): Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the hon. member for Norfolk (Mr. Roxburgh). Had I voted I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Nasserden). Had I voted I would have voted against the amendment.

It being seventeen minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, May 22, 1963

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPORTED COMMITMENT OF CANADIAN AIR DIVISION TO NATO NUCLEAR COMMAND

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the Canadian Press dispatch is correct when it says, "Canada today committed its eight-squadron air division in Europe to a NATO nuclear command." The article points out that speeches were made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) and the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer), that the subject was the projected interallied nuclear force, and the commitment of the Canadian air units to NATO was agreed to.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as the interallied nuclear force which is under consideration by NATO has not yet been established, the question of a commitment of the Canadian squadron to that force does not yet arise. This is a matter under discussion at the council meeting which is now going on; it is one matter on the agenda. The Canadian policy in regard to this particular matter will be known when the council meeting finishes.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, whether or not there is an actual commitment until the final decision has been made, did the Canadian representatives undertake that they would commit Canadian forces overseas to this body in the event that such a body was set up?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman knows that it would be quite inappropriate to make public the instructions of the Canadian delegation to the council meeting of NATO while that council meeting is going on. That is a procedure which he followed himself in respect of previous council meetings of NATO when nuclear and other matters were under consideration.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, that latter statement is entirely incorrect.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am not going to have the Prime Minister make such a statement about what stand we took, when it is incorrect. Does he suggest that the people of Canada should be bound by the stand taken by this government without disclosing it to parliament? That is all I want to know.

Mr. Pearson: The right hon. gentleman, when he was head of the government, already committed those eight squadrons to a particular role in NATO and informed the House of Commons about it when he returned from the NATO council.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Not at all.

RUSSIAN PROPOSAL THAT MEDITERRANEAN BE MADE NUCLEAR-FREE ZONE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Since, unfortunately, he is not in the house, I wonder if I might direct it to the Prime Minister.

In view of the Soviet proposal yesterday that the Mediterranean area be declared a zone free of nuclear weapons, would the minister inform the house what attitude the Canadian delegation to the NATO conference will adopt toward this proposal, and whether it will be examined in the light of the Eden plan, the Rapacki plan and other proposals aimed at mutual disengagement and disarmament in central Europe?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): This, as the hon. member will realize, is a very important proposal indeed, if it turns out to be in the terms which have been made public. It will undoubtedly have to receive careful consideration not only by this government but by all the other members of NATO. In that consideration it will have to be related to the earlier proposals for disengagement in other areas to which the hon. member referred. It will also be interesting to find out whether the Mediterranean area to which the Soviet proposal refers includes, for instance, the Black sea. Until all these matters are considered, and until the question has been discussed with our friends in NATO, perhaps at the current meeting, it would be premature for me to make a statement.

Mr. Douglas: Could I ask the Prime Minister whether he would make a statement as early as possible when some decision has been reached?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Pearson: Yes, I shall be glad to make a statement on this matter at an appropriate moment.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

GREAT LAKES—PROGRESS TOWARD SETTLEMENT OF DISPUTE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I should like to ask the Minister of Labour whether during his talks in Washington any decision was reached to end the strife on the great lakes.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Yesterday the United States secretary of labour, Mr. Wirtz, and I met with Mr. George Meany, president of the A.F. of L.-C.I.O. and Mr. Claude Jodoin of the Canadian Labour Congress. This meeting was held following arrangements made by the President of the United States and the Prime Minister at Hyannis Port, at which meeting they asserted the principle that ships and the men who sail them should be free to go about their lawful business without impediment or harassment.

We began with this premise yesterday, and all I can tell the hon. gentleman is that we had a friendly and constructive preliminary meeting. I was satisfied that sufficient momentum had developed at the meeting yesterday in the direction of a settlement to justify further conversations. It is hoped these further conversations will be held either in connection with the report of the Norris commission or at another time which would be opportune. I am satisfied we are moving in the right direction.

BRITISH COLUMBIA—INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF CONCILIATION BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): I have a question for the Minister of Labour. Has the hon. gentleman any idea how much longer it will be before the federal conciliation board, which for many months has been investigating the dispute between the shipping federation of British Columbia and the international union of longshoremen and warehousemen will finally make its report on this matter?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): I wish to thank the hon. member for sending me notice of his intention to ask this question. I am advised that the conciliation board dealing with this matter is expected to render its report on some date between May 25 and May 31.

[Mr. Douglas.]

REPORTED LAY-OFFS CAUSED BY STEEL STOCKPILING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the hon. member for Saint John-Albert (Mr. Bell) asked whether I would investigate whether any relationship existed between the lay-offs in the shipbuilding industry and the stockpiling of steel. I have investigated this matter and my information is that few, if any, of the current lays-offs in the firm in which he is interested appear to be due to steel shortages. It is understood that the company in question anticipates June delivery of its current steel orders.

TRADE

RED CHINA—SUGGESTED SENDING OF TRADE MISSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the statement in this morning's Montreal Gazette by the chairman of the Canadian wheat board that sales of wheat to China will be reduced in the future, and in view of the urgency of the matter now that the United States farmers have rejected the wheat referendum in that country, will the acting minister indicate whether the government intends to send a general trade delegation to meet with representatives of mainland China so that general trade between that country and Canada can be expanded and thereby ensure a continued volume of grain sales in that market?

Hon. Rene Tremblay (Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Trade and Commerce will be back tomorrow morning, and may I take this question as notice.

(Translation):

TRANSPORT

NORTHWESTERN QUEBEC—REPORTED ABANDONMENT OF TRAIN SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gerard Laprise (Chapleau): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Transport.

Could the minister tell us if it is the intention of his department to abandon the C.N.R. train service between the towns of Rouyn-Noranda and Taschereau in northwestern Quebec?

(Text):

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his question. I should perhaps point out to him that the department does not abandon railway lines, but I have checked up and I find that no application for abandonment of this line has been filed with the board of transport commissioners. I have also referred his question to the management of the Canadian National Railways for any further information they may have on the subject.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question. May I ask the minister if his department is making any representations to the board of transport commissioners to suspend those applications which are before them for line abandonment until the government has made a complete review and brought down some legislation to implement the recommendations of the MacPherson commission.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, the question asked by the leader of the New Democratic party deals with a very large and important subject, and to answer his question in the form he asks it is perhaps misleading to the house, in that representation in that form are not the method of handling this subject of rail abandonment, which is very important particularly to the western provinces. He can be quite sure that there will be adequate opportunity for the representations which I think he has in mind being made to the government before the policy is finally determined. In the meantime no action is being taken on the actual abandonment of any of the lines.

(Translation):

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

REPORTED REQUEST FOR TERMINATION OF JOINT PLANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. Could the Prime Minister inform the house whether it is the federal government's intention, upon the request of some provinces, to withdraw from all joint federal-provincial plans?

(Text):

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of important government policy which will be announced at the appropriate time.

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question? Was the Prime Minister of Canada presented with requests to that effect from the governments of the provinces of Quebec and New Brunswick?

(Text):

REPORTED STATEMENT BY QUEBEC MINISTER RESPECTING FISCAL AUTONOMY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Has the hon. gentleman's attention been called to a report in this morning's Montreal Gazette of a statement made by the minister of municipal affairs of the Quebec government, Mr. Laporte, that unless the government of that province achieves complete fiscal autonomy the province may withdraw from confederation and, if his attention has been drawn to this, has he any comment to make on it, or does he consider such a fiscal proposal would be consistent with confederation?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): The answer to the first part of the question is no, Mr. Speaker.

(Translation):

AGRICULTURE

PROVISION OF FEED GRAIN STORAGE IN EASTERN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Does this government intend to provide the eastern provinces with feed grain storage facilities?

(Text):

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, these things are under consideration at the moment by the government, and the house will be hearing from us later in this regard.

ARDA—APPROVAL OF PROJECTS AFTER CONSULTATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Can the minister assure the house that all ARDA projects approved and to be approved by his government have been or will be so approved only after the provincial governments have consulted local authorities before presenting such projects for final federal approval?

An hon. Member: Take it as notice.

Mr. Pearson: Put it on the order paper.

Mr. Chevrier: Order paper.

MILK—ENCOURAGEMENT OF DIVERSION TO SPECIALTY CHEESES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. To follow up the government's program of encouraging the diversion of milk to the production of cheese, would the minister give urgent consideration to the adding of specialty cheeses to the cheddar cheese now promulgated in the order?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in so far as the soft cheeses are concerned the government feels that due to the high price of cheese in Canada, soft cheese will well take care of itself and any increases in price, which are negligible—maybe two cents a pound on soft cheese—could be handed down to the consumers without doing any harm.

(Translation):

REPORTED WITHDRAWAL OF SUBSIDY ON MILK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Is it true that his department has abolished the subsidy of 25 cents per 100 pounds on milk?

(Text):

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the 25 cents subsidy on sweet milk and fluid milks has been abolished, with the saving of some $6 million to the taxpayers. We felt that fluid milk did not require that sort of a subsidy.

(Translation):

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question? Could the Minister of Agriculture tell us why he has repealed that excellent measure passed by the previous government?

[Later:]

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a further question to the Minister of Agriculture. Is it for the same reason, that is to save the taxpayers' money, that the Minister of Agriculture has abolished the subsidy on the purchase of lime?

(Text):

Mr. Hays: Mr. Speaker, I should like to take this question as notice.

(Translation):

[Later:]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether he intends to follow the same policy as the Minister of Agriculture, in cancelling the subsidies paid to the Canadian National Railways in order to save money for the taxpayers?

[Later:]

Mr. Gerard Chapdelaine (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Can the minister tell us whether the savings brought about by the cancellation of subsidies to dairy producers will serve to pay for nuclear warheads, or will they serve other purposes?

(Text):

REPORTED REQUEST FOR PARTICIPATION IN CROP INSURANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): I would like to address a question in French to the Minister of Agriculture.

(Translation):

Could the minister tell the house whether the governments of Quebec and New Brunswick presented him with an official request to take part in the crop insurance plan?

(Text):

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, not to my knowledge.

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: I should like to put a supplementary question. Is the minister sure of his answer?

(Text):

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

NATIONAL PARKS

NOVA SCOTIA—INQUIRY AS TO LOCATION OF SECOND PARK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, but first I should like to congratulate him upon his appointment to the cabinet. Would the minister inform the house whether a decision has been reached with regard to the location of a second national park in Nova Scotia and, if so, would he tell the house the names of the counties in which this park will be situated?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, no decision has been taken but there has been some correspondence with a number of persons, amongst whom has been Premier Stanfield. I have written him that if he will give us the demarcation of the property concerned, then we are prepared to make a recommendation. The matter has gone that far only at the present time. I think the new proposal is in the counties of Queens, Shelburne and Annapolis. We have found that the present national park in that province is making a tremendous contribution to tourism, and every consideration will be given when the submission is made.

BANFF—REPORTED CANCELLATION OF TENDERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the minister of northern affairs. I understand from information I have regarding Banff national park that in February tenders were called with reference to building motels to take care of the tourists this summer, that tenders were submitted and those tenders, following April 8, were cancelled. I was wondering would the minister answer why those tenders were cancelled after April 8?

Some hon. Members: Out of order.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I am wondering whether the minister is going to refuse to answer that question, because it is very important to Banff national park and I would like an answer.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure I appreciate the urgency of the question as well as the hon. member does, as he will know, but the minister is not obliged to answer unless he wants to do so.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF PARLIAMENTARY COMMISSIONER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Justice of which I have given him notice. Has the government given consideration to following the example of Sweden and New Zealand and appointing a parliamentary commissioner or ombudsman to advise parliament upon interference with political, civil or human rights by government agencies?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): The hon. member was kind enough to send me notice of this question several days ago. I would say there are, as the hon. member knows, a number of matters on the order paper concerning this question. First I believe there is a resolution, and next I think there is a question having to do with it. It seems to me that this is a matter for parliament to determine rather than the Minister of Justice. It might well be a matter that could be referred to the committee on procedure that is under the chairmanship of Mr. Speaker. If that would be agreeable perhaps it would be an excellent way of bringing the matter to the attention of the house.

REPRESENTATION OF CONSTITUENCY OF NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State what steps are being taken to make possible the immediate representation of the constituency of the Northwest Territories in the House of Commons. Forty four days have elapsed since the election, and this is the 31st day of decision.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre knows as well as I do, and as every other hon. member does, that elections in this country are not conducted by the government but by an officer of this house, the chief electoral officer. I will draw the hon. gentleman's query to the attention of the chief electoral officer, and I think it will be found that the explanation is that the writ has not yet been returned.

WEST BLOCK—REQUEST FOR RETENTION OF CONFERENCE FACILITIES

On the orders of the day:

Miss Pauline Jewett (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, having been much impressed by the conference arrangements in the west block, I should like to ask the Minister of Public Works whether his department is contemplating keeping these facilities so they may be of continuing benefit to members of parliament for a conference hall.

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I wish first of all to thank the hon. member for having sent me notice of this question. Since my answer must of necessity be lengthy I beg the indulgence of the house. I think this information would be of some interest to all hon. members.

I have visited the conference room and auxiliary services, and I am most impressed with the size and efficiency of the layout. I may say that in the planning of the remodelling of the west block the main room now being used by NATO was always planned as a conference room and will continue to be used for this purpose. The present wall and floor finishes are temporary installations.

Following the conference, the permanent furnishing will be installed, maintaining its present size. However, its appearance will be considerably more lavish, in keeping with the continuing use to which the room will be put; that is, for conferences, parliamentary receptions and, in fact, any parliamentary functions requiring this type of facility. The present table arrangements as well as communications and translation services are removable and will be reinstalled at such times as they are required by any conference taking place in the room. We are also examining the advisability and possibility of maintaining on a permanent basis press communication and translation services.

I would add that in addition to this planned conference room there are to be two large caucus or committee rooms with an approximate capacity of 125, five smaller committee rooms and divorce courts, as well as a members' lounge. There is also provision for a planned recreational area which will be located on the floor above the main conference room.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister gave us a very good description of these areas, but he left out the dimensions. I wonder whether he could give us that information as well.

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Public Works whether there will be more office space available for members after the NATO council meeting is over.

Mr. Deschatelets: May I say, Mr. Speaker, that these arrangements will not disturb in any way the plan we have for offices for hon. members. I might add that the offices provided for hon. members will be ready for occupancy around the end of the present month, and the whole work in the west block will be completed by September 1.

DISPOSITION OF PORTRAITS OF FORMER PRIME MINISTERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Public Works, though first I should like to congratulate him on his appointment.

Will the minister advise the house whether the portraits of Sir John A. Macdonald, Sir Charles Tupper, Sir John Thompson and another former prime minister which formerly adorned the west foyer of the centre block have also been moved to the west block and, if so, when they will be returned to their rightful place of honour.

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): I shall inquire and give the answer to the hon. gentleman in the very near future, and when I say "in the very near future" I mean exactly what I say.

GRAIN

OATS AND BARLEY—INQUIRY AS TO INITIAL PRICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, in view of the information contained in a pamphlet put out by the Liberal party during the campaign to the effect that the initial prices for oats and barley would be announced during seeding, will the Minister of Agriculture inform this house what the higher prices for oats and barley are this year, since we are already in the midst of seeding?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I will take that one as notice, too.

PRICE AND SUPPLY OF FEED IN EASTERN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that feed grains are the chief single cost item for eastern farmers, will the government be bringing forward legislation this session to stabilize the price and supply of feed grains in eastern Canada?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, these matters are all under consideration by the government.

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO $2 PRICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. S. Smallwood (Battle River-Camrose): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. During the recent election campaign in western Canada he promised the farmers $2 a bushel for wheat. Can we expect this government to fulfil that promise in the 60 days of action?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the intentions of the government on this important matter of policy will be made known in due course.

PENSIONS

CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES RESPECTING PORTABLE PENSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the announcement by Premier Lesage that legislation regarding portable pensions will be introduced in the Quebec legislature, and in view of similar legislation in Ontario, may I ask if the federal government is consulting with the provinces concerning this matter to avoid conflict, or will the government introduce its legislation at an early date so that the provinces will know what is in hand at the federal level?

Miss Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The announcement which was made yesterday by the province of Quebec indicated that they are contemplating legislation similar to that enacted by the province of Ontario. It is, I think, of interest to all hon. members of the house, and particularly to this government, that the failure of communication and lack of co-operation which there has been on the federal-provincial level in the last few years has been overcome.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Miss LaMarsh: I should like to advise my hon. friend that consultation will be had between this government and representatives of each of the provincial governments.

Mr. Knowles: Will the minister take note of the other part of my question, namely, will this government's legislation be introduced at an early date so that all the provinces and the people of Canada will know what is to be before us?

Miss LaMarsh: Obviously this is a matter of considerable concern to all provinces, Mr. Speaker. There will be consultation with all provinces and with all possible dispatch the legislation will be forthcoming.

FORESTRY

ARRANGEMENTS FOR MEETING OF NORTH AMERICAN COMMISSION IN OTTAWA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Forestry. In view of the importance of the work of the North American forestry commission with respect to the development and conservation of our forests and wildlife, and in view of the proposed meeting of the North American forestry commission in Ottawa from June 17 to June 22, can the minister give the house any information with respect to the arrangements that have been made for the meeting, the names of persons participating and the program?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Forestry): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member indeed for having given me notice of his question. He is quite right; the second session of this commission will be held in Ottawa from the 17th to the 22nd of June. I might say that the North American forestry commission is an agency of the food and agriculture organization of the United Nations and its second meeting is to be held in Ottawa on the dates I have mentioned.

Membership in the organization is confined to the United States, Mexico and Canada. These three governments will all be represented at the meeting, and there will be representatives of most of the provinces of Canada. All the provinces have been invited. Observers will also be invited to participate, and invitations have gone out to the Canadian institute of forestry, the Canadian pulp and paper association and some other bodies. I will be pleased to provide more information to the hon. member or other interested members on request.

UNITED NATIONS

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON WORK OF SPECIAL SESSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, but in his absence perhaps the hon. and learned parliamentary secretary will take it as notice. Would the minister report on the progress of the special session of the United Nations general assembly now in progress and let us have information on the initiative of the Canadian delegation in respect of the highly important question of United Nations financing, a matter to which the Canadian delegation made a significant contribution at the regular session?

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will take the hon. gentleman's suggestion and bring his question to the attention of the minister.

(Translation):

NATIONAL DEFENCE

TENDERS FOR TRUCKING NUCLEAR WEAPONS FROM U.S. TO CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gerard Chapdelaine (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Defence, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister and ask him whether he is aware that two weeks ago the American government started inviting tenders from Canadian trucking firms regarding the transportation into Canada of nuclear weapons originating in the United States?

(Text):

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I have had no such information, and I doubt very much whether the hon. gentleman's information is accurate on this matter.

(Translation):

INQUIRY AS TO COURSES AT ST. JOHNS ROYAL MILITARY COLLEGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Associate Minister of National Defence. Does the minister intend to recommend to the cabinet that St. Johns Royal Military College give complete courses, as does Kingston Military College?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the departmental high officials intend to recommend that St. Johns Royal Military College be able to give the most complete course that is possible.

Mr. Pigeon: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister make a statement to the house before the expiration of the 60 days.

(Text):

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

DISCUSSIONS RESPECTING PURCHASE OF MEDIUM RANGE JETS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport if he expects to be in a position in the near future to report to the house on the discussions between Trans-Canada Air Lines and various producers of medium range jet planes, and in particular with regard to the possibility of T.C.A. adopting the Caravelle plane built in Montreal by Canadair.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, before answering the question I should like to take this opportunity since it is the first one I have had, to acknowledge the courtesy of the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer) at the time I was appointed to this office, by his waiting in the office to receive me and extend those small courtesies which do mean so much in public life.

As to his question today, it is quite impossible at the moment to say when I will be in a position to make any statement to the house on the subject of possible purchases of aircraft for T.C.A.

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gerald W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have another question for the Minister of Finance and I direct it to him not only in his capacity as such but also because of his known and recorded advocacy of the principle of debt free money. Has the minister any comment to make on the editorial which appears in the Bay Street Journal of May 13, 1963 to the effect that the stock market is at an all-time high in the anticipation of Social Credit co-operation and influence on the new Liberal government, and that Lester Pearson should have little difficulty achieving common ground with Robert Thompson?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would think that question is completely out of order.

[Mr. Pigeon.]

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. I wonder whether the Secretary of State has noticed that his friend the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) has, under pressure, changed his seat in this house.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, it does not seem to me that is a proper question for the Secretary of State, but perhaps Your Honour would permit me to make the very respectful submission that certain admonitions made by your predecessors with respect to the character of questions on the orders of the day would appear to apply to many that have been asked today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, may I direct Your Honour's attention to page 43 of Hansard for October 1, 1962, where it is reported that these words were used by the present Minister of Transport (Mr. McIlraith):

> If hon. members putting questions are to be called to order, then surely the rules must be drawn to the attention of the ministers in making answers and those answers must be made properly.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

ALLEGED INEFFECTIVENESS IN RESPECT TO F.L.Q.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Justice whether he is at present reviewing the capabilities of the R.C.M.P. security division in view of that division's apparent lack of effectiveness in uncovering the operations of the F.L.Q.?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): In connection with that question, Mr. Speaker, I think all I need say is that the premier of the province of Quebec has been in communication with me since last Friday in relation to the matter of additional assistance from the federal force, that is the Royal Canadian Mounted Police force, and I have assured the premier of the province of Quebec that in so far as the federal forces are concerned they will lend all and every and immediate assistance that they can under the circumstances.

Mr. Fisher: As a supplementary question, could the minister tell us whether in terms of the security division this particular operation, that is the F.L.Q., is looked upon as a subversive or a security threat to the country?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member will immediately appreciate that in so far as the prosecution and the laying of charges are concerned, should they be found necessary in the province of Quebec, they are the responsibility of the municipal and provincial forces. In that respect I am afraid I can go no further at this time.

(Translation):

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As the Minister of Justice has just said that he had a telephone conversation quite recently with the premier of the province of Quebec, would he tell us if the premier of Quebec took that opportunity to discuss the question of his ultimatum concerning the new fiscal arrangements?

(Text):

COAL

REMOVAL OF TARIFF ON IMPORTS FROM U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys, but in his absence I will direct it to the acting minister. Is the government giving consideration to the removal of the tariff on United States coal imported into Canada?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to take that question as notice and draw it to the minister's attention.

SUGAR

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON INQUIRY INTO PRICE INCREASES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice, who intimated last week that he was looking into the skyrocketing price of sugar. Having in mind the adverse effects of this increase now reported spreading to the fruit and canning industries, I wonder if he is in a position to report any progress in his investigations.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker; I did not hear the first part of the hon. member's question, but I think I know what he has reference to. It has to do with the question he asked earlier concerning sugar. I am afraid I cannot report anything further than I did the last time. When there is an opportunity to do so, I shall.

INDUSTRY

TRENTON, N.S.—REQUEST FOR ORDER FOR RAILWAY CARS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. I have not given him notice, and he may wish to take the question as notice. In view of the serious unemployment situation at the Eastern Car Company plant at Trenton, Nova Scotia, which is the largest employer in the area, and in view of the fact that U.I.C. benefits are running out, I wonder whether the minister would look into the matter of providing a railway car order immediately for that plant.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will be very glad to take the question as notice.

COMBINES

WINNIPEG—REPORTED COMPLAINT RESPECTING ELECTRICAL EQUIPMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Has the minister received a complaint from the city of Winnipeg regarding a possible combine in the field of electrical equipment, and if so, what action is the government taking in respect of this complaint?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker; I did not hear the last part of the question. Dealing with what?

Mr. Orlikow: A possible combine in the field of electrical equipment.

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, I believe I have, and the matter is under study.

WATER RESOURCES

PARTICIPATION BY ALBERTA IN CONSERVATION STUDY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Due to the fact that the province of Alberta has recently decided not to participate in the water study asked for by the prairie water conservation board, would the hon. gentleman not use his good offices to try to convince the government in Alberta and, maybe, his counterpart in that government, that this question is of vital importance to the cattle industry in our province and that they should participate in this study of the prairie watershed?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): We shall be glad to consider this.

(Translation):

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO NEW ISSUE OF FEDERAL BONDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of Finance.

Can the minister tell the house whether it is true that the present government intends soon to issue a new series of federal government bonds?

(Text):

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): It is customary, as I think the hon. gentleman knows, to give notice from time to time when bond issues are contemplated. We did this the other day before the most recent issue was announced. I think the announcement was made to the investment dealers and not in the house. I believe that has been the practice for many years and it is probably the best one to continue.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed, from Tuesday, May 21, consideration of the motion of Miss Pauline Jewett for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to the speech from the throne delivered by His Excellency the Administrator at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Diefenbaker.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is for me, sir, a very real pleasure to extend to you my heartiest congratulations on your election to be the Speaker of this house. I join with my leader, as well as with others in this group and, indeed, with all groups in this chamber, in extending good wishes to those other hon. members who must, by now, know that we all offer them warmest congratulations.

Mr. Speaker, in the course of the last two or three speeches which I had the privilege of making in the recent campaign, I made an assertion which I feel sure could not be denied, and I made a prediction which I believe may well come true. My assertion was that the last parliament was just about the worst one we ever had. My prediction was that this parliament, which we were electing on April 8, could be one of the best we have ever had. I believed that to be so at the time I made the prediction. I believe it now. As a matter of fact, I believe it even more today than I did yesterday, for I think what happened in this house last night will play a salutory part in bringing my prophecy to reality.

When I made the prediction that this parliament could well be one of the best we have had in the history of this country I did so saying at the same time that I thought we would have another minority government. I tried, therefore, to deal with the question: why could I hope that a parliament with a minority government would be a good one whereas the parliament just over, which also had a minority government, was such an awful one? My own answer to that question was this. I believed that no matter what party might be called on to form the government in this parliament it would realize that it should at all costs avoid an election, and that in order to do this it would have to pay some attention to the views of all members in the house. I said, also, that I felt it would have to pay some attention to the views of those of us who represent the New Democratic party.

The government learned yesterday that that is true; that although we, in common with all members of the house, feel that the people of Canada want us to stay here and do the business of the country, on important and crucial issues we shall not shrink from doing what is clearly our duty. I am sure all of us in the house hope that after the experience of yesterday the government of the day will drop its arrogance and realize it has to pay some attention to the wishes of parliament as a whole.

When I said that this parliament could be one of the best we have ever had, I had in mind not that this would just happen because someone predicted it or because a certain party formed the government, but rather because there were certain things which we, as members of this house, would have to do. If we want this to be a good parliament, and one which serves the people of Canada well, there are certain conscious efforts which we as members must make. I intend to speak of these conscious efforts under three main headings.

In the first place, I feel we in this parliament in all corners of this house must with determination practise strict adherence to the rights, privileges and procedures of parliament. I want to emphasize that this means something more than just literal adherence to the rules or standing orders set out in our book. It is easy enough to follow the simple rules which determine how long a member may speak, when the house shall sit, when it shall rise, and so on. Most of the written rules are easy enough to follow. But parliament consists not only of written rules of procedure but of certain rights, practices and traditions which have grown up over the years and over the centuries. If we are going to make this parliament work, if we are going to make it the valuable democratic institution it could be, we have to pay regard to these rules, practices and traditions. In order to be specific as to some of the things in which I think this parliament must not fail, it will be necessary for me to refer to some of the failures of the past. I would make the plea that they not be repeated in this twenty sixth parliament.

Last year we had the experience of a full fiscal year passing without the people's representatives voting on the estimates of expenditure. A full fiscal year's money was spent, ten months of it on the basis of interim supply and the other two months on the basis of governor general's warrants. If my reading of Canadian history is correct, this is the first time this has happened. This sort of thing does damage to the institution of parliament. I call upon this government which has now taken over not to delay bringing down the estimates. Once they are down, I call upon the government not to delay in arranging for their discussion as early as possible in the fiscal year, so that they can be considered by hon. members of this house and can be passed before that money is almost entirely spent. The whole question of parliamentary control over the purse is one of the most important elements in parliamentary democracy, and it matters not how well we keep the written rules in the book if we fail to adhere to the principle of parliamentary control of the purse.

In the same vein I would mention the question of the budget. There are various definitions which one can give to a budget. Sometimes it is thought of merely as a series of taxation changes that the minister of finance brings before the house. It is that, but it is more than that: it is an accounting by the government to the people's representatives on the state of the nation's finances. It is almost two years since the House of Commons had a full debate on a budget dealing with the finances of this nation, and I urge this government to make sure that this error, this failure, is not repeated during the life of this parliament.

I remind the government also of the position in which it finds itself with regard to the surcharge order in council passed last June. The government now finds itself, according to an announcement made yesterday, in the position of feeling that it must introduce legislation validating an order in council which at one time the members of the government felt, as we felt, was completely invalid. It may be that the government of today has no alternative to the one suggested yesterday, but I am certainly very unhappy about this proposed course because it seems to suggest that future governments who may feel they want to pass something by way of order in council which is of doubtful validity can say: "Oh well, a subsequent parliament will take care of it by legislation if there is any invalidity". Mr. Speaker, these are the kinds of things beyond the actual rules which are written in the books which are of great importance if we are going to maintain the rights and privileges and the importance of parliament.

Another of the errors of the last parliament, and another reason why it was such a poor one, was the great difficulty we had in getting to the floor of that parliament the tremendous issues which were of concern to the Canadian people at that time. I need not enumerate them now because we enumerated them during the course of the last session. We have already had that sort of trouble in this parliament, for it is only because we took advantage through the right of the leader of this group to move a subamendment yesterday that we had a discussion on the important issue of nuclear arms. But even though we had this discussion yesterday, it was virtually ex post facto because the government had already made an announcement which indicated a decision for the Canadian people had been made on this question.

Yesterday we were told by the Prime Minister that we should not be concerned about this; that after all there was an opportunity to vote confidence or non-confidence in the government, and that such action would show approval or disapproval of the government's decision. But I would remind the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill), who is doing me the honour of paying attention to my remarks, that the Liberals in the last house did not agree that the votes of confidence which the government in the last session won gave validity to the surcharge order in council. True it is, in a constitutional sense, that if a government is maintained in power by votes of confidence the day to day things which it does have a kind of approval. But surely you do not stretch that constitutional theory to the point that it is giving approval of government decisions on major issues of policy.

The surcharge order issued last year was such a major issue. It involved the taxation of the Canadian people of hundreds of millions of dollars. It was enacted by order in council without reference to parliament at any point, and without the consent of the government of that day even to refer it to the supreme court. That was a wrong course to take. The nuclear arms issue is an issue of deep concern to all the people of Canada; it is perhaps the most significant issue facing the human race at the present time. I feel, as all members of our group feel, that it was improper and that it was a violation of the rights and traditions of parliamentary practice and procedure for the government to take a stand on this question before bringing it before this House of Commons. My plea to the government is to remember how its own members, when sitting on this side of the house last year, felt annoyed and affronted over the things done during that session, and I hope that they will not soon forget their annoyance but that they will realize that if parliament is to work they must pay attention to these niceties of the relationship between the executive and the parliament of Canada.

This is the most important aspect of responsible government. As I say, it depends not just on our being able to follow written rules which spell out some mechanical details; it depends on the government realizing all the time, day and night, week in week out, that it is responsible to parliament and that its proper relationship with parliament is something it must continually maintain.

In the same vein I feel that if parliament is to be seen as a place where democracy is being practised and where the people's representatives are speaking for them, a great deal of thought must go into the organization of the business of this house. I would pay tribute to the action of the Secretary of State for his holding already a meeting of representatives from all four parties, at which it was my privilege to represent this party. I understand he plans to hold other such meetings, and I welcome them and urge him not to let down on this. I urge the government to pay particular attention to the organization of the business of the house so that it will appear to the country that we are doing business, and so that the members of this house will feel this business is being done in an orderly manner.

Again I must mention some things which should not be done. I think it is a mistake to commence debate on a piece of legislation and then, because the government runs into some difficulty, to adjourn the debate and proceed with something else. I think it is a mistake to shuffle around from one piece of business to another. I think it is a mistake to keep the house guessing from day to day as to what is going to happen the next day or next week. I think it makes far more sense in terms of democracy and parliamentary practice for the government through this kind of four-party meeting which the Secretary of State has already held, to take the house into its confidence and to tell us what is being planned. Then once we commence a piece of legislation we should stay with it until it is completed, and thus do our business in an orderly fashion.

A lot is said about the organization of the business of the house as though the main aim were to get it through and save time. We do not want to waste time, but that is not the main aim of parliamentary reform. The main aim is to make sure that our business is done efficiently and with expedition, and also to make sure that it is done with a sense of participation on the part of all members. I recognize that this is not a city council or a county council but the parliament of Canada. The government is the government, and it has certain responsibilities as the executive. It is also responsible to parliament. But the fact remains that the people in the constituency of Winnipeg North Centre are represented here not by the government but by their member. The people of Burnaby-Coquitlam are represented by their member, and those of other ridings by their members, and there are certain things in which the people of Canada are not really participating unless their members are taking part in these decisions. This is what was wrong with the spending of money last year. It was spent without the approval of the 265 members representing the 18 million people of Canada. It was spent as a result of decisions of the cabinet. I say, therefore, that the whole business of organizing the legislation, the discussions, the debates of this house is important, not just for the convenience of members. It is important that it appear that the whole of the parliament of Canada, all the representatives of the people of Canada, are taking part in the debates and in the legislation in this house.

I think also, Mr. Speaker, attention should be given to the whole question of how questions are answered. I realize, and I assert, that on the opposition side of the house we must not use the question period frivolously. Today's Hansard will show a number of questions which, in my view, should not have been asked. However, when serious questions are asked the government has the responsibility of giving answers as expeditiously as it can. I think we have far too many occasions upon which the answer is that government policy will be made known in due course, or that the question asked is one of which notice will be taken. We should forgive government members for a few days, perhaps, until ministers know their way around their departments. However, I think we should look upon the question period not as so much political warfare but as one of the most important parts of the political democracy we are practising in this country.

One of the things about the parliamentary system that makes it superior to other legislative systems is precisely the fact that we are members representing our people in 265 constituencies and we are here on the floor of the House of Commons with the members of the government, in a position to ask them questions on behalf of the people we represent. This gives us the right to ask serious questions and to receive serious answers. The importance of asking serious questions and of receiving informative replies cannot be overemphasized.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if the hon. gentleman would permit me to ask him a question at this point?

Mr. Knowles: Yes, if it is short.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does the hon. gentleman think it would be a good idea if we were to follow the British practice and have notice given of questions so that a minister could be informed when he rises to answer questions?

Mr. Knowles: It is always difficult to cite British practice and suggest ours should be equated with that of Westminster because there are other differences. I would accept the British practice with regard to questions if we were to adopt the British practice with regard to debates of questions on adjournment. You cannot take one thing out of the British practice that is to the advantage of the ministers and not take something else. I hope I will be a member of the committee on procedure. It might study this matter among others, and I would be glad to take part in a discussion concerning it. I am stressing the things that the government should do, but I have already said there are responsibilities on the opposition side as well, not to make a joke out of parliament, not to ask frivolous questions, and to realize the tremendous importance that this place holds in our parliamentary system. Let us have, by all means, the cut and thrust of debate, sharp argument, but let us realize at all times that we are the representatives of the people of Canada and we are here to do a job.

The second thing into which I think we must put some effort if we are going to make this parliament, as I think it can be, one of the best in our history, is to establish in the public mind confidence in the integrity of their public representatives. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the ordinary people of Canada want to believe in us, want to have confidence in their members of parliament. They look upon us not just as the ordinary people we are but as members of this important institution of parliament. At times this becomes difficult. At times cynicism arises. I suggest one of the reasons that cynicism arises is the tendency of parties, when they move from one side of the house to the other, to change their position. I have kept particular notes, and I am addressing myself to the government in particular, of the things that the Liberals supported in the last parliament. They supported a bill of mine calling for eight statutory holidays with pay. They supported a bill of mine to have $1.25 per hour established as a minimum wage. They opposed these things when they were on the government side prior to 1957. I hope they will not change their position now they have moved back to the government side of the house.

The Liberals, when they were the government last time introduced a bill to provide for hospitalization but refused to include in it provision for mental and tubercular patients. When the former minister of national health and welfare came over to this side of the house he asked the Conservative government to do what he had refused to do. What is his position now? I could go on with various things. There is the question of the position that the Liberals have taken on nuclear arms. I have some material here and I would have made more use of it last night if I had had an opportunity to participate in the debate at that time. This book is published by McLelland and Stewart Limited, a firm of discriminating publishers, and it is entitled, "The Liberal Party", by J. W. Pickersgill. On page 133 of this book I find a very ringing statement to this effect:

> The Liberal party believes that Canada can make a more appropriate and effective contribution to the joint defence of this continent and to the military alliance of the free world by strengthening the so-called conventional armaments of the Canadian forces than by seeking to become a very junior nuclear power, with a limited supply of nuclear weapons which, in present circumstances, could not be under Canadian custody.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles: I find, of course, this entire book was given the imprimatur of the right hon. Prime Minister of Canada because he wrote a foreword in which he said:

> Mr. Pickersgill's book, to which I am glad to contribute this foreword states the Liberal record and the Liberal purpose in Canada in a clear and convincing way.

I give this now, Mr. Speaker, as an example of the thing I think politicians, members of parliament, should avoid, this business of taking one position when you are on the government side of the house and taking another when you get to the opposition side, then changing again when you get back. It is not good for parliamentary democracy. It does not lead the public to have that kind of confidence in their representatives which the people of Canada want to have. I say the same thing to my friends of the Progressive Conservative party. It is very interesting to hear some of them now asking from this side of the house for the government of the day to do the things that their government refused to do when they were over there.

Now, Mr. Speaker, is this really necessary? Must we have this kind of human weakness that results in a change in position as we move back and forth? If we persist in it, we cannot be surprised if there is cynicism in the public mind regarding politicians. I think it is unfortunate there is that cynicism. I think it is unfortunate that "politician" is sometimes thought of as a dirty word. I feel that a politician has a tremendously high calling, but it is up to us so to act in this house in our various parties that the people of Canada will come to that realization.

The third heading I have on this list of things I think we must do if we are going to make this parliament one of the best in our history is that we must work to produce some solid legislation that will be of benefit to the Canadian people. In the first place, without delay, we must get on the statute books of this country legislation, and we must have brought before us government policies, that will get our economy rolling and keep it rolling. We must provide employment. I welcome the statement that was made by the hon. lady who moved the address. I welcome the statement made in this regard the other day by the Prime Minister. However, statements are not enough. We have to keep at this. Unemployment is not something that can be solved with one magic solution. It takes economic planning; it takes fiscal and financial policies that will stimulate the economy. It takes training. It takes all the various things our economists know must be done. This is the session of parliament in which we must do those things to provide employment and provide a thriving economy for our people.

The field of pensions is another in which we must produce a piece of solid legislation. I welcome the announcement in the speech from the throne that something is coming. I welcome the assurances that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh) has given me on a couple of occasions that if I will just contain myself these things will come to pass. But, Mr. Speaker, I insist that there must be no delay and that this legislation must be as good as or better than the Liberals are now proclaiming it to be. Though the indications so far are very good, in the sense that it looks like there will be an increase in the amount of the pension and that there will be a contributory plan and so on, I regret that there seems to be no suggestion from the Liberal side of the house that the means test is going to be removed at age 65. In my view this is one of those solid achievements that this session of this parliament ought to produce.

I regret too that in the speech from the throne there is no reference to health insurance or medicare. The year 1919 was the year when the Liberals first started talking in this field. It took them nearly 40 years to get hospitalization on the statute books. But, Mr. Speaker, medicare is one of the prime needs of the people of our time. There is a great deal of interest in it, as is being shown by the platforms of all parties in this country at the present time. This is a piece of legislation that must come out of this session.

Housing is another field in which we must make tremendous progress. Before my time runs out I should like to say that I think too, that in this session of this parliament we must make tremendous steps in the field of increasing our contribution to external aid. We in this corner of the house do not like the only decision that has been made so far in this parliament so far as international relations are concerned, namely, the decision that was taken last night. Over and above whatever defence or diplomatic arrangements have to be made, we think that if we are going to achieve and maintain peace in the world we have got to do something to raise the living standards of mankind the world around, and what we are doing in Canada is not even a drop in the bucket. When you look at that in the light of our unemployment and in the light of our unused capacity and unused resources, I suggest the time has come for the government to give to parliament and to the people of Canada a vision of what we can do as Canadians to help to improve the position of mankind throughout the world.

There are other fields, but I stress these five: the provision of full employment, including the whole question of the economy and economic planning; improvements in pensions, and I suggest that the least that should happen would be $75 a month at 65 right away, with the other things that the government has indicated; then, housing; also medicare, and finally a contribution to the peace of the world. I see you are on the edge of your chair, Mr. Speaker. I am through. I just want to emphasize my belief that the prediction I made before the election was held is one that we can make come true. We can make this parliament one of the best that the people of Canada have ever had. We can do it, if we will adhere strictly to the traditions and practices of parliament, if we will do our best to establish in the public mind confidence in us as their representatives, and if we will work together to bring down some very solid legislation for the good of the people of Canada.

(Translation):

Mr. Maurice Sauve (Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate you on your appointment and I associate myself with many of our fellow members who have taken this opportunity of expressing their regard for you.

I also want to tell the hon. member for Northumberland (Miss Jewett) how much I appreciated her speech last Friday and to what extent I subscribe to the principles she expounded at that time.

The hon. member for Lotbiniere (Mr. Choquette) proved that worth does not wait for age, and he did very well in carrying out his task.

Mr. Speaker, this morning I attended the opening of the NATO conference. I was very pleased to hear the chairman and the secretary of the NATO council say that they were particularly happy to attend a NATO meeting in Ottawa. Moreover, I was also extremely satisfied to hear those two personalities, Lord Home and Mr. Stikker, pay a special tribute to the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson). They stated that he had not only been one of the founders of NATO, but one of the main leaders to support this organization during its most difficult moments, that he had been one of the three wise men. In a word, they wanted to pay him a particular tribute in this very house, and I am proud to be a member of a party led by a statesman who has the confidence, not only of his fellow citizens, but also of the whole world and more particularly of the diplomats of other countries with which we maintain diplomatic relations.

Mr. Speaker, I would be remiss if I did not point out the fact that I regret the absence today of some of our colleagues in the last parliament. On the other hand, I am happy to welcome the newly-elected members who will share the difficulties of parliamentary life with us. Indeed, election campaigns are much more easy, on the whole, than the work we have to carry out during the sessions.

(Text):

I might take this opportunity to speak for a few minutes about the election campaign in the Magdalen Islands. I do not want to devote too much of my speech to this matter as I intend to discuss the economic content of the speech from the throne and its consequences in terms of employment and so on. But, Mr. Speaker, you might be interested to know that something very strange happened during the campaign. We had a Conservative candidate by the name of Gerard Mecteau who came to the Magdalen Islands four or five days before nomination day. He was accompanied by Mr. Snyder, former campaign manager of the Union Nationale candidate, Mr. Hormidas Langlais, who was defeated last November after sitting in the Quebec house for 26 years. Mr. Mecteau was an employee of Mr. Snyder. He came there, filed his nomination papers and disappeared. He never showed up during the campaign. We do not know him. We have never seen him.

The surprise is that a week before election day this same Mr. Snyder, the organizer for the Conservative candidate and campaign chairman for the former Union Nationale member, came there and started campaigning on behalf of the Social Credit candidate, Mr. Fernand Turbide. But that is not all. Not only was the Union Nationale linked with the Conservative candidate and the Conservative candidate linked with the Social Credit candidate and the Union Nationale organizer and the Conservative organization supporting the Social Credit candidate, but they were supporting a candidate who was not qualified to stand for election. Probably for the first time since confederation a candidate in a national election ran for office without being 21 years of age. I have his birth certificate which I will send to my friends of the Social Credit party so they can read clearly what is in it and I will read it now for purposes of Hansard.

(Translation):

Mr. Gregoire: May I ask the hon. member for Îles-de-la-Madeleine a question? Was he aware of those facts before election day?

(Text):

Mr. Sauve: I will read—

(Translation):

Mr. Gregoire: May I ask the hon. member for Îles-de-la-Madeleine a question?

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I remind the hon. member that he must address the Chair.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member for Îles-de-la-Madeleine a question? Is the hon. member aware of the fact that a candidate did not have the required age on election day?

Mr. Sauve: Yes, sir, we knew about it, but it was impossible to be on the spot in time with the necessary documents to prove the facts to the returning officer.

(Text):

I will read this document now because I think it is a fascinating one. It proves that the Social Credit party did not take this election seriously in the Magdalen islands, and probably elsewhere. How would a national party with standing dare to present a candidate who was not 21 years old?

(Translation):

Parish of Ste. Therese d'Arvida

Joseph Ovide Fernand Turbide, born on December fifth, in the year one thousand nine hundred and forty two, legitimate son of Edmond Turbide and Marie Louise Lafrance. Godfather: Jean Paul Lafrance. Godmother: Fedia Lafrance Martin. Christened on December 6, 1942 by the Reverend Maurice Girard. This is a true copy made out on March the 13th, 1963 by Normand Deneault, priest.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member allow a question? He therefore received this copy on March 13, 1963, that is almost a month before the last election, because as the date on the paper indicates, he asked for this copy of the christening certificate on March 13, 1963.

Now, could the hon. member for Îles-de-la-Madeleine explain to us how it could be that he, who is a good and law-abiding citizen, has not tried to rectify the case before the election, instead of doing so later?

Mr. Sauve: Mr. Speaker, it is true that this document was signed on March 13, but it reached me only on March 17 or 18, and the nomination was on the 25th. It was therefore, because of existing circumstances, impossible to submit this document—

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker—

(Text):

Mr. Sauve: In any case the responsibility rests with the Social Credit party, not with me. I was not the one to choose my opponent, and when you see what happened there you can understand why the population of the Magdalen Islands will not vote for many years for any Socred, Conservative or National Union candidate, when they come there to laugh at the people during an election.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, in any case, I am not here this afternoon to discuss the happenings in Îles-de-la-Madeleine.

An hon. Member: The member for Îles-de-la-Madeleine is the only one to be aware of those alleged facts.

Mr. Sauve: I have only one thing to say. The speech from the throne contains the legislative program of this government for the first part of the session. It is very clear that one does not find in the speech from the throne the whole program and all the commitments made by the Liberal party during the last election campaign. We have a four year program. How could the hon. members of this house expect that in the first part of this session the government would endeavour to solve all the problems? It is physically impossible.

An hon. Member: You have 60 days.

Mr. Sauve: Exactly, the government has decided in those 60 days to fulfil some of its most urgent commitments.

An hon. Member: Like nuclear weapons for Canada?

Mr. Sauve: And when I compare—

Mr. Pigeon: Or the return of taxation powers to the provinces?

Mr. Sauve: When I compare this 60 day program to the inaction of the 2,140 days of the previous government, I am proud to be a member of the Liberal party.

An hon. Member: It takes very little to make you proud.

Mr. Sauve: Now from the legislative program offered in the speech from the throne I would particularly like to dwell on the economic measures mainly meant to remedy unemployment.

I do not have to recall that the government intends to establish a department of industry, that it will add $100 million to the funds at the disposal of the Atlantic development board. The government intends to create a municipal development and loan board. It also intends to create a Canada development corporation and to establish an economic council of Canada.

When the bills are before us we will, I am sure, be able to see exactly what the government has in mind.

The actual wording of the legislation and the way it is to be carried out will enable us to judge more readily whether the government is in earnest or whether it simply wants to fulfil some of its commitments.

As a matter of fact, unless we decide to implement the indicative planning we talked about during the last session, a planning which has brought prosperity to so many European countries, I think we will have very little chance to solve the serious unemployment problems and the serious economic problems of our country.

I hope that all those boards the government intends to set up will have a fair and equitable representation of the labour and farming communities. All elements of our economic life must be represented on those federal agencies.

I am of the opinion that the climate of confidence which surrounds this new government, which is reflected in the papers and the comments made by everybody, will promote the appearance of new capital in Canada and new investments in the most important segments of our economic life.

If I discussed economic problems and solutions contemplated by the government, it is mainly because in our province of Quebec unemployment is and has always been a plague as I shall try to prove it. I think that all members of this house realize that the economic situation in the province of Quebec is difficult, that you find in the province of Quebec 37 per cent of all jobless in the country—

An hon. Member: Under a Liberal government.

Mr. Sauve: —while there is only 27 per cent of the labour force and twice as many unemployed people.

Mr. Gregoire: Under a Liberal government.

Mr. Sauve: That has been going on for a long time. If the hon. member for Lapointe will listen to me, he will understand, like hon. members from other provinces, that the uneasiness felt in the province of Quebec originates from deep economic causes and that by finding a solution to those economic problems, we may do more to maintain national unity in Canada than all the great speeches which are delivered at present on that matter.

That situation has been existing for a long time.

I have here a publication by the dominion bureau of statistics entitled "Unemployment in Canada", catalogue No. 71-503F. On page 12 of that document, you can read "Distribution of unemployment by region". From 1951 to 1955, a period when we had a Liberal government—one must admit that—36 per cent of all jobless in Canada were in the province of Quebec. From 1956 to 1960, when we had a Conservative government for most of the time, 36 per cent of jobless lived in the province of Quebec. In 1961, the proportion is still 35 per cent while we only had 27 per cent of the labour force.

It is obvious that unemployment has particular effects on personal income. I have before me a document which shows that there was $497 difference, in 1961, in the personal income as between a resident of Ontario and a resident of Quebec; this means that in Ontario, the per capita income was $1,829 while in the province of Quebec it was only $1,382, a difference of 37 per cent.

Well, Mr. Speaker, how can the citizens of the province of Quebec, who consider themselves as full fledged citizens, who want to be considered as equal partners in Canada, be willing to accept a situation where they are at a financial disadvantage compared to the citizens of Ontario?

I believe that the measures set out in the speech from the throne will probably help to find a solution to the problem of unemployment. But what chances have these measures of being successful in the province of Quebec? I suggest that any legislation from the Ottawa government should get the approval of the Quebec people and of the provincial government. The pieces of legislation with which we shall have to deal in this house should facilitate the work already undertaken by the government of Quebec.

In the province of Quebec, we have set up a general investment corporation; we are planning to establish an iron-smelting industry and, unless the central government, which has great responsibilities in the economic field, comes and facilitates the renovation work undertaken by the Liberal government of Quebec, I am afraid that we, in Quebec, shall not be able to achieve the aims which we have set forth and, consequently, we shall continue to have grievances against the rest of Canada.

For the administration of these new laws, when we shall have to recruit civil servants, it will be important to choose employees from the province of Quebec, familiar with the Quebec mentality, who will be on friendly terms with the Quebec government, and with the officials from Quebec. Otherwise, how can we hope for the successful administration of these new laws?

Mr. Speaker, as far as the unemployment problem and the inferior income I have just referred to are concerned, even if the latter situation is, to my way of thinking, the main cause of the uneasiness which is felt, it remains nevertheless that, as a group, our situation is far from brilliant.

When we consider the situation of the French Canadians in the hundred largest corporations in Canada, we find that only two of them are managed by members of our group; there is not a single French Canadian vice president on the executive board of the C.N.R. or of the C.P.R. In fact, until recently, not a single French Canadian was a member of the executive board of the C.N.R. Why did we have to utter shrill protests in this house before Mr. Maurice Archer was appointed? What can we infer from this?

You will note that two French Canadians have been prime ministers of Canada; that three have been chief justices of the supreme court and one, Governor General. But why are there no French Canadians to be found to manage more crown corporations as well as the large Canadian banks?

It should nevertheless be appreciated that we have been waiting since 1867. We have been patient. It is difficult to ask a people to keep on waiting, when that people has known, since the month of September 1959, a climate of freedom.

That people who want to develop is creating the instruments of its own freeing and goes on with its emancipation, as it can be seen now.

Things that seem irregular happen too often. For instance, on the trains between Montreal and Ottawa—on both the C.N.R. and the C.P.R.—conductors are practically unilingual and the announcements are called only in English. And while this happens in Ottawa and on the trains, bombs are exploding in Montreal. Even in government buildings, elevator operators do not always understand French. Most of the time, if we want to go to the fourth floor, they take us up to the sixth.

Such is the situation at the present time. It should at least be realized what a climate it creates. We have practically no right to live in French in certain provinces.

In the economic field, where do we stand? We own almost nothing. We have almost nothing, outside the province of Quebec.

As to the civil service in Ottawa, even if they say to French Canadians: "Come, you will be welcome", our civil servants must nevertheless write and discuss in English. In the important international meetings, how many French Canadian officials represent us? Indeed I intend to put this question on the order paper of the house.

There must be a possible solution to that problem. We cannot wait any longer.

The proposed enquiry on biculturalism will soon get under way, but naturally it will not solve all our problems. However, it might increase our awareness of the situation, and enlighten more particularly our English speaking friends. For most French speaking Canadians, the problem is of a psychological order. If we are not really happy outside Quebec, if the education of our children in the other provinces is fraught with difficulties, if we must fight to snatch mere crumbs from the various provincial governments, how then can we be proud of our country and feel at home everywhere within the Canadian borders? It is high time for all of us to size up the situation.

The commission on biculturalism will only succeed if it secures the co-operation of the provinces. If this co-operation is denied, what could the commission do? We know that most of our problems stem from education, a matter strictly within the jurisdiction of provincial governments. The success of the inquiry rests also in part upon the choice of the commissioners. I hope that the provinces and the federal government will select the best men, and discard every vestige of partisanship.

I think we are all agreed on that point. The success of the inquiry on biculturalism will depend in great part on the excellence of the briefs to be submitted to the commission. If the two main racial groups of our country take advantage of this inquiry to give expression to their spite toward one another, its results will be inconclusive. Briefs must be objective.

I trust that the inquiry will have at its disposal all the means required for objective and scientific research in order to find out what is going on and what is exactly the situation at the present time. Being aware of the situation, we shall be in a better position to find the proper answers to our problems.

Let us not believe, however, that those answers will be found overnight, because even though the federal government were to accept the proposals of Mr. Lesage, the matter would not be entirely settled because it goes beyond the problem of fiscal relations.

I, for one, believe that the federal government could accept the terms of the Quebec government and propose to the other provinces the same arrangements whereby the federal government's share of expenses would be turned over to the provinces in the fields coming under provincial jurisdiction. Let me explain.

Supposing that the fiscal demands of the province of Quebec would amount to $125 million a year, the federal government might very well hand over those $125 million to the province while the province would have to pay, at the same time, the federal contribution of $75 million to hospital insurance and do the same in other fields.

What Quebec wants, is self-administration in its own way. The province does not want to take what rightly belongs to others, but it wants to be able to look after its own affairs in all fields under its jurisdiction.

You will note, Mr. Speaker, that if we want to be our own masters at home, it does not mean that we want to separate ourselves from the others, though—and here I am weighing my words carefully—we find, more and more, in the province of Quebec, people who do not expect anything either from Ottawa or from the rest of Canada.

Those people are not necessarily separatists. But they have decided to solve their own problems themselves through a government which is nearer to them, i.e. the provincial government of Quebec.

I trust—my speaking time is about up—that all my fellow members will realize the importance of the legislation suggested by the Liberal government in Ottawa. I also hope that they will not tarry in passing economic legislation, which might end part of our troubles, because we of the province of Quebec want to live in the same way as others do. We want to live as others do, as do people in Ontario, and enjoy the same prosperity. We want to feel at home everywhere in Canada. When we get out of the province of Quebec, we want to find ourselves at home too, be it in Vancouver, Winnipeg or St. John's, Newfoundland. For this is our country, the country of all Canadians. And, which is perhaps still more important, we would like the people from the other provinces to want us too.

We want to feel that we are essential to the development of Canada. We want the rest of Canada to like us. If Canadians from all provinces will join with us, we will build in Canada, our land as well as yours, a country where it feels good to live in good understanding and complete equality. We want to be equal partners.

It is probably the last chance the traditional political parties will have in the province of Quebec. No longer can we accept promises from political parties in that field. Now, we need action. We have become politically conscious. We all know what happened last June when the people of Quebec gave a warning to all traditional parties, voting as they did for Social Credit. The province of Quebec gave that warning and they might give more than a warning at the next election, unless we, who are responsible for the government, take courageous and necessary measures. But I think those measures are forecast in the speech from the throne. I am proud to belong to a party with a leader such as the Hon. Lester B. Pearson.

Mr. Marcoux: May I ask the hon. member a question?

An hon. Member: His time is up.

Mr. Marcoux: I should like to ask the hon. member which section of the election act provides that a candidate in a federal election must be at least 21 years of age?

Mr. Sauve: Mr. Speaker, there is a specific section on this, but I do not know which one. I think it is section 19 which provides that one must be a Canadian and 21 years of age, and—there are three requirements.

Mr. Marcoux: That applies in the case of an elector.

Mr. Sauve: No. In any case I shall bring you the document.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member's time has expired, so he cannot be asked questions.

Mr. Remi Paul (Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasant duty, first of all, to offer my sincere congratulations to the hon. member for Mount Royal (Mr. Macnaughton) who has been elected Speaker of the house. It is a great pleasure indeed since the Conservative party was the first to recognize the competence of the hon. member for Mount Royal when he was asked by the leader of the opposition in 1958 to become chairman of the public accounts committee. Fortunately, his party has now recognized his exceptional qualifications and ability. There is no doubt in our mind that he will discharge his responsibilities with tact, diplomacy and justice.

I also offer my sincere congratulations to the chairman of committees. I am sure that you will preside over our proceedings with the necessary diplomacy to ensure that the business of this house always takes into account the welfare of the Canadian people.

It is a tradition also to commend and congratulate the mover and seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. I am pleased to offer my most sincere congratulations to the hon. member for Northumberland (Miss Jewett). She discharged her duty with charm and courtesy, but too much optimism because she will be faced soon with the hard reality after she has seen this government in action for a while.

As for the hon. member for Lotbiniere (Mr. Choquette), the hon. member for Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Sauve), mentioned that he had proven that youth did not rule out ability. It is a fact that the hon. member for Lotbiniere made a highly enthusiastic election speech full of wonderful assurance which probably indicates a brilliant political future. But he will have to abandon the party he now belongs to because otherwise, in the near future, we will say about him like we said about many other hon. friends who sat across the aisle: "He was only passing through parliament in Ottawa."

I am proud to express my appreciation to the voters in the riding of Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere for the confidence they showed in me when they renewed my term for a third time. I can give them the assurance that I shall continue to place my limited abilities at their service and try to discharge fully my responsibilities as a member of this house. Such responsibilities go beyond patronage and involve a sympathetic consideration of all needs, all problems, with a view to giving assistance where it is needed.

I have already described the geography of the riding of Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere in a speech I made, but I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that its population is exceedingly clever as can be seen from the results of the last election held on April 8.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Paul: Our Socred friends did not seem to relish those results; let them not worry, for I will have a few words to say about them in a minute. The debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne gives us an opportunity to deal with just about every subject, provided, however, that the discussion can be constructive, for one should not forget that the present government is a minority government.

Hon. members all remember the enthusiasm shown by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson)—and I take this opportunity to congratulate him for his recent appointment to the privy council of Her Majesty the Queen—when he said the day after the election of June 18, 1962:

> We must have an election.

The lust for power was the driving force behind him. It is interesting to read the comments made in this house by the then leader of the opposition on October 1, 1962. I believe that his words are still timely today. This is what we find at page 50 of official Hansard:

> The first business of this parliament once the formalities have been completed . . . must be to decide in accordance with our constitutional and democratic rights whether the minority government now in office has the confidence of this House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker, 41 per cent of voters voted for the Liberal party. Therefore, the government which is leading us presently does not have the confidence of the people. In fact, the Prime Minister made a statement in 1962 which can very well apply to the situation we have today. This is what he said:

> In the present circumstances, such a motion takes precedence over other business—

The Prime Minister of today was speaking of a non-confidence motion.

> —as it has done in the past in similar circumstances. For this purpose it is the duty and the privilege of the official opposition to move a motion which will make that decision possible. That duty is obvious. Indeed, it is inescapable, when nearly 63 per cent of the voters in this country have declared in the recent election that they have no confidence in this government, in its policies and in its leadership.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that there is nothing to be changed in this statement except that 61 per cent must be substituted for 63 per cent.

The then leader of the opposition went on to say:

> Will it help Canada if, by voting confidence in this minority government, we reject this verdict of the people, ignore the records, and deny the validity of positions previously taken, and declared by those who took them to be in the national interest? There can be no stability in government when over any substantial period the party in power cannot ordinarily command the majority in the House of Commons.

It was interesting to note the concern shown last night by the hon. members opposite. As a matter of fact, they were pale, which reminded me then of the words of Louis Veuillot: "Let us beware of pale faces". They were all nervous, because they remembered no doubt the statement made by their leader on October 1, 1962. But the present situation is a little more complicated and confused.

Mr. Speaker, until Good Friday of this year, the Canadian people were not sure which one of the two main parties would form the next government. But then came a turncoat movement, a sort of political osmosis, the sudden joining of six Social Crediters who were drawn to the Liberal party, either to protest their own interests, or from conviction, or for a sense of security, or for money, I know not what. But the present right hon. Prime Minister had such a lust for power that, on the very day that group of six joined forces with him—later, they had to withdraw—he hastened to express his satisfaction at getting the support brought to him by six Social Credit members.

Well, if the former Conservative government has been taken to task for remaining in power with the help of the Social Credit party, then I would say to my Liberal friends, have no fear, because you were lucky last night.

We hope that the members of the Social Credit party will be true to the statement they made during the election campaign, that is, not to be the servants of another political party, but to remain true to their mandate by working first of all for the welfare of the people, as every member of this house is duty bound to do.

Mr. Speaker, we noted a great contrast between the uncalled for interventions of the present Prime Minister, when he was leader of the opposition, last June, and the calm, the seriousness with which the present Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) greeted the people of Canada, last April 21 and wished good luck to the new Liberal government, while assuring the people that the opposition would not systematically practice obstruction, as our hon. friends opposite did during the last parliament. That is why, last night, as a national issue was at stake, and not in order to indulge in a systematic opposition, but because we had, at this time, to take a stand on a question in accordance with the Conservative party policy, we did not fear to vote for the subamendment.

And, Mr. Speaker, it is difficult not to mention the lack of interest with which the members of the cabinet seem to listen to the speeches offering solutions to the problems discussed since the beginning of the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne. In fact, there is only one minister in the house this afternoon, while the members are dealing with various matters that might interest various departments. But I hope that the Postmaster General (Mr. Denis), who is at his desk right now, will let his fellow cabinet members know about the various recommendations, suggestions and criticisms that are made by the members.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the house to certain events, not unusual, but somewhat strange, that happened in my riding during the last election campaign. I want to tell you that following some calls that I made in my riding since last April 8, I found that some of my constituents felt that they had lost some of their independence.

How the Canadian people feel outside the limits of my riding, I cannot tell, but I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that back home, in my constituency of Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere—and the Postmaster General (Mr. Denis), being a native of my riding, is quite familiar with that particular mentality —people are asking themselves whether the President of the United States or the Prime Minister of Canada is now governing our country.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Paul: I realize that does not please some of my friends. But, if I ask that question, Mr. Speaker, it is because in my riding, during the last election campaign, all possible means were used to gain a victory for the Liberal party, and to such an extent that, on voting day itself, American rather than Canadian five and ten dollar bills were distributed from the most generous Liberal coffers.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Paul: That surprises my friends.

Mr. Gregoire: It is true.

Mr. Paul: That will certainly be the only time I shall agree with the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) during the present session.

Mr. Speaker, there has been a shameful patronage going on in the province of Quebec. Everything has been done to bring about the triumph of the Liberal party. There has been blackmail, individuals have been threatened with withdrawal of their welfare pensions and indigent mothers of their allowance, invalids saw their pensions threatened, and the same happened to farmers with regard to farm credit payments if the mother and father would vote or if the grown boys and girls did.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that I shall with great pride render tribute to the people of Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere, who remained unmoved by such threats and promises, who have proved to be above any immediate material gains, and remained faithful to the Conservative party, not because of him who is now speaking to you, but because the Conservative party advocates, and always will advocate political independence.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) said, on January 31, 1963, in this very House of Commons, as can be seen on page 3289 of the official record:

> It will, as always, honour its obligations. But it will not be pushed around or accept external domination or interference in the making of its decisions. Canada is determined to remain a firm ally, but that does not mean that she should be a satellite.

It is interesting to note developments in my riding since the Liberal gentlemen came into power. First of all, there is the matter of the Associated Textiles of Canada Limited. We can remember the distress and depression in which the textile industry had fallen when the Conservatives took over in June 1957. The employees of that industry were facing chronic unemployment; working hours had fallen to 30 or 35 a week; there was overproduction. The minister of finance and the minister of trade and commerce of the day worked together in order to improve that national production and find markets for it, and so successfully that the chairman of the manufacturing branch of the Associated Textiles of Canada Limited sent a letter to all the workers in that plant, dated December 18, 1962, in which he said:

> In the year that is drawing to a close activity in the textile industry in Canada increased considerably. This is mainly due to the changes made in the value of the Canadian dollar, and to the higher tariff wall designed to protect goods manufactured in this country, which brought about a decrease of imports, while a great number of Canadian workers in the textile industry are now benefiting from this increase in production.

That was on December 18, 1962. And I hope that my hon. friends opposite will not attribute a political character to that document, as it preceded the last federal election by nearly four months. But, oddly enough, the situation is deteriorating to the point that on May 3 last, the company had to dismiss 75 employees in its textile industry at Louiseville and the same thing is happening in St. Gabriel de Brandon and Berthierville. We have good reason to ask what new life the present government has given to the textile industry. What steps have they taken, upon assuming power, that have so paralysed that important industry of the province of Quebec.

That is not all. In my home town, Louiseville, there is another industry, the Laminated Structures Company Limited. Every spring that company used to increase its staff and, in May, it had something like 150 to 175 employees. This year, on May 3 last, the company had to fire 29 workers. How can you explain such a situation? How is it that several labourers or tradesmen like bricklayers, plasterers, carpenters and electricians can no longer find work in Montreal, a situation which has not occurred in the past five years. That has happened in the last two or three weeks, or in the past month.

[Mr. Paul.]

But what measures does the government intend to take to get the Canadian production and economy moving? We shall come to that in a moment.

But there is another much more serious question and that is the intolerable lot imposed on the eastern farmers in the province of Quebec and in the Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere riding by the new Liberal government. This afternoon, we heard the new Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays), with an inexplicable candour, state that the 25 cents subsidy per 100 pounds of milk would not be paid out anymore and that this meant a saving of $6 million for the taxpayers. Let the Liberals go and explain that statement by the Minister of Agriculture in the province of Quebec where they travelled around during the last election making believe that the Liberal party would stimulate agriculture. And what about imports of American pork arriving in Montreal by truck loads and car loads to such a point that nowadays, the farmer is not getting the price he was receiving under the Conservative administration. Is that Liberal stability?

I think some measures are necessary to cope with the situation which is becoming alarming not only for labourers, but also for textile workers and farmers. I do not intend to dwell any longer on this matter of agriculture. I know that the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Vincent) will discuss the matter in a much more capable manner than I could.

Now let us take a look at the speech from the throne—which is supposed to be the corner stone of the legislation to be introduced by the government. There are some excellent measures in the speech from the throne but others are dangerous.

First of all there is the establishment of a royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism. That measure is excellent. It has been a must for a very long time and I should commend the government for having understood a problem which transcends the interests of political parties because it involves the very future of confederation and the peaceful co-existence of English speaking Canadians and French speaking Canadians throughout Canada.

The former administration under the present leader of the official opposition also had an excellent idea, that of a federal-provincial conference. In my opinion, Mr.

Speaker, we should not put that idea aside because if we want Canada to be a bilingual country, we must go to the very heart of the problem which is a problem of education. And since education is a provincial matter under the constitution, the provinces must subscribe to the principle of bilingual education right across the country if our youth is to grow up with such a mental attitude and culture, so that when they attain maturity they may continue to practice bilingualism and biculturalism which are so necessary to the greatness and prosperity of Canada and particularly to the survival of this Canadian confederation. This matter supersedes political interests, as the hon. member for Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Sauve) stated a moment ago. One must not ignore all that has been accomplished in the past, because governments have always been half aware of this fact. The Liberals have adopted measures which have been satisfactory to French Canadians and so have the Conservatives with measures which have been called "mere concessions" and I am not using these words lightly when I say "mere concessions". We are not Canadian citizens who want more than others. We only want to be treated like the English speaking citizens.

And I would remind the Anglo-Saxon Canadians that the French Canadians were never vanquished on the Plains of Abraham, in Quebec city. They were just defeated. There is a difference. Yes. We kept our civil code, our courts of justice. We had, at that time, aspirations and rights that were recognized by various measures, constitutional or otherwise. But those measures were defined in and sanctioned by an act called the British North America Act, after meetings held in Charlottetown and Quebec city, in order to treat with fairness and equity those two great pioneer nations of Canada. Well, we have no right today to remain unconcerned regarding this serious problem of biculturalism and bilingualism. We must consider a situation which has become alarming and, unfortunately, can have dire consequences for the future of the Canadian confederation.

Personally, I am in favour of calling together the French Canadian states general. I support the measure passed last week in the legislative assembly of Quebec, both by the Liberals and the National Union party, so that that meeting can enable French Canadians to become conscious of an actual situation, study steps and means to correct it, participate in the drafting of briefs to be submitted later to the commission set up by the present government. Let us hope that it will be possible later on to call a federal-provincial conference to facilitate the solution of that problem, as I said earlier, not to give special treatment to French Canadians, but so that they may be treated as equal partners who have fought, worked and suffered for the greatness and prosperity of the whole of Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

(Text):

Mr. Grant Deachman (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I join the many voices in this house that have offered their congratulations and their good wishes to you on your election to this historic chair which Speaker James Cockburn first took in the old House of Commons to open the session of 1867 about 96 years ago. I join too with many other members in congratulating the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and the members of his cabinet on their appointments and wish them success in the great task which they have undertaken.

I was touched by the eloquent words of the mover (Miss Jewett) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne as she described the beautiful villages and the fertile valleys of her own Northumberland, and I wondered as I listened how I would be received in this house when I came to describe how my own constituency of Vancouver Quadra lies between 16th avenue on the one hand and 37th avenue on the other. I admired too the brief and cogent words of the seconder (Mr. Choquette) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne and I congratulate him upon setting an excellent precedent for the new members of this house to follow.

I wish to say a few words about my distinguished opponent in the past election. Few persons in Canadian public life have achieved such a reputation as the Hon. Howard Green for unswerving loyalty and integrity. He first entered the house in 1935, the same year as my late father, who entered parliament in that year as the Liberal member for North Huron. He reminded me of this on election night when the battle was over and he came to our committee rooms and told us that if he had to be defeated he preferred to be defeated by the son of a man whom he had personally known and had respected in this house. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that hon. members on this side of the house will grant me a few moments to salute this great Canadian, soldier and parliamentarian, who served his country for a lifetime, as few are given to serve it, in war and peace.

I deem it a high honour to follow him as the second member of parliament to be elected for Vancouver Quadra and the first to serve it as a member of the Liberal party. I return to this beautiful city of Ottawa after an absence of over 20 years during which I have seen it only fleetingly. Not much has changed. There was a May blizzard terrifying the tulips when I arrived, but the next day the sun blazed and the whole city was defrosted in a few hours. The old pavement along Rideau street is still the same and it jarred my memory and my spine. But the new government buildings, the tall apartment buildings and the burgeoning suburbs around the periphery of Ottawa reminded me that this capital has kept pace year by year with the growth of the nation.

I was astonished a little to see the new art gallery which looks like our post office in Vancouver. I remember that a distinguished visitor from this city to Vancouver told us on one occasion that we should put a slipcover over our post office. Here in Ottawa the quiet, old, stone convents, shuttered and curtained, the green patina of copper roofs and the gingerbread topping on the old east block still link us with our historic past and with the city of Laurier.

On the coast, and I know I will be understood by easterners who come from the "island" or from the "bay" if I just refer to it as the coast, we have no long history. In 1842 Henry Goulburn, British chancellor of the exchequer, said:

> These territories are bounded by frost and wrapped in fog, and woe betide any unfortunate individual who might be so far diverted from the path of prudence to settle in these parts.

But by 1908 Rudyard Kipling had come by. He thought a little better of it and said:

> Such a land is good for an energetic man. It is also not so bad for a loafer.

Not very long ago I met Greg Clark in Victoria and he said to me:

> Anybody who can live on the coast and doesn't is an idiot.

So we are improving.

The constituency which I have the honour to serve was named after two gallant seamen, Captain Vancouver, who first mapped the inland waters of the coast and whose maps were so very good that they are still in use in parts today, and Admiral Quadra, a Spanish sailor who knew those waters in the days when the coast was claimed by Spain.

There are no great factories, office buildings, forests or farms in my constituency. It lies in the heart of residential Vancouver and is the home of many men and women who daily earn their living in the city.

The University of British Columbia, which now enrolls 13,000 students in its degree courses and instructs almost as many more in its post-graduate and summer courses, is located in Vancouver Quadra. On a spacious promontory overlooking the sea it faces on the west towards the strait of Georgia and the waters of the Pacific, and on the north and east towards the coastal mountains, rising dramatically and abruptly from the sea to heights of 5,000 feet. We make no boast when we say there is no other university in the world more beautifully situated than this.

Millions of dollars of provincial money and private contributions are involved in the building program now under way at our university. Funds from the Canada Council have also contributed to the extension of the library, the building of dormitories and the construction of the new fine arts theatre and centre, which is now reaching completion on that campus to make it one of the finest in north America. Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation loans also assist in dormitory construction, so that the federal government has a considerable role in the improvement of that university.

It is in the field of operating costs that universities find their greatest troubles. There seems to be ample desire to build buildings, provide equipment, grant scholarships and bursaries and finance research projects. But no one, provincial or federal, private or public, has any real enthusiasm for paying the operating costs. How to pay for the daily operating charges of universities is becoming an acute provincial problem and one in which the federal government must find ways to play an increasingly important part, if our universities are to expand in keeping with the expansion of the country.

A military district headquarters is located in Vancouver Quadra. The Department of National Defence keeps a faultlessly neat establishment there and its military personnel are good neighbours. But it is situated on a choice beach property which impedes the development of Vancouver's scenic Marine drive and public beaches. Proud as we are of this establishment and the fine Canadian soldiers who operate it, we residents of Vancouver look to the day, not too distant I hope, when this property can be released for the completion of the parks and drives and beaches which will make the littoral of English bay one of the finest anywhere.

I believe I sensed last night that there are more vital issues than this pressing the Minister of National Defence. But I can assure him that there is none which he could solve more easily and which would give him more pleasure in doing it.

There is one other federal institute of size in Vancouver Quadra. Shaughnessy military hospital, with a thousand beds, is one of the great general hospitals in Canada built to serve our veterans. At one time its beds were filled with veterans undergoing treatment for service wounds and disabilities. Its patients were young. The hospital's cases were acute. The staff doctors who walked its corridors were the best of the civilian specialists in the city of Vancouver. Nowhere in Canada could a man obtain more superlative treatment and care than in Shaughnessy.

Today, circumstances have changed. Service wounds and disabilities form only a small fraction of present cases. Many beds are filled with aging veterans. They present problems of chronic care, and single patients tend to occupy beds for periods of weeks and even months. The specialists who gave Shaughnessy its enviable reputation have tended to drift away. So have many of the acute, non-service cases which formerly were treated there.

Thus, a magnificent general hospital of 1,000 beds, which would cost $20,000 to $25,000 a bed to build today, has become, for the greater part, an institute for the terminal care of the aged. We owe such care to our aging veterans, Mr. Speaker, but is it necessary that chronic care be administered in the highest priced, best equipped, most modern general hospital beds in the land?

As medicare plans are developed, the number of acute hospital cases will rise simply because people will be given the opportunity for the first time to obtain long deferred elective treatment. Existing general beds will, in all probability, not be able to accommodate the flood of new cases.

The time is not too far distant when we must find the means to accommodate our aging veterans in adequate, but in less expensive quarters, and release these costly beds for the care of acute general cases in medicine and surgery.

These, then, are the institutions in my riding most affected by federal policy. But its people, many of whom are the business, industrial, cultural and civic leaders of the coast, are interested in all matters affecting the economy and welfare of British Columbia and, in fact, of Canada. In particular they are interested in its trade because we in British Columbia are a trading people.

In 1961 the value of all exports through B.C. custom ports was almost $1 billion, out of total national exports of approximately $6 billion. In the same year, 1961, the population of British Columbia was 1,630,000 out of the total Canadian population of 18,240,000, so that with less than 9 per cent of the population, British Columbia accounted for more than 17 per cent of the value of Canada's export trade.

At the same time imports into British Columbia from commonwealth, United States and foreign countries are estimated to run in current years at roughly half the level of our exports. In other words British Columbia today is a net exporter on behalf of the whole of Canada of approximately half a billion dollars of goods a year. In the five year period 1956 to 1960 exports from B.C. exceeded imports into the province, for consumption locally, by approximately $1,400,000. While exports of grain to red China have accounted for a substantial portion of this total in recent years, it must be remembered that British Columbia is a producer of 70 per cent of Canada's sawn lumber, 12 per cent of its pulpwood and approximately 80 per cent of its plywood, virtually all of which is produced for the export trade. In addition, of course, we are major exporters of minerals, metals, natural gas, fish, agricultural products, and so on. Shipping is a major industry up and down the coast of British Columbia and between Canada and the United States in its coastal waters. The aviation industry connects us with the far east, with Australasia and across the world into Europe, and southward to South America. Aviation is the second largest secondary industry in the whole of British Columbia, and one of great importance to us on the coast in providing connections on short hops throughout the whole of British Columbia's indented and serrated coast.

I hope, therefore, as my knowledge and experience grows in these matters, to take a larger part in the debates in this house and in the work of its committees, so that I may make some worthy contribution to public affairs while I am a member of parliament.

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to be taking part in this debate. I should like first of all to offer my congratulations to the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Deachman) on his maiden speech in the House of Commons. I can assure him that they come easier as you make them, and no doubt, in view of the ability he displayed today, he will make more as time goes on and will do very well. I should also like to compliment him for his very fine remarks about the former member for Vancouver Quadra, the Hon. Howard Green, who was a wonderful man and a wonderful friend to members of parliament on both sides of the house. He made a tremendous contribution to Canada. All Canadians should feel proud of him for the contribution he made.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate you, the chairman of committees of the whole house and the deputy chairman, who comes from the Atlantic provinces, upon your appointment. I look forward to your work, which I know will be impartial and on the fairest possible basis. Let us hope that we work well together and have an effective and efficient parliament. I should also like to offer my congratulations to the mover and the seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne.

Mr. Speaker, my first remarks must be directed to one section of the speech from the throne with regard to the Atlantic development board. This section reads as follows:

> Amendments to the Atlantic Development Board Act will be proposed, to strengthen the board and to provide for a capital assistance fund through which it can promote basic projects in the Atlantic region.

Mr. Speaker, I say that I must first direct my remarks to that particular section because it is the only section in the speech from the throne that has any special application to the Atlantic provinces.

Mr. Pickersgill: What about the trans-Canada highway?

Mr. Coates: What about the trans-Canada highway? You are not doing anything for the Atlantic provinces; you are not doing something for everybody in Canada. Mr. Speaker, from what I have seen on the order paper in the way of resolutions which will amend the Atlantic development board it is obvious that the Liberal government of today have informed the people of the Atlantic area that they are going to provide them with the most expensive funeral the Atlantic provinces have ever seen. They have even informed us that they are going to provide six Grit pall bearers to go with it. What are they going to do for us? They are going to give us $100 million. Well, isn't that wonderful. They are going to give it to us over a six year period. They are going to amend the board so they can get six Grits on there in order to eliminate the worry about the five present members. That must be the very logical and obvious reason for the appointment of these people. Yes, they are going to change it. They are going to kill it. They have put into the resolution the date it is going to die. They have provided its obituary. This is the great promise made to our people by this Liberal government of today. Mr. Speaker, as time goes on and the people of the Atlantic provinces will have an opportunity to look the Liberal candidates in the face again and assess what they have done, they will be sure they were led down the garden path by this Liberal government and will do something to change it.

What do these amendments mean, Mr. Speaker? To me, as one who played an active part in making the Atlantic development board a reality, I see them as a pay-off to the Atlantic provinces in order that we can be forgotten for as long as the Liberal party again remains in power.

An hon. Member: Another 22 years.

Mr. Coates: It will not be 22 years this time. They will be lucky if it is two. On that basis it would not be a bad pay-off.

Mr. Fisher: What about Newfoundland?

Mr. Coates: The Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) says that Mr. Smallwood has given us all he can, and he has not as yet given them much back. He will have to do better than that or he will probably be looking to another part of Canada for a seat.

Mr. Winkler: That would not surprise anybody.

Mr. Churchill: Don't send him back to Manitoba.

Mr. Pickersgill: Are you frightened?

Mr. Churchill: No, I am not. Come and run against me.

Mr. Coates: I do not think anybody else wants him either. Let us look at this development fund realistically. Let us see exactly what it gives us. The resolution says we will be given $100 million over a period of six years. Well, there are four provinces down there, in case the Secretary of State does not know. There are four provinces between which this $100 million has to be divided over a period of six years. It does not even come near the Atlantic adjustment grants. We were good enough, when we came into office, to recognize the problems of the Atlantic area and we did something about them. We immediately provided $100 million in special grants, with no attachments, no special board, no set up such as will be the case with this government, bringing six Grits in to look after the five appointees who are already there. There was nothing like that. We did not say to the Liberal government in Newfoundland, "You cannot have the money because you are a Liberal government". We distributed the money and let them work out the manner in which it should be distributed within the four provinces.

Very well; they will give us $100 million over a six year period, and they say, "We are going to kill the board. We are going to bury it on January 24, 1969." What right has this government to say they are going to bury the board in 1969? Do they think they are going to be here in 1969? If they do, it will not be the votes from the Atlantic provinces that will keep them in office. What constitutional right has this government to say that the board is going to die in 1969? It is certainly well beyond the scope of this parliament even if it were to continue for five years. No, there is little hope for the Atlantic provinces in the amendments as they appear in the speech from the throne and on the order paper.

I should like to quote from an editorial which has something to say about a fund for the Atlantic development board. It appeared in the Daily Gleaner of January 25, 1963. The title of the editorial is "On to Prosperity"—it was referring to the Atlantic provinces, and had this to say:

> It would be both unrealistic and self-defeating to bind the Atlantic development board with a fixed fund. Such a fund would at once prove inadequate. We need massive developments in this region, and massive developments call for massive investments. A single project could deplete the fund.

Perhaps I could digress here for a moment to point out that the Prince Edward Island causeway project alone would cost more than $100 millions.

An hon. Member: What happened to it?

Mr. Coates: I don't know what will happen to it now, with you people over there. I know what would have happened to it had we been there. We would have built it. Certainly, the Atlantic development board is not going to build it. Come to that, it is not going to do anything about the Chignecto complex either, because the dams alone would cost $350 millions.

To continue:

> A single project could deplete the fund and leave our other requirements exactly where they are now—on the shelf or drawing board.

That is where most of them sat when the Liberal government was in power earlier.

> Moreover, curbed by a fixed fund, the Atlantic development board would be unable to judge between the urgent needs of the separate provinces. It would be put in the untenable position of having to decide, for example, whether a specific New Brunswick project was more urgent than one for Nova Scotia.
>
> The Atlantic development board is just what its name implies. It is an agency concerned solely with the development of the Atlantic provinces. It has no funds to spend. It is no super-government, no intercessor between federal and provincial administrations, no buffer between Ottawa and the just demands of the region. Its objective is to raise the standards of living in the Atlantic provinces, and bring them to parity with the rest of the nation. And, in this, it has the blessing and the support of the government of Canada which created it and which is now putting it to work.

Well, it is not going to have much money with which to do this work if the amendments which are proposed are passed by this house. Let us hope the government comes to its senses and removes the amendment with regard to the date of its death, and makes that $100 millions into a billion dollars—a realistic sum in comparison with the needs of our area.

Let me read another editorial. This one appeared in the Daily Gleaner on May 17, 1963, and it also had application to this subject. The heading is "The Battle-Cry"—an allusion to the twenty sixth parliament. It says:

> Jobs for maritimers should be the battle-cry of Canada's twenty sixth parliament. No conscientious parliamentarian who reads the latest unemployment statistics can miss the shocking discrepancy between job opportunity in this region and the rest of Canada.
>
> To be sure, unemployment here dipped from 15.3 per cent in mid-March to 14.1 per cent in mid-April. But that was a national trend. The fact remains that this 14.1 per cent when compared with the 6.4 per cent representative of the other six provinces is a sobering indictment of a country that enjoys relative prosperity in its central and western areas and permits out-and-out depression in its eastern extremity.
>
> But statistics are cold and insensate things. The hard fact is that the 82,000 people in the Atlantic provinces without jobs face the humiliation of charity and the dole, their immense productive capacity lost to the region and to Canada, their support a drain on the resources of those fortunate enough to have jobs. In the national interest, the new government in Ottawa should not be long in facing up to this fearful problem.

What were our people told during the election campaign when they were asked to vote for this Liberal party, this Liberal government of today which has all the answers? At least, they said they had all the answers. What is their answer to these 82,000 people who are unemployed? An expensive dismissal of the Atlantic development board? Is that their answer?

I have in my hand an advertisement put out by the gentleman who ran against me as Liberal candidate during the election campaign. Here is what he had to say:

> The Liberal "Hundred Day Crash" program. This is a plan designed to create new jobs quickly.

An hon. Member: Wasn't he operating on the 60-day deal?

Mr. Coates: I gather he had extended it by 40 days. Anyway, he said a Liberal government would put this crash program into effect immediately after May 5. May 5—that is a long time ago, now. I have not heard anything about this 100-day crash program. Maybe it got lost in these 60 days of decision. I don't know what happened to it; I have heard nothing about it. The government have been making a few decisions it is true, mostly connected with doing something about the unemployment situation by appointing their friends to the various boards they are bringing into existence. Perhaps this is the way in which they intend to eliminate this unemployment problem—by setting up government boards, making bureaucracy the order of the day and placing enough people on these boards to cure unemployment. Well, the advertisement continued:

In areas of high unemployment as in Cumberland special measures will be taken.

I do not know of any special measures that have been taken yet.

There will be—

1. Grants to establish new industries.

I have not heard of anyone in Cumberland county getting any yet, and 17 days have passed since May 5.

2. Special tax incentives to expand present industries and for new industries.

I have not heard of anything being done yet.

3. Special industrial loans at low interest.

I have not heard anything of this either.

An hon. Member: Coming.

Mr. Coates: Coming? How long do we have to wait? We are 17 days late now. May 5 is the date he gives here. Of course, he was very clever. He did not say whether it was 1963 or 1983; I suppose that is the loophole. There must be a loophole.

No, Mr. Speaker. These have been very disappointing days for the people of the Atlantic provinces, these days of decision by the Liberal government, and if the speech from the throne is any example of what we have to look forward to in the future there will continue to be disappointing days.

What about agriculture? This is an important subject for the people of the Atlantic provinces. There are some significant statements about agriculture in the speech from the throne. The party opposite pay what is probably the greatest tribute to my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) that any party could pay to a single individual. They say it takes three Grits to do the job of one Conservative cabinet minister. They are to have a two-headed department and they have given back the wheat board to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp). I am not sure whether they do not trust the present ministers with the wheat board or whether they think they are not fully competent to deal with the selling aspect of our products. I do not know why they decided to shift this responsibility back from where it would logically seem to belong and where we got results. Where are they going to build this iron curtain? What part of Canada is one minister to look after and what will be the responsibilty of the other? Is there a place somewhere in the constituency of the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) where they can arrange to have this curtain built so that the eastern minister cannot go beyond it in one direction and the western minister cannot go beyond it in another. Is this the scheme? Are the dairy farmers of eastern Canada going to be told: You are a dairy farmer in eastern Canada. It does not make any difference what is done for the western dairy farmer, but things will be done differently for the eastern farmer. Or is the complete absence of anything about agricultural policy in the speech from the throne an indication that the government has no agricultural policy at all?

An hon. Member: That is right.

Mr. Coates: I am afraid that is right. What is happening to agriculture in this country? I read in Macleans magazine where the Prime Minister's wife was very upset with the farmers of western Canada. She said they were dirty dogs because they did not vote Liberal. I suppose this is a way of punishing the farmers of western Canada for not voting Liberal. Is the government going to cut them off? Are they to look forward to receiving nothing by way of agricultural assistance because they happened to have a different attitude than the Liberals about the sale of wheat, or the lack of sales of wheat? I am very mixed up about this agricultural program since the Liberals have come into power, and I afraid that the agricultural people in this country are also mixed up. I should like to have some clarification from the government. We keep asking questions of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) each and every day in this house, but we do not seem to get much further. He is more mixed up than we are. What is going on? It must be very upsetting, having had such a stable industry in this field for the last five years, to see what is happening to it today. In the remaining days of decision there is a lot we are going to have to find out from the party which has all the answers. The people of Canada are also going to have to find out a lot before they can have any confidence in what has been going on today. I asked the Minister of Agriculture a question today. I asked him what he was going to do about the price of feed grains for eastern farmers. He said that the matter was under consideration. It is nice to hear that the matter is under consideration by gentlemen with all the answers in these days of decision. It is nice to know that we were indecisive and that they are men of decision. Because what in effect has happened is that they have not made up their minds about something we had already decided to make into law.

Mr. Speaker, I have an article in front of me which appeared in the Amherst Daily News of January 24, 1963.

An hon. Member: Where is Amherst?

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, the present Prime Minister made a speech in the town of Amherst, but you would get a better appreciation of the town of Amherst if the Grits had never gone there.

Mr. Churchill: Has he ever gone back?

Mr. Coates: No, he has not. He apparently thought it a waste of time coming to Amherst. He did come in 1961 and some of his supporters went around my constituency for eight or nine months, but it didn't seem to help them very much.

When the former minister of agriculture went to Windsor, Ontario, on January 24 last, the Canadian Press headlined him as saying that maritime and Quebec farmers would be first in line for federal help. Here is part of what he said:

> Part of federal policy would be made public during the present session of parliament, he said, with the introduction of a feed grain and assistance bill to try to achieve stability of feed grain supply to eastern farmers, equalization of price, stability of price and "protection of the interests of eastern producers of feed grain".

Well, let us hope that before these 60 days are out the new Liberal government will get as far as we got on January 24 last. They still have a long way to go even though they have all the answers. The only answers we seem to be able to get today are that they are thinking about it, that they are considering it, or that they will take it as notice. As far as indecision is concerned, they are past masters at that.

Now I want to turn to another subject very important to all Canadians, namely what is going to be done by the government to see that we get the proper type of segregation at the earliest possible date of inmates in our penal institutions. People in this country are pretty disturbed about the recent riots which took place in many institutions. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier) has stated that he is going to step up the program. I should just like to point out that if the former Conservative government had not been elected in 1957, there would not even be a program to step up. Mr. Speaker, let me give you some figures to back up this statement. In 1951-52 the estimates for that year showed that $1.8 million was spent by the penitentiaries branch of the Department of Justice on construction, improvement and equipment of our penal institutions. In 1952-53 $1.5 million was spent. In 1953-1954 $1.4 million was spent. In 1954-55 $1.6 million was spent. In 1955-56 $1.7 million was spent. In 1956-57 $1.7 million was spent. Now, that is hardly any indication that anything very significant was happening in the Department of Justice with regard to inmates or institutions, or that there was any great improvement in old, or construction of new institutions to look after the increasing number of inmates.

In 1957 the Hon. E. Davie Fulton became minister of justice, and from that date forward we had one of the most progressive penal and correctional programs in the country, or as far as I am concerned in the world. To give an example of just how different the approach was from 1957 until we left office, the estimates show that in 1957-58 $1.3 million was spent, which I agree does not indicate any significant change. But in 1958-59 $4.3 million was spent. In 1959-60 $6.6 million was spent. In 1960-61 $3.8 million was spent. In 1961-62 $6.7 million was spent; and the estimated expenditure for 1962-63 was $11,813,000. With the expenditure of these funds we saw two new large institutions built in Canada. In 1959 Joyceville was opened, and in 1961 the Leclerc institution in Quebec was opened. Since 1959 there have been 15 new minimum-security institutions constructed in this country, one of them in my constituency. This is an example of the progressive penal program instituted by the former government. If this government in its days of decision will move forward and get new institutions constructed, and expand the old institutions and segregate the inmates, we will have less of a problem in this country in our penitentiaries than is apparent today. But they have to get a move on.

I was very pleased to note that the Minister of Labour recently announced that the institution, which it was forecast would be built at Springhill, will be built. This is probably a very good thing not only for the economy of Cumberland but for the penal situation that is developing in the Atlantic provinces. The Dorchester penitentiary is overcrowded and has been overcrowded for some time. We have constructed three minimum security institutions in the maritime provinces, one at Springhill, one at Dorchester and one at Blue Mountain. We still need a young offenders' institution, one which will allow us to take the young men who have a chance of rehabilitation out of the maximum security institution at Dorchester and place them in a separate institution where we can work with them to make better citizens of them.

The Minister of Labour stated that construction of the young offenders' institution at Springhill would be commenced in the fall. In view of the situation that is very apparent at St. Vincent de Paul, at New Westminster and other places, I would urge him to try to step up this program, to try to get it under way as soon as possible. Certainly, we should be able to get a site clearing program under way immediately. The land has been purchased and that portion of it which has not been purchased is to be expropriated so there is no reason for not starting immediately on site clearing. Perhaps we could have the site prepared so that construction of the institution could take place as soon as the architects have prepared the plan.

I hope the government will look at this program again to determine if they cannot undertake construction of that young offenders' institution in Springhill at an earlier date.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. gentleman but I must inform him that his time has expired.

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, the words of the leaders of the parties concerning their personal esteem for you are, I am sure, shared by all who know you. To the many sincere congratulations you have already received upon your appointment as Speaker, I should like to add my own. I should like also to congratulate the hon. member for Stormont (Mr. Lamoureux) upon his appointment as Deputy Speaker of this house. I am certain the house will be well served both by yourself, Mr. Speaker, and your clear spoken bilingual deputy from Ontario. I should like also to congratulate the hon. members on this side of the house who moved and seconded the address in reply. They are a credit to their constituencies and to this party. Everywhere in this country, women as well as men, are today voicing their pride in the performance in this house of the hon. and charming member for Northumberland (Miss Jewett).

As the member for Spadina, Mr. Speaker, the most cosmopolitan riding in Canada, I should like to say a word of tribute at the outset to the former member for Spadina, Mr. Charles Ted Rea, who has been seriously ill and has recovered to a limited extent only. I know from meeting many people in my riding and from meeting members here who knew him, particularly members on the opposite side, that he is a well liked and respected man. He was the able deputy of committees in the twenty fourth parliament, when he suffered a stroke. He made a decision against his own interests that he could not in fairness stand for re-election. On your behalf, and on my own, I wish him well.

Mr. Rea was first elected in Spadina in a by-election in 1955 after Colonel David Croll resigned his seat. Colonel Croll, of course, was elevated to the Senate. Senator Croll, as you know, is equally as active in the Senate as he was in the house. As the Liberal senator for Spadina, he continues to bring honour to my constituency. As a speaker in demand during the last election campaign, Senator Croll's activities were the toast of this party and the scourge of the opposition. I am pleased to follow both of these fine men and I hope to emulate their good work.

My riding is one of the central ones in the city of Toronto. It is known for its infinite variety of nationality, race and creed, as well as for its extremes of wealth and poverty. Particularly since the last war the southern part has been a reception area for landed immigrants from different nations. Succeeding groups settle closely together under crowded housing conditions and then, as they adjust themselves, tend to settle throughout the metropolitan area. However, each group always seems to leave at least a small core behind, and this gives the business streets of Spadina, particularly the famous Kensington market a distinct international flavour. Symbolic of this is the widespread use of the espresso coffee percolator.

There are more than the usual number of retail and wholesale stores, the best known one being the ecstatic establishment of that prince of discounters, Honest Ed. There are many multistoried manufacturing plants in the southern industrial area of the riding, large railway yards and a new expressway. Spadina avenue itself is still the Ontario centre of the garment industry and great numbers from both within and without the riding are employed in the needle trades, usually on a piecework basis.

Although the work of making cloth, fur coats and other articles of wearing apparel is wonderfully satisfying, it is a trade that has a high, early lay-off rate as aging fingers become less and less nimble. There is some need, therefore, to plan and carry out retraining of not only the unemployed but also of those who may become so.

Spadina is bounded on the north by the south limit of Forest Hill village and on the south by the waterfront of lake Ontario. It includes Toronto island. Although the map of Spadina resembles a Christmas stocking, all within its boundaries is not always Christmasy.

The main problem is lack of sufficient steady work, both for willing immigrants and for willing Canadians from depressed areas who migrate to Toronto. For Spadina, the loans and grants of the municipal development and loan board to the city of Toronto, with the approval of the province, should prove to be a godsend. It is true that there are many existing statutes offering aid to municipalities, but they mostly require a sharing agreement between the three levels of government and pertain to one class or object of construction, or else have a higher interest rate. The existing aids are not used as often as they might be because municipalities are unwilling to take the initiative in fields selected by the federal government. In the main, they found that if they did go ahead the construction program often created an accompanying problem. Now, under the proposed legislation municipalities will be able to pick their own projects, obtain the necessary loan or grant and proceed on their own plan. Thus, subways, clearances, redevelopments, public housing, sewers and water works projects, together with other urban and suburban service renewals should be eligible, under this proposed plan, for low interest loans.

The central part of my riding is densely populated. Many are not yet citizens. Some are political refugees who hide acute feelings but who struggle and succeed in this strange but wonderful new land. Those who acquire the language quickly are the happiest and usually the most successful. Many have brought new skills with them to Canada and have made new fortunes in a surprisingly short time.

Unless she goes to business, the wife of an immigrant has great difficulty in learning English. She longs for her native land and occasionally becomes so homesick that she and her whole family will return; but most desire to remain to provide their children with the great opportunities that they readily see this country affords.

There are an unusual number of well attended churches and synagogues in my riding and, of course, the famous Scott mission with its sad lineups of hungry men stretching along the sidewalks of Spadina avenue. Another structure well known to the unemployed is the ancient unemployment insurance commission office on Spadina avenue, where men and women ride up and down in rickety elevators and stand in line for hours and hours. They hope, as I do, for increased benefits, less waiting and less need to be there.

Other buildings of note are Casa Loma, perched in the north end on the shore line of ancient glacial lake Iroquois, the Primrose club on St. Clair avenue west, the medical arts building on Bloor street west, the Toronto reference library on College street, the Toronto Western hospital on Bathurst street and the fine new publishing plant of the evening Telegram on Front street west, designed specifically to be heated by a new and independent principle to complement, no doubt, its new, independent policy. While I am on the subject of the evening Telegram, let me add a compliment for the good sportsmanship of its publisher after the hard battle in June of 1962.

Mr. Pickersgill: And his good sense.

Mr. Aiken: When you can't beat 'em, join 'em.

Mr. Ryan: Well, he used his head in any event. We have some lovely high-rise apartments in the riding which are replacing many grand old homes that are now too hard to carry even as guest homes. The University of Toronto has expropriated many blocks of houses and stores west of St. George street—I know many of you know Toronto very well—torn them down and already erected several fine new university buildings.

The Toronto islands boast of the Royal Canadian and Island yacht clubs, an airport, a beautiful municipal park and many year-round homes built on lands leased from the city on Ward's, Algonquin and Centre islands.

The islands are at present reached by ferries from the foot of Bay street. These are a pleasant means of transportation in the summertime but in this day and age they are somewhat anachronistic. Certainly they are slow and costly to maintain. A tunnel or other satisfactory modern means of access to these islands is badly needed, particularly to give the working man and his family access to a delightfully restful place where they can go in their leisure time at little expense. Indeed, a former federal government had at one time planned to provide such a tunnel at its entire expense but it was prevented from doing so when it met the same fate as did the last government a few weeks ago.

Responsibility for access to these islands should again be recognized, I submit, as primarily the responsibility of the federal government because the dredging of the eastern and western channels prevents the islands from becoming naturally accessible by fill sands drifting from Scarborough bluffs. The beds of both channels lead into Toronto harbour. As most hon. members probably well know, these beds and the bed of the harbour are federal property.

Since the opening of the seaway colourful ships from all over the world enter Toronto harbour, usually by the western channel or western gap as it is more familiarly called. Lightly loaded or shallow draught vessels usually leave by the eastern gap where a dredging problem arises more frequently. Because of the great increase of traffic in the harbour a lift bridge across either of the channels would not be too feasible. I understand that the Toronto harbour commission has redrafted a plan for a tunnel from the foot of Bathurst street under the western gap to the island airport, and it is my hope that this government together with the commission and the city of Toronto will shortly move in this matter. It is not only of importance to Spadina but to the whole metropolitan area.

I would estimate that the two largest national groups in my riding are the Italian and the Hungarian. The section of College street between Bathurst and Grace is affectionately called "Little Italy" and on the side streets north and south of College many immigrants make their own "vino" as they did back home. For this purpose they import grapes from California by the carload. After visiting many of these hospitable homes one becomes impressed with the money and effort that has been put into improving their interiors and their furnishings. In many homes and backyards there are plants and gardens that are reminiscent of the walled estates of Italy, only on a smaller scale.

Spadina has since the year 1956 probably been the largest reception area in Canada for immigrating Hungarians, Serbs, Slovenians and Croatians. The freedom fighters and those who followed them have taken to their adopted land with enthusiasm and are noticeably eager to acquire citizenship. For them the most popular man in this country is the former minister of citizenship and immigration who is now the Secretary of State for Canada (Mr. Pickersgill). They are most appreciative of his efforts on their behalf when he went to Austria in 1956 to assist their entry here. In fact, if I want to raise a cheer in some audiences I find I simply have to mention the name of the Hon. J. W. Pickersgill. May I call it six o'clock?

Mr. Aiken: Did you say cheer or jeer?

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, May 23, 1963

The house met at 11 a.m.

HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN

REPLY TO DECLARATION OF LOYALTY ON CELEBRATION OF BIRTHDAY

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that in accordance with the wishes of hon. members the other day a message was forwarded to Her Majesty expressing the loyalty and devotion of members of this house to Her Majesty on the occasion of the celebration in Canada of Her Majesty's birthday.

In reply I have received the following message:

Buckingham Palace
May 23, 1963

The Speaker,
House of Commons,
Ottawa.

I have received your message with very great pleasure. Please convey my sincere thanks to the members of the House of Commons in parliament assembled for their kind and loyal expression on the occasion of the celebration of my birthday.

ELIZABETH R.

CANADIAN CITIZENSHIP ACT

PROVISION FOR GRANTING OF CERTIFICATES IN SPECIAL CASES

Mr. Joseph Macaluso (Hamilton West) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-66, to amend the Canadian Citizenship Act (grant of certificate).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Macaluso: Mr. Speaker, the bill I propose to introduce is entitled "An act to amend the Canadian Citizenship Act (grant of certificate)". The purpose of the bill is this. In the Canadian citizenship courts today there are many wives of Canadian citizens who are not granted their citizenship papers because they do not know enough of the English or French language. This is because some of these wives who live in isolated areas and places, and even in urban areas, are not able to assimilate enough of the English or French language to learn sufficient to enable them to receive their citizenship certificates. This bill is to provide that in special cases where a wife has been in Canada for 10 or 15 years but is still not sufficiently knowledgeable in the English or French language—and there are cases where the children of such a person have become citizens of this country along with her husband—she may be granted a certificate of citizenship.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

SASKATCHEWAN—REPORTED INTENTION TO APPOINT LIAISON COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether there is to be legislation introduced along the line indicated by Mr. Thatcher, the Liberal leader in Saskatchewan, in an interview which he gave, wherein he said that the Prime Minister was going to establish a five man liaison committee in Saskatchewan to work with a minister whose responsibility would be to look after Saskatchewan affairs. I should like to know whether this five man liaison committee will be set up by legislation, or what is the nature of this committee to which Mr. Thatcher has referred in such imposing terms.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can understand the interest of the right hon. gentleman in this matter, but I can assure him that this is purely a party matter and does not require legislation.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have that assurance that we are not going to have a constitutional monstrosity.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he has under consideration appointing the gentleman referred to, Mr. Thatcher, to the other place and creating him minister without portfolio in order to look after Saskatchewan's affairs.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I can understand the hon. gentleman's interest in the organization of our party, but I do not think it is necessary for me to whet that interest by telling him exactly how we propose to carry out this organization.

Inquiries of the Ministry

GRAIN

WHEAT—STEPS TO BE TAKEN TO PROTECT CANADIAN PRODUCERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, before asking a question I would like to draw the attention of the house to a change in the seating arrangements of our party. Our caucus has selected the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) as deputy house leader of our party, and I would like to welcome him to this position.

In directing my question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce I would like to welcome him back from the GATT conference, I hope with his head bloody but unbowed. In view of the United States farmers' vote in favour of the unhampered production of wheat, will the minister inform the house what steps the government intends to take to protect the interests of Canadian wheat producers, and whether he will initiate discussions with the government of the United States regarding a joint program for the orderly disposition of wheat surpluses?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have only been home a few hours but I will do my best to answer the question. As hon. members are aware, the vote of the United States farmers yesterday rejected their government's proposal for a new price support program which was to have started on July 1, 1964. I think it is premature to draw any inferences from this result until the subject has been further clarified because it is, of course, possible for the congress of the United States to take further action.

May I say, in reply to the specific question asked by the hon. member, that the government of Canada is in constant consultation with the United States government on the question of the orderly disposition of wheat surpluses. When I was in Geneva I had some discussions with the representatives of the United States government, and these will be followed up immediately.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, as a supplementary question may I ask the minister whether this means that the government will still be able to proceed with the implementation of its pledge to pay the farmers a guaranteed price of $2 a bushel for their wheat?

Mr. Sharp: I was not here, sir, but I understand that the Prime Minister made it clear this is a matter of government policy that will be announced in due course.

[Mr. Pearson.]

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I would like to follow up the subject raised by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam and put a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the President of the United States has stated publicly that the rejection of the United States government's wheat proposal will deal a serious blow to the whole economy of the United States, would the Prime Minister go to President Kennedy, as the previous government went to President Eisenhower, and get the assurance of the president that there will not be an extension of public law 480, particularly dealing with giveaways, to move more U.S. wheat into commercial markets?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to maintain my close and friendly contacts with the president on the protection of Canada's interests in this and other matters.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Speaker, I would like an answer to the specific point I raised. Will the Prime Minister get the assurance from the President of the United States that there will not be an extension of giveaways in the commercial markets of the world?

Mr. Pearson: I hope, Mr. Speaker, to be more effective in my representations on this and other matters than were the representations of the previous government.

OATS AND BARLEY—INQUIRY AS TO INITIAL PRICES AND QUOTAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked the Minister of Agriculture a question with reference to the pamphlets put out indicating that the announcement of a higher initial price for oats and barley would be made prior to seeding. On page 142 of Hansard I am reported to have said:

> —a pamphlet put out by the Liberal party during the campaign to the effect that the initial prices for oats and barley would be announced during seeding.

What I did say was "prior to seeding". That will have an effect on the answer of the minister.

Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. As a guide to western farmers, can the minister inform the house whether there will be an open quota on grain delivery for the present crop year, as there was in the last?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): I apologize, Mr. Speaker, but I will have to take the question as notice and give an answer tomorrow.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In reference to this question of making announcements prior to seeding, one of the major factors, as the minister must know, is the question of price. Would the minister indicate to the house whether he knows the significance of the fact that barley, which is in short supply, has dropped six cents a bushel in price since the election, while American corn, the competitive feed, has gone up four cents a bushel?

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NATO—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON CURRENT CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I desire to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of newspaper reports that the government has made certain commitments at the NATO conference with regard to Canada's contribution to NATO operations, prior information having been denied to the House of Commons, will the Prime Minister see to it that an early and full report is given to the House of Commons and an opportunity provided for the fullest discussion?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, no new commitments have been undertaken as a result of this council meeting in regard to the use of Canadian forces with NATO. The Secretary of State for External Affairs will be reporting to the house on this matter on Monday, when the council meeting is over. Meanwhile I should like to make it quite clear that the role of Canadian forces in NATO is not under consideration at this council meeting. That role will be the role which was undertaken for Canada by the previous government, and which has not been changed as a result of this meeting.

(Translation):

APPOINTMENT OF CANADIAN REPRESENTATIVE TO VATICAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Prime Minister. Does the Prime Minister intend to appoint soon a Canadian representative to the Vatican, as have done almost all nations of the world, including England?

(Text):

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): This is, of course, a matter of government policy. It is being considered, as no doubt it was being considered during the last six years by the previous government.

TRANSPORT

SMALL WATER CRAFT—MEASURES TO REDUCE DANGERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that the Ontario provincial police are adding officers to reduce the danger of fatalities caused by power boats, and in view of the fact that the inspector in charge has stated that the chief offenders in the resort areas are under the age of 16, is the minister planning any action to assist by prohibiting the operation of such boats by individuals up to this age limit, thereby lessening the danger of deaths from this cause in our resort areas? I realize that the minister may not be aware of the thinking of his department because I gave him notice of this question very late and, if he so desires, I shall wait until tomorrow for an answer.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I understand and appreciate the hon. member's reference to being satisfied to wait until tomorrow for an answer. I take it he has in mind the danger arising out of the control of small boats commonly referred to as outboard motor boats, and that he has reference to a news item in the morning papers to the effect that the Ontario provincial police are purchasing a small power boat of another type to be used in Ontario resort areas, mainly the Muskoka lakes region and the Algonquin park area.

I can tell the hon. member that the whole subject of the control and regulation of small power boats has been receiving active consideration, and that I hope before very long to come before the house with some statements on the subject that I hope will meet with his approval. It is a subject of very great concern to the department. The difficulty arises because of the fact that the provincial authorities have more immediate control over many of the small lakes and rivers—and some not so small—in which these boats operate, and it is very difficult for the federal authority to have a thorough inspection system.

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the minister for that answer. I did not want to miss this opportunity to have him make some further decision in these great days.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CAPE TORMENTINE, N.B.-BORDEN, P.E.I.—CONSTRUCTION OF NEW FERRY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether he is now in a position to answer a question I asked him a couple of days ago, and which he took as notice.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): I am happy to be able to inform the hon. member that the planning for this project is going forward in accordance with decisions which have been taken. Discussions on general design with the Canadian National Railways are close to completion, and funds are available in this year's estimates to complete design specifications to the point where we hope to be ready to call tenders by the end of the fiscal year. I am not in a position, however, to give further details on actual design lay-out until the consultations mentioned have been completed.

(Translation):

AGRICULTURE

QUEBEC—ASSISTANCE TO FARMERS THROUGH LIME SUBSIDY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Can the minister tell the house whether the government intends to take the required steps to assist the farmers of Quebec since subsidies on lime have been reduced by 50 cents a ton?

(Text):

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am a new member and I do not know the rules very well, but I understand that questions on orders of the day are supposed to be on urgent, important matters that have arisen since the previous day's sitting, and that other questions should be put on the order paper.

Not having had notice of the question, I suggest that perhaps the hon. member could put it on the order paper.

[Later:]

Mr. Hays: I should like also, Mr. Speaker, to answer a question raised yesterday by the hon. member for Shefford involving the subsidy on lime purchases.

Under its lime assistance policy the federal government shares with provinces the cost of direct assistance for the purchase by farmers of limestone for agricultural purposes. Last year the previous government placed a limitation on the extent of its participation based on the average contribution made over the previous four years to each province. The government has made no change in this policy.

REPORTED WITHDRAWAL OF SUBSIDY ON MILK

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Shefford inquired concerning the 25 cents per hundredweight supplementary payment made on milk. At this time I should like to clarify the reply I made then.

Under the dairy support program in effect in 1962-63 a supplementary payment of 25 cents per hundredweight was made on all milk used for manufacturing purposes other than that from producers participating in the fluid milk market. For the current support year this 25 cents per hundredweight payment has been increased to 30 cents per hundredweight for milk from eligible shippers whose milk is used for the production of cheddar cheese. This action was taken to provide a modest incentive to the diversion of milk to cheddar cheese production, since both domestic requirement and export opportunities have increased for this product.

For milk used for the production of butter and skim milk powder the 25 cents supplementary payment has been replaced by a purchase program on skim milk powder designed to compensate producers of milk used for this purpose. At the same time the 25 cents supplementary payment was withdrawn on manufactured milk products for which production can be adjusted to meet domestic requirements. This action was based on the premise that such products should not require federal subsidization.

[Later:]

Mr. H. A. Moore (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture and first would like to congratulate him, as a fellow Albertan, on his appointment as minister. How does he expect fluid milk shipped to milk condensing plants, especially in the west, to be converted to cheese production when most of the cheese factories in the western areas were forced out of production during the period when western agricultural problems were ignored? Will it not be inclined to increase butter production?

(Translation):

CROP INSURANCE PROGRAM FOR EASTERN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Clement Vincent (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture whether the government intends to establish a crop insurance program for eastern Canada?

(Text):

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): I should like to thank the hon. member for having given me notice of his intention to ask this question. The Crop Insurance Act provides the basis for federal government participation in crop insurance programs in any province. In eastern Canada at the present time such a program is in effect in the province of Prince Edward Island. The province of Nova Scotia also has crop insurance legislation based on the federal act.

(Translation):

Mr. Vincent: As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask if that crop insurance which is being offered at present to the eastern provinces is the result of the legislation that was enacted in July 1959?

(Text):

Mr. Hays: I would have to take that as notice. I cannot tell the hon. member at this time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

STATEMENT ON PROCEDURE RESPECTING QUESTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Speaker: I am sure hon. members, particularly the newer members, will not misunderstand me if I refer for a moment to the procedure concerning questions. I should like to point out that rule 39 of standing orders of the House of Commons deals with the whole subject, and it reads in part as follows:

> Questions may be placed on the order paper seeking information from ministers of the crown . . .

Then the rule goes on to set out the basic principle in these words:

> . . . but in putting any such question or in replying to the same no argument or opinion is to be offered, nor any facts stated, except so far as may be necessary to explain the same; and in answering any such question the matter to which the same refers shall not be debated.

In so far as the newer members are concerned, and particularly for my own benefit, perhaps we should refer to Beauchesne's fourth edition, citations 171 and following. I think this would be very helpful to all of us.

(Translation):

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. As you have just referred to Beauchesne's work, I take the opportunity to ask the Prime Minister if we will have the French edition soon?

(Text):

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I hope so, Mr. Speaker.

TRADE

GATT—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT BY MINISTER ON RESULTS OF CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the conflicting reports which we have been reading in the press concerning the results of the conference from which the minister has just returned, I wonder if he would be prepared at the earliest possible moment, perhaps tomorrow on motions, to give a short, but I hope full, explanatory statement of what appears to be a very confused situation.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I thank the hon. member for his suggestion. I had intended to make a statement today but did not realize that the session began at eleven o'clock. Otherwise I should have been prepared. I do intend to make a statement tomorrow. I think it will satisfy the members of the house that Canada's interests were fully protected, and that the cause of world trade has been advanced.

RED CHINA—STATEMENT ON SENDING OF TRADE MISSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I should like also, Mr. Speaker, to reply to a question that was asked yesterday by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle in my absence. He asked me whether the government intends to send a general trade delegation to meet with representatives of mainland China so that general trade between that country and Canada could be expanded, thereby insuring a continued volume of grain sales in that market. I should like to assure the hon. member for Qu'Appelle that these discussions have been under way for some time, and that arrangements were made some days ago for a mission to go to Hong Kong early in June.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the minister would give us the composition of that delegation. Which departments are to be represented on it?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the present intention is that the delegation should consist of representatives of the wheat board, of course, and it will probably have representatives of two or three other departments, the Department of Trade and Commerce, Finance and National Revenue. Those are likely to be the departments represented.

Mr. Hamilton: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the subject matter dealing specifically with wheat, or general trade?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the mission will be to sell wheat to China.

REPORTED NEGOTIATIONS RESPECTING QUOTAS ON EXPORTS TO CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of published reports that government negotiations have been initiated to persuade Portugal, Israel, Hong Kong and Formosa to accept quotas on certain of their exports to Canada, and in view of the widespread interest of the business community in the implications of such negotiations, can the minister advise the house whether these negotiations are continuing and, if so, can he give the house an up to date report on such discussions and negotiations?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm to the hon. member that discussions on this question are under way, but I am sorry I am not in a position to give any further information at the present time.

Mr. Scott: As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, could the minister indicate when he might be able to give us an up to date report on these negotiations?

Mr. Sharp: I certainly could not give an up to date report until the discussions are completed.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEASURES TO COUNTERACT RADIOACTIVE FALL-OUT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the widespread anxiety created by published statements that the greater part of the radioactive debris from the December, 1962 Russian atomic tests, including strontium 90, cesium 137 and carbon 14, is now starting to drift down over Canada, and in view of the fact that such published reports indicate that such debris will settle more heavily on Canada than on any other country in the world, can the minister outline to the house the steps being taken by the government to protect Canadian livestock and food supplies from the dangers of contamination with its resultant danger to the health of the Canadian people?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his question this morning. While I feel that the steps the government is taking to protect Canadian livestock and food supplies are not properly matters which should be given on orders of the day—and if my hon. friend wishes I shall be pleased to answer a question on the order paper—the matter is of such concern to many Canadians that I should like to comment at least in this way. We are testing air, precipitation, soil, milk, wheat and human tissue. We are bringing samples to Ottawa and having these tested, and we will continue to do so in an intensified way.

However, it is not correct to say that at the moment there are significant quantities of cesium 137. If there is no further atmospheric testing the level is one which, while we are watching it, is not of great concern; that is, it is not dangerous. The levels of strontium 90 and cesium 137 result from the heavy atomic testing of last fall. At the moment it is considered by the department that the levels reached will not be high enough to warrant government intervention, but a very close watch is being kept on this and a plan is prepared for use if necessary.

I should like to assure the hon. member and all hon. members of the house, and through them the country, that the closest attention is being paid to this particular problem.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister tell the house at how many points these samples are taken across Canada?

Miss LaMarsh: I do not have this information available, Mr. Speaker, but may I suggest to the leader of the New Democratic party that if he is prepared to put the question on the order paper I shall see that the answer is given.

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare arising out of her answer to my colleague from Danforth. Has her department undertaken any research to establish the threshold of danger with regard to the radioactive substances referred to by my colleague and the hon. lady herself or, if not, on what basis does her department base their judgment that the danger level has not yet been reached?

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Speaker, in answer to this question I am not absolutely certain what testing is being done or has been done by my department. I do know of one basis used in ascertaining whether the danger level has been reached, which is not of Canadian origin. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the answer might be lengthy and will certainly require my investigation, and that if my friend wishes to pursue the matter he either see me in private or place this question on the order paper.

PROTECTION OF PUBLIC AGAINST IMPAIRMENT FROM SMOKING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I must apologize for not having given her notice of this question. Has a decision been made regarding the control of cigarettes in view of the announcement by the British Medical Association definitely linking cigarette smoking with cancer of the lungs, and the more recent announcement of the Canadian Medical Association on this subject? What steps is the department taking to deal with the problem of making teen-agers and others aware of the connection between cigarette smoking and cancer of the lung, a disease which is now steadily on the increase and which is proving so destructive to human life?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): As I recall it, the answer to the first part of the question is no. With respect to the rest of it, may I suggest the hon. member place it on the order paper.

BRITISH COLUMBIA—CONSTRUCTION OF TREATMENT CENTRE FOR DRUG ADDICTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I desire to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of newspaper reports that plans are nearing completion for the construction of a multimillion dollar institution in British Columbia for the incarceration and treatment of drug addicts, and that tenders for construction will soon be called, can the minister inform the house whether the government is considering any policy decision that might require any changes in order to apply what is sometimes referred to as the English system of treating addicts as sick people and not necessarily as criminals?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, may I thank the hon. gentleman for having given me notice of his question just prior to my coming into the house, and also acknowledge his continuing interest in this matter of great concern to my department.

In the few moments available to me after receiving notice of the question I checked with my department and was advised that under the legislation as it now stands it would not require a change in order for doctors to treat addicts. Any physician or institution which wishes to treat an addicted person by the so-called English system is quite at liberty to do so.

With respect to the larger matter of government policy, may I say to my hon. friend and to the house that I have not had sufficient time to go into this field as deeply as I would prefer before giving a definitive answer.

Mr. Winch: A supplementary question. May I ask if it is now the intention of the government to proceed with the construction of a multimillion dollar institution in the province of British Columbia.

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Speaker, I suggest that such a question dealing with the construction of an institution might more properly be referred to my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. Winch: Then may I do so and ask the Minister of Public Works if the intention is to proceed with this construction.

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, this will be known very shortly when the estimates will be tabled.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

PACIFIC WESTERN AIRLINES—REPORTED ACTIONS OF AIR TRANSPORT BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. I am sorry I did not have an opportunity of giving him notice, but I would be pleased to discuss this matter with him should he so desire.

My question is as follows. In view of the continued refusal of Pacific Western Airlines to agree to a settlement of its dispute with the Canadian airline flight attendants association in a manner consistent with fair labour practices, will the minister investigate and report to the house on the actions of the air transport board, which appear to be giving aid and comfort to this company in its attempts to avoid a fair settlement?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the officers of the Department of Labour have been in touch with this situation for some time, and only recently instructions were given to the officer on the west coast to lend whatever assistance he could in order to reach a satisfactory settlement in this situation. With respect to the other part of my hon. friend's question, I will be glad to look into it and possibly discuss the matter with the Minister of Transport.

(Translation):

LABOUR CONDITIONS

POSSIBLE CHANGES IN OFFICERS OF SEAMEN'S UNION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour.

Would the Minister of Labour be able to confirm the approaching departure of Mr. Hal Banks and of his assistants at the head of the Seafarers' International Union?

(Text):

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I cannot help the hon. gentleman in that regard.

Mr. Speaker: May I point out that I do not think that question is quite that pressing.

(Translation):

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

REQUEST FOR CONTRACTS FOR VALCARTIER ARSENAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Beaule (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Defence Production. Can the minister tell us whether negotiations have been initiated to obtain new contracts for the Valcartier arsenals, near Quebec, with a view to re-employing the workers who were laid off, several of whom live in Quebec city?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest that the hon. member put his question on the order paper.

(Text):

PUBLIC WORKS

INQUIRY AS TO METHOD OF AWARDING CONTRACTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works. Since he took office have any changes been made in the method of awarding contracts for public works projects?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): The answer is no, Mr. Speaker.

CONSTRUCTION OF LAUNCHING WAYS FOR SMALL CRAFT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. I do so because this is a matter of public interest and national significance. Is the government giving consideration to changing the former government's policy with respect to the building of launching ways on navigable waters for the use of small craft? Further, have any discussions been held with the representatives of any provincial government on this question?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): I thank the hon. member for having given me notice of this question. The answer is no; there has been no change in the policy, and there was no meeting or discussion with any provincial representative. However, as the hon. member knows, we are always prepared to discuss this matter with any provincial government in relation to the promotion of tourist facilities.

SUGAR

REQUEST TO EXPEDITE INQUIRY INTO PRICE INCREASES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Justice, and is as follows. In the light of the fact that the almost daily increases in the price of sugar are threatening to put small bakers out of business, can the minister do anything to expedite the investigation which he has already told this house his department is making, in answering questions from the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Mather)?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, there have already been two questions on this matter, and perhaps more; one from the hon. member for New Westminster, one from the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett), and the hon. member who has just spoken, who sent me notice of his question a few minutes before the house met. I do have a reply on this subject. It is somewhat lengthier than usual but I hope the house will bear with me, because I think this is a matter of some importance.

I should like to put on the record the following information, which was given to me by the director of investigation and research under the Combines Investigation Act. On the morning of May 21, 1963 the refinery price for sugar in Montreal was $16.19 net per 100 lbs. in a paper bag. On May 21, 1962 the comparable price was $7.03. The increase is $9.16. On May 15, 1962 the world spot price for raw sugar was $2.68 U.S., and on May 20, 1963 it was $12.30 U.S. The difference is $9.62 U.S., and when allowance is made for the fact that it ordinarily takes 107 lbs. of raw sugar to make 100 lbs. of refined sugar, the Canadian refiners, who must buy their raw sugar under pricing conditions that are directly affected by world market prices, have had a cost increase of $11.11 Canadian per 100 lbs. of refined sugar.

Between April 8 and May 20, 1963, the world spot price for raw sugar went up by $4.47 U.S. or approximately $4.83 Canadian. In the same period the net refinery price in Montreal increased from $11.98 to $16.19, or by $4.21.

Both these illustrations indicate that Canadian refinery prices have gone up less than the price for raw sugar. The figures given, however, are not completely reliable because they do not show the actual prices at which the refiners, who are continually making purchases of raw sugar for future requirements, have bought, but they are the best available figures for purposes of comparison and do show why the refiners have had to increase their prices. They also indicate that the price advances have not been out of line with increased costs for the basic and essential raw materials.

The two main reasons for lower prices on refined sugar in the United States at the present time are, first, that there is now no tariff on importation of raw sugar into the United States and, second, the United States prices are apparently lower than Canadian prices because of the different exchange values of the United States and Canadian dollars.

The increase in raw sugar prices is said to flow from increased demand, poor beet sugar crops in Europe for the past two years, and poor cane crops in Cuba. Speculation in the world sugar market may also play a part. None of these matters is under the control of the Canadian refiners.

Beet sugar production in Canada is substantial, but it only accounts for about one fifth of the country's requirements. In the present situation, sugar beet growers and beet sugar makers are not in a position to affect the price of sugar in cane sugar consuming areas in any significant way.

It is the practice of the combines branch to scrutinize all notable commodity price movements for the purpose of determining whether there may be cause for inquiry under the Combines Investigation Act. In the case of sugar, the director indicates that price changes of the nature experienced can take place without their necessarily having any significance under that act. The director will continue to keep the matter under surveillance.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—POSSIBILITY OF AGREEMENT AT FORTHCOMING MEETING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister and ask him whether the negotiations with the United States respecting the Columbia river have reached the stage where he shares the optimism of Premier Bennett that an agreement will be reached at the June 3 meeting.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Premier Bennett will be discussing these matters with myself and other members of the cabinet on June 3 in a preliminary way. I should think it would be a little optimistic to deduce from this fact that complete agreement between British Columbia and ourselves will be reached at this one meeting, let alone agreement between Canada and the United States.

Mr. Olson: A supplementary question. Will there be representation from the United States interests at this meeting on June 3?

Mr. Pearson: No. This will be a discussion between representatives of British Columbia and the federal government with a view to getting matters cleared up between ourselves before we can make a final arrangement with the United States.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

INQUIRY AS TO POSITION OF FUND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. William Dean Howe (Hamilton South): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Can the hon. gentleman give the house information on the present financial status of the unemployment insurance fund and its future prospects?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): In reply to the question asked by the hon. member for Hamilton South I wish to say that one of the first things I did on entering the Department of Labour was to inquire about the status of the unemployment insurance fund. The figures I have seen indicate that at the end of April this year the fund was in a deficit position in the amount of approximately $23 million. That situation has been met by loans for the month of April authorized by warrant in the amount of $25 million.

(Translation):

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance.

In view of the savings of $6 million effected by the Minister of Agriculture as a result of the cancellation of subsidies on milk, can the Minister of Finance tell us which taxes he intends to abolish in order that Canadians may benefit from those $6 million savings?

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, but that question is out of order.

(Text):

FINANCE

PAYMENT OF FAMILY ALLOWANCES TO AGE 18

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is it the intention of the government to introduce legislation to extend the payment of family allowances to those up to and including 18 years of age if still attending school, which according to reports the minister promised at the time of her appointment?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, may I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of this question, but I am sure he will realize that his query relates to government policy which, in accordance with the usual practice, will be announced at such time as the Prime Minister decides.

Mr. Patterson: A supplementary question. I wonder whether the minister would recommend that this action be taken.

IMMIGRATION

VANCOUVER, B.C.—ALLEGED INTERFERENCE WITH CHINESE IMMIGRANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. I wonder whether the minister could tell the house whether his department has received complaints from Chinese groups in Vancouver relative to government surveillance of, or interference with, alleged illegal Chinese immigrants? Further, could the minister give a brief outline of his department's policy in the matter of Chinese immigration?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. gentleman for having given me notice of his intention to put this question. As to the first part of his question, I must say that I have not personally been made aware of any such complaints which are alleged to have been filed with my department. I shall inquire and endeavour to answer the first part of this question.

AIR TRANSPORT

ALLEGED REFUSAL OF LICENCE TO B.C. AIRLINES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. I wonder whether the minister could tell the house why the air transport board has refused a licence to B.C. Airlines to operate a charter plane from Vancouver to Sullivan Bay in order to transport loggers on behalf of the international woodworkers? Is this being done to protect Pacific Western Airlines, whose employees are on strike at the present time?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, with great deference I think that question is quite out of order. It is an assertion of something which the air transport board is reputed to have done. If the hon. member wants to find out what the air transport board has done in this particular connection, and why, I would be very glad to provide the fullest possible information. But I think in the form the question is put it cannot be answered, because it will be seen at once that any answer given would involve admissions which would not be in accordance with the facts.

Mr. Douglas: Since the hon. minister has now taken a hand in conducting the business of the house and in deciding what questions are in order, may I ask him this supplementary question. Has the air transport board refused a licence to B.C. Airlines to operate a charter plane from Vancouver to Sullivan Bay?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for putting the question in a form in which it can be answered. I will get the information for him and give him the answer.

(Translation):

BRIDGES

CHAMPLAIN BRIDGE, MONTREAL—ABOLITION OF TOLLS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Remi Paul (Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport? Could the minister tell the house if the national harbours board, which comes under his department, plans to abolish the tolls on the Champlain bridge, in Montreal?

(Text):

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will also take that question as notice.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO SECRETARY OF RESOURCE MINISTERS' COUNCIL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the minister of northern affairs, and also to take this opportunity of congratulating him on his good fortune in being appointed to a portfolio which as a result of the kind of vision referred to by Lord Home in this chamber yesterday has worked wonders in recent years.

My question is: has the general secretary for the resources ministers' council been selected and, if so, could the minister provide the house with his name and a brief résumé of his qualifications?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, this first question from my immediate predecessor gives me an opportunity of telling the house how deeply I appreciate the kindnesses and consideration he has shown me in the transfer of our positions.

In reply to his question I might tell him that the executive of the resource ministers' council was to have met in Montreal on Saturday, May 25, for the purpose of appointing a secretary. Yesterday, however, we had a request from the chairman of the council, Mr. Levesque of Quebec, that the meeting be delayed until June 10. At that time I shall be delighted to tell my hon. friend the outcome of the meeting.

NATIONAL PARKS

BANFF—REPORTED CANCELLATION OF TENDERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): While I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker, I should like to reply to the question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams) in respect to some motel sites in Banff townsite.

Last October steps were taken to permit construction of motels on two sets of lots in Banff where existing parks zoning regulations do not conflict with the recommendations of the Oberlander urban development plan. Public notices were published by the department on December 26, setting out the conditions under which the sites were to be awarded, and the closing date for receiving tenders was February 18. Later, at the request of the then minister, the closing date was moved to March 18.

The assessment of applications for developments that affect the character and general atmosphere of the national park merits a fair degree of time and effort. The then minister sought to have a determination made after April 16. As he had not all the facts he remitted the assessment to the department on or about April 22 for further consideration. Assessment of the 20 tenders has not been completed, and in a matter of days all interested parties will be informed of the final results.

(Translation):

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

REQUEST FOR INCLUSION OF FRENCH NAME ON AIRCRAFT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport. Since the present government is so well disposed towards biculturalism, does the minister expect that the words "Air Canada" will soon be painted on all T.C.A. aircraft? Last year, the present Minister of National Health and Welfare had introduced a bill in that regard.

(Text):

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the premise to his question. The government has moved forward very rapidly in the field of improving bilingual and bicultural relationships in this country and I am very happy to report that good progress has been made in the department over which I have the honour to preside.

Mr. Woolliams: Just a matter of words, not action.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the interjection of the hon. member for Bow River, and perhaps it is well I did not hear it. As to the particular question asked by the hon. member for Chicoutimi, I cannot give him the answer at the moment.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members will realize it is now well after 12 o'clock noon, and unless questions are of grave immediate urgency might I suggest that they be deferred to another day.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed, from Wednesday, May 22, consideration of the motion of Miss Pauline Jewett for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to the speech from the throne delivered by His Excellency the Administrator at the opening of the session, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Diefenbaker.

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, to continue from where I left off at six o'clock yesterday, I would like to say to all hon. members, and particularly to all whose mother tongue is French, how pleased I am with the contents of the speech from the throne, and especially paragraphs 6 and 7. I am convinced that without the strengthening of our traditional bonds, and at the same time the recognition of the stimulating contribution of other cultures, this nation cannot flourish as it should. Indeed, it is in danger of disintegration if such steps are not taken. The leadership of the Conservative party never did pay proper attention in this direction, and it is doubtful whether there is still any awakening or realization there. That is the main reason they are back in opposition after such a short parole.

The Prime Minister is to be heartily congratulated, not only for the speed with which he has written to the premiers of the provinces enclosing to each of them the terms of reference for the proposed royal commission of inquiry on bilingualism and biculturalism, but especially for the incorporation in the terms of reference of the expressed provision that:

> —the contribution made by the other ethnic groups to the cultural enrichment of Canada and the measures that should be taken to safeguard that contribution——shall be taken into account.

The Prime Minister and his ministers are to be congratulated upon the whole content of the speech from the throne. They have not attempted to crowd the complete Liberal platform into it, as this would have meant biting off more than could properly be chewed. Instead, to the chagrin of the Leader of the Opposition, and contrary to his inclinations, a concise, clear course of action has been charted. It is a course that bespeaks decision and beneficial results for the nation. First things have been put first, and there is a new atmosphere of confidence throughout Canada as a result of the April 8 verdict of the people and as a result of the insight and drive that the Prime Minister has continued to demonstrate since that day.

My constituents in Spadina will be particularly interested in the measures designed to promote steady employment, the system of contributory portable pensions, the special assistance for technical training, the changes that will be made in the citizenship act to ensure full equality of rights for all Canadian citizens wherever they were born, and the promised review of immigration policy. The unspecified amendments to the National Housing Act are also of considerable interest.

With respect to employment plans I suggest that wherever possible the work to be done should be taken to the workers or provided in their close vicinity, and not vice versa. In this way the chance of a better future is offered to many persons without their being forced to leave their own environment and seek residence elsewhere, which almost always entails the heartache of separation and difficult periods of adjustment and social integration. This is particularly applicable to the landed immigrant, who should have the benefit of the advice and close association of his friends of his own nationality.

I much appreciate finding in the speech from the throne the paragraph on the establishment of a comprehensive system of contributory portable pensions. I should expect that this would take some time to evolve, due to the complexities of any such proposed system. The new Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh) and her departmental assistants are to be complimented upon the hard work they have done and must no doubt still do in this respect. I receive many calls about this measure, particularly from the elderly who need and are looking forward to the extra $10 per month.

There are already two provincial institutions in Spadina that have been established for retraining purposes and they are heavily subsidized with federal grants, but more assistance in this direction is needed and particularly in this area to which so many people who lack job security seem to gravitate. The increased technical training of our youth is also a necessity and a priority. In both these connections planning should be so tied in that tradesmen will be trained for as much indoor work as possible in the winter months and as much outdoor work as possible in the milder months, and work when feasible should be scheduled accordingly. This should be given emphasis because of the particular severity of our winters. Our planning, of course, should be for our country and its problems, and should not blindly follow that of other countries.

It is very pleasing to me that naturalized Canadian citizens will no longer be subject to deportation to their country of origin for catalogued misdemeanours or otherwise, and that they will in future, therefore, be deemed to be equal before our law. This will open the way to discussions with the United States for an agreement whereby our naturalized citizens will no longer be subject to the quota for their country of origin when seeking entry there.

It will, I know, take some time to review the Immigration Act and the regulations now in force under that act, but I am sure this will not prevent this new reform minded Liberal government from humanizing the application of the present harsh and inhuman regulations. Such action is needed and is in accordance with the spirit and tradition of this party. We on this side have always had a warm heart toward the immigrant. We have consistently realized the value to our country and its economy of a much larger population. Our domestic consumers' market still remains far too small to absorb the products of our farms and factories. Under the present circumstances, surely the need to relax regulations respecting close relatives can be met, particularly in respect of brothers and sisters, children over 21 and formally adopted children and their families. Many an immigrant saves sufficient money to sponsor a brother and can provide employment for him, only to be frustrated by the strict letter of some other regulation. The red tape and delay experienced during the last government's tenure of office by applicants for the entry of priority relatives, such as wives, parents and children under 21, should also be cut.

I congratulate the new Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Favreau) upon his appointment. I remind him that he has power under the act to admit in special cases. I am sure that particularly because he is a Liberal it will not be necessary to remind him to exercise this power generously.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that when it comes to arms for our defence forces we should have the best available that we can reasonably afford to answer known threats, as history proves that only those able and willing to defend themselves survive. I believe that when it comes to co-operation with NATO and NORAD we should do our best to co-operate, for in unity only is there strength. I believe that when it comes to disarmament talks we should, with proper safeguards seek vigorously for an agreement to disarm. I am convinced that when it comes to communism an eye should be kept on the increased activity in central Toronto, as it appears to be leaving its soap boxes and following more respectable means of infiltration.

Both Canada and the United States, Mr. Speaker, are currently countries where 50 per cent of the people have 20 per cent of the wealth and 20 per cent of the people have 50 per cent of the wealth. In the light of this fact I believe that when it comes to questions of planning, and automation versus employment, a new sense of social justice must imbue both our industry and our government, even a good Liberal government which this one so brightly promises to be.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, after listening to the latter remarks of the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Ryan) regarding immigration cases I am inclined to revive all my immigration cases and place them again before the new minister in the hope that now they will be disposed of favourably and quickly.

May I first of all, Mr. Speaker, congratulate you on your nomination to the honourable position which you now hold. In my opinion it was a wonderful choice, and every member of the House of Commons is agreed upon it. I am sure that all members of the house will wish you well and that you will apply to your new duties those principles of fairness and impartiality which have been traditional with those in your position.

I should also like to take the opportunity of congratulating the hon. member for Stormont (Mr. Lamoureux) on his appointment as Deputy Speaker. I know his task will not be easy in presiding over the committees of the whole house, but I am sure he too will discharge his duties with fairness and impartiality.

I should also like to join those who have preceded me in this debate in congratulating the mover and seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne, both of whom discharged their tasks in a worthy manner, particularly the lady from Northumberland, a neighbouring constituency to my own.

So far as the present government are concerned, Mr. Speaker, they can be assured of a high degree of co-operation from the official opposition, that is co-operation in all measures that take into account the realities of the situation and are designed to apply practical solutions to the problems. This I feel we have a right to expect, and this I feel the people of Canada also have a right to expect. The present Prime Minister has a difficult task, but he can be assured that we in the Conservative party will respect the position he holds, something that has been lacking in the past five years. When the Grits were in the opposition, and particularly during the last parliament, they disregarded and degraded the position of the prime minister, and continued to do so in the election campaign which followed. We will respect, Mr. Speaker, and understand the enormous responsibilities which rest upon the Prime Minister's shoulders. We will not allow ourselves, for merely partisan considerations or reasons, to forget that as Prime Minister of Canada he is entitled to consideration and respect from all sides of the house.

I just want to point out to the right hon. gentleman that, after all, he has not a mandate from all the people of Canada. He has a mandate from only 43 per cent of the people of this country, even though he had the advantage of the support of all the newspapers and other media in the metropolitan centres of this country. In spite of this he was only able to achieve a minority government when 43 per cent of the people voted for him. I think he should keep this in mind as he conducts the affairs of this country.

I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that this is a critical time for Canada. In this critical time all of us, all the members of this house, are called upon to play a responsible and constructive part in the conduct of the affairs of this country. It is a time for enormous and far reaching decisions. I must say that a mere change of government does not alter the deep-cutting issues with which this country is faced. The issues remain, and they must be met.

However, I want to point out that Canada has been faced with problems ever since confederation, and will be faced with problems continuously from this day forward. Any young country which is growing has problems, and those problems must be faced and solutions must be found for them. Solutions must be provided in order that the initiative and energy of industry and labour in this country may continue to serve the economy, and above all that Canadians themselves may benefit to the maximum extent from the products of our labour and the exploitation of the resources of this country. This is a task of government now as it always has been, regardless of what government was in office.

These problems, Mr. Speaker, cannot be solved by presenting them in pious platitudes, nor can the government talk its way around them. I am referring particularly to these highfalutin' platitudes about decisions in 60 days. Decisions are called for now, and action, but that action must be courageous and resolute; because the greatest and perhaps the fatal mistake any government can make at this time is to resort to high sounding phrases which would have a reassuring effect and lull everyone, including the government, into a state of false complacency without coming to grips with the problems. I am afraid this is what is happening at this period of our life in this country. We might be lulled into a sense of security by the thought that we now have a government that has promised to make decisions within 60 days.

The government of which I had the honour to be a member under the leadership of the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) addressed itself, regardless of the criticism we have faced, in a positive and practical manner to the tasks as they presented themselves to us. The measures we implemented have brought an unprecedented increase in the economic growth and a record rise in exports, a drop in imports, and a general, across the board increase in employment in this country. During the election campaign there were those who wanted to get the economy rolling, as they said in their propaganda. I say we got it moving, Mr. Speaker, and it is up to the government now to keep it moving.

We have heard a great deal from this government about 60 days of action. Some of the newspapers in the metropolitan areas picked this up and publicized it. As a matter of fact, after this government took office some of the newspapers kept track of the situation from day to day. I know one newspaper in the Toronto area that went so far as the 14th day, on which they publicized an announcement by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing) to the effect that there would be 10,000 scholarships available. To this day nothing more has been heard about that, and this newspaper dropped the tabulation on the 14th day because no other action was forthcoming and no decision was made.

As a matter of fact, I believe some of the most important decisions were made in the choice of some of the cabinet ministers who were selected by the Prime Minister. This situation recalls the 100 days of Roosevelt's first term. He did not talk about 100 days of action, he implemented the action during the 100 days and then talked about it. In this country we have the situation reversed. They talk about 60 days of action but no action at all has been forthcoming. I commend this example of Roosevelt's 100 days of action to hon. gentlemen opposite.

As a member of the previous government I had some intimate concern with the problem of unemployment. To the new Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) I express my congratulations and my assurance that he can count upon me for complete understanding of the problems with which he will be faced. During the past several years we heard a great deal from hon. gentlemen opposite, when they were in the official opposition, about the problems which beset this country. As I pointed out earlier, Mr. Speaker, a young, growing nation such as Canada will always be faced with problems. Those problems must be resolved in the best way possible by whoever has that responsibility at the time. There has been some reference in this debate to unemployment. I do not wish to go into this subject at the moment to any great extent. The Prime Minister in his speech averaged out unemployment over the years prior to 1957. He also averaged out unemployment during the years since then, and pointed up the great differences that occurred in those years.

During the election campaign hon. gentlemen opposite promised the people of this country full employment. We will give them a reasonable time to implement this promise; then we will assess the results to ascertain whether they meant what they said or whether it was only a hoax perpetrated upon the Canadian people. I remember some of these hon. gentlemen, and I see some of their faces now—the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Deschatelets), the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin), who is not here—who showed a great deal of concern over the unemployment problem and certainly brought it to our attention with great vehemence. They were worried about unemployment in the provinces; they were worried about unemployment in their municipalities. It will be interesting to see what these gentlemen who now occupy the treasury benches and have the responsibility and opportunity are going to do about those problems in their provinces and constituencies. We will keep track of what is happening, what the situation is and what the results are.

By the measures implemented in the past two years by the former government we were able to reduce unemployment month by month and increase employment month by month and year by year. It will be interesting to see whether this government with its policies, will be able to continue that trend of decreasing unemployment. If they are not able to increase or at least continue that trend they will certainly hear from us, and I think we will be right in pointing out the serious problem to them. I hope they will continue to maintain their concern now they are in office. But more important, I hope they will do something about the situation and continue what we started in the past, the results of which are now evident month by month and year by year.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, they will not take the attitude, for example, that because the Prime Minister has taken two trips out of the country, all our international and domestic problems will be solved. After all, we still have not felt the effects of trips which will no doubt be taken by the new Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin). I have watched him for a few days, and he has a faraway look. I think he visualizes some of the trips he might be making outside this country. I would say to him if he were here —and he can read it in Hansard—that the most important thing he has to remember is that primarily he is the member for Essex East including the city of Windsor. He was so concerned, and rightly so, about the economic situation in Windsor that he must apply himself to rectifying the situation in that city; then he can make trips abroad.

Mr. Churchill: We will pin him down here.

Mr. Starr: We will certainly keep our eye on what is happening in Windsor and to what extent he will be able to convince his colleagues on the treasury benches that they must rectify the situation with which he has been so vitally concerned for the past five and a half years.

One of the problems over which hon. gentlemen opposite expressed great concern was that of foreign control of Canadian industry. One of those who expressed concern was the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon), who recently made one of his frequent excursions into print as the author of an article entitled "We must buy Canada back". I must say that I agree entirely with his analysis of that problem. We can have no employment security in this country as long as we are a nation of branch plants, as long as management decisions affecting the course of our production, and thereby the existence of jobs, continue to be made outside this country. It is to be hoped that this government will come to grips with this problem. One way to deal with it is to stimulate more production in Canada.

It is interesting to read the speech from the throne and see the proclamation by this government that they will establish a ministry of industry, that a minister will be appointed whose prime objective will be to have consultation with industry in order to build up more industry in Canada and thereby provide more jobs. On the other hand, however, we find that the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) is now negotiating for the lowering of tariffs. The Minister of Trade and Commerce is as busy as a bee trying to lower tariffs and eliminate industry in Canada. The new minister of industry has not yet been appointed. He is behind the eight ball; he will never catch up with the Minister of Trade and Commerce. If the Minister of Trade and Commerce carries out his policies he will eliminate more Canadian industries in two years than the new minister will be able to establish in the next five years.

Mr. Churchill: He will not have five years.

Mr. Starr: The question is, who will win, and I am betting my money on the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is that the way to provide jobs for Canadians? I would point out to those on the treasury benches that they must give this matter very careful consideration, having in mind the manner in which many industries were established in this country in order to provide year round jobs.

One direct and tangible result of our policies in the past has been the manufacture of automatic transmissions and automobile parts in Canada. This has certainly given a great impetus to the automobile industry of this country. They talk about a standard economy in this country. The automobile industry is selling more cars than ever before. There are more people employed in that industry than ever before, and this industry affects every village, town and city across the country. Why are they enjoying such an impetus in their growth and prosperity? It is because they are selling cars. Are they exporting these cars? No, they are selling them to Canadians. Canadians are buying them, because under the Conservative government of five and a half years Canadians can now afford to buy cars.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is just the new confidence.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Grafftey: Tricky, but inaccurate.

Mr. Starr: The Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) need not go into any gyrations, because he must remember that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) has taken the subsidy off buttermilk.

Mr. Pigeon: To save $6 million.

Mr. Starr: One of the basic things this country needs, and which it has needed for some time, is vocational training. We dealt with that matter very effectively when we were in office. Because of the tremendous advance made in vocational training we will have on the labour market skilled and trained young people possessing the basic qualifications which are required for jobs in industry. This is what we did in the short space of two and a half years. I think it is incumbent upon this government to see to it that when these young people emerge from vocational training, jobs will be available for them. We will make sure that we point this out to them from time to time. That is why it is urgent that the machinery of co-operation between management and labour, which we set up through such bodies as the productivity council, be not allowed to lapse into rust and disuse. We need more jobs in Canada. The best way of providing these jobs is through the co-operation of labour and management. They have a very important part to play. Therefore I hope the government will do everything they possibly can to bring about a greater degree of labour-management co-operation in this country.

Another problem is the effect of automation upon the labour force of this country, which is a terribly fearful thing to the older worker. We presented a bill designed to deal with this problem in a specific way. That bill was acclaimed by all who understood it and were interested in it. We hope that the new Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) and the government will again bring this bill in for consideration by this parliament.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to refer for a few moments to our school building program designed to give Canadians the advantage of learning new trades and skills. I feel this is one of the basic problems confronting this country. I do not intend to go into detail regarding the expenditure which has been incurred in building these schools. I want to point out, nevertheless, that it is now giving 135,000 Canadians an opportunity to learn new trades and skills. I hope that after a careful assessment of this program, which is ending in October of this year, the present government will come to the proper decision and, if necessary, build more schools in order to provide education of this type for the people of Canada. There is no mention of this in the speech from the throne, even though it represents, in my opinion, the basic solution to the problem of unemployment.

The municipal winter works program has been effective in curbing the steady onset of seasonal unemployment, and I trust the new Minister of Labour will look sympathetically at these arrangements even though the minister of external affairs may be against them; I recall that he dismissed the program as a bagatelle when it was introduced into this house. My own feeling is that it has done well in providing jobs for Canadians each winter on a temporary basis.

I have mentioned labour-management co-operation because I believe this is a field in which the maximum degree of effort is required at the present time. It is a field where such efforts will yield the greatest possible results, because management has a direct and positive interest in increasing the rate of industrial growth while the labour unions have a direct and personal interest in keeping up the supply of new jobs. This is a task which any government must set itself in moving to correct those built-in disabilities which have helped to introduce unemployment. Government can only accomplish this task by enlisting the support of labour and management in a direct and positive way. I must point out that there is a great deal of good will on both sides, good will which must be placed at the service of the economy and of the people of Canada in general.

At this time I should like to say to the new Minister of Labour that he is indeed fortunate in the calibre of those people he will find at his disposal in the Department of Labour and the unemployment insurance commission, people who have been, are, and, I am sure, will be ready and willing to carry forward the policies he may be initiating.

I have mentioned these matters at some length because I believe they are the real problems and issues which must be kept in mind when we examine the outline of government policy as it appears in the speech from the throne. It is not my intention to pull this document apart, sentence by sentence and word by word. However, there are some general remarks which I feel called upon to make at this time. While giving the government the benefit of the doubt, as we are all inclined to do, nevertheless I am forced to point out that there is very little for labour in the speech from the throne. Some of the promises which have been made by the present occupants of the treasury benches, including the Prime Minister, come to mind. I think of the measure to introduce a minimum wage of $1.25, the regulation of hours of work and a number of other things. I have scanned the speech from the throne thoroughly and have yet to find anything in it directed toward labour in this country. There is one sentence relating to automation and manpower adjustment, but it is not clear what that sentence really means. I would think it refers to a bill similar to the one we introduced in the last parliament, and setting out the same policy that was contained in that measure—one, by the way, which failed to pass.

What about the proposal to set up a new department of industry? Will the new minister be able to give direction to industry? Is that what is intended? If so, where does direction stop and regimentation begin? We should like to hear about this when the legislation setting up the new department is introduced. If the department is not going to give direction, what will be its function? We shall all be awaiting with interest the answers to these questions.

Also to be found in the speech is mention of an economic council to develop more employment and encourage efficient production. I venture to say that if this council is set up no effects will be felt in this country for at least four or five years. In fact there is nothing in this speech from the throne which would have an immediate effect. This economic council appears to be nothing more than a wrapping up of the national economic development board which we proposed and which was held up by the last parliament along with the measure to establish a productivity council. Hon. gentlemen opposite have thrown these into one basket and come up with this idea of forming an economic council.

I have no objection to this, because the measures we introduced were good measures which would have resulted in a continuation of the economic development already under way as a result of the other programs we implemented. But to try to pass these measures off as part of the bold, imaginative Liberal government program is just a little too much to swallow. I think hon. members opposite have perpetrated a hoax on the Canadian people.

They say they are going to set up a municipal loan board. What funds do they propose to make available to that board for loans? Is it $400 million? How much work is that going to provide? The municipal winter works program has seen $900 million spent in five years, giving jobs every winter to 135,000 Canadians for a period of 45 days. Yet hon. members opposite talk about solving the unemployment problem with $400 million. How is this money to be distributed? What criteria will be applied in granting loans to some municipalities and refusing them to others? Can any municipality get them? Is there to be a limit, or will Toronto and Montreal or some other large municipalities get all the money, leaving nothing for the others?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

(Translation):

Mr. Jean Chretien (St. Maurice-Lafleche): Mr. Speaker, as a new member in this house, allow me to offer you my most sincere congratulations on your appointment as Speaker of the house. I am sure that you will discharge with dignity and impartiality the heavy responsibilities that have been entrusted to you by both sides of the house.

I might be permitted also, Mr. Speaker, to congratulate the movers of the address in reply, the hon. members for Northumberland (Miss Jewett) and Lotbiniere (Mr. Choquette), for having so splendidly performed their duty in the house.

(Text):

I am very glad to be a member of a party which has a leader of the calibre of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson). Never has an English speaking Prime Minister had such a comprehension of biculturalism and the fact that Canada is a different nation from the United States. This is because one third of the population is French speaking and will always be so in the centuries to come.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to represent the riding of St. Maurice-Lafleche, which was set up in 1935, and which, even at that time, through the foresight of its electors, enabled a Liberal government to take over from a Conservative administration. In 1963, the electors of my riding of St. Maurice-Lafleche decided once again to help the Liberal party stop the spread of Social Credit and sound the beginning of the end for that party in the province of Quebec, and also to put in power a Liberal government to replace, once more, a Conservative administration.

Mr. Speaker, I succeed a Liberal member, Mr. J. A. Richard, who sat here for many years and served his riding and the house well. Therefore, on behalf of the electors of the riding of St. Maurice-Lafleche, I wish to pay tribute to that man who, although well in years, represented with dignity for many years the riding that did me the honour to elect me.

Mr. Speaker, since I have been elected, many of my English speaking colleagues have asked me questions on a problem of the day and wanted to know what I thought of the separatist movement in the province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, I believe we should not give too much importance to that situation. However, I would like, in a few words, to try and clarify the matter for the information of my English speaking friends who represent ridings in other provinces.

In the last century the province of Quebec had a population of farmers and craftsmen. It was only in the last generation that Quebec started to become an industrial province. Such a deep transformation creates a number of problems. At the present time, with the changes the premier of Quebec, Hon. Jean Lesage, is bringing about, especially in the field of education, thousands of young French Canadians will soon make their entry on the labour market while thousands of university graduates will start their active life, and they will all ask for adequate employment.

Now, Mr. Speaker, those qualified young men want to have their due place in a French Canadian community and in the community of the province of Quebec as a whole.

As a French Canadian, I must admit that we all have a place in this house. We may speak French or English here and we enjoy complete freedom. But, unfortunately, I find that in the past French Canadians in the province of Quebec were too often left in the background, more particularly in the industrial and commercial field.

Today, we are able to carry out some functions competently. But unfortunately some industrialists and businessmen in Quebec have but too often failed to be frank and honest enough or were prejudiced against their French speaking fellow citizens, to the point of limiting their progress to a certain level. However, at this time, I have to render due tribute to various financial, commercial and industrial institutions in the province of Quebec, which offer to Canadians of French origin more and more possibilities for an advancement, to which they, indeed, have a right.

As a matter of fact, La Presse of Saturday, May 11, 1963, reproduced an item published in the Financial Post and stating that French had become the fashion in Montreal and that, if industrialists in the province of Quebec began to offer possibilities of advancement to French Canadians, it was due to a recognition of the latter's increased competence and present economic strength, which had to be reckoned with, as well as of the need to negotiate with those people. That is why many corporations in the province of Quebec now offer some possibilities of advancement to French speaking Canadians. I hope this trend will develop more and more in the years to come, so that we may live in peace within the Canadian confederation, as we trust we shall.

Mr. Speaker, we may, of course, pass some legislation in this house. However, the Canadian people in general, and more particularly the English speaking Canadians, should, in the province of Quebec as in the other provinces, give French Canadians the same possibilities of progress so that there would be no such discrimination as has been noted in the past.

Mr. Speaker, I am confident that the present separatist movement is not serious. On the other hand, I feel that at the last federal election, the people of Quebec showed their trust in the party that has always recognized the importance of the French Canadians. That explains why so many ridings in Quebec have elected Liberals to represent them in this house, even though no expert could have forecast a Liberal victory in that province. It must be admitted that Quebec, in these times of confusion, has put her trust in the Liberal party, and it is the Liberal party which will restore a climate of confidence in the province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it one o'clock?

Mr. Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

(Text):

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

(Translation):

Mr. Chretien: Mr. Speaker, allow me to go back briefly over some things I said this morning.

This morning I was saying that at the present time, in the province of Quebec, a peaceful revolution was being carried out by the new government. I feel it is proceeding to the satisfaction of the people of Quebec. There is no reason to worry about the events reported these days in the newspapers, because on April 8 our people gave themselves an adequate representation in the federal government, that is a Liberal representation. Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, to give hope to those thousands of young French Canadians who are now attending university and tomorrow will be out on the labour market, I believe the federal government should pass adequate legislation. It will have to recognize the existence of the province of Quebec, which may wish to be more independent from confederation than in the past. So the government of our province must be given the means to solve its own problems. The federal government will have to adopt laws on biculturalism that are adequate and recognize, on a national scale, that during the next hundred years, Canada will be different from the United States, a country where there are two languages and two cultures.

I feel that under the present Prime Minister the government is going in that direction and I urge it to keep on going along that same path.

It will also have to study the sharing of taxes. The government of Quebec and the other provincial governments must be given sufficient financial resources to solve the numerous economic and educational problems that exist today, especially in the province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, I feel it is the duty of this house to give the country progressive legislation. The people of Canada will find in the Liberal program the solution to their problems.

The solutions that we have put forward shall have to be applied rapidly and, in this regard, I have a suggestion to make. I believe hon. members should be given the opportunity to take a more active part in this task, by changing the procedure of committees, so that members can really go to the root of problems and offer possible solutions. Committees should be diversified and the most competent people in this house should be appointed to work on each problem and submit solutions to the government and then adequate legislation could be enacted.

Mr. Speaker, some newspapers said that the member for St. Maurice-Lafleche perhaps had gone against his own way of thinking by supporting the government when the vote was taken on a non-confidence motion proposed by the New Democratic party. During the campaign, I took a position by saying that I was against nuclear arms but that if Canada had been committed by the Conservative government to acquire them, I did not want the Liberal government to fail to respect those commitments, or to do in public life what we do not do in private life.

Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister told us that this question would be discussed in the house in due course; he promised us that we would have an opportunity to discuss it. We only had half a day to deal with this problem and we were called to vote that same evening without having received all the information to which we were entitled.

I believe that problem is important, and the Prime Minister undertook to give us an opportunity for a full debate, not only an afternoon sitting. That is why, Mr. Speaker, I voted with the government.

It was premature at the time to launch a debate when we were unable to discuss the NATO agreements. It was impossible to take a stand until we were made aware of the solution that would be offered at that time. That is why I voted with the government, and when the debate is really opened on this problem I shall give my opinion and shall analyse the problems honestly according to the mandate my constituents gave me.

Mr. Speaker, some members can deplore, of course, the fact I am so nervous and I understand so little English. In any case, I believe that my position is highly defensible and, as Canada has acquired a reputation in international affairs for keeping its commitments, if there were any commitments, the member for St. Maurice-Lafleche will certainly vote in favour of fulfilling them. However, I reserve a final decision until we have had an opportunity to discuss the whole problem. I will not be satisfied with only an afternoon discussion. That is the reason why, in my opinion, it should be said that this issue was raised a bit prematurely and at the wrong time.

Mr. Speaker, the member for St. Maurice-Lafleche, like all the hon. members of this house, will make it his duty, when the government raises the nuclear weapons issue before this house, to examine both sides of the coin in the most thorough manner.

I conclude my speech here. It was my maiden speech and I wish to thank the members of this assembly for giving me such kind attention. I believe that even though we occupy the government benches we must give the members of this house the assurance that we will give our point of view on every matter raised before the House of Commons.

Anyhow, it will be clear for everybody that the riding of St. Maurice-Lafleche wants a progressive representation. It made a point of ousting a Social Crediter in order to return a Liberal member. I believe that my electors gave me an extremely clear mandate.

Yesterday I heard the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) say that the Canadian economy was under the control of the Americans. Mr. Speaker, I wonder how it is that the hon. member for Villeneuve, who complains of that situation, is a dealer for the Chrysler corporation, which is owned by the Americans. I hope that he will be able to give us an explanation for that situation. If he was so convinced of his opinion he would obviously endeavour to sell cars from companies other than American companies.

[Mr. Chretien.]

(Text):

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, this is the third time I have had the honour to represent the great district of Athabasca, the place where there are reeds; but I assure you the reeds are not shaken in the wind, except in the wind of false propaganda which recently somewhat thinned our ranks. I trust this situation will be shortly changed again. However, I do not intend to waste the time of the house in recriminations. My attitude has always been one of positive suggestion and contribution.

Last September I challenged the present Prime Minister to bring forward policies superior to those of the administration of which I was a supporter, but in the speech from the throne I see little promise to Canadians of any such change. In any member of parliament or any member of a government I as a taxpayer and as a Canadian citizen look for more than promises and empty words. I look for character, and surely one of the important aspects of character and stability. It is not enough to mouth high sounding phrases about freedom, democracy, independence and sovereignty; those phrases must be implemented and the Canadian people must be guaranteed independence, progress and sovereignty.

We are asked to believe that this new administration is going to give us this stability, but I should like to review the record. A short 18 months ago the present Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer) said that nothing could be gained by having atomic weapons on Canadian soil. At that time I thoroughly disagreed with that stand. I spoke on the same day, September 12, 1961, but what I said was, of course, ignored by members of the press because they only print what they want to print. They did not report what I said. At times they refuse to cover what they know is the bald truth.

At that time I begged the Minister of National Defence to reconsider his stand. He wanted to get out of NATO. It is in the record at page 8231 of Hansard of 1961. He said that nothing would be gained by adding atomic weapons to our arsenal or by joining the atomic club. Why the change? Eighteen months ago the Liberals were a family of bird watchers, but now I suggest that they have been watching the eagle much too carefully. Don't try to hang "zombie" around my neck. I served my country; I made a good stand.

An hon. Member: You are not the only one.

Mr. Bigg: I know I am not the only one. I ask those who served to remember those days and to call for something better than the raise in pay of $4 per month recently granted the men of the services. I assume these young men are going to follow in the steps of their forefathers and brothers in arms. This magnificent contribution is like the $6 increase in old age pensions offered by the Liberals, these friends of the little people. I challenged you then and I challenge you now—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Bigg: Save your applause; you might not want to give it later. I challenged you then and I challenge you now to be the party of the little people of the country. If you are, your ranks may well be swelled. The only man to lead an administration in this country in the last quarter of a century that was worthy of the little people is the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker). He championed the little people to the point where the big money, the big press and the big mouths of Canada deserted him, and some members of his own party failed in the vision and wisdom required of a good John Diefenbaker Conservative.

I throw out that challenge now. I am not one who is inconsistent. I am consistent, because 18 months ago I nailed my colours to the mast and put out 22,000 copies of this pamphlet I hold in my hand. I will be pleased to give a copy to every member of the opposition, so they can find out where I stand and have always stood.

An hon. Member: You are the opposition.

Mr. Bigg: If you want decision, read my pamphlet. Yes, at times I have been opposed to some of the policies of my own party, and I have stood up bravely and said so. I asked for acreage payments when many people were asking for deficiency payments, and we got acreage payments. I said the price of hogs was desperately low and that if something was not done about the situation the small family farmer would be destroyed. I stood up in caucus and in the house and advocated these things, but I did not get into the press and I do not expect to get into it today, either. I am not accusing the press of being bought, but I am accusing them of only printing the amount of truth they want to print.

If you want a clear picture of my position on the question of nuclear weapons, this is my point of view and it is personal. I think we should stand shoulder to shoulder with our American allies right down the line. I took this stand 18 months ago when the present Minister of National Defence said no, it would be treason to have atomic weapons on our soil. That was the consensus of the Liberal party until January, 1963. I can now stand conscientiously on the question of joint —I repeat the word "joint"—control of the atomic defences of North America. I would go as far as to join the United States army as a private soldier and give up my sovereignty and possibly my life to defend western democracy against any aggressor.

How many of you are willing to stand on this ground, and how long have you been willing to stand there? Not 18 months ago, because the foremost defence spokesman of your party said flatly—read Hansard if you have the time; do your homework before you come into the house—as found at page 8231 of Hansard that it would be tantamount to giving up our sovereignty as a nation if we allowed American generals to come and brainwash us into this foolish move. If you do not know that you do not do your homework in your own party. I know where I stand. Where do you stand? I will never vote for unilateral control of atomic weapons on Canadian soil. I will demand Canadian sovereignty in every phase of our national and political life. Do you dare to stand with me on that? Do we have to create a new party? This is where we stand. There is a word for any other stand, and you know it as well as I do.

You promised us a national flag, and thank goodness for that. If you ratify the one we have that will suit me fine. I said that in 1961. How many have the courage to stand alongside me on this issue? I feel that the flag under which our fathers died and under which we were willing to die is good enough for Canada. All across the hustings of this country during the last few months I have heard such disgraceful statements as these, that this flag does not give representation to all our people. What is this flag we are going to ratify? You promised it; have you the courage to carry out that promise? I am not afraid to take my stand, but I think many of you are.

I feel that we should not only stand beside our United States allies in the atomic defence of the western world, but I think we should also contribute money and manpower. I believe it is time we had a system of national service in this country. This would provide every young man with a chance to square his shoulders and learn a little discipline. How many of you would support me on that? I will risk my political reputation on that stand. I would not interfere with a young man's education, but this would make his education realistic in the twentieth century.

I feel that we should reform the Unemployment Insurance Act. I am not saying anything against the people who introduced this scheme, because it was done in an experimental fashion, but in many cases it has failed. It has put a premium on laziness and deception. In many cases it has encouraged unemployment. Let us reform this system. Let us encourage those who really want to work. Let us encourage farm labour so that the farmer can have the help he needs. Let us not have any of these second class citizens about whom the Liberals are always talking.

There has always been a lot of talk about selling our country to the United States. When the Conservatives are in power you say it, and when you are in power we say it. What are we going to do about it? We could make it worth while for Canadians to invest in their own country. We could give tax incentives. The Conservatives were accused of allowing the United States to have too big a share in our industries. However, the fact is that we bought more shares in United States companies than they bought in Canadian companies. We should give Canadians a chance to develop their own country.

I think it is time we stopped saying things are too hot to handle. How about the labour situation in Canada? Read the latest issue of Maclean's magazine. It is disgraceful that there should be 2,000 young seamen in this country who are being bullied by labour bosses, by criminals from across the line. Well, you talk about Canadian sovereignty. Are you fellows going to stand up and fight for Canada in the labour field? The answer is to give every labouring man in Canada a secret ballot controlled by government supervision so the men can elect the bosses they want rather than have appointments made by labour unions across the line. Have you got that kind of courage? I am standing here waiting. Is it too hot to handle?

Evidently you frankly admit you cannot get one man from your party to handle the Department of Agriculture in the same fashion the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) did. You are going to divide it. For goodness sake try to get two men who, together, will produce the results for agriculture that he did. We sold wheat to communist China on terms. What is wrong with Pakistan and India and all the other hungry countries? I do not have to go to Formosa to get my orders; my orders come from my heart, which tells me to help the hungry people of the world. If this government has the courage to put these things into effect, then I will vote for them. Do these things and you can challenge me then.

[Mr. Bigg.]

I suggest that right now the farmer is nowhere receiving parity. On the hustings you fellows were saying the western farmer had achieved parity. The western farmer has had attention for the first time in 25 years. The acreage payment is a clear attempt to give him parity. So long as I am in this house I will press for these acreage payments until he gets true parity, until he gets equality with the machinery companies concentrated largely in your great city of Toronto. They backed you up, but it will be some time before you get any backing from the farmers of western Canada. You will not receive their backing until you try to give them something like the square deal we have tried to give them. You talk about the western farmer getting better than a square deal. Take the hog price differential between the western and eastern guaranteed price; I refer to the $2 difference in the price of a dressed hog. This differential should be removed. The farmer should be given at least 25 cents a pound across the whole country. If there are too many business concerns and professional men going into hog production, we must cut down the quota and let the small farmer retain control of his own business. Don't talk to me about these things, because I have always earned my living by the sweat of my brow and the callouses on my hands.

What do those who occupy the front benches know about service in the armed forces when they come up with an increase of $4 per month? Just look at what they gave the generals, the men who brainwashed the rank and file by saying that the government was taking away their arms. Who was it wanted to ground the air force and make them into a bunch of bird watchers? It was the Liberal party. Who was it pressed for the building of the F-104? I did, for one. I went to Cold Lake and told the boys we would keep them flying. The finest air force in the world was going to be reduced to a bunch of bird watchers. I do not care if they are eagle watchers. If I could have been at Cold Lake and talked to them the way I am talking to you I do not think they would have voted for you. You had them convinced that we were letting them down.

This is the party that refused to help build airfields in 1938 in order to train airmen for the Empire training scheme. I wanted to be an airman at that time, but I was denied that privilege. Some of my friends went over to England and took short term commissions. They were right there for the battle of Britain and were amongst the few who fought so well. It is difficult for me, a veteran of seven years standing, to sit here and listen to such gobbledygook as the statement that we are unwilling to defend freedom, when 18 months ago you fellows wanted to reduce the air force to a bunch of bird watchers. I find it difficult, Mr. Speaker, to retain parliamentary decorum when speaking of these things.

Mr. Speaker: I would advise the hon. member that as long as he applies this language to a party and not to a person he is in order.

Mr. Bigg: I feel we should set up a national transportation policy to co-ordinate our roads, our railways and our airways. I have spoken about this before. I believe, too, that we should reassess our national parks system. I am tired of some people in this country telling me it would be wrong not to retain 17,500 square miles of parkland for the whooping cranes. There are only 28 of them. Yes, there are natural resources in Wood Buffalo park. There is enough gypsum alone to replaster every building in the world, yet this is denied to us because of the whooping cranes.

Do you not think it is time we as a nation and as a group of provinces got together to develop Canada for the good of the little people, whom the Liberal party are so fond of saying they represent? Now they are going to pretend that they came up with the idea of portable contributory pensions. I suppose this is an excuse for not giving the $10 to our old people, an offer which was made on every Liberal platform across the country during the election campaign. Once they were going to give them six bucks. I wonder if they will come through with the $10. They only gave the armed forces $4, so perhaps they will give our senior citizens the full $10.

I think I have made my position clear. When the Liberal party acts for the good of the little people of Canada I will vote for every single constructive measure they bring forward. But I am tired of double talk and gobbledygook, and I am tired of this terrible hypocrisy, which 18 months ago would have left us naked to our enemies. Today a whisper from Washington means more than the will of the people. I say to the government, beware of the steps you take.

Mr. J. B. Morison (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I rise with pleasure today to address the house for the first time. I wish to add my congratulations to you upon your election to the demanding office of Speaker. I am sure that with your capabilities and well known talents, at the end of your term of office we shall all congratulate you just as warmly as we do now. I should also like to congratulate the right hon. Prime Minister upon having earned the right to form a government in this twenty sixth parliament. I am sure, because of what I have seen in the last three or four days, that his decisiveness and enthusiasm will make this an excellent parliament. If I may quote the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) on Monday last, if he is correct in the Freudian slip of Mr. Kent, the Prime Minister will still be prime minister in the forty first parliament. I do not intend to be arrogant, Mr. Speaker, when I say that we Liberals are an indestructible lot, but the thought was prompted by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam.

I should also like to congratulate the Leader of the Opposition and wish him a long and brilliant career, if it does last to the forty first parliament. The preceding speakers should also be congratulated upon the excellence of their speeches. They have inspired me to rise today and address the house.

I represent Wentworth, which is a riding that surrounds the ambitious city of Hamilton, Ontario. Our biggest centres of population are parts of Hamilton, Dundas—my home town—Ancaster and Stoney Creek. The Burlington-Aldershot area is referred to sometimes as the bedroom community of Hamilton, and I am happy to say that we have done a good job; the population is now three times what it was 15 years ago.

The riding has changed since its inception in 1904. At that time it was predominantly rural, the farmers were a hard working lot and there was a very small population. The riding now consists of approximately 70 per cent urban dwellings—most of them are single family—30 per cent rural and a small amount of commercial and light manufacturing. Our farms still have many fine orchards. We have tender fruit farms and beef and dairy farms.

As I say, the area has changed greatly. My predecessor, Mr. Sams, in campaigning continually stressed that he was going to continue in the manner of his predecessor, who was elected to this house in 1935. I am glad to say that our constituents realized that a change was necessary, and they gave me the honour of representing them in this parliament. I believe I am unique amongst my colleagues in that I appear to have very few problems from my constituents. Whether they have been lulled from long habit into not complaining, or have been uninformed that it is our wish to serve them here, I do not know.

An hon. Member: Wait till the end of the 60 days.

Mr. Morison: I hope I do not have to wait until the end of the 60 days. Whatever the reason may be, the sooner they realize that we are here to serve them, and the sooner they realize that we would like to help them with their problems—and we do have problems in Wentworth—the better pleased I shall be.

Our farmers, unlike the lucky, shall I say, western farmers, have been caught in a price squeeze between the cost of their products and their selling prices. The small businessman in Wentworth does need help. He must be encouraged to expand so he can help with his share of the municipal tax load. Also the urban communities, with their vast expansion, do need a municipal loan fund. These are the problems, then, that we face in Wentworth.

The hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) said of the speech from the throne that it was a national disappointment in every part of Canada. I disagree. After listening to the impassioned speech of the hon member for Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Sauve) on behalf of French speaking Canadians, I cannot help thinking that every man, whether he lives in eastern Canada, western Canada, Quebec, or wherever it is, can hardly wait to welcome the committee on biculturalism. I do not think they will be disappointed in any way.

It was stated in the speech from the throne that the Secretary of State for External Affairs would strive to improve the welfare of all nations of the world. Now that we have accepted our commitments to the United Nations and NATO I think we are ready to go ahead and improve Canada's prestige and work to this end.

Many things were said against our trade policy. It was compared with the home consumption of automobiles, automobiles which Canadians are buying. I should like to remind hon. members that one Canadian in five relies upon exports for his job. We need jobs; we need trade. I should also like to remind hon. members that despite a minimum of growth in the last five years we have been having trouble with our balance of trade payments. Also, we have had some trying times with our currency. If ever, now is the time we must build up in the other nations of the world an ever increasing confidence in our currency. We must take a leading and constructive part, as Liberals, in world trade.

Certainly we are going to have problems. The only time we do not have problems is when we are dead. We are on the threshold of a new era in trade patterns, one which requires co-operation, imagination and bargaining. Certainly these will be the keynotes of our trade policy. The rest of the world too are going to have their share of problems. Germany has oil problems. Japan has problems because of her fast rate of expansion. The common market has France; Great Britain has Canada and the commonwealth to worry about; Canada has her five wasted years. These difficulties must be faced. They will not go away.

Changes are taking place in the trading pattern and we must adapt to them. Commonwealth preferences are deteriorating. The trading world is becoming less tolerant of our anti-dumping laws. Trade barriers are being reduced whether we like it or not. If we are to prosper we must go into these market places and barter with a positive attitude. We are bound to lose in certain areas, but if these small losses give way to large gains in the future they will have been well worth while.

I should like to congratulate the Minister of Trade and Commerce on his achievements at GATT. His mission has been accomplished and Canada has taken the first step toward a basis from which to begin bargaining if the Kennedy round is realized in 1964. This is a step in our program of action, and it is a positive one. We must be ready to bargain and to trade. The markets are there. There are two hundred million thriving Europeans, and they are ready to buy. The Barbados have spoken to us. They are ready to trade in co-operation with us. We can supply the Caribbean. We have been invited into the Americas. These are markets we must foster with a positive attitude. We must be prepared to go in and sell.

I suggest that if hon. members on the other side of the house will stop taking a negative attitude and remember they are Canadians; if they will stand up to face these problems with the initiative and the confidence we have shown for the last 96 years, they will be proud one day to have formed the opposition during the period of the fine twenty sixth parliament.

(Translation):

Mr. Clement Vincent (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, I want to associate myself with all hon. members who preceded me to express my best wishes to you on the occasion of your appointment to the post of Speaker of the house. I also want to congratulate the hon. member for Stormont (Mr. Lamoureux) for having been appointed chairman of the committees of the whole, and I also congratulate the deputy chairman of committees (Mr. Batten). We are sure that you will all discharge your responsibilities in the worthiest manner.

Moreover, I want very sincerely to congratulate the mover (Miss Jewett) and the seconder (Mr. Choquette) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. Having had the same honour last year, I am convinced that they carried out their tasks honourably, and I hope they will have as much pleasure sitting in this house as I have had myself.

Mr. Speaker, those who believe that the government alone can, by an arbitrary policy, settle all the important issues we shall have to face in the future, should realize that as members of parliament and representatives of the Canadian people from coast to coast, it is our duty to mention that we want the government to do some planning for the future of this country, but not a planning of an imperious character.

The mandate of the government elected by the people is to guide, through a vigorous impulse, the national economy, while leaving the greatest latitude to private enterprise and individuals so that they may play their proper part. This government has no mandate to impose a bureaucratic system which, in its turn, will impose arbitrary policies upon the people which they will have to accept without a word.

Moreover, it should be well understood that the solution of our present problems depends more than ever on each and every one of us. As a matter of fact, the mission we have been entrusted with is not to defend any political colours as our friends opposite did too often, but to make every possible effort with the view of making Canadians aware of their responsibilities, in every field.

In a general way, Canadians should not rely only upon the government for settling their everyday problems.

To my mind, the state has to play a complementary part, that is to say it must provide that which our various organizations may be lacking, but it should not replace our institutions which, in spite of some statements to the contrary, have played a very useful and very important part in our economy, and which will yet be called upon to play a very important part in the raising of our standard of living.

As I am a farmer and therefore one of the rare representatives of that profession from the province of Quebec, I would like, at this point of my remarks, to speak about agriculture. On other occasions, I shall have an opportunity of dealing with other subjects which are also of interest to the riding of Nicolet-Yamaska.

Mr. Speaker, it is always a pleasure to speak about the Quebec farmer, for he is a progressive fellow, a man who knows exactly where he is heading.

In days gone by, it was the fashion to dwell on his individualistic traits. Today it is evident that though he may be an individualist, he has learned to fully appreciate the virtues of a co-operation which helps him solve the problems of his rural community and improve its lot.

Since the last war, we are witnessing a technical and economic revolution, which needs the farmer in order to succeed. The farmer has already benefited from that revolution; unfortunately, he also suffered from it.

In agricultural regions where revenues are insufficient to ensure a decent standard of living, farmers are indirectly prevented from investing in order to modernize their farms and take advantage of economic and technical progress.

These farmers, as well as those who live in more prosperous areas, do not intend to bow under the burden of the agricultural problem. They know that new problems call for new solutions and that people must sometimes aim at larger fields of action to find them.

They have won the confidence of the Canadian government from 1957 to 1963. That is why that government, as suggested by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton), whose ability is well known, established a legislation entitled Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act. The Conservative government then invested for that purpose the amount of $59 millions.

You know the aim of that legislation. Farmers found in A.R.D.A. that program established in 1961, principles and methods of co-ordination that would enable them to initiate a real rural development campaign. It is a campaign in which all must lend a hand, that is farmers, parishes, districts, provinces as well as agricultural organizations.

The Canadian government of that time never intended to interfere in any way with the farmers' liberty of action. That legislation aimed only at giving them the technical and financial assistance which would enable them to put their good will, their ability and their social and professional organizations at the service of an idea, our agricultural survival.

As everyone knows, the federal government, on October 15 last, signed an agreement with the Quebec government.

When we lost power on April 22 last, great strides were being made in the province of Quebec. Many programs were in progress and many others were arranged for next summer.

I now ask the government which presides over the destiny of Canada to remember that such a program of action calls upon all the human, natural, industrial and institutional resources of the community. The government will have to act but it must leave to the individuals, to private enterprise and to the co-operatives their own responsibilities. Furthermore it will have to help them by trusting them and refraining from submitting the resources of the community to harsh regulations that would kill our farmers' legitimate ambitions and, should changes take place too quickly, miss the objectives aimed at.

Mr. Speaker, during the last electoral campaign, the Liberal candidates made promises. I see here, for instance, a promise made by the Liberal candidate in the riding of Nicolet-Yamaska; I quote from one of their election pamphlets:

> Establish the following principle: that the producer must be able to sell a pound of milk at the same price he pays for a pound of feed.

Many farmers put faith in that promise. But today, unfortunately, they are finding out that those were empty words. We have noticed that, during the first 60 days of action, the Liberal government has removed, in order to save the Canadian taxpayers $6 million, the 25 cents subsidy per hundredweight of milk shipped by the farmers to the processing plants for the production of butter and powdered milk.

An hon. Member: This is ruin.

Mr. Vincent: Moreover, that policy has been totally changed.

I received recently from a co-operative in the county of Nicolet-Yamaska, from a parish in that Nicolet-Yamaska county—there are 36 of them—information regarding that new policy and the effects it would have on the farmers in that parish.

Last year, in that co-operative, half a million—500,000 pounds—of butter were made and this year, with the new dairy policy of the new Liberal government, in the first place, the method of paying the 12 cents subsidy per pound of butter has been changed.

Ordinary people, who are no experts on the matter, will say: "The government, instead of paying 12 cents on a pound of butter, will pay from now on 14½ cents on a pound of butterfat", and they will believe it makes 2½ cents more.

Well, Mr. Speaker, that is not the case. All those who know something about agriculture will tell you that, with 100 pounds of fat, one can make 122½ pounds of butter. That is why one co-operative in particular, in just one of the parishes in my county, produced 500,000 pounds of butter using 408,163 pounds of fat. So if you figure out 500,000 pounds of butter at 12 cents per pound, you get a total of $60,000, and if you figure out 408,163 pounds of fat at 14½ cents a pound, you get a total of $59,183, an $817 difference because of the new Liberal policy. That is to say that, consequently, a single small butter factory in my riding suffers a loss of $817.

That might not seem a lot, but if one considers that, in my constituency, there are 36 parishes and if one multiplies, say, $817 by 36, one will get a possible total loss of $30,000 for the county of Nicolet-Yamaska, due to the new butter policy of the Liberal party. Moreover, we know that in 1962, that co-operative received from the federal government $72,987.96 in a single year, through the subsidies of 25 cents per hundredweight on milk and 12 cents per pound on butter.

The 25 cent per hundredweight subsidy which has been taken off had provided $19,884.15. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) will tell us that the price of powdered milk has been increased by 2½ cents a pound. Well, those who know about these matters will tell you that with 7,953,662 pounds of whole milk you get only 7,058,296 pounds of skim milk, so that at 2½ cents more for a pound of milk powder, and at 8 pounds of milk powder per hundredweight of skim milk, it comes to only 20 cents per hundredweight of skim milk, which means a loss of $5,767.54.

We therefore find that the average price for the year 1962 in that butter factory was $2.65, plus a subsidy of 25 cents per 100 pounds, as I mentioned earlier, and, plus 10 cents per 100 pounds for cooled milk, or a total of $3. However, as the payments are always three weeks late, the price for milk shipped since May 1, will be $2.80, plus 10 cents or a total of $2.90, which would mean a loss of 10 cents per 100 pounds on eight million pounds of milk, i.e., $8,000 for a single butter co-operative in my riding.

As I said before, we think that in a constituency like that of Nicolet-Yamaska, where there are 36 parishes, it means a total loss of between $250,000 and $300,000, thanks to the new policy of the Liberal party, which party, during the 1962 election, had promised to apply the principle that the milk producer could sell one pound of milk the same price as he might pay for one pound of feed.

Mr. Speaker, if we glance over the papers, we find that, according to a Liberal member, the main problem in the province of Quebec was the farm problem. This is what he said:

You may be sure that, as soon as a minister of agriculture will be appointed for eastern Canada, I shall be sitting on his doorstep.

Well, I shall immediately ask the minister to put some chairs on the doorstep of his office, but also not to forget to ask the hon. member to come in from time to time, because it is important not only that the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska be sitting on the minister's doorstep, but also that he enter the minister's office from time to time in order to discuss the farm problems peculiar to eastern Canada.

Thanks to the milk policy of the Conservative government, there has been an increase in the average milk price in the province of Quebec for milk testing 3.5 per cent. In 1954, under Liberal rule, it was on average $2.51. Those figures were supplied by the Department of Agriculture. In 1955, it was $2.51; in 1956, $2.58; in 1957, $2.70. That was for the last four years of the Liberal administration.

On the other hand, during the last four years of the Conservative administration the prices were as follows. In 1959, $2.75 plus 25 cents per 100 pounds. At this stage, I must say that the 25 cents per 100 pounds subsidy was not recorded in the statistics of the Department of Agriculture. The 25-cent per 100 pounds subsidy was directly added to the payments made by cheese and butter factories to the farmers of the province of Quebec. In 1960, $2.74 plus 25 cents per 100 pounds; in 1961, $2.69 plus 25 cents per 100 pounds; in 1962, $2.75 plus 25 cents per 100 pounds. Those figures therefore show a difference of some 40 odd cents per 100 pounds of milk between the last four years of the Liberal administration and the last four years of the Conservative administration.

This means that a farmer selling 150,000 pounds of milk per year would get a difference of $660 per year for the five years of Conservative administration, or $3,300 for the full period, Mr. Speaker.

The price of milk produced by farmers in eastern Canada poses a most important problem. That is why I would now ask the Minister of Agriculture to thoroughly consider the possibility of improving the situation and correcting the anomalies in eastern Canada. Due to the great importance of the dairy industry in our parts, and since our farmers rely on that source of income, I am requesting such improvements to enable our farmers to get reasonable income.

There is also another problem affecting eastern Canada, that of feed grains. During the last election campaign, I read, for instance, in the papers that a certain Mr. Hazen Argue who was a former member from a western province promised the wheat producers of western Canada a minimum price of $2 per bushel.

I ask the Minister of Agriculture to be very careful before he grants this $2 per bushel minimum price to the western wheat producers. I am asking him to fully consider what would happen should such a step be taken.

First, that would close eastern markets to western producers. Second, it would ruin farming in the east because with such prices as a result of that policy we could no longer raise cattle, go into the production of hogs, eggs or fowl.

In the course of the last session, we had on the order paper of the House of Commons, a bill to provide for the construction of grain warehouses in eastern Canada. I think that bill provided the machinery required to find a permanent solution to that matter of feed grain prices since it enabled western Canada to supply eastern Canada with feed grain at reasonable prices. I should like us to pass legislation whereby farmers, millers and eastern co-operatives could organize themselves into a purchasing board which could buy all the grain needed at harvest time. That bill should also provide for the storage of grain in eastern Canada in the warehouses which would have to be built, of course.

The federal government could pay for the transportation of that grain by ship, because at the present time we must already pay out almost $20 million in transportation subsidies for that grain from western Canada.

Mr. Speaker, the Conservative party is a progressive party. With our policies, from 1957 to 1963, we have tried to find other ways to stimulate our economic growth and this government must work in the same direction. We also introduced another bill which would be of interest for my riding: the national economic development board. When the Conservative administration introduced that bill in the house, they wanted to get together the best brains who, in a spirit of deep faith in the economic future of Canada, would have strived for that ideal. They would have advised the government on the measures that the elected representatives of the people had to take to develop long term farming and industrial policies.

Mr. Speaker, I repeat that the future of the country lies in each Canadian more than in the political colour of every minister.

If the Liberals, during the last session, had co-operated with the government instead of preaching doom and gloom, instead of sowing fear without any reason across the country, we could have pooled our talents, not to insure the victory of a team, but to secure prosperity for the Canadian people, for each citizen. That was the objective of our party. The people must realize that and we must remind them of that.

Mr. Speaker, I should like all Canadians, from coast to coast, to realize that all the work done by our party from 1957 to this day was meant to enhance the greatness of this country, letting at the same time the individual and private enterprise play their own part.

I also wish that every Canadian, and more particularly my Quebec compatriots, could read in our minds the objective we had and still have in view. They would see that our objective was not only to be in power but rather to make our country, which means every province, economically strong and master of its own destiny, besides making Canadians happy within the framework of Canadian institutions.

By contrast to what we witnessed in the house during the last parliament, from a certain opposition party, our party intended to take its responsibilities, looking for the good of the nation before the good of the party.

Mr. Gerard Girouard (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I should like first of all to thank the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) for not having taken the floor before me; this gives me today a few minutes in which to be heard before this house. I know, of course, that under the old regime I would have had the opportunity to speak a few days ago, for if then the minority members were given a third rate treatment, that treatment is now fifth rate. I do not know if I owe this attention to my hon. friend the member for Hull (Mr. Caron); by the way, may I say that my hon. friend has won only half an election, as he ran his campaign both in his constituency and in my own.

I do not think that I have anything new to tell the house today, but I have fallen prey to that irrepressible instinct of the member of parliament which impels him, after each election, to try and kill a few of the dangerous germs that fly around during the electoral campaign.

During the whole period, I heard exaggerated statements—so mean and pernicious that they went beyond anything that can be imagined—with regard to a party in which I am active, the Social Credit party.

Today, I take pleasure in reading an excerpt of a speech made by the Hon. Henri Bourassa in this house, at the time when he was a Liberal:

> More particularly in the political field, I do not see any advantage, either for ourselves or for the true public opinion, to doubt ourselves or to teach the people to doubt the sincerity of our public men. There should be enough matter for criticism and blame in the actions of all political parties, without needing to impute unfavourable motives to any of them.

Of course, Henri Bourassa was a Liberal who later left his party to become an independent.

Mr. Speaker, I might forgive politicians to have resorted to certain means to win votes. But what terrified and astounded me was to see journalists of the province of Quebec, who are supposed to be intellectuals and boast about belonging to the elite, suffer such a loss of memory in the period from February to April. I am speaking of the few leaders of the Quebec press who, last year, were loudly and warmly cheering the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) and others for causing the Conservative party a lot of trouble and defending the French fact in this house. At that time, the newspapermen were loudly cheering, while candidly admitting that they knew nothing about Social Credit but that they admired the Social Crediters. No need to list their names, everybody knows that they supported the bloc populaire policy and were fighting in the ranks of the Action nationale.

Politically speaking, they never had an outstanding record. But today those gentlemen pose as the protectors of the nation and the saviours of the people. In any case, from February to April they forgot everything. Nothing was good in their opinion either in the Social Credit or among the Social Crediters notwithstanding the fact that they had been admiring them for a year. In my own constituency of Labelle, every morning I read newspapers filled with unfriendly editorials, malicious reports and statements out of context. I do not know why, but those people of the fourth estate decided at one point to get behind the new wave of socialism which was the fashion in their set. Those gentlemen of the press at one point rallied a whole group of students in the province of Quebec, students I was working with not more than a year ago. Those students got together at the forum a few days before the election and, in the name of freedom of speech, tried to drown the speeches of the Social Credit speakers. Those responsible for such a situation were those gentlemen, the so-called saviours of the people who, we will never know why, decided during the election campaign to lose all memory of the past.

Mr. Speaker, Messrs. Andre Laurendeau, Pelletier and Gagnon decided to throw in their chips with the new socialist wave. Newspaper owners, who are a little more materialistic, opened their purse to amass betrayal money.

I wish to tell these newspaper men whom we used to admire and who have a role to play in the province of Quebec, who were calling for Quebec leaders within the Conservative party, that the Social Credit did have leaders, but I wish to tell them also that they are the ones who took it upon themselves to destroy them in the province of Quebec. I want to impress that on the house.

Those gentlemen of the press talk of unity, friendship and respect between the two nations. Let us first of all start by having respect for ourselves in the province of Quebec. They do not even respect the Quebec people themselves. I wish to tell those gentlemen of the press that they must stop throwing mud at us.

I say to those people that I am fed up with headlines about small bombs in mail boxes, about disgusting resignations, imaginary compromises and exaggerated contradictions. I say to them: stop acting in this way.

I heard yesterday the hon. member for Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Sauve) demanding once again equality on behalf of the province of Quebec. I admire him and I approve him, as do all Social Crediters. But I must tell those who direct public opinion to stop running us down in their headlines.

Mr. Speaker, I like to speak about Henri Bourassa, the man who founded Le Devoir, in Montreal, initiated all the journalistic movements, and his most ardent wish was that the Quebec press be at the service of truth. If Henri Bourassa had come back to life during the last election campaign, he would have taken hold of Caouette's whip to expel "those that bought and sold in the temple."

Mr. Speaker, there are 265 members in this house. I know that politicians make sharp distinctions between the Liberals whom I congratulate on their election, and the Conservatives who now form the opposition and who played a great role while they were in power. Distinctions are made also between the New Democratic party which gains in quality what it has lost in numbers, and the Social Credit party of which I am proud to be a member. However, in the eyes of the electorate, we form a homogeneous group, we are all members of the House of Commons. For them, we all have equal powers and our task is tremendous. That is why we will be criticized or praised according to whether or not we have shouldered our responsibilities.

Mr. Speaker, I realize that I am biased but I am sure that the Canadian people endorse the Social Credit doctrine, regardless of the political party to which their elected representative belongs. Indeed, any member who has toured his riding at least once knows how heavily unemployment and taxes bear on the Canadian people and how a handful of remorseless financiers are growing fat at the expense of the less fortunate.

Even though the Liberal party was elected to office, I am sure it has been entrusted with the mission of helping those poor people.

I am glad to see that the party in power includes economists, people for whom I have the deepest respect. I know that economists can be of great use to a government. The hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Pepin) should know that. Furthermore, I realize that those economists will be able to help us give a new direction to the Canadian economy. Those eminent gentlemen use the classic economic theory taught in the universities. It is quite good and already producing results. But with all the talent I know they have, I should like to see them go a little beyond that stage and use their training to try and rise a bit higher and find modern solutions to the current problems of this modern world.

And in this connection, Mr. Speaker, I would tell them that, even if they finally were to put the emphasis on consumption instead of production, they would not go much farther than Keynes and the other neo-economists who have been preaching along that line for some time.

Mr. Speaker, at the last election, the Canadian people have shown that they wanted unemployment to end. Moreover, they want further industrial development and a more significant farm policy. They also hope for an unlimited expansion of our foreign trade, and in this last field I must say a good word for the party in power, because it seems to have made some achievements in the economic field even before it was elected.

Mr. Speaker, our present trade balance with the United States must at last be more favourable, if we are to assess it on the basis of the unusual number of U.S. dollars in circulation in our ridings a few weeks prior to the election.

I should like to remind these prominent economists of the words spoken in 1900 by Mr. Henri Bourassa and I quote:

When it comes to public business, politics government and finance, I do not have much faith in logic.

And he added this:

Good governments clothe the people with a well-fitting gown, suitable for their size, their way of life and their work of the moment.

Therefore, the government must adopt active and efficient policies for the whole country.

The party in power has obtained several mandates, including one concerning biculturalism. I know it is ready to take a step in that direction, but with hundreds of people in Quebec, I would like to repeat to the party in power what they know already, that the province of Quebec does not like quitters. I am ready to go the whole way. Some members on the government side must fight also and, if they were to resign, as did Henri Bourassa in 1900, I would say to them: go ahead, gentlemen, the province will respect you.

As I said the other day, I wonder if the members for Lotbiniere, St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville, Drummond-Arthabaska or Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Messrs. Choquette, Dupuis, Pepin, Sauve) would be ready to make that sacrifice for their fellow citizens of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words now about federal-provincial relations. I know that the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lamontagne) will have a heavy task too. First he will have to clear a reputation he himself built up. He will also have to prepare new legislation, but above all to try and understand what is now in the constitution, not only in the written act but also in the spirit of the constitution.

Mr. Speaker, we could strive for years in this house to amend the constitution, to obtain further privileges and a recognized equality, but as long as members of the Liberal party will not be convinced that there is in the spirit of the constitution something else than what we have at present, we will get nowhere and commissions of inquiry will bring nothing constructive.

It is all very well to start with inquiries, but what I ask of my hon. friends is to be ready in their minds first of all to give our small French Canadian nation the little it claims in our great country.

At this point of my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I should like to point to the house an editorial published in this morning's Le Devoir, under the signature of Mr. Claude Ryan.

I shall quote a few excerpts of this article to show you how low one can be when one decides to write intelligent things when one is devoid of intelligence. This article relates to the vote taken Tuesday night on the question of nuclear arms. Speaking of the party in power Mr. Ryan said:

First, we can see to what a lamentable depth a party can sink through servile obedience of its members to the sole decisions of their leader.

In other words, he upbraided the members on the government side of the house for being mere sheep. And he continued:

The aristocratic methods, which still prevail in the most important of our four political parties, create a rather paradoxical situation. One cannot be sure any longer that the views legally expressed in parliament reflect the nation's true feelings.

And Mr. Ryan went on to say:

Do the Liberals in Ottawa—more particularly those from Quebec—fully understand that their spirit of conformity puts the whole nation in an extremely ambiguous position?

Up to now, I am in agreement with Mr. Ryan. Of course, when all the members of a party decide to vote because their leader has chosen that course, they do tend to look like a flock of sheep. But what is rather amazing, is that a few lines further, the same man writes in the same editorial:

Faithful to their promises, the Quebec Crediters voted like good nationalists on this question. Those from the west followed Mr. Thompson.

And this is his conclusion:

This event should not be given more importance than it really has. But it is more and more obvious that this sham party will not be able to resist the ideological disintegration of its elements.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Girouard: You can applaud, gentlemen; it seems that you have not understood the meaning of the editorial. The editorial writer blames the members from the government benches for having all voted like their leader, like a flock of sheep.

Then he blames the Social Credit members for having decided to vote according to their conscience.

This is the image of our party that our good newspapermen are trying to create in the mind of the public. I want to say once again that the newspapermen do not all fall in this category, but I blame the leaders like those I have named a moment ago, Laurendeau, Pelletier, and Jean Louis Gagnon, as well as a few small-minded followers, who decided the new wave was worth more than the creation they could imagine.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal briefly with another question. We have had a vote recently on the issue of nuclear arms.

Under the circumstances, I had a clear mandate to vote in favour of the motion introduced by the N.D.P. However, I should like to add at this time that my personal convictions, those of the people of my riding and of my province, forced me to support the N.D.P. subamendment which I found ill-timed, ill-advised and ridiculous.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Girouard: Ill-timed, sir, because the subamendment was moved on the eve of a most important conference from which we hoped to get on that the subject the information that the former administration kept from us and which the present administration does not seem more eager to give us.

I found it ill-advised because we have called for the establishment of a defence committee and we felt that the present government would give in in that respect, thus enabling us to get a clearer picture before taking a decision. The subamendment was ridiculous because, had it carried, the Liberal government which has a clearcut policy on nuclear armaments might have been overthrown just like its predecessor which had no policy in that respect. That is why I found the subamendment most unpleasant. Yet, I voted for it because I had a clear mandate from my constituents who are strongly against nuclear weapons.

To be honest, I cannot help but feel somewhat grateful to those who voted against the motion. But that is when I realized that there are always two sides to a major question. Some members told me that they did not wish to veto prematurely a question which the government promised to submit to the house for its approval sooner or later.

Others told me they feared that some communist influence might be behind the demonstrations staged by the C.I.N.D. and "The Voice of Women". By the way, I should like to speak about "The Voice of Women", not that I question their sincerity, but they intrigue me, those guardians of the home who of late have mothered peace. I wonder if those women, whether they be in Canada or in Rome, know exactly why they demonstrate and where they are going. I feel it would be easy to clear up the matter if the Prime Minister decided to reveal some private talk.

The only demand I have to make respecting nuclear weapons, is that I insist—and I believe all hon. members support me—that any final decision in this connection be taken by the house. I feel that if we had a free vote then, or to go even further, if we would disregard parliamentary procedure and hold a secret vote, not more than 40 or 50 members in the whole house would vote in favour of nuclear arms for Canada.

Mr. Speaker, if one day, in spite of my unimportant and dissenting opinion, the government party were to conclude such an arrangement with the United States, I ask them not to forget altogether all those years of struggle our country went through, when less than two centuries ago, Canadians were still shedding their blood to keep the freedom that our distinguished, but not too powerful neighbours, were trying to take away from them.

Mr. Speaker, I come now to the amendment moved to the address in reply to the speech from the throne.

When the former prime minister moved his amendment, I felt a great deal of indignation, because I could not help but think of the saying: "Opportunity makes the thief".

Indeed, the Leader of the Opposition thought that the government did not act quickly enough. At one time he said: "I find that the government's statement of intention is not enough to maintain or pursue the expansion launched by our government in 1962". With regard to this matter, Mr. Speaker—I do not know whether my party is involved by saying so—I say that the same chance may be given to the ministerial benches that we of the Social Credit have given to the Conservative party in the past. Anyway, in order to soothe the Leader of the Opposition, I shall say that, though there is no great promise in the speech from the throne, after the last six years which the country spent under Conservative rule, Canada should not be too exacting.

Mr. Speaker, I shall now conclude my few remarks. I took great pleasure in being able to express my way of thinking. In concluding, I want to say that a few days ago, the Liberal party made some promises which seemed interesting from the point of view of the Canadian people. If the government carries out what the people want, it will apply what the Social Credit party always asked for, on behalf of the people. While strengthening our economy, the government promises to give us what we want in the matter of biculturalism.

I shall therefore conclude my remarks in stating that, if the government carries out the promises it made during the election campaign, it will be in absolute majority, because the 265 members of the house, in supporting such legislation, would only discharge their responsibilities, which consist in giving to the Canadian people all the happiness which political, economic and social security can mean.

(Text):

Mr. William Dean Howe (Hamilton South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take this opportunity of congratulating you, sir, on election to your esteemed office. I have been told that this is considered a maiden speech. I do not know whether this is in reference to being launched, or because this is the time of life at which the greatest degree of nervousness takes place. A previous maiden speaker referred to this as going into orbit, and with this I must agree. However, when I consider the small percentage of hon. members who will probably be left in this chamber when I have finished my speech, I am sure the nervousness will be almost overcome. As to where I sit in this house, at least all I can do is advance. I do not think it is possible to get any further back, but at least I have my foot in the door. The geographical distance between here and some of the other seats is short. The distance is one of status rather than physical footage.

The riding I represent is large. It was established in 1952. Both the somewhat larger parties have ably represented this constituency in the past, but in this election the people felt they should try a party that can truly represent the interests of the working people.

As to my immediate predecessor, Bobby McDonald, I should like to say that, knowing him personally, I hope I shall be able to represent our riding in as able a fashion as he did.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Howe (Hamilton South): I have always found him fair in every respect, and to follow him places a large burden of responsibility on my shoulders.

The city of Hamilton, the fifth largest in Canada and the largest industrial city in Canada, is well located at the extreme west end of lake Ontario. It is a natural port area on the great lakes which allows clear access for the shipment of the many commodities manufactured in that great city. I am not going to bore hon. members here with Hamilton's many advantages, because I am sure they are well known by reputation alone. Needless to say, with the amount of industry which takes place in this area there is a huge labour force that is deserving of social benefits which have not even been mentioned in the speech from the throne. We were particularly astounded at the omission of any medicare program. We were pleased during the campaign when we saw that the Liberals had included this in their platform, being careful, of course, not to offend the private companies as they turned right from their portended social policies to gain their support. Do the Liberals realize that they are dependant upon more than themselves to keep their present status? The effectiveness of any government has no relationship to the numerical majority of that party. I feel that stability would indicate the calibre of the men who make up the government and the sincerity of purpose, rather than party affiliation as a sole criterion for judgment. To me sincerity is more important than physical majority. There have been many successful minority governments.

The New Democratic party has pledged itself to support a minority government as long as this government is carrying out any legislation that is good for the people of Canada. What better way is there of maintaining effectiveness and honesty than if the minority party is kept to its election promises through the watchful guidance of a party interested in the welfare of the people? This minority government, as in the past, could be the finest government of them all. Monopolizing power by one party, with no thought of utilizing effective people of an opposition party, is ineffective administration. It is my sincere contention that voting for a majority government merely for the sake of majority is wrong. To vote for ineffectiveness and poor policies serves no useful purpose.

Our party proposed a plan that would give complete medical care to everyone. We do not think the quality of medical care should be determined by how much a person can afford. Rather, this should be determined only by the degree of illness. We believe that any plan of medicare must be all inclusive and completely comprehensive. It must include doctors' care, hospital care, dental care, drugs, glasses and other necessary appliances. This plan would be for the benefit of the people and not one designed against the doctors—after all, I am one myself. It would be designed to meet these needs without the sacrifice of the doctor-patient relationship. Doctors would be paid on a fee for service basis rather than a salary. This would maintain a doctor's incentive. He would have the complete freedom to practise inside or outside the plan and also have complete freedom of choice of his patients. This would be completely democratic and yet maintain the dignity and pride of the medical profession which it so justly deserves, because of its sacrifices and unswerving loyalty to the ailing since the ancient inception of this profession.

We feel, too, that the people are equally deserving of the best care available. Through experience in the practice of medicine I find there is a large group of people who are medically indigent. Some of these people have sufficient to make them ineligible for medical welfare assistance, yet they can ill afford adequate medical care. There are new discoveries in treatment, in newly derived drugs that cannot be used on as high a percentage of patients as they should be. The exorbitant prices of these drugs makes it necessary for doctors to substitute cheaper ones rather than use the best in the case of many of his patients. Because of financial obstacles, must our Canadian people receive second or third rate substitutions?

When a patient enters my office I am forced to make two diagnoses—one has to do with a medical diagnosis and the other with the patient's financial ability to pay for the treatment I will have to prescribe, whether it be drugs, surgery or even time off work that many can ill afford. What about private plans? These are so covered with exceptions, exclusions and fine print that to interpret them would take the ability of a legal man. None of these plans include dentistry or appliances. A few of them partially cover drugs on a percentage basis. It was interesting to note that in yesterday's Globe and Mail on the editorial page there was an editorial called "Facing the Inevitable", and I would like to read this.

> The dental profession is showing wisdom in its co-operative and constructive approach to prepaid dental care. At the joint annual conventions of the Canadian and Ontario Dental Associations at the week end, it was disclosed that sponsoring bodies had already been set up by the profession in British Columbia and Quebec to administer prepaid plans, and that similar bodies were in the process of formation in Alberta and Ontario. The Ontario group should be ready by the end of the year to administer plans on behalf of a number of groups.
>
> Dr. W. G. McIntosh, past president of the Canadian Dental Association, had some words of advice for his colleagues. He warned them not to resist social change:
>
> "The only reason for the existence of our profession is to serve others. If we fail to make our services available or place them beyond reach of the public, then our status as a profession and our legal power of self-regulation will quickly disappear... The cry of no government control is outdated. It is now a question of how much government control and how it can be most efficiently used in the best interests of all concerned."
>
> By moving voluntarily into the prepaid field, the dentists are co-operating gracefully with the inevitable. Dental bills place a greater financial burden on some families than medical bills, and there are many families who cannot afford dental care or for whom dental care is not available. The need is twofold: there should be prepaid plans that will spread the costs and enable people to guard against sudden and enormous bills by paying a reasonable monthly premium; and dental services should be made much more widely available.
>
> These are not needs that can be quickly satisfied. The first plans put into operation in Ontario will be in the nature of experiments. Until they have been working for some time it will not be possible to determine the full extent of the need for dental services or to fix firm premiums. It is also probable that the original plans will function only in urban areas; the shortage of dentists in many rural communities at the present time could make any sort of comprehensive prepaid scheme impossible. Before prepaid dental service can be made available to all its citizens, Canada will need many more dentists.
>
> The dentists are wise, however, in proceeding with their pilot schemes now. It is an indication of their recognition of the need, and of their willingness to co-operate in meeting it.

It is interesting to note that even the Globe and Mail does not speak in a derogatory way about the possibility of this plan being government run. Is it not the prime responsibility of any responsible government to attend to the health of the people?

Great Britain has had a medical plan since 1948, and although the Labour party, which had the sagacity to institute this plan, has been out of power since 1951 the plan has not been withdrawn. Rather, the Tories have recently offered increased benefits. The doctors want it, the people want it and even the government wants it. If such a plan as this could be brought in during a period of austerity in Britain by a Labour party, and not removed by governments following them, surely Canada is in a better position than Britain was in post-war days to institute a plan of similar magnitude for our Canadian people?

The complaint that quality would be substituted by quantity is unjustified, as evidenced by the Norwegian health plan. Two of the standards used for the determination of quality of medical practice are the infant mortality rate and the average life expectancy at birth. Both of these are considerably more favourable in Norway than either here or in the United States. Although medical education in Norway is free, there are still fewer doctors per capita and therefore the improved statistics are not explainable on the ground that Norwegian doctors handle fewer patients.

There are only two countries in the western world which have not achieved some form of government operated medical health plan —the United States and Canada. This is something the people need and want. I feel that a speech from the throne which omits even to mention this subject is remiss in attending to the needs of the people. Is this not truly the duty of a duly elected government? The people are not asking to be branded by the stigma of receiving charity from either the government or other people but I do feel that anyone who is doing a job to the fullest of his ability should have equal rights and access to benefits available to everyone; he should not be looked upon as seeking charity, but, rather, recognized as a human being, not indigent but with equal rights. If any one right falls in this category it is the right to health.

A properly planned medical health scheme that is truly all-inclusive would advance the course of medical science, because it would not only look after the people but it would provide incentive to the doctors and advance the cause of scientific research without such duplication of effort as results today from the studies of private companies. It would make the latest scientific advances available to anyone whose medical condition required them. This would be the only criterion of their use, as the financial barrier would be removed. Also, education along medical lines would be made available to those who have the ability. Today, one needs both ability and opportunity. This would make the opportunity available to all those who have the ability.

Only through idealism is the realism of improvement accomplished. A goal set high remains an eternal objective even if never attained. Perfection is impossible to attain, but the closer we can come to it the better will be the life of our people. So, let us all work and build a new Canada with standards for our people that will be the envy of the world.

(Translation):

Mr. J. E. Brown (Brantford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin my remarks in the language of my French speaking compatriots, many of whom are my close friends.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate you upon your appointment as Speaker of this house. On all sides of the house you have been held in the highest regard. I know that you will discharge your duties with great distinction and impartiality.

Also to the Deputy Speaker and deputy chairman of committees, I should like to extend my sincere congratulations.

Mr. Speaker, one of the first matters mentioned in the speech from the throne is the establishment of a commission charged to study "thoroughly but urgently how the fundamentally bicultural character of Canada may be best assured."

As a representative of one of the major English speaking areas in Canada, I am glad to commend the government for its efforts to create a true bicultural relationship in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I truly love the traditions and background of English speaking Ontario. But I also love the traditions and background of our sister province of Quebec.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker, the speech from the throne forecasts decisive action on the part of the government to combat the serious unemployment problem that besets this country at the present time. My constituency of Brantford has felt the effects of this problem for quite some time. Many have suffered greatly, and for them I have had grave concern. I believe that across the country there is a good deal of optimism and satisfaction that the new Liberal government is endeavouring to bring Canada back to a greater degree of stability and a higher degree of prosperity, a prosperity which is more widely shared by the whole population than was the case in the past. I congratulate the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and his colleagues for the leadership they are giving in face of many difficult national problems.

I hope I will be pardoned for the enthusiastic belief I have that Liberalism is not dead in Canada today. I believe it can still offer this country an effective path to greater freedom for the individual, and a richer and fuller life for the majority of the people of Canada. I have always found that somehow modern parliamentary Liberalism has an answer, and an effective answer, to our national problems, and I congratulate the government upon the leadership it is giving in this direction as outlined in the speech from the throne.

Of particular interest—and I mention it now only because I may very probably have more to say about it later—is the reference to the new national contributory portable pension plan. It was spoken of a great many times during the election campaign, and I am now looking forward very much to its implementation during this session of parliament. I believe in it because I believe that it will be a tremendous stride forward in social legislation when it comes into effect. It will be contributory; it will not be a handout. Every working man and woman knows full well that we must all somehow pay for this and for many other benefits which may come from such measures of social legislation. I believe that each and every such person looks forward to contributing to something from which he or she can benefit in years to come upon retirement. When the new minister brings down the bill implementing this legislation, it will be one of the most vital pieces of social legislation which has been introduced in this parliament in a generation.

Above all I should like to congratulate the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) upon his speeches in this debate. He gives promise of great leadership in the days to come and is bringing singular credit to this house and to the country in these days of decision.

There is one matter that I should like to bring before the house and the government in this debate. This might be said to be a local matter, but it is one which affects far more than the people of my own constituency. It would benefit the entire area in which I live in the province of Ontario, and one in regard to which representations will, I know, be made to the government in the near future. I refer to the deepening and the redevelopment of the Grand river for purposes of navigation. This may seem to be a small matter at first but, Mr. Speaker, I believe it to be a big one. I want you to know, sir, that it is one which will be of inestimable value to one of the most heavily populated parts of Canada.

The Grand river is a navigable stream—at least it has been for many years—as far as Brantford, that picturesque and historic city which I have the honour to represent in the House of Commons. The Encyclopaedia Britannica 1948 edition describes Brantford, Ontario, as a port of entry into Canada by water; and as such it was recognized from earliest times. It was a centre of civilization and gives evidence of having been an Indian capital in the days before the coming of the white man. The potentialities of the Grand river were recognized from earliest times by both wise Indians and white men alike. It traces a majestic course from its source in central Ontario to its mouth at lake Erie. It was at the fall of the river, which is also the ford of the river, to where the earliest white settlers in the area came. This river valley was chosen by the Indians of the Six Nations when they settled in Canada following the American revolution under their redoubtable chief Joseph Brant, that illustrious leader of men, both Indians and whites alike, and a valiant ally of the British crown. And as I said, the earliest white men followed Joseph Brant to settle at the ford of the river, at Brant's ford, there to establish the beginnings of the province of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, did you know that when Brantford was a port whole families of people came from as far away as Virginia, bringing their slaves with them to spend their summers in the delightful climate of our part of Ontario? The historic Kerby hotel at Brantford was jammed to the doors every summer in the 1850's, and they had to set up an annex across the river to hold the crowds.

What I am saying is that this great river must be made navigable for the reasons I will outline. Did you know, Mr. Speaker, that in the last few years every municipality along the Grand river has spent large sums of money, some in the millions, establishing sewage disposal plants, with the help and direction of the provincial government, in order to put an end to the pollution of the river? The result is that it is rapidly being restored to its pristine beauty—to its old and rightful place in the life of all those important communities on its banks. It is being made ready for navigation again, and the federal government, this government will, I know, be called upon to give a little leadership in restoring navigation.

Perhaps commercial navigation may never develop again on the river—who knows? But navigation for pleasure craft will change the entire economic life of this whole area. The possibilities for recreation in the valley of the Grand, serving the whole area between what is called the Golden Horseshoe around lake Ontario and down to the region of lake Erie, are unlimited.

Hon. members will be well aware of the increased interest in boating and water sports over the last few years. The highways in our part of Ontario are full of people hauling boats either to Georgian bay or lake Erie. This should not be necessary when all they have to do is put their craft on the water at Brantford. Further down the river past the Six Nations Indian reservation and Chiefswood, the newly restored home of the Indian poetess, Pauline Johnson, is Caledonia, where above the dam the boating and water sports enjoyed are a sight to see.

With some dredging and a number of low dams, the entire Grand river and its flat lands on either side will become, in my view, a recreational area second to none in North America and serving a whole number of communities throughout its length, in the most densely populated parts of Canada.

With the river pollution coming to an end, with help from the federal government to promote navigation, and with the construction of certain small sized dams, the adjoining farm lands, always a credit to our province, will be enhanced in value by the possibility of irrigation, so that agriculture will be able to hold its accustomed place as a cornerstone of the economy of the Grand valley.

The redevelopment of the Grand river will also be one of those projects which the federal government can promote at this particular time, or in the near future, to alleviate the unemployment problem in the area. It is a public project that will bring about a good return on the investment made. There will be resultant prosperity ensuing from the establishment of this enviable recreational area, one which will be second to none in Canada.

Millions of dollars have been spent in past years on the Trent valley system and on the Rideau canal system, and I believe, and believe firmly, that the next great move on the part of government will be the redevelopment of the Grand river for navigation. Present day urban civilization requires a multiplicity of parklands and recreational areas, and the potential of the Grand river valley is tremendous in this respect.

As I said at the outset, great men of the past recognized its value and potential by settling there. Joseph Brant and the chiefs of the Indians of the Six Nations confederacy, after careful study, chose this area as above all a place worthy to establish in the wilderness a haven where British justice under the crown of England would flourish and prevail.

The white man, after the advent of railways, rather carelessly neglected some of our splendid waterways, including the Grand river. Today his descendants are turning to these rivers again for recreation and the Grand river area will, I confidently predict, from one end to the other become a retreat for countless thousands and a bulwark against the pressures of modern urban civilization.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Deputy Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate, like so many others I would first like to congratulate you on your election to the office you hold. I would also like to congratulate the mover and seconder of the address in reply for the manner in which they delivered their speeches. Those of us who have already made our maiden speeches know what an effort it is on such an occasion to express oneself when it appears that all eyes are turned on one. However, there was none of that nervousness, that I personally experienced, evident in those new members whom I have heard, and I admire them for that.

[Mr. Brown.]

In particular I admire some of the Liberal members who can speak of the throne speech and make it appear as though it were something of which they could be exceedingly proud. During the recent election campaign we felt some bold action would be forthcoming, were the Liberals returned to office. We heard them say: "It is time for action; it is time we got a new government." But what do we find in the speech from the throne? We find that what the new government have done is to take legislation which we announced in the speech from the throne last session, reword it, alter it a bit and present it to the country as though it were theirs. They have copied it, and I admire them for doing that. I am glad they could see the wisdom in the legislation we had presented.

We left the country in a better position than the press, Liberal spokesmen and television commentators made it appear. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, quite a hoax was perpetrated on the Canadian people. I have before me a clipping from the Ottawa Journal of May 1 and under the heading, "A house left in good order" there appears this:

> Official figures which came last week should be noted well by Canadians.
>
> For what they showed, beyond any dispute whatever, is that when Mr. Diefenbaker last week handed over the government of Canada to Mr. Pearson he presented Mr. Pearson with a house in good order.

An hon. Member: What about the unemployment?

Mr. Korchinski: I will deal with that shortly. The article goes on to say:

> He left Mr. Pearson a country whose national production in 1962 had climbed 8 per cent to a peak of $40.4 billion . . .
>
> He left him with a country which, after years of trade deficits, had at last achieved a favourable trade balance.

The article continues:

> He left him with a country whose reserves of gold and U.S. currency had been brought to $2,700,000,000—the greatest reached in years.
>
> He left him with a country in which, during 1962, trade had reached an all-time high; in which manufacturing had jumped by 8 per cent, construction by 8.2 per cent, business capital investment by 4.8 per cent . . .
>
> In short, Mr. Diefenbaker left Mr. Pearson with a country whose people were producing more, selling more, earning more and saving more than ever before in their history.

Is it any wonder that they followed through by keeping that type of effective legislation? Is it any wonder that they are continuing the program of technical assistance? The former minister of labour dealt with that earlier today. Is it any wonder that they want the Atlantic development board? Oh, they will change it a bit. Perhaps what they want is a few of their appointees on the board, but they are not saying that it was bad legislation. I can remember when they spent days and days in the house—obstruction, that is what it was—trying to make it appear to the country that this was poor legislation.

What are they going to do about this legislation now? They are going to improve it. They are going to put in $100 million and that is supposed to solve the problem. They are going to make a few more appointments. So far as solving unemployment is concerned, no doubt they are going to appoint some of their men to the board and that will absorb jobs. I think they should take a lesson from the experience of the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) who was premier of the province from which I come. He tried all these things. It is a wonder they did not discuss the matter with him because he has tried everything they are going to do now. He put up funds. He said one time that he was going to create all types of industry and that this was the answer to the problem there. What was the result? A woollen mill on the rocks, a shoe factory, a box factory—

Mr. Douglas: More industries than the province ever had and not one Tory in the legislature.

Mr. Korchinski: —you name it. And so on down the line. You will find that the only type of industry that has ever been successful is one where there has been a monopoly, where you can charge as much as you want, where there is no competition. Then the industry will survive. This is supposed to be the answer to the unemployment problem. This is the bold action from a government which said that Canada is going to the dogs.

Mr. Gundlock: Forty days gone.

Mr. Korchinski: Somebody says that 40 days are gone. What have we got? Only a repetition of the same mistakes that the province of Saskatchewan made 20 years ago. The government will appoint the board. What power will it have? Will we put money into some industry and find it does not pan out and then put in more good money after bad as was done in the province of Saskatchewan?

What is going to happen with the present provincial leader in the province of Saskatchewan, Mr. Thatcher? He tried to kick down the door of the provincial legislature in order to tell the N.D.P. in that province that they are not doing the right thing. Yet the Liberals here in Ottawa are going to do the very thing that the C.C.F. proved was wrong in the province of Saskatchewan, and this is supposed to be the answer to the unemployment problem.

Let us go on. Will we have a repetition of the same mistakes, only to get the same answers? You have a development plan for the Atlantic provinces, you have legislation for central Canada, but what is going to be done for our province of Saskatchewan? For example, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam must be aware of all the potential that exists in my constituency. He said something about industries. I can show him silica sand deposits, I can show him timber, I can show him water resources, I can show him fish in that area. What has he done? Nothing.

Mr. Douglas: Have you heard about Squaw rapids and the timber board?

Mr. Korchinski: I have heard about the timber board and all the timber board did was to lay off people in that area at a time when the N.D.P. were crying about unemployment. People have talked to me about it. Is it any wonder that people who know about the timber board will not support their party?

Mr. Douglas: They do.

Mr. Korchinski: The situation in Saskatchewan is well known and certainly the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam should be quite well aware of that fact because the people indicated in no uncertain terms a year ago what they thought of that type of planning.

I come now to the municipal development board. This is merely an extension of legislation now in effect with regard to sewer and water programs. There will be a forgiveness clause. How long is the period to be? Nobody knows. There is nothing wrong with that type of legislation but it is repetition. Where is the bold new action we were led to believe would come from the Liberal party? There is nothing.

The provision for an economic council for Canada is just another name for the national productivity council. Again I say that all the Liberals will do will be to make new appointments and put a new man at the head of it. Perhaps some of their candidates who were not successful will be on that board. They were unsuccessful in one place but they will put them in another place, to make a success.

Contributory pensions are another idea that we had. They told us in the last session of parliament that their one big aim was to destroy a government that had nothing to offer, and yet they are offering the very things we did. Where is that bold new action? It is not coming and will not come from them. No.

They tell us that in a few years we will have a new flag. I wonder whether on his recent trip south the Prime Minister of Canada discussed this matter with the president and decided that perhaps one more star on their flag would be the solution. Is there agreement in this regard? After all, there seems to be agreement on everything else. It would appear from all the commentators in the press and on the radio that we have reached a wonderful Utopia. Just one little trip to the south and everything is fine.

As a matter of fact, I came through the United States myself when I drove to Ottawa. There is nothing wrong with going there, but to think that we will get all the answers because we have a new Prime Minister who cannot say no to anything seems to me to be stretching the imagination pretty far. The throne speech has been called imaginative, but you have to stretch your imagination to see what is in it that is new. Nothing, I say. After all, the flag of the country to the south has flown over military installations in this country in the past. There was nothing wrong with money from that country coming to Liberal headquarters during the campaign. That was wonderful. They had every assistance on television and in the press, all across Canada. To what avail? They could not convince the people, even with all their money. It is entirely up to the United States as to what they want to do, but I understand they want to have a member in this house, somebody to be their spokesman. Apparently the ambassadors are to sit on the sidelines. I understand that Congressman Hays has introduced a bill to this effect, which also makes provision for Canadian representation in their legislative bodies. Can you imagine Canada having an effective voice in their house of representatives and senate? Their spokesman would have every right to come into the Canadian House of Commons, tell us what they believe and perhaps give us an indication of what is necessary for Canada. Wonderful.

Now we come to some of the new ideas in the throne speech. One of them is to have two ministers of agriculture. I think it would be a good idea to have a lot of ministers of agriculture. That is evident from some of the experiences we have had in the last couple of days. I think the Prime Minister should have asked the new Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) one thing: "Have you read the agricultural platform of the Liberal party?" In that way he would prepare himself for the type of questions that may be asked him. I am sure he has no idea, as is evident, of what is in that platform; if there is a platform; but they did put out some material it would be very nice if he had read it.

I asked a question the other day: What is the higher initial price for oats and barley? It was taken as notice. I have just had a phone call. Seeding is almost finished and I should like to know what that higher price for oats and barley is. The former minister of agriculture rose today and told us that the price of barley has gone down. What did their platform mean? Is that not perpetrating a hoax? What were they trying to tell the people of the west? Is it any wonder they have so few members from the west? I have a pamphlet here issued by the Liberal party, and do you know what it says? "Ensure a minimum return on wheat". I emphasize the word "minimum" because that is exactly what we are heading for. It says "minimum".

Why do we need two ministers of agriculture? Would it be because they wish to have somebody to whom they can pass the buck? Whenever you do not want to make a decision, you hand it over to the other man.

Just a few minutes ago there were two members talking behind the curtains. They were both talking about sugar beets, but one was from Ontario and one was from Alberta. Who will look after the problem? How are you going to solve that? What about hogs? What about eggs? What about cattle? What about grain, for example, that will be sold in the east and grown in the west? Who is supposed to decide that problem? Where do we go? Is this an admission by the Liberals that they cannot possibly handle the problems with one minister? Already, they have taken the wheat board away from the department of agriculture. We used to have one minister who did a remarkable job. We had one of the greatest ministers of agriculture Canada ever had. The Liberals are admitting that they cannot handle these problems, so they take the wheat board away from the Minister of Agriculture. Then, they will split the remainder of the responsibilities in half. I understand, too, that they are supposed to set up another cabinet minister to deal with Saskatchewan. Then, there is supposed to be another committee. What are we going to have, Mr. Speaker? Who is supposed to be charged with these responsibilities? To whom do I go in the event that there are problems?—and there will be many agricultural problems, according to evidence already produced.

One of the first acts of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) was to reduce the price support on whole milk. I saw an article in the Ottawa Citizen of May 22 entitled, "Bread price rise may follow milk." It reads:

> Rising prices of powdered milk across Canada could lead to higher prices for bread, dairy industry spokesmen say . . .
>
> The milk powder increases were sparked by the removal of a federal government subsidy to farmers of 25 cents for 100 pounds of whole milk.

To whom do I go with a problem like that? Already, it is evident that we cannot get answers. It is evident that there will be problems, and to whom do we go? A strange new animal is going to make its appearance here, something with two heads. The other day the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau) asked a question of the minister. What kind of answer did he get? He was informed that the new plan for the Department of Agriculture would save the treasury some $6 million. This is the first aim, to save the treasury money and forget about the farmers. They want to forget about the farmers, whether they are from the east or the west. Perhaps this is what the Prime Minister meant when he spoke in New Brunswick and said they were not going to spend a single nickel. Is this what he was referring to, that they were not going to cut off all grants?

We had the acreage payment, and what do we get? There was a promise of $2 per bushel for wheat. Apparently, however, this does not have the priority to be included within the 60 days of decision. When will it be included, Mr. Speaker, if ever? What are we supposed to do? Are we to wait until just before another election, only to find they will use that same old bribe? I can remember the years when they pitted the east against the west. During the last five or six years, we have been able to smooth this over. In other words, we have put the farmers in a position where for once they have had a fair share of attention given to them. The Liberals are putting us right back into that old position. They are doing this because they have only one thing in mind, to hang on to power. Since Saskatchewan did not give them any representatives, they will go in a roundabout way to see what they can do to get a few members from that area. May I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that they have a lot to learn.

The other day they sent an invitation to one of our more illustrious members, the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale (Mr. Rapp), to sit on their side of the house. I can assure them he will teach them plenty. He has done a terrific job in bringing to the government's attention the needs of his constituency. I can assure the Liberals that if they would take the time to read some of the literature that has been published, such as the brief put out by the farmers' union, they would learn something. They offer us nothing but two heads for agriculture. The farmers had better be satisfied with that.

We are told the government will establish a ministry of industry which is supposed to solve the problems of industry. What will it do for my constituency? I have already pointed out the potentials existing in my area. We have mines, we have timber, we have water, we have good farmland and we have the people. If the government just deals with the areas of chronic unemployment, they will just deal with Toronto. They will deal with the cities because those are the areas in which chronic unemployment is evident. Will they concern themselves with other areas? Will they try to boost the economy of other areas? They will not, because that does not have priority. The Prime Minister has said that the best way to prosperity for farmers throughout the country is through the expansion of markets at home and abroad. Is it any wonder that he needs two ministers of agriculture? I think he will keep one at home and he will send the other one on a trip. I suggest that if he is going to send any minister of agriculture on a trip, he should send the present one, because obviously we have not had an indication from this minister that there will be $2 wheat or that there will be an increase in the initial price of oats and barley, or other legislation. The only indication we have received is that there will be an expansion of the Department of Agriculture. We are going to have more ministers, more secretaries and so on. This is supposed to solve the unemployment problem.

One of the things that was evident under the former administration was that the western farmers were getting their fair share of attention. One of the things that was evident was the amount of machinery the farmers were beginning to buy. I found over the last couple of years that the farmers were not grumbling as they had under the Liberal government. We managed to get them into a position where they received their share of attention. They were not unhappy over the fact the maritimes got its share of attention. They were not unhappy over the fact that eastern Canada got its share of attention. They were happy over the fact that for once they were getting their share of attention.

There was an article in the Winnipeg Tribune dated February 22, 1963 entitled "Western prosperity", and it read:

> One of the indicators of relative farm prosperity is the statistics of farm implement sales. When farm income rises it is followed immediately by an increase in the consumption of goods of all kinds, particularly farm machinery.
>
> According to figures released by the dominion bureau of statistics, sales of farm implements and equipment in 1962 were valued at wholesale prices as an estimated $279,019,000 or an increase over 1961 of 15.6 per cent...
>
> There could hardly be a more concrete confirmation of the general proposition that the government's agricultural policies have benefited western Canada.

I should like the new government to take note of that because any time the western farmer gets his fair share of attention and is prosperous, that money will be channelled back into the east. We have been trying to remind the Liberals of this fact. Every time there is any indication the farmer might have a good crop, the agents will be on his doorstep to see what they can sell him. The farmer will buy just as he has in the past. This government should take note of that fact. Instead of running around setting up all kinds of ministers, I think they should get down to the basic problem of trying to put more money into the hands of the farmers. They should forget about playing politics and give the farmers the acreage payments, even if we did introduce them.

It is an odd thing, Mr. Speaker, but when we ask questions of the minister we do not get any replies. I cannot blame him if he does not have all the answers because this is a difficult department to administer and no doubt it is difficult for him to know all the answers. It is difficult to know all the answers, and we will not hold him to that. But here is one of the pamphlets put out by the Liberal party dealing with today's problems where they answer these problems. When will we get the answers? Do we have to wait for another throne speech to get some of the answers? We will never get them from this government.

What is going to happen if the decision of one minister on one course of action disagrees with the decision of the other minister? What are they going to do? Are they going to look around to see who gets more votes, or which has the biggest voting potential east or west. What about the maritimes? What about the people of British Columbia, the fruit producers? Mr. Speaker, I do not know how long I have been on my feet.

Some hon. Members: Too long.

Mr. Korchinski: Too long for the Liberals, they tell me.

An hon. Member: Too long for the gallery, too.

Mr. Korchinski: I think one of the things for which this throne speech will be noted is its omissions. I have plenty of pamphlets which I have picked up on the way. The Liberals had candidates all over the place, and they really concentrated on the western areas, mine being one of them. They offered everything. There was our program for the north, which the Prime Minister called a program of building roads from igloo to igloo. He has not mentioned anything about that in the speech from the throne. He is going to ignore that part of the country because there are not too many votes to be garnered there. They are not too concerned about that part of Canada. Do they think they will look after unemployment that way? One of their candidates said they were going to do something about roads to resources and roads to the north. What kind of a position does this put the candidates in from those areas? I am sure they must be somewhat ashamed of the manner in which the Liberal party is acting today in connection with those very things.

I have the pamphlets here. How can these candidates stand for the very things they thought their party leader would do for them? How can they answer these charges? They cannot, because it is impossible to do so. The Liberal party just does not do anything, period. That is exactly what they have been noted for in the past. This has been their theme for years. They will offer a little carrot here and perhaps talk about these things. Biculturalism is a wonderful thing. I think I have almost as many people in my constituency from different countries and of different nationalities as any hon. member. I think these people are interested in living together, because they have proved in the past that they can live together. But the Liberal party at election times just offers a little carrot here and there in order to get votes.

What about the scholarships which they promised? If this is supposed to solve part of the unemployment problem, why is there no mention of scholarships? They ignore that. Perhaps we will hear about scholarships before the next election. According to the speech from the throne one of the greatest problems in Canada today is unemployment. If unemployment is one of the greatest problems—and I assure the house that it is a problem—why are there not two ministers of labour? Why did they ignore labour in this respect? If they think that agriculture needs the attention of two ministers, why not appoint two ministers to deal with the problems of labour? It seems to me the only reason they are trying to give agriculture that type of attention is because they were sadly lacking in votes in agriculture areas. If so many people are suffering as the result of unemployment, I suggest to the Prime Minister that instead of filling his cabinet with unnecessary members he should appoint two ministers of labour, one for employment and one for unemployment, if he wishes.

Mr. Macdonald: It would be Tory unemployment.

Mr. Korchinski: I think that department could be improved, if he wishes, and I think there might be room for more people working within that department to see if we cannot solve this problem. It is a problem, I assure the house. I am sure that everybody in this house would like to see the day when we would have no unemployment. It does not matter where we sit, whether we are members of the official opposition, the other opposition parties, or the government, I am sure this is first and foremost in our minds. But what do they do? They make it appear to the country that agriculture is sadly lacking in solutions. They make it appear that we need to have two ministers of agriculture, and at the same time they admit to having no solutions for these problems. They have none of the bold action about which they spoke. Where is the boldness now? They just tiptoe through the tulips; that is what they are doing. They are walking in darkness, because they haven't a clue. They had television and the newspapers on their side, and they had the money, and they sold ideas which were not exactly according to the facts.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret that I must interrupt the hon. gentleman and inform him that his time has expired.

Mr. Jack Davis (Coast-Capilano): Mr. Deputy Speaker, like others before me I should like to congratulate you upon election to your high office, and through you I should like to extend my congratulations to the Speaker. I know that both of you will show the ability, integrity and impartiality of your high office in administering the affairs of this house.

The leader of the Social Credit party decried the fact that we talk politics in this House of Commons. This is the place where we should talk politics. But we should at least be agreed, not only upon our Speaker and his impartiality but upon many of the facts which are often in dispute. Among these I would include facts as to economic realities. The speech from the throne contains the proposal that this parliament pass legislation with respect to a national economic council. We need a national economic council in this country in order to determine what the current trends are. The council may make forecasts of various kinds, but these forecasts are merely an indication of what basic, underlying trends and forces are currently at work in our economy.

This national economic council must not be a secretive body. It must work with agencies, particularly economic research groups, representatives of management and representatives of trade unions. It must communicate freely and frequently with them. I would argue that it should be staffed in large part by men who are seconded for relatively short periods of time from management and labour. In that way the government would certainly be better informed, and industry, management and labour would know to a much greater extent where we are going. If where we are going does not satisfy management, industry and labour, then we obviously have to change things. But at least these trends will be clearly mapped out. We will not be arguing much about what has happened in the distant past or what is happening currently, but more about where we should be going and what should be done with respect to redirecting our economy in ways we think are most desirable.

In other words, we should be arguing more about long term goals and objectives, more about policy, more about politics in the sense of the fundamental shape of the Canadian economy and our nation in the years to come.

Mr. Woolliams: It is pretty good now.

Mr. Davis: We need long term forecasting and long term planning, because at the moment we are looking ahead essentially a year at a time. Our annual budgets merely look ahead one year, but many investments made by individuals and industry are in assets, buildings and equipment which will last, not five or ten years, but 25, 50 years or even a century.

In order to make decisions intelligently we must be looking ahead not just one year but much further into the future, and the national economic development council will help us to do just that. It will remove a lot of uncertainties. Government will not be introducing policies and legislation whose provisions conflict with each other. Industries and individuals throughout this country will know better where they are going and what alternatives are open to them. They will be able to make their own decisions and invest in the light of the best possible information.

Also in the speech from the throne is a proposal for the setting up of a new department of industry. We have had traditionally in this country a Department of Trade and Commerce nominally, at least, concerned with international trade. More recently we have had a Department of Defence Production concerned primarily with buying munitions of war for our armed forces. But many of the decisions taken by these departments have influenced industry in this country. The setting up of a new department of industry will enable us to deal more directly and more frankly with industrial development in Canada.

The Glassco commission recommended the establishment of a purchasing department incorporating the Department of Defence Production. The new department of industry will be more than that. It will be a department whose actions, contracts and placement of requirements will influence industry to an undoubted extent, but within an over-all framework of flexible targets and long term objectives.

Economic research is one thing, but in addition to economic research we should do a great deal more scientific and basic research. We do not do much of the latter at the present time. The new department of industry will help to stimulate scientific and industrial research. It could do so in various ways, through tax incentives and so on. I personally think we would be well advised to make Canada a tax haven in respect of research and development of various kinds. We should define research broadly and should free from the imposition of income tax the results of research, particularly royalties and revenues from the sale of what are essentially ideas. This would not only encourage the development of new industries in this country but it would cause some large international corporations, which so far have been very shy about carrying out any research here, to do so in the future.

Think of what this would mean in terms of employment for scientifically trained people, particularly for our youth. This is an area in which we have little to lose because at the present time we do not gain much from these activities. This is the type of activity which I sincerely hope the new department will encourage as part of a comprehensive program of revitalizing our country and increasing the opportunities of ownership in industry in Canada. I mention ownership because ownership generally follows ideas. The people who create new ideas are generally on the inside track. It is where research is done and where management is aware of the opportunities offered by scientific research that one finds opportunities to hold the equity control of new companies. I think this is important for Canada's future, particularly as the trend for many years now has been toward increased foreign ownership. This is one of the more positive and more liberal ways of increasing Canadian ownership in Canadian industry.

The new department of industry will have under its jurisdiction the national development corporation. This corporation will provide funds for the creation of certain new industries in circumstances where private enterprise does not, at least as yet, see its way clear to establish industries without substantial subsidy. I can think of various projects which I, personally, would like to see launched and I am sure every other hon. member has other projects in mind which he considers are on the verge of being economic propositions. Some of these could be accelerated if the government got into the picture at an early stage. One scheme which I have been pushing for years concerns the processing of uranium in this country to convert it into forms which are useable overseas in a variety of applications—power plants, submarines, cargo ships and so on. At present we only produce raw natural uranium. We should be able to convert it into a more saleable form. Today, we are unable to sell a large part of our uranium production in its natural state. We would have to sell it to the United States atomic energy commission, and that commission is following a policy of making the United States self-sufficient in respect of uranium supplies. In other words, we cannot sell to the United States and we cannot process the product here.

I am not advocating the creation of large numbers of crown corporations one after the other. I think they might well be created at times but, surely, relatively low cost money is a sufficient advantage. It must be remembered that the majority of these corporations operate free of taxes in various respects and, certainly, free of income tax. Thus they enjoy a great advantage over the private sector of the economy.

If we go on in this way, if we continue this immense financial bias in the creation of crown companies we shall eventually arrive at the creation of a socialistic state north of the international boundary. I think we should develop a mechanism for selling off these crown corporations. This has been done in other parts of the world. West Germany, for example, sold the Volkswagen factory in such a way that the people were able to participate in its ownership. Shares were distributed in various areas in Germany and a tax incentive is still provided, all of which has ensured that the company is largely in the hands of West German nationals. I think we could devise ways in Canada of getting government out of business as well as into business, as well as ways of creating Canadian ownership and retaining ownership in this country. This is essential, and we need effective arrangements of this kind if, in fact, we are going to buy back a substantial amount of the ownership of industry within this great nation of ours.

I must insist on this: in order to grow we must also change, and in the process of change certain industries are bound eventually to decline; they must make way for newer and more vital industries. In speeches in our chambers of commerce the emphasis has always been on growth—on the growing industries rather than on the declining industries, those which have to receive government support in the form of subsidies and so on. Provision has been made for tremendous subsidies to the coal mining industry, for example. At the other extreme we are subsidizing nuclear power, which is not yet an economic proposition. At the same time we are heavily taxing the truly economic industries of oil and gas and, to a lesser extent, hydroelectric power. This is not the way to improve the economy of the country unless, taking the long view, we are consciously allowing the old and less economic industries to die. One of the best ways of letting them die is to leave them in the private sector.

I believe we need more economic information, particularly economic information of a long term, fundamental type. But we must leave the policy-making essentially to the politicians, in other words to the members of this chamber, and have those policies debated in this chamber. We do need planning, but we do not have to be set inevitably on a course towards a collectivist state. I am a small "l" liberal. But I am also a big "L" Liberal in that I believe that at this time we have in the Liberal party the most effective team for bringing about a true nation with a true national identity and the maximum freedom for the individual in this country. I do not believe in buying the voter with his own taxes. I do not believe in running a continuous deficit in our budgets, because I believe that this is merely postponing to the future the shouldering of an immense financial burden. I believe it is merely confusing the individual Canadians of this country as to the course of events, if we do not lay long term policies before them but are merely borrowing on tomorrow and paying them subsidies and supports of one kind or another. In that way we are plunging inevitably toward some sort of collectivist state, and that is the main reason why I had no confidence in the Conservative party last year during the twenty fifth parliament.

We also have a tremendous deficit in our international balance of payments, a state of affairs which has existed for a number of years. This amounted to a substantial sum in the early fifties and it has continued in the last half dozen years. This, put in the most summary terms, means that we have been living beyond our means, that we have been borrowing from others. We have been able to borrow only because we mortgaged the resources and the ownership of industry in this country. We must not confuse the people any more. We must indicate, first, through long term economic projections, and then through distasteful policies, if necessary, what the alternatives are and what course we must follow if we are not only to balance our own budget internally but also to balance the budget we have with other countries, so as to buy back our inheritance and be independent, and really achieve this true north, strong and free.

The basic burden of my remarks this afternoon is essentially this. We need to look ahead. We need to go forward in the sense of knowing a little more what is happening, what the fundamental forces at work today are, and where we are going if we do not consciously change course and set our sails toward the objective which we all agree is desirable. We need good communications, and good communications mean at least a national economic council and a department of industry which will carry out a number of tasks which industry needs to perform, including industrial research and development. The speech from the throne was only the beginning, but I believe we have started on our way. I believe we are beginning to raise our eyes and look ahead, and for this reason, Mr. Speaker, I trust we will find tonight a majority in this house in support of the government.

(Translation):

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate you upon your appointment as chairman of the committees of the whole. I am sure that your colleagues are confident that you will carry out these high functions to the satisfaction of all.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker, I would particularly extend my congratulations, and perhaps my commiserations, through you to my esteemed successor in the chair you now occupy. I must say that to anyone in this house who has been elected Speaker, who has been elected by his peers to be the first among them within this house, it is indeed an honour and a great responsibility. I am sure you will convey to the hon. member for Mount Royal, our present Speaker, my most sincere congratulations and best wishes. I am sure he is going to find the position both interesting and challenging, and not without its moments of excitement.

I would also wish at the beginning of these few remarks this afternoon to extend my congratulations to the hon. member for Northumberland (Miss Jewett) as the mover of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. I was particularly struck by the calm deliberation and rather spontaneous fluency with which she delivered her first speech in this house. As you know, Mr. Speaker, sometimes on these rather awe-inspiring occasions, such as one's first speech in the house, there is a tendency slavishly to follow a script, of course under the benign blind eye of Mr. Speaker. But here we did not have this, and while I must say that she did a very commendable job in moving the address in reply, I wish there had been rather more in the speech from the throne and then I think she could have done a better job.

(Translation):

I also wish to congratulate the hon. member for Lotbiniere (Mr. Choquette) on the manner he performed his task of seconding the address in reply to the speech from the throne. I had the opportunity to visit his riding as the guest of his illustrious predecessor, the Hon. Raymond O'Hurley, who is one of my good friends. I therefore know that he represents a fine riding where the people are most kind.

(Text):

I should like to raise a little point here which might interest the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill). After all, we heard in the last speech some remarks by the parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister (Mr. Davis). I recall on a previous occasion a former parliamentary secretary to the then prime minister express, shall we say, some ideas of his own, and he was accused of flying a kite. It is quite a responsibility for a parliamentary secretary to enunciate policy. This is a very neat point and I think the Secretary of State will remember the occasion. We have now heard the hon. member for Coast-Capilano indicate that he favours —and I wonder whether the government favours—the disposition or the disposal of crown corporations. This is a very important point, and I am wondering whether in this instance he is enunciating policy, or is he flying a kite for the government? He expressed ideas about many other things. I think perhaps he was expressing those ideas as his own, but I may say that in the position he now occupies he may go behind the curtain and listen to some advice from the Secretary of State.

I do not want to deliver a lecture to an hon. gentleman who was a colleague of mine at Oxford some years ago and whom I know as a man of whom Canada can be very proud. I think he is one of that post-war generation of young men who, in the family of Rhodes scholars—and here I excuse myself since I belong to them—have contributed a great deal to the public life of this country. I certainly welcome him and all those in this house who belong to that fraternity, if I may so describe it.

Before I turn to the speech from the throne I should like to acknowledge the support I have received from my constituency of Edmonton West.

Hon. members may not realize this. After all the press on numerous occasions has indicated, and not only the press but people who have some lack of knowledge about western Canada, that western Canada is composed only of rural constituencies and that the members on this side of the house who adhere to the Conservative party represent only agrarian constituencies. That is far from the case.

It may be of interest to the house to know that the constituency I represent is either the seventh or eighth most populous in the country, and is closely followed by two constituencies in Calgary and another in Edmonton-Strathcona. As a matter of fact, the three Edmonton constituencies are just as urban as almost any other in the country. Therefore, the fact that the three Edmonton constituencies are represented by members of the Progressive Conservative party, together with two constituencies in Calgary—and we were not too far off making a clean sweep in Calgary —would show it is inaccurate to state that it was only the farmers of western Canada who supported the Conservative party. Western Canada as a whole did that.

It may be, as someone has said, that some of the eastern dailies did not get out there. Certainly they did not have many people out there to survey the scene and, if I may introduce a personal note, those who did come, as in 1962, in 1963 said I was one of those people earmarked for sure defeat by some prime candidate of the Liberal party. I think these commentators, when they came out west, used to go into Calgary. I do not know what form of ouija board they consulted, but they always forecast that I was going to be the loser. The people of Edmonton West did not share that opinion.

As a matter of fact this time not only did the Liberals send in a lot of party bigwigs— I think we had the visitations of even the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill), the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin), the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) and a few others—but we also had what I would consider the biggest flood of eastern Liberal money the west has ever seen. We all know the money had to be raised elsewhere because they were not raising it locally; but the net result was that my majority this time was doubled, and all the majorities of my colleagues in and about Edmonton were also increased. So, I say, let them send all the money they want and let them send the same people to visit the west and we are assured of being re-elected again.

The hon. member for Northumberland would have been far more effective if she had been supporting the type of speech which we had been led to expect, by the beating of bands and the sounding of trumpets prior to the opening of parliament. We were led to believe that this was going to be the speech of all speeches, that this was going to be the program that was to be the ultimate of all programs. The economy of Canada was to be got going again. Well, Mr. Speaker, how can you get something going unless it had been previously stopped? I am sure there is not one hon. member opposite who will dare support the proposition that Canada's economy had slowed down to the point that it was almost stopped, because statistics—any kind at which they want to look—will absolutely refute that assertion.

I seem to recall that in 1962 the members of the opposition, and those people who supported them in the press, were forecasting a dire future for Canada. In May and June of 1962 they said we were going completely to the dogs, that our trade was going to be wiped away and we were heading for depression—mind you, not recession but depression. They also said the cost of living was going to zoom upwards. They did not mention that once in 1963.

We can look at the record in trade. I shall not give the figures because they have all been put on the record in the last few days. However, I shall refer to them briefly. It seems to me the Liberal party has suddenly discovered that Canada has got a deficit on its balance of international payments, but I ask when did Canada not have one? They seem to think this is a recent discovery, but I would point out in the matter of commodity trade, tremendous strides had been made, not by the former government but under the aegis of the government. They were made by Canadian business, by Canadian businessmen who did not believe those opposition forebodings of last year. Instead they went out and beat all records. The same is true of heavy industry which went out and beat the records of previous years. People in heavy industry did not believe the Liberal party, the New Democratic party or the Social Credit party. This in itself is a tribute to Canadian businessmen and industry.

Our industrial program has kept pace all the way along in 1963. If there was going to be a recession, 1962 was a flash in the pan. Steel and automobile production are up, and let me assure hon. gentlemen on the other side that the sales of automobiles back in January, February and March long predated any question that Liberals would form a minority administration. Record sales of automobiles are not a May wonder of 1963.

In addition, the cost of living has maintained an even keel, with a very minor advance, again showing that the forecasts, estimates and guesstimates of those experts, or so-called experts, of 1962 were very wrong.

What do they mean by "getting the economy going again"? I think it is just a mere slogan, something that has been borrowed from some other book. This was a catch phrase on another occasion, so let us not hear any more about getting the economy rolling or going again. Let them maintain the momentum. Then we will listen to government spokesmen; but let us not hear any more about getting it rolling again. Maintain the momentum and let it go forward.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. Lambert: Certainly.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does the hon. gentleman not think it would be a good idea to get the half million unemployed, that we inherited as a legacy from hon. gentlemen opposite, going again at work?

Mr. Lambert: The hon. gentleman must have some form of telepathy because I was just coming to deal with the question of unemployment and those measures which seem to be proposed. When one looks at the question of unemployment he needs to cast his mind back to 1956 and 1957, when an industrial slow-down was approaching. It was certainly there then. It did not come as an event of July, 1957. It was already well on its way. Be that as it may, unfortunately at the present time there are some 462,000 unemployed in the whole of Canada. This is not to say that there is the same saturation of unemployment throughout all regions. The hon. member for Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Sauve) yesterday indicated, with I think the appropriate emphasis, and this a point that is quite forgotten, that unfortunately unemployment is much heavier in certain regions of Canada than it is in others, and that it has been chronically so. I have here an extract from Le Devoir of the other day commenting upon the latest release of the dominion bureau of statistics. This is the headline:

(Translation):

Le Devoir

Quebec has 40 per cent of the unemployed.

Mr. Pickersgill: Of the country?

Mr. Lambert: Of the country.

(Text):

That is not in the headline. But the point that the hon. member indicated is so. Even in 1956 Quebec unfortunately counted between 35 and 40 per cent of the unemployed. It has been consistently so. There is much heavier unemployment in the maritime provinces. Certainly in the area from which I come we have some unemployment, but the percentage is down to 4.4 and this article says that in the eyes of certain economists that is equivalent to full employment. But you must remember that when you talk about the total of unemployment or certain areas of unemployment you do not speak of the whole of the country. We have been particularly blessed in the past few years with a booming economy and advance.

Some hon. Members: Social Credit.

Mr. Lambert: Hon. members say "Social Credit". I would say no. It is because of oil put there by divine Providence; and there are many other things. The province of Manitoba is in good condition too, but the province of Saskatchewan is not in as good condition as Alberta or Manitoba. The point is that we must not forget that the question of unemployment is not necessarily a national problem, with the same degree of intensity throughout the country. Therefore certain steps have to be taken.

I note in the speech from the throne that the government is going to expand vocational and technical training. This is really the only immediate step they are considering. What are they doing but continuing the program inaugurated by the Conservative government some two years ago? I would say to the hon. member for Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Sauve) as I would say to his colleagues from the province of Quebec that it is indeed unfortunate—I will not go into the reasons why—that in that province they have not seen fit or have not been able to avail themselves of these facilities to the same degree as other regions of Canada have.

(Translation):

Some grants have been given to Ontario. Comparing the situation in Quebec and in Ontario, one of the ministers from Quebec said the other day that Quebec was entitled to so many million dollars under the technical training assistance program.

Are you aware of the fact that in my own county of Edmonton West we received more than $16 million in grants, while during the same period the province of Quebec was getting only $13 million? In that county we have paved the way to these grants, and as from next September, our students will be able to enroll in those schools.

I do not share my colleague's viewpoint. I do not believe that we should be giving grants all the time and indiscriminately. It is up to them to come and get those grants if they want to go ahead.

So, why complain?

Why those recriminations against the province of Ontario and western Canada? We wish to avoid disputes between regions. The assistance plan was available; it was up to them to try to share in it; they should have come into it to a greater extent.

(Text):

Now we come to another item, the municipal development and loan board. As has been indicated by other hon. members, I am wondering just what consultation has taken place with the provinces in regard to this program.

Mr. Grafftey: None.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to anticipate the debate on item No. 2 under government orders on today's order paper but there is some elaboration of this point in the resolution found there which contains these words:

> —to enable municipalities to augment or accelerate their capital works programs subject to the approval of the provinces concerned.

Just what consultation has been held with the provinces in this regard? There always has been agreement between the federal government and the provinces in these matters. There always has to be a program and there has to be agreement between the provinces and the federal government before any part of the program can be put into effect. If hon. members will consult the legislation I think they will see that a municipality may come before the board to borrow. Will that borrowing have to be within the limits on borrowing set by the provincial municipal board or equivalent body? What control will there be by that provincial authority? After all, the municipalities are creations of the provinces. What control on borrowings will there be if a municipality can come to the federal government and get either grants or loans for such works? This is something that we would like to know. It will be most interesting to discover what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) will disclose to us in this regard.

I was also intrigued by the other joint programs that have been announced in the light of the solemn undertaking by the Liberal party that they would be getting out of joint programs because there is a price that has to be paid for the collaboration of the province of Quebec, and so far as they were concerned this was it. Let us not also disregard the fact that there was an ultimatum served by the premier of the province of Quebec. I can go back to page 10 of Hansard of May 17 where the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), in reply to the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire), denied that this was so and said:

> —I am aware of no ultimatum from the province of Quebec on any subject.

Yet we read in today's La Presse a report of a press conference with the premier of the province of Quebec in which he said that his speech was very definitely an ultimatum to the federal government. So what have they done in regard to this matter?

Mr. Woolliams: I wonder what other members from other parts of Canada think?

Mr. Lambert: As the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams) says, what do the other provinces say about these arrangements? What do other hon. members of this house have to say with regard to such treatment?

Then we come to another measure, the Canada development corporation proposed in the speech from the throne for the purpose of increasing Canadian ownership of industry. How is this going to be achieved? As was pointed out the other day by a financial writer, in order to have a change of ownership there must be consent. If there is at present foreign ownership of certain Canadian industries then you must have the consent of the present owners unless there is going to be expropriation or confiscation.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if the hon. gentleman would permit me to interrupt for one second to clear up one point, because this might be very deleterious to Canada. There is no thought whatsoever of any powers of expropriation in connection with this legislation.

Mr. Lambert: Well, I am glad the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) has clarified the legislation before it comes to us. However, I am still raising this question. It is a question in the minds of a lot of people.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is why I wanted to remove it.

Mr. Lambert: All right, then; we have the Secretary of State disclosing particulars of a certain bill before it reaches us.

There are a lot of other things about which I should like to speak.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, I would say a few words about our dual culture in Canada and the commission which the government proposes to set up in order to study the problem. I trust, as the hon. member for Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Sauve) already said, and as some newspapers have pointed out, that this commission will not become a haven for the protégés of the Liberal party.

I would like the French members of that commission not to be recruited in the province of Quebec only, because I must say to hon. members that the French fact in Canada is not present in that province alone.

Indeed, the question of bilingualism does not only interest the province of Quebec, or the English or French speaking citizens. I am somewhat astonished that people seem to limit the problem of bilingualism to eastern Canada. But, gentlemen, what are you going to do with those citizens that are of Ukrainian or German extraction, if they live in western Canada and who are much more numerous than their French speaking fellow citizens? They cannot be ignored. They are living in Canada, they are Canadian citizens. Consequently, they may not be ignored. I think that an error is being committed when speaking merely of an investigation to settle certain problems that arise between the French and English elements.

But this is not all. Certainly, this is a problem which must be settled, but it does not only arise between French speaking and English speaking Canadians, because Canadian citizens of Ukrainian origin or of German origin also have a culture of their own.

I, therefore, urge hon. members from the province of Quebec to visit western Canada and to meet our fellow citizens of German and Ukrainian origin out there, instead of going to Florida, to Atlantic City or New York, as they are now doing. They should come and visit our beautiful part of the country, using the trans-Canada highway or travelling by the Canadian National or the Canadian Pacific Railways or even trans-Canada airways.

Hon. members from the province of Quebec, come and see us. You will be most welcome and you will indirectly help to alleviate the burden of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) because you will contribute to a reduction of the deficit situation of the tourist industry. Spend your money in Canada. Go visit western Canada and discover what Canada and the Canadian people mean.

Besides, you could not make any such discovery in the papers, because there is a total lack of communication and co-operation between them. As a matter of fact you can read all the Montreal or Quebec city papers you want, you will find no report on western Canada unless it involves some scandal, some murder, or some serious highway accident. Except for those spectacular news items, nothing is ever said about western Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is with regret that I must advise the hon. member that his time is up.

(Text):

Mr. D. G. Hahn (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I should like first to follow the traditions and customs of this house by extending to you my congratulations on your appointment to the position of responsibility you now have. The unanimous nature in which this appointment was approved by the house, I think, bears adequate testimony to your ability to discharge these responsibilities. I should like also to congratulate the hon. member for Northumberland (Miss Jewett) and the hon. member for Lotbiniere (Mr. Choquette) upon the manner in which they have moved and seconded the address in reply to the speech from the throne. The standards they have set make it difficult for those of us who follow.

I stand here in this assembly making my maiden speech, and I confess to the usual amount of nervousness that most new members must feel. However, I also confess to a feeling of pride. I, like everybody here, am proud to be a Canadian. As a Canadian, I am particularly proud to be able to stand in this house, the greatest of our Canadian institutions, and represent the people of my constituency. As a member of this institution, I am proud that I am standing on this side of the house supporting the new Liberal government, for I strongly feel that this government will be a great government.

As a new member, Mr. Speaker, I come to this house with a certain amount of idealism about it, with a certain amount of respect for the institution. I know that the last session of parliament has been discussed by many who felt it was not up to the mark. Since I have been here I have heard comments, particularly from some hon. members on the other side of the house, concerning the failures, and the causes of the failures of the last parliament. I have heard suggestions given, primarily to us on the government side, about what might be done to rectify the situation. Perhaps it is impertinent for me, as a new member, to discuss these things, but having sat here and listened to the things that have been said I feel, first of all, that I cannot help agreeing with many of the things that have been said from the other side of the house.

However, it seems to me that some things have been left unsaid. As I have said previously, we have a responsibility to recognize the rights of minority parties, to recognize the importance of parliament. However, I believe hon. gentlemen opposite must realize there are two sides to the question. There are two sides to this house. They, too, have a responsibility. They have the responsibility to conduct their opposition vigorously and to the best of their ability; but I think that all of us must bear in mind that we are here, not to continue the last election campaign but to conduct the nation's business. I think that if members on both sides of the house will recognize this, then, at the end of our first session, we new members will have kept our respect and idealism.

May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Hahn: Mr. Speaker, before the recess I had completed my introductions and would now like to move on to the main points which I should like to discuss. My riding is Broadview, which is a downtown Toronto riding. Most of the people in my riding depend either directly or indirectly on industry for their livelihood. To my constituents unemployment is a very real, critical problem. Throughout the campaign and since, many, many people have come to me with the problem of finding a job. There is not much point talking to these people about the booming conditions in our economy because to them it does not mean very much. While the figures that have been cited in this house do indicate that we have made progress in the last year, we still have not solved this most critical of problems. So that if I talk of boom to my people, they talk to me about jobs.

We all know that unemployment is probably the worst blight on our society. We all know what unemployment does to the self-esteem of a man who wants to work but who is rejected time after time. We know we cannot let this continue. We also know that while we have unemployment we cannot do many of the other things that we want to do for our people. There is no magic wand. Our economy cannot support advanced social measures while it is supporting a large number of people who should be working. It is imperative that this problem be recognized, that it be tackled and tackled effectively. I believe, from the measures I have seen in the speech from the throne, that our government is going to do just that.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to outline the basis of the problem as I see it and then show what I think we can do about it. First of all, where do the jobs come from? Over the next few years we have to find large numbers of new jobs each year. Where do we find them? I think we also know that most jobs must come from industry. Therefore if we are going to create new jobs, this is the area to which we must look. We know that in order to expand our industry we have to produce some of the things that we are now consuming but which we are bringing in from outside our country. We also know that probably one fifth of our jobs depend on exports. Therefore as our jobs must grow, so must we increase our exports.

How are we equipped now to do that job? What is the condition of our industry? I think we all know that you can sell a product either because it is cheap and competitively priced, or because it is of a unique design that nobody else has. These are the two criteria upon which you can make sales.

In Canada our manufacturers are generally producing for the Canadian market, a market of 18 million people. This is a low volume. Yet our wage structure is high in relation to our European competitors, and it is close to that of our competitor to the south. We therefore have a situation of relatively high wage costs and low volumes of production. The two together mean that our costs are high.

What about our ability to design our own products and produce unique designs? We are not doing it, by and large, because most of our companies are either subsidiaries of foreign concerns, using the design of their parent concern outside this country, or they are Canadian concerns that are buying its research and development through licensing agreements with foreign concerns. We in this country are not producing our own unique designs. So that we do not have either low cost or unique design.

If I may cite an example from my own experience, we were producing home laundry equipment. This was a product designed in the United States and we were working under a licensing agreement. In Canada we produced in one year what the United States concern produced in five days. How could we hope to take a carbon copy of their product and try and compete with them in export markets? This was an impossibility.

My predecessor from Broadview, the former minister of trade and commerce, was very active in trying to stimulate exports. I believe that the principles upon which his trade drives were based were sound, but I also feel that somehow the cart got ahead of the horse. We had built up a sales force and were trying to sell before we had products to put on the market, and before we had negotiated the necessary trade agreements so that we did have a market. These are difficult problems to solve, and anybody who claims he can solve them overnight or in 60 days is not basing his claim on realism.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Woolliams: That's for sure.

Mr. Hahn: But there is a vast difference between solving a problem and admitting that it exists and taking the action necessary to tackle it. And that is what we are doing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hahn: I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the measures outlined in the speech from the throne will start the action necessary to effect the cures that we must have. I should like to look briefly at some of these measures. First of all, it has been said in this house that we have proposed nothing that will put people to work quickly. Well, I dispute that. The municipal loan fund is to me our shot in the arm, our shock treatment. It can and will put people to work quickly. That is one of its purposes. The type of things that will be done under this program are projects that can be implemented and put into effect quite quickly. So that through the municipal loan fund we should be able to take up the slack, to put people to work, to get them to work in a hurry.

We also know that this is no long term cure. We know this will not solve the problem, because we know we must also increase our industry. This is why we are suggesting that we set up a department of industry. The department of industry will have the responsibility of solving what I call the technical problems that face us. It will have to tackle the problem of our high costs; it will have to tackle the problem of research and development in this country. It must also bring together management and labour so that instead of these two groups battling each other and treating each other with suspicion, as they have in the past, they will work together, realizing that their enemy is not each other but that they must join together and battle the common enemy of world competition around us.

We in Canada have the ability, the technical knowledge and the skill to do well in the area of research. I have only to point to the number of Beavers, Otters and Caribou flying around in the skies of the world to indicate what can be done by this country. While tax incentives may be one way of encouraging research they would be of little use, it seems to me, when a company would not realize the profit from its research work for a number of years, or in the case of a company without sufficient capital to launch a research project. I think some of the suggestions made by my hon. friend from Coast-Capilano (Mr. Davis) might be effective in dealing with this situation.

The new department of industry will have to look at the situation as our tariffs come down, and devise ways and means in which our industry can prepare itself to make an onslaught on world markets. This department could also produce some immediate short range benefits. During the election campaign the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) talked about what might be done in the automobile industry. The suggestions he had to make then could be applied in the case of many industries.

Let us take an example with which I am familiar, the home laundry equipment industry. We had a range of home laundry products consisting of 15 models with five different machine tops required for them. If we had received some direction from the government and knew our competitors were thinking along the same lines, we might have been able to reduce the volume of imported parts considerably by cutting down the number of our model lines to perhaps seven or eight models and the number of machine tops required to probably two. On this basis we would have had sufficient volume to justify tooling up for the production of these tops in Canada. It would have provided employment for the tool and die shops, additional work in our factory and, perhaps, sufficient work for a porcelain enamel plant. If the government could encourage industry to take action of this kind, results would be produced in short order.

The creation of a department of industry will not solve our problems though it will create a mechanism through which they can be solved. We know we must expand our trade. I believe we all recognize the work being done by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) to set up, with the western nations, proper trading areas for us. It is useless for us in this country to resist the trends that are taking place around the world. We must join those trends and derive the maximum benefit from them. This is what is being done now.

To do the things we have to do will require money. We would normally expect that industry would provide its own financing. However, through the Canadian development corporation we also have a means of providing funds when traditional methods fail. I hope this corporation will halt the sale of our industry to foreign countries. I hope it will begin the process of buying back industry which has already been sold. I hope that by this means more capital may be provided for risk ventures. I know a number of people who have had ideas for good products but they did not have the capital to develop them; they had to take their ideas to the United States and have them developed there. I think we should be able to provide the risk capital here when it is needed for projects of this nature.

If we are to compete successfully in foreign markets we must accept the most advanced technology available. We must not turn our backs on the difficulties caused by automation. We must face them and enjoy the benefits automation can bring us. In order to do this we must weigh the problems automation is likely to bring before they descend on us, and we have to plan, as we are planning now, for the retraining of those put out of work as a result of automation. Of course, there is little use training people unless we make sure we are training them in an occupation which is likely to be needed. There is little sense training bricklayers to be butchers when what one really needs is electricians. So when we talk about retraining we must also take steps to ensure we are training people for the right jobs.

I think the difficulties we now encounter have arisen because we did not adapt ourselves quickly enough to new conditions in the changing world around us. I think the formation of an economic council will serve to guard against our making a similar mistake in the future. I think this will be a means by which we can respond to technological changes before, rather than after, they hit us.

I believe the program we are undertaking now is practical and realistic. In these 60 days we are not going to cure all the problems which face us. We are going to begin the cure. During the election campaign we did not promise an instant cure for all the ills which beset the economy. What we did promise was that we would make the decisions necessary to effect a cure. We did promise to introduce realistic programs. We did promise to start on the road to a better future. I believe the measures contained in the speech from the throne indicate we have made that start.

Mr. Stuart A. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): My first words this session must be to offer you, Mr. Speaker, congratulations on your election to the high office you hold in this house and also, through you, to convey good wishes to the other officers of the house who will support you in the onerous responsibilities you are required to discharge.

I should like also to express my congratulations to the mover (Miss Jewett) and the seconder (Mr. Choquette) of the address in reply. They discharged their duties in a most felicitous fashion and, I have no doubt, in the weeks to come this house will hear more from them. I may not have found myself entirely in sympathy with some of the things they said, but I admire the fact that on their introduction to this house they said them so well and did not allow themselves to be dismayed by the nervousness which tends to affect us all when we speak first in this somewhat overwhelming atmosphere.

As to the speech from the throne itself, it is well known among us all, I suppose, that before a session opens members of parliament, regardless of where they sit, look forward to reading it with anticipation because it is there that they hope to find a foreshadowing of the march of events which will follow the opening of the session. We look for freshness of approach, for new ideas, a dynamic attitude to events. We hope to find these things. Yet, on examining this particular speech we found a borrowing of ideas rather than a freshness—the intention to reintroduce into this parliament legislation which was already before the Commons at the time of dissolution in February; to carry on programs which should, by now, be producing their benefits for the people of Canada but which did not take effect because the Liberal party chose not to proceed with them. Many of these items are constructive and will find a ready response on this side of the house from the members of my party. But we look for new ideas. We look for this freshness and dynamic force, and all we find are measures which should give us cause for apprehension and doubt rather than confidence. Because those very things which spokesmen for the government have been lauding and suggesting provide, if not the answers, at least the beginning of the answers, are the very things which I think the people of Canada should examine most carefully and wonder along what path the Liberal party is intending to take them, and see whether it may soon decide to announce itself, as it did not in the last election but may well in the next, as the liberal socialist party of Canada.

For a start, I will take the department of industry. We already have several departments of industry. We have the Department of Forestry, the Department of Fisheries, the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys and the Department of Trade and Commerce itself, each one of them specializing in the particular problems of particular industries and areas of industry in Canada. Each one of them is capable, through the specialized knowledge of the people working in them, who are available to them for advice and assistance, of providing this stimulus for industry in Canada which this new all-powerful, all-wise department of industry is supposed at some time in the future to provide. The continuing effective use of these particular departments dealing with our principal industries, our resources and our secondary industries is the requirement which is laid at the door of this government, not the proliferation of departmentalization. We have enough of bureaucracy now, without this addition. The effective utilization of the means which now exist is the demand we must make of this government. Very effective steps have been taken and very effective use has been made of the specialized knowledge in these various fields during these past five years. We ask for a continuation of what already has been accomplished and established, not by the creation of some other super-authority which is supposed to advise but cannot effectively utilize the tremendous diversity of knowledge spread through the various departments, and cannot meet satisfactorily the tremendous diversity of demands which must be made if there is going to be a continuing and effective development of industry in this country. This is one area where the result of this tentative step to relieve unemployment is simply the giving of more work to more administrators who will confuse the situation perhaps even more than it has ever been confused.

Now I move on to the imaginative concept of agriculture, which is to be divided between east and west. For some reason or other this is supposed to provide solutions to continuing or new problems which may arise in the field of agriculture, whereas in fact all that is being done is to fulfil an impulsive promise. The suggestion to split the Department of Agriculture into two segments must have been impulsive; it certainly could never have been well considered. In fact, the requirements of the department are for specialized branches of agriculture within the over-all agricultural industry of Canada. I can only suggest that if by creating an eastern ministry and a western ministry it is thought that this will smooth out any complications now existing, then the government should consider what can happen when they approach the problem of, let us say, the tree fruit industry in Canada. The Okanagan tree fruit industry would, I presume, come under the jurisdiction of the western minister, whose primary concern no doubt would be that of grain and beef cattle. The problems of the Okanagan tree fruit industry would be in all important particulars precisely the same as the problems of the industry in the Niagara peninsula and the Annapolis valley. So that we have the eastern minister trying to establish national policy on the basis of the problems presented to him in the Annapolis valley and Niagara peninsula regions, and the western minister endeavouring to establish national policy on the basis of the same problems presented to him from the Okanagan area, which will mean that there will be another reason for consultation and delay and administrative proliferation. This sort of thing can be duplicated over and over again. This is no solution to the problem; it is a trick to try to take political advantage, but it is not going to work, for the simple reason that it is going to create so many problems that I am sure in due course the government will wish it had never submitted to the impulse.

I go back for a moment to the department of industry and to the area development agency concept. If I may be permitted to appear slightly immodest, I should like to quote from a speech I made in this house on July 30, 1960. In that speech I said:

Hard core and seasonal unemployment can be the consequence of failure to utilize most effectively the reservoirs of resources, skills and knowledge which already exist. It can be proven, I believe, that in many areas unemployment is most severe where an imbalance of development is found; where primary industry is not supplemented by secondary industry; where a single industry, either primary or secondary, maintains an entire region. It is in these circumstances that very often we find the most severe conditions of winter unemployment occurring and where there is growing evidence, also, that continued long term unemployment is likely to occur. The problems, to a large extent, originate in the inadequate utilization of existing resources, skills and knowledge, and the solution must therefore lie, at least in part, in a more effective use of these elements.

Then I went on to suggest that this problem can be offset by the creation of regional development councils.

From reading the speech from the throne and the reference to the creation of this new department of industry, you would think it might be suggested that no such councils have in fact been provided. In fact, on December 15, 1960, when this house passed the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act, such councils were provided for. Personally I have always regretted that that act was called the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act, because I think it could more properly have been called the rural rehabilitation and development act. It provides for the greater utilization of existing resources, skills and knowledge, and also provides for the utilization of local councils and for the co-operation of provincial and municipal governments in particular resource areas, primarily rural areas where the problem of hard-core unemployment and seasonal unemployment are most evident. So that this idea that area development policy or an area development agency is new, is a fresh one, or the answer to the problem, is entirely fallacious. These councils, which are already in being or can be brought into being within the scope of the A.R.D.A. program, are today at work and can be further utilized as the people in those various parts of the country who require this kind of assistance get the know-how to utilize available resources.

So, by picking out of the speech at almost any point the allegedly new ideas, we find either things that are not new or things that are simply providing a duplication of services that already exist, and in the case of the Canadian development corporation we might see the creation of a massive corporation. I am told it will be designed to encourage investment by Canadians in their own industries. But it will be a government agency, and it must be remembered there are private agencies capable of doing this. One in particular was created within recent months, the brochure of which was made available to all hon. members of the house. It might even be on their bookshelves right now.

These are a few of the matters I mention to indicate that this is not an adequate program for the times in which we live. It does not add that new dimension which we were led to expect from the Liberal party in all its professions of a new Jerusalem for Canada, during the election and prior to the calling into session of parliament.

There is one other point on which I certainly do not intend to criticize the government. I only hope it will be able to live up to what it has claimed for itself, and that is its ability to resolve the continuing problem of reaching agreement with the province of British Columbia on the development of the Columbia river. No member of the house could be other than satisfied to learn that the premier of British Columbia is prepared to meet the Prime Minister of Canada in June, to initiate discussions on this question. But may I warn, if it is necessary, the members of the Liberal party and the members of the government that the mere fact the premier of British Columbia is prepared to discuss the subject with them is not necessarily a guarantee that the project will proceed.

By things I heard during the election campaign I am led to believe that the Liberal party wishes to renegotiate certain aspects of the present treaty, and from what we hear from the premier of British Columbia, I am led to believe that he wants certain concessions from the government of Canada.

I have no way of knowing exactly what direction the government's renegotiation commitment will take it, but I am somewhat apprehensive of what the premier of British Columbia will demand in concessions from the federal government. I would like to put three suggestions to the government for consideration on this matter. At this point I do not suggest they are sufficient to provide an entire resolution of the question, because the Columbia river development is complex. Indeed, it is very difficult for a layman to enter into this field without getting himself into trouble. I would suggest to the government however that studies be made of the costs estimates made after the treaty was negotiated, which seem to indicate that the Mica creek dam can be built approximately fifteen feet higher than was originally projected within the costs estimates. If it is possible to increase the height of the Mica creek dam within the present costs estimates, it might provide the opportunity to transfer part of the storage waters of the Arrow lakes to the reservoir behind Mica, and thus eliminate the flooding now contemplated. This in turn would reduce the pressure on the built up areas on the Arrow lakes and also preserve more productive farm land.

I do not know if this is a feasible suggestion, but I do believe its feasibility should be examined in the light of the knowledge that is now available to the government. Perhaps it could lead the way to the suggestion, made three years ago by General McNaughton, before the external affairs committee of the house when he referred to the possibility of an intermediate Arrow program instead of high Arrow, if low Arrow program was not possible in the complex of over-all development.

I would also like to suggest that the government endeavour to persuade the province of British Columbia that, in a development as large as the Columbia river, the authority which supervises it, whether it be purely provincial or a joint authority shared by both the federal and provincial governments, these should be an over-all authority concerned not just with the building of dams for power generation and the storage of water, but with the redevelopment and relocation of the communities in the whole of the valley, that it provide for the diking and protection of lands where necessary, and that it assist in providing services in those communities to which a large number of workmen and their families will come, such as occurs when a program of this size is undertaken.

If it is true that 3,000 people will be employed for three years at Mica creek, then presumably the city of Revelstoke will have to provide additional water, sewage and other services for a substantial number of people. To the best of my knowledge this problem is not being faced up to by the province of British Columbia at the present time, and the federal government should assure that it be considered.

There is one further step that the federal government might take, and that is to offer the province of British Columbia an outright grant of half the costs of the construction of the transmission lines on the Mica creek project as a first step in the establishment of a national power grid in Canada. I assure the government, interested as this one professes to be in economic development in Canada, that any major step of this kind would lead to tremendous economic growth in British Columbia, and beyond British Columbia in the rest of Canada, if immense resources of electrical power could be moved to other places. In suggesting this I assume the government would be interested in any step that would lead to the establishment of a national power grid system.

In making this suggestion I would point out there are ample precedents for making an outright grant of this kind. These are found in the grants to the maritime provinces, and the grant which forms the federal government's share of the cost of atomic power development in the province of Ontario. This latter expenditure by the federal government will be an outright grant to the province of Ontario when it takes over the operation of the atomic power plant. Other precedents include the grant to Manitoba to combat Red river flooding, and the grant to Saskatchewan for the south Saskatchewan dam project. Such a grant would be one means of stimulating activities on the Columbia river.

I only hope that, after the meeting between the Prime Minister and the premier of British Columbia, one minister will be able to come into the house and say that the differences have been rectified. I know certain Liberal spokesmen have made it appear that this is a very simple question. For their sake I hope it is, and for the sake of the people of British Columbia. However, all I can say is that at the moment I would reserve my judgment until after that meeting takes place.

Briefly, Mr. Speaker, these are some of the points that have occurred to me as a consequence of reading the speech from the throne and listening to the debate on it. I am sorry I cannot be as enthusiastic as some previous speakers, because I think there is room for a great deal of doubt as to the competence and intentions of the government when it presents us with such a document which is simply a borrowing from a program already placed before the house, and when it includes measures that ultimately could do greater damage to Canada than any benefits they provided.

(Translation):

Mr. Gerard Ouellet (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that I am speaking in the house for the first time, I will lose no time in congratulating you on your appointment to such an important office. I have no doubt that you will always discharge your great responsibilities with dignity.

I also want to congratulate the hon. member for Northumberland (Miss Jewett) for the interesting speech she so graciously made to the members of parliament. I hope that she will always be happy and proud to have served her social and political team.

The election campaign is over and I see no point in continuing it here. Each of us has received a mandate from his electors. Each and every one of us has a precise duty to fulfil. Each member of the house, whatever his political allegiance, has formally committed himself to his fellow citizens and the whole country.

I want to show as far as possible my loyalty to that duty, because a sense of responsibility does consist first of all of self-respect and of devotion to the community of which we are part.

Mr. Speaker, it is a formidable honour to speak before this distinguished assembly; therefore, I trust that in listening to me, you will keep in mind that I am a farmer anxious to make my small contribution to the conduct of the business of this house, in order to improve materially and without delay the lot of the members of my profession.

I should like now to thank and congratulate the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) for the likely appointment in the near future of a minister of agriculture who will have the appropriate legislation implemented in order to relieve eastern farmers of the very difficult situation they have been experiencing far too long.

I have complete admiration for this unique decision. If you allow me, I would say that since my active participation in our political group, this project to have two members of the federal cabinet, one to take care of the eastern farmers and the other to look after the farmers of the west, is in keeping with the needs of the times.

I am still prouder of the appointment to the federal ministry of the hon. member for Matapedia-Matane (Mr. Tremblay), that beautiful riding next to the constituency of Rimouski, which I have the honour to represent in this parliament. I also offer special congratulations to the hon. member for Outremont-St. Jean (Mr. Lamontagne). These two ministers, natives of my riding will help, I hope, the progress of our area. Congratulations to the Prime Minister for the selection of these two distinguished men.

The farmer whom you are listening to right now was secretary treasurer of the local chapter of the united farmers; for three years, he was general adviser of the U.F.C. of which he was an active member during 31 years. In May 1955, I left my village where I had been manager of the caisse populaire during 18 years and a member of a farm co-operative for 17 years, to become a full time farmer.

I have been secretary of both the municipal council and the school board for several years. When I left my village to work on the farm, I did not think for once that I would come back to public life. However, the Social Credit party drafted me and, today, I find myself in a position of honour but which is difficult none the less, as I am sure you will agree.

Today I urge the hon. minister who represents my area to see to it that further consideration be given to granting the eastern farmers substantially reduced purchase prices for feed—a little over $20 per ton for grain intended for cattle bred by eastern farmers, without reducing the fair revenues of the western farmers.

In my humble opinion, this is a suggestion of prime importance in order to maintain our farm establishments, the reduction of which becomes a source of concern today for those who wish to remain true to their forefathers' vocation.

Everyone will admit the indispensable part played by agriculture in a Christian civilization. Our family farms are faced today with problems worthy of the concern of all men of good will and I believe that each and every one of us should be among them.

When the necessary measures have been taken to pass legislation aimed at helping the eastern farmer, we shall be sure that all members of my profession will be able to carry out their duties to the national community. It will not be an easy task though I must admit that worthy efforts have been made in the past.

However, we farmers, after having established a host of works designed to promote and protect the general interest of our profession, consider that time has come to urge our government to take as soon as possible the steps necessary for that purpose.

Here we must be possessed with a spirit that unites all groups. This must be our goal; we must seek fear of God first of all and respect for all human beings in civil and religious fields.

And so, we Canadians will then live in peace and quiet, because we will have found a true basis for unity.

The county of Rimouski sent me to parliament. More than 30,000 voters expect me to let the house know about their most urgent needs.

In that county, numerous associations work towards the expansion and the success of local and regional undertakings. May I point out that the runway of the Rimouski airport is in a sorry state of disrepair. I have been most urgently asked to try and get some repair work done without delay, as it is essential not to allow dangerous defects on the runway to slow down air traffic. Besides, the far end of the main runway should be covered with asphalt for more than 1,000 feet.

At Trois Pistoles, that maritime town in my county, there is urgent need of improving the wharf. The town is indeed a natural maritime centre with a future. Its population wants a study to be made which would lead to the means of improving the north-south ferry service. There is no doubt that following a careful study by competent people, supported by fair-minded statesmen, our maritime, industrial and agricultural district would know a splendid development. It is a worth-while undertaking. The time is for action, because we are facing a more than urgent need.

And what about our labour class? Though there has been notable progress from the professional point of view, in the various trades, thanks to specialized institutions, from the marine school to the agricultural school, the labour market is still cluttered. It would therefore be appropriate to pass legislation for carrying out important public works which would increase our national assets, our common heritage.

In co-operation with hon. members from our part of the country, as well as from the maritime provinces, the Atlantic provinces will know days of greater security and national equity. That is the price of confederation.

May I also congratulate the hon. member for Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Sauve) for his remarkable speech in favour of our part of the country. In some ways, it is more to be admired than to be imitated, and I think that his wishes and his requests will incite our leaders to bring about positive results. I thank all those men in advance who will do the necessary tasks to carry out our projects.

Is it not true that the light comes from the east, as the sun rises there?

I hope that I may be allowed to submit here to your good attention words spoken in this house by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson), our national leader:

> Money has been the key to the organization of society. Money makes economic democracy possible by making consumer choice the arbiter of economic direction. We can go back, if we so desire, to Great Britain during the 1500's when the renaissance was just developing, when the industrial revolution was beginning to take its embryonic form.
>
> Here, again, this development was preceded with a development for the facility of the medium of exchange in the monetary system which ultimately resulted in the present monetary system.
>
> As we look for democracy, for a system of government, let us remember that economic democracy is at the root of democratic democracy. The one is not complete, and the one cannot survive unless it has the other. I am concerned because of the trend towards increased governmental control, increased taxation. This is actually an abandonment of our monetary system, an abridgement or an attempted abridgement of economic democracy. It does not enlarge the human spirit, but abridges it instead. It does not enlarge human dignity. It subjects individuals to the indignity of government by bureaucracy. If it promotes equality, it is precisely at the expense of that precious individuality that has been the spark kindling the fire of western civilization. As the Austrian writer Heimito von Doderer said, contemplating the difference between east and west, that in the east, "individual life does not rebel. There is too little of it for rebellion. One soul mingles with the other like smoke. But in the west, every life has its own special, if invisible, garden plot. A man stands alone between the tended flower beds and the little porticos of a house from which no one, by law and equity, is entitled to expel him . . . This is the only way he knows how to be. Only in this way can he be big or little, crooked or straight, good or bad".
>
> So, as we consider this new path let us remember the old fundamentals that are basic to the very way of life we mutually agree is the way we should live. Is the new path we are taking, then, a new path or is it an old one? Is it the collapse of economic democracy which is forcing us to take actions which are contrary to the basic principles under which we live? Perhaps this sounds strong, but look at the socialist governments behind the iron curtain. It is the logical confusion of bigger and bigger governments. Creative ideas have never sprung from groups, they spring from individuals. No committee has ever painted a piece of art. No board of directors has ever written a symphony. No commission has ever invented a scientific machine. In our awe of the power of the organization compared with that of the individual, let us not forget the complementary need of the organization, however complex, for the individual's vision, skill and ability. It is the contact between the aspired mind of the individual and his creator that enables him to bring to others a glimpse of the infinite and the eternal that lie outside the view of ordinary men. This suppression of creativity carries with it the seeds of decay of every socialist state.

There is another member who, I believe, deserves the compliments of the house, and I am thinking of the member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Deachman). As I listened to him yesterday, I felt admiration for this man who filled his bounden duty of coming here and paying tribute to his opponent, the hon. Mr. Howard Green, this great Canadian who has served his country so well. The hon. Mr. Green will go down in history as a valiant contriver for peace with honour.

Allow me to express once again my gratitude and my congratulations to the Leader of the Opposition for having appointed the hon. Mr. Earl Rowe as Lieutenant Governor of Ontario. This gentleman of the Canadian political scene deserves our respect and our friendship.

There is a remarkable man sitting among us, who is attracting attention: it is the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), dauntless servant of democracy, of freedom and, therefore, of civilization.

In closing Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out to the house that when I came to parliament, I felt everywhere at home, that everybody I met had been most kind to me, and that I shall never forget the warm welcome which was given to me by the Clerk of the House. Believe me, it is most pleasing for a farmer to feel that way.

In carrying out my mandate, I shall need the co-operation of those who sit on the government side. I do hope that everyone of them will grant me his full co-operation for the welfare of all the voters of my riding, and I thank them in advance.

Social Credit is the answer, the cure of democracy or of Christian civilization against the communist, the atheist, and the leftist pressures, and it is also the cure against capitalist rightist dictatorship.

(Text):

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): My first words, Mr. Speaker, must be words of congratulation to you upon your elevation to your present office. Shortly after April 8 when it became apparent to everyone in the country that we were going to be afflicted with another Liberal government, many of us entered into a little guessing game as to just which members might be chosen for the various posts in this new government. I might say that, in so far as the over-all picture was concerned, I did not come out too well. I would say, however, Mr. Speaker, that in so far as the choice of a Speaker was concerned I am happy to announce that I was in full agreement with the choice long before it was actually made.

(Translation):

Second, I must say that we who have had the privilege, during the last session, of seeing how the hon. member for Stormont (Mr. Lamoureux) handled himself, are not surprised at the honour bestowed upon him, and the new members are happy to find that the confidence that was put in him when he was appointed Deputy Speaker and chairman of committees was justified.

(Text):

I should like to congratulate also the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and the remainder of the cabinet ministers upon the new responsibilities they have accepted in this chamber. Particularly, I should like to convey my congratulations to my colleagues from northern Ontario. It is quite some time since the treasury benches have been filled with so many representatives of the great northern part of this province.

(Translation):

And now, Mr. Speaker, having given credit where credit is due, I would ask the house to bear with me for a moment while I say a few words on a subject which is giving me some concern.

Not too long ago, when the simultaneous translation system was installed in this house, I had some misgivings due to the fact that, in my opinion, it is easier to put on an earphone in order to understand what is being said in another language than to learn that other language. The installation of that equipment could postpone rather than bring forward the day when hon. members would be proficient in our two official languages.

(Text):

However, Mr. Speaker, in spite of the doubts that may have been in my mind at the time, I must say that after some considerable time this new system has worked very well. One thing I have noticed, and I think it is very good, is this. In years past, when an hon. member was speaking in a language that some other hon. members could not understand we saw quite an exodus from the chamber, but now we see hon. members turn on their apparatus and listen to the simultaneous translation. But I should like to register a mild protest in regard to what appears to me to be a new practice that is growing up in the house. I refer to the practice of repeating everything in both languages. This is not necessary, because we have the simultaneous translation system. To my mind bilingualism means being able to speak one or other of our two official languages, and if they are given equal status I see no need for everything to be repeated in both languages. After all, if I say, "Mr. Speaker" and the translator says "Monsieur l'Orateur", I see no need for my saying "Monsieur l'Orateur" so that the translator can say "Mr. Speaker". To my mind this is almost a mockery of bilingualism and makes no use of the instantaneous translation system which we have. I think the speech from the throne at the beginning of this session set an excellent example which we would do well to follow; that is, of speaking first in one language and then the other. To my mind this gives equal status to both languages and I think this is the way it should be. This is one problem with which we are faced in this country today, the problem of bilingualism and biculturalism. It has received a great deal of attention. If we stop to consider this question, I think we must realize that this situation is rather a reflection upon the Liberal and Conservative governments which we have had in the past. If we consult the Parliamentary Guide we find that we have for some 50 years been governed in this country by a Liberal government—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): —and for some 46 years by a Conservative government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Now that the backpatting is over, Mr. Speaker, may I say that I think the unrest we see in the country today is a condemnation of both these governments.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): We have seen, particularly during the last election campaign, the old parties trying to blame the problems of this country upon the new parties that are growing up in Canada today. They completely ignore the fact that the only reason for the new parties is the failure of the old parties. The problems that we face in this nation today have arisen from a long, long line of small grievances. These grievances have for far too many years been hidden; and hiding solves nothing. Certainly if hiding solved anything, all these problems would have been solved in 96 years. The greatest danger that we face today is that we may go from one extreme to the other.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, allow me to say here that I shudder when I hear irresponsible people speak about the separation of Quebec from the rest of Canada. I was born and educated in Quebec. I served in Quebec regiments, both French and English. As far as I am concerned, Quebec is not only my birthplace, but also the cradle of our nation. Quebec is Canada; how could it be separated from it?

(Text):

The thing that raises most fear in my mind, Mr. Speaker, is that the acts of terrorism we see being committed today may prevent a proper solution to these problems which we have had over the years. I should like to make an appeal to both the English and French citizens of our country and ask them to use forbearance at the present time; for the English Canadian to realize that there are grievances which need correction, and for the French Canadian to realize that we will not solve problems in this country of ours by acts of terrorism.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would come to a matter that is of great importance to the constituency which I have the honour to represent. During this session, or certainly during this year, parliament will have to deal with the problem, because it is a measure that is up for consideration. I am referring, of course, to the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act, which has run its three year course and this year is up for renewal, amendment, or whatever is the will of this parliament. I realize, of course, that we will have another chance to discuss this matter in possibly more detail when the legislation is before the house. All I wish to do now is impress upon the government the importance of this particular matter.

The Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act was first passed by a Liberal government. It has twice been extended by a Conservative government. In fact, the last time it was dealt with the assistance provided under the act was increased by some 25 per cent. Many years have passed since this measure was enacted, and I think we should now realize that in addition to the original purpose of this act—which was of course to foster and maintain the gold mining community—this is a very important matter to our country today. One of the major problems that has plagued this country for a number of years is that we are importing more than we are exporting. Every year this problem is with us. I think we should realize that gold is one product that Canada has in quantity. In fact, Canada is the second highest gold producing country in the world. This is one product that we will never have more of than we can export. We may have a glut of copper, iron, lumber, paper—yes, even of wheat—but gold is one thing we will never have a glut of in this country. Consequently, if we realize the true significance of this product and its value to our country, we should realize that this matter is really the responsibility of the country and the gold mining industry should therefore, in its present circumstances, be subsidized by the country as a whole. It should not be subsidized, as it has been for far too long in the past, by the industry itself, by the people working in that industry and by the merchants and citizens of the communities which are supported by the gold mines. However, I have not changed my opinion that if this act is to serve the purpose for which it was originally passed, some changes must be made to ensure that the benefit of this subsidy paid by the people of Canada shall accrue to the municipalities, to the people working in those municipalities and to those who serve them.

I should like to devote the remainder of my time to a question which I have found to be the number one problem in the riding I represent. There are some who may think that when I deal with this matter I am venturing upon a provincial field, but such is not the case. This subject has a direct interest for the federal government, and more particularly for the Department of National Health and Welfare. I am only sorry that the minister is unable to be here while we are dealing with this matter. I have in mind the great number of cases in my constituency, and, I assume, in similar constituencies, of people who sustain injuries in the course of their work. Because of the present regulations and practices of the workmen's compensation board of the province of Ontario, these injured workmen become foisted upon the municipal welfare rolls which are supported in their turn by the federal government through the Department of National Health and Welfare.

It is my intention to list just a few of these cases. I can assure hon. members I have hundreds of them on my files. During the last election campaign between 300 and 400 of them came to my attention. I am thinking in particular, now, of a case where a man sustained a broken ankle. After treatment the cast was removed from his ankle and he was instructed by his doctor to take some exercise. While walking across his yard, his ankle buckled under him and he fell, twisting his back, as a result of which he had to spend two or three more weeks in hospital. The compensation board refused to accept that there was any connection between the two accidents. The man's wife and his seven children are now wards of the municipality with 40 per cent of their welfare costs being paid by the federal government.

Many cases arise where there is a delay of six weeks, ten weeks, three months, four months or even five months before a payment is made to these injured workers. Again the situation arises where they must go to the municipality for welfare assistance and where the costs are passed right back to the federal government. I wonder how long we can go on fooling ourselves by believing that we have no real responsibility for what is going on with regard to these particular welfare payments because the money does not appear, in the first instance, to be coming directly from the federal pocket. I think this is a subject which the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh) and, indeed, the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) might well look into. I can assure them both I can provide hundreds of cases to back up the statements I am making tonight. I sometimes wonder why it is practically impossible to bring this matter adequately to the attention of the public and of those concerned. I have had occasion to write to newspapers, to Toronto daily papers, listing as many as 15 of these cases including the claim numbers, dates and so forth, but not a word will appear in the press. It makes one wonder sometimes if there is not a conspiracy of silence in connection with this matter. I believe the trouble is that the board has been in office far too long. They are looking back with such pride on things they did ten or 15 years ago that they are not even aware of the situation which prevails today. This is certainly one of the most urgent problems which faces my constituency and I sometimes wonder if a similar situation prevails in all the other constituencies across the province and across Canada.

The whole field of public welfare needs review and revision. I encountered one situation which seems impossible to me in this day and age. It was the case of a man who had an unusually large family, at least for our part of the country. He had some 17 children. Because of the demands of this large family he naturally got behind in paying his bills—an affliction which affects most of us. Of course, the garnishees began to come in and as soon as that happened the man lost his job and had to fall back on municipal welfare relief. Because of the size of his family he was receiving the maximum payment which, in Ontario, is $180 a month. Finally he was able to get a job where he was protected from garnishees. It was a job with the Ontario department of highways. There was one problem, though, he had to take a $20 cut to go to work. His wages came to $160. If he had not gone to work he would have faced a non-support charge and would have gone to jail. I think this is a situation which bears looking into. It is an aspect of one of the most pressing problems which faces the new minister as she assumes her duties.

In line with the general trend on this 31st day of decision I think it would be appropriate if I ended my remarks at this point, since we shall have ample time to deal with these matters in the days ahead.

Mr. Joseph P. O'Keefe (St. John's East): It is a distinct pleasure for me to begin this, my maiden speech, by offering to you, Mr. Speaker, my congratulations on your election. I know you will fill this high office in a most impressive way and in keeping with the finest of our parliamentary traditions. I am very conscious of the honour which is mine to be speaking in this house for the first time. I feel even more honoured to be speaking as the representative of St. John's East. Historic old St. John's East has now returned happily, and I am confident permanently, to the Liberal vote.

To stand in this parliament of Canada is an experience that for all of us I believe is a memorable one. It is significant in the fact that we are now the chosen representatives not only of the districts from which we come but of the length and breadth of Canada as a whole. I, like many hon. members here, have entered parliament for the first time. They may or may not be awed by the intricacies of constitutional procedure and the varied and complicated order of business; I know

I am. But I know that down deep in our hearts is the dedicated determination to serve worthily and well the people who have sent us here and have entrusted to us their hopes and aspirations. I am very proud to represent St. John's East and I feel that what is good for that district is good for Newfoundland.

Canada's newest province has received some definite and specific undertakings which, when implemented in full, will go far to remove most of the special handicaps under which our province has been operating since confederation. The most forthright of these commitments has been the undertaking of a federal offer of 90 per cent of the cost of completing the trans-Canada highway. This, as you know, has been pledged to all the Atlantic provinces, but our province is the only one with a very large unfinished portion of our national highway. Obviously the task is quite beyond the means of our provincial government. It will be remembered, too, that the MacPherson commission strongly recommended its completion at federal cost as a basic national obligation. This, sir, I suggest it is.

Almost above all else Newfoundland vitally needs communications, not only of the physical or material kind—roads such as the Marine drive, with all its maritime magnificence, our long-sought and so badly needed east coast ferry and other ferries and roads—but communications or meetings of minds, so that what is said or sought in Newfoundland is understood and appreciated in Ottawa. This has not always been so in the past.

The 12-mile limit for our hard pressed fishermen is another all important project. Its success, of course, will depend upon the agreement or acquiescence of our American friends. This, I feel, is likely to be forthcoming since the United States associated itself with the six-plus-six resolution which failed by only a very small margin to gain the required two thirds majority at the last law of the sea conference.

The question of fishery development on a national basis is for us of the greatest importance. What will be done in this respect will, of course, depend upon the outcome of a conference which our Prime Minister has offered to call. This will have to be hammered out into a sound economic program that will produce maximum results from efficient direction, financing and supervision.

Newfoundland needs the restoration of the former system of the tax rental agreement. This plan, as you know, Mr. Speaker, made sure that the poorer provinces shared in Canada's growth. Under this system our province will benefit from the expected expansion of our Canadian economy and so would acquire a substantial contribution towards the annual increase in the cost of maintaining our vital public services. What is of crucial, over-riding importance, however, is that our new national policy will consider all these things and others in terms of what is required to overcome inherent disabilities in all the provinces.

I will not dwell at any great length on all, or even many, of the needs of Newfoundland. Some good was done for St. John's East and other districts and provinces by the previous government. After all, they held power for nearly six years, so they could scarcely help doing some good. Yet a great deal more needs to be done now. From time to time I am quite sure that Newfoundland's representatives, all seven of us—all we had to offer—will be heard on behalf of the oldest part of this new country.

Mr. Speaker, the prevailing standards of living in Newfoundland, it seems to me, are maintained to a very large degree by the expenditure of either the federal or provincial governments on various public services, social security and welfare. In places such as Bell island, with its labour surplus, the standard of living is still lower. Of all of this great district, I am painfully anxious that something be done for so long neglected Bell island.

I should like to devote the remainder of my speech to telling you and the house of my native province of Newfoundland and of its natural grandeur, just as others have done with their provinces. However, my people have sent me here to represent them and to act as their spokesman. This is my duty and this I am determined to do as best I can. For this reason I am going to take the few minutes at my disposal to lay before you some details of a situation about which I feel very strongly both the house and the nation should be informed and about which I can no longer remain silent.

Mr. Speaker, my district includes the large island in Conception bay that we call Bell island, with its large town of Wabana, a beautiful Beothic Indian name meaning "land of the rising sun". Some 14,000 people make their homes on this island. I only wish I could tell you that they also make their living there, but that is not so. These 14,000 people do not make a living on Bell island. These men and women, all of them fine Newfoundlanders and Canadians, are doomed by forces seemingly beyond their control to live in circumstances which in case after case approach utter destitution. Do not misunderstand me, sir. I am not saying that each and every one of these fine souls is unable to earn his or her daily bread, for that is not so. But what is true, and tragically true, is that of these 14,000 the staggering number of 5,500 are on relief, existing on the hated, soul-searing dole.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It being 9.30 o'clock p.m. it is my duty, pursuant to section 4 of standing order 38, to interrupt these proceedings and forthwith put the question on any amendment now before the house.

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Diefenbaker) which was negatived on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Aiken
Alkenbrack
Baldwin
Bigg
Cadieu (Meadow Lake)
Cantelon
Churchill
Clancy
Cooper
Crouse
Danforth
Diefenbaker
Dinsdale
Doucett
Enns
Fairweather
Fane
Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke)
Flemming (Victoria-Carleton)
Forbes
Grafftey
Gundlock
Hales
Hamilton
Horner (Acadia)
Howe (Wellington-Huron)
Irvine
Jorgenson
Kennedy
Kindt
Korchinski
Lambert
Loney
MacEwan
MacInnis
MacLean (Queens)
Macquarrie
MacRae
McBain
McIntosh
Madill
Mandziuk
Martineau
Millar
Monteith
Moore (Wetaskiwin)
Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria)
Muir (Lisgar)
Nielsen
Noble
Nowlan
Nugent
Ormiston
Pascoe
Paul
Pigeon
Rapp
Ricard
Rynard
Simpson
Skoreyko
Slogan
Smallwood
Southam
Starr
Stefanson
Stenson
Thomas
Valade
Vincent
Watson (Assiniboia)
Webb
Weichel
Willoughby
Winkler
Woolliams—76.

NAYS

Messrs:

Addison
Armstrong
Asselin (Notre Dame de Grace)
Asselin (Richmond-Wolfe)
Badanai
Barnett
Basford
Batten
Beaule
Bechard
Beer
Benidickson
Benson
Berger
Blouin
Boulanger
Boutin
Brewin
Brown
Cadieux (Terrebonne)
Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands)
Cantin
Caouette
Cardin
Caron
Carter
Cashin
Chapdelaine
Choquette
Chretien
Côté (Longueuil)
Cowan
Crossman
Cyr
Davis
Deachman
Denis
Deschatelets
Douglas
Drouin
Drury
Dube
Dupuis
Emard
Ethier
Favreau
Fisher
Forest
Forgie
Francis
Frenette
Garland
Gauthier
Gelber
Gendron
Godin
Gordon
Granger
Gray
Greene
Gregoire
Guay
Habel
Hahn
Haidasz
Harley
Hays
Hellyer
Herridge
Honey
Howe (Hamilton South)
Jewett, Miss
Kelly
Klein
Knowles
Konantz, Mrs.
Lachance
Laing
LaMarsh, Miss
Lamontagne
Lamoureux
Langlois
Laniel
Laprise
Latulippe
Leduc
Lessard (St. Henry)
Lloyd
Loiselle
Macaluso
Macdonald
MacEachen
Mackasey MacNaught
McIlraith
McLean (Charlotte)
McMillan
McNulty
McWilliam
Martin (Essex East)
Martin (Timmins)
Mather
Matheson
Matte
Mitchell
Moreau
Morison
Mullally
Munro
O'Keefe
Olson
Orlikow
Otto
Ouellet
Patterson
Pearson
Pennell
Pepin
Perron
Peters
Pickersgill
Pilon
Plourde
Richard Rideout
Rinfret
Rochon
Rock
Rondeau
Rouleau
Ryan
Sauve
Scott
Sharp
Stewart
Tardif
Temple
Thompson
Tremblay
Tucker
Turner
Wahn
Walker
Watson (Chateauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie)
Webster
Whelan
Winch—147.

Mr. Byrne: I was paired; had I voted I would have voted against the amendment.

(Translation):

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer). Otherwise, I would have voted against the amendment.

(Text):

Mr. Cardiff: I was paired with the hon. member for Algoma West (Mr. Nixon). Had I voted, I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. Chatterton: I was paired with the hon. member for Victoria, B.C. (Mr. Groos). Had

I voted, I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. Regan: Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt). Had I voted, I would have voted against the amendment.

Division

Mr. More: I was paired with the hon. member for Norfolk (Mr. Roxburgh). Had I voted, I would have voted for the amendment.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, May 24, 1963

The house met at 11 a.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. DIEFENBAKER—INFORMATION RESPECTING NATO NOT GIVEN TO PARLIAMENT

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question affecting the privileges of this House of Commons. The NATO council meeting has continued for a couple of days. Parliament has not received any information whatever regarding the stand taken by Canada, yet the press from day to day contains statements. Last night's Canadian Press sets out the following:

> The way has been cleared for the creation of an Atlantic alliance with nuclear strike forces with Canada one of the contributing countries. Today NATO foreign ministers switched their attention to world trouble spots. General agreement on the basic idea of the type of force to be built initially around Polaris-firing submarines and British long range bombers was reached.

Mr. Speaker, I am informed that the press is regularly given information by the Secretary of State for External Affairs and by the minister of defence. This information is not made available to parliament. I will say no more at this time except that this constitutes a derogation from the rights of parliament. Controlled news is something which should not exist in this parliament.

TRADE

GATT—REPORT BY MINISTER ON RESULTS OF CONFERENCES

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I was asked yesterday if I would give a report on the discussions that took place in London and Geneva in connection with the general agreement on tariffs and trade. I should now like to do so.

As hon. members are aware, the meeting of the economic consultative committee took place in London on May 13 and 14 just before the meeting of trade ministers held in Geneva under the auspices of the general agreement on tariffs and trade from May 16 to 21. I beg leave first to table copies of the communique issued at the conclusion of the commonwealth meeting, and of the resolutions and other conclusions adopted by the trade ministers in Geneva.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the minister have leave to table these documents?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Sharp: At the London meetings, Mr. Speaker, I was impressed by the variety of the modern commonwealth. It seems to me that this is a reflection of the modern world, the free world at least. The whole spectrum of needs and aspirations is represented in the commonwealth. We have Britain, a highly industrialized country, Canada and Australia which are major exporters of agricultural and primary products as well as manufacturers of more limited scale, and New Zealand almost entirely dependant on agriculture. I was impressed with the fact that the modern commonwealth includes a majority now of newly independent countries only recently embarked on the process of development and diversification.

It was a rewarding experience for me to meet the trade ministers of these commonwealth countries, the new as well as the old. In London we were able to discuss in the unique and understanding atmosphere of commonwealth meetings that is familiar to so many of us the interests and approaches of the different members to the major current issues of trade and development.

Three main questions were on the agenda. First, the expansion of the trade of the developing countries; second, world trade in agricultural products, and third the proposal for a further major round of negotiations to reduce tariffs and other barriers to world trade. At the meeting there was also an opportunity to review the situation in Europe and to hear from the British ministers about developments since the termination of the Brussels talks.

All the ministers recognized the continuing significance of commonwealth trade. We were also agreed on the need for a general expansion of world trade and on the importance of this for all commonwealth countries.

As hon. members will see from the text of the communique which I have just tabled, the needs of the less advanced countries of the commonwealth received full recognition, and Canada joined with other members of the commonwealth in promising our support for action to help meet these needs, both at the subsequent GATT ministerial meeting and at the forthcoming United Nations conference on trade and development, the preparatory committee for which is now meeting in Geneva.

At the GATT meeting in Geneva the purpose was to come to grips on a world wide basis with the three major trade problems discussed in London. These problems are difficult and complex, and many conflicting interests remain to be resolved in the long negotiations that lie ahead. Nevertheless the countries concerned have agreed to come to the negotiating table and a start will be made. This was a tremendous and heartening achievement.

For the developing countries decisions were taken to facilitate expansion of their trade, and machinery had been established to keep their problems in the forefront of the negotiations and of GATT discussions. But on many points views differed as to the best way to proceed, notably between the European economic community and the overseas countries associated with the community on the one hand, and the developing nations in the commonwealth and elsewhere in the world on the other.

These differences are reflected in the documents I have tabled. But there was no disagreement on the urgency and fundamental importance of moving to help all these countries to meet the challenges of their development and the fundamental need to improve the lot of their peoples. Aid is clearly not enough. Financial and technical assistance must be accompanied by better opportunities to trade and other measures to facilitate the expansion and stability of the export earnings of these countries.

The Geneva conference of GATT was the fifth meeting of GATT ministers since the general agreement was signed in 1947, and the chief purpose of this meeting was to initiate a major negotiation for the reduction of tariff and non-tariff barriers to trade. The new United States authority to cut the protection surrounding the United States market made these negotiations possible. The power contained in the trade expansion act to reduce most United States tariffs by half and to remove duties that are 5 per cent or less is both imaginative and far reaching. It provides more scope to reduce American protection than has been available for many, many years.

The proposal for new and substantial negotiations, the so called Kennedy round, was strongly supported by Canada, by Britain and by many other countries whose interest lies in the expansion of world trade. The meeting agreed that negotiations should be joined and that they should cover trade barriers of all kinds and all sectors of trade.

Agreement was also reached that the negotiation plan should be based on the principle of equal across the board tariff reduction subject to certain exceptions and subject to the working out of procedures to narrow differences in tariff levels between major industrial powers where these have significant effects on trade.

As hon. members will be aware from the newspaper reports that came back from Geneva, many days of negotiations between the United States and the European economic community were necessary before the final formula affecting the principle of negotiation was agreed upon.

I made it clear that for Canada such a formula of tariff reduction would not yield the necessary mutuality of trade and economic benefit. I indicated that for a country like Canada, with its limited domestic market, its patterns of production and trade and its relatively narrow range of exports, it would be difficult to find any single formula that would achieve the necessary balance of advantage. I assured the meeting, however, that Canada would play its part and make concessions in Canadian tariffs commensurate with the benefits we receive.

The conclusions of the meeting cover the position of Canada and certain other countries in a somewhat similar position. I should like to quote these provisions so that members of the house will understand how the negotiations concluded. The conclusions provide that the tariff negotiations committee which was established at our meeting shall deal with, inter alia, and I quote:

> The problem for certain countries with a very low average level of tariffs or with a special economic or trade structure such that equal linear tariff reductions may not provide an adequate balance of advantages.

In his statement which forms an integral part of the conclusions of the meeting the chairman of the GATT ministerial meeting stated that pursuant to this paragraph, and I quote:

> The committee will deal with the case of certain countries where it is established that their very low average level of tariffs or their economic or trade structure is such that the general application of equal linear tariff reductions would not be appropriate. For such countries the objective shall be the negotiation of a balance of advantages based on trade concessions by them of equivalent value, not excluding equal linear reductions where appropriate.

In addition, the chairman was asked during the concluding meeting whether the words "special economic or trade structure" in the resolution covered the special situation of a country which, it is established, has a very large dependence on exports of agricultural and other primary products, and the chairman replied that this was the case.

I am satisfied that the United States and our other major trade partners fully understand Canada's position.

World trade in agricultural products presents particularly difficult problems. The normal trade rules have not been applied here, and efficient agricultural exporters like Canada have faced much frustration. It is significant therefore that agreement was reached in Geneva, including agreement by the European economic community, that agriculture shall be included in the negotiations. There is no doubt a settlement will be difficult to find, but with so much at stake, particularly with respect to wheat and other cereals, I can assure hon. members that the representatives of Canada at the forthcoming discussion will make every effort to ensure that these negotiations succeed. There are to be early meetings to discuss cereals and meats and a special group has been set up for dairy products.

These discussions may lead to new or revised international commodity arrangements.

In this connection, I would draw the attention of the house to the statement made Wednesday of this week in the British House of Commons by Mr. Christopher Soames, the minister of agriculture. I should also draw the attention of hon. members to the speech made by Lord Amory, which is on the same subject, reported in the Globe and Mail this morning. Mr. Soames forecast important changes in British agricultural support and import policies, and indicated British willingness to participate in further negotiations of international arrangements for temperate foodstuffs. I had the opportunity to discuss these matters with Mr. Soames, and we look forward to working closely with Britain, other importers and our fellow exporters of cereals and other products in the negotiations which are scheduled to open immediately.

Agreement at Geneva on the major points that I have mentioned was by no means easy. Much remains to be done and many difficulties overcome before there can be confidence that the various negotiations will yield a substantial and positive result. The stage has, however, been set for further progress if there is real willingness to make the negotiations a success. We propose, and I am now speaking in the name of Canada, to play a full and active part.

A busy timetable for negotiations has been agreed. In addition to the agricultural groups I have mentioned, a tariff negotiations committee will meet with a first task of working out the detailed negotiating rules by August 1. These preparations are to lead up to a major trade conference opening on May 4 of next year, which will bring together the various elements and carry the negotiations forward toward completion. In preparation for the negotiations the government will wish to consult fully with all Canadian interests which may be affected. Procedures to this end will be announced in due course.

As one of the world's leading trading nations, whose economic well-being heavily depends on trade, Canada has much to gain from the success of the negotiations and the new export opportunities that will be opened up. This is true for our manufacturing as for our agricultural and primary production. Lower trade barriers can contribute in an important way to the efficient development of Canadian industry on the basis of wider markets. Successful negotiations will provide the opportunity to develop an improved pattern of production and trade which would give a stimulus to Canadian growth and employment on a suitable and competitive basis and so contribute to the development of Canada and the prosperity of the Canadian people.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the house has listened with a great deal of interest to this report of the two meetings, one in London and one in Geneva, which the Minister of Trade and Commerce has just read to us. I think in some reports on international gatherings there is a tendency to exaggerate the results accomplished and to gloss over or minimize the difficulties which still remain to be resolved. As the minister has said, there are many difficulties in this area which have hardly been touched upon. I think, judging from press reports—and they were unanimous in this respect—that the conference at Geneva nearly broke down. It was not until the last day, and almost the last hour of the last day, that some agreement or some compromise was worked out which permitted the conference to adjourn, while officials carried on in attempting to establish some ground rules.

As I see it, that is about what was done. An agreement is to be reached on the ground rules under which future negotiations could be conducted. Apparently at the moment the officials will be engaged in trying to establish ground rules which would permit future negotiations.

The minister spoke about the complexity of the changing commonwealth which he found at London. I am sure that is a situation which everyone realizes, the complexity of the commonwealth and its rapidly changing basis, which perhaps explains why it is much more difficult to accomplish concrete objectives in that area when one is faced with this complexity than it is when one is on the outside and can airily suggest the ease with which these things could be accomplished.

In the press which, of course, I have seen this morning, it is reported that three of the commonwealth countries almost refused to concur in this tentative agreement, and with some reluctance they were persuaded to accept it. This is a report from the Wall Street Journal, not necessarily always an authentic and objective source of information, but it is fairly reliable. If it is correct I suppose the commonwealth countries referred to were Australia, New Zealand and Canada, and one must wonder what arguments were finally used to persuade them to accept.

Mr. MacEwan, the deputy premier of Australia, is quoted in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald of yesterday's date by Mr. Eric Dennis, who was in Geneva, as saying that this marked the death knell of the British commonwealth preferential system. If that report is correct—and everyone knows it has been United States policy for many years to bring about the destruction of the preferential system—it is certainly going to add to the problems of agriculture to which my hon. friend the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) referred yesterday. It will not only add to the problems of marketing wheat but also to apples, in which I have more than an academic interest at the moment.

In so far as Geneva is concerned, as the minister has said, he apparently took the position that we could not agree to a universal 50 per cent tariff cut across the board. I think it is fairly obvious why we should not. It must be remembered that throughout the years since the establishment of GATT, as the now Prime Minister said a short time ago in the House of Commons, Canada cooperated fully through all its governments in establishing the GATT principle, and as a result we have a low tariff structure in this country. If, for instance, we have an average tariff structure of 20 per cent and some other country has an average tariff structure of 40 per cent, then in agreeing to a 50 per cent cut we would end up with a 10 per cent average tariff and the other country would still have as high a tariff as we had at the beginning. It is quite obvious that some exception will be taken to that, and apparently the minister took such exception.

It is interesting to note, reading back through the discussions which took place in the last few months and years with respect to these negotiations, that there was on the part of the present Prime Minister almost enthusiastic acceptance of the 50 per cent cut across the board. The outcome simply goes to prove what we all know, that on the assumption of responsibility it is much more difficult to carry out airy promises and statements made before one has accepted such responsibility.

The minister has quoted from the chairman's statement at the end as to the compromise arrangement which is to be worked out. That quotation, of course, is reported absolutely objectively and correctly, but he did not quote the interview given by Mr. Christian Herter, who also was in Geneva, and who said these adjustments would only be made—I have forgotten the exact phrase—after proof of tariff and trade imbalances. Everyone knows the difficulty of proving such things. They can go on for years and years, so therefore we can only hope the statement of the chairman is not qualified by the statement made by Mr. Herter at the conclusion of the conference.

So far as we are concerned on this side of the house we of course give full support to any policy which will result in the widening of trade throughout the world, always of course with the reservation that Canada's interests be safeguarded. The Leader of the Opposition took that position when, some time ago, he suggested a conference of like-minded nations to President Kennedy, to accomplish a widening of world trade.

We are appreciative of the statement which the minister has given us this morning. We shall watch with interest the developments and negotiations, and we shall support all logical and proper steps to expand the trade of Canada.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): We in this group have listened with a great deal of interest to the report given by the minister on the two meetings, one in London and the other in Geneva. We endorse the suggestion he has made that we should be looking for a balance of advantage in these tariff negotiations rather than for a straight 50 per cent reduction or any other percentage of reduction.

We hope there will be some follow through of the interest which has been shown rather than paying lip service to the idea of reducing tariffs and then dismissing the subject out of hand, as was done by the previous government in 1957 when Britain put out a challenge to some of this lip service in favour of tariff reductions. We are pleased to find this emphasis being placed on the development of trade with so-called underdeveloped countries, particularly those within the commonwealth. We in this group believe this is an area where there is the greatest opportunity for trade expansion. We realize that because of the situation which has developed in the United States in the last few days with respect to wheat even more attention will be demanded by this aspect of our agricultural trade.

We wish the minister and his department well in these negotiations and hope they will have the courage to follow through when the items which come up for negotiation reach a point at which some specific action can be taken.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Trade and Commerce is to be commended for making a report to parliament so early after his return from attending the two meetings in London and Geneva. I was somewhat disappointed that his report on the commonwealth conference in London dealt with such generalities. I hope we shall have an early opportunity for a fuller discussion of this matter. Certainly the press reports emanating from London gave the impression that the minister, on behalf of Canada, had poured cold water on any idea of a commonwealth trading arrangement. This may not be an accurate report.

We all recognize that a commonwealth trading plan is no substitute for a world trading arrangement. However, it is true that we have very large markets in the commonwealth and particularly in Great Britain, markets which give us a considerable favourable balance in our trading relationships and which help to offset the imbalance in our trade with the United States. It is important that we should retain these markets and, if possible, expand them. While we are waiting for a world trading arrangement, which will undoubtedly take some time to work out, it would seem to the members of this party that no opportunity of strengthening and widening our present trading position within the commonwealth ought to be lost. After all, we cannot keep the commonwealth together merely by airy generalities about a common loyalty to the crown or a common faith in democratic institutions. It will have to be some practical thing which will have meaning particularly for the newly developing nations which have entered the commonwealth and which have serious trading problems at this time.

With reference to the Geneva conference, it is undoubtedly true that the earlier part of this conference was a great disappointment. The United States insistence on a linear or across the board reduction as against reductions on selected items meant that for a while there was the danger of a complete breakdown. I think the United States position may become less inflexible. If it does not, I am afraid the future prospects for GATT will be considerably dimmed. I hope that at an early date the government will take action to make possible a general debate on this matter so that we may have further information.

I had hoped that in the course of his report to the house the minister would have said something about whether the government is considering the introduction of a trade adjustment act which would set out the kind of compensation to be made available to various segments of our economy which might be adversely affected by tariff adjustments. I think a great deal of uneasiness would be removed if those large areas of our economy which might be affected by tariff adjustments, and other changes which we all recognize will have to be made, knew that legislative and administrative machinery were being provided in order that they might receive some compensation. There would be less uneasiness if they knew there was some period over which the adjustments might be made and that they would be put into effect in an orderly fashion without the dislocation which might follow should action be taken too suddenly.

I think the minister's report has been most useful, but I trust an early opportunity will be presented for fuller discussion so the hon. gentleman might answer questions and give the house further information.

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Arising out of the statement made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, in the course of which he said he had had some discussion with Mr. Soames, reference was also made to the fact that in the last couple of days discussions had taken place in the British House of Commons on the question of trade in general.

I would ask the hon. gentleman whether or not he had discussions with Mr. Soames on the question of British imports of agricultural products and, in particular, what Canadian agricultural exports to the United Kingdom are in contemplation by the British government as being subject to potential quotas if applied.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I am grateful to the Leader of the Opposition for giving me an opportunity of expanding the remarks I made in my statement.

I look upon the statement made by Mr. Soames as one of the more constructive developments of recent times. The United Kingdom government is reviewing its domestic agricultural policy, and Mr. Soames spoke to me about the relationship this would bear to imports of such things as cereals from Canada. He looked upon this as a means of enlarging markets for Canadian cereals in the United Kingdom, and of giving this market a stability which has not hitherto existed. That is why in my statement I did refer to what Mr. Soames had said, and also to what Lord Amory said yesterday. I think this is a most constructive development, and I trust the Leader of the Opposition will not be unduly concerned by what he reads in the newspapers.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am not unduly concerned by what I read in the newspapers. I am concerned with what was said in the British parliament the day before yesterday to the effect that in these discussions "we found a good deal of understanding for our general thesis that if they—" that is, the commonwealth countries among others—"are to obtain a reasonable return from our market there must be control over the conditions under which it is supplied."

I ask the minister this. What were the particular cereals and what is the nature of the controls, among others under discussion, which the minister apparently indicated he was prepared to support?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I do not think I could be expected to discuss British domestic policy in answer to this question. I should like to assure the Leader of the Opposition that the reason Mr. Soames spoke to me—indeed, he gave me in advance the text of the remarks from which the Leader of the Opposition quoted—was to assure me that these developments were very constructive from Canada's point of view and were designed to give us a more secure share of the British market for the products, particularly cereals, in which we have a direct interest.

UNITED NATIONS

REFUSAL OF RUSSIA TO PAY SHARE OF COSTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question of urgent importance to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It concerns a situation which seems to be deteriorating every day. In the absence of the minister perhaps I can address my question to the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister inform the house what Canada will suggest or what she is prepared to do to meet the critical financial problems of the United Nations now that the Soviet union has again informed the United Nations that she does not intend to pay or to assist in paying any of the $200 million loan or a share of many obligations of the United Nations?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is, of course, most regrettable that the Soviet union or any other member of the United Nations refuses to accept and live up to its financial obligations in respect of the United Nations. Notwithstanding that, the Canadian government, as in the past, will play its full part financially and otherwise to ensure that the work of the United Nations can go on. Proposals have been made by the Canadian delegation at the recent assembly meeting dealing with these financial matters. My hon. friend the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who will be speaking in the debate on Monday, will have something to say on this matter in greater detail.

(Translation):

MINES AND TECHNICAL SURVEYS

QUEBEC—DEFINITION OF QUEBEC-LABRADOR BOUNDARY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. Could the minister tell the house if he has received from the governments of Quebec and Newfoundland an official request to define the Labrador-New Quebec boundary line?

Hon. W. M. Benidickson (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to the hon. member for advising me beforehand that he would ask me a question in French today. Would he allow me to answer it in English?

(Text):

Since assuming my portfolio I have not received any communication of the nature referred to by the hon. member.

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: Could I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker? Does the government intend to assume its responsibilities and to bring together the two parties interested in order to define those boundaries?

(Text):

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Speaker, it is my intention to call a meeting on this matter in the near future.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—ASSISTANCE TO FEDERAL GOVERNMENT BY U.S. OFFICIALS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the premier of British Columbia has disclosed that since the end of last year he has had the free services of Mr. Robert B. Anderson, former United States secretary of the treasury in the Eisenhower government, to assist him in negotiations with United States officials, would the Prime Minister inform the house if the government of Canada has found it necessary to secure the services of any United States official to assist it in negotiations with respect to the Columbia river treaty?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): To the best of my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, no; certainly not since this government has taken office.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

GREAT LAKES—ACTION FOLLOWING STATEMENT BY U.S. UNION HEAD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Can he indicate to the house the nature of the assurances that he has received from Mr. Rusk, the United States secretary of state, in connection with the dispute on the great lakes?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, when the statement appeared yesterday in the press on this matter, issued by the head of the seamen's international union of the United States, I thought the statement was unhelpful, to say the least. Therefore I asked at once to see Mr. Rusk, who was in Ottawa, and I discussed the matter with him. The assurance he gave me last night was the only assurance he could give me, that he would take the matter up at once at a higher level with his own government. He has done that, and I heard from him this morning to the effect that the government of the United States is taking this matter under urgent consideration—that is, the statement which appeared yesterday—and I expect that during the course of the day a statement will be made in Washington on behalf of the government which I hope will be more helpful, to say the least, than the one issued yesterday by the head of the seamen's international union.

(Translation):

QUEBEC—STRIKE AT SOLBEC COPPER MINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Has he received a report concerning the strike which is still affecting 200 miners of the Solbec Copper Mines in Quebec since March 1?

(Text):

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): No, Mr. Speaker.

(Translation):

[Later:]

QUEBEC—CONTROL OF NON-FERROUS MINING BY NORANDA COMPANY

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. Could he intervene in order to put an end to the feudal system now existing in the mining industry in the province of Quebec, which is under the control of Noranda Mines Incorporated, as far as non-ferrous metals are concerned?

(Text):

Hon. W. M. Benidickson (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, I will take notice of the hon. member's question and look into the matter of the dispute to which he refers.

BRITISH COLUMBIA—INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF CONCILIATION BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Can the minister tell the house when we may expect the report of the federal board of conciliation set up to determine the dispute between the longshoremen's union and the B.C. shipping federation?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the expectation is that the report will be delivered between the 25th and the end of May. It should be available very shortly.

DRUGS

SYSTEM FOR DISSEMINATION OF INFORMATION ON ADVERSE REACTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, but before doing so I would, with your permission, congratulate her publicly on heading the best department of government and the department which reaches into the homes of more Canadians than any other department. I am sure that she will find it a rewarding experience.

My question is this. As a result of the adoption by the world health organization of the proposal made by Canada to that body approximately one year ago to the effect that a system of rapid dissemination of information on adverse drug reactions be set up, could the minister tell the house how soon the machinery for the implementation of this proposal will be in operation?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, may I thank the hon. member for his gracious remarks. I agree with him with respect to the efficacy of the department and the very high quality of all those who are now and have been in the past associated with it. I must, however, ask my hon. friend to permit me to take this question as notice in lieu of written notice.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

SUGGESTED PROGRAM OF DISPOSAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. Yesterday the parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister said in his speech that he thought that we should develop a mechanism for selling off crown corporations. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether this is government policy and, if so, would he indicate which crown corporations are likely to be sold off?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is not a matter of government policy.

FINANCE

QUEBEC—CONSULTATIONS RESPECTING LOANS TO MUNICIPALITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Did any member of his government communicate with Premier Lesage, or any other member of the Quebec government, before the proposal for loans to municipalities was announced?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the policy to which my hon. friend refers has not yet been announced in the house. When we reach this matter, which I hope will be shortly, the house will be given complete information about the discussions leading up to this resolution.

[Mr. Monteith.]

FISHERIES

NORTH PACIFIC COMMISSION—EXTENSION OF JAPANESE FISHING RIGHTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs. Would the minister state precisely what action the government has taken with regard to the finding of the international north Pacific fisheries commission that certain stocks of fish no longer qualify for abstention under the terms of the North Pacific Fisheries Convention Act?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to take that question as notice.

COAL

REMOVAL OF TARIFF ON IMPORTS FROM U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the minister of mines is now in a position to answer the question I posed on Wednesday.

Hon. W. M. Benidickson (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria asked whether the government was giving consideration to the removal of the tariff on United States coal imported into Canada. In so far as my responsibility is concerned I have seen only some representations from importers like Ontario Hydro, but I am sure this is a matter which would normally be answered by the Minister of Finance at budget time.

[Later:]

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I have been waiting patiently to see whether the Minister of Finance would take over from where his colleague the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys left off with my question. I wonder whether I might now redirect the same question to the Minister of Finance. Is the government giving consideration to the removal of the tariff on United States coal imported into Canada?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there have been representations on this matter and on many other matters affecting the tariff, all of which are being considered, and any decisions of the government will be announced when the budget is delivered.

(Translation):

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

ACTION TO PREVENT SHIPMENT OF FOREIGN LOTTERY TICKETS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General.

Since lotteries are illegal in Canada and it is publicly known that tremendous quantities of foreign sweepstake tickets are sent by mail in Canada, does the minister intend to take appropriate steps to remedy the situation?

Hon. Azellus Denis (Postmaster General): First, may I say that I do not have to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his question because he failed to do so.

I must say, however, that every time delinquents are uncovered, the correspondence is seized and, in many cases, the hon. member and many others come to see us to request that the law be not applied in certain cases.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The Postmaster General alluded to an alleged attempt on my part to obstruct justice in the field of lotteries. I think the minister's answer should be withdrawn since I never made any request to the hon. member for St. Denis or to any other minister to hinder the enforcement of the law. The minister's answer is evasive and undoubtedly caused by his ignorance of what is going on in his own department. I think the minister should withdraw his allegation.

Mr. Speaker: I shall consider the report later on today.

(Text):

Mr. Valade: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, the minister has just made a very disloyal remark about me—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I understood what the hon. member said, and I said I will examine the report later this day.

[Later:]

Mr. Valade: Mr. Deputy Speaker, I have a question of privilege I want to raise. I regret that the Postmaster General is not in the house. This morning I raised a question of privilege to Mr. Speaker which was supposed to be taken into consideration and a ruling made this afternoon. Am I right to raise a question of privilege under article 17, page 10 of the standing orders, which says that a question of privilege should be taken into consideration and discussed immediately it happens? I accepted the point that His Honour was perhaps not ready to consider the matter but I think it is very urgent because of its implications and I think I should be given the right to discuss it right away.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder, sir, if the hon. member would permit me to raise a point of order.

Mr. Valade: Well—

Mr. Pickersgill: I think it is always permissible to raise a point of order about any matter. My point of order is a very simple one. The hon. gentleman quite correctly raised his question of privilege immediately and His Honour the Speaker took it under advisement and said he would deal with it later this day. At the time the hon. member accepted His Honour's disposition of the matter, which was merely postponement. There have been many other occasions, sir, when a question of privilege has been postponed after having been taken up.

I feel quite sure that when His Honour the Speaker himself is in the chair he will be very glad to hear the hon. member, but it does seem to me that His Honour himself should be here to hear it. The hon. member would just have to make his argument a second time when His Honour was here and I wonder if he would consider, without having any formal disposition of the point of order, waiting until His Honour is personally in the chair.

Mr. Churchill: On the point of order, the house will have to know whether Mr. Speaker himself is going to be here and at what time. Second, on a matter such as this involving a question of privilege it may be that the Speaker will rule that the words spoken should be withdrawn and this should appear in Hansard very close to the words that are alluded to. If deferment continues until say a quarter to six this afternoon it is too late in the order of proceedings to be effective. Therefore I think the hon. member should have the right to raise his point now and have it decided upon immediately.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if I could say a word about that. I feel quite sure we might ask His Honour the Speaker to direct that the proceedings relating to this matter be placed together. Mr. Speaker, before Your Honour took the chair the hon. member for St. Mary raised the question of privilege he raised earlier today which Your Honour asked to have deferred until this afternoon. I interrupted the hon. member on a point of order with his consent to suggest that the matter be held over until Your Honour was in the chair. I suggested that without any formal disposition of the point of order we should agree to await the return to the chair of Your Honour. Your Honour has now returned.

Meanwhile the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre raised a point which seems to have a lot of validity, namely that the hon. member for St. Mary would wish to have the proceedings that we are now entering upon at this point appear in Hansard at the same point where he first raised his question of privilege. It seems to me that it would be within the competence of Your Honour to suggest to the Hansard editor that these proceedings, although they are taking place now, be inserted in Hansard immediately after the point at which the hon. gentleman raised his question of privilege. I am not sure whether that can be done, but if it can be it would seem to me that it would be within the competence of the house to so order. It would seem to me that it would be only fair and right that it should be done and it would meet the point that the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre has raised.

Mr. Churchill: I would just add the suggestion that sometimes questions of privilege are involved and the proceedings are lengthy, and it might upset the orderly printing of Hansard to print the full proceedings on this point in the place that is suggested by the Secretary of State. What would be possible perhaps would be to insert at the proper place in Hansard a reference to the proceedings which are now under way which would direct the attention of anyone reading Hansard to the full account.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think that is an admirable suggestion. I wonder whether we could have an order of the house that it be done in the way the hon. member suggests.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Mr. Valade: On the point of order, may I add that to complete the whole matter it may also be necessary to make an adjustment with regard to the reply of the Postmaster General. The correction asked for by the Speaker or the correction in fact made by the minister involved should also be included at the same point.

Mr. Pickersgill: We are being very informal about this, Mr. Speaker. I have asked that a message be sent to the Postmaster General to ask him to come into the house if he is available. I wonder whether the hon. member for St. John's East might be allowed to complete his speech. Then the hon. member for St. Mary could be recognized and raise his point of order and we would hope that by that time the Postmaster General would be here too.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Later:]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Royal.

Mr. Churchill: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the Postmaster General has now returned to the house. Could we continue the point of privilege?

(Translation):

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, this morning, after I had asked the Postmaster General (Mr. Denis) what attitude his department intended to adopt to remedy the situation which exists when persons connected with foreign lotteries are using the mail service to send lottery tickets to Canada, the Postmaster General made the following statement, and I am quoting it as transcribed at 11.55 a.m. on the blues of today's Hansard.

> I must say, however, that every time delinquents are uncovered, the correspondence is seized and, in many cases, the hon. member and many others come to see us to request that the law be not applied in certain cases.

Those remarks, I submit, are unparliamentary, out of order and ought to be withdrawn by the Postmaster General.

This morning I rose on a question of privilege, as I was entitled to under standing order 17 of the house, page 10, which stipulates that whenever a matter of privilege arises it shall be taken into consideration immediately.

I agreed, at Your Honour's request, to wait until we had the official report.

I am of the opinion that the Postmaster General has violated the standing orders of the house, as shown in particular by Bourinot's citation found in Beauchesne, at page 96, citation 105, paragraph 2, which I want to call to your attention.

(Text):

I quote from Beauchesne, page 96:

> Bourinot, page 303, quotes an ancient authority as saying: "Whether any question is or is not before the house, and even in the midst of another discussion, if a member should rise to complain of a breach of privileges of the house, they have always instantly heard him."

Now, sir, I should like to refer you to another citation in Beauchesne, page 155, citation 128, in which it is stated that any expression which may be disrespectful to the house, or painful to the feelings of individual members, may be explained, apologized for, or retracted.

(Translation):

The implication that the hon. member for St. Denis, the present Postmaster General, made this morning to the effect that I or other members of the house intervened in the administration of his department to impede the enforcement of the Post Office Act, is absolutely false and contrary to the facts.

I would therefore ask you, sir, to call on the minister to withdraw unconditionally the statement he made this morning concerning me.

Hon. Azellus Denis (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I should like to answer that serious accusation about a statement which is of no consequence whatsoever. If the hon. member for St. Mary had taken the trouble of assessing the meaning of the words I used, that is "members often come to see me", he would have realized that I meant no insult. People often ask that the application of the law be suspended in certain cases.

Sometimes the Post Office Department is at fault, or someone might post in all good faith a letter that should not be posted because it contains lottery tickets.

I had no intention whatsoever to suggest that the hon. member for St. Mary was breaking the law. I simply told him that hon. members often made representations with a view to restoring the mail service to certain persons because they had inadvertently, but in all good faith, used the mails to send some illegal matter. I am sorry if the hon. member for St. Mary thought he was being singled out. This was not directed to him personally, but to all hon. members in general. If the hon. member were ever to find that the mail of one of his friends or constituents has been seized, either by mistake, or through some misunderstanding, when that person was acting in all good faith, I can assure him that I would gladly do my utmost to oblige him.

(Text):

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I believe that the minister has once more evaded this question. The written words that appear in Hansard today are the following, and I quote again from the French—

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder, sir, if I might rise on a point of order.

Mr. Valade: I am speaking to a point of privilege.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am rising on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member is seeking to quote what he says are proofs. I understood it was a rule of this house that proofs were not available to any hon. member. The only record available is the printed Hansard. This question has come up many times in the House. It seems to me that if the hon. gentleman recalls from his own recollection what was said, that is permissible in debate. However, the hon. member should not have a privilege which is not accorded to every hon. member, of seeing the Hansard record before it is available to other hon. members.

Since this is a very important point of order, sir, that is apt to arise on many occasions, I think it should be decided. I know the former prime minister raised this matter himself on one occasion in the parliament before the last.

Mr. Pigeon: When?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sure the right hon. gentleman recalls it, as many other hon. members do. It has arisen on a great many occasions. It seems to me that this point of order should be settled because it is apt to arise again.

Mr. Valade: On the point of order raised by the Secretary of State, I should like to say he is in error when he says that these blues are not available. If he had read the correspondence sent to him at the opening of the session he would find we all received a small booklet concerning the rules of the house. In this booklet we were informed that one hour after the notes were taken by the stenographers we could read the transcript. This just indicates that the hon. member for Bonavista-Twisting Gates—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think I have a question of privilege here.

Mr. Valade: —the hon. member for Bonavista is twisting again the truth of this matter.

Mr. Speaker: May I interrupt the hon. member? I think he is quite right in raising his point of privilege. Of course, points of privilege in this house are extremely important; therefore I think he is quite right in raising it. In so far as the question of these notes or proofs are concerned, these are only proofs of what the hon. member has said. As we all know, hon. members have the privilege of seeing what they have said and correcting it if necessary. This is not proof, and the only proof we have is the Hansard record when it is delivered to us, perhaps tomorrow.

Therefore on that particular point I would say that he is not dealing with proof but he is only dealing with the verbatim notes. I have, for example, just received those notes. I said this morning that when I had an opportunity of seeing exactly what was said I could give some attention to the matter. I must say to the hon. member for St. Mary that it seems to me, while he is quite right in raising his matter of privilege immediately, nevertheless the Postmaster General has endeavoured in his humorous way, perhaps not so humorous this afternoon, to give satisfaction if I may put it that way, without resort to arms.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege affecting all hon. members because the Postmaster General, who gave a reply to the hon. member for St. Mary (Mr. Valade), implicated all hon. members of the house. He said the hon. member may not have done this or that himself, but the minister also said "I am referring to all hon. members". Then he said "Some hon. members have done this". If he is going to mention some hon. members let him name the hon. members who have contravened the act, as he said this morning. The words he has not denied appear to be "the hon. member and many others have asked that the act not apply in certain cases". I myself have never approached any postmaster general with regard to any problem whatsoever, so here you have the present Postmaster General casting an implication on all hon. members of the house. I think the only course open to him is a complete withdrawal, without any qualification, of the words he has used.

Mr. Speaker: Before the Postmaster General speaks may I suggest to him now is the moment to give a complete and full statement. I am sure he will realize the full implications.

(Translation):

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to comply with the request of the former minister of national defence, so that we can resume the business of the house. I withdraw anything I have said and which might have offended anybody. I had no intention of insulting anybody, but I merely wanted to say that post office officials are sometimes mistaken and that hon. members intervene to suspend the application of the law since it was misinterpreted by the Post Office Department.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I rise again on a question of privilege. The Postmaster General did not say that he was withdrawing the words which referred to me personally, to the effect that I had intervened in the affairs of his department.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker, I want to repeat this in English so that our friends across the border will grasp more clearly what I said. I said that the Postmaster General has not withdrawn the specific statement he made on my behalf, that I as a member of the house intervened in the application of the law of his department, and this is the phrase I want him to withdraw.

Mr. Speaker: I do not wish to disagree with the hon. member for St. Mary but I certainly did not get that implication and I am sure it was not intended.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INDIA—INQUIRY AS TO MILITARY AID

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I have a question that I hoped to address to the Minister of National Defence. Perhaps in his absence I could address it to the Prime Minister.

In view of the published reports that the government of India is requesting more conventional arms aid from the United States and Canada to aid her defence against red China, can the Prime Minister advise the house whether the government of India has requested such conventional arms aid from the government of Canada? If so, will the Prime Minister advise the house as to the Canadian government's response to such request?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in regard to the first half of the question, it is true that a few days ago the minister of defence of the government of India was in Ottawa with other Indian officials and did ask the government to look into the question of military assistance to the government of India in defence of its frontiers against the threat of invasion from communist China.

This matter is now under consideration, and I hope my colleague the Minister of National Defence at the appropriate time will be able to report to the house on it. The request, incidentally, was not made in detail; it was merely that the government should give sympathetic consideration to any possibility it might be able to discover of helping India in this regard.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the announcement that Mr. Jack Macbeth has been appointed executive assistant to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, is this an indication that the truth squad is being reassembled?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can certainly understand the interest of my hon. friends in truth.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

REPORTED U.S. INTENTION TO REDUCE ORDERS IN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Defence Production. In view of the report in the Financial Post of May 25 that the dollar squeeze of the United States government will crimp defence orders placed in Canada, I wonder whether the minister would advise the house as to what action he will be taking in this regard; that is, by way of meeting his counterparts in the United States on the matter of joint defence orders, which are so important to many firms and employees in this country.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Defence Production): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to be able to say a word on this important question. The government is fully seized of the importance of continuing the highly successful defence sharing program which was initiated some years ago and which is currently in difficulty as a consequence of the currency arrangements in the United States. Perhaps some misunderstanding has arisen in the last year between the Canadian and United States governments on this subject. It is my hope that within the next week it will be possible to continue the conversations already initiated with Mr. McNamara in Ottawa, leading to a satisfactory solution of this problem.

SUGAR

POSSIBILITY OF IMPORTS FROM CUBA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to direct to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the acute shortage of sugar in this country, and in the light of Cuba's recent statement respecting the availability of a sugar supply from that country, can the minister say what the situation is in regard to importing sugar from Cuba in line with our trade in non-strategic materials?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I regret that I cannot answer the question at the moment, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps I will be able to obtain some information, which I will give later.

TRANSPORT

CAPE TORMENTINE, N.B.-BORDEN, P.E.I.—CONSTRUCTION OF NEW FERRY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Yesterday, in reply to a question I asked, the minister said in part that funds are available in this year's estimates. I presume he was referring to the estimates tabled in the house by the previous government, or was he referring to estimates which have not yet been tabled?

An hon. Member: Were they tabled?

Mr. MacLean (Queens): They were.

Mr. Benidickson: No, that procrastination is of a former government.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, if I was guilty of being premature in disclosing some information to the house I must apologize, but I assure the hon. member that I was not speaking for the last government.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Was the minister speaking for the present one? I presume, Mr. Speaker, that the minister disclosed something that he expects will be in the estimates when they are tabled.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I think the estimates, when they are tabled, will make the hon. member quite happy.

RAILWAY BRANCH LINES—MORATORIUM ON APPLICATIONS FOR ABANDONMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the great concern on the prairies regarding railway branch line abandonment, could I ask the minister whether the railways are continuing their voluntary moratorium on making applications for abandonment until such time as government legislation is brought down to provide for orderly dealing with this matter. If not, will the minister request the railways so to do?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I should like to tell the hon. member that a committee of cabinet is dealing with this very subject at the present time and is considering the matter very carefully in all its aspects. As to the question of applications before the board of transport commissioners, I noticed that the hon. member used the word "making". I do not want to give him a technical answer, but I would point out that a request has been made to the railways to provide information as to the complete program they envisage so there can be thorough treatment of the whole subject in a responsible way. The subject is under very active consideration at the moment, and he can be quite sure that no abandonments are taking place without the whole matter of policy being considered very carefully and no decisions are being taken, or without an opportunity for an appropriate hearing for those persons in the west who may be concerned.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question. I thank the minister for the information, but I still would like the first part of my question answered. Are the railways continuing their voluntary moratorium on making applications for abandonment, or have they resumed the practice of making applications?

Mr. McIlraith: No, they are continuing their voluntary restraint in this regard. I did want to check the hon. member on the use of the word "making". I have made a request that they advise us as to all possible applications that they might wish to make. That was the point I wanted to clarify for him.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REPRESENTATION OF CONSTITUENCY OF NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State whether he has yet received an answer from the chief electoral officer with regard to the representation of the Northwest Territories in this house.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I find that my surmise was quite correct, that the writ has not yet been returned, that the official count has only very recently been made, and it will be returned just as soon as it is physically possible for it to be done.

Mr. Churchill: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister says it will be returned just as soon as it is physically possible for it to be done. In this age of air travel and rapid communication surely it could be done much more rapidly than the minister suggests.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is an old and experienced parliamentarian and knows perfectly well that the government has no control whatsoever over the machinery of the chief electoral officer; nor should it have, in a free country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Secretary of State, as a supplementary question, whether he will give every assistance to the chief electoral officer, as the government should, to expedite the return of a member of this house.

Mr. Pickersgill: I will be only too pleased to do so, sir. I think the hon. gentleman will find that when vacancies occur in the house this government will expedite the work of the chief electoral officer, which was not done by the previous government.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: Disorder.

Mr. Churchill: We have now had a reply from the minister which ranges far beyond the answer that should have been given—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: —and I suggest that Your Honour direct the attention of the Secretary of State to the rule which you read out yesterday from the rule book and from Beauchesne.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the hon. gentleman, and in future I will try not to range.

DISPOSITION OF PORTRAITS OF FORMER PRIME MINISTERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, two days ago the junior member for Queens asked me a question with reference to several paintings of former prime ministers which have been removed from the centre block. I wish to inform him that these paintings are now being cleaned and repaired, and as soon as the work has been completed they will be put in their usual place.

(Translation):

ARTS, LETTERS AND SCIENCES

APPOINTMENT OF CHAIRMAN OF COMMISSION ON BICULTURALISM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson). Could he tell the house if he has recently been in communication, either by correspondence or verbally, with Mr. Jean Louis Gagnon, of the province of Quebec, for the purpose of appointing him as chairman of the royal commission on biculturalism?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no.

Mr. Gregoire: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the Prime Minister assure the house that appointments in that case will not be of a political nature and will not constitute a reward to former supporters? (Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is quite a hypothetical question, and as such is not admissible.

AGRICULTURE

SOYBEANS—REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF SUPPORT PRICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent, Ont.): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture, and only the urgency of a crop having already been planted prevents me from placing the question on the order paper. Can the minister inform the house when we may expect an announcement by the government of the support price for soybeans under the Agricultural Stabilization Act? Would the minister give consideration to a support price of $2.50 per bushel as requested by the soybean growers, rather than the $2.40 a bushel which the hon. member for Essex East indicated at a meeting in Tilbury, Ontario, on March 25 last?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think this matter can wait until Monday. I have had no notice of the question, and I should like the hon. member to put it on the order paper.

IMMIGRATION

WELDON CHAN—INQUIRY AS TO ADMISSION AS LANDED IMMIGRANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ron Basford (Vancouver-Burrard): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Is he giving consideration to the admission of Mr. Weldon Chan to Canada as a landed immigrant?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, although I did not have the privilege of receiving notice of this question may I inform and assure the hon. gentleman that this question is at present under serious consideration by me, and I will be in a position to report to the house about the middle of next week.

HOUSING

REFINANCING OF N.H.A. MORTGAGES TO COVER IMPROVEMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Revenue. In view of the widespread public interest in the matter, can the minister advise the house if he was interviewed by the Ontario retail lumber dealers association to introduce a plan for refinancing N.H.A. mortgages to cover home improvements? In the event that the minister was so interviewed, can he advise the house as to his response to this request?

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I suggest that the hon. member put his question on the order paper. I do not see any urgency. May I also call the attention of hon. members to the fact that it is now considerably after twelve o'clock noon, and unless there are questions of urgency I wonder whether we could get on with orders of the day.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed, from Thursday, May 23, consideration of the motion of Miss Pauline Jewett for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to the speech from the throne delivered by His Excellency the Administrator at the opening of the session.

Mr. O. W. Weichel (Waterloo North): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege for me to take part in the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne. Before going on with my remarks I should like to congratulate you, Mr. Speaker, and the Deputy Speaker on your appointments to your important positions. May I also take this opportunity to congratulate the mover and seconder of the address in reply for their very fine presentations.

I was pleased to hear in the speech from the throne that the government plans to continue the fight against unemployment and will not relax the efforts that have been going on to boost production and co-operate closely with industry. Such promises as a department of industry and an economic council will, I am sure, be welcomed by Canadians as further steps in our continuing battle to provide jobs for as many of our citizens as possible, and to help us to compete with other nations in trade. As you all know, Canada's gross national product last year increased by 7 per cent, a record unsurpassed in the western world, and our record of economic stability was better than that of any other free nation.

You are aware also that employment rose and Canada's external trade reached a record $12.5 billion.

But this fine record, made possible only through co-operation between government and industry, is no reason for us to relax our efforts. We will face growing competition from nations behind the iron curtain which have vowed to bury us in an economic war. The common market countries, now just beginning to flex their muscles, will progressively lower their tariffs and make it tougher for us to sell our goods abroad. During the next three or four years the United States, as a result of Mr. Kennedy's trade bill, will be slashing tariffs in order to compete.

What I mean to emphasize is that with protective tariffs steadily falling in this highly competitive world of the next few years, Canadian producers will have to stand more and more on their own feet. We cannot rest on the records we have chalked up. Instead, we will have to bend our efforts toward devising new ways, new ideas to meet this growing trade challenge.

With this thought in mind, Mr. Speaker, I should like to dwell for a few minutes on a move under way in my constituency of Waterloo North, a move that every community in Canada might do well to copy and a move deserving of support from our new government. I am sure most of you have heard something about it because it received extensive press, radio and television coverage in its initial stage. I am referring to the work going ahead leading to the creation of a labour-management forum to bring about a better understanding between both sides and subsequently boost production and sales.

The plan is to enroll the help of the entire community in the bustling industrial area of Kitchener-Waterloo, where the forum will function, in order to insure its success. Both Mayor Hymen and Mayor Bauer of the two cities agreed, immediately following the first public meeting at which the idea was endorsed, to form a steering committee with respresentatives of labour and management. Two of those directly concerned are George Goebel, president of the Kitchener-Waterloo and district labour council, and Dr. R. V. Yohe, president of B.F. Goodrich Canada Limited. These men have been working quietly but diligently with plans for more public meetings this fall and winter in an effort to put the forum's principles into practice.

Representatives of all segments of the community, including churches, service clubs and other associations, will be joining other delegates from labour and management in discussing common problems and possible solutions. It is hoped that in this way an air of understanding of both sides will begin to permeate through the community. The result, it is expected, will be greater mutual trust and a spirit of co-operation such as is found in European countries.

The founding meeting of this forum, believed to be the first of its kind in North America, drew a crowd of some 700 people in Kitchener. The stimulus for such a get together arose from a Conservative government sponsored mission to Europe last summer. Dr. Yohe, a member of this mission, returned to Canada so impressed with the results of similar projects in Europe that he set about laying the groundwork for a labour management forum in his own community. In fact Dr. Yohe sees such action as almost compulsory for the survival of Canada in this world of competitive trade. I do not believe we can stress too strongly the fact that co-operation among labour, management and government has been the major force in the fantastic post-war economic recovery in Europe.

Of course you might say that conditions in Europe in the years following the war were somewhat different from those existing in Canada today. Their economies were at a standstill, on the verge of collapse, whereas our economy is thriving today. You might say, too, that the widespread despair in post-war Europe was a tremendous stimulus to teamwork and did help to remove prejudice. Here in Canada we have no such despair. However, I feel strongly that the threat of competition we face from other trading nations should be great enough to compel us to forget past prejudices and work together. When Dr. Yohe uses the term "survival" I do not think he is exaggerating. As a member of this national productivity council mission he has visited Europe and has seen what has been accomplished and what competition our products will have to face in the years ahead.

Although we have just completed a banner trade year, not enough of our success has been due to labour-management co-operation. This lack of co-operative spirit so far has made it difficult for our products to compete with those of the European nations in quality, design, price and service. I confess, though, that many of our firms have excellent relations between employer and employee. However, I believe you all know that in many of our industries strife and bitterness between these two factions are deeply rooted and strong. This was equally true in Europe, so the results prove that co-operation is possible if it is seen that survival is at stake.

If we cannot submerge these frictions, which in most cases have prevented labour and management from working together to cut costs and improve quality, we will have to wage the battle for markets under a severe handicap. I think Dr. Yohe and Mr. Goebel, as well as all the others instrumental in promoting this forum in Kitchener, are to be commended. I feel that the crowd of 700 who turned out for the meeting out of which this forum was born are also to be commended for their interest and foresight.

At the risk of being accused of bragging about my home constituency I suggest it might have been expected that Waterloo North would take the lead role in such a project. The area has a record of stability in industry and business. The people of the constituency are a fine blend of many nationalities and are progressive, hard working folk with a fine record of industrial development. Even during our recession of a few years ago the Kitchener-Waterloo area, one of varied industries, was not hard hit and today enjoys the distinction of being one of the lowest areas of unemployment in Canada.

I do feel, Mr. Speaker, that the Kitchener labour-management forum will bear fruit. I think it is taking the right approach that co-operation in industry is not a government responsibility. This co-operation should start with the worker and his employer. Other communities, I understand, are watching the Waterloo North project closely. They might well follow the Kitchener-Waterloo example by starting at the grass roots with similar forums to hammer out an understanding of how effective co-operation can be developed. At first these forums could function independently of government so that no one could suggest there were any political implications in such projects. However, in the long run government co-operation would be necessary, because I believe all possible resources must be pooled in this fight for economic survival.

I strongly believe, Mr. Speaker, that forums of this kind, aided ultimately by the government, can play a major role in meeting trade competition with other countries. If we properly pursue the objectives outlined for the Kitchener-Waterloo forum I feel that we can not only successfully meet this trade threat, but we can also look forward to higher employment throughout the nation and even a higher standard of living for all Canadians.

Mr. Robert Temple (Hastings South): Mr. Speaker, in opening my remarks today may I first of all offer you my congratulations on your election to your high office. It is obvious to us all, sir, from the manner in which you have conducted yourself that no mistake was made. The fairness and impartiality you have shown have emphasized this.

I come from the riding of Hastings South in the province of Ontario, an old and historic riding in that province. It is a mixed constituency, rural and urban, containing the city of Belleville, the town of Trenton, the villages of Tweed, Deseronto and Frankford, four rural townships and two large R.C.A.F. bases. Being in that part of the country it is, of course, a beautiful riding. As a matter of fact it cannot escape being so because it adjoins the riding of Northumberland, which is a very fine place indeed.

I was born and raised in the city of Belleville. I am very proud of my home and my constituency, which I hope I shall represent well in this house. I am extremely honoured to be a member of the house. In fact for many years I thought, one might almost say dreamed of participating in the deliberations of the House of Commons, and now I am fully conscious of the honour bestowed on me by the voters in my constituency.

I should like to compliment the Prime Minister, the government and the Minister of Trade and Commerce upon the excellent efforts they are making in the field of trade. This is a matter of great consequence to all ridings and most certainly to Hastings South, because there we produce certain articles and items of such high standards that they can be sold and exported.

In Belleville we have what to us is a large manufacturing plant, the Northern Electric Company, employing some 1,000 people. Recently they have designed a switching system for television networks. It is unique of its kind, has already gone into production, and the first order has been received. The Bata Shoe Company in Batawa produces shoe machinery which is exported to the United States, Australia, Iraq and many other free countries in the world. The Central Bridge Company in Trenton manufactures structural steel and the Stephens-Adamson Company in Belleville are experts in conveying machinery and receive orders from many parts of Canada, the United States and other regions of the world. Of the 115 million pounds of cheese produced in Canada last year, eastern and central Ontario produced almost half. This cheese is a quality product; in fact Canadian cheese can compete anywhere in the world.

So I wish to compliment the new government upon its efforts to expand our trade because, as I say, we do have quality products which must be exported. The reason I stress trade is that over the years we have come more and more toward having one economic class in Canada. We do not have a division of great wealth on the one hand and great poverty on the other, but if we do not expand our trade in this rapidly changing world we shall again be faced with a great division of wealth, a few people having the vast majority of it and the rest of the population having very little. Should that happen then the state of our democratic institutions can and will suffer.

Like so many other hon. members I am of mixed blood, of mixed racial descent.

(Translation):

One of my grandmothers was French speaking; her name was Gariepy. She lived in the big and beautiful city of Montreal. I should add that I too live in a beautiful city.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker, this government is taking positive and correct steps to improve the economic conditions of Canada, and I look to the day, which I hope is not far off, when we Canadians will consider a university education in the same way we now regard a high school education, as available to all people, based on their ability and application and not on their economic circumstances. We cannot afford to lag behind in this rapidly progressing world, and if we rely on yesterday's knowledge we will end up out of touch with reality.

In conclusion may I say I am certain this government will encourage private initiative. The thing which concerns me more than any other is that as legislation is introduced, both now and over the years to come, it be so carefully scrutinized, as has been the case in this house previously, that no individual liberties will be lost; because if we start losing our individual rights then little by little we shall tend to lose them all and, if we do that, we shall have lost everything.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Before beginning my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I wish to extend to you my very best wishes and congratulations on assuming the office of our chairman as Speaker, and to congratulate you on the efficient manner in which you have conducted your duties to date. It seems to me that you have not yet had the misfortune to become embroiled in the difficulties your predecessor encountered at the beginning of the last parliament, and I sincerely hope this may continue through the current session.

(Translation):

I present also my congratulations to the chairman of the committees of the whole and Deputy Speaker of the house who has already proved that he knew the rules thoroughly.

The movers of the address in reply to the speech from the throne have discharged their responsibilities with great talent and I congratulate both of them most warmly for their magnificent contribution.

[Mr. Temple.]

(Text):

Mr. Speaker, I shall have something to say about the contents of one of these speeches later, but I do congratulate the hon. members for their conciseness and the easy delivery they displayed.

The speech from the throne at the beginning of each session of parliament is an important indication of the intentions of the government. However at the beginning of a new parliament, and especially with a new government, it becomes doubly interesting to carefully examine the speech from the throne in order to find the direction in which the government intends to proceed. We consider the document along with the accompanying speeches and actions to see where it is leading.

This is a comparatively short speech from the throne. That would not in any way detract from its importance if it were concise and to the point. But in this case, after the first 15 paragraphs of generalities, in my opinion the operative part of the speech is directed toward the establishment of boards, commissions and councils without giving those bodies any direction or any indication of what they ought to do. It is possible, of course, that bills will be brought down later to give direction to these organizations, but my primary criticism of this speech is that it announces the intention to set up a large number of boards without indicating the direction in which they are to move. No authority is given to them, and parliament itself has no indication of the course they are to pursue.

I notice that a new department of industry is to be set up. Within it there is to be an area development board, or perhaps a number of such boards. There is to be a new municipal development and loan fund. There is to be a new Canadian development corporation. There is to be a new economic council for Canada. There is to be a division of the Department of Agriculture into two parts and provision for an additional minister. Just imagine the tremendous complex of new government agencies, commissions, boards and councils which will spring up within the framework of the government service when these bodies are established. Imagine the host of employees who will be required to man this new bureaucracy. Perhaps this is the government's answer to the problem of unemployment, to put the unemployed into the government service until the workless figures are substantially reduced. Certainly there is nothing else in the speech from the throne which would directly help to reduce unemployment.

I should like to turn for a moment to the remarks of the hon. member for Northumberland (Miss Jewett) when moving the address in reply. I am glad the hon. lady is in the house. Naturally I do not intend to say anything derogatory about her, but I wish to make some comments on her speech because some of the statements she made relate to certain things I have found in the speech from the throne. The hon. lady's remarks were admirably concise and direct. I think they are even more revealing of the philosophy of the party opposite than is the speech from the throne itself. They reveal to me a desire, on her part at least, for a headlong race toward paternalism under a Canadian government. The hon. lady says, in effect, that people are no longer able to make their own decisions and that government must make these decisions for them. In order that I may not inadvertently be misquoting her I should like to read just one paragraph from her speech which seems to me most interesting and which indicates the point I am making. I am reading now from page 22 of Hansard of May 17:

> We still hear people talking about the good old days of self-reliant individualism when all an individual had to do was to get up and go. It is always very pleasant to wish we could return to those days; but the fact of the matter is, and we could see this if sometimes we were not blind, that we have moved from an individualist society to a collectivist society, a society where it is very difficult for a great many of us to make the decisions that affect our own destinies. These decisions are increasingly taken by others on our behalf, particularly by large organizations which exist throughout our whole economy. These decisions are simply beyond our control.

As a Conservative member of this house I naturally believe that to take away from the individual the rights which have been built up by society and by the law over the years is a move in the wrong direction. I believe we have to draw a line at the point where the right of decision making by individuals is taken away. That is all I have to say in connection with this address.

There is, however, another question which relates to this. It is the government's quiet move to add thousands of civil servants to the federal payroll. Some of these employees will undoubtedly be required, but I believe the government service is best met by an adequate staff well paid and well protected, rather than by an overpopulated and underpaid public service. There is already an indication of a great expansion in the public service quite apart from the new boards and commissions to which I have referred. This trend, taken together with the large number of boards and councils to be set up as foreshadowed in the speech from the throne and in the light of the remarks made by the hon. member for Northumberland in moving the address, indicate to my mind the direction we are taking, a move toward the masterpieces of bureaucracy which the Liberals are so fond of creating, without there being anything new for this great bureaucracy to do.

I should like now to touch on another subject, namely the question of our relationship with other countries. It has seemed to me that the government is moving rapidly away from the United Kingdom and from the European situation in order to tag along behind the United States. I had the good fortune, shortly after the election, to make a trip to the United States lasting about ten days. I needed a holiday at the time as, no doubt, did most of the other members of this house. I had the opportunity of speaking to a large number of United States citizens, including persons in the government service; and whether they are justified or not, United States citizens believe they won the 1963 elections in Canada and they are waiting now for the country to be delivered to them. This impression was confirmed in their minds by the quick trip which our new Prime Minister made to Washington and the amiable, even eager, approach which was made to the President of the United States.

I believe that international and business relations depend a great deal on mental approach, and the belief by the people of the United States is that the present Leader of the Opposition did not give the American people all they wanted but that the new Prime Minister would give it to them. They believe he was elected on this basis. It is therefore my feeling that the Prime Minister and all members of the government must be exceedingly careful in their relations with the United States to see that this impression does not go beyond the point of no return. This is a thing which gradually begins to grow, and we have seen it growing. We have seen the Prime Minister, when answering questions from time to time, eagerly saying "Yes, I went and discussed this with the President of the United States. Yes, our government is taking this up with the United States. Yes, we are doing everything we can". There is a difference between friendly co-operation and being amiable, and there is very often a misunderstanding of this difference.

While we are the best of friends with the United States as a country, and while the Americans as individuals are the best friends we have—we can all testify to this—we are surely competitors in the business, trade and international arenas. Mr. Speaker, when your competitor comes to you and starts patting you on the back, you must begin to wonder what you are doing wrong. I say that if our United States competitors in world trade keep patting us on the back for any extended length of time, I will begin to wonder what is being given away on behalf of Canada. When we begin to hear a few complaints from across the line, that is when I shall feel a little better about our relationship with that country. I suggest to the government that they must be on guard; that they have started off from a position they may not be able to get out from under, and I think they have to watch it.

We in Canada have been encouraged to believe, as were the electors at the beginning of the last election campaign and throughout, that mutual friendship and respect, both personal and international, depend upon being amiable with others. This is certainly helpful, but it is only one factor in the situation. Being amiable and friendly does not protect the interests of the persons upon whom you rely, in this case the Canadian people, unless it is accompanied by firm declarations that the interests of your country are to be protected, followed by actions to bring about that result. We have heard that the Prime Minister, while being amiable, friendly, and so on, has also been firm about Canadian rights. I do not believe this is true. I believe that up to this point he has been nothing more than amiable and friendly, and I believe this is what has come out of the various meetings. There is nothing wrong with a friendship and a friendly relationship with another country but, Mr. Speaker, the people of this country did not elect a government to give away the heritage that Canada has built up over a great many years.

Accompanying this turning toward the United States is an apparent turning away from the commonwealth. At the beginning of the visit of the Minister of Trade and Commerce to the commonwealth conference in London, the newspapers came out with some very strong statements. I have one clipping with me which says that the minister delivered a "blockbuster" to the conference and told them that he was not interested in commonwealth trade at all, that he was interested purely in an over-all trade pattern, and that the commonwealth as such was not very much good.

As we have seen today from the statement of the minister and the very direct comments made by the former minister of finance, the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan), it is very easy to make these general statements on trade. It is very easy to say that we will cut tariffs 50 per cent across the board. But it is not so easy when you come to consider the individual interests of the Canadian people. We have over the years built up a very unusual complex of industry and agriculture in this country. It is one which is not easy to sell. We have a good standard of living. We have high wages, or at least reasonably high wages. We have difficulty in competing with foreign countries, particularly those countries where the wage standard is very low. Over the years we have built up a pattern of trade. We have negotiated time and again in GATT and in other international arenas for the protection of these industries which are Canada's and those agricultural commodities which Canada grows and exports.

It is not possible immediately to enter the picture and say that all that is going to be changed; it just cannot be done, Mr. Speaker. While any government comes into power with great ideas and expressions of opinion, I hope the present government will quickly come down to the facts of life which have been learned by governments in the past, and which this government learned before 1957. We find upon our front benches several members of the previous administration. They knew full well what our problems were. They knew full well that the former government was dealing with them effectively. In order to get elected hon. members opposite had to criticize, granted; but I do believe that unless they face reality and get over their desire to be friendly with everybody and give everybody everything they want, we in Canada are going to face some very severe times ahead.

Mr. Joseph P. O'Keefe (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, it is not given to all new members to have the opportunity to speak twice during the course of the throne speech debate. However, I am very gratified that a technicality of procedure allows me to make some further remarks. I should like to express my very deep gratitude to my colleagues who, by allowing me to take their place, have afforded me the opportunity of informing the house and the nation about a situation with regard to which I feel very strongly. I refer to Bell island, which is in my district of St. John's East.

Bell island is a community of 14,000 people, and the tragic fact is that of those 14,000 the staggering number of 5,500 are on relief. They are existing, not living. Their fathers and grandfathers before them made a decent, if frugal, living; but these men and women of today in Canada cannot. Wabana is a one industry town. There are only the great iron mines to provide these people with the jobs they need to support them. These mines have been producing the rich red iron ore ever since 1896, and uncounted millions of tons have been torn from the mines. These mines run three or four miles out under the waters of beautiful Conception bay. The reddish dust which covers every single object on Bell island is famed throughout Newfoundland, and the ore which produces this dust has been the bread and butter of many of our people these 70 years now. However, lately Wabana has fallen on hard times.

I am not an expert in these matters, sir, and I do not pretend to be one. I do not understand why these hard times have come. All I know is that the far flung overseas markets seem to have gone away, and the jobs have gone with them. I fear they have gone forever. But the people have not gone, and only this week it was announced that yet another 150 miners would be laid off. Some 5,500 out of 14,000 are on dole, and there will be still more in this Canadian twentieth century.

The company which employs these men no longer finds it economically feasible to offer work, so they are left to shift for themselves. Bell islanders and their forebears have worked this mine for 70 years. The succession of companies that has employed these men in my opinion did precious little to improve the community that housed them. Their only interest over the years, it would seem to me, was to get the ore out of the ground as cheaply as possible. They spent a mere tuppence on the miners, their families and the town. I would not want to write the epitaph of the companies that operated these mines. They have never felt any real sense of obligation to the community that gave them many years of pecuniary gain. As a result Wabana has bred a fiercely independent type of men, proud men, who are humbled at the thought of what lies ahead.

There is no single community in Newfoundland so deserving of whatever constructive policy this house may have to offer. They have nowhere else to turn. They ask us for a helping hand. In past years when these men were working they made a magnificent contribution to Newfoundland's never too prosperous economy. In war and peace they have stood with the finest men of this country. They have given me the great responsibility of being their spokesman in this house. They look to this house, through me, to offer them something more than mere soothing words.

This government has introduced an imaginative and progressive program which will help Canada generally. I have no doubt of that. But, Mr. Speaker, what will this mean to my people of Bell island? How can these policies be translated into action for Wabana, which is an Indian name for "land of the rising sun"? I am not criticizing anyone and I am not blaming anyone, because it may be that there is no blame. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that this is a national shame which should burn into the heart of every Canadian. Mr. Speaker, you may very well say "Why do these people live on Bell island? Why do they not leave?" But where can they go? Must these people tear themselves away from the homes that have been theirs for generations and go elsewhere? This twentieth century which is Canada's must hold more than this for our people.

What is to be done? I do not know; I wish to God I did. But this I can say, sir, and I say it with all the force I can muster, with all the strength that is in my body and with all the fervour that is in my soul. Something should be done, and I hope that something will be done.

The fact that governmental expenditure may have avoided actual privation and may have even given a boom aspect to sections of our economy cannot conceal the existence of a very high level of unemployment. This has two effects. First, the provincial economy loses millions of dollars in production through the enforced idleness of thousands of its workers, and second all those who are supported by any form of government aid are adding to the load of the people who are gainfully employed. Our province of fewer than half a million, with the lowest level of per capita income in Canada and an enormous territory to administer, cannot be expected to find easy solutions to all these problems.

I believe that any region of Canada which is at this time afflicted with a high rate of unemployment should join forces with a Canada-wide planning association or organization. This should be set up to assist the provinces. This kind of federal-provincial co-operation is, I suggest, essential to national and regional progress. While certain it is that Newfoundland's needs are great and many, it is just as certain that our prospects for the future are indeed bright. Our dynamic premier's list of projects which he hopes to see achieved, as does every Newfoundlander and every Canadian, is indeed challenging and imaginative.

Were I to mention at this time only one, I would have to choose the dramatic development of the vast hydro potential of the Hamilton watershed in Newfoundland, Labrador. Estimates of what can be produced vary from 4 million to 7 million horsepower. Even at the lowest figure this enterprise is immense; it is gigantic by any standard. It would be clearly advantageous to Quebec, to Newfoundland and indeed to Canada as a whole if this power could be fed into a Quebec grid, when power now utilized in Quebec could be released for delivery to Ontario and for export to the United States.

What is certain is that the resources of the province of Newfoundland are now better known than ever before, and that the wishful thinking about them in the past has been converted into actual developments of great magnitude and into prospects which must in time become the source of new production and employment on a substantial scale. With our rapidly increasing population and costs it will be badly needed in our province.

In that vein, sir, I do not wish to be considered insular or parochial, we are now part of a nation that is great and growing in stature. To us has been committed the destiny of that great nation. It is for us—and I speak particularly to newer members like myself—to realize that in the economic growth and expansion of Canada lies the successful development of all the areas which form its component parts. In that sense may I appeal for a broader outlook in our discussions and an awareness of national problems and their over-all importance. In my opinion, now more than ever before Canada's great need is unity, unity of thought, unity of action and unity of effort.

Perhaps because I am new to the scene I have found great difficulty in accepting or even understanding the dissensions and divisions about which we hear so much.

Some hon. Members: One o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but it being one o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. O'Keefe: Mr. Speaker, at one o'clock I had been saying that Newfoundland is now part of the great nation of Canada, that we are no longer, if we ever were, parochial or insular, that in my opinion the great need of Canada more than ever today is unity, that my own province is united now, united under our premier, united too in its dream and confident, if periodically a little anxious too, of a brilliant and prosperous Canadian future. We now have the organization and the men. May a greater Canada be built by all Canadians with courage, imagination and intelligence.

In simple essence, sir, let us work to the full extent of our ability, dedicated in obligation and in conscience to the needs of our constituents, keeping before us always the future of Canada, our country.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, now that we are able to go on, knowing our honour has been vindicated, may I say your selection has met with widespread approval, and I would like to include my name among those who feel your selection is so satisfactory.

[Mr. O'Keefe.]

For a member to attempt in this debate to discuss the whole spectrum of affairs which must concern him as a member, would be of course presumptuous and impossible. At the outset may I register a protest against those who would turn politics into a profession in the narrow sense, and who seek to temper politicians into a common mould. Surely the strength of this place is partly due at least to the diversity of its members, both intellectually, technically and ethnically.

In our rush to worship at the altar of planning, we might well recall the plea of the painter Kokoschka who said, "nationalizing, normalizing and statistical anonymising —these are the deadly enemies of a man who passionately believes in the rights and dignity of the individual." These words cannot be dismissed as being stuffy platitudes of another age. They are, I suggest, modern in their concept and contemporary in their need of application.

I suggest that we must not abjectly abdicate our role to faceless planners and must not, as has been said, permit our parliamentary responsibilities to ooze away. This is not to be construed as being a cry of anguish by one who should be living in another century. I worry lest decision makers, as Toynbee said of our society, become proletarians who are "in" but are not "of" the society they dominate. Planning is obviously essential if we are to progress, but planning without the partnership of the members of this house might well degenerate into planning for its own sake.

It is my hope that NATO, in its anxious search for an acceptable formula to clothe its plan to arm itself with nuclear weapons, will not rush into a patchwork, piecemeal policy merely for the sake of expediency. Surely it should be said that in spite of the flood of technical and military statistics which seek to prove the need for a proliferation of nuclear arms, the proposals before the NATO meetings this week are political and not based on any proven military need?

Some nations are playing the old neighbourhood game of trying to keep up with the Joneses. Patchwork is not too harsh a word for a plan which has evolved in a zig and a zag during the past year. One commentator called the policy evolution "a multinuclear multimaze." Just last March 6 President Kennedy said that if Europe decided the multilateral force was too expensive, then Washington would be content with the present situation, that is, a United States nuclear monopoly within NATO. In November 1962 United States under secretary of state George Ball said:

> We do not feel that the alliance has an urgent need for a European nuclear contribution.

Is it any wonder, Mr. Speaker, that the public looks on somewhat cynically at the scramble to evolve a nuclear policy for NATO, knowing perfectly well such a force has no military reason for existence? Walter Lippmann in a recent column headed "The Phony Nuclear Deal", published in the Saint John Telegraph-Journal of May 15 said:

> On the face of it, there is something strange about the urgency with which the U.S. administration has been pushing the British, the Italians and the Germans—particularly the Germans—to accept a scheme for a European nuclear force. Although the administration insists that the United States has a nuclear power which is quite adequate for the defence of the west, it continues to press the Europeans to interest themselves in nuclear matters.
>
> Why? The administration does not like General de Gaulle's nuclear enterprise. It thinks poorly of the British nuclear effort. Yet it keeps slogging along toward a multilateral scheme which would bring the Germans into the nuclear business and, incidentally, induce them to pay a large share of the cost.

In another part of the article he makes this charge of the scheme:

> It is, I believe, an amateurish, naïve and deeply unwise project.

May I add my own astonishment about the theory that in order to be a first class nation, a country must be equipped with nuclear weapons. This to me is cynical classification in the extreme. Are Norway and Denmark any less first class because of their refusal to participate in this "amateurish, naïve and deeply unwise project"?

Surely the gods must laugh at man's latest standard of measurement. Surely those victims of Hiroshima and Nagasaki must be repelled as are men everywhere by this new measure of a nation's worth.

Many of us have had an opportunity to read Pope John's recent encyclical "Pacem in Terris". May I suggest, as a non-Roman Catholic, that the world will share the anxiety of Catholics about the illness of this most remarkable Pope. The Manchester Guardian on April 18, 1963, commented that "Pacem in Terris" gives the world "a lead from the Pope on co-existence" and calls the encyclical "one of the most satisfactory attempts yet made to work out the ground rules of ideological co-existence between east and west, in a form which might in the distant future acceptable to both sides."

Walter Lippmann writes of the encyclical:

> In reaching out beyond the clergy and the faithful of his own church to all men of good will, including the declared enemies of his church, the Pope has based the arguments of his message not on revelation and the inspired teachings of the church but on a philosophical principle. It is that there is in all men at least the rudiments of a conscience, at least some capacity to reason, and some inclination to follow it... It is a profoundly moving event in the history of our times that this high-minded and good-natured Pope should be telling men that this is the way to peace among themselves and in all the lands.

In her most excellent address in reply, the hon. member for Northumberland (Miss Jewett) suggested that we should "encourage our trading, cultural and other relationships with some of these countries in the communist world". If I have any criticism of her speech it would be that she might well have spelled out that she meant by this diplomatic recognition of the Peoples Republic of China. I hope it will not become a habit of Liberals to cloud what they mean in obscurity—the speech from the throne is another example of this unsatisfactory tendency. In that speech, arming Canadian forces with nuclear weapons becomes:

> The armed forces of Canada should have available the modern weapons necessary to perform effectively the defensive tasks which Canada has undertaken in the alliance.

This is a textbook example of hiding clear meaning under a welter of words.

Having made this gentle comment, may I agree that red China, as it is popularly known, should be recognized by this country and should be seated in the United Nations. Dr. Wilder Penfield, speaking at the University of New Brunswick last week—coincidentally on the same day that the hon. lady was speaking—suggests that "we face a dangerous emergency" because "governments like Canada and the United States do not speak directly to the Peoples Republic of China." There is no need for me to weary this house with a long treatise about the fact that diplomatic recognition obviously does not mean approval of China's overt acts of aggression. But surely it is folly to try to seal off 700 million people from the stream of world diplomacy.

There will be another occasion to mention the dedicated devotion to disarmament of the former secretary of state for external affairs (Mr. Green). Canada's chief negotiator at the disarmament conference at Geneva has played a hero's role. It would be a tragedy, not of this decade but of this age, if the United States and Russia cannot reach agreement on the nuclear test ban. The bargaining must continue. The gap between three inspections as proposed by Russia and seven as proposed by the United States is too narrow not to permit of further concessions on both sides. Many scientists articulate in the intricacies of the nuclear era tell us that a test ban treaty is in the best interests of the United States and of world peace. A treaty, they said in a statement in the Washington Post in April this year, "would reduce the speed of the present arms race, inhibit the spread of nuclear weapons to non-nuclear powers, reduce the likelihood of nuclear war, and prevent the extension of the hazards of fallout." Opponents of concessions at the Geneva conference claim modification means appeasement. In fact, say the scientists, during the time since the test ban discussions began in 1958 detection techniques have improved. It is now possible to detect explosions within a given country by stations outside that country. It should continue to be Canada's objective, to use President Kennedy's expression, "to prevent the genie from getting out of the bottle".

Mr. Speaker, during the last election a good deal of nonsense was indulged in about anti-Americanism. I suppose no part of Canada has closer ties with the United States than have the maritime provinces. A couple of generations ago Harvard trained our lawyers and M.I.T. our engineers. There is hardly a family in the maritimes that cannot visit a relative in what are colloquially know as the "Boston states". It seems almost trite to disclaim anti-Americanism. No nation carrying such harrowing world wide responsibilities as does the United States should be subject to anything but constructive comment and criticism. This does not mean that we help the United States by abjectly accepting all her pronouncements upon world affairs without question. Canada has unique political military and economic problems which should be appreciated by United States politicians. Now that the election is over I presume United States newspapers and periodicals will resume their massive ignoring of Canada, although perhaps a helpful side-effect of the NATO meeting will be that some newspapermen will find us interesting and our affairs worth commenting upon. There is more to Canada than the F.L.Q.

Many Canadians were disappointed by the total disregard in the throne speech of any mention of the problems facing our universities. The previous government has an enviable record in aid to universities—first, by increasing the grants per student enrolled and, second, by including dormitory construction under long term C.M.H.C. loans.

Adjectives and superlatives abound about university problems but in most instances are not used in exaggeration. "Crisis" was the word used in 1961; "staggering" was how the Canadian Universities Foundation described its analysis of financial requirements on operating and capital account for the foreseeable future. Total university expenditure in 1960-1961 was $282 million. That estimated in 1965-1966 is $692 million. The plan for university scholarships is commendable but will only touch half the problem. Flying on one wing, someone has termed the plan. In fact, a scheme for scholarships without immediate and generous federal assistance to both capital and current costs of educating the students would be a menace and not a help. I suggest that every dollar for scholarships should be matched by a dollar paid to the university to help with overhead costs. This will not end federal responsibility. Obviously a drastic upward revision in federal grants must be an immediate government decision—60 days will be none too soon to tell our universities that substantial additional help is coming.

Mr. Speaker, both in Britain and Canada attention is being focused on the role of parliament and its members in the contemporary scene. Mr. J. Grimond, leader of the Liberal party in the United Kingdom, says it is not as if the House of Commons had been handed down by God; it should be reformed.

Dean James A. Gibson of Carleton University in an address to the Ottawa chapter of the Canadian public relations society made several suggestions which I will merely list. One of these was mentioned by our leader the other day. The first was a permanent voters list, which would be an obvious advantage and is long overdue. Second, he suggested smaller parliamentary committees with expert staffs. As Dean Gibson says, the opportunities for a backbench private member to become well briefed on subjects of national concern are inadequate and much neglected. Third, he recommended an agreement by the parties as to how much time should be allotted to debates on particular topics. Fourth —and I think this is a very interesting one and should be of concern particularly to government benches—debates on public questions which are the deliberate concern of parliament should take place in the House of Commons and not on television or radio. And last, fuller, more informative and more genuine reporting to the people of Canada by all the official delegations which go abroad, including reporting on their extra-curricular visits. I am told, by the way, that everyone who had an extra-curricular visit to Paris last year was returned, which is a measure of the maturity of Canadian electors.

An hon. Member: Not only returned; they were re-elected.

Mr. Pickersgill: Where did the hon. gentleman say they were returned to?

Mr. Fairweather: To this place, sir. I think "re-elected" is a better word and I thank my hon. friend for his editing of my interpolation. Reform must come from within if our reputation and authority are to be reviewed. We should, particularly in view of the minority government, stop treating every vote as a vote of confidence. Sometimes I like to think this house by its collective wisdom should be able to get a minister to concede a point, or change a policy, without bringing down the government.

Mark Bonham Carter, writing in the Guardian of March 14, 1963, said that there are three questions—and I think these questions apply to us—to be answered. Is parliament efficient? Does it control our governors? Is it representative of the country as a whole? I am afraid we must share the answer which was given in England and say that the answer is almost certainly no. An hon. member must, in my opinion, have access to information and this should be provided by availability of expert staffs and through specialized committees.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, we are being bombarded these days by new and convenient interpretations of the constitution, most of them under the guise of a formula to make confederation work. Some of these statements show a singular lack of appreciation for the objectives of the British North America Act. I think it will not do us harm if we remind ourselves that Sir John A. Macdonald and his colleagues designed the act of confederation expressly to avoid the narrowness of the states rights provisions of the United States constitution. The statesmen of Sir John's day knew all about the American document and a study of the debates prior to confederation shows the length to which our constitution-makers went to avoid the narrowness of the United States constitution, which is being shown today in the state of Alabama. Canada has been ill-served in the intervening years by narrow and restrictive interpretations of the B.N.A. Act. I suggest that when we here chart a course to help Quebec and her culture reach their undoubted place within the confederation, we recall the days of 100 years ago. Perhaps that could be our contribution to our centenary. It is not so much the document which is at fault, but the spirit with which it has been interpreted since its enactment. Surely there can be no Canada without Quebec; neither can there be Quebec without Canada.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity this afternoon of participating in this debate on issues which we believe are of vital concern to the whole Canadian economy. I hope I will not be considered disrespectful if I omit words of congratulation to the various hon. members who have been the object of so many similar expressions during these last days; I just want to say I agree with them all.

As I listen to the various addresses being made, especially from the members of the official opposition, it is interesting to compare them with some of their activities and statements of days gone by. We listened with interest to the intervention of the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Kindt) just a few days ago. He endeavoured, in his own words, to set the record straight with regard to the circumstances which led to the defeat of the former government. He severely reprimanded the leader of this group, the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson), because of some statements which he made pointing out the reasons why the former government was overthrown. He then proceeded to give what he considered to be his own interpretation of those circumstances. I would suggest, however, that the hon. member for Red Deer was much closer to the truth than was the hon. member for Macleod.

It has also been interesting to listen to some of the speakers of the official opposition in their references to the throne speech. It has been pointed out on a number of occasions that as far as they are concerned it is more or less a rehash of legislation that had already been proposed by the Progressive Conservative party while they were in office. Then they proceeded, as did the former prime minister also, to point out that this was a far cry from what the people had the right to expect from this present administration. So it would seem, as you put those statements together, that they were far from satisfied with the program they themselves endeavoured to put into operation during the time they were in office.

Mr. Speaker, as we consider some of the important issues which were raised in the speech from the throne, I would like to say that we recognize that there are a number of them which will be of far reaching consequence, if attention is given to the matter of implementing them and carrying them through to their logical conclusion. However, if they just appear on the order paper and are briefly debated and then forgotten, we are not going to get very much benefit from the matters which have been presented.

First of all I should like to deal briefly with the question of national defence. It has been pointed out in the throne speech that we will be called upon to give approval to the setting up of a defence committee. I should like to suggest that this was a matter which was raised on many occasions by the leader of this party, and then on later occasions was picked up by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and included in his program. The debates on this important subject in the previous sessions and also in this session point up very conclusively, I believe, the need for such a committee. The information we have been able to obtain is very sketchy. Very little information has been given when questions have been asked and it seems as though everything has somehow been covered with a dark cloak to obscure it from the view of hon. members. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that this committee should be set up immediately so that this important matter of national defence can be taken out of the area of the political football field and considered by the representatives of the people in this house who will be appointed to that committee. We have had an indication, on the one hand, that the government is very hasty in arriving at decisions without reference to the committee which is to be set up. On the other hand we have had a tendency to tie the hands of this committee even before it is established and has had an opportunity of considering the issue of defence in the light of all the available information, the military requirements and the international situation that obtains from time to time. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I would urge that this committee be set up and put to work at the very earliest possible moment.

In the speech from the throne we have a very brief reference to agriculture. It has been pointed out that we are now to have two ministers of agriculture, one from the east and one from the west. I do not know whether this is the best policy. I question whether it is. The trouble is that in the past, under the former Liberal administration and the Conservative administration, we have had a patchwork set-up as far as agriculture is concerned. We have had not just two policies but a great many policies. I remember that when I had the opportunity of representing the Fraser Valley a number of years ago I called the attention of the government to the fact that certain overriding policies must be laid down as far as agriculture is concerned. I recognize the fact, of course, that separate areas have separate problems and perhaps special consideration will have to be given to those areas, but I also believe we must have certain policies that apply right across the nation. Unless we have these we are not going to have that unity which has been the subject of so much discussion in this house.

I listened with interest to the hon. member from Wentworth (Mr. Morison) when he was participating in the debate yesterday. He referred to the lucky western farmers. He went on to say that, contrary to the lucky western farmers, the farmers in his area were caught in the cost-price squeeze. May I say, Mr. Speaker, that this is one problem that applies right across the nation. From coast to coast those in this great primary producing industry, agriculture, are faced with this same problem. It has been pointed out on some occasions that the income of farmers has increased. However, when one takes into consideration the constantly increasing costs of production there is not very much to brag about. This applies to those in eastern Canada as well as those in western Canada. Therefore I would suggest that this matter be given very serious consideration, as I believe it will, in order that agriculture may move up the scale and occupy that place in our economy that it should occupy. I would urge that it receive its fair share of the income of this great nation of ours.

There is a reference in the speech from the throne to the development of a national fisheries policy. This is also a very important matter. The fisheries, as well as agriculture, is a very important matter as far as my own constituency is concerned. Certainly as far as British Columbia is concerned the fisheries is one of our great industries. Those engaged in the fishing industry, and the representatives of the fisheries organizations, are very apprehensive of the trends and developments relating to this industry. I have received through the mail a number of communications with respect to this matter and to the amendments to the international north Pacific fisheries treaty. I think these organizations were perfectly within their rights when they requested that these matters be referred to the parliamentary committee on marine and fisheries before they were given approval by the cabinet. Instead of that however, the cabinet has apparently seen fit to go ahead and approve these amendments without having them taken under advisement by the committee, and without giving these organizations an opportunity of making representations.

In this connection, I wish to refer to a letter from the Hon. Earle C. Westwood, minister of recreation, conservation and fisheries for British Columbia. This letter was addressed to the Hon. J. Angus MacLean, who was then our minister of fisheries. It states:

> As minister of fisheries for the province of British Columbia herewith my request that implementation of the recommendations and decisions of the Canadian section of the international north Pacific fisheries commission pertaining to the decisions re abstention zones reached at the commission's 1962 annual meeting held in Seattle, November 17, 1962 be subject to examination by the federal standing committee on marine and fisheries.
>
> Such consideration and hearings before the standing committee on marine and fisheries will permit opportunity for those concerned to submit briefs on the recommendations and decisions of the Canadian section of the commission before these recommendations are brought to the floor of the House of Commons.

Apparently he was rather optimistic when he thought it would go that far. He then proceeds to give the reasons for this particular request. Before the last parliament was dissolved we had a full delegation from the united fishermen and allied workers' union who presented this matter to the various groups in this house for consideration. They asked for the same consideration. In spite of this, the minister of fisheries apparently saw fit to go ahead, without allowing representations to be made to him in this regard, and gave approval to the amendments to the treaty. Mr. Speaker, this is not a very good way to promote public relations. It is not a very good way to promote understanding between the various groups which make up our economy, and the legislative bodies. I trust that with all speed this committee will be set up and will have the opportunity of studying not only those amendments, which consideration may be now too late, but also other suggestions and recommendations which those interested in this industry can present.

The speech from the throne contained reference to municipal financing problems. This is a matter that was given great consideration by the members of this particular group. We have insisted that if we are going to solve our problems we have to solve the problem of municipal financing. We have recommended the establishment of a municipal development bank, as a branch of the Bank of Canada, to make loans to municipalities at the cost of administration. This has been taken up by some of the other groups. They will not follow, of course, the formula that we suggest, but nevertheless we appreciate the fact that recognition is given to the problem and they are willing to consider this particular matter.

I wonder if this proposal will share the same unfortunate fate that befell the Municipal Improvements Assistance Act some years ago. Under the Municipal Improvements Assistance Act of 1938 loans could be made to municipalities at a rate of interest of 2 per cent. In Hansard of October 24, 1957, page 389 we have the record of questions in this connection raised by the late Mr. Tom Irwin of this group. He was advised that all loans were discontinued after December 31, 1940, and no applications have since been entertained. Up to that time 143 applications for loans were received of which 110 were approved. You will notice, Mr. Speaker, that this act was passed in 1938 but after 1940 no further applications for loans were entertained.

I wonder why the Liberal party put a stop to that particular program. I wonder why they ceased to make loans under that act. Quite a few years have lapsed but now they come along with the suggestion—I do not know whether or not the rate of interest is going to be 2 per cent—that they are going to set up a municipal loan fund of some description. I hope it does not share the fate of the one that was established in 1938.

Another matter to which a number of members have made reference is the question of the Columbia development. We look forward with a great deal of anticipation to an early and favourable conclusion of the negotiations now going on with respect to this project. Liberal governments have not acted with any great degree of alacrity in the past with respect to the development of this great source of power. For many years it was under consideration but that is as far as it got. It was a Liberal government that blocked the plan some years ago to develop this system and it is questionable if any plan considered since that time has been any more advantageous than the one proposed then.

The Prime Minister now promises to renegotiate the treaty, but we hope this will not result in several more decades of delay and frustration. I am not going to say that no changes should be made. The hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke (Mr. Fleming) stated today, I believe, that it is difficult for a layman to understand all the ins and outs of this great problem. I simply voice the hope that the negotiations may be concluded speedily and that we will be able to proceed with this great project that will mean so much not only to the province of British Columbia but to the whole nation as well.

There are many matters with which I wish to deal, including quite a number of problems relating to my own constituency, but opportunities will be afforded on future occasions and I will reserve my remarks on them until then.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, as the member representing the Garden of Eden of Canada I am very happy to have the opportunity to make a few remarks in this most important debate where we are able to bring forward those things that directly concern us and our constituents. First of all, Mr. Speaker, it is my duty and my pleasure to congratulate you on your appointment as Speaker for this parliament. I am sure you have the good will of the whole house. I know that principles of justice and fair play endure throughout the centuries and I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that I trust when time steals your years away and you come to the end of your Speaker's day you will be able to use the words of Solon, the father of Athenian democracy, in about the seventh century before Christ and say with him:

I gave the commons their sufficient meed
Of strength, nor let them lack, nor yet exceed
Those who were mighty and magnificent,
I bade them have their due and be content.
My strong shield guarded both sides equally
And gave to neither unjust victory.

I also wish to take the opportunity to congratulate the Deputy Speaker and chairman of committees on his appointment. I cannot proceed with my remarks without congratulating the mover (Miss Jewett) and seconder (Mr. Choquette) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. Someone has said that eloquence is the transfer of thought and emotion from one heart to another. I must say that the lady member who moved the motion met that test to the fullest degree. Hers was in every sense of the word a most successful maiden speech. I must say also that I enjoyed the seconder's vehement simplicity of language and verbal thrust.

Before proceeding with my main topic I want to deal with a matter or two that concern me. There is a growing awareness among members of the house of the need for improvement of the machinery of parliament to meet changing circumstances and conditions. This question will be dealt with at much greater length by members of this group and other members of the house, I am quite confident, but I wish to take this opportunity to make a few observations as a result of some recollections in solitude.

With respect to the Senate, I am not going into the question of abolition and reform and that sort of thing. However I do think that good work has been done by committees of the Senate in recent years, particularly by the committee on manpower and the committee on land use, and in my view this good work indicates that the government could use the committees of the Senate to much greater advantage. I suggest that the government give consideration to utilizing the committees of the Senate to carry on certain investigations and inquiries such as are at present given to royal commissions. I think in doing that the government will put these matters in the hands of competent persons and there will be a considerable saving to the public exchequer.

A word or two with respect to the House of Commons. I welcome the reference in the throne speech to the establishment of a committee on procedure under the chairmanship of Mr. Speaker to strengthen, as the words read, and make parliament more effective. In my opinion the committee should give consideration to the length of speeches in order to provide an opportunity for as many members as possible to participate in this type of debate and especially in the committee of the whole house. I think that on occasion speeches are too lengthy and we could save time and provide opportunities for more to participate when the house is in committee.

I think there should be more consideration given to the organization and efficiency of committees, their hours of sitting and so on.

I think the government should give consideration to the necessity of a research staff available to members of parliament. The work of this house, the work of committees and the increasing volume of correspondence make it almost impossible for a member who is attending to his duties to spend much time in research. He is limited largely to cutting pieces out of the newspaper and so on in order to find suitable questions on orders of the day.

I also want to mention something in the nature of a complaint on behalf of the members who sit in this corner of the house. I have received complaints from members on the government side of the house that they are not able to see us very well in this position. I suggest that consideration be given to moving the Sergeant-at-Arms' desk into the centre of the chamber where he can be viewed from all sides in all his magnificence and glory. At the present time, with the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) on one side and the Sergeant-at-Arms on the other, the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) and the hon. member for Kootenay West have to look, as it were, through a picket fence at you, Mr. Speaker. We do hope that consideration will be given to this matter in order that other members will have the opportunity to see the members in this corner of the house, particularly those who raised this complaint and brought it to my attention. I trust that consideration will be given to this matter. Then, there is another reason for moving the Sergeant-at-Arms to the centre, which I think should even be more convincing. I find that people in the galleries have, on occasion, mistaken the Sergeant-at-Arms for an executive assistant to the New Democratic party. For his sake we should not allow that to happen in the future. I do urge serious consideration of the somewhat personal complaint from this very important corner of the house.

Our leader has very well expressed our response to the items in the throne speech. He has dealt fully with our attitude to the problems that face us today. I am going to confine my remarks from this point on to one very serious and important question, namely, the development of the Columbia river. The Columbia river treaty was signed by the representatives of the governments of Canada and of the United States in Washington on January 17, 1961. Ratification was approved by the United States senate with only a few minutes of discussion, and with only one dissenting vote, on March 2, 1961. The treaty has not been presented to the Canadian parliament for consideration.

However, Mr. Speaker, the terms of this document have been available to the people of Canada for more than two years, and the result has been a growing understanding of the terms of the treaty as well as the disastrous effect on the rights and vital interests of our country. Many qualified engineers and other persons have given this treaty very careful study from an objective point of view and, as a consequence many organizations and individuals have expressed their opposition to the terms of the treaty. I should like to list some of them briefly in order to indicate to the house the strength of the opposition and the quality of that opposition to this treaty.

First of all, I must mention General McNaughton. I should like to refer hon. members to press reports of his speeches to the Canadian institute of engineering, the Alberta engineering institute and to his articles in magazines and newspapers. Then, there is Mr. F. J. Bartholomew, electrical engineer, Vancouver, B.C., a very well known consulting engineer; Mr. Richard Deane, electrical engineer, for Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company, Rossland, B.C.; Larrett Higgins, Toronto, Ontario Hydro-Electric Commission; J. M. Southin, a very well known British Columbia Conservative and registered professional electrical engineer. He said that this is a treaty we could very well do without. Then, I should like to mention the B.C. convention of the New Democratic party, all the trade unions in British Columbia and many unions in other parts of Canada; and the chambers of commerce of southeastern British Columbia.

In that connection, I should like to refer to a recent incident. You know, a very well known gentleman, Dr. Keenleyside, came to Nelson just before the election. He was invited to speak at a public event there. Then, he had a reception afterwards and some of my friends were at that reception. He took the opportunity to discuss the Columbia treaty and to point out that if it were not signed this year there would not be any treaty signed at all because the United States were getting impatient. He expressed some disappointment at the support the hon. member for Kootenay West was receiving for his views. He urged action to promote early ratification of the treaty. As a result the Nelson chamber of commerce, at the annual meeting of the associated chambers of commerce of southeastern British Columbia, on April 5 and 6 presented a resolution urging immediate ratification of the Columbia river treaty. This was the subject of debate and there were some very qualified engineers and others at that meeting. As a result of that debate, the resolution urging immediate ratification of the present Columbia river treaty was defeated 33 to 15. This indicates the attitude of the chambers of commerce in our district to the present treaty.

The advisory board of the farmers institute of British Columbia have opposed it. The Arrow lakes water resources committee, which represents trade unions, farmers organizations and chambers of commerce as well as rod and gun clubs from Castlegar to Revelstoke, is opposed. The rod and gun clubs of British Columbia have been concerned about the possible damage to fish and wildlife that could be occasioned by this treaty if the basins are not completely cleared of vegetation. Naturally, these organizations have made their views known to governments and members of opposition parties who have become aware, as a result of this, of the opposition to this treaty as it now stands and the effects of this treaty in general.

The present Prime Minister is fully aware of this. He has received numerous communications and has given evidence of his awareness. I should like to quote from a letter he wrote to Mr. Donald C. Waterfield of the water resources committee, Nakusp chamber of commerce, Nakusp, B.C.

Dear Mr. Waterfield:

Your letter of April 12th has just arrived and I would like to assure you that I agree with you that it is imperative to renegotiate the Columbia river treaty.

May I also assure you that all B.C. interests, particularly those of the water resources committee of Nakusp chamber of commerce, will be consulted by a new Liberal government before a final decision is reached.

I was very pleased to hear the Prime Minister's reply to a question I asked him the other day in that respect. I am very pleased also to record again that the hon. member for Coast-Capilano (Mr. Davis) has expressed strong criticism of this treaty. He expressed his criticisms and placed them on the record on December 12, 1962. He also wrote a very interesting article in the Vancouver Sun on February 28, 1963, which incidentally is my birthday so I look upon that as a good omen.

During the campaign in Kootenay West the treaty was opposed by the New Democratic party strongly, by the Liberal candidate and was criticized by the Progressive Conservative candidate. The only candidate who supported it without reservations was the Social Credit candidate who came at the bottom of the poll, so you can appreciate the attitude of the people I have the honour to represent, Mr. Speaker.

What about negotiations that led to the present treaty? I am just hurrying through this history of it for the benefit of new members and in order to refresh the memories of other members to get the subject in proper focus before I fire the parting shot.

1. Negotiations commenced under favourable conditions on principles for determining and apportioning the benefits from the co-operative use and storage of waters and electrical interconnection within the Columbia river system agreed to by the United States and Canadian members of the international joint commission. They are too lengthy to deal with now.

2. We had a good plan for Canada in sequence nine of the joint engineering board report.

3. During the early stages of the negotiations, there was no serious dissent by the United States representatives.

4. Then, suddenly, Premier Bennett apparently in order to downgrade the Columbia opposed the east Kootenay development as proposed in sequence 9A.

I recall talking to one senator about this when I was away on an official trip. He said to me, "You know, Herridge, we were amazed when they threw General McNaughton's aces away in one throw."

5. Then, Premier Bennett called in the Sir Alexander Gibb Company to make a report on the Columbia river and Peace river developments. This report showed that Peace river power would cost 4.5 mills and Columbia river power 2.9 mills. It is an interesting thing to note, Mr. Speaker, that this company with a world wide reputation is no longer employed by the government of British Columbia.

6. As a result of Premier Bennett's demands Canadian rights under the Boundary Waters Treaty Act of 1909 were surrendered in the present treaty.

7. Shortly after the treaty was signed, Premier Bennett wished the treaty terms altered to provide the sale of downstream benefits on a firm and long term basis. We have witnessed some interesting reversals of policy at high levels with regard to the proposed development of the Columbia river.

8. During the discussions on the international rivers bill in 1955 attorney general Bonner and water controller Paget expressed strong opposition to the flooding of the Arrow lakes. This policy was reversed when they came to deal with the present Columbia river treaty.

9. In the years past, the present Leader of the Opposition opposed the idea of the long term export of firm power, then reversed his position according to the throne speech of September last. I want to indicate how completely the hon. gentleman reversed his position, and I quote from page 3 of a statement made by the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker, Prime Minister of Canada, following the signing of the Columbia river treaty in Washington. This is what he said about the treaty:

> So far as Canada is concerned, the most important feature of the treaty is the one I have already referred to—the recognition of the principle of division of downstream benefits. From that principle all the great advantages that are possible for Canada as a result of co-operative development of the Columbia basin flow. Without that principle the entire arrangement would be fruitless for this country.

This is the bedrock upon which the treaty is supposed to stand, but afterwards they hurled that great arrangement overboard.

10. Mr. Fulton, chief negotiator for Canada, opposed the long term sale of downstream benefits in the most vehement language, and then reversed his position.

11. It is obvious from these reversals of policy, on the part of those who are supposed to know what they were talking about, that this present treaty was entered into with undue haste without understanding all of its terms and their consequence, or without the facts with respect to problems and costs of construction, rehabilitation, compensation or the unnecessary destruction of natural resources.

However, as the facts have come to light throughout the months, we can view this delay as a blessing in disguise.

I now submit a quotation from the speech of Professor Marts, professor of geography, Washington University, at the Kelowna natural resources conference in August 1962.

> Canada should resist pressure to hurry a decision from any group including the United States and make certain that their final decision will be a correct one and not regretted at a later date. Canada would be well advised to make haste slowly on the Columbia river development.

This present delay presents an opportunity to the government for the first time to do some effective planning for the development of the water resources of the Columbia river to the advantage of Canada and with equity for the United States. Therefore, on behalf of this party, I suggest the following, and let me say I am trying to be as non-partisan as possible in this. I admit I have a sentimental interest in this question because I live in that country, know its beauty and love its land, waters and beaches. I make these proposals:

1. That the Canadian government inform the United States government and the government of British Columbia that the proposed treaty is not satisfactory.

2. That re-negotiation be commenced on the basis of the adoption of the principles for development adopted by the international joint commission.

3. That the government proceed on the basis that sequence 9 (a) is the most acceptable plan for Canada.

4. That we propose a flexible approach for the timing and staging of developments to fit the load curve. That we should begin the building of the Mica creek dam first in order to provide flood control protection to Canada and the United States.

5. We propose the development of Dorr dam in order to satisfy primary flood control in the United States.

6. We urge the appointment of General McNaughton as chief adviser to the Canadian government negotiating team.

7. We urge that, prior to any final decision, public hearings be held in east and west Kootenay by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing) according to the powers provided by the terms of the International Rivers Act. There is nothing like having these questions fairly discussed and presented to the people concerned. The hearings should not be held in a courtroom atmosphere where ordinary citizens are made to feel small and cheap, and uninformed. They should be held in the usual way such hearings have been conducted by the federal government throughout the years.

8. Then the result of the discussions and evidence presented at the public hearings in east and west Kootenay should be referred to the external affairs committee, when it is studying a proposed treaty.

We suggest that this procedure will do the following:

1. Provide opportunity to obtain advice and opinions from qualified persons.

2. Provide an opportunity for organizations and persons in the area affected to be informed and their views heard, whether they are farmers, village residents, industrial workers, tourist operators and so on.

3. Provide the government and members of the external affairs committee with essential information upon which to base any decision.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have hurried through this very complex and very complicated subject, but I have presented it in such a way so that it would be somewhat easy to digest by those who do not live in the area and are not acquainted with all the developments. Before concluding, and in order that they may get all the available information before they deal with this matter in the house, I suggest all hon. members get copies of a statement on the proposed Columbia river treaty made to senators and members of parliament in the House of Commons on Wednesday, December 12, 1962 at a meeting presided over by joint chairmen, the hon. member for Kootenay East and the hon. member for Kootenay West. This statement was made by General McNaughton. I also suggest they get a copy of an address given by General McNaughton to the association of professional engineers of Alberta held at Calgary on March 23, 1963.

I further suggest they get the latest issue of the International Journal, spring 1963, which costs 75 cents a copy. I see my colleague from Toronto has already got a copy of it, as have other hon. members. They will find a very complete article in it on the proposed Columbia treaty, by General A. G. L. McNaughton, which is very informing, covering the legal, engineering and economic aspects of the treaty. I also suggest they get a copy of the Engineering and Contract Record for September 1962 in which they will find an article on the Columbia treaty. Then too I suggest they would be well advised to get, from the Department of External Affairs, the report of the international joint commission—United States and Canada—on principles for determining and apportioning benefits from co-operative use of storage of waters and electrical interconnection within the Columbia river system. This will give them an opportunity to understand what is meant by the principles established by the international joint commission for the development of this great river system.

In conclusion I urge hon. members of all parties to consider this present delay as an opportunity to make a thorough review of every aspect of this problem, so that when we come to make a decision with respect to any treaty presented to the house, they will have all the facts available.

I am confident that when they have that information they will say, with a good many of us: "Thank God for General McNaughton, his services and his advice to this nation."

Mr. Viateur Ethier (Glengarry-Prescott): Mr. Speaker, it is a great honour for me to represent the county of Glengarry-Prescott in this house since this was the last riding which one of our great leaders, the Right Hon. William Lyon Mackenzie King, represented before he retired in 1948.

I should like to congratulate you, Mr. Speaker, on your election to the important office you now hold. I extend congratulations also to the Deputy Speaker whom I knew very well, having shared an office with him during the last parliament. I am sure, sir, knowing your good judgment that you will discharge your obligations with impartiality.

I should like also to take this opportunity to congratulate the proposer of the address in reply to the speech from the throne (Miss Jewett), a newcomer to this house who also represents an agricultural county which might be compared with my own. My congratulations, too, to the seconder, (Mr. Choquette), a very promising young man who proudly represented the French Canadian element in this house. I should like also to congratulate our Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) on succeeding so nicely in bringing back to office in this parliament the great Liberal party. Congratulations also to the Prime Minister on having selected men of such high quality to help him in his great task of making a success of this twenty sixth parliament. Sincere congratulations to all the cabinet ministers and parliamentary secretaries.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, since I represent an important rural riding which is the second largest producer of cheese in Canada, I wish to commend the present government for its intention of giving Canada a second minister of agriculture. I am confident that such a step would greatly improve the lot of eastern farmers. In fact, the farmers of my riding have already started to feel a certain improvement.

I wish to congratulate the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) for having increased, in the four or five days he had at his disposal, the subsidy on milk used in the manufacturing of cheddar cheese. Contrary to what happened in the past, that will help balance the production of cheese and butter in Canada. Obviously, that will not solve all the problems of our milk producers, but it is a step in the right direction.

Mr. Speaker, as member for an agricultural riding such as Glengarry-Prescott, I can assure the house that I shall press the government unceasingly until milk producers will get at least $3.50 per hundredweight for their milk.

Mr. Speaker, what our eastern farmers are lacking most of all is a greater borrowing power.

I therefore suggest that the Farm Credit Act be amended, as I asked before during the last session of the twenty fifth parliament, so that more farmers may obtain farm loans.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the previous minister of agriculture (Mr. Hamilton) advocated an unimaginative policy in the last parliament. These last few days, we have been criticized by the official opposition for having appointed three men to replace the former minister of agriculture. I sincerely believe that if he had not relied so much on his own judgment and had sought advice from other members, there would not be so many serious mistakes in the pieces of legislation that he had approved by the Department of Agriculture.

I should like to deal first of all with the Farm Credit Act. Last year, we considered this bill and suggested certain amendments. After having discussed the amendments brought forward by the Minister of Agriculture, we asked that the bill be sent to the committee on agriculture for further consideration, but this request was turned down. And I believe that I would not be wrong in saying that it was the first time in the political history of Canada that a parliament sat without a committee on agriculture being called upon to consider certain measures. Now, the hon. members who were here during the last parliament know very well that that is what happened.

The Farm Credit Act, in its present form, is useful to very few farmers in eastern Canada. On the other hand, in western Canada, where the farms are more extended, it might very well be that the farmers derive more benefits from the provisions of the act. However, in eastern Canada, in order to qualify for a farm loan, one must not be over 45 years old. And even at that, if the government would grant a loan for a period of 29 years under the present provisions of the act, the farmer, upon reaching 65, would still have one third of his loan to pay back to the government.

I think the legislation was drafted without the benefit of a close study.

The Cheese and Cheese Factories Improvement Act was also passed rather inconsiderately, because instead of helping the farmers, it made for their exploitation by certain people. Before the Conservatives took over, and introduced that legislation, we had several small cheese factories in my district which operated on a co-operative basis. Now, all those who are familiar with our farming counties know very well that our little cheese factories now hardly exist. Our farmers have to accept what the large concerns are willing to give for their goods.

Moreover, although cheese has been selling for the past two or three years at a higher price than ever before in Canada, the larger number of our farmers got less than $2.50 a hundredweight for their milk last year, including the increased bonus.

Mr. Benidickson: That is true.

Mr. Ethier: For instance, under the Cheese Factories Improvement Act, anybody able to amalgamate a second cheese factory with his own, qualified for a government grant representing 50 per cent of the cost of his business, up to a maximum of $60,000.

Here is what happened in my county. About five years ago, a cheese factory owner having succeeded in buying another small cheese factory qualified for a grant of $60,000. Now, this year, his factory burned down and he lost his business; he does not want to rebuild it and just puts the insurance money in his pocket. It is just as if the government had made that man a present of $60,000.

Now, if the minister of agriculture of the Conservative government at that time had intended to appoint two ministers of agriculture as the present government proposes to do now, we might perhaps have been able to save something. The hon. members for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) and Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Vincent) did very little last year to assist their minister of agriculture.

Mr. Pigeon: Prove that.

Mr. Gregoire: We saw it in our ridings.

An hon. Member: That is true.

Mr. Ethier: The hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska should have given his minister of agriculture a hand and—

Mr. Gregoire: That is true.

Mr. Ethier: —I think these members, like myself, represent a rural riding. I was here almost all the time, I seldom stayed away. When I hear some Social Credit members say: "That is true"—

Mr. Gregoire: That is true.

Mr. Ethier: —it reminds me that the majority of last year's Social Credit members came from rural ridings; and what solutions did they offer to the minister of agriculture when they discussed that matter?

Mr. Gregoire: You were not here.

Mr. Ethier: I sat on the other side of the house. You criticized the Liberal opposition, something seldom witnessed in this house. I think—

Mr. Gregoire: Criticize the opposition?

Mr. Ethier: —this year, you can do it, and properly so; you can criticize the Liberal party as much as you like.

Mr. Gregoire: That will not be difficult.

Mr. Ethier: At least, you will be doing what you are supposed to do.

Mr. Gregoire: That is true.

Mr. Pigeon: Would the hon. member allow me a question?

Mr. Ethier: When I have concluded my remarks.

Mr. Gregoire: The hon. member is afraid.

Mr. Ethier: No, I am not afraid, but the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm can ask his question when I have concluded my remarks.

An hon. Member: He is afraid.

Mr. Ethier: Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the government for having included in the speech from the throne the matter of contributory pension plans.

Mr. Gregoire: More taxes.

Mr. Ethier: The Liberal government deserves congratulations for that project and many others. I think it would be saying the truth to state—

Mr. Gregoire: That is not so sure.

Mr. Ethier: —that all social security measures in Canada were brought before this house by a Liberal government.

Mr. Benidickson: That is true.

Mr. Gregoire: So were taxes.

Mr. Pigeon: Including the atomic bomb.

Mr. Gregoire: And nuclear weapons.

Mr. Ethier: I should like to ask the government to include in that legislation on contributory pensions, a provision to take into consideration people who are 60 years of age and who cannot meet the requirements of their employer, because everyone knows that an individual who has a job requiring a great physical effort cannot give a full day's work after the age of 60.

Mr. Gregoire: We have been saying that for a long time.

Mr. Ethier: Furthermore, it is almost impossible for anybody who is 60 to find a job.

An hon. Member: Even 50.

Mr. Ethier: Then those people have to rely on relief. If we added a special clause to this act we would help those people, which would relieve municipalities of the heavy burden of looking after those needy persons.

Mr. Speaker, taking into account the increase in the cost of living I would also ask the government to give special consideration to family allowances.

Mr. Gregoire: Now you are talking.

Mr. Ethier: Family allowances are another item introduced in this house by a Liberal administration, but they were submitted to a lot of criticism at that time by the Conservative opposition which only the other day pretended they were the defenders of the small people in Canada. Well, I do not think they were that at the time because they very strenuously criticized the act and they did all they could to prevent its enactment. Family allowances may have had some relation to the cost of living some years ago—

Mr. Gregoire: Twenty years ago.

Mr. Ethier: —but I sincerely feel that a small increase would be most appropriate.

Mr. Gregoire: A large increase.

Mr. Ethier: Mr. Speaker, I believe that if family allowances were paid to the students in the high schools and universities it would encourage parents to keep their children at school.

Mr. Gregoire: Quite true.

Mr. Ethier: We would thus have an increased number of qualified people in the working class—

Mr. Gregoire: Quite true.

Mr. Ethier: —and that would reduce the risk of unemployment.

Before concluding my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words about the celebrations for the centennial of confederation.

Mr. Gregoire: You were doing well just now.

Mr. Ethier: I sincerely believe that for those celebrations it would be a good idea to recreate the atmosphere of 1867.

In addition, I submit that if we canalized the rapids on the Ottawa river, at Hawkesbury, it would make the river navigable up to the capital area, and we would then have one of the nicest tourist trips for the confederation celebrations.

The elimination of the Hawkesbury rapids and the reconstruction of all wharves which existed in all the villages before the erection of the Carillon dam, would cost very little to the federal treasury and would greatly assist the tourist industry in the years to come.

Mr. Gregoire: We should not forget to dredge the Saguenay river.

Mr. Ethier: Mr. Speaker, again about the confederation centennial I must remind the house that in my riding of Glengarry, which is an old Ontario riding, we have in Williamstown the oldest house in Ontario, the old Sir John Johnston manor house. Since that residence is only 25 miles away from Upper Canada Village, I believe that the federal government, in co-operation with the province of Ontario, could acquire the old structure and make it into a very nice historic site for the celebration of the centennial of confederation.

This scheme would cost very little to the government and it would increase the income from the tourist trade in Canada.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate the voters of my beautiful riding of Glengarry-Prescott who have put so much confidence in me, and I am sure that the government we now have will give a fair deal to the farmers, as well as to the other groups of our society.

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has agreed to answer a question at the end of his remarks. Could the hon. member tell us why the new Minister of Agriculture has completely cut off the 25-cent per hundred pounds subsidy on milk, thus reducing by $6 million the income of the dairy producers?

Mr. Ethier: I am sorry I have not understood the hon. member. Would he mind repeating his question?

Mr. Pigeon: Could the hon. member tell us why the new Minister of Agriculture has done away with the 25-cent per hundred pounds subsidy on milk, thus taking away from the dairy producers an income of $6 million? Does he find this step beneficial to the farmers?

Mr. Ethier: I believe that the hon. member could find the answer in yesterday's official Hansard, if he would take that trouble. However, I suggest that 25-cent subsidy which was cut off does not take anything away from the farmers, but rather from the capitalists and the dairy plants of the country, for I do not believe that the 25 cents which were supposed to be granted these last three or four years ever reached the farmers; although they were given a bonus of 25 cents this year, they were still getting less than in the past.

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Would the hon. member allow me a question? As far as his suggestion in regard to family allowances is concerned, has the hon. member made representations to his party and can he say that his party will raise the family allowances before long? Is there no answer coming?

Mr. Ethier: I have clearly specified in the course of my remarks that such representations will be made to the government.

Mr. Gregoire: Since his time has not run out yet, could the hon. member tell us whether he will exert very strong pressure on the government in order that they raise family allowances?

Mr. Ethier: That you will know in due course.

(Text):

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): It is, sir, a pleasure and an honour for me to be able to participate in this very important throne speech debate. I know there is a tendency in the press and elsewhere to denigrate this particular part of our parliamentary proceedings. I hear the expression that the throne speech debate drones on and interest slackens. Actually, the parliament of Canada is not designed for the amusement of the press gallery. It is of the utmost importance that this legislative chamber remain always a representative body and that we have the viewpoints constantly put forward of those members who are elected from various parts of this country. I think it is a vital and highly necessary part of our proceedings.

I would like to begin, as hon. members who preceded me have begun, in congratulating our Speaker and Deputy Speaker. I would like to say a particular word to the deputy chairman of committees. It is some time since one of our chief presiding officers has come from the Atlantic provinces, and I wish the hon. member for Humber-St. George's (Mr. Batten) all good wishes in the discharge of his duties.

There are those in this country who are concerned about the permanency of the speakership, and this indeed may be a forward step. But as I have looked back over the record of Canadian history I am not convinced that this high office has been degraded by the hon. gentlemen who have held it through the years. I would like to congratulate the mover and the seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. This is not only a perfunctory duty; it is a real pleasure. I congratulate especially the mover, who is a fellow political scientist; indeed, a professor of political science. It would probably be ungracious of me to use the expression "egghead" about such a charming lady, although I have been the recipient of the expression many, many times in the house. But it is for me, perhaps, a more appropriate expression. I think we do well to have a few academicians among the hidebound or practical politicians who make up the bulk of those in this chamber. I would like to say that the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) indulged in a bit of poetic licence today when he spoke about his constituency being the Garden of Eden. I speak a straight line when I say that I represent the garden province of Canada, the garden of the gulf or, perhaps, in deference to the Solicitor General (Mr. MacNaught) I should say that I represent the most prosperous and most beautiful and politically perceptive part thereof.

I was impressed, too, by the speech of the hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott (Mr. Ethier) and I congratulate him on something I have long sought but have been unable to obtain, his felicity and facility in both languages. If I sought to give him any advice it would not be in languages, but I would say that when it comes to cheese, if he wants to be a gourmet he should try Tyne Valley, Prince Edward Island. I think the mover made a most interesting contribution to the debate and I think my good friend and colleague, the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Fairweather) followed that approach today, in that he and she before him looked at some of the fundamentals upon which our political system is based and examined some of the organizations and institutions of Canadian politics. She, I believe, pointed out that because of her observations and study of the Liberal party she decided to become a Liberal. I would not want to indulge in too much self-confession, but I went through a similar performance and I made a somewhat different choice. I had long been convinced of the great contribution made by the political group that was founded by Sir John A. Macdonald over 100 years ago. I knew he had been impressive in his stand for a strong national policy, that he had shown moderation in days of extremism, that he brought a pragmatic and sound approach to problems facing this difficult, challenging and wonderful country. As I looked over our political history I saw the same emphasis on a sound and vigorous nationalism personified by that great Nova Scotian, that great Canadian, Robert Borden, who was the chief architect of Canada's independent nationhood, the man who said, "If you want our aid, call us to your councils", and who was not unprepared to accept all the responsibilities which were given to this country. Then I thought of one of the series of great Conservatives in the long story of our party, the late Arthur Meighen, who typified forthrightness and a straightforward meeting of even the most thorny issues, and a refusal to deal in the kind of indirect discourse and opinion-reading which sometimes brings success to the shrewd politician but apparent failure to the statesman.

However, the moment of truth came when as a Canadian voter I sat in the gallery of this House of Commons and saw the frightening drama of the pipe line debate. I saw closure brutally applied. I saw our parliamentary institution shaken to its very foundation. Then I decided to put all else aside and give such energy and ability as I might possess to the party which fought against that terrible threat to our democratic institution. I am proud to say—and I am not one of those who believe that one party has a monopoly of all the virtues—that in the six years in which I supported the government never once did I see it resort to such repressive tactics no matter how sustained or fractious the oposition. I cannot but note that some who sat in the seats of power in those days sit there again.

But enough of the past. We hope those days are gone and that those who are now in government will not even be tempted ever to return to that kind of conduct. Perhaps this is what is meant in the throne speech when we find the expression, "Familiar ways of thought and action are becoming less certain guides". We now have, if not the new era at least a new parliament, a government in office but barely in power. We have a large, active, vigorous opposition. These are things from which one can take some comfort. I believe that the April 8 election has done something; it has expressed the Canadian people's preference for the two-party system, and I believe that before too long the third and fourth parties will disappear from our political spectrum. The New Democratic party was something of a marvel in our age. Never was there a party so long aborning, never such elaborate birth rites, and yet it seems to have gone into a decline before it reached its adolescence.

Mr. Douglas: What a surprise you are going to get.

Mr. Macquarrie: Of the Social Credit party I will say nothing. They, I believe, have troubles enough of their own. But what of the new government, still enjoying a political honeymoon, still basking in the glaring light of favourable publicity? How soon, I ask, will the cracks in its façade become apparent? How quickly will its great list of tremendous promises and magnificent commitments run it into difficulties, difficulties dire and dreadful, I am afraid?

Much is said of the ability of the new administration, and I hope for Canada that these men who form it are as able as their friends proclaim. Yet I cannot forbear to feel that in this new government we have seen administrative ability and expertise become the leading virtues. An efficient and effective bureaucracy is essential in the modern state but the bureaucracy is the means of government. It must never itself become the government. Sound judgment, awareness of the needs of all parts of the country and, above all, an ever-present sensitivity to the parliamentary process and the democratic fundamentals are much, much more important. I sincerely hope that the Prime Minister will never allow these priorities to be lost sight of. As an old professor of mine used to say, experts should be on tap but never on top. This man was a good Liberal too, and there are lots of good Liberals in the universities.

However, Mr. Speaker, I am not disposed to be critical. I believe that Canadians as a whole want to see this government given a chance because they may feel its tenure may not be very long. Yet even at this stage I have one disappointment. I had thought that my long time friend, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin), would have been a little more prominent in the early 60-day decisive phase of the government. He did not go to London, nor did he go to Hyannis Port. Nor has he in these early decisive days been able to bring about his cherished desire of bringing Canada into the organization of American states. I thought he might be making some tours in Latin America when his Prime Minister was going to Massachusetts and London, but I have not heard that we are moving into the organization of American states.

But I remember what I heard last January. The hon. member who is now Secretary of State for External Affairs said then:

> The time was never more urgent for us to accept the longstanding invitation of every member of the O.A.S. and to join this organization.

I have been looking forward to such a step for many years and I thought he was the man who would finally lead us to accept some of our hemispheric responsibilities. But not even in the speech from the throne do I detect the slightest hint that this step is about to be taken. However, I wish the new Secretary of State for External Affairs well. Never would I accuse him of doing anything to injure Canada's prestige abroad or to lower our standing among the international community. I am equally convinced that the same would be said by every objective Canadian about the two great statesmen who preceded him, the late Sidney Smith and the Hon. Howard Green.

If there was one thing about the last election campaign which I think should soon be forgotten and pass into the limbo of things which should never be uttered in campaigns, it was the suggestion by spokesmen of the present government that Canada's repute abroad was being lowered. This was positively not the case, and Canada's role in the last six years offers far more eloquent refutation than I could ever give.

I was impressed and pleased with and I congratulate the new member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Deachman) upon the remarks he made about the Hon. Howard Green. They were a little in contradiction of some of the things said by some of his political associates during the recent campaign.

But I think this is not a time to dwell on negatives, Mr. Speaker. I think all hon. members will want to assist the new government in its difficult task, and if they do not think they are going to have difficulties they have a rude awakening not far ahead. We are interested in seeing what they will do, in seeing how they will translate into positive and meaningful action the commitments which in such large measure they gave the people of Canada from coast to coast. I should like to presume to assist the new ministers with particular reference to the province of Prince Edward Island.

I think Prince Edward Island makes a good test case. In no province is the question of dominion-provincial relations so important and I think that a dominion government which does well by Prince Edward Island can measure up to discharge its duties properly for the whole of Canada. One fundamental problem in Prince Edward Island is the problem which was germane to the confederation discussions of 1873, that of transportation. We were a bit reluctant to enter confederation—when I say "we" I am speaking historically—and we insisted that efficient and continuous communication with the mainland must be guaranteed by the dominion government.

If you go down through the years you will find that Prince Edward Island members of parliament, whether Liberal or Conservative—we have never had any other kind—have asked about the honouring and the upgrading of this commitment with regard to the question of transportation. It is a vital question. More and more people are showing their good judgment and coming to our island province. They are coming by the thousands and they are welcome. There is room, and the happy thing about it is that those who come return again and again.

Hon. members will recall we have discussed the question of ferries. When the Liberal party came into power in 1935 it found at Borden two ferries, one four years old and one 18 years old. After 22 years in office they left at Borden two ferries, one 10 years old and the other 40 years old. When the last government left office a few weeks ago there were at Borden four ferries on the run or available on the run and plans were under way for yet another new one. So I would say to the new Minister of Transport (Mr. McIlraith), who is not here, along with most of the members of his party, that this is a fundamental thing for him to consider and that he has quite a challenge to meet if he is going to live up to the record of the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer) when he was minister of transport.

I was interested when the minister replied to my colleague, the senior member for Queens (Mr. MacLean), the other day in respect of the building of a new ferry for the Borden-Tormentine run and said that plans are going forward. I should like them to go forward at an even faster rate. I very much hope that the decision to build this ferry, coupled with the lack of reference to the causeway in any official announcement by the government, does not mean that the present government will repudiate the commitment of its predecessor in respect of the building of this tremendous land link which will finally join Canada and Prince Edward Island. I should like to make it very clear that we do not consider the causeway to be one of those projects to be decided upon by the Atlantic development board, no matter how many members it is going to have on it. In the first place, $100 million would not build the causeway and, even more important, this is a great project which has already been decided upon and upon which we received a commitment which I expect will be fulfilled.

Then, I should like to deal with the question of fiscal needs. If the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) were here, I could point out to him the success story of the last government in the way it dealt with our little province. During the fiscal year 1956-57 Prince Edward Island received $4,870,000 from Ottawa. During the fiscal year 1961-62 the amount was $12,242,000. Total expenditures by Ottawa on behalf of Prince Edward Island were, for the corresponding years, $30,569,000 and $47,394,000. This is the kind of pattern we expect him to emulate because if he does not, to plagiarize the title of a well known book, he will have a sorely troubled Prince Edward Island on his hands.

We recall with appreciation how quickly the former government moved to implement the Atlantic Provinces Adjustment Act. This made great new sources of revenue available to our province and to our sister provinces in the maritimes to extend further the services needed by our people.

If the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing) were here, I would say to him that we hope he will emulate his three predecessors in their vigour and their interest in the development of one of the finest national parks in Canada. With one exception, this park had more visitors than any other in this country last year and the year before. We found that previous years of neglect, money voted and not spent, had to be met in 1957 with a vigorous and massive development program which resulted in a tremendous expansion in the use of the park by people from all over North America.

I would say to the same minister that the roads to resources program has meant a great deal to our people and has translated, in a few short years what was at one time the province's poor highway system into one of the most splendid highway networks in the dominion of Canada.

If the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) were here I would say that the ARDA program has struck a most generous and appreciative response in Prince Edward Island. Our provincial government, headed by that truly great Canadian the Hon. Walter Shaw, had already embarked upon a program along similar lines which dovetailed magnificently with this program which is known as ARDA. I hope the present Minister of Agriculture or the other one who comes from the east—I suppose we will come under his jurisdiction—will foster and further the development of this magnificent program which is doing so much for the agricultural people of Canada.

I do not know to whom the next item should be directed—perhaps the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh). If she were here, I would say that we expect the payment of $75 per month to all our people over 65 years of age. This will be appreciated, as was the increase of $19 which was made by the previous government. The increase would only be $10, but we will appreciate it. I was impressed the other day as I listened to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). He seemed to be somewhat critical of the Liberal party because, in his view, they had taken a long time to fulfil their promise in respect of hospitalization. I suppose one might say that it was our party that fulfilled that promise for them. However, I would not quibble. The year 1919, to which he referred, happens to be the year of my birth, and therefore I cannot say it is a long time ago.

I am also not prepared to say it is a long time when I recall another promise which was made at another Liberal convention in the year 1893. This is a most impressive commitment to the people of Canada and was given by the Liberals then assembled. It was that:

> —the present constitution of the Senate is inconsistent with federal principles in our system of government and is in other respects defective, as it makes the Senate independent of the people and uncontrolled by the public opinion of the country, and should be so amended as to bring it into harmony with the principles of popular government.

This was a plank in the platform in 1893, in 1896, and I need not ask Mr. Speaker, about the implementation of that plank in an ancient platform. Compared with that, the non-implementation of the hospitalization plank of 1919 may be interpreted as a mere lapse of memory. If there are changes in the Senate, I suspect they will be similar to the changes which have been made throughout the years when the Liberal party was in power.

I would not want to give the impression to the members of the new government that we do not wish them well, that we are not here to assist in any way we can in their policies for the people. I should like, at this time, to compliment the Prime Minister upon having selected one of my Prince Edward Island colleagues for a cabinet post. I will not make any comparisons on the importance of the post formerly held by my colleague, the hon. member for Queens (Mr. MacLean) and the post of Solicitor General. I will only say that I am delighted that the Liberal party, after a quarter of a century, has honoured one of the members from Prince Edward Island by giving him a cabinet position. I extend to the Solicitor General (Mr. MacNaught) my good wishes as he takes on his duties. I pledge him such co-operation as I can give in the furtherance of the interests of Prince Edward Island.

I should like to say, too, that I feel similarly about the new member for Kings (Mr. Mullally). Naturally, I cannot compliment him upon defeating my former colleague, Mrs. MacDonald. However, I wish him well and I will say to him, through you sir, that as always I stand for province before party. If the new government, during its tenure of office can do as well or half as well for Prince Edward Island and for the maritimes in general as its predecessor, they will exceed my expectations, but they will please me tremendously.

There is nothing more for me to do at this stage, but I hope in future days I may have an opportunity to participate in debate. While I may not have been active in some ways, Mr. Speaker, I think no hon. member who has ever come to the House of Commons has moved about as much as I have. I began by sitting on the Speaker's remote right and now I am on the Speaker's immediate left. Who knows where I will end. In the parliaments of Europe they used to interpret and correlate a position in the chamber with one's political views. To date I have been an extreme rightist and an extreme leftist. Possibly my position merely indicates my party whip wanted to get me as far away as possible, or perhaps it was just an accident of seating arrangements.

We will have a big event in Prince Edward Island in 1964, the place where Canada was born and which is the cradle of confederation. At this early stage I would like to extend an invitation to all hon. members to join with the thousands and thousands of others who are coming to our shores to celebrate that inaugural event. I think we will give you a real eye opener and a worthy prelude to the national celebrations which will take place in 1967.

Mr. Ron Basford (Vancouver-Burrard): Mr. Deputy Speaker, I have enjoyed listening to the last remarks of the hon. member for Queens (Mr. Macquarrie), particularly with regard to closure. I find them a little surprising coming from one who is a supporter of the right hon. gentleman opposite, the former prime minister, who undertook to do away with closure and then immediately imposed his own form of closure by governing the country, or trying to govern the country, by refusing to allow parliament to discuss a budget for two years and by imposing taxation and surcharges by order in council, again without allowing parliament the opportunity of discussing them.

I should like to congratulate you, sir, on your election as chairman of committees and Deputy Speaker, and I ask you to convey to the hon. member for Mount Royal my congratulations on his election as Speaker, which I add to the many already offered him. I am sure Mr. Speaker's conduct in his high office will be such that it will lend to the increasing demand that his appointment be permanent.

I also want to congratulate the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) on his election as Prime Minister, and his cabinet colleagues on their appointments. I am sure the trust that millions of Canadians have placed in him will be fully justified. I further want to congratulate the mover and seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne on the creditable manner in which they performed their task, which has brought honour and distinction to their respective ridings.

I would like to thank the people of my own riding, particularly those who voted for me and worked so hard on my behalf, for giving to me the opportunity, at a fairly early age, of serving in this house and working with other hon. members in making this country a better place for all of us. I would also like to thank my fellow Liberal party members from British Columbia in doing me the honour of selecting me as chairman of the British Columbia caucus.

I think I speak on behalf of all new members on both sides of the house in thanking those hon. members re-elected in the last election for the very warm and gracious way in which they have welcomed us to the house, and for the very helpful way in which they have endeavoured to get us going on our parliamentary duties.

I have not had the opportunity of talking with the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas), but I am sure when I do his welcome will be tinged with a certain regret because, Mr. Speaker, I have the honour—or at least I regard it as an honour—of belonging to a very select group on this side of the house who defeated New Democratic party members of parliament in the recent election. The N.D.P. group in the house has grown smaller as a result of the April 8 election, and I predict that in the years and the elections to come they will grow smaller still.

If the government is allowed by hon. gentlemen opposite to get on with the job of governing Canada and carrying out its program, of which the speech from the throne is only a first instalment, we will be able to show that this party and this government are the really effective element of reform in Canada, and that the New Democratic party, by fighting or refighting the class wars of 50 years ago, is becoming increasingly old fashioned and out of touch with Canada's twentieth century problems. In passing, I would say to the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge), because I know the N.D.P. well, that I think the Sergeant-at-Arms should be left where he is rather than put in the centre of the aisle.

It is traditional in maiden speeches to describe in some detail the beauties of one's own riding. I would like to describe the beauties of my riding and of the west coast of Canada, but the beauties of the west coast are so great that they are indescribable. Rather than describe them I would like to invite all hon. members to come out to the west coast of Canada to see the sort of very beautiful country we have there.

To hon. members who do not know my riding I point out that it is purely urban, situated in the central part of Vancouver and having both residential and industrial sections. While I hope to speak from time to time in the house with regard to problems of special concern to my riding, such as waterfront development, False Creek harbour development and the Kitsilano air force station which is located in it, at the present I just want to mention it is a purely urban and downtown riding.

Because it is situated right in the city of Vancouver, the general prosperity and welfare of the people of my riding, like that of all people in Vancouver, are dependant largely upon the success of Vancouver becoming the major trading port that it can become. At the present time to handle the people and commodities arriving at our international airport and through our harbour, 24 consulates, five trade commissioners, 21 customs house brokers, 15 shipping agents, 47 shipping company representatives and 26 freight forwarders now make Vancouver their operational base. Because of the importance of trade to Vancouver, and because of the importance of Vancouver becoming the trading centre that it can and must become, I welcome the references in the speech from the throne to the fact that the government will pursue an active and expansionist policy with regard to trade. The welfare of Vancouver and the west coast generally depends on Canada having the freest possible degree of trade. In this particular connection I would like to bring to the attention of the Prime Minister and his colleagues the application of the city of Vancouver for a centennial Pacific trade centre. I shall quote briefly from the application of the city of Vancouver with regard to this trade centre:

> There is reason to expect Canada's exports to northeast and southeast Asia, Australasia and the west coast of the Americas will flow through British Columbia ports at the rate of more than $2 billion a year a decade from now.
>
> To secure this trebled increase and to improve upon it, and in so doing help correct Canada's urgent imbalance in world trade, requires bold, new-fashioned formulas to withstand competition from the aggressive new Europe and the United States.
>
> The Pacific centennial trade centre is proposed as one such bold, new-fashioned formula.
>
> It is the contention of the city of Vancouver that the centennial Pacific trade centre, bringing together under a common roof all traders with Pacific interests, not only will meet the foreseeable demand but, more, will be the prime agent creating it.
>
> It seeks the impetus of the senior government.

This is an application by the city for the construction of a huge trading centre in Vancouver. I would urge upon the Prime Minister that at the appropriate time he give this application the attention it deserves so that we may have constructed in Vancouver a monument not so much to what has been done as to what the port of Vancouver can become.

[Mr. Basford.]

My riding of Vancouver-Burrard is wholly urban. Vancouver, like every major city in Canada, has at its centre areas of blight, decay, ruin and slum. While there are many charming residences in my riding, there are also accommodations in which no human being should be expected to live. I am sure some of the agriculturists opposite would refuse to put some of their animals in such accommodation. For this reason I welcome the announcement in the speech from the throne foreshadowing the establishment of a municipal development and loan board as well as changes in the National Housing Act which, I am sure, will provide cities and municipalities with increased financial assistance in respect of slum clearance and urban redevelopment. I would hope that the mayor and aldermen of my city, as well as those of all other Canadian cities, are farsighted and imaginative enough to take full advantage of this municipal program when it is established.

There are those in our cities who regard slum clearance and urban redevelopment as a luxury which municipal taxpayers can ill afford. On the contrary, slum clearance makes good economic sense. Apart entirely from the social and human values involved—and these should not be minimized—it is of real advantage to municipal taxpayers to redevelop their blighted and slum areas. A decayed area brings little or no revenue to a city, yet the major part of every city's police costs, fire costs, welfare and other costs is spent in these non-revenue producing areas. The largest burden for servicing these blighted and decayed areas falls not on those areas but on the non-slum areas. It therefore makes good economic sense for cities to redevelop these areas and bring them back into active and proper use producing tax revenues for their municipalities.

I had not intended to mention anything about the fishing industry but the subject was raised this afternoon by the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Patterson). I wish to say only that I welcome the statement in the speech from the throne with regard to the establishment of a 12-mile territorial limit recognizing the treaty rights and historic rights of others. I am sure that in the atmosphere which now prevails under a government which is dealing with our friends as friends and not as enemies, we shall shortly be able to establish a 12-mile limit and thus give to our fisheries on both coasts the protection they need.

I should like to compliment the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Robichaud) for having come to British Columbia only a few days after his appointment and sat down with representatives of our fishing industry, our vessel owners, the union and the native brotherhood to discuss the problems of the industry and to hear the representations, made to him with regard to changes in the international north Pacific fisheries convention. I compliment the hon. gentleman on having taken quick and decisive action in this regard and on saving the NORPAC treaty and the international control of fishing in international waters when it was in great danger of collapse. I disagree with what was said by the hon. member for Fraser Valley and compliment the Minister of Fisheries on his conduct.

I welcome the statement in the speech from the throne that the government will be establishing a commission to study biculturalism. There are those who may wonder why people in British Columbia are concerned about this subject when we are so far removed from the scene of action but I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that we as Canadians are as concerned as anyone else about the present stresses and strains within our confederation. I hope this royal commission will produce at least some of the answers to the problem. I hope that all Canadians, whether we be English speaking or French speaking, will act with understanding and maturity because, if we do, we can surely provide a system by which the rights and privileges of all Canadians are protected and recognized within confederation.

However, in this discussion of biculturalism let us not forget another group of Canadians, those who have come from afar to make their homes in Canada. I ask the indulgence of the house before reading part of a letter which was delivered to me on election day. I might add that it made the afternoon of election day a little more pleasant.

I am authorized by a few dozen naturalized new Canadians to address myself to you on behalf of all of us.

Having discussed thoroughly the question of voting today, we have decided all to vote for the Liberal party on April 8, 1963.

The motives of our unanimous decision were:

We have full confidence as working people and as members of an ethnic group that the Liberal party government will secure for us more jobs, and that the new Liberal government will have also more understanding for our own, as well as for all Canadian ethnic groups, their cultural, social and political needs and aspirations.

Please convey this our feeling of confidence directly to the hon. Lester B. Pearson with the expression of our highest esteem for him.

I urge the house not to forget in our consideration of biculturalism that there are thousands of people, those of whom the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Ryan) spoke so eloquently, who have come to Canada to build new homes and new lives. In some cases the countries from which they came have been destroyed or have disappeared. These people want to play their part, and an important part, in helping to build this country into the great nation which I am sure it can become.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): In rising to take part in this debate I should like to congratulate the Speaker, the Deputy Speaker and you, sir, the deputy chairman of committees of the house. I should also like to extend the customary congratulations to the mover (Miss Jewett) and seconder (Mr. Choquette) of the address.

I think, too, it would be fitting for me to pay tribute to my hon. friend, the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Watson) who defeated the once famous member who represented that constituency in this house, none other than Mr. Argue.

An hon. Member: A good man.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Yes, in your eyes. As another socialist you can agree with him. I think the hon. member who now sits for that constituency did a great service to farmers and Canadians everywhere by defeating that once socialist member who represented the constituency of Assiniboia.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Because if he had been elected he would have been made minister of agriculture in the Liberal government we now have.

An hon. Member: That is right.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Someone says that is right. Hon. members over on that side were faced with a very difficult choice. They had a possible left-wing minister of agriculture, but he was defeated so they chose the very opposite, a right-wing minister of agriculture, and they say they were right with either one of them. They do not know their fellowmen very well. I think the whole house should pay tribute to the result of the election in Assiniboia, and I hope we will reap the benefits from that election for many years to come.

Being a farmer, I may deal to quite some extent with agriculture during my talk. I read the speech from the throne carefully to determine what it meant to me and to all farmers in western Canada. I wanted to know whether there was anything we could grasp upon. Was there anything in it hon. members opposite could grasp upon? They seem to want to grasp upon something. I say, grasp upon it, and then tell me what any farmer concerned about agriculture could grasp upon. I followed very closely the vote taken in the United States with regard to farm problems there whereby a guaranteed support price for wheat was rejected by the farmers of that country.

I ask hon. members on the other side of the house, what does that mean to Canadian agriculture? Where does it place their $2 per bushel guaranteed price they campaigned about so vigorously? What assurance can they give me as a representative of the farmers in my constituency that the bottom will not fall out of the price of wheat? I looked at the speech from the throne for some assurance but found none.

Mr. Speaker, I did find a high-sounding paragraph with regard to a program for agriculture, but there was absolutely nothing in it. Then I read a little further and saw reference to a division in the department, the establishment of a second minister. I should like to point out at once that it may take two ministers to do the job as successfully as the former minister of agriculture.

An hon. Member: It may take three.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): It may even take three, as is suggested. Are they trying to scale down the job to fit the man? I do not think so. I think they are doing this for political reasons, and very poor reasons at that. Are they going to set up two separate departments with two deputy ministers, each of which would have a certain amount of control over the stabilization board? Which one would control the stabilization board or other departments like the ARDA program which will be functioning for many years to come all across Canada?

Mr. Olson: It has not functioned yet.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): The brilliant comment from a neighbouring constituent in Alberta is that it has not functioned yet. I would inform him that the minister in that province asked for $6 million under ARDA for development in Alberta.

Mr. Olson: Yes, if we get it.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I would hope you would get it with the co-operation of the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill), who is listening carefully to this debate. You would have got it a year ago if the Alberta government had been prepared to act; and on that subject I will say more later on so I hope the hon. member remains in his seat to hear me out.

Mr. Speaker, at the moment I am dealing with the question of whether the farmers of western Canada can look at the Department of Agriculture and expect jurisdiction, advice and counsel with regard to any particular product we may be producing. The speech from the throne refers to an eastern minister and a western minister. We have livestock industries and feed cattle flourishing in both areas. I think that whatever legislation in agriculture is brought in it must have a basic concept which will apply all across Canada, treating all parts of Canada equally alike. ARDA is a very good example of this. The stabilization board is a very good example of this, as is the Farm Credit Corporation and many others which can quickly be cited. I would question very much whether the Department of Agriculture needs two ministers actually to increase efficiency in that department. I would like to point out that this step does nothing for any particular part of Canada but it may do something for a particular political party which has been trying to favour itself at the expense of all Canada over the last five years.

We in western Canada heard a lot about this $2 per bushel of wheat, so perhaps, Mr. Speaker, you will bear with me if I come back to it for a moment. I might say that No. 1, No. 2 and No. 3 wheat are all supposed to be scaled below $2 a bushel. What of barley and oats? What of Durum wheat? Does there not have to be a relationship between your crops in the acreages allotted? We do not want to have western Canada growing nothing but wheat and no oats or barley. We have seen during the last year or two a shortage of oats in western Canada. A year ago oats had to be imported from the United States. If wheat is priced at $2 a bushel and oats at only 50 cents a bushel, what will the farmer grow? Of course he will grow more wheat than formerly. He will take acres out of oats and put them into wheat, and we will have again to import feed grains into the country, which is likely to occur in years ahead with a Liberal government, and have a surplus of grain.

We in western Canada paid particular note also to the fact that the wheat board and board of grain commissioners were taken out of the Department of Agriculture and placed once again into the Department of Trade and Commerce. Many farmers have asked me why this was done. I am a person of non-partisan views in many cases. I had a number of Liberals and a tremendous number of N.D.P. people supporting me and voting for me, but the only true answer I could give them was that there was a political reason for the government taking this step. It was taken a day or two after the government took office. I ask, why would a minister from Toronto sell more wheat and feel more responsible to sell wheat than one who had grown up and been raised in the wheat growing areas of western Canada? It has no real logic to it, and I doubt whether it will work as efficiently as the former one.

It is interesting to note that taking the wheat board and the board of grain commissioners out of the Department of Agriculture means that they now fall under the responsibility of a former deputy minister of trade and commerce. A few years ago when farmers had a surplus of grain and wanted an advance on the grain they had stored in the granaries on their farms, the department said no. Farm unions and representatives came to Ottawa and asked for cash advances several times. This is an old story to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp). He determinedly said no in those days, and I suppose that western farmers in particular can look forward to being told no in the future.

An hon. Member: That is the Liberal answer.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): As my colleague says, that is the Liberal answer.

Western farmers enjoyed a reasonably good year in 1962 while many areas were still plagued with drought. Grasshoppers were still a problem in other areas. The cattle industry enjoyed a relatively good year. Farm income was high. Farmers are now asking themselves, "What will a change in government in Ottawa do to the money in our pockets?" They are asking themselves whether they will have more or less money. After all, this is the way in which farmers usually judge governments. I think farmers are concerned today. They were concerned about the political shifts in the Department of Agriculture as soon as there was a change of government. They immediately looked to the speech from the throne to see if they could find any reassurance there. They found none. We will be watching agricultural legislation very, very closely in the weeks ahead. We will be looking for this assurance in the hope that it will be forthcoming.

We hear talk about trade missions and wheat exports. We know wheat exports are down a little in relation to what they were in the past. We want assurance in this regard. As a representative of an agricultural constituency I will be working hard trying to obtain some assurance for the farmers I represent and farmers generally across western Canada.

As a member from the province of Alberta I had the idea that a veterinary college should be established in that province. Alberta has been hanging back. At one time the premier of Alberta said that a veterinary college would be a white elephant. He has come off that to some extent; he now says, no, it would not be a white elephant; but he has not proposed any actual expenditure in this connection. I hope the present Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) who is a colleague, one might say, from Alberta, will use his good offices to try to encourage the somewhat slow department in Alberta to promote and create a veterinary college for that province, in which most of the livestock in western Canada are raised.

There is one other thing I should like to point out. The constituency which I represent is sometimes plagued with drought and is commonly called the short grass country. Many community boards have been set up to promote water studies and feed resources in the southern part of that riding. I was interested the other day in a report to the effect that the prairie water conservation board wanted to go ahead with a very thorough study of what might be called the eastern Rocky mountains watershed. This whole concept springs from the resources conference which we had a couple of years ago. Alberta once again said no.

Mr. Olson: We have already had such a study.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Alberta once again said no, they would not contribute and would not enter into a study of the potential water resources of the prairie provinces. Because Manitoba and Saskatchewan said they would, Alberta said they would not. I would ask the Minister of Agriculture to use his good offices to urge Alberta, that wealthy province of Alberta that we hear so much about, to move on this suggestion, because in many parts of that province we are still forgotten on this question of water. Many parts of Alberta could use greater feed resources for a greater intensification of the livestock industry.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. member would permit a question.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I would be glad to do so.

Mr. Olson: I wonder whether the hon. member has read the very exhaustive study that was undertaken in about 1952 respecting this whole area about which he now speaks, prior to the arrangements for the south Saskatchewan river dam.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I do not know that I have read the particular report to which the hon. member refers. He failed to give it a title. I might have read it, but I might not. I would rather not deal with that question now. I have read many studies with regard to the watershed and the water resources with which we are so blessed in the prairie provinces, particularly in Alberta. I am vitally interested in this question, and I would once again urge the hon. member who is particularly interested in my speech to get in touch with his party in Alberta on this question. Perhaps when there is an election out there he could urge them to make some promises in an election campaign which would give some ray of hope to that area which is so badly in need of water as a guaranteed feed resource. This is very important to the people and the livestock industry there.

Mr. Speaker, I should now like to leave the subject of agriculture and deal with another question. Many of my constituents looked to the speech from the throne to find a ray of hope or an assurance that they may have a job tomorrow or the day after tomorrow. I refer in this connection particularly to the operations of the C.N.R. railroad and transportation by rail generally. I read the speech from the throne and found very little reference to rail transportation, railway line abandonment, and so on. I found no guarantee that any significant legislation would be forthcoming in this regard. The other day questions were asked in this house with regard to the discontinuance of railway services from Winnipeg to Calgary. These questions were asked because the people in those areas are concerned about this matter. I refer to the people who are receiving benefits from these services and the people operating the trains. This is just one more step in the operations of the C.N.R. The policy of the C.N.R. is to continually take away services and eventually abandon the line if possible. The policy laid down by the president of the C.N.R. is that the railroad should become bulk haulers and they should do away with all other types of traffic. It is strange to me, Mr. Speaker, that a bus can run along a highway and carry passengers, when its maintenance costs are higher and fuel consumption, and so on, are higher than is the case with many railway lines. On the railway you have smaller inclines and no breaking up of roads which causes wear on tires, or anything of this sort. The question was asked the other day about trains Nos. 9 and 10 being discontinued. There is no regular bus route to replace these trains. No other means of passenger service will be implemented or could be implemented. Since the change of government the railway have failed to take into consideration the needs of this area in what might be called the south central part of the prairies.

We know the railroad operations will come up for review in the sessional committee which will be set up very soon, I hope. This committee will study the yearly operations of the C.N.R. This house knows my feelings with regard to the management of the C.N.R. A fellow by the name of Coyne entered into saving Mr. Gordon's neck a few years ago. In any case, I hope that sessional committee will study the expenditures and operations of the C.N.R. very, very closely. This railroad did away with firemen. They are now trying to lengthen their runs; they are trying to run through divisional points and lengthen the runs so they may last, particularly in winter, from six to 16 hours. No man can stay on the job day in and day out for 16 hours without its having some effect upon his health or the proper fulfilment of his duties. We have already increased the operational duties of the sectionmen, while at the same time cutting down on the help. To me and my constituents this appears to be nothing more than a matter of increasing the hazards of railway travel. One can only note that the accident rate on the railways has gone up and is going up and this emphasizes the fact that the direction of movement of railway management can only lead to an increase in the accident rate.

I do not want to go into the question of railway deficits. We all know that the C.N.R. took over many uneconomic lines. We all know that in some cases some lines may perhaps have to be abandoned in all parts of Canada. But I do think we all agree that in most cases the C.N.R. has a duty to provide a service and a means of transportation for the goods and commodities produced by the people of Canada.

My constituency along with several others is going to be affected a great deal by any changes in transportation policy that may result from the MacPherson report. I was vitally interested in the legislation proposed by the former government and I looked in the speech from the throne for some assurance of the continuation of jobs in the field of railway transportation. We find little assurance. We will once again watch for any legislative development on the part of the government to provide assurance to railway workers all across Canada that their jobs will be secure and that the trains and trackage will remain as a prominent part of Canada and the movement of Canadian goods.

(Translation):

Mr. Jean-Pierre Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, allow me to add my own congratulations to the many you have already received on the occasion of your appointment to the high office of Speaker of the house. I wish to pay homage also to the Deputy Speaker. I take this opportunity to congratulate the new ministers who have been called to the cabinet and to encourage them in the hard task that awaits them in order to put our economy back on its feet. I feel sorry for them when I think of the problems their predecessors have saddled them with.

I am very proud to represent in this house the beautiful riding of Longueuil. I take this opportunity to thank my electors who had to choose between the former associate minister of national defence, a Social Crediter, a member of the New Democratic party and myself. I must say, Mr. Speaker, that I have nothing but praise for my opponents who put up a clean fight, without personalities. I would like to mention in particular the Hon. Pierre Sevigny, a veteran, a colonel, a very sociable man, who has many friends and who had been the member for Longueuil since 1958.

Mr. Speaker, it gives a newcomer in politics a great thrill to have defeated a minister at the polls even though certain people try to play down that victory by saying that my opponent's resignation from the cabinet before the election definitely contributed to his defeat. Yet, I can see from my seat one of the ministers who resigned before last April 8; he is still in the house and even goes so far as to vote with the government. The riding of Longueuil is comprised of seven municipalities situated alongside the St. Lawrence seaway, on the very location where the world fair will be held.

During the post-war years, my riding which is at the foot of both the Jacques Cartier and Victoria bridges, was invaded by an exodus of Montrealers, mostly people who wanted to build themselves a house surrounded by a lawn and garden. There is a wide variety of houses and the price of properties ranges from $5,000 to $150,000. Some municipalities have set up industrial parks that offer many advantages and where industries will be welcome. In fact, we plan to establish an industrial committee that will encourage industries to settle in our area and will show them the benefits that would accrue to them.

I am very much impressed by the speech from the throne which makes known the great decisions the government intends to take, in spite of the fact that the house was convened so quickly after the election.

My first term in the house gives me the great pleasure to witness how tactful, quick-witted and vigorous is the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Pearson) and what a great fighter he is.

Mr. Speaker, I was surprised to hear the remarks made by some members of the Social Credit party about the requests directed during the election campaign by the premier of Quebec to the government that was to be elected.

I find their attitude strange, the more so since, during the election campaign, they gave the premier of Quebec—rather coarsely, some people thought—this ultimatum: Mind your own business, otherwise we will fight you in the next provincial election.

Another thing I have found out in the short time I have been here is that the Union Nationale party has its representatives right here in this house, who repeat the speeches made by the leader of the opposition in Quebec. It would be unfortunate that the interruptions of these hon. members, by their arrogant tone and their partisan spirit, should harm the harmonious discussions that might otherwise take place.

I must also point out, Mr. Speaker, all the admiration I have for the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) who has I believe, all the qualities of a born opposition leader. As this job is very important in an efficient government, I hope, for the welfare of the country, that he stays in his present position for many years to come.

The province of Quebec has elected more members from the Liberal party than from any other party, for it feels confident that the government of Canada, headed by the Liberal party, will be able to uplift the national economy, to curtail the plague of unemployment which is with us at present, by taking appropriate steps to create new jobs, to give to the country a flag and a national anthem, to set up an inquiry on biculturalism and to bring back order in the public service, so as to make it compulsory for certain civil servants or officials of crown corporations to be bilingual, so that bilingual government employees get a higher salary, and that French Canadians can pass tests in their own language, according to their culture and their education.

The province of Quebec has voted Liberal, for it knows that the Liberal party understands its financial problems as well as its claims in this field, and that it will give it its fair share.

In my capacity as chairman of the school board of Longueuil, I can easily understand the financial problems now facing school boards.

To make up for the time lag in the field of education, the Quebec government must take early steps. And these steps, of course, are very expensive. Under the old regime, the salaries of teachers and day labourers were equal, which created a shortage of teachers. But for the last few years, teachers' salaries have doubled in some cases, and we realize now that we are short of normal schools to train potential teachers. It is essential that the Quebec school system be as good as any in the world.

The people of Quebec have become aware of certain weaknesses in the field of education. But the reforms they have already initiated are very costly and are proving too heavy a burden for the taxpayers. That is why the government of that province claims from the central government its taxation rights as well as authority to establish a national lottery, which seems to me most justified.

Joint programs have not always been favourable to the province of Quebec. A striking example of this is the program for the building of technical and vocational schools. That five year program, which was established in 1957, aimed at giving the provinces 75 per cent of the construction costs of such schools. Well, schools are not built for the sole purpose of taking advantage of a grant; sites had to be chosen and the schools built according to the local needs and in compliance with the new program for technical training.

In 1962, when that joint program came to an end, the province of Quebec was just beginning to carry out the construction of certain technical and vocational schools. When the youth minister asked the federal government to extend the joint program in order that Quebec might be able to take advantage of it, he was informed that the program might be extended for another six months.

How many schools can be built in six months? Can you imagine the millions of dollars the province of Quebec is going to lose because of such a stand? I am convinced that the new government will treat Quebec with fairness in that matter.

Mr. Speaker, the strength of Quebec stems from its financial independence within confederation. When the province has to beg, it loses its pride. The more autonomous Quebec will become, the weaker the separatist tendencies.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that my insistence on that point shall be forgiven; but I am convinced that a just and well-balanced distribution of taxation would unite strongly together, in one confederative state, all our Canadian provinces.

My very presence in this house proves my faith in confederation, but we must all admit that Quebec has an important part to play within confederation, and that is to assert the French fact throughout Canada. And the other provinces should understand that the French language in Canada must not be restricted to the Quebec boundaries, no more than the French Canadians should think that the English language must stop at the Quebec boundaries. When a Canadian from another province goes to Quebec, he has the right to expect that he may be spoken to in English but when a French Canadian leaves his province, is he not entitled to be answered in his own tongue? It is the same country, Mr. Speaker, and in a bilingual country, must only the French Canadians be bilingual?

In the province of Quebec, there is no problem between the different ethnic groups. You must not think that barricades separate neighbours of different races. A large number of people in Quebec are English speaking; we are proud to have them among us, and I am sure that they are also proud to be from Quebec.

If we can get along wonderfully on the provincial level, why could we not do the same on the federal level? The province of Quebec wants to be acknowledged as an integral part of confederation. French Canadians want to feel at home from Halifax to Vancouver. But to achieve this, we would have to be welcomed in other provinces, and be able to find there advertisements and directions written in French in public places. But alas, outside Quebec, French no longer exists.

I urge Canadians of all racial origins to visit the province of Quebec so that we can show them fine Quebec hospitality and to what extent we are bilingual.

Mr. Speaker, one cannot expect the problem of biculturalism and bilingualism to be settled in a few months, but if all Canadians do their share, it will disappear with time, and all Canadians will benefit from greater understanding and love of each other.

(Text):

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, my first words must be words of congratulation to you upon your elevation to your high office. It is a position that I know you will fill with dignity and with fairness to members in all parts of this house. I extend congratulations also to the hon. member for Stormont (Mr. Lamoureux) upon his appointment to the post of Deputy Speaker, and to my fellow maritimer in his capacity as deputy chairman of committees. I should like to extend my congratulations to the hon. member for Northumberland (Miss Jewett) and the hon. member for Lotbiniere (Mr. Choquette) for the capable manner in which they discharged their duties in moving and seconding the address. To the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and his colleagues in office, I extend congratulations. They have inherited a house and a country left in good order.

This is indicated by a report in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald under date of April 19, which reads as follows:

> Canada's economy registered an 8 per cent gain last year in the value of its total production. The gross national product, the value of all goods and services produced, rose to $40,401 million from the revised 1961 figure of $37,421 million. In volume terms output rose 6.2 per cent. It was the largest economic advance since 1956.

In April of the past year our foreign reserves of gold in U.S. dollars had risen to $2,671,400,000. A reserve of this magnitude is no mean inheritance for our new finance minister. This situation was brought about by the sound policies adopted by the former Conservative administration.

In the field of trade, Canada had reached an all-time high in 1962. Our merchandise trade surplus amounted to $80 million following upon a surplus of $124 million in 1961. These are the only two years of surplus in the last decade and they reflect the substantial improvement which has taken place in Canada's trade position since 1956 when our merchandise trade deficit was in excess of $700 million. The financial newspapers of this country indicate that in 1962 manufacturing, construction and outlays for new machinery and equipment jumped by 8 per cent. Canadians were producing more, were selling more, were earning more and saving more than ever before in our history.

Now, during the recent election campaign we heard from the present Prime Minister during a visit to Milford, Nova Scotia, that we in the Atlantic provinces have been left far behind in terms of the national economy. He asked for support so that he could get the economy going again and restore confidence. Well, Mr. Speaker, his assertion must have been based on the assumption that the economy had stopped. When you say you want to get something going again, it must have stopped. If the present administration can get the economy going to the extent there is an increase of more than 8 per cent in the gross national product in a single year, all of Canada will be grateful to them and we will not judge them too harshly on their performance with regard to the first 60 days of decision, in office.

The speech from the throne is a fascinating document not only for the policies it contains but also for those which it neglects to mention. When speaking in Milford, the present Prime Minister said, with reference to unemployment, that 250,000 new jobs must be provided in each of the four years a government should last. He said there was also a problem in relation to those unemployed by automation and the Liberal plan called for supplementary retraining benefits to assist the long term unemployed. Where are these benefits listed in the throne speech? He also called for a revival of the West Indian trade and a policy calculated to make the Atlantic provinces full partners in confederation. In so far as West Indian trade is concerned he said:

> —the Liberals wanted to get that going again. This may require special Canadian aid to the West Indies, especially since the current $10 million aid program expires on March 31.

The Conservative administration, Mr. Speaker, provided aid to the West Indies and early in January 1963 the first fruit shipment from Jamaica in 25 years arrived in Halifax for distribution to the maritime provinces. According to the Halifax Chronicle-Herald, this was a shipment of 13,000 cases of citrus fruit valued at $100,000. We are selling to Jamaica seed and table potatoes, Nova Scotia apples, eggs and balsam Christmas trees. However, I see no mention in the throne speech that will further assist in promoting and extending this new trading pattern.

We in Nova Scotia well remember the economic benefits that accrued to our province when trade between the maritimes and the West Indies was flourishing, and we would urge the present administration to carry out its promise, and do everything possible to expand the West Indies trade in keeping with a start already made by the Conservative administration. Our agricultural economies complement one another and industries can be developed in our coastal provinces using Canadian skills and Canadian materials to service the Caribbean market.

During the election campaign the Prime Minister outlined a plan to award 10,000 annual scholarships of $1,000 each to send needy students to university, and on tax sharing he called for the restoration of the principle of equalization payments to ensure poorer provinces would get per capita revenues from personal and corporation taxes equal to the income of the richer ones. What happened to these promises, listed as items we cannot afford not to do? There is no mention of these in the throne speech.

Perhaps these will be done later, along with the other unfilled promises, to provide legislation to establish national marketing boards for farmers, payment of family allowances for children past the age 16 if they remain in school, a special committee to study the problem of railway branch line abandonments, amendments to the federal labour code to provide a $1.25 hourly minimum wage, 40 hour work week, a distinctive national flag, free milk for school children, improved livestock grading, and continued freight assistance for the movement of feed grains to our eastern farmers. What happened to those promises, Mr. Speaker? They are not listed in the throne speech.

During the election campaign we heard many promises. But the Canadian people have become accustomed to action under the Conservative government and they will expect performance, not platitudes from the Liberal administration.

There is one chapter in the throne speech that has a special appeal to me, and I quote:

> It is only with courage and perseverance and hard work that we will achieve the better life that is within our power, for ourselves and for our children.
>
> Our progress is the work of all the people. In a free country we are all responsible.

This is the basic ideal of the truly free enterprise spirit that made Canada great, and for which my constituency of Queens-Lunenburg is well known. The people of my riding are strongly independent, believing in the capitalistic free enterprise system. Predominantly farmers, lumbermen and fishermen they make their living from primary industries and they must work long hours to provide for their families. A visit to the riding will show the fruits of their efforts, for Queens-Lunenburg is one of the prosperous beauty spots in Nova Scotia.

It is interesting to talk to these people. In their view there has been too much emphasis placed upon the importance of the government, at all levels. As a result governments have grown in size, and the expenditures of all levels of government and the taxation which they necessitate, are at levels which tend to put brakes on our economy. Government featherbedding adds to costs, and increases the inclination to import from other countries, thus contributing to our international balance of payments problem.

In the opinion of my constituents, taxation, especially direct taxation, has the effect of choking off business recovery and stifling expansion. This is understandable when we realize expenditure by our governments represent about 33 per cent of the gross national product of this country. In the United States government expenditures represent about 29 per cent of the gross national product, and Canada today is in the unhappy position of offering less reward for enterprise and initiative than our friendly neighbour to the south. It should be the other way around when we consider some of the handicaps under which we operate.

Competition for the tax dollar between the federal government on the one hand, and the provinces and municipalities on the other, gives rise to more acute difficulties than are found elsewhere. Expenditures of the provinces and municipalities are now estimated to represent 16 per cent of the gross national product, compared with only 9 per cent ten years ago. The present figure is close to the requirements of the federal government. Provinces and municipalities are constantly under pressure to increase their spending and many proposals are prefaced with the statement "Canada is rich enough to afford these improvements." There is apparently no feeling of responsibility for the national interest, which is regarded as the concern of the federal government. It was this scramble for taxes by the three levels of government which was one of the reasons for the appointment of the Rowell-Sirois commission 26 years ago.

With some provinces now asking for an even greater share of federal revenues, I would urge the government to give careful consideration to our present taxation problem. Some method must be found whereby individuals and corporations can retain a greater share of their earnings for investment in Canadian companies, for it is only through the expansion of our secondary industries under private enterprise that we can overcome some of our unemployment problems.

The government's stated intention to establish a department of industry to work with provincial governments and provide a special thrust for industrial development in areas of chronic unemployment, is a good move. However, I would like to ask the government if this has to be discussed and approved by provincial authorities? There will be some overlapping with provincial departments, but no doubt this can be worked out. However, I believe the taxation problem should first be examined, so that individual Canadians can more fully participate in their country's development.

I note with interest the government's intention to bring in amendments to the Atlantic development board, and its plan to make $100 million available to initiate projects and help lift up the economy of the region. This of course will be welcome news to all those living in the Atlantic provinces, for Canadians generally cannot expect our region to remain economically depressed forever. We deserve equality of opportunity because of our historic past and our contribution to Canada as a nation. However, it is evident the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) had nothing to do with this legislation because in his royal commission on economic prospects, as recorded at page 99 of his report, he stated he did not believe in ad hoc projects and handouts.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if the hon. gentleman would permit a question?

Mr. Crouse: If I may have a little extension of time I will be glad to do so.

Mr. Pickersgill: I was going to ask the hon. gentleman if he would read a little further on in that report and he would find the blueprint of the Atlantic provinces development board?

Mr. Crouse: I have read the entire report. It is not too encouraging. It is interesting to note that it took a Conservative government to lead the way in a much more generous manner than the present administration, in keeping with the Atlantic resolutions made by the Conservative candidates at that famous conference in Moncton in the spring of 1957. The Conservative government, on Saturday, January 25, 1958, in keeping with those resolutions announced special adjustment grants for the Atlantic provinces of nearly $100 million to be paid over a four year period. At the expiration of this time the grants were increased to $175 million to be paid over the next five years and, Mr. Speaker, there were no strings attached. The provincial premiers and their ministers were free to spend this money wherever they thought it would do the most good.

These grants could well be considered the forerunner to the Atlantic development board for they enabled the provincial governments in the Atlantic provinces to establish industrial estates, to expand their fishermen's loan boards, and promote much needed industry for the benefit of our citizens. According to the resolution, this act will die on January 24, 1969. However, from now until that date, we will have $100 million to be divided by 11 nominated men, throughout the four Atlantic provinces. This boils down to $20 million a year for each of the five years, and the question arises regarding the method to be used for the division of this money.

I wonder, Mr. Speaker, may I complete my speech or should I leave that until Monday?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Has the hon. member unanimous consent to continue?

Mr. Pickersgill: I would like very much to agree, but a great many of us have rather pressing engagements, and if the hon. gentleman would not mind calling it six o'clock it would facilitate us.

Mr. Crouse: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will call it six o'clock.

Business of the House

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: I wonder if the house leader could give us a forecast of the business for next week.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would be very happy indeed to do that. We know of course that this debate can go on until the close of the sitting on Wednesday, when under the rules it would come to an end. I may say it would be gratifying to the government and would, I think, be in accord with what has been said by many hon. gentlemen on the other side of the house about the desirability of getting on with the business of the country, if there were any possibility of ending the debate a little earlier than that. I am not seeking to suggest that any of the freedom of speech of any hon. member be abridged in any way, but there will be many other opportunities for debate, and the government will be glad to try to bring on a supply motion as early as possible. But if that cannot be done, the government's business will start on Thursday. If it is done earlier, the program I am about to suggest can start that much earlier.

It is the intention of the government to ask the house to consider the motion in the Prime Minister's name for setting up a defence committee, as the first item of business as soon as this debate is ended, whenever it is concluded and, in any event, if it has not been concluded before then, on Thursday. If that does not take the whole time on Thursday we shall go on with the resolution stage of the economic council measure. I imagine those two items will take all of the time. But should there be any further time we would like to go on with the measure dealing with the department of industry and the amendments to the Department of Agriculture Act.

In any event, since we are rapidly approaching the end of May it is the intention of the Minister of Finance to ask on Friday, May 31st, for interim supply. The government would like to ask the house to provide interim supply for the months of June and July. We would then come back some time in July to ask for further interim supply because I do not seriously anticipate that all the estimates will have been passed in time to enable us to do without a second stage of interim supply.

I think that will take all of next week, but if it does not there are some other government items on the order paper and we will be glad to give as much notice as possible of the order in which they would be taken.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, May 27, 1963

The house met at 11 a.m.

(Translation):

PRIVILEGE

MR. PIGEON—ALLEGED ALTERATION IN TEXT OF "HANSARD"

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member from Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Sauve) on May 22 made a speech in this house and later deleted an important part of it.

And to prove what I have just said, I refer to the Ottawa Citizen of May 25, 1963, and I quote:

(Text):

But he also spoke of the "last chance," and at the height of his oratory threw in a statement, following a list of Quebec complaints, that when "the bombs explode in Montreal, the people are astonished in Ottawa". (He later had that passage struck from the Hansard record, saying it was absolutely contrary to his meaning to indicate that he thought there was a cause and effect relationship).

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, contrary to the rules of this house, the hon. member for Îles-de-la-Madeleine removed from his speech a passage which was quoted in the Ottawa Citizen.

In accordance with the rules of this house, the hon. member and yourself have to decide whether or not it would be advisable to have that passage included in the official report.

(Text):

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): In the absence of the hon. member for Îles-de-la-Madeleine I wonder if I might say a word about the alleged question of privilege brought up by the hon. member for the hon. member for Joliette-l'Assomption-Montcalm. The hon. member has made a somewhat serious charge against the hon. member for Îles-de-la-Madeleine and he has made it, not immediately after the Hansard appeared, but after the lapse of some time. It seems to me the appropriate course to take in the circumstances would be for Your Honour to take the point as notice and to defer dealing with it until the hon. member for Îles-de-la-Madeleine is here to speak for himself.

Mr. Pigeon: The hon. member for Îles-de-la-Madeleine is not here. It is not our fault on this side. If it is possible I should appreciate having your comment on this question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: My comment is very simple. I am taken slightly by surprise, as are others this morning, and I would like to compare the original text with the printed version before rendering any decision. One must obviously get the facts before rendering a decision. So I think the point made by the Secretary of State is well taken, and I would ask the permission of the house to delay any judgment on this matter until we have had a chance to find out what the facts really are.

THE MINISTRY

REPORTED ACTIVITIES OF MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. The Minister of Agriculture is absent, and it may be that the Prime Minister will want to wait until his return before replying. Does the Prime Minister consider it appropriate for a minister of the crown in charge of the portfolio of agriculture to be engaged in the auctioning of cattle at an auction sale, and is not such a course in his view not in keeping, as I believe it is not, with the proprieties that one expects?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I received no notice of this question, and the Minister of Agriculture is not here. I will discuss the matter with the minister and on the basis of the facts I will be glad to reply tomorrow or the next day.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NATO—REPORTED EARLY ISSUE OF FINAL COMMUNIQUE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is the minister aware that a final communique in respect of accomplishments at the recent NATO meeting was issued well in advance of the holding of the conference?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is not correct in the statement he has made. The communique that was issued at the end of the ministerial meeting on Friday last was not the communique that was originally proposed by certain member states at that ministerial meeting. The final communique represents a drafting effort that was made during the course of the meeting, and in very large measure it represents many of the suggestions made by the Canadian delegation.

NATO—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON OTTAWA CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. On Thursday last, May 23, I directed a question to the Prime Minister relative to newspaper reports of Canadian commitments to NATO. The Prime Minister replied in part as follows, an found at page 171 of Hansard of that date:

The Secretary of State for External Affairs will be reporting to the house on this matter on Monday, when the council meeting is over.

May I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs, is that report going to be made, as promised by the Prime Minister last week?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker, that commitment too will be observed when I speak in the debate this afternoon.

REPORTED ACTIVITIES OF GERMAN INDUSTRIAL GROUP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of reports in various United States newspapers last year and recently and in other periodicals that an organization of German industrialists is financing a world wide publicity campaign to promote the hard line in the cold war, and in view of the fact that the United States state department, justice department and senate foreign relations committee are now seeking information about the organization and purpose of this group, has the minister any knowledge concerning the activities of this organization and, if so, has he any information he can give the house?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, until the hon. gentleman sent me notice of his question just before we met this morning I was not aware of the problem. I am not aware that any information has come to the department. However, I shall make the necessary inquiries.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

(Translation):

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

QUEBEC—ULTIMATUM RESPECTING TAX SHARING ARRANGEMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Justice, to whom I sent a few days ago a copy of the Quebec premier's ultimatum respecting a new tax sharing arrangement. Could the Minister of Justice tell the house whether he has studied this ultimatum and whether he feels it is important enough to make it known to other cabinet members?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I duly received the press releases the hon. member sent me. I even heard the Quebec premier, Mr. Lesage, on television, when he stated that he considered as an ultimatum the claims or proposals of the province of Quebec.

In the circumstances, I feel there is only one stand to take, that is, both in our discussions and during a federal-provincial conference on fiscal matters, the proposals of the province of Quebec will have to be considered as such.

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the Quebec premier has delivered his ultimatum, does the Minister of Justice not feel that it would be a waste of time to convene a conference on the matter?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I have nothing more to add to the answer I just gave.

(Text):

BRITISH COLUMBIA—MEETING TO DISCUSS OFFSHORE RIGHTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Has the minister received a request from the British Columbia minister of mines for an early meeting to discuss the continental shelf or offshore rights in British Columbia, and if so what arrangements are contemplated in order to prevent this most important matter having to be referred to the supreme court for decision, as originally intended by the British Columbia government?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): I should like to thank the hon. member for having given me prior notice of his question.

It had been indicated by the attorney general of British Columbia that he was preparing a case for submission to the appeal court of British Columbia under, I think, the constitutional disputes determination act, a measure on the statute books of that province. Later he indicated that that intention was withdrawn. We did receive a letter from Hon. Mr. Kiernan, minister of mines, asking that a meeting be held in Ottawa to discuss this matter with him. He indicated a time after June 15, and we will, of course, make suitable arrangements.

UNITED NATIONS

REPORT ON WORK OF SPECIAL SESSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal with questions asked me by the hon. member for Queens and the hon. member for Medicine Hat last week concerning the financial situation of the United Nations, and particularly arising out of the problem of the major peace keeping operations of the organization.

These problems have recently been the subject of intensive review by a working group of 21 member states, including Canada. This group was unable, regrettably, to devise an agreed formula for long term financing. Its report suggested elements for an approach which could be adapted to meet the immediate problem of financing these peace keeping operations for the remainder of 1963.

Although other questions such as the payment of arrears and the improvement of budgetary procedures will be considered, the main task of the special assembly of the United Nations is to work out an acceptable method for sharing peace keeping costs on a basis of collective responsibility and a recognition that the less developed countries should be afforded some reduction in their assessments under the regular budgetary scale.

Negotiations to this end are now being vigorously pursued at the United Nations. The Canadian delegation is actually today meeting under its chairmanship with a group of member states to see if some particular formula cannot be devised. The situation is a serious one. The integrity of the United Nations is involved, and Canada is not leaving any effort unexpended in this matter.

Inquiries of the Ministry

HEALTH AND WELFARE

INQUIRY AS TO GRANTS TO CITIES FOR HEALTH PROGRAM STUDIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the announcement in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald of Saturday, May 25 that a federal government grant of $27,000 has been approved for a study of the administration and health program of the city of Halifax, would the minister tell the house whether grants on a pro rata basis will be made to Lunenburg, Bridgewater and Liverpool, Nova Scotia, and whether similar grants will be made to all the cities in Canada?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I would be pleased if the hon. member would place this question upon the order paper, since it requires detailed information which I am sure would not be of equal interest to all hon. members of the house.

POSSIBLE CHANGES IN REGULATIONS RESPECTING USE OF PESTICIDES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is the department considering possible changes in the regulations dealing with the use of pesticides in the light of the report made to President Kennedy by his scientific advisory committee, following which the U.S. government stopped the use of DDT sprays in the forests of the western United States and substituted another pesticide?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, may I thank the hon. member for giving me notice last week of this question. I would advise him that the regulations regarding the distribution and use of pesticides are the responsibility of my colleague in the Department of Agriculture which administers the Pest Control Products Act.

As far as my department is concerned, we have regulations under the Food and Drugs Act which are considered adequate and satisfactory at the present time. However, I assure the hon. member and the house that these regulations may be changed quickly and effectively should evidence that such a change is necessary come to light.

Inquiries of the Ministry

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NUCLEAR WARHEADS—REPORTED ARRANGEMENT FOR FALL DELIVERY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. I noticed a headline in this morning's Gazette which read, "Bomarc's Nuclear Warheads Due in Fall". Is that decision going to be made by this government without any further consultation in parliament?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): That question does not deserve any reply because there has been consultation and there will be consultation on this matter in the defence committee which we propose to set up at once.

Mr. Woolliams: I should like to follow that up with a supplementary question. In the same newspaper there is a statement reported to have been made by the president of the exchequer court to the effect that the present government does not have a mandate from the people to accept nuclear weapons. I was wondering if the Prime Minister would care to comment on that statement, particularly in the light of the fact that the president of this court was a friend of this government.

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE TO TRAIN CONGOLESE ARMY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of National Defence, to ask him whether Canada has been approached to supply military training assistance to the Congolese army, and what response the Congolese government can expect from this request.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian government has received a request from the Congolese government, and the question is presently under study by the departments of external affairs and national defence.

CANADIAN REPRESENTATION ON LIAISON GROUP AT AIR COMMAND HEADQUARTERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Defence. In view of the suggestion made by Secretary McNamara of the United States respecting a nine man representation to be attached to the strategic air defence target planning force, are any Canadians to be representatives on this group?

[Miss LaMarsh.]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman is referring to the liaison group of the supreme allied commander in Europe assigned to the strategic air command headquarters at Omaha, Nebraska, the question of future representation has not yet been determined.

PIPE LINES

REPORTED INTENTION OF TRANS-CANADA TO PURCHASE NORTHERN ONTARIO SECTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the announcement in the report of the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation to the Minister of Trade and Commerce that Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited is seeking to purchase the northern Ontario section of this pipe line this year, is the government considering the renegotiation of the contract with Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited so that the ownership of this pipe line can be retained by the people of Canada, who paid for it in the first place?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Trade and Commerce is not in the house, as he is in Washington on official business. I would like to take that question as notice, and either he or I will reply to it shortly.

TRADE

LUMBER—INCREASED EXPORTS DUE TO DOLLAR REVALUATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Has his attention been drawn to a Canadian Press report out of Vancouver on Saturday in which his colleague, the Minister of Forestry, is reported to have indicated to a press conference that there has been a greater export volume and greater profits for Canada's multimillion dollar forest industry in the last 15 months, mainly because of this country's pegged dollar? If so, does this now represent government policy?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I welcome a chance to reply to that question. I have not seen the report in the Vancouver newspapers, but the hon. member may know that I was perhaps one of the first people to suggest publicly that the dollar should be reduced in value back in early 1960 when it was at a high premium. I think it would have been a good thing to have done at that time.

Mr. Lambert: As a supplementary question, I wonder has the Minister of Finance convinced his colleagues of this wisdom?

(Translation):

PENITENTIARIES

REQUESTS FOR INFORMATION ON NEW CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. On September 18, 1961, his predecessor, Mr. Davie Fulton announced the erection of a medium security penal institution at St. Pie de Bagot. Can the minister tell the house when the work will start?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, if I remember correctly, several medium and super maximum security institutions are to be built in various parts of Canada. Unfortunately, I do not have all the information in my possession at this time; so I suggest to the hon. member to put his question on the order paper, and then it can be answered.

(Text):

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. I regret that I have not given him notice, but I am sure he will be able to answer it in detail.

Following a report in the Globe and Mail of this morning it would seem that the location of a new federal penitentiary site in Ontario has not been decided. My question is, does the minister know that an announcement was made on May 17, 1962 to the effect that an institution would be built in the Markdale-Dundalk area of Grey-Bruce constituency, and that public moneys have been spent accordingly?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I do know that, in so far as the question raised by the hon. member is concerned, there has been no selection of a site. However, having answered my hon. friend from St. Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard) in the manner in which I did, I think it would be unfair if I did otherwise than say to the hon. member that because of the fact that a number of these institutions are being constructed in Canada I have not details at my fingertips, and the question might well be put on the order paper.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, and it may have to go on the order paper, as the Minister of Justice mentioned. The Globe and Mail report says, "Canada to build four penitentiaries this year". I was wondering whether one of those was the institution planned for Drumheller, Alberta.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, my recollection is that the plans for the construction of the institution in Drumheller did not require it to be built this year.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

SUDBURY, ONT.—REPORTED MOVEMENT OF UNEMPLOYED TO THOMPSON, MAN.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour, but in his absence perhaps I may address it to the acting minister. My question arises from a report that unemployed married men with families are being required to move from Sudbury, Ontario, to Thompson, Manitoba, or lose their unemployment insurance. What action is the government taking in this situation?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to take that question as notice and ask the minister to reply, or have a reply made on his behalf at the earliest possible moment.

(Translation):

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

SUGGESTED CLOSING OF OFFICES ON SATURDAYS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General. Does he intend to amend the Post Office Act, if need be, so that post offices may close on Saturday, as several institutions, especially banks, are doing now?

Hon. Azellus Denis (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that this question deals with a matter of government policy, a statement to that effect will be made in the house in due course.

Inquiries of the Ministry

(Text):

SUGAR

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON INQUIRY INTO PRICE INCREASES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. E. Pascoe (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture, but apparently he is away busily auctioning cattle so perhaps it can be answered by his parliamentary secretary. It concerns the increases in sugar prices, but it is a little different from earlier questions on the same subject.

The sugar price increases have affected the price of molasses, which is used in preparing feed concentrates, thus increasing the cost of livestock feeding. Has the minister taken this question into consideration, and is he making any recommendation to the government for a possible control on sugar prices as advocated in a Winnipeg newspaper?

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the great concern about the increase in the price of sugar and similar commodities, and in view of conflicting reports in the papers some attributing it to speculation and others to a shortage of supplies, would the minister get all the information possible on this situation and make a full report to the house so that it will satisfy the Canadian people?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman knows I did make a lengthy, fairly general statement on Thursday, and I indicated to the house that the matter was under surveillance by the director of research and investigation of the combines investigation branch. I shall take further notice of my hon. friend's question and make sure that the study with reference to this important matter is kept alive.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): If I may ask a supplementary question in this connection, Mr. Speaker, I have secured the statistics as to the amount of sugar in storage in Canada, and I find that as of March 31 there were 470 million pounds. Does not the minister feel that in view of the tremendous increase in price that has taken place since March 31 more than just a general view of the matter should be taken by him, in view of the unconscionable profit being made and the unfairness to Canadian consumers?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, as I am sure the right hon. gentleman knows, the matter is determined by statute, and I think the statute is quite clear as to the responsibilities of the director of research and investigation. I shall be glad, of course, to bring this additional information to his attention at once. But from the statement which I made on Thursday last there would certainly appear to have been no profiteering from the point of view of the refiners of sugar.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Chevrier: I simply add this, that I will ask the director to look at the matter anew in the light of the information given to the house by the right hon. gentleman.

PUBLIC SERVICE

EXTENSION OF SALARY INCREASES TO RECENTLY RETIRED CIVIL SERVANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Has the government yet found a way to provide retroactive pay increases to those former civil servants who retired after the date the pay increases were made effective but before they were actually announced?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this is a question which is under consideration and I hope to have something to say about it shortly. As the hon. gentleman knows, this matter comes under a statute and is provided for in the statute. The members of my department are giving consideration to this question, and that is all I can say at this time.

INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBLE AMENDMENT OF CIVIL SERVICE ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State. In view of the number of ex-senior civil servants currently sitting on the government treasury benches, I should like to ask the Secretary of State whether he foresees any future changes in the Civil Service Act or regulations.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I can see, sir, no connection whatsoever between the preamble and the question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: And there is no connection between the answer and the question.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

CONTINUATION OF ROADS TO RESOURCES PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister of northern affairs. Is the minister considering discussions with his counterparts in the provinces with a view to continuing and extending the present roads to resources program, which has proved so successful in the development of the north?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member I would say that a continuing number of applications are coming in from the various provinces. We are in effect extending the programs individually. The hon. member suggests that conference with a provincial group might well be of advantage, and I think I would agree with him; but we are receiving various submissions from the provinces and are giving them every consideration.

Mr. Korchinski: A supplementary question. Are these submissions being dealt with individually, or is consideration being given to a group meeting?

Mr. Laing: At the present time they are being dealt with individually by provinces. The hon. member is suggesting that a nation wide discussion be held, and I think his suggestion has much merit to it.

(Translation):

ARTS, LETTERS AND SCIENCES

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENTS TO COMMISSION ON BICULTURALISM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Prime Minister a question about the royal commission on biculturalism. Does he intend to appoint to that commission Messrs. Andre Laurendeau and Gerard Pelletier, journalists?

(Text):

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Of course, Mr. Speaker, it is improper to ask the government who will be appointed to a particular commission. The commission has not yet been set up but will be set up very shortly.

ROYAL CANADIAN AIR FORCE

REPORTED PREMATURE SHIPMENT OF CF-104 PLANES TO EUROPE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I desire to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence, of which I gave him notice last week, but due to the fact that he was attending the NATO conference I did not put the question. Has the attention of the minister been drawn to the Canadian Press article appearing in the Ottawa Citizen of May 21 to the effect that the Royal Canadian Air Force shipped the first CF-104 low level jet bombers to Europe before they were combat-ready in an attempt to force the former prime minister's hand on the nuclear warheads issue? Can the minister inform the house whether this statement is accurate, and whether it is true that the planes required some 40 modifications on their arrival in West Germany?

Mr. Speaker: Might I interrupt to suggest that this is a question for the order paper.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, may I suggest that the last part of the question as to whether or not 40 modifications were required may be a matter for the order paper, but the question whether the statement is accurate that these planes were shipped to Canadian forces in Germany before they were combat-ready seems to be a matter of fairly urgent importance.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I should like first of all to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his intention to ask this question. In reply I can tell him that I saw the article referred to in the Ottawa Citizen, and there is no truth in the allegation contained in the first part of the question. The aircraft were delivered in accordance with predetermined squadron formation dates, and at no time were any instructions received by the air force to postpone delivery. In this connection I should like to draw attention to a question asked of the former minister of national defence, the hon. member for Calgary North, on September 15, 1961, as to when the first squadrons of CF-104's would be posted overseas. The answer given at that time was "in November 1962".

As to the second part of the question, the agreed schedule of delivery called for the first squadrons to be sent overseas with some modifications still to be done. These have been carried out by R.C.A.F. personnel in Zweibrücken assisted by a mobile repair party from Scottish Aviation Limited. As was pointed out to the writer of the article some time ago, the modifications were not of such a nature as to preclude essential squadron flying training in preparation for the full operational role. I might add that there is nothing unusual about aircraft requiring modifications after their acceptance from a contractor.

Inquiries of the Ministry

INDUSTRY

TRENTON, N.S.—REQUEST FOR ORDER FOR RAILWAY CARS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister of Transport yet able to answer the question I directed to him on Wednesday last?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I had hoped to answer this question last Friday, but at the conclusion of the question hour events moved rather rapidly and I did not want to interrupt.

I have been in touch with Canadian National Railways, and the management advise that tenders, which were called for 100 covered hopper cars and on which this company bid, are now under consideration. The management add that they have no immediate requirements for additional car equipment, but if and when further tenders are invited the Eastern Car plant will be given an opportunity to bid along with other manufacturers.

AIR TRANSPORT

ALLEGED REFUSAL OF LICENCE TO B.C. AIRLINES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, last week I directed a question to the Minister of Transport and he promised to bring down an answer. The question was whether the air transport board had refused a licence to British Columbia Airlines to fly a charter flight from Vancouver to Sullivan Bay in order to take loggers to an operation because of the strike of Pacific Western Airlines employees.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the first part of the question is correct but the second part of the question is very wrong. The facts are these: The air transport board advise that British Columbia Airlines is licensed by the board to operate a charter service from a base at Vancouver. The board denied an application by British Columbia Airlines to operate charter flights between Vancouver and Sullivan Bay because the operation was considered to circumvent a long standing regulation of the board affording route protection to air carriers who operate scheduled air services. The scheduled carrier in this case was Pacific Western Airlines.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask the minister whether this decision has not in effect banned the international woodworkers from being able to fly their members to Sullivan Bay without crossing the picket line set up by the employees of the Pacific Western Airlines. Was not the decision of the air transport board helping, in effect, to break a strike?

Mr. McIlraith: No, Mr. Speaker.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

OPERATION OF CAFETERIA IN CENTRE BLOCK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Secretary of State in his capacity as leader of the house. This is not a matter of national urgency, but it is one which affects every member of this house as of today, and believing that a problem should be removed before it becomes an irritant I should like to ask the hon. gentleman whether, in view of the fact that the joint Senate-House of Commons restaurant committee has not yet been appointed, he could find out who issued the regulations which went into effect today regarding the cafeteria in the centre block. I ask him to do this because under the new system, if you want a glass of milk you can get it, but if you want a milkshake you must go to the restaurant in the west block. If you want a sandwich, you may get one between the hours of 12 noon and 2 p.m. but not between 6 p.m. and 8 p.m., the period during which the house takes its recess, or at any other time. I think I am right in calling attention now to this situation which has arisen because of some stupid regulations which were put into effect, and I ask the leader of the house to look into the matter.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): The hon. lady, my colleague the Minister of National Health and Welfare, is one of the commissioners of internal economy, and I am going to ask her to look into this matter.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed, from Friday, May 24, consideration of the motion of Miss Pauline Jewett for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to the speech from the throne delivered by His Excellency the Administrator at the opening of the session.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): My speech was not intended to be a cliff-hanger or to be delivered in serial form, but in view of the limitation of time on Friday I was obliged to interrupt it. Now I am pleased to deliver part two.

When the house rose on Friday I was speaking about the Atlantic development board and the government's intention, according to the resolution, to make available $100 million to be divided throughout the four Atlantic provinces by 11 nominated men. This amounts to $20 million a year for 1964, 1965, 1966, 1967 and 1968, and a question arises regarding the method to be used for the division of this money. What projects will receive priority? Will political considerations supersede economic need? After all, two of the Atlantic provinces have Liberal premiers and two are blessed with Conservative leadership; and the board, with its six additions, will be top heavy with Grits. I sincerely hope the board will give consideration to those projects which will be of benefit to the entire region. We have to do something with this money, little though it may be in relation to the large area to be serviced.

In my opinion the first item for consideration could be the distribution to our universities of some of these development funds. Serving as I do on the board of Waterloo Lutheran University, I am aware of the tremendous growth taking place in this institution in Ontario. Our maritime universities are faced with a similar need for expansion. For example, it is estimated that enrolment at Dalhousie, St. Francis Xavier and Acadia will be doubled within the next ten years. Funds must be found in order to provide the necessary facilities and professors.

We in the Atlantic provinces, and in Nova Scotia in particular, have laboured under a serious disability in connection with the federal university grants program. Because of our high student enrolment in relation to our provincial population, we have received grants well below the national average. In fact Nova Scotia stands at the bottom of the list, receiving $214 per student last year compared with $495 in Newfoundland and $360 in Ontario. In an age when men are planning a trip to the moon, we have a duty to provide necessary university facilities for our professional, business and political leaders of tomorrow.

A second project I would suggest to the Atlantic development board for consideration concerns the desirability of providing assistance toward establishing an additional ferry service between Nova Scotia and Gloucester, Massachusetts. This would open up a vast potential tourist market, since some 30 million people live in the Gloucester-Boston area. The present ferry, the Bluenose, is unable to handle all the traffic, especially during the peak period from June 1 to September 30. Once these tourists arrive in Nova Scotia they will no doubt wish to visit other Atlantic provinces, and I need not point out the economic benefits that accrue to all our business people from an expanded tourist industry. It is quite possible they may wish to travel to Newfoundland, to the province of Prince Edward Island or to the province represented so well in this house by the former minister of forestry (Mr. Flemming), the province of New Brunswick. I would urge the government to do everything possible to bring about this worth-while project, bearing in mind that a second ferry service would also provide new outlets and a faster delivery service for our expanding fishing industry.

Speaking of the fishing industry, I note in the speech from the throne that the government is initiating consultation with the provinces to work out a program for national fishery development. Apparently members and supporters of the present government are oblivious to the fact that during the six years when they sat in opposition we brought in a shipbuilding program which is providing new opportunities for our fishermen. The Liberals, when they were previously in office, put into effect a program whereby subsidies were discontinued in respect of ships over 65 feet in length. Unlike them, we instituted a policy whereby a federal subsidy is paid on ships of any length of over 45 feet. As a result our shipyards are booming from Cape Breton to Yarmouth. In my riding the shipbuilding yards in Mahone Bay, Lunenburg and Dayspring have a year's work booked ahead, while at Liverpool, Nova Scotia, a steel ship is under construction for the first time in history, all as a result of the constructive and far reaching policies worked out and put into operation by a Conservative government. These ships are all of a size which will assure greater safety to our fishermen while assisting them to earn larger incomes. I only wish the former prime minister, the present Leader of the Opposition, could visit Nova Scotia to see the beneficial effects of his shipbuilding program. However, we welcome any program which will be of benefit to our fishing industry, and I will watch with interest the program to be put forward by the present administration.

In the speech from the throne there is a statement indicating that the government intends to establish a 12-mile limit for the benefit of Canadian fishermen. All of us from the Atlantic provinces are interested in the fishing industry in one way or another, and I have placed a resolution on the order paper asking the present government to take immediate action to conserve our marine fishery resources by declaring certain bodies of water adjacent to our coast Canadian national waters. I have suggested that the straight base line method be used to measure the breadth of territorial seas, and that recognition be given by Canada to the historic fishing rights of France and the United States in Canadian national waters.

This is in keeping with the views I expressed in the house when speaking on the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act on January 30, 1962. A base line drawn from Grand Manan to cape Fourchu would seal off the bay of Fundy, while a base line drawn from cape Sable to Scatari island would seal off St. Margaret bay and Chedabucto bay. A line drawn from cape North to Port aux Basques, Newfoundland, would seal off the gulf of St. Lawrence, and this would then become a territorial sea wherein conservation measures could be carried out on the vast Bradelle bank and Orphan bank.

This action will not solve all our problems, but the rapid increase in world fishing effort and efficiency and the terrific concentration of foreign trawlers off our coast have focused attention on the fact that unless some safeguards are taken the marine resources that have played such a vital role in the development of the Canadian economy will be harvested by foreign fleets. However, in my opinion France and the United States should be given historic rights in Canadian national waters. France owns the islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon, and along with the United States has historic rights under the treaty of Utrecht of 1713 modified by the convention of 1904 and the treaty of London of 1818. Nations not having historic fishing rights with Canada should be denied access to our marine resources within the areas enclosed by the proposed base line.

I am concerned, however, by a statement made by the present Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill). Speaking during the recent election campaign at Sydney, Nova Scotia he said:

> Under a Liberal government foreign fishing ships would not be permitted within the 12-mile limit.

This is reported in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald.

> Mr. Pickersgill, in a quick swing through Cape Breton, said Liberals would call a federal-provincial conference on the fish business. "We are not going to beat around the bush about the 12-mile limit." He said if other nations would not go along "we will do it alone."

The present Prime Minister, also speaking at Sydney, said:

> Because an agreement of a 12-mile limit had not been reached, I think the time has now come for such unilateral action. I am sure that if Norway and Iceland can do this, so can we in a way which will not cause difficulties with our friends.

That, Mr. Speaker, is exactly what we are hoping to prevent, namely difficulties with our friends. We do not want a gunboat fisheries policy in the Atlantic provinces similar to the gunboat policy of Iceland in September, 1958. The export of Canadian fisheries products reached a record in 1962 of $156,615,000, an increase of 9 per cent over 1961. We are the third largest fish exporting nation in the world, and we rank seventh among the fish producing nations. More than 79,000 Canadians are commercial fishermen and, just for the record, the United States imports approximately 70 per cent of Canada's total fish exports. I need not point out to the house the economic havoc that the loss of this market would create in the Atlantic provinces as the result of any rash or hasty action on the part of the present administration.

According to the press, President Kennedy continues to favour the three-mile territorial and fisheries limit. If this is so, we in the Atlantic provinces want to know. We have a right to know, for our very livelihood is at stake, about the government's negotiations with the United States on a 12-mile fishing limit. I believe this 12-mile limit can only be established through international agreement and by giving American fishermen equal rights with Canadian fishermen, thereby assuring continuing friendly relations between our two countries and the continuing expansion of the market for our fishery products.

The United States fishing industry is highly organized. They have the national fisheries institute in Washington as well as an organization called the New Bedford seafood council. With the rapid expansion of our groundfish industry and our scallop industry, we must have continuing free access to the United States market if we are to avoid a serious marketing problem in the Atlantic provinces. We need to start some measures of conservation such as I have outlined, but we must also maintain our markets, and I cannot urge too strongly upon the present administration the necessity of attaining both these objectives.

(Translation):

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like first of all to take this opportunity of offering you the customary congratulations upon your appointment to the position of Speaker of this house. I should like to add another motive for these congratulations: there exists now in the house an atmosphere of freedom that we had not known for at least a year. However, I must assure you of our co-operation, for freedom of speech does not necessarily mean libertinism.

Mr. Speaker, since the last session, there was a general election and once more the people again had to choose their representatives in the house. There have been few changes. Two political parties have changed sides in the house, but since then, I believe that their speeches, whether they sit on the right or on the left, are strangely similar. The members of the present opposition claim that everything was fine when they were in power and those who are presently in power say that they form the best government Canada has ever had, or exactly the opposite of what was taking place last year.

Mr. Speaker, the last election taught us a lesson. Money has been spent during the last campaign, and a kind of brainwashing was performed on a large scale throughout the country. But, in spite of everything, it was apparent that, during the last election, the voters did not fall as they have in the past, for these brainwashing techniques accompanied by high sounding publicity, as well as by heavy expenditures. The Quebec population had enough judgment to give more than 600,000 votes, or 30 per cent of the total in the province of Quebec to a middle party, that is to say the Social Credit party, which carried out its campaign with very little money, relying mostly on the dedication of its benevolent organizers. I believe that the province of Quebec would have sent to Ottawa a majority of Social Credit members had 10 or 12 per cent more voters supported us.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to take this opportunity to pay a well-deserved tribute to two persons who have spread wholesome ideas and done a task of political, social and economical education throughout the country. I am thinking, first of all, of our national leader, the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson), who did not make any false promise, but who was content with putting forward ideas to the Canadian population, explaining the problems that we have to face today. He did not roam about the country decrying people or seeking to prejudice reputations or to spread falsehoods throughout the country. Rather, he tried to propose a solution, a monetary system which would give a new expansion to the Canadian economy, an expansion which the country can enjoy and which it deserves at present.

In second place, I should like to address my congratulations to our national assistant leader, the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) for the manner in which he conducted the election campaign in the province of Quebec. It was also a clean campaign; he outlined ideas and tried to appeal to the common sense of the people, rather than to their lowest instincts.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps the speech from the throne that we have before us is somewhat vague, but I suggest that it is like all the other speeches from the throne. It gives indications that there might be some achievements from the legislation that the government will bring forward. Let us hope that the attitude of the government in this field will differ from that it seems to take in the case of the matters that we had been putting forward since the beginning of the session. We get vague replies, or rather, no replies at all. When we put a question to the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), his favourite answers can be summed up in the following manner: "We shall give you a reply in due time. We shall take care of that a little later. We cannot make an announcement right now".

Their answers are most evasive and I hope that in the future members of the cabinet can be more factual and give us the answers we expect to get.

Mr. Speaker, the most serious problem today is still the economic situation. Our people live in a condition of prevailing economic stagnation. In fact, unemployment is developing at a rate a little too high for a country such as Canada. We note that industry finds it difficult to develop, that it cannot advance. At the same time, trade is declining.

We must get our economy moving again and provide for its expansion.

The speech from the throne announced measures aimed at giving expansion to our Canadian economy but it does not contain a paragraph that we find in the Liberal party platform for the 1963 general election. In fact, I have that platform in my hand and on page 11 I find a paragraph which does not appear in the speech from the throne but which would have opened the door to all the solutions that the speech from the throne would like to apply. I think that paragraph is more important than all the rest of the Liberal party policy and even more important than the speech from the throne itself. I quote:

> A new Liberal government will see to it that the money supply is large enough to insure that tight money will not paralyse business—
>
> A new Liberal government will see to it that the money supply is large enough—

Mr. Speaker, I feel that the major problem facing Canada at this time is that of the money supply. Our country's possibilities are out of proportion with the amount of currency in circulation.

It is proposed to help create new industries at a time when existing industries are marking time and several of them have to close down or reduce production. Why is that? Because the available money supply is not sufficient for Canadian consumers to purchase all our production.

And by Canadian consumers, I mean the federal government, the provincial governments, the municipalities and the school boards as well as the individuals.

This morning questions were addressed to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier) about construction of penitentiaries. Everybody in this house will agree that there is a scarcity of penitentiaries, but the Minister of Justice stated: "We cannot build any because our budget does not enable us to". So this is a matter of budget not a matter of our country's productive capacity.

People ask for the erection of post offices. The erection of those buildings is acknowledged to be imperative, but our budget is such that we cannot afford it.

For many long years, the voters in my riding have requested the erection of an armoury building. It will not be built because our budget does not allow it.

Yet the capacity for building those structures is there. But the money supply, the credit which would enable us to erect those buildings and thus reduce unemployment, is not there. Why? Simply because the government has no control over the money supply, over the credit which would enable this country to expand.

The present Liberal administration is fully aware of that because they said in their program:

> A new Liberal government will see to it that the money supply is large enough to ensure that tight money will not paralyse business—

And it is precisely a tight money situation which is paralysing business today.

Consider for instance the government of the province of Quebec facing all sorts of difficulties because they do not have available to them the credit that would be necessary for a full expansion of industry, as well as of the education, health and highway facilities. Since they do not have the necessary credit, the government of the province of Quebec are now serving an ultimatum—this is the word used by the premier of the province of Quebec himself—asking a better tax-sharing arrangement from the federal government in order that the provinces may develop by themselves, and this ultimatum from the province of Quebec is based on the need to obtain new credit to successfully implement their program, because the province of Quebec has roads to build but no money to do it.

On the other hand, the federal government are in a sort of disastrous situation. They find themselves in hot water because this request comes from one of the main supporters of the federal Liberal party in the last general election, none other than the premier of the province of Quebec.

But, the present administration know very well that they cannot return to the province its sources of revenue because they are themselves in a disastrous financial situation at the present time and they must face unbalanced budgeting and accumulated deficits. This government must face the problem of health insurance and they must replenish the unemployment insurance fund. How can we expect the federal government to do away with its sources of revenue when it needs them itself.

We can feel at the present time that there is dissension between the two levels of government and it is due not only to the fact that the money is not there for those who need it but also that the governments try to grab for themselves the little there is. In fact, it is as if there were on a plate a single piece of pie over which the federal government and the provincial governments were fighting.

The best suggestion we can make to the government at the present time is to read over carefully that section on page 11 of the Liberal platform for the 1963 general election. If the government applied that section, it would realize that all the other pledges that they made or which are contained in that booklet can be readily implemented.

In fact, this booklet contains statements concerning old age pensions and assistance for the construction of houses. But nothing can be done now because, as it happens, no money is available for that purpose.

I wish to point out to the house many problems which are ignored in our country at the present time, especially the role assigned to the industrial development bank. That institution was established to help the existing small industries, but it now refuses about 90 per cent of the loans' applications, precisely because it does not have the necessary money to help small industry to develop. There is no co-ordination between the various departments who could help to solve the industry's problems. In this connection, I should like to mention a striking example of what took place in my riding.

Some time ago, that is immediately after the holiday period, a manufacturer in my riding, who owned a small mattress industry, was hiring ten employees at the time, but had orders on hand which exceeded ten times the number of mattresses he was able to put out, i.e., from 800 to 900 mattresses a year. Now, I accompanied that business man who wanted to obtain a loan from the industrial development bank. After having submitted his request, he was told: "We cannot grant you a loan, your business is not large enough." Now, mind you, Mr. Speaker, this man is anxious to enlarge his business, and it was for that very purpose that he was asking for a loan of $40,000, which would have enabled him to hire 50 new employees, and to reduce the number of Canadian unemployed proportionately, and more particularly in my riding.

After he had exhausted all arguments, I said to the manager. "But if you grant him a loan of $40,000, this means that there will be 50 fewer unemployed in the county of Jonquiere, who will then have no need for social benefits or unemployment insurance payments—each of them receives an average of $100 a month in unemployment insurance benefits. This would therefore, mean a saving of $60,000 a year for the unemployment insurance fund, for this is the amount now paid in benefits to the 50 unemployed who would then have found work. If the government had granted a loan of $40,000 to this small business man, it would, in a year, have saved $60,000 for the unemployment insurance fund; moreover the federal government would receive taxes from those former unemployed who would be working and realize a profit even if the loan were not immediately repaid.

But the manager answered: "I understand those needs very well; however, this is no concern of mine. It comes under the unemployment insurance branch."

And if you try to explain that problem to the unemployment insurance commission officials, they will not understand it either.

As you see, Mr. Speaker, there is no co-ordination between the various government departments. The unemployment insurance commission is interested only in paying allowances to the unemployed, without requiring the latter to work. On the other hand the industrial development bank is not interested at all in helping reduce unemployment in Canada.

Rather than keep on creating a lot of boards, economic councils and so on, the services of all government departments should be co-ordinated in order that the taxpayers' money be spent wisely.

Mr. Speaker, last year, amendments were made by this house to the federal Farm Credit Corporation Act, so that farmers of the province of Quebec, like those of eastern Canada, could derive greater profit from it. We hoped it would be a good piece of legislation.

Well, in my riding, hundreds of requests were made, but barely 2 per cent were accepted.

Legislation is adopted to help the farmer, but when the farmer asks for any assistance, it is refused, so that the act becomes almost inoperative. What good is it then to pass legislation in this House of Commons if it is not put to some use, and inspectors or managers in the various government departments see to it that it is not.

Mr. Speaker, I would now like to deal with another problem. There has been talk in the house lately about problems raised by the coexistence of the two great nations making up our country. Mention is made of the establishment of a royal commission on biculturalism or the study of that problem.

I read in a newspaper this morning that a government member has made a suggestion which I feel is very sensible. He said: "In the forthcoming days and months, we should concentrate in obtaining bilingualism in the federal civil service without further delay." And the member for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Pepin) expresses fear that the holding of a royal commission on biculturalism might well lead French Canada to miss the boat once again.

It is a fact, Mr. Speaker, that because of the delays which will ensue from the inquiry, we may lose sight of our objective. As the hon. member for Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Sauve) stated the other day, there are many things which should be improved in our own house; the structures of the federal government, of parliament itself, should be revised. Even in the parliament buildings, in Ottawa, there are serious gaps as far as bilingualism is concerned.

In my opinion, the present government should not wait until the royal commission on biculturalism submits a report to put its own house in order. It should ensure that throughout Canada, full recognition is given to bilingualism not only in all fields pertaining to federal jurisdiction but also in matters which come under the provinces. Lately I received two pamphlets. One is a C.N.R. publication called "C.N. Keeps Track" which deals with a certain number of promotions. That was the issue of May 1963, written in English. Out of 24 promotions given lately at the C.N.R., only three went to French Canadians. That is what is happening in May 1963, only five or six months after the repentant president of the C.N.R. assured us that there would be no recurrence of such situations.

I have also before me the Canadian Travel News, written in English.

(Text):

T.C.A. holds staff instructional courses for personnel.

(Translation):

Courses, that is, to prepare its personnel for promotions. Out of the 29 employees who follow those courses there is not a single French Canadian.

It is my contention, sir, that the government should look more closely into the matter; it should institute reforms right now instead of waiting for the establishment of a commission of inquiry.

But I think that a still more serious problem exists. Language is not the only difficulty in Canada today. My grandfather and my father spoke French in the province of Quebec; I speak French and my seven-year-old son speaks French very well. I am convinced that we will keep on speaking our language, and we have proved it for 200 years.

However, the heart of the problem lies somewhere else. It is rather that at the present time, among French speaking Canadians, especially in the province of Quebec, the idea of "decolonization" is spreading, as it is throughout the world, but in our province it is more a matter of "economic decolonization".

We feel that, in the economic field, Canadians from coast to coast are more or less "economically colonized" by foreign countries. We do not control our own economy. We do not control our own industry. And the French Canadians, feeling this much more deeply than the English Canadians at the present time—I am sure of that—would like to break those chains, those economic ties that bind us too closely to other countries.

Now, in this economic decolonization effort the French Canadians lack the support of the English Canadians to walk in line with them. They feel that, in this decolonization effort, they have to drag the English Canadians along with them, and the burden they have to carry becomes too heavy. They say: we might as well go it alone and let the other provinces sink into foreign economic control, if that is what they wish.

Proofs of this are to be seen everywhere. A few days ago, I received—and all hon. members must have received it too—a report on small loan companies from the superintendent of insurance for Canada. I always go through these reports for I find them interesting. For instance, take the two largest of these small finance companies operating in Canada. The largest one, Beneficial Finance Company of Canada, has an authorized and issued capital of $10 million. Out of these $10 million, $9,980,000 have been issued to Beneficial Finance Company of Wilmington, Delaware, U.S.A., and only $20,000 were issued to Canadians. Twenty thousand dollars, out of $10 million, were issued to Canadians and $9,980,000 to an American company. Last year, with this authorized and issued capital of $10 million, this company had a surplus of $9,188,738.01. Making $9,188,000 with an authorized capital of $10 million is what I would call a paying proposition. But profits do not go to Canadians; they go to an American company that comes here to get our money. This is what I feel is important: they come in our country to get our money.

The second finance company mentioned in the report, Household Finance Corporation of Canada, has an authorized capital of $5 million, but with $3,075,000 issued and paid up. The president, Mr. F. A. McDonald of Chicago, Illinois, has subscribed $3,052,000 out of $3,075,000 which leaves about $17,000 subscribed by Canadians. That gives you an idea of the situation, Mr. Speaker.

And you can look into all the other branches of our economy. Not so long ago, two important Canadian chartered banks, the Imperial Bank of Canada and the Canadian Bank of Commerce, merged under the name of the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce. According to the Canada Gazette a British bank is the major stockholder in the merger.

Foreign capital controls our economy in such sectors as financial companies, industrial concerns, banks and many others. From the economic viewpoint, Canada is a colony, under the control of foreign enterprises, and our country has become a sort of private hunting ground, where these enterprises become rich at our expense.

In the field of insurance, how many Canadian companies sell insurance in France, Great Britain, the United States or Belgium? On the other hand, innumerable foreign insurance companies come over here, collect Canadian money and pocket their profits. The same situation prevails in all other areas.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, I say that we feel we are not the masters of our own country. And industry in the province of Quebec does not belong to English speaking Canadians.

No, it is not the citizens in the province of Ontario who are to blame if we are not masters of our own industries in our province of Quebec. It is rather the result of a whole set of circumstances if our industries today are owned, not by Canadians but by foreigners.

Like the citizens of other countries who in the last few years, had felt the same need, the French Canadian people want to throw off the foreign yoke. If they cannot get the co-operation and collaboration of the English speaking Canadians in order to share in this struggle for economic liberation and that of their province, then the French Canadians are prepared to go ahead alone, because the Canadians from the other parts of the country do not seem ready to participate in the same effort in order to free themselves from the economic foreign hold which controls our economy today.

Mr. Speaker, I think that it is a very sensible feeling.

How is it that every year our minister of finance tells us: "We have a tremendous trade deficit". Last year, in reply to a question, the then minister of finance, who is now in the opposition, said this:

> There was an outflow of $1,100 million in Canadian money last year in payment of dividends, interest and profits to foreign companies operating our Canadian industries.

It is obvious, Mr. Speaker, because while Canadian labour unions in the nine other provinces are all branches of international unions, in the province of Quebec we have a Canadian union, the confederation of labour unions, which is the only important independent union in the province of Quebec and in all Canada.

Even the labour leaders in the other provinces accept such a situation, that is being under the control of international unions. It is amazing, all the same, to find that money is leaving Canada under the form of labour contributions paid to international labour unions. It is amazing also that English speaking workers do not realize that they are themselves under the economic domination of foreigners.

I am sure our workers in Quebec are intelligent enough to look after their own. They have set up their own trade unions, like the C.S.N., which is in a much better position today than the unions which have to take orders from outside.

I have touched upon only a few points relating to finance companies, trade unions and Canadian industries. However, I could give many other instances.

If we wish to realize national unity, we will have to get together and become masters in our own house.

Mr. Speaker, we do not even have a distinctive Canadian flag. Is that not a sufficient proof of our immaturity? How then can we hope to shake off the last remnants of foreign political domination? But such is indeed our present state of mind.

Some of my constituents sometimes tell me: "We have the Queen's picture on our dollar bills; does it mean that if these dollars are scarce, it is because the Queen of England does not wish to give us more?"

Mr. Speaker, French Canadians want to throw off the last traces of foreign sway. Their claim appears to be just and reasonable. I think, as they do, that if all Canadians throughout the country worked together to abolish foreign control of their economy, they would be masters in their own home, freed from the control of foreign enterprises whose head offices are on foreign soil.

A truly Canadian flag is naturally very important, but not quite as important as to be master of one's own castle. Perhaps the English speaking Canadians are not too concerned about their freedom, but French Canadians are very attached to it. If the English speaking provinces do not wish to help us to free ourselves in every respect, we would be ready to mark off the boundaries of our own province.

When we are promised a flag within two years, I cannot but recall that the French Canadians had to fight for 20 years in order to obtain at last bilingual cheques and the right to conduct bank transactions in both languages. The former minister of finance settled the matter in five seconds. He merely said to the printer: "Print the cheques in both languages".

The same thing should be done as regards the choice of a flag. The question would be settled as quickly as the other one if the Prime Minister just gave to the employee appointed to hoist the flag on the parliament buildings the order to hoist some distinctive national flag, whatever its design. It is useless to spend two years trying to find a proper design, for there will always be people who are not satisfied. There are 4,000 designs of flags at present in the files of the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill). However, it would be possible to select a distinctive flag within the space of ten seconds.

You may find I am simplifying the problem. In fact, it has to be simplified if it is to be settled. The important thing is to be free from all traces of ties and domination such as we have had in the past.

Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that all the problems Canada now has to face in the economic field can be solved.

I have mentioned but one point taken in a brief paragraph of the Liberal program. I do not wish to be unduly critical of the new government, for I do want it to prove itself, especially concerning the questions I raised earlier.

I shall end here, since my time has expired. Let the suggestion contained in this short paragraph be put in practice, and many problems will be solved, which is what all Canadians wish. Then we shall reach a lasting understanding in our country.

(Text):

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, the compliments which previous speakers have paid to yourself and your deputy on your appointments have been so well worded that I think it unnecessary for me to further take up the time of the house by repeating them. However, I would like to say just this, that in my opinion if the government only shows the same good judgment in other matters during this session as it did in your appointments, the work and responsibility of the opposition would be very greatly reduced.

Mr. Speaker, I come from the riding of New Westminster, which is the deep southwest of Canada. This riding has more people in it than has the province of Prince Edward Island. It is the largest riding, as regards population, west of Toronto. As I say, we have more people in our riding than there are in the province of Prince Edward Island. That province, however, as you know, has at all times four members in this house and four members in the other place, whereas our riding of New Westminster, with its larger population, has only Senator Reid and myself to carry on all its work. So you can see how busy we must be, sir.

In many respects New Westminster is, I think, a good cross section representation of many other ridings of Canada. We have many large developments in agriculture, dairying, fruit and vegetable growing. We have a large fishing fleet based there, many lumbering and saw mill operations, plus a growing number of secondary industrial manufacturing concerns. In addition, many people who work in the larger city of Vancouver make their home in the three municipalities and three cities of New Westminster riding.

I think the people who live in our riding are very much like the people who reside in other parts of Canada. They have the same basic needs. They want health, education, employment and peace. They have sent me here again, sir, to do what I can to get these elementary things for them and make them possible for their children. In my view I can only succeed to the degree that this nation, and indeed the whole world, proceeds on the basis of planning and co-operation for the welfare of the majority.

Mr. Speaker, we in the New Democratic party have very little hope of the present administration achieving very much along that line. As the previous prime minister said, I think last session, "We hope but with little hope". We know, like the official opposition whose members are mostly still dedicated to the ideals of outmoded laissez faire capitalism, that the government has the same general ideas, and that it has only reluctantly and out of economic necessity begun to speak now of economic planning and collective collaboration. We know there are serious omissions in the throne speech. There are many subjects which have not been gone into. For example, I think a very serious problem in this country which we should face up to is the fact that we are spending something like 40 cents of each federal tax dollar on the non-constructive items of armaments and debt interest. Can we afford to do this?

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, our party sees in the throne speech, after all these years, a few of the things which we in this party, and in the C.C.F. before us and in the Progressives before them, a few of the things which we worked to bring about. We see that the throne speech promises action on planning and on economic boards for the better production and distribution of goods and services. Second, we welcome in the throne speech an intimation that there is to be a beginning of contributory pensions and an increase in the present pension. We hope again that these matters will be undertaken in very short order, and that it will not be proved to be a move which will be too little and too late. It might be considered that for the past 15 or 20 years in this country approximately 25 per cent of the value of pensions has been consumed by the constant inflation which has taken place over that period.

The subject of redistribution is mentioned in the throne speech, and we are all for that. There is a pressing need for Canada to redress the present unfair basis of representation in parliament which gives such legislative power into the hands of rural minorities. As you know, in the United States citizens in urban and suburban communities have recently taken action in the courts to secure a better form of representation for themselves in the councils of their nation. In Canada, Mr. Speaker, we in the New Democratic party have consistently polled over one million votes, which should entitle us on a numerical basis to something like 35 to 40 seats in this house. Yet the system of representation which we have—or should I say "misrepresentation"—limits us to about half that number. We are glad to see that the government intends to redistribute our electoral units. We would also favour action to bring in absentee voting. At the present time scores of thousands of industrial workers are disfranchised at every election.

The 12-mile fishing limit is also mentioned in the throne speech and is a matter which has been fought for by those of us in this part of the house for many years. Indeed, I have a bill calling for the 12-mile limit on the order paper at this time, and I had it there last session. While I am not from Missouri but from British Columbia, where the people long ago learned to distinguish between promises and performances, I intend to leave my bill on the order paper until I see the legislation the government is speaking of bringing in.

Mr. Speaker, we in this part of the house consider that our function is not to block but to push, not to drag but to drive, not to slow down but to speed up. We in this party are here to oppose delay. We are not here to defeat this government; we are here to get the best and quickest possible results for the people of Canada. But, Mr. Speaker, we can do little or nothing to achieve a better Canada unless or until we have a better world. We have some terrible contrasts and maladjustments in our present world. It is a very small world now; we can fly around it in minutes and send messages around it in seconds. We are now trying to get to other worlds and will very likely succeed, unless in the meantime we succeed in blowing up and destroying our present world. At the same time over half the people in the world are said to go to bed hungry at night. Millions are suffering from disease. Hundreds of millions cannot communicate with each other, cannot read or write.

For our part, we in this part of the world have to deal not with shortages but with surpluses. It strikes me that nearly all the problems which come before us in this house arise from problems of surpluses, having their roots in production or in the deployment of our manpower. Our problem is one of distributing the vast wealth which we have produced, and this is an impossibility under private enterprise alone. These are some of the problems and maladjustments which exist.

Mankind is further divided by our political creeds. We here call for increased support of United Nations agencies, and we mean to exert every effort we can to see that this is done. In my view, Mr. Speaker, the first essential is to work for peace. Without that we have nothing. In that connection I should like to compliment the hon. member for Northumberland (Miss Jewett) on her recognition of the changes which are taking place in the international scene and for what I took to be her personal opinion that the time is drawing near when this country should recognize China.

Mr. Speaker, in that regard I have a proposal to make to the government. If we can have two ministers of agriculture, could we not have two ministers of external affairs? It seems to me that if the government would appoint the hon. member for Northumberland as the minister of external affairs for the Pacific region it would be a very good thing. I can promise her the warmest support from this quarter of the house.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is well for us at this time to consider the historical fact that the differences that we in the western world have with those of the east, considering all the divisions and the bitterness existing between us, are yet less than those which a few centuries ago plunged the world into religious wars which plagued Europe for centuries. As someone has written, if those who had been involved in the religious wars of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries could return to earth today, they would be astonished to find the old hatreds gone and that the old antagonists, instead of burning each other at the stake, are able to live together peaceably and discuss things in a rational manner.

I should like to urge upon the government, and particularly on the Prime Minister, that they do not isolate Canada or lessen her power for peace by perpetually and automatically turning a deaf ear and a blind eye, as some do, to offers or actions of a conciliatory nature which may be made by the other side. We on our side of this world dispute are not all white, and those on the other side are not all black. I think there is meaning in the words of the former president of the United States, President Eisenhower, when he said that the people of the world want peace so much that unless their leaders get it for them they will somehow push them out of the way and unite for peace of their own accord.

Mr. Speaker, our Prime Minister has recently visited the United States. I understand that he intends to go again. Still more recently we have had the NATO conference here. I suggest to the Prime Minister that he consider—perhaps he has already done so—the possibility of making a visit to Russia to see if he cannot use some of those powers of his which once won him the peace prize of the world toward securing at least a better feeling and an easing of tensions between that country and our neighbour to the south. We would have nothing to lose by this. Ultimately we are either going to live together or die together; there is no other alternative.

Turning now to our internal affairs, I should like to put forward a few of my own proposals. One of the growing services of our nation is transportation. It is something which affects us all. I think a great deal more federal attention should be given to transportation; because whether it be air, sea, train or bus, transportation is now subsidized by the taxpayer. In many instances a subsidized part of the industry is competing on its subsidy with another subsidized part of the industry. I believe the time is here when we should set up a comprehensive, all-embracing transportation authority in Canada which will have power to plan and regulate the expenditure of public money on transportation, so that the best result could be achieved for all and particularly for the public.

Another point I should like to put forward is that there is a need for a very much stepped up and more imaginative program for our rapidly approaching centennial celebrations. These take place, Mr. Speaker, in 1967, and speaking as one who had something to do with the initiation and organization of the 1958 centennial celebrations in British Columbia, I think it should be pointed out that we are behind time with our national celebration preparations. These will take place in 1967, and plans for them must be completed by the end of 1966. We are now almost half way through 1963, so there are approximately 43 months left to prepare for these celebrations and ensure that they are of the magnitude which a country of Canada's size should expect.

We still seem to be lagging. Is it because we have not got the right kind of organization? Is it because we are not providing enough money? Is it because we lack the imagination to see what this birthday celebration can do for Canada at home and abroad? For one thing, I would like to think that on the morning of January 1, 1967 not only across Canada but around the world the new flag of Canada, which the government promises, should be unfurled in simultaneous demonstration.

An additional proposal I want to make concerns taxation. In the United States municipal taxes and mortgage interest payments on homes are deductible from federal taxes. They should be here, too. This would encourage home building, home owning and family stability, to say nothing of stimulating increased business in the construction industry and in all the many related businesses.

Second, I call for the levying of a capital gains tax on stock market profits. Canada is one of the very few countries which does not have such a tax. Millions could be secured from it and put to work to reduce either the public debt or the level of other taxation.

In the field of citizenship and unity, I feel that whether we are English speaking Canadians, French speaking Canadians or members of that other great group, the new Canadians, the important thing is that we are Canadians. In this connection I make a modest suggestion. We use the translation hearing aids, but for the people who visit us and sit in the galleries there are no such aids. If they are English speaking Canadians, without French, they must listen to 20 minutes of oratory of which they can understand nothing. If they are French speaking Canadians without English, they must hear a speech in English, such as my own, without comprehending any of it. I think it only right that we should install in the galleries translation hearing aids which would enable our visitors to tune in on all of us. And when they do so they will find, I am sure, that though we are speaking in different ways, in our ideas we speak the same language. I put forward as a serious suggestion the provision of translation hearing aids for the galleries.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, there are the local issues or problems of my own constituency. I hope this new government will go ahead at once with matters which have been on the books, so to speak, for years, including the reorganization of the present New Westminster port authority into an enlarged Fraser river authority, giving representation to the municipalities along the banks of that great stream. I will have more to say on these and other matters as we progress in this session. I resume my seat now so that other members will have an opportunity to speak.

Mr. J. E. Lloyd (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, on May 16 I took my seat for the first time in this House of Commons as one of the elected members from the dual constituency of Halifax. It is a constituency in which 225,000 Nova Scotians reside.

Within its boundaries are two cities; Halifax, the historic capital of Nova Scotia, and Dartmouth, one of the most rapidly expanding cities in Canada. Outside its urban area it includes the beautiful farming district of the Musquodoboit valley. Along its Atlantic coast boundary are found picturesque fishing villages such as Peggy's Cove, Little Harbour and many others, the home of the hardy inshore fishermen, unique places of interest to artists, relaxing vacation spots for those who enjoy Nova Scotia's rugged coast line.

My constituency includes that world famous east coast port from which convoys sailed during both world wars to maintain vital supply line to the allied forces overseas. The port of Halifax, one of Canada's year round ice free Atlantic ocean ports, is a major base for Canada's armed forces. Around its shores are found nationally recognized universities and colleges—Dalhousie, St. Mary's, Kings and Pine Hill—as well as the offices of departments and crown corporations of this federal government. For example, there are armed forces establishments, the national harbours board, the Bedford institute of oceanography, C.N.R., T.C.A., central mortgage and housing, the Department of National Revenue and the Bank of Canada.

The extensive facilities of the Halifax shipyards, including floating and dry docks for new ship construction and ship repairs, provide a key industry. Expanding oil refineries and secondary manufacturing plants are located on the Dartmouth side of the harbour. In short, my constituency is a metropolitan urban growth area, the seat of provincial government and a centre of banking, trade and commerce. According to economic base and other studies, the population could rise to 300,000 in the next ten to 15 years.

For many years I have enjoyed the privilege of service in the Halifax city council, and was its mayor when elected to this house. I am most pleased to have associated with me, as a Liberal member from our dual constituency, a young energetic member of the bar of Nova Scotia. He has to his credit many accomplishments in the field of labour management relations.

My colleague has brought to your attention the serious threat to the volume of winter port traffic at Halifax with advent of extensive icebreaker operations in the upper reaches of the St. Lawrence. We shall seek the co-operation of the government and this house to adopt constructive proposals that will stop the gradual erosion of our winter port business, a vital and substantial element in the economic base of the port region around Halifax harbour.

We shall also seek the co-operation of the government and parliament in correcting a serious injustice in the policy of grants in lieu of municipal taxation of crown properties. For example, in Montreal—and I should like my colleagues from Quebec to note this—the C.N.R. is liable for, and pays to that city, 100 per cent of municipal real property taxes, business taxes and water taxes. In Halifax a privy council order limits such grants to 50 per cent of the real property tax. The Nova Scotian hotel enjoys a ten year tax agreement limiting its tax payment to $60,000 per year. In the city of Montreal the Queen Elizabeth hotel is liable for 100 per cent of all city taxes. For 1963 that tax bill ran close to $1 million.

The national harbours board grants in lieu of taxation are confined to the equivalent of rated police and fire protection taxation on its properties throughout Canada. The board contends its operating deficits prohibit it from meeting the liability for grants equal to 100 per cent of real property taxation. On the other hand, like the C.N.R. the national harbours board continues to accumulate interest charges on outstanding loans and advances from the national treasury, its only source of capital funds. Only part of that interest accrual is actually paid. Its 1962 balance sheet shows $71,290,474 in interest arrears. It also continues to make provision for depreciation of its fixed assets. At December 31, 1962, it held approximately $60 million in treasury bills and government bonds for replacement of capital assets.

The board has been unable to supply us with any consistent definitive policy with respect to the disposal of replacement reserve funds. In fact they have been employed as working capital funds. In short, the board's contention that it cannot afford to meet local taxation is indefensible. Grants in lieu of taxation on crown property do more than relieve the pressure on the local ratepayer. They provide an import dollar quotient to our port region, with its beneficial multiplier effects in our marginal economy.

Until we improve on our present office arrangement, my colleague and I run the risk of being distinguished in this house as the centre block speaking and the west block speaking members for Halifax. With that temporary disability overcome, we look forward to more effective teamwork in this house. Despite our professional backgrounds, we readily admit our need for experience with the unfamiliar procedural rules and the general modus operandi of this national parliament. During orientation to my duties I have gone through the usual initial periods of frustration and bewilderment that confront all new members. Setting up a small office in share quarters is an example. I share with the hon. member for Kings (Mr. Mullally) a splendid view of the excellent masonry at the back of the peace tower. On the other hand, I have enjoyed many moments of enlightenment afforded to me by understanding, co-operative and experienced hon. members and civil staff members.

Despite that willing co-operation, for which I am most grateful, I have continued in orbit around Ottawa to such an extent that I believe I vie with the accomplishment of astronaut Cooper. At this moment, my first speech in this house, I begin the re-entry program, with procedural controls in your hands, Mr. Speaker. I trust that I shall successfully land on my feet from cloud nine without unscheduled stops on the clouds in between. Now I turn to my re-entry rockets.

I share with all hon. members, Mr. Speaker, a deep sense of appreciation that you were available and willing, with the customary display of traditional reluctance, to undertake the onerous duties of Speaker. Your wide experience and highly respected service as a member of previous parliaments should greatly expedite the urgent work to be performed by this house.

I now turn to my specific comments on the address in reply to the speech from the throne. The right hon. leader of the official opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) spoke in derogatory terms of the decisions made by the new Liberal ministry. It is my purpose to show that the right hon. member has made assertions about the throne speech that are unsupported by any foundation in fact. Indeed, the right hon. member in his former capacity as prime minister of Canada is now on the opposite side of the house because he failed to make the very decisions Canadians urgently needed and wanted and which are now the decisions of the new Liberal ministry, notice of which is set forth in the throne speech.

May I first commend the government for its decision to present legislation to the house to establish a municipal loan fund. This is good news for the mayors' federation of Canada, which sought in vain for such a fund from the previous government. They made representations on this matter in 1961 to the Senate committee on manpower and employment. Extensive justification in support of the federation's carefully drawn conclusions is set forth in report No. 10 of the Senate committee proceedings dated February 15, 1961.

Subsequent thereto the federation urged the then minister of finance, the former member for Eglinton, to recognize the urgent need for national government action to implement the proposed fund. No decision was made at that time. Following the June 18, 1962 election no action was taken on this matter so vitally essential to any comprehensive plan to increase the opportunities for national employment and at the same time overtake the backlog of much needed municipal services and urban renewal programs. It could provide a potential alternative to foreign sources of funds and thus help to improve the nation's external payments position.

The government of the right hon. gentleman who now leads the official opposition further delayed a decision on this urgently needed policy by referring the question to the royal commission on banking and finance. On October 29, 1962 the mayors' federation submitted to that commission another extensive brief fully outlining the many economic advantages to be derived from a federal government municipal loan fund.

The Leader of the Opposition had much to say about the throne speech. On page 43 of Hansard for May 20 he is reported as follows:

> I intend to deal with this speech from the throne, because in every part of Canada there is national disappointment. It is full of platitudes spaced out among economic generalities which indicate that the planners and the bureaucrats know best.

I am certain, Mr. Speaker, that the mayors of Canada, who submitted their brief on the need for a municipal loan fund to the royal commission on banking and finance, are not disappointed with the Liberal ministry's decision to ask the house to establish a municipal loan fund. I am equally certain that the brief submitted by the mayors' federation on this matter is neither platitudinous nor the product of bureaucrats.

At this point it may be well to contrast the previous government's vacillation on this vital and urgent matter with the performance of the new Liberal ministry. On April 22 the right hon. gentleman from Algoma East (Mr. Pearson), who so capably leads the Liberal party, became Prime Minister. He proceeded with the appointment of his cabinet ministers and then went to work. On May 16, the day the house was opened, the throne speech reflected the decisions which had been made in the first 24 days of the new ministry. The Leader of the Opposition referred to the expression "60 days of decision" as "shifty days". The record of performance of this house on the specific recommendations of the new Liberal ministry will determine to which hon. member and to which party the term "shifty" should apply in the context used by the Leader of the Opposition.

I reiterate that the throne speech reflects the decision of the new ministry to establish a municipal loan fund, a decision taken within 24 days contrasted to over two years of established shiftiness on this subject by the former government, which then ducked the issue by waiting for the report of the royal commission on banking and finance.

The throne speech also provides other conclusive evidence of decisive action on the part of the new Liberal ministry within the 24-day period from April 22 to May 16. During those 24 days of decision the government decided to introduce measures at the current session of this twenty sixth parliament to establish a new department of industry to foster industrial expansion throughout Canada.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Lloyd: Mr. Speaker, when we adjourned at one o'clock I had been describing the events of the 24 days of decision under the new Liberal ministry from the date they took office on April 22 to the date of the opening of this session on May 16. I reiterate my closing remark at one o'clock that the speech from the throne gives further evidence of ministry decisions during this 24-day period. The speech from the throne, for example, reflects the decision of the new ministry to establish a municipal loan fund, a decision taken within 24 days in contrast to the two years of shiftiness on this subject by the former government, who then ducked the issue by awaiting the report of the royal commission on banking and finance.

The speech from the throne, Mr. Speaker, provides other conclusive evidence of decisive action on the part of the new Liberal ministry within this 24-day period from April 22 to May 16. During those 24 days decisions were taken to introduce measures during this twenty sixth parliament to establish a new department of industry to foster industrial expansion throughout Canada; to establish an area development agency within the new department of industry to work in co-operation with provincial governments in areas of chronic unemployment such as we have in a number of districts in Nova Scotia, particularly the Cape Breton-Pictou area and other areas where coal mines have been closed down.

During these 24 days, Mr. Speaker, the new Liberal ministry decided to strengthen the obvious weaknesses in the Atlantic development board and to provide it with a national assistance fund for projects essential to a revitalized Atlantic economy. During those 24 days the new Liberal ministry decided to recommend to this house amendments to the National Housing Act designed, I believe, to promote dwelling construction and home ownership and to advance urban renewal programs. Within these 24 days the new Liberal ministry decided to establish a national economic council to assist government, industry and labour in obtaining the maximum use of the nation's human and material resources through co-operative effort. In my opinion this means not more and more planning but more effective and better organized economic planning by government in co-operation with private management, labour and provincial and municipal governments.

The speech from the throne, Mr. Speaker, gives further evidence of ministerial decisions within the 24-day period. For example, I cite the proposal to establish a royal commission on biculturalism; the actions taken to meet our commitments under the NATO alliance; the establishment of eastern and western divisions within the Department of Agriculture; the establishment of a system of contributory pensions; the redistribution of seats; the appointment of a special committee to examine defence problems.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that no ministry of this parliament since confederation has moved with greater dispatch and with such a responsible sense of urgency, with such proven skill and ability, to attend to the nation's business. The government's program is before us. It is up to us, in this parliament of minorities, to co-operate with this decision-making cabinet, leaving history to record this parliament as the parliament of decision.

Mr. Charles J. M. Willoughby (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I should like to add my congratulations to those of hon. members who have spoken ahead of me in this debate to yourself and to your deputy upon appointment to these high offices. I understand from those who have been in this house for years that the choices are excellent. I should like also to congratulate the Prime Minister and the members of the cabinet upon their appointments to posts of high responsibility. I hope they may discharge their responsibilities with due regard to the welfare of all our country. I should like to congratulate also the hon. member for Northumberland (Miss Jewett) and the hon. member for Lotbiniere (Mr. Choquette) upon the excellent manner in which they discharged their duties in moving and seconding the address in reply to the speech from the throne.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I know it is unusual for a man of my years to make a maiden speech. I happen to be one of the few medical men in this house, and I am much more accustomed to delivering babies than I am to delivering speeches. However, I do feel that such an undertaking in this house would probably be inappropriate at this time. I do, however, wish to remind hon. members that great men like Pitt, Churchill, Burke, Gladstone, Macdonald, Laurier and even our present Prime Minister began life with a feeble cry. If what I have to say this afternoon sounds in any way like a feeble cry, then at least I have the consolation and satisfaction of knowing that I am not alone in this house, because I have heard many feeble cries from the benches opposite. This is not the time to worry about the plight of hon. members opposite. This is a time when we should be concerned with the continuing good government of our country.

I am here, Mr. Speaker, representing the constituency of Kamloops. I know that during the last 18 years the hon. member for Kamloops has had a special and honourable place amongst the members of this house. "Kamloops" has always meant Davie Fulton. I come to praise him, not to bury him. I am certain, Mr. Speaker, that every member of this house wishes him well in his new endeavour. I have heard it said that in his new field of operation he is tilting at windmills. Let me say that this is not so. Our friends Mr. Bennett and Mr. Gaglardi in British Columbia are not windmills; they are all wind and no mills. If the present government of British Columbia continues as it has in connection with the Columbia river treaty, the chance of getting mills grows smaller and smaller and eventually there will be no power and no mills left.

Mr. Patterson: That government will be there for a long, long time.

Mr. Willoughby: That remains to be seen. I am here, as Davie Fulton always was, to represent the people of Kamloops with the vigour and integrity for which he was so well known. Hon. members will recall the many ways in which he has rendered service to his country, both in opposition and as a minister of the crown. An outstanding example was the part he played in the enactment of the Canadian Bill of Rights, under the right hon. Leader of the Opposition; extensive amendments to the Criminal Code revising the provisions dealing with capital murder; general penal reform; legislation dealing with obscene literature, and also as chairman of the Canadian team which negotiated the Columbia river treaty.

It is a great honour for me, Mr. Speaker, to follow in the tradition which Davie Fulton has established, and to be a member of the twenty sixth parliament. It was an honour for me 18 years ago to nominate him as a candidate in Kamloops riding, and it was an equally great honour for me to have him return the compliment and nominate me in that riding three months ago. Needless to say it is also an honour for me to have him as a guest in the gallery today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Willoughby: Mr. Speaker, although I was sad to leave Kamloops at this time, the loveliest time of the year, I must admit I had a most enjoyable trip on the C.N.R. I did not hit a Liberal constituency until nearing northern Ontario.

As I look across the house at that attractive horizon over there, I regret I cannot agree with the charming and hon. member for Northumberland (Miss Jewett) who, in moving the address in reply to the speech from the throne, said we should get the economy rolling. What we must do is keep the economy rolling as it is now. If there is anyone here who has any doubt about that, I issue an invitation to visit my constituency of Kamloops. Never has there been such activity and feeling of well being there as that experienced during the past few years.

Mr. Gregoire: Because you have a Social Credit government in the province.

Mr. Willoughby: It did not give us a 92 cent dollar. The ranching, mining, lumber, building and tourist industries are all thriving and I am confident this is the general situation throughout Canada. Therefore I reject the suggestion that our economy is not already rolling. What I do suggest is that we keep it rolling, by co-operation in this house of minorities.

While I was listening to the speech from the throne I was gratified to note what a high regard the Liberal government has for Conservative party policies and principles. Imitation is the sincerest form of flattery, and when it is done on this scale it borders on adulation. I was delighted to discover how much the government learned during its years in opposition. Therefore, on our part, and speaking particularly on my own behalf, I say that in the days to come we will no doubt be able to support many of the policies outlined in the speech from the throne because so many of them are directly derived from the policies of the previous government.

However, there were some omissions from that speech, one example of which was that there was no proposed action regarding a national medicare plan, in which I, as a member of the medical profession, am deeply interested. Many items were conspicuous by their absence, but I hope this may be corrected as the session proceeds. While I came to the house to be critical in a constructive way of the government's action and legislation which I may consider lacking, I also come in a spirit of co-operation, a spirit which the last parliament so sadly lacked. I stand to support strong legislation introduced by the government. Indeed it is our responsibility to do so, but in turn we expect the government to be responsive to constructive and indulgent criticism, and to ensure that the legislation proposed is respected in every detail. There should be no need to remind the government that every member of the house is a legislator, and that their views should be given proper and fair consideration.

I should like to deal now with four items about which I am particularly concerned, and which were dealt with inadequately or not at all in the speech from the throne. Brief mention was made about assistance for the completion of the trans-Canada highway. This, of course, is a continuation of the policy of previous governments, but there was no mention of any move to establish a national highway system or to bring about the formation of a national highways policy. This, Mr. Speaker, you will recall is something which the Conservative government had included in its program for Canada, and I would urge the present government not to hesitate to follow that lead, having done so in so many other ways.

It was a Conservative government which completed the first railroad across Canada and a Conservative government which ensured that this country would have a trans-Canada highway as a link from the Pacific to the Atlantic. I hope the new government will learn from such examples and begin working on the formulation of a national highways policy, recognizing the primary jurisdiction of the provinces over highway construction. It is going to become more and more necessary to establish some procedure of co-ordination among the various highway programs in order to bring about a proper system as soon as possible. As Canada grows, and as the provinces continue to build more and more highways, it is important that we should soon decide on co-ordination of the provincial highway programs, and that consideration be given to completion of a second trans-Canada highway.

Highways are not only the heart, arteries and lifeblood of modern transportation, but they are like a roll of beautiful ribbon; as they unravel they carry with them new populations, new industry, new employment and new prosperity. Never was this better demonstrated than since the opening of the Rogers pass route last year. As a specific proposal I would urge this government to include the Yellowhead highway pass in the scheme I have suggested for a national highway system. Its benefits would equal those already realized by the completion of the Rogers pass route. I am not suggesting, of course, that the federal government try to do this alone, but I do suggest that at the earliest possible time the federal government call together a conference of provincial highway ministers under the chairmanship of the federal Minister of Public Works (Mr. Deschatelets) to discuss this very important question.

There was mention of the Columbia river treaty. I listened with great interest to the hon. member from Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) when he spoke on this important subject on May 24. He would suggest that radical changes are necessary to make this agreement acceptable. Well, Mr. Speaker, I am not an engineer, but I am prepared to accept the reports and agreements devised by the best engineers of both Canada and the United States who, after 17 years of negotiations, arrived at the most acceptable solution to all concerned. In any such negotiations one side cannot have it all its own way, but the treaty as outlined today is the most acceptable to all parties. I feel it is vital that parliament ratify the treaty in its present form, and as soon as possible.

I note that the Prime Minister is to meet the premier of British Columbia to discuss this matter. I wish him luck at this meeting, and I fervently hope that it takes place. The premier has already demonstrated a distressing habit of forgetting appointments. At this meeting these should be no backing down before the connivances of Mr. Bennett, and connivances there will be. It is the first responsibility of the government to protect Canadian resources, and any suggestion of bowing to the pressure of Mr. Bennett would be an abrogation of that responsibility.

May I urge, therefore, that the federal government stand firm on the Columbia river treaty as it was signed, because it is vital to the future development of British Columbia. I understand from a radio news broadcast the other evening that the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Nicholson), whose opinion I respect, stated in Vancouver on Friday last that no radical change in the treaty is anticipated or necessary. At least these words are encouraging.

Mr. Speaker, I want to bring to the attention of the government the absence of any reference to a policy regarding feed grain assistance for British Columbia. This, you may recall, was included in the program devised by the former minister of agriculture. This is important to the ranchers and farmers of British Columbia. At the present time beef ranchers in our part of the country are compelled to ship their range cattle to the prairies for market processing, instead of bringing the grain from the prairies to the interior of British Columbia, because of the high cost of feed grain purchased through the wheat board. I therefore want to impress upon this house the need for the introduction of a proper policy in this regard in the immediate future.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I want to bring to the attention of the government the complete lack in the throne speech of any indication that the government recognizes the need for forward looking policies to deal with the problems of our Indian citizens. I hope that the Indian claims commission proposed by the Conservative government will be established even though there was no reference to it in the throne speech. Our Indian citizens need our help so they can share fully in Canada's growth and development.

I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that I do appreciate the opportunity provided for me to speak, and I hope the suggestions I have had to offer and will offer in the future will not be considered as frivolous or unjustified but that they may be of assistance to good government in our country. As I attempt to follow my predecessor's example, I feel it is my duty to speak out fearlessly in the interests of Kamloops riding and the interests of Canada. In return I anticipate just and courteous consideration from all departments of this great national assembly.

[Mr. Willoughby.]

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, may I first of all congratulate you on your elevation to the office of Speaker. By long training and your own natural imperturbability we are all agreed that you will discharge your responsible functions judicially and with a sense of fairness and impartiality.

We have had two outstanding speeches, by the mover, the hon. member for Northumberland (Miss Jewett) and the seconder, the hon. member for Lotbiniere (Mr. Choquette). To these hon. members I would add my words of praise and congratulation. Also, I am sure we all enjoyed the speech to which we have just listened, and particularly the fine sense of humour which the hon. gentleman displayed as he made his argument. He referred to the presence in the gallery of the former minister of justice and now the leader of the Conservative party in British Columbia. I join with him in the tribute he has paid and to the welcome he has extended to this former hon. member of the house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I may perhaps be permitted to note that in the opposite gallery is sitting another former minister of the crown, a distinguished and gallant gentleman, Hon. Milton Gregg, former minister of labour.

Mr. Speaker, I now wish to make a report on the ministerial meeting of NATO which was held in Ottawa last week. The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer) and I had the responsibility of representing the government of Canada at that meeting. Because of the importance of the subject matter, and in accordance with the convention which attends the delivery of a statement of this importance by a minister of the crown, I propose to follow closely what I have prepared for this particular occasion.

May I say at the outset that it was an excellent idea, in my judgment, to have Canada play host to this meeting. Thanks to the superb physical arrangements made through the co-operative efforts of various departments of government under the able chairmanship of General Fin Clark, chairman of the national capital commission, a most favourable impression, I am sure, has been made upon our distinguished visitors. I cannot too highly commend those who were associated with this preparatory work over a period of some four months.

In addition, of course, the Minister of National Defence and I were afforded an opportunity to meet our opposite numbers both during and before the ministerial meeting itself. I had valuable talks in my office in the four days preceding the meeting with secretary of state Rusk, foreign minister Lord Home, and with the foreign ministers of France, M. Couve de Murville, and of Germany, Mr. Schroeder; that is, with the leading members and representatives at this meeting of those countries with which we have the most intimate relations. Of course I should add, so that I would not in any way discriminate, that I was privileged to have important and useful talks with the foreign ministers of Holland, Belgium, Portugal, Turkey, Greece and Denmark. We were able to review not only matters which would be brought before the meeting, but also questions of bilateral concern. In ordinary circumstances it might have taken many months to establish direct personal contact with these foreign ministers or, in the case of the Minister of National Defence, with ministers of national defence from the 14 countries which attended the ministerial meeting along with Canada. All this, I must say, is due to the forethought of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) in having invited the conference to Ottawa last December.

(Translation):

During the private talks I had with our distinguished visitors, I felt that they were deeply conscious of the fact that the success of the alliance would in the end depend on our being able to combine the efforts of western Europe, and North America.

In years gone by, such a partnership could exist only through mutual understanding between Great Britain and the U.S.A. Canada has played a useful role in that field at various times. The happy relations between London and Washington are the results of such steps.

Now that Europe has recovered from war devastation, the Atlantic community must be given a broader basis.

As a North American country which has received a precious inheritance and two cultures from its motherlands, Canada can once more be useful in exerting a discreet influence to promote even greater understanding among the members of the Atlantic alliance.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker, this meeting was timely in another sense. It gave the government an opportunity to remove the doubts which continued to linger in the minds of our allies concerning the position of Canada with regard to the commitments undertaken on behalf of our armed forces by the former government. To that end the Minister of National Defence took the opportunity on the first day of the conference to set the record straight by confirming to the council in ministerial session the information which had already been given to parliament two days before by the Prime Minister, namely that negotiations had been resumed with the United States relating to defensive nuclear weapons systems which had been the subject of previous discussions with the United States.

I want to make perfectly clear that Canada has undertaken no new commitments at the meeting just concluded. It is, however, the policy of this government to take the steps needed to make it possible for the Canadian forces to discharge the role accepted for them by the previous government. This was as long ago as 1959. That role would not disappear if Canada failed to carry it out; all that would happen would be that some other member or members of the alliance would have to shoulder the obligation in our place.

The kind of forces Canada agreed to contribute were to meet part of an established NATO military requirement, and I am sure that no hon. member of this house would wish Canada to be placed in the position where it would be foisting upon others a task voluntarily assumed by Canada through the former government as part of the collective defence effort of the alliance. I stress the word "voluntarily" because the military contributions to meet agreed force requirements were assumed as a result of bilateral discussions between the NATO military authorities and individual member states, and not all of them saw fit to undertake a nuclear role. I will have more to say a little later in connection with this aspect of the NATO meeting.

Now, sir, the spring ministerial meeting of the NATO council is normally attended by foreign ministers to review international developments and appraise the state of the alliance. Defence ministers also participated at this time because there were on the agenda items affecting the organization of the deterrent forces at the disposal of the alliance. Hon. members will doubtless have seen the communique issued at the conclusion of the meeting last Friday noon, but for the permanent record I would ask, Mr. Speaker, for leave of the house to have printed in Hansard the text of the communique as released in both French and English.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to accept this suggestion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: For communique referred to above see appendix.]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The decisions on defence matters taken at the meeting have attracted a great deal of public notice, virtually to the exclusion of all else. I do not wish to underrate the significance of those decisions, for they represented a further step in the integration of elements of the deterrent forces which should go some distance toward improving their co-ordination and control. But I would also draw the attention of hon. members to the fact that the emphasis in the communique was on peace. The communique opened and closed on that note. This is as it should be, for ours is a defensive alliance, the military activities of which are maintained solely in the interests of the integrity of the member states and therefore of the peace of the world. The whole underlying concept of NATO is the prevention of war, and there is full realization within the alliance that peace cannot be ensured by military power alone. So the council has reasserted its desire to seek equitable solutions by negotiation, and it is hoped that the communist world will come to see that they too have no less an interest in such settlements.

Some of the areas of continuing concern—Berlin, Cuba and Laos—are named in the communique and were indeed thoroughly discussed in the private sessions of the council. I reported to the council on the unsatisfactory situation in Laos from the viewpoint of one of the members of the three-nation international supervisory commission. I expressed our determination to continue to press for greater freedom of action and movement for the commission, and I am happy to know that the three members of the commission have joined together in their most recent report.

Too often in the past the council has met in the shadow of crisis. Last December it met in the immediate aftermath of Cuba. The preceding year it was the wall in Berlin. This year we were faced with no immediate threat of armed aggression affecting the treaty area directly, and this fact was noted in our review of the international situation. On the other hand the absence of war or the threat of war is a long way from the kind of peace we seek, and we were also forced to recognize that long standing issues such as were named in the communique remain unresolved and are a continuing source of grave concern. The causes of the present lull well may lie within the Sino-Soviet bloc itself, although no one can predict how long this state of immobility in east-west relations may continue.

There was complete agreement upon the importance of maintaining continuous contact with the Soviet union in an effort to resolve issues which might lead to war and ensure, at the very least, that neither side should misunderstand the intentions of the other.

In this connection the decision in principle which has been reached at Geneva between the United States and the Soviet union to establish direct communication between Washington and Moscow was welcomed by the Canadian delegation as one which should help to reduce the risk of war by miscalculation.

That agreement was one of the useful by-products of the 18-nation disarmament conference now meeting in Geneva. As I had occasion to say in one of my interventions before the council, the outlook at the Geneva disarmament conference and the test ban talks is so far from encouraging that it would be unrealistic to slacken our defence efforts. But I noted at the same time that the implications in both military and financial terms of an unrestricted arms race are such that we simply could not relax our efforts to negotiate a balanced reduction of armaments and armed forces provided we can secure the proper safeguards. To abandon this search would be a counsel of despair, although I have no illusions about either the ease or the speed with which results may be achieved.

There was unanimous support for the continuation of efforts at Geneva to bring about general and complete disarmament by stages under effective international control and international safeguards. Even though real progress in the scaling down of arms may be some distance away—and I believe this is the case—there are related areas such as the communications link which can substantially reduce the risk of war by accident or miscalculation and thereby contribute to the maintenance of peace and security. Similarly, on the subject of the nuclear test ban, I welcomed on behalf of the Canadian delegation and the government of Canada the recent Anglo-American approach in Moscow in an attempt to break the current deadlock. I made clear the Canadian view that there must be unremitting effort to bridge the narrow gap between east and west on this issue. Verification is, as it has so often been, the root of the trouble.

In our appraisal at the council meeting of the state of the alliance a good deal of attention was paid to the improvement and intensification of timely consultation on political developments. This is a subject on which members of this government have had a good deal of experience, in that the Prime Minister was intimately associated in 1955 with the specially appointed group which originally set up the procedures and basic rules which have been followed in the alliance ever since. Since taking over my responsibilities I have found that impressive strides have been made in this field in the intervening years, but in that same period there has been a corresponding growth in the scope and complexity of the problems facing the members of the alliance which demands an even more intensive effort in this direction. I took the occasion, in reviewing this question as seen from the Canadian viewpoint, to make clear that any shortcomings there may have been on the Canadian side would be removed.

I should like to make clear to the house, as I did to our NATO colleagues, that the Canadian government looks upon its contribution to NATO, and indeed regards the military role of the alliance itself, as part of a broad international network of peace keeping activities. As the Prime Minister indicated in his remarks at the opening ceremony, the interdependence of all nations is a distinctive characteristic of our era. It has come to be recognized that a local war, whether in Indo-China or Africa, if not contained, can have as grave consequences as any outbreak of hostilities in the more familiar trouble spots of direct concern to NATO. Moreover, participation in many of these peace keeping responsibilities outside the NATO area is, by tacit consent, denied to the major powers since one of the primary objects is to prevent fighting without inviting the even greater danger of a great power confrontation. For this reason it has been and continues to be Canadian policy to assume international peace keeping obligations both inside the United Nations, as in Gaza or the Congo, and outside, as in the Indo-China commissions. Through these activities we have a constant reminder that the NATO alliance has to be seen in a broad world perspective.

To place NATO in global context in this way, is not, however, in any way to deny that the central challenge to today's world is between the closed totalitarian regimes of the communist bloc and the free societies of the west, and that NATO is the instrument on which we all rely to meet that challenge. One of the principal subjects with which we were concerned at this meeting was the possible nature of that challenge, and to ensure that NATO forces should be so equipped as to be able to offer a range of responses appropriate to any aggression affecting the treaty area. In this connection two decisions of importance to Canada and to the alliance were taken, both of which were noted in the communique.

The first was concerned with the ability of the alliance to deal with the obvious threat posed by the Soviet union's mounting arsenal of nuclear weapons. Paragraph 8 of the communique described decisions taken by the council to regroup and organize certain elements of the nuclear deterrent forces under the command of the supreme allied commander Europe. These forces will henceforth include the whole of the United Kingdom V-bomber force and three United States Polaris submarines. This formidable new strength to be at the disposal of SACEUR will be added to certain tactical nuclear forces already in being or programmed and already assigned to him. This decision was of direct relevance to Canadian forces in Europe for, by indicating our willingness to arm the Canadian air division with the weapons which will enable it to discharge the strike role to which it was committed by the previous government, the way has been opened to permit Canada to play its part in the new arrangements.

Let me make it perfectly clear this decision in no way makes Canada a member of the nuclear club in the sense of owning or manufacturing nuclear warheads. Indeed, the decisions taken at this meeting affecting the organization of the alliance's existing nuclear forces are entirely consistent with resolutions unanimously adopted by the United Nations to avoid the further spread of nuclear weapons under independent national control. Custody of the nuclear armament of all the forces involved, with the exception of the United Kingdom bombers, will remain as before with the United States. I also want to make it clear that there is no new assignment involved for Canadian forces, as they were already assigned by the previous government to SACEUR's command. These arrangements were welcomed by the Canadian delegation as steps which, through the greater sharing of knowledge and responsibility for nuclear defence, will help to knit the alliance together and, in the words of the communique, "improve co-ordination and control of its nuclear deterrent forces".

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the minister allow a question at this stage? Without in any way admitting this question of commitment, I ask the hon. gentleman was Mr. Justice Thorson right in the statement he made two days ago that this government has arranged, or has agreed, to the arming of the F-104's with one megaton bombs, in other words bombs equivalent to one million tons of t.n.t. each?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition says that Mr. Justice Thorson has made this statement, which I have not seen. He is entitled to his opinion, of course. This is a free country.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Your former colleague.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): All I can say is that the nuclear club does not warrant the interpretation which critics of the present government's policy suggest. All I can say is that this government has merely acted in respect of a commitment which was made by a government headed by the right hon. gentleman.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I am not accepting that at all. Repetition does not make it factual, because it has been denied more than once. I am asking the simple question. Is it the intention of this government, and was it so made clear to its allies in NATO at this conference, that the 200 Canadian F-104's will be armed with one megaton bombs? That is all I am asking.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. gentleman has listened to my statement. He will follow what I am going to say, and then he will have to draw his own conclusion. All I can say is that the government proposes to live up to a commitment made by Canada—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Not at all.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —a commitment established by a government of which my hon. friend was the leading figure. That is the fact. We recognize the desirability of making NATO an effective instrument, in connection with which we propose at this time to see to it that that commitment is lived up to.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There was no such commitment.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The steps I mentioned earlier should be seen as part of the democratization of the alliance with respect to the exercise of its heavy responsibilities in the nuclear field.

The second decision of importance is recorded in paragraph 9 of the communique, where the need to achieve a satisfactory balance between nuclear and conventional forces was recognized. To this end the permanent council has been instructed to undertake, with the advice of the NATO military authorities, a comprehensive review of the interrelated questions of strategy, force requirements and the resources available to meet them. I have already mentioned that NATO must be able to offer a range of responses to any challenge, and this means that if that challenge is conventional then the conventional means must be available to meet it without premature recourse to nuclear weapons. At the same time the nuclear strength must be there to deter any possibility of a direct challenge with nuclear weapons.

The cost of maintaining the correct balance must be shared equitably amongst the members of the alliance and must be geared to the capabilities of each, having regard to its resources and its other military obligations.

For example, Canada has heavy responsibilities in North American defence, in NATO and in the United Nations and in other peace keeping activities. Our contribution too must take into account these responsibilities and the resources we have to meet them, and our planning must be projected as far as possible into the future if we are to make the most useful contribution to world peace in all these fields.

As members of the house know, the Prime Minister has announced in the house, as the Minister of National Defence did in the council, the government's intention to conduct a national review of defence policy and to set up without delay a parliamentary committee as part of that process, and a motion to that end will shortly be introduced. Our national review will thus go forward in parallel with the NATO review, a fact which will be helpful in considering the full range of our defence obligations. The outcome of these two reviews should enable the government to form considered judgments on the extent to which the present allocation of the Canadian defence effort should be continued or adjusted.

There has been a good deal of public speculation, Mr. Speaker, as to why there was no mention in the communique of another project in the nuclear field which is known to have been under active consideration in the alliance. I refer to the so-called multilateral force and, in particular, that aspect of it which would consist of a mixed-manned fleet of Polaris carrying vessels. This question was not on the agenda because the special mission headed by United States Ambassador Livingston Merchant has not yet completed its visits to all the capitals of the alliance. I wish to say no more at this stage than that the Canadian government hopes to receive Ambassador Merchant's group and himself in Ottawa some time during the first week in June in order to inform itself better of all the ramifications of this proposal.

By any reasonable test, Mr. Speaker, the Ottawa meeting was one of the most successful the alliance has had.

An hon. Member: That is not what the Ottawa Citizen said.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I noticed what the Ottawa Citizen said, but unfortunately that distinguished journalist was not present at the meeting. It is easy, and I regret to say fashionable, to emphasize the centrifugal tendencies in NATO, tendencies which are bound to manifest themselves in any organization of free and sovereign states whose cooperation has so succeeded as to bring a measure of relief from external pressures. It is precisely because NATO has succeeded in deterring aggression and promoting the security of its members that they can afford to indulge in the luxury of some dissent, precisely inherent in the fact that NATO is made up of freedom loving states.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the minister, but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I will just be a moment. I thank the house. But this dissent does not extend to the basic purposes of our alliance, nor does it diminish in any way the collective determination to preserve the common heritage.

This meeting of the council had before it certain matters for decision designed to reinforce the enduring character of the partnership between western Europe and North America. It took those decisions unanimously and in a spirit of harmony. It is wrong to say NATO is in a state of disarray. The assembled ministers were responding in a tangible way to the keynote address of one who has from the beginning lent inspiration to the alliance. I refer to the Prime Minister of Canada. The wise counsel he gave in opening the meeting, his assessment of NATO's achievements, his warning of the perils that lie ahead and his plea for unity created the climate for a meeting that will be recorded, I believe, in the history of the alliance as another milestone in Atlantic partnership.

Mr. Olson: I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question. Now that he has been in office for a number of weeks and has had access to some information that I am sure he did not have access to before, may I ask him whether in his opinion the expenditure for the Starfighters, Voodoos, Bomarcs and Honest Johns would be wasted or useless without nuclear devices?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend surely has answered his own question. In the event of conflict, which we all hope will never eventuate, what good would an airplane be that carried no weapons at all?

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): I should like to ask the minister a question. Now that he has made his report upon the meeting, would he care to tell us what happened at the NATO conference?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I will be glad to tell my hon. friend what happened. The NATO meeting represents the only way by which this country, in concert with other freedom-loving nations of the world, challenged by the greatest peril in human history, can defend itself. It seems to me that it is not within propriety that an hon. gentleman should use the form of interrogation which was used, seeking to belittle an organization designed to preserve the freedom of this country and the freedom of the world.

Mr. C. S. Smallwood (Battle River-Camrose): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate I should like, first of all, to congratulate you and the Deputy Speaker as well as the chairman of committees on your appointment to your high posts. I am sure that you will all fill these posts with sincerity and fairness to all members of this house. I should like also to congratulate the mover (Miss Jewett) and seconder (Mr. Choquette) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne.

I did not intend to get into an argument with the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin). However, after listening to him split hairs for the last 30 minutes regarding nuclear weapons, and refusing to answer the questions of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), I am reminded of a quotation I should like to put on the record. There are a great many quotations I could put on the record, but none is better than the one I have in my hand to illustrate to the people of Canada how the Liberals have changed their mind about nuclear weapons. This is a quotation attributed to the Nobel peace prize recipient, the Right Hon. L. B. Pearson, and it appeared in the United Church Observer for October, 1961. It reads as follows:

> We should not join the nuclear club by acceptance of nuclear weapons under national or so-called joint control. This would add little security to Canada or to the alliance and would be an abandonment of the stand we have taken at the United Nations and elsewhere, that the number of states possessing nuclear weapons should be limited rather than extended. Canada, if she became a nuclear power, would have far less influence and authority at the United Nations than she has had in the past—

This was the stand taken in 1961. Now, the big-wigs of the party have changed their minds. They keep changing their minds so often that we do not know where we are, and I do not believe they do either.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the election resulted in a new government taking office. I do not feel there was any need for that election because we had a good government in power. If you go back and look at the record you will find, as the Ottawa Journal did, that national production in 1962 had climbed 8 per cent to a peak of $40,400 million, the greatest increase in any western country during this time. After years of trade deficits, we achieved a favourable trade balance. Foreign exchange reserves in U.S. currency reached a total of $2,700 million, the greatest reached in years.

Trade had reached an all-time high; manufacturing had jumped by 8 per cent, construction by 8.2 per cent and capital investment by 4.8 per cent. This editorial concludes by saying:

> We must all hope that Mr. Pearson does well; to wish him well is but to wish well for Canada. But for truth's sake, if for nothing else, let Mr. Pearson and his friends stop trying to give the impression that they took over a broken down Canadian economy.

They did nothing of the kind. They wanted to obtain power. I could refer you to an editorial that appeared in the Toronto Globe and Mail which reads:

> The Liberals went into opposition in 1957 after 22 years in power. They had in their ranks a number of former cabinet ministers who had the opportunity to offer informed and instructive criticism; who had the opportunity over the past four years to devise detailed alternative policies to those proclaimed by the government.
>
> The Liberal leaders chose not to use their opportunities in a serious or responsible manner. Instead, they chose to offer negative and destructive criticism, to cry gloom and doom for the country, and to spend the rest of their time fashioning new planks to fasten on the shaky structure of the Liberal welfare state.

The Liberals came here after the 1962 election with one objective in mind and that was to force an election as soon as they could. They could not do this themselves, but needed the support of the other two groups we have in the corner. During the campaign, we heard the Social Credit members talking about Canada being ruled by the Liberals and the Conservatives. The other day in this chamber I heard one of the New Democratic members stand up and chant the same old cry that for 90 years Canada had been ruled by the Liberals and the Conservatives.

An hon. Member: Right.

Mr. Smallwood: I am not ashamed of this because Canada is the best country in this world and I am proud to be a Canadian. This is the reason I am here today, because I do not like this poppycock. These idealists do not know what they are talking about. We have no room in our country today for splinter parties. What we need is a stable government.

An hon. Member: You mean like we have in British Columbia.

Mr. Smallwood: You will have your chance to talk. If you do not say any more than you are saying now, you won't say very much. We hear these little Social Credit boys interjecting. They do not like to hear the truth, but they are going to be told the truth in a few minutes.

An hon. Member: That is good.

Mr. Smallwood: I turn now to this Social Credit government. If they want to listen, I will talk to them. The members of this party do not know who is leading them. They do not know where they are going.

Mr. Gregoire: We are going somewhere.

Mr. Smallwood: You are going downhill, that is where you are going.

I recall that on February 4 the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) stood up in this house at six o'clock and said we could not stand an election in this country. He went out and had his supper. I do not know what he ate or what happened, but evidently he decided we should have an election. I will tell you what I think happened. I think the leader from Quebec said, "I will bring back 60 seats". The leader from the west said, "I will bring back 40 seats". They thought they were going to bring back so many they were going some place, but they went downhill. They brought back fewer seats from Quebec, and the few from the west just managed to hold on.

Mr. Patterson: You are now in the opposition, yourself.

Mr. Smallwood: They went out on the campaign trail and referred to the fact we had not had a budget. This was the reason the situation could not continue. They went out on the campaign trail, and they talked about the debt of the country. A few minutes ago I heard an interjection about Alberta and British Columbia. If they want to know the truth, they might as well have it right now. This oil boom poured more than a billion and a half dollars into Alberta's treasury. Anybody could run a country—I am sorry to see the hon. member for Red Deer leaving because I am not through yet. Anybody could run a country if the money from oil wells poured in like that.

Mr. Gregoire: You speak too fast.

Mr. Smallwood: You are like a little duck. You are either squawking or running around looking for some place to lay an egg.

Let us look at British Columbia. Mr. Speaker, under the Social Credit government in B.C. provincial debt rose from $218 million in 1952 to $1,260,000,000 today. That is what Social Credit is doing in British Columbia.

Mr. Leboe: Look at their budget. It says no debt, no interest.

Mr. Smallwood: Why, you Social Crediters can make figures read any way you like. During the election campaign the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) visited my home town. About 400 or 500 people attended his meeting, and he went back to Red Deer and told his constituents that he had the constituency of Battle River-Camrose won. One of my friends attended that meeting, and I asked him what the Social Credit leader had to say. He replied "I listened for 40 minutes; when I left I was still waiting for him to say something." Only last week the hon. member for Red Deer treated the house to one of his old, warmed over speeches.

During the election campaign the hon. member for Red Deer went out to Vancouver and said something about Premier Manning being included in the federal cabinet if Social Credit won the election, but on March 26, 1963, there was this report in the Edmonton Journal:

> Thompson claim said unfounded—Premier E. C. Manning termed a report by national Social Credit Leader Robert Thompson as "wholly unwarranted and without foundation."
>
> Mr. Thompson said Sunday in Vancouver at a press conference that Premier Manning would likely be in the cabinet if his party won the April 8 federal election.
>
> Mr. Manning told the Journal Monday: "I am certain Mr. Thompson had no intention of conveying the impression taken from his comments at Vancouver, as we have had no discussion on this matter."

Such was the irresponsibility of these people going around and making remarks like that, but this time the people of Canada showed that we have no place for splinter group parties in Canadian politics. I say to those on the left, move over with the Liberals, and to those on the right, move in with the Conservatives, and let us get ahead with the business of government.

An hon. Member: Look at your own party and the splinters in it.

Mr. Smallwood: Don't scratch your head, you may get some slivers. Mr. Speaker, the throne speech was nothing more than a warmed over edition of the policies introduced by the Conservative government. We heard an awful lot about the devaluation of the dollar, and I remember the hue and cry in 1962 on the part of Liberal front benchers when we devalued the dollar. They said it was a terrible thing; but on looking back I find that on September 16, 1939 and July 5, 1946 the Canadian dollar was devalued to 90.5 cents under the Liberal government. It was the same from 1949 to 1950.

Devaluation of the Canadian dollar helped the economy of our country, but it is interesting note in the Canadian Liberal Challenge, the newspaper put out by the Liberal party headquarters in December 1962, there was a question from the New York Times magazine which reads as follows:

> The ultimate humiliation came this summer when the government was forced to devalue the Canadian dollar. It was pegged at 92½ United States cents.

However I notice the Minister of Finance realizes now that it was a good move, and I am glad he is content to leave the dollar pegged where it is. That quotation from the New York Times magazine also said this:

> With winter, their hardest season, coming close, Canadians now wait to see how deep the economic crisis will cut and how severe austerity will be. They are resigned to higher prices as a result of the import surtax.

What happened, Mr. Speaker? The price of living in Canada rose slightly over 1.6 per cent since last fall, the smallest increase in the western world. They talk about the economic conditions of the country, but on February 13 last the Ottawa Journal had this to say:

> Mr. Pearson and his much-vaunted economic wizard, Mr. Walter Gordon used to talk about the decline of our gross national product. They are not talking that way now. The gross national product is on its way up now; for 1962 it is estimated at 8.2 per cent over 1961.

Elsewhere in the article it says:

> Well, only a few days ago President Kennedy produced facts to show that in the matter of economic stability Canada's 1962 record was better than "any other western industrial nation"—common market countries included.

When these people talked about doom and gloom they had no desire but to get back into power, regardless of the truth and regardless of what they put before the Canadian people.

They talked about unemployment. Well, Mr. Speaker, there was unemployment under the previous Liberal government. In fact I can quote from the "Western Canadian Lumber Worker" of November 1951 in which a Social Credit supporter said "5 per cent unemployment good for Canada".

> An unemployed level of 5 per cent of the working force would be a good thing for the Canadian economy, says E. W. Hinman, Alberta's provincial treasurer.

That is just one more example of irresponsibility on the part of those people. We have helped the unemployment situation and I only hope the Liberal government will bring in amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act, because it is grossly unfair that people who do not wish to work can get unemployment insurance. However, the government has to have the support of the cities and municipalities in order to help clear up unemployment, and when I speak of cities and municipalities no better example comes to my mind than the city of Ottawa, where they hire women on the traffic squad. They putt up and down the streets on their scooters checking the meters and they stand out on the streets directing traffic. This is certainly no job for a woman. It does not add any dignity to the city of Ottawa and, above all, it is taking work from men; there are many family men who could do this work and I am sure these women could find work more suitable to them than out directing traffic.

I am sorry the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) has left the chamber because I wish to say I am a little concerned about the displacement of many people in government service. I am speaking of Liberal patronage, because that party has a great system for passing out patronage. We can remember how the only commissioner from western Canada on the veterans pension board was displaced not very long ago, but shortly after we came into power the inspector on the ships in Montreal was known to be in possession of contraband spirits and tobacco and I can remember all the fight we had from across the floor then.

Last year the former member for Assiniboia got up in this house and made a big speech about the P.F.A. political machine which the Conservative minister of agriculture was supposed to have. The hon. member must not have known very much about political machines. He should have seen the one the Liberals had before we got into power. I happen to know a man who attended a P.F.A. school in a town in Alberta. He said there were about 90 men there and the man in charge told them "You people are all good Liberals or you would not be here today." He told them to go out and take up the P.F.A. claims, but not to take more than eight, and to preach Liberal policies to the farmers when they were doing it. I hope the present government will not return to such low standards as that. They should be able to spread Liberal propaganda across western Canada without that and without using treasury money. In my constituency I have Liberals, Social Crediters and—no, I do not think I have any Social Crediters.

An hon. Member: Don't discriminate.

Mr. Smallwood: I am not discriminating; I want ability. I have Liberals and Conservatives taking up P.F.A., and if the Liberals try to fire all those people they will be firing all the people who used to support them.

My time is limited, Mr. Speaker, and I want to come now to agriculture. The minister is unfortunately not here today. I have with me a pamphlet entitled "Prosperity on the farm" and another entitled "Time for action", both published by the national Liberal federation. These are handy little pamphlets to carry around. The first one says, with regard to wheat, oats and barley, that a Liberal government will immediately bring in a price of $2 a bushel for No. 1 northern. They went across the country saying this and the Prime Minister promised the farmer $2 a bushel for his wheat. Now the 60 days of action have almost gone and I do not see any move toward keeping the promise they made. They promised a two price system under the unit quota. Before they go into that I hope they will give it a little study, because if they start paying out money under the unit quota they will see 25 per cent of the farmers getting 75 per cent of the money, and they will be neglecting the little farmer whose friend they are supposed to be. Therefore I hope they give these matters a little consideration before they go too far with some of their new ideas. This pamphlet also says that a new Liberal government would establish a higher initial price for oats and barley, which would be announced well before seeding. Well, they have not many members here from western Canada but I will tell them that a lot of oats and barley are going into the ground today. When is this going to happen? Probably five years from now. They will not be in power then.

We also see that they are going to appoint an associate minister of agriculture. I agree that they should appoint an associate minister of agriculture, but this idea of appointing a minister of agriculture for western Canada and one for eastern Canada is nothing more than trying to split the country down the middle. It just will not work. It is fine to have one minister of agriculture for Canada and an associate minister to work with him, but if they are going to try and split Canada down the middle by having a minister of agriculture in the west and one in the east, it is just not going to work.

I know the west was neglected for 22 years by the Liberals. Sometimes I blame them and sometimes I do not, because I look back and see that we sent C.C.F'ers and Social Crediters from western Canada for 22 years, and I wonder whether I should blame them. Today western Canada has sent some farmers to put through a good farm policy. That is what the people of this country want. We have to get back to a stable government. We went out and sold our wheat when the Liberals were in power. The minister of trade and commerce in the Liberal government had the attitude, "We have the wheat. If you want it, come and get it". That was the attitude of the Liberals, but our attitude was to get out and sell the wheat. We passed the Export Credits Insurance Act which put money into the hands of the department and enabled them to sell our wheat. We got out and sold wheat to China. We were condemned by some hon. members who said it was immoral to sell wheat to China. It is not immoral to sell food to any country that is starving.

I say to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp), send your delegations out and sell our wheat. If you keep prosperity in western agriculture, this will bring prosperity to the manufacturing communities in the east, because the western farmer will go out and buy expensive machinery, every piece of machinery that he requires for his farm in western Canada. This will in turn bring more employment to eastern Canada. Therefore I hope that in the next few weeks we will see some good agricultural legislation come before this house. If it is good for the welfare of the farmers of Canada, I will be one of the first to support it.

Mr. B. S. Mackasey (Verdun): Mr. Speaker, it is traditional, of course, that I should join the other hon. members who have spoken in this debate on the speech from the throne in offering you my congratulations. I do so with the knowledge of the help, guidance and assistance which you so kindly accorded to me when I came into the house for the first time last June. I would like, also, to take this opportunity of congratulating the mover and the seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. I was happy to see them continue in the same fine tradition that characterized the speech of the mover last session, the hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Chaplin).

If I may be excused, Mr. Speaker, I would like to cross the line of party politics for the moment and voice my regret at the absence from this hallowed chamber of many of the fine speakers who contributed so ably to the debates last year. I think I perhaps listened to more speeches than the average member. I miss the gentle responses of the former secretary of state for external affairs, and I miss more than anything, I think, the clear logic and to-the-point speeches of the then hon. member for York South. If I in no way share the political philosophy of that hon. member who is no longer in the house, I at least admired his contribution to the House of Commons in the short time he was here.

Mr. Speaker, may I also draw the attention of all hon. members of this house to the remarks made the other evening by the hon. member from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) pertaining to the conservation of the rights and privileges which we have acquired in this House of Commons through so many years of trial and tribulation. I hope that in our haste for parliamentary reform we do not substitute speed for efficiency.

I think there is one thing this parliament can do without. That is a continuation of the vicious anti-American campaign that characterized Tory efforts in the last election. I think many of the speeches from that side of the chamber so far have indicated that they intend to carry that anti-American campaign into the house. I think this type of action is but a reflection upon the integrity of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), and the constant references to his trip to Hyannis Port and to the United States press, radio and television is also an insult to the people of Canada, who showed clearly in the last election that they want no part of any anti-Americanism in this house.

Mr. Speaker, there has also been more than a little reference to the 60 days of decision. I think this is no doubt the role of the opposition. But I think, the very fact that we are here so soon after the election should be taken as some indication of good faith on the part of the Prime Minister. Certainly if the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) succeeds in bringing down a budget within 60 days, as he has already promised, he will have done more than the previous minister of finance was able to do in two years.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may be permitted for just a moment, before discussing the speech from the throne, to say a few words on behalf of the community which I represent. Like so many others represented here in the house, my community could, I suppose, be labelled bilingual. We have no agricultural content and no industrial complex, but we rank in population with a third of the province of Quebec. We have acquired the reputation, Mr. Speaker, of being perhaps the most community-minded city in Canada. Certainly the No. 4 Legion branch has carried on in that tradition, and as I mentioned in the address in reply to the speech from the throne last year we are very proud of the fact that we in the city of Verdun can boast that we had the highest rate of voluntary enlistment in the Canadian army of any city of comparable size during the last war. Just a few weeks ago we were one of the few cities across Canada to mark the commemoration of the battles of Ypres in appropriate style.

I may say that I, like other hon. members who have already spoken, would like to see medicare introduced, and introduced soon. I should like to see the Liberals maintain their promise of university grants to leading students. I am aware of the fact, however, that all cannot be accomplished at the first session, but I am sure that we will be constantly reminded of this vital social legislation which we need so badly.

In my own community, Mr. Speaker, there is one piece of legislation sadly needed, and that is some federal program to provide housing for our senior citizens. I like to use the term "senior citizens" when talking of our aged, for they are precisely that. They are the people who have made their contribution to this country of ours. They are not looking for handouts but simply for some way to exist, at the same time retaining their dignity and pride. I think that in my community at least private industry has failed in regard to providing housing for our senior citizens.

Mr. Speaker, there is another item in the speech from the throne which is of concern to me. I am referring, of course, to the establishment of a commission on biculturalism and bilingualism. The hon. member for Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Sauve), whom I admire and respect greatly, made a very fine and moving speech on this subject last week. I would urge all hon. members who were not present to read Hansard and his interpretation of the problems that are confronting the province of Quebec. He made no attempt to assess the blame for this unhappy situation; rather he simply emphasized the facts as they existed. He has suggested, and rightly so I think, that the economic plight of the average citizen of Quebec as compared with that of, for example, Ontario was one of the underlying factors in the unrest in Quebec today. I do not attempt to place the blame for the unrest in Quebec on the shoulders of any particular party represented in this house; I think we are all to blame.

Mr. Speaker, I was therefore quite happy when the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) lived up to his promise made last fall of establishing such a royal commission. I think it was the first and the most logical step suggested in this house to recognize the problems of French Canada. I was hoping, Mr. Speaker, that such a commission might bring to the surface some of the subtle differences which have caused friction in that province; and I speak with some little concern and knowledge of the matter for I am one of the many hundreds of thousands of English speaking Canadians who dwell in the province of Quebec. I was born, as a matter of fact, in the cradle of this country, the city of Quebec, and at an early age I moved to a village known as Sillery, which produced the famous Chubby Power, who graced this House of Commons for many years.

Mr. Speaker, there are many differences which are separating Quebec from the rest of the country, and certainly with the time at my disposal I could name but few of them. But I should like hon. members to remember that the rights which the French Canadians are asking for themselves across the country are the rights that I, as a representative of the English minority, have always enjoyed in the province of Quebec. I can remember, Mr. Speaker, going to school for the first time 35 years ago. I was entitled to attend an English speaking school with English speaking teachers, and with a curriculum acceptable to the religious beliefs of my parents. This privilege has always been recognized in the province of Quebec. Certainly French Canadians, in asking for this privilege in other parts of Canada, are simply asking for things which they have always extended to the minority in our province. The use of English in the provincial buildings, in civic administration, even in road signs, periodicals and annual reports, has always been encouraged and fully recognized. The maintenance of the rights and privileges of the minority in our province, even in the dark days of Mr. Duplessis, has always been protected. Personally, as one who is considered reasonably bilingual, I cannot visualize the day when every Canadian will be fully bilingual, but I do think the day has come when every Canadian should have more than a passing interest in French or English; and I might add, Mr. Speaker, that my remarks apply equally to my French Canadian friends.

Rather than wait for the full implementation of the royal commission report, I think steps can be taken immediately to further the cause of bilingualism, at least in our senior civil service departments. I do not subscribe to the theory that all must be rectified by 1967. Certainly there is no magic date when all these differences of opinion must disappear. But I do think that confederation should at least mark the date of stocktaking, when we can look back with pride to some improvement in the question of bilingualism and biculturalism. I think, Mr. Speaker, that every Canadian is duty bound to acquaint himself a little more with French Canada. Prominent Canadians found to their delight many years ago that a deep knowledge of French Canada, its culture, its language and its traditions is an exciting and fulfilling experience. The province of Quebec is our birthplace, and it was from here that the hardy settlers first braved the tough winters and journeyed on to make Canada, and indeed the United States, known to our European friends.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may be permitted for just a moment to outline some of the facts which have led to the rejuvenation of the province of Quebec. The fact that in 1960 our province was finally freed from the yoke of a very corrupt administration is, I think, well known to all of us, and certainly if the province of Quebec has not expanded as well as it should have economically, the blame must not be laid entirely at the feet of English Canadians. French Canadians must take a second look at the yoke of tyranny which men like Duplessis placed around their own necks. Today our province is on the move. The institution of a hospital insurance plan, for example, brought it into line with the rest of the country. Our universities are flourishing, thanks to statutory grants. High school education is now free up to and including grade 11, and the province is embarking upon a vast building program for secondary and technical schools. Crown prosecutors are being named on a permanent basis.

Antiquated electoral laws have been brought up to date and Quebecers for the first time in history are putting their savings to use for the benefit of the province through their general finance corporation. Meanwhile, the council for economic orientation is endeavouring to spread industry beyond the confines of the upper St. Lawrence valley.

In short, I feel the province of Quebec is rapidly closing the economic gap which separates it from the rest of the country. Its culture is flourishing. Its literature and art are finding a ready audience not only in the United States but in English speaking Canada. Its French television programming is vigorous and alive; French technicians have been responsible for the finest of the documentary films made by the national film board.

I remain one of the optimists as far as the future of confederation is concerned. However, I believe confederation must be reviewed and its contents more clearly defined. It is important for us to remember that the terms of confederation will mean very little if there is not a desire to make them work, motivated by mutual respect and understanding. The desire for equality of opportunity, equality of language, must be earnestly desired by all Canadians and for all Canadians. Certainly I think we must realize that the spirit of confederation, as it was envisaged, has never been fully realized. The time has come for us to realize that what is good and proper for Quebec is good and proper for Canada. By the same token, French Canadians and the people of Quebec should realize that what is good for Canada is good for Quebec. It is not by isolation that Quebec will fulfil its destiny. It is not by retiring from confederation that Quebecers will realize the fulfilment of their economic dreams. The eventual and logical development of Quebec to the full richness of which Quebec is capable must come from within confederation. The time is now.

Canada is ready and willing to view the French Canadian position in its right perspective. It is not by loose talk of ten federations, of separatism or of reducing the role of the federal government to nothing that Quebec will flourish. It will flourish when Canadians right across this great dominion realize that the ultimate greatness of this country depends on a vigorous and lusty Quebec, and that our greatest protection against further inroads into our culture by friendly allies is the extension of French Canadian culture across the country. I believe this fact has now been recognized across the nation. Responsible Canadians everywhere feel French Canada has been ignored to some extent. I believe Quebec has served notice in the last two years that it is fully capable of managing its own affairs. If the province is to achieve the greatness of which it is capable, her leaders must now be prepared to permit the rest of Canada to help rectify the situation.

In closing, may I say that if certain leaders in the field of politics and in the world of letters adopt the attitude that nothing can be done, that Quebec has no role to play in confederation, then the long struggle for equality will have been in vain. If, on the other hand, the commission on biculturalism is given an opportunity to function, if its report is analysed with an open mind, if the differences separating French Canada and English Canada are acted upon, then I feel Canada will eventually reach the greatness predicted for it by Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish I had time to deal extensively with the speech made this afternoon by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin), but I have certain other topics to deal with, so I cannot do more than comment briefly on the remarks he made.

The minister, who had an opportunity to give us a full statement with regard to the NATO conference, satisfied himself with a rough and ready summary of what happened at those meetings. He forgot to mention that most of it had been decided in advance and that the communique had been prepared and agreed upon by most of the leading nations in NATO long before the business was concluded. The hon. gentleman did point out, though, that he had met in advance with various foreign ministers, starting off with Secretary Rusk, thus reversing the order followed a couple of weeks ago when the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) started off with the prime minister of the United Kingdom. Here, perhaps, we have the proposed pattern. The hon. gentleman began by meeting the secretary of state and followed by meeting Lord Home of the United Kingdom.

The minister of external affairs indicated to us that the debate on nuclear arms is far from finished. He opened up new vistas for us to examine. He indicated, as did the Prime Minister earlier, that the question of defence policy would be taken up when the committee is appointed to discuss that matter. The Prime Minister said it would be a committee to consider defence policy and the Secretary of State for External Affairs said almost the same thing this afternoon. Consequently we shall have, to use his words, a review of national defence policy as soon as we get around to setting up the committee. It is essential we should do this because there is certainly great misunderstanding in regard to this subject, above all, in the mind of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He had the effrontery to say that in the discussions prior to the meeting he took it upon himself to remove what he called doubts in the minds of our allies with regard to Canada's role in NATO. Mr. Speaker, there has never been any doubt in the minds of those in any country as to Canada's role in any crisis. There is no country in the world which has exceeded Canada's efforts in time of international crisis. Except for some of our own Canadian politicians, no person has ever expressed doubt about this country meeting its obligations in time of international crisis. Yet we find the minister of external affairs continuing this practice of downgrading Canada and leaving an impression in the minds of his listeners that in the past there have been doubts created in the minds of our allies—he means, of course, by the previous government. None of this happened during the days of the Eisenhower administration, and I am surprised that the minister of external affairs should use an expression like that in this house.

The hon. gentleman also indicated that Canada was now about to take steps to discharge the role to be played by our forces. There has never been any dispute or misunderstanding on the part of anyone suggesting that Canada would not discharge its role effectively. The hon. gentleman went on to say that the NATO meeting had direct relevance—those were his words because I took them down—to Canadian forces in Europe. Yet a few months ago gentlemen opposite were saying throughout this country that the NATO council to be assembled in Ottawa would have nothing whatever to do with Canada's role in defence. They told us earlier that only the foreign ministers would come. We discovered—and the Canadian people now realize—that the defence ministers came along as well, because the major item to be discussed at this meeting was the subject of defence. So the hon. gentleman had to admit that the NATO meeting last week had direct relevance to the employment of Canadian forces in Europe, as we said from the beginning. Then he went on to say —and it has been announced in the press— that the government had committed our forces to SACEUR and that they would now be a part of its deterrent force. I point out that this new force which has been put together is a deterrent force comprised of the bomber fleet of the United Kingdom, three Polaris submarines and the tactical nuclear force available in Europe of which Canada's force comprises part. The government has taken action of this kind without reference to parliament and has committed our force in Europe to undertaking a deterrent role. It is not just a defensive force. The range of the planes is not very great but it is enough to enable them to reach into the iron curtain countries. The size of the bomb carried is such that it is not just a defensive bomb to be used in support of an army on the battlefield. It is a megaton bomb and there will be 144 planes each armed with a megaton bomb, which we are told is equivalent to the explosive power of a million tons of explosive. Canada itself will have enough explosive power virtually to destroy civilization.

So this government, without having a national review of Canada's defence policy, without referring the matter to parliament, has committed Canada now to a position in the deterrent force under NATO. I would have thought that this matter should be carefully considered by parliament and carefully considered by the people of Canada before precipitate action such as was taken. Here was the chance—the NATO meeting, proposals put forward there and then a full discussion by the Canadian parliament with regard to what Canada should do in the future. But that has not been accorded to us. We are going to be able to discuss this afterwards in a defence committee which the Prime Minister is quoted as saying in one of the papers might take a year to complete its work. But the decision has already been made by the government and, strangely enough, we have not heard from the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer).

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You will.

Mr. Churchill: He is travelling around in the shadow of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I should like the Minister of National Defence to assert himself. He is the man who is responsible to the house for Canada's armed forces. He has an associate minister who claims equal authority with him. Why do we not hear from the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cardin)? But no, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who has no particular knowledge of defence matters, is telling us what to do and telling the two ministers of national defence what their role will be, a role which is obviously an inferior one. They are tagging along behind the Martin comet.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I assure my hon. friend that he will be hearing from the Minister of National Defence.

Mr. Churchill: I can hardly wait. I hope what I hear will be more interesting, more objective and more informative than what we heard this afternoon from the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You are not too generous today, Gordon.

Mr. Churchill: I have only just started and I have already wasted ten minutes on the minister's very bad speech. What I had intended dealing with, and I have a chance to deal with them now, are some of the commitments which the government has failed to keep. This government has been talking and its members were talking during the election campaign about keeping commitments. Let us examine their record.

Within 30 days of assuming office they have already declined to keep a commitment which was made during the election campaign. Last week in the House of Commons I put the following question to the Minister of Transport (Mr. McIlraith), as found at page 33 of Hansard:

> Does the government intend to honour the commitment made by the Prime Minister during the election campaign to retain in Winnipeg and St. James the T.C.A. overhaul and maintenance base?

The answer given by the Minister of Transport reads in part as follows:

> I can find no such commitment having been made.

Subsequently in answer to a supplementary question by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who I am sure will pursue this subject, the Prime Minister used the following words:

> —there was no commitment in that statement in the terms put forward by the hon. member who asked the question in the first instance.

I want to draw to the attention of the house an article which appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press of Saturday, March 30, just in the heat of the election campaign. The article reads as follows:

> Fred Douglas, the Liberal candidate in Winnipeg South Centre, said Saturday that if a Liberal government is elected the Trans-Canada Air Lines maintenance and overhaul base will remain in greater Winnipeg. At a press conference Mr. Douglas showed a policy statement contained in a telegram from Liberal Lester Pearson. Mr. Douglas said Mr. Pearson's statement "ensures that the T.C.A. maintenance and overhaul base will continue in Winnipeg."

I do not have the time to elaborate on this matter but no doubt other members from Winnipeg will do so. I quote again from the Free Press:

> If the base moves about 1,000 employees would be affected and a gross pay packet of from $8 to $13 million.

This is of great importance to the city of Winnipeg and to individuals. The Winnipeg Tribune of May 21, commenting on the question and answer in the House of Commons, had this to say:

> Questioned in the Commons on Monday, Prime Minister Lester Pearson denied that he had made any commitment to keep the overhaul base here. From the standpoint of semantics, Mr. Pearson could argue that he has made no specific pledge concerning the overhaul base. But certainly it could have been read into his election message that Mr. Pearson was prepared to fight to keep the base here. That was the conclusion made by his own candidate and no move was made to dissuade the electorate otherwise.

It is indeed regrettable that the present government should have so badly misled the residents of Winnipeg and St. James during the course of the election campaign. I call upon them to honour their commitments, expressed or implied, that were used during the election campaign to influence the voters of greater Winnipeg and to attempt to affect the vote in that city. It was understood by the people that there was a commitment.

An equally bad error was made within four days of the government assuming office. That was the callous and ruthless treatment meted out to a first world war infantryman who served in the trenches and at Passchendaele. I will spare the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Teillet) any comment on this matter today but I will be referring to it subsequently and I will show the complete indifference of the Prime Minister when this matter was drawn to his attention, as it was drawn to his attention by myself by cable and by telegram. He had every opportunity to take immediate action on behalf of the veterans of this country and to protect the pension commission, and he failed to do so. He wrote it off. He gave his complete and unqualified approval of the action of the Minister of Veterans Affairs. It is a subject that will be reviewed again in the House of Commons.

The other day, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) in speaking in this debate indicated that after the election was over he had paid a visit to the United States. I was struck by this sentence of his speech that is recorded on page 249 of Hansard. He said:

> I had the opportunity of speaking to a large number of United States citizens, including persons in the government service; and whether they are justified or not, United States citizens believe they won the 1963 elections in Canada and they are waiting now for the country to be delivered to them.

That is an extraordinary experience, but I think that the election campaign which ended just a few weeks ago will be recorded in history as one in which United States interests played a larger part than at any time for at least 50 years. I think it is important to set down on the record a summary, for Canadians of the present and for the historian of the future, of some of the main factors that loomed so large during the 1963 election. A great part of the interest shown by the United States administration in Canadian affairs centered on the question of nuclear weapons. The controversy was started by a visit to Canada by General Norstad after he had vacated his command as supreme allied commander, Europe. Ostensibly he had come to bid farewell to his Canadian friends. Whether he did the same in all of the other countries of the NATO alliance has not been disclosed. His parting words to his Canadian friends were actually a sharp attack on Canada and an unexpected and unwarranted interference in Canadian affairs. That happened on January 3.

On January 12 at a Liberal association meeting in Toronto the then leader of the opposition, now the Prime Minister, executed the very difficult acrobatic feat of reversing himself while balanced on a tightrope. For several years he had proclaimed the policy of no expansion of the nuclear club and no nuclear arms for Canada.

On January 12, however, he explained his change of position, and these are his words:

> The experience and information in recent months, even recent weeks, have influenced that position.

He has yet to tell us what was the experience in those recent weeks which were the weeks of the parliamentary recess in December and January. Where was he during that period? With whom did he consult? Who caused him to change his mind? He based his January 12 speech in the house on a statement made by General Norstad on January 3. These are the words he used:

> These are the facts about our nuclear defence situation today. If there are any doubts about these facts, those doubts were removed the other day by a man who should know, General Norstad, the man who for years was Supreme NATO Commander.

Mr. Pierre Elliott-Trudeau, writing in the May issue of Cite Libre poses several questions that have been in the minds of many people. Here are two of them:

> Do you believe it was as a tourist that General Norstad ... came to Ottawa on January 3 to demand publicly of the Canadian government that it respect its pledge? Do you think it is by pure chance that Mr. Pearson in his speech on the 12th January rested on the authority of General Norstad?

To continue the chronological summary, I may say that the next event was the notorious press release by the department of state in Washington, issued on January 30. Then, on February 6, the Globe and Mail carried a dispatch from Washington which referred to that press release. The article reads as follows:

> Doris Fleison writing in the Washington Star says, "It could just be that some well-meaning friend here decided to give Mr. Pearson a hand. Precisely that suggestion is going the rounds with a rather important name attached."

The Chicago Sun Times of February 3 commented:

> The issue is political in Canada. The American press release seemed to correspond with the position of Diefenbaker's political opposition, Liberal Leader Lester Pearson ... For our part we hope Washington hasn't committed a diplomatic bay of pigs with our friends the Canadians.

Mr. Walter Lippmann in the Washington Post wrote:

> American dealings with the Canadian government have no doubt been complicated. But the crucial issue is the same one which has disrupted American relations with France and shaken the whole western alliance and has alienated the U.S. from General de Gaulle.
>
> It was a thoughtless decision to embroil the U.S. with Ottawa in a relatively minor aspect of the great issue which is posed from Paris.

This is a quotation taken from an article reprinted in the Calgary Albertan on February 12, 1963. Then, Mr. Pierre Elliott-Trudeau poses these questions:

> Do you think that it was by mistake that the State Department sent to the press, on the 30th of January, a release reinforcing Mr. Pearson's position and bluntly calling Mr. Diefenbaker a liar? Do you believe it was by pure chance that this communique furnished to the Leader of the Opposition the argument with which he literally stuffed his speech to parliament on the 31st of January? Do you believe that it was a mere coincidence that this series of events culminated in the fall of the government on the 5th of February?

There followed during the election campaign various other incidents of which I will mention only two—the Newsweek article in February characterized by the Toronto Star as a disgraceful attack on the then prime minister, and the Buffalo radio station, WYSL, broadcasting an editorial urging its Canadian listeners to vote Liberal as recorded in the Toronto Telegram of April 4.

After the campaign came the gloating from Washington as reported in an editorial of the Globe and Mail of May 2, and a news story in the Toronto Telegram of April 24. Mr. Richard Starnes of the Scripps-Howard chain wrote as follows:

> Adroit statecraft by the American State Department brought down the bungling, crypto-anti-Yankee government of Prime Minister John Diefenbaker and replaced it with a regime which promises to be faithful to the concept of Canadian-American interdependence ... American intervention was coldly calculated to do precisely what it did, and it was a brilliant success.

How coldly calculated was it by the state department? In the brief chronological summary that I have given, there should be inserted a letter dated January 14, a copy of which I received in the mail. The letter reads as follows:

> Please accept my sincere congratulations on the excellent and logical speech you made at the Liberal party conference on nuclear weapons on January 12th.
>
> We appreciated your statement which indicated that the points of view expressed by the Liberal party and my government are identical. As a result of your address,—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Churchill:

> —no other Canadian politician on record has gained as many devoted friends in my country as you have.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The hon. gentleman is reading from a letter. Would he identify the letter in accordance with the rules of the house?

Mr. Churchill: I always identify every document to which I refer in this house. I can assure the hon. gentleman that I will. I continue:

> I was delighted with the timing, which I considered perfect, announcing the stand taken by the party. The Conservatives will be forced to repeat what you have already stated. It will be quite evident to the electorate that the policy of the Conservatives is narrow-minded and that they are unfit to continue governing the country.
>
> At the first opportune moment, I would like to discuss with you how we could be useful to you in the future. You can always count on our support.

The letter opens with the salutation—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On the point of order with respect to the rules; the hon. gentleman knows perfectly well that the practice is, when an hon. member is about to read from a letter, he identifies the correspondent. He identifies to whom the letter is sent and he identifies the letter writer. I greatly suspect that what the hon. gentleman is now doing, and he is doing it with knowledge, is that he is reading a letter which he knows to be an absolute forgery.

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame.

Mr. Churchill: This is a most unusual interference by the minister of external affairs and the accusation which he has made against me is something which will have to be considered very seriously by parliament. He has accused me now in a way which he will regret in the future. I will continue, Mr. Speaker, and I will identify, as I say—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On the point of order, Mr. Speaker; the hon. gentleman will observe the rules of the house and give us the name of the person to whom the letter is sent and who wrote it. I well suspect that he will be reading a letter which is a forgery.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order; I believe the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) would want to identify the letter which he is reading now.

Mr. Churchill: I am surprised at the intervention of the minister for external affairs. I said to the house that I would identify it as I always do every document that I present. I was on the point of identifying this document when he interrupted me quite unfairly with an accusation which he is going to find very difficult to substantiate.

The letter opens with the salutation, "Dear Mr. Pearson" and closes, "Sincerely yours, W. W. Butterworth". It is addressed on the lower left-hand corner of the letter to the Honourable L. B. Pearson, 541 Acacia avenue, Rockcliffe Park. In the top left-hand corner it bears the crest of the United States and on the top right-hand corner embossed are the words, "Embassy of the United States of America".

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, is the hon. gentleman not aware that a newspaper in his own city, and I am not now referring to the Winnipeg Free Press, thought this letter was of such a character, of doubtful authenticity bordering on forgery, that they would not stoop to do what the hon. gentleman has done in this house this afternoon.

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame.

Mr. Churchill: The minister of external affairs is arrogating to himself authority which he does not possess. He is making accusations here which are derogatory to the position of a minister of the crown and an insult to the members of the House of Commons. I stand here, sir, in the right of the free speech which is the heritage we have had in this parliament for generations, and for centuries, and I am entitled to draw the attention of the house to documents that I have received, such as this; and the Secretary of State for External Affairs has no right, no authority and no justification for any of the statements he has made.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We shall see.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre would permit me to ask him one question. Would the hon. gentleman say where he got that letter and from whom, and what effort he has made to find out whether or not it was ever written by the purported author?

An hon. Member: No answer.

Mr. Pickersgill: Shame.

Mr. Hellyer: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, is it not customary when a document is referred to and noted in the record that the person so doing so tables that document?

Mr. Baldwin: No, only if it is a public document.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I understand it was not a public document, and there is no obligation on the hon. member to table it.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I do raise a point of order. I think Your Honour, on consulting the rules, will find that it is not a rule of the house that a private member must table a document, and that only members of the government can table documents, and then only official documents; but every hon. member of the house who quotes a document has to vouch for the authenticity of the document he quotes. That is a rule of the house and I would ask Your Honour to enforce that rule with respect to the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill).

He has quoted what purports to be a letter written by the United States ambassador here in Ottawa, to the present Prime Minister. Under the rules he has to take the responsibility, and the full responsibility for the authenticity of that document which my hon. friend, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, says he believes to be a forgery and which he believes the hon. gentleman knew to be a forgery when he quoted it. I must say, sir, I share that belief.

Mr. Churchill: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have already drawn Your Honour's attention to statements made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, now repeated by the Secretary of State. The Secretary of State for External Affairs just recently made a statement which I will ask Your Honour to insist be withdrawn.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: What I understand the minister to have said is simply that he believed the document is a forgery. I did not understand him to say he believed that the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre was under that impression, or knew it was a forgery.

Mr. Churchill: Yes, that is what he said.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is not what I gathered, and I am sure that is not the implication of the words spoken by the minister.

Mr. Woolliams: On a point of order, as I understand the minister—

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I believe the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam got up on a point of order first.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, I want to raise two matters. The first is that the rules of the house do not require an hon. member to vouch for the authenticity, but to accept responsibility. There is a slight difference. Second, I certainly contend that for an hon. member to say of another hon. member that a document he has produced is a forgery, and that the hon. member reading it knows it to be a forgery is surely an imputation contrary to the rules of the house and should be withdrawn.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Deputy Speaker, with the greatest respect to you my understanding was that the Secretary of State for External Affairs said that the hon. member speaking knew it to be a forgery. There is the privilege and there is the reason why that statement by both ministers should be withdrawn.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I raised a point of order, and my point of order I think was quite properly corrected by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas). I said that the hon. member quoting the document was expected to vouch for its authenticity, but I am sure the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam is quite correct in saying he must take responsibility for it. To me the two things are the same. To me no hon. member, no gentleman, would quote from a document that he did not believe and have every reason to believe was authentic, so that while I was paraphrasing the rule I do not think I was changing its spirit in any way.

The hon. gentleman presumably takes the responsibility for the authenticity of this letter which I, and my hon. friend the Secretary of State for External Affairs, have said we believe to be forgery, and which we said we believed the hon. gentleman knew was a forgery. Now, if the hon. gentleman made so little effort to find out whether or not a document that he says was written by the ambassador of the United States to the present Prime Minister was authentic, if he was so careless that he did not take the trouble to find out—which he could easily have done by asking either of the parties—if he brought that document in without making any effort to find out whether it was authentic, then if that is the way he behaves, if that is his idea of responsibility all I can say is that that is not my idea of the way an hon. member of this house should behave.

It seems to me that before any extraneous question, such as was raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) is settled, Your Honour should first settle the point of order I raised; that is to say we should be assured by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre that he takes the responsibility for that document. If the hon. gentleman is willing to do that then I am quite prepared to withdraw any words I may have said that may have been offensive to the hon. member.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, there is a question before you that affects the privileges of the house. The Secretary of State for External Affairs, repeated in turn by the Secretary of State, has made an imputation that must be withdrawn under the rules of the house. There is no question about that, and no smokescreen can get over that. The statement made by each of these hon. ministers was that the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) knew this document to be a forgery. That, sir, must be withdrawn or the day of debate between gentlemen, under the rules of the house, will indeed have passed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my opinion that if this was actually what was said by both hon. ministers, that the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre in reading this letter knew it was a forgery, then these are the words which should be withdrawn or explained by the ministers.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I must ask you to excuse me. I was talking to another hon. member and I did not hear what you said.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: What I said was simply this, that if what was said by the hon. ministers was that the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre knew that the letter he quoted from was a forgery, these are words that should be withdrawn.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, with great respect I would suggest that the rule encompasses an act on the part of the hon. gentleman which he has not yet taken. If the hon. member says that what I have said does not represent the situation, then I have no other alternative under the rules than to accept that; but the hon. gentleman has not yet denied what I did say, and if he denies it and says it is not the case, then under the rules I have no alternative but to withdraw.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State has just said we should settle one question first and not bring in extraneous matters, but with all due respect that is what the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Secretary of State are trying to do. The Secretary of State for External Affairs said (a) this letter was a forgery, or words to that effect, and (b), that my colleague the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) knew it was a forgery when he was quoting it. That is a direct imputation against the integrity and honour of my hon. friend. It is absolutely contrary to the rules and, as you have already ruled, it should be withdrawn unconditionally, and other extraneous matters can be raised later.

Mr. Pickersgill: Your Honour, I understand—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Pickersgill: —that you did not make any such unequivocal ruling at all.

Some hon. Members: Yes, he did.

Mr. Pickersgill: What Your Honour said was that the minister, if he did say what he was alleged to have said, should either withdraw it or explain it. My hon. friend the Secretary of State for External Affairs has pointed out, quite correctly, that the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre has not denied that he knew this was a forgery. If the hon. gentleman denies that, then, as my hon. friend has said, he would of course have no choice but to accept the hon. member's word, and I am sure he would do it without delay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I do not believe the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre has to deny anything. The statement has been made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I think that if those were actually the words spoken, and the intent of the minister was that when the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre made that statement and read those words he knew they were a forgery, those words should be withdrawn.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I say first of all, Mr. Speaker, that this is the first time I have seen you in the chair and I must congratulate you and say that we all admire the way you are handling a difficult situation. If that is your ruling, of course I accept it and I act upon it at once.

An hon. Member: Obey it.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. May I suggest that the minister has had the courtesy to withdraw his words.

Some hon. Members: He has not.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my understanding that he has withdrawn his words. He has said that if this is my ruling, he abides by my ruling. It is the ruling of the Chair. The words have been withdrawn, and I would urge hon. members to consider the matter closed.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, the matter to which reference has been made—and I am sorry I was not in the house when the reference was made—is a letter, I take it, that was supposed to have been sent to me by the United States ambassador. When this letter was brought to my attention, or the report of it, during the election campaign I let it be known then that I had received no such letter, and the United States ambassador let it be known that he had sent me no such letter. My hon. friend opposite must have known that, and therefore the letter was a forgery; of course it was a forgery.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

(Translation):

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The letter deals with an important matter, and I should like to ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) whether he has made an investigation, since he has become the head of the government, to determine who has thus been using his name and that of the American ambassador to write such a letter.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The matter is closed.

A point of order was made and the minister concerned gave an explanation. Therefore, I consider that the matter is closed; I now recognize the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac (Mr. Latulippe).

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): May I first of all congratulate the Speaker on his nomination to the high position to which he was appointed and also the Deputy Speaker and the deputy chairman of the committees. I should also like to congratulate the mover (Miss Jewett) and the seconder (Mr. Choquette) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne.

It is with pride that I thank my electors of Compton-Frontenac for the confidence they have placed in me in renewing my mandate for a second time.

I can assure them that I will continue to put my humble knowledge at their service in order to fully discharge my duties as a member of parliament, which are not to be confined to patronage but should also involve all the needs and problems of my constituents in order to help those who are in need.

It is with anxiety that I listened to the speech read by the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General.

Fine words and many flowers or rhetoric can be found in it, but I note that it is always the same kind of speech we have since confederation—a lot of meaningless words and few practical suggestions for the uplift of the unbalanced economy facing the Canadian people and against which they have been struggling all across Canada.

I had expected to see the Liberals, for once in history, tackle the problems of the Canadian economy head on and apply beneficial and true solutions, appropriate and vital cures to the glaring economic unrest as, for instance the host of the outcasts of fortune, the homeless, the numerous unfortunate victims of the oppression of the many by the few.

The Liberals did delude those poor people and tossed them in a blanket by presenting themselves as completely new men during the last election campaign of last April 8, and pretending they had a rejuvenated party with a new spirit, strengthened by new ideas, a party with new policies, and contending that under its leadership the Canadian people would have a brand new economy and unprecedented stability.

I find that the speech from the throne is meaningless and, as I said earlier, it is almost identical to all those made since confederation, except that this time there is something new in the field of nuclear weapons. The Liberals are in orbit. They are thinking about the moon. They are getting away from earth and from worldly concerns. They know nothing about the problems of needy families, they no longer think of the unemployed. They want us to swallow the matter of nuclear weapons, they want peace, but they prepare for war.

In the Friday, November 16, 1962 issue of the Montreal daily Le Devoir, Hugh MacLennan stated the following:

> In universities throughout the world and, I believe, even in universities behind the iron curtain, everyone agrees that an international policy based on nuclear fear must normally lead to an inconceivable disaster.

What do we of our generation want, whether we be old or young, men or women? War or peace? Life or death? If we want to live, we undoubtedly want peace.

Now, the question is, what sort of peace do we want? A confused peace, in which we shall rot away miserably, facing a hopeless future for our young people, in homes too poor to have children and to bring them up decently.

That is the sort of peace which this unsettled government offers us, whose administration deprives the poor in order to pay war debts, unemployment debts to "money makers", expenses for guns, aircraft and nuclear arms.

No, that is not the kind of peace we want, what we want is an orderly, settled peace. Peace with all the other countries, but, first and foremost, peace among ourselves, in our own country, peace between capital and labour, between management and labour, between unemployment and technical advance, between this country's wealth and the living standard of our people. That is the peace we want. It is obvious that we know what we aim at: As much money as there are products, a constant balance between our buying power and the goods offered for consumption.

Let us have a showdown: People are dissatisfied with the present government. In this our Canada, as well as throughout the world, there is general discontent and grumbling, discontent due to constant fear, chronic insecurity, and groundless destitution. One crisis breeds another, so that, on the one hand, great quantities of essential assets and efforts are lost, while on the other hand, half the people in the world suffer from the pangs of hunger. Here, Canadians are fighting unemployment crowded and crammed in slums.

Farming is in a state of depression. Gerard Filion, the columnist of Le Devoir, wrote on November 7 last, and I quote:

> The farmers are up in arms and it is serious. Political parties ought to have the problem of agricultural economy thoroughly examined once more by experts, so as to offer something else than panaceas. It is serious, because the agricultural class is entitled to a decent living.

A fact remains which nobody can deny: it is that the present economic system praised so much by the two old line parties, works badly, leads to credit restrictions, unemployment, misery and to the inconsistencies of privation amidst plenty.

It is precisely because economists of the two old line parties did not want to see the facts that they proclaimed for a long time that the Social Credit theory was a utopia. But is the present system that our economists persist in defending so consistent with reality? Has it proved so great a success? Does it bring the necessary solutions? Will they be the last and only ones to defend it?

What is so utopian in Social Credit? Is it utopia to turn our country's wealth to the benefit of our families, to put within the reach of everyone that which everyone contributes to produce?

People do not eat according to the food produced in the country; people do not dress according to the clothes manufactured in the country; people do not stay in houses according to the lumber and building materials of the country. The basic criterion remains the sum of money the system allows us.

Popes have denounced such a state of affairs, but it goes on. Every human being is entitled to the necessaries of life. Money must be geared to production, not production to money. Systems are made for men, not men for systems. Money must not limit human freedom and self-achievement. Here is an extract from the financial column of La Patrie signed by Marcel Ouimet on November 21, 1962, and I quote:

> Any economic system is subject to continuous change, and capitalism is no exception to the rule. At the present time, the contribution made by the enterprise economy will therefore be appreciated to the extent it will succeed in enlisting every one's support, said Mr. Kierans, and in adapting itself to people's needs and in presenting itself to the still uncommitted countries as an acceptable system of social organization which can best combine material progress and complete respect for human values.

Today's economic system is based on money, and so it starts at the wrong end. Finance controls and governs production, production governs consumption, man must get along with what he is offered and what he is allowed to get. Why must our province of Quebec account alone for almost half the unemployed in Canada, or more exactly 36 per cent of them? Is our well known patience to be pushed to the limit?

In fact, a booklet entitled "Unemployment in Canada" and published by the dominion bureau of statistics under catalogue no. 71-503F, shows that between 1951 and 1955, years during which we lived under a Liberal administration, the unemployment figures by region give Quebec 36 per cent of all the unemployed in Canada. The same situation prevails during the Conservative administration between 1956 and 1960.

Our work force being only 27 per cent, a sharp difference of 35 to 40 per cent between the per capita income in Quebec and Ontario is the lot of the population in the province of Quebec.

Would not that be reason enough to provoke those poor people, forced to live in slums because they have no purchasing power, because they cannot get the money that is so cheap to produce, because, try as they may, they cannot sell the strength and production of their arms?

And injustice does not strike only the unemployed or the small wage earners in our cities. Because a great number of people lack enough purchasing power, the farmers are forced to sell their products below cost, even if they evaluate their work at only 50 cents per day.

Personally, I have come to the conclusion that there is a fifth column at work to drive the Canadians away from the system that prevails in Canada, to kill all ideals in their hearts and thus to hurt our economy.

You can not stand up in defence of a given regime if you do not really care for it. I feel it is high time for the authorities to pay some attention to this fifth column of ours.

Bankers reject the idea of a well-balanced economy and try to postpone its advent. They do not mind seeing people with empty pockets, and would much rather control mortgages and increase our national debt than help the state give the people wholesome and proper food and lodgings, capable of maintaining a decent army of workers and of warriors.

It is generally recognized that the family is the main cell of the national body. If we do not have a truly patriotic legislation, taking into account the elementary needs of large families, we shall see on the home front, long before enemy bombs might start falling—our families dispersed, our birth rate disrupted, our population drained of its lifeblood—and all this for what reason? In deference to figures and regulations which place money above human capital.

Hitler was blamed because of his disregard for human life. Does our tight money system have regard for human life? Has not the time come to redress and rectify a disorder which weakens our cause?

In order to support my argument, I shall quote a paragraph printed black on white on page 878 of the 1954 decennial review of the Bank Act.

> At this time the chartered banks have accumulated securities of every kind, representing a total of about ten billion dollars. As strange as this may seem, they have acquired all these assets from the people and the government of Canada for practically nothing. That has been possible because, first of all, the banks have stocked up securities without spending so much as a cent. They obtained everything by resorting to trickery. It is high time that they give back their ill-acquired securities or that they be made to pay for them.
>
> The banks are pretending that they have paid or lent ten times the amount they now hold or have collected; that they have issued money to acquire their holdings, or that they bought them with their customers' money. That is as false as can be: it is a despicable way of cheating people. This is what they really did: instead of using their own capital for constituting their holding, they simply credited their customers' accounts with the amounts owed. If those liabilities to their clients had been paid by the banks, there would have been no reason to complain. But, strange as it may seem, all was cancelled, rescinded or repudiated later on, so that the securities making up the holding remained in the hands of the banks without ever being paid for.

Why not start by paying allowances in proportion to the cost of living. I don't mean a fortune for everybody, but at least what the humane society would ask for the average pedigreed dog. It would be less expensive and would bring in more for the nation than the interest paid to the bankers.

In view of the great dangers that have been mentioned, would it not be proper to put all our forces into the service of the nation, even the banking force. The bankers might do much better that way, because, about a week after they have been made out, all cheques come back to them perfectly safe and in good order.

Let us hope that our leaders will soon open up their eyes and bring to reason the fifth columnists supplying credit a drop at a time and paralysing the traditional family organization, promoting higher taxes, to such a point John Doe is beginning to wonder who is the boss.

Just think: the citizens choose candidates who are already selected; the politicians deceive their electors, promote political prejudice, make speeches stuffed with distortions of the truth and half truth, strive to repay their fund subscribers and faithfully serve those who have the money. I could name several of them here in this house.

Think also of the system of political patronage used to hand out the right to live for the price of degradation, abuse and delation. Think of the civil power, which should govern from above, as a sovereign and supreme judge, in all fairness and only in the interest of the common good and of justice. It has fallen to the level of a slave and has become the manageable instrument of all passions and ambitions of private interest.

The inability shown by statesmen throughout the world to solve the problems facing them is the underlying cause of crisis and wars which have been suceeding each other for several decades.

Why should the province of Quebec alone have almost half the jobless in Canada, or more precisely 36 per cent of them? Do they want to aggravate the virtue of patience which characterizes us?

If the democratic nations had succeeded in distributing the products of industry to the people, they would never have had to face the terrible threat of totalitarian states.

We, in America, are at present going through a crisis, we have to spend billions of dollars, we have to abandon our traditional occupations, and to support the staggering burden of taxation and indebtedness simply because democracies did not have in the past enough social awareness to give the essentials of life to every element of the community.

They ignored the fact that if they neglected to operate the system equitably for all, they would bring about indirectly destruction of democratic capitalism.

The only thing for us to do is to take the necessary means which Social Crediters have been advocating for years and years: a national dividend to all members of the community, supplemented by compensated discounts.

If, after such evidence, people still want to close their eyes to reality, we repeat that the true enemies of democracy are within and the day will certainly come when public opinion will send them one by one to its merciless tribunal.

Error cannot always win over truth.

But there is in this world, no intelligent being who after having pondered the matter at any length who would not admit the truth of my repeated statements. That may have been why Henry Ford said:

> If the American public knew of the corruption of their money system, there would be a revolution tomorrow morning.

The basic evil is that the leaders of all our democracies refuse to admit the current reality or do not want to realize that humanity has reached a stage in its development where productivity is so enormous that the whole system of wage payment and other similar forms of remuneration or distribution have become entirely obsolete and must make way before a system based on an accurate assessment of the facts.

Well understood Social Credit is genuine enough not to be against anything in a negative manner; it is simply for the complete truth, in order to take its place in a well balanced community.

We are wondering what the old governments have done to build up a debt-free system, a monetary system based on existing production and on production potential. What have our two old governments done to guarantee to everybody, out of our gigantic production, the vital minimum required? What pieces of legislation have they enacted in order to protect large families? What legislation have they passed to protect farmers and settlers, apart from the system of debts that we have now?

Social Crediters have been shouting for 35 years now: since the store-houses are full, it is possible to put something on the tables; since the warehouses are bulging, we can also fill the houses; since merchandises are piling up in the stores, we can put some in the homes so that each and everyone receives the share which is his through progress and science transmitted from generation to generation.

(Text):

Mr. Arnold Webster (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I wish to be associated with the congratulations and expressions of appreciation that have been extended to all presiding officers of the house during this debate. Anyone who values our parliamentary institutions must recognize the necessity of orderly procedure based on self-discipline and respect for the authority of the Speaker. The alternative is anarchy.

Since the opening days of the twenty sixth parliament I have frequently thought of two former Vancouver members with long records of service in this house. One is Angus MacInnis who represented Vancouver East and later Vancouver-Kingsway continuously from 1930 until 1957, and the other is Howard Green who sat for Vancouver Quadra from 1935 until 1963. Although Mr. MacInnis is a Prince Edward Island socialist and Mr. Green a British Columbia Conservative, these gentlemen have much in common—humility, integrity, courage and dedication to the public good. I am sure that all members who knew them will join with me in wishing them good health and many happy years of retirement on the Pacific coast.

The speech from the throne reminds us of our association with the commonwealth, of the meeting of prime ministers last year and of the brief visit of our present Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) to the British Isles early this month.

There have been many meetings in London since the first conference in 1887. In the beginning they were called colonial conferences, then imperial conferences and later commonwealth conferences. It is significant too that in 1887 those who attended were not even members of parliament but government officials who met under the chairmanship of the British colonial secretary. Now the prime ministers of the autonomous states meet as equals.

From 1897 until 1911 Sir Wilfrid Laurier constantly opposed the Chamberlain policy of political federation with a central parliament in London, and from 1915 until 1919 Sir Robert Borden insisted that the time had passed when the British prime minister could speak for the whole empire, and successfully urged that each dominion could be bound only by its own ministers in the imperial war cabinet, at the Versailles peace conference and later at the league of nations. Canadians should remember with gratitude the leadership of Laurier and Borden at a critical time in our national life. They spoke out frankly on behalf of this young nation. What Sir Wilfrid referred to as a "galaxy of nations under the British crown" Sir Robert described as "autonomous nations of an imperial commonwealth". Had their vision been less clear and their courage less strong, the course of this country and of the commonwealth would have been very different.

The commonwealth has no parallel in history. Centralized empires there have been, colonies there have been which have become independent states, but there have been no other instances of colonies becoming free and then turning to co-operative association with one another and with the mother country. This political evolution has been the result, not of breaking sharply with the past nor of standing by and allowing matters to drift, but of developing and extending proven institutions to fit new circumstances.

Once again the British genius for government, for adaptation and compromise, is being tested as she considers a new relationship with her neighbours on the continent of Europe. The attitudes of men all over the world are changing. A few years ago who would have thought that western Europe would be bringing itself together in a dynamic economic and political association where old traditional rivalries and state sovereignties are being submerged in a new pattern of public administration that can only be described as revolutionary? Dissolution of a centuries old empire has been accepted, even accelerated by Britain herself. So, too, all over the world we have this greater conception of human brotherhood, of a common humanity which defies our old ideas of a static world and demands a new dimension in our thinking.

In Canada only men of little faith and narrow vision fear this historic development. This must be Britain's decision. It remains for the Canadian government to respond with good grace and with energy and resourcefulness in taking advantage of new trading opportunities wherever they may appear. I have no doubt that the commonwealth will continue to grow in strength as a unique instrument for peace and progress throughout the world. To this end the Canadian government should play a leading role in improving the means of communication between the component parts of the commonwealth and in promoting co-operative measures at the world trade conference to be sponsored by the United Nations in 1964. I was pleased to read the following comment of Lord Home, British foreign minister, in the Ottawa Citizen last week:

> It is an excellent thing to see Canada playing an active part in the political councils and economic activities of the commonwealth as she approaches her centenary.

The speech from the throne implies quite correctly that the most vital question before mankind today is to learn how to live together without plotting to destroy one another, in brief, to avoid nuclear war. To this end Canadians should associate themselves with others to create a world climate that is conducive to peace everywhere. Scientists and artists do it in their areas of interest and activity, as demonstrated at the UNESCO festival in Ottawa last week. Why not politicians? We must be humble enough to adjust our attitudes to other people who may have coloured skins, speak strange tongues and worship foreign gods. We must learn to understand and trust people, all kinds of people, if we wish to survive the twentieth century.

If an individual claimed for himself the self-righteous moral values that public men and writers attribute to our nation, he would be considered beneath contempt. But to talk of the foreign policies and attitudes of our own country in anything less than superlatives which pay solemn tribute to our nobility and high moral purpose is to be unpatriotic. In very truth, according to our present standards humility and patriotism are incompatible.

When Oliver Wendell Holmes was over 80 years of age he once declared that he had spent the first 70 years of his life learning that he was not God.

In the United Nations assembly delegates speak with respect of one another in discussing the most controversial subjects. But in national parliaments like our own House of Commons we are inclined to refer in derogatory terms to countries with whom we are not aligned in the cold war. We should stop thinking in absolute terms of black and white, good and evil, slave and free.

I wish to present four witnesses who remind us that we have a responsibility to examine our own minds in relation to other people. Sydney Harris in a column last week in an Ottawa paper said this:

> None of us should listen to a man giving a lecture or preaching a sermon on his philosophy of life until we know how he treats his wife, his children, his neighbours, his subordinates and his enemies.

Raymond B. Fosdick, in a recent article in the New York Times commenting on a statement of Admiral Radford's that "we cannot trust the Russians", said this:

> It may be true, but that is also what the Russians profess to think of us. That is what the Athenians under Pericles said about the Spartans. It is what the Romans said about the Carthagenians. It is what both Catholics and Protestants said about each other in the 16th century as they began a hundred years of reciprocal slaughter. It is what many modern nations have said about one another in two recent world wars. It is what the north and south charged a century ago here in the United States as they plunged into a fratricidal mania from which even today we have not fully recovered.

My third witness is Prime Minister Harold Macmillan who, on November 6, 1962, said in the British House of Commons, and I quote:

We must not be cynical and believe nothing but ill of certain classes of our fellow men—much as we may dislike the doctrines they follow. One cannot live in a world which is just nothing but suspicion and fear or life becomes intolerable.

My next witness is U Thant, secretary general of the United Nations. In closing his acceptance speech to the assembly on November 30, 1962, he spoke very earnestly as follows:

These problems can be solved only by good will and mutual understanding and by a spirit of give and take.

When the future of mankind itself is at stake no country or interest group can afford to take a rigid stand or claim that its position is the only right one and that others must take it or leave it. No difficult problem can be solved to the complete satisfaction of all sides. We live in an imperfect world and have to accept imperfect solutions which become more acceptable as we learn to live with them and as time passes by.

The speech from the throne reminds us that Canadian unity is being threatened at the very time we are preparing to celebrate 100 years of confederation, and at the very time when we need to be strong to play our full part as a young and vigorous democracy in world affairs. In Quebec, the advocates of withdrawal from confederation repudiate 200 years of nation-building, including the glorious periods of Papineau and Mackenzie, Laurier and Borden and more recently King and St. Laurent.

Let us not forget, too, that every province has been strengthened and enriched by thousands of industrious and gifted French Canadian families who have made their homes in all sections of this country from the maritimes to British Columbia. Their contributions to Canada and their interests must be considered in any future plans designed to strengthen confederation. Ignorance on both sides is our greatest danger, a continual source of misunderstanding and irritation between English speaking and French speaking Canadians. In spite of modern means of communication and travel, Canadians in the west and Canadians in the east remain strangers in many ways. A reporter in the Globe and Mail a few days ago advised us to plan a do-it-yourself birthday party for 1967. This is an excellent suggestion. However, I would urge that we expand the idea and call it a get-acquainted party.

To this end, I recommend that we stop thinking of Canada as a melting pot. This conception of nation building is outdated, unrealistic, unimaginative and destructive of important values. We should seek unity through variety not similarity; unity through mutual appreciation, not through dull conformity; unity through justice, not through discrimination. At all costs, let us avoid becoming a nation of sheep. Mahatma Gandhi once said, "I like to think of the winds of time blowing the cultures of all lands around my doorstep".

We must build greater respect and understanding for one another in the fields of education, culture and sports, as well as commerce and industry. Exchange of language teachers at the secondary school level and of university students should be encouraged between Quebec and the western provinces. Furthermore, there should be an immediate speeding up of plans to teach the French language to more and more elementary school classes across the nation. In this connection, I recommend that all hon. members read the challenging article by Pierre Berton in the latest issue of Maclean's magazine.

A democratic society calls for a maximum development of every individual as a worker and as a citizen. No Canadian, regardless of the poverty or isolation of his home, should be neglected. In order to provide instruction and training for all who can benefit from it, governments must give high priority to school and university budgets. The local taxpayers cannot be expected to carry the major burden. The federal government should support higher education and research on a new and imaginative scale as recommended in scores of recent reports on this subject. I hope that the absence of any reference to this subject in the speech from the throne does not mean that this government contemplates a backward step in this department.

Canada will become a second-rate nation if we do not recognize education as a major social enterprise of national importance. If we do less we will make a farce of the boast that we believe in equality of opportunity for Canadian youth.

A study of biculturalism is to be commended. However, much can be done now by public spirited leaders in every community. Let us encourage the wider use of our present means of communication and travel. Let us remind our fellow Canadians that we own a Canadian broadcasting system with both radio and television in both English and French; trans-Canada railway and telegraph service; an air line, and a trans-Canada highway which permits one to motor at top speed across this nation. Let us encourage more people to use their own facilities to move east and west instead of north and south. It would be good for all of us.

Thousands of our friends go south every summer from force of habit. The same situation prevails in British Columbia, Ontario, Quebec and Nova Scotia. Let us change the direction of our holiday migrants for the good of Canada. "Let's get acquainted" should be a major objective of the centennial committee.

However, if we are to have a strong, united Canada, this parliament should be content with nothing less than full employment long before 1967. Nothing contributes more to frustration and bitterness or loss of confidence in one's country and its social system than long periods of unemployment. The relatively poor economic conditions in Quebec provide a major source of discontent among the working people and farmers in that province. To a lesser degree, this is true in all areas across the dominion.

Bold measures must be taken to expand production and distribute goods to both domestic and foreign markets on an enlarged scale. This is the challenge to those who have the responsibility for introducing and administering the various planning bills foreshadowed in the speech from the throne. Unemployment is the most outstanding weakness in our Canadian economy today. Both the public and private sectors must co-operate with the government, management and labour to develop means of working in concert towards the objective of full employment.

The Vancouver Sun, a staunch Liberal paper, in commenting on unemployment demonstrations in England said this in an editorial, and I quote:

> Here in Canada few if any delegations plague our M.P.'s in the corridors of the house. Here, even in the midst of a federal election campaign, unemployment is little stressed as a major national issue.
>
> The Englishman becomes agitated, indignant and mildly violent when less than 5 per cent of the national labour force is unemployed. Canadians, with 8 per cent of the labour force idle, show no similar trepidation.
>
> Does this show that we are qualified to instruct the emotional Englishman in respectable restraint and political propriety? Or are we just hardened to unemployment?

Thirty years ago this July, in London, I heard a Scottish miner by the name of David Kirkwood cry out from his seat in the House of Commons, "Mr. Speaker, the work is all done". This is an exaggeration, of course. However, his remark contained an important truth which we are just beginning to appreciate in this age of automation as revealed, for instance, in many of the recommendations of the Glassco commission.

Is it true that we have become hardened to unemployment? Last Monday, after speaking for almost two hours, the leader of the official opposition made an offhand reference to unemployment. He said that one of his lieutenants would no doubt deal with the matter later in the debate. Apparently the subject was of no great importance. It would be interesting to know if the present Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) is still of the opinion that 2 per cent or 3 per cent unemployment must be expected in this country as a matter of course. In a citizen's forum debate with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) last winter the minister, then plain Mr. Sharp, said:

> I should think this is about the sort of minimum level of unemployment that is compatible with the free working of the system.

In answer to this statement Mr. Knowles remarked:

> I think Mr. Sharp let the Liberal cat right out of the bag. He said the level of unemployment should be as low as is possible being compatible with the system. There is the Liberal approach—keep the system that we've got. That is more of a god than getting rid of unemployment. We say if necessary change the system to get rid of unemployment completely.

If medical scientists had accepted diphtheria, tuberculosis, small pox or diabetes as incapable of treatment, would we ever have found the means of preserving the health of countless thousands of people in the past 50 years?

If the current illness in our economy requires new procedures, new controls—"human direction" to quote Lewis Mumford—they should be undertaken in the interests of a strong, healthy, happy Canada. A few weeks ago the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing) responded in a matter of hours when flood conditions in the Northwest Territories endangered the lives of our fellow citizens. We applaud him quite properly for his initiative, energy and compassion, but why do we not display the same kind of concern for the families of the half million men and women who are without work across the country? Intelligent people know that this depressed condition will be ignored at our peril.

If Canada is to be united and strong as it approaches its centennial, the government must take bold and decisive action to place legislation before us in this session that will prove effective in meeting this human tragedy.

In closing, I wish to quote a statement by the late Archbishop of Canterbury, Dr. William Temple:

> If a bridge is to be built, the church may remind the engineer that it is his obligation to provide a really safe bridge but it is not entitled to tell him whether, in fact, his design meets this requirement. Similarly, when the church is asked to provide the Christian remedy for unemployment it must answer, 'No, I cannot tell you what is the remedy, but I can tell you that a society in which unemployment is a chronic feature is a diseased society and if you are not going to do all you can to find and administer a remedy you are guilty before God.'

I thank the house for its attention.

Mr. Joseph Macaluso (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, may I also, in the time honoured tradition of the house, congratulate you on your appointment to the high position which you hold, and may I congratulate the Deputy Speaker on his appointment. I would also like to take this opportunity of following my colleagues on both sides of the house in congratulating both the mover and the seconder of the address in reply to the speech from throne, the hon. member for Northumberland (Miss Jewett) and the hon. member for Lotbiniere (Mr. Choquette). May I say too that I am proud to be a member of the party which is now in government, and especially proud to be led by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson).

I am most happy and proud to have been elected by the people in my riding of Hamilton West as their representative in this house. My predecessors have represented the riding with distinction, and I pray and trust I shall follow in their footsteps. Hamilton West is composed of many diverse peoples of diverse occupations—the labourer, steelworker, small businessman, executive, industrialist and financier. Within its electoral boundaries are to be found industry, McMaster University with its nuclear reactor, the business, commercial and financial centre of the city of Hamilton, the new city hall of which all Hamiltonians are justifiably proud, and the new county court house of the county of Wentworth, which is the finest court house not only in the province of Ontario but in all of Canada at the present time. Also within its electoral boundaries is the port of Hamilton, one of the most important ports on the great lakes and St. Lawrence waterways system, and it also contains some very fine residential areas, both old and new.

In the speech from the throne there are proposals which, when translated into legislation and approved by the house, which I fully expect they will be, will be of great benefit to the people of my riding and to all other Canadians. I will not touch upon all of the proposals, as previous speakers have adequately done so. Instead I shall restrict my comments to a few, those which are of the utmost importance to my riding and the people of Hamilton generally.

The city of Hamilton is justifiably known as the "ambitious city." It is the industrial and steel centre of Canada. Industry is the lifeblood of this country, and the steel industry is the lifeblood of the people in Hamilton, not only of the steelworker but of those in all fields of enterprise within the city. Therefore the immediate establishment of a department of industry to foster industrial expansion and provide the many new jobs that are so badly needed, in order to check the large scale unemployment of recent years, will be anxiously looked forward to by the people in my riding.

As an alderman in the Hamilton city council for ward 2, a ward wholly situated within the electoral boundaries of Hamilton West, and which seat I will soon resign, I can say that the intention of the government to establish a municipal development and loan fund is a great step forward in the long awaited additional assistance from the federal government to the over burdened budgets of our municipalities, in order that capital projects can be commenced and completed, not only to provide and improve services but also to provide further means of employment.

My constituents in Hamilton West will be especially and particularly interested in the proposed amendments to the National Housing Act. Hamilton, as I have said, is known as the ambitious city, but it is also a gracious city. Its hand is extended in friendship to all who come there for a visit, or to make the city their home. Hamilton West has much to offer—good business opportunities, complete shopping facilities, pleasant residential areas and an excellent school system from kindergarten to postgraduate university level. However, parts of our city are getting old; some are well over 100 years old. Many of the original buildings still remain, and the street pattern has been virtually unchanged since it was first laid down.

Urban renewal and development is a reality in our city. Already there has been acquired and cleared in the Van Wagner-Crescent Beach area some 72 acres of waterfront property on lake Ontario, which consisted of blighted and low density residential homes. This area has been cleared and is presently being developed as a public park and recreational area. Further, a plan of urban renewal and redevelopment has been prepared by the city of Hamilton for the northeasterly section of my riding, encompassing an area of some six blocks, which plan has been approved by the city council and is awaiting the approval of the Ontario municipal board.

Much has been said, a great deal has been written, and not too much has been done about urban renewal in Canada. Urban renewal is a city-wide program in which all available federal, provincial, municipal and private resources should be applied to eliminate blight, slums, and to prevent their formation. Urban renewal has four main purposes so far in this country—clearance, redevelopment, rehabilitation and conservation.

Public acceptance of urban renewal as a concept has advanced further in the United States than in Canada, and particularly so, as it relates to assistance from the federal government. The present urban renewal program in Canada has been too narrow to cope effectively with the basic problems facing our cities. If our cities are to recapture their economic health they must offer better opportunities to commercial, industrial and residential developments and strengthen the cultural and recreational facilities of their cores.

The extent to which a federal government should be a direct participant in the financing of urban renewal is a matter which leaves room for a difference of opinion. In the United States the federal government enters into a direct contract with the municipality concerned. Under part 5 of the National Housing Act of Canada arrangements may now be made with a province or with a municipality with the approval of the province to conduct studies of the condition of housing and urban areas. Federal contributions may be up to 75 per cent of the cost of such studies. There is further provision for clearance grants in the amount of one half of the difference between the cost of clearance and the economic value of the land when cleared. The remaining 50 per cent of subsidy is financed by the province and/or the municipality as determined by the province. The important thing to note here is that clearance grants have only been made available for the purpose of clearing land which is substantially residential and which is to be redeveloped substantially in a residential form. At one time in the United States the same was true, but there has been progressive widening of use of their clearance legislation to a point that urban renewal funds may now be used for non-residential renewal projects deemed necessary for sound community development.

It is in this aspect, Mr. Speaker, that we should turn our attention to the proposed amendments to the National Housing Act, that is, in the area of providing funds for non-residential renewal projects, which is so badly lacking at the present time in our legislation; in other words, for the renewal and redevelopment of the commercial core of our cities. All in all, quite a job is being done in Hamilton, and particularly in Hamilton West, where new high-rise apartments are being erected almost monthly. This is changing the character of the southern section of my riding from clearly a residential to a more commercial area. However, the funds provided for these projects are coming mainly from private investors. The targets of those interested in urban renewal in Hamilton are considerably higher than even the accomplishments to date.

Renewal and redevelopment of the central core of Hamilton, which is situated wholly within my riding, would have three parts, I suggest—commercial, public building and residential accommodation. With respect to commercial redevelopment and public buildings, Mr. Speaker, there is no lack in Hamilton West of vacant land in the areas suitable for those developments. All along our downtown streets we find vacant land which has been created by the demolition of obsolete buildings, demolished because these structures created rentals insufficient to pay the taxes on them and the expense of operating them. Vacant land for parking gives a better net return. Our taxation system has been an important clearance tool in the commercial but not the residential field. The city of Hamilton is concerned, as are many other municipalities, about its downtown core because it feels that development must take place in that location but finds that it does not have funds to carry on the project itself. Municipal government finds itself in the position of being obliged to finance and provide public services to a scattered population in the maximum use areas and simultaneously trying to extend public service to a scattered population in the farflung new fringe areas. Inadequate city living started the rush to the city limits and beyond to the urban fringe and the suburbs.

City living can be made as desirable and satisfying as life in the suburbs. To attain this goal, however, requires more than cleaning of backyards and of painting of houses or any aspect of the "clean up, paint up, fix up" campaigns. The problem is complex and so is also the solution. Urban renewal is a continuing process and in the final analysis it will be up to the federal government to see to it that a workable program is adopted and put into practice in the field of commercial redevelopment.

I would like to quote a few excerpts from the Hamilton Spectator of Saturday, May 25, 1963, which to a certain degree shows the extent of the problem in Hamilton and Hamilton West in the redevelopment of commercial areas. I quote from an editorial by Tom F. Mills:

> Before the inferiority complex becomes too complex, it should be said that good planning has gone into the north-end urban renewal area, and much work done on it by city planners. But people who come here from out of town know what they see and feel. Just about a year ago, William Zeckendorf, Jr., president of Webb and Knapp, Inc., leading redevelopers, made a controversial assessment: "Hamilton is in need of complete revitalization of its downtown core." Without immediate action, he said, there could be complete deterioration, and he urged efforts to have Hamilton industries build office buildings downtown.

This to date has not been very successful, Mr. Speaker. He goes on:

—we think perhaps the most significant comment about Hamilton was made here only in March by Mr. John James, planning chief for Great Britain's ministry of housing and local development.

Mr. James said, according to this article:

There is a loose fabric in Hamilton which is very odd... I would like to see more heartbeat in the downtown area.

Mr. Mills then goes on to say:

A favourable sign is renewed talk of an auditorium and of other proposals stirring in the downtown sector; there are indications that the graph of civic spirit is rising. And of course there is more to town planning than the creation of zoning areas and the drawing of land use maps, basic as these are in a properly planned city. But we must also have the stimulus of optimistic architects' sketches of pedestrian malls, public parks and buildings downtown.

The "loose fabric" sensed by Mr. James must be drawn tight; the heartbeat made stronger so Hamilton can restore itself to a proud position among the great and progressive cities of Canada.

I do not wish to show by these comments, Mr. Speaker, that Hamilton is not progressive and is not advanced but I merely put this forward to show that the problem which exists in Hamilton also exists at this time in many of our municipalities and cities, for example, the metropolitan area of Toronto. In order to revitalize our downtown cores the federal government must take steps in moving forward with amendments to the National Housing Act to extend grants for urban renewal, not only for urban renewal in residential areas but also urban renewal in the commercial field. Urban renewal and development has another aspect in that it is more calculated to stimulate our economic recovery, provide more jobs and create further employment.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Macaluso: Mr. Speaker, at six o'clock recess I had just completed discussing the proposed amendments to the National Housing Act which were set out in the speech from the throne, and I had completed stating my view that the government must take into consideration amendments to the National Housing Act dealing with grants for urban renewal and extend them from the clearance field of residential areas and development of residential areas to grants for commercial redevelopment in the downtown core of our municipalities.

Mr. Speaker, I should like at this time to refer to the following words which appear in the speech from the throne:

Immigration policy will be reviewed.

In an earlier section the speech says:

The character and strength of our nation are drawn from the diverse cultures of people who came from the many lands to create the Canada that is ours today.

I should like at this time to quote from an editorial in the Globe and Mail of May 9, 1963, where it states:

Immigration was up by 1,648 during the first three months of 1963 over the first three months of 1962; but Canada can take no credit for this microscopic gain. Most of the increase in the flow of new residents came from the United Kingdom, and the Britons were not so much coming to Canada as getting away from the rigours of the worst winter Britain has known this century.

A revision of the Immigration Act, Mr. Speaker, has been long overdue. The core of Canada's immigration policy is contained in section 31 of the immigration regulations. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), when prime minister, devoted much of his oratorical talents to the cause of civil rights for all, but he and his government procrastinated about amending the Immigration Act. This is not hard to understand, for immigration policy offers a test of a government's convictions. The Immigration Act of 1952 is and remains an anachronism. The former government brought about reform through changes in the regulations, but one might become suspicious of flexible and seemingly liberal regulations because the effect of these regulations depends upon interpretation and administration, and leads one to question whether they will be administered in a liberal manner, or will they be a mask for selection by race?

There is room in Canada for skilled workers; we all know this. However, prosperity in Europe is making it more difficult to find skilled immigrants and to encourage them to come to Canada. Again quoting from the same editorial it says:

Canada is a large, rich, empty country that needs immigrants as much as, if not more than, any country in the world. We need their skills to make new industries to make new jobs. We need their consumption to increase the size of our domestic market, reduce our per unit cost of production and make us more competitive at home and abroad. We need their presence to fill up the empty holes and make it possible for us to become a nation.

Beyond our own needs we have a responsibility to the human race in general. While more than half the world's people live in grossly overcrowded conditions, we cannot morally justify keeping them out of one of the last pieces of scantily populated real estate on the globe ...

In spite of our needs and in spite of our responsibilities, Canada has seldom sought immigrants. Most of our governments have taken the attitude that it was kind of us to let them in, a kindness we managed not to bestow too freely, especially among the non-white, and were reluctant to bestow at all if there happened to be any unemployment at home.

I suggest that this is, of course, quite natural in light of our economic life these days. As far as the unemployment situation at home is concerned, we must have a planned program of immigration. The editorial goes on to say:

It is a policy, or lack of it, that has kept us people-poor, and no nation can fully develop its other resources if it does not have sufficient of the human sort.

Canada today is a country of vast potential wealth and of resources almost unlimited. The immigration policy of Canada must therefore be conceived in broader terms. I do not intend to spend any more time on this particular aspect of our immigration policy, Mr. Speaker. I am sure that this government when reviewing the Immigration Act will see that amendments are required not only to the regulations but to the act itself.

(Translation):

Hon. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join with all those who spoke before me in congratulating the hon. member for Mount Royal (Mr. Macnaughton) who, because of his fairness and sense of justice, will perform his high duties with a great deal of tact and to the general satisfaction.

As for your own nomination to the office of Deputy Speaker of the house I am happy to tell you that you too have all the required qualifications to carry out satisfactorily the duties of your office. I know that you will see to it that every member is treated fairly in all circumstances.

I should also like to take this opportunity to congratulate the worthy member for Northumberland (Miss Jewett) and the hon. member for Lotbiniere (Mr. Choquette) on the manner in which they performed their task. Frankly, when one considers what little there is in the speech from the throne, it must be admitted that those two members, newly elected to this house, have accomplished a tremendous task in attempting to analyse its contents.

[Mr. Macaluso.]

I would also like to take this opportunity to congratulate the ministers and all those who were given a post or a promotion, whether as ministers or parliamentary secretaries, and to wish them health and success. I will co-operate with them as much as I can and I hope that their "tour of duty" in Her Majesty's service will be profitable to the Canadian nation.

Mr. Speaker, following the example set by my friend the hon. member for Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Sauve), I would like, before making the few remarks I want to make about the speech from the throne, to review some of the events that occurred during the last election campaign and even during the last two.

If it is true that, in my friend's riding of Îles-de-la-Madeleine, some strange things happened, he should not have dealt only with what took place in his own territory; he should have gone here and there in the province of Quebec and he would certainly have seen things to make one's hair stand on end.

Not only has there been in our part of the country, people who came along without having the required voting age, but much more surprising things were done by people who have always given themselves as symbols of electoral honesty.

That certainly gives us food for thought. As in other ridings, there has been in my riding of St. Hyacinthe-Bagot a lot of money which is said to have come from beyond the 45° parallel, a lot of money which was thrown into the Liberal election fund in order to help my opponent to win. But even if there was plenty of money, and plenty of liquor bought with that money, the fact remains that, for the fourth consecutive time, the voters of the riding of St. Hyacinthe-Bagot have elected me to come here and look after their interests. I should not want to miss this opportunity to thank them for the confidence they have put in me for the fourth time and to congratulate them for not having been deceived by the propaganda—that is indeed the proper word—the deceitful propaganda used against me.

I say to the hon. member for Îles-de-la-Madeleine that there is nothing they did not attempt to try and eliminate the member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot.

But, thanks to the sound judgment of the folks back home, I have returned here and expect to come back when once again I am given the opportunity to seek another mandate.

Mr. Speaker, I shall limit my comments on the last election campaign to just a few words, because I wish to go back a little and ask my colleagues to join me in going through once again the few weeks which preceded the election days of June 18, 1962, and April 8 of this year.

Mr. Speaker, you will recall that during the 1962 election campaign there was nothing left unsaid against us by our opponents, who even accused the Conservative party of leading the country to bankruptcy. Indeed, if we were to believe those who campaigned against us, the end was in sight and our children were even to find it very hard to get their three meals a day. So, I should like to put some figures on record to compare the situation in 1962 with that of 1956.

But before doing so, since I represent a mixed riding, partly rural and partly urban, where agriculture is much honoured because its farmers are among the most progressive and hard-working people in the province of Quebec, I wish to make a few remarks on the subject of agriculture. I can assure you that I shall not deal at length with the matter since my colleague from Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Vincent) has already given a brief but very lively picture of farming in our area, where he compared the present situation with that which prevailed under the former Conservative administration.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot but regret that the first measure taken by the present Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) has been detrimental to agriculture in our country. I shall use the very words spoken by the minister to say that the first measure that his colleagues in the cabinet agreed to was one which deprived the Canadian farmers of a yearly sum of $6 million.

In fact, under the Agricultural Stabilization Act, the Conservative government established a payment of 25 cents per hundredweight for powdered milk. Well, in order to help the farmers, the present Minister of Agriculture found nothing better than to recommend that this premium be abolished and, in one fell swoop, he deprived the farmers of an annual income of $6 million.

Mr. Speaker, if that is the re-adjustment that the farmers are to expect and were promised with such fanfare during the last election campaign, in short, if that is all the Liberal government can give agriculture, I am of the opinion that the farmers will long remember the coming to power of the Liberal administration headed by the member for Algoma East (Mr. Pearson).

It may be that we must see in such action the penalty to be meted out to the farmers for having shown, almost everywhere in the country, their attachment to the Conservative party, because in man's memory no other government has done so much for the farmers in the short period of six years, than the one led by the present Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker).

Mr. Speaker, when we assumed office, Canadian agriculture was going through a critical stage. Farmers could hardly sell their produce. This state of affairs was due to the fact that our predecessors had not realized or did not want to admit the necessity, once the world war ended and stability was restored in Europe, to adopt measures aimed at securing markets abroad. However, that has been the daily concern of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) who carried out with vigour and to the satisfaction of all farmers his role of minister of agriculture. In fact, the member for Qu'Appelle is well known in our area as being the greatest minister of agriculture Canada ever had.

Many times he stated that the farmers' income, especially that of the eastern farmer, was not adequate. He stated that priority should be given to eastern agriculture and that is what he did during his term of office as minister of agriculture.

In this connection, I could quote many articles published in Canadian newspapers which leave no doubt as the main objective of the last minister of agriculture in the Conservative administration; he wanted to satisfy all farmers, including those from Quebec, and give them a reasonable share of the national income.

And to continue along the same line, the Liberal party which promised to give everything, to renovate everything for the benefit of eastern farmers, is the one which has done most to lessen the role of the farmer and, particularly that of the Quebec farmer. I have here a circular published in a St. Hyacinthe newspaper in which Mr. J. B. Lemoyne was presented as the agricultural genius who would use his knowledge and talents to the benefit of eastern farmers. Now, at the general election of 1962, the very man who was considered as the potential minister of agriculture in the Pearson cabinet after June 18, 1962, was defeated by a majority of over 3,600 votes, and I think that the hon. member for Matapedia-Matane (Mr. Tremblay) must be glad of the treatment he received this year at the Liberal convention, since it was "packed" so as to eliminate him completely—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, I see that my hon. friend from Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes shakes his head. I know what I am talking about, because unlike what the hon. member for Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes did last year —and I shall probably come back to this later—I am not given to talking through my hat.

Mr. Lemoyne, who was discussed here this year, was cast aside by the Liberals as were also at a certain convention, some 15 farmers who were competing for the honour of being chosen as official candidates of the Liberal party throughout the province.

But since the Liberals do not want to give too much importance to the farmers, they devised means to eliminate them all, one after the other.

Mr. Speaker, we of the Conservative party have been accused, during the last two election campaigns, of remaining idle and leading the economy into stagnation. In the few minutes left to me, I would like to compare some concrete achievements of ours with what was done before us by the Liberals.

We passed several pieces of legislation the immediate result of which was to help particularly our working class, such as vocational training, special training courses for the unemployed, winter works and municipal loans.

To help the little people, we reduced the personal income tax and increased the personal exemptions.

All those measures benefited factory employees, average employees, in short the rich and the poor or those who have to work for a living.

With your kind permission, Mr. Speaker, I should like to compare, for instance, the position as it is now with that of the year 1956. Canadian sales to other countries have shown an increase of 31.3 per cent from 1956 to 1962. As far as personal income is concerned, Canada has even outstripped the United States by 7 per cent from 1956 to 1962. As a matter of fact, the increase in personal income from 1956 to 1962 climbed by 39 per cent while the increase in corporations' benefits rose by 32 per cent from 1956 to 1962.

During the same period, industrial production increased by 19 per cent while employment in the manufacturing industry showed an increase of 15.7 per cent.

Day after day in the house, and particularly during the last two sessions, hon. members opposite, who were in the opposition at that time, talked about unemployment. They said repeatedly that they had the solutions that would settle that problem overnight. But now, after 40 days of decision, I think, we still have unemployment and our hon. friends still have to apply their magic formula. Not only do they find it hard to agree on the steps to be taken but they contradict each other.

In the Ottawa Citizen of April 15, 1961, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) was quoted as saying:

> Full employment will be the main objective of a new Liberal government.

According to the Ottawa Citizen of February 27, 1963, this is what the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) said:

> Considering our harsh winter weather and our general economic set-up, there will always be a large group of unemployed in Canada.

And, as reported in the Vancouver Province, he stated the following on February 28:

> Those who claim that we will put an end to unemployment know nothing about Canada.

It seems to me that the Minister of Trade and Commerce should try to make his colleague the Minister of Finance understand that his evaluation of the situation is not true to facts.

It was also said, sir, that everything was in a bad way, that the country was going to the dogs under the Conservative government. Let us see what progress was made by the textile industry, the construction industry and the manufacturing industry in general. In 1956, the average weekly salary of the textile workers was $45.20, in November 1962, it was up to $68.70. The construction worker was getting an average salary of $72.10 in 1956, as compared to $87.60 in November 1962. With regards to the manufacturing industry in general, the Canadian worker was getting $68.50 in November 1956, while his weekly salary amounted to $84.50 in November 1962.

However, during that time, our hon. friends opposite did not miss a single opportunity of pointing out over and over again in this house, and even outside this house, that the country was doomed, that it was heading towards bankruptcy.

I should like to deal with social justice for a few seconds. Here again, we were charged with doing nothing or practically nothing; but we have statistics to show that nothing could be farther from the truth. However, before giving statistics, I should like to put on the official record a statement made by the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) on old age pensions, as reported in La Presse on January 31, 1962. This is how the report goes:

In the field of social security measures, the Liberals have promised yesterday, through Mr. Paul Martin, to raise old age pensions to $75 a month as soon as they take over.

Well, I see nothing in the speech from the throne to the effect that the old age pensions are going to be raised. But still more interesting is this other statement published in the Ottawa Journal, on May 8, 1956, and which was made by the same member, that is the hon. member for Essex East. I quote:

(Text):

Health minister Martin has told city council the federal government cannot afford to raise old age pensions to $50 from $40 a month.

In a letter made public yesterday answering council's request for higher pensions, Mr. Martin said the raise would cost an additional $100 million a year. This year the pension bill would be $400 million.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, those are the people who in so little time have changed their views to such an extent in so many different circumstances that one wonders whether they are sincere. I do not hesitate to say, as other members suggested in this house, that their only concern, since they are eager for power, is to use all means at their disposal to secure power. They are obsessed by power and they are ready for anything in order to get votes.

Again according to an item published in La Presse—as you will see for yourself, Mr. Speaker—there is an obvious lack of sincerity. This is what I find in the February 1, 1962 issue of that newspaper under the heading:

Ottawa cannot afford to increase old age pensions.

And that was at a time when hon. members in this house were promising an increase in the old age pension. In the other place, a distinguished senator said he was opposed to the increase of the old age pension from $55 to $65 a month. I say this to prove that we are justified to doubt the sincerity of those hon. members who now sit on the treasury benches.

Let us now compare the amounts paid out for social security by the government which preceded us, that is for the fiscal year 1956-57, with the amounts paid out under the Conservative administration for the fiscal year 1961-62.

Under the heading of payments made by the federal government to the provinces for health and social welfare, it is noted that in 1956-57, an amount of $75 million was paid to the provinces, while under the Conservative government the amount is of the order of $527 million, an increase of 603 per cent.

In regard to the increase in the benefits to disabled persons, in 1956-57, the Liberal government paid out $5 million, while under the Conservative government, an amount of $20 million was paid out during the fiscal year 1962-63, that is approximately—

Mr. Denis: You are talking about two different centuries.

Mr. Ricard: The Postmaster General has just made his annual contribution.

The sums allotted to family allowances, under the Liberal government, amounted to $398 million, while in 1962-63 under the Conservative administration, they amounted to $536 million, that is an increase of 35 per cent.

And now, Mr. Speaker, what about increases—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

(Text):

Mr. Steven Otto (York East): After some 40 years, Mr. Speaker, during which the riding of York East has been heard from seldom in this house, I am very honoured and York East is very honoured to present its maiden speech —if after a period of 40 years it could still be called a maiden speech. I am sure that hon. gentlemen will indulge me for a moment in order that I may put on the record some remarks about the riding. In this way, at least this generation of hon. members will know that it exists.

There are about 80,000 souls in this constituency. We are jammed in between the staid old city of Toronto, represented here by the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Hahn), and the sprawling suburb of Scarborough. We have the characteristics of both, part city and part suburb. We have very few large industries in our riding and very few men of considerable wealth. We have mostly small industries and small businesses. Most of us earn our daily bread by the sweat of our brow receiving, I would say, somewhat less than $60 per week upon which we try very hard to feed, clothe and shelter ourselves and almost three children. This is no easy task as most hon. gentlemen here will agree.

We hope for better things. We hope that in time we shall be able to share in the bounty of this country, along with other Canadians, and we do not agree that we have never had it so good. We have to have it better, and we will have it soon.

I heartily agree with the policy set down by the government which states that unemployment is our most pressing domestic problem, and I am pleased the government intends to take every possible step to help encourage industrial growth. At all times we are saddled with the fear of unemployment and other problems besetting the country, but the problem which recurs time in and time out is that of unemployment. I am confident the government will do everything possible to set things right.

Mr. Winkler: Follow the pattern of the Conservative government.

Mr. Otto: I regret, Mr. Speaker, I have not got my ear phone on and cannot hear the hon. gentleman.

An hon. Member: It wasn't worth hearing.

Mr. Otto: Mr. Speaker, I now join with all the other hon. members who have spoken in extending my congratulations to you on your election as Speaker. You will have the respect of every member of the house as of right, but sir, you will have an opportunity very few Speakers have had in this house, that of presiding over a committee which will consider a reform of the procedures of the house. By the manner in which you do that you can earn the highest respect of every hon. member here and of everyone in Canada.

As you preside over that committee I know you will acknowledge that this is a most able house. If the twenty fifth parliament was considered to be one of the most able we ever had, I am sure you will agree hon. gentlemen here make this one even more so. None of us sought election to this house merely for the sake of prestige, if there is any prestige left in being a member of parliament. Most of the hon. gentlemen here have been highly successful in their private careers and have received the highest of accolades from their fellowmen in their own communities. I sincerely believe we all came here to contribute our ideas, imagination, and the value of our experience to the government of our country. But, sir, do you wonder at times that there is a sense of frustration?

If a lot of hon. members had not sought election but had stayed at home and looked after their careers, it is quite possible, in fact likely, they would be appointed to many of the commissions and boards which are formed from time to time, but being members of the house it seems to me a great part of their job boils down to a matter of voting yea or nay.

With the greatest respect, Mr. Speaker, I would like to suggest that this committee over which you will have the honour to preside should consider whether or not some of the hon. gentlemen here could be appointed as members of these boards or committees, if the powers of parliament have to be delegated to such bodies. I am sure most hon. gentlemen opposite will agree that when they occupied the government benches, they found that the distance from here to the seats of the mighty is no shorter on this side of the house than it is from any other corner of the house, and that it is sometimes difficult to express the individual talent which each member brings with him. I believe that if it is a fact that the government of Canada has to rely more and more on the senior civil service for both administration and legislation, then the committee over which you will preside should consider whether it would be a good thing for the country to merge the two powers into one.

Surely, sir, there should be some consideration given to an expansion or extension of the committee system of parliament so that hon. members could have much closer contact with various problems, and contribute more to government and to the administration? I seriously suggest that the expansion and strengthening of the committee system in the house would be beneficial to all Canadians, and would allow most hon. gentlemen here to contribute more of their talents and ideas to the government, so that the measure of a man will not be taken as his conformity or his acquiescence, but will be based on his ideas, work, talent, reputation and the courage of his convictions.

During most of the last session of the twenty fifth parliament a great deal of work went into the preparation and presentation of private members' bills, but what comes out of that? When the hour comes up for debate on private members' bills each speaker very seriously protests that he does not want to talk out the particular bill under discussion, but invariably it gets talked out. I do not say everything should be radically changed but, sir, as you preside over this committee I suggest you give some consideration to the matter of private bills.

There are many important matters in this country which are not necessarily a policy of one party or another, nor does the government have to assume responsibility for certain matters that are raised. However surely some system, some new procedure, could be devised so that certain private bills, on approval by the government, could be debated in a free house and voted into law. I am sure that exercising our lungs between five and six o'clock every day is not the thing we ought to be doing at this time, in this century.

I agree with the sentiments expressed in the speech from the throne that we have to find new paths and assist in the strengthening of parliament. In that connection I am trying to recall a caution given by an author to a prince some 500 years ago. He said there is probably nothing more difficult to take in hand, more perilous to conduct and more uncertain of its future than to take the lead in the introduction of a new order of things, for the innovator will have as his enemies those who have done very well under the old system, and only lukewarm support from those who may do well under the new. But if you, sir, as the guiding hand of this committee are the instrument of deep, worth-while reforms you shall earn the laurels of this house and the nation.

Mr. J. E. Pascoe (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, first I want to endorse the congratulations and best wishes addressed to you and the Deputy Speaker by earlier speakers in this debate. I trust that although these congratulations may have become somewhat repetitious, you will consider that they are no less sincere. We look forward to a well ordered session with you in the chair enforcing the rules of parliament. You proved this afternoon, sir, that you will see the rules are properly observed. I also congratulate the mover and seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne for their first efforts in this house. I wish to thank the fine people of Moose Jaw-Lake Centre for again supporting me with their vote on April 8 and affording me the honour and privilege of taking part in this debate.

In my maiden speech in 1958 I fully outlined the virtues and economic strength of my constituency. I shall not repeat my earlier account of the riding at this time, but would point out and emphasize most strongly that it is a constituency closely associated with our leader and strongly in support of the national development policies he adopted when he was prime minister. The constituency includes the city of Moose Jaw, a large part of the city of Regina, 48 towns and villages and a fine agricultural area of big and smaller family farms. Farmers, city and town residents, labour and business are almost equally represented. This means that every action, or lack of action, by the present government will be of direct concern to one or more segments of the riding's economy. Therefore I can assure the members of the government front benches, especially the so-called inner cabinet of economic planners, that their decisions and policies will be carefully scrutinized and very carefully compared with the achievements of the former government since 1957. Those I represent know full well what was accomplished in national development in the past six years. They were not confused or misled by Liberal propaganda and a biased press, as was eastern Canada.

In 1957 just over 23 per cent of the electors of Saskatchewan voted Progressive Conservative; in 1958 the vote was 50.7 per cent Progressive Conservative; in 1962 it was 51.6 per cent, and in the April 8 vote this was increased to 53.9 per cent Progressive Conservative. So, Mr. Speaker, nearly 54 per cent of Saskatchewan voters endorsed the national development program of the Diefenbaker government and certainly will not be satisfied with anything less. However, from indications in the speech from the throne they are going to get much less from the new government.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, I must take strong exception to the words used in high Liberal circles on election night when Saskatchewan returned a full slate of 17 Progressive Conservative members. The Saskatchewan voters were called dirty dogs because they did not vote Liberal. Saskatchewan voters are not dirty dogs. I can assure the government, however, that they will be watchdogs; they will watch very carefully what the government does in the next two years, particularly the policies of what the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) called the two-headed Department of Agriculture. I say two years, Mr. Speaker, because there is almost bound to be an election in two years when the opposition becomes convinced that the great Liberal election promises, promises that were not included in the speech from the throne, will also be missing from the government's program. In two years the public will have time to contrast the country's economy with the 1962 record.

Other speakers have outlined Canada's economic gains, but we are going to emphasize this record again and again, Mr. Speaker, because the facts are a stinging repudiation of the apostles of gloom and doom now on the government side. As has been indicated, the gross national product in 1962 increased by 8 per cent to over $40 million. There was a trade balance of Canadian exports over imports for the second year in succession. There were gains in total employment each month as compared with the same months in 1961. The total number of Canadian workers now stands at 6,660,000, an increase of 878,000 workers over the 5,782,000 employed in 1956, the last year of the former Liberal government. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, 878,000 more people are working now than were working under the Liberals in 1956.

Steel production is a good indication of economic strength. In 1962 our steel production increased by 10 per cent to almost 8 million tons, with each month's output from Canadian mills breaking the previous month's record. It has been described as the greatest year in the history of steel in Canada. These economic gains are a challenge to the new government. They are placed on record as a mark by which to measure the accomplishments this year of the Liberal regime. But they are not the only yardstick. Consumer prices were maintained by the former government at a level described by President Kennedy of the United States as the most stable in the western world. With the increase in sugar prices in the past three weeks, where will the consumer price level be in the next dominion bureau of statistics report, because these increased sugar prices affect many other prices.

Last Saturday I visited in Wakefield, Quebec, an old mill which is still operated by waterpower. It is an interesting old mill and I was pleased to learn that the government has acquired it for restoration and preservation. The miller was grinding feed concentrates for livestock. He said that the higher sugar prices and the sugar cane situation resulted in higher prices for molasses, and as a consequence prices for feed concentrates were higher. As I drew to the attention of the one Minister of Agriculture in office (Mr. Hays), that will increase the cost of livestock feeding and I think he should urge the government to do something about it. I would also draw to his attention the report in the Winnipeg paper that the government is being asked to control prices while the matter is being investigated.

Then there is the indicated increase in bread prices resulting from the removal by the government of the subsidy on whole milk to save the federal treasury $6 million. Coffee is going to cost 15 cents a cup. Rents appear to be going up. I have exactly the same accommodation I had when the last parliament closed in February, but the rent has been increased $22 a month for this session. In the space of four weeks it appears that this is going to be a high-price government.

There is another measure, Mr. Speaker, by which to judge the government a year from now. This is a measurement of particular interest to prairie farmers whom I represent. It is the statement of the Canadian wheat board on wheat delivery quotas as at May 21. There are now 232 points on a 7-bushel quota, 259 points on an 8-bushel quota, and 929 points on 10 bushels. Farmers' wheat marketings for the 1962-63 crop year have set an all-time record of 300 million bushels as at the end of March. That is right here in the official d.b.s. report which I hold in my hand: 300 million bushels delivered by western farmers by the end of March, with four months still to go in this crop year. It will take great effort by the new government to match this wheat marketing effort. I think there might have been a better chance for this if the Canadian wheat board had been left with the Department of Agriculture, even with a two-headed department. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) in my opinion got off to a poor start on a television appearance shortly after taking over control of the wheat board when he said he did not need or want any help or advice on China wheat sales from the former minister of agriculture who is now sitting on the front benches of the official opposition. I suggest that the trade minister change his attitude towards the former minister of agriculture and accept all the help and advice he can get. We have come down here to play a positive opposition role, but this will have to change if our criticisms and advice are rejected out of hand.

The prairie farmers are worried about the possible loss of the wheat market in mainland China. Comments I have received on the situation present two views. One is that President Kennedy may have influenced the Canadian government to reduce its trade with China in line with American policy. The other is that China may reduce its purchases because of Canada's acceptance of nuclear arms. I pass on these farm views for the information of the government and particularly of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. At the risk of a curt reply such as he gave to the former minister of agriculture, I suggest that he make a public statement on the China wheat situation as soon as possible.

There is another worry Saskatchewan has, Mr. Speaker, this time over possible views of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon). In his report of the royal commission on Canada's economic prospects, the so-called Gordon report, the present Minister of Finance stated at page 172:

> We would be hard to convince that Canadian agriculture as a whole is likely to benefit from the investment of large amounts of capital in monumental irrigation schemes.

If this statement can be taken to foreshadow any slowing down of work on the south Saskatchewan dam, the new government can expect terrific and immediate reaction.

That dam, started in 1958 by the Diefenbaker government, holds the key to realizing the full industrial potential of Saskatchewan. The signing of the agreement was one of the early accomplishments of the former prime minister. Completion of the dam will bring great benefit to the constituency of Moose Jaw-Lake Centre and other neighbouring constituencies in maintaining lake levels and assuring adequate domestic and industrial water supplies. So I hope the Minister of Finance has changed his earlier views on such projects and will not delay any contracts necessary for completion of the dam by 1966, the target date set by the present leader of the official opposition when he signed the agreement as prime minister.

There is concern in the west, Mr. Speaker, and I am sure there is similar concern in farming areas in other parts of Canada, regarding redistribution of constituencies. The speech from the throne merely states that a commission will be established to make the constituency changes. I hope this commission will realize that there is more involved in redistribution than boundary changes on a population basis. There is a need to assure each segment of the economy that it will have a fair representation in parliament. We know that there are more people living in the cities now and fewer on farms. City problems have increased, but so have farm problems. When population figures are considered by the redistribution committee, I suggest that there must be some form of weighted index to equalize farm and city representation. I hope to have more to say on this when legislation establishing the redistribution commission is introduced.

On this question of farm representation I join with other Saskatchewan members in objecting to the published statement by the Saskatchewan Liberal leader that a cabinet minister is being assigned to work with a sort of "shadow cabinet" of Saskatchewan Liberals back home. As I pointed out earlier, the full slate of 17 Progressive Conservative members were elected with the support of nearly 54 per cent of the voters. We were elected to represent our constituents and we intend to express their views in their interests. We hope the government will listen to our representations. I am sure we understand western views better than any Liberal shadow cabinet in Saskatchewan, especially if they include the Liberal organizer who has stated that the family farms cannot be maintained in modern agriculture. We believe they can. I have been an advocate of family farms, and I am sure other hon. members have, too. I think that any farm legislation brought down by the government should bear in mind the need to preserve family farms.

There is one other item in the speech from the throne on which I should like to make a brief comment representing my personal views. It is in regard to the proposed commission on biculturalism. I agree with the statement that the bicultural character of Canada must be recognized. I agree as to the need for a basic partnership between Canadian speaking and French speaking people. I agree that the governments of the provinces must be consulted and that their views must form the basis for any commission study. As a matter of fact I consider the question could be better resolved by a dominion-provincial conference as suggested by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) when he was prime minister than by the proposed commission, which at best could only make recommendations before final acceptance or rejection by the federal and provincial governments.

The comment I have to make is this: I wish to draw attention to the results of a Gallup poll which appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press on May 22, 1963, under the heading "Quebec Not Gloomy on Ties to Canada". The article says in part:

> Although Quebec has a few angry separatists who want to secede from the rest of Canada, the people of that province are not pessimistic about feelings between themselves and English speaking Canada.
>
> Thirty seven per cent in Quebec claim that relations between French and English speaking Canadians are better than they were five years ago.

I just wanted to put that on the record.

In conclusion, may I say that I agree with earlier speakers from this side who described the speech from the throne as a disappointing outline of what the government hopes to do for Canada. As our leader has emphasized, it is not a question of getting the economy moving, as supporters of the government claimed during the election campaign. On the other hand a very definite responsibility rests on the government to keep the economy moving forward at the 1962 rate. Other speakers have pointed out the government's responsibility in this regard by quoting from an editorial which appeared in the Ottawa Journal. I should like to repeat the closing words of that editorial.

> Let Mr. Pearson and his friends stop trying to give the impression that they took over a broken down Canadian economy. They took over a house in good order—a strong and going concern.

There is also a statement which appeared in the Letter-Review of April 29, and which, it seems to me, is deserving of being placed on record. Referring to the economic state of this nation in 1962, the Letter-Review comments:

> The increase has been steady, almost spectacular, and suggests that while further advances are desirable it is hardly optimistic to utter the thought that 'the economy should be got going again'. It has not stopped for many years.

To sum up, Mr. Speaker, the 1962 achievements of the former government in national developments are on the record. We challenge the present government to match this record. They will be answerable to the public in about two years if they fail.

(Translation):

Mr. J. J. Greene (Renfrew South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to join previous speakers in congratulating you on your election as Speaker of this house. I am sure that you will fill with distinction the office that has in the past been occupied by so many distinguished men.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is amusing that we should congratulate the Speaker especially in view of the efforts made to force the nominee to occupy the chair. It was said that Speakers used to be executed when they did not hand down the desired rulings. It is just like congratulating a supporter of Louis XIV who would be marched off to the guillotine. But this is how we do in this house and I wish to congratulate you, Mr. Speaker.

May I also congratulate the mover and seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. I wish both of them success in their career both in the house and in the service of the public, commensurate with the brilliance of their effort.

Like everybody else, I support this part of the speech from the throne concerned with the establishment of a royal commission on biculturalism and bilingualism. There is only one aspect of this general and positive endorsation of biculturalism which concerns me. Every politician today seems bent on vehemently supporting biculturalism. However, statements made by politicians on this subject have about the same weight and the same value as the admonishments of those who preach against sin. It is the right attitude but it does not bring results. Instead of stating at length our support of biculturalism I feel that this house should tackle the undoubtedly difficult task of establishing practical and realistic biculturalism. This cannot be done within the hour, overnight or even in the life of one legislature. However, any legislature which would devote itself in all sincerity to that task might, no doubt, set up the basis for biculturalism.

I think it was comforting indeed to hear that part of the speech from the throne and the words of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), where he said that Canadians will be better able to realize that dual culture which confederation had in mind if they manage, in a general way, as a nation, to make fluent use of both the official languages of our federal state.

Minor details, like bilingual cheques, bilingual publicity slogans and claims with regard to the fair distribution of federal jobs, just stress the deficiencies in our confederation. If all Canadian citizens were bilingual, such details would be of no importance.

If, as I think, our leaders are honest and sincere when they publicly call for biculturalism, how shall we manage to get a Canadian citizen who speaks both mother tongues fluently. That is an aim which neither the tired men of our generation nor even the much younger and much more gifted ladies who sit in this house will scarcely attain or be able to hope for. Our aim should therefore be to blaze the trail, which tomorrow's truly bilingual citizens and leaders, will be able to follow.

Mr. Speaker, I think that, in spite of all we say, we still have not made the first step in that direction. Dr. Wilder Penfield, who analysed our Canadian brain so well tells us that ability to learn another language decreases very rapidly after the age of 13. It therefore seems that we should apply ourselves to give our young children under 13 the means and incentives to acquire a second language.

The methods to be employed to this end, if there are any, are very rare today. The direct method, which enables boys and girls of an age where they still have the best ability and aptitude, to acquire not only the other language but also some elements of the second culture, is the exchange of school children or pupils for one or two years, according to the needs. A timid start has been made in that direction, but, ordinarily, in the case of pupils of more advanced age, where the acquiring of a second language has become more difficult.

As far as I am concerned, I should have liked to send my eldest to Quebec to help him acquire a second culture. But at that time I could not afford it.

Now that I am in this house and that my income is higher, it would be easier.

But most Canadians do not have enough money to send their boys and girls to private schools.

Mr. Speaker, if we are sincere in what we say on that matter, I think we can play a great part right here in the field of biculturalism without infringing in any way on the constitution and this, simply by allotting federal funds for that so important and even vital objective. Evidently, it is the only way for our nation to work out true biculturalism.

(Text):

I represent in this house the historic and renowned riding of Renfrew South. That riding stretches from Arnprior on the east at the junction of the mighty Ottawa and the roaring Madawaska rivers, to the newly incorporated municipality of Whitney at the gateway to Algonquin park on the west. The riding consists of people of varied ethnic origin—British, Scottish, Irish, Polish and German—and as such it is a pretty good cross-section of Canada as a whole, to such an extent that the newspaper pundits from time to time during an election campaign say that as Renfrew South goes so goes Canada. Believe me, Mr. Speaker, this is a great burden for a candidate to bear in the riding of Renfrew South.

Having so realized, I was somewhat taken aback when I came to the conclusion that I had brought this party in here on my back, and I was somewhat dismayed to hear our hon. friends opposite tell of how many hundreds of thousands and millions of dollars were available to my party in the winning of the election. As my hon. friends opposite have been so expert in finding out the state of the finances of the Liberal party, I would appreciate it very much if they would find out for me who got my share. I assure you that with the grave responsibility I have it would have been far easier to buy my way in than do it by footslogging, the way I had to do across the 130 miles of Renfrew South. Also, Mr. Speaker, having brought the Liberal party to this house on the back of Renfrew South I must say I was rather surprised when I arrived here to find that if I had been any farther back I would have been sitting in the Ottawa river.

The beautiful town of Arnprior, which is my home town, is one of the earliest settled communities of Ontario. At the centre of my riding we have the town of Renfrew, which bears the name of the county represented here by the constituencies of Renfrew South and Renfrew North. I would say this of the town of Arnprior, that, by reason of the active and vibrant municipal organization led by its former mayor, Robert M. Simpson, who brought secondary industry to our town, we have probably shared some of the fruits of the economy of Ontario.

In the town of Renfrew the employment situation at this time is very grave. By reason of the cancellation of the Avro contracts the aircraft industries there were put in a very poor plight and to this date nothing has been done to remedy that situation. Going farther west in my riding we come to the storied town of Eganville, an Irish settlement which is politically known as the home of the Maloneys. From Eganville came the Hon. Dr. Maloney who sat with distinction and honour on the opposite side of the house, his son, Arthur Maloney, who also, I am sad to state, sat on the opposite side of the house, and the late James Maloney who sat as minister of mines in the legislature at Toronto and with whom for many years I did battle on the hustings of Renfrew South. He is gone, and I wish to pay him my respects in this house at this time as a valiant, doughty warrior on the hustings of a fighting riding.

I would point out also, Mr. Speaker, that apart from these English, Scottish and Irish people we have in my riding in the township of McNabb the descendants of the original Laird McNabb who still bear proudly that Scottish name. We have in the townships of South Algoma and Gratton citizens of German descent who are now first class and have been first class citizens of Canada both in war and peace. There are families who bear names such as Verch but who still pronounce that name in the German fashion, Ferch. No better citizens are there in Canada than these people of German descent.

Going farther west in my riding we come to the lovely village of Killaloe and beautiful Brudenell where the Irish stock is still predominant but where help is again needed economically as the lumber industry has died out and nothing has come to take its place.

Moving farther west again we come to the grandiose land around Wilno, bounteous Barrys Bay and the summer paradise of Combermere. Here are wonderful people of Polish origin. These people of Polish origin were great friends of my predecessor on this side of the house, the late Dr. J. J. McCann, who held them very dearly in his heart. It has been one of the pleasant things in public life, so far as I am concerned, to come to know these smiling and happy Polish people who live in my riding of Renfrew South. I would point out, Mr. Speaker, that here we are sometimes concerned with two languages and two races in Canada. Let us not forget the Polish people, the Scottish people, the Irish people and the many other ethnic groups that go to make up this great land of ours which, along with the English and French, make Canada unique.

Now, Mr. Speaker, having gone over the geographical aspect of my constituency, I should like to point out that economic conditions in this beautiful and lovely riding are not as they should be. I have heard some of our friends from the province of Quebec referring to the economic shortcomings that exist in Quebec. They say that Quebec has not shared in the economic bounties of this country as has the province of Ontario. This is what troubles them most. I should like to assure this honourable house that Quebec is not alone in this area of drought. I heard an hon. member state that the average income in Ontario was $1,800, while the average income in Quebec was some $1,300. I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that in my riding, and in particular in the west end of my riding where no secondary industry has ever located, the average income is far below that $1,300. Ontario, therefore, is not an economic utopia. There are hills in the metropolitan areas but there are valleys and swamps in the economy of Ontario as well as in other parts of Canada.

I do not ask that these mountains of economic prosperity such as exist in the metropolitan areas and in western Ontario be dragged down. We are not asking to pull anybody down from his lofty pinnacle. However, we do believe that those economic quagmires which exist in areas such as the west end of south Renfrew should be drained a little. We should fill in those hollows a little bit, so that my people will share in the bounties of this very rich province. I assure you that while we profess so often and so loudly that there is equality of opportunity in this land, a boy or a girl from the south end of Renfrew does not have the same opportunity for advancement, for education and for prosperity in the future, as does a boy or girl from one of the metropolitan areas. I know of many cases where boys and girls just could not go to high school because there was no high school. There was no economic foundation on which a high school could be built. The only way they could go to high school was by taxicab some 10 or 15 miles, if their mother or father could pay for it, and this in an area where there was no industry in which the mother or father could get a job to take care of this expense.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that one of the great tasks before this house is to assure that there will be equalization in this wealthy land. I believe that the spirit of the Pearson plan, as envisaged in this speech from the throne, is that we will not add to these growing cities, these new abodes of the cave-dwellers who are more and more residing in apartment houses in the great metropolitan area. Surely, it is inherent in the speech from the throne that the economic powers of the government should be used for social purposes. What finer social purpose is there than the diversification of industry in order to enable our people to live where there are green hills, fresh air and lakes, beauty and sunshine? This would avoid the continued growth of the cities as has occurred in the past few years.

If I am correct, Mr. Speaker, in interpreting the speech from the throne in this light, then I know of no place where the diversification of industry is so badly needed, I know of no area in which industry may be located to better advantage so that the people will enjoy a better way of life, than in my own riding of Renfrew South, particularly the west end of that riding.

The whip on this side of the house, Mr. Speaker, has very kindly given priority to the new members on this side of the house in this debate. As a result of this, my colleague from Renfrew North (Mr. Forgie) may not have an opportunity to speak. With this in mind, I should like to state that I shall at all times support him in his endeavours on behalf of the town of Pembroke and the surrounding area where the problems are similar to those in my riding, since it is in the other half of the county of Renfrew. I shall be very pleased also, and proud, to support him in his continuing efforts, by which he has distinguished himself in the past, on behalf of the armed forces at Camp Petawawa. I wish to align myself, as I know the hon. member for Renfrew North has many times before, with the proposition that these men and women serving in our armed forces should receive comparable emoluments to those received by people in comparable jobs in civilian life. Without these men and women, our country would soon grow weak and the very things for which we profess to stand would be but a farce.

There is one other group of people I should like to support in conjunction with my hon. friend from Renfrew North. I refer to the employees at Deep River who are engaged in atomic research and production in Canada. We have lost too many of our most able men, of our best trained technicians, because apparently in this land we do not appreciate the contribution these people are able to make to the future of Canada. I believe that in the future we should look after these people as best we can so that the scientific age, the atomic age, will in fact belong to Canada.

On the broader national aspect of the measures contained in the speech from the throne, I shall say very little. Other speakers from this side of the house, much better informed, much more knowledgeable and experienced than I, have gone over the variety of commitments contained in this document. I support them to the hilt in their stand on the measures therein contained. Hon. gentlemen opposite have, however, raised one point with which I shall deal briefly, namely the fear that by reason of the measures contained in the speech from the throne which involve a new use of the executive power for social purposes, there will be lost that freedom of the individual which is the very nub of our system, as compared to those systems which use control but which forego that freedom of the individual. I was very pleased, therefore, Mr. Speaker, to see that passage in the speech from the throne with regard to the committee on procedure. It clearly indicates that this side of the house is just as concerned with the rights of the individual, which are inherent in the supremacy of parliament, as are our friends on the opposite side of the house. They have attempted to perpetuate and promulgate the myth that in their own fashion they are the champions of parliament and the champions of the supremacy of parliament, but I do not believe this is the case. That the committee on procedure is to be set up is witness to the fact that this side of the house is just as concerned in this regard as any other hon. members of the house.

I may make a suggestion in a very humble fashion as a new member, Mr. Speaker, that this house can only be as strong as its individual members, and I have found in the very short time I have been here that the facilities given to the ordinary hon. member make it very difficult for him to carry out his job. We have been given horse and buggy tools in a jet age. If a man is doing the important job of representing some 30,000 to 60,000 people, and is doing that job conscientiously, then he must have far better facilities than are given to the ordinary member here.

I do not wish to appear as a precocious member, Mr. Speaker. I know I have a great deal to learn but I do think that every hon. member should at least be given a private office, with separate quarters for his staff. I do believe every hon. member should at least be given stenographic help, not just during the session but during his entire tenure, at Ottawa or in his constituency as he deems advisable. The people of Canada would be shocked if they knew the limited facilities given to their representatives in their job of representing them here in Ottawa, and I hope the house will take it under advisement, and that hon. members on the front benches on this side will give consideration to providing better equipment and better tools.

I found that even a dictaphone was something foreign to the office of a private member, and in the twentieth century surely this is something to be deplored. We have heard a great deal of talk that being a member of the house is a full time job. In the little I have seen of it, it is more than a full time job, and if we are going to do a full time job, we should have the facilities, the equipment and the help to do an adequate full time job. If we are ever going to discuss the matter of raising the emoluments of hon. members, then let us be sure we are in a position to do an adequate, 100 per cent full time job for our constituents, and that means we must have the necessary tools.

In conclusion I wish to say I am sure the measures which will be brought forth in the committee on procedure will ensure the continuing supremacy of parliament over the executive and administrative areas of government. To me the great challenge of today is this: can free peoples use the power, controls and direction which are necessary to provide full employment, and at the same time retain that freedom and supremacy of the individual which we deem essential?

I think it is correct to state that in any community or any country where the supremacy of the legislature has been subjugated, then that supremacy of the individual has been lost, from the days of the Star Chamber to the Bundestag and the Kremlin. Only if we maintain the supremacy of this house over all elements of government is the sanctity of the individual on the best and surest foundation.

I do not know how long I will be a member of the house, because in my riding it is mighty tough to stay an elected representative. Political longevity however is not my only aspiration. I hope to do something of benefit for my people and for the country while I am here, whether it be for two years as my hon. friend opposite has stated, or for 22 years; and may I say it is my fondest hope that my political epitaph, whenever it is written, will say "he served well in the House of Commons", because I believe that is the greatest challenge of our times.

Mr. H. M. Horner (Jasper-Edson): Mr. Speaker, it may be only just and right that I should follow the hon. member who has spoken so eloquently on behalf of the constituency of Renfrew South. I do not agree with all he said but I certainly appreciate the very eloquent manner in which he said it. My forefathers came from the Ottawa valley and I may say I can appreciate the natural ability and oratory he acquired from his Irish ancestors in that area.

As I have said, I cannot agree with all he said. Certainly when he talked so glowingly about the speech from the throne, he must have had his hand in his pocket. There was nothing in it. We heard all the promises of the Liberal party, but where are they now? I shall deal with them one by one, but prior to doing that I want to congratulate you, Mr. Speaker, on your elevation to the speakership. I also want to congratulate the Deputy Speaker on his appointment, and the mover and seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne.

Now I wish to deal with the nub of the problem in Canada today, as I see it. There are several problems which are facing us as Canadians, but the most important one depends on whether or not we remain a country. I do not subscribe to the bumbling aspirations of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer). I do not subscribe to the bumbling aspirations of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and I want to say why, and say it clearly.

With regard first to the question of biculturalism I want to say this sincerely and put it on the line. I represent 2,000 French Canadians, people who took their courage in their hands and migrated to Alberta where they homesteaded. I represent these people not only in fact but by their votes. What is their message to this house, to Quebec and to Canada? Their message is simply this, that we must have a Canada first; that we want to maintain our culture but we have to have a Canada.

What about our culture? What about this thing called culture that the C.B.C. on occasion tries to shove down our throats? You do not develop culture because a minister says this, that, or something else. You develop culture by living a life, by your family living a life, and by creating and doing things different in this country, with the help of what your forefathers gave you. There is a lot of nonsense about this, and I shall speak about the press in that regard in a moment. We develop culture as we work, build and develop a country. We do not develop a culture because of United States influence. If we do, we are not a country. If this culture that we are trying to develop and if this country that we are trying to develop does not take into cognizance this essential fact, then we are not a country. If the Liberal party persists in accepting United States money to run their campaigns—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): —and to control our industry—

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): All right, nonsense, old boy. I have some industries in my riding controlled by United States companies. What did they do? They financed the Liberal candidate, and he lost his deposit. They provided him with a campaign manager free, gratis. Why? I asked the manager. He said, "We did not like your writing to our head office in New York and suggesting to them that they should look beyond the United States for markets"—for the only pulp mill in Alberta. They did not like this. I should not have done this, as a member of parliament for Jasper-Edson.

Is this the only reason they ran? Certainly they had no farm policy, so they did not make any votes there. I am glad to see that the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing) is in the house this evening, because the Liberals over the years have had no policy in national parks, so they could not make any votes there. I hope, when they talk so promisingly of the things they are going to do, that we will not return to that policy in national parks where the best Liberal got the job. When they talk about patronage, I challenge the minister to find any trace where patronage has been used in Jasper since 1958. I challenge him to do the things that are required to be done in this regard. I challenge him to look over his civil servants. I challenge him particularly to have some discussion with his director, because I do not agree with his director. I challenge him to put forward policies for our national parks which are in the best interests not only of maintaining these parks in their natural beauty but of making them available to all Canadians. This is the challenge in regard to that department.

I know that my time is limited, Mr. Speaker, but I want to say a word with regard to some of my friends in the press gallery. I have nothing to hide, nothing to be afraid of them for. But I say to them this, and I say it sincerely. If they want to maintain the freedom of the press in Canada they had better pull up their socks; they had better start reporting the facts. We in northern Alberta particularly are concerned about this. We have one newspaper there which has not reported the facts, and I am not afraid to say this outside the house in any court of law. They have not reported the facts. I would like my friends in the government now to say what kind of a deal they have made with the Southam Press. Are they going to make this fellow Basil Dean a senator? I challenged him to run against me and he did not even bother answering.

If these people have any convictions, if these people can do any other job, which I doubt—and I am talking primarily about the people who are writing politically in the Edmonton Journal—I say to them this, you are reporting in the Edmonton Journal because you have not found any other job which would give you a livelihood. I challenge them to come forward. We have been subjected in northern Alberta to the most vicious attack by this press, the most biased, the most absolutely irresponsible attack. We want to see the freedom of the press maintained. We want to see the press in Canada strong and virile. But we want to see the truth. Very simply I say to them this, if they want to see how a paper should be run they should look about them; they should look at some of the weekly newspapers which are published in the province of Alberta and they will see what I mean, not this nonsense that we see from Basil Dean and his cohorts who—and I have this on good authority—do exactly what they are told by officials of the Southam Press. I say to the people in the government, have you an agreement with the Southam Press? Are these people United States controlled? Are these people going to get a big deal out of your government? We in Alberta think they are.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): These are the things we want to know. I am sorry that the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Teillet) has now removed himself from the chamber because I want to say something to him in regard to the removal of Mr. McKay. I want to say this to him, that we in northern Alberta have a number of French Canadians and that Mr. McKay was a good friend of theirs, he served their purpose, he served them as he did everybody else in Alberta. I suggest to the minister that he must have had some pangs when he took the orders from the hierarchy of the Liberal party that this man must go. This was obviously the situation.

An hon. Member: A terrible thing.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): I am glad to see that the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) is here because I have something to say to him as well. In the speech from the throne we have a great big paragraph about which I want to say something. I could also say something to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh), but my time is going to preclude that. But I want to say to the Minister of Trade and Commerce that we are concerned in western Canada. We know him as the guy who said he could not do anything for us. We will be watching him with a great deal of interest because we in Alberta are primarily concerned with markets, not only for grain but for our minerals, in the far east. This concerns not only China but Japan. We want to trade with these countries. We want to expand our markets in these areas. We do not want any more of this nonsense which he propagated before us as a senior civil servant, when he said, "We have the grain. If you want to buy it, come and get it". We want none of that for our grain; we want none of that for our coke and coal; we want none of that for our copper and iron ore. We want him to get up off his fanny and get to work.

These are the things that we require in western Canada. There has been some talk with regard to the session, and all this type of thing. There is the suggestion out around Fort William that the people of Canada must realize that we believe in confederation, that we are willing to go more than halfway to make it work. We want to see these things done by these ministers in particular—I have mentioned the ministers of trade and commerce—and the other ministers. The Minister of Transport (Mr. McIlraith) is away at the moment, but I want to say something in regard to him.

Mr. McIlraith: No, he is not; he is here.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): I want to say something about the policy of the C.N.R.

An hon. Member: He is sitting in another seat.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): I am glad to see him because I have a delegation coming to see him tomorrow. We want to see if you, sir, can convince the president of the C.N.R. that he should pay more attention to selling its services than selling his men off. We want you to do something about this, sir. Think about it.

Miss LaMarsh: After six years.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): "After six years", the good lady says. As I said before, I could say something with regard to health and welfare, but I am saving that.

Miss LaMarsh: Go ahead.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): I want to go back—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order; ten o'clock.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

APPENDIX

FINAL COMMUNIQUE OF NATO MINISTERIAL MEETING

The north Atlantic council met in ministerial session in Ottawa from 22nd to 24th May, 1963.

2. In their review of the international situation, ministers emphasized that in the world of today peace is indivisible. The enduring character of the north Atlantic alliance, founded on the principles of interdependence and common defence, constitutes a basic guarantee for the maintenance of peace.

3. The council noted with regret that the Soviet union had so far shown little interest in seeking equitable solutions for outstanding problems.

4. With regard to Germany and Berlin, the threat has not disappeared. Thanks to the firm attitude maintained by the west, however, developments detrimental to the interests of Berlin and the alliance have been effectively discouraged. In this connection, the alliance abides by the terms of its declaration of 16th December, 1958, on Berlin.

5. Outside the treaty area too, tensions and difficulties continue to exist which have a profound effect on the alliance. Soviet military personnel remain in Cuba; and the situation there, with its repercussions in the region generally, still gives cause for concern. Ministers also expressed their disquiet over recent events in Laos, and stressed the importance of sustained efforts to secure respect for the Geneva agreements.

6. Ministers reaffirmed the importance, in building a peaceful world, of progress toward general and complete disarmament by stages and under effective international control. In this connection, they noted that agreement in principle had been reached between the United States and the U.S.S.R. on measures to improve communications designed to reduce the risk of war by accident or miscalculation. They expressed the hope that the Soviet union's attitude would evolve sufficiently to permit genuine progress to be made on key disarmament questions.

7. The growing scope and complexity of the problems facing the alliance make it imperative for the council to ensure that its political consultations are as prompt and effective as they can be made. Ministers noted the progress already achieved in this direction and expressed their determination to secure still further improvements.

8. Ministers discussed NATO defence policy and approved the steps taken to organize the nuclear forces assigned or to be assigned to the supreme allied commander Europe (SACEUR).

These include notably:

(a) assignment of the United Kingdom V-bomber force and three U.S. Polaris submarines to SACEUR;

(b) establishment by SACEUR on his staff of a deputy responsible to him for nuclear affairs;

(c) arrangements for broader participation by officers of NATO member countries in nuclear activities in allied command Europe and in co-ordination of operational planning at Omaha;

(d) fuller information to national authorities, both political and military.

Ministers welcomed these measures to increase the effectiveness of the nuclear capability at the disposal of the alliance and to improve co-ordination and control of its nuclear deterrent forces.

9. Ministers recognized the need to achieve a satisfactory balance between nuclear and conventional arms. They directed the council in permanent session to undertake, with the advice of the NATO military authorities, further studies of the interrelated questions of strategy, force requirements and the resources available to meet them.

10. The council noted progress made in the implementation of earlier resolutions concerning the defence problems of Greece and reaffirmed its interest in the effective application of these resolutions.

11. The north Atlantic alliance seeks peace. It deplores the diversion into the military field of resources which might be used for the betterment of mankind, and in particular for increased efforts to raise living standards in developing countries. But the free world remains faced with a continuing threat and the members of the north Atlantic alliance have both the right and the duty to protect their freedom and independence.

12. The next ministerial meeting will be held in Paris in December 1963.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, May 28, 1963

The house met at 11 a.m.

(Translation):

PRIVILEGE

MR. SAUVE—CORRECTION OF REMARKS MADE IN DEBATE

Mr. Maurice Sauve (Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Yesterday in this house, the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) raised a question of privilege about the report of the speech I made on Wednesday, May 22, which appears in Hansard beginning at page 151.

He explained to the house that a sentence had been deleted from my speech at my own request. I admit it is true, Mr. Speaker, and here is what happened.

An hour after we have made a speech, a blue copy of it is handed to us which we are asked to look over. As is the custom, I made a few style and vocabulary corrections which in no way altered the meaning of the text. And then I came up against a major difficulty. I felt an important sentence was missing. Since I was not allowed to add that sentence, I decided to delete a few words. I considered that, without that sentence, my text took on a wrong meaning or, at the very least, that the sentence had a significance other than the one I intended it to have. Therefore, I thank the hon. member for having given me this opportunity of making that correction to my text and four others which I also consider important.

On page 4 of the appendix, the words:

—as in Ontario.

should be added to the following sentence:

—while there is only 27 per cent of the labour force and twice as many unemployed people—

And to comply with the request of the hon. member, on page 5, after the sentence beginning as follows:

For instance, on the trains—

And ending with:

—and the stations are called only in English.

the following sentence should be inserted:

And while this is going on in Ottawa and on the trains, bombs are exploding in Montreal.

Finally, at the bottom of the second column of page 5, instead of:

—while paying, at the same time, the federal contribution—

One should read:

—while having the province assume, at the same time, the federal contribution of $75 million to hospital insurance—

I trust, Mr. Speaker, that with leave of the house, those corrections will be made in the final version of Hansard. I might add, Mr. Speaker, that I apologize if I have unintentionally violated the rules of this house.

Mr. Pigeon: On the same question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, you realize, of course, that the hon. member has just delivered another speech.

The hon. member has agreed that he struck out that phrase. He did so contrary to the standing orders of the house. I ask therefore that the rules be applied and that those words be put back in the official report. Besides, if you refer back to the blue sheets which never lie, you will see that the hon. member for Îles-de-la-Madeleine, on page 5 of the appendix, has made other changes himself, when he said:

In the economic field, where do we stand? We own almost nothing.

When, as a matter of fact, he said:

We have absolutely nothing.

(Text):

Mr. Pickersgill: May I raise a point of order, sir. The hon. member for Îles-de-la-Madeleine had already asked the house to have the phrase replaced to which the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm referred yesterday. It seems to me, sir, that after that had been done the matter should have been closed. The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm has no right whatever under the rules to begin to discuss, at this late date, days after the Hansard appeared, other changes that he wishes to have made in the version of the hon. member's speech. The hon. member himself made a number of corrections, and it seems to me the matter should be closed now.

Mr. Speaker: I have studied this matter and come to a conclusion. May I refer hon. members to page 95 of Beauchesne, citation 104, subsection 5:

Question of Privilege

As a motion taken at the time for matters of privilege is thereby given precedence over the prearranged program of public business, the Speaker requires to be satisfied, both that there is a prima facie case that a breach of privilege has been committed, and also that the matter is being raised at the earliest opportunity.

A certain amount of leeway has been allowed in connection with this matter. We are dealing with a new member who was speaking on the address. He has not added to his remarks, he has simply taken out a sentence which does not alter the context of his remarks. I suggest to hon. members that there is no prima facie case that a breach of privilege has been committed. I suggest that a mistake has been made by an hon. member for which he has apologized and which he has attempted to correct.

(Translation):

Having heard the explanation given by the hon. member for Îles-de-la-Madeleine, I am of the opinion that the matter is now closed.

Will the house allow me to add that suggested changes concerning remarks made in the house must be confined to correction of errors and essential minor alterations.

(Text):

In other words, if hon. members will refer to the back cover of Friday's Hansard they will see there a notation by the editor to the effect that suggested changes must be confined to the correction of errors and essential minor alterations.

(Translation):

The same thing is said in French.

(Text):

Under the circumstances, an apology having been given and an explanation having been offered to the house, I think the matter should rest there.

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I bow to your decision but I am of the opinion that it would be in the interest of the house if the hon. member for Îles-de-la-Madeleine—

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order, please; I think the matter has been dealt with sufficiently.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

WEST BLOCK—ARRANGEMENTS FOR MEMBERS TO SEE FACILITIES USED BY NATO

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): I should like to announce, Mr. Speaker, that arrangements have been made with you to show a group of members interested the accommodation which was used by NATO in the west block. Any members who wish to see these rooms should meet at 2 p.m. this afternoon at the main entrance of the centre block. Officials of the public works department will accompany the group on this occasion.

INQUIRY AS TO AVAILABILITY OF SEATING PLANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State. Would the minister advise the house when the queen's printer will have seating plans available in order that hon. members may be able to recognize their new colleagues by name and riding?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I believe the seating plans are being printed at the present time. I hope they will be available if not today, then tomorrow.

OPERATION OF CAFETERIA IN CENTRE BLOCK

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Vancouver East directed a question to the house leader which, in my new capacity as housekeeper, was referred to me.

I wish to inform hon. members and those employees of the house who are interested in this matter that I have been advised by the house leader that arrangements have now been made to set up a committee of the house later this day to deal with the matter. In the interim I am pleased to inform the house, as a matter of rapid decision, that effective today arrangements have now been made to serve packaged sandwiches, soup, juices, milk, coffee and chocolate bars between the hours of 10 a.m. and 10 p.m. in the centre block cafeteria. Perhaps I should also point out to all hon. members that of course more complete cafeteria service is available in the west block.

REPRESENTATION OF CONSTITUENCY OF NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the other day the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre inquired about the return of the member for the Northwest Territories. I feel I should let the hon. gentleman know that the four clear days required by the law within which application for a recount may be made will expire at midnight tonight. To the best of my knowledge and the knowledge of the office of the chief electoral officer there has not been and is not likely to be any such application. If there is none before midnight tonight, the queen's printer is making arrangements to bring out an extra edition of the Canada Gazette tomorrow morning so that the hon. member in that case should be in a position to take his seat tomorrow afternoon. I may say there has been no delay whatsoever in this matter beyond that which is required by a statute made by this parliament.

[Later:]

PARLIAMENTARY RESTAURANT—PERSONNEL ON JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, may I have unanimous consent to revert to motions for the purpose of moving a motion with respect to the restaurant committee? I have spoken to the whips about this.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Has the hon. minister unanimous consent to revert to motions for that purpose?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wish to move, seconded by the hon. member for Niagara Falls (Miss LaMarsh):

That Mrs. Konantz and Messrs. Boulanger, Cowan, Cyr, Doucett, Ethier, Forgie, Gelber, Gregoire, Gundlock, Hales, Horner (The Battlefords), Irvine, Laprise, MacRae, Martin (Timmins), Matheson, McNulty, Muir (Lisgar), Noble, Pugh, Rinfret, Tucker, Webster, Whelan be appointed to assist Mr. Speaker in the direction of the restaurant, as far as the interests of the Commons are concerned, and to act as members of a joint committee of both houses on the restaurant; and that a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint their Honours therewith.

Motion agreed to.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

MEETING OF MINISTER WITH GENERAL NORSTAD

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of National Defence a question with regard to an article which I am informed appears in today's Toronto Telegram to the effect that, with some diffidence, upon being asked a question as to whether he had a secret meeting with General Norstad last fall, he admitted he had. Would he tell the house the nature of this secret meeting?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, when I came back last fall I told hon. members in the house, as well as others, that while over there I had been fully briefed by the top military and political people of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, and the then prime minister was very much aware of those briefings.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I would ask the hon. gentleman, did he secretly see General Norstad and did he receive from him information of a variety that satisfied his curiosity?

(Translation):

VALCARTIER RESEARCH CENTRE—TRANSPORTATION EXPENSES OF STAFF

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Associate Minister of National Defence whether his department considers that the government should continue to pay transportation expenses of the Valcartier research centre staff?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to the hon. member for having given me notice of his intention to ask that question.

I can tell him that we are making a thorough study of the question and that I shall get in touch with him as soon as possible.

(Text):

HUMAN RIGHTS

STEPHENVILLE, NFLD.—U.S. NEGRO SERVICEMEN DENIED ADMISSION TO CLUB

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Has the minister's attention been drawn to the fact that some 20 Negro United States servicemen from Harmon air force base were denied admission to the Clover club at Stephenville, Newfoundland.

In view of the international implications of such action, what steps does the minister propose to take, in conjunction with the provincial authorities, to prevent a repetition of this unfortunate incident?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the article in question was just brought to my attention on my way into the house, and if my information is correct this club is operated by a United States citizen—

Mr. Douglas: In Canada.

Mr. Hellyer: —in Canada, outside of the base area. In that case it would, I believe, under the constitution come under the authority of the provincial government, and if these facts are correct then I am asking my friend the Secretary of State to bring the matter to the attention of the attorney general of that province.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED TELEGRAM TO VATICAN ON ILLNESS OF POPE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question in French to the Prime Minister.

(Translation):

Is it the Prime Minister's intention to send, on behalf of the people of Canada, to His Holiness Pope John XXIII a telegram extending our wishes for a prompt recovery?

(Text):

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that matter is already under consideration and the telegram is being drafted.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

WINNIPEG—TRANSFER OF OVERHAUL AND MAINTENANCE BASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Has the government of Canada been approached by the government of Manitoba with a view to the sending of a delegation to appear before the government of Canada regarding the retention of the T.C.A. maintenance and overhaul base at Winnipeg? If so, will this delegation be received?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the question is yes. I may add that no date has been set for receiving the delegation because the minister of industry and commerce for the province of Manitoba in his telegram suggested that he would communicate with the federal government again within the next few days to arrange an appointment.

CONSTRUCTION IN CANADA OF NEW PLANES TO BE ACQUIRED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of reports that Trans-Canada Air Lines will need $200 million worth of new jet liners beginning in 1966, would the minister assure the house that the fullest consideration will be given to working out means by which these planes can be built in Canada?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Hellyer.]

INDUSTRY

URANIUM—REPORTED CLOSING OF MINE AT ELLIOT LAKE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question which I wish to direct to the Minister of Labour, but as it affects constituents of the right hon. Prime Minister maybe he would care to answer it. As it is reported by a former Liberal cabinet minister, Hon. Robert Winters, that another uranium mine will shortly be closed at Elliot Lake, what steps does the government propose to take to assist these unfortunate miners?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): The government proposes to take every step possible regarding the closure of the mine in question, which my hon. friend has referred to, but this closure is being carried out under the obligations of a contract made by the previous government with the company in question.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the alibi of course has no application—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —but I ask the Prime Minister, did Mr. Winters allow him to know in advance that this was going to be done?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, it was obvious from the terms of the contract made by my right hon. friend that this had to be done, and he himself knew of it well in advance.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is not so. On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, that suggestion is false.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is not a question of privilege.

Mr. Pearson: On the question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, if the Leader of the Opposition is correct in his statement of privilege it is unfortunate that he does not know the terms of the contract made by his own government.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question in view of the answer he gave to the original question. Will any of these actions that he contemplates result in a reduction in the amount supplied to the uranium market by the mines in Uranium City, Saskatchewan?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, all the uranium producing areas should be treated in the same way in these matters, so no particular area will be given preferential consideration over any other area.

LIVESTOCK

REPORTED DANGER OF OUTBREAK OF ANTHRAX

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. I notice that he is not in his seat; perhaps he is still auctioning cattle. However, would the parliamentary secretary to the minister, or the associate minister, take this question as notice. My question stems from an article in the Financial Post of May 23. The headline is "Anthrax a menace to the west". It goes on to say that this disease can be readily spread through wildlife, foxes, caribou, buffalo, and so on.

Are steps being taken by the Department of Agriculture to guard against or prevent a further outbreak of this dreaded disease, which could do untold harm to the livestock industry and create a serious health hazard with untold social and economic implications?

Hon. Rene Tremblay (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, this question has been studied by the department and we have taken action in this regard.

Some hon. Members: What action?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister inform the house at the earliest possible moment what action the department is taking to prevent the spread of this disease?

Mr. Tremblay: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

FINANCE

SALE OF GOVERNMENT BOND ISSUES IN UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I would direct my question to the Minister of Finance. According to figures released by the dominion bureau of statistics there has been a record flow of United States capital into Canada during the first quarter of 1963 due to federal and provincial government borrowing. My question is, would the minister clearly state whether it is his plan to continue the previous government's policy of encouraging the flow of United States capital into Canada through the sale of bond issues in the United States?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. gentleman for giving me notice of his question. I shall have something to say at the appropriate time about the need for and the role of foreign capital in Canada. All I need say now in answer to the hon. member's question is that a continued inflow of foreign capital will be welcomed by this government. Decisions respecting borrowings by the government in the United States market will be made in the light of the circumstances and conditions prevailing from time to time.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO SETTING UP OF COURT OF CLAIMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, or the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the speech from the throne makes no reference to the setting up of a court of Indian claims, I wonder whether the minister could inform the house of the intentions of the government in this connection for the current session of parliament.

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, this question is under consideration at the present time.

IMMIGRATION

VANCOUVER, B.C.—ALLEGED INTERFERENCE WITH CHINESE IMMIGRANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. I asked the minister last week whether his department had received complaints from Chinese groups in Vancouver relative to an alleged government crack down or interference with so called illegal Chinese immigrants. The hon. gentleman said at that time, if I understood him rightly, that he would look into the matter and be prepared to make a statement later on. I wonder if he is yet able to answer my question.

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): I am now in a position to answer that question, although I think it is one which should more properly have been placed on the order paper.

As hon. members are aware, this matter has been under investigation since 1960, and Chinese groups have from time to time complained about the investigation. The present policy, which was inherited from the previous administration, is that persons who entered Canada illegally prior to July 6, 1960—which is the date of the declaration of the amnesty—would not be deported or prosecuted for offences committed prior to that date.

These persons were invited to come forward voluntarily and give truthful statements pertaining to the circumstances of their illegal entry. The status in Canada of those coming forward is being adjusted. Persons in Canada who engaged in organizing illegal entries for personal gain were not included in the amnesty.

We are giving careful consideration to the present policy, and if any changes are decided upon they will be made known in due course.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

CONSTRUCTION IN CANADA OF SUBMARINES FOR CANADIAN NAVY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): I have a question to direct to the Minister of Defence Production. Can the minister assure us that the three submarines requested by the Royal Canadian Navy will be built in Canada by Canadian shipyards?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Defence Production): I thank the hon. member for having given me notice of this question. The three submarines to which he made reference were tentatively included in a program drawn up by the previous government. As the hon. member knows, this program is now under review by my hon. friend the Minister of National Defence and his colleagues. Consequently no decision has been taken at the moment as to whether these submarines should be acquired.

In the event that a decision is taken to acquire these submarines, it will be recalled that an announcement was made by the previous government that they would be procured in Britain if suitable reciprocal defence orders could be obtained. It will be the intention of this government to continue to look toward a reciprocal defence order program with the United Kingdom.

INQUIRY AS TO ALLOCATION OF NAVAL REFITS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Defence Production, and I regret that I have not given him notice. It is in regard to naval refit allocations made prior to April 8. Will these refits be allocated now, and I have in mind particularly the refit scheduled for the North Sydney marine railway which was due to enter that yard in the latter part of May or the first part of June?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Defence Production): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to look into this matter and answer tomorrow.

[Mr. Favreau.]

(Translation):

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

QUEBEC—TEACHING OF FRENCH TO ESKIMOS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Is it the minister's intention to prescribe the teaching of French as a second language in the Eskimo schools of new Quebec?

(Text):

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): I should like to take that question as notice.

FISHERIES

NORTH PACIFIC COMMISSION—EXTENSION OF JAPANESE FISHING RIGHTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he is now in a position to answer the question which the acting minister took as notice last Friday.

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): As the question directed to my colleague by the hon. member for Queens referred to regulations concerning the Department of Fisheries, may I be allowed to reply now. The hon. member's question was as follows:

> Would the minister state precisely what action the government has taken with regard to the finding of the international north Pacific fisheries commission that certain stocks of fish no longer qualify for abstention under the terms of the North Pacific Fisheries Convention Act?

The answer is as follows. The government has accepted the commission's recommendations and has advised the commission accordingly. It has also approved by order in council the amendment to the northern Pacific halibut fisheries regulations as recommended by the commission. The decision was taken on May 7, and the order in council was passed on May 23.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Minister of Fisheries for his reply, and I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs a related question. Would the minister table the instrument of ratification referred to by the Minister of Fisheries? Could I also ask him whether he found it unnecessary or undesirable to comply with the repeated request of the present minister of northern affairs, as recorded in Hansard, that this matter be referred to the standing committee on marine and fisheries or external affairs?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I shall be glad to look into that, Mr. Speaker.

GRAIN

OATS AND BARLEY—INQUIRY AS TO QUOTAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. On Thursday last I asked a question with reference to what we might expect as far as quotas were concerned in the west. Is he prepared to answer that question today?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member asked me whether I could inform the house that there will be an open quota on grain delivery for the present crop year as there was for the last. By way of preliminary to the answer to this question I should like to point out that producer marketings of all grains to May 15 this crop year have been 451 million bushels, as compared to only 277 million bushels at the same date last year.

I am informed by the Canadian wheat board that although a great many producers should be able to deliver all the grain on their farms by the end of the crop year, it is highly unlikely that open quotas will prevail throughout all of western Canada by July 31 next.

[Later:]

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the reply given by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, will the Prime Minister indicate to the house whether the agriculture committee will be set up and have the Canadian wheat board called before it prior to the summer recess of parliament?

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would hope that the house would agree to set up that committee at the earliest possible date.

UNITED NATIONS

ATTENDANCE OF CANADIAN MINISTERS AT SPECIAL SESSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the grave financial crisis involving the very existence of the United Nations itself, does either the Prime Minister, as I believe he promised during the recent election campaign, or the Secretary of State for External Affairs plan to attend at once the current special session of the United Nations to lead the Canadian delegation and lend their experience to doing everything possible to resolve the present difficulties there?

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, no such promise was made by me during the election campaign, that I would attend a special session. I said I would attend the regular session in September with my hon. friend the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and that I propose to do.

[Later:]

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of this very grave financial crisis at the United Nations, does the Secretary of State for External Affairs intend to go to New York as soon as possible and take charge of the Canadian delegation in its efforts to solve the situation?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in answer to my hon. friend he will be interested to learn that I am going to see the secretary general of the United Nations this afternoon at four o'clock.

TRANSPORT

PICTOU, N.S.—RAIL FACILITIES FOR NEW PIER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works. Has the minister received a telegram containing a special resolution passed by the town council of Pictou, Nova Scotia, in special meeting with regard to the urgency of providing adequate rail facilities for the newly completed pier C and asking that the filling in of the area with sand and asphalt be curtailed? If so, what action is the minister taking in this matter?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his question. Unfortunately it reached me only a few minutes ago. I am going to inquire and I shall answer tomorrow.

WELLAND CANAL—INQUIRY AS TO TWINNING OF LOCKS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Is the government giving consideration to the early twinning of the single locks on the Welland ship canal?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The matter is under intensive study at the moment. I think I should point out that there are some very large issues involved, and it may take some time to resolve them.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

FILLING OF ONTARIO VACANCY ON SUPREME COURT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. Has an appointment yet been made to the Ontario vacancy on the Supreme Court of Canada?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): The matter is under consideration, Mr. Speaker.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

HANNA, ALBERTA—REPORTED REMOVAL OF CAR REPAIR DEPOT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Has he received a telegram from the town of Hanna concerning the reduction in or removal of the car repair depot by the C.N.R. in the month of June, and is he prepared to use his good offices to try and maintain this small industry in this town already abandoned by the C.N.R.?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe I have received that telegram; I think it came in yesterday. The matter is being looked into.

(Translation):

TEXTILES

INQUIRY AS TO SETTING UP OF BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice.

Does the minister intend to recommend to the cabinet the setting up of a Canadian textiles board?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, this question does not concern the Minister of Justice. Besides, I think that the hon. member will see immediately that it should be put on the order paper.

Mr. Pigeon: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister remember that on March 22, 1961, in the House of Commons, he made such a suggestion to the government?

[Mr. McMillan.]

THE MINISTRY

INQUIRY AS TO SECOND MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Clement Vincent (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Prime Minister in French. Practically all newspaper reports concerning the changes that your government intends to make in the field of agriculture mention two departments of agriculture.

Could the Prime Minister inform the house as to whether he intends to set up two departments of agriculture, one for western Canada and one for the east, or whether he just proposes to appoint a second minister of agriculture to represent eastern Canada?

(Text):

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is a resolution on the order paper dealing with this matter and it will be before the house in due course, when my hon. friend's very legitimate curiosity will be satisfied.

PIPE LINES

REPORTED INTENTION OF TRANS-CANADA TO PURCHASE NORTHERN ONTARIO SECTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre asked a question regarding the announcement that Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited is seeking to purchase the northern Ontario section of this pipe line this year. The Prime Minister accepted this question as notice pending my return to the house.

I wish to inform the hon. member that the government of Canada has approved the decision of the national energy board to grant the application of Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited to proceed with the purchase of the northern Ontario section of the all-Canadian natural gas pipe line from northern Ontario pipe line crown corporation. It is expected that the actual purchase will be carried out prior to the end of this month.

Following completion the section was leased to Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited under a 25 year lease agreement which included the provision that Trans-Canada would have the obligation to purchase the section as soon as that company could arrange the necessary finances. This obligation is now being fulfilled. It is expected that it will involve a payment of approximately $108 million by Trans-Canada to the crown corporation. Accumulative rental payments under the lease agreement are expected to amount to approximately $41 million. When the transaction is completed the Canadian government, through the crown corporation, will have recovered more than its full investment in the northern Ontario section, plus interest.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a supplementary question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce in relation to the statement he has just made in reply to the question of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. Was there any discussion with Trans-Canada pipe lines to indicate to them the desire of the government that some of the equity stock and debentures required to purchase this northern Ontario pipe line from the government would be made available to Canadians?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I think there must be some misunderstanding on the part of the hon. member about that transaction. This was simply an obligation by which Trans-Canada was required to purchase this Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation as soon as possible. This is now being done. I do not think it has any implications of the kind which are suggested by the hon. member.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. Was any effort made by the present government or by the previous government to renegotiate this contract with a view to the line being retained under public ownership?

Mr. Sharp: I cannot speak for the previous government. This transaction was, of course, in the process of being completed when we took office. No effort was made on the part of this administration to retain ownership of the crown section of the line. Under all the circumstances I think it would not be appropriate for the government to own one section of the trans-Canada pipe line indefinitely.

Mr. Peters: Did you consider buying Trans-Canada?

ARTS, LETTERS AND SCIENCES

REQUEST FOR INCREASED GRANTS TO UNIVERSITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Does his government intend to increase grants to the universities, as seems to have been requested by the province of Ontario?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as far as I know no request of that kind has been made by the province of Ontario. Representatives of the universities called on me yesterday with a view to increased financial assistance from the government, and that matter is now being considered in the light of all the other financial obligations that face the government at this time.

NATIONAL PARKS

BANFF—REPORTED CANCELLATION OF TENDERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, may I make a short correction in Hansard of May 23, page 179, the right hand column, lines 25 and 26, which reads:

Assessment of the 20 tenders has not been completed—

That should read:

—has now been completed—

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, in view of the change made by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources I should like to ask him a question. As I understand the change made today by the minister after a week has elapsed, he has changed the word "not" to "now". I take it that tenders were called for. To whom were these contracts awarded with reference to motels in Banff national park?

Mr. Laing: Mr. Speaker, within a few days or a week at the most I would expect that an announcement as to the successful tenderers would be made. I think my hon. friend is aware that due to the regulations this matter has to be approved by treasury board, and when that is done an announcement will be made as to the successful tenderers.

HISTORIC SITES AND MONUMENTS

AGREEMENT RESPECTING PRESERVATION OF SHIP "ST. ROCH"

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Can the minister inform the house whether an agreement has yet been reached between the city of Vancouver and the government of Canada to assist in the preservation of the good ship St. Roch? In view of the rapid deterioration of this famous ship the matter assumes some urgency.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): No, Mr. Speaker, not yet.

Inquiries of the Ministry

PENITENTIARIES

CONSTRUCTION OF INSTITUTION IN GREY-BRUCE CONSTITUENCY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice if he has an answer to the question I asked him yesterday.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I suggested to the hon. gentleman that he put his question on the order paper. I do not know that I can add anything other than to say that the matter to which he had reference, namely the construction of a penitentiary institution in the riding of Grey-Bruce, certainly had not been determined by the former government so far as the site is concerned. If the hon. member desires additional information I shall see that he gets it if he will put his question on the order paper.

(Translation):

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO TERMINATION OF JOINT PLANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

Does the Prime Minister intend to abolish the joint programs as called for by the Liberal party during the last federal electoral campaign?

(Text):

PUBLIC SERVICE

SUPERANNUATED FEDERAL EMPLOYEES—REQUEST FOR INCREASED PENSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the many representations the government has received from organizations of retired civil servants, is the government giving consideration to legislation to improve the position of retired civil servants similar to that which was brought down about four years ago?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not familiar with what was done four years ago, but the government is considering this whole question and I hope I will have something to say about it in the not too distant future.

[Mr. Laing.]

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON ADDRESS IN REPLY

The house resumed, from Monday, May 27, consideration of the motion of Miss Pauline Jewitt for an address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to the speech from the throne delivered by His Excellency the Administrator at the opening of the session.

Mr. H. M. Horner (Jasper-Edson): Mr. Speaker, last night at ten o'clock we were discussing some of the problems that face this country and the paucity of solutions in the speech from the throne. At the outset this morning I should like to re-emphasize my warning to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) that we in western Canada are going to be watching him very closely indeed.

I want to turn to the problems of confederation and some of the things that will have to be considered in order to make it really work. I think the first comment one should make is that some of the problems which we have to meet are problems resulting from the old Liberal policy of divide and rule. We are now suffering because of what happened during 20 years of Liberal rule, when they deliberately divided this country. I am hoping they will not do this again, but it is obvious that they are on the same track. We in western Canada are certainly concerned over this fact. As I said last evening, we are firm proponents of confederation. We want to see a whole Canada. We want to see a united Canada. In addition to that, we want to see a Canada run by Canadians without this interference from our neighbours in financial and political matters.

I believe that one of the prime responsibilities of the press in Canada is to take a new look at what they have been doing. I believe that on their doorstep lies the responsibility for some of this division which now exists in Canada. I suggest to some members of the press that they pay more attention to reporting the facts than to building up their own egos or images as Hollywood stars or as interpreters of the news. Most of them do not have the necessary background information to make an accurate interpretation of the news as they continually purport to do. They have a responsibility if they are going to maintain the freedom of the press in Canada, if they are going to do their part in promoting unity within Canada. This unity is necessary in order to make Canada a growing, developing country. If this unity is to be achieved, then the press must become more constructive, more positive in their approach instead of continuing this negative, destructive approach which we have seen exhibited by some members of the press gallery and the press generally throughout Canada during the last two years.

I believe confederation can only work in Canada if all of us have as our goal a united Canada. The members of the press, having the prime responsibility for communication among the various ethnic groups, among the various regions in Canada, have not met their responsibilities. I am suggesting to them that they should pull up their socks and help us build Canada instead of destroying it.

I should like also to say something with regard to our position in the world. During the last election campaign we heard a lot of nonsense, some of it engendered by our friends in the press and all of it started by the Liberal party, to the effect that Canada's prestige abroad had gone down. This is such utter nonsense that it needs to be commented upon. I suggest to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) that if Canada's prestige does not go down now that we have become a satellite of the United States in connection with nuclear arms, I will be very surprised. One of the things that struck us when we attended the commonwealth conference last fall was the fact that Canada could play a role with these newly developing countries in Africa and Asia. I will always remember the suggestion given to me by the Malayan delegate. He said "You people really are not part of the commonwealth at all; you are an appendage of the United States". If they thought of us in that fashion then, what must they be thinking of us now?

The Liberals talked about loss of prestige. Our prestige was never higher than under the leadership of the former prime minister, the present Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker). Is it loss of prestige if a few newspaper reporters in certain countries such as the United States and the United Kingdom felt we were not doing exactly what they thought we should do? What utter nonsense. What utter irresponsibility by these people. I suggest that the Secretary of State for External Affairs will have to walk with his head bowed when he does return to the United Nations, because Canada will not be able to stand up and take the position she did previously. This situation will result from the decision, which is not final yet as far as I am concerned, regarding nuclear arms and our position in NORAD.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I want to reemphasize the importance to Canada of making confederation work, the importance of taking these two languages and two nations and building them into one. Then there is the question of the division between urban and rural people, which has been fostered by the daily press in Canada. I suggest that the members of the daily press should have a look at some of the things the weekly editors across this country have been saying, and should accept some advice from these people. We need better support from the members of the press if we are going to have a united Canada and a confederation that really works.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): As I rise to take part in this debate, Mr. Speaker, I should like to join with the many others who have extended to you and the Deputy Speaker, as well as the deputy chairman of committees, their sincere congratulations. If the manner in which the proceedings of this house have been handled so far is any indication of what we can expect in the future, I think all hon. members will be satisfied. I should like also to offer my sincere congratulations to the mover and seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne.

I do not wish to cover a lot of the ground that has been covered by hon. members who preceded me in this debate. In so far as the speech from the throne is concerned, first of all I should like to suggest that the preamble certainly does recognize the bicultural character of Canada. There are, however, one or two commonly held thoughts which I believe are erroneous which are brought out in the speech from the throne. The first is the separation of Quebec from the rest of Canada. There is a reference to the French sector, and the other nine provinces seem to be referred to as the English sector.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in the past there existed the same division between eastern and western Canada. At that time the dividing line was somewhere west of lake Superior. We had repetitious references to the fact that there was a division along that line. I feel it would be unfortunate indeed if we were to now continue that line of thinking by moving the border to the Ottawa river. We have French communities in Alberta. We have French communities in many other parts of western Canada. In addition we have large numbers of people, even in my own riding, with French ancestry. I suggest too, Mr. Speaker, that we in western Canada have just as much in common with Montreal as we have with Toronto. For example in the clothing and needle trades I think it is fair to say western Canada buys more of this type of merchandise in Montreal than it does in Toronto. That is to say it buys more from Quebec than it does from Ontario. I shall not labour the matter at length except to point out I would not like to see a division along the lines of separating Quebec from the rest of Canada in the so-called bicultural nature of our country.

People come from Quebec to western Canada just as young people in particular go to eastern Canada from Alberta, and there are social adjustments that have to be made in each case. I can remember that not so long ago three young fellows from the province of Quebec called at my farm. They had just enough English so that we could get along and communicate with each other, although certainly they were not too proficient in this language. It happened to be a season of the year when we required some additional help so we hired all three of them. That was several years ago. One of the young men proved capable and interested in the work and type of opportunity available there, and by now he has made a huge success of it. He adapted himself to the working conditions in the agricultural sector and now holds one of the best jobs in the area.

I have not followed the progress of the second young lad, but the third one could not adjust and I understand he went back to Quebec rather sadly disillusioned, if I may put it that way, with his experience in western Canada. By the same token young people from western Canada have moved to Toronto and Montreal, drawn by the bright lights and the opportunities they thought were just waiting for them. However, they were strangers in the large cities, and some of them have come back to western Canada pretty disillusioned with what they had thought were greener pastures.

I shall not say more about that at this time, except to state that I do not believe all the problems, in either English or French Canada, are going to be solved by bilingualism. People will learn other languages only when there is an economic need for them to do so. These language differences are not confined solely to Canada. Just a couple of days ago I noticed in the press where 1,500 people were demonstrating in Belgium with a view to separating Belgium into two countries, one for those who speak French and the other for those who speak Flemish. Language difficulties are also present in many other major countries. India and China have a multiplicity of languages which divide them and make communication among their peoples almost impossible.

Even in such a very small country as Nigeria, which we visited last fall, we found three separate languages, three large language groups, besides English. The western region, the eastern region and the northern region each had its own language, and people who did not have the opportunity to learn the three languages simply could not communicate with one another except by the common language only a few of them had, and that was English. Therefore I do not appreciate the allegation that removing this language barrier in itself will solve the problem. Furthermore I do not believe there will be a determined effort, by those people who only have one or other of these languages, to learn a second language until there is an economic need for them to do so.

Mr. Speaker, the matter of Canada's commitments in international defence and her contribution to the western alliance has received a great deal of attention in this debate. I am happy to see that the government is proposing a resolution to set up a committee of 18 to study this problem. That committee will provide information, perhaps even classified or secret information, to members of all parties so we can have a fairly good idea what Canada's commitments are, and perhaps we can have unanimity as to what she should do to meet those commitments.

The other day I asked the Prime Minister whether he had taken any steps to renegotiate our commitments to the western alliance. His answer was not particularly clear, but I certainly did not ask the question with a view to embarrassing him or reminding him of one of his statements that he perhaps regretted having made; because I think there is some merit in his suggestion that we first of all meet the commitments we have made and then possibly renegotiate them so that we can take on a role more in keeping with Canada's position as a middle power in the world.

The reason I say this is that one of the greatest dangers in the world today is when we have a direct confrontation between the two major powers. The Secretary of State for External Affairs yesterday referred to this briefly, and looking back over the last two or three years I am sure we all agree that the periods of greatest tension were those two occasions when there was direct confrontation between the two major powers.

September, 1961 at Berlin, when Russian and United States tanks were facing each other across the border, was one of those occasions. My own feelings, and those of the community in which I live, were very tense in that situation. Quite frankly, I believe it would have been immeasurably safer had the troops on both sides of that border been troops from middle power nations. This would give the major powers an opportunity to sit back and perhaps referee the situation and allow it to cool off in case someone had accidentally fired or misinterpreted a command, or something of that nature. Even today I shudder to think what would have happened in that situation had either United States or Russian troops opened fire.

Of course the greatest tension in recent history was when the confrontation of Americans and Russians took place on the high seas off Cuba. I am not suggesting there was a place in that situation where the middle nations could have avoided such a confrontation; nevertheless we can all agree that if there is a place and a role for the middle nations it is in such matters, so that we can keep the major powers from getting into a situation where either one or the other would lose face by backing down a little.

There are a number of other suggestions in the speech from the throne that could be very, very useful if properly implemented. The municipal development fund that is suggested is one of the most far reaching and useful proposals, if it is set up properly and if it becomes active enough to meet the demands that will be made on it. Of course we in this party over the years, and particularly during the last election campaign, suggested that the social capital or social credit necessary for the municipalities to meet their expansion requirements could be supplied far better from a branch of the Bank of Canada, rather than having them go out into the private money market where they must compete, with private industry, thus forcing up interest rates.

So we will have to wait until we have a more specific outline of what this measure is going to do. Certainly if it is set up properly I think it will be very, very useful. We have in Alberta a model, perhaps, that could be used in this regard. Although of course we do not have the resources of the Bank of Canada behind the municipal finance corporation out there, it certainly does give an opportunity for all municipalities in all parts of the province to obtain their social capital requirements at a rate of interest substantially lower than would be obtainable if each of them were to go to the money market individually to get these funds.

Therefore we will leave that for the moment, Mr. Speaker. I think our party will have a great deal to say in the debate that will take place on the setting up of this fund, because we look upon it as something that can be useful. On the other hand, we would not like to see it suffer the same fate as the municipal assistance program that was set up prior to 1940, which program simply disappeared.

Mr. Speaker, there are one or two other suggestions contained in the speech from the throne about which I have something to say. There is the proposal for a new department of agriculture act to be placed before parliament with a view to the appointment of a second minister of agriculture. I am a little apprehensive about this. I agree that the problems facing agriculture in eastern Canada are somewhat different than those in western Canada, but only in some aspects. I say this because certain agricultural products are common to both areas. It is just possible that this proposal, if carried out, will cause too much of a division in this department. To my mind this may create more problems than it would solve. On the other hand the proposal that there be an associate minister of agriculture who will give special attention to the problems of farmers in one particular area sounds a very good idea. We know this is a very large department and perhaps special attention should be given to certain areas.

I should like for a few moments, Mr. Speaker, to return to my own constituency. I would inform the house that the greatest problem there today is drought. This is a recurring problem that has been with us in a very severe way for the last four years. I am certainly not going to try to attach any blame for this to either the previous Conservative government or the present Liberal government. However, I want hon. members to know that while some of them speak of the hardships that come with an average income of $1,800 or $1,300, or various other figures, for the farming sectors of their constituencies, for the last four years in my constituency hundreds of farmers have had no income at all because of drought. In fact they have had substantial losses. They are now living on an accumulation of capital, not cash capital but depreciation and other things. Certainly this cannot go on very much longer.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, I am not trying to attach any blame to anyone for this, but I do hope some assistance will be provided by this government which will enable those who are vexed with this problem to get over this very trying period. Certainly when we look back over the weather patterns in this area we are convinced that this is going to change. In spite of the fact that the last drought period was longer and more severe than any in recorded weather history, we still hope that it will change. We hope it will change even this year. But if it does not, it will be necessary for both the provincial and federal governments to come forward with some assistance to at least maintain the breeding stock of the cattle business, and so on, so they will not be completely dissipated when the weather and drought conditions do improve.

One other serious problem in my constituency is the continual decrease in the output of the flour milling industry. Looking back over the records of our exports of flour we find that year after year for the last five or six years there have been decreases in the amount of flour Canada has exported, particularly to some of the nations in the Far East. I think it is fair and safe to say that the flour milling industry in Medicine Hat was established with a view to supplying the flour requirements of the Orient and some of the south Pacific countries. Some of these countries have of course established their own flour milling plants, in the last few years, and this is one of the main reasons for the decline in exports.

However, in Canada we produce in abundance the raw material that goes into this industry. I would urge the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Agriculture, when they go into the international markets to sell wheat or other food from Canada's surpluses, to take into consideration the fact that we already have a large, established flour milling industry which produces the highest quality flour. Perhaps in some of the wheat deals we are making part of the content could be made up of the finished product.

The matter of ARDA has been raised a number of times in this debate, and I want to say a word or two on this question. In the southeast corner of Alberta we have set up what is known as the short grass ARDA advisory committee. This committee is composed of a large number of organizations. I believe on the committee there are very competent men representing those organizations, and they have come forward with some very useful, practical and feasible suggestions to make use of what was anticipated in this act. No. 1 on their list of recommendations is the need for more positive information relating to ground water reserves for the southeast corner of Alberta. Many livestock operations are at the moment experiencing the most severe shortage of stock watering facilities in their history. This, of course, is because of the prolonged drought, but it is quite obvious that the most complete system of dams and dugouts is quite inadequate when there is no run-off to fill them. This committee says the immediate answer would appear to be water wells, but farmers are reluctant to dig wells after expensive failures with either dry holes or inadequate supplies of surface ground water.

The need is more widespread than just stock watering, as many small towns, villages and hamlets are at the present time very short of good drinking water. They recommend—and I think it is a good recommendation—that a systematic ground water survey be undertaken to indicate large aquifers, underground channels or rivers and even supplies of water large enough to permit pump irrigation. I may say, Mr. Speaker, that the ground water division of the Alberta research council has indicated what might be accomplished by its limited operations in this area. This committee also recommends that some additional encouragement and perhaps some financial assistance by way of long term credit be extended for the carrying out of proper and adequate land levelling in the irrigated areas of this part of Canada. I think it is generally agreed by all those who have studied the problems of the irrigated farm that many of the difficulties could be removed if there were adequate land levelling so the best possible use could be made of the acres "under the ditch".

One project which I think it would be appropriate to reassess at this time is the Redcliff-Ronalane irrigation scheme. There is new interest in the potentiality of some specialty crops and, moreover, there is the growing importance of livestock production in the constituency. The reason it is appropriate to reassess this project is because of the severe loss of stock water in the area resulting from the condition of extreme drought which has persisted during the last four years.

These are the suggestions I have to make regarding what could be done to assist as many farmers as possible in this area. I hope the Department of Agriculture or whoever is responsible for the ARDA program will give consideration to the proposals I have made.

There is one other point I have to make, and it concerns the establishment of a veterinary college in Alberta. I wish to urge the Minister of Agriculture in the most sincere way I know to make some financial contribution to this project at an early date. The province of Alberta is prepared to make a large contribution to set up this college in Edmonton, and to get it under way as soon as possible. I hope there will be no undue delay in doing so. It is interesting to note that a few days ago the Globe and Mail carried a story which read as follows:

> There is a shortage of veterinarians throughout the world but the need is most acute in the developing countries, says the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization.

We have a shortage of veterinarians even in Canada, and we know that the facilities for training them are simply not adequate to meet the needs of our own people. This, I think, is an important consideration. Our exports of livestock to the United States may at some stage reach a point where they will depend upon the manner in which we can control disease. So we are dependant upon having sufficient veterinarians to keep livestock diseases in check.

The Prime Minister said at the outset of this debate that he hoped some years from now we could all look back with pride on the work of the twenty sixth parliament. I hope this statement comes true. I also hope that when we do look back upon the first session of the twenty sixth parliament we will be able to say we achieved something for the good of Canada generally. In conclusion, may I say there are many details of the proposals set out in the speech from the throne which will be examined as each of these measures is brought to the floor of the House of Commons. I hope the legislation will be brought down as quickly as possible so that we may get on with our work and implement some of them for the well being of the people we represent.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): My opening remarks will be characterized by sincerity if not by originality, Mr. Speaker. I should like to congratulate you warmly on your election and appointment as Speaker of this house.

The leader of the New Democratic party has already made it clear in this chamber that the members of this group are ready to give the government a chance to carry out the program outlined in the speech from the throne. To this end we offer hon. members opposite a high measure of co-operation—critical co-operation, but very real co-operation none the less. We shall seek to join with the government and with other parties in this house to make the twenty sixth parliament of Canada an effective instrument for the welfare of the people of Canada.

Perhaps, however, I should give a warning to those members of the government and their supporters who happen to be in the house. We do not suggest, by this offer of co-operation, that the millenium has arrived. We do not believe that politics are entirely banished from this house. Indeed, if the government does anything good we shall take the credit for it; if the government does anything bad, we shall point it out as clearly as we know how. I must say that the lamb—I think hon. members know to whom I refer—is not yet ready to lie down with the lion. We do not relish the thought of being inside that animal.

Seriously speaking, there are some goals of achievement which I believe this parliament should set before it. I know this is repetitive, but I believe, as the speech from the throne indicated, that the first and most urgent task which faces us is to conquer unemployment.

No modern country can tolerate unemployment on the scale that has become chronic in Canada. The economic waste is obvious and staggering; the human waste is worse. There can be few members of this house who have not had the painful duty of telling numbers of their constituents, eager and anxious to find work, that there is nothing they can do to help immediately. This is particularly tragic when those who seek work are over 40 and are told that by reason of their age there is no place for them in the economic system. If someone were to come into this house and tell each member who is over 40 that he was to be retired for good, there would indeed be wailing and gnashing of teeth; and rightly so, because not many members would be left. There would be only a corporal's guard. Yet this is the experience which happens to hundreds of thousands of our constituents every day, and we must do something about it.

The speech from the throne contains promise of certain economic measures designed to deal with this overriding problem of unemployment. I hope these instruments will be used vigorously and fearlessly for the purpose of the economic planning that is essential. We must not only will the end of unemployment, we must also will the means necessary to end it. These means must include, as up to date economists concede, the large scale infusion of social capital into the economic system. In this connection, in my opinion, the provision of adequate housing has an important part to play.

I trust that the proposed municipal development and loan board will ensure that the projects to be financed include large scale plans for urban renewal, low rental public housing and rehabilitation of existing housing that is threatened with decay. In the metropolitan area of Toronto we are justly proud of the Regent Park development. A three bedroom apartment in Regent Park rents for $50.50 a month. A comparable apartment outside rents for $150 a month. In metropolitan Toronto it is estimated that at least 30,000 people are without a decent place to live. They are members of low income families who cannot afford proper housing. We need more and more Regent Park developments in this country.

It is often said that one of the major problems facing us is the high cost of living. In this problem the rental payments for those who rent, or the mortgage payments for those who have bought their own homes, is a major factor. We worry, and properly so, about small increases in the price of milk or bread or some such other essential commodity; I hear one of my colleagues mention sugar. The greatest pressure on the cost of living today comes from the extremely high cost of another basic commodity, housing.

In my constituency the major problem of housing is the danger of the gradual depreciation and decay of the existing stock of housing, most of which was built some 50 or 60 years ago. Any housing program should include a plan for encouraging and giving incentive to bringing this existing stock of housing up to date; it should include incentives to improve facilities and the environment of areas which are already built up. The present housing act has done something to provide housing for medium income groups in suburbs, but it has done very little to rehabilitate and renew the existing stock of housing where you already have services, schools, and other things provided in the larger cities. The urban centre requires attention.

Mr. Speaker, I was glad to note that the speech from the throne made reference to amendments to the National Housing Act. These amendments, however useful, will not be enough. More is required. We need vigorous and active leadership from the federal government if we are really to tackle this problem of housing. There are already provisions in the National Housing Act for low rental housing. Again referring to metropolitan Toronto, they adopted a modest program for building 5,000 low rental units in five years. So far in the period they have produced only 550 units. I myself was connected indirectly with a project of the federal government in 1953 which was a partnership project with the government of Ontario under the National Housing Act. They acquired 1,800 acres of high class farming land in the neighbourhood of Toronto. They expropriated the farmers' property and turned them off their farms. It cost them nearly $2 million and interest has no doubt been paid over the last ten years, as this instance occurred some ten years ago. Not one house has been built, not one lot sold, not a single service provided in this area. We will need better planning than that particular effort in housing.

It is our view that by effective leadership in the field of housing the federal government could kill two birds with one stone. It could provide employment and at the same time reduce the cost of living for a basic essential of life, and incidentally improve the environment and living standards of many Canadians. We shall await with a great deal of interest how the government proposes to fill out the bare reference in the speech from the throne to amendments to the National Housing Act, because in our view this field provides an important weapon to deal with the whole problem of unemployment.

Mr. Speaker, there is another urgent task for this parliament, I suggest, and that is its own revival as a vital institution. Those of us who are frank will have to admit to ourselves that parliament has fallen into disrepute. Very few Canadians look upon parliament with the respect they should. They fail to see in it an instrument to carry out the constructive plans and purposes which are essential. I think one reason for this low esteem of parliament is the inadequacy of the procedure of this house. For that reason I, and I think my colleagues in this party, welcome the proposal in the speech from the throne that a committee on procedure be established with the aim of strengthening parliament and making it more effective. I urge that this committee be taken seriously by all hon. members of this house and that the members of the committee and of this house do not shrink from radical changes where necessary. Such changes can, in my opinion, be brought about without in any way interfering with the basic rights of the members of this house.

I have on the order paper a resolution dealing with this particular subject, and I do not intend to discuss it in detail now. Unfortunately it is well down the order paper and I doubt if it will come up for quite a long time. I would, however, suggest that very high priority be given to making more effective use of the committee system. Unless that system is working the individual members of the house who are not members of the government cannot make the contribution of which they are capable. I was interested to note that exactly the same discussions are taking place on this matter in the British House of Commons, where they too are seeing the revival of parliament through an effective committee system in which all the members of that house have their part to play in gaining expert knowledge, in contributing to the particular subject on which they are qualified to contribute, and in carrying on the business of parliament in that way.

I also suggest that steps can be taken to eliminate repetitive debate, of which my short experience in the last house gave me quite a taste, and to provide for greater brevity in speeches. I am not worried so much about the private members as about the three-hour speeches which we occasionally hear from the leaders. I think we should endeavour to provide machinery, such as is provided in Sweden and New Zealand, to review and bring to the attention of this house invasions of individual rights by governmental or bureaucratic action. I was very much encouraged by the Minister of Justice the other day when, in answer to a question, he suggested that the appointment of a parliamentary commissioner, known in Sweden as an ombudsman, would be considered by the committee on house procedure.

Amongst the other matters which are of great concern to my constituents as well as to all Canadians is a comprehensive system of contributory portable pensions, mentioned in the speech from the throne; also the subject of national health legislation or medicare, which was not mentioned. I suggest that this parliament will be judged by the people of Canada by the test of whether it is able to move ahead with other modern and civilized nations to effective legislation in both these spheres of contributory portable pensions and medicare. I do not propose to discuss medicare at this stage because my colleague, the hon. member for Hamilton South, dealt with it very fully last Thursday.

Mr. Speaker, there is one other subject with which I wish to deal, and that is an aspect of Canada's external policies. I am glad the speech from the throne has recognized that Canada's economic progress is vitally dependant on vigorous economic progress and expansion throughout the world. It also recognizes the importance of pursuing active policies for the economic development of newer nations. The fact of the matter is that there has been a serious lack of balance as between the effort and thought that have gone into traditional aspects of defence, and the effort and thought that have gone into building a world community through a world strategy of economic development. This, I suggest, is equally important to the security of Canada as to the security of the world. This imbalance between the attention given to these two subjects is symbolized by the fact that Canada's contribution to what is known as economic aid is in the order of $70 million a year, in contrast to an expenditure of $1,650 million a year on traditional defence. The proportion therefore is that of one to 23.

I suggest that it is quite impossible to face the challenge of aggressive international communism by traditional methods of defence alone. They may be necessary, but in the field of economic aid the western world is lagging and Canada lags behind other sections of the western world.

Let us take a look for just a moment at the world in which we live. It is a world in which a part, namely the western world, has achieved by and large a dynamic economy which has gone far to abolish poverty and which can be justly described as an affluent society. There are still many social injustices and much that has to be remedied, but the contrast between this affluent society and the abject poverty of two thirds of humanity is striking, and it has been growing. The sheer physical needs of the vast majority of the human race remain real, desperate and urgent. Much has been done but much more remains to be done.

The Marshall plan succeeded, through the infusion of large scale capital investment and the unparalleled generosity of the United States, in creating a viable and expanding economy in Europe which I suggest contributed as much as, if not more than, military defences, to the containment of communism. The economies of the underdeveloped countries in Asia, Africa and South America have not been devastated by war, but they too require the infusion of capital on a massive scale, on the same scale and with the same spirit that inspired the Marshall plan.

The speech from the throne recognizes this principle, because it says that the principles of Canadian external policy are those of the United Nations charter. The speech from the throne promises the promotion of the welfare of all peoples by international co-operation. I hope these words are not mere lip service as they too often have been in the past. At its fiftieth session the United Nations general assembly passed a resolution which among other things expressed the hope that the flow of international assistance and capital to developing countries would be increased substantially so as to reach as soon as possible approximately 1 per cent of the combined national income of the economically advanced countries. Canada's contribution to date has been in the order of one fifth of 1 per cent of our gross national product, so we are living up to one fifth of our obligations which the speech from the throne said we accept as the principles of Canadian external policy.

I hope this new government is going to do much better in this field, and we are going to keep an eye on what they propose to do. We will be watching very carefully to see whether the present government proposes to live up to the standards suggested in this important field by the United Nations, and to which the government has made reference in the speech from the throne.

I do not propose now to reopen the debate covered by the subamendment which was so narrowly defeated in the house the other day. I must say, though, that to me it is a tragic thing that Canada should not be leading the nations of the world away from the path of nuclear dispersion which threatens the destruction of humanity. I find this particularly tragic because the decision of the government appears to have been based upon a view as to Canada's commitments which I find it difficult, if not impossible, to share. It certainly seems to me that if any commitment was made by Canada it was a commitment which was subject to review in the light of changing circumstances.

However that may be, I take comfort from the fact that the Prime Minister, in his famous Scarborough speech on January 11, said, and I have quotations from his speech:

> How can Canada make her most effective contribution to collective security in order to avoid war?

That, he said, was the simple and basic defence question facing Canada. He then went on to make his own view, I thought, quite clear. He said:

> The government should re-examine at once the whole basis of Canadian defence policy. In particular it should discuss with the United States and with NATO a role for Canada in continental and collective defence, which would be more realistic and effective for Canada than the present one.

The present one is the one which the government is now purporting to carry out. The Prime Minister made it perfectly clear that we should at once, and these are his words, "reconsider that whole role at once". In the light of this the Prime Minister went on to make the following statement in his Scarborough speech:

> The greatly increased power and range of nuclear missiles has also, paradoxically, increased the importance of non-nuclear conventional weapons. Cuba showed that. NATO is showing it... Western military thinking is therefore putting more emphasis on the strengthening of conventional forces. For smaller powers—

I take it we are one.

> —this is economically the most feasible form of defence.

I call the Prime Minister to witness that even in his Scarborough speech on January 11 he said that the most feasible form of contribution to defence by Canada and by small nations such as Canada lies in the strengthening of conventional forces. I am also gratified that the Minister of National Defence made it clear that once the commitment which he believes was made by the former government is carried out, Canada should be able to pursue a non-nuclear role in the future. He contributed an article to The Varsity, a publication of the University of Toronto, in which he said:

> One of the questions which bothers many sincere people is this: Will not the fulfilment of our commitments now make it impossible for us to pursue anything but a nuclear role in the future? The answer in my opinion is a resounding no.
>
> [Mr. Brewin.]

This is the present Minister of National Defence speaking.

> In the future we will be able to adopt the policy which we think is most in keeping with our national objectives.

He made it clear that he thought the policy most in keeping with our national objectives was one which would forgo the nuclear role and concentrate on conventional weapons. It is for this reason that we welcome the setting up of the committee to examine defence problems, and we hope it will proceed at once, as the Prime Minister has suggested, with a reappraisal of Canada's role in the light of up to date, strategic understanding and the needs of the western alliance. If this is done we are convinced that it will indicate a non-nuclear role for Canada and, indeed, a basic change in NATO's strategic policy.

May I summarize what I have endeavoured to say to the house in these remarks. I say this parliament can be noted for effective steps to modernize Canada's provisions for social security by medicare and a contributory portable pension. It can take the necessary steps to conquer mass unemployment. It can turn away from the path of nuclear involvement. It can make real and effective efforts to build a world community through a generous world strategy of economic aid and expanding trade.

Last but not least, this parliament can revive the fading prestige of parliament itself by businesslike and efficient procedure. This, I suggest, Mr. Speaker, is an inspiring time, and we in this party, and I am sure all other members of the house will contribute all we can to make this parliament effective in this way.

(Translation):

Mr. Ian Watson (Chateauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie): Mr. Speaker, I should like first of all to congratulate you for having been unanimously chosen for the high position of Speaker of the house.

I trust that during this twenty sixth parliament, our conduct, as members of parliament, will not put an extra burden on your already heavy task.

Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to find out about the scope that is allowed in a speech on a motion for an address to His Excellency in reply to the speech from the throne delivered by His Excellency the Administrator, a motion which, I believe everybody will agree, has been extremely well presented and supported by the hon. member for Northumberland (Miss Jewett) and the hon. member for Lotbiniere (Mr. Choquette). On account of this scope, you will have to put up with a somewhat varied menu during the next few minutes.

My home town as well as the town where I now reside, are situated in the historical county of Chateauguay, one of the three counties which make up the federal riding of Chateauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie. I say it is a historical county because it is there that, exactly a century and a half ago this year, a small group of Canadian soldiers under Colonel de Salaberry, distinguished themselves in a military operation considered today by our military historians as the most important of the 1812-14 war. It was a military operation that definitely put an end to the efforts of the Americans who were trying to capture what was then the heart of Canada, the city of Montreal. If they had been successful in their efforts, the whole of Canada, after the capture of Montreal, would have surely and rapidly passed into American hands. Colonel de Salaberry, at the head of a military detachment mostly made up of French Canadians, drove back a much stronger American force in the main operation of the battle of Chateauguay. It gives me pleasure to point out here that several government departments have offered their co-operation so as to ensure a commemoration worthy of this important historical event.

As they had done when they helped England push back the army of Benedict Arnold several years before, the French Canadians at the time of the 1812-14 war recognized that it was to their mutual interest to help England to protect Canada against the forces from the south. It was unquestionably French Canada's loyalty which on October 26, 1813 prevented Canada from falling to the Americans. A hundred and fifty years later, I am convinced that it will precisely be the bicultural character of this country which will prevent Canada from losing its identity and simply becoming another state of our southern neighbours.

It was indeed comforting to learn from the speech from the throne that new and positive measures would be considered and introduced in order to preserve that alliance. The principles of freedom and equality which I think are endorsed by most Canadians must not be applied in a superficial manner or be simply ignored, but must rather make up the basis on which our two main groups, the French and the English, will find refuge, comfort and justice. If we want that status of equal partnership between the two mother races of our nation to be recognized and practised everywhere, terms and conditions will have to be brought into our constitutional regime.

But on the other hand we from Quebec must realize that the idea of an active bilingualism and biculturalism at the national level is something completely new for most people in western Canada. I am sure that English speaking Canada will accept the changes which are necessary to maintain our nation as such, but the application of those changes will meet with difficulties unless they are presented with sound and reasonable conviction, free from any kind of ill-feeling or ultimatum.

It also gives me pleasure to note that our Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) has announced that within two years, the project of a distinctive flag for Canada will be brought before this house for approval. I hope that when we adopt such a flag for our country, we will at the same time accept "O Canada" as our national anthem.

While the Chateauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie riding is renowned for its apple orchards, its herds of pure bred milch cows and for the fact that it is the main milk supplier of the Montreal metropolitan area, that region, in view of its favourable geographic situation between the seaway and the American border, is bound to know a major industrial development. I am happy to note in the speech from the throne that this government is preparing legislation on regional planning and development. I want to stress that the area composed of St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville, Chambly-Rouville, Chateauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie and Beauharnois counties have a potential for industrial development unsurpassed anywhere else in Canada. The American region south of our area, made up of northern New England and New York states, is a rather undeveloped or underdeveloped area as compared with the American area which lies right to the south of industrialized Ontario. I think that it would be possible with adequate planning and a skillful use of our assets, such as our surplus power, for the triangle composed of the southwestern part of the province of Quebec to become, in a more or less distant future, a major industrial centre serving a large portion of the northern part of the New England and New York states, with the help perhaps of some tariff agreements.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker, since the southwest triangle of Quebec, in which my constituency is located, is destined for industrial and population growth simply because of its strategic location, long term regional planning is especially important to us. We are happy that there is an indication in the speech from the throne that legislation will be introduced to encourage long term regional planning for industrial development by the setting up of regional development areas. I hope that eventually the government may create a special wing of the national research council which would concern itself with long term plans for cultural, recreational and industrial development in Canada 25 or 50 years hence.

May I call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

At one o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie): Mr. Speaker, when I left off this morning I had just completed saying that I hope the government will eventually decide to establish a special wing of the national research council, staffed with planning scientists who will be able to plan for all our needs 25 to 50 years hence.

We realize that most of the area in which this planning will be involved comes within provincial jurisdiction, but I suggest that this special wing of the national research council should have on its staff at least one or two town planners and architects of world wide reputation and that, at the request of municipalities and regional bodies, they should be able to supply plans for the long range development of a particular region with regard to industry, culture, recreation, health and accommodation. I am convinced that Canada needs such a group of theoretical planners if we are to avoid in the future the mistakes resulting from the lack of regional planning which have so characterized our past.

The constituency of Chateauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie is approximately two thirds agricultural, with dairying predominant as the major farm industry. This dairy industry is faced with two immediate and serious problems. The first is the campaign of the Montreal dairies and the refrigeration industry to force all milk producers in the Montreal milkshed to adopt bulk refrigeration units at a cost of at least $2,000 per farm. As I have heard rumours that some United States areas which have adopted these units are not satisfied with the results, I feel that our Department of Agriculture should launch an immediate, impartial inquiry into the economic benefits resulting from the introduction of these bulk units, and I have sent a letter to the Minister of Agriculture asking him to do just that.

The second problem is the removal of the 25 cents per hundredweight subsidy on fluid milk shipped to butter factories. This has adversely affected many farmers in my constituency. Although the subsidy on milk shipped to cheese factories has been increased by 30 cents per hundredweight, few cheese factories exist; and although the theory behind this move, which is that of switching milk from the production of butter, which we cannot sell, to the production of cheese which we can sell, is correct, unnecessary hardship is being caused.

I suggest that the Department of Agriculture aid butter factories that wish to change to cheese production, by providing through other government agencies the necessary credit for such changeovers. This would go a long way toward alleviating the immediate hardship and toward achieving the end result desired, which is decreased butter production and increased cheese production.

Mr. Speaker, there are approximately 10,000 Mohawk Indians living on two reservations, Caughnawaga and St. Regis, located within my constituency. These people are extremely dissatisfied with the present Indian Act, to the extent that less than a dozen voted in the last general election. The application of the same rules and regulations to Indians living in Montreal suburbia and to Indians living in the Hudson bay marshlands is absurd and antiquated. I shall go into this subject in greater detail at a later date, but let it suffice for the moment for me to state it is to be hoped the government will undertake a complete revision and modernization of the Indian Act.

The question of nuclear arms has special significance to the population of the counties of Chateauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie. At Champlain, New York, 1,000 feet from my constituency; at Mooers Forks, one and a half miles from my constituency; at Ellenburg Depot, one and a half miles from my constituency, and at Chateauguay, New York, two miles from my constituency are located four hard site offensive Atlas missile sites. The location of these sites, 300 feet underground and within 35 miles of approximately 2 million Canadians living in the Montreal region, guarantees the immediate total destruction of those counties, together with the population of the Montreal area, within the first few minutes of a nuclear conflict regardless of whether Canada remains neutral or otherwise.

To the population of my constituency it makes absolutely no sense to be complaining about defensive Bomarc missiles 300 and 400 miles away from population centres when offensive missiles exist on their very doorstep, guaranteeing their annihilation in the first minutes of any war. Because we sit in the very shadow of those offensive weapons I think we realize better than many Canadians why Canada must co-operate completely in any defensive measures which will make war less likely.

The members of the New Democratic party have argued that Canada can only have an effective voice in the world, especially among the so-called uncommitted nations, if we refuse to have anything to do with nuclear arms, but surely is it not our special relationship with our southern neighbour which gives the voice of Canada a special position in the world chorus? If this special relationship deteriorates because of our unwillingness to co-operate in the defence of this continent which we share with the United States, then surely the voice of Canada becomes less effective, whether it be in the councils of disarmament or in expounding the view of the uncommitted nations on a particular subject.

This parliament is facing many difficult problems. The right hon. Prime Minister has already indicated that he is tackling these problems energetically and decisively. I would hope that in solving these problems we would not fear taking good advice from our adversaries, and that our guiding formula will be that for each problem a solution exists which is better than any other. This best solution can be found if we gather adequate facts and undertake proper analysis.

Finally, I would hope that once this best solution is determined it will be put into effect without fear—should it mean more government control or planning—of the myth that all government control and planning is evil; and if the particular solution should lie in less government interference and the encouragement of private capital, I hope it will be effected without fear of hurting the feelings of our socialistic friends.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, as is customary I wish to say it is a pleasure for me to extend my felicitations to you and the other hon. gentlemen who have the privilege of occupying the chair. I express these words with a sincerity which is no less than when I conveyed my congratulations personally. I know that the judgment from that quarter is in good hands. I also wish to compliment the mover and the seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. Although I cannot agree with everything they said, they did justice to the task that was given them.

I notice, Mr. Speaker, that on the list of speakers for today we have the hon. lady from Winnipeg South (Mrs. Konantz), whom I certainly look forward to hearing. Although it may not be evident to the hon. lady, I have noticed that she is a very distinguished person and has deported herself well since her arrival in this house. I might say that she bears a certain resemblance to the first hon. lady to sit in this House of Commons, one of my predecessors. I think the opportunity that awaits the hon. lady from Winnipeg South is much greater than awaited my predecessor—although she will do well to equal her performance—because I recall very well that when the Liberal party decided that Miss Agnes Macphail had occupied her seat for too long, at the time of redistribution the stroke of a pen eliminated her for all time from this house.

As other hon. members have stated in their maiden speeches, I too, after my fourth election to this house, appreciate the honour bestowed upon one so humble as myself in being sent here as a representative of my constituency and of Canada. I hope the hon. members who have made such eloquent addresses will not be disillusioned in the years to come by their participation in this chamber. Certainly this has not been the case so far with myself, and I hope this attitude will not change. I came here in 1957 to represent the people of my constituency and, indeed, all Canadians. I came here to represent all those in my constituency regardless of their political affiliations. I have endeavoured to do this justly, wisely and to the best of my ability. I hope this will remain in the minds of hon. gentlemen who have delivered addresses in this chamber for the first time.

I note, however, regrettably that the old signs of patronage are already becoming evident. This is regrettable when we realize that this is the machine which ran our country prior to 1957. Indeed, just the other day—and I regret that the Secretary of State for External Affairs is not here—we noted the first of these acts in the removal of Brigadier John H. Price from his position at the United Nations, where he had served Canada well and in a distinguished manner. I can only suggest to the members of the government that this will do nothing but harm to our status in that world federation. I regret this. I do not hesitate to suggest that this type of action is becoming evident within the limits of my constituency. Since my entry into this chamber there has never at any time been any member in the government service from my constituency who has not had my support. This applies to any institution of or any position in the government which is within the boundaries of Grey-Bruce.

However, I have now noticed so early in the life of this government that it is becoming evident that the old machine that was very creaky from disuse is getting some oil at the necessary joints. I regret to see this. Not only is it happening in my constituency, but we have had evidence of this in other quarters. I warn hon. gentlemen opposite, particularly those who occupy the back benches, that they would do well to see that such practices are not again put into effect as they were prior to 1957.

It may be that the new era of Liberal control suggested in the Globe and Mail of May 23 is becoming a reality. The article in this newspaper is headed "A tighter rein on the Liberals". I believe that such a tight rein ruled prior to 1957, and as I have said, this is once again becoming evident. I do not believe that the Prime Minister himself is responsible for this, but it is under the direction of his chief lieutenant, the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill). Under his control all these things will be enforced. I also believe that the program and strategy that was used to bring the Prime Minister to his present high office was directed and controlled by the Secretary of State. I shall attempt to prove this in a very few minutes.

Before I get into the area of that argument, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that the constituency I represent is probably the hub of the furniture industry in the Dominion of Canada. I recall that in the days prior to 1957, even with the protection of a 22½ per cent tariff these people had a very difficult time competing with the big industrial machine of our neighbour to the south. The 22½ per cent protection was not enough to discourage imports into this country, and as a result this industry was placed in a very depressed condition. Through the actions of the Conservative government these people realized full employment and prosperity. They had never seen such prosperity. When I hear of the free trade program which is likely to come into being, the slashing of tariffs, I can only say to my constituents "Beware", because this is the warning I put forward during the election campaign. Even with this tariff this industry does not compete very well now, even though they have spent millions of dollars to bring themselves in line with automation and current day production methods It will be an even more difficult thing if this tariff is tampered with for these people to stay in business, as was the case prior to 1957.

However, there is one glimmer of hope which I would extend to the people of my constituency and any other constituency which has this industry within its bounds. That is that the Prime Minister has made a statement —and I have it here—to the effect that we do want some exceptions. I will hang my hat on that very small nail, hoping that when this new program becomes effective the Prime Minister and his government will see that this industry does not pass into oblivion, as we expect will be the case with other smaller secondary industries.

My constituency is also partly rural, and this causes me to consider the activities of the government in regard to that smaller agricultural industry. They are taking a great deal of joy out of the fact that they are now saving $6 million from the payment of subsidies to milk producers. We all realized that something had to be done, but I do believe this has been done to the disadvantage of the small farmer, the man we decided we would support. These people, too, come into the same category as the industrial furniture workers to whom I have referred. My job since I came here has been to stand up for these people in the smaller income categories, and I will continue to fight for them until they say they do not want me any longer. But at the present rate it will be a long, long time before they say that.

As I suggested earlier, the days of patronage seem to be returning. After what was said prior to and during the election campaign I believe this may be a necessary area for the government to move into, but if they return to their former practices they will be put into the street in short order, because I do not think the people of this country will stand for it very long. One thing I know definitely is that the people of Grey-Bruce will stand behind me with regard to the attitude I have taken toward public institutions and for the efforts I have made on behalf of those in the lower income brackets. That is the way I intend to continue, and I suggest my seat will be very secure if present indications of what might happen do come to pass. I cannot be more specific than that; the ministers concerned will know whereof I speak.

It is necessary for me to say a few things, first of all, as to the economy of the country prior to the change of government. I do not think there is anyone in this country, even in the Liberal party, who would suggest we were having anything but prosperity and good times. Yet the hon. lady from Northumberland suggested we must do something to get the economy rolling. That is a fine thing, of course. I can recall one occasion, last New Year's I think it was, when the present Prime Minister told us that one of his New Year's resolution, if he were returned to power, would be to get rid of unemployment. Canadians, he said, could expect something better out of the economy. Well, he may be right, but he had better check with the Minister of Trade and Commerce; because, speaking in Vancouver on February 20, that hon. gentleman said Canada could never eliminate unemployment. There are a number of other contradictory statements with which the right hon. gentleman will have to deal.

As for the Prime Minister himself, he and his whole party planned to kill the last parliament; they planned to destroy it and bring to an end any co-operation which existed in that twenty fifth parliament. All we have to do to confirm this is look at what he said in the house on October 1, 1962, as reported on page 74 of Hansard of that date. Listen to this:

> We have heard a good deal in recent weeks—a good deal more in recent days—of the necessity of putting the national interests above the playing of politics.

We all know what went on. We know what the circumstances were. Members opposite say there was no obstruction, but we know better. Anyone who sat in this house knows this to be the case. The right hon. gentleman went on to say:

> That talk does not come very convincingly to me at least, from those whose concern to avoid an appeal to the people could preserve a state of political weakness and uncertainty such as we have in this parliament today.

In other words he blamed us, in that brief parliament of 1962, because we would not go to the people. I will tell you why he wanted us to go, Mr. Speaker. It was because of a direct design on the part of the present Secretary of State and his minions to destroy the prime minister of the day, discredit parliament and go back to the people on bogus charges. During the campaign the people were told up and down the country that the Conservative government had been spending too much money and was putting Canada into bankruptcy. This statement was repeated time and time again. Yet here is a statement which appared in the Globe and Mail of April 18, 1961, shortly after the Liberal party convention at the Chateau Laurier. It begins:

> In promising a miraculous cure for Canada's economic ills, the Liberal party appears to be basing its seven point program of pre-election lures on the assumption that people not only can, but actually want to be fooled.

Well, if the Liberal party ever invoke the promises made at that convention they will see what a broke country looks like in comparison with the good order and high degree of prosperity which existed when the former government left office.

Certainly the former government was ready to spend money. What government with half a brain in its head would not have spent money on coming to office in 1957? There was no one happier to get rid of the responsibility of office at that time than the leader of the Liberal party and those associated with him, and no one more capable to restore conditions of prosperity than we on this side of the house.

Let us look to the United States to see what the situation is there. In the United States, with unemployment numbering 5 million, President Kennedy has proposed to budget for a deficit of $10.3 billion. I think hon. members opposite would be well advised to realize this, because in view of the promises they have made some definite action will be necessary. The people of this country will probably be looking to a balanced budget. We shall await action by hon. members opposite and see what their magic will be as this program gets rolling.

It will not be for us on this side to obstruct the business before us. I think we have deported ourselves very well already. Certainly the government will have my co-operation in this regard though it is a difficult thing for them, after what they did last year, to realize that anyone in this house can be responsible. Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, and the people of this country, precisely what happened. Let us go back to February 24, 1962. When commenting on a speech by the present Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cardin), one of the Toronto newspapers said the activities of the house had reached "a new low level". I do not have to repeat for the benefit of hon. members what was said on that occasion, but it was one of the most despicable speeches I have ever heard. I can recall another occasion when we read the report of a speech delivered in Toronto by the present Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer), in which he called the then prime minister dishonest. I think, too, of December 19 last when the present Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Teillet) was responsible for shouting down the prime minister of the day.

Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, what the plan was. It was a deliberate plan, made years before April 8, to destroy the product, which is Canada, to destroy the nerve centre, which is parliament, and then buy it back cheaply. This was the plan of hon. members who now support the government. I shall wait to see the operation of this patronage pattern take effect in order to have verified exactly what I have said. The people of my riding will get the words of this address, and I am the first to say I will back everything I have said. The government and its supporters may disagree, but we are all too well aware of what happened.

I travel now closer to the present day. I think the Liberal party is indeed fortunate to be manning the government benches on that side of the house. I say this in the light of newspaper articles predicting that the next boom will be bigger than the last one regardless of what government sits in Ottawa. This, I believe, is a well known fact among economists who have made predictions in the last few weeks. But somebody had to bring our affairs to this point, and it was a government under the direction of the Conservative party which did it. They certainly took into hand the circumstances which existed in 1957 and brought us out of a recession which the Grits were proud to wash their hands of.

Then I think, Mr. Speaker, of the charges which were made with regard to obstructionism in the last parliament, and how they continued them on the hustings. I suggest that we read the words of an editorial in the Globe and Mail of April 15, 1963. This is the Globe and Mail after the election campaign—and I repeat the Globe and Mail, Mr. Speaker:

But the opposition—

They are referring to the Liberal party.

—did waste some time and did interfere with the orderly conduct of parliament. The country will be in no mood for a similar performance during the coming parliament.

We believe this, and as a result we will certainly not put on the display that these people put on in the last parliament. If parliament reached a low, Mr. Speaker, we all know who was responsible for it, and there is certainly no question about that statement.

Then I think of a few other things which happened in the course of the election campaign. I think of the words of the present Prime Minister when he said on February 6 that he did not expect to see the election result in no party having a very clear majority in the house, but that if it did all leaders would have to search their conscience and come to the aid of their country. That is what he said in answer to a question from a newsman.

Mr. Speaker, after all the instances I have quoted I should think that the report by Mr. Lubor Zink of the Toronto Telegram would be more apt in this regard. Mr. Zink reported that the present Prime Minister did not win a clear majority, when he and the present leader of the government—that is the prime minister of that day——should resign to let the two parties work together for the good of the country.

I have heard nothing of that one, although I realize that the present Prime Minister denied that statement later on. Then Mr. Zink, who is no particular friend of this party, went on to say down the line that one or two more lies would not matter anyway. I do not know what he was referring to, but it was in direct relation to that particular question.

Mr. Speaker, it has become evident that we are not going to be terribly concerned about the economic level of this country unless this situation is tampered with. Therefore, if there is any increase in the number of undesirable areas with which we have to deal in this house, we will also be able to put the responsibility for them directly on the shoulders of this government; and, as I said, they will have my support so far as this parliament is concerned.

Because the speech from the throne is always couched in generalities we cannot refer to very many specific points. That is the purpose of a debate like this, so that we can deal with a wide range of subjects. The subject which interested me was the reference to a municipal loan fund. I am all in favour of such a fund, and I would support it. But the way the Liberal party has projected this idea is, I believe, somewhat different from what the country would expect. I do not for one moment think the country would expect the Liberal government to stay within their support of Social Credit's interest free money, such as the Minister of Finance suggested last year. I do not think that will be the case. But until I see the terms of this bill I will possess my soul in patience and wait for the bill to come forward.

Mr. Speaker, I will tell you why. The winter works program which was projected by the previous minister of labour I believe was superior to the municipal loan fund which is to come forward. The interest rate will have to be extremely low or the municipalities will not be in any different position than they are today. Mr. Speaker, look at the winter works program which was under the administration of the former minister of labour. It contributed directly to the financial support of the communities through the support which we offered to the municipalities if their projects were accepted.

In the final analysis, Mr. Speaker, we will wait and see what the legislative program will be. I am satisfied that as the days go by this party on this side of the house will deport itself and discharge its responsibilities in accordance with what I have stated. We will wait for the legislative program and do our utmost to see that the responsibility of opposition so far as the country is concerned is maintained to a much higher degree in this parliament than it was in the twenty fifth parliament of Canada.

(Translation):

Mr. Jean-Luc Pepin (Drummond-Arthabaska): Mr. Speaker, last week the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Girouard) and the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Vincent) made some rather crafty remarks concerning me. That is why I am participating in this debate. I shall be as brief, concise and calm as hon. members on this side of the house have been in the past few days when they have addressed the house.

However, as I would not want to break well established traditions, it is most natural that I should congratulate all those whom the house has honoured lately.

My riding is one of the most typical and, at the same time, one of the most beautiful in the province of Quebec and in Canada. As everybody knows, it is partly urban and partly rural; it is also typical of the whole of Canada in that it is becoming increasingly industrial and urban.

An American sociologist, Mr. Hughes, looking for the most representative city in the province of Quebec for the purpose of his book entitled "French Canada in Transition", chose the city of Drummondville.

Drummond-Arthabaska is a county where secondary industry, based on the textile and furniture industries, is experiencing all the ups and downs to which it is subjected throughout Canada, and where agriculture, dependant on milk production to a very great extent, is in almost permanent difficulties.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, it is a county which contains a sprinkling of Anglo-Saxons among a mainly French speaking population. Therefore, the problems raised by the relations between French speaking and English speaking Canadians and by federal-provincial relations take on in this riding an unusual meaning. There is a tremendous interest in those problems.

During the recent election campaign it was even said: as goes Drummond-Arthabaska, so will the whole of Quebec go. Mr. Speaker, you will admit that such a typical riding, such a representative riding must have an excellent representation here and that is what I intend to give in the years to come.

Mr. Speaker, for the next 25 years I intend to frequently talk about the problems most dear to my heart, problems which interest me passionately, problems of international relations, of constitutional law, and economic, social and farm problems.

At this stage of my remarks, I should like to say by the way that I am not an economist. I have the greatest respect and admiration for the economists, but I am not one of them, I belong to this new category of sociologists called "politologists". This could be a word to add to the vocabulary of this house where the future of politologists is bright because they are already represented in this house by the hon. member for Northumberland (Miss Jewett), whom I wish to commend for her excellent contribution to this debate, and also by the hon. member for Queens (Mr. Macquarrie).

Politologists are interested in everything. Their eagerness to find out things is uncommon, as I hope to show you in the years to come.

In England, we find in the letters to the editors the phrase "student of politics". Well, Mr. Speaker, I shall be, in this house, a "student of politics".

I intend today to talk about things I may know the least, which will give my hon. friend from St. Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard) an opportunity to say, like so many others, that I am talking through my hat.

There is a danger for me in doing this, but it may be the wise thing to do because the quality of my remarks cannot but improve as compared to my effort of today, and the press will be able to say: the young member for Drummond-Arthabaska is improving daily.

I shall refer therefore to an agricultural matter, especially that of the dairy industry, because it is an important problem for all of Canada, for the whole province of Quebec and particularly for my constituency, an important problem also for my party. In the months and years to come, the Liberal party will absolutely have to improve the agricultural situation in the east. That is a must, if we are to establish the equality we hope for and want between eastern and western farmers, that equality which did not exist in the past, as can be easily demonstrated. We shall try to remedy the situation. That is why, in the speech from the throne, great importance is given to the appointment of a minister of agriculture for eastern Canada. And yet some members of the opposition have ridiculed the idea.

There is no question of impoverishing western farmers but simply to better the lot of eastern farmers. A formula used recently by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) about GATT can be taken up again here: a balance of advantages is imperative.

Here is something the hon. members for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot and Nicolet-Yamaska could do, they could convince their own colleagues of the importance of that matter, instead of wasting their time laughing at those who, like me, consider it very important.

Hon. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska is putting into my mouth words that I never said. I did not deal with that matter concerning the Minister of Agriculture in my remarks on the address in reply to the speech from the throne. In all fairness, the hon. member should withdraw his remarks.

An hon. Member: Prove your allegations.

Mr. Pepin: The concept of absurdity that I was emphasizing stems from the manner in which the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Vincent) asked something from me.

(Text):

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. I do not think the hon. member has a real question of privilege, and I would wish that the hon. member now speaking might continue.

(Translation):

Mr. Pepin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Vincent: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska said that the member for Nicolet-Yamaska was trying to ridicule the members of the government.

(Text):

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. I do not think the hon. member has a question of privilege.

(Translation):

Mr. Pepin: The hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska tried to ridicule me because during the last election campaign, I asserted that I would be the first to knock on the door of the new department of agriculture for eastern Canada. I did so even before the appointment of the minister; furthermore, not only was I at the door, but I was actually inside the office.

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, I never stated that the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska said these things during the last election campaign. It is rather after the campaign, once he was elected, that he asserted he was going to sit on the doorstep of the new department of agriculture for eastern Canada. La Parole printed his words 15 days after the April 8 elections.

(Text):

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a point of order. If I may say a word on the point of order, it seems that certain hon. members opposite feel that they are entitled to interrupt an hon. member who has been elected to this house for the first time merely because they differ with things he has been saying in his speech. As Your Honour knows, that is not according to our rules. If an hon. member feels that anything said in a speech is contrary to facts relating to him, he has the privilege of getting up and making a correction at the end of the speech but he has no right whatever to interrupt an hon. member without the consent of the hon. member concerned. I would hope that all hon. members would recall this, and that Your Honour would not be put to the inconvenience of rising constantly to remind hon. members of it.

(Translation):

Mr. Pepin: That is what we call a tempest in a teapot.

So I intend to deal with the decision made by the government on April 29 last to cancel the 25-cent per 100 pounds subsidy on milk that is paid to processing plants. Why this decision? Why the cancellation of that subsidy? To fight the very detrimental effects of the subsidy policy of the previous government, that led to the stockpiling of 200 million pounds of butter in warehouses. This when the federal government had the opportunity to sell cheese, powdered milk and casein, when it could have sold on the foreign market between 5 and 6 million pounds of cheese, when half our consumption of fancy cheese was imported. So we had to give this policy a new direction.

The hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska—you will excuse me if I refer to him—says that he is in favour of planning, but as soon as action in that direction is contemplated, he condemns it, probably because he is self-assertive. In my opinion, he has not yet discovered the meaning of that word.

Our purpose was therefore to guide production, to discourage butter production without weakening it, to stimulate cheese and casein production because there was a market for those products.

Why did we act so fast? Why was a decision taken in four days? I wondered myself. The answer is that the Agricultural Stabilization Act required a yearly revision, otherwise we would have gone on producing butter and, adding to the 200 million pounds I mentioned before.

If we had pursued the policy of the previous administration, at the end of the year the members of the opposition could have told us: "Where is the planning the Liberal party was talking about?" And they would have blamed us for not taking that decision at that time.

It is also important, Mr. Speaker, to point out that such a decision was taken with the agreement of the representative dairy producers' organizations, the Catholic Farmers'

Union, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the National Dairy Council, the Canadian Milk Producers Association. All those organizations supported that step. This is giving a commendable importance to intermediate bodies, to representative organizations, in matters concerning them.

Now, what have we done on April 29 to promote cheese production? We maintained the support price for cheese at 32½ cents and we raised stabilization grants from 25 to 30 cents per hundredweight of milk going into cheddar production. Then, as far as cheese production is concerned, we thought that fancy cheeses were able to move along and find their own way to the domestic and foreign markets.

On the other hand, so that butter production might not be unduly affected, the government deemed it proper to increase the 12 cent subsidy paid previously on every pound of butter to 14½ cents per pound of butter fat.

That is a point on which the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska disagrees with the experts other than himself. He claimed that such a decision would result in a loss of $817 for every parish in his riding. And everybody knows now that there are 32.

It seems that the calculations made so carefully by the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska is erroneous. He makes his calculations on the basis that 100 pounds of fat are equivalent to 122½ pounds of butter. Now, according to experts from the Department of Agriculture, this is not so. There are 100 pounds of fat on an average for 121 pounds of butter. In my riding, some even say 117.

I do not think it is necessary to appoint a royal commission to determine which experts are right. If you multiply 100 pounds of fat by 14½ cents, you get $14.50 whereas 121 pounds of butter at 12 cents gives $14.52. Therefore, it comes to the same thing.

As far as powdered milk is concerned, it is true that the 25 cents stabilization subsidy has been abolished but the government will buy large quantities of powdered milk with the result that prices will go up. It will pay 11 cents a pound for it instead of the current price of 8 cents or 8½ cents a pound.

Such a step should bring about a price hike as the newspaper La Presse stated on May 24, 1963:

> It follows that while producers will lose the subsidy on processed milk, they will benefit from the rise on the price of powdered milk and the companies and co-operatives will increase the price of processed milk accordingly. Experts feel that this increase will compensate for the loss of the subsidy.

As far as casein is concerned, a product used for the manufacturing of plastics, we export it to the extent of 90 per cent. Therefore, a subsidy of 10 cents a pound will work to the advantage of the producers.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the butter, cheese and milk producers will have to let their suppliers share in the advantages they get. I am glad to be able to quote from a letter I received this morning from the Granby farm co-operative:

> If you compare the price paid in the last two weeks of April to the price members will get for the first two weeks of May, you will see that for those periods there is no difference in our case. The price for milk has not changed—

Mr. Speaker, is that a good policy? It is held to be good by the experts and the organizations concerned. At least, it is better than what was going on before, when the heap of butter was left to grow and grow.

I honestly believe it is too early to judge. The days to come will tell us what the results of that policy will be. No doubt there is room for improvement. We are the first to deplore the fact that this initial step the Department of Agriculture had to take for eastern Canada cannot please everybody.

But what does that prove? Well, it proves the need for a minister of agriculture for eastern Canada, to look after the interests of eastern farmers.

It also proves the need for a global policy, a comprehensive policy for eastern agriculture.

It also proves the need to find new uses for milk, whether it be the fattening up of school children or the fattening up of livestock. I apologize for putting both in the same category.

It proves among other things, as the hon. member for Glengarry-Prescott (Mr. Ethier) said, the need to improve agricultural conditions.

It proves the necessity of an over-all agricultural policy, a rational one, and especially of a policy concerning feed grains.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, it is not enough to have vision, or visions, we sometimes need prevision. Sometimes we must do some planning, and we just inherited the situation created by the lack of agricultural planning of the previous government.

I would have liked very much to talk about other questions which have been dealt with in this house. I would have liked to express my personal ideas on constitutional problems and the importance of a bicultural commission, and above all on the importance of bilingualism in the federal administration.

I would also have liked to talk about that administration school which was mentioned by us Liberals during the election campaign. I would have liked to say that this school should be a non-government university school, a federal-provincial school, that it should not only be joint but also bilingual. I would have liked to discuss also nuclear weapons.

This being my first speech in the house, I felt that it was more important to contribute to a reform of parliamentary procedure by being brief.

Mr. Pigeon: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Pepin: Go ahead.

Mr. Pigeon: Does the hon. member think that the abolition of the subsidy of 25 cents per hundredweight of milk will be detrimental to the farmers, especially in districts like mine where there are very few cheese factories.

Mr. Pepin: According to my information, the "Co-operative agricole de Granby" also takes its milk in the Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm area.

Mr. Pigeon: Not all of it.

Mr. Pepin: The facts I have put on the record also apply to the hon. member's riding.

Mr. Pigeon: Not a large quantity of milk.

Mr. Pepin: I did not inquire from all co-operatives.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the hon. member from Drummond-Arthabaska. The hon. member has just mentioned a surplus of 200 million pounds of butter. Could he tell us whether his constituents have a surplus of butter or whether they run short of it sometimes?

(Text):

Hon. H. J. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, in rising to participate in this debate I assure you it is more than just an amenity to congratulate you on having been chosen for the high position which you presently occupy and to wish you the greatest degree of satisfaction in that position, because I am sure those are the sentiments of your many friends in this chamber. May I say also that those sentiments apply equally to the Speaker and the chairman of committees.

At this stage I should like also to congratulate the mover and seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. This is the first opportunity that I have had to congratulate them. I feel that they performed their duties in a way that would bring satisfaction to their constituents, and I am sure they brought credit to themselves in this house in the process.

I would like now to mention that the speech delivered by His Excellency the Administrator, contains many suggestions which are thought provoking to all in this chamber. But Mr. Speaker, I am one of those who believe that a nation is only as great as the people who compose its citizenship. I am one who believes in the development of the individual. I believe in the encouragement of his creative instincts and his desire to accomplish things. I believe in the encouragement of his desire to work, and his ambition to acquire a stake in his country, his native land, as a result of effort, long hours of work, and determination.

The talented hon. lady who moved the address in reply to the speech from the throne stated categorically that we have moved from an individualistic society to a collectivist society, and then she proceeded to state that the Liberal party is quite prepared to accept that proposition. I shall quote her own very words:

> I think the party, or most members within the party at any rate, are prepared to accept this growth toward a collectivist society that we have witnessed and furthermore—and this is even more important—are prepared to accept the argument that such a society can simply not be self-regulated, that such a society does require direction and guidance from the main institutions that the people have to help them, namely governments at all levels, municipal, provincial and federal.

I submit that the question can properly be asked, where does this put the Liberal party? How far to the left does it bring it? In my opinion it brings it close to the socialist camp because I assume the opinion expressed by the hon. member for Northumberland (Miss Jewett) expresses the policy of the Liberal party.

It is my opinion that direction and guidance should go from individuals to government, and not from government to individuals. I am unable to agree that we have completely moved to a collectivist society, but I am prepared to acknowledge that the throne speech contains indications of future action by this government which may lead to the condition she envisages as having arrived. Let me first state that governments by their action and by their emphasis can contribute to the development of the individual, or otherwise but I believe that the individual, by his or her accomplishments, should be the foundation of our society.

The function of government is not to make people happy, but to create the opportunity by which they may make themselves happy. In several places in the first part of the throne speech there appears the word "opportunity". It refers to new opportunities and expanding opportunities, and I like those words. It is good for people to consider that it is opportunity which is important to all of us, to our society, to our young people, indeed to all our people. In this connection I wish to quote two paragraphs from the throne speech:

> You are deliberating the course of our country in times of great change throughout the world. These are times that test old virtues. They are times that open up new opportunities. Familiar ways of thought and action are becoming less certain guides. The task before us is to seek out, with wisdom and imagination, those new paths that will lead us surely forward.

No one in this chamber could disagree with that paragraph. The next paragraph reads:

> As Canadians we can work with hope. Our country has a proud history. Now there are expanding opportunities open to us. But they depend on our overcoming serious problems. It is only with courage and perseverance and hard work that we will achieve the better life that is within our power, for ourselves and for our children.
>
> Our progress is the work of all the people. In a free country, we are all responsible.

Mr. Speaker, in seeking out the new paths which the throne speech states will surely lead us forward, it is my contention that we cannot discard the old virtues and the old attributes which have contributed to our progress, both individually and as a nation over the years.

There is much in the new which we should acquire. This is in fact the Conservative philosophy—the preservation of all that is useful of the past, and the acquisition of the new ideas that make for progress. Those were the guiding principles of the Conservative government from June 1957 to April 1963, a period of nearly six years. Let us look and see what happened during that period of time.

I have before me a condensation of what took place under various general headings. Dealing first with the gross national product, under the Conservative government it increased from $30,500,000,000 to $40,400,000,000, an increase of 32.74 per cent in those six years. Labour income increased from $14,800,000,000 to $20,300,000,000, an increase of 36.72 per cent. Personal income in 1956 stood at $21,800,000,000, and by 1962 it had risen to $30,700,000,000, an increase of 40.70 per cent. Retail trade in 1956 totalled $1,192,000,000, and in 1962 it was $1,455,000,000, an increase of 22.06 per cent. Steel production, which is sometimes used as a measuring stick for development in any nation, rose from 5,301,000 tons to 7,174,000 tons in the same period, an increase of 35.33 per cent. United States tourist expenditure in Canada rose from $309,000,000 in 1956 to $510,000,000 in 1962, an increase of 65.04 per cent. Overseas tourists spent $28 million in 1956 as compared with $50 million in 1962, an increase of 78.57 per cent, and the number of U.S. tourists who came to Canada increased from 27,700,000 to 31,700,000, an increase of 14.44 per cent.

Those, Mr. Speaker, are the accomplishments of a government working with the philosophy I have just mentioned, the philosophy of keeping what is good of the old and picking up what is useful of the new for progress in the future. The results which I have read are tremendously impressive and, as I say, they are the results of Conservative government.

The speech from the throne also states that the ministers will expand Canada's export trade. I can tell them how to do it. Let them just consult the Leader of the Opposition as to how to accomplish this since, under his government, the excess of imports over exports prevailing when the Liberals left office was completely eliminated. From a figure of $713 million unfavourable balance on merchandise account in 1957, the position was changed to a favourable balance for 1961 of $173 million, and for 1962 of $155 million. If you add the two figures together you will find the net difference was close to a billion dollars in that period of time.

I suggest to the government that the intention of setting up more departments, more boards and the establishment of more ministries and councils is something which is not acceptable to the people of Canada who have the responsibility of paying the bills. The proliferation of bureaucracy is something which in my opinion should be frowned upon and not encouraged. The funds for the payment of much needless duplication must come from taxes and the apparently forgotten man, the taxpayer. There is in Canada today an opinion that there is more volume of bureaucracy than is necessary. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) might tell the house what the annual cost will be of the various departments, boards, councils, etc. forecast in the speech from the throne. In his budget speech he will be obliged to tell the house where he expects to find the money to pay the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I now wish to refer to unemployment for a few minutes. All hon. members will agree, I am sure, with the speech from the throne when it states that this is the most urgent of our domestic problems. Much has been said about it in this debate, and we are all concerned about this problem. I am convinced that in the final analysis there is only one method of attacking this problem which has any chance of being successful; that is, for government and industry to tackle the problem by working together at it. A solution will not be found by setting up more and more government departments. A solution may be found by encouraging industry to create employment. A man who works for industry is a producer. In this connection may I say, Mr. Speaker, that I believe quite impressive progress was made between the years 1961 and 1962. I find that the labour force in Canada between those two years increased from 6.5 million, in round figures, to 6.7 million, which is an increase of 2.8 per cent. I also find that during this same period employment for all months on the average increased by 4.1 per cent. This is the comment which Canadian Business Service Limited makes in this connection:

> Reflecting the sharp increase in national output, employment rose by 4.1 per cent to 6.3 million thus exceeding the 2.8 per cent increase in the labour force by a considerable margin, with the result that the number of unemployed dropped appreciably from an average rate of 7.2 per cent of the labour force in 1961 to 6.4 per cent in 1962.

Mr. Speaker, the minister of labour of the previous government is in his seat, and I think he deserves a major portion of the credit for that improved result. This government has announced its intention of expanding its bureaucracy. It is my opinion that they should make more use of the many splendid men and women now available in the public service, rather than adding to it. There is too much tendency in government to establish entities which compete with private enterprise, too much application of Parkinson's law, too little use of services which could be performed by private industry, too much tendency to be competitive with industry, too little tendency to be co-operative.

I find that among some influential people in government service there seems to be impatience sometimes almost bordering on contempt of free enterprise and private industry. Where there should be a tendency to encourage, there sometimes seems to be a desire to hinder. Where there should be a tendency to be conciliatory, it sometimes seems there is a desire to be tough. Where there should be a tendency to co-operate, it seems to me there is very often a tendency to compete. I consider that the private enterpriser is entitled to the respect of the government, who is his partner and in many cases receives about 50 per cent of his profits. While on the subject of profits, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that in my opinion it is profits which are responsible for the payment of bills for the many things which we consider important. None of us would ever receive a cheque for services were it not for taxes resulting from profits. I think the word "profit" should be one of the most highly respected words in the English language. Moreover, it is the measuring stick of an efficient performance. It takes no ability to spend government money. It takes no ability to spend any kind of money, for that matter. Anyone can do it; I can do it. But it does take ability to conduct a successful business, make profits and pay a large percentage as a contribution to general public expenditure, welfare costs and other activities. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I repeat what I said regarding unemployment, that it is by co-operation and not competition with private industry that governments can have any hope of grappling successfully with the existing situation.

But what do we find this government proposing in the speech from the throne? We find them proposing two ministers of agriculture, and the transfer of the administration of the wheat board to the Department of Trade and Commerce. Are we to assume that this means a tremendous increase in personnel, with the substantial costs resulting from it? They propose to augment the Atlantic development board, already set up with a representative of each Atlantic province, with six extra members. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, this is a definite political gimmick designed to clip the wings of the existing personnel when it comes to a vote. I wonder how the Atlantic provinces Liberal members can possibly favour this, because if they do it represents their acceptance of the principle of divide and conquer, which was in operation as long as I can remember until the coming into office of the Diefenbaker government in 1957. I will have a little more to say about that when the resolution is before the house.

I take exception to the use of the word "strengthen" in the speech from the throne referring to the Atlantic development board. They should have used the word "lengthen" because that is all they are doing; they are just going to lengthen it to a membership of 11. So far as the capital fund is concerned, I submit that this compares most unfavourably with the plan envisaged by the original act. I submit that the government has no right to delegate the spending of $100 million or any other amount without coming before parliament for approval. The act as originally constituted and passed contemplated that all the resources of Canada would be at the disposal of that board, subject to the board's recommendation when approved by the minister and the government. The determining factor was to be the economic soundness of the projects recommended. The hon. member from Queens-Lunenburg (Mr. Crouse) yesterday wondered who was going to decide where they would spend $100 million over a period of six years in four provinces, and he was wondering who was going to get the best of the scramble. I think that was a proper question to ask. I might remind hon. members in this house of the Beechwood financing legislation for which this house gave authority in 1958. This was Conservative legislation, impossible under the Liberals but possible under the Diefenbaker government. It provided for financing of that project over an eight year period at an interest rate of 3¾ per cent plus one eighth per cent, a total of 3⅞ per cent. Five of the eight payments have been made and the others will be made when due, partially from earnings of the project itself. That is reminiscent of what the original act was designed to accomplish.

I would also remind the house of the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act passed by the previous administration, providing for the financing of the construction of thermal plants and transmission lines in the Atlantic provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. The act is now in operation, the federal government financing the capital cost thereof and annual payments being made, and financial advantages being derived from earnings available from these annual payments. Also tied up in a similar package are the coal subventions so necessary for the maintenance of coal mining operations.

The government further proposes to establish a department of industry with all the technical personnel and expense involved in creating another department. How much may we suppose the estimated expense of this will be? Members opposite propose to establish a Canadian development corporation to more readily direct savings into the building of new enterprises. This is another bureaucratic set up, meaning more people, more space, more expense. They propose to establish a municipal development board for the purpose of lending and granting money to municipalities in order to carry out projects subject to the approval of provincial governments. Another bureaucratic set up; a creature of the provinces. How much will this cost, I wonder. How much encouragement should be given to municipalities to increase their indebtedness?

They propose to establish an economic council, presumably composed of more people. This is the one place where the suggestion is that it may be part of the productivity council and, in that case, there will be no duplication.

I have asked many questions about the government's suggested bureaucratic proliferation. I trust explanations may be forthcoming in due time. However, duplication seems to be the watchword of this government. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, you are wondering what I would suggest that the government do in connection with these matters. It would be this:

Let the Atlantic development board function under the present set up and see what it is able to accomplish, for a while, at least, instead of clipping its wings as foreshadowed in the resolution.

Let the Department of Trade and Commerce take care of industry by an industrial division.

Let the Canadian development corporation operate under the Bank of Canada.

Let the municipal development and loan board operate under the industrial development bank.

The speech refers in vague terms to consultation with the provinces regarding various matters of mutual interest and concern. It remained for the premier of New Brunswick to make a definite announcement concerning a federal-provincial conference on tax sharing, as reported in the Saint John Telegraph-Journal of May 18, 1963. The speech from the throne states that special assistance for technical training will be extended—I should like to emphasize those words "will be extended" —in co-operation with the provinces. But the premier of New Brunswick is more specific. He says:

> There will be a tremendous expansion in aid to technical and trades training facilities on the part of the federal government.

So it would appear desirable that this house should know by how much federal aid for technical schools will exceed the 75 per cent paid by the former government for both facilities and operation, since the premier of New Brunswick states that the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) had assured him there would be a tremendous expansion.

The premier of New Brunswick also stated that 90 per cent of the cost of completing the trans-Canada highway would be provided by the federal government. He further stated that the Prime Minister had promised equalization payments as well as adjustment grants. In addition, he said he hoped the Atlantic development board would put up a share of the cost of the Macnaquac project which is estimated to cost $100 million. It looks as if there will not be much left for anyone else. The premier also said that the Prime Minister and the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Deschatelets) had confirmed that federal assistance would be available for trunk roads.

My comment is this: it appears strange that announcements as important as these and having such extensive financial implications would not be made in the House of Commons rather than in the Saint John Telegraph-Journal, even though the latter is an excellent newspaper. Perhaps the Prime Minister will explain.

The speech states that the ministers have undertaken to establish a comprehensive system of contributory pensions. This is simply carrying out an expressed intention of the previous government and I have no hesitation whatever in saying that I favour it strongly, as I did when our government was considering it. I favoured it strongly then. The very fact that the present government is carrying out our expressed intention is most satisfactory and pleasing. The plan suggests contributions by people at an early age, contributions which would continue until the retirement of those concerned. I would point out that this is an encouragement of thrift and saving, two of the old virtues mentioned in the speech from the throne. We shall await with anticipation the submission of the details.

In conclusion, may I submit to this government the admonition that they will do extremely well if, in future, they maintain the progress made by their predecessors. They might well adopt the slogan, "Continue to go forward" as we were going forward prior to April 8.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if the honourable and amiable member for Victoria-Carleton would permit me to ask him one question. The question is this: the hon. member drew attention to the possibility of a new department being set up. Has he forgotten that the previous government asked this parliament to set up a new department expressly that he might be appointed to it, and appointed him to it before he had been elected to this house?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): It is easy to answer that question. Usually the Secretary of State confines himself reasonably closely to the truth, but this time he is nowhere near the truth. That was not done. I made no request and, as my leader knows, there is no basis for the assertion which has been made. There is no foundation for it whatever.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does the hon. gentleman mean there is still no basis for the Department of Forestry?

[Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton).]

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): I do not mind answering these foolish questions, though I am surprised a minister of the crown should be asking them. Of course there is a need for a ministry of forestry. But the hon. gentleman implied I had asked the prime minister of that day to set up a department, and that is absolutely untrue.

Mr. Pickersgill: I know the hon. gentleman very well and I am sure he does not want to misrepresent my words. I did not suggest the hon. member asked for it at all. I am sure he did not. I asked him whether he had forgotten that the previous government had set up a department expressly for him and appointed him to it before he was elected to this parliament. I know that the hon. gentleman, like myself, is far too modest to have asked for it.

Mr. Marvin Gelber (York South): Mr. Speaker, in making my first speech in this house, I do not feel among strangers, having been associated with many members in public endeavours for some years. The historic role of this house must impress all who sit here, and particularly those of us who are most junior resolve to use its privileges and perform its duties with responsibility. May I add my word of congratulation to you, Mr. Speaker, upon your election to high office, and to the Deputy Speaker, and to the deputy chairman of committees. For her thoughtful speech in moving this motion, and for her skilful presentation, I would like to say a word of congratulation to the member from Northumberland (Miss Jewett) as well as to the member from Lotbiniere (Mr. Choquette) for his able speech of seconding.

The riding of York South is marked by many things, but none more intriguing than the list of those who have been defeated for election to this house. I speak from experience. A right hon. gentleman, twice prime minister of this country and leader of his party, made his last stand for public office here. Brilliant parliamentarian, centre of many a national storm, Mr. Arthur Meighen did not pass the testing ground of York South. The victor of that day was to meet defeat, when the much beloved Mr. Joseph Noseworthy came, left and came again to this house. With a record over many years, Mr. William Beech has given much service and matched his two wins now with two losses. My immediate predecessor, my friend, Mr. David Lewis, a leading trade union lawyer, made his mark as a debater in this house and now adds York South to his losses. This is one of the anomalies of the party system. Elected, but never defeated, the Hon. J. Earl Lawson served as minister of national revenue.

And now that the subamendment and the amendment to this motion have been lost, redistribution, as mentioned in the speech from the throne, will probably see a rearrangement of this constituency, which runs from Oriole parkway at its easternmost tip to Jane street on the west. Its 63,000 voters represent an important cross section of achievement, not only in the two municipalities but in the wider metropolitan Toronto, in the affairs of the province of Ontario and in many things across this broad country. In government, industry, commerce, trade unionism, banking, the professions, the arts and education, the people of York South are well represented.

This electoral district consists of the village of Forest Hill and most of the township of York. At one time the township included the area between Scarborough and the Humber river. To attend a council meeting involved almost an entire day of travel. The fragmenting of this area into a series of municipalities has helped create the problems of metropolitan administration. The present township within the boundaries of York South is largely residential, while the main roadways afford extensive retail shopping facilities. Some important industries are located along its northern fringe. The village of Forest Hill constitutes about one fifth of the riding, and has been carefully planned to maintain its special character for residential living. It is well known for the high standard of its public educational system.

This government has given notice that it will introduce a number of important bills with a view to increasing the rate of economic growth. In order to achieve this result we must deliberately plan to reach ascending economic plateaus. Forward economic planning of such comprehensive proportions can only be the responsibility of government.

In the past we have lived with certain national illusions. For one, it was assumed that no matter who was in power we would automatically receive good government. With the ins or outs the prospects were equally good, it was said. The future of Canada was assured no matter how well we did our part. This optimistic illusion is now exposed. We must work hard with wisdom, patience, courage and imagination, to meet the many problems which confront us and assure for Canada days of more fruitful prospects and better realization. Economic myths have been no less embedded in our national being. Somehow we would always achieve that rate of growth which would take care of our many problems. A passionate controversy over responsibility for monetary and fiscal policy destroyed one illusion in recent years that bewitched those charged with high office.

At the heart of our economic problem is the rate of capital investment, and the speech from the throne lists measures which show that this government will accept, as it should, responsibility for ensuring a sufficient flow of investment to maintain an adequate rate of growth. But the private sector remains the largest, and in some ways the most important area of investment. I was interested in the criteria outlined by the hon. member from Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) in this house the other day. I agreed with him as far as he went, but has he not oversimplified the problem? Our objectives must certainly be towards full employment and towards a higher standard of living for our people. But these two do not necessarily go together. In order to achieve both, we must improve and develop the productive capacity of this country through more efficient plant capacity and we must increase the capability of our labour force by investing in those skills that a developing economy will require. We must be particularly mindful of all these things since we, more than others, work in an open economy. The rate of growth here is intimately and directly associated with our international trading relationships. It seems to me that we must add to the criteria of the hon. gentleman in formulating an economic program for Canada.

To ensure a sufficient rate of growth we must maintain a climate of investment congenial to those whose capital commitment is necessary. This cannot be based on caprice or on short-run objectives. The investor has his choices, and we must so provide a framework of profitability and confidence that we attract an adequate flow of capital. But we are much concerned not only about the quantum of investment, but also about its quality. We must offer greater inducements for greater productivity. We want an adequate rate of growth, but not a lopsided one. The problem of inflation must also continue to be of concern.

In the over-all planning for Canadian economic expansion the budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) will be watched with special interest. The remarkable recovery of western Europe underscores both the importance of planning and the agreeable acceptance by the private investment sector of reasonable goals set out in a national program. The success of the European common market has set up special problems for Canada. A strong and prosperous western Europe is certainly a Canadian interest. I was particularly interested in the statement made in this house by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) upon his return from the commonwealth meetings and those of GATT. The possible polarization of trade in the Atlantic community around separate European and American axes would set up a threat to the leadership which the west must give to the whole free world. The proposals of the Kennedy administration which are aimed at turning the European common market outwards are of great concern to us here.

Historically we have sought in European markets, principally British, to build a sufficient surplus of payments to meet our deficit with the United States. What happens to the other two sides of this triangle is vital to us. We must seek a place in the accommodations which are made. Certainly our present imbalance cannot persist. It is our labour which is being discriminated against, because the more we process our materials the greater are the obstacles of the U.S. tariff. Will the new patterns of trade be adequate to our needs? Will they provide avenues for the emerging states of Asia and Africa? The struggle for Atlantic trade patterns is also a political struggle and much of what we have taken for granted in our relations with our allies will have to be examined critically. There are new challenges, new issues, new opportunities for statesmanship and this government is particularly rich in the needed skills and endowments.

In the ceaseless search for world peace, Canada must maintain the friendliest association with her allies and must maintain the most cordial relations with all nations which seek to secure the international rule of law. This has not always been so. We particularly prize our association through the commonwealth with new states, which give us special approaches in Asia and Africa. Support for the United Nations is the touchstone of our foreign policy, and we give what aid we can to settle international differences by conciliation. Our diplomats are in the forefront of this struggle for peace and understanding.

In a world where starvation is the primary fact of life for more than half the human race, we cannot be unmindful of the needs of underdeveloped countries. We can assist them to solve their problems, and we have contributed to all the multilateral programs of the United Nations. Our major effort has been through the Colombo plan, and it seems to me that such bilateral programs provide the basis on which Canada's international economic assistance plans can be most readily increased. The argument is often made that defence appropriations impoverish foreign aid in competition for the national dollar. This view is too easily spoken and the problem not examined sufficiently closely. There is much that we can do within the existing economic context. A most likely field is in the export of know-how. The new nations are most deficient in technical skills, and this aspect of assistance can be expanded if we offer reasonable inducements to Canadians who might be prepared to make careers in this new field of foreign service.

Addressing the international law association at McGill University some years ago, Mr. Dag Hammarskjold suggested that the United Nations should establish a corps of international civil servants. Men and women prepared to serve the underdeveloped countries would have the security and the career prospects which such a corps could offer with the support of the contributing national governments.

International careers are not opening up; they are becoming more restricted for Canadians. With the increase in membership at the United Nations, which we welcome, the number of jobs available to Canadians is becoming less and less. By opening this additional avenue the United Nations itself can become the vehicle for a full career of international service.

In lieu of this forward looking action by the United Nations, Canada might consider providing within its civil service specially recruited and specially trained people who would be available for posting abroad on attachment to governments needing their assistance and where such aid has been specifically requested. A portion of the cost must be paid by the recipient countries in counterpart funds. The great record of the Indian civil service and similar administrative agencies suggests that a role, now sought by newly independent governments, could be provided for Canadians to serve as others have served with great distinction, people proud in their traditions but modest in administrative and technical skills.

Our commitment to NATO is our most binding international engagement. As a signatory of the NATO pact we were undertaking to play a role in the affairs of Europe in peacetime which in two world wars we had shown to be our national interest. But Europe itself has not stood still. The entente between France and West Germany, which would have been considered impossible earlier, provides opportunities for new co-operation. The coal and steel community foreshadowed a successful trading association with Italy, France and West Germany together with the Benelux countries. This poses a problem for Britain and for those like Canada who have an important stake in British trading prospects.

The rebuff to Britain administered by France is of wider import than trade bargaining. It is political, and political in the most serious meaning of that term. Nuclear power, not agriculture, is the issue.

Events are moving swiftly and we must be continually examining and re-examining our relationships. American nuclear supremacy is almost too easy an answer for giving military strength to NATO. Britain's special relationship to the United States, particularly in matters of nuclear policy, makes her specially suspect to General de Gaulle. When he says Britain is not sufficiently mature he means she is specially favoured.

NATO is tested by the struggle to establish three centres of nuclear power and nuclear technology within the alliance. The decentralization of control over some of the elements does not satisfy the demands with regard to the command problems of the alliance. German participation raises special anxieties.

Just as NATO itself intimately associated Canada with the defence of Europe, the new struggle is opening the door to an even more closely knit political relationship of Canada to western Europe. A new Europe has emerged and we must ensure that it unites us and does not set us apart. We may look to wider Atlantic horizons to find in some larger constellation a solution to our problems which arise in part from the very success of our efforts. In this developing Atlantic community we may yet look to resolve some of our present problems of trade and defence. But this does not diminish our concern for our wider trade relationships and our support for the United Nations. The struggle for disarmament as well must be persistent and be pursued with wisdom, tenacity and great patience. The stakes are the highest and our best efforts must be engaged.

Canada is moving because we choose to move. But the world about us is moving even more quickly. The optimistic, the automatic, the easy roles were illusory in any case, and we have been carried forward in a bound of good fortune. We have to assess our position critically and wisely. We have to conserve our forces of strength, of which national harmony and economic prosperity are among the most important. In association with our friends and allies we must seek without pause to resolve these problems of the greatest perplexity to advance the interests of Canada and of all mankind.

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take this opportunity to congratulate the Speaker, Deputy Speaker and deputy chairman of committees on their election to their high offices. In congratulating the Speaker may I say that I was indeed very pleased that he was the one who received the call. In his previous experience as chairman of the public accounts committee, of which I had the honour to be a member, I know that he did a magnificent and impartial job. I should also like to congratulate the mover (Miss Jewett) and seconder (Mr. Choquette) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. I wish them well, with but one reservation, only during this parliament.

In taking part in the debate on the speech from the throne I should like to say from the outset that it is not my intention today to speak so much on what was mentioned in the speech from the throne but rather on what was not mentioned, and in particular a matter that received such great publicity during the election campaign. I refer to the adoption of a distinctive Canadian flag.

As a preliminary I should like to say that at times I feel I should be the last man in the house to speak on a Canadian flag or, more specifically, on the red ensign. To me a flag is not just a piece of cloth on a pole. To my mind it is a symbol of what the country stands for.

I may be the only one in this house who has had the misfortune to live under more than one flag and I also realize I may be the only one here who has ever had to live under the flag of the hammer and sickle. I recall one sunny day in November, 1929, when I looked for the last time on that flag and, as is always the case when one comes to the end of a road or a span in life comes to a close, all the past appeared before me. All the things that happened under that flag, the revolution, one of the bloodiest in human history, all unfolded before my eyes. Under that flag there was to be built a community where democracy was supposed to be restored, where freedom, liberty and, above all, equality, would be given to all the people of that country.

I lived through those times but I also lived to see later times when millions sought to flee from this so-called democracy. I also lived to see the time when under that flag the revolution subsided and the so-called newly restored freedom, liberty and equality turned out to be farther from the grasp of the people than ever before. I also lived to see the day when under that flag dictatorship reached the highest point of despotism ever experienced anywhere in the world.

Human rights and freedom disappeared under that flag while, at the same time, millions of lives were sacrificed to uphold the flag and all it stood for. As a result of this revolution millions of people looked for refuge under other flags in other countries such as Canada, and other freedom loving countries in the world.

I was one of the more fortunate ones who succeeded in emigrating to another country, in my case to Canada, and I well recall stepping on Canadian soil and being able to see for the first time the Canadian flag which stood for principles quite contrary to those experienced under the flag of the hammer and sickle. I was also aware of the fact that under this Canadian flag thousands of Canadians had fought and given their lives to preserve freedom and democracy as we know them today, all symbolized in the Canadian flag.

The question arose in my mind: Will we now as new citizens achieve our desire for freedom and the democratic rights which are so dear to our hearts? Will we be allowed to become Canadian citizens? After 34 years in Canada I must say, Mr. Speaker, that Canada has lived up to all our expectations. I will always be grateful to this country for what it has done for me and my family. Canada has earned high respect and esteem throughout the world under this Canadian flag. Canada is a country to which many would like to come if they were only allowed to do so.

An incident which I will never forget happened only a couple of years after we came to Canada. This was the time when our first child had to attend school. Coming from a country where the schools not only served the purpose of education but also served the ends of indoctrination with the communist idea, it was a great satisfaction to us to see the union jack flying over our country school. I knew then and there that this was not going to be a place where our children would be indoctrinated with the ideologies of communism, fascism, or nazism. I can only speak with the highest regard and esteem of the Canadian educational system. It is available to all who have the ability, the will and some means. It was available to my family in abundance.

When we hear so much about the free education the people of the communist countries are supposed to enjoy, I often wonder if people are aware of the other side of the coin. I refer to the fact that you are nothing more or less than a tool of the state, and after the state has given you your education, it takes possession of you. This is not the case in Canada, as everybody knows. When the question comes up concerning a new distinctive Canadian flag, I will always recall the first time I looked upon the union jack and realized the things for which it stood. Latterly, of course, the red ensign, which was adopted on September 5, 1945, stood for all these things.

I am not the only one who is concerned with this issue of the flag. Many new Canadians will also be concerned with the question of a new, distinctive Canadian flag, since all of them at one time or another lived under another flag. Undoubtedly the question will arise in their minds as to whether this new flag will be one which will stand for the same high principles, the same rights and privileges that have been afforded to Canadians of whatever race, creed or colour, as those which were available under the old flag, a flag under which Canada grew to the position of high esteem in which she is held by all the countries of the world. As a result of this national issue before us, all Canadians will search their hearts and souls in an attempt to find the right answer to the question of whether or not Canada should have a distinctive Canadian flag or retain the red ensign. An answer must be found and a decision must be made.

As I said at the outset, perhaps I should have been the last man to speak about the Canadian flag. My purpose in speaking, however, is only to enumerate the high principles for which Canada stands now, and for which she stood in the past, all symbolized in our Canadian flag. However, should the time ever come when this house decides to adopt a new Canadian flag then, as one who believes in democratic majority rule I would accept this decision and swear my loyalty to Canada under this new, distinctive Canadian flag of whatever design. At the same time, however, I should like to be around when the old flag, the red ensign, which to me is the free flag, is lowered for the last time. I should like to pay my last tribute to it, to touch it for the last time and then wipe away a tear or two because of my affection for the old Canadian flag, the only free flag I ever knew in my life and the flag by which Canada is known all over the world.

(Translation):

Mr. Gerard Chapdelaine (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, allow me to congratulate you on the occasion of your appointment and to deliver my speech as if the Speaker himself were in the chair, because that is how it was prepared.

I am pleased to join with all those who have spoken before me in this debate to offer you the habitual congratulations upon your appointment to the office of Speaker of the House of Commons. I do so with pleasure and sincerity, the more so as I have had the privilege of knowing you outside the house and of appreciating your qualities of heart and mind.

I do not intend to compete with Demosthenes, in a flight of oratory, first because I would be hard put to do it and then because I see no point to it.

The debate on the speech from the throne will soon reach its eighth day and I doubt that the administration of the affairs of the country, which has been entrusted to us, is further advanced than on the second day. I shall therefore refrain from giving my co-operation to this chronic standstill which paralyses us lawmakers. I know that one must suffer great pains to give birth to great ideas but heroism must not be extended to the point where one gets to be fond of those pains.

I could spend much time analysing the speech from the throne to bring out its flaws for the delight of the opposition and the confusion of government members, but previous speakers have done it for me during the first days, and I think that the government has suffered enough while the opposition has rejoiced enough.

I could also speak in praise of my consituency and of my political heroes, but the Sherbrooke riding cannot be described; you have to know it to appreciate it and I heartily invite all hon. members of this house and their friends to come to see us. The tourist industry in my region would be thankful forever.

As for my heroes, I will not even mention their names because you would not accept them and it might make some people laugh.

To make sure that this brief contribution on my part does not sink into negativism, I should like to repeat a suggestion I made in the last parliament to the effect that this debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne should be made shorter. My first thought would be to do completely away with the whole debate following that speech since the same topics have to come up again in our discussions on bills. But I think such a change would be too drastic, because we must provide some opportunities for politicians to show off their talents.

But so as not to break away from traditions too abruptly, I feel sure that we could set a maximum of three or four spokesmen for each party represented in this house and no one would suffer from that, certainly not our electors. Those speeches could take the form of a legal debate and the speakers taking part after the leaders would discuss only new developments instead of going back over the same stories all the time.

That way, Mr. Speaker, I am sure this debate would have come to an end several days ago and we would now be discussing legislation instead of just quibbling.

I thank you for bearing with me, and I apologize to the hon. members for monopolizing such precious minutes.

(Text):

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, may I join the others who have spoken in this debate in congratulating you and your deputy upon your election to your high office. I should like also to congratulate the members from British Columbia who were appointed to the cabinet, the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Nicholson) and the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Laing). The Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources represents the riding immediately adjacent to mine and is a native of Richmond. I congratulate him upon his appointment.

I should also like to congratulate the hon. member for Northumberland (Miss Jewett) on her speech in moving the address in reply. I was very interested in the content of that speech, and it seems to me that the tiny group of liberals in the Liberal party have a new recruit. I would be very interested to know her reaction to the speech made last Thursday by the hon. member for Coast-Capilano (Mr. Davis) in which he advocated the sale of crown corporations and expressed some fear about the growth of the collectivist society. I should also like to know the reaction of the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Nicholson) to that speech as he remembers, with understandable pride, his part in the creation and operation of the Polymer Corporation.

I would remind the hon. member for Northumberland that when she becomes disillusioned with the role of a liberal in the Liberal party that we have room—in fact lots of room—in the New Democratic party for liberally minded people. She can just keep that in mind.

Mr. Pickersgill: Lots of room—period.

Mr. Prittie: Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to add a few hundred words to the many thousands which have been spoken on the subject of bilingualism and biculturalism. I am not sure that the term biculturalism has been defined in precise terms as it relates to Canada today, but I think it means that the French speaking citizens of Canada demand that the French fact be recognized in Canada, as it is in the province of Quebec at the present time, and to a limited extent throughout the federal legislature, federal courts and civil service.

It is stated in the speech from the throne that the government will foster the spirit of co-operative federalism. I believe that term "co-operative federalism" was publicly used for the first time at the founding convention of the New Democratic party in 1961. Both the program and the constitution of our party recognize the bicultural and bilingual character of all Canada. I do not think this recognition in our party program and constitution is the result of the wisdom and foresight of the English speaking delegates to that founding convention. Rather, as I recall it, it was the Quebec delegation which forced the issue, and I remember one Ontario delegate remarking, when the matter came up for voting, "What the devil; let us vote for it if it makes them happy". I think that remark typifies the thinking of many English speaking Canadians. They bear no ill towards French Canadians. Quite the contrary; but they wonder what the fuss is all about. They simply do not understand why French Canada is angry at the present time, but the discussion which has been taking place during the past year has helped to inform them on the subject.

I suggest that to condemn all English speaking Canadians for the dissatisfaction of Quebec and the French speaking residents of other provinces, is a mistake. The average English speaking Canadian who lives in Halifax, Toronto, Brandon, Calgary or Vancouver is not responsible for whatever economic exploitation there has been in Quebec. He did not write the British North America Act. He is not responsible for the composition of the federal civil service, so do not blame him for all these things.

It may have been necessary on the part of the people of Quebec to overstate the case in order to be heard, but I think they have now achieved a result in that the rest of Canada is listening. I suggest the average English speaking Canadian is willing to listen, and he will listen much more readily to those who speak in moderate terms than to those who speak in extreme terms on this subject. It seems to me it serves no useful purpose to speak of ultimatums, a last chance for confederation or even, as the premier of Quebec did, of the state of Quebec.

I may say quite frankly I am critical of the press, but in this particular case I think they have done a fairly good job in recent months in reporting this subject. In my own area the Vancouver Sun sent one of its editorial writers to Quebec, and he has written a good series of articles on this subject, trying to explain to readers away out on the Pacific coast just what is the root of the controversy. Having said that, I can state the New Democratic party endorses the proposed royal commission on biculturalism.

More than that we agree there should be a reconsideration of the tax sharing agreements between the federal government and the provincial governments, but here I would add a word of caution and say that, while we believe the provinces do need sufficient revenues to carry out their proper functions of government, we do not want this carried to the extent that the federal government will be seriously weakened, because it too has very serious and heavy responsibilities. We will also want to see the continuation of the equalization formula which has been in existence for a number of years.

If we are to remain a united country, and not just a collection of almost-autonomous provinces, it is essential that some of the revenues collected in the richer provinces be distributed to some of those provinces which have less than an average income. There has to be a great deal of compromise on this question of the allocation of revenues.

Mr. Speaker, while we endorse the proposed royal commission and believe it can serve a very useful purpose, we think there are a number of steps which could be immediately taken by the federal government without waiting for the report of the commission, particularly in the case of bilingualism. I should like to make a few personal comments on that point. None of us expect that Canada will be completely bilingual at any time. Far from it; but we want it to be more bilingual than it is now. In most cases this means that the efficient teaching of French should be encouraged, and we feel more use could be made of instruments now available to serve this purpose.

For example, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has done quite a good job in this field in a rather limited way, and I imagine the reason was that it was limited by funds. I refer particularly to the series of programs carried for the last several years under the direction of Professor Vinay of the University of Montreal, the series called "Speaking French." It is an excellent form of instruction and I would like to see more of it both on C.B.C. television and radio.

I would also like to see some C.B.C. French outlets in parts of Canada which are not now served by the French network. Last year I made a plea for a French language outlet on the lower mainland of B.C. I suggested a low power relay station, a relatively inexpensive type of installation. In the lower mainland of B.C. there are approximately 50,000 people of French speaking origin, some of them Canadians, and some who come from France, Belgium and Switzerland, but at the present time they have no radio service in the French language. The establishment of low power relay stations in several parts of the country could carry the French network to places where it is not now heard. This is something which could be done without waiting for a royal commission. It just requires the allocation of funds to the C.B.C. and then it can do the job.

As one who has been on both the receiving and the giving end of language instruction in Canadian schools I know just how bad and tedious it has been. In past years students in the English speaking provinces have had to suffer through a great many French lessons that were very dull and overly bookish, but there are now available modern techniques which can make language instruction much more efficient and interesting. I refer in particular to the installation of language laboratories in schools. They can do this kind of job much better than it has ever been done in the past, and this is one type of federal assistance to education which might be quite acceptable. Special funds might be made available to the various departments of education, which in turn could allocate them to school boards for the installation of language laboratories, not only for the teaching of French where that is necessary but also for the teaching of English in parts of the province of Quebec. This is a practical measure and I know that many school boards would like to do it, but they hesitate because the cost of these laboratories is quite high.

Apart from the measures which the federal government can take on its own to promote bilingualism and biculturalism in Canada there are certain actions which can only be taken by the provinces, particularly in the field of education. I understand that one of the demands of French Canada is that instruction in the French language be available in provinces other than Quebec. Personally I agree that this should be done wherever there is a sizeable group of people to receive this instruction. But I would suggest to those who are advocating this step that they be patient and prepared to go slow on it. It is one for which they will have to wait, I think, until public opinion in the provinces changes somewhat. Even in the province of Ontario I noticed last fall a sharp reaction, I believe it was in Scarborough, when demands were made to the separate school board—a board which one would think would be quite sympathetic—for more bilingual instruction. I think this will come, but its advocates should be prepared to be rather patient. Finally, Mr. Speaker, on this particular topic of bilingualism and biculturalism I think the point has been made and English speaking Canada is now becoming aware of the problem. They want to see an improvement, but there are those who think as I do—and I think my views are shared by many in English speaking Canada—in wishing to retain Canada as a unified country. We do not want a collection of, as I said, almost autonomous states in a very loose confederation. I think we can achieve a more bicultural nation and still retain a strong Canada.

I was rather disappointed that there was no mention in the speech from the throne of aid in education, and particularly for universities in Canada. This subject has come to the fore in the last day or so while the Canadian universities federation have been in Ottawa presenting a brief to the Prime Minister. They have asked for federal grants of $300 million in the next three years. These grants amount to a great deal of money. I know that the hon. gentlemen on the treasury benches are besieged with requests for help, all of which call for the spending of money, but some things are more important than others. Certainly the financing of university education is one of the most important considerations at the present time. The funds available through the Canada Council in the form of university capital grants are certainly not sufficient. There was only $50 million to begin with and that sum has been considerably reduced. I think this is a matter upon which the federal government will have to take a stand very soon. They do pay certain operating costs, but what is required are capital grants for the construction of new colleges and universities.

I have a general and a particular interest in this topic. My particular interest arises because it was announced recently that a new university, to be called the Simon Fraser university, would be built in Burnaby, specifically in Burnaby-Coquitlam. This university will be on a magnificent site. It will be the third provincial university in British Columbia, and it will be a very expensive undertaking. The provincial government will have to do their part. I would agree right away that the present government of British Columbia does not do the part it should in the financing of universities. I hope we can expect more help from them. Certainly, unfortunately, the students will have to meet part of the cost, but if the university is to be built, federal assistance will be necessary. We do not ask for any special consideration but we hope we may share increased support in the form of capital grants for all universities.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I noted with pleasure that in the speech from the throne there was reference to the establishment of a municipal development and loan board. This has long been advocated. It was advocated by members of this party as far back as the early 1950's and possibly before that. However, we are not concerned with who advocated it but we are very pleased that something is to be done about it. As one who spent several years in municipal life on a municipal council I can appreciate the problems facing people in local government trying to meet the costs of urban expansion. Therefore I shall look with great interest at the detailed legislation on this particular topic. There were a number of other proposals in the speech from the throne which I think show promise but with regard to which we must await the detailed legislation in order to pass final judgment upon them.

Mrs. Margaret Konantz (Winnipeg South): Mr. Speaker, as a new member of this house I have been sitting here for eight days listening to other hon. members telling about their constituencies. Most of these constituencies have been either in Ontario, Quebec, the maritimes or British Columbia. For this reason I thought it was my duty to let hon. members know about the area I come from, Winnipeg South, Manitoba.

First, sir, through you I would like to congratulate the Speaker on his appointment. I know, from what I have heard in these last eight days, that he will always show great fairness and clear judgment in all our debates. We are indeed fortunate to have you, sir, as our Deputy Speaker, as we are the deputy chairman of committees. The appointments have been excellent. I would like to take this opportunity of thanking the hon. member from Grey-Bruce (Mr. Winkler) for the very kind things he said about me in this house earlier this afternoon. I only hope I can live up to his expectations. I want to congratulate the mover and the seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. As I listened to the hon. member from Northumberland (Miss Jewett) I was reminded that I, too, had connections in her constituency for, sir, my great grandmother first settled there when she came from Scotland. She and her husband had been given a beautiful farm by her father. Then, too, I thought of my grandmother who, as a bride leaving a lovely part of Ontario, travelled across lakes and up rivers by canoe with her husband, a Hudson's Bay factor, to Norway House which is situated at the most northerly end of lake Winnipeg. I have her diary, and in it she describes the skill of the Indians as they handled their cargoes through the rapids and over the portages into this rugged territory. Those were truly pioneering days.

Mr. Speaker, there are only two of us with the government to represent Manitoba. I must admit we Liberals had hoped during the campaign that there would be more and I can assure you there will be after the next election. However, I can guarantee that the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Teillet) and I will do our best to hold the fort, so to speak. And I believe we shall be capable of doing this, for I must remind you, sir, that the minister is a descendant of a great man who held the territory which is now Manitoba for Canada back in the years of 1869 and 1870, while I myself, as a descendant of the first governor of the Hudson's Bay Company, a man who developed the tremendous area of Rupert's Land, feel that my roots go deep. Our pride in our ancestors has made us both determined, and we will always fight to a finish. It seems extraordinary that we two, coming from such a background, should be representing the territory where years ago French and English stood side by side to defend Fort Garry and the little community across the Red river against the penetration of the fur traders from the south. Today we two, French and English, stand together to work for our people. I am sure my hon. friend and I will prove to other hon. members that French and English can work together with great harmony and understanding.

My constituency of Winnipeg South is a large one in which 114,000 people live. It is primarily an urban area. It might be interesting to hon. members to know that in this one federal constituency there are five provincial ridings. All these provincial seats are held by Conservative members of our Manitoba government; three are cabinet ministers—our attorney general, our minister of trade and commerce and the minister of labour. I can assure you, sir, that it took all my courage, a woman, to go into this territory to try to win this seat for the Liberal party. It was achieved only because of the magnificent job that was done by over 2,000 workers under the excellent guidance of a brilliant campaign committee. Here, I must pay tribute to my opponent Mr. Gordon Chown who was the hon. member for Winnipeg South for the last two sessions and deputy speaker of this house last year. My family and his family have been friends for many, many years. It was indeed unfortunate that the two of us should be candidates in this constituency of Winnipeg South, but then I was trying with my people to take this seat once again for the Liberals. I have been told that Mr. Chown through the years gave excellent service to his party. I know he was very well liked in this house, and that he will be missed by his many friends.

Mr. Speaker, I am not going to say much about my constituency but I do wish to say a little about the people I represent. Their ancestors came first out of ships from Hudson's Bay, then by the long river route of the fur traders and as Selkirk settlers. These people knew the hardships of frontier life—wars between fur traders, floods on the Red river, massacres, cold, hunger, loneliness. Being so isolated they developed their own ways of life, their own thoughts, their own independence.

With the C.P.R. railroad reaching this frontier town of Winnipeg in 1881 came the great surge of settlement. People from all over Europe brought their skills, their culture, their experience. These people were so far away from any other centre in Canada they were forced to make their own amusement, develop their own interests in music, dramatics, art.

The growing of grain brought the first wealth to this part of Canada and I believe that this made everyone very conscious about business in other countries. World wide interests were developed, so today you find among the people of my constituency the fierce energy of the pioneer, a kind of informality that was first found at our early forts, a gaiety that has come down through the years, a people with a forward look, and with a world wide feeling. I am proud to represent these people. I am not bilingual, but I found that as I went around the constituency during this last campaign, I was able to meet new friends in three languages—but with an appalling accent—simply by saying "bonjour", "au revoir", "buon giorno", "arrivederci", "slava esusu khristu".

I can assure hon. members that the people of south Winnipeg will welcome the proposals set out in the speech from the throne. They will be particularly interested in the municipal development and loan board which is to finance municipal works projects; in the Canada development corporation which will channel savings into industrial growth, and in the economic council to be set up to develop more employment and more efficient production. In addition, they will be interested in the proposal to set up a new department of industry because, like so many other parts of Canada we, too, have suffered from the ills and causes of unemployment.

The people of Winnipeg South will welcome the proposed amendments to the National Housing Act and the setting up of a national contributory pension plan. The establishment of a commission for the redistribution of commons seats will definitely affect Winnipeg South, for here it takes three to four city votes to equal one rural vote. As one who was thrown into an election campaign without any political experience I welcome the review of the Canada Elections Act which is foreshadowed. We of the west are a practical people and I believe our elections are too expensive and the campaigns too long. They try the patience of the voter, and in my opinion our election machinery could be modernized.

The setting up of a new committee on parliamentary procedure is an excellent course to follow. This committee would, I realize, be one of many which have been named in the past but I would like to think that our present members will be strong enough to see that the findings will be put into effect. Surely the time has come when the business of this house can be streamlined.

A study of biculturalism by a federal-provincial commission set up for that purpose is obviously needed. All French Canadians should feel at home anywhere in Canada.

Plans for the Canadian centennial celebration will give every Canadian a chance to work together for projects that will have real and lasting value. I urge our government to give the leadership that has been so badly needed at the federal level during these last two years.

There is one problem which concerns not only my own constituency but constituencies all over Manitoba, and I feel I should draw it to the attention of all hon. members.

That is the proposed move of the Trans-Canada Air Lines maintenance and overhaul base from Winnipeg to Dorval. There is a long history behind this proposal, and it would seem that through the last five years the government and T.C.A. while saying one thing did another. I do not intend to discuss the details here but I urge the Minister of Transport (Mr. McIlraith) and his department to delve into every angle of this problem before any decisions are made. One thousand of our most highly skilled craftsmen and mechanics and their families would be involved in such a move. Did anyone in the previous government think twice of how such a move would affect these people? It would involve the giving up of their homes, their environment with their friends and relatives they know so well, uprooting their children in the midst of their education, transferring them all into an area so different in every way to what they have known. Surely these people must be given some consideration. T.C.A. is recognized as a good air line but it does not operate on the same terms as a privately-owned venture. It is government-owned and supported by public funds. Surely the federal government should have a definite say in its policies. The Minister of Transport knows that there will be a delegation to protest once again, with representation from our provincial government, the municipalities, business and industry and the trade unions and workers, indeed I could say our whole community. I am confident that the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) will carry out the pledge he made to the Liberal candidate for Winnipeg South Centre during the election campaign, that "a new Liberal government will immediately clarify the position of T.C.A. in the light of the full facts which up to now the government has obscured or suppressed."

Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) for the statement he made before this house last Friday on the two meetings that he attended in London and Geneva. I was particularly interested in what he had to say about expansion of trade to developing countries. You may not know, sir, but I have been closely associated with the United Nations association in Canada for the last seven years. In order to learn more about the work of the United Nations beyond the general assembly I have had the privilege of being able to travel, first through the Asia region of the children's fund under the auspices of UNICEF. This took me to Japan, Formosa, Hong Kong, the Phillipines, Thailand, Cambodia, India and Pakistan. I continued on from there and made brief visits in Iraq, Lebanon, Jordan and Israel. A few years later, with the co-operation of my friends at the United Nations, I travelled for three months through nine countries in Africa, Ghana, Nigeria, South Africa, Rhodesia, Tanganyika, Kenya, Uganda, Ethiopia and the United Arab Republic. Quite frankly, it was the result of these two intensive trips that made me decide to enter politics. Between the years 1956 and 1961 I had found that our image abroad had deteriorated to such an extent that I was anxious to do anything that I could to serve my country. This was the time that we needed the leadership of our great Canadian, one who has given this country such service, who is known so well in so many world capitals for his outstanding ability in international affairs. I speak, of course, of the Prime Minister, a man who is so highly regarded at the United Nations, indeed all around the world. He is a man of peace and understanding, a man who already during his short term of office as Prime Minister has brought credit to our country by visiting both Britain and the United States to cement old friendships. I am proud to be associated with a friend that I have known for many years.

There is not time here today for me to go into the many questions relating to foreign aid. However, I want to say I am one of those Canadians who believes that Canada is not giving enough money, enough technical assistance or enough leadership. But I am one of those people who believes that foreign aid must be carefully planned, co-ordinated with other nations and followed through so that the main objectives can be achieved. I have seen the value of the simple community development schemes in the villages of central Africa. I was told that the women of the Masai tribe could never be trained. But I will never forget the day that I saw these women doing a feeding project for the children of their greatest enemy, the Kikuyu, who were starving as a result of the drought.

[Mrs. Konantz.]

Again I was privileged to witness the opening of an aluminum plant in Lagos, Nigeria, financing of which had been arranged for between Britain, Canada and Nigeria. After watching the way cargoes were taken from the great ships off the coast of Ghana by outrigger canoes, I understood so well the need for the great new harbour at Tema. Foreign aid is not charity. It is more than good business, it represents a true partnership with those less fortunate nations of the world whose living standards must be raised if the free world is to bring a better life for everyone. I pay tribute, Mr. Speaker, to the Canadian students who have gone to Africa and Asia under the auspices of the Canadian university services overseas. These young people are serving our country and learning at the same time, and I am sure that what the sponsor of this program had to say is true, that when these young people come back from a year or two of living and working in these countries they will be far more valuable citizens at home.

It would seem, sir, that there never was a time when there must be greater understanding between young and old, between all our people, between communities and provinces and well beyond our Canadian shores—an understanding between nations. I pray that I will be worthy of the trust that the people of Winnipeg South have placed in me.

(Translation):

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I should like at the outset to congratulate you on your new appointment. I should like also, through you, to congratulate the new Speaker of the house. The new Speaker came here at the same time as I did in 1949. We have always been fond of each other. I have especially noticed his first names: Alan Aylesworth. I remember that, as a child, I had the opportunity, at Pointe du Lac, in my county of Three Rivers, to see every summer the great and very influential politician that was Sir Alan Aylesworth, Sir Wilfrid Laurier's right hand. I remember that Sir Alan Aylesworth used to tell us about his political memories. I am convinced that if he were still alive, he would be proud of the new Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, I should like also to extend my congratulations to the mover and seconder (Miss Jewett and Mr. Choquette) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne.

(Text):

I should like to congratulate the mover not so much for what she said but for the way she said it.

(Translation):

As for the hon. member who supported the motion, I wish to congratulate him for having performed his task with great dignity.

Mr. Speaker, it is not easy, these days, to deal with Quebec and the French Canadians, and to explain what is going on in the province of Quebec.

I know that the bombings by the madmen of the F.L.Q. have spread confusion, but I should like to assure the house as well as all those who are listening that these bombings are the work of only a few who have been condemned by all the associations, by all the people of the province of Quebec endowed with a sound judgment, and even by the most fiery separatists.

There is surely a revolution boiling up in many fields right now in the province of Quebec, but it is a perfectly peaceful revolution, and it can be summed up this way.

The French Canadians want to play a greater part in the economy of the province of Quebec. Nobody can find any fault with that, it is a perfectly natural aspiration. It must even be encouraged by all possible means. There is unquestionably in the province of Quebec a movement, especially amongst the young people, according to which our young French Canadians should play a more active part in the economic, social and political life of the province.

To begin with, there has been changes in the field of education. Under the Hon. Paul Sauve, great steps were made in this field. Under the government led by Mr. Barrette, nine marking pieces of legislation were enacted, while since Mr. Lesage came into power, inquiry commissions have been set up and a real effort has been made in this direction.

There is something quite noticeable right now in the province of Quebec, in the streets or everywhere. When one talks with young people, they show a very real desire to learn, to qualify themselves, and this desire is sometimes reflected in outbursts of impatience.

I wish to point out to the house that this is a very invigorating atmosphere, and one that we shall not be able to destroy.

There has also been great changes in the church in Quebec; perhaps the church was somewhat too traditionalist. But today, there is an extreme liberalism boiling up in this same church. There is a modernism with which we were not familiar before. There is also a certain secularization taking place in the Catholic religion in the province of Quebec.

All this has contributed to create a new mentality among our people.

Unfortunately, that trend which reflects that great desire on the part of the French Canadians to play an even more important role in the province of Quebec gives rise along the way to a wave of separatism, a wave powerful enough to warrant our attention.

Two or three years ago, people did not take that separatist movement seriously and, for my part, I felt it was but another one of those short-lived movements which come up about every 20 years. I thought it was politically weak, that is weak in numbers and not homogeneous enough. But today, the movement has become more homogeneous and even turned into a political party.

I must tell you that it is quite strong among the youth of the province of Quebec. That even surprised me. I made a survey among the young people of my beautiful city of Three Rivers and was able to find that, not only among the university students, but also among those in our convents and colleges, that separatist feeling is real.

If we look for an example of that force, we simply have to notice the outbidding which is done at the provincial level towards the separatists. I can give further evidence of the seriousness of the situation. We just have to read the article under Peter Newman's byline which appeared last week in Maclean's magazine, which makes us wonder if, in fact, Mr. Lesage, the premier of Quebec, would not become Canada's prime minister or the president of the Quebec republic. I know that this article by Peter Newman contains a flash of wit but there is also quite a bit of seriousness.

Anyway, it is obvious that Quebec is going to sink more deeply into separatism.

As for me, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the only way we can provide for such an eventuality is to ensure that the young French Canadians who have a great desire to play their part in the economy and in the political life of the province of Quebec, be able to participate as well in the economic, political and social life of the whole of Canada.

And to do that, ladies and gentlemen—I beg your pardon, that was left over from the last election campaign—sacrifices will have to be made on both sides. Besides we are somewhat used to that because it must be remembered that, in the last hundred years, living as we do next door to the American giant, we have had to make sacrifices in order to keep our independence and our sovereignty. We have had to accept a standard of living lower than our southern neighbour's, only to be part of that sovereign Canada.

If we want to keep our country whole and united, we will have to make still more sacrifices. There is no doubt that our English speaking friends in the other provinces, as well as in the province of Quebec, will also have to make sacrifices. Why? Because they have the upper hand in our country's business and especially in the central state.

The royal commission on biculturalism or bilingualism will undoubtedly do some good since it has been approved. However, it will take two years to present its report. And it is much too long considering the turmoil in which the province of Quebec finds itself at the present time.

Canadians must realize without delay that we, French Canadians, want a change as soon as possible. First of all, Canada must have a distinctive flag without further delay. Even though we urge French Canadians of the province of Quebec to believe in a great and united Canada and to be Canadians first of all and Quebeckers after, they always reply along the same lines: "How can we believe such a state of things, how can we have a national feeling strong enough to believe in a united Canada when we do not have a distinctive flag or a national anthem such as 'O Canada'?" I ask then all Canadians to sincerely weigh the arguments I have just outlined concerning this problem.

At this time, it would be appropriate to make an effort in the field of federal services. As you know, the old question remains to be dealt with. What French Canadians consider most insulting, is to see that they are not proportionately represented in the central administration.

French Canadians do not hold as many senior posts as they should. I think that the best way of rectifying the situation now is to grant to each bilingual person, that is to anybody who has taken the trouble to learn both this country's languages, a supplement of 5 per cent in every civil service examination.

I want to call the attention of the house to a particular point. I would like the cities of Ottawa and Hull to become an essentially bilingual federal district which would really represent the union of both cultures and of both ethnic groups in this country. First of all, there is the needed number of people. All that is required is to create a federal district comprising Hull and Ottawa under a commission where both ethnic groups would be represented in equal numbers. French Canadians from the province of Quebec will then really feel that this is their country's true capital and will really feel at home here. Such a suggestion would, of course, require some sacrifice, and a great deal of consideration on the part of our English speaking friends.

However, I hope that they realize what the situation is at present in the province of Quebec, because it is really a rather difficult one.

Further, our Anglo-Saxon friends, mainly in the province of Quebec, could make true friends among French Canadians by helping to create the impression that the latter may live as successfully in our confederate system as English Canadians.

I now come to the industrial field. I know that some laudable efforts have been made in that direction. However, if we look around us, for instance in the beautiful town of Three Rivers, which, incidentally, besides being certainly the finest city in Canada is also the greatest paper manufacturing centre in the world, where paper is made from pulpwood taken from crown lands in the district of Mauricia, and where five or six large paper mills have been operating for the last 40 years, we would see that, unfortunately, French Canadians working in those paper mills, who thoroughly know their trade, as they have been employed there all that time, seldom rise above the rank of foreman.

In the last few years, something has been done along these lines, but our effort should be increased. Of course, there are people who say: "Perhaps they did not have all the necessary education and technical preparation." However in that same period, at St. Jerome and Mont Rolland, a French Canadian firm set up a paper mill that was as successful as those in Three Rivers. So I think that in that field, big corporations will have to make sacrifices.

Indeed some people say that these big industries had the necessary capital for that purpose, but I feel that this argument is slightly exaggerated. In fact, I could mention the example of one company that came to Canada with a capital of $1.5 million at the very beginning of world war II; today it has a capital of more than $350 million, because it received financial help from the governments.

As a matter of fact, I am of the opinion that the argument put forward by the French Canadians: "We do not have capital" also has some flaws.

On the other hand French Canadians must be prepared for sacrifices and they must consent to make a serious effort to save and strengthen confederation. We should not forget that confederation, which has been in existence for 100 years, constitutes a formula which has been of some service to the French Canadians, which enabled our group to develop, maybe not as fast as we would have liked to, but it nevertheless rendered immeasurable services. I am not one of those who pretend that we should destroy confederation, because it does not serve any purpose any longer. Confederation made Canada the great modern country it is today.

When French Canadians ask for changes, they should not forget that we have retained our ethnical individuality through confederation.

Let us remember that while we might feel we face serious problems today as far as saving confederation is concerned, those problems are very minute ones compared to the problems faced by Cartier and Macdonald in 1867.

This is why I believe that the ultimatum delivered by Mr. Lesage, the premier of the province of Quebec, was out of place. In my opinion, it was Mr. Lesage's duty to use that bit of common sense which would have been expected from the present leader of the province of Quebec. Quebec undoubtedly needs increased revenues and there are undoubtedly improvements to be made in the field of taxation, but did not our government increase equalization payments from 10 to 16 per cent in the short years we were in office? It would have been possible to discuss those problems around a conference table, and that is why I am asking the federal government to call a meeting of the representatives of the various provinces to discuss the problem of taxation.

I think everyone can expect Mr. Lesage to come to the conference table, as the representative for the province of Quebec, to get a better tax-sharing arrangement. That ultimatum of Mr. Lesage to the effect that the province of Quebec would get out of confederation if it did not get 25 per cent of taxes, should not have been delivered.

French Canadians have a right to make claims but their requests must retain a sense of measure. We must not forget that confederation was very beneficial to us and that it still is today.

I do not think that the statement made by the minister for municipal affairs, Mr. Laporte, to the effect that provinces had to be sovereign states united into a confederation, is likely to improve relations between the various provinces in Canada or between the two ethnic groups.

Nowadays, we see the European countries, age-long enemies, stand shoulder to shoulder to form the common market.

Mr. Speaker, I sincerely think that if we so wish Canada will live another hundred years as a great country. Sacrifices will have to be made on both sides and federal as well as provincial representatives of the people will have to show great statesmanship. We all want Canada to be a great country. We want both ethnic groups to be able to develop according to their aspirations. That can be done if we go hand in hand, shoulder to shoulder. I am certain that Canada will be a strong country, a great country and that a bright future lies before us.

(Text):

Mr. Leonard P. (Red) Kelly (York West): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether or not it is because I do not have on my skates, but it feels much more slippery here than it does on the ice. I should like to offer my congratulations to you, Mr. Speaker, and also to the Deputy Speaker on your election to these offices. I had occasion to get to know the Deputy Speaker a little bit during his first election campaign when I visited his constituency in order to help him in my own small way. I am certainly greatly pleased with the honour he has received in this appointment.

I should like also to congratulate the mover (Miss Jewett) and the seconder (Mr. Choquette) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. They certainly set a good example and I know that it is one with which I shall not be able to keep up; but I will certainly give it a good try. The position of the Speaker in this house reminds me a little bit of the referee in a hockey game. He has to know the rules of the house and he has to be able to set them out. Some Speakers are a little more rigid than others, and some are a little lenient. Sometimes they have to hang on a misconduct penalty, as happened in the last parliament to one of the Social Credit members. As a matter of fact the Speaker had to call on the Sergeant-at-Arms to make sure the hon. member went to the penalty box, but I am confident that we will have a little better conduct in this parliament.

Mr. Speaker, I have been a little slow in rising to make my maiden speech. I was not sure whether I should speak right away or wait for a while, but I received so much publicity in the last parliament by not speaking that I could not hope to achieve that much again.

Speaking for the first time in the House of Commons is a rather awesome feeling for a new member. It is not like speaking before an ordinary crowd. We have hon. members who are reading their newspapers, some doing their correspondence and others get up and leave just before one begins to speak. Then there is the odd one who is catching up on a little sleep that he missed. But seriously, sir, I would like to thank all hon. members of this and the previous house, and all the government staff who have been so kind in offering me their assistance. As a rookie in the house I was pretty green. I still am; but all the people I mentioned have been very kind to me and I would like to extend my thanks to them.

When it comes right down to it, the House of Commons reminds one of an amphitheatre in the days of the Romans when, having concluded your efforts, you look up to the gallery to see whether you get the thumbs up sign.

I first became acquainted with my riding of York West during my school days at St. Michael's College. I used to take the girls out from St. Joseph's and ride the streetcar down to the end of the line where we went dancing at the Old Mill. As a matter of fact we had to walk the last 500 yards or so because money was a little scarce in those days. Since then however the riding has changed greatly. It has become one of the fastest growing areas in the country.

It is bounded on the eastern side by the historic Humber river, on the south by lake Ontario, on the west by the new international airport and on the north by Thistletown and the Albion road. It is really a melting pot in a melting pot, and its population consists of pretty nearly every type of nationality conceivable. It has industries both large and small, approximately 800 in all. Some are Canadian owned and some are subsidiaries of United States firms.

One company in York West with a sales promotion of about $6,500,000 has just expanded into the United States, setting up a branch in Manhattan, New York, right in the heart of the American competition, but with no fear of not coming out on top. I think this is remarkable at a time when we are worried about how U.S. companies are taking over Canadian firms, and when we are worried about how Canadians will fare as we decrease tariffs on exports and imports. I feel this company deserves a great deal of credit. Also in York West we have a first in Canada, and that is pay T.V. I am happy about this, Mr. Speaker, because it gives me an opportunity to appear before my constituents every Sunday night.

As I have said, York West is one of the fastest growing areas in the country. Between the last two elections it showed an increase in eligible voters of approximately 6,000. My constituency is about 116 square miles in area and holds 100,000 voters. I may say that to represent so many people is a big job.

Because it is a fast growing community we have an influx of many families with a lot of young children, and these children have to have an education. We are pretty proud of the educational system we have in York West, both academic and physical. Academic education comes under provincial jurisdiction, but the physical education is a concern of all Canada, and comes under both federal and provincial jurisdiction. I feel that in the past few years we have become rather lax in regard to our physical fitness, probably because of the many modern conveniences we have which we never had 50 or 60 years ago. It boils down to the fact that we do not get enough physical exercise, and I believe a physical fitness program should be carried out to the fullest possible degree. I might point out, sir, that we suffer from a lack of physical exercise in this house. The only exercise some hon. members get is rising to speak often, but that is not a well balanced program.

I have some comments to make with regard to a Canadian flag and a national anthem. I was raised by my father and mother to honour and respect the Queen and the flag, but I am one of the younger generation and maybe this is why I have some of the feelings I do. In my career I have had the opportunity of travelling a little bit around the world and of appearing before crowds in foreign countries. When my team appeared in public, before our performance we stood in the spotlight and they used to play "God Save the Queen." Of course we stood at attention and we were very proud to do so. But during the last few years "O Canada" has been played the odd time. As I have stood before these people in a foreign country and they started to play and sing "O Canada, our home and native land" I have felt great pride and my chest stood out a little more. They were singing about our land, our home.

All this made me feel we should have a flag and a national anthem. This Canada of ours is young. It is a young land. People are coming to it from many different countries to settle here and be Canadians, and we should have our own national anthem and a flag that is representative of all of Canada.

An hon. Member: The maple leaf?

Mr. Kelly: There was a little criticism about the length of the speech from the throne but I feel it is not the form but the quality that counts; and the legislation outlined in that speech, if put into effect, will be good for the country. In addition it stated that more legislation will be introduced later. I think this is all that can be asked for. If these measures are put into effect the country will be in good shape and Canada will be put where she should be.

One paragraph in the speech from the throne referred to a municipal development and loan board which would provide loans to municipalities for the carrying out of projects to increase employment and improve services. I have talked with the municipal representatives in my riding and those in the surrounding districts. These people are interested in this legislation and are very anxious to receive the assistance provided by it when it is passed by the house.

During the election campaign and after I was elected I was asked, as I imagine most members of parliament have been asked, why I decided to run as a member of parliament. I know that all hon. members feel the same way as myself in thinking so much of Canada and her future, wanting to be part of that future and helping this country grow. I know this is the feeling of all hon. members. However, there was one reason in particular which I should like to mention. I had the opportunity of meeting our Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) on several occasions and I admired and respected him a great deal. The more I talked to him, the more I read of his past political history, the more I thought this man could be the tonic Canada needs. I felt he could do a whale of a job for the future of Canada. That was one reason for my running as a member of parliament. Then after I had been in the house for a short time and had more occasion to be closer to him and see him at work, my respect and admiration grew. I think that this government, with its legislation put forward under the leadership of our Prime Minister, will put Canada where she should be.

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, I should first of all like to add my congratulations to those of previous speakers upon your appointment. I should also like to congratulate the Speaker of the house and the other officers upon their appointment. May I also congratulate the mover and the seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. I thought they made an excellent contribution to the debate. Finally, Mr. Speaker, may I congratulate the hon. member for York West (Mr. Kelly) upon the very interesting speech he made this afternoon. If this is an augury of the speeches he will make in the future, introducing a little humour as he did today, I am sure we will all be very grateful.

As a representative of Simcoe East and a member of this parliament and of the previous Conservative regime I should like to say that I am more than proud to be a Canadian. I am more than proud to have been a member of previous parliaments, when so much was achieved under a Conservative government.

I think it is well for us all to remember that this is a great country which has done great things. I do not think I can do better than quote from the Ottawa Journal of May 1, wherein appeared an article entitled "A house left in good order". I think that after the election all of us should be proud of the position we occupy and have attained as Canadians. This article in the Ottawa Journal says:

> He left—

This is referring to Mr. Diefenbaker:

> —a country whose national production in 1962 had climbed 8 per cent to a peak of $40.4 billion—

Mr. Speaker, that is the first time in the history of the western world that any country of less than 20 million people has achieved such a great increase in gross national product. The article continues:

> He left him with a country which, after years of trade deficits, had at last achieved a favourable trade balance.

I think all of us, no matter what our political affiliations are, can be proud of the achievement Canada has made in this regard. The article then says:

> He left him with a country which, on the testimony of President Kennedy, had achieved a greater price stability than any other western industrial nation.
>
> He left him with a country whose reserves of gold and U.S. currency had been brought to $2,700,000,000—the greatest reached in years.
>
> He left him with a country in which, during 1962, trade had reached an all-time high; in which manufacturing had jumped by 8 per cent, construction by 8.2 per cent, business capital investment by 4.8 per cent, outlays for new machinery and equipment by 8.6 per cent, and consumer spending by 5 per cent.
>
> In short, Mr. Diefenbaker left Mr. Pearson with a country whose people were producing more, selling more, earning more and saving more than ever before in their history.

Mr. Speaker, I do not say this as a matter of politics, but as a Canadian I am proud of what has been achieved. The article continues:

> Mr. Pearson has said that he will "get the economy going", "restore confidence".
>
> If Mr. Pearson can "get the economy going" beyond an increase of 8 per cent in the gross national product in a single year, we shall all be grateful to him—

I for one, Mr. Speaker, hope that he can. The article continues:

> But what many must wonder about, in the light of the facts we have cited, is what Mr. Pearson can have in his mind when he talks of "restoring confidence". Was there really any lack of confidence, or reason for lack of confidence, in a country which in trade and income and price stability surpassed every other western nation in 1962?

Again, Mr. Speaker, I am proud to be a Canadian and a member of this parliament:

We must all hope that Mr. Pearson does well; to wish him well is but to wish well for Canada. But for truth's sake, if for nothing else, let Mr. Pearson and his friends stop trying to give the impression that they took over a broken-down Canadian economy.

Mr. Speaker, there are a few points to which I wish to refer. During the last election, in the campaign promises and statements of the Liberal party were to be found items referring to early tax reforms, a balanced budget, municipal aid and many other things. I should first of all like to deal with the promise made to establish a municipal bank where this meets, of course, with provincial approval, from whom money could be borrowed at favourable rates on the advice of the province concerned. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, the previous government had been doing this through the winter works program and by providing money at low rates of interest for the building of sewage plants, waterwork establishments, and so on. The municipalities were also given the incentive that if the work was completed in a certain length of time some of the debt was written off.

The municipal taxpayer is hard pressed at the moment by taxes that are needed to pay for local needs and I am surprised at the archaic way in which we are collecting money from taxpayers at the municipal level, then giving money back to the provinces, which is in turn given by the provinces to the municipalities in the form of grants. I would ask hon. members to consider the cost and the machinery involved in collecting this money at the federal level, giving it back to the provinces, going through all the machinery again and all the people necessary to handle it, then the provinces giving it back to the municipalities after the amount necessary for handling has been deducted.

Today in most municipalities 50 per cent or more of the tax dollar is spent on education. This is very necessary but it occurs to me that the federal government should be making larger grants to the provinces in this area. As we all know, they administer the Unemployment Insurance Act and are responsible for dealing with the effects of unemployment. We also know it has been found in surveys that the ranks of the unemployed are largely made up of those who are uneducated. It seems to me, therefore, that we should use our best efforts in educating people to a higher level, especially if this will help ease the unemployment situation, as we know from these studies it will. It seems to me the federal government should be accepting a greater responsibility with regard to helping the municipalities meet their education costs. It occurs to me that the federal government did in effect accept this principle when it went across Canada building hundreds of technical schools and accepting 75 per cent of the cost. We should go on from there and help the municipalities cover their education needs.

The Canadian Tax Foundation has published a book called "The Burden of Canadian Taxation" by I. J. Goffman. It divides the people according to three levels of income —those earning less than $4,000, those earning between $4,000 and $7,000 and those earning over $7,000. It is estimated that more than $6 billion a year is collected as taxation by the three levels of government—this survey, by the way, was made in 1957. The federal government takes over $4 billion of this amount while the provincial governments and the municipal governments take just under $1 billion each. Roughly 57 per cent of the five million taxpayers covered by this survey paid 25 per cent of the total taxes collected. They are in the $4,000 and under group. I do not think we should lose sight of this. It is interesting to note that these people contributed about 23 per cent of the federal revenue and 26 per cent of provincial revenue, but that at the municipal level they contributed no less than 34 per cent. This would indicate that the people in the lower income group, the little people, pay more to government at municipal level than they do to either of the other two levels of government. It is also interesting to note on reading this survey that people in the group $7,000 and over pay 40 per cent of the aggregate of all taxes. But this time the pattern is reversed. They pay almost 43 per cent to the federal government, 40 per cent to the provincial government and 30 per cent to the municipalities.

Let us put it in another way. Seventy per cent of all municipal taxes in Canada are collected from those with incomes of $4,000 or less, so any relief in respect of municipal taxes helps the lower income groups first—the labouring man, the farmer, the low income worker with a small family, people who need more help than any other group. These are the men we must be interested in; we must see that their families, their children, are looked after.

It seems to me somewhat archaic that we should not allow any exemptions in income tax in respect of municipal taxation. I think a change in this respect is long overdue.

Similarly, we do not allow income tax deductions in respect of interest paid by a home owner on a mortgage, this is a situation which I believe needs attention right away. In the United States, both municipal taxes and mortgage interest are allowable deductions. Action on these lines would do a good deal to help the small fellow to own his own home and to have a stake in his country.

To follow this theme further, it would seem to me that even without the aid of a municipal bank the chartered banks should, on a well secured loan—the security being, for instance, taxes which are to be paid or government grants due to be received—be able to lend money at a preferred rate of interest. I say this because such loans are virtually guaranteed.

I should like to touch on two other matters briefly. The first is the cancellation of the free testing for brucellosis by the federal authorities. Surely, this is a federal health campaign and in any public health venture the federal government as well as provincial governments should carry a share of the responsibility. Work of this nature for the health of animals has always been under the jurisdiction of the federal government. I need hardly point out that we export cattle to almost every country in the world and that our cattle are considered to be of the highest quality wherever they are sold. I hope the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) will be able to give this matter his attention very shortly so that farmers can have their cattle tested free of charge.

May I call it six o'clock?

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Speaker, to recapitulate on brucellosis testing, about which I was speaking at the supper recess, this is in my opinion a public health measure designed originally to protect the people from developing the disease, and second, to keep cattle from developing it. Once they developed it breeding programs became severely hampered, and human beings who contracted the disease underwent a long period of illness and convalescence. The loss of young cattle was crippling financially to many farmers. The federal government carried on this testing successfully over the years. Now, at the fruition of this long campaign, it appears that they want to give it up; they want to drop it. I feel that as a health measure this is completely wrong, that the public health should be protected, and the health of animals branch should continue testing cattle, where possible employing local veterinarians which would cut down the cost of travel and expense. Canada has made great strides over the years in listed and certified cattle. Our cattle have been sold in many parts of the world and have always given a good account of themselves. As a matter of fact, Canada holds an enviable position in this particular field, a fact to which the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) will testify. I would hope that he will give this matter his very earliest reconsideration.

I should now like to turn to another matter and to mention briefly the link between cigarette smoking and cancer of the lung. I mentioned this matter some years ago in the house, and since that time mounting evidence has come to light to prove the existence of this link between cigarette smoking and cancer of the lung. The British College of Physicians and Surgeons came out flat-footed last year and stated that cigarette smoking and lung cancer are definitely linked. This year the Canadian Medical Association and the cancer committee of that association have started war on smoking and lung cancer. Surely our federal health department will wait no longer to inform our school children and adults of the dangers of smoking. It has already been stated in an excellent article, I believe by Mr. Burton of the Toronto Star Weekly, that cancer of the lung kills more people than any other single disease. It kills more people than all the traffic accidents and drownings occurring across Canada each year. And once you have contracted this disease your chances of cure are pretty slim indeed. The president of the Canadian Medical Association has stated that this disease has reached epidemic proportions. This suffering and wastage of human life must be stopped. Each day 500 of our young boys and girls in our schools across the land, it is said, commence smoking and many will be condemned to premature death and suffering unless something is done to stop this epidemic of lung cancer.

Mr. Speaker, this is one of the diseases to which we have the answer. It is one of the diseases which starts largely in our schools. To recapitulate, I believe the figure quoted in one of our papers was that 500 boys and girls across Canada start smoking each and every day of the school year. About 100,000 of those children will probably be condemned to death by this disease. Many authors are writing good articles about this disease. There was an excellent article in the Star Weekly and another in the Consumers Digest pointing out the risks and dangers entailed when one commences to smoke. It is high time that the federal Department of National Health and Welfare joined hands with associations and groups to help bring to the people of Canada not only what is their right to know, but something that may save them from sickness, suffering and probable death.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that it is my sincere hope, and I know it is the hope of all Canadians, that the Prime Minister, at the end of his tenure of office, will be able to hand over the affairs of this country in as buoyant a condition as the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) handed them over to him.

(Translation):

Mr. Gerald Laniel (Beauharnois-Salaberry): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take this opportunity to congratulate you on your appointment and would beg you to convey my heartiest congratulations to the Speaker of the house for the honour bestowed upon him.

All members of the House of Commons are happy with the manner in which you have presided over the debates until now. Your sense of justice and integrity are in keeping with your high function and a credit to the constituency of Stormont.

I pay tribute also to the movers of the address in reply to the speech from the throne (Miss Jewett and Mr. Choquette), who discharged their duties with ease and spirit.

Mr. Speaker, I wanted to take part in this debate, because I too wished to express in this chamber the feelings of confidence I have had since the change of government. Moreover, those feelings are shared by all the Canadian people, who for many months had wanted to get out of this period of insecurity and indecision brought upon us by the Conservative regime.

There are two ways to examine the present situation and, consequently, the legislative program of the government, as outlined in the speech from the throne. We can enumerate the legislative measures mentioned, comment upon them and show to what extent they measure up to the expectations of the Canadian people, or we can compare the present situation with the one that prevailed at the opening of the twenty fifth parliament. I will adopt the latter procedure and go back to the 1962 election campaign when the party in power then was on the defensive, trying to justify itself and hoping for even half a victory, wishing to keep enough seats to form a government, even a minority government. They had to cling to power at all costs, forgetting that the people had the right to know about our economic situation and our relations with the rest of the world. I will not go over all the events but the facts prove that our leaders had failed to assume their responsibilities.

A second party which had been selling soap on television for two years, Social Credit, had certainly built up a clientele in part of the province of Quebec. During the election campaign, they kept on being as constructive and they hammered into the people's minds that they had nothing to lose, that they did not have to understand the Social Credit doctrine and, surprisingly enough, some people believed them. However, they forgot one thing. You cannot forever take a negative attitude and the last election proved it.

The "anti" this and "anti" that campaign lost a lot of speed since last April 8.

Mr. Speaker, it is fun to go to the circus but being part of one is another thing.

As for the New Democratic party, the grandson of the C.C.F. and the last offspring of the P.S.D., it remains as always conscious of its role as a watchdog. There are good men in that party but do they really believe that they will one day form the government of Canada?

As for our party, and here I am still referring to the election campaign of 1962, after a keen contest with the Conservatives, showing their mistakes and their irresolution, as compared to the program that we were offering them, the leader of the Liberal party demanded immediate action and requested a quick convening of the chambers.

We were defending parliament's rights to study urgent problems and we questioned some of the things done by government members.

All those people, Mr. Speaker, came to the opening of parliament on September 27, to listen to a speech from the throne that offered nothing new and a Prime Minister who was often arrogant. Before this Conservative intransigence, we, the Liberals, deemed it our duty to defend the people and we came to the conclusion that at that time the only weapon available to us was to overthrow that government which was considering only its own political interests.

The three other parties have accused us of engaging in petty politics, of refusing to give a chance to the Conservatives, who had not been able to accomplish, with more than 200 members—the strongest majority in the house since confederation—what they claimed they could accomplish successfully with a minority government, but without even wanting to discuss matters with the opposition.

While the N.D.P. members were seeking to have their leader elected in a by-election and in a province that was not even his, the Social Credit members, saviours of the French Canadian race, were discovering that they had a nationalist mission, among all the contradictions and the endless sermons on a mock money system. They always tried to hold up to ridicule our institutions and our qualified authorities. All the speeches delivered by the member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) during the last election campaign had already been given in the house during that short session. In fact, a journalist wrote in La Presse on January 30, 1963 and I quote:

> To have the Social Crediters in the house is too high a price to pay for what we are gaining in terms of bilingualism.

We, Liberals, might not have been in the headlines as often as those who were shouting; we have had perhaps a little more than our share of criticisms, but this does not mean that we have been inactive, on the contrary.

We had taken a decision in the face of the inefficiency of the Conservative government, and, during that period we were preparing ourselves to replace them. Our action was much more positive than certain people believed it was, and today the record shows that we have sought long term solutions to our problems. This can be seen from our program during the last election campaign and from the speech from the throne. It is all very well to be shocked by a unilingual menu at the cafeteria; it is still better to ask that Beauchesne be translated, if this is possible; but what can be gained by claiming Donald Gordon's head? Especially if the system is not changed, or if such an individual is replaced by his like.

Can we infer that a joint Liberal action, even if it is unnoticed, is worthless?

Some people have claimed that Social Credit is positive nationalism; it might seem that way to the Quebec voters, who elected 26 Crediters out of a total of 30. Yet is the speech delivered by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) on biculturalism on December 17 not really positive action? And who could have brought about such a broad outlook among the leaders of the Liberal party but the team of our members, people who know how to dialogue, who are trying to understand each other and to act accordingly?

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to serve my country on such a team under the leadership of such a competent and understanding leader as the present Prime Minister. Besides, several Conservatives are envious of us or have been in the past.

We have all examined the speech from the throne in which we find promising legislation for the future. Let the Conservatives make fun of the 60 days of decision promised by our party. They cannot understand such a thing, it is new to them. They are amazed to realize that the best way to solve a problem is to face it without delay. This is what the Liberal party intends to do within the next four years. Moreover, the Prime Minister clearly stated on many occasions that those 60 days are the first 60 days of decision suggesting thereby that this is only the beginning. We can feel already an atmosphere of confidence, we treat our friends as such, we call things by their names, the word "unemployment" is spoken once again and we are not afraid to use it while seeking the means to check it, especially if we consider that the Leader of the Opposition has finally managed to take a definite stand on the matter of nuclear weapons.

We repeat in this house what we have preached during the election campaign and a part of it has even been mentioned in the speech from the throne. We are ready to assume our responsibilities although it is obvious that we have many problems to solve and that many questions will require much tact.

Mr. Speaker, I admit frankly that there is no magic way of solving the problem of biculturalism but this government has resolved to create an equal partnership between the English speaking and the French speaking people. In the speech he delivered on May 20 in this house, the Prime Minister has shown his firm intention regarding this question and has said that the Canadian entity would progress only through the co-ordinated efforts of each and every one of us.

> But you cannot have a bicultural country without having a country. So Quebec, to be Quebec, must be Quebec in Canada.

Such are the words spoken by the present Prime Minister.

As far as I am concerned, I am ready to negotiate and most Canadians feel the same. I am confident in Canada's future, I believe in the possibility of a truly bilingual country where citizens of both major racial groups would have equal opportunities without infringing upon the rights of other minorities.

Several members who spoke before me mentioned those minorities and I am glad about that but it should not be forgotten that those people are more easily integrated than people of French origin. That sets the problem in a slightly different light. The province of Quebec is the motherland of all French Canadians and the latter have never stopped fighting for their rights for the past two centuries. It is high time we became full-fledged Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, I take the liberty of calling to your attention the fact that there is in my riding of Beauharnois-Salaberry a crown corporation where the French fact is far from being recognized at the management level. More than 80 per cent of the employees are French speaking and yet, in all the many years it has been in operation, there has not been a single French speaking department head. Apparently, there has never been a French Canadian qualified enough, we are told, as Mr. Donald Gordon said last year about the C.N.R.

All the French Canadians ought to feel that they have equal opportunities because it is often difficult to prove that discrimination really exists. I, therefore, urge the royal commission to start its work as soon as possible before other elements make use of those matters as an excuse to do unfortunate things.

I have no more patience with the pig-headedness of certain French speaking Canadians than with their English speaking counterparts. We should all open our minds and seek a better mutual understanding. We, the people's representatives in the house, are duty bound to set an example, and foster brotherhood between our two ethnical groups. While we grope for solutions, let us encourage the spirit of fraternity in our ridings. We must be the ambassadors of a renewed Canadian confederation, where unity will breed strength.

Blame must fall on the promoters of hatred, and there is surely no better way to fight them than to put into practice the brotherhood called upon by the government in the speech from the throne, and in the speeches of Liberal leaders and members of parliament.

The legislative measures we advocate to strengthen our economy, should restore confidence among the Canadian people. The Canada development corporation will increase their opportunities for partnership, and thus give our people a clearer understanding of their responsibilities at the national level.

The people must feel closer to its leaders, and all the other legislation dealing in particular with the establishment of a department of industry, a municipal development and loan board, an economic council, a contributory pension scheme and the appointment of an eastern minister of agriculture must bring Canadians closer together.

We want to provide the Canadian people with the highest degree of social and economic security, and we wish also to assume our responsibilities at the international level. Besides, the Prime Minister has already asserted himself in these fields in the few weeks the government has been in office.

We must regain the admiration of the free countries and we shall do so openly and directly on behalf of those who have elected us as their representatives.

(Text):

Mr. Jack A. Irvine (London): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take this opportunity, first of all, to convey my congratulations to you upon your appointment to such a high and distinguished office. I should like also to congratulate the mover (Miss Jewett) and seconder (Mr. Choquette) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne, not only on the very excellent manner in which they have presented their submissions but for their sincerity of purpose.

I must say, Mr. Speaker, that as a new member I approach this opportunity with a great deal of timidity. I have the privilege, and I consider it a great privilege, of replacing in this house the Hon. Mr. Halpenny. The constituents of London have accorded me a real honour and have placed upon my shoulders a major responsibility.

I should like to say that the city of London has become a key manufacturing centre in the province of Ontario. We can boast at the present time of some 200 manufacturing establishments, most of which are enjoying a great period of expansion and prosperity, more particularly in the last six years. If one checks he will find that the percentage of unemployment in the city of London is amongst the lowest of any city in Canada. We hope, and we trust, that the new government will do all they can to see that this condition is not changed adversely. London has a population of approximately 175,000 people. It is the second largest city in the province of Ontario in total area. It has one of the finest universities in Canada, the University of Western Ontario. We have shopping facilities that are above average. The city can also boast of having a higher percentage of residents owning their own homes than any city of like size in the entire Dominion of Canada. The city is surrounded by one of the finest agricultural areas in the country. You see, therefore, Mr. Speaker, the citizens of London feel they have a great deal at stake.

We have heard much here about unemployment. Sometimes the figures seem to be distorted to suit the purpose of the individual. There is an old saying that goes something like this: Figures don't lie but liars do figure. I was somewhat disappointed to find no mention was made in the speech from the throne of the unemployment insurance commission. It seems to me that this insurance program has too many loopholes and is being abused at the expense of the taxpayer. I know, as I am sure many others do, of people who work just long enough to reinstate themselves, then sit around until their credits expire, after which they go back to work again. This is an area in which I feel much can be done. It is my hope that as we pass through this much publicized period of 60 days of decision, something will be done regarding this expensive but necessary insurance scheme.

I was sorry also to note that no mention was made by our friends across the floor of an increase in old age pensions. I believe a promise was made, perhaps in a left-handed fashion, during the recent election campaign of an increase of approximately $10 per month. While I am in favour of this, I am also in favour of parliament taking a good look at the entire act. Many people who are the recipients of the old age pension at age 70 do not really need it. Imagine a man with a million dollars getting his $65 cheque every month. It is not inconceivable that we may be able to start this pension at age 65 for those in need. Many people have had to stop work at age 65, and have had no income until they reached age 70. While $65 or $75 per month is not much, the proverbial half loaf can, in many cases, be a godsend. Many people find themselves in these circumstances through no fault of their own.

As one with some experience in municipal affairs, Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might be forgiven a natural curiosity about three interrelated items contained in the throne speech. These are the proposed municipal loan fund, the national development or investment fund, what ever name it might be called, and the economic council for Canada. The throne speech merely made passing reference to each of these but, sir, they could constitute a bitter disappointment that would be tantamount to a national hoax or national betrayal.

As a new member I am given to understand that throne speeches are always couched in vague generalities. This being the case, the throne speech in these three particulars certainly adhered to tradition, but I wonder if this is wise in these three instances in the light of the new government's commitments. The government party campaigned on slogans, and chief among these was full employment. It was not maximum employment; it was not the most possible employment; it was full employment.

The economists have a variety of views as what constitutes a desirable level, a maximum level, and indeed the full level of employment. The present Minister of Finance is on record as to what he means by the best obtainable level. It does not quite gibe with the glossy propaganda pamphlets, with the national Liberal party resolutions, or with the Liberal party's campaign promises of full employment. The average Canadian thinks full employment means just that, that every Canadian ready, willing and able to work will be gainfully employed.

The throne speech says nothing whatever about full employment. In fact it hedges. It talks about the highest possible employment, which could mean anything at all, or it could mean nothing at all. This is not good enough for the leader of a party committed to accelerating the economy and to attaining full employment. It may be that having assumed office, and having accepted the responsibility for pushing the economy at a greater pace than it reached in 1962, the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance have decided that hedging is the wiser, more discreet course.

As I said earlier, the three interrelated agencies proposed by the government could mean much or they could mean nothing. Let us start with the economic council. This could be the same economic agency as proposed by the Diefenbaker government, an advisory council working hand in hand with the national productivity council and with the government; an agency that would assess, propose and promote specific projects.

The economic council as proposed in the throne speech could, of course, be something else again. Depending upon the authority vested in it, it could be a new government bureaucracy that not only would recommend but would control, direct and indeed dictate. If this is what the government proposes then the Liberal ministry will have to reckon not only with the Conservative opposition but with the Canadian public, and with management and labour alike.

Labour and management must come into closer harmony, but I cannot bring myself to believe that either management or labour ever will agree that the Prime Minister, and the Minister of Finance, or any other combination of ministers here in Ottawa, either have the knowledge or the ability let alone the right to control business on the one hand, or on the other hand to direct and order labour to accept specific jobs in specific communities and at specific rates of pay.

That is what a planned economy means in its extreme form and this is what the Liberal economic council may mean. No government can plan for full employment with any real hope of implementing that plan unless it has some power to order and direct. It might further be contended that even this ultimate form of state planning and state control cannot be wholly effective, for the simple reason that Canada cannot live in isolation; for the simple reason that this country, however the government might seek to direct its economy, will remain vulnerable to economic influences from beyond her own borders.

I am not alone in this thought. The financial community is disturbed by the vague generality of the information contained in the throne speech. Labour too is showing signs of concern. Just as no businessman is willing to abdicate in favour of management by bureaucracy, so it is that no worker in Canada with an investment in home and family life in any community is prepared to sell, to move and to start anew in another part of the country at the dictates of this or any other government.

The throne speech indicates that the government proposes to establish a national development fund. Here again the vague general statement of intention has caused concern in the business community and among financial institutions. For a government that made a campaign boast of restoring national stability, the administration appears to be doing its utmost to accomplish just exactly the reverse.

What is this development fund to be? Is it to be a gigantic government mutual fund, with its resources drawn from the major financial institutions and the small investor? Will this government sponsored agency divert investment funds, again by some form of compulsion? Or, if it offers inducements to big and small investors, then will it in fact compete with its own bond issues? Will it compete with provincial and municipal governments for investment capital? These are questions we would be well advised to ask ourselves and dwell on before we make a fatal step.

The third element in the government's economic program is that of calling for the establishment of a municipal loan fund. Municipalities naturally would welcome an ever ready, ever available source of low cost financing for local projects, and I would like to add here that I am sure the London council would be very pleased with something like that. I have had some experience with them on this subject.

[Mr. Irvine.]

I gather that the government has in mind a revolving fund of perhaps some $400 million, with a forgiveness clause applicable to municipalities that complete works within specific time limits. This at first glance might appear attractive. Indeed municipal governments have long advocated such a federal program. However it should be noticed that the proposed plan appears to be merely an extension of the present government's system of loans, but with the added feature of making a new board the central clearing house for all applications.

It will be interesting to see if the legislation confers any greater benefit upon the municipalities than does the winter works program of the previous government. This was a virtually all embracing program, and it should be remembered that under it municipalities derived a substantial benefit in the federal government's share of the labour costs involved. It remains to be seen if the municipalities will be happier with interest bearing loans than with the shared cost arrangement of the previous government.

Mr. Speaker, the government party's stolen slogan of "60 days of decision" has in fact provided a 60 day honeymoon for the new administration, but the honeymoon is just about over. The government must soon face the harsh realities of living with the inflated promises to which it was wedded in the zeal of an extravagant election campaign. How extravagant it was we already have had some intimation in the throne speech, with its forecast of a multiplicity of boards, funds and bureaucrats. Just how costly all this may be we will, I presume, learn in the budget next month.

The government is committed to effecting a closer balance between revenues and expenditures, and to moving towards a balanced budget.

The Prime Minister in his 1962 campaign promised a balanced budget within two years of assuming office. Presumably this means that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) will go half way in his 1963-64 budget toward striking the promised balance. With the current tempo of the economy he has a favourable tide flowing his way. The house will await the budget as a measure of not only government responsibility in office, but of Liberal responsibility when out of office.

Mr. Speaker, I submit that with the present composition of the House of Commons we are in a position where, if we get down to the task at hand, we should and could have good, sound administration. The members on the opposition side of the house will see to it that this happens. Over the period of the last six years we have enjoyed an economic growth never before experienced in Canada in peacetime. We are turning the country over to the new government in an extremely sound condition, and I would say that now is the time for us, whether we sit on the east or the west side of the chamber, to put nation first and party second. Let us get together in a spirit of progress and co-operation and get on with the business of running the country.

(Translation):

Mr. Gerard Perron (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with custom and tradition, I must first offer my congratulations to the Speaker, the Deputy Speaker and also to the mover and seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne (Miss Jewett and Mr. Choquette), who have performed their duties so well.

We are undertaking here a task which is most serious. From the start this first session of the twenty sixth parliament has new horizons to contemplate concerning our country's economy.

During the last election campaign, a great many projects were brought up for the benefit of Canadians from coast to coast.

The fact that the responsibility for administering the affairs of the state has been handed over to those who were so pessimistic, as we found out during the previous session, which lasted but 71 days and ended last February, seems to have stimulated them so much that they have become as optimistic as it is possible to be.

Canada's future and the future of Canadians must be considered from an angle which is sufficiently idealistic, even if the speech from the throne is rather vague with regard to the announcements and matters we will have to discuss during this brief session, to give us great hopes for Canada and all our fellow citizens from sea to sea.

Evidently, some things may be more pressing than others. I realize that, following an election, which, like the last one we had, consisted in a rapid attack, where all sorts of arrows were aimed against us in Quebec, who had to take more than we could absorb, we might tend to retaliate. I shall not waste my time pointing out all those barbed and pointed attacks against us. However, let me mention a few allusions made by the hon. member for Beauharnois-Salaberry (Mr. Laniel), who, a few moments ago, mentioned the "funny free money" of the Social Crediters.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that it has been more or less seriously tried to cast discredit upon what the Social Credit party has been advocating throughout the country for many years, i.e. the essential need to revise this country's Bank Act so that money might become an instrument of service in the hands of the shareholders, that is our society as a whole. I submit that nobody in this house has the right to try casting a slight upon us by speaking of "free money", when it is known that, among the many economists who, today, are sitting on the government benches nobody has yet been able to find a formula for reviving our economy. I hope we will be submitted other things than magic formulas, to amuse Canadians in general, and the whole country from coast to coast—formulas which are nothing but a waste of time—to solve this country's problems, which are great and many.

As the member for Beauce, which I have again the privilege of representing in this house, I can speak on behalf of French Canadians, and more particularly those of my own province. I also speak on my own behalf. I do not want to commit the group to which I belong, but I believe that, after the unfortunate events which recently took place in my province, it is high time that we consider, from all possible angles, the various problems which our Canadian society will have to face.

Speaking as a patriotic Canadian, I wish to be well understood by all, tonight.

It is all very well during an election campaign, to try to discredit an opponent, but the day has come now, I feel, to assume our responsibilities as right-minded Canadians and look seriously to the future of our country.

Much has been said about the state of Quebec. There has been much talk about it. In some Quebec circles, people have talked about the magic formula of Social Credit.

But will economists, at least those who are now among the fighting wing of the government party, be able to find something besides the formulas of indebtedness which we have known.

The speech from the throne mentions the setting up of a municipal development board. Will this be done according to the concept of conventional economists, that is by borrowing at 5 per cent to lend to municipalities at 1 per cent? That would only displace the uneasiness, since they should tax indirectly to pay the heavy burden of interest that we already have to repay on the huge amount of indebtedness we have all over Canada: federal, provincial, municipal and school debts.

As a Quebecer, I know something of the problems of our beautiful province. The indebtedness has no end. The critical economic situation in which they struggle at all levels of administration of public affairs is unimaginable.

As far as our school boards are concerned, the parent commission in the province of Quebec claims that an amount between $4 and $5 million should be used in the next few years to prepare plans enabling us to develop the talents of our people in the intellectual field as well as in the technical and scientific fields.

We have also been talking of steel mills for over ten or 15 years in the province of Quebec. What is preventing the establishment of those secondary industries which would convert our own raw material on our own soil and put to work a great part of our manpower and, consequently, would help to curb the unemployment evil which exists at the present time.

Mr. Speaker, this beautiful province of Quebec, for the past three or four years, had held the unemployment record. In January only, there were 200,000 unemployed in the beautiful province of Quebec, while at the same time many hundreds of persons could not keep their arms busy throughout the country. It was impossible to build factories on our own soil in order to bring wealth to the whole Canadian community, yet, during that time, under the cover of social security, what was happening? One hundred and thirty two million dollars were being spent on social welfare, while numerous inquiries were being made to try, not to find means to end dire poverty, but rather to deprive thousands of people from the benefits of legislation which could have afforded them the opportunity of providing their families with the bread and butter they lacked.

What is offered to us? A municipal development and loan board, and an area development agency. All these boards exist already at the provincial level and we have many of them. A corporation to finance the tremendous works which must be undertaken in the province of Quebec has also been established as we did here last year when we considered the Atlantic development board, discussing the matter for days.

What prevents the carrying out of all these things, even if it has been said that it will require lots of imagination to get the economy moving again?

I believe that we have in our province as well as in the other provinces, businessmen who think big and who have enough imagination to assess the needs of the people and our own processing and manufacturing capabilities according to our people's wishes and needs.

Is there today in the country a shortage of the basic things needed by the consumer? I am not talking about food and clothing. Of course I do not mention housing because I feel that it is time to find solutions to take out of the slums of Montreal, Quebec city and other cities in Canada, large families who must live there.

How many families worry about tomorrow, not because there is a shortage of goods but rather because the consumer does not have the means to buy what we could produce.

How many things could we produce ourselves to meet the demand if the consumers could pay for what they need?

Chambers of commerce, study groups and all kinds of commissions try to find solutions to those economic problems and a policy that would create new jobs. But, in the meantime, while talking about industrialization, we do nothing for some people who are underfed because they are unable to find work in their own country.

This state of affairs exists in my own constituency because we do not have the possibility of establishing secondary plants that could employ most of the manpower in Beauce. In that riding which has been in existence for 250 years, these North American pioneers even had to go into exile in other provinces and even out of Canada to find work.

Last fall some people talked here—and we will hear it again—of the protection we must give our workers who must go and earn their living in the state of Maine, south of the border. Why is it not possible to use some imagination and get the economy moving again inasmuch as money will not interfere with the plans of our administrators, at the municipal or school board level as well as at the provincial level?

It is all very well to laugh at the Social Crediters' "free money", but I think that the people are rather entitled to laugh at the lack of serious solutions by our economists to the many problems which at present face our society. It is not easy to find formulas to solve these problems. It is not by blaming formulas that problems can be solved.

The state of Quebec is on the march. We do not ask for more than our fair share but we want French Canadians to feel at home within the Canadian confederation so that they may march forward as equal partners in this twentieth century.

As a great leader of the Liberal party once said, the twentieth century belongs to Canada. If we want that to become a reality, Mr. Speaker, our own financial institutions will have to start working in the interest of the Canadian people instead of against them as they always did in the past.

At present, the processing of our raw materials is done outside of Canada, thus giving work to foreigners, after which the finished product is sold back to us at a profit. During the election campaign, the Liberal candidates often quoted from page 11 of their official propaganda booklet which reads as follows:

A new Liberal government will fully ensure that the money supply is adequate and that business is not crippled through a lack of credit.

What then is preventing our province from undertaking without delay, like the other nine Canadian provinces, a great number of projects, since plans have already been made at the provincial or municipal level to develop our economy?

What is preventing the carrying out of these many projects, if not the lack of funds or credit facilities available to those organizations willing to undertake those projects in order to give a new start to the Canadian economy?

The speech from the throne also mentions the matter of biculturalism and great emphasis was placed on the subject during the election campaign. The matter has been entrusted to the worthy representative for Outremont-St. Jean (Mr. Lamontagne) who will set up the commission appointed to look fully into the matter.

I wonder if the people of Quebec will have confidence in that commission when they realize who is responsible for it? After reading his works, one finds that provincial governments become branches of the central power, and such a stand is taken on the authority of the Rowell-Sirois report, which is perhaps the most centralizing of all royal inquiries.

Following that commission's report, centralization was put into effect by the Liberals who held office at the time and who, between 1940 and 1945, took away bit by bit, piece by piece, from the province of Quebec, the resources which would have enabled her to assume her responsibilities in the field of social security.

Unfortunately, we still meet Canadians who claim that it is the French Canadians' fault if they do not hold in confederation the place they should but that they had to relinquish in certain fields. Why? What prevented the provinces from availing themselves of the advantages offered in the field of social security, if not the financial impossibility of meeting objectives which the twentieth century has set throughout the world?

So, as a French Canadian from Quebec, I sincerely hope that the commission on biculturalism will be something more than a toy good for a couple of years, that is until we celebrate the confederation centennial in 1967, at the time the world fair is to be held in the province of Quebec.

As the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Pepin) was saying, I do hope that this will not be another opportunity to have us miss the boat. We would not want to miss the boat once again. We are now in full "evolution" and, please note, I do not say "revolution". We want Quebec to have its share in confederation. We wish to have our say, economically and politically, on a national basis and even on a world wide basis. We want a Canada where we shall be able to live in accordance with the legitimate aspirations of human beings who lack security but still hold the greatest respect for freedom.

Security and freedom are exemplary things to be carried very high today, because, under the cover of freedom and security, whole nations have been crushed under the boots of dictators. The economic dictatorship to which we are subjected at the present time may not be for our fellow Canadians as crushing as the political dictatorship some peoples have had to live under. While, in the name of authority, dictators have reduced peoples to slavery, I do not believe that we have the right, in the name of freedom, to allow democracy to take advantage of the masses, as it happens in this Canada of ours.

Many family heads, farmers and factory workers, citizens from large cities and small towns, had put their confidence in the future of our country. How many businessmen now realize that everything is not running smoothly in their country?

Let us talk now about contradictions. The speech from the throne mentions the appointment of a second minister of agriculture, a French Canadian representing the Atlantic provinces and better acquainted with the problems of the eastern farmers, and at the same time the present Minister of Agriculture announces the abolition of the milk subsidy. I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if this is a policy likely to give new confidence to the French Canadian people of Quebec and I wonder if our Canadian confederation does not still operate to our disadvantage because I represent a group of people composed of large French Canadian families who had to leave home and go here and there, due to the lack of job opportunities in their native place, in their own county.

We have had imaginative people who succeeded in building firms with a national and international reputation. I could give as an example the "Vachon" cakes from Ste. Marie de Beauce. There are still in Canada businessmen with imagination in our twentieth century. If only loans were made available to them through an industrial financing bank. At the present time we have an industrial development bank which refuses to grant 75 per cent of the loans requested. If money were more readily available, if it were within the reach of these businessmen, we would see the industrial situation change in our country and there would be created additional jobs. I wish the province of Quebec would nc longer hold this notorious unemployment record in Canada.

During the last election campaign, and generally, much has been said about the fact that the province of Quebec has delivered an ultimatum. And it is still being repeated. According to that ultimatum, there are only ten months left to give back to the province of Quebec part of its tax rights, that is 25 per cent of individual income tax, 25 per cent of corporate income tax and 100 per cent of the estate tax. How many of us have realized that two months have already gone by since that 12-month ultimatum was given? It seems that some would like to forget it.

It was said during the last election campaign that our magic formulas had no value at all. Maybe they prefer to keep bowing tc the financiers in this country, those who control money and finance everywhere, under the banking system we have in Canada. Canadians are being paralysed and prevented from making this country a place where people would smile more often instead of being concerned about the future.

We have witnessed a radical change in the speeches made in the house. Last year, the Liberal party took pleasure in blaming the Conservative party in a most pessimistic way, sometimes to the point of preventing businessmen from being confident about our industries, because they feared the financial future of the country. This same party is now most optimistic. Is this the justification of what we had been advocating for several years already? Are the good parties good only when they sit on the opposition benches?

Mr. Speaker, I hope we will find out the worth of some who, today, assume administrative responsibilities in the affairs of Canada. The party in power must stop acting like the hon. member for Beauharnois-Salaberry (Mr. Laniel) who tried to hold us up to ridicule. He should not forget that as the representative of a riding in a minority government, he must also, like myself, represent the interests of all Canadians, and it is with the sincerity of a politician that we must strive toward that objective, and not by running down the splinter parties or by predicting that there is no future for them.

Social Credit has contributed its own pinpricks. Today, in Quebec, things are moving since June 18, even though nobody will give us the credit of having awakened the nationalist feelings of French Canada.

I do not feel obliged to say that it is not only by insisting on a bilingual menu in the cafeteria that we will reach our objective, because we have seen behind that something besides bilingualism. We have seen something else there and, moreover, the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) said himself, a few months before the election campaign, that the French Canadians in Quebec will no longer be satisfied with bilingual cheques. We have also seen something besides bilingualism. We have seen two great nations, the very foundation of that confederation, which want to go forward together. It has been repeated that the best thing was to make Canada from coast to coast a country where it is good to live, a country able to give security and freedom to each and every one of its citizens.

We do not call for magic formulas which would free us from economic servitude but we ask that a sound monetary system based on mathematical data be set up to bring about a constant balance between production and consumption, under which money would not stand in the way of those who can make our country richer and more productive and who want to show the whole world that people of various nationalities can live together in a country where bilingualism is recognized by the constitution itself.

Mr. Speaker, my opinion concerning the French fact may be different from that of your predecessor who feels that French Canadians should be on the same footing as newly arrived Canadians in this country. In my opinion, there is quite a difference between one's right to be educated in one's mother tongue and to speak it and the right of equal partnership in this fine and great country of America which is recognized by the constitution.

That is why, on behalf of all Canadians, I would ask those who are entrusted with the government of our country to provide, not the magic formulas they claimed to have, but at least down to earth solutions. The numerous economists who are members of the government should find means to restore the confidence of the people in a political climate where we could rightly expect the fulfilment of the predictions that the twentieth century would belong to Canada.

(Text):

Mr. Fred T. Armstrong (Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare): Mr. Speaker, may I in this my maiden speech in this house join with other hon. members in congratulating you on your election to your very high office, a position which I know you are very worthy of holding. I should also like to congratulate the Deputy Speaker, who is also chairman of committees, and to join with other hon. members who spoke earlier in complimenting the mover and the seconder of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. These speeches were two of the finest I have heard this session.

My riding of Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare is one of the finest in Canada and is in the finest province, Nova Scotia. This riding consists of three provincial ridings: Shelburne, being a single riding; Yarmouth, a dual riding; and Clare, a single riding. Shelburne county is nearly 100 per cent English speaking. Yarmouth is about 50 per cent French speaking and 50 per cent English speaking and Clare is about 100 per cent French speaking. Most of the people of Shelburne county are fishermen, depending for their livelihood mainly on the sea. The town of Lockeport, which is part of Shelburne county, has three fishing plants employing approximately 350 people, both men and women, as fish cutters, packers, and so forth. The fish are brought in by draggers and long-liners, and people from the surrounding area are employed there. In the town of Shelburne the same thing applies as in Lockeport, but the fishing plants are not as large. Another industry in Shelburne is the manufacture of office and school furniture from moulded plywood by Ven-Rez Products Company. Shelburne is also noted for its fine granite stone from which is manufactured in the town tombstones and granite stone sidings for buildings.

The people in the remaining area of Shelburne county are engaged in fishing or in fish plants, with the exception of the areas of Clyde river, Upper Clyde and Ohio, where they are engaged for the most part in lumbering. There are also boat shops in the Shelburne, Shag Harbour and Woods Harbour areas, where they build Cape island lobster boats, which are sold both locally and in the United States.

(Translation):

The people of Clare county depend a great deal on fishing, some on farming, lumbering and boat construction for their livelihood, but families in that part of my riding derive most of their income from fishing. There are several small businesses that build boats from 35 to 50 feet long, many of which are exported to the United States. There are also two large shipyards, each employing about a hundred workers. Those shipyards build boats up to 125 feet long, which are mostly used for scallop fishing and other types of deep sea fishing. Those businesses were set up during the war by the numerous French speaking Acadians who live in that part of my county.

Allow me to say, Mr. Speaker, that the French speaking people of Yarmouth and Clare counties expect to enjoy one day television programs on the French network of the C.B.C. Since you all know the story of the Acadian people, I need not repeat it tonight. You can appreciate as well as I do the importance of French culture and French language media to my Acadian constituents. I read in the papers recently that the C.B.C. was planning to build shortly a satellite station at Cheticamp, in Cape Breton, and in the Magdalen islands. I am not familiar with technical problems, but I expect that it would probably be just as easy to build a rebroadcasting station at Digby Neck in order to comply with the rightful demands of our French speaking population.

I trust that my colleagues from the province of Quebec will use their influence with the departmental authorities to help me obtain this satellite station.

There is also in my county the St. Anne college at Pointe de l'Eglise. This college is well known to all Acadians and it has surely helped them to preserve and develop their French culture. The Reverend Eudist Fathers direct the college which is attended by over 300 students. Two months ago, works at a cost of $300,000 were undertaken to receive an additional 150 students. As you see, my French Canadian constituents are active and the French people of my riding are trying to develop with all modern means available.

(Text):

The people of Yarmouth county also depend a lot on fishing, some lumbering and farming. The chief industry we have in the town of Yarmouth is the manufacturing of cotton duck by Cosmos Imperial Mills Limited, who employ approximately 400 people. The other industry is the manufacturing of sweaters and tartan plaids by Thistle Knitwear Company Limited. Then there is in the town of Yarmouth the Yarmouth Ice Cream and Dairy Company Limited, large milk suppliers and manufacturers of butter, cheese, ice cream and various frozen foods.

The communities of Wedgeport and West Pubnico are large fishing areas with their own fish plants. Boats 35 to 50 feet long for lobster fishing and pleasure are also built there and sold in the United States. We also have in West Pubnico a firm engaged in the manufacturing of school buses. In these two areas almost all the people are French speaking.

We also have our problems in Yarmouth. One is the television supplied by the satellite station bringing in a channel from Halifax. Our people are pleased to have this service but are dissatisfied with its extent and have asked me to try to obtain another channel.

Another problem is our local airport which is becoming outdated and not large enough for the planes that are now being used. We were told before the election of 1962 that $1,600,000 was set aside for an extension to the airport, but since that time nothing has been said or done about it. This apparently is another project affected by the austerity program. If the existing airport in Yarmouth is not enlarged and improved it will mean we will have a feeder service from Halifax or Saint John, New Brunswick, possibly two or three times a week, resulting in the worst setback western Nova Scotia has ever had.

For instance, the lobster buyers are working up trade with other countries to ship live lobsters or fresh lobster meat to other parts of Canada and to all parts of the United States. Our tourist trade will also be greatly affected if the project is not carried out. I believe that after this government has looked into the matter something will be done to improve the situation.

We also have the motor vessel Bluenose plying from Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, to Bar Harbor, Maine, making a round trip daily during the summer months and the tourist season. This service began in 1956. We are all delighted to have the Bluenose plying between these two ports, but hotel and motel operators as well as the merchants in Yarmouth believe that the vessel, being Canadian owned and operated by Canadian National Railways with a Canadian crew, should lay over at night at Yarmouth and not at Bar Harbor, Maine. If she did this, tourists would then be in our town during the late afternoon for shopping and would patronize our hotels and motels in Yarmouth overnight. I also intend to bring this matter to the attention of the government.

As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, my riding is essentially a district of primary industries. With regard to the primary industries of fishing and the gathering of Irish moss, in going around the area I find that the requirements for these have been neglected in the past three years. More and improved facilities are needed because each year more boats are being built and more people are entering the fishing. In most cases throughout the area the wharves and breakwaters, which were barely adequate 10 years ago, have not been improved or enlarged, making the facilities completely inadequate for the increased number of boats being used each year. Our fishermen do not want handouts but are seeking decent facilities to protect their boats and equipment.

It is gratifying to know, Mr. Speaker, that our Prime Minister, who has been in office such a short time, has already visited the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom and the President of the United States of America, and has had friendly and constructive discussions with them. In my opinion there is no better way to live and prosper than to be friendly with one's neighbours.

I am pleased to see included in the throne speech the item to reduce barriers limiting trade. This is a step in the right direction, especially with regard to trade with the United States, as our people in Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare are almost totally dependant on the United States for markets for their fish, Irish moss and other products.

The establishment of a 12-mile limit is something that has been talked about for years but nothing has ever been done. I am pleased to see that the present government is endeavouring to implement this undertaking which, if brought into being, will be so beneficial to our Canadian fishermen.

The people of Canada, I am sure, will be pleased with the establishment of a comprehensive contributory pension plan, and I do expect the government to increase as soon as possible existing old age pensions and old age assistance payments as well as pensions for the blind and disabled to $75 a month, and also to extend the provisions to single women and widows at the age of 60.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, may I say that I am proud to be a member of this house and to be associated with such a fine group of people from all parties. I should like to congratulate the Prime Minister upon having selected a very capable group of cabinet ministers. My aim now is to endeavour to do the job the voters of Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare expect me to do.

Mr. Joseph Slogan (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to add my congratulations to the many you have already received upon your election to the high position of presiding over the debates of this house. I am sure that you will continue to enjoy the confidence of the members on all sides of the house for many years to come. I should like also to extend my congratulations to the mover (Miss Jewett) and the seconder (Mr. Choquette) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne.

I should like to extend my congratulations to all those members who have been returned to this parliament. It is said that the battle of opinions is the true dialogue of democracy. We are all believers in democracy in this house. I think all of us form friendships with members of all parties. It is one of the great pleasures of being re-elected to renew those friendships.

For a moment, I should like to make some observations about the composition of this house. I have been very amused during the last few days to watch the Liberal backbenchers and see member after member in the back row get up and make his maiden speech. I think this is a very fine thing. Indeed, this privilege is not easily won, because in the last parliament one of the members sitting in the back benches complained very bitterly over the fact that a small group of frontbenchers prevented him from speaking, asked that speeches be censored, and so forth. I sometimes wonder how altruistic this freedom of the backbenchers in the Liberal party is. I have waited to hear some of the members on the front benches speak. I thought that after all of this talk about action and decision, one by one the ministers would get up and say: This is the policy of action for Canada. They have been very mute indeed. It seems to me that they are merely using the backbenchers to hide their own lack of policy. In fact, their policy seems ephemeral indeed, because it seems to dissolve day by day as the 60-day period dissolves.

I should like to make a brief comment on the composition of the cabinet. A few days ago I was in Toronto attending the Canadian Dental Association convention. During that time I took the opportunity of visiting some of my friends who belong to different ethnic groups. I must say that these days they all seem to be Liberals. They expressed very keen disappointment in this government because the very able member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz) who, on the basis of seniority should have been appointed to the cabinet, had been overlooked. I believe the Prime Minister was asked to put him in the cabinet. He would have made a very wonderful minister of health, but instead of that the Prime Minister relegated him to the position of caddy to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh). There are other fine members on the other side of the house. There is the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Badanai) and the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Macaluso). These are members who represent that third force in Canadian life about which the other side of the house has been so mute. I refer to the one quarter of the Canadian people who are not of Anglo-Saxon or French descent. For 22 years, the Liberals ignored them. The very able member for Vegreville sat here for eight years but received no recognition at all.

How different it was when the Conservative party came to power. The former minister of labour was appointed immediately, and he was one of the finest ministers of labour this country has ever had. We now have an Indian senator and there are two Ukrainian senators, one representing each faith. We are all waiting to see what this government is going to do about this third force to which they pay such great lip service. The present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) were so loudly indignant. They said the Conservatives always talked about this third force in Canadian life. They said they were the ones who really represented these people. Well, these people are waiting. I am sorry that I have to be the one to speak for those who are in Toronto, but obviously the present members from Toronto are not looking after them.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Liberal frontbenchers will pay a great deal of attention to the backbenchers and also the opposition, because they ought to do so. You know, the backbenchers are an indispensible lot these days and their price comes rather high as the Liberals have found out. They are not easily bought. It is a fact that the opposition represents the opinions of 57 per cent of the people of Canada. The government, therefore, should pay more attention to the opposition than to their own policies, policies that were rejected by the majority of the Canadian people, as were the majority of the Liberal candidates.

I do not want to be so negative all the time. I want to tell you a little bit about that great Conservative party and the policies that party has followed. These policies have, all too often, been misunderstood by our friends and misrepresented by those who are opposed to us. The Conservative party was born long before Canada. In 1854 a young lawyer by the name of John A. Macdonald united a group of progressive young men behind his dynamic leadership. This was a group of men with differing views but a common purpose. That purpose was to unite the existing colonies which were disorganized and were being threatened externally. He set about bringing confederation into effect and creating the nation of Canada. Thirteen years later that nation was created, largely on the initiative of the Conservative party. Sir John A. Macdonald, the first prime minister of Canada, did not rest then. He had another vision, a vision of extending and uniting this Canada from sea to sea. In order to accomplish this, the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway was undertaken.

This was the greatest single feat in Canadian history. It dwarfs the St. Lawrence seaway. Almost 100 years later we are just opening the trans-Canada highway. The defeatist Grit opposition of the day said we were building railways from tepee to tepee. I have just introduced this little bit of history in order to show that the policy of the Conservative party has always been a Canada first policy, a policy of national purpose and national unity.

I am not going to give you a history lesson tonight, but I should like to refer to 1957. After 22 years of Liberal government, confederation was beginning to split at the seams. The leader of the Conservative party said to the people of Canada: This party wants to provide equality of opportunity for all parts of the country, to all segments of the people and to all segments of the economy. He said that there were certain parts of the country which had fallen behind and he named those parts. He referred to the maritimes, the west and the north. He said that there were certain segments of the people who had fallen behind, and he named them. These were the people on fixed income. They were falling behind because the cost of living index was going up at a rate of 3.7 per cent per year over the last 10 years of the Liberal regime, and their meagre pensions were being eaten up. These were the old age pensioners, the blind, the disabled, the veterans, the Indian population and so forth. He said there were certain segments of the economy falling behind, and he mentioned small business and agriculture.

Then we said what we would do about it, and when we were elected in 1957 we started to do something about it. We immediately raised old age pensions by a further $9 a month. Mr. Speaker, you have heard about the six buck boys. It might be interesting for hon. members on the other side of the house to realize that the Liberal government was defeated on June 10 of that year, and the increase of $6 did not come into effect until July 1, so that we paid for that six bucks, and immediately afterwards increased old age pensions by a further $9 a month, and later still by a further $10 a month. This has meant well over $1 million in the pockets of old age pensioners in my riding alone annually.

Old age assistance, together with the blind, disabled and veterans pensions were also raised, and we did something for the Indian people. We appointed an Indian senator and we gave the Indians the vote. They had the vote in eastern Canada at one time, but in 1898 the Liberal government took it away from them.

We improved their housing, and if one doubts what I am saying all he has to do is go through any Indian reserve in my riding where there are 3,500 Indians, to see the improvements in education, in new schools, new houses, new roads being built, and in the new self-help projects such as pulpwood cooperatives. We adopted a progressive attitude towards these people who had fallen behind. We have heard a lot about the Glassco report and integration of Indian schools and hospitals. This is already taking place in my riding. These are some of the things I just want to mention in passing.

Then we dealt with the segments of the economy which had fallen behind. This included small business, and for the first time the government introduced small business loans, to help small businessmen get loans of up to $25,000 to improve their premises and assist them compete in modern society.

With regard to agriculture we displayed the same basic approach to it as we brought to bear on all the problems of Canada. What are the problems in agriculture? Mr. Speaker, you know what they are. The unpredictability of the weather is one of them, and so we broadened the eligibility for P.F.A.A. and increased the payments. We brought in crop insurance. To cope with the problem of surpluses we introduced the accelerated sales program. There was a shortage of credit, and so we scrapped the old farm loan board and set up the Farm Credit Corporation. Under the old board an average of $4 million a year was lent to farmers during the Liberal regime, but under the Farm Credit Corporation loans to farmers last year alone amounted to $90 million more. These are the kind of things we did to extend credit to farmers; yet the Liberal party says it is going to extend credit to farmers.

There was instability of prices and to deal with that we brought in the Prices Stabilization Act. We also introduced ARDA. I could tell you the story of wheat—the greatest story ever told. When we signed the Chinese wheat agreement the then hon. member for Assiniboia said "This is not a deal because there is no fixed price." Do hon. members not remember the British wheat deal signed by the Liberal government, which robbed western farmers of $600 million? Well, we were not going to make that mistake; we did not want a fixed price.

The price of wheat was $1.67 a bushel when the Chinese agreement was signed. Afterwards it went up to over $2 a bushel, and that meant millions of dollars more in the pockets of the western farmers without costing the taxpayers a cent. When the farmers marched on Ottawa they asked for a subsidy of 30 cents a bushel. In the end result they got more and it did not cost the taxpayers a cent.

Liberal spokesmen have talked about a minimum price of $2 a bushel. Mr. Argue, when he came into Springfield, went one better. He said $3 a bushel for wheat under the two price system for the first 300 bushels, and a guaranteed minimum of $2 a bushel for the rest. Mr. Speaker, I am all for that, and I am just waiting for it to be implemented.

During the election campaign the Prime Minister promised free milk for school children. We have a big milk surplus and so he said they would give free milk to all the children in schools. We are still waiting for that. All sorts of promises were made to agriculture. One of the promises was a higher initial payment on oats and barley to be announced before seeding time. Well, seeding time is here but the announcement is not. It just goes to show this government is not a government of decision or action. It is a government of inaction and a government that is trying to forget its promises.

I am not going to talk much about agriculture because many able agricultural spokesmen have spoken before me, but it is a sad story indeed that we have to have two ministers of agriculture. In fact the one minister we have has nothing to do now because he is going to auction sales. The government has not enough activity to keep one minister occupied. The farmers of western and eastern Canada are not looking forward to the fragmentation of the national policies for agriculture brought in by the previous government.

We said that certain parts of the country had fallen behind and we would do something about them. I am not going to talk about the maritimes as they have many able representatives to speak on their behalf, but I am going to say something about what is going on in my own province of Manitoba. There was the south Saskatchewan dam, promised for years and years by the Liberals, but it took a Conservative government to bring it into being. The Columbia river project would be under way if it were not for one provincial government that cannot make up its mind.

What about Manitoba? I see the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) smiling. For a long time I felt he was the spokesman for Manitoba, and it was a sorry day indeed when this government came to power. I expected as a good Manitoban with great ability, that the Prime Minister would instantly recognize this man and place the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate in the seat immediately beside him. This, Mr. Speaker, was the man picked to be prime minister once before. It is a sorry thing that a man of such great ability was put in such position as house leader and Secretary of State. I feel I must speak up for him because he is much more deserving of a higher position than that which he received.

In Manitoba we have the Winnipeg floodway. We have an associated system of dams and water conservation projects, and the biggest thing to come to Manitoba has been the Whiteshell nuclear research establishment in my own constituency of Springfield. What does that mean to us? I first entered politics as a young student in 1953 because of the fact that 90 per cent of the young people were leaving Springfield on account of lack of opportunities. What is Springfield today? It has been described as the jewel in the crown of Manitoba, and one of the greatest projects in it has been this Whiteshell nuclear research establishment. It was brought there under the national development policy of the Conservative government to stimulate those parts of the country that were falling behind. I hope all hon. members of the house will have the opportunity of coming to see it.

There are some 600 men working there at present, and in a few months there will be some 500 people living in the new townsite there. Well over $20 million has been spent, and I think eventually the expenditure will probably be well over $200 million. What does it mean? It is not just the construction jobs that it provides for the people from Manitoba and elsewhere, but it is the jobs it is going to provide for the brilliant young men in universities in the research program for the peaceful uses of atomic energy. These young people who at one time had to leave the province and the country to seek opportunities elsewhere can now find opportunities on their own doorstep.

During the last election campaign the Liberal party in Manitoba had a television or telethon program, or something like that, where you 'phoned in questions. One of my constituents 'phoned in a question and received a letter from the Liberal party of Manitoba in which they said:

> The Whiteshell nuclear project has not been nor ever will be a campaign issue. The Liberal party has in the past, and will continue to support the establishment of all such similar projects for the province of Manitoba.

I was interested to listen to the hon. member for Winnipeg South (Mrs. Konantz) when she said that she and the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Teillet) are going to do such great things for Manitoba. Well, my hon. friends, where were they when the present Prime Minister, who claims to have such a broad national outlook, was trying to take this project away from Manitoba and put it into his own riding? The Minister of Veterans Affairs sat mute in the Manitoba legislature. Where is he now? The only thing he has done for the west is fire one of the most capable men on the veterans' pension commission. If that is the greatest contribution he is going to make to western Canada he may as well pack his bags and move to Ottawa, because surely this is not why the people of Manitoba elected him.

The Liberals paid great lip service to this nuclear project. Let us look at the headlines of just a little while ago. Here is a headline of the Beauséjour Beaver of February 3, 1960, "Pearson for moving nuclear centre". Then we see this headline, "Liberals increase pressure against research centre". This is the kind of pressure that was brought to bear by the Liberal party in trying to take this project away from Manitoba and put it in the Prime Minister's own riding. There were marches on Ottawa. Do hon. members remember the march of the women from Elliot Lake? They said there were 500 of them. I counted them; there were only 150. They did everything they could, and the present Prime Minister was the leader in the fight to take this project out of Manitoba and put it in his own riding. Is that a viewpoint for a national leader to take? Is this the national viewpoint of the Liberal party? If it is, it is little wonder that they received the verdict they did from western Canada. That is exactly the verdict they will continue to receive.

I talked about the north. We had that vision of the north. Do hon. members know what the present Prime Minister, that great leader with national vision, said? He said, when we brought in our roads to resources program, "You are building roads from igloo to igloo." Does not that harp back to the days when we were trying to build Canada and bind it together with the C.P.R.? They said in those days that we were building railways from tepee to tepee. The philosophy of the Liberal party has not changed. The philosophy of the Conservative party has not changed, because we adopt that same basic attitude toward our nation's problems and our nation building that we had in those days. It is little wonder that Harry Boulette—who was a Liberal candidate in the provincial election, I believe, in Manitoba in 1958 or 1959—came out in this election and supported me. He said that the policies of the former Liberal government had bankrupted the north country. He is known as the king of the north. He said that the policies of the Conservative government had breathed new life into the north country. It is no wonder the Liberals received such a small percentage of the votes in the north country, because when their own party supporters and party candidates desert them, they must indeed be bankrupt of ideas. Harry Boulette was not the only one. There was the candidate in Brandon-Souris who deserted the party because of their nuclear stand. He led an anti-nuclear demonstration in Winnipeg during the campaign. Therefore one does not wonder at the verdict given by the people of western Canada to this government.

I think it is about time that instead of fragmentation policies they sought to unite this country. I for one will be waiting eagerly for the ministers on the other side of the house to get up one by one and declare what are these nation building policies they are going to bring forth. I would like to see them brought forth, because we will certainly support them if they are good for Canada.

I must compliment the backbenchers of this parliament, because they are most certainly better behaved than were the backbenchers of the last parliament. We are not going to behave in any way like the Liberals behaved last December 19. Do hon. members remember that day—

Mr. Matheson: After six o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Pipe down.

Mr. Slogan: —when they forced the prime minister to stop speaking. A friend of mine, after witnessing that incident, said, "You know, the House of Commons was once a gentlemen's club where most of its members spent their time hunting and shooting. After that demonstration it looked more like a railway brotherhood whose members spend most of their time shunting and hooting".

In the few minutes I have at my disposal, Mr. Speaker, I should like to acquaint the house with my constituency. It stretches from Winnipeg to the Ontario boundary; it goes 300 miles north; it covers some 30,000 square miles of territory, and there are 50,000 people in it who are representative of all nationalities and all creeds. It is a Canada in miniature. We have suburban areas and we have vast areas where you can go 100 miles without seeing a person. We have Indians, Metis, Ukrainians, Poles, Germans and people of all nationalities who came in the great immigration under the Liberal government—and I give them credit for this—not as immigrants but more as colonists, who settled, worked hard and built Canada. The sons and daughters of these people are, like myself, taking their place in the forefront in professions, business and all walks of life. As I said before, I regret that this government has not seen fit to recognize the people who represent one quarter of this country's population.

I hope the present Prime Minister will correct this and correct it soon because I think these people are very deserving. In saying this, I take nothing away from our other people. I spent some time in Quebec. The first school I went to was a French school that did not teach English. I have a great deal of respect for all nationalities and I have great respect for Canada. My only plea is that we look to Canada first, that we do not fragment our nation, that we do not fragment our policies. I think the government can count on the support of every hon. member in this house if they bring in policies which have as their basic aim the building of a great, united Canada for the betterment of future generations. If those policies are brought forth, then the government need not worry about being defeated in this house. But so long as they fragment our nation, so long as they adopt this narrow, partisan point of view which does not see the forest for the trees, then Canada will indeed be in a sorry state, and if it is it will not be long before the people of Canada will again render their verdict and re-elect a Conservative government whose purpose is to unite Canada.

(Translation):

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to associate myself with those who spoke before me to congratulate you on your appointment as Speaker of the house.

I should also like to commend the Deputy Speaker on his own appointment and the mover (Miss Jewett) and seconder (Mr. Choquette) of the address in reply to the speech from the throne who are the pride of the new and youthful Liberal team.

As the member for Gaspe, I am glad that the throne speech deals with questions which are of special concern to underdeveloped areas. It is the first time that a throne speech holds such promise for underdeveloped and labour surplus areas like Gaspe.

My riding which is a tourist attraction has a population of 65,300, 29,800 of whom have the right to vote.

In the first few months of 1963, there were 6,000 unemployed; three quarters of them received unemployment benefits and the others social security benefits.

Mr. Speaker, some people are alarmed when the unemployment level reaches 6, 7 or 8 per cent of the labour force in Canada. In my constituency, it goes over 50 per cent in wintertime and winter lasts six months down our way.

The federal legislation which was enacted in these last few years to relieve unemployment did not do so much for the underdeveloped areas of Quebec and the maritimes, but especially for the Gaspe peninsula.

During the past seven years, I was secretary treasurer of the town of Chandler and there are facts I know from personal experience which I should like to put on record mainly concerning the winter works program.

That legislation is more favourable to western municipalities and those of central Canada than to communities located in the province of Quebec and in the maritimes.

There are two seasons in Gaspe, summer and winter. This year, the winter works program covered the period from October 15 to May 31 regardless of whether the works were being carried out in Halifax, Chandler, Montreal, Toronto or Vancouver.

My colleague in the House of Commons, the member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Deachman) arrived in Ottawa around May 10 for the opening of the session and he told me that, before he left the Pacific coast, tulips in Vancouver were a thing of the past and that summer flowers were in bloom.

On May 10, this same day, I had lunch with the students of the classical college of Gaspe seminary, and this same morning, my car became stuck during a snow storm at Murdochville.

The municipalities in my constituency can hardly benefit from the winter works program, because there is too much snow and the weather is too cold.

The Department of Labour will have to set up a committee to review the law and regulations governing the winter works program. When the time comes to pick out the members for this study, we will have to choose people from underdeveloped areas.

Mr. Speaker, the enacting of other legislation to help the areas suffering from chronic unemployment was not favourable to Gaspe peninsula. The point is about order in council No. PC-1961/326 amending the Income Tax Act in order to help industries in a surplus labour area.

The authorities of the town of Chandler and of 12 municipalities in the area submitted a brief in 1961 asking that our area be declared a surplus labour area.

On April 24, 1961, the deputy minister of labour replied as follows:

As you know, a survey was conducted last spring to see whether the village of Chandler could be recognized as an area of surplus labour for the purposes of the special capital cost allowance program. It has been ascertained that the area was not meeting the conditions required to be classified as such under the program.

To be recognized as a surplus labour area, (1) an area must have been classified by the Department of Labour in the surplus labour area category for at least 50 per cent of the summer months from 1953 to 1960 and (2) employment must have decreased during the same period. Our survey of the situation discloses that the village of Chandler has been classified in that category for less than 50 per cent of the necessary period and that employment in Chandler has increased during the same period. As you can see, Chandler meets neither of the two conditions.

Since the designation is based on the trend of employment and of unemployment during the period 1953-60 and since, according to the reports, your area does not meet the conditions, I hope you will understand that it would not be of much use to make a new survey.

Yours truly,

George V. Haythorne.

Mr. Speaker, during the fifties I was placement officer of the unemployment insurance office in Chandler, and I can assure you that the statistics related to the unemployed were in accordance with the applications filed at the office, but they did not give a real picture of the conditions prevailing in that area.

The Gaspe population was aware of the fact that there were no jobs available in the forest industry, in the building industry or elsewhere. So they felt that it was useless to report to a local office for employment since jobs were not available.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it ten o'clock?

(Text):

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, May 29, 1963

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

(Translation):

PRIVILEGE

MR. DESCHATELETS—REFERENCE TO ARTICLE IN "GLOBE AND MAIL"

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

I notice that my name appears on the front page of today's edition of the Globe and Mail in connection with the following:

(Text):

Shortly after the Liberal victory at the polls a dinner that became known as the Ruby Foo's party was held in Montreal. The dinner brought together successful Liberal candidates and Mr. Banks. Among those reported to have attended were public works minister Jean-Paul Deschatelets, Edmund Asselin, member for Notre Dame de Grace, and George Lachance, member for Lafontaine, who acted for Bernard Boulanger, director of the S.I.U.'s welfare plan at the Norris inquiry.

(Translation):

I am amazed that my name should be mentioned in that report since I have never met Mr. Harold C. Banks nor even spoken to him on the telephone. I do not know him and I could not even say what he looks like. Moreover, I have never set foot in Ruby Foo's restaurant and I regret to say that I never had the pleasure of eating out with my colleagues from Notre Dame de Grace (Mr. Asselin) and Lafontaine (Mr. Lachance).

Under the circumstances, I hope that the person who wrote the article will confirm my statement after checking the facts. I must add that the hon. members for Notre Dame de Grace and Lafontaine also deny the report.

[Later:]

Mr. G. C. Lachance (Lafontaine): Mr. Speaker, I did not have the opportunity, a few minutes ago, to speak following the statement made by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Deschatelets). I should like to add that I fully support the statement he made to the effect that neither he nor the hon. member for Notre Dame de Grace, nor myself have been invited to or have attended a dinner in Mr. Banks' company, with whom I have never had dinner. Furthermore, I might add that it has been two or three years since I last set foot in the restaurant where the dinner took place.

(Text):

Mr. Edmund Asselin (Notre Dame de Grace): On a question of privilege, I thought the Minister of Public Works had made the matter clear. However, I think I should say I was neither invited to nor present at any such meeting as is referred to in the Globe and Mail this morning.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): May I, too, in conjunction with this, indicate that neither do I know Hal Banks, nor do I have any great desire to.

(Translation):

[Later:]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier). In view of the almost disgraceful manner in which the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Deschatelets) denied a moment ago the report published in the Globe and Mail and since the same item reports also that there were meetings between the Minister of Justice and a Liberal organizer—

Mr. Speaker: Would you come to the point?

Mr. Gregoire: My question is this: Is the Minister of Justice denying the report published today to the effect that he had discussions with one of the directors of the S.I.U.?

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: The question is completely out of order, but in order to complete the report may I say the restaurant in question is in my constituency and I knew nothing about this meeting, nor had I had anything to do with it.

MAIN AND SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES, 1963-64

Messages from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting the main and supplementary estimates for the financial year ending March 31, 1964, were presented by Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance) and read by Mr. Speaker to the house.

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, by leave of the house I would like to make a statement concerning these estimates. The main estimates being tabled today are those which were prepared last fall and which have been the basis for the operations conducted under authority of special Governor General's warrants during April and May of the current year.

The supplementary estimates (A) are also being tabled today and contain the customary adjustments of the main estimates. Total budgetary expenditures in the main and supplementary estimates for 1963-64, including amounts already authorized by continuing statutes and moneys parliament is being requested to appropriate, amount to $6,545,-504,515.

Because of the need for carrying on the financing of government operations by special warrant for the last two months of 1962-63 it will be necessary to await the appearance of the final expenditure figures for that year in order to make detailed comparisons. The government intends to report to parliament the total estimates and supply picture for 1962-63, following a detailed review being made to determine items and amounts which should properly be charged to the accounts of that year.

The royal commission on government organization, the Glassco commission, made suggestions for improving the form in which the estimates are presented to the house. These are at present under review but no change has been made in the form in which the estimates for the current fiscal year are now being presented.

With the permission of the house I now request that there be included in Hansard two tables relating to the estimates. The first table compares the 1963-64 estimates with the total budgetary estimates for several preceding years. The second table indicates the changes in the main estimates for 1962-63 and 1963-64, broken down by administration and operation, capital and other costs.

Mr. Speaker, there are two ways of effecting economies in government expenditures. The first is by a detailed examination of each item of expenditure and the particulars of each establishment. The second is by a realistic reappraisal of policies and programs approved in the past and carried forward from year to year more or less automatically. The purpose of such a reappraisal would be to see if certain programs that may have been quite justified and useful when originally introduced should now be dropped, or reduced in scope, in favour of new programs of greater importance under the economic and social conditions prevailing today. Both these approaches are needed if a thorough control over government expenditures is to be exercised. It may be, however, that the second approach of reappraising existing programs will provide greater opportunities for eliminating or reducing less necessary government expenditures than a long drawn out examination of details, which sometimes degenerates into mere penny pinching.

Treasury board is now examining the programs of each department with the assistance and co-operation of the ministers concerned. Of necessity this examination will take some months to complete. Any reductions in the 1963-64 estimates which may result from this further examination and review will be reflected in the appropriations the house is asked subsequently to authorize.

The government is also pressing forward with a review of the recommendations made by the Glassco commission. Those recommendations of the commission that may be expected to result in greater efficiency throughout the public service or in useful savings of expenditures will be implemented as quickly as possible.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give permission to the Minister of Finance to have printed in Hansard the explanatory notes and attached tables relating to the 1963-64 estimates?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: For explanatory notes and tables referred to above, see appendix.]

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, the statement which has just been given to the house by the Minister of Finance in connection with the tabling of these estimates is, of course, of interest to all hon. members. I have not had an opportunity to see the statement, which sometimes has been given to financial critics prior to the tabling of the estimates. All I can say at the moment is that we have listened with interest to the minister's statement and will give proper consideration to the explanations he has given. I gather from what he said that treasury board may still be dealing with a revision of these estimates. I presume, however, that the estimates which are now put before hon. members are the final estimates of his government in so far as the financial year is concerned, and we will not expect these to be amended except as further expenditures are required.

I am very happy to see some reference finally made to the report of the Glassco commission—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nowlan: —and the fact that the present government is considering dealing with some of the economies which were recommended by that commission. At the moment, Mr. Speaker, there is nothing one can say in this matter except that we have before us today the estimates for the coming year. I am not sure what procedure is going to be adopted by hon. gentlemen opposite in dealing with the estimates for the preceding year which, due to their own obstruction, were never approved by parliament.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Nowlan: I assume that some legislation will be brought in to validate those estimates, otherwise I think we on this side of the house will have to take a very careful look at this matter to decide what procedure we are to adopt. But at the moment we welcome the tabling of the estimates today. I hope this government follow the economies which their predecessors attempted to institute. We will consider this matter and deal with it on a future occasion as circumstances warrant.

[Later:]

Mr. Gordon moved:

That the messages of His Excellency together with the estimates presented this day be referred to the committee of supply.

Motion agreed to.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

DISCUSSIONS RESPECTING U.S. AIR FORCE UNITS IN CANADA

